Mr. POPE. I understand the hon. gentleman's question. It is possible there may be some ballasting to do. I do not say we are going to do any work whatever, or to pay one dollar before that time.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not ask the hon. gentleman whether he was going to take money, contrary to the law, and pay it out before the 1st of July, 1881.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We could not do that.

Mr. BLAKE. And therefore I do not ask the question. I asked if he was going to take it for work to be done before the 1st of July, 1881, and which ought to be provided for in the services of the current year.

Mr. POPE. It is possible that in this case, as in every other case, the fencing which is to be done may not be completed, and not paid for before July, and that this vote will cover it. It is also for these bridges which are in the contract, which we believe will not be completed before the 1st of July, and consequently will not be paid for. I do not see how the hon. gentleman can take exception to that.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not taking exception. I asked a question, and having received an answer I proceed to take a serious exception. My exception is, that the hon. Minister says we made contracts, which contracts we are bound to implement, so far as the contractors are concerned, even although we are not bound as between us and the Syndicate to improve the Pembina Branch for them. Of course, if the hon. gentleman chooses to keep the contracts alive and let the contractors do the work, he will be bound to pay; but if he chooses to keep the contract alive and let the work be done and incur the obligation and pay the money, when he might cancel the contract, save doing the work, save paying the money which he will be making a present of to the Syndicate—

Mr. POPE (Compton).

Mr. POPE. That is your way of doing business.

Mr. BLAKE. I say if you agree to hand over the Pembina Branch without agreeing to put no more money in it—you are not bound to put any more money on that branch, and if you are not, and if you are able to relieve yourselves from doing so, you are bound to relieve yourselves, and you would do so if it was your own business.

• Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will notice in the interpretation clause of the contract, that the words Canadian Pacific Railway are intended to mean the entire railway as described in the Act of 1874, 36 Victoria, Chap. 14—that is the main line and the two branch lines.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The seventh clause of the contract reads thus:

"The railway constructed under the terms hereof shall be the property of the Company: and pending the completion of the eastern and central sections, the Government shall transfer to the Company the possession and right to work and run the several portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway already constructed or as the same shall be completed. And upon the completion of the eastern and central sections, the Government shall convey to the Company, with a suitable number of station buildings and with water service (but without equipment), those portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway constructed or to be constructed by the Government which shall then be completed; and upon completion of the remainder of the portion of railway to be constructed by the Government, that portion shall also be conveyed to the Company, and the Canadian Pacific Railway shall become, and be thereafter the absolute property of the Company. And the Company shall thereafter and forever efficiently maintain, work and run the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Under that clause the portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway, whether constructed or to be constructed, are to be completed. The Pembina Branch is declared to be a portion.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have been utterly unable to get any information out of the acting Minister with regard to Upper & Murphy's contract, except such information as I had myself. I will now give the hon. gentleman some information which he, as acting Minister, might be supposed to have. In the report of the hon. Minister of Railways I find the following paragraph:—

"The bridging, track-laying and ballasting over the same distance was let to Messrs. Kavanagh, Murphy & Upper, in June, 1878, to be completed in December, 1879. The contractors having failed to perform the work, it has been completed by the department."

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. the First Minister says that under the 7th clause the Government is to complete the Pembina Branch. I deny that altogether. That clause reads:

"The railway constructed under the terms hereof shall be the property of the Company: and pending the completion of the eastern and central sections, the Government shall transfer to the Company the possession and right to work and run the several portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway already constructed or as the same shall be completed. And upon the completion of the eastern and central sections the Government shall convey to the Company, with a suitable number of station buildings and with water service (but without equipment), those portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway constructed or to be constructed by the Government which shall then be completed."

They are to transfer to the Company at once, the possession of portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway already constructed, or as the same shall be completed. Then there was some portion already constructed at the date of the contract, and if it was not the portion on which trains had been running for a long time, I want to know what portion it was.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You can work a railway partly constructed.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a statement here that there are portions already constructed, and I want to know whether it was the Pembina Branch that was already constructed or some other part. If it was in another part it must have been in a less advanced state than the Pembina Branch, because the Pembina Branch was in the most forward state of any. The hon. gentleman is bound under this construction, and I presume he has already transferred the possession of the Pembina Branch to the Company.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not yet.

Mr. BLAKE. He proposed to do it immediately, at any rate, and in advance of the time, in order that the Company may reap the profits while he is paying for the completion out of the public funds.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The report of the Minister of Railways says it is already completed, and that the contract had been resumed by the Government. What does the hon. the First Minister say to that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is merely a verbal quibble on the part of the hon. member for West Durham. If he were arguing before a Court upon the construction of the language there might be some weight in it. But this road is substantially constructed, and it was so far constructed that trains have been running upon it. There remain still some portions to be ballasted, and some iron bridges to be constructed, and the road, while being so far constructed as to be capable of being run, is not completed. You will find the word "completed" is used through the whole sentence. I would like no better judge than my hon. friend if the case came before him, though not as an advocate just now.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What does the hon. gentleman say to the report of his Minister, who says the road is completed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman knows that he ran the road himself, though it was not finished. It was running in his time, but it was not completed.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Here is a statement saying distinctly that the bridging, tracklaying, and ballasting is completed. He says the contract was taken out of the contractor's hands and completed by the Government.

Mr. POPE. No; it would be completed by the Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He says it has been completed by the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government took it out of their hands, and had to finish it. We have got the contracts, and we are carrying them out.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This report is of the 30th of June last, and it says that before that time the road was completed, yet the Government are asking money to ballast the road.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will go over the road now—and from his experience he is almost an engineer—he will report that the road is not completed at this moment.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have nothing to do with that. It would only be another instance of where hon. gentlemen opposite say things that are not always correct—not always accurate, because here is a report of the leading Minister saying it is completed. I accept his word. I am not accusing anyone of wrong-doing, but there is some mistake in asking for money to do that which the Minister of Railways has already reported to have done.

Mr. MILLS. We had this matter discussed when the Pacific Railway contract was under consideration. There was a gentleman on the Treasury benches, though he was neither the First Minister nor the Minister of Public Works, nor the Minister of Railways, but he intimated to the House that not a single dollar further was required to be expended upon the Pembina Branch. We had an elaborate calculation made by the Minister of Public Works, showing how much is to be expended on each particular section that the Government are called upon to build. He gave us the cost of the British Columbia section, of the Lake Superior section, but when we came to the Pembina section he told us that it cost $1,556,900, and that so far as this portion of the road is concerned the Company is paid. Now, if the hon. gentleman says that there is further work to be done and further money to be expended, it would be necessary to show that this further sum is provided for in the sum asked as the cost of the Pembina Branch, and which was stated, by the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways, to be completed. It is obvious that upon the report of the Minister that was laid on the Table, and from the contract itself, that every statement made to this House was that this Pembina Branch was completed, and that all was expended that the country was called on to pay towards its construction.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman say what the cost of the Pembina Branch is as it is to-day?

Mr. POPE. About $1,500,000.

Mr. BLAKE. How much more does he expect to spend before the 30th of June?

Mr. POPE. I think if I was operating this road I would do just exactly the same as I should do with the hon. gentleman if I got him to carry on a law-suit for me. I do not suppose it will be completed before that time.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the hon. gentleman did not understand me, or he would not answer me in that spirit. When we are giving public money, part of which is a re-vote and part of which he is going to spend during the existing financial year, I am surely entitled to ask how much he expects to spend during the existing financial year.

Mr. POPE. I said I did not expect to pay out much money before the 30th of June.

Mr. BLAKE. What does the hon. gentleman call much?

Mr. POPE. I do not think there can be much more any way. These contracts for bridges certainly will not be completed before that time. A considerable quantity of the fencing is done, I think there is about thirty miles more to complete the contract, and I do not believe it will be built before that time. Of course it cannot be settled for until the work is done. The work will not be done before that time, and I do not expect to pay out money before.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman not state more accurately what is the cost of the road?

Mr. POPE. The memorandum before me states that it is $1,500,000.

Mr. BLAKE. That, of course, does not include any charge for working. That is construction account alone.

Mr. POPE. Construction account alone. It does not include what is going to be paid out.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is the report correct that the contract has been taken from Mr. Upper?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then what is Mr. Upper doing now?

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman has had too much experience not to know that when a contract is taken out of a contractor's hands, any work that is done is done at his expense, and a settlement cannot be made till the work is completed.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister of Railways, in moving the adoption of the contract, said:

"The amount I submitted on estimate last year was $1,750,000 for the Pembina Branch, but that included more than my estimate now includes for the Pembina Branch, and for the reason, as hon. gentlemen will see, the heavy expenditure charged to that branch for workshops, &c., will now devolve upon the Company, and consequently reduce the estimate to $1,500,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Give us a detail of the reductions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All I can say is, that I took the estimate of the engineer, charging what was fairly chargeable to that road—building in connection with its operation—and the amount of the Pembina Branch was therefore placed at $1,750,000. We now reduce that by $250,000, because, as I say, the expenditure we would have had to make immediately in connection with the work now devolves upon the Syndicate under the contract."

It is now said, in order to make the Pembina Branch better for the Company, we are to spend on it $50,000 more.

Mr. McCALLUM. It appears to me it would not be very extravagant if that road was to cost $50,000 more. It is impossible to say how much money will be paid out, because that depends on the amount of work that will be done.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But it is known in the department what is paid every month, and that is all we want. How many miles of wire fencing have been let by contract?

Mr. POPE. The whole length of the Pembina Branch, and there is about thirty miles of fencing yet to be built. Another hundred miles was let west of Red River, but that is paid by the Syndicate.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I had hoped that the Minister of Railways would have been able to be here and explain every item of this estimate, but he has not been able, and everybody will admit the difficulty which my hon. friend to whom it is referred, must labor under in mastering details of this kind. It is impossible that the House should have the details of this expenditure, and before concurrence, a full statement of what composes it, together with a statement of the conditions under which the conditions will be let, will be submitted.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it was also understood that the details would be inserted in the vote.

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. POPE. The road from English River to Eagle River will be completed 1st July, 1882, so that trains can pass over it. The total cost of that section will be $2,580,000, and a further sum will be required of $400,000. It is expected that the road from Eagle River to Keewatin will be completed by 1st July, 1882; and from Keewatin to Selkirk by October next, and the present vote will complete the work on this section.

76. British Columbia $3,000,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. I asked for information regarding this item, whether any change was to be made in the grades and curves between Yale and Moody, whether any change has been made by which it is proposed to let this by contract now, or whether the entire amount is for the contracts already let in British Columbia.

Mr. POPE. It is believed the curvature and the grades can be kept as they are. The amount of $3,000,000 is for that contract which is let.

Mr. ANGLIN. We were told the expense of the work had been reduced. In what way has it been reduced?

Mr. POPE. By the change in location, not by reducing the grades and curvatures.

77. Telegraph Lines and Roadway $70,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. Where is this to be expended?

Mr. POPE (Compton). $11,000 is required to pay Sefton & Ward a drawback; Fuller, $31,000; Oliver Davidson, $16,000, and to build a portion of the telegraph line on the railway between Selkirk and Prince Arthur's Landing, $12,000.

78. Station and Terminal Accommodation $50,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. Where is this item to be spent?

Mr. POPE (Compton). It is a revote for stations, &c., between Selkirk and Prince Arthur's Landing.

80. Lachine Canal $800,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would like some statement of the condition of the works—what portions are finished, the future expenditure required to finish them, and other particulars. I read in the papers that an accident had happened that would prevent the working of some portions of the canal, and entail additional expense.

Mr. POPE (Compton). The accident will not prevent the operating of the canal. The works of enlargement are pretty much completed, except the gates and a few bridges. The amount required to complete the works is estimated at $500,000. To complete sections one and two and pay the final estimate, $176,000; number three, $432,000; numbers six and seven, $233,027; number eight, $56,670; number nine, $13,670; number ten, $22,650; number eleven, $158,000; construction of lock-gates, $62,700; bridges, roads, fences, &c., not under contract, $84,000; wharf at Lachine, $20,000; making in all a total of $900,141.

In answer to Mr. MACKENZIE,

Mr. POPE (Compton). Mr. O'Brien has the contract for the gates.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does he supply the timber too, or merely construct the locks?

Mr. POPE. The Government supplies the timber, a portion of which had been purchased before the contract was given out.

Mr. BOWELL. A large portion of this timber was purchased under contracts given out by the hon. member for Lambton himself, and was delivered before the present Government was formed. A portion had, under the contract, been delivered at the Welland Canal, some at Williamsburg and some at Cornwall; and the hon. gentleman allowed the oak to come into Canada free of duty, when it was dutiable at 17½ per cent.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have no recollection of that.

Mr. BOWELL. It is true, however, for when I took office I made the importer pay the balance of duty unpaid.

81. Cornwall Canal $80,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is this to complete the existing contract.

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is for deepening the river, I presume.

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Where is it intended to expend the money?

Mr. POPE. The sum of $175,000 is for improving the river from the head of the Carillon Canal to Lachine to a depth of thirteen feet.

83. Welland Canal $1,065,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does that complete the canal?

Mr. POPE. That is supposed to complete the canal within $150,000 or $160,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Including the bridges over the new canal?

Mr. POPE. Yes; everything.

Mr. McCALLUM. It is possible there may be some misunderstanding about that item. I remember that when the hon. member for Lambton was in office he said at one time that this canal would be completed in 1876.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. McCALLUM. Your report said 1877, but I do not find any fault with that because perhaps it was only a slip; but I think it is better to give no information at all than to give it inaccurately. The shipping interest have been looking far more anxiously to the enlarging of this canal, and it is of great importance that they should have correct information. When the acting Minister—who has only been in charge of the department a short time—says that this sum will complete the work, I am sure that he does not mean to include the work upon the locks through to Lake Ontario.

Mr. RYKERT. That will cost $3,000,000 itself.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. We embraced the entire expenditure connected with the 14 feet enlargement, and the under work is all completed.

Mr. McCALLUM. I do not think the part from Port Dalhousie to Thorold can cost anything like that sum. I do not know that it will cost $1,000,000. But if we expect the canal to do the work which is expected of it we must have a depth of 14 feet.

Mr. POPE. This estimate is not intended to cover the entire 14 feet enlargement, and if 14 feet is required, we have another vote of $920,000, which is the estimate of the Chief Engineer for completing the work.

Mr. McCALLUM. I may say that with the vessels of the draft and size which will be put on that canal I fear the old aqueduct will not answer the purpose, and that a new one will be required.

85. Carillon Canal, Dam and Slide $350,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. I had intended to call the attention of the House, and necessarily in some detail, to the manner of letting the contract and other matters connected with this work, and as I would have to blame the hon. Minister, I am averse to doing so in his absence. I give notice, however, that next Session, if I am able to be here, I shall call attention to these matters.

86. Grenville Canal $470,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is intended to be done with this money?

Mr. POPE. The upper entrance is to be enlarged to 100 feet at a cost of $170,000; $250,000 is to complete the contract of Messrs. Haney, Stewart & Company, at Greece's Point, and $50,000 is for the construction of locks, lockmasters' houses, &c.

In answer to Mr. MACKENZIE,

Mr. POPE. With the exception of Messrs. Haney, Stewart & Company's contract, the other works have not been let. It is proposed to put them under contract.

87. Culbute Canal, improving approaches $30,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. Are these approaches above or below? I supposed these approaches were all completed, according to the depth in the lock, long ago. I am at a loss to understand what this large sum can be wanted for.

Mr. POPE. This expenditure is for work to be done some distance below. It is in order to render the river navigable below the locks as far as Bryson, and for that purpose it will be necessary to build two submerged dams, to remove three shoals, and also a reef above Calumet.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is proposed, of course, to invite tenders for this work.

Mr. POPE. We do not proceed on any other plan.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes, you do, as I shall show before long.

88. St. Peter's Canal $3,000 00

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton). In connection with this vote, I wish to call the attention of the Government to the fact that the laborers on St. Peter's Canal have not been paid their wages for 1876 and 1877. Mr. Tuck, the original contractor, assigned his contract to Mr. Kennedy, leaving the laborers who had worked for him previous to that time, unpaid to the amount of $6,600 or $7,000. The claim of these men was brought to the notice of the Government of the hon. member for Lambton, who decided to divide the money then in hand among the laborers, according to the different sums due to those men. Unfortunately the sum on hand was very small, only $400 or $500. I understand that sum remains still unpaid, on account of the difficulty of ascertaining the amount due to the different laborers. Now, I wish the Government could find it possible to divide this sum of $3,000, along with the balance on hand at the time Mr. Tuck made the assignment, among the men, in proportion to the sums due them. The Government of the hon. member for Lambton adopted the principle of paying these men the balance that was due to Mr. Tuck, and it is to be regretted that there was not in the hands of the Government, at the time of the assignment, a larger sum than $400 or $500. I hope the Government will find means to force Mr. Kennedy to pay these men the sums due them.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The statement the hon. gentleman makes about the men being unpaid by the first contractors is no doubt correct. But we did not concede that the Government was at all liable for the wages of men whom the contractors failed to pay, though in that case, as in the Carillon case, and one or two others, we endeavored to secure all that was possible for the men. No money was paid to that contractor after we became aware of his owing the men so much. I forget precisely what steps we took, but we retained the money in our hands to enable the men to sue for it. I think that was the course taken in the Carillon case. We got the contractor to assent to the payment of the men, and we sent Mr. Jones as paymaster to pay all the men whom those contractors were owing. In this case nothing can be done. The contract was assigned to Mr. Kennedy, who had already been a successful contractor in another place. But Mr. Kennedy has no liability whatever in connection with the wages the contractor owed when Mr. Kennedy took the work. It is absurd to talk of forcing Mr. Kennedy to pay the men of the previous contractor. The Government have nothing in the world to do with the matter, except, as I have said, to use all their efforts that the money may reach the men if possible, as was done in the two or three cases I have alluded to.

Mr. JONES. I think the hon. member for Lambton is mistaken in his allusion to the Carillon canal, in saying that the contractors assented to pay the $9,000 which was charged against their contract. I do not think those gentlemen assented to that, as he will find by referring to the letter sent by them to the department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. They were applied to for their assent, and they sent their own clerk with the pay-roll along with Mr. Jones, and was present when the money was paid; indeed, the money was paid through the hands of their own clerk.

Mr. JONES. I have no doubt they were glad to see the men paid, but I do not think it was through their influence that Mr. Ralph Jones was sent down to pay those men; in fact I am sure it was not. When Mr. Ralph Jones was sent down there was no objection made to their clerk going with him with the pay-roll. They were glad to get the money any way that was withheld from them unjustly.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The money was not due to them at all. If we had kept the drawback according to contract we would have had $30,000 in our hands; we had only $6,000 or $8,000.

Mr. JONES. I think the money was due to them and ought to have been paid. I think upwards of $23,000 was paid to those gentlemen which was held from them unjustly in 1877, as was stated by Mr. Lash, the Deputy Minister of Justice; and that the contract was broken with them by the Government, in withholding the money which was due to them in their estimate.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There was no money withheld from them that was due to them at any time. The $22,000 the hon. gentleman refers to was the amount that Mr. Page recommended should be paid for work additional to the contract. For a long time Mr. Page did not consider that a number of items were extra; but he was pressed by the department to give them every possible advantage, and the papers will show that Mr. Page carried out what was stated. However, it is inconvenient to base a discussion on that matter on an incidental remark, and I have said I will not discuss it in the absence of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton). I had the opportunity of looking at some papers relating to this work which were laid before the Senate the other day, and I find that the hon. member for Lambton is a little mistaken. I find by these papers that on April 17th, 1878, his department ordered Mr. Perley to pay the laborers employed on the canal by Mr. Tuck $188.77, from the balance then in the hands of the Government; so that he acted on the principle of paying these men if he had money enough to pay them. Mr. Kennedy took the contract on the condition that no profits should be divided between him and Mr. Tuck until all Mr. Tuck's liabilities were paid. I find that in Mr. Perley's report to the Public Works Department. If this is the case, I would like the Government to investigate this matter and, if possible, hold the money until the laborers are paid.

Mr. POPE. The matter will be carefully enquired into.

Mr. MACDONALD (Victoria, N.S.) I am pleased to find the hon. member for Cape Breton bringing this matter before the House. That hon. gentleman, and other representatives of Cape Breton, and myself, have endeavored from time to time to induce the Government to do justice to Cape Breton in this matter, but I regret to say that so far our efforts have had no effect. At one time we thought we had the bird in hand, but when Parliament met we found the bird as far off as ever, if not farther. There are cases of extreme hardship in connection with this transaction. Mr. Tuck went down to Cape Breton with a flourish of trumpets, and with that importance which is generally considered attached to a gentleman holding a Government contract. People flocked from all parts of the country for employment, and labored month after month on the fair promises of the contractor that they would be paid. But after they had labored for six months, Mr. Tuck found it convenient to leave for home, and handed the work over to his sureties. These gentlemen, it appears, refused to become responsible for the liabilities contracted by their principal. They completed the work and added to their profits the labor of hundreds of men for months, which is not yet paid for. The laborer not only gave his time and labor, but had to furnish himself with the necessaries of life, and I understand there are instances in which poor men were obliged to sacrifice their small properties in order to pay their board-bills and shop accounts. The Government say: "Oh, we cannot do anything; we contracted with certain parties for certain work, and pay them regardless of how they treat the laboring men; we cannot do anything for the laboring men, they must look after themselves." Is this equitable or just? Surely the Government in framing the contract provided that a certain amount must be retained in their hands until the work was completed. Surely there is a clause in that document providing that the laboring men should be paid, and if not, why not? Should the laboring men suffer on account of the incapacity or negligence of a Government? Certainly not. I will apply the argument of the hon. the Premier a few evenings ago, when a similar case was under consideration. Canada can afford to be honest; Canada cannot afford with honor to take the labor and toil of poor men on her public works without paying them; Canada must and will do justice to the laboring men. A wealthy contractor has no difficulty in bringing his grievances before a Court of Justice or board of arbitrators, and receiving his rights; the poor laborer has no such remedy to recover his account. The Government are in honor bound to pay the laboring men. If they neglect to take proper precautions in paying contractors or in fixing contracts, there is no reason why the laborer should suffer. I trust the Government will, at an early day, pay those claims in full. Nothing less will satisfy the laborers of Cape Breton; they cannot be expected to be satisfied with anything less.

89. Murray Canal, towards construction of..... $25,000 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. POPE. The estimated cost of the work is $700,000. This canal has been the subject of discussion at different times—in 1833, 1840, 1846, 1867, and during the past year. There is no doubt it is a very important work, and it is more important now than ever before. It has been represented by gentlemen of undoubted integrity that if this canal were built, iron smelting works would be started at that point and a large number of men employed. Under this pressure, and after the representation that was made by those gentlemen, the Government felt they could not any longer refrain from trying to open up this important section of the country, not only for the iron but the lumber trade as well.

Mr. BOWELL. The estimate given by my hon. friend includes a cut through the neck of land that extends from the main shore running out into the lake, thus forming the Presqu'Isle harbor, so that the amount will be nothing like the sum estimated. That calculation was based on the report of Mr. Lightall, made some time ago, in which he stated there was a large amount of rock cutting to be done. The examination, during the last summer, by Mr. Austin proved that fourteen feet below the surface there was no rock.

20. Miscellaneous..... $10,000 00

Mr. BERGERON. I am very much surprised there is no estimate for the Beauharnois Canal. It will take $18,000 or $20,000 to put that canal into proper order. It was badly kept under the late Administration and seems to be badly managed under this one. The pier at the foot of the canal was smashed up five or six years ago and the stones fell into the channel. There is no lighthouse on the channel at night. It is a dangerous place, and if any accident should happen the Government will have to pay damages exceeding in amount what would be required to put the canal in proper order. Every year since ten or twelve years ago, the sum of $8,000 or $9,000 has been put in the Estimates for this canal while $75,000 or $80,000 are given to the Welland Canal. The Beauharnois Canal is about half the size of the Welland Canal and contains nine locks. It is a very important work and has been greatly neglected. A report was made by the Engineer stating that it would cost $15,000 or $18,000 to put it in proper order.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is out of condition in it?

Mr. BERGERON. The banks of the canal are in a very bad condition.

Mr. POPE. That question is engaging the attention of Government. Officers have been sent to make reports, on completion of which the Government will come to a conclusion about the matter.

51. To meet expenses in connection with the Census..... $200,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain what changes there are in the mode of taking the Census now as compared with the mode of taking the last Census?

Mr. POPE. There is no considerable difference. Of course, I thought a considerable saving could be made by employing the chief census officers for much shorter time. The result is, these provincial officers that have the general overseeing of the work will be employed but a third of the time they were employed before. I thought, also, a less number of Commissioners might do the work. I do not think they, altogether, exceed the number that were employed before. With respect to the enumerators, the schedule was a little cut down. For instance, I found there were certain columns that it was impossible to fill up. I cut the schedule down from nine to eight, and increased the number of families to be taken by the enumerators for a day's work, from eighteen, the old number, to twenty. These are the chief points of difference.

Mr. BLAKE. What will be the result, pecuniarily, comparing this with the last census?

Mr. POPE. The last census cost $510,000. I am quite satisfied the present, notwithstanding the increase of population and territory, will not cost more. I hope to make it less.

Mr. BLAKE. Will there be greater expedition in getting the census taken than last time?

Mr. POPE. The enumeration will be made within three weeks. I tried not to increase the enumerators, but impressed upon them the importance of taking the census as fast as possible; and I have as nearly as possible fixed for them a fair day's work, not in a way to cause the work to be slighted, but so as to have it completed, both quickly and well.

Mr. BLAKE. How can the hon. gentleman do that? As he is Commissioner of Patents, he had better take out a patent for his invention.

Mr. POPE. I have fixed twenty families for a fair day's work, allowing a day's pay for that number. The commissioners are paid $4 for every 100 families entered on their register, which is considered for them a fair day's work.

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. POPE. The chief officers were first employed on the 20th January, I think. It is supposed their work will be completed early in April, or, at any rate, before 1st May next. Their remuneration is $5 a day, and $3.50 for expenses.

Mr. FLYNN. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the importance of securing competent enumerators, without whom the information and statistics gathered will be of comparatively little value. In looking over the clerks returns of 1871, I have found such gross inaccuracies in regard to localities and industries in my own province, with which I am personally well acquainted, as to justify me in asserting that the statements set down are of very little value. There are errors as to the amounts of grain, and fish and fish-oil produced in different localities, so palpable as at once to surprise any person well informed. I believe those errors arise either from incompetence or indifference on the part of the enumerators, who should be selected not only on the ground of their ability but of their knowledge of the districts visited, otherwise they may be imposed upon by incorrect answers. The Minister should be impressed with the necessity of competent enumerators, without whom the information gathered will be of very little value.

Mr. POPE. I quite agree with the hon. member, that the information must be correct, or it will be valueless. I hope we shall be able to get the best information on all subjects. With regard to fish oil, as I am informed, it is a most difficult matter for the enumerators to get correct information, owing to the fact that after half a-dozen men or so fish in company and when one of them is asked the amount of his catch, he may give the quantity for the company, and vice versa. I have no doubt the case referred to by the hon. gentleman arose in that way.

145. Salaries and Allowances of Lighthouses

Keepers..... $159,456 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. How does this increase of $2,000 arise?

Mr. POPE (Queen's.) It is owing to the fact that new lighthouses are constantly required, and consequently salaries for the keepers. I will lay a memorandum on the Table showing the details. In some cases there have been considerable reductions, and of course, there must necessarily be increases owing to the extension of the service.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. These details used to be given in the Estimates, but I think they have very properly been withdrawn, owing to their being so cumbersome. Might not a brief memorandum be prepared showing the increases and decreases, without going so finely into details?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think such a memorandum could be prepared, because there are a number of increased lighthouses, but with decreased salaries to the keepers, and though the $2,000 may, in some degree, represent the officers, yet the salaries of all the new officers would amount to a much larger sum.

Mr. SNOWBALL. If the hon. Minister's attention has not already been called to the subject, I would state that since the lighthouse was placed at Tabusintac Bay, on the Miramichi, the storms of 1879 have opened a new gully, and the consequence is that the old entrance is filling up and the new entrance which has been formed is much more available for boats coming into the bay. The light, where it is now placed, is entirely useless for the purpose intended, and it is only a source of expense. The light is on Crab Island, which is submerged at high water, and in case of a storm it is dangerous for the keeper to stay on the island. The building is in good order and could be removed at little expense and placed opposite the new gully on the main land where it would be perfectly safe and be of benefit to vessels entering the bay; and by placing a beacon range light on the beach near the new entrance, it would answer all the purpose the light was originally intended for, and would cost little extra to the department.

Mr. McCALLUM. What is the amount allowed for the Colchester reef lighthouse?

Mr. POPE. The plans for this work are being prepared, and as soon as they are ready tenders will be advertised for. It is satisfactory to be able to state that the American Government have undertaken to build a light in that neighborhood, and have placed a sum in their Estimates for that purpose, provided we vote a sum of money for the construction of a light on the Island. The lightship will probably cost from $15,000 to $18,000. Last year, $2,000 was placed in the Estimates, and this year we are asking for about $5,000 more.

Mr. McCALLUM. A light has been maintained there for some years, for which the Government have paid only $700 a year for the last ten years. Last fall this vessel was wrecked in the ice, and there have been petitions to this House to give some compensation to the parties who lost this vessel. I trust when the Supplementary Estimates come down, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see his way clear to reimburse those young men to a certain extent for the loss they have sustained. For a number of years, the Government of this country has been getting that light maintained for a great deal less than it was worth. The hon. Minister thinks this lighthouse will cost $18,000; I venture to say it will cost $24,000. It is a difficult place to build a lighthouse on, there being five or six feet of water. The Government has received great advantages from the light which these young men have kept up, and surely the Government of this country should not do injustice to these young men for the benefit of 4,000,000 of people. It will cost $24,000 to keep up this lighthouse for ten years; the interest alone on this sum would amount to $1,200 a year. I think the maintenance of and attendance of this light will, with interest, cost $1,800 a year. Consequently when we consider what these young men have been doing it for, it will be evident that they have saved a great deal to the country. The calculation will show that during the past ten years they have saved this country $10,800. These young men, in losing this ship, lost their all. I think the Government ought at least to pay one-half their loss, inasmuch as they were waiting to get orders from the Government when they lost the vessel. They risked their lives in the interest of the shipping of this country, and it would not be fair or just to refuse to reimburse them.

Mr. SCHULTZ. I would like to add my testimony to that of the hon. gentleman for Monck (Mr. McCallum) in regard to this lightship. I am a native of that part of the country and familiar with the dangers of the shoals this lightship protects, and I know the persons who had charge of it. I know from personal knowledge both the value of the lightship and the risk run by the young men, and the numbers of years they have maintained it, and I think they are entitled to some consideration. I trust the Minister, in considering that claim, may think the amount of $2,400 is but a trifle, seeing that they maintained this ship for ten years at great risk to themselves, and lost it at last through their wish to protect the shipping which was passing that reef.

Mr. POPE (Queen's). With regard to the matter mentioned by the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum), I may say that memorials have been sent to the Department asking that these young men should be compensated. The vessel was placed there under an arrangement with the people of the locality, who paid $500 a year towards the maintenance. She was recently taken in charge by the Government who paid $700 a year towards maintaining her. The vessel was carried away in the ice in the autumn. The hon. member for Essex (Mr. Patterson), took quite an interest in the matter, and telegraphed to me, asking me to send tugs to save her. As this vessel was private property, used there as a lightship under contract, I declined to bear the expense of sending tugs. The case is one of hardship, worthy of all sympathy, and it shall be taken into consideration by the Government.

Mr. McCALLUM. For years they have only received $50 a year over and above the $700 paid by the Government, and they furnished everything in connection with the lightship.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). The total amount received by private subscriptions towards the maintenance of that lightship was $50 a year, contributed by the Cleveland and Detroit Steamship Company. These young men remained at their post under orders, and I think they have a legal claim for compensation. The people in that part of the country look to the Government to do justice in this matter. I am glad the Government are going to take this matter into consideration. These men have performed acts of heroism in obscurity, and they deserve the sympathy of this House, when they have suffered an unavoidable misfortune in the performance of their duty.

Mr. McCUAIG. While I am willing to support the Government in giving these men whatever amount they may think proper, I hold that they are not legally bound to pay anything. The vessel might have been secured by the payment of a small amount of insurance.

Mr. McCALLUM.

Mr. McCALLUM. The time of insuring was past.

150. Fisheries $92,800 00

Mr. DAWSON. As this vote relates to the fisheries, and as the most extensive inland fisheries are in the district which I represent, I desire to offer a few remarks to the House on this item. In the lakes inland we have recently had a new industry established, namely, packing fish in ice, and exporting it to market in that way. This is an industry which requires a large investment of capital in order to make it succeed, and without a permanent holding it is impossible for that industry to be carried on. The system prevailing in those waters has been to grant ground licenses and to renew them from year to year, the same as licenses for timber limits are renewed by lumbermen. With this tenure at several places on those great lakes, a very considerable investment has been made, and fish have been exported packed in ice, and the result has been to give a great deal of employment to poor local inhabitants, especially to half Indians, who are not very good at farming or anything of that kind, who are, in fact, fishermen by profession. The result is observable at one place especially, Killarney, which was formerly known as the most desolate and poorest place on the whole of the great lakes. The establishment of this industry there has been that Killarney has grown and flourished, schools and churches have been erected, and instead of its being a mud hole, it is now a village with plank sidewalks and improvements. This shows what an industry of that kind can bring about. That change has been brought about, not only in that part, but also in other parts of the district. I am very sorry to say that the Department of Marine and Fisheries has made a change of policy in respect to this system of licenses. From year to year the people, on the faith of leases, invested largely in this industry, and suddenly, without the slightest warning, last year the department declined to renew them. The consequence will be that many of the people will be ruined, and I, therefore, think it not out of place to ask an explanation from the Government on the subject. As I understand the matter it is this: There is also a system in existence of granting boat licenses; that is, a person may man a boat, and pay so much, and go where he chooses to fish. The people who have ground licenses have an interest in preserving the fishing ground and preventing over-fishing. The people of Killarney who had licenses, had preserved a considerable expanse, about six miles square—not a very large space in the whole sea of the Georgian Bay, which covers 7,000 square miles. The holders did not get their licenses renewed last year, and the people with boat licenses came on the ground and, in the course of a few weeks, completely depleted it, to the great hardship and injustice to those holding the ground licenses, who had made a permanent investment of $15,000, as appeared from the report of an old officer of the Government, Captain Wilson, of Sault Ste. Marie. It is not the holders of those licenses alone who have established fisheries, but we have other people who have been in the habit of holding licences, viz., the poor Indians. If the system of abrogating those ground licenses is to be persevered in, I suppose it will apply to the Indians also; and I hold in my hand a letter written from Wikwemikon, in the Island of Manitoulin, complaining that depredations have been committed on Indian grounds. Lake fisheries are not like sea fisheries, they cannot stand fishing in the same way; and if this system is to be continued, then the inland lakes which were once full of fish, will soon be like Lake Ontario, where it is now hardly possible to find them. In the Georgian Bay, ten years ago, you might set a net anywhere and catch fish; but under this system of allowing boats to roam about, and of not protecting the fisheries by granting ground licenses, that great sea, the Georgian Bay, has been in a large measure depleted of fish—although there are fish there still. Persons from Collingwood come 150 miles into Algoma and take the fish from the fishermen there, who have no other means of gaining a livelihood. I think it is a matter which should receive the attention of the Government, and I hope the people will be fairly dealt with.

Mr. SPROULE. I have received a letter from some of the fishermen on Georgian Bay who are associated with fishermen of Collingwood. It is signed by twelve or fourteen fishermen, and they strongly favor the system of licensing and not leasing. Complaints were made that many of the Indians hold a title to fishing ground which they neither use themselves nor allow others to use. If other fishermen went into that part of the lake to fish, the result was a quarrel. It seems to be the general opinion of fishermen along the Georgian Bay, coming from Meaford, Collingwood and Owen Sound, that the licensing system is decidedly the best one. It is their wish that that system should be adopted and continued. Their opinion does not coincide with that expressed by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) that fish are getting scarce there, and fish are as plentiful in Georgian Bay as they were fifteen or twenty years ago, and many of the men holding this opinion have been engaged in the fisheries for that length of time. They have written me favoring a licensing system, as being decidedly the preferable one and in the interests of the fishermen.

Mr. POPE (Queen's). I have been very desirous to meet the views of my hon. friend in this matter, but it did seem to me he required a little too much for his friends. I quite agree that men who embark capital in an enterprise ought to be protected, and every reasonable protection will be given to these men. It appears those gentlemen have received titles from the Provincial Government and are secured as to their lands. We did not think it right that the fishing grounds of a great inland sea, like Georgian Bay, should be given to one house. To a certain extent it is true, every man could go on the grounds leased to these men and fish, provided they sold their fish to them at whatever price they would be willing to give. Is it right this monopoly should exist? Every man residing there should have a right to go to the deep sea fisheries and fish, if he paid a license. I am told that, instead of their business being lessened, these men had a larger business last year than previously.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. gentleman's information is not correct. The grounds that these people hold is a little space of some six miles or so. Can that be called a monopoly of the whole sea of the Georgian Bay? Besides, these men had a vested right in the grounds, having held the lease for three years and it was renewed every year, like a lumberman's license. Had those gentlemen thought this lease would have been discontinued, they would not have made the investment they did. This was a breach of contract with them. I think the officers of the hon. gentleman's department would tell him these leases were renewable every year, and that unless they were renewed that industry could not be carried on. It is all very well to say the sea is open to any person who chooses to fish in it, and that these men can buy the fish from those who catch them, but that does not meet the case. I was passing there last summer when these people who had paid licenses had fished on those grounds. The morning I visited the place there were not less than 10,000 very large trout and whitefish landed. I mentioned to a man who had lived there all his life, that that looked well. He said: "It does, but it is ruin to us." These people came there with boat licenses, and, as he said, three weeks longer would kill the business. The fisheries would be rendered valueless. The Indians of the Manitoulin made the same complaint. The fishermen with boat licenses had ruined their grounds, which were a vested right secured to the Indians, practically if not in so many words by treaty, when they relinquished their territorial rights. If this system be continued it will soon render these inland seas valueless. I am happy to hear the hon. gentleman say he is prepared to consider the matter, and trust he will see that justice is done.

Mr. POPE (Queen's). It is amusing to hear the hon. gentleman speak of the injustice tried to be done to the Indians by taking their lands. The hon. gentleman knew his friends, who had three or four larger sections of these waters, had taken charge of a place called Squaw Island and wanted a license as well. As a matter of course the department would not grant one. That is their great grievance.

Mr. DAWSON. I know nothing about the particular circumstances to which the hon. gentleman refers, but I know the licenses were not renewed, and that if they asked for a license encroaching on the Indians rights, they should certainly not have got it, but they are entitled to a renewal of their former lease. The people from a distance knew the leased ground to be swarming with fish, because the lessees had husbanded this resource. Having a lease, they kept the place so as to have always a supply. They kept up a large establishment, had ice-houses, and employed men to pack the fish and send them to market. It was to this ground that the intruders rushed, and they plundered it, greatly to the loss of those who held the lease.

Mr. KILLAM. The close season for lobsters in western Nova Scotia is not satisfactory to the fishermen. I do not see why they should not be allowed to take lobsters for canning in the fall. If the hon. gentleman will regulate the close season—take 20 days in July and the whole of August, and allow the lobsters to be caught for canning and for export as caught, alive, during the whole of May and June, and up to 10th July, and then from the 1st September out, all through the rest of the year, he will act very much in the interest of the fishermen, without injury, whatever, to the fish on the shores. There is no reason why, in the fall, lobsters should not be taken, alive, for export to the United States, or for canning purposes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman explain the item of $30,000 for fish-breeding, fishways and oyster beds—why the increase of $3,000?

Mr. POPE (Queen's). Last year $5,000 was taken for building a fish-breeding establishment at Cape Breton and one in the Eastern Townships; $5,000 was taken off the amount for general expenditure, leaving it insufficient. You cannot well lessen the staff. In fact, as our population increases, you need more inspectors for the protection of the fisheries, and the staff has been increased. The additional $3,000 is to finish the fish hatcheries, at those places, and restore the establishment at Restigouche, now tumbling down, this being the most important point of all for parent salmon the best in the Dominion. It is a mistake to have small hatcheries all over the Dominion. The best return for the money would be got from a good hatchery at Restigouche and other important points.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman any oyster-beds in actual operation?

Mr. POPE (Queen's). There is no expense incurred for them. There are some few oyster-beds owned by private individuals, which have never cost the country a cent, nor do I think ever will. I should be very glad if the people in the Maritime Provinces, where they have facilities for producing oysters, would do so. I believe Prince Edward Island is the only Province in which oysters can be produced in any quantity. Of course, the close season has to be maintained, which cannot be done without some small cost.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I would like to know what this new appropriation means—does the Minister intend any appropriation for the creation of oyster-beds, or oyster-breeding?

Mr. POPE. It is not intended to expend any money on those oyster-beds, though it is very desirable our people should take greater interest in them. It may be necessary that some surveys should be made and reports sent to the department before licenses can be granted for fish propagation.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I think the explanation of the Minister is not satisfactory. I do not know what he means by surveys of oyster-beds. Is this survey for P. E. Island or New Brunswick? Is it intended to grant licenses to persons for the exclusive right to breed oysters?

Mr. POPE. I said the increased expenditure is for the salmon hatcheries, not the oyster-beds. If applications are made, say from New Brunswick, we must be able to say where the grounds are and what beds are there.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Have you any such applications?

Mr. POPE. The money is not to be expended in that way. It is for hatcheries.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am glad to see the Minister doing something for the cultivation of the oyster. When the hon. member for Westmoreland (Sir A. J. Smith) was in charge of the department his negligence was the means of running out some of the finest oyster-beds in the world.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I think that either the hon. Minister should say that he has a policy in the subject or strike out these words, as the vote is a new one.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Marine has given a very full explanation. He wished these words inserted, because there may be applications for encouragement to the oyster trade whenever there are oyster-beds. Unless these words are put in, however reasonable the application may be for a small grant in aid of that fishery, it could not be given. We know that round the coasts of England the oyster has almost disappeared, while by judicious cultivation the quantity of oysters raised along the coasts of the United States have steadily increased. My hon. friend wants to have the cultivation of the oyster encouraged, and in order to provide the means he asks that these words should be inserted.

Mr. POPE. I would like to see the production of the oyster encouraged, and our people take an interest in the matter, as it would eventually become a great source of wealth. There is no better place in the world for the hatching of oysters than on the Bay of Shediac, for instance. If parties go into the trade, it is necessary they should have some protection, and that protection can be afforded with a small expenditure.

Mr. OGDEN. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is an arm of the sea called Bras d'Or Lake, which contains a large quantity of oysters—they are as fine as any in the world—and very plentiful.

An hon. MEMBER. What! plentiful?

Mr. OGDEN. Yes, plentiful; so much so that they grow upon trees. Hon. members may smile, but if they will have patience I will explain to them the manner in which these oysters are propagated. When the spawn leaves the mother oyster, it attaches itself to the first object with which it comes into contact, a pebble, a blade of grass, a limb of a tree, or a neighboring oyster, which accounts for their being found in clusters, and the limbs of fallen trees on this lake are often literally loaded with oysters.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. What! in a fresh-water lake?

Mr. OGDEN. I am really surprised that the hon. member for Westmoreland, the ex-Minister of Marine and a member of the late Government, that spent thousands of dollars in opening the St. Peter's Canal into that lake, should show such a lamentable want of knowledge of the geography of his country. I should not have been surprised had the question been asked by the hon. member for Monck or for Prince Edward, who live near the inland seas of Canada, but I really did expect something better from the ex-Minister of Marine, who ought to know that the Bras d'Or is an arm of the ocean. I have several times called the attention of the Minister to the locality, and am pleased at finding a sufficient sum of money placed at his disposal to enable him to foster and encourage this valuable fishery.

Mr. KILLAM. I would call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that, in the propagation of fish, he has not given any attention to the four counties in the western part of Nova Scotia, Queen's, Shelburne, Yarmouth and Digby. I do not know that he has planted any salmon spawn in Annapolis county. The hon. gentleman says, he thinks it is much better to have a few large fish hatcheries than to distribute small ones through the Province. I had some hope he would have placed one in my own county. He must be aware that there are a number of rivers there just as good for salmon as any of those in the eastern part of the Province, or in New Brunswick, in which he has been placing spawn to a large extent. I think the means of communication now existing will enable him to stock those rivers without difficulty. I hope the hon. Minister will take steps during the coming season to stock a number of rivers in that part of the Province with some. If he is going to survey for oysters I think he will find in St. Mary's Bay a good field for his operations. There are no oysters, so far as I know, on the coast of America between Boston and the Strait of Canso. Of course, the whole south of the coast of Nova Scotia and some parts of the Bay of Fundy offer a good field for their propagation. St. Mary's Bay is a good place for oysters, and if he will stock it with them we will ultimately have a large commerce in oysters.

Mr. SNOWBALL. In what condition is the Miramichi hatchery, and how many ova are there now in it?

Mr. POPE. I will be prepared to furnish the hon. member with the latest information to-morrow.

Mr. ANGLIN. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction in some of the Maritime Provinces with regard to the manner in which this whole expenditure is managed, and particularly with regard to the fish hatcheries. It is thought by many that New Brunswick has many fine rivers adapted for salmon, but it does not receive proper attention from the Department; that a great deal of money is expended on the western lakes in experiments which, it is said by some, have proved a failure. The hatching of some in the western lakes was productive of no very beneficial results up to last year. Some allege that they never can produce good results, and that the money expended in that way has been wasted. I think there were some special reports on the subject last Session, in which the fact that few salmon had been caught in any of the lakes was controverted by the statement that the salmon remained in deep water for the greater part of the year and did not come into the rivers for propagation. Perhaps the hon. Minister can tell whether there is any prospect of rendering salmon a fish of commerce in those western lakes. It seemed from the first an extraordinary undertaking to endeavor to transplant salmon to those waters, and I think the experiment has not proved successful. It is time we should know what the result of the experiment is. Many millions of fry have been let loose in those waters, and in the natural course of things the propagation should have been great; there should have been an increase from the hatcheries also, and if the experiment was at all successful there should now be a large number of salmon in those western waters. The hon. Minister knows that last year there was a great deal of correspondence on the subject in the newspapers, and I can assure him that the feeling is still just as strong as it was last year. We feel that a great many of our rivers have not received proper attention.

164. North-West Mounted Police. $290,000 00 .

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The amount asked for is the same as last year. We find that, although there are three months yet before the first of July, that sum will not be exceeded. That sum will cover the expenditure for 1881, and it is a very large reduction from the previous year. For the last five years it was, in round numbers, $347,000. $290,000 will cover the expenditure of 1880-81, and we ask for a similar sum for 1881-82, although we hope that the result of the economies being introduced will reduce that sum considerably. As it is, the year 1880-81 shows a reduction of $16,000 in the expense of the force as compared with the previous year. There is a reduction in the pay of the force of $8,000. The men now receive 40 cents per day during the first year, and 50 cents per day during the other four years of service. The old rates were 50 cents per day during the first year, and 75 cents per day during the remaining four years of the term. We found that we could, with an improvement to the quality of the force, reduce the pay. The pay was originally very large, fixed at a time when it was new, and when the difficulties of going through an unknown country were perhaps exaggerated. But the pay was so good that there was a rush of men to the force; we found great pressure brought to send up gentlemen's sons—educated men, of broken habits—and the force was to some extent made to serve the purpose of an inebriate asylum. Under the present system we find that we can get good men, equal to the members of any constabulary force. We propose, also, to adopt a scale for a small additional allowance for long and faithful service, which we hope will be an inducement for good men to remain in the force when they get there.

Mr. MILLS. I observe that last year, although the vote was $290,000, the expenditure was $332,855, $43,000 over the estimate, so that the hon. gentleman will have to economize to that extent to reduce the expenditure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The responsible officer is confident that the expenditure for 1880-81 will not exceed $290,000.

Mr. BLAKE. I have been informed, on what I believe to be good authority, that, notwithstanding the very stringent regulations maintained in the force, there has been a considerable amount of drinking at some of the posts. I have also been informed that there is a considerable amount of desertion. I should like to know if the hon. gentleman has any information on these points.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As regards the habits of the men, I think, on the whole, they are in a very fair state, but there is still a good deal of drinking. As the hon. gentleman knows, some of the force is stationed on the frontier, and there has been, I am afraid, a laxity in granting permits. Besides, there has been no care taken to number the permits, and I have reason to believe also that there has been a great use of that most noxious alcoholic drink, Perry Davis' Pain Killer. It contains a great quantity of alcohol, and has not only affected the physical health of the men, but the mental health of some of them. That has been used largely under the pretence of being medicinal, but, really, I am afraid, as a stimulant. We propose to have the permits numbered and limited. There has been, and there will be hereafter, a more rigid discipline preserved among the men. Colonel Macleod, who formerly commanded them, was a very good officer, but he was too kindly towards the force. He is now a Stipendiary Magistrate, and Colonel Irvine, who is now in command, is, I believe, considerably more of a martinet, and is paying particular attention to the restoration of discipline and the correction of the dissolute habits of some of the men. When the force was first established, they were scattered in small detachments all over the country. It has been found, however, that it would be infinitely better for the efficiency of the force, to have headquarters somewhere near the line of the Pacific Railway, more in the centre of the country. The Indians are beginning to settle down peaceably on their reserves, and more economy can be effected and more rigid discipline maintained, by having a larger amount of the force at the headquarters. Another rule that was destructive of discipline, was that when men were sent to an outpost, they were kept there during the whole period of their enlistment without any opportunity of drill. The military system has now been introduced, and the men will be changed from headquarters every two years; it will be a moveable instead of a stationary force. Among other objections to its being a stationary force was that some of the officers began to have herds of cattle, and thought more of speculating and attending to their personal interests than to those of the force. All this is destroyed by the system of moving every two years. The men first come to headquarters, and every second year, as the older men became perfectly drilled, they are sent to the out-stations. I am informed there have been nine desertions of men who were desirous of going to the alleged gold mines, and of those eight were recaptured.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the statement of the hon. gentleman as to the proposed systematic transference of the men who occupy the outposts is very satisfactory. There are many reasons, besides those to which he has referred, which will naturally occur, why men should not be permanently kept in small bodies at a small outpost. The House would like to know a little more as to the extent of the change of principle in locating the force, to which the hon. gentleman has alluded; whether it is intended to have only one important body at headquarters, and how many outposts was it intended to have. I am sorry to hear the statement as to the abuse of liquor permits. When I had charge of the force I abandoned the practice of granting permits. I found a very painful case of a private, who was said to be a most excellent member of the force, but who was tried by court-martial and found guilty of gross insubordination, he having struck his officer while drunk, the officer having received a permit. It appeared impossible to maintain discipline if officers were allowed permits. I issued an order that total prohibition should be enforced throughout the whole force, officers as well as men. A request was made that the liquors on the way out should be turned into the medical stores, and should be accounted for in that way, which I acceded to; but so long as I had the regulating of the force, no officer was allowed to ask or accept a permit.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the officers are under the same restrictions as the men, but permits are granted to other parties.

Mr. SCHULTZ. The present system of permits is faulty in itself. It acted very well so long as the only ingress into the North-West was past the Mounted Police station at Shoal Lake; but it does not work effectively now there are different means of entering the country. The abuse of the system occurred from a party who, once procuring a permit, being able to use it over and over again.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman inform the House as to what progress has been made in the cultivation of farms at the outposts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Considerable progress was made last year, but the summer frosts greatly injured both the quantity and quality of the crop. It had not turned out so well as had been expected; but that was an exceptional frost, and I hope there will be substantial aid from this source to the food of the force next year. In regard to the increase of $7,000 on the item for repairs and renewals, replacement of horses, arms and ammunition, $6,000 was required for horses, $1,500 for renewal of general equipment, and $1,500 for tents.

Mr. MILLS. I suppose a very large sum in the $3,000 for contingencies is paid for advertising. I have had some of the papers sent to me in which those advertisements appear. Among others was the North Star, a paper 7 inches by 2, with three columns on a page; and the Orange Lily, which appears fitfully, according, I suppose, as it has an advertisement to publish. The hon. gentleman has gained nothing by a large portion of his advertising, as there are only two or three parties who can supply the beef at Fort McLeod, and with these men he could have communicated by letter, instead of advertising for the supply in the Halifax Herald, the St. John's Sun, and the Moncton Times. The hon. gentleman's object, no doubt, was to aid that struggling industry, the Conservative press. In the hon. gentleman's department alone, upwards of $10,000 are paid for advertising. It would be better to have this item put separate in the Estimates, so that we would know how much this advertising patronage costs us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman's suggestion is worthy of consideration, and we shall designate it specially as an attempt to encourage periodical literature in the country. If the hon. gentleman will look back, he will find there was a considerable amount of substantial pecuniary aid given to Grit literature when the late Government was in power. The advertisements were supplies of clothing, saddlery, etc., which can be procured in Canada at very fair prices. The whole amount of contingencies asked for this year is $3,000 for the Force, and for the Indian Department $3,000 more. Under those two items must be found the means of paying any advertisements the Mounted Police or Indian Department requirements may call for.

Mr. MILLS. That is just about ten times the former amount.

Mr. SCHULTZ. There has been an abuse in this matter of advertisements, which the member for Bothwell has not been precisely responsible for. I have had occasion, myself, the last two years, to call attention to the enormous preponderance of supplies furnished by the firm of I. G. Baker & Co., and I have said that the best way of preventing this abuse was to advertise more extensively in the Dominion for supplies. No doubt those advertisements were designed partly to diminish the great cost of the supplies to those distant points. I am sorry to say they have not been effective for this purpose; for I see by the last accounts that I. G. Baker & Co. received for supplies, $104,858.67; Powers & Co., $2,299.92; the Hudson's Bay Co., $3,927; Mahoney & Macdonald, $820.26; Stobart, Eden & Co., $656.71. Still, I think the effort is one in the right direction, and that if it has not been successful, it is no fault of the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there to be any report about the Mounted Police?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is in the printer's hands. It will be furnished, complete, by next Monday morning.

Mr. MILLS. Is there a report for the Department of the Interior, separate and distinct from that of the Department of Indian Affairs?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; because they are now separate bureaus.

171. Permanent Headquarters, Mounted Police...$20,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Where will the headquarters be? What is the general plan?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Force is now scattered all over the country, and the present barracks are cold and exceedingly uncomfortable. It is proposed to place the headquarters somewhere on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, so that the Force can be sent east and west, wherever their services may be required. The headquarters are not yet selected.

172. Expenses of Dominion Government Agency at Rio Janeiro..... $1,250 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is this sum intended for a Consul, and who is the gentleman?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is to be an officer in that city who knows the products of Canada, and what are likely to be exchanged for the products of Brazil. The Brazilian Consul in Canada has strongly pressed upon us the opinion that we should have some such officer in Rio Janeiro, with a view to the increase of the trade between the two countries. And the Brazilian Government and some merchants of Rio are to send to Montreal specimens of all Brazilian products in return for specimens of our productions, in order to educate the people of that country in regard to what we can make and produce for them.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. For $1,250 you can hardly get the services of a competent person. Perhaps you had better choose somebody residing in that country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe the Postmaster General, who is in charge of this enterprise, has made arrangements for a competent person in Rio Janeiro to act in that capacity, and the Brazilian Government have placed a very handsome building at our disposal, as a sort of museum, in which to display specimens of our productions.

173. To meet expenses connected with the consolidation of the Dominion Statutes..... $5,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. What are the arrangements for the consolidation of the Statutes?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fancy we will follow very much the example of the Ontario Government, who, I understand, have made a very successful consolidation. We have not yet selected a commission, nor formed any specific plans. The Minister of Justice will apply himself to that subject after prorogation.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very glad that this vote is proposed. We had a vote here for some years, and spent a small sum in preparations, with a view to such a work. The Ontario Government employed the services of two young lawyers to do a considerable portion of the rough work, and unless the Government will adopt that course they will have to follow another plan. The matter will, I suppose, be settled when we get the plan for re-modelling the Supreme Court.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So far as the consolidation and codification is concerned, I think I might say we will almost require another Judge, and that my good friend Judge Gowan might have to be brought down here to keep a watchful eye on the work.

174. Expenses of Commissions of Enquiry$10,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. What is this for? Are we going to have more of them?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Pacific Railway Commission and the Civil Service Commission have, of course, been running, and it is not at all improbable that we may have to look to a commission to enquire into the Supreme Court question. I hope we shall not be obliged to do so, but it may be necessary.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the hon. gentleman is not going to postpone the remuneration of the Civil Service Commissioners until 1882, and that amount should be estimated in a supplementary report. As to the Pacific Railway Commission, I would fain hope that it is nearly over. I am sorry.

to hear that it is contemplated to refer the Supreme Court question to a commission.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. It seems to me absurd that there should be any question raised as to the desirability of retaining the Supreme Court. I know that so far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned the matter is beyond question altogether. These discussions which take place every Session tend to impair the usefulness of the Court, and I do not think the matter is one which should be trifled with. I think it is one of the grafts of the institutions of this country, and we should endeavor as far as possible to maintain the confidence of the people in that country.

Mr. BLAKE. I was sorry to hear the observation of the First Minister with regard to the Supreme Court. I think it was an unfortunate one, in view of the fact that the proposition made last Session to abolish the Supreme Court was rejected by a decisive majority. The discussion which we had the other evening was not upon the question of abolishing the Court, but as to the proposal to withdraw a certain class of subjects from those which should come within its consideration; and I do not recollect that one name of note in this House was recorded as wholly hostile to the retention of the Supreme Court. I think it would be unfortunate, if the idea should get abroad, that there was in the House any question of whether the Supreme Court should not have a definite existence. I hope that the Administration, having announced a policy last Session, and having made a pledge this Session that the whole matter should be considered, will announce as fair a policy with regard to the Supreme Court.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid that there are a good many hon. gentlemen in this House, from both the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec, who are against the Supreme Court. I believe that once the Court is made more satisfactory to the Province of Quebec, it will be a different question; but the hon. gentlemen will find that there is among the members of this House representing Lower Canada, a very strong feeling against this Court. That Province is withdrawn altogether from its jurisdiction, and the Court ceases to be a Court of Appeal for the Province of Quebec.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. We have had a vote on it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman knows that but for the action of the Government the vote might have been quite different.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no doubt that when the Court was first established it was somewhat unpopular in the Province of Quebec, but, so far as I am acquainted with the feeling in that Province, that unpopularity is constantly dying out. The facts confirm it. I have looked over the reports of cases and find that forty-five appeals have been taken from the Province of Quebec, and of this number only seven or eight related to civil rights or arose under the civil laws of Lower Canada. All the others were either criminal or constitutional cases in which Quebec has no special laws of its own, and the principles of which affect the Dominion at large. Everybody must admit that if, in the course of five years, that Court has been called upon to decide only seven or eight cases of a civil nature, Quebec has no reason to feel anxious. I know that at the outset that Court was unpopular in Quebec, but that feeling was of a political nature; the Court was unpopular before it was established, but from purely political motives. At the last general election almost every hon. gentleman from Quebec now sitting on the opposite side of the House, attacked the Supreme Court with more or less bitterness. It was represented as a useless institution. But that feeling is changing. We heard the hon. President of the Council admit, the other day, that it was not a useless institution, and that it was a necessity of our political institutions. The objection from that Province is now reduced to a certain part of its jurisdiction. The principle of the Supreme Court is now generally admitted. This is an immense gain upon the language used three or four years ago. It was then said in Quebec, by gentlemen who have since become members of this House, that the Court was altogether useless. We can expect that those who spoke that language at the last election will still adhere to that opinion, but we can expect also that if their opinions have been modified on the main question they will be modified on the minor question. One objection now made to the Court is this: It is said that it is illogical for us to submit our laws to be reviewed by a Court composed of men who have not been trained in those laws. Yet we must choose between the Supreme Court and the Privy Council, and everyone must admit that it would be better for us to have them reviewed by the Supreme Court where two of our men sit, than by the Privy Council where none of our men sit. It seems to me quite clear, both from the experience of the past and the illogical opposition now made to the Court, that its unpopularity in Quebec is constantly diminishing, and I have no doubt that in a new Parliament it will have completely died out.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a strong feeling in Ontario against this Court, and were it not for the assurance given by the Government that this matter would be looked into very soon, that feeling would find expression in this House. But as the Government have promised to endeavor to remedy the grievances of which we all complain, the members from Ontario refrained from taking any action against the Supreme Court. The hon. member for West Durham says he is not aware of any members of note in this House opposed to it; but whether they are of note or not, if they are sufficient in numbers to carry the Bill, I can assure him their desire is strong enough to do it.

Mr. LANDRY. Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to protest against the assertion of the hon. member for Quebec East, that the hostile feeling shown up to the present time by the Province of Quebec against the Supreme Court, was gradually dying out. The hon. member for Quebec East is certainly laboring under a false impression. When, in 1877, he solicited the votes of the electors of Drummond and Arthabaska, the hon. member was obliged to defend the creating of the Supreme Court and the votes that he had cast; and if the hon. member was beaten, he may attribute his defeat in 1877 to the bad odour in which the public held the Supreme Court.

Mr. LAURIER. That is not the reason; it is because the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and several others promised that factories should be built in all the parishes.

Mr. LANDRY. I had the pleasure of taking a part in that contest in Drummond and Arthabaska, and as far as I am concerned, I can assert that I did not promise any factories. At that time, we promised that if we were sent to the House, we would try to have justice done to the Province of Quebec, and that feeling has generally grown from day to day. This was referred to just now, when an allusion was made to the several votes taken in this House with regard to the abolition of the Supreme Court. But if one compares this year's with last year's votes, one will see that this feeling, far from being on the wane, is manifesting itself more strongly, for last year there was against the abolition of the Supreme Court a majority of over 100 votes; this year, that majority has been reduced to 49; and should the question come up before the House next year or in two years, that majority will be still further reduced. The Hon. Premier has himself said that if the Government had not put its shoulder to the wheel, the Supreme Court would probably have been abolished this Session, so strong is the hostile feeling against the Supreme Court in this House, as, indeed, throughout the country. It has sought to make a comparison between the Supreme Court and the Privy Council, and the hon. member for Quebec East has said that he preferred the Supreme Court because we had two Judges who understand our language. True, but for two who understand us, there are four who can only render judgment according to sound principles, whilst in England, before the Privy Council the parties pleading are sure to be understood, whatever be the language that they speak, for the Judges of the Privy Council are erudite men, who perfectly understand the French language.

Mr. LAURIER. This is an argument against the Court; this is an argument against the Judges.

Mr. LANDRY. It is an argument against the Judges of the Court such as it stands to-day; and as long as such Judges form part of such a Court, so long will such a Court suffer therefrom. At any rate, by asserting that the argument is against the Judges, the hon. member for Quebec East admits that there is an anomaly that should be done away with; consequently, we are perfectly justified,—we, representatives of the Province of Quebec,—in demanding justice at the hands of this House, and I am not the only one of this opinion, which is that of the whole population of the Province of Quebec. Who are those who ask that the Supreme Court be maintained? It is perhaps those, who, like the hon. member for Quebec East, are lawyers as well as members of Parliament.

Mr. BERGERON. I can understand the people of the Lower Provinces being in favor of this Court; but, in the Province of Quebec, it is becoming more unpopular every day.

Mr. LAURIER. Why?

Mr. BERGERON. Because we do not want it; because we can have our cases decided in our own Court of Appeal. When the Superior Court was established, it was stated that it would be a final Court of Appeal; but it is not, as we can go to the foot of the Throne. When a lawyer from the Province of Quebec comes to plead before the Supreme Court, he is placed in the awkward position of having to plead in English. When we go before the Privy Council, we can plead in our own language, and we are addressing Judges who understand our laws. I do not blame the Judges of the Supreme Court for not knowing our laws, because they have not studied them; and these men, at least one of them, have shown that they are political men still.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BERGERON. I say that the sentiment of the House is against the existence of the Supreme Court, and I believe, that if the chief of the Government were opposed to it, it would be swept away by an immense majority. In the discussion which took place the other day, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Macdougall) spoke logically when he said that we should have the same laws all over the Dominion. If we had the same laws all over the Dominion, there might be some justification for the Supreme Court. But we in the Province of Quebec want to keep our own laws; and I am sorry to hear the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) talking in the way he does.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I am equally sorry to hear a member from the Province of Ontario speaking as my hon. friend from South Bruce (Mr. Shaw) has spoken. The more this matter is discussed, the worse it becomes, as such discussion tends to injure the Court. I think I am in a position to say that the popularity of the Supreme Court is increasing in Ontario day after day. I agree with the hon. member for Westmoreland (Sir Albert J. Smith) that it should be considered as a part of our Constitution.

Mr. LANDRY.

Mr. VALLÉE. Mr. Speaker, I have something to say with regard to the Civil Service Commission, so as to caution those who represent our interests in the Government against adopting the report of that Commission. I hope that the Government will never submit to the decision of the majority of that Civil Service Commission. That decision is simply infamous, and I here declare that if the Government brings forth a measure to give effect to the report of that Commission, that I will strenuously oppose it. The conditions imposed on those seeking employment in the public service would lead one to believe that those who have sat on that Commission have had in view the ostracizing of the French Canadian element from the Civil Service. I hope that the Government will give the matter its most serious attention, and that it will do justice to our fellow countrymen.

Mr. SPROULE. Some of us have heard the case of one man who spent $800 in litigation for the recovery of a debt of $40, and still did not collect it. I believe it is every lawyer's duty to defend his own interests, and in defending the Supreme Court or any other Court, he is defending his own interests. But I can assure this House that there is a very strong feeling against the Supreme Court. There is a feeling that we have too many Courts and too much law. I believe, if the question were placed before the people, a large majority of the electors of Ontario would express themselves against the Supreme Court.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I find that a great many appeals come from the Province of Quebec to the Supreme Court. Why is this the case, if that Court is so unpopular as it is represented to be? It deprives the people of no right they had before. They may still go to the Privy Council, if they wish. I believe the gentleman who last spoke does not know anything about the sentiment of the people in reference to this Court. I think the personnel and the decisions of this Court are becoming more popular every day throughout the whole Dominion, and there is no just ground for the hostility to this Court.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I have but one word to say in reply to the hon. member for Portneuf, and that is that he need not fear for the interests of the French Canadians. Their interests will be protected as well as other interests.

Resolutions ordered to be reported; and (at 1:45 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 11th March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORTS ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. LANGEVIN moved that in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee of Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines, the time for receiving reports of Private Bills be extended to the 16th instant.

Motion agreed to.

SALARIES OF JUDGES.

Order for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That the following be the salaries of the Chief Justice and Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island, instead of their present salaries, viz:—

The Chief Justice per year	$4,000
Two Puisne Judges, each per year.....	3,200

2. That the following be the salaries of the following County Court Judges, viz:—

To the Judges of the County Court of the County of York, Ontario; of District No. 1, Nova Scotia, and of the County of St. John, New Brunswick, each per year..... $3,000

To the Judge of the County Court of each County, Union of Counties or District in Ontario, of which the population exceeds 50,000, $2,000 per year, for the first three years; $2,400 per year, for the second three years, and $3,000 per year thereafter. The period of service of a Judge now in office to be counted, but the increase of salary not to take effect retrospectively.

To each Junior Judge of a County Court, $2,000 per year, for the first three years, and $2,400 per year thereafter. The period of service of a Junior Judge now in office to be counted, but the increase of salary not to take effect retrospectively.

3. That an additional sum not exceeding $100 per year, be allowed to such Judges and Junior Judges of County Courts in Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, as may be fixed by the Governor in Council, reference being had to the time occupied in travelling and the distance travelled.—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou.)

read.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, the notice which has been for some time on the paper, embraces provisions for increasing the salaries of the Supreme Court Judges of Prince Edward Island, and also the salaries of certain Judges of County Courts throughout the Dominion. The publication of the notice following its introduction into this House has enabled me to obtain a large amount of information, with respect to the position of those gentlemen who occupy so important a position in the judicial system of our country, both from members of this House and occupants of the Bench. I have received various communications affecting in a greater or less degree the distribution and nature of the distributions which is proposed by these resolutions. The result of that information thus acquired has been to impress the Government with the fact that the wisest course will be, in view of the fact that the census of the Dominion is about to be taken during the coming summer, and before next Session, and of the necessity of arranging with the greatest care the mode in which the admitted desirability of supplementing the salaries of these gentlemen should be met, not to press upon the House during this Session any of the resolutions of which I have given notice, with the exception of the first. Therefore, I will confine my attention to submitting to the House the first resolution which explains itself, viz: That the salaries of the Chief Justice and Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island, be as follows: The Chief Justice per year, $4,000; two Puisne Judges each per year, $3,200. I need not recall to the House the fact that Prince Edward Island was admitted into Union with the other Provinces in 1873. At that period she possessed the same judicial system, the same amount of judicial strength that the Province now possesses, viz: three Judges, one the Chief Justice and two Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court, as it is called in that Province, one of them being also Master of the Rolls and the other Vice-Chancellor. In addition to those, there were at the time of Union three County Court Judges, making altogether six Judges, which is still the judicate strength.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. There were no County Courts at the time of Union.

Mr. McDONALD. Yes; there were. We have established no County Courts since Union. At the admission of the Island, the salaries of the County Court Judges were $3,000, and subsequently we put them on a parallel with the County Court Judges in other Provinces, and placed their salaries at $2,600. All the Judges of the Supreme Court in the other Provinces have had their salaries increased since the Union. The Judges of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have had their salaries increased—not to an equality with the salaries of the Judges in the larger Provinces, but pro rata, so as to bring them to a comparative equality—not such as we ought to be satisfied with in the Lower Provinces; but still their position and condition was recognized, and an increase was given which made their position, comparatively with the population, and, perhaps, comparatively with their political influence, fairly consistent with the dignity of their several Provinces and with the dignity of the position which they occupied. At the present moment, therefore, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, the Judges of the higher courts are paid in this proportion: in Ontario, the Chief Justice is paid $6,000, and the Puisne Judges $5,000 each, with this very notable and important addition, that the Province of Ontario, under the name of salary for the performance of duties which I think are performed only, or principally, in the imagination, pays its Judges $1,000 each. So, in Ontario, the Chiefs of the several Courts receive $7,000 a year, and the Puisnes $6,000. In Quebec, the Judges do not stand quite so well, because that Province does not pay them anything out of the Provincial funds, and therefore the Chiefs get $6,000 a year and the Puisnes $5,000. In all the other Provinces, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, the rates are the same. In Manitoba and British Columbia, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the Chiefs are paid $5,000 a year, and the Puisnes $4,000, while up to this time, in Prince Edward Island, where the Court is of equal dignity and importance in regard to the functions which it performs, and the jurisdiction conferred upon it, and where the only possible difference is the difference of population and the difference in the size of the territory over which their jurisdiction extends, the salary of the Chief Justice is only $3,000, or $1,000 less than the Puisnes receive in the other Provinces, and the salary of the Puisnes in Prince Edward Island is only $2,500, or only $100 more than the pay of the County Judges in the same Province. I think that every gentleman in the House, however strong his views with reference to economy, will feel that that is a comparison that cannot bear argument. In the first place, with reference, merely, to the social position these gentlemen occupy, and to the changed condition of affairs and the cost of living since Confederation, independent, entirely, of the rank and dignity they occupy as Judges of the Supreme Court in their Province, I think their position is entitled to consideration, and I, therefore, propose not to equalize their salaries with the salaries of the Judges of the other Provinces—though I frankly admit, speaking for myself, that I can find no reason why those Judges of Prince Edward Island should not occupy, in respect of salary, as they do in respect of jurisdiction and dignity, so far as their Court is concerned, the same position as their fellow-Judges in the other Provinces—though I do not propose now to act upon that view—that the Chief Justice in Prince Edward Island shall have $4,000 a year, instead of $3,000, and the Puisne Judges $3,200, instead of $2,500.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman in making an allusion to the position of the several Judges, I think might have added, with reference to which I quite agree with him, is an objectionable provincial payment in Ontario, that the Legislature of that Province has resolved, by a decisive majority, that that payment shall not continue beyond the tenure of office of any Judge who now receives it; so that is not to be regarded as a permanent payment, as I am glad to know. With regard to the present resolution, I cannot myself agree with the personal view of my hon. friend (Mr. McDonald) who, perhaps, may have spoken more as a prospective Chief Justice of Nova Scotia than an hon. member of this House; for he said he could see no reason why there should not be an absolute equality in the salaries of all the Chief Justices and Judges. But I have always agreed that those salaries ought to be suitable to the dignity and position of the offices, having regard to the cost of living and the emolument of the Bar in the Province in which the judgeship was

We have to give, as I said more than once, such salaries as will secure to the people the best persons to fill the high seats of justice. I agree with the hon. gentleman that there is one cause for bettering the position of the Judges in Prince Edward Island, to which he has not alluded—the cost of living has largely increased since Confederation—I do not mean putting it in the old sense of the term, for it would be inapplicable, because the position of those gentlemen was largely improved in 1873, on the admission of their Province into the Union. But since the admission of Prince Edward Island into the Union, the cost of living has largely increased, through the policy of hon. gentlemen now on the Treasury Benches, who probably think they ought to make the Judges some compensation for that increase.

Mr. BRECKEN. I listened with much pleasure to the views of the Minister of Justice, and only regret that he should not see fit at present to carry out his opinions with regard to the compensation of the Judges of Prince Edward Island, who, he properly thinks are entitled to the same salaries as the Judges of the other Maritime Provinces. I am at a loss to understand why the Government should not have made the salary of the Island Chief Justice $5,000 and those of the Puisne Judges $4,000. However, in behalf of the judiciary of Prince Edward Island, I will say I am glad the Government have thought proper to make the present increase of their salaries, though I regret they are not placed on an equality with those of the Judges of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The Minister of Justice was quite right in saying that just previous to Prince Edward Island entering the Union, we passed a County Court Act, and the Judges of that Court were duly appointed. Previous to that time, we had a Court of Commissioners for the recovery of small debts throughout the Island. That Court is now abrogated, and the duties really performed by the County Court Judges are those which were performed by that tribunal. The member for West Durham threw out some hints upon the cost of living in Prince Edward Island being latterly increased. He was not very clear on the point. I imagine that was a hint to the members from Prince Edward Island who voted for the National Policy. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the cost of living on the Island has not increased on account of the altered financial policy of the Government, though it is a fact that the cost of living has increased within the last twenty-five years to a very great extent. Shortly before I left the Island, one of the Judges of our Supreme Court drew my attention to that fact in the course of a conversation I had with him; and I believe myself that since those Judges were appointed, the cost of living in Charlottetown has increased fully fifty per cent. I suppose the Government had reasons for not dealing a little more liberally with us, but, speaking as a representative of Prince Edward Island, I am glad to find that they have increased the salaries of our Judges. I hope the Minister of Justice will see the propriety, the justice, and the necessity of putting the Judges of our Supreme Court upon an equality with those of the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I presume that every member of the House is perfectly content that the resolutions which the hon. Minister of Justice has proposed, should be carried. I understand that it is based on the necessity in order to get the best men to fill the position of Judges in Prince Edward Island, to increase the salaries, that increase having been rendered necessary by the increased cost of living on the Island, and probably also by the increased aims in their profession which are open to the members of the Bar of that Province, who are competent for Judgeships. But the same principle when duly applied, will undoubtedly lead to the increase of the salaries of the Judges in other Provinces; for, as I understand, there is nothing singular in the position of Prince Edward Island in that respect.

Mr. BLAKE.

As the hon. member for West Durham has pointed out, the present addition to the salaries which the Judges of the Supreme Court receive from the Province will not be granted by the Province to any newly appointed Judge; and I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, when it becomes necessary to fill vacancies occurring in the Supreme Court Bench of Ontario, will find a difficulty in getting those gentlemen whom he would wish to appoint, to accept the position without the additional allowance which is paid by the Province of Ontario. The hon. Minister spoke of this allowance being given in consideration of services which were merely nominal—which had no real existence. The service in respect to which it was originally granted, and has continued to be paid, was the duties which these gentlemen performed as Judges of the Heir and Devisee Court of Ontario. Some years ago they had a large amount of work to do in that capacity, occupying them many weeks, and causing them not a little anxious and laborious consideration. Lately there has not been so much of that work falling upon them, because the powers which they used to exercise exclusively are now vested in the Commissioner of Crown Lands. The Court still meets twice a year, however, for several days, and does a certain amount of work. It will be necessary, hereafter—and at no very remote period—I have no doubt, for the Government to consider seriously the question as to whether the necessity for a general increase of the salaries of the Judges in Ontario at least, has not arisen in consequence of the determination of the Ontario Government not to pay that additional $1,000 a year. I regretted to hear the announcement of the Minister of Justice that he did not intend to proceed with the resolutions in reference to the County Court Judges of Ontario. I think the putting of these resolutions on the paper, amounted to a statement on the part of the Government that they thought there was a grievance or an injustice that ought to be remedied, and I think it would have only been right had they carried the resolutions through the House, either in their present form, or in some modified form. I have no doubt that every legal member of the House has received sufficiently numerous communications from the County Judges of Ontario to convince him that there was a general feeling that the question of the salaries and allowances of these Judges was one which required consideration, and required also that an alteration be made.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Some lay members have got letters too.

Mr. CAMERON. No doubt they have. I have received at least a dozen myself. I am not prepared to say that the resolutions as introduced, were entirely acceptable, either to the class affected, to the Bar, or to the public generally; but members of the Bar of Ontario on both sides of the House held a meeting, discussed the matter and submitted their views to the Government; and I did hope that the Government, if not prepared to adopt those representations in their entirety, would at any rate have taken up the subject and legislated upon it this Session. I can quite understand that if they adopt the population basis as the foundation for the salaries of the Judges that they could do so better after the census is taken; but still, having raised the hopes of the County Judges of Ontario, that the injustice under which they feel they are laboring would be removed, it is to be regretted that the resolutions have not been proceeded with.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I have noticed ever since I became a member of this House, that if a question affecting the Bench or the Bar comes up in the House, every lawyer on both sides is willing to hold up his hands for it. The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Blake) approves of the resolution as a lawyer.

Mr. BLAKE. No; I do not.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Well, I beg your pardon then, but if you have not done so on this occasion, it is the first time.

Mr. BLAKE. I have repeatedly spoken in another sense.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). That is how I noticed the matter. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) says he has received letters from the Judges complaining that their salaries were not high enough; but let there be a vacant Judgeship or deputy Judgeship and many letters come asking for the appointment. I think that both the Bar and the Bench are very well looked after, and the Government has acted wisely in dropping a portion of the resolutions. Had they not done so they would have found a good many of their supporters opposed to them.

Mr. BUNSTER. The Minister of Justice has alluded to British Columbia, but he knows very little of the expense of living in that Province. My remarks are intended for the Minister of Justice, in order to induce him to do justice to the Judges of British Columbia. They have to pay large fees indeed for servants, and when he draws comparison between Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, I am sure he is laboring under a mistake. I am astonished that the Minister of Justice has not done more justice to our Judges in British Columbia and increase their pay as well as that of the Judges in Nova Scotia. I dare say he has learned by this time that one of our Judges, who is a very able and much respected gentleman indeed, from the small pay he was getting, saw fit to better his condition in another country. He has left our flag, as I am credibly informed. It is the duty of the Government to give the Judges sufficient remuneration to enable them to keep up their establishments, as they do in Prince Edward Island and the other Provinces.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I fear my hon. friend from West Durham did not understand my argument, or I am quite sure he would not have insinuated that I was actuated by personal or unworthy motives in bringing down this resolution. I did not advocate at all raising the salaries of the Judges of the smaller Provinces to an equality with those of the Puisne Judges of the larger Provinces. My observation, to which my hon. friend referred, was with reference to the inequality between the salaries of the Judges of the smaller Provinces. I observed that personally I could not see why the Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island should not receive the same salary as the Chief Justice of British Columbia, or Manitoba, or New Brunswick, or Nova Scotia, but I did not in any way, so far as I can recollect, advocate raising the salaries of all the Judges to an equality with those now received by the Judges in the larger Provinces.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the hon. gentleman and the House did not suppose I was making an imputation on him. I thought I was making a very innocent and not unpleasing joke. I am glad to see that there was so much earnest about it.

Resolution considered in Committee, reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou), introduced a Bill (No. 95) to increase the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the Province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BLAKE. From what date is the increase to take place?

Mr. McDONALD, From the first of July next.

Bill read the first time.

PETROLEUM INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. MOUSSEAU, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 75) to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act, 1880 (from the Senate), said: When the hon. leader of the Opposition asked for papers relating to this subject, he said he was opposed to the principle of this Bill unless it could be shown that it was in the interest of trade. I think it is not only in the interest of trade, but of public safety and of National Policy. The flash test is one necessary for the public safety, and after the experience of this and other countries, the gravity test is found to be a secondary precaution. It appears that there is a substance called paraffine in coal oil. The specific gravity of petroleum is increased by the presence of paraffine held in solution. The presence of paraffine in excess permits the presence of the lighter products of distillation in greater proportion than is consistent with safety without reducing the flash test so long as the paraffine is held in solution. An exposure to cold, say to a temperature of 15 degrees Fahrenheit, will crystallize the paraffine which is then precipitated, when the lighter products predominate, and the petroleum that previously stood the flash test, ceases to do so and becomes dangerous. It has also been found that petroleum which contains an excess of paraffine becomes dangerous in another way. The lamp wick becomes encrusted and its capillary action destroyed by the paraffine, and the circulation necessary while feeding the flame is impeded. As a consequence the wick holder is heated, the heat is communicated to the metallic parts of the lamp and thereby to the oil, and an explosive vapor is generated. Probably a greater number of lamp explosions originate in this way than in any other.

Mr. COLBY. It is obvious that the paramount consideration in legislation on this important subject should be that of the safety of the people who use the burning oil. That was the object of the legislation of last year. We all recollect, prior to the assembling of Parliament last year, the large number of fearful and heartrending accidents that occurred all over the country. The attention of Parliament was called to the fact, and legislation was had, which was designed to insure to the people a safe burning oil. In that particular, the legislation has been eminently successful, for during the past year we have noted almost no accidents. In fact, I do not myself recollect to have seen in the newspapers the report of a single accident. Undoubtedly some have occurred that have not fallen under our observation, but I am sure we must all be aware that the danger of the use of coal oil has been very much lessened by the higher fire test and the higher gravity test adopted at the last Session of Parliament. But the effect of both of these tests, while they ensure safety, has been in the direction of enhancing the cost of the oil. There is no doubt that we can have a cheaper oil by removing both tests, but then we would have oil that would be as explosive and dangerous perhaps as gunpowder. The practical point for this Legislature to determine is what is the safety point, and this is one attended with a great deal of difficulty. This is obviously so, because no laboratory experiment can determine this point. You cannot subject the oil to any chemical tests that will correspond with the actual conditions existing in the country where the oil is used, because we know that the oil, in many instances, is ignorantly exposed to an inordinately high temperature. It is not unusual to find, in a country store, a lamp suspended near a stovepipe, and to see oil exposed in such a way that, unless it is absolutely safe, accidents must occur. Then again, a chemist cannot take accurate account of the actual condition of the lamps, burners, and other appliances made use of. Consequently, no office or laboratory experiment, with respect to either the fire test or the gravity test, can be an infallible guide. Any legislation on this subject must be tentative. Now, the question is, how far may we with prudence relax the test imposed last Session, so as in some degree to cheapen the cost of the oil? I am in favor of relaxing the gravity test; I am not in favor of relaxing the fire test. I think experience has shown us that we have arrived at about the right point. I am very glad that the Government now brings down the proposition I urged with great pertinacity and earnestness last Session, and that they recognize that there is no difference intrinsically between Canadian and American oils, and that they should be subjected to the same test. The Government went a long way last Session towards meeting that view, and this Session I am very glad to see that they have gone the whole length in that direction. I am very glad to know that my opinions on that subject have been confirmed by tests which I understand the department has made during the previous year. I think it would be unwise at present to tamper in any way with the fire test, and I am very glad the proposition of the Government does not propose to do so. The hon. Minister who introduced the Bill intimated his willingness, if it be the sense of the House, to relax the gravity test from 802 to 805, and I think that, perhaps, he is acting prudently. I think it may be relaxed to that extent with entire safety; possibly it might be relaxed to a greater extent. I am not at all sure that it would not be safe to relax it to 807, but I do not think it would be safe to go beyond that. In this matter we should proceed with caution. I would rather be conservative in this matter. I would rather the hon. Minister would relax the test to 805 this year, and if found safe to do so, make another relaxation to 807 next year, than take the jump from 802 to 807 this year. It is an experiment which cannot be determined with accuracy in the department itself, it must rest on experience outside the department. I think this legislation is wise and judicious and conservative. There is no doubt that the safety of oil largely depends on its gravity as well as upon the other conditions, for, in order to have a safe oil, it is necessary there should be free combustion. Anything that prevents free combustion, anything that prevents the ascent of the oil freely from the lamp through the wick, anything which has a tendency to char the wick and check the combustion of the oil increases the risk of explosion; the lamp becomes heated, and the gases which would, if there were free combustion, pass off and be consumed, are pent up within the lamp and only wait the opportunity to explode. On the whole, I am inclined to think that these propositions are entirely within the line of safety. I think the House should accept the suggestion to relax the gravity to 805, reserving the privilege of still further relaxing the test if it were found safe to do so, rather than overstep the line and find ourselves using an unsafe oil. I have stated that these restrictions do somewhat enhance the cost of the oil, but it has not enhanced it to the extent popularly believed. The popular impression is largely due to the change in measure. This year we are using the Imperial gallon when formerly we used the wine gallon, and people, on finding they are paying several cents more per gallon for their oil, are apt to overlook the fact that they get a larger gallon than they did formerly. I happened to be absent from the country, during autumn, when a very interesting newspaper discussion was going on, and did not observe it, but since the opening of the Session I have taken some pains to ascertain what has been the cost of the oil that is used in the section of the country from which I come. I obtained from a leading dealer in oil in the Eastern Townships, a firm very reliable in its statement, a statement of the cost of oil to them per wine gallon. The cost in Portland was thirteen cents per gallon; adding the various items of freight, duty, inspection fee, duty on barrels, freight on empty barrels returned to the United States, Customs fees, Customs charges on the returned barrels, the whole amounting to 21 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents for the wine gallon, which is not an inordinate price. I believe also that similar prices have been obtained in Cleveland.

Mr. BLAKE. Are they New York prices?

Mr. COLBY.

Mr. COLBY. I have not enquired with regard to New York prices. I have enquired with regard to Portland and Boston prices, with which I think Cleveland prices correspond. The firm to which I have referred, Messrs. Luke and Mitchell, have given me a statement of the cost, which amounts to 21 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents laid down at Sherbrooke. These prices should have determined the prices of Canadian oil, but it is possible they did not do so, because it is quite possible that merchants who are in the habit of ordering their oil from certain Canadian firms have kept on doing so without any reference to the prices of articles imported, and I have no doubt that, in some instances, owing to the disturbance during the autumn which is likely to occur in any branch trade for a short period, people have been paying more than was necessary to pay in consequence of any legislation that was adopted, if they had enquired as to the cost of oil in the American market. I will go as far as any man in the direction of relaxing the test in order to get cheaper oil within the line of safety. Still, I believe, we ought to be conservative in this matter, because it is one on which hon. members are very ill-informed. This question of the gravity test is not one to which many hon. members have given any special attention. What little attention I myself have given to the subject, has been rather directed to the fire than the gravity test. I am fully persuaded there should be a gravity test in order to procure safety. With these views I shall very heartily support the proposition of the hon. Minister. I believe the legislation is in the right direction. I shall be very willing, at the next Session of Parliament, if it is proved that we have not overstepped the mark in making the test 805 to 8° still further in the relaxation of the gravity test. The problem is one that cannot be solved by discussion here or by any experiments in the laboratory. It can only be solved by experience in the homes of the people.

Mr. BLAKE. To what extent will the relaxation of the gravity test tend to reduce prices?

Mr. COLBY. I believe it will lessen prices by one cent per gallon.

Mr. BLAKE. The Bill, of course, is an improvement on the law as it now stands. It is an improvement certainly to find the fire test equally applied to the imported and the native oils. I find the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby), who at an early period, with other hon. members, took that view, at length was justified by the decision of the Government itself. Sir, the circumstances under which the struggle took place and was continued, and was for so long successful, for obtaining and retaining a higher fire test for American than Canadian oil renders me somewhat suspicious of the motives which have animated those who have pressed upon the department the adoption of the gravity test; because it is admitted pretty candidly by the hon. Minister on a former, as on the present occasion, that his Petroleum Act was a combining of a regard for safety and of a regard for the National Policy. Now, the argument that was addressed to us when we were asked to sustain a difference between the fire test on Canadian and American oil was not that it was a protection to native oil. It was that the circumstances were such that, in order to secure public safety it was necessary that there should be a higher fire test on American oil. Protection, hon. gentlemen were told by the hon. member for Stanstead, and other Protectionists, they were quite willing to give Canadian oil. Hon. gentlemen said: "Whatever the Canadian manufacturer require in order to give him command of the market, we are willing to give; but we want to be honest about it; and have it put on in the shape of a duty, and by that means we shall know precisely how the thing is worked;" but the hon. gentleman asserted that this was an indirect means of giving an industry an additional amount of protection in a dishonest way under the color of a provision for the public safety. Of course, I took the hon. gentleman's statement to be accurate. I was prepared, had he done last Session what he intimated it was his intention of doing, to have sustained him by my vote in equalizing the test, as I quite agreed with him that it was a very great additional disadvantage that the attempt to encourage manufactures should be done in an indirect way, under false pretences, and in a manner in which the public could not calculate what the effect of the protection was or what was the exact operation of the whole system. I am not imputing to the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches that they did not really entertain these sentiments with which they pressed those Bills; I am speaking of what I believe to have been the views on which inequality of tests were pressed by those interested on the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite. That is all admitted now. Hon. gentlemen have found that the arguments that were then advanced were worthless, that public safety does not require an inequality of tests, that public safety is secured by a fair test, and exactly the same test being applied to American and Canadian oil. There remains the serious question whether the test is not fixed too high in order to keep out safe American oil. I fear it is. Hon. gentlemen have also found, of course, that public sentiment was not such as would admit, in view of the results of that mode of protection, the adoption of the National Policy in this particular department of it; yet the hon. gentleman told us the other day that it was a mixed system under which the public safety would be assured, and a little additional protection introduced. Now, what follows from all this? This follows. When the same source, which you have found misled the Government, the House and the country for some years with respect to the fire test, proposes a new gravity test, you have a right a little to suspect the representations made by those persons; and when to that is added the fact that the gravity test was propounded not in public, not in a manner in which the House had any practical means of forming or expressing an opinion upon it, it is the less entitled to respect. My hon. friend for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) says it behoves us to be excessively cautious how we interfere. Were we not rash in interfering in 1879 and 1880? It is well to recall the circumstances under which the prohibitory gravity test was introduced and placed upon the Statute-book. Resolutions were introduced by the late Minister in 1879, which he declared had regard to the fire test. Neither in his speech nor, as far as I recollect, in his resolutions was a word said about the gravity test. It appeared for the first time in the Bill. There was no explanation given about it in the House. As far as appears from official reports of the House—I was not then a member—and without any statement being made, it passed through the House wholly unobserved. It was inserted in a law which the House was told was designed to deal with the fire test, and this new prohibition with regard to oil became the law without one word of explanation, of discussion, or without any opportunity being given to those concerned to make their representations, to give their explanations, to consider the matter, or to the House to form an opinion upon it. In that way a prohibitory gravity test of 807 found its way on the Statute-book. What happened during the Session? The hon. Minister found this Bill of 1879, which had been carried through the House in a very great hurry as far as the fire test was concerned, and with still greater celerity and less discussion certainly, as far as the gravity test was concerned, did not answer the purpose. The fire test being the subject of very much discussion during last Session, the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) having from an early period intimated his intention to move an equalization of the tests on American and Canadian oils—the Government having, as we know people constantly in communication with them, persons sitting in the Library and about the House almost the whole Session in connection with the question, in the interest of the oil refiners, I believe, or of some of them—I say the Government then brought in resolutions, and the Minister announced that those resolutions dealt solely with the question of the fire test. The hon. gentleman did not say a word about the gravity test under the resolutions. The House was not told it was intended to alter the gravity test in any way or shape; the Bill was brought in, run through the House, and passed its stages in about five minutes, without one word from the Minister to inform the House that the Bill dealt with anything else than the fire test. I would like to know how many hon. members knew that the prohibitory gravity test of the previous Session had been by that legislation altered, and made still more rigid than it previously was? Well, the hon. gentleman has found that in both those measures as to the fire test there was error, and that in the principle of inequality there was error. He has found, practically, that in the change made in the gravity test of last Session there was error; because he now announces a willingness to alter that test and bring it to a point between the point of the Bill of 1879 and that of the Bill of 1880—to bring it up again from 802 to 805, which he informs us he believes the minimum test which is safe. As I understand him, he proposes this test on the ground of the public safety, and not from those mixed motives from which he appeared to act on a former occasion—he proposes to adhere to a prohibitory test and fix it at 805. Both these propositions are advanced—first, that the public safety requires a prohibitory gravity test, and, second, that it requires to be fixed at 805. I think when we find that it is proposed to change the action which took place at the close of the Session, after full information to the Government though not to the House, it would be more satisfactory if the hon. gentleman would give us the full details of the evidence upon which he proposes this reduction. The member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) says there can be no scientific evidence which would prove it, that nothing in the laboratory would enable one to tell the safe point; that the test of practical experience, as the oil is sometimes used, is the only test available. Well, then, where is that, and wherever can that be which will enable us to reduce the gravity test? Will you prevent me absolutely from burning in my house or warehouse oil of a lower gravity than 805, and at the same time announce as your principle of action that, unless by the practical experience of ordinary consumption, it is impossible to tell whether any lower gravity will be safe? How in the world are we ever to know that any lower gravity would be a proper test?

Mr. COLBY. If experience proves that 805 is not safe, we may go to 807 next year, and if this figure will not answer, to 809 the year following. Do not overdo the mark.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not wish to overdo the mark. The hon. gentleman says, that in this matter experience alone is the guide—that practical experience has told us 802 is safe. Well, how does he know that 803, 804 or 805 would be safe?

Mr. COLBY. It is purely an experiment.

Mr. BLAKE. You are going to make a test. The hon. member for Stanstead states the refiner's test is not safe—that you want practical experience to guide you in fixing a test. I say there is nothing to show that any change is safe. But he says, practically, we will make a jump in the dark so far as 805—it would be dangerous to make a jump so far as 806—and that if you find 805 is not safe, by the experience of a year, we can go down to 807, obviously reducing the amount three points this year and two points next year, and, I suppose, the following year, if that is safe, one per cent. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman proposes later to go down half a point, if that is safe; but it is a diminishing ratio of progression that he proposes for these tests. I think there is much force in his view as to practical experience with reference to that degree of safety or danger in the burning of the oil, in this question of capillary attraction; but I deny that it would be reasonable or right, with the enormous additional cost which a very high gravity test would impose, to apply such a test as he proposes. He says we know that oil is often very carelessly used—that in the country, sometimes, it is put in very close proximity to a warm stove—and we want to provide that the oil should be safe when men use it in a dangerous manner.

Mr. COLBY. That was not my argument. We must take, I said, the average experience. I say the oil is exposed to such conditions. I do not believe that oil should be made so absolutely safe that under no possible amount of carelessness or mismanagement there would be an explosion. I instanced an extreme case. I do not say that we ought to keep a test that would meet that extreme case; but we have to meet all conditions of practical use. My argument simply is, that the whole thing is an experiment; it cannot be determined in the laboratory, in the office, or in any other way than by the average of common experience under the conditions that exist. I mentioned the difference in lamps, mentioning old worn-out lamps as one of those conditions. Another is a very serious condition in the climate: it is found that a certain degree of cold will separate the constituents of the oil, leaving the lighter particles to rise and the heavier to fall. The oil may be drawn off in such a way after this partial separation, that the heavier particles forming the lower strata, and the lighter particles the upper, will only at a certain temperature be wholly mixed; at another temperature those particles will be separate, and you may get the heavier particles where you got the lighter. These conditions will enter into the general public experiment; and upon the results as they are found to exist, I am prepared to base my judgment, and not upon any scientific test. We are within the line of safety now. I am prepared to relax it step by step until we come to the verge of safety, which ought to be the getting of the cheapest oil compatible with safety.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says he is disposed to take an average, and he has given us a new instance of the risks experienced in this connection, which suggests the old direction that druggists attached to their mixed prescriptions—to be well shaken before taken. I do not know to what extent this argument may go. If there is a possibility that the oil, unless well shaken up, may in certain states of temperature separate itself, one part becoming very dangerous and one part quite safe, we may have—to accomplish absolute safety under all conditions, if one portion will not rise in summer as well as in winter—to raise the price of one of the first necessities, perhaps I should call it the first necessary of life to the people. I say there is a reasonable mode of dealing with this question, not dependent upon the conditions which the hon. gentleman suggested. While those conditions, from their importance must always be taken into account—I mean those connected with the practical working of any test through the whole country for a considerable period of time—I am quite sure it is possible to accumulate evidence very rapidly and easily, from the consumption of oil with lamps in various states of use and deterioration, with various kinds of wicks, to make such experiments with much greater rapidity than the hon. gentleman suggests, and yet to gain quite a sufficient margin of experience to enable us to act otherwise than the hon. member supposes. And mark this: it is a serious question for the people of this country. The tax which they are paying upon their light in order that some careless people might be protected from reaping the consequences of their own carelessness—the general tax which the whole community is paying is something enormous. What with the combined operations of the law I find that the price which Canadians pay for their oil is now about twice the price which is paid in New York, and a little while ago it was three times as much.

Mr. COLBY. But that is not the fault of the law.

Mr. BLAKE. I said that I was not speaking of this provision of the law alone. It is partly, and I believe largely, the fault of the provision we are discussing, and I agree it is not entirely the fault of this particular impediment. But all your laws in reference to petroleum at this moment, as I understand from practical men, have this result: that the people of New York can buy their oil at one-half the price which we have to pay for ours. How long, I ask those who are interested in the protective aspect of this question, will the people of Canada submit to pay twice as much for their oil as they need to pay? I say that those who are interested in the production and manufacture of oil in this country, are playing a most suicidal part in endeavoring to keep up the gravity test to any point which is not demonstratively demanded by the public safety. Inasmuch as it is clear that the gravity test does enhance the price of the article, the result of their keeping up a difference between the price of the article here, and the price at which, but for this test could be procured, will be that the whole fabric will fall; and, therefore, in their interest—though I do not profess to speak in their interest—it is important that an obstacle which will have the effect of still further increasing the price of oil should be removed. There is indeed a reason why a very high specific gravity test is favored by some who are engaged in refining. It is favored by those who at once produce crude oil and refined—those who are owners of oil wells and refiners. And why is it favored by that class? It is because the higher you keep the prohibitory gravity test, the more gallons of crude oil you require to make a barrel of refined oil; because there is a greater consumption of the raw material, to give the people the same number of gallons of refined illuminating oil. That is the purpose, and that is the line which now divides the refiners of this country on this subject. Those who are not engaged in producing crude oil, so far as I am aware, are almost unanimously in favor of the reduction of the specific gravity test. Those who are not engaged in producing crude oil—some of them at all events—are taking a somewhat different position.

Mr. COLBY. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to state that every refiner who has communicated with me on the subject—and for some reason or other a great many do communicate with me—has been in favor of the relaxation of the gravity test.

Mr. BLAKE. To what degree?

Mr. COLBY. To different degrees, but they are all in favor of relaxation.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not say that they are not in favor of some relaxation, but I say that, so far as I have had communications, I find the line to be that those who are not engaged in the production of crude oil are more liberal with reference to the degree to which they are willing and anxious that a specific gravity test should go than those who appear to combine the operations of producing and refining the crude oil. For this I can find but one reason, namely, the reason which animates the producer of crude oil—and it is not a reason which should commend itself to this House—that there should be a real waste of the natural production, only that there might be a greater quantity consumed at the expense of the people of this country. It is true I have received letters from some engaged in both trades, and none of them have favored keeping the test up to 802, and that is the strongest proof that could be given of the utter recklessness and impropriety of the legislation of last Session. I believe that with the exception of one man who professes to speak for the trade, no man engaged in the trade knew the intentions of the Government with reference to the gravity test which they imposed last Session; and that if the Government had acted upon the wise and proper course which should precede all legislation of ascertaining the views of the people with regard to it, the change would not have taken place. On the evening the Bill passed through the House, I received a telegram from one of those who are engaged most largely in both producing and refining, stating that the Canadian trade would be ruined if the change was made. I received this telegram at eight or nine o'clock in the evening; I went for the purpose of showing it to the Minister, but he was not in his place; I went again at ten or eleven o'clock, but I found that with that expedition which sometimes characterizes the other branch of the Legislature in some matters of legislation, the Bill had passed beyond its reach. I can understand that those who are engaged in the business in a very large way and have worked up to the exigencies of this test, should desire to retain an advantage which they have acquired, but I say that this test operates injuriously in two ways: First, by requiring a much larger quantity of raw material to make the same number of gallons of refined oil, and, secondly, by requiring a tedious and somewhat uncertain process to be gone through with in order to produce the result; for it not unfrequently happens that the process has to be repeated at considerable expense to give the oil—after it has attained the required fire test—the specific gravity which is prescribed. Those who have the best instruments, those who have their business in such a shape, that they can with the greatest certainty work up to a high and difficult test, would have a considerable advantage over others, under the operation of a law which insisted on such a high test, and I can conceive that they too should also be anxious to keep it up to a needlessly high point. Upon the evidence which I have at present, though I hope we shall have more before the Bill goes through, my belief is that the general view of the refiners is, that there should be a considerable reduction in this test, even in their own interest. I wish to say further, that while I have compared the general price of oil in New-York with its price in that country, I do not contend that that is the only test. It is well known that the price of oil is regulated in many cities, for instance in Cleveland, as I believe, and in some other places as I know, partly by their tests, but largely, not by any operation of the laws of trade, but by the will and power of the Standard Oil Company. That great monopoly, by reason of the power it has attained, and by means of the arrangements it had made with railway companies, does keep up in some places much more than in New York, but, as I believe, in New York itself, also, much beyond the level which it would otherwise attain, the price of oil in the United States. Therefore we are making a comparison, not with the price at which the people of this country might obtain their oil under natural circumstances, but a comparison with the very disadvantageous circumstances existing in the States; and still, disadvantageous as they are, and however great the odium which has been created by the existence of the Standard Oil Company monopoly, they are so much better off than we are that they are paying now in New York about half what we are paying here. My desire is that we should not, in legislating upon the subject of gravity, legislate upon the same line as animated the legislation upon the fire test; but that we should legislate with regard to the public safety alone; that we should not interpose in this matter what the hon. Minister thinks is a good thing, the question of indirect Protection; that, whatever we are willing to do to protect the producer of crude, whatever we are willing to do to protect the manufacturers of refined, we should do honestly, openly, and above board, by a duty levied on the imported article, and that we should, as far as all other regulations go, make them just as free as the public safety will permit. We have come down to that now, as we are told, in the fire test, though that is still a question. We find, it is said, that 802 is the lowest to which the hon. gentleman can go as to the gravity test. I do not intend to discuss that point just now; it will come better in the discussion upon the reception of the report; but I wish to say for myself that I think it wholly indefensible to legislate in the way of prohibiting the people of this country from what they shall eat, drink, or wear, or consume, in any shape or way, except with regard to the public safety. My hon. friend (Mr. Anglin) does not extend that to alcohol. I think the public safety is concerned in the alcoholic question, therefore I am quite consistent. I look with well grounded suspicion on the representations which induced the Government to bring in a gravity test of 807, to alter it by making it 802, and which have now induced the Government, in obedience to a very strong pressure, which was due, I suppose, to the enormous prices which oil has attained, to say that they are willing to make the reduction to 805. I say I believe their sources of information are largely tainted sources, that they are tainted in this sense: that their informants are animated by a desire to make as high a gravity test as possible with the view to a greater consumption of the raw material, and not with exclusive reference to the public safety.

Mr. ORTON. The leader of the Opposition has treated the House to a very elaborate statement on this subject, but I think he has furnished us with very little information. I think the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) has treated the subject very clearly. The flash test is now the same on Canadian oil that it is on American oil. The fire test, which my hon. friend has referred to, has nothing to do with the public safety. With reference to the gravity test, it does not aid in any way to increase the protection against American oil. American oil, as a rule, is much lighter than Canadian oil, and it is much lower than 802. I believe there is one kind of American oil imported into some parts of this country that is of the same heavy character as the great part of our oil. I must congratulate the Government that they have seen their way clear to increase the specific gravity, because it will enable our coal oil refiners to produce an oil at a much cheaper rate, and the public will be the gainers. I am glad to notice in a paper I received the other day that there have been new oil discoveries at Oil Spring; new wells have been struck, and the oil obtained is of much better quality than that at Petrolia. Consequently the Canadian public will receive a better oil in the future and at a cheaper rate. That paper states:

"We are bound to light up Canada with a pure, clear, non-combination burning oil; there are already other companies forming; one expects to commence operations next week, and so confident are our citizens of success, they are willing to stake their last dollar in the enterprise. With the C. S. Railway station at Oil City within two miles of us, and the superior quality of our oil, we will guarantee Dr. Orton, M.P., and his friends who are crying out against the Petrolia monopoly, that we will give them as fine and much safer burning oil than the Americans at reasonable rates.

I think there will not be much interference with the duty, and if the Government next year can see their way clear to still further increase the specific gravity it will be a still greater advantage to the public.

Mr. KILLAM. There are persons who believe that all the legislation upon the subject of oil has been entirely in the interest of the oil producers of Western Canada and against the interests of the public generally. I do not object to the oil legislation we have had as a Free Trader only, but in the interest of the revenue and the interest of morality. The hon. member for Stanstead and myself can scarcely agree upon the prices in the United States. I am inclined to think, from the low figures he has given of the prices in the Eastern Townships, that by some means or other oil of a lower grade is admitted there than is allowed to pass through our Custom house. I took trouble to make inquiries in Boston, from which the Maritime Provinces are chiefly supplied, and I learned that the price of oil which would pass the Canadian test was 17½ cents per wine gallon. It was oil of a lower grade, but it was in common use and was considered perfectly safe for domestic purposes there, and was selling for about 11 cents, I think. I have reason to believe that, in some cases, the owners of vessels trading between some ports in the Maritime Provinces and Boston have brought back cheap oil as a return cargo, and smuggled it into some outports of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, having a premium, partly from the Minister of Finance, and partly from the Minister of Inland Revenue, of something over 100 per cent. for so doing. My opinion—and I believe I speak the opinion of the great mass of the consumers in the Maritime Provinces, as well perhaps, as that of the people of that part of the country which my hon. friend from Stanstead represents—is that the test is now too high. I believe the test in England is only 105, and that the oil, under that test, is used with perfect safety. I believe the law will not be right until the specific gravity test is taken away; until the fire test is reduced to something like 105, and until the oil producers and refiners of the west are satisfied with the too high duty of six cents per gallon, which is nearly 100 per cent.

Mr. COLBY. I think the change in the fire test from 120 to 115 will be sufficient to meet the views of my hon. friend (Mr. Killam). Last year there were experts here from the United States, among others a gentleman who is the inspector of nearly all the oil that goes from New York to Liverpool, and they were under the impression that a fire test of 120 would admit the standard oils, which were not too expensive. But it has been found by experience that many oils would not come up to that standard, but, perhaps, as far as 118, and could not be admitted. I have no doubt, therefore, that a test of 115 will admit that class of oil which my hon. friend desires to admit.

Mr. KILLAM. I do not pretend to have that knowledge of the subject which the hon. gentleman has, but I believe every time an oil bill has been brought before this House, it has been for the purpose of giving underhand a protection to the refiners of the west above the six cents of duty which we are willing to allow to them openly and honestly.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. The hon. leader of the Opposition tried to make the House believe that the Government had concealed the fact that they wanted to place a high duty on American oils, and give greater protection to Canadian oils. I want to say to the House and the country that the policy of the Government from the beginning of this matter has been fair and above board. When in 1879 we made the flash test 105 on Canadian oil, and 130 on American oil, it was obviously protection for Canadian oil. So that we have resorted to no crooked ways in bringing our policy before the country. This year, when we say that the flash test shall be uniform on American and Canadian oils, we cannot be accused of anything of that kind. The hon. gentleman regarded the gravity test as another means of giving protection. In establishing the gravity test, the Government have been inspired by a very simple motive. As I have said, this is a new trade. It attracted the attention of the House first in 1868. In 1871 we applied the flash test. Then it was discovered that a new test was necessary. Everybody knows that before 1868, the daily papers constantly recorded accidents from the explosion of coal oil lamps. After the introduction of the flash test, the number of accidents decreased. I may mention that some three years ago, the attention of the department was directed to the effect of the change of temperature on the quality of petroleum, and some experiments were made in relation thereto. Among others, a quantity of petroleum of known gravity and flash test was placed in a tall sample bottle, at a temperature of about 65 degrees. It was then, by means of a freezing mixture, reduced to a temperature somewhat below zero. A sample taken from the top of the vessel would not stand as high a flash test by about 10 degrees as it stood before it was exposed to the cold, and its specific gravity had been reduced. A sample taken from the bottom of the vessel stood a higher flash test than before, and its specific gravity had been increased. The causes of explosions are found to be quite as often from lamps in bad condition, and wicks in bad condition, as from low test oil. The highest test oil that can be made will explode if sufficient care is not taken to secure free circulation through the wick and free combustion in the burner. Various experiments have been made during the last twelve months, and their results decided the Government to retain the test. As the hon. member for Stanstead has well explained, the refiners do not want the gravity test applied, as it is not in their interest to apply it. The Canadian oil being much lighter than the American oil, the former averaging seventy gallons to a hundred gallons of crude, and the latter only forty gallons, no protective policy would be sufficient to counteract the difference in quality. By applying, therefore, the flash test and the gravity test equally to both oils, you will get the best oil at the cheapest rate.

Bill read the second time.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I am always disposed, when I cannot get all I want, to take what I can get. I move that in the first clause, two be struck out and five substituted.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. That is my proposition.

Bill, as amended, reported.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION BETWEEN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ASIA.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Langevin: That the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions respecting telegraphic communication between the Pacific coast of the Dominion and Asia.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Since the adjournment of this debate the other day, the Government have considered this resolution, and come to the conclusion to ask the House to pass it with this modification—striking out the exclusive privilege. The other modification I stated the other day—that instead of the date, 1st October, we should put 1st January next, giving the promoters twelve months for preparations, on account of the great distance to be travelled. We think twelve months is not, under these circumstances, an unreasonable delay.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sure the House will receive with every gratification this announcement, because it will remove serious difficulties in the prosecution of this measure. I suppose that this announcement involves the announcement of the policy that this Parliament will not be asked to consider this privilege an exclusive power, or to reject another proposal for the incorporation of cable companies for the same purpose.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Of course.

House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. There is just this question which I would like the Minister of Public Works to answer: what is the reason now that the monopoly is removed, that the incorporation should not be under the Electric Cable Companies Act—why there should be special legislation at all?

Mr. LANGEVIN. We are of opinion that special incorporation under the powers asked here, would be the proper thing under the circumstances. The general Act is not considered sufficient, or perhaps certain modifications would be required in the Bill. When it is introduced and printed, hon. gentlemen will see whether there may not be certain provisions that are not required here, because they will have to be made specially. The idea is to secure for Canada that telegraphic communication with Asia which we may not obtain, or which we may only obtain with great difficulty, if we delay the matter any longer. I shall have great pleasure in showing the hon. gentleman the correspondence, and when he sees it, perhaps he will agree with me that it would be inadvisable in the public interests to publish it at once.

Mr. BLAKE. My suggestion was not made with the slightest idea of causing delay, but I think it a sound principle not to have recourse to a special Act if the work can be accomplished by the general law. I would like to ask if it is intended to depart from the provision of the Cable Act with regard to the prohibition, upon the granting of the charter, with reference to those companies who insist upon maintaining exclusive rights elsewhere.

Mr. LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. BLAKE. So that if exclusive rights had been obtained in Japan, it would be incumbent upon the projected corporators not to insist upon those exclusive powers?

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I should like to know if the hon. Minister can give us any reason for the Government introducing a special measure for Mr. Fleming and his friends, when others are not so favored?

Mr. CURRIER. I should like to know upon what footing the Bill, for the incorporation of the other company, will stand; whether it will be allowed to pass, and if the two Bills will be on the same footing. Also, if there will be any deposit?

Mr. LANGEVIN. There will be no deposit in either case. The Bill to which he refers will come before the Railway Committee, where I have no doubt it will receive that justice which the Committee accords to all measures which come before them. In reply to the hon. member for Westmoreland, I may say that I think if he looks at the general Act he will find that this company could not be incorporated under it. As I stated before, the Government thought, and they still believe that it would be in the interests of the Dominion that we should ask these powers.

Mr. BLAKE. I understood my hon. friend to say at the beginning, in answer to my question, that the elimination of the monopoly clause was intended substantially to indicate that it would not be the policy of the Government to obstruct the incorporation of other companies. That is his first position. I think that is wholly satisfactory so far. I think it will equally follow from that view, that as a general principle, when the Government is proceeding to consider the provisions of proposed incorporations for other companies, they will put them on the same footing as this company. There are some things in his Bill that are objectionable. There are some things the hon. Minister proposes to introduce that may be objectionable, but I think it will follow naturally from the view that there is to be no monopoly, that there is to be no preferential advantages of one company over another.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The removal of the monopoly clause from the resolutions removes the objections to the Bill, as I stated to the House the other day when the matter was before it. I would suggest to my hon. friend that the question that has now been raised, will be more definitely discussed after the Minister of Public Works introduces the Bill which he proposes to do. When it comes up for discussion in the ordinary course, the Bill of my hon. friend will have passed the Railway Committee, and will then be before the House. We will be in a position to see just what rights and powers Parliament has thought fit to grant to the company incorporated by the Bill which he has in charge. I am quite sure the feeling of the House is, that no preferential advantage should be given to any one. I may say that, since the discussion on the subject the other day, I have had some communication with Mr. Fleming and some conversation with him about it. I am told that Mr. Fleming has devoted a good deal of time and labor to this matter, and, in so far as I can judge, in a most disinterested manner. If it is necessary that powers should be taken by the Government to incorporate himself and associates in the manner proposed at present, I see no objection to it, the exclusive privilege being eliminated.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the real truth of the matter is, that the Administration made this arrangement with Mr. Fleming, which would probably have been carried out in all its entirety had it not been affected by this resolution. It is obvious that if Mr. Fleming was now called upon to proceed by Private Bill, he could not get a Private Bill, and I think, with my hon. friend, that he should not be in a worse position than if he petitioned for a Private Bill.

Resolutions reported as amended, and concurred in.

Mr. LANGEVIN introduced a Bill founded on said resolutions, which was read the first time.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou), in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 87) respecting the naturalization of aliens, said: The object of the Bill is to amend our laws with respect to the naturalization of aliens in this country. Since Confederation we have been governed in regard to matters affecting the naturalization of aliens in this country by the Act passed in 1868, as amended in some particulars by the Act of 1870, and as regards

Mr. BUNTING.

British Columbia by the Act of 1872. By that Act, three years' residence in Canada conferred upon aliens, conforming to the necessary forms, the rights of British subjects in Canada. The privileges thus conferred were confined to Canada alone, and did not confer upon those availing themselves of our laws, the rights and privileges of British subjects out of Canada, and as if they had become naturalized under the Imperial Act. The House will observe that the Imperial Act of 1870 conferred the right of naturalization of aliens upon British subjects, but it has not been applicable heretofore in Canada, so as to enable persons naturalized under our laws to avail themselves of that Act. The Empire of Great Britain has entered into conventions by treaty with various foreign nations with the view of enabling it by mutual consent of the respective parties to the several treaties to confer, with the consent of the country of origin, the rights of British subjects upon those coming from other countries. The principal object of the Bill is to place the law upon such a footing in this country that, with the consent of the Imperial authorities, who will, I am given to believe, upon the passage of this law, take such measures to obtain such Imperial legislation that parties becoming naturalized in Canada will possess all the rights, privileges and immunities which belong to British subjects naturalized under the Imperial Statute. This is very important, and will become still more important to this country in view of the large immigration which we anticipate in the immediate future from the various countries of Europe, particularly from that country from which we hope to receive a large accession of strength, namely, from Germany, from which we have now so many industrious and intelligent citizens now residing among us. The Imperial Government have, moreover, placed themselves in communication with the German Government, with a view by treaty of enabling German citizens leaving Germany to settle in this country with the consent of their own Government, and to obtain the rights of British subjects in this country. I need not say to the House that without consent, while we can confer the rights of naturalization upon foreigners, we can only do it in so far as those rights will not operate in contravention of their natural allegiance in the country of their birth. And it is only by the mode which I have indicated, by mutual treaty and convention between the respective countries, and arrangements by the necessary legislation, that the important privilege can be obtained for foreigners coming to this country to settle here. This Bill endeavors to carry out this object we have in view very fully. We still retain the period of three years as the time of residence in this country, which will enable a party not heretofore naturalized to naturalize himself in Canada. I have reason to believe that, with the consent of the Imperial authorities that naturalization in Canada will hereafter confer very much higher rights and privileges upon a naturalized citizen than heretofore. Heretofore those rights and privileges operated only in Canada. But hereafter they will, from the necessary legislation in England, confer the rights of British subjects in every part of the Empire. It then provides that a native of any foreign country, residing in Canada for the length of time which the laws of that country prescribe as the period during which it will be necessary for any of its subjects to reside in a foreign country, before becoming entitled to be free from his natural allegiance, shall be naturalized, and shall have obtained such rights and privileges as in the previous clause are conferred irrespective of that convention. The Bill is divided into several sections. There is very little new in it. It is framed very much on the model of the Imperial Act with such modifications as suit the circumstances of this country, also embracing such portions of our own Act heretofore in operation as the circumstances of the case seem to require. The first division of the Bill relates to the status of aliens before naturalization, referring to the position which they may obtain in the country without becoming citizens. That is determined in section 4, in which they are allowed to hold real and personal property, with the exception that it does not qualify them for any office, or for any municipal, parliamentary, or other franchise, or to become owners of British shipping. Then there is a declaration of previous naturalization. Any British subject from Canada having gone abroad and become naturalized in a foreign state, ceases by virtue of this law to be a British subject. Provision is, however, made in subsequent clauses of the Act, by which such British subject, desiring to rehabilitate himself and be restored in his allegiance, shall have the power of doing so. Section 17 enacts:

"An alien to whom a certificate of naturalization is granted, shall within Canada be entitled to all political and other rights, powers and privileges, and be subject to all obligations to which a natural-born British subject is entitled or subject within Canada, with this qualification, that he shall not, when within the limits of the foreign State of which he was a subject previously to obtaining his certificate of naturalization, be deemed to be a British subject unless he has ceased to be a subject of that State in pursuance of the laws thereof, or in pursuance of a treaty or convention to that effect."

X In other words, that, until it is agreed by convention between Great Britain and the particular State of which the party has been a subject, naturalization in this country does not obliterate his natural allegiance to the country of his birth. Section 24 enacts that a three years' residence in Canada will entitle a party to naturalization; and section 26 and following sections refer to the status of married women and infant children—women married to foreigners, and the children of natural born subjects, born in foreign parts; and sections 32 to the end, relate principally to the procedure necessary to obtain and confer upon parties the privileges intended in the Act.

Mr. BLAKE. We have now been a little more than three months in Session, and this Bill was distributed some hours ago, and I am not ashamed to say I have not read it. Other duties have engaged me as well as other hon. members. I wonder how many of us have read this Bill since it was distributed, and yet the hon. gentleman is moving its second reading. We have arrived—not at the slaughter of the innocents, but at the birth, out of due time, of measures framed under the rule of hon. gentlemen opposite. Legislation, under these circumstances, is a farce. To say that any intelligent opinion can be passed on this measure, under these circumstances, and at this period of our deliberations, is preposterous. I do not intend to attempt discussing to day the provisions of the measure. The hon. gentleman's explanations indicated some provisions in the Bill of very high importance. But I do not propose to attempt to comment upon them with the period for information allotted to me to familiarize myself with them. I was, however, struck by one statement from the hon. gentleman. He is proposing to enact in this Parliament—and I call the special attention to it, of the members from Quebec, who appear to be particularly jealous of provincial rights—a law declaring who shall be capable of holding real property in the various Provinces. It does seem to me that that is an arrogation of power beyond our competence. We may naturalize aliens and give them all the rights of British subjects, and of native born subjects of Canada; but to say that we can declare who shall be competent and who not competent to hold or transfer real property in the various Provinces, is to say that we have within our jurisdiction the question of civil rights.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has introduced this Bill at a very late period. It has been the policy of this Administration, as it was the policy of the last Government of which the present Premier was Premier, to introduce all the measures of the Government at a period of the Session when it must be impossible to give them due consideration. This is not legislation by Parliament. It is legislation by the Administration. Parliament is simply called together to register what is done by the Government, and pass the Estimates. It is impossible to have any measure well considered at this period of the Session when members on both sides are anxious that the work of Parliament should be brought to an early close; when Committees are meeting at an early period in the morning and last nearly to the hour at which the House assembles, and when the sittings of Parliament are often protracted to two o'clock in the morning. But I wish to call the attention of Parliament to the fact that in this measure the Government are assuming that our naturalization of aliens has no effect beyond the marine league. I deny that proposition altogether. We are authorized to legislate in regard to a variety of matters, relating to the welfare and good government of the people in which our legislation has effect beyond the marine league. There is, for example, the subject of marriage and divorce. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that persons married under the laws of this country, would be released from the marriage bond if they went beyond the marine league or into another country? I say a more preposterous position could not be taken. When hon. gentlemen were in power before, they permitted a Naturalization Bill, which had been passed through the Imperial Parliament, to be extended to the colonies without calling the attention of the Imperial Government to the fact that we were already authorized to deal completely with this subject. Take, again, the subject of contract. Hon. gentlemen know that a contract made under the laws of Canada between two parties could be enforced in a foreign country; because any law affecting the personal status or interests of a person operates wherever he may go, either by international law or by treaty regulations. Let me call the attention of the House to the 7th sub-section of the 91st section of the British North America Act, which confers the power to pass laws upon naval service and defence. But under such a restricted view of our powers as hon. gentlemen are proceeding upon in this Bill, we may fit out a vessel as a ship of war; we might grant a commission to some person and order the commander to go, say to Hudson's Bay and cruise, but so soon as she had passed the marine league she would be a pirate on the high seas. I contend that we have power to legislate with regard to the naturalization of aliens, and that it is our business to press upon the attention of the Imperial Government the propriety of recognizing the naturalization of aliens which is conferred by the provision of our law. My hon. friend the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) called the attention of the House to the 4th section of the Bill which proposes to deal not with the subject of the naturalization of aliens, but with the right of aliens to hold real estate. That does touch the subject of the naturalization of aliens, but has reference to the capacity of aliens in this country with reference to their property and civil rights. Our Provinces have the power to legislate upon the subject of the property and civil rights of those who are residents of the Provinces, whether they are British subjects or aliens. We have nothing to do with the subject of the status of aliens in Canada; and it will be of special consequence to the hon. members from the Province of Quebec to see that this clause of the Bill does not become law; for if they allow it to pass they will give up those rights and interests which are secured to them by the British North America Act, and which were inserted in the law, perhaps, more in their interest than in any other Province.

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. gentleman has based a long argument on the statement that a Bill of an important character has been introduced within a few days of the probable close of the Session. That measure was introduced in the Senate five or six weeks ago; it was passed by the Senate, and sent down to this House, I think, about three or four weeks ago.

Mr. BLAKE. It came down on the 9th of March.

Mr. PLUMB. But it was distributed in this House at that time. But all Senate Bills are sent to hon. members, and those who take an interest in the proceedings of Parliament read those Bills to find out what is going on in the other House. This Bill had its first reading in the Senate on the 25th of January, and its second reading on the 1st of February. My hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake), who has objected to the lateness of the period at which the Bill was introduced, made himself sufficiently acquainted with the details of a petroleum Bill to-day, notwithstanding his multifarious duties, to make a speech of one hour's duration, and yet he says he has not time to become seized of the provisions of this Bill. Perhaps the proverb that "where there's a will there's a way" would not be inappropriate in the present case. I am surprised that such a discussion as has been indulged in should have come up at so late a period of the Session. I regret that my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) should overload the subject before the House with a long discussion relating to the marriage laws and other matters equally irrelevant. The hon. gentleman, doubtless, knows perfectly well that there was great difficulty in passing any naturalization laws which would protect the citizens of the German Confederation. He knows that, according to the laws of that country, it was almost impossible to prevent great difficulty happening to natives of those states who become citizens either of this country or of the neighboring Republic. He knows that in some instances gentlemen of position, who held property in the United States, on returning to the land of their birth, were there seized and compelled to do military service in that country. Those arrangements have been made for the protection of those who were properly naturalized under the regulations agreed upon between the two Governments. If the hon. member had examined this Bill, as probably he would have examined another which he was desirous of putting through, he would within one hour have satisfied himself of its provisions, and would probably have been willing, as he is always able, to discuss those provisions. The leader of the Opposition could, with that grasp of mind which always characterizes him, have mastered all its complications; and I think even a layman could understand them with very little study. I trust that the discussion upon this Bill will be proceeded with notwithstanding the objections made by the hon. member for West Durham. I know it is of great importance to this country. I know there are gentlemen in this House who have paid the greatest attention to it, and to whom we are greatly indebted for the intelligent interest they have taken in this measure. I trust that none of the objections which have been urged against that law will disappoint those gentlemen in doing for their late countrymen, and those who will be their present countrymen, what they have endeavored to do in having this Bill prepared and brought down to Parliament.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I was much surprised indeed to hear the legal objection of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. I do not think there is anything whatever in the objection that the Bill from the Senate was not distributed until a day or two ago.

Mr. BLAKE. To-day.

Mr. McDONALD. I think my hon. friend is mistaken. I think it was yesterday or the day before. At any rate, I admit that the Bill from the Senate has not been distributed for any length of time, and the complaint would not be unreasonable, were we to suppose that my hon. friend did not see that Bill until it came down here. But it was printed almost, if not quite, a month ago, and distributed to every member in this House. I regret the delay in the Senate made it impossible to take up the question earlier; but it is a matter of too much importance, in view of transpiring events, to allow a mere technical objection to stand in the way, if the Bill on its merits should be such as to demand the attention and consideration of this House. Now, with reference to the legal objection taken by my hon. friend, I frankly admit I was surprised to hear it. I need not say that I, in common with every man that knows him, have the highest respect for any opinion he may give on any question of jurisprudence, and therefore it is that I am the more surprised to hear him give such an opinion on a question, which to me, and to high legal authorities elsewhere, appears so plain and distinct. My hon. friend says the fourth clause of the Bill interferes with that clause of the Union Act relating to property and civil rights. Now, I take the liberty entirely to dissent from that view. The clause, neither in its bearing, neither in its working, neither in its results in any manner whatever, nor in its political or legal relations, can bear that construction. I suppose my hon. friend will not deny that under the British North America Act, all legislation of whatever kind that is competent to any Parliament in Canada, is within the competence of this Parliament, Aliens and naturalization are expressly given to this Legislature, and all questions relating to those two subjects are naturally included. I need not say naturally, because that very important question has been decided by the highest authority in the country, that when any particular subject is within the competence of this House, and this House legislates upon that subject, such as civil rights and property connected with that subject, and which is involved in the legislation necessary to effect the object of parliamentary relation, that subject must, as a matter of course, follow the main and principal subject itself, and become the peculiar legislation of Parliament. That appears to me to be the principal so thoroughly well settled by the Supreme Court, so thoroughly recognized by every legal man, that I do not think I transgress in saying that I was surprised to see my hon. friend take that position. But I need not, even to sustain the legality and constitutionality of that fourth clause, resort to that principle at all. The clause did not pretend to affect the principle of civil rights. My hon. friend will see there is a vast distinction between giving mere power to an alien to hold property and to regulate and control property in the hands of an alien. I need only illustrate the principle by asking what would be the result in this country at the present moment, and continuously hereafter, if that was sound law? Why, we would have the curious spectacle in a free country of intelligent and energetic people coming from other countries and being unable to hold in this country a single dollar's worth of property, either personal or real, until they had, by a residence of three or five years, entitled themselves to become naturalized British subjects.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all.

Mr. McDONALD. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. The proposition is an insult to the intelligence of the country; it would be an insult to the common sense of every legal mind. Therefore, either on that ground, the proposition could not be sustained, for, as I stated before, the principle of the Bill flows naturally from the section giving us control over aliens and naturalization. Let me take the Province of Quebec, to the representations of which my hon. friend appeals. The clause of the Bill says that a citizen of the United States residing in Montreal, and doing business there, who has not become, or who has not had time to become, naturalized, but who is living in assumed waiting for the period to expire when he may become naturalized, and appears to be, and during that period is doing business, or desirous to buy a house, he may do so, but according to the hon. member for West-Durham, he cannot hold it, and obtains no title on paying his money.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all.

Mr. McDONALD. He desires to do business; the money he accumulates and stock he has in his house are not his, and he cannot hold it under the law.

Mr. BLAKE. Not so.

Mr. McDONALD. Then I do not understand the proposition.

Mr. BLAKE. That is quite likely.

Mr. McDONALD. But I think the House will agree with me that when my hon. friend declared that we had not power or authority constitutionally to confer the right upon an alien to hold real or personal property, we cannot understand the result of that proposition if it does not lead directly to the consequence which I have stated. That is, at any rate, my humble opinion, but I dare say my hon. friend could explain the proposition in a manner that would enable my obtuse mind to understand it. Then, this clause 4 proposes only, and entirely within the power and competence of Parliament, to declare that aliens shall be able to hold real and personal property. That does not authorize this Parliament, nor does this Parliament seek to determine in what form or in what manner that property shall be held. That is governed by the local laws; but the rights he shall acquire, in relation to property, must be governed by the way in which he shall sell or buy. He is entitled to hold it, transmit it, or sell it, just as any other resident in the Province of Quebec, under and by virtue of the laws of the Province of Quebec, affecting real and personal property, and like any other resident, he is subject to the laws regarding the civil rights of the residents of that Province. Therefore, I contend that the proposition contained in that clause is perfectly constitutional. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says that the 4th clause, that giving power to aliens to hold property, has nothing to do with naturalization. Well, I dare say a naturalization Bill would be perfectly valid without it, but I do think a naturalization Bill which would debar aliens during the period of time which the Bill declares they must wait before becoming entitled to naturalization, from the right to hold or acquire any property, would be an anomaly in a civilized country.

Mr. MILLS. Supposing a foreigner comes out here and says: "I do not want to become naturalized." This Act only authorizes us to deal with the naturalization of aliens. How can you naturalize one who does not want to become a citizen?

Mr. McDONALD. My hon. friend has not read the Bill. It is not one for the naturalization of aliens, but it is one respecting naturalization and aliens, so that it embraces in the fullest manner all the legislation required to fulfil the object which this Act has in view. We are also told that the Provinces forming the Dominion had various provisions in reference to the naturalization of aliens at the time of the Union. The law of 1868 was for the purpose of simplifying these various laws, and enabling persons residing in the Dominion to obtain naturalization in a simpler form, while reserving any rights they may have acquired before that time in the several Provinces. But so far as I am aware, in each and all of the Provinces an alien had a right to hold property. The English Naturalization Act, from which this is copied, begins with the declaration that aliens residing in the country shall be enabled, subject to conditions stated in the clause, to hold real and personal property. I have only to repeat to some extent the observation I made when I rose—that if the view of the hon. gentleman were correct, we should have the curious anomaly of inviting people from foreign countries to come and reside in this country, while at the same time declaring to them that for three or five years after their arrival they would be worse than strangers in a strange land, entirely unable and incompetent to hold property which, by their industry and intelligence, they might acquire.

Mr. LAURIER. So far as I understand the hon. Minister of Justice, he held that aliens in the Province of Quebec could not acquire or hold real estate or property there. The 25th article of the civil code of the Province of Quebec, says:

"Aliens have a right to acquire and transmit, by gratuitous or onerous title, as well as by succession or by will, all moveable and immoveable property in Lower Canada, in the same manner as British-born or naturalized subjects."

This is the law which existed in the Province of Quebec at the time of Confederation, and which exists at the present time. The clause in the hon. gentleman's Bill is clearly ultra vires.

Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BOURASSA. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago we witnessed the Government granting protection to the manufacture of beet-root sugar, by exempting it from taxes for a certain number of years, and I thought that that measure was an advantage, not only to the refiner, but also to the agricultural class. I hope that the hon. member will not rest contented with that, but that he will go a step further in the right direction, viz, towards favoring that class, which has been somewhat neglected for a number of years. With that object I move the following amendment:

To leave out all the words after "that," and insert the following instead thereof: "It be resolved, That whereas more than nine millions of pounds of unmanufactured tobacco are imported in each year, and whereas that plant might be advantageously cultivated in this country, this House is of opinion that the cultivation thereof should be encouraged by the abolition of the excise duty levied upon tobacco grown in Canada."

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who moves this amendment seeks assuredly to make political capital during the present elections, or during those that are to take place in a couple of years. The hon. member is not going to succeed in his attempt, because the people understand that it is necessary to have a revenue to meet the expenditure and to carry out the various public works demanded throughout the country. Moreover, the hon. member must not forget to tell the electors, at the next elections, that there is an excise duty on tobacco cultivated in this country, that there is a far higher duty on imported tobacco, and that consequently the policy adopted by the Government with regard to Canadian tobacco is the same as that adopted to foster other manufactures of the country. For instance, in the same manner as we encourage the manufacture of cotton in this country by imposing a heavy duty on imported cottons, and by admitting raw cotton free; in the same way as we encourage the refining of sugar in this country; in the same way do we encourage the cultivation of Canadian tobacco, in this country, by imposing a far higher duty on foreign tobacco. The hon. member must be aware that, since duties have thus been levied, the cultivation of tobacco has assumed far greater proportions throughout the country than formerly, and, moreover, our farmers may cultivate tobacco for their private use, without paying any duty at all. But as soon as tobacco is cultivated for the purpose of sale, so soon, as in other cases, the Government, which requires a revenue, must levy an Excise duty; but the Canadian grower knows full well, that when he goes into the market with his tobacco, he has in his favor a differential duty, which presses far more heavily on foreign tobacco, and which enables him to get a better price for his own tobacco. The House consequently will not support the motion of the hon. member, because, in doing so, the hon. member would deprive the Treasury of a revenue of some $200,000 to $400,000, and it would be difficult to say by means of what other tax that amount could be brought into the Treasury. The hon. member must not expect that his motion will be supported; moreover, he knows full well that had he wished to succeed with a motion of that kind, he should have brought it forward as a separate motion, and not as a motion of non-confidence in the Government.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I remember that not so many years ago, three or four at most, the hon. members, who now sit on the opposite side of the House, were of opinion that Canadian soil was peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of tobacco, and that if it was true that the soil was adapted to the cultivation of tobacco, the logical consequence of this state of things was that Canadian tobacco should be free from all Excise duty, and that its cultivation should be promoted by all possible means. At that time, I, for my part, would not have been prepared to admit that pretention; but facts compel me to admit that the experiments recently made have satisfactorily established that the soil of Lower Canada and its climate are evidently suited to the cultivation of tobacco. I see by the last report brought before the House, that in the district of Joliette, for example, a district comprising the counties of L'Assomption and Joliette, the cultivation of tobacco has been considerably developed. A grower told me that an objection formerly raised was that the severity of the climate of Lower Canada did not allow of the tobacco maturing, but it is now an established fact that vegetation is so rapid owing to the intense heat of the summer months, that tobacco ripens fully; consequently, if such is the case Lower Canada is as well adapted to the cultivation of tobacco as Connecticut itself; and if such is the case, the hon. members on the opposite side of the House, in order to be logical, must now support the motion of the hon. member for St. Johns (Mr. Bourassa), for that motion says what they ever said when they were on the Opposition side; and, as the conditions have not changed, they should vote now as they voted then. When last this motion came up before the House, last year, I, for my own part, said that I did not think that the cultivation of tobacco was suited to the climate of Lower Canada, but recent experiences show that it is so suited; and if at the time I did not think it was, I was logical in voting against that motion, but as I now think it is, it would be illogical for me to vote as I did last year, and unless my hon. friends on the other side of the House are convinced that the soil of Lower Canada is not adapted to the cultivation of tobacco, it would be illogical for them to vote against the present motion.

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken on this resolution has probably forgotten his record of 1878.

Mr. LAURIER. I have just spoken of it.

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. gentleman who is now defending this motion made use of language which I am about to quote. He was then Minister of Inland Revenue, and we remember well that the Finance Minister of that day appealed to the sympathies of each side of the House, not to allow their sympathies to be worked upon to support any proposition which would have the effect of taking off the excise duty on home-grown tobacco, as he said, to the extent of $700,000 or $800,000. The hon. Finance Minister and the hon. Minister of Internal Revenue of that day were not then in accord, and could not possibly have had any communication with each other on the subject, for while the hon. Finance Minister admitted, by implication, that the home grown tobacco was an important product whose unrestricted growth would affect the revenue by $700,000 or $800,000, my hon. friend said:—

"The object of the motion was to collect a revenue from the importation of tobacco, and to relieve home-grown tobacco from duty. His hon. friend had said, in the course of his argument, that they could consider the interests of the agricultural class from the farmer's point of view; but the first question that presented itself was this: Was this country adapted to the cultivation of tobacco? He observed that his hon. friend said that if this Excise duty was abolished for a certain number of years, the production of Canadian tobacco would assume such proportions as to permit tobacco to be exported instead of being imported, as was now the case. But was this possible? Was it possible to maintain seriously, that Canada could ever produce enough of this article to enable it to be exported? It was well known that, above all in the Province of Quebec, and in the Maritime Provinces, and also in Ontario, we could not produce tobacco which could enter into successful competition with the foreign-grown article. We produced an inferior quality of tobacco, which was used for local purposes. The agricultural class was frugal and economical, and it produced tobacco for its own consumption; but, on the other hand, it was equally certain that it was perfectly impossible to raise, in Canada, tobacco which could enter into successful competition with the foreign article, for the simple reason that we had not the climatic conditions necessary to its growth. The Province of Quebec, above all, and all the Provinces east of Quebec, could not raise tobacco on a considerable scale, for the simple reason that their climatic conditions were not proper to the growth of this plant, which was excessively sensible to such conditions. Again, our seasons were too short to permit its successful cultivation; Spring was too late, and autumn came too soon; and, under the best possible climatic conditions, the tobacco which we cultivated could never attain maturity. The farmers were obliged to take it in before it arrived at perfect maturity, and then, very frequently in Lower Canada, they were visited with frosts during the warmest months of summer, even in July and August, and it was known that tobacco was extremely sensible to changes of temperature, and of the weather; and, under these circumstances, as an article of commerce, it lost much of its value, suffering in flavour and quality, and failing to command the price which it would otherwise secure. Owing to these considerations, the argument of his hon. friend lost much of its force. The object of the motion was to encourage the cultivation of tobacco in Canada, though of all the plants that Lower Canada could cultivate, the last thing which they should cultivate was tobacco, which could not become for them an article of export."

Mr. LAURIER. I have since, from further experience of the question, changed that opinion.

Mr. PLUMB. Tho hon. gentleman could hardly have changed his views so suddenly. Have the climatic conditions undergone a change? Caelum non animum mutant qui trans mare currunt. Hon. gentlemen change their minds, on the same principle, when they cross the floor of the House. The hon. gentleman now, in the face of his past record, makes an appeal in support of a motion which, from his own point of view, I may characterize as a claptrap resolution.

Mr. LANDRY. Mr. Speaker, I was not surprised to hear the assertions of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier). He has more than once accustomed us to see him burn one day what he had worshipped on the previous one. That is what he is doing to-night, when he burns not only what he worshipped last year, but what he worshipped all the time he was in the Mackenzie Government. It is not necessary for me to go very far back to find in the speeches of the hon. member assertions that condemn him to-day in the most formal manner. I have merely to oppose his last year's to his this year's assertions. What does the hon. member say to-day? He asks that the duty on tobacco be abolished, because he has discovered that the soil of our Province is adapted to its cultivation. This is what he says: "My opinion has changed, because to-day I have before me a report, according to which it is demonstrated that tobacco can easily be cultivated in our country." But, alluding to what he said when he was a Minister, the hon. member for Quebec East said last year, and his words are most important, as they completely condemn the position taken to-day by my hon. friend:

"I was of opinion at that time, and I am still of opinion, that if there is an article which should be subject to a tax, it is certainly tobacco. There cannot be any doubt on that point. Since the Government is in need of revenue, it is evidently better to tax articles of luxury, such as tobacco, than to tax the necessaries of life."

Such was the opinion of the hon. member for Quebec East last year. The hon. member must know that a Government, to maintain itself, must necessarily levy taxes. In that case, I take up his argument and I say with him: if there are articles which are to be subjected to taxes, they certainly are the articles of luxury, and if there is an article pertaining to that category it is assuredly tobacco. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the fears expressed by the hon. member will vanish into smoke. He says that in voting against that motion we are going to change our policy, and that we are going to vote in opposition to our former utterances. He is mistaken; in those days, when the Liberal party was in power, there was a tax of ten cents on tobacco, and we always asked that that tax should be reduced; perhaps did we ask that it should be completely taken off.

Mr. BOURASSA. Perhaps the hon. member will allow me to tell him that they did not ask for the reduction, but for the abolition of the tax.

Mr. LANDRY. That is just what I was saying. It seems to me that if we were asking for the abolition, we were necessarily wishing for a reduction, for the lesser must be contained in the greater. When the present Administration came into power, it met the wishes of the people by reducing by more than one-half the duties levied on tobacco. Since it is necessary that the people should pay taxes, in order that the Government may meet an indispensable expenditure, I agree with the hon. member for Quebec East that articles of luxury are to be taxed in preference to all others, and for that reason I think we should vote against the amendment, because it simply seeks to take off an article of luxury a necessary tax, which it would be then necessary to levy on other articles, perhaps necessities of life.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) say but a moment ago that one's ideas change when one crosses the seas. I think that this year, he too will change his opinions. If I refer to a motion made in this House on the 23rd April, 1878, and which is almost identical with the present one, the only difference to be found is that the quantity of tobacco is specified in the motion. I see that the Government intends giving a vote entirely different to the one it gave on that occasion; and, on referring to the proceedings of the House at that date, I see that the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) is one of those who voted in favor of the motion; I notice also that at the time, you yourself, Mr. Speaker, were in favor of that motion and that you seconded it; I see that the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Bowell) likewise voted in its favor; I also see that the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) voted in the same way; I see that the then hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald) voted likewise; I see also that the hon. Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper) voted in the same way. I was about to forget the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Langevin) who certainly does not deserve to be forgotten; he also voted likewise. Now, if we refer to the speeches which were delivered at the time the motion was made, we shall see that one defended then what one is opposing at the present time. If ever there was a favorable time to reduce this tax, it is now; for if we are to accept the data of the hon. Minister of Finance, there is to be a surplus at the end of the year; now, as the cultivation of tobacco is increasing considerably in the Province of Quebec, it would be merely compensating the grower of tobacco. Under the circumstances, I intend voting against the motion.

Mr. VALIN. Would the hon. member state how he voted at the time?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I voted in favor of the motion.

Mr. BECHARD. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Langevin) in answering my hon. friend the member for St. John's (Mr. Bourassa) accused him of making that motion in order to acquire political capital. I am convinced that such is not the intention of my hon. friend; in presenting this motion, he merely adheres to the policy which he has ever followed whenever that question came up before Parliament; and in seconding the motion I am but following the policy I have ever followed. I remember when a duty was first levied on Canadian tobacco; it was during the First Parliament of the First Session of 1867. I was the first to present an amendment to abolish that duty. I looked upon the production of tobacco as a great agricultural resource, which was rapidly developing in our country, and which deserved to be encouraged. I have just said that the accusation of the hon. Minister of Public Works is without foundation. Was the object of his friend, who, when he was in Opposition, made a similar motion, simply that of making political capital? Did the hon. Minister of Public Works, when voting in favor of that motion, seek for political capital? Certainly not. Well, then, I maintain that this accusation can no more be brought against my hon. friend for St. John (Mr. Bourassa) than against them, when they were in Opposition. I must, nevertheless, say, Mr. Speaker, that in seconding the motion of my hon. friend no sentiment of administration for any Protectionist policy impels me to do so, but since we have a system tending to protect all classes of society, I think it would only be fair and reasonable to protect the farmers of Canada, as long as such a tariff is in existence, and inasmuch as it can be done. Tobacco is one of the few articles, the cultivation whereof, may, in my opinion be protected, because it is an article that we cannot produce in a sufficiently large quantity to meet the consumption, and consequently we are obliged to import it. If you levy Excise duties on tobacco grown in Canada, and if you levy duties on imported tobacco in the leaf, as a result the price of that article will increase and you will thereby be giving the producer of tobacco in Canada the advantage of selling his tobacco at a higher price in proportion to the duties levied on that article.

Mr. LANDRY. I will call the hon. member's attention to the fact that there are in the country considerable differential duties.

Mr. BECHARD. The motion of my hon. friend merely asks that more protection should be given to the Canadian farmer. It has been established that the excise duties in force to day discourage the farmers from growing tobacco, whilst the levying of Customs' duties would stimulate the production of Canadian tobacco.

Mr. BERGERON. It is quite natural that the hon. member for St. John should present this motion. At every Session of Parliament it is a regular occurrence that an hon. gentleman should rise and move that no tax be levied on Canadian grown tobacco. If I remember aright, the first tax imposed on Canadian tobacco, was imposed by a Liberal Government.

Mr. BÉCHARD. No; it was imposed in 1867.

Mr. BERGERON. In 1867 a tax of 6 cents was imposed by the Conservative party, and it was a continuance of the tax which had been imposed by the Liberal party in 1863. When the Liberals came into power again, they raised the tax to 10 cents. On the 23rd of April, 1878, a motion was made by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Bolduc) to abolish the duty, and that motion was supported by the hon. member for St. John, who, at least, is acting consistently in the matter. This cannot be said of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) who, though he now contends there should be no tax on Canadian tobacco, in 1878, according to the Journals of the House, voted against the motion of the hon. member for Beauce, to take off that duty, and thus voted in favor of keeping it, as it then stood, at 10 cents per pound. Among the nays were also the names of Messrs. Malouin, then member for Quebec East, Huntington, Jetté, Laflamme—another patriotic French-Canadian—and Scriver.

Mr. ROSS. Read the other side.

Mr. BERGERON. That has already been read by the hon. member for L'Islet in French. I do not suppose that any hon. member will say there should not be some tax on tobacco. It is but natural, when taxes have to be imposed, that the people should pay a tax on that which is of use only for their pleasure. What hon. gentlemen on this side, when in Opposition, asked for was that the tax should not be as high as 10 cents; and when the Conservative party came into power in 1878, they reduced the tax to 4 cents, and provided that the Canadian farmer could smoke his own tobacco without paying duty, as 30 pounds were allowed by law to every family for home consumption. Only those who made a trade of it had to pay 4 cents a pound duty; and protection was given to the native plant by the imposition of a heavy duty on foreign tobacco. I am not going to vote for the motion of the hon. member for St. John.

Mr. MILLS. With regard to this particular tax, I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite, according to their view, will say it is on the farmers. They have contended that a tax imposed on a particular article is paid by the producer, and as the farmer is the producer of the tobacco, which bears this tax, it is he who pays it. So far as I am personally concerned, if the Government had not interfered with the freedom of sale, I would have no objection to a moderate tax. What has particularly destroyed this branch of industry in the West has been the restriction imposed on the sale. I wish to call the attention of the House to the very different manner in which they deal with the farming population compared with that in which they deal with the manufacturers. The ordinary manufacturer is allowed to bring in his raw material free of duty, and a very serious tax is imposed on every article that comes into competition with his industry. But with the farming population a different rule is adopted. The hon. gentlemen are not satisfied with letting them alone, but insist on taxing the product of their industry, and when a motion is proposed not to protect them, not to deal with them in the way in which cotton manufacturers and sugar refiners are dealt with, but simply to let them alone, and not impose on them burdens which are not imposed on other portions of the community, these hon. gentlemen oppose that motion, and then the hon. gentleman proposed that farmers should pay the Excise duty on the products of the farm.

Mr. PLUMB. You added 10 per cent.

Mr. MILLS. But hon. gentlemen adopted a different policy. They adopted a policy of Protection which serves to protect certain industries of the country, while they have taxed others. If they had allowed the farmer to stand on a footing of equality, they would not only have relieved him from all taxation, but would have given him a bounty to encourage him in his agricultural pursuits. Hon. gentlemen opposite have not done that. The hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) stands up and defends a special tax upon the products of the farm, while he is not only ready to relieve other industries of the country from taxation, but he also proposes to give them a bounty. I propose in this matter, while the farmer is being burdened with a view to encourage other branches of industry, to vote for the repeal of a tax which imposes special burdens on his own.

158. Indians, Ontario and Quebec..... $26,800 00

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said the Robinson treaty remained in the same position as when the hon. member left office.

Mr. DAWSON. Has any arrangement been arrived at with the Ontario Government for the payment of amounts due to the Indians for the Lake Superior lands, because the payment to the Indians was really a lien on the lands, and it is very important to have the principle established now in view of the disputed territory, for if it falls to Ontario or any part of it that Province should certainly pay the Indians whose annuities are to all interests and purposes a lien on the land which they relinquished.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This money was paid to the Indians for the extinguishment of their title to the lands, and if Ontario reaps the benefit it is bound to pay the money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Not only what has been voted this year, but what has been voted from the first,—that would naturally have to come to the Dominion so soon as the boundary question is settled.

Mr. MILLS. There are large tracts of territory near Lake St. John, in Quebec, which have never been surrendered by the Indians, but from which the timber has been cut. Has the First Minister taken any action on this subject, or any correspondence with the Quebec Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As regards the timber from the Quebec lands, that question has never been raised in Parliament, except by the hon. member for Bothwell.

Mr. MILLS. The Indians themselves have raised it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question should be looked into, because the Indians of Quebec are in a very destitute condition, and in a different position from the Indians of Ontario.

Mr. ROSS, (Middlesex.) Is it the intention to bring Indian schools on Indian reserves under the educational system of the Province of Ontario? I understand that was the intention of the department at one time. Indian teachers are now specially certificated by the Commissioner or Indian agent, and are under his control in a certain sense, and the department felt it desirable in the interest of Indian education to employ no other than those only licensed as teachers under the educational system of Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is desirable that certificated teachers should be employed as much as possible, but it is also desirable to encourage Indian teachers, if they can be found, because of their linguistic knowledge and their acquaintance with the habits of Indians.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex.) I am glad to hear the Minister's statement. It would be a great mistake to take the instruction of Indians out of the hands of the Indians themselves.

Mr. MILLS. In many places the Indians speak English well, and in such cases there is an advantage in employing them as teachers. If Indian teachers thus qualified for the work can be found they are the best class to employ, but I would not prefer an Indian teacher who cannot speak English or French, because it is not easy to make progress with Indians who are acquainted with only their native language, for they have no literature.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is to our interests to get the best teachers for Indians as well as for white men.

Mr. MILLS. There is an item of $3,000 for surveys. Where will they be made?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Principally in the Lower Provinces. There are several reserves there for which there is a demand made that they be surveyed.

162. Indians (B. C.)..... $42,209 31

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I hope the Minister of the Interior will give some detailed account of the state of things, as regards the Indians in British Columbia. Their position gave rise to considerable uneasiness two or three years ago; and although, I believe, it has been greatly allayed, still the House would like to know the present position of affairs, and how far the good intentions of the present Government, towards securing the rights of the Indians, have been successfully carried out.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it was during the late Administration that Mr. Sproat and two other gentlemen were appointed Commissioners to settle the Indian Reserves, but latterly the sole Commissioner was Mr. Sproat. He proceeded, I think, very leisurely but effectively, in some cases, to mark out the surveys and reserves. Last year he resigned his office. We have had some difficulty in finding an efficient successor who would be acceptable to the Government of British Columbia. Of course, both Governments must act together. I am glad to say we have secured the services of a gentleman capable and acceptable to both Governments, who will resume Mr. Sproat's duties and continue the survey and settlement of the Indian reserves, commencing, of course, with the reserves at the points more immediately required, and going leisurely and steadily in laying out the reserves.

The new Commissioner is Judge O'Reilly, one of the Stipendiary Magistrates and County Judges, who will assume those duties immediately.

Mr. MILLS. Has the hon. gentleman fixed any salary for Judge O'Reilly?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He had $3,000 as Stipendiary Magistrate, and the pension is $2,000. He lives in Victoria, but will be obliged to break up his establishment, go to the mainland, and be stationed on the Fraser River, somewhere between New Westminster and Kamloops, for the purposes of his office. We had some difficulty in securing his services. His salary will be $3,500, inclusive of pension, making a saving of $1,500. Mr. Sproat received $3,650.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What amount of land is to be assigned to the Indians?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be regulated by the size of each band.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Has any acreage been fixed upon as between the two Governments?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. The bands are, some large and some small. They have got their ancestral headquarters, and, I suppose, their ancestral burying grounds; and all these matters are considered together, the Commissioner judging in each case according to the requirements of each tribe, their numbers, and occupationary rights possessed for years.

Mr. MILLS. What progress has been made in locating the Indian reserves; is the work nearly completed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid it is not. It is not completed in Vancouver's Island. Besides, a difficulty has arisen, which I hope will soon be overcome; the Government of British Columbia have not yet, by any conveyance or patents, sanctioned those reserves. There has been no active opposition; but there has been delay in the issue of patents under the Great Seal of British Columbia. Objections are taken to some of the reserves as laid out by Mr. Sproat, the present Government claiming that in some cases great mistakes have been made, and in some the reserves made unusually large.

Mr. MILLS. It does not seem to me the reserves were large.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say so.

Mr. MILLS. In British Columbia the Indian title was never extinguished. When British Columbia entered the Union the right hon. gentleman made some regulations which ignored the Indian title altogether. I do not think he had the power to do so. Looking at British and United States precedents, including the practice of the Imperial Government, and decisions of the United States Supreme Court, I will say that those authorities have always recognized a title in the Indians—not a political sovereignty over the country, but a personal right of property in the soil. That title in all other British colonies had been always considered as existing before the Crown undertook to deal with the lands for the purpose of sale or disposal to other parties. In the Illinois country, before the American Revolution, a case arose in which the right of the Indians to sell their lands was disputed—and upon which the law officers of the Crown gave an opinion recognizing the title of the Indians to the property in the soil, and their right to sell to private parties before the King by his Proclamation forbade such purchases. I think that no arrangement made between the Ottawa and British Columbia Governments will take away the Indian's right in the soil, if he has not already disposed of it. When I was Minister of the Interior, I was not disposed to raise the question, if the Government of British Columbia would deal fairly with the Indians. But it did not seem to me that they were disposed to recognize any right or title of the Indians, or grant them reserves large enough for their subsistence. So much dissatisfaction was created among the Indians, that there was a confederacy between the Indians of British Columbia and Washington Territory, which, had it not been for the success of the United States troops against Chief Joseph, that Indian confederacy would probably have involved the whole of that Province in civil war. Mr. Sproat, the Commissioner in British Columbia at that time, recognizing the critical condition of things, was disposed, as far as possible, to meet the wishes of the Indians. I think they did so fairly, and without giving the Indians reserves unnecessarily large. But within the limits of some of those reserves the local Government had already granted patents to private parties. There are some instances in which the parties had come into possession and have either leased the land of the Indians or agreed to work them on shares. Now, according to the local land regulations, a squatter could certify to the facts in such a case, at the land office and get a certificate upon which a patent might ultimately issue, and there have been, I believe, two or three instances in which patents were issued to parties in the very centre of the Indian reservations. I would like to know from the hon. gentleman whether, in such cases, the patents have been cancelled and the lands surrendered to the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have not, so far as I am advised. The hon. gentleman has very accurately defined the difference between the status in which Canada found the Indians in British Columbia at the time of the Union with that Province, and the status of the Indians in the other Provinces. In Ontario, at all events the Indian title was recognized and treaties were made by which the Indians surrendered their titles before the Crown opened the land for settlement. I think that was a fair mode of treatment. The Indians are the aborigines—the original occupants of the country, and certainly their rights should be respected. These rights were not recognized at all, in the same sense in British Columbia as in Ontario. In the first place, when the Hudson Bay Company held the promise under license from the Imperial Crown, they acted with respect to the Indians of British Columbia, as they acted with respect to the Indians elsewhere, and when it became a Crown colony the same system was carried out. The Indian title was never formally recognized by the Government, though I believe they were very fairly treated as a rule. Still no treaty has been made with them and no surrender of the lands took place. The arrangements made by the late Government were, I think very proper, in the way of having reservations marked out by the Commissioners; and as I understand it, the Commissioners always consulted with the Indians and obtained their assent to the restrictions as being sufficient for their purposes. Arrangements were also made so as to enable the remainder of the country outside which were in the possession of Indian bands, to be opened for settlement. I do not at all say that the decisions of Mr. Sproat, or of the three Commissioners, were erroneous, in the way of being too liberal to the Indians. My feeling would be, as I think the feeling of the hon. member for Bothwell would be, on the side of the Indians, and in the direction of seeing that they had "ample room and verge enough" for all their wants. I would be slow to acquiesce in any alteration of a reservation deliberately set apart by the Commissioner for a band, on the ground that it was excessive. There might be mistakes, of course, and they might be corrected, but in all such cases I think the Indians should be consulted, and should be reconciled to any alterations in the bounds which they have been informed are the bounds of their several reservations. I am strongly of the opinion that if the Government raised the question of the Indian title, the Courts of this country and the Courts of England, at all events, would maintain the right of the Indians and their title to the occupation of the soil until that right whatever it might amount to was extinguished. And as the Government is the guardian of the Indians, if it was found that the Government of British Columbia was acting unjustly with the Indians—which I do not, by any means, expect—or depriving them of their reasonable rights, we might in such an event be obliged to assert the rights of the Indians to a recognition of their titles to the lands.

163. Indians, Manitoba and the North-West ... $543,369 24

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With regard to the item of annuities there has been a decrease of $14,166. As the hon. gentleman is aware the practice is that when an Indian is absent for say three years, he does not receive his arrears of annuity when he comes back. He received the annuity for the year in which he returned and the arrears for one year, and the next year he received the annuity for two years. This plan was followed for two reasons: first, to avoid unexpected demands upon the appropriation; and, secondly, to avoid overloading the Indians with money which would be wanted. It is calculated that $6,000 will be saved in that way. Then we expected to save at least $8,166 by a system of checking by tickets which we follow, for the purpose of preventing the Indians from being paid more than once. It has been found that while, on the whole the Indians have been honest, they sometimes cannot resist the temptation when they move from one agency to another of endeavoring to get paid twice.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think the hon. gentleman has acted quite fairly to the House in submitting this vote in its present form. I find, on referring to the Estimates for 1878, that there are thirty distinct items in place of the one we find here. It is impossible to know how this money is to be distributed. We might almost as well vote the entire Estimates in one sum, as to vote this sum of upwards of $500,000 in the way proposed. In the Estimates for 1878-79 and in all previous years we have a distinct vote for each Indian treaty. For Treaty No. 2, we voted $27,000; No. 3, $15,640; No. 5, $15,560; these votes were for the superintendency of Manitoba. In the superintendency of the North-West Territories we had distinct votes for the Treaties Nos. 4, 6, 7. Then again, with regard to the expenses of those superintendencies, with regard to the amount to be expended for provision, for freight, and with regard to all various payments that were contemplated, each of them were estimated for, and the House was informed of the amount required. The hon. gentleman proposes to take $202,025 for annuities, and we are left in the dark as to how this sum is to be distributed, and it is only by looking at estimates of former years that we can form any opinion of it. I do not think the hon. gentleman has been successful in preventing frauds. That system of checks has always been in force in reference to the North-West Indians. My opinion is that frauds were practised to a moderate extent in the beginning and they have gone on increasing from year to year. The hon. gentleman has, no doubt, looked at the report of the Inspector. I find in that report that there have been many cases where the Indians appeared at three or four different places and received pay. An Indian appears as a member of a particular band, and he is paid, but instead of returning to his lodgings again he hastens away to the next point of payment, under some other agent, where he presents himself and is paid again. I have looked over the statistics, and I think I can show the hon. gentleman that frauds of this sort have been practised. They have been practised to a limited extent in the Treaties Nos. 1, 2 and 3, because the number of Indians who have appeared, from time to time, each year, is pretty much the same. Yet even in these treaties frauds have been practised. If the hon. gentleman will look at the number of Indians, for instance, in Treaty No. 6, presenting themselves for annuities, he will see that they have been going on increasing from year to year to an alarming extent. When that treaty was negotiated in the first instance, the number of Indians who appeared for the purpose of receiving compensation was, I think, 2,776; in the next year 5,000; in the next year 6,607; and in 1879-80—the hon. gentleman has not furnished us with the figures for the past year—the number was 8,508. In that year $44,000 were paid in annuities. Some of those parties received $5 each. Those who received $5 must have been previously settled with for their first payment, they must have come under the treaty before. This is evident from the number of Indians who formerly received $12. I have taken the list of some of those who came in last year. They say: "We have never appeared here before; we want our $12; we are going to accept the treaty and come under its arrangements." We find nearly 2,000 who appeared for the purpose of receiving pay for the first time. These parties said: "We were not paid last year because we were not present," and so they received their pay for that year. There were upwards of 2,300 names who were paid for that year and the year following. Now, I will take the year 1876-77. The number paid in that year was 2,776; the number paid in the year following, as coming under the treaty for the first time, was 1,938. Then the number who were in 1878-79, and did not appear in the year before, was 4,971, making 9,685 Indians altogether who have accepted treaty money under Treaty No. 6. I am quite satisfied there is not that number there. I am satisfied that a large number of Indians, more than 1,000, probably more than 2,000, have, under Treaty 6, been paid over twice. Then again, when you come to Treaty No. 4, you find exactly the same process going on. The hon. gentleman could ascertain this from the Public Accounts. Take the last year. We find there how many Indians appeared and said they were not present in 1877. There are a certain number who say they were not present in 1876; certain others who say they were not present in 1878, and each of these are paid for those years respectively. You turn back for those years and see how many were present, and how many appeared each year subsequently, and who were paid in former years. You find the sum total, and you find a larger number of persons who were paid $5, but have never come under the treaty at all. Now, an Indian is not likely to fail to present his claim for $12 and accept $5, if he is acting in a straightforward manner. We know of many cases of that sort. The hon. gentleman has only to take the Public Accounts and go over them from year to year and see how many were paid in various years, and he will find that it was a much larger number of Indians than are to be found in that country. When you take Treaty No. 4, you find for the year 1876, there were 3,910; for the next year, over 4,000; for the next year, 5,605; for the next year, 5,878. I am perfectly satisfied that in Treaty No. 4 a large number of the Assiniboine Indians, who had received pay in Treaty No. 7, appeared and were paid again. I am sure that in paying the Indians $5 each as an annuity, there are nearly 30 per cent., possibly more than that, who were paid twice over, if the agents themselves have not falsified the returns. It is impossible to examine the Public Accounts without coming to that conclusion, because you find that the number do not correspond with the number who have accepted the treaty and have received $12 for the first year's acceptance. Then if the hon. gentleman will look at the provisions for the purchase of agricultural implements under those treaties, and will look at the returns, he will find that those Indians have been supplied with a far larger number of implements than they were entitled to. Of course, there were frauds practised in the first instance, and it was impossible well to tell how many Indians actually received agricultural implements and cattle under the treaty. Before I left the office over which the hon. gentleman presides, I instructed the inspector in the Manitoba superintendency, when he visited each band, to see what they had actually been supplied with, and to report, so that the Government would know how far they had been imposed upon. I have no objection to furnish the Indians with even more than they are entitled to under treaties, if what they receive is applied to some useful or necessary purposes; but it is perfectly futile to furnish the Indians with agricultural implements if they are left to decay. Under Treaties 1 and 2, there was distributed in 1876-77, $4,000 worth of agricultural implements; in 1877-78, $8,000 worth; in 1878-79, $12,950 worth; in 1879-80, $7,680 worth; and in 1880-81, $4,700 worth. Under Treaties 6 and 7, the hon. gentleman last year took a lump sum of $55,967. How this is distributed we cannot tell from the Estimates, as the hon. gentleman has departed from the former practise of taking a separate vote for each treaty. With regard to provisions, I remember that when I submitted the first estimates on this subject, the hon. gentleman and the late Minister of Militia both strongly objected to the Indians being fed while they were being paid; and my statement then was that as soon as the Indians could be located on their reservations, it was hoped that this practice would no longer be necessary, but while Indians have to be collected from long distances to a particular point on the plains, it is necessary to feed them while payment is being made. My hope, however, was that this appropriation would diminish year by year as the Indians settled on their reservations. So far that hope has not been realized, and the hon. gentleman has not yet begun to adopt a policy different from the one he then so much deprecated. I find that in 1877-78, $13,000 was voted for the purpose of purchasing provisions to feed the Indians in the Manitoba superintendency while they were being paid, and $16,400 for the North-West superintendency; in 1878-79, the second year after the treaties were negotiated, $16,500 was voted for the Manitoba superintendency, and $37,000 for the North-West superintendency, making in all $53,000. For 1879-80 the hon. gentleman expended $56,930 for this purpose, in the two superintendencies, and last year he took a vote of $130,686 for the same purpose—three times the amount necessary to feed the same Indians when I had the honor of administering the office. There are, no doubt, a larger number of Indians who have come within the treaties; although no new treaties have been negotiated, the number has, I think, been increased from 27,000 to 32,000, an increase not at all proportionate to the increase in the expenditure. The cost of obtaining supplies is not so great now as it was formerly, as settlements are rapidly progressing westward, and a considerable portion of the supplies can be purchased near the localities where payments are made. I cannot understand this enormous increase. With regard to the management of the Indians, the amounts expended for salaries were as follows:—In the Manitoba superintendency in 1876-77, $18,600; in 1877-78, $18,200; in 1878-79, $18,300; in 1879-80, $25,000, and in 1880-81, $25,000; in the North-West superintendency, in 1876-77, $19,000; in 1877-78, $17,000; in 1878-79, $18,500; in 1879-80, $14,400, and in 1880-81, $36,430. Two years ago the hon. gentleman proposed to adopt a policy of instructing the Indians in agricultural operations. I think that would have been a prudent policy, if it had been prudently and fairly carried out. But, looking at the returns, and gathering what I can from the hon. gentleman's statement, and from the reports of persons who have been in the North-West, I am of opinion that the system is not likely to be attended with success. When you furnish Indians with agricultural implements, oxen and horses, to enable them to till the soil, it appears to me that the simplest, and cheapest, and best way of undertaking to teach them would be to put some person on each reservation to show them how to hold the plough and cultivate the soil, and let the crops be theirs when they are harvested. It is said by Dr. Cook, in his lectures to the theological students of Belfast, that clergymen should be taught to preach as we teach dogs to swim, by throwing them into the water; and it appears to me that Indians must learn agriculture in very much the same way. They must be put at the work, and it is by what they do themselves that they learn to cultivate the soil. I observe that in 1879-80 the hon. gentleman took as his first vote for farmers' wages $11,250, and in 1880-81 $36,430, and last year I think the account runs up to something over $65,000. That is a very large expenditure, one which requires favorable results to justify it. I have looked over the report and I cannot see any estimate of the value of the farm products. There is no statement as to the number of bushels of potatoes, wheat, barley, etc., raised. I see that these men are paid by the Government; that the horses and waggons and all the appliances are purchased for them by the Government; and that white men instead of Indians are employed to labor for them. As far as I can see, the products of their industry are to be altogether their own property. One would suppose that, being furnished everything, the products ought to belong to the Government to be used to meet the wants of the Indians not settled on the reservation or suffering from famine. There is nothing in these accounts to show that any one of these farmers has succeeded in producing means for his own subsistence, to say nothing of supplying means for the subsistence of the Indians, and have a very large increase in the vote for this year over that of last year. Farmers and farmers' wages last year were put down at $36,430; they cost $65,000; this year the amount is estimated at $60,000. It seems to me that it ought to be sufficient to supply a farmer with the appliances necessary for conducting his farm. I do not see why he should be paid at all. If you undertake to pay him, what guarantee have you that he will be industrious. The hon. gentleman has employed a very large number of instructors. He has furnished them with 50 spans of horses that cost $1,700, and 46 yoke of oxen that cost $5,700, with various other appliances. I have looked over the list. I do not say that the list is a very extravagant one, but I find that those gentlemen are better supplied with implements of husbandry than most farmers are in the older Provinces, and there ought to be something to show for the large outlay that has taken place. If the hon. gentleman continues to pay these men and take their crops they will have no motive to do anything. They will be precisely in the position of the African slaves in the Southern States who, not receiving the profit of their industry and whose wages not depending on the results, will do as little as possible. You cannot have such an inspection over those men as well secure efficiency. You may have an inspector that will enable you to detect a man who is scandalously careless and dismiss him, but you will put another man in his place who, under the pressure of the system, will tend downward to the same point. From the policy he has adopted, the hon. gentleman is likely to receive the smallest results for the largest outlay. There has been a very large expenditure for the establishment of a central organization in the North-West to manage Indian affairs. The hon. gentleman, shortly after he assumed the duties of the office, complained that under my charge, and through the exercise of what he called a meddling oversight, the management of Indian affairs was somewhat disorganized. I do not subscribe to the hon. gentleman's conclusion. The office was scarcely organized. It was, in fact, my intention to have reorganized the Indian management if we had been more successful at the elections; but during the period I was in office, I had done very little more than obtain the information necessary to intelligent action, and when the hon. gentleman proposed to create a Commission in the North-West and put the Indians in the North-West in charge of it, it did seem to me he was departing widely from the principles of responsible government, for through whatever instrumentality the government of a country may be carried on, the responsibility after all should rest with the Government here. While it may be well to have an efficient officer on the ground to obtain information and report, it is evident that the final determination ought to rest with the Government. I do not think that the hon. Minister will improve the efficiency of the office by repudiating the responsibility and transferring the duties to some other person in a distant part of the country. It does not seem to me that the right hon. gentleman's Commissioner purposes residing in the territory.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He does; but he is here at this moment.

Mr. MILLS. He was here when the Session opened, and has been here ever since, I think.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS. I find the office costs $7,658, to say nothing of travelling expenses; that the establishment of the farms cost $34,000; maintenance, $31,000; and this year the farm will cost $60,000 more. So far as I can learn from any information procurable, those farmers have not even produced crops sufficient to sustain themselves. The hon. gentleman has expended upon advertising, in connection with Indian affairs, between $3,000 and $4,000, between thirty and forty newspapers which he found it necessary to patronize. I was quite right in giving him the number of newspapers I did last night, as 124.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS. Yes; there were upwards of thirty advertisements in the Indian branch, and 139 in the Dominion Lands branch of the department. Looking at the proportions of this expenditure I find that the management of the affairs of the North-West which formerly cost $30,000, now costs $25,000 more; in addition, we have $8,000 nearly spent on the office of the Commissioner, and something like $14,000 in all, upon the officers and their travelling expenses, exclusive of the salaries of the Commissioner and his secretary. So we have here a proposition to spend an enormously large sum for this service, and this will be the fourth year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; our Estimates only commenced from 1st July, 1879.

Mr. MILLS. $11,252 was expended in 1878-79, and $65,000 in 1879-80. The vote we are now taking is for the fourth year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This Government have only estimated for two years, for 1879-80 and 1880-81.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman brought down a supplementary estimate for the expenditure for this very purpose in the previous year, $11,250; and now there is an estimate for this, the third year. I can see no object in taking a large sum out of the Public Treasury, to employ laboring men on those farms with the farmers. If any persons are employed, it should be Indians; and if the hon. gentleman would give the Indians a share of the crops for wages, they would have a special interest in producing as much as possible, and he would save a large sum to the public. Our Indians will not learn to farm by seeing other men at this work, and they are not likely to enjoy even that advantage if the farm is remote from the reservations. If we were to dispense with the vote for wages, diminish the vote to the farmers, and allow a proportion of the crop to go to the Indians as compensation for their help to the farmers, he would save public money, and teach the aborigines to become farmers, making them in some degree, at least self-supporting. The present prospect is a large increase of expense without improving the condition of the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend (Mr. Mills) has complained with regard to the annuities, that the amount estimated for is not inserted in the Estimates as it was last year. The chief reason for the alteration is the Audit Act. The Auditor General very correctly, perhaps, under this Act, holds that, no matter how the vote may be subdivided, no more money can be spent under the head of the subdivisions than is voted. For although the whole any expenditure may be within the whole vote, in consequence of the vigorous system of paying the Indians by ticket, there would be a considerable reduction—there has been one and would be a larger reduction. But you cannot by any possibility hit a saving under this treaty. You can only approximately average the figures in the whole amount of the various accounts by the more rigid system. If the whole amount is kept within the bounds of the last year's estimate, and if the report shows, as it does, the amount under each treaty—the matter is satisfactory. The whole report unfortunately has not been laid before the House, but the amount given under each treaty is stated specifically in the report. With regard to the system of payment by ticket, last year there appears on the face of the ticket which is given to each head of a family, the number of his family and the place where he was paid last. This ticket he must produce before he is paid, and under this system it is as nearly as may be a perfect check upon his being paid twice. The hon. gentleman says he finds that a large number of tools and agricultural implements have been given to the Indians, and that they have not used them. But the hon. gentleman must remember that we are under a treaty obligation to furnish them with a certain number of agricultural implements, oxen, &c. Perhaps those treaties were not sufficiently guarded as to the manner in which those implements were to be used by the Indians, but at all events we are bound to furnish them. All we can do is to endeavor, in every possible way, to induce them to use them. Some cattle which were given them at first they ate the moment they got them, but now they are attaching value to the ox as an animal of labor rather than as an article of diet. The experiment of employing these farm instructors is, I believe, working as successfully as could well be expected, considering that 1880 was the first year in which it was tried, and that they had to begin by teaching the Indians the very rudiments of agricultural pursuits. In despair at finding that their ordinary means of subsistence have disappeared forever, the Indians have betaken themselves, in a rude way, to cultivating the soil—to scratching it I might say—and are to some extent, at least, feeling the example of their instructors with promising results. Unfortunately the crop of last year has been exceptionally killed in consequence of a summer frost, but at all events the Indians have made a commencement, which is about all we could expect for the first year, considering that we had to take the nomadic Indian from the prairies, wild as the buffaloes, and set him down to stationary agricultural pursuits. The Indians are being induced to work, but they must have instructors, and these instructors must be paid. You cannot get men, from motives of philanthropy, to settle amongst a band of Indians which is away from his own kindred and lineage. The farms of the instructors are just outside of the reserves, but in juxtaposition to them, and it is their duty as well as the duty of their assistants to show the Indians how to do the work and induce them to cultivate their lands. The hon. gentleman says that there is no possibility of inspection, but I do not see that at all. We have an efficient inspector there at present, and he reports that on the whole—though there have been one or two failures, and that must always happen—the great majority of them have proved themselves worthy of their salaries, and have acted wisely and well in inducing the Indians to betake themselves to work. The hon. gentleman says that the instructor should not get the crop. He does not get the crop. When they were first engaged they were given twelve months' provisions, with the understanding that, after that time, they should find themselves. Some of them, however, contended that anything they raised on the farms, after supplying themselves and their hands, was to be their own property. A notification was sent from the Department defining their duties. Another notification drew attention to the arrangements made with them, and further informed them that they would be charged 25 cents per diem for their board, and that each member of their families would be charged 12½ cents per diem. Statements were to be sent to the Inspector, and checked, as to the produce of the farm, and the amount consumed, which was to be charged against them. Statements were to be made every quarter showing the number of the family of each farmer. Some of them who were dissatisfied with the arrangement was told that they might go, as it was possible to get as good and perhaps better men—men who were more acquainted with this country. These instructors were originally selected in the older Provinces, but it is expected that now, after the influx of persons skilled in agricultural pursuits, we would be able to get suitable men who have been in the country four or five years, to take the place of any who may yet be dissatisfied. The farmers who get their salaries are obliged to pay for everything else they get. With regard to the two farms in the McLeod district, where there are many destitute Indians, it is intended to use the surplus to feed these Indians. On the Indian farms located off the reserves, the home farms, the Indian is to raise sufficient for the farmer at 25 cents a head, and also to put as much labor on the Indian reserves as possible, making the workingman employed under the farm instructor work with Indians, not only to show the Indians how to work, but to work with them, so that they may see how the white man works. The Indian is docile in that respect. Where the example is shown him he will take off his coat and work with considerable assiduity, much more than the Indian in Ontario and Quebec. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman says about the abuse which has existed, in his time as well as my own, in regard to the waste of provisions furnished the Indians when they received their annuities. The hon. gentleman knows that the Indians were in the habit of assembling in large bands and indulging in jollity and play, and they would refuse to take their pay in order that they might be fed and keep up the assembly as long as they could. They had either to be fed, or starve. This was a very bad system, but I fancy it was absolutely necessary—there was no other way of paying the Indians at first. But now, with an improved mode of communication which increases every year, and with the increase in the number of agents and white employees of the Government, it is the intention of the Government—they have commenced this year, and they intend to continue it—to pay each Indian band as much as possible on their own reserve, and thus to discourage these large assemblies. The department may not be able to do this in some few places, but it will be done wherever possible, and the Indians will be paid at once by the agent on their own reserve, and thus save this unnecessary waste and prevent the Indians from assembling in a manner prejudicial to themselves. Of course the system is tentative and it is expensive, especially in feeding the destitute Indians. But it is cheaper to feed them than to fight them, and humanity will not allow us to let them starve. The vote is large, and will continue to be large, but the Indians must be fed, and the country will not allow us to let them starve for the sake of economy. The only way to avoid that necessity is by using steady efforts to get them settled on the reserves and to make them farmers. Some of our efforts have resulted in total failure, but the experiment must be persisted in. If there is failure one year it must be avoided next year. The Indians are by slow degrees learning to cultivate the soil. We have already met with sufficient success to justify the Government in asking for these votes. It is a necessity of the whole country to have the Indians civilized and utilized, and if the experiments sometime fail, and if the expense seems large, Parliament must put up with it because there is no other way. I shall only repeat again that the report shows that the Indians have been taking themselves to the cultivation of the soil. They have fully realized that in future years they must look to the soil, not to the produce of the chase, for their support. It is a great thing to have that notion firmly impressed on their minds, that in the future, except in case of an occasional failure of food, they must depend upon the soil for their subsistence. The hon. gentleman says he thinks the appointment of a Commissioner is a mistake—or he insinuated that. I think the hon. gentleman intended at first that the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West (Mr. Laird) should act very much as a Commissioner—at all events he was appointed as agent with an addition to his salary as Governor, for that purpose. Although he was so appointed I understand the hon. gentleman found it more convenient to conduct affairs directly from headquarters here than through Mr. Laird. At all events, Mr. Laird resigned his position. It occurs to me that it is a mere matter of administration, it is a matter of responsible government, and the Minister is responsible to Parliament and the country for the good administration of his department. It seems to me absurd to suppose that every little land agent, every farm instructor and every Indian agent, should report directly here instead of having a commissioner there to whom accounts could be sent, who would supervise the whole system and be responsible to the Minister, the Minister in his turn being responsible to this Parliament. I think that is so obvious that it is hardly worth arguing. As regards the present Commissioner, he was here last Session and he is here this Session, being specially called here for the purpose of consulting with the department. He has roamed over that country with great activity during the short period he has been appointed. He has visited nearly every portion of that vast country, and made himself acquainted with the Indians and their wants. Of course he was fully trained in intercourse with the Indians of the North-West before he was appointed. Being a man of great energy, and of good physique as well, he has gone over that whole country, and has made himself as fully acquainted as any man possibly could during the time. It is, of course, necessary that he should come down here. It was only a journey of three or four days from Winnipeg to Ottawa, and it was necessary that he should come here, and give an account of his experience, along with suggestions as to working out the system, which is yet, I must admit, in an experimental state. I think it will be absolutely necessary that we should have such an officer, and I think results will show that his appointment has been a success. If there is any other point that I have omitted I will be glad to furnish the hon. gentleman with information regarding it.

Mr. MILLS. I will just say a word with regard to the last observation of the hon. gentleman. He knows, from papers in the department from Manitoba superintendency, that all the reports of the various Indian agents came, not to the department, but to the superintendent. If the hon. gentleman has read the papers he knows that the result of that system was not satisfactory, and that a condition of things existed which never could have existed if reports had been made directly to the department by the subordinate superintendents as well as by the central office. Look at the results. From 1874 to 1878 the treaties were negotiated. Special expenditures were incurred during these negotiations that have not been incurred since. The hon. gentleman knows that it requires considerable time to negotiate treaties; large number of Indians are assembled together, and must be provided for until the negotiations are concluded. But nothing of that sort has occurred since the hon. gentleman adopted his new arrangements; so that, in comparing the estimates of the early years with those of the latter years, this fact must be kept in view and reductions accordingly made. Notwithstanding that, the expenditure for provisions has enormously increased. There is a strong temptation for men whom you appoint as Indian agents—and they are always men without much means, or they would not accept the salary we give—and who are far removed from the influence of public opinion, to act dishonestly towards the Government or towards the Indians. In my opinion, these men require some sort of supervision, a supervision which they have not received. Some of these men incur larger expenditures than they ought to incur, and I am perfectly satisfied that some of them have not acted faithfully towards the Government who have entrusted them with their positions. I would also call the hon. gentleman's attention to the evidence which the Public Accounts afford, that many Indians have been paid twice over each year, and the number is continually increasing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not now; it is decreasing, and we believe it is going still further to decrease.

Mr. MILLS. Under treaties 1, 2, 3 and 5, which apply to Indians who are collected in small bands, the payments in each year have been pretty uniform, and therefore there should be no difficulty in appropriating a precise sum for each; but in the others, 4 and 6, the amounts vary considerably, and have been going on increasing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We hope to put a check to that.

Mr. MILLS. With regard to the commissionership, the hon. gentleman has yet to show why it should exist. The hon. gentleman says we had a commissioner; we had Mr. Laird as a temporary superintendent, because we knew very little about the country, and the negotiations with the Indians were not completed. It certainly was not the intention that the condition of things then existing should continue, and it does seem to me that we have now a machinery altogether out of proportion to the work required to be done. It is obvious, from the amount of the appropriation last year, that these Indians were not totally destitute of supplies. The supplies given them would feed them only for a short time, certainly less than a month, and the rest of the time they must have been living on means provided by themselves. When you once commence feeding the Indians, their demands for supplies must go on increasing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not quite understand my hon. friend. The Indians must either be fed or allowed to starve. Of course if they are furnished with food, it is natural for them to hang around where their food is, and every possible check must be applied to stop that. I believe every possible check has been applied. Some of the officials, from good nature, and others from fear of the Indians, being far away from adequate protection, have, perhaps, been too liberal. The hon. gentleman says there are temptations to these men to be dishonest. That is so, and yet the hon. gentleman objects to the Commissioner who is specially appointed to look after these men and to keep them honest as far as possible. I may inform the hon. gentlemen that, in order to prevent the Indians from hanging around the different stations, they have only been fed on half rations, and we have been so severe upon the Indians in this regard that we have on several occasions received remonstrances from the medical men in the vicinity of these points, stating that the food was insufficient to support them. Still we hope that the demand for food will decrease every year, as the Indians become employed. We find them betaking themselves to getting out ties for the railway, and it is believed that they will be ready and willing to apply themselves to the work of construction, not to rock cutting, but to the use of the pick and the spade, which will be of great advantage in view of the scarcity of labor in the country. I would also state that the agents for treaties 1, 2, 3, and 5 have been instructed to subtract from the payments to the Indians next year the overpayments which have been made. Will the hon. gentleman object to the cost of $12,000 for building an office for the Commissioner. He will be situated at a central point. $12,000 will not build a very big house anywhere, and certainly not out there. The Commissioner must have an office, and also a council room in which to receive the Indians.

Mr. SCOTT. Some hon. gentlemen may think the expenditure for the Indians is in excess of what it ought to be, but they should take into consideration the fact that it is most necessary to the opening up of the North-West that we should maintain the most friendly relations with the Indian tribes. To do that, we must keep faith with them. When treaties are made, the amount must be paid punctually and promptly; if not, we will be sure to get into the same difficulty with the Indian tribes of our North-West that our friends on the other side of the border have to contend with. We know from experience in the North-West that the Indians, when opportunities are offered them, are always ready to lend a helping hand in the farming operations, and that the policy of the Government in appointing farming instructors in the North-West has had already a most beneficial effect. It is much better to pay this small sum — for although it may appear large, I contend it is a small sum for the extinguishing of the Indian title and the purchase of lands in the North-West — or to pay double the amount rather than have an Indian war. I believe the Indian agents appointed in the past, have managed the business, at all events, to the satisfaction of the Indians; if not, we would have heard of it long before this. I presume the Government must have sufficient check on their officers in the North-West to know if they are dealing honestly with the Government or not. I have every confidence that the movement which the Government have made in regard to the treatment of the Indians of the North-West will result in good hereafter. I trust they will continue that policy. I trust they will be even more generous towards the Indians. We know well that during the regime of the Hudson's Bay Company, we never heard of difficulties with the Indian tribes, and that notwithstanding it has been called a great monopoly, it held the Indians tribes true to the British flag.

Mr. JONES (Leeds). I am aware of the truth of what the First Minister has said. I know of one man who was placed on one of the outposts, and who gave up his position on account of the reduction of rations, as he was afraid to remain there on account of the position of the Indians.

Mr. McCALLUM asked what kind of cattle were supplied. Where they wild Montana steers, such as were purchased by the late Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe some wild cattle were given under contract some years ago, but I have no doubt my hon. friend opposite called the contractors to account.

Mr. MILLS. Montana and Minnesota were the only places where cattle could be purchased. I have no doubt the Government are obliged to purchase cattle now where they were purchased before. I believe the last lot was bought from the Hon. James McKay, but he had formerly purchased the cattle in Manitoba. The wild cattle were not purchased in my time, but before I came into office and since.

Mr. McCALLUM. The hon. gentleman made the most extraordinary contention that it would be good policy to starve the Indians. The Indians will not starve but will fight or steal, and it will cost less to feed them than to fight them. The hon. gentleman says we should make them farm lands, but we must first teach them how to do so. They must be coaxed into becoming self-sustaining.

Mr. TROW. The hon. gentleman appears to have misunderstood the remarks of the hon. member. His statement was that the appropriation was not unreasonable, but that its application in many instances was not proper, that it was not legitimately expended. I have had some little experience out there, and I know large sums are expended for provisions which are not properly appropriated. Indians have been obliged to come to some places hundreds of miles to receive their pay. It is not proper they should be obliged to come all that distance to receive their paltry pittance of $5 each. If the paymaster would travel, instead of the Indians, for hundreds of miles, it would save money, because the Indians are allowed certain days' rations. On one occasion at Qu'Appelle several Indians had travelled five days to the place of payment, and occupied a like time in returning to their hunting grounds. That could be altered.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is being altered.

Mr. TROW. I cannot understand the system of checks to which the hon. First Minister has referred. Badges were used many years ago, but several of them were lost, and agents had to take it for granted that they wore the right parties. One great grievance I noticed was, that the Indians would remain feasting several days before they would accept their payments; on one occasion the time was nine days. I can understand that this might occur when the Indians were making treaties, but no reason existed after the treaty had been made and amount of payment fixed. On all occasions of payment, merchants and peddlars follow the paymaster, and within an hour of receiving their pittances, nine-tenths were expended in trifles not worth five cents, but for which a dollar was charged. I know cases in which Indians have bought a bottle of Pain-killer for a buffalo robe worth $5. I hope the system initiated by the Premier will have a tendency to prevent fraud, because at one time 27 Sioux Indians who had escaped from Sitting Bull's band came to Qu'Appelle and nine of them received payments.

In reply to Mr. MILLS,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The chief scene of the destitution among the Indians is in the territory extending from the vicinity of Wood Mountains to Fort Macleod. Besides the gradual and rapid decrease of the buffalo, there was the fact that the American troops were drawn up on the front in order to watch the hostiles, the Sioux, and the buffalo were thus driven back.

Mr. SCHULTZ. There are a large amount of lakes in the North-West filled with whitefish, while others have no fish. I would suggest that the department consider the advisability of stocking such lakes with fish spawn.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What information can the First Minister furnish respecting Sitting Bull and his band?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The main portion of the hostiles have surrendered to the United States. Sitting Bull with a much diminished body, numbering only 60 lodges out of all the vast body of men, is in a starving condition, but is still obstinate, more from apprehension, I think, than anything else, and refuses to surrender. The Americans promise the Sioux good treatment, and those who have surrendered have been very well treated. Sitting Bull, who is in a starving condition, receives no sustenance of any kind from the Canadian Government. They are told they will receive no food from the authorities, and that they must surrender to the American Government. Our offer of an escort of Sitting Bull, to the frontier, and also of protection till the American forces are ready to receive and protect him, has been again and again made. The Indians are afraid of being attacked by some of the western men who suffered from hostile incursions of the Indians during the Civil War. Every inducement has been offered to those Indians to surrender, and I believe they will surrender to the United States authorities ere long ex necessitate. The bands have dwindled away considerably. There are now 60 lodges.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I am extremely glad to hear that, because Sitting Bull's Indians have always been a serious source of danger to us. Where are those people?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Wood Mountain.

176. Collection of Revenues—Excise..... $200,206 66

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. This item was last year but $180,000. Is there an increase of $20,000 this year? The increase of the salaries of the Excise officers is a very large one. There seems to be a considerable alteration in the system.

Mr. LAURIER. I thought the same system was kept up this year. I see there have been examinations for the admission of candidates into the different branches of the service; and I knew the candidates raised from one class to another are entitled to an increase of salary. If it is not proposed to have any such examinations this year, I do not understand why there should be so much money asked for—more than last year.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. The increase over last year is $20,206. The increase is accounted for by the larger number of employees this than last year, amounting to seventy-six; thirteen are to oversee the collection of the tobacco duty; fifteen are excisemen; there are two caretakers and three messengers besides a few other officers.

Mr. ANGLIN. Where is the additional work for those officers?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. The increase is in consequence of the Act last Session by which a change in regard to the cultivation of tobacco was provided for, and the inspection of petroleum was made more effective.

Mr. LAURIER. This increase is principally for new excisemen to look after the tobacco revenue.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. To look after tobacco, petroleum and gas.

Mr. LAURIER. How many officers are for petroleum?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. None specially. Last year there were fifteen, this year twenty, but that is not at all a vote of the Government, but it is done in carrying out the law of 1873.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Are we to understand that the increase of thirty-three additional employees on a total staff of 133 or 134, is on account of the inspection of tobacco?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. With regard to this inspection of tobacco, we have been entering on a new phase of the matter, in the hope that it would ultimately be an important source of revenue.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is it from a tax on this native grown tobacco that you hope to realize this revenue?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. Yes; and, by sending instructors through the country, to teach the people how to grow good tobacco.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Do you mean to say that, under this vote, you are taking money to pay instructors in the growth of tobacco, and not for excise purposes at all?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. Some of the instructors have only begun their work, but the production and sale of the articles are rapidly increasing.

Mr. LAURIER. Really I think this is obtaining money under false pretences. This vote is asked for the salaries of excisemen, and now the hon. gentleman says that these men have the duty of instructing the people in the growth of tobacco. This I do not think is allowed by the Act, and the hon. gentleman should at least state fairly and above-board what the money is for. I do not believe these are part of the duties imposed on the exciseman. I believe, on the contrary, it can only be the duty of the exciseman to collect the revenue. I see by these estimates that the collection of the duties on tobacco cost this year over $60,000, though a very insignificant revenue was collected. If we are expending all the hon. gentleman has stated, I can only repeat what I said before, that it is obtaining money under false pretences.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What provision is there in the Act authorizing these officers to instruct the people in the growth of tobacco?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. What I said was that the instructions from the department were to examine the kind of tobacco in cultivation, the mode of cultivation, to give such advice as was needed, and to report to the department. If there are any improvements made in the culture of tobacco, it will be the duty of these instructors to acquaint the people with them. I understand that the gentlemen selected for this purpose are well acquainted with the culture of tobacco. These officers have already been appointed.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The statement made is a remarkable one and requires the attention of the Committee. The hon. gentleman tells us that, owing to the encouragement to be given to the growth of Canadian tobacco, he expects a large increase in the revenue. We impose a duty of only four cents a pound upon that, and all the Canadian grown tobacco which goes into consumption will necessarily keep out so much foreign tobacco on which there is a much larger duty, and where the additional revenue is to come from I really do not see.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. There is 14 cents on manufactured tobacco.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Unless the law has been altered the duty is twenty or twenty-five cents. Although it may be very desirable to encourage the growth of Canadian tobacco, for every pound which pays an excise of four cents you lose necessarily an equal quantity of foreign tobacco, which would otherwise go into consumption, and pay a double or treble duty.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think it is a great advantage to the House that the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue is not present to-night; for he would not, I think, have given such explanations as we have received. If thirteen gentlemen are to be sent through the Province to teach farmers how to grow and save tobacco, it would be well that we should be informed how these instructors are to be instructed, for I presume it is not easy to find men who are adepts in that business. We should first be satisfied that they know something of the business, and that they will be able to convey valuable information to the native population. This is an extraordinary system that appears to have been adopted. In regard to excisemen, the hon. gentleman did not tell us why this large number of officers is now necessary that was not necessary last year. We ought to know what these gentlemen are to-day, and why they are more necessary now than they were last year.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. We are asking for $12,000 to provide for the cost of obtaining stamps and for the stamping of imported and Canadian tobacco, under the provisions of 43 Victoria, chapter 19; also to pay for travelling expenses of the instructors.

178. Weights, Measures and Gas $83,350 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. We were told that there was going to be an immense economy in this business, and I perceive that we are within a fraction of the amount expended under the old system, under which we received much more in the way of fees than we are receiving at present. If you make allowance for diminished receipts, you will find that we are expending, over and above what we receive, just as much as we expended before.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. In 1878-9 you appointed 94 inspectors of weights and measures; we have this year only 71.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. In other words, the impudent farce which was played two years ago is now developing itself. By Act of Parliament, just as good men as we now have were turned out on the pretence of economy, and the economy is now developing itself into an expenditure of $83,000. I do not doubt that next year it will be $93,000, and the next year $103,000. The whole powers of Parliament were prostituted to turn out these men in order that a number of new appointments might be made, and we now see the result.

193. To pay George Levegne arrears of salary as caretaker of the wharf, lighthouse and gate at River Ouelle, 20th September, 1870, to 1st March, 1874, and for disbursements made by him.....$211 50

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT asked an explanation of this.

Mr. LANGEVIN said he was employed all that time and never presented his account. His claim was looked into and was found to be correct.

Mr. LAURIER. Why was he removed in 1874?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The wharf was leased to a tow-boat company, and his services were no longer required.

194. Post Offices. $1,943,500 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. LANGEVIN gave details of the increases required for the operation of the service in the different Provinces.

Mr. BOURBEAU. Mr. Speaker, the parishes of St. Cyrille, in the County of Drummond, Saint Valère, Saint Albert and Sainte Clothilde, have asked the hon. Postmaster-General through me, for a mail service three times a week; these last named parishes were the first to be created in the County of Arthabaska. It is true that there are but few stores in those parishes, but there is a large lumber trade, especially in winter, with merchants from Québec, Three Rivers, Nicolet and other places. These merchants are often obliged to send messengers for a distance of 18 miles, in order to get to the Arthabaska Post Office. I regret to have to say that he refused to grant this just request. I am glad to be able to make the request in the House, because I told the hon. Postmaster-General that I would not trouble him any more. I hope that the hon. Minister of Public Works, who thoroughly understands the interests of the Province of Quebec, better perhaps than the present hon. Postmaster-General, will grant the request of these four parishes, for I have not the intention of again applying to the Postmaster General. Too much economy is perhaps exercised in the Counties of Drummond and Arthabaska, and perhaps the money spent elsewhere might make the population of these counties jealous. To be just, one should not economize in one county, and spend in the other. The Counties of Drummond and Arthabaska are two counties represented by one member, and they do not enjoy the same advantages as other counties; the member representing those two counties should have at least as much patronage as that allowed to a deputy representing but a single county. As I represent two counties, I should at least receive the same patronage as other deputies, but I regret to have to say that I am far from having my share of it.

Mr. LANDRY. I take advantage of the circumstance to ask the Minister of Public Works, who is here representing the Postmaster-General, if it has been quite settled that the various documents, reports and forms indorsed by the Post Office Department, and sent to the different postmasters in our rural districts, are to be in French. I ask the same question of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska, I must point out to him how wrong it is for him to have said that he would again call on the Postmaster-General. He must see that if so far he has not succeeded, it is because the Postmaster-General needs further explanations; were he to go and see him again, and give him further explanations, he would gain his point, and I consequently would advise him to call once more. I am certain that when I shall have told him what has just taken place, he will reconsider the matter, and will grant what is asked for, if there is a possibility of doing so.

Mr. BOURBEAU. If the hon. Minister of Public Works will give me the assurance that he will be more courteous, I am ready to call again on him.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. member cannot understand that Ministers are but men, and that often a Minister is tired and has not the time to receive all those who call on him. Those who call on him are often members of Parliament, but when seven, eight, ten, or twelve follow one another during the course of the same morning, a Minister may get tired, and not receive every one with the same courtesy. But the hon. member may be sure that the Postmaster-General, who is a most courteous man, did not intend to receive him uncourteously, and that he will be perfectly well treated should he call again. With regard to economy in the Counties of Drummond and Arthabaska, the hon. member need not fear that the Government seeks to economize except where it is necessary, and we have not the intention of economizing in that county more than in any other. With regard to the question put by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry), I know that it is the intention of the Postmaster-General that the documents sent to French Canadian postmasters and officials shall be in French; it has always been done; there may have been a misunderstanding, but such is the intention. I made note of the matter in order to put it before the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HESSON. The expenditure for the Post Office service appears to be very considerably increased. I am satisfied, however, that there is no expenditure from which the public receive greater advantage. I believe there will be no illiberality displayed by the House in regard to voting what is necessary to maintain this service effective. I know from long experience how much the people value postal facilities, and how much they are benefited by them, especially in the newer settlements. I will add that I am sure no portion of the service is more ably administered, and in none is the expenditure more wisely made.

Mr. ROSS (West Middle ex). I would like to know why two or three post offices have been closed up in my constituency. Perhaps, between the time of concurrence and the next general elections, we shall have the matter explained. The closing of those offices has resulted in great inconvenience to the people.

Mr. LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman will give me a notice of his question, I will try to answer on the next opportunity.

Resolution ordered to be reported.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. When will the Supplementary Estimates for 1881-82 be brought down?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. On Monday, I think.

House adjourned at 2 o'clock, a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 14th March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that on this day, and on every Monday during the Session, Government business shall have precedence after Private Bills.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that Private Bills be placed on the Orders of the Day the same day as they are reported.

Motion agreed to.

MILITIA AND DEFENCE.

Mr. CARON introduced a Bill further to amend the Acts therein mentioned respecting the Militia and Defence of the Dominion. He said: I may state that by the first clause of this Bill it is proposed to correct an error which exists in the French copy of the Act and which gives that copy a different sense from the English copy. I propose to add the words "ou soldat" in the 18th section, 31 Victoria, Chap. 40, after the words "si c'est un sous officier." The second clause provides for extending to February, 1883, the time when the enrollment of the reserve militia shall take place, the date in the present Act being February, 1881.

Bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The following Bills passed through Committee:—

Bill No. 79 to incorporate the Northern, North-Western and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company.—(Mr. McCarthy).

Bill No. 25 respecting the Ontario and Pacific Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Williams).

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. LANDRY asked if the Government could, to-day, give the answer promised last Monday, seventh instant, with regard to the action it intends taking on the petitions that have been presented to it, asking for the building of a branch off the Intercolonial from St. Charles to St. Joseph de Lévis; and, whether it has the intention of building that branch this year; if not, what are the Government's intentions at that point?

Mr. LANGEVIN. In reply to the first part of the question, I have to say that the Government is ready with its Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

answer to-day. With regard to the second part of the question, as to whether the Government has the intention of building the St. Charles branch this year, I must answer in the negative. To the third part of the question, viz., what the Government's intentions are, I will answer that the Government has the intention of at once inviting tenders for a railway ferry between the terminus of the Intercolonial in Quebec South and a spot nearest the Occidental Railway on the Quebec side, so that the baggage cars may be transported from one side of the river to the other. That ferry will have to be built by the Intercolonial and Occidental, on joint expense—i.e., by the Federal Government and the Local Government. On the other hand, as the Government has not the intention of building the St. Charles Branch this year, in order that the trade of Quebec, which interests the hon. member when he puts that question, shall not suffer, the Government intends to regulate the charges on the Intercolonial between St. Charles and Quebec, by calculating the distance as if the St. Charles Branch was actually constructed.

CANAL AT THE CEDARS

Mr. LANTIER enquired, Whether, in accordance with the promise made in the early part of the Session, the Engineer-in-Chief of Canals has examined the reports of explorations made for the construction of the projected canal at the Cedars; whether a report has been made, and the Government are prepared to give a decision?

Mr. POPE (Compton.) The Chief Engineer has been enquiring into the matter, but has not yet made his report.

GOLD AND SILVER MINING IN KEEWAYDIN.

Mr. SCOTT enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to encourage gold and silver mining industry on Lake of the Woods in Keewaydin Territory, during the coming season, by making temporary arrangements for the issue of mining licenses until the question of disputed territory may be finally settled?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The subject is under consideration. I hope to give the hon. gentleman an answer in a day or two.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Why, it was done years ago.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes.

THE MENNONITE RESERVE.

Mr. SCOTT enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to open the unsettled portion of the Mennonite Reserve, in the Province of Manitoba, for general settlement, particularly in the region known as the Pembina Mountain District?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The intention of the Government is, during the course of the present spring, or the coming summer, to offer these lands for sale at public competition.

CANADA CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to place a postal car on the western extension of the Canada Central Railway; and if so, when?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is not the intention of the Government to do so until the state of the railway business warrants it.

INTERNATIONAL PARK AT NIAGARA.

Mr. HUNTINGTON enquired, Whether any negotiations are progressing regarding the proposed International Park at Niagara; and if so, what is the nature thereof?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are no negotiations progressing; but the Government is in anticipation of legislation at Albany during the present Session of the State Legislature.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND CONFEDERATION.

Mr. GAULT enquired, Has the Government had any correspondence during the past twelve months with the Government of Newfoundland with a view of bringing that Island into Confederation with the Dominion?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have had no such correspondence.

SOUTHAMPTON MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. GILLIES enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to extend the evening mail service from Walkerton to Southampton; and if so, when?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is not the intention of the Government to do so.

RED RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SCHULTZ enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to remove the piles of the temporary bridge across the Red River upon the completion of the permanent swing bridge?

Mr. POPE (Compton). It is.

EXPENDITURE BY MR. ANNAND.

Mr. BORDEN enquired, Whether the following extract from "Remarks" under date 30th October, 1880, contained in page 100 of the Auditor General's last Report: "For the expenditure by Mr. Annand, of the London, England, Office amounting to £495 10s. 7d. stg., no details nor vouchers have yet been furnished," correctly represents the facts?

Mr. POPE (Compton). They do not correctly represent the facts. The vouchers for this sum were transmitted from the Department of Agriculture to the Audit Office in a letter dated the 22nd November, 1880, in reply to the Auditor's letter of October 30th, but it does not appear in the Auditor's report. I may add that there is no complaint whatever made with respect to Mr. Annand's conduct in that settlement, and I think it is unfortunate that there should be placed in the Auditor's—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to order. This is not debateable.

Mr. POPE. I am not debating it. It is put there—

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to order.

NEGLECTED AND DESTITUTE INDIANS.

Mr. PLUMB enquired, Whether the attention of the Government has been called to articles in the London Free Press, of the 2nd, 7th and 8th insts., alleging that the Indians in the vicinity of the town of Sarnia have been utterly neglected and are in a state of destitution, and whether it is the intention of the Government to cause an enquiry into the truth of the allegations?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The attention of the Government has been called to these articles. They have, in fact, been transmitted to my department. I shall, of course, make enquiry into the truth of these allegations.

RAILWAY AND TELEGRAPH MATERIALS MANUFACTURED IN CANADA.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, make regulations:

(1) For ascertaining the quantities and values of fish plates and other fastenings, spikes, bolts, nuts, and iron bridges, manufactured in Canada and used by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the original construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as defined in the Act 37 Victoria, Chap. 14, and also the quantities and values of all telegraphic apparatus manufactured in Canada and used by the said Company in the original construction and first equipment of a telegraph line in connection with the said railway:

And for ascertaining the persons in Canada from whom such fish plates and other fastenings, spikes, bolts, nuts, and iron bridges, and telegraphic apparatus, respectively, have been procured by the said Company.

2. That the Governor in Council, with the assent of the Treasury Board, and on such terms and conditions as may be thought proper, may pay over to the persons in Canada from whom such articles as aforesaid, manufactured in Canada, have been procured, sums of money not exceeding the amount of Customs duty which would have been payable on such articles respectively, if imported into Canada at the time they were so procured by the said Company.

He said: I will call attention to the fact that there are certain articles named in the contract, for instance steel rails, that are not named in this resolution. They are made free until 1883. There are articles not manufactured in the country for telegraphic purposes, not included in these resolutions. I hold in my hand a statement, a copy of which, I think, was handed to the leader of the Opposition, by the Minister of Railways, as to the probable amount of duty that will be paid on those articles, and from that memorandum I will read:

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, PROBABLE AMOUNT OF EXEMPTION FROM DUTIES UNDER THE SYNDICATE CONTRACT, VALUE F.O.B. LIVERPOOL.

Steel Fish Plates. —Say 1,950 miles at 3½ tons per mile, 6,825 tons F.O.B. Liverpool, say £5 5s. or $25.55 per ton, $174,379,
Duty 17½	$29,063
Rails, Spikes. —Say 2,000 miles at 3 tons per mile, 6,000 tons F.O.B. Liverpool, say £7 10s or $36.50 per ton, $219,000.
Duty ½ cent per lb. and 10 per cent. ad valorem	89,100
Cut and other Spikes. —Say 100 tons at say $37, $3,700 at ½ cent per lb. and 10 per cent ad valorem	1,490
Rail Joints, Bolts and Nuts. —Say 2,000 miles at 90 tons per mile, 1,800 tons F.O.B. Liverpool, say £10 or $46.67 per ton, $87,606. Duty 30 per cent.	26,281
Other Bolts and Nuts. —Say 800 tons at $46.67 per ton, $37,336 at 30 per cent. duty	11,200
Materials of Wood. —Say to be purchased on line of railway
Wire. —Duty 15 per cent	17,688
Telegraph Apparatus. —Say 200 instruments at $100, cost $20,000 Duty 30 per cent	6,000

That is the result, supposing the whole of those articles should be manufactured in this country and the drawbacks paid. But it is quite clear that, so far as the materials required for the British Columbia end of the road are concerned, we cannot expect to manufacture them in the Dominion. The expense of transmitting them to British Columbia, until the railway to that Province is completed, would be great. Under any circumstances, no doubt that portion of the materials required for the road would be brought in under the terms and conditions of the Act. It is, I think, properly agreed that, as to any of those articles manufactured in the country, the manufacturer should, under the contract with the Company for the first construction of the road, receive an amount not in excess of the duty that would be paid on them were they imported, the Government taking the power to fix their probable marketable value had they been imported, and the rate of duty they would have paid under the circumstances—the object is to fix the drawback to be given at an amount not exceeding the duty.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister has not included, so far as I can recollect, the value of the iron bridges, which may amount to a very considerable item. The character of the North-West country is such that, although in other respects railways through it may be constructed with extraordinary cheapness, there will, undoubtedly, be a very considerable number of gullies to cross, and in some cases the bridges must be made of iron. So the total amount of duties to be refunded may be very much more than the House or Minister contemplates.

As to the general principle of the proposal, I call attention to the fact that it involves the direct payment of bounties, neither more nor less. The precedent thus to be established is one of very great importance. In some respects I, individually, would prefer to see bonuses given to protective taxes, but for this reason only: the country would know what exactly the protective system costs it; but that has not been the guiding principle of Ministers. If this system were adopted and the resolution carried out, it would undoubtedly astonish and probably alarm even the most strenuous advocates of Protection. The duty is, I think, 25 per cent. on iron bridges.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. This iron bridge over the Ottawa, above the Chaudiere, cost, I think, $300,000 or $400,000, and the duty amounted to $75,000 or $30,000. I merely raise the question in order that the House may clearly understand what it is about. It appears to me seriously objectionable for two reasons: first, that we do not know what amount of cost will be involved; and, in the next place, it is a direct application of the system of bounties.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This calculation is made as for 800 tons of either bolts or nuts, required for the construction of wooden bridges. There has been no statement made with respect to iron bridges, because it has not been decided whether the Company will build iron bridges or not, although, if they do so, the desire of the Government will be carried out. We, therefore, do not know the probable cost of such bridges. It was stated by the Minister of Railways, in the discussion on the subject, speaking of the arrangement made by the late Minister of Public Works as to the railway along the north shore of Lake Superior, there was no provision made for a single iron bridge. It was, therefore, uncertain, at the present moment, whether the Company would build iron bridges at all, and if so, what rivers would be spanned by them. The allowance would amount to 25 per cent. on all bridges built in the country. Iron bridges for British Columbia would require to be shipped from England. If bridges were built here the country would receive 17½ cents duty on the iron entering into them, and the difference would thus be the amount between that rate and 25 per cent. on the manufactured article, and the compensation for that loss of revenue would be the employment given to the people and the encouragement of the industries of the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is not further from Halifax to British Columbia, by way of Cape Horn, than it is from England.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Practical men say that iron bridges could be as easily sent from Canada as from England.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister of Finance has stated that the only difference in regard to the duty on iron bridges is the difference between 17½ and 25 per cent., inasmuch as the Government will collect 17½ per cent. on the iron. That is true as to the raw material, but the hon. gentleman should be able to inform the House what proportion of the total cost is represented by the raw material. Such structures involve a great deal of work unless, indeed, the Company should bring in the bridges in parts and simply put them together in this country.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If bridges in pieces were brought in under the present Tariff a duty of twenty-five per cent. would be levied, except on some portions not made in the Dominion which, would be admitted at a lower rate.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What estimate does the hon. Minister make as to the relative value of the raw material? Will the value of the raw material amount to one-third of the value of the structure?

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think the raw material will be equal to one-third, probably three-fourths.

Mr. BLAKE. When spikes are imported will the duty be levied on the bar iron or on the spikes?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The duty will be paid on the finished spike.

Mr. CASEY. This is a valuable admission on the part of the hon. Minister of Finance. We have always been told that the consumers did not pay the entire amount of duty imposed for protective purposes. Now the hon. gentleman admits that the manufacturer does gain by the whole amount of the duty, and if it were removed he would just be where he was if no duty had been put on.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The manufacturer has to pay on the raw material while the English manufacturer has not.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I wish to point out that if the manufacturers of iron bridges are treated as some other manufacturers have been treated, they may enter into contracts based on this resolution only to find that by some regulation or Order in Council they could not get the drawback upon what they depended, and a great injustice might be done to them in that way. I think we ought to know whether there is a mere temporary expedient to tone down the ire of the manufacturer, or whether it is a regulation which will be fairly and permanently carried out. I have frequently called the attention of the Government to the fact that from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 worth of manufactured goods have been exported from Canada upon which the Government agreed to give drawbacks, but upon which, although the Tariff has been in force twenty one months, drawbacks have not been paid.

Mr. BOWELL. I am inclined to think that the hon. gentleman is like a good many others, who are constantly demanding that drawbacks should be allowed to their friends, but who fail to look into the facts connected with the demands they make. Neither the Government as a whole, nor any of the departments, have made arrangements with which it is impossible to comply. With regard to the instance to which the hon. gentleman refers, no claim has yet been made to the department or to any of its officers upon which it would be possible to come to a correct conclusion as to the amount of the drawback which should be paid upon those articles for which drawbacks are allowed. If my hon. friend knew that among the demands made are demands for drawbacks upon pig iron and iron purchased in Londonderry, he would see how difficult it is for the department to satisfy these parties. There is not in the demand to which he refers a single paper or document upon which it would be possible for any accountant to come to a correct decision as to the amount of the drawback which should be allowed. In the last interview we had with the gentleman in question, he admitted that a portion of the articles were manufactured in Canada, and yet he demanded a drawback; and when he is refused, he says it is impossible for him to comply with the regulations, and he always finds a defender on the floor of this House ready to condemn the Government for not distributing the public money merely at the demand of those who ask for it. The regulation is as simple as any regulation can well be. The manufacturer is asked to lay before the department the amount and the cost of articles imported, as raw material, and which articles have gone into manufacture. Upon a reference to the Tariff the amount of duty he has paid is easily ascertained, and then, upon evidence being received that the articles have been exported, he gets the drawback. The Government has been desirous, and I may say over anxious, to meet the just views of the manufacturers; but I do not think that even my hon. friend from Brant would justify the Government in paying these drawbacks out of the public moneys without proper data for such payments.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman thinks that every time I speak upon this subject I have reference to a particular claim.

Mr. BOWELL. I know you have.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. I have several times spoken of the general fact that three or four millions dollars worth of goods have been exported upon which the Government pledged themselves to give drawbacks, but upon which no drawbacks were paid. I moved for a return to show the names of the firms exporting these goods, but when it was brought down there was a rather curt note appended, saying that as rejected claims were not a matter of account they could not be given. I submit that this is not a proper way in which the business of the country should be transacted. I think, in the face of this fact, the position I take is a strong one, and it does not lie in the mouth of the hon. the Minister of Customs to ask me whether there has been a claim presented by those individuals. I venture to say this: that there are far more claims than the one he would lead the House to believe has been the only one. He has the means of knowing; I have not. I took steps to find out and I was told that no record was kept. I would ask him whether there have not been many more claims than those whose demands have been satisfied. He says, with reference to that claim, that he had put in Londonderry pig iron along with his other pig iron; that the boiler tubes were a manufactured article while the pig iron was not. Here, to-day, we have a direct contradiction of that statement. We have the hon. gentleman telling us that pig iron is a manufactured article in Canada as well as the article of boiler tubes. Yet, forsooth, the Ministry have adopted a system of regulations whereby they will give a drawback on pig iron which is manufactured in the country; while boiler tubes are not manufactured in the country and no drawbacks shall be given on boiler tubes, because, they say, these are manufactured articles and pig iron is not. Why, the whole thing is an anomaly. The whole thing is in such a shape that it is impossible for men to get their rights. Take it again with reference to this bounty to bridge manufacturers; if carried out it is giving to them the whole claim that can be preferred by any manufacturer in any direction. Why, under this regulation the iron bridge manufacturer will get by way of bounty the total amount of duty on pig iron that enters into the construction of that bridge, whether made in Londonderry or made in foreign countries, because it is the amount of duty that would have been paid on the manufactured articles that he gets back, the finished article; so that under this heading he is giving to the bridge manufacturer, about the only ones who supply material to the Syndicate, a drawback of the full amount of the material that enters into the construction of their work, whether that material be made in Canada or in any other country. There is another point upon which I would ask him to draw a straight line. I want him to understand that I am not speaking in reference to the claim of the one firm that has been referred to. Neither have I gone into the question of the alarming decrease of our export trade, a decrease which ought to be a subject of alarm for the Ministers. There is no argument more telling against their National Policy. If they would strengthen their position they must look into this question, and if they would not destroy their export trade they must take steps whereby the matter will be better arranged in the future. Again, I point out to the hon. Ministers that the resolutions now before the House give, by way of bounty, what would be given, by way of drawbacks, on all the material entering into the construction of their work, whether made in the country or out of the country, and yet he gives no drawback on iron manufactured in Canada, though it is a raw material, and he cares not whether he may injure or cripple the export trade thereby. With reference to the claim I mention, I did not intend to allude to it personally, but I intended to go to the hon. Minister himself, who is always so courteous in his department, and point out to him that it ought to be recognized. But I now deal with the general principle, and I am pointing out how it is affecting the whole export trade of the country.

Mr. BOWELL. It is quite evident that the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), is a protectionist, but having voted for all the Free Trade motions that were ever presented, is now trying to make his peace with the manufacturers in his own county by advocating a drawback on articles which no Government ever contemplated allowing. The hon. gentleman has, with a good deal of tact, mixed up articles actually manufactured in this country—the pig iron of Londonderry, the tubes manufactured in the United States, and the saws manufactured somewhere else—and has then attacked the Government because they do not pay a drawback on the whole. I have always been under the impression, and, I think the manufacturers of this country understand it very well, that if a drawback is to be paid, it is to be equal to the duties paid on the article which goes into the manufacture; yet he condemns the Government because we refuse to pay a drawback upon an article manufactured in the country itself. That is the position my hon. friend took a few minutes ago.

Mr. PATERSON. If it is raw material.

Mr. BOWELL. How can you pay a drawback upon an article which never pays any duty?

Mr. PATERSON. How are you going to do with this bridging?

Mr. BOWELL. That is for special purpose.

Mr. PATERSON. Oh! that is an easy way of solving the difficulty.

Mr. BOWELL. My hon. friend may fancy that "oh!" means argument. The hon. gentleman ought to know that these resolutions were not even proposed when the regulations were adopted.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not blame you personally.

Mr. BOWELL. I take it for granted the Government is responsible for what I have done, and have approved of it in every instance, so far as they are cognizant of it. But I find fault with the hon. gentleman, because he says that regulations have been adopted which prevent manufacturers from obtaining a drawback. I challenge him to prove it. The resolutions proposed by the Government are so simple in their nature that no person who desires to obtain a drawback, and desires to obtain it honestly, can fail in obtaining it. I say, further, that in no single circumstance where a proper demand has been made has it been refused. We only refuse where such a demand has been made as that we have under now our notice, in which drawbacks are asked to be paid upon articles made in the country, and upon which, consequently, no duty could possibly have been paid. That is the objection I take to the hon. gentleman's position. Whether, as I stated the other night, it is proper to carry the principle of drawbacks to cover manufactured articles brought into the country, is a debatable point which I am willing to discuss with the hon. gentleman privately or in any other way. But I deny positively that the charge which has been brought against the Government by the hon. gentleman has any foundation in fact—I do not say he wilfully misstates the facts. On the contrary, I know manufacturers who have made statements that they could not get further drawbacks. When the gentleman to whom my hon friend refers waited upon me personally, I pointed out to him the absurdity of asking drawbacks upon articles never manufactured in the country. He could not say anything further, the only answer he could give was: "We will strike them out." I say now that the Government is anxious to encourage the manufacture of every article that is being exported to the fullest extent, but manufacturers must keep their books in such a way as to show the department that the importations upon which duty has been placed have actually paid the duty, that the goods have been consumed, or that the article has been exported, and then there is no further trouble about it.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman says that I am trying to make my peace with the manufacturers. I am doing nothing of the kind, but I have already contended that we ought to give a certain amount of protection to the manufacturers. I supported a Government for five years that did it, and what I ask from the hon. Minister of Customs to-day is that he will, by his drawback system, place the manufacturers in this country on the same footing they held when the Tariff of the late Government was in force. What I complain of is that these hon. gentlemen, by their Tariff, have hampered and placed loads on the backs of the manufacturers of this country. When they grant the full amount of the drawback, they are only placing the manufacturers on the same level, and giving them the same amount of protection that they enjoyed under the late Government.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. member for South Brant appears in a new role. I had not the honor of a seat in this House during the time of the late Administration, but I remember that within the walls of this Chamber, within my hearing, the hon. gentleman used entirely different language about the manufacturers of Canada.

Mr. PATERSON. Never.

Mr. HESSON. They were described by the hon. gentleman and others on that side of the House as bloated monopolists who were going to rob the poor people of this country—as the few who were to be enriched at the expense of the many. To-day the hon. gentleman stands up and delivers what I shall consider a National Policy speech. We know that his record and his votes for the past five years have been different; but if he were indeed a National Policy man, supporting the true interests of this country, I think he would be on this side of the House. I think the hon. gentleman's proposition as to these tubes being entered as raw material is entirely inconsistent with our duty to the manufacturers and laboring classes of this country. If we are to give employment to our own people, it is certainly not to be done by importing tubes which can, and ought to be, manufactured in this country.

Mr. KILLAM. The hon. Minister of Customs asks how a drawback can be paid on an article that pays no duty. I can inform him that the hon. Minister of Finance professes to do so in the case of ships and ship materials.

Resolutions reported, read the first and the second time, and agreed to.

PETROLEUM INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved the third reading of the Bill (No. 75) to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act, 1880.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACTS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the second reading of Bill (No. 77) to amend the Dominion Lands Acts.

Bill read the second time.

Mr. BOWELL,

(In the Committee).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said, with reference to the 4th section, that it was intended to enable the Governor in Council to sell tracts of lands to people who desired to purchase them for the purpose of establishing settlers thereon. Several persons of wealth and standing were willing to invest their money on lands in the North-West, and to send over tenants to settle on them. He was in hopes there would be a very considerable immigration from Ireland; he knew there would be a large immigration from Scotland. It was important that those who were willing to send out immigrants should know where they were to be settled, and that arrangements should be made for their reception. There was a clause in the Act of 1879, saying lands shall be sold at $1; there was no reason, if it was worth more, why land should not be sold higher. This did not interfere with the homestead settlement.

Mr. MILLS. By the provisions of this section, there will be nothing to prevent the Government leasing a section to one party and selling the fee and granting title in free and common soccage to another.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; this power is taken.

Mr. MILLS. Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to enable parties to bring out settlers to certain North-West lands, who may take leases from the Government, while someone else is invested with the deed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. The reason why the word "lease" is inserted in the clause is that there are now applications for grazing sections, with which we desire to deal properly. We do not, as yet, from our knowledge of the value of those grazing lands, know whether it would be wise to sell them in large tracts. Of course, where tracts are arable a different policy would be required. But where the land is best adapted for grazing, large quantities would be wanted to form anything like the grazing farms in the United States. We are not yet able to tell the value of those lands, and so we provide for leasing them. We intend providing that leases for land used by graziers may, in a few years, should it be found arable, be ended.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see that it is necessary to do what is proposed, because the 8th section of the Bill gives the Government all the power necessary in regard to leasing that the hon. gentleman desires and refers to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes. All the power desired and described is granted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I intend to speak of mining lands and forest lands which we might not desire to sell.

Mr. BLAKE. As to mining lands and wood lands, if their disposal should be by rules and regulations to be submitted for the approval of Parliament, it would be well to say so; for by this Bill it might appear that the Government may, if it wishes, lease arable lands in that territory. I think it would be better in the last degree to adopt the policy of not leasing arable lands which should, instead, be sold outright.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There may be something in that view.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman takes power to sell tracts of 100,000 acres, or more if he pleases—there is no limit. Under the clause the Governor in Council can sell all the land in contiguous blocks. That is a power we never contemplated giving the Government. I think it is very much to be regretted that a Bill proposing this power should have been brought in so late, for it involves the reversal of our entire land system. It may very materially affect, if extended to railway companies, the whole terms and conditions under which the House supposed it was dealing with the question of grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway itself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway we provided for in this Act. I think the House and Parliament might be inclined to trust the Government with the power that is absolutely necessary in order to attract emigration to the North-West on a large and systematic scale. To attract this European emigration you must give people with money inducements to assist in the work. The majority of the emigrants would not be able, perhaps, to pay their own way to that region, or only with difficulty, and, in order to enable them to come out, there must be some such confidence and trust in the Government as will enable it to make arrangements with persons who might advance the passage money to those people to help them out to settle in the North-West. There is no other way of doing it but by giving the Government some such power. It has been thought advisable that the power of leasing lands should be reserved to a certain extent with regard to mill sites, grazing lands, and some other lands, which it might not be advisable to sell at first. I quite agree that this provision as a general rule would not be a wholesome one. No Government would willingly introduce a system of leasing rather than a system of sale. I think that any and every Government, however, could be safely trusted on this point.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will observe that the second sub-section of clause thirty deals with this subject of water powers, mill sites and stone quarries, which may be disposed of on such terms and conditions as may be fixed by the Governor in Council. If it is decided that these are to be leased, let them be leased, and let there be a general power to lease them. We find, however, that whenever the First Minister comes to explain any of the clauses of the Bill, there appears something behind that does not apply to the main subject of the clause.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, in order to meet the views of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) I will agree to strike out of clause thirty, the words "or lease" as applied to the disposal by the Government of Dominion lands, which can be therefore always sold if desired.

Mr. MILLS. Without such an amendment it might be said the Government of Canada desired to introduce such a state of things as prevails in Ireland, leasing to the poor and selling to the rich.

Mr. BLAKE. When we get down to the provision in clause thirty:

"Provided also that except in special cases where otherwise ordered by the Governor in Council, no such purchase of more than a section, or 640 acres, shall be made by the same person: Provided further that where deemed expedient by the Governor in Council such purchase shall be restricted to the odd-numbered sections in each township."

That indicates that unless the Governor in Council takes special action, the rule is, that the purchaser shall not be restricted to the actual number—that it requires special provision to restrict to the odd number. Why is that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. For the purpose of giving the Governor in Council power to restrict to the odd number sections the right of purchase. There is nothing in this present Act reserving the even number. It is considered that most likely the Government will have a policy subject to the approval of Parliament, to provide that the even numbered sections should be held for homestead purposes, and that if the Governor in Council should declare that purchasers shall be restricted to the odd numbers that they shall be so restricted.

Mr. BLAKE. Would it not be better to alter the phraseology, so as to declare that unless the Governor in Council should order to the contrary, the purchasers should be restricted to the odd numbered sections in each township?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It comes to the same thing.

Mr. BLAKE. No. You are laying down a policy that it is expedient to make those restrictions, unless the Governor in Council should see it expedient to depart from that rule.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. As to the general matter, I desire to enter my protest individually against this system, because I am perfectly convinced that these attempts to bring in large bodies of people, in the fashion presented, will end as such attempts have ended before, in far fewer being brought out than the Government imagine, and in large tracts of land falling into the hands of individual purchasers. Prince Edward Island is a case in point. The island was divided into twenty or thirty blocks about the size of three in the North-West Territory. Stringent conditions were imposed upon those who got the grants; they were to bring out a considerable number of associates and to incur a considerable expenditure; they were, if I remember aright, to make some roads and erect some buildings. But we all know that the conditions were not fulfilled, that only some few people were brought out, and that the land lapsed into the hands of proprietors whose proprietary rights were subsequently commuted after interminable delay and trouble. The same thing will occur in this case. We will find parties professing to come within the Government terms and partially fulfilling them, but the result will be that large tracts will fall into the hands of individuals.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The case of Prince Edward Island which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, is by no means analagous. There the landed proprietors were almost in the position of seigniors, settled on large tracts of lands which they held in fee simple. The whole idea was one of tenantry, of annual rental, and that is not what is contemplated here. It is not intended to have large continuous tracts of land, and I think, when it is considered that that country is as large as all Europe, it will be seen that there is not the slightest danger of a monopoly in land. It is well known that German and Scandinavian immigration depends largely on the power being given to those people, by agents or otherwise, to come and see the localities beforehand, as they have done in the north-western States. Then large tracts of land are selected in advance, and then they come in large bodies, bringing their clergyman, their doctor, so many mechanics, so many agriculturists, and unless they are allowed to settle together in that way they will not come at all. Perhaps, in the case of German or Irish or any other immigration, it would be better to have the different races scattered throughout the territory, so that by degrees they might amalgamate, and become, in the end, Canadians; but the first thing to do is to get them to come, and if they will not come readily and scatter over the country, then we must bring them out in communities. To do that these people must have persons to lead them. In Germany for instance they form parties who club purses and send out an agent or trustee to make the purchase of land for them. From England and Scotland such parties might be brought out by persons of capital, from benevolent motives, or by landlords for instance, who might desire to remove their tenants from the superabundant population of those countries; and it is only by providing these means that such immigration can be secured. I find that that feeling operates so strongly even in Canada, that we have frequently applications from forty or fifty or sixty young farmers or others in a particular county in Ontario for a tract of land, so that they might all settle together. At present we cannot accommodate these parties though it would be desirable to do so; and it is absolutely necessary, if we are to settle that country, that provision should be made for the settlement of communities like these.

Mr. BLAKE. The cases which the hon. gentleman puts before the House are provided for in section 6 and subsequent sections, which are specially directed to meet the requirements of those who wish to select lands in advance and settle together. But they do not involve the proposition which is made in this particular amendment, and by which individuals may acquire large tracts of land, which they may cultivate, or, as landlords, lease it to others, or, as vendors, sell it at a profit. It seems to me that the only condition in which this land should be disposed of by large sales, should be actual settlement, early settlement, and settlement in which the occupant of the property shall be its owner. I, therefore, do not see that the hon. gentleman has made any case, that he has given us any reason why this law should be altered in the particular in which he now proposes to alter it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The party must be allowed to purchase, and the Government must have the means and the authority to make returns of the articles purchased. No Government in this country would be so foolish, and would run so contrary to the spirit of the country, as to grant large tracts of land, uninterrupted and continuous sections of land, giving the purchaser unlimited power to form a tenantry, or to a middleman to sell it at a profit. No Government would do that. But in order to induce individual capitalists to go in and purchase under conditions to be laid down from time to time, as the requirements of the country call for, and as the alterations of the circumstances from time to time call for, it is necessary that we should have this power, and I ask the Committee to entrust the Government with it.

Mr. MILLS. I think it unfortunate that the hon. gentleman should ask for the power mentioned in this section, and also that he should have resisted the policy which is provided for in the subsequent sections of the Bill. I am satisfied, from my short experience there, that the attempt to induce persons of capital to come out and take possession of large tracts of land with the expectation of their being settled, will always hinder the settlement more than it will promote it. From my experience I came to the conclusion that the sooner we ceased all attempts at reservation the better it would be in the public interest. It will be remembered that west of Red River seventeen townships were set apart for Mennonite settlers. I have no hesitation in saying that a larger number of people from Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces have been turned away from Manitoba, and have gone into Dakota and Minnesota, than would have settled that country. Instead of gaining anything by the Mennonite settlers, in so far as the occupation of the country is concerned, we have really lost by it. The hon. gentleman dissents from that view, but I have no doubt of its accuracy, and I am satisfied that to-day, between Grand Forks and Manitoba boundary, there are a larger number of Canadians settled in Dakota than of Mennonites in Manitoba, and that the larger number of those who, for the first two or three years, went to Manitoba, left there because they could not get possession of the lands which were reserved for people whose occupation of the lands was extremely doubtful. The same thing may be said in regard to almost every other reservation in that country. I am convinced that if the hon. gentleman were to give up the idea of granting large tracts of land as an inducement to secure a settlement, and would throw open the country to actual settlers of the soil and to any person who would come and take possession, he would do much more to promote immigration than by all other schemes combined. We know what the consequences have been in other parts of Canada where large tracts of land were given to companies, that, instead of settling it early they have stood in the way of its settlement, and many sections in Ontario would have been settled a quarter of a century earlier were it not for the impediment of the Canada company. Railway corporations are in a different position, because they have a special interest in promoting settlement in order to obtain traffic for their roads. But that does not apply to any other parties; it does not apply to private parties seeking to get possession of large tracts of land; and the hon. gentleman is, in my opinion, providing by this and other sections of his Bill, to fasten upon the North-West Territories a very vicious system; and one which will do infinitely more to impede settlement than to promote it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The only consequence of the hon. gentleman's plan will be that that country would be settled only by people who came there with their own money and select their lot of land, and no man would be assisted to settle who would be very glad to do so and who would do so with a little help. We would have a very few wealthy land holders, but we would not have the masses. What we want is to secure the settlement of that country, not only by wealthy men, but by great numbers of those who, though they may be paupers in their own country, if they were assisted a little would become valuable settlers in our North-West. Of course, if there are no restrictions upon purchasing and if we saw an evil growing up there Parliament could quickly interfere and prevent that evil from extending. We must now use every effort possible to get every person, whether he is a poor man or whether he has money, to come into this country, and run the risk of his taking 2,000 or 3,000 acres. There is no necessity of our running that risk, because we cannot provide that parties must state their intention of sending out immigrants to occupy these lands. They must agree that these lots shall be settled within a particular time, otherwise they will lose their lots and get back their money.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. All that has been tried again and again and again, with the same results.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With the most successful results.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. With the most unsuccessful results. We have heard before about assisting persons without means to come out to this country, and under cover of that, placing large tracts of land in the hands of certain private parties. I do not doubt at all that there are in England and Ireland at this moment some benevolent individuals who would be willing to do this for the benefit of their tenantry or their country generally. But there is always a considerable number of people who are extremely desirous of becoming possessed of large tracts of land in our North-West country, and who would go out of their way for the sake of acquiring large territories there, and who would no doubt agree to comply with all the stipulations the Canadian Government choose to impose with the intention of reserving large tracts of land ultimately in their own hands, as they could easily do in a hundred ways. We could grant a quantity of land which we would consider insufficient for a family and which would appear to those people to be a considerable quantity. They will make grants of small portions to settlers, while they will retain all the remaining portions in their own hands. I know that is intended to be done. I know that there are parties who, under cover of such a clause as this, will go in at once. I have had communication with some of them myself. I was asked the other day by a gentleman in England to select several sections to be purchased for the benefit of a god-son of his, who had, I believe, just come into the world, and which were to be given to him when he became twenty-one years of age.

On clause 5, providing that a person obtaining a homestead entry shall be liable to the forfeiture thereof should he not become a bona fide occupant of the land so entered within two months of the date of entry.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question with me is: how long a time should be fixed between the entry and the occupation? I do not think it should be longer than ten or twelve months.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman should make the time uniform. Two months is far too short. In many cases, persons go from Ontario and Quebec to the North-West only in the spring, as agents for their neighbors and other persons who contemplate taking up land; they afterwards remain on their old farms until their crops are taken off and they can dispose of their property; and, perhaps, late in the fall they move to the North-West. It is very desirable that we should have a Canadian immigration into that country. American emigration from the Eastern States is what has Americanized the foreigners who have settled in the Western States; and if we expect to have a united people, we must have a Canadian emigration to the North-West. What ver time is fixed for persons coming from abroad should be fixed for our own people; because it is sometimes easier for a person coming from the old country, who has little or no property to dispose of, than farmers from the older Provinces, to take up land in the North-West Territory. Usually, he goes in the spring and makes his selection, but does not move in until the fall, or if he makes his selection in the fall he does not move in until the winter is over. Two months is certainly not sufficient time.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman should make that period at least four months. When up in the West, last fall, I heard of several cases of great hardship where parties had entered on their homesteads, and their claims were what is called "jumped."

Mr. BLAKE. The very best and most provident settlers are those who take the trouble to go over and look into the country before they part with their farms here. If they can suit themselves, they must have sufficient time to dispose of their farms and stocks here; otherwise you will deprive yourself of a most valuable class of settlers, as they will not be able to sell their farms and stock profitably and go up there with their families within a period of two months. I should say six months would be the proper time.

Mr. TROW. In corroboration of the statements made by the hon. member for Bothwell, I may add that in a little village near Stratford, called Shakespeare, I induced some fifteen families to move out to Manitoba. The heads of these families went out last spring and took homesteads, returned, and are now about to start out again with their families, after having been out of the country about six months. If only two months be allowed, they will lose their property.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Two months are too short, and connected with that infamous system of "jumping" claims there have been cases of hardship, some of which have come within my own cognizance. But I take it, if an immigrant goes up in May, he will not return in November, six months later. I think four months is quite enough.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman must pay some regard to the condition of the roads over an immense portion of that country. According to all the information we have, and the information I received when there last year, you really cannot travel so as to make a proper selection of land until July or August. The consequence is that going up in these months, the farmers will rarely be prepared to settle with their families until the next spring.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the word "six" be substituted for the word "two" and that the clause

"Provided that the Governor in Council may, in the case of immigrants, or of persons desiring to settle near each other, vary the above rule, as may be deemed expedient, but in no case shall a longer period than month be allowed between the date of entry and the due occupation of the land, and the occupant shall thenceforth continue to occupy and cultivate the same as hereinafter provided."

be altered by substituting for the words "in the case of immigrants or of persons desiring to settle," the words "in case of intending immigrants or of persons from abroad desiring to settle," and the period in blank made twelve months.

Agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman intend that those persons shall, as a guarantee of good faith, pay the entrance fee?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. Representations were made to me in England that the fee should not be exacted, but I concluded that unless it were, persons would enter their names for speculative purposes only.

Mr. MERNER. A man going to the North-West cannot reach it in spring, but only in the fall, and by the time he gets there, looks at the land and returns, the winter is at hand; so he cannot leave to settle in the North-West before the following spring. Even for emigrants from the old country, twelve months is too short. There ought to be two years allowed.

Mr. CHARLTON. I desire to ask the First Minister whether he intends to provide that the residence upon a homestead should be continuous? Will an absence of four or six months in the year be allowed a homestead settler as in the United States?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A homestead settler will be governed by the present law. There must be a continuous residence of three years—it is five years in the States.

Mr. CHARLTON. In the United States a homestead settler may be absent six months in the year. A young man without means to bring his farm under proper cultivation, may want to work somewhere else for six months to obtain the means, and he may do so by the Homestead Act, if he has complied with the settlement duties.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a provision in the Act of 1872, that if the settler is absent more than six months his right is liable to forfeiture.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Frequent applications are made for leave of absence in special circumstances, and the parties are always treated liberally. Persons who have gone on land and put up houses are not obliged to live on the land the year round; but the conditions to be obeyed within the three years are looked for.

Mr. CHARLTON. It would be better to have those conditions of settlement defined.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are in the Act.

Mr. WISER. I would like to know whether parties may secure land enough in the North-West, by purchase or lease, to embark upon cattle raising and grazing on a large scale with the certainty of retaining the land for a term of years? If cattle raisers and ranchmen can only obtain small sections, I do not see how we can establish great stock farms in our country like those in the United States. I am prepared to start for Kansas in about a week to purchase cattle, and if facilities are afforded me to secure land enough in our North-West on which to pasture or feed

3,000 to 10,000 animals, I shall use them. But I must have security that I can obtain and hold the necessary land for a sufficient length of time. I should not want a million, but 5,000 or 10,000 acres that would be mine, and enough land besides to graze, perhaps, 20,000 head of cattle. The drove of Texas cattle, 267,000 head, is already begun, and these animals will soon reach Kansas on the way north. A great many are already sold, and I learn from letters from Kansas that if any of these cattle are to be got this year, they must be purchased within 30 days. I am prepared to purchase from 3,000 to 10,000 head as an experiment, if I can obtain the necessary grazing land. I could not put them at the foot of the Rocky Mountains or in the vicinity of Wood Mountain this year; but I can drive them to the Yellowstone or Poplar River and there winter them. It would take another year to take them to the feeding ground I desire. Another question I would like answered—will Canadian graziers and stock-raisers be allowed to import their cattle from the United States, where the greater portion must be obtained, free of duty? If not, that ends the business, as we cannot compete against the Americans and pay duty. I desire immediately to start between 3,000 and 5,000 cows on the road for the Canadian North-West; and if I can obtain the necessary lands by purchase or lease with a reasonable assurance that I can keep them till I mature and develop my stock, I am ready to enter into the business.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sure the Committee are very glad to hear the announcement made by my hon. friend. I had understood that he intended investing some of his superabundant capital in the North-West, in forming a grazing and cattle feeding establishment. I can only assure him that, so far as the Government are concerned, they will be only too glad to meet his wishes in every possible way. A gentleman in the other branch of the Legislature, Senator Cochrane, is about to go into the same kind of business. He has applied for a large tract of land in the vicinity of Bow River, which is likely to be a beautiful grazing country. Like the hon. gentleman opposite, he says he hopes this summer to put on the land a large quantity of cattle, for which he requires a large tract of land. He also wants to be at liberty to purchase a certain quantity of land for the purpose of barns and other buildings required for supporting and cultivating stock. He applied for the right to purchase 11,000 acres, which we thought a quantity too large. Perhaps half that quantity would be quite sufficient; but we, of course, recognized the fact that, in a prairie grazing country a considerable tract might be sold for a homestead, sheds, barns, stables and dividing lines, for the stock, and that the lease of a tract of land should be given, to be increased from time to time according to the size of the herd. The hon. gentleman, if going to commence with a considerable herd, should get a lease for a tract of land quite sufficient. It would be absurd to limit him in that regard. The more of those grazing farms we have in this North-West country the better. There will be an influx of immigrants into that country within the next few years, and their first requirement will be cattle. There will be no danger of too large tracts being given because of the inducements offered to settlement. Leases will be given which can be terminated by the Government on giving two years' notice. No difficulty, I think, will arise with respect to the danger of such leases being terminated for an insufficient reason. People confide in the Government every day. Timber licenses extend only from year to year, yet the holders erected mills, knowing that so long as they worked them their licenses would be renewed for ever. So it would be with respect to grazing farms. The privilege might be abused by those who obtained large tracts for a certain number of years, who might change their minds, sub-let the land, and act quite contrary to the idea on which the original lease was granted. The provision in the Bill is quite sufficient for that purpose. As regards the duties on cattle. All the stock used for the first herds in the North-West must come from the Western States of the Union, and for all the stock of the Eastern Province, we can find a market in England. Mr. Cochrane went to the Minister of Customs on the subject, and the latter showed the former an affidavit to bring in stock, and asked him if he could make an asseveration of that kind, and he said he would have no difficulty in doing so. If that be so, the American cattle can be taken in. Mr. Cochrane was about to establish a stock-raising farm there, and if there should prove to be, after a careful examination, some defects in the law, no doubt Parliament would take off the duty on cattle for the purpose of grazing farms.

Mr. WISER. The leases should run for a term of ten or twenty years, and the notice given should exceed two years. Parties occupying the territory should have the first right to buy the land when it is placed in the market, at an upset price of perhaps a dollar an acre. One million acres are required to feed a herd of 25,000 or 30,000 cattle. I am now joining with a party in Kansas to purchase a tract of land thirty miles wide on a river, and if we buy it, the quantity will be 40,000 acres. The land can be bought at forty cents per acre, and there is a herd of 10,000 head on the ranche. That purchase will not interfere with my affairs in the North-West. On the Kansas property there is a stream in the centre and we buy the stream. The cattle feed fifteen miles from it. Some other owner of a ranche will have cattle running fifteen miles on the other side, and the stream is called the Divide in the cattle-grazing countries. This is the plan on which the large cattle-grazing ranches of the United States are conducted. I do not know the character of the North-West country, but I propose to go and see it, and if it is entirely suitable for grazing, or for both agricultural and grazing, we must, if we put our cattle there, have the assurance of occupancy during a certain number of years. After a herd of cattle has been placed on a ranche, four or five years will elapse before they begin to give returns. Then there will be a large herd there which cannot be marketed in a day or a year, and the land should be let on leases of from ten to twenty years, terminable on three or four years' notice. This is not a political question, but one affecting the interest of the whole country. We are building railways, sending in immigrants and assisting the Indians with food supplies. For these purposes cattle were brought from the United States, but if grazing farms were established in the North-West, the supplies might be furnished by our own people. I have intended all my life, when I found myself in a position to do so, to enter into the cattle business, and I think I am now in a position to do so. I intend to start in this business in two months. My preference is for Canada, and if the Government will afford me the facilities, I will carry the business on in Canada; if not, I must go to the United States.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman will be able to persuade the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to agree to his proposition. The hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Wisser) is going to be a wholesale purchaser of land, one of the landed aristocracy of whom the hon. member for Bothwell is so frightened. Notwithstanding the strong conscientious objections which that hon. gentleman will make, the Government will endeavor to meet the views of the hon. member for South Grenville by giving the widest construction of the law for the purpose of inducing him to remain in Canada with his herds instead of going and establishing large herds in the United States. The Act gives power to the Government to grant lands on such conditions as they thought proper, and that might be a matter for settlement between the hon. gentleman and the Government. I can assure the hon. gentleman that he will be dealt with on the most liberal construction of the law. Looking at the tariff, I find that settlers effects are admitted, with the exception of cattle, but at the same time there is the privilege, under regulations to be made by the Minister of Customs, of allowing live stock to be admitted into Manitoba and the North-West Territories free of duty until otherwise ordered by the Governor in Council, so that the hon. gentleman may rely with certainty that his cattle will be admitted into that country on his declaration that they are taken into the country for no other purpose than those which have been stated.

Mr. BOULTBEE. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wiser) has stated his desire of opening a large ranch in the North-West, and as the leader of the Government states that they will be prepared to meet his wishes if possible, the matter is one of considerable gravity. The hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Wiser) says that 1,000,000 acres of pasturage will be required for 25,000 cattle, but I think there must be something technically wrong in that estimate, else we are in danger of creating one of those monopolies of which we have heard so much. Surely forty acres is not required to pasture one cow or one steer. I should think that if one-quarter or one-eighth of that quantity of land per head is not sufficient it cannot be very fertile or of very much value.

Mr. WISER. The estimate per head in the grazing regions of the United States—Kansas, Nebraska, Montana, Wyoming, &c.—is 360 acres per animal.

Mr. BOULTBEE. Why, the animal would run its legs off in getting the grass.

Mr. WISER. We do not expect that it all will be fit for grazing. It must be remembered, too, that there is a great liability to drought in which many cattle perish. In Montana and Nebraska the risk to cattle in that is from 15 per cent to 30 per cent., while it should not exceed 3 per cent. Unless sufficient allowance is made to guard against these drouths, the whole capital invested might be wiped out in one season.

Mr. BANNERMAN. I think the lands in the North-West are of so much better quality than those in Montana that one acre per animal would be a liberal allowance.

Mr. CHARLTON. I believe the losses to which the hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Wiser) has referred as regards the cattle in Montana, etc., is due to the severity of some of the winters, for which provision is not made, and the consequence is that the cattle die of starvation. It strikes me that 360 acres per animal is an exceedingly liberal estimate, and that if we were to calculate on that basis the herds of the United States would be rather small in number. I think it will be found that even the poor bunch grasslands of the Western States will support a much larger number than the hon. gentleman has stated.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it will be found that in the territories referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wiser) the lands stretch back from the rivers, and that as the lands are almost valueless without the river the area at the disposal of some of these herdsmen is practicably illimitable. According to the estimate of the hon. gentleman the whole Province of Manitoba would only support about 350,000 head; but I hope it will support a great many more cattle than that, even if it is largely devoted to other industries in the future. This, however, is only another proof of the importance of the Government ascertaining exactly what they have in that country before giving it away. Whether the provision for cattle raisers should be adequate, and the pasturage should be given by a tenure reasonably certain to accomplish the purposes in view, enormous domains should not be leased in the first instance until we know that they are necessary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is quite right. I think the hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Wiser) was speaking of enormous spaces of country given up for pasturage and which are practically valueless for other purposes. But if we are at all correctly informed the Bow River country is a beautiful country, equal to any land in those Western States, and superior to a great deal of it; and the question is if it is so fine a country for grazing, whether it would not be suitable for arable purposes. It is for that reason that we have put in a clause providing that upon ten years notice being given, the land may be applied for the purposes of settlement as may be determined; so that if it is found that a man is occupying more land than he really requires, it may be withdrawn upon two years' notice being given. I think that is quite sufficient guarantee, as no Government would dare to deal harshly with a man who had large herds of cattle grazing and was occupying an area of country in that way. I can only repeat that the Government will permit to all reasonable extent facilities for the introduction of herds and the development of grazing.

Mr. MILLS. If Professor Macoun's report is correct, a great portion of that country is very different from Wyoming or the American Desert; it is so well adapted for agricultural purposes that very little of it will remain a grazing country. Of course, that country had better be occupied for grazing purposes than to be left a waste.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As well be occupied by cattle as by buffalo.

Mr. MILLS. It is clear the Government could not dispose of a country for grazing purposes if actually fit for agricultural purposes, because it would be much less profitable that way than if occupied by settlers. It seems to me that before the Government could undertake to dispose of the country, or to make long leases, they ought to know the character of the country as nearly as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope that during the course of the summer we shall have a report upon that country, with reference to the water and the river streams that supply that country, with a view to the best mode of laying out the different ranches.

Mr. BLAKE. Upon what principle will the rent be based?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose the rent will be so much per 1,000 acres. It would be small at first. In the United States I believe there is no rental at all.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think there is any title there. I think the parties procure a piece of land on the river; that becomes his own and the cattle go out on the public domain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; ranchmen make a sort of arrangement among themselves. I do not think that is a wholesome system for us to introduce.

Mr. BOULTBEE. In my remarks I did not wish to be understood as desiring to circumscribe the raising of cattle in that region. I only thought as the hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Wiser) had been sitting so long behind his leaders and hearing them talk of the North-West, that he had formed an opinion of its capabilities similar to what we are told of the Eastern States, where they hold the lambs down by the tails to reach the blades of grass between the rocks.

On the 7th clause,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Sub-section A is a re-enactment. Sub-section B provides for the settlement of Mennonites and Icelanders, to whom restricted privileges are given, also to immigrants of other nationalities, such as the Germans, etc. Sub-section C is to meet the wants of people removing from the older Provinces, and who desire to settle together for mutual aid and comfort. This is a plan that has been suggested in a report made to Congress by a United States Commissioner. I may mention that I made enquiry at the Land Grant Department at Washington, and was informed that the suggestion of the Commissioner did not become law for want of time, but the head of the department reports that he has no doubt that at the next Session of Congress it will become law.

Mr. MILLS. There are cases where parties going to the North-West Territories and Manitoba have taken up sections, but finding scarcely any water there they have built a mile or two away, near some brook or spring, but have made improvements on their sections. There was a difficulty about their right being recognized. While they are carrying on improvements their actual residence is somewhere else. I never saw any objection myself to allowing these persons to retain their homesteads and to recognize them, although they may not be actually residing on the lands.

On clause 7, section C, providing for variation of requirements in the case of settlers forming villages,

Mr. BLAKE. Why is this applied to homestead settlers other than immigrants? I understand that it is the custom among some of the Mennonites to live together in villages or hamlets, and if it is good for our own people to settle in that way, why not for the people of the old world?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Because we cannot foresee exactly the applications which foreign immigrants may make and the nature of their requirements. They would ask for special privileges connected with their special requirements and customs.

On clause 8, containing special provision as to leases of grazing lands,

Mr. BLAKE. I do not observe that there is any special provision for selling lands in the grazing district. I suppose the hon. gentleman intends to use these powers with respect to sales.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think so.

Mr. BLAKE. I agree with the hon. gentleman that a Government lease of grazing lands, no matter for how many years, if terminable only on two years notice, is quite as safe an instrument for the lessee as anything he could have. But that to my mind is a reason why we should alienate as little of that territory in fee simple as we can. If a man puts up buildings and makes other improvements on the land, and wants to own it, it is reasonable that he should. I do not see that so much land as my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Wiser) mentions is necessary for grazing purposes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Cochrane, who has gone to England to make arrangements for bringing out a certain kind of cattle to mingle with the herds which he can get on this side of the Atlantic, asked for 10,000 acres, and said he would start with 10,000 head of cattle and run up to 300,000. I thought that 10,000 acres in fee simple was too much, and that we should not give more than 5,000 acres. We spoke of $2 an acre as the price; but that is a matter we cannot decide upon until we get a report on the country, and ascertain what the size of the homestead—the cattle sheds, stables, and so forth—will be. If we sell 5,000 acres at a good price to a large ranchero, I do not think the country will be a loser.

Mr. BLAKE. Did Mr. Cochrane mention his own opinion as to the quantity of land required for his herd.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 100,000 acres; and he expected a large increase to his herd.

Mr. JONES. Is there any protection for men with small ranches who settle on these lands?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Although settlers of that description have no legal rights in the land, and although it is not well to encourage people to scatter over that immense continent on unsurveyed lands, still when people do settle down and make improvements, they have always been respected in Ontario and Quebec, and will, I have no doubt, be respected there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

On clause 10, providing for charging expenses of passage, etc., on lands of immigrants,

Mr. BLAKE. This may be open to a great deal of abuse unless the hon. Minister of the Interior sees that the whole claim, for whatever purpose, represents expenses actually incurred. I see not why the hon. Minister should take power to verify a portion of the expenses and not the remainder.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said, with reference to section A, clause 10, that it was for the purpose of keeping down, as much as possible, the cost of subsistence. That should be scanned carefully to prevent abuse by agents. It would not be possible to check effectually the cost of erecting buildings, providing farm implements and seed grain; but the charges for subsistence could be checked.

Mr. BLAKE. The agents will be careful not to exercise fraud or imposition in the charges for subsistence and passage money, as these will be scanned by the Government officer, but they will do so in charges for erecting houses, &c., which will not be scanned. The right hon. gentleman, of course, anticipates imposition or there would be no necessity for the clause.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The argument of the hon. gentleman would be in the direction of striking out clause A. When the immigrant gets on his location, he will consult his neighbors as to how much they paid for their houses, implements, etc., and will thus be able to check the charges himself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that $600 be made the outside figure in clause C for principal and moneys advanced against a homestead.

Mr. ANGLIN. $400 was the amount named by the hon. Minister of Agriculture as sufficient for a family of five persons.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Sir A. T. Galt, who has been in communication with some of the capitalists and benevolent societies, suggested $500. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture suggested $600. Perhaps $500 would be the better amount.

Mr. BLAKE. We have the authority of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture that $400 would suffice.

Mr. POPE (Compton). I made no allowance for farming implements and subsistence, and besides men who gave $100 as the amount sufficient to erect a house, would not take a contract to do so at that rate.

Mr. ANGLIN. There will be this difficulty in carrying out the arrangement, that the men who go out there will find themselves starting with a burden of debt to which other settlers are not liable. It will be an obligation on the land, to get rid of which will be a strong temptation to them to cross the border, especially as many of them will have their minds previously excited by the glowing prospects exaggerated by agents.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They will not care to leave a place where they have comfortable quarters erected for them to go over to the States where they must begin de novo, and where their personal responsibility would equally follow them.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me it will invite fraud. If the hon. gentleman considers the subject, he might, with an active, careful, energetic man, who would consider the whole account or claim of the party against the emigrant, prevent fraud upon the emigrant. But what it is proposed to supervise, without any real supervision being exercised over the whole transaction, does open the door for fraud upon the emigrant; and a few cases of hardship, where emigrants are unfairly dealt with, would be sufficient to damage the hon. gentleman's entire scheme. The hon. gentleman ought to make provision for supervising the matter altogether or abandon the provision altogether. A single officer in the North-West, active and energetic, who understood the subject and knew the value of the appliances there, could check this account, or charges of every sort made against the ingoing emigrant. No doubt very great hardships to emigrants will arise. The emigrant, if he thinks he is overcharged will remain in the house till the supplies are consumed, and then move across the border, preferring life in the States as an ordinary laborer to farming in the Dominion with a heavy debt to pay off.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the charge subsist on the homestead or land, in any shape, if the emigrant has left it? Will the person who advanced the money have the charge upon the homestead in his favor and as against any other person who may come upon it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He will have to find a tenant for the land of course.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it is intended that this man shall not run the risk of the emigrant remaining? No matter what the fate of the emigrant—whether he lives on or departs—the creditor has a mortgage on the land?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If a house is put up and the land prepared for settlement, if one man does not take the farm another will. There will be no difficulty in getting one occupant for the place, with a house on it, for the mere cost. The man who builds a house on a lot and prepares it for settlement has a right to consideration should the emigrant go off. If the place goes to waste, the title is not given. It is in the Crown; but the Crown should treat a person who has invested money to that extent, as it would treat a homesteader, with every degree of liberty without giving him the title. If it finds the land going to waste it will resume it.

Mr. BLAKE. The plan involves, of necessity, only his making an expense in bringing out the emigrant—the subsistence and passage money, and yet the creditor may have a charge on the land. If the emigrant does not like it, he may go to the States; and then you have a charge on the land in favor of this undertaker. Suppose all that they agree on is, that the charges for subsistence money and for the passage should be made a charge on the land, and that the emigrant, after getting out, goes away—is the debt a charge upon the land?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly not.

Mr. BLAKE. How does it become a charge on the land if he has built a homestead?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Even if the house is put up, the patent will not issue unless there has been occupation for three years.

Mr. BLAKE. Does not the hon. gentleman see that any settler coming upon any such abandoned lot may not only have to pay the remaining value of the house, but the subsistence money and passage money of some emigrant who may have gone to Dakota or Minnesota?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The general law is not in any way attacked or altered. It does not matter what person's money puts up the house and makes improvements, the settler cannot get the deed unless he has occupied and cultivated the lot for three years. If an assisted emigrant does not settle upon a lot the land is again free and open.

Mr. BLAKE. Suppose a house has been built upon a lot for an emigrant, who afterwards goes away, and that the undertaker on the claim urges that the patent shall not issue in favor of some other homesteader, except on the payment of the money he has expended on the property, what will be the result?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The person advancing to the homesteader who abandons his place, stands in no better position than the homesteader himself.

Mr. SHAW. Section ten should also be made to apply to parties going from old Canada to the North-West. If a capitalist furnished money to an emigrant from Ontario or any of the older Provinces to enable him to proceed to the North-West and settle there, the lender in that case should also have a lien on the settler's property. A great many persons were leaving this country and going to the United States, to various points of which their railway fares were paid by American agents. Surely Canadians were as good settlers as any who could be placed in the North-West, and when we find so many going to Dacotah and the Western States there should be inducements held out to lead them to settle in our own country.

Mr. ANGLIN. No provision is made as to the mode in which the moneys are to be repaid. The amount should be made payable by annual instalments extending over eight or ten years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The man comes out here with nothing and settles on the land; he cannot receive a title to the lands until after three years; and the lender cannot press him until after three years.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. As soon as the three years have expired the settler may be called upon to pay the principal and interest, and thus exposed to considerable hardship.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We must induce parties to lend money to settlers and make it a matter of contract between the parties. If the matter is surrounded with so many difficulties, no money will be advanced and no person will come out.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It is only so far as this arrangement will contribute to the bringing out of a number of settlers that Parliament or the Government are at all justified in agreeing to it. Such being the case, we are justified in adopting such precautions that the object for which we grant these extraordinary privileges shall not fail.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is impossible to suppose that people in England or Germany would enter into a speculation to make money by bringing out emigrants and making arrangements with them for the purpose of subsequently selling them out and cheating them out of their farms.

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The extension of the powers given to surveyors under the 11th clause is to enable them to ascertain the facts regarding squatters.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I wish to move this amendment:

Any discoverer of minerals upon surveyed or unsurveyed lands who had applied for a grant of such lands before the passing of 43 Victoria, Chap. 6, or his assigns or associates, shall be held to have the same rights as if such Act had not been passed.

He said: This is an amendment which should have been made last Session, as there are some persons who claim to have rights to such lands, and have spent considerable sums in explorations, etc.

Mr. BLAKE. This is, of course, new to me, but I should regard it as nothing short of a public calamity if large areas of coal or other mineral lands should be liable to get into the hands of private individuals; and though I am anxious to regard existing rights, we should be careful not to allow large tracts of these lands to get into private hands merely because a few hundred dollars have been spent in surveys. It would be infinitely better in such cases to compensate these parties at the public expense and keep for the public the coal lands of the North-West. If the areas are small, and there are other large areas of course, these remarks would not apply; but large sections of coal lands should not get into the hands of private individuals without the utmost care and consideration for the future of this country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am only aware of three claims: one is that of Mr. Sutherland upon coal lands; another by a Mr. Osborne, who contests Mr. Sutherland's claim, and another by a person who claims to have discovered gold and silver on a small island in the Lake of the Woods.

Mr. BLAKE. Are the areas large?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; very small. The whole coal area, I am informed, is 320 acres at Souris. The island is the same.

Mr. MILLS. Does not this island fall within the limits of Ontario according to the award?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I see that in the United States an individual is allowed to take 160 acres, and an association of persons is allowed to take 320 acres, provided they go on and do bona fide work upon it. If they are within fifteen miles of the railway they pay $25 an acre, and if more than fifteen miles from a railway, they pay $10 an acre.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I would call the attention of the First Minister to the affidavit in support of the claim for a homestead right. I am inclined to think that this is dealing a little hardly with a class of men who deserve some consideration at our hands, that is, the class of pioneers who take up homesteads, do a good deal of work upon them, put up houses, break land, and then sell out to move further west. Such a party would be entirely debarred under all circumstances from taking up a homestead grant twice. I have no doubt that prima facie a great deal may be said of the mode in which this affidavit is drawn, but I am inclined to think that, having regard to the circumstances of the North-West, some modification might be made so that a man who had actually done work on the homestead and afterwards sold out, should not be precluded from taking another homestead, as these are usually persons who have quite a little capital.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope there will be no difficulty in bona fide parties getting round that difficulty.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The way the affidavit is drawn it looks as if they could not. "I, A. B., do swear that I have not previously obtained a homestead under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act." It seems to me that would cut out all such parties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a practical evil, as the hon. gentleman is aware, which has arisen to a great extent. There are a number of persons up there who make it their business, being on the spot and knowing the country, to pick out the very best lot in the township. They squat on it and make a little improvement, and then look round for a purchaser and sell out and move on to another. It is found to be a good means of extracting money from a bona fide settler who sees a beautiful lot and wants to get it; and in this way the first party becomes a middleman.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The latter class of whom the hon. gentleman speaks does not deserve consideration, but this would exclude that class of men who have bona fide improved their homestead, and, after three or four years, have sold it and moved further.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. TROW. I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) is worthy of consideration. I have noticed that in some parts of the North-West a large number of parties have left Manitoba for the reason that they could not get a second homestead, having disposed of the first one, and they have gone to the other side of the line to procure homesteads. In all countries the first pioneers are generally single young men. They rough it for a while and make some improvements and then sell out to a man with a family who is anxious to get a home, and who is prepared to give some consideration for the improvements, and the young man sells out and goes further west. I do not think we should debar him from taking another homestead.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no alteration in the law, it has always been so. These affidavits have been merely altered to suit the several clauses of this Act. I am told it has been found that this promotes gambling and speculation in homesteads, and that that has been the result of the experience of the last few years. I am told that there are parties up there who go on to the best lots and try to find purchasers, thus becoming middlemen after having merely squatted on the land.

Mr. MILLS. I discussed this matter last year and made a proposition similar to that now made by the hon. member for Centre Huron. My impression was when I was managing the department that it would be better, instead of requiring occupation for a fixed period of time to require a certain amount of improvement upon these homesteads, and after these were made the party should be at liberty to sell his improvement. I believe there are cases such as the hon. gentleman speaks of, but the mischief done is less than would be done by refusing a sale altogether. Although the party has resided on the land, if he has not a certain amount of improvement the patent ought not to issue when the period expires. He ought to have the privilege of sale, so that some one else coming in and wanting an improved lot of land may have the opportunity of purchasing it. If he has the means he will do that, and the man who sells will have a capital with which to purchase again or to purchase agricultural appliances with which to begin anew. In doing this the hon. gentleman will be providing for those who go from the older Provinces into that territory, who will be able to advance money to the original immigrant for his improvement. I think on the whole, the country would gain more by an arrangement of that sort than it would lose by any speculations in which these people might engage. The experience of all new countries is that there are certain men who may be designated border men. They do not care for the comforts of an advanced civilization, but they make certain improvements, and whenever they find the people around them reaching a certain point of civilization, they want to go somewhere else and begin anew. They contribute to the advancement of the country, and they ought to be allowed, within proper restrictions, to follow their instincts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is almost impossible to make a provision of this kind without some countervailing disadvantages. The hon. gentleman thinks we should allow settlers to sell their claims if there be a certain minimum amount of improvements. In the first place, you would have to have a special staff of officers to go over the country and settle the value of the improvements. In the next place, you would be very apt to cause great dissatisfaction if you fixed a high minimum. What we want is the people to settle on the land, to keep it for three years, to build some kind of a house, and to cultivate the land. With some races the standard of improvement and comfort is higher than with others. Men from the West of Scotland or the West of Ireland would put up with a much smaller house and with fewer improvements, perhaps, than men from Ontario. So the fixing of the minimum would cause a great deal of dissatisfaction.

Mr. BANNERMAN. With all deference to the opinion of the right hon. leader of the Government, I would like to see some modification made in this clause. My experience in the North-West is, that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction with this clause, as it debars any man who has been on a homestead lot for three or four years, from selling it to an emigrant and going further west to take up another homestead lot. A great many people who come from the old country become homesick and discouraged in the newer districts, and would be glad to buy homestead farms which have been improved by others. I hope, therefore, that the right hon. leader of the Government will make some modification in this clause for the relief of bona fide settlers who may wish to sell their improved farms and move further west.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There may be a few cases of that kind; but we must avoid those speculators who take up the vast lots, and on the pretence of settling on them, stay there for a short time, make a few improvements, and then sell to others. That is no advantage to the country, as these men may go off to the States. However, I will consider the matter between now and to-morrow.

Bill reported and amendments concurred in.

NATURALIZATION AND ALIENS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 87) respecting Naturalization and Aliens (from the Senate).—Mr. Langevin.

Mr. MILLS. I take exception to the 4th clause. I do not think we have the power to legislate on the subject. This has to do with the status of aliens in the country; it has nothing to do with the subject of naturalization. The Local Legislatures determine what the status of an alien is to be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the respective Provinces. It is true, we may have, under the powers given to us by the British North America Act the right of expelling an alien enemy or giving him a license to remain, and deciding on what terms he should be allowed to remain; but the question as to who shall hold real estate in the country must be decided by the Local Legislatures which have the control of that real estate. This principle has been long recognized in the United States, whose constitution is in this respect similar to ours. There the naturalization and political status of aliens are under the control of the Federal Government, and the subject of property is under the control of the State Legislature. That is precisely our position. It is for the Local Legislature to decide whether an alien may or may not hold real estate within the limits of a Province. In the Province of Quebec, for instance, a large class of aliens might be introduced to whom the people of that Province might feel a certain repugnance, and they might, on grounds of public policy, declare it was not the intention of this Province that those people should be allowed to hold real estate or inherit property. The authority that has the right to state on what condition and by whom property shall be held, has the right to decide whether these persons who are not citizens, who are aliens by birth, shall hold property or not. If the subject of property and civil rights does not include these provisions, I do not very well see what it does include. The hon. gentleman proposes to deal here, not with the naturalization, not with the status of aliens, not with the conditions upon which aliens may carry on trade and commerce in the country, which may be under control of this Government, but with the civil rights of aliens, a subject with which we have nothing to do. If the hon. gentleman wished to say that an alien should not make a promissory note or carry any particular trade or calling, then I could understand upon what ground he might undertake to legislate on that subject; but when he undertakes to deal with the inheritance of property, the ownership of real estate within the limits of a Province, I cannot understand what ground he has for his action, since the subjects of property and civil rights come under the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures. I think that the effect of our exercising this power will be mischievous. I remember a Bill that was introduced by a colleague of the hon. gentleman in the Senate in 1869, which contained this very provision. I remember calling the attention of Sir George Cartier to the subject, and looking up authorities with him, and I know that that hon. gentleman, after looking at the authorities and considering the subject, had not the slightest doubt that this Legislature had not the power to deal with this particular subject, and this clause was struck out of the Bill. To-day the hon. Premier has introduced in this Bill a claim to exercise power by this Legislature which the Government in 1869, of which he was the head, admitted this Legislature did not possess. I think we ought not to undertake to encroach on the authority of the Local Legislatures. This Parliament can always maintain its own rights and assert its own authority, but this is not the case with the Local Legislatures. If we are to maintain a system of Federal Government, it is of the utmost consequence that none of the powers which those bodies possess should be taken from them. I do not believe that you can long have an efficient system of Local Government, if you do not leave with the Local Legislatures control over a sufficient number of public questions of importance to interest the public in their legislation and administration of public affairs. It is not only necessary under our Federal system that the Local Legislatures should have powers important in themselves, but should have such powers left them as will attract to them persons of ability, and such matters of legislation as the public will feel a sufficient interest in to take an interest in the character of their representatives. If you were to go on with this system of encroachment on the rights of the Local Legislatures, and on their political importance, our system of Government would not be as wisely and efficiently conducted as if those Legislatures were left with larger powers and undisturbed. I trust the hon. gentleman will not persist in retaining this section of the Bill, for which there can be no reason. It is easy to inform foreigners that in all the Provinces of the Dominion, by the local law, aliens are authorized to hold real estate. There is no difficulty whatever with regard to that matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think this Bill attacks the jurisdiction of the several Provinces which, I take it, still have the right to deal with this subject. But, notwithstanding, it is absolutely necessary that there should be concurrent legislation, and that Parliament should intervene and have power to deal with this alienage question as well, I believe in all the Provinces, by provincial laws, aliens have the right to hold property. But the question of an alien is a matter altogether belonging to the Crown or Parliament. An alien enemy cannot, of course, stay in the country, except by special permission of the Crown—he can only stay on sufferance. By the law of nations now settled, and the concurrence of many treaties between civilized nations, he has a right to trade between nations at peace. An alien can trade and hold property under statute; but he cannot for reasons of state, connected with the existence of the empire, become a permanent occupier or owner of the soil, and liable to all the duties and responsibilities attaching to such ownership. There is no clearer position than that the Crown is not bound by an Act unless the Crown is specially mentioned in it. The Crown has not lost one of its rights by the British North America Act. The law exists—that although an alien friend may purchase land in England or elsewhere, yet, by the prerogative of the Crown, in consequence of the non status of an alien in the country, and the want of right to occupy with permanency, it is held that, even if the land has been purchased, it inure, is forfeited to the Crown. That right exists at this moment. The Crown, if it chooses, by letters patent, without reference to the Parliament of England or any of its colonies, can give the right by letters of denization—not a political right—but can, of its own prerogative right, without an Act of naturalization, issue letters patent declaring the party to be a denizen, a demi-citizen, a half citizen, having no political right, but the right to hold real estate. On the same principle I take it that, although each Province can pass a law affecting the rights of property, we can here declare that, notwithstanding any such law, a crime or a felony will work the forfeiture of that title. That is a necessary incident of the paramount power. No alien has a right to a permanent habitation in the country, because it may be dangerous to allow aliens to come in and become possessors of the soil. That is one of the great questions raised in California at this moment with reference to the Chinese immigration. If they come into the country and settle in it, and take up land, they may endanger the State—forming a Mongolian settlement, holding lands, backed, sustained and supported by a great company behind them; and therefore it is held that the paramount power must have something to say in removing that disability. Therefore, under the British North America Act, that power was also given to us. We have the right to say no alien shall come to the country at all. I do not suppose the paramount power might desire we should pass it; perhaps it might say it was contrary to the general interest to impose it, contrary to the comity of nations. But they have given us that power. Therefore, we must, in some way, to give assurance and security to the alien friend coming to this country from Germany or other foreign country, say, that so far as this Legislature is concerned, any alien may hold land if it does not interfere with the concurrent rights of the Local Legislatures in this matter. We must act together. Supposing we pass a law and say, in order to prevent the Crown from interfering to deprive the alien of his right to come to this country and hold land, we give him power so far as we can. The Provincial Legislatures must do the same thing, and they have done the same thing. The Local Legislatures say that aliens can hold such a right and title to the land, and we say notwithstanding the general principle of the law, we give them that right, although without that clause they can have the right. The Prince Consort was an alien until an Act of Parliament was passed; and to repeat my statement, it is so completely the prerogative right of the Crown that the Crown may, by its own mere motion, without reference to Parliament, issue letters of denization, and without them an alien cannot hold land except under the law giving naturalization. And although the Local Legislatures may give power to an alien to purchase under the prerogative, it is not affected by anything in the British North America Act, and it may be forfeited to the Crown and held by the Crown. But taking the hon. gentleman's own argument that a double security should be given to intending immigrants. If we say that the Province of Ontario or the Province of Quebec has given, so far as it could, the right to share and occupy the soil; that is one security. Then, by our passing this law we say we have no political reasons, no reasons of State, no prerogative reasons for interfering with any of the rights which the aliens may acquire by law, affecting property and civil right in the several Provinces. And having these two together; having this concurrent assurance by the Dominion and the Province, you give a double security to the alien. And it is of importance that this should be so, because the jurists of the continent of Europe will look at the nation, at the predominant or paramount power; and until we give them the assurance which is conveyed in this Act, they will hold that the security which is necessary has not been given. I think it is of great importance that we should look upon the matter in this way; and that intending immigrants should feel that so far as the laws regarding property and civil rights are concerned, they are given certain rights by the Provinces, and that as regards their political rights, the Crown and the Parliament of Canada have given them an assurance in every possible way that these rights shall not be impugned.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has referred to the power of the Crown with regard to the denization of aliens in England, but, if I remember aright, that does not give the power to hold property in fee simple; it is simply a tenancy for life.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is mistaken:

"A denizen is an alien born, but who has obtained ex donatione legis letters patent to make him an English subject; a high and incommunicable branch of the royal prerogative. A denizen is in a kind of a middle state, between an alien and natural born subject, and partakes of both of them. He may take lands by purchase or devise, which an alien may not do except under the statute before mentioned; but he cannot take by inheritance: for his parent, through whom he must claim, being an alien, had no inheritable blood, and therefore could convey none to the son. And, upon a like defect of hereditary blood, the issue of a denizen born before denization, cannot inherit to him; but the issue born after may. And no denizen can be of the Privy Council or either House of Parliament, or have office of trust, civil or military, or be capable of any grant of lands from the Crown."

Mr. MILLS. Of course, the property purchased by the alien reverted to the Crown on the obvious principle that the original estate was vested in the Crown. I cannot see any reason why the hon. gentleman should undertake to deal with the subject. He says it is a prerogative right; but granting that it is the executive power throughout the whole empire, whether it be vested in the Lieutenant-Governor of a Province, or the Governor of a Crown Colony, or in the Governor General here, is the executive power of Her Majesty? The Queen is not divested of any power she had over matters which are within the jurisdiction of the Provinces so far as she possessed executive power over these Provinces. By the 9th section of the British North America Act: "The executive government and authority of and over Canada is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen." That does not mean merely the executive power exercised by the Governor General, but that exercised by the Lieutenant-Governors of the Provinces; and all the legislation in the country is carried on in Her Majesty's name. If the Provinces have control over real estate, over property and civil rights, whatever prerogative rights belonged to Her Majesty, in dealing with those subjects before the British North America Act was passed, is vested in Her Majesty still as the executive authority of the Province. Therefore what the hon. gentleman proposes is to call upon this Parliament to legislate upon a subject which belongs to the Provinces and not to the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the suggestion of the leader of the Government, that there should be concurrent powers in this case, is a dangerous one with reference to provincial rights altogether. By the British North American Act there is only one power which is given concurrently to this Parliament and the Local Legislatures, and that is with reference to laws dealing with agriculture and immigration. And even in regard to that set of subjects when the power is exercised by both, that of this Parliament is declared to be paramount. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman is, as I understand it, that the Local Legislatures have power to enact effectually that an alien shall have the right to hold real property or that he shall not have that right, and yet that it is important that this Parliament should also legislate. He says that political reasons—though I do not observe any political reasons connected with this clause—require that an alien shall not have any political rights of any description whatever, and that this section shall only give him the right to hold real and personal property, or no more than a Local Legislature has a right to give him, an exclusive right to give him, for what right a Local Legislature has, as to property and civil rights, is an exclusive right.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When I used the expression "concurrent rights" I used it for the purpose of convenience, to explain my view that the action of both Legislatures was necessary. In the first place, the action of the Local Legislature for the purpose of giving the party, whether he be an alien or a subject, the right to hold property—that is one thing; then this is to remove the disability which, by the general law of the empire, all aliens labor under. The one Legislature gives the property right, the other removes the disability, and therefore my whole argument was to show that both Acts were necessary in order to secure the alien. The Local Legislature confers the property right, the General Legislature takes away the disability which obtains by the law of nations and by the general law of England, which provides against any alien having any right to hold property, for political reasons, I said. Of course, this clause provides that he shall have no political rights, that is to say, he shall not have the right of voting, the idea being that all his political sympathies being with his own country he is not a man to exercise political rights until he becomes to all intents and purposes a British subject. It was in that sense I used the word "political." But I am as certain as I can be that should this case be submitted to the Courts they will hold that no alien has an inalienable right which a man cannot deprive him of, unless we have this legislation; and for that reason I am extremely anxious that the alien should have double security, first, of the property right conferred upon him by the Provincial Legislature, and the removal of all disabilities which pertain to his character as a foreigner, as an alien, by the action of the general Legislature, who alone can deal with the alienage and naturalization.

Mr. MILLS. We carried the Wrecking Bill the other day providing that an alien should have the right to hold property in a British ship.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If another Act for a special purpose gives a special right, that is quite another thing.

On section 13,

Mr. MILLS. Where you have not many aliens coming into the country you may succeed in naturalizing them in this way, but if you are expecting a large immigration of foreigners you must adopt some more convenient system, or a large number will not be naturalized at all according to law. Unless you have some system where a man may be naturalized in some other way than by going into Court to have his certificate registered, you will not have many aliens naturalized in conformity to the law. In a new country, when a good many aliens are coming in, it will not be easy to get them to go some distance to a court to be naturalized. I can understand that in a country like England, where few persons are coming in, this may be done, but I am sure that the attempt to naturalize a large population in this way will not succeed.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). A County Court sits in every county of the Dominion, and I do not think there would be any difficulty. This is an important right you are conferring upon an alien, and if he appreciates it at all, he will not begrudge the trouble of going to the county town and having his rights confirmed by registration. It is better to preserve some short form. The affidavit is taken before a Commissioner and is filed by the Court. It is not necessary even the party should go himself.

Mr. MILLS. There would be no difficulty. The hon. gentleman might provide for the affidavit being sworn to before a justice of the peace, and forwarded with the certificate to the clerk of the peace to be filed by him, and read at the next sitting of the Court.

Mr. BLAKE. It appears to me to be most important that the Government should carry out their regulation, in some such spirit as my hon. friend from Bothwell has indicated, so as to provide the easiest and simplest mode for foreigners to become British subjects, rather than to put an obstacle in their way.

Mr. McDONALD. Provision is made for the Governments to appoint people for that purpose.

Mr. MILLS. In the North-West Territories, no doubt, the land agents could facilitate the business.

On clause 24,

Mr. MILLS. Is it intended that persons who are naturalized shall be recognized as British subjects everywhere?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes; the Imperial Government will legislate in that direction as soon as this Bill becomes law.

Mr. MILLS. To what extent?

Mr. McDONALD. It is by convention. They are now legislating with regard to Germany, and this clause refers specially to that country, although it applies to all countries. The law of Germany requires five years absence before it allows the right of German immigrants to be naturalized in a foreign country.

Mr. BUNSTER. Does the Bill apply to the Chinese?

Mr. BLAKE. There is an express provision for the Mongolians holding lands.

Mr. BUNSTER. I am afraid, then, I cannot support the Bill. Will the hon. Minister of Justice answer—how does this Bill affect the Mongolian race as regards registration?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The Bill proposes to do the heathen Chinese the honor of treating him like any other foreigner who comes into the country and desires to be a good subject of Queen Victoria.

Mr. BUNSTER. Then I cannot support it. I am really astonished the hon. leader of the Government would sanction any such Bill, when he got a constituency totally opposed to the Chinese race. There is no right or justice in it. It will make bad blood among our people in British Columbia.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bunster) does not understand his difficulties. He opposes the naturalization of the Chinese, while the hon. gentleman is going to be returned by the Chinese votes at the next election.

Mr. BUNSTER. The right hon. gentleman got all the votes in the constituency but one, and he ought to respect the feelings of the men who sent him here, when the balance of the Dominion opposed him. In allowing such an infliction to be imposed upon us, he is doing us great injustice, and I, for one, will not vote for him again. He ought to protect us against this Chinese pest. In sanctioning this Bill, the Premier overlooks his duty towards the people he so proudly represents.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am very sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bunster) was not in his place to move an amendment to the second reading of the Bill. At any rate, I cannot move an amendment against a Government Bill. If the hon. gentleman had been in his place he would doubtless have convinced the House, with his usual eloquence, of the necessity of preventing the Chinese from having this right. But, if I am not much mistaken, I believe aliens have a right to hold land in British Columbia by the local laws. Cannot Americans hold lands?

Mr. BUNSTER. Why does the hon. gentleman class Americans with Chinese?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think German, Italian, French and other aliens can hold land in British Columbia, under a local Act, and that the heathen Chinese can get this right to purchase land until the Legislature of British Columbia repeals the law allowing all aliens to hold lands. If we acted as the hon. gentleman desires, this Parliament would be setting itself up against the law of British Columbia.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bunster) tell us if the heathen Chinese has a vote now?

Mr. BUNSTER. Probably this is a more vexed question than the hon. member for Victoria (Sir John A. Macdonald) has considered it. I am astonished to think he has been so careless with regard to it. If he had read the Montreal Gazette of the 12th of this month, he would have seen that the Australian colonies—and I have a notice on the paper on this subject—have bound themselves together against this Chinese pest; and when he tries to smooth it over and asks: "Have not foreigners the right to vote in British Columbia?" and draws the line of demarcation between the Chinese and the Americans—the comparison, to my mind, is very odious.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Would the hon. gentleman prevent Dutchmen from settling and holding land in British Columbia?

Mr. BUNSTER. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, one foreigner comes from China and the other from Delf. I am sure china is better than delf.

Mr. BUNSTER. Not at all. I am very glad to know I have called the hon. gentleman's attention to this question.

Mr. BLAKE. Have the Chinese votes now for members of Parliament?

Mr. BUNSTER. No; they are on the municipal roll if they pay their taxes, and can vote for city councillor or mayor, but cannot vote for members of Parliament. We desire to prevent Chinese from coming into British Columbia. We want only white people to settle our lands. The Chinese do not even lay their bones in our Province after spending their lives there. The Chinese are obliged to give bonds for their return to China. It has been said that if I were a good constitutional authority I might amend this Bill; but what chance would I have of amending it, when I was left the other night to vote alone on a question. If the First Minister were to bring in a Bill to hide a man he would carry it. I hope the Government will give the present Bill due consideration, and not inflict such a preposterous measure on the country.

Committee reported.

MERCER REFORMATORY.

Bill (No. 81) an Act with reference to the Andrew Mercer Ontario Reformatory for Females, and the Central Prison for the Province of Ontario—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou)—was considered in Committee, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

168. Expenses of Government in the North-West Territories..... $30,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could give the House an explanation of the increase of $13,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The expenses of Government in the North-West Territories are the same as last year. The additional sum is made up as follows: Strong representations were made by the North-West Council to the effect that some of the main trails over which immigrants are beginning to flow are in a bad condition, and that some bridges are required for the continuity of those trails. To secure that object we ask $8,000; and $5,000, also on the strong recommendation of the North-West Council, for schools.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is there any sort of municipal organization under which rates in aid can be collected for schools and other purposes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There will be this summer. In consequence of the influx of population several electoral districts have been mapped out, and the settlers there are now electing their representatives on the North-West Council under the North-West Act.

169. For the Expenses of Government in the District of Keewatin..... $7,500 00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The sum of $2,500 in addition to last year's vote is for the extinguishment of remaining claims on account of small-pox. There have been no investigations since 1878, but of course all claims will be thoroughly investigated before they are paid.

Mr. MILLS. I took the ground that the Dominion Government should not pay the expenses of any means provided for the protection of the Province of Manitoba from small-pox.

In answer to Mr. MILLS,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No Council has been established in the District of Keewatin.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think the Lieutenant-Governor can act without the aid of the Council.

195. Surveys, Dominion Lands.....$300,000 00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This amount is the same as that for last year. It is very necessary that the work should be rapidly executed. In the first place, it is desirable that we should continue the regular survey by degrees wherever lines of settlement may be established. Then it is necessary that we should prosecute surveys along the line of the railway as much as possible, as the settlement of the country will largely follow the railway line. Again we want to send some surveying parties into the Bow River country for the purpose of thoroughly examining it. Then branch lines will be surveyed east and west from a base line running south from Battleford to the frontier. I do not think the statement formerly made by the hon. gentleman, that surveying was proceeding too rapidly, is borne out. We cannot, of course, accurately estimate the extent or the direction of settlement, but we must keep in advance of immigration and the requirements of settlers. Then, in view of the arrangements with the Syndicate, the surveys along the line of the railway must be prosecuted from Red River to the mountains. The only additional work proposed to be done is the survey of some townships on the 114th meridian, so as to provide for the nuclei of settlements which are being formed there. The costs of surveys will not be serious, as the iron corner stakes will mostly remain, though some of the intermediate mounds and wooden stakes may have disappeared. No applications have been made to the department for resurveys of townships on the ground that the original marks were lost. The cost of survey has been considerably diminished. The average in 1878 was 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents per acre. In 1880, under the system introduced last year, it was 3 cents an acre, a saving of 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents. All the returns of the surveys have not yet been received, therefore some of the accounts are yet outstanding; still, the rate per acre here given for 1870, based on the actual payment for 200 townships, may safely be taken as the average for the year. It is more than probable that when the accounts are in the average may prove to be even less than 3 cents per acre. Now, we are still further reducing the cost of survey, in the first place, by the alteration in the system of surveys, and the section lines will not be staked out so fully as they have been hitherto.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. How long have these iron stakes been placed? Has that been the custom the last year or two?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That has been the custom from the beginning.

Mr. MILLS. $300,000 last year was charged to capital account, and the same sum this year is so charged. But we have not before us a statement of the work done for the expenditure. We do not know how many acres have been surveyed, or whether the surveys have been carried on.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The report was only printed half an hour ago. There are 300 townships surveyed this year. I am afraid we cannot furnish a statement of the number of settlers going on to those surveyed lands during the last year.

Mr. TROW. Do I understand the Premier to say that iron stakes are used?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Iron stakes are at the four corners of the townships, but the sub-divisions into sections are made by mounds and wooden posts.

Mr. BLAKE. There was an arrangement made last Session that there should be an account opened and a statement brought down each year showing the results; also an account submitted to Parliament, showing the survey account and other expenses as against the land. The hon. gentleman argued that it was proper that this should be taken to capital account.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My recollection is that that should be the system in the future, but that we should have one year over our heads to get ready in. We have not got all the returns of the last year in yet, but we hope, next year, to be able to give a full account and a capital account, showing the cost of surveys and showing the amounts received, indicating and commencing the basis of a fund to redeem the indebtedness for the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It was distinctly understood that the sums received, at any rate, from the 1st July, 1880, on account of Dominion Lands, were to go as far as they could go in reduction of this same charge to capital. I hope that has been carried out.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will appear at the end of the year.

196 Dominion Lands $70,466 60

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The increase over the sum asked for last year is due to the rapid increase of work, both in the land transactions and in the surveys. Three draughtsmen and four clerks have been added to the staff, whose salaries amount to $5,400 a year.

Mr. MILLS. Do the advertising expenses mentioned here include the publication of the speeches of the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb)?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think very likely they will.

Mr. BLAKE. Those are included in the last Public Accounts. I suppose my right hon. friend means that this item is intended to include any similar speeches in the future.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid I am responsible for that charge. I lost my hon. friend's speech, not being present when it was delivered. I heard it was a very good speech and full of statistics respecting the North-West, and would make a very good emigration pamphlet, therefore I thought it would be money well spent to have that on hand.

Mr. MILLS. Is it the policy of the right hon. gentleman to circulate such speeches in this way in the future?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will promise not to distribute any more speeches in the future, unless I come across a good speech of my hon. friend. That is fair.

Mr. MILLS. I have in my hand a list of some expenses incurred in this department last year. Perhaps the hon. gentleman, if he has not seen it, would like to hear it read.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You may read it to me.

Mr. MILLS. The list is as follows:—Annual Register and Review, $100; Aylmer Times, $76.09; Berlin News, $103.10; Belleville Intelligencer, $193.40; Bracebridge Herald, $22.50; Bradford Witness, $27; Brantford Courier, $84.40; Brantford Telegram, $40.50; Brampton Conservative, $47.96; Canada National Zeitung Neustadt, $27; Canadian Temperance Advocate, $67.90; Canadian Spectator, $138.70; Cape Breton Advocate, $27; Cardwell Sentinel, $27; Central Canadian, $64.48; Charlottetown Presbyterian, $39.90; Charlottetown Herald, $64.25; Chatham Planet, $710.86; Christian Guardian, $130.80; Ottawa Citizen, $427.89; Cobourg Sentinel, $27; Colchester Sun, $35.60; Collingwood Enterprise, $31.50; Colonial Standard, $16.20; Cookstown Advocate, $27; Cornwall Reporter, $59.14; Courier de Montréal, $168.80; Courier de St. Hyacinthe, $27; Daily News, Kingston, $54; Daily Telegraph, Quebec, $67.50; Dundas Standard, $27. The total amount received by the papers whose names I have read was $2,962. I do not know that I need read the whole list, but if the hon. gentleman has the least doubt that there are 139 papers, I will go on.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will take your word for it.

Mr. MILLS. I think the total cost of advertising is in the neighborhood of $14,000. Now, it seems to me that this is a monstrous waste of public money. If the hon. gentleman wishes to aid the Conservative newspapers, as a struggling industry, on the principle of the National Policy, let him ask for an appropriation for that purpose; but do not mislead the House and the country by taking it as an appropriation for public lands. Then the country will know what they are paying these gentlemen who have organized themselves with the Government into a mutual admiration society, and who devote so much of their space and time to eulogizing the Government and their policy. If the public could see this list and know that the money supposed to be devoted to the opening up of the North-West was spent in this way, they would perhaps not attach so much importance to the opinions of the gentlemen who conduct these newspapers. If the Government would come down and say, we want $20,000 out of the public Treasury for the support of the Conservative press of Canada, we should know exactly what was being done.

Mr. BOWELL. Why did not you do that?

Mr. MILLS. Because we did not adopt such a policy. If the hon. gentleman looks over the accounts for the period that I had charge of the department, he will find that there was less than $500 spent in two years.

Mr. BOWELL. During the six months prior to their leaving office, over $10,000 was spent for advertising by the Department of Railways and Canals alone.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend's list, I understand, runs up to about $14,000, and among these 139 newspapers are many of which most of us, I suppose, never heard before. Nobody can doubt that this was not wanted in the public interest, and nobody can doubt that the hon. Minister knew that it was not wanted in the public interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We heard a great deal for and against the regulations for the settlement of the public lands, and I think it was well that the people should be fully informed in all localities of the country, even at the expense the hon. gentleman has mentioned, of the nature of these regulations, because immigration to the North-West comes from all parts of the Dominion. I think hon. gentlemen opposite, when in power, spent, and properly spent, a considerable sum in the way of advertising. If I am not mistaken, the present Minister of Railways, on taking office, had to pay out sums to the extent of $10,000 for advertising in that department for the previous six months under his predecessor. If we compare the cost of advertising, I think hon. gentlemen opposite will be found to have been as anxious in disseminating information as the present Government. I must say, however, that there ought to be a very considerable check put upon indiscriminate advertising, and we shall endeavor, prompted by the precept, if not the example of hon. gentlemen opposite, to try and keep down the cost of advertising in the future.

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman looks at the Public Accounts, he will find that there was not, in the year 1878, $500 spent in advertising in connection with the Department of the Interior. Under the provisions of that law we were required to advertise the claims of various parties before the Commissioner undertook to deal with them. For this, I think, some $12,000 or $14,000 were paid. Those advertisements required to be inserted in the daily papers of Winnipeg for three months before action could be taken. Apart from that, you will not find $500 spent for advertising in two years. There is no necessity for it.

Mr. BOWELL. Let the hon. gentleman put a notice on the paper asking for a comparative statement, and he will find the comparison is not to the advantage of the late Government. As for my own department, I have scarcely got through paying the old accounts yet, running in cases of some papers for useless advertisements to the tune of $500 or $600 each.

Mr. MILLS. The advertisements may have appeared without orders from the department, and the hon. gentleman may be paying for advertising gratuitously done.

Mr. BOWELL. I have refused most distinctly to pay accounts unless certified to by the Queen's Printer, and when the Queen's Printer refused, the late Minister certified to them as having been ordered by himself. I did not consider myself justified in refusing an order of that kind, though the order was in direct opposition to the Order in Council passed by the Government of which he was a member.

Mr. CHARLTON. While upon the subject of Dominion lands, I wish to call attention to some matters in connection with Ordnance lands. We have not the report of the hon. Minister of the Interior this year, but I see that the arrears for payment of balance due for rent and instalments are very large and are increasing yearly. On the 30th June, 1875, the balance of rent unpaid was $25,755.29, and instalments and interest unpaid amounted to $20,440.75, a total of $46,196.02; the next year the arrears from both of those sources had run up to $47,003.87; on 30th June, 1877, they reached $52,844.48; the 30th June, 1878, $86,915.55; and the 30th June, 1879, the amount reached $107,368. It would be interesting to know how much was due last year. I think these accounts ought to be collected better than they are. I find from the last report that at Fort Erie $10,489.76 is due for rent and interest unpaid on 30th June, 1879, and the amount received was but $30.66. In the same year the amount due for interest and rent on Ordnance lands sold in Toronto is $1,534.80, and for instalments unpaid, $3,556.35; against which but $405.11 was received. Some change should be made in conducting this business. It is quite evident that political pressure is brought to bear on the hon. Minister of Interior by hon. members whose constituents are indebted to this fund. It is very natural, therefore, that these accounts should fall into arrears. I throw no blame on one Government more than another. The system is evidently defective. I suggest that this matter should be placed in some other hands, say in the hands of a commission entirely independent of political influence, who would deal with it in a business-like way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite correct. There has been great laxity in collecting the rents. Colonel Coffin, when in charge, was a very active officer who did his duty to the utmost extent, but was stopped by influence of some kind or other. There has been, especially in this vicinity, a very considerable lack of due pressure to collect dues of every kind. We are endeavoring to work up the collection as much as possible. The system has lasted so long that you cannot well come down with the hammer of Thor and crush all those people who have been allowed very laxly to run in arrears, but pressure will be brought on them to make them pay up.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe that in Ottawa, the rents and interest remaining due and unpaid are over 18,000, while the instalments unpaid amount to but $7,000. I do not know how much is interest and how much rent, but allowing an equal amount for each, you have an enormous arrear of rent. It would be better for the Government to put this property up at the hammer and collect the purchase money from the purchasers. There is a total of $50,000 rent and interest in arrears, and the whole amount due is $194,000.

Mr. MILLS. A large part of the Government property in the city is held under perpetual leases. Those should be converted into freeholds, and the capitalized sum charged to the parties instead of yearly rental.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. During the last five years the depression in Ottawa was severely felt, and it would have been useless to put the property in the market, and you could not have converted the leases into freeholds. Now that the depression is over more active steps will be taken. Now, especially in this part of the country, there is no reason why those arrears should not be collected. I agree with the hon. gentleman, that whenever you can get rid of the property you should. We should endeavor to dispose of this property as fast as possible, consistent with the rights of the parties.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). What policy do you propose in connection with the Ordnance lands in Shelburne? Shortly before the retirement of the late Government, I made application on behalf of a gentleman who held Walter's Island, in the harbor of Shelburne, under an old lease from the British Government. The Minister of that day (the member for Bothwell) reported it had been decided the island should be sold to this gentleman, Mr. Willet, for $300, which he paid to the Receiver-General. Since I have made repeated applications to the Minister of the Department on Mr. Willet's account, whether his money would be accepted and a title for the island given, or his money refunded? Is the right hon. gentleman prepared to give an answer now or let the matter go on from year to year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not able to give an answer now, but shall inquire into the matter with a view to an early reply.

Mr. MILLS. When I was Minister of the Interior, I referred the matter to Col. Coffin, who reported that the land claimed by Mr. Willet was worth $300. Certain parties in Shelburne, to whom I wrote, put a higher valuation on it, but left out of sight the fact that Mr. Willet had a life lease. Considering this fact and the smallness of the rent, we felt that Col. Coffin's was a fair valuation. On my writing to Mr. Willet for a higher sum, he answered he thought $300 was more than the island was worth, and that if we did not choose to accept it he would receive back his money and give up the island. I then concluded that the $300 should be accepted, and ordered a patent to issue; and so the matter stood when we left office.

Mr. BLAKE. We have made very good resolutions as to the propriety of avoiding the system of arrears in connection with those Ordnance lands, and there is very considerable need of such a policy. I want to read a sentence or two from the right hon. gentleman's report with reference to the North-West Railway lands, which possesses some bearing on this point:

"I regret to have to report that, even at this early date, at what is the mere initiation of a system of time sales of railway lands, there is already experienced difficulty of obtaining punctual payment of instalments due."

"The experience of the department of the steady accumulation of arrears of payments, in case of similar sales of Ordnance lands, would lead to the inference that, unless the extreme measure is resorted to of prompt cancellation of sale on default of payment of any instalment, this evil is likely to increase."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt it is much more satisfactory to get the money in our hands. When we established the regulations for time sales, we had to contend against the very liberal terms offered to settlers in the United States. Our country was more remote from the general current of emigration, and we were told, I think by hon. gentlemen opposite, that we had no people for our lands, or very few, and in order to offer proper inducements, we did sell on time. If, however, arrears accumulate inconveniently, we can alter that policy, and demand ready money for all sales, or a system similar to that of the United States. Then hon. gentlemen opposite will not, I hope, attack us for the illiberality of our regulations.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman misapprehends the report, which does not refer to the subject of his motion, but to the sales of railway lands for speculators' purchase. With reference to his apprehension of being accused of illiberality by us, if he alters his policy, I beg to remind him that we pressed upon him, when he announced a plan of sales to speculators—not on condition of settlement, but on time—its objectionable character; we denounced it, and told him that sales ought to be for cash, and not on time, and it is with reference to that passage in the report that I spoke. I suppose the hon. gentleman, having brought down his report, approves of it, though he does not appear to have read it. I hope he will carry out this policy of the Opposition, which they earnestly urged last Session.

201. Contingencies.—Amount required to pay Sir Alex. Galt, expenditure incurred by him in establishing his office in London, over and above amount already voted..... $1,294 07

In reply to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Last Session a vote was taken of $3,000 to pay the expenses of the removal of Sir Alex. Galt and his establishment to London. The whole expenditure, as submitted by the accounts of Sir Alexander, and vouchers attached, was $4,294.07, and therefore this vote of $1,294.07 is required to pay the difference.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it has nothing to do with the expenses of his office?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. $3,000 were voted for the last fiscal year, $4,000 has been voted for the present fiscal year. $3,000 were not sufficient to take Sir Alex. Galt over and establish him in London, and therefore $1,294 additional is required.

204. Dorchester Penitentiary, to pay the salaries of the Warden, $1,000, and the Deputy Warden, $600, from the 1st September, 1879, to the 1st July, 1880..... $1,600 00

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The term "salaries" is not exactly correct. We expected the year before last to get into the penitentiary on 1st September. The Department of Public Works, who had charge of the construction and finishing of the prison, reported that the prison would be ready, and the Department of Justice made the necessary arrangements for transferring prisoners from Halifax and St. John to Dorchester. The warden and deputy warden were appointed by Minute of Council early in September. It afterwards turned out that the prison was not ready for occupation until the following July, and the warden and deputy warden were more or less engaged during the nine months which intervened between the date of their appointments and the time the prison was occupied, although they were not occupied as departmental officers; and the Government thought it only fair that they should be paid something, and they were voted $1,000 and $600 respectively.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not understand why this vote was not brought down last Session. The difficulty had occurred. The Minister of Justice brought down the vote for Dorchester Penitentiary, having arranged the salaries of the warden and deputy warden.

Mr. McDONALD. We wished to have the expenses of this prison settled irrespective of an extra claim like this. Besides, I do not know that the country lost much, if the claim is a proper one, by letting it wait.

Mr. BLAKE. I suspect that the people had not to wait very long, for I fancy that they have been paid long ago.

Mr. McDONALD. No; they have not.

Mr. BLAKE. It certainly was stated, whether in the press or in this House I cannot now remember, that these appointments had been made at a premature date, and it was replied that no harm was done because other men were not paid any salary, so no further question was raised on that subject. But we find that these men were appointed, their salaries fixed, and next year comes a proposition to pay a considerable sum of money, occasioned by these premature appointments. If the arrangements of the Board of Works were so much out of the way, as the hon. gentleman has stated, I am surprised, having regard to the administration of that department, that there should have been such a miscarriage of calculations as to the time when the prison should be ready. I think, perhaps, there was more anxiety on the part of those persons to be appointed than any anxiety on the part of the Government to proceed in such a way that there would be a necessity for appointing them. Surely it would have been enough for the Government to have told them that they would be appointed when the prison was ready for them, instead of appointing them nine months before they were required, and then proposing to give them $1,600 because they were appointed before they were required.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not know what my hon. friend saw in the press, but if there was any such statement as the hon. gentleman says, I have only to say that there was no authority for that statement. The delay which took place in regard to the preparation necessary lie at the door of hon. gentlemen opposite, for if the work had been prosecuted with vigor and these contracts given with punctuality, we had reason to suppose that the prison would have been completed and the Public Works Department would not have been in a position to find themselves so entirely wrong in their calculations. There is this, however, to be said about the services of these men: that some one was required to perform the duties which they performed. The place had to be got ready, preparations had to be made for the reception of the prisoners, furniture had to be procured and placed in the building, furnaces had to be arranged, and a variety of other things attended to in connection with housekeeping on so large a scale; so that the warden and the deputy warden, who exercised a supervision over this work, practically earned the money which we now ask Parliament to vote.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says that because some delays were made in the construction of the buildings prior to October, 1878, therefore, in September, 1879, he appointed permanent officers in a building which was not ready until—

Mr. McDONALD. I did not say so.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says that it was because of delays which occurred under the late Administration.

Mr. McDONALD. No; I did not.

Mr. BLAKE. All I can say, then, is that, unless the hon. gentleman meant to say that, his remark had a relevancy. The question is not whether the building would have been ready if there had been no delays, but whether it was proper for the Government to appoint them and pay them ten months before the building was erected.

Mr. McDONALD. It is hardly worth the hon. gentleman's while to present my remark, however, to give himself the opportunity of saying that it was not relevant. What I did say was that, if my hon. friend, who presided over the Department of Public Works, did not have the building ready for occupation at the time anticipated, the fault lay on the other side of the House.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that in September, 1879, a year after we had vacated office, he could not tell when the building would be ready?

Mr. McDONALD. I think it was the Minister of Railways who was presiding over the department then, and, as he is not present, I cannot tell why he was disappointed. I can only say that, acting on an intimation conveyed from that department, the building would be ready the first of September, or shortly after the appointments were made.

Mr. LANGEVIN. As the Minister of Railways is not present it is just to him to say that I had then been Minister of Public Works for two months, and that I found that we were disappointed about the fulfilment of the contracts. These are things that may happen at any time; and we did all we could to hasten the work, but of course we were disappointed in the time.

Mr. ANGLIN. Did the hon. gentleman recommend that the appointment should be made in advance?

Mr. McDONALD. No; I recommended them.

205. Additional amount required to cover the cost of the publication of the debates..... $10,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is this for?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think it was stated by the Chairman of the Printing Committee that it was on account of previous years, and the hon. member for West Durham moved for a return.

Mr. BLAKE. The returns do not show the results, so far as I can make out.

Mr. BOWELL. After the debate which took place the other evening, I took the trouble to obtain from the clerk of the Printing Committee the figures showing the total cost of reporting and publishing the debates for the last four years. He explains to me, as I think I explained the other night, that portions of the sums voted have lapsed before settlement was had with the reporters and printers. Hence arose the necessity of taking sums out of the appropriations for one year to pay amounts due for the year previous. The actual cost of publishing the debates was, in 1877, $15,356.66; in 1878, $18,963.61; in 1879, $16,130.18; in 1880, $16,216.75. During the year 1877, up to the 30th June, there was only $8,963.58 paid; so that for that year there was taken out of the appropriation of 1878, $6,393.08. In 1878, $13,971.20 was paid up to the 30th June, leaving $4,992.31 to be paid out of the appropriation for the next year. In 1879, $11,704 was paid, leaving $4,425 to be paid out of the appropriation for the next year. In 1879-80 it was $9,661.69, leaving a balance of $6,568.81. The appropriation for 1880-81 is $15,000, to which the hon. member for Centre Huron referred. Deduct from that $6,568.81, which had lapsed, and it left an amount in the hands of the clerk of only $8,401.19. The Supplementary Estimate of $10,000 now asked for, makes up the $18,401.19 which is required to pay for the reporting and the printing of the debates of last year, it being about $3,000 more than the appropriation desired.

Mr. BLAKE. I confess myself entirely unable to understand how the legislative account has been worked for some years. I took occasion to look at it on finding this extraordinary proposal for $10,000 for one year's expenses for Hansard, making in all about $25,000. I found, when I got the return down, that the whole expenses for Hansard for that previous year were $16,260, and consequently it cannot have been for that year. It appears now to have been for a series of years.

Mr. BOWELL. Not for a series of years. There is only $15,000 taken for last year. On the 30th June, $9,661 had been paid, the balance had lapsed. Then the accountant took this $6,509.81 out of the appropriation for this year to pay the balance due on last year, and if you take that $6,000 and the $10,000, together with what had already been paid, you have the total of $18,000.

Mr. BLAKE. As far as I can judge, if the strict course had been pursued that prevailed in former years, of assuming that all sums paid after the 30th June must be paid with the appropriation of the preceding year, the account would stand differently from what it does to-day. As the hon. gentleman stated, the account for 1877 indicated that the amount paid within the fiscal year was $8,963. As I understand the hon. gentleman's statement, that $6,393 was paid out of the vote for the next year. If so, there was also paid in that year $13,971.20, actually paid in that year for the service of that year, so that the amount of $6,393.08, which is said to have been paid out of the year 1878 for 1877, added to that which is said to have been paid in 1877 for the service of 1878, would be the sum in excess of the vote which was given for 1878, and I do not see where the money came, according to the statement. The hon. gentleman says $6,393.77 was paid under the vote of 1878. I find it reached $13,971.20 for the service of 1878, and was paid out of the vote for that year. The aggregate of these two would be a trifle over $20,000 said to have been paid out of that vote, and that vote was but $15,000. Where that $5,000 came from there was no intimation. Then there is nearly $5,000 paid for 1878 out of 1879.

Mr. BOWELL. It may be possible that if that statement was traced back it could be accounted for in the same way.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is really deserving the attention of the authorities. We also find $4,992 in arrear for the service of 1878, irrespective of that $5,000 I have spoken of. That would be paid out of 1879, with the $11,704 paid for the service of 1879. The aggregate of these two would make nearly $19,000 alleged to have been paid out of the vote of 1879. But the vote of 1879 was but $15,000, less by $37,000 than the sum supposed to have been paid out of the vote of 1879. Then there was $4,425 unpaid for that year to be paid out of the vote for the following year. $9,661 was paid in 1880, so that we come in pretty even to this very year in which $10,000 is required. Now, I turn to the account, and I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to the unsatisfactory mode in which the legislation account has been kept for a number of years. We get certain details in the Estimates of that account, but in the Public Accounts you have but a single lump sum given, without details of any kind. For 1877-78 the total amount voted for legislation was $131,000, which included $15,000 for the Hansard. The charge in the Public Accounts for that year is $140,000, or $9,000 in excess of the vote. Now we find that much more than $9,000 more was expended, for it is alleged that the $6,393 of Hansard money was not expended in that year, therefore there was really expended for the year $146,000 odd as against the vote of $131,000. For the next year the vote was $177,000, and what is charged in the Public Accounts is $142,914. For the next year $133,000 is the vote, and there is charged $174,000. So it seems to me these accounts require some investigation. We find that for these three consecutive years there is a charge in the Public Accounts, as having been spent on account of these votes, more than the whole vote which Parliament gave in each of these years, and aggregating in the three years to no less than $17,000 of over-expenditure. In addition to that $17,000 we are now asked for $10,000 more for Hansard during the year. So there seems to have been some irregularity of some description in keeping these accounts, which requires further explanation before we come to concurrence.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman will remember that this matter was brought before the Public Accounts Committee last Session. It has been the custom in the past, if the appropriation for one branch of the service was insufficient and there was a surplus in another branch, that the surplus has been used for the other service. During the present year, and by direction of the Public Accounts Committee, the whole of these accounts passed into the hands of the Auditor-General. The particular item to which attention is now called has been expended under a wrong head, and this is a difficulty that will be obviated in the future under the new system of auditing.

208. To provide for increase of salary to the Deputy Adjutant General in Manitoba $300 00

Mr. CARON. When Col. Osborne Smith went to Manitoba, he was promised command of the battalion which at that time existed in Winnipeg. Subsequently the battalion was disbanded, but as he had been promised the command, this $300 was left to him as part of his payment. I may say it is not intended to continue the pay to his successor, Mr. Horton, who is coming from British Columbia to Winnipeg.

209. Contingencies—To provide for gratuities on retirement to the under-mentioned officers:
 Lt.-Col. W. S. Durie, Deputy Adjutant-General, Military District No. 2 $3,400 00
 Lt.-Col. J. Fletcher, C.M.G., Deputy Adjutant-General, Military District No. 5 3,400 00
 Lt.-Col. J. H. Gray, Deputy Adjutant-General, Military District No. 12..... 1,700 00
 Lt.-Col. J. Moffatt, Brigade-Major, Military District No. 1..... 2,400 00
 To provide for removal allowance to Deputy Adjutants-General and Brigade-Majors..... 5,683 16
 To provide for personal travelling expenses and cost of transport of luggage of each officer..... 1,816 84

Mr. ANGLIN. I suppose this arose from the shifting of the officers lately?

Mr. CARON. Yes. Several of these gentlemen have been several years in the service. Previous to my taking charge of the department, it was decided to remove the different brigade-majors and deputy adjutants-general who had been so long in the different districts, from one district to another. It became necessary to provide for a number who, by reason of age or some other reason personal to themselves, were not able to accept the offer to remove. In the cases of Col. Moffatt, Col. Durie and Col. Fletcher, the annuity is for two years.

210. Amount required to cover cost of transport of military stores for equipment of Mounted Rifle Companies, organized for the protection of settlers in the North-West $645 75

Mr. CARON. This is for the transport of military stores by the Hudson's Bay Company from Winnipeg to Fort Carlton.

Mr. BLAKE. When did the transport take place, and under what circumstances was this force organized?

Mr. CARON. Under an Order in Council of the 16th August, 1879.

Mr. BLAKE. Was it in consequence of some Indian scare, or in pursuance of some policy of keeping up a mounted police force for the settlers?

Mr. CARON. At that time there was a good many rumors about of expected trouble among the Indians in that part of the country, and it was considered necessary to have some mounted troops. Of course, it cost very much less to provide for these than it would have cost for the mounted police.

211. Intercolonial Railway—Amount required to cover salary of Chief Engineer appointed for the settlement of old claims, salaries of Assistants, travelling expenses, Shorthand Writer, etc..... $12,000 00

Mr. POPE. This includes the salary of Mr. Frank Shanly, as Chief Engineer, $6,500; Mr. Ralph Jones, as Secretary, $1,200; Mr. C. W. Shanly, Secretary, $600; travelling expenses, telegraphing, &c., $3,700. This is, of course, for this year.

19. To pay Mr. Girouard, for railway ties lost in transit in 1872 $2,640 00

Mr. POPE (Compton). The arbitrator, after examining into this matter, decided the claim should be paid.

Mr. ANGLIN. The ties when lost were the property of the contractors. They were being removed, when lost, to the place of delivery, and, therefore, the Government were not responsible.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Did not the official arbitrator refuse to recognize that claim?

Mr. POPE. I have no information about that. Mr. Cowan proved pretty satisfactorily the loss of the sleepers, and produced a letter from Mr. Stevenson to the effect that if Girouard proved the loss, he was entitled to payment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is the same question which was supposed at one time to have affected my seat in Parliament. I was notified that I was to be moved against for having violated the law relating to the independence of Parliament. It has just been stated that Mr. Girouard did not deliver the sleepers where they ought to have been delivered, and therefore he should not have been paid. He clearly established the fact that the sleepers had been delivered and received by the Government; and that it was, after it was so received, found necessary to remove the pieces to another portion of the work, and he was instructed so to remove them. He pointed out the danger to which he would not undertake the work unless the Government held him safe from all loss—on this condition he removed the sleepers. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Anglin), who knows the country, knows also that removing timber from the Bay of Bathurst would be hazardous in rough weather; rough weather did overtake him, and they were blown across to the Canada side and were lost. At the same time Mr. Johnson, a New Brunswick man, well known, had some contracts along the same line, which he sub-let, giving to these contractors the ties. One lot was got out and another delivered, but I fear describing them. The late Government paid for those ties, although they had not been delivered, and were not its property. They felt it was better they should lose the price of the sleepers. But there was a better case for Mr. Girouard, who had delivered his sleepers to the satisfaction of the Government inspector. They had been received and partly paid for, and at their request he charged them from that point. The hon. gentleman who now tries to find some fault or scandal in regard to this payment to Girouard, was very anxious, a couple of years ago, that he should be paid. The late Government brought him here, all the way from Kent. When they thought I was involved in that transaction, when the paper published by the member for Gloucester stated I had gobbled up $7,000 or $8,000 of the public money, he was brought up here to see if anything could be proved against me personally; but the moment I challenged them to prove anything, or proceed against me, and they found they could not, they took no further interest in the matter.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. This is an utter and deliberate misstatement of the facts—an utter and deliberate falsehood. The statement made by the hon. member who has just spoken—that the reason why Girouard's claim was not paid—was, that the late Government, who intended to pay, would not do so because they could establish no claim against himself.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I dispute the right of the ex-Minister to stand in this House and accuse me of deliberate falsehood. I deny his right to do so; and he knows he would not dare to make such an accusation if he did not know he could shield and protect himself under the rules of the House. I express myself as clearly as I can, that he would not dare to make such a charge outside of the House.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I repeat, it is a false statement.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman has forgotten, I think, what is due to the House in making use of such language. I repeat an interest was taken in Mr. Girouard at that time. I can go further, and state that the leader of the late Government declared a true case was made out against me, and that he would unseat me. That was the reason why I asked my hon. friends not to commit themselves to a whitewashing case.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) has given a version of the case not quite accurate. If it is true, as has been and is alleged, that Mr. Girouard delivered those ties in Bathurst Basin, I have no doubt he was entitled to his money. But it always seemed to me extraordinary if he delivered them there, and they were duly accepted in Bathurst Basin, that he should have undertaken the risk and trouble of moving those ties into the Bay, and along the coast, which is rather dangerous. He stated he was required or asked to do so by the officer. However, Mr. Stevenson has denied over and over again that he ever received or accepted the delivery of those ties in Bathurst Basin, asserting that he refused, positively, to accept their delivery there—that it was not the place where the ties were wanted—that he required to take them to Richibucto, and that on the way the ties were unfortunately lost. With regard to the statement of the member for Victoria (Mr. Costigan) that there was some effort made to involve him in this transaction, it is necessary I should say a few words in explanation. In 1877 Mr. Girouard applied to me to endeavour to obtain for him the sum he alleged was due on his contract for the supply of ties. I wrote him that I would be very willing to help him, and asked his account in order to furnish it to the department. He replied he kept none, and asked me to obtain a copy from the department. I received from the department the figures of the two contracts, the one in which Mr. Girouard was interested as a partner of Mr. Renaud, who was a member of the House, and the other in which the hon. member for Victoria was directly interested.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Why does the hon. gentleman state in the first place that Mr. Girouard was a partner of Renaud, and that I was directly interested in the other contract.

Mr. ANGLIN. I stated what at the time was the current opinion; I do not assert it myself, but there is some evidence in support of the probabilities of the case. Several large sums were drawn by John Costigan on account of the contractors. Girouard denied he gave any authority to John Costigan to draw some of those amounts, and claimed that several of those sums were still due him. If that statement was correct he was still entitled to this money. On his behalf I pressed that claim on the railway authorities, and called upon them to show whether Girouard ever had obtained those sums. I was met by the proper authority with the statement that he had in his possession a receipt in full for the settlement of Girouard's account and balance due, obtained from him. I then stated that if that was the case the claim could not be established, and wrote to Girouard to that effect. The following year I was rather surprised to learn that Girouard was in Ottawa, and I believe the hon. member had some business transactions with him. Possibly at his instance Girouard came up here. I had nothing to do with bringing him here. I said to Mr. DeVeber on the way that I thought there was no case, that I had taken a great deal of pains to inquire into the charges, and that I thought they could not be established. However, he thought it would be well to make further inquiry into the whole matter. Mr. DeVeber pressed his claim very strongly, and he finally demanded the production of a receipt in full, said to have been signed by Mr. Girouard. This receipt was looked for but could not be found, so that secondary evidence was required. Secondary evidence was produced, and Mr. Stevenson, as a witness, appeared and said that a receipt had been duly signed by Mr. Girouard. On the other hand, Mr. Girouard said he had signed a paper in blank after receiving a large sum of money towards closing the account, but that he had never willingly or knowingly signed a receipt in full, and that if such a receipt existed, it was not a paper which he had signed. Mr. Stevenson contradicted that statement, and said that the accounts had been fully gone into, that Mr. Girouard expressed himself as being fully satisfied with the amount, and that he signed a receipt in full. Mr. Duplessis, the accountant of the department, was then, unfortunately, sick of the illness of which he subsequently died, but he was applied to, and he wrote a statement, which I saw, declaring that he was present during the whole time that the settlement was made, that it was a settlement made in a regular way, that Mr. Girouard expressed himself as quite satisfied, and that he signed a receipt which was drawn up in a regular and formal way. I think I have heard it stated that Mr. John Costigan was present, and that he bore evidence somewhat to the same effect. So the matter stood, and so much was my entire connection with the whole affair. It leaked out that sums paid Mr. Costigan were paid without authority, but if such a rumor did leak out it was because Mr. Girouard made these statements within the precincts of the House, while he was here pushing his claim. I think it will be seen from the statement in the Minister of Railways' report that Mr. Girouard now claims over $6,000, and it is possible that he claims some of the old sums which, he says, were paid without his authority. I had nothing to do with the matter further than trying to press Mr. Girouard's claim, while believing it was well grounded. I had no idea of hurting the hon. member for Victoria (Mr.

Costigan). I circulated no reports connecting his name improperly with the matter, and when it was stated on the hustings that these moneys were paid without authority, I attached no more importance to it than was absolutely necessary. The whole transaction seems to be one of a very extraordinary character. With regard to this particular payment, its justice or its injustice, its propriety or its impropriety, rests entirely on one single point, and that is whether Mr. Girouard did, as he alleges, and as Mr. Stevenson absolutely denies, make delivery of those ties to Mr. Stevenson on behalf of the Government at Bathurst Basin, and that they were lost. One gentleman says one thing, and the other says another, but I must say that the probability seems to be on Mr. Stevenson's side.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Of course, every hon. gentleman will accept the statement of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) that he did not desire to do anything that would hurt my feelings, but it is rather a remarkable fact that in the Public Accounts Committee he stated boldly that two men then supporting the Government were bribed by this contract. Of course, the hon. gentleman would not injure anyone's feelings; perhaps on the ground that he imagines all feelings of delicacy and self-respect are concentrated in himself. However, he stated, as he now states, that Mr. Girouard, the member for Kent, was a partner with Mr. Renaud, and that according to public rumor I was directly interested, and that he was informed that I had drawn large sums of money without the authority of Mr. Girouard. He informs the House that he minutely examined all the papers. That I thoroughly believe, for I know that he did not leave a paper or a record unsearched with the view of having me unseated; but I think when he failed to find anything he would have been more generous if, instead of giving currency to rumors in his paper and otherwise, he had stated that, having searched all the papers, he had found that not a single dollar had been drawn by John Costigan.

Mr. ANGLIN. I did not say there was.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Of course not, but when he searched the papers and found nothing against me he should have had the generosity to say that he found the claim was not substantiated. There was nothing in connection with the contract that could effect anybody, and I will now state how far I was interested in the matter. Tenders were asked for ties for several sections on the Intercolonial Railway. Mr. Robert Connors, one of the largest of our lumber operators, tendered for four sections. Waiting for a reply he made no arrangements to go into lumber operations that year until the month of September or October, and finding that the contracts were not awarded, he entered into operations in the usual way of getting timber upon the St. John River. Afterwards one of the sections was awarded to him. He came to Grand Falls and asked me if I would manage the contract for him. I said I would, and I went as an agent to do his work—not for the first time, because for the last twenty years, more or less, I had acted for him in the same way. I went and superintended the work, but after we had got it going, I found that it was to his interest that he should get out of the contract and allow the other contractor to finish both sections. The advances which I drew, by power of attorney, from him were put into the business. The ties were got out, and handed over to Mr. Girouard on condition that he would supply the two sections, and draw all the money for them. I never drew a single dollar on account of Mr. Girouard's claim, and there was no question of my authority to draw the money on the other. When the ties were got out, it was found that there was a larger quantity at Bathurst than was required, and the Government found it necessary to take some of them to another place. Mr. Girouard found that there was no way of getting them there except by water, and Mr. Girouard, after pointing out the danger and risk there would be in moving them in that way, undertook the work, and, as has already been said, he failed in the undertaking on account of a storm. Before this the Government had paid for ties which had been burned along the Intercolonial—ties which had never been delivered, and which they never expected to receive—and they paid for them simply on the evidence of witnesses who testified to the number of ties got out.

Mr. SNOWBALL. Was any action taken in reference to the claim of Mr. Jones, at Newcastle Station?

Mr. POPE. I have heard nothing about it since I came to the department. I do not know what Jones the hon. gentleman means.

Mr. SNOWBALL. He has a water mill in rear of Newcastle Station, and the water was drawn off for the use of the station. Will this case come before the Commission?

Mr. POPE. It is possible, but I could not give the hon. gentleman any information about it.

216. To pay J. B. Smith for fencing erected in 1872 for Intercolonial Railway$1,891 50

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. POPE. This was an award of Mr. Shanly's. Mr. Smith was a sub-contractor under Sumner and Somers. Mr. Smith performed this work, but was never paid for it by the contractors, and the Government is now paying him for it. It has been referred to the official arbitrators.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Was it refused and subsequently paid on reference to Mr. Shanly?

Mr. POPE. No; they found for Mr. Smith.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. If they found for Mr. Smith I would like to know why it was referred to Mr. Shanly. The hon. Minister just informed us this was paid on Mr. Shanly's award.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman knows that in all cases that are referred to one official arbitrator, it is not for his decision but for report to the hon. Minister. The report was in favor of Mr. Smith, afterwards it was referred to Mr. Shanly, and he decided in the same way.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not think the hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that in all references to an official arbitrator it is for him to report to the hon. Minister.

Mr. McDONALD. The report is to be made to the hon. Minister, and the hon. Minister is to pronounce on the finding of the Board. There is an appeal from the one arbitrator to the whole Board.

Mr. BLAKE. Then if that is so, it is obvious that the decision of the one arbitrator is not a decision from which the party may appeal to the whole Board. Did Mr. Girouard appeal from Mr. Cowan's decision? Are you going to produce Mr. Cowan's report before concurrence?

Mr. POPE. It is on the Table.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. Minister inform us why Mr. Smith's claim was not paid between 1872 and 1881.

Mr. POPE. I cannot say.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. There must have been some substantial ground alleged why this was not settled. No doubt the claim was frequently presented.

Mr. POPE. I have received no information, nor seen any documents giving me any information on that point. I can only say that the official arbitrator who acted upon this, reported favorably, as did also Mr. Shanly. The circumstances as I learn them from the department, are simply that Mr. Smith was a sub-contractor under Sumner and Somers, that he performed this work, that the contractors were never paid for the work, and that the sub-contractor is now being paid for it.

Mr. BLAKE. Sumner and Somers were the contractors for the Government, and I think they brought forward a claim under that contract, a very large contract. The name of the firm is familiar to me. I think that Sumner and Somers had a claim which the Government disputed, that they filed a petition of right, and that it was found in the courts that there was nothing due them. Now we find that this claim of their sub-contractors against themselves is paid. It seems to me that there is no claim of this man's against the Government at all, from what the Minister has stated.

Mr. POPE. He claimed after their failure.

Mr. BLAKE. He had no claim in law nor in equity.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Practically, the Government has paid twice over for this work.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am quite sure that cannot be the case, and I have no doubt my hon. friend, (Mr. Pope) on concurrence, will be able to show that it is not the case. At present it appears that they were not paid for this work, that the work was done by Mr. Smith and was paid for, and I am quite sure that if he is paid, Sumner and Somers will not be paid.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no doubt Sumner and Somers will not be paid, because, from my recollection of the nature of the claim, they have been paid everything that was due to them. I do not think it is very satisfactory in reference to an item of this description, paid in this way, that we should be told that we must take it on trust now and that we may get information on concurrence. I think a Minister who proposes to Parliament to pay a ten-years-old claim ought to be ready now, in Committee, to give us information. The hon. gentleman has not given us satisfactory information; even his leader says he will satisfy us on concurrence, which means that we are not satisfied yet.

217. Rivière du Loup Branch—Additional amount required for repairs and improvements.....$140,000 00

Mr. POPE (Compton) This amount has been already expended. The items are as follows:—Tracklaying and ballasting, $78,454.91; station buildings, $54,992.37; rails and fastenings, $90,006.69; sleepers, $2,254.45; fencing, $5,024.09; bridges, culverts, &c., $8,887.95; water service, $2,651.81; snow protection, $677.96; miscellaneous, $14,102.32;—making in all $256,179.25. A former vote was $116,000, leaving this appropriation to make up the balance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does this branch pay?

Mr. POPE. Its revenue exceeds the expenditure. The whole cost of the branch, when it is provided with the rolling stock we propose to ask the House to give us authority to purchase, will have amounted to about $20,000 a mile.

218. Canadian Pacific Railway—Amount required for purchase of Prince Arthur's Landing and Kaministiqui Railway..... $14,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. When was the arrangement made for the purchase of that railway, and under what authority?

Mr. POPE. The purchase was made on the 20th May, 1880, under authority of an Order in Council, dated 30th October, 1880. This money was appropriated under the authority of the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, for the purpose of placing the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Prince Arthur's Landing, which the Government to be a better place for it than Fort William. The amount paid for the railway was $14,000; it originally cost $68,000.

Mr. BLAKE. But the hon. gentleman spent more than $14,000 upon the road.

Mr. POPE (Compton).

Mr. POPE. We took up the iron rails and put down steel rails in their places.

Mr. ANGLIN. Can the hon. gentleman tell us how much the Government expect to spend for the erection of piers and breakwaters, to make Prince Arthur's Landing a good harbour?

Mr. POPE. Not one dollar.

Mr. DAWSON. Prince Arthur's Landing is not, as it has been represented to be, a place requiring any very great expense to make it accessible, because it is so well guarded that open row-boats have ridden at anchor there during the whole period of navigation. It could be made an excellent harbour at a very slight cost.

221. New Brunswick.—Woodstock Post Office, &c., &c., additional amount required for site.....$2,500 00

Mr. KILLAM said that the Customs duties at Woodstock did not exceed $9,000, and the post office revenue was very slight, yet the Government would be paying equal to a rental of $1,200 a year for this new building. Suitable buildings could be got for $200 or $300 a year rent. At Yarmouth, whose Customs revenue was $60,000, the total amount paid for a building yearly, with fuel, &c., was $600 or $700.

Mr. DOMVILLE said that Woodstock was a flourishing place, and a suitable building was required for the Post Office and Custom House.

Mr. KILLAM confessed that he had never been in Woodstock, and perhaps might be applied to himself with regard to Woodstock, the saying of an American that "Herodotus might have died a miserable death because he had not seen Duluth." No doubt the erection of this expensive building where there was no necessity for it would make political capital for the hon. member for Kings.

223. Québec—Grosse Isle Quarantine Station.—To pay Messrs. Piton & Co. in full settlement of all claims made in connection with buildings erected by them since June, 1873..... $2,215 99

Mr. LANGEVIN. This work was continued after we were out of office by the hon. gentlemen opposite until the end of 1875. Previous to that, in 1874, a contract had been taken by Piton & Co., and afterwards they were again entrusted with a portion of that work. Finally they claimed $15,000 for damages, and $5,596 for extra work. The thing lingered down until I became head of the department, when, on the department being threatened with a lawsuit and heavy expenses, I directed the Chief Architect fully, and I called upon the claimants to see whether they would consent to have the case referred to me for final decision instead of going to law. They entrusted it to me; the Chief Architect took up the matter, and, after all the calculations were made, instead of $20,596, the amount awarded to these gentlemen was $2,215.79. I thought it was a good settlement, and an Order was passed in Council to that effect.

Committee reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the Estimates accompanying the Messages be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE NAVIGATION OF THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:

That in order to assist the Montreal Harbor Commissioners in the improvement of the navigation of the St. Lawrence below Montreal, it is expedient to amend the Act Thirty-sixth Victoria, Chap. sixty, by providing that the rate of interest payable by the said Harbor Commissioners to the Receiver-General upon the sums raised under the said Act shall be four per cent. per annum, instead of five, and further by repealing the provisions in the said Act contained, relating to payments by the said Harbor Commissioners for the formation of a Sinking Fund.

He said: Before Mr. Speaker leaves the Chair, I desire to make a short statement with respect to the object which the Government has in view in submitting this resolution for the consideration of the House. It has been generally admitted, I think, by hon. members on both sides of the House, that it is exceedingly desirable, as far as it is within the power of the Dominion Parliament, to increase every facility that can possibly be given for the improvement of the navigation of the rivers and harbors throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion. The Commissioners of the Harbor of Montreal have been for sometime pressing on the consideration of both Governments, the propriety of relieving, as far as possible, the shipping entering the harbor of Montreal, and thereby relieve the whole of the exporting industries from charges on shipping arriving at that port. This matter was presented to the Government very strongly by the Commissioners, and the Government were urged to assume the whole responsibility of the existing debt upon the work, amounting to $1,500,000, for which the Commissioners are paying the Government at the present time, under the Act referred to, five per cent. The Government felt, under existing circumstances, anxious to co-operate with the Commissioners, but felt they could not consistently at this time add to the permanent debt of the country, $1,500,000; but, inasmuch as the Government are in a position at the present moment to obtain money at four per cent. instead of five per cent. or six per cent. paid at the time this obligation was entered into, it was thought desirable to ask Parliament to relieve the Harbor Commissioners to the extent of reducing the interest from five per cent. to four per cent., and relieve them from the obligation to pay one per cent. on account of Sinking Fund. If the resolution is adopted it will relieve the Commissioners of an annual payment of $30,000. It is proposed, in addition to that aid, that the Government should act as they have done in respect to various harbors in the Dominion—assume the annual expenditure which is estimated at $7,000, for buoying the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec. On those two items direct relief to the extent of $37,000 a year would be given to the Montreal Harbor Commissioners, and with the surplus they have at present from the increased shipping arriving at the port, and which will, I am satisfied, go on increasing, the Government believe the Commissioners will be able to reduce the charges on vessels entering the port next year, to the extent of, I believe, $60,000 or $70,000. This is as far as the Government feel they can consistently go at the present time. Practical relief will thus be afforded not only to the ships entering Montreal harbor, in the form of reduced charges on vessels arriving there, but the cost of shipments from the West to Europe will also be reduced; and therefore the Government trusts that, in submitting this proposition, it will receive the unanimous assent of hon. members on both sides of the House.

Mr. COURSOL. I think that hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will accept this resolution as being a step in the right direction. I regard them, however, as only one step, as I fully expected ere now a great deal more would have been done to relieve the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal from the enormous expenses they have to pay in the shape of interests, for what, I believe all will admit, is a national work. The deepening of the Lake St. Peter channel is not in the interest of Montreal alone, and was never claimed to be so. I, as one of the representatives of that city, in urging upon the Government the relief of the city from this burden, did so on the ground of its being in the general interest of the country at large. The work was no more of a local character than the deepening of the canals in the Province of Ontario, or than the works which were performed below Quebec, or the improvement of navigation in any other part of the Dominion. I trust that the Government having entered upon this work, will shortly see that they can go much further in the same direction in the public interest. In these days of railways, telegraphs, and improvements of all kinds, if we want this country to maintain its just position of influence we must put trade on a proper footing. As long as we allow our neighbors to monopolize the carrying trade we shall always be kept in the back ground. We have already spent enormous sums on our canals and the St. Lawrence water route, $50,000,000, I am told, by an hon. gentleman who has spent a great deal of time and done a great deal for his country—I mean the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Fortin). If we had taken the proper course in season and had widened our canals we would have been able to take the largest share of the trade from the Western States and Manitoba. But we have done so only partially and began too late, for when the Americans saw that we were going ahead, desirous as they were to monopolize the trade of the Western States and not allow a bushel of grain to go through Canadian waters, they passed a law abolishing tolls on the Erie Canal, so that boats only pay on arriving at Buffalo, while the return charge is abolished. Boats can now go down to New York and when they come back they have no toll to pay, the boats thus making a clear profit on the return trip. Since this arrangement the bulk of trade has been greatly in favor of the Erie Canal. Formerly 6 cents per ton, of 33 bushels, were charged on this canal, but now the toll has been reduced to one-half that rate. On our canals we have to pay over 40 cents per ton, which places us in a very inferior position. I think we ought to abolish this charge entirely, and I believe that before long this House will be unanimous in supporting such a scheme. All parties in Quebec and the leading commercial men of all parts of the country are unanimous in looking upon the deepening of Lake St. Peter channel as a Federal scheme, and I have no doubt that we will see it considered in that way by the Government before long. I will now read an article from the Toronto Monetary Times :

"It is more important to make the best of the navigation of the St. Lawrence, upper and lower, during the open season. The debt created by improving the navigation of Lake St. Peter, may properly be assumed by the Government, as there is every prospect that it will be."

When a paper of this weight in the city of Toronto gives such an opinion, it may fairly be set against the opinion of other newspapers who only see in Montreal a rival seeking solely her own interest, being unable to understand that the merchants of Montreal are patriotic enough to desire the welfare of the whole country as well as of their city. In another paper, the Journal of Commerce of Montreal, I find the following on this very question :

"We should imagine that when so many works of a local character are undertaken by the central Government there ought not to be a second opinion as to the propriety of relieving the Port of Montreal of the burden of deepening the channel of the River St. Lawrence, and more especially as it falls on the trade of the entire country west of Montreal. The subject has been brought fully under the consideration of the Minister in elaborate reports from the Harbor Commissioners and the Board of Trade, and the important questions of pilotage and towage have also been treated by those bodies. It is by no means surprising that foreign vessels avoid the St. Lawrence where a towage system which can only be described as grossly fraudulent, is tolerated. The Harbor Commissioners report that about the year 1874 the tugboat owners agreed upon a tariff, which was considered very high by the shipowners, who obtained discounts, until the Tariff was practically abandoned."

Another paper called Le Moniteur du Commerce, a new paper started in Montreal, and which is calculated to exert a great influence as a commercial authority, gives some figures which have not yet been published so far in any other newspapers. I will read them :

"The different tolls which a ship of 1,000 tons and its cargo have to pay at Montreal, are as follows :—

Port of Montreal.
Hospital and Police, 2 cents a ton.....	$20 00
Wharfage $\frac{1}{2}$ cent. per ton per day (10 days)...	25 00
Tax upon 800 tons of wheat, 25 cents per bushel of 60 lbs.	67 00
Loading, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent a bushel upon 26,666 bushels	134 00
Pilotage (18 feet of water), Montreal to Quebec	36 00
Pilotage, Quebec to Father Point.....	57 00
Towage	300 00
Total.....	$639 00

Port of New York.
Police and Hospital, etc.....	$23 00
Wharfage, (10 days)	70 00
Loading at $7 per 1,000 bushels.....	182 00
To the Harbor Master.....	20 00
Pilotage.....	73 00
Towage	35 00
Total.....	$403 00
Difference against Montreal	$266 00

Now, Mr. Speaker, these figures cannot be contested. The Port of Montreal is twice as costly to shippers as the Port of Boston, and four times as costly as the other ports in the United States. The moment our ports are sustained by Dominion funds, we shall get a large share of the traffic which now goes through the Erie Canal. Barges capable of carrying 150,000 bushels of wheat are being built for the Lake Superior trade, and they pass down by the Sault Ste. Marie and through the lakes. It behoves the commercial men of this country to join their efforts with the view of obtaining from the Government by all reasonable means this concession. Representations have been made to the Government on this matter, but, unfortunately, the resources of the country appear to be in such a state that this measure cannot be accomplished now. The sooner we take hold of this question with a firm hand, the better. My colleagues from Montreal and myself have been charged with having neglected the interest of our constituents in not taking the proper steps, to obtain our wishes. I think I may appeal in confidence to the hon. leader of the Government, the hon. Finance Minister, and every member of this Government—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. COURSOL. To say whether I have not done everything in my power in the interests of Montreal and the whole country. In order to show that the work of deepening Lake St. Peter was undertaken by the Government, I have only, in closing, to read from a report published in 1879:

"The work of improving and deepening the navigation between Montreal and Quebec has been carried on, partly by the Government and partly by the Commissioners authorized by Government, or by the Commissioners acting as agents of the Public Works Department since the year 1841. In that year an Act was passed, authorizing its prosecution by the Board of Works; but after the expenditure of about $300,000, it was abandoned, and nothing further done till 1851, when an Act was passed authorizing the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal to undertake the improvements. This action was largely the result of persistent efforts made by the late Hon. John Young, who claimed that the Government plan of operations had been defective, and that the work was quite feasible, in which view he was supported by the opinions of eminent engineers, Messrs. McNeil, Childs, Gzowski and the late Sir Wm. E. Logan, who reported on the subject and operations were accordingly recommenced on the 12th June, 1851, and in November of that year a channel had been successfully completed, having a minimum depth of 14 feet with 12 feet on the flats of Lake St. Peter, thus securing an improved navigation to the extent of 2 feet draught of water in the short period of five months.

"In 1865, the channel of 20 feet deep, and 300 feet wide was finished and tested, though it took a considerable period to accustom pilots and shipmasters to its use."

This proves that Governments were not proceeding with the work as rapidly as they should have done. The Harbor Commissioners, assisted by the advice of the late Honorable John Young and others, spent a great deal of time and energy upon it, and succeeded in bringing the tidal navigation 180 miles higher up the river, that is to Montreal, benefiting, not only the merchants of Montreal, but every merchant in the upper Provinces and the country at large. I will vote for this resolution, but, next year, I trust that the Government will see their way to taking the Lake debt entirely under their charge.

Mr. RYAN (Montreal). The resolution now before the House, I am free to admit, will afford substantial relief to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal to the extent of $37,000. This is not a new question; it has agitated the minds of the commercial men of Canada, and the various Parliaments of Canada, for the last forty years. The question of improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec began in 1841. Between that date and 1851 the Government spent $300,000 in the effort to improve the channel, particularly that portion known as Lake St. Peter. In 1851 an Act was passed by the Legislature authorizing the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal to go on with the work, and so borrow money for the purpose. Up to 1860 they expended $1,200,000. The Government of 1860 assumed $900,000 of that debt, and in 1865 the Harbor Commissioners spent $300,000 more to deepen the channel to twenty feet. It is a great mistake to say that this is a Montreal question. It does not affect Montreal or the Province of Quebec alone, but the Dominion at large; and if any Province more than another is going to benefit by the completion of this great public work, it is the Province of Ontario, which exports a large quantity of goods in excess of its requirements. Therefore the size of vessels has been increased to a very great extent, so much so, that Allans, Rae & Co., the largest steamship owners in the country, have recently constructed a vessel for this trade, of over 5,000 tons burthen. The Harbor Commissioners of Montreal found it necessary to have the channel further deepened to twenty-five feet, and the Legislature passed an Act in 1873, authorizing them to prosecute that work, for the cost of which the Government of the day agreed to advance them the money at five per cent. interest. The Harbor Commissioners expect to have the channel completed to a depth of twenty-five feet this year. I am glad to know that the hon. leader of the late Government in his place in the House, expressed the opinion that this was a public work, one that ought to be charged to Consolidated Revenue equally with any expenditure for enlargement of canals, and in 1880 on the occasion of the visit of a deputation from the West to press on the Government the necessity of assuming this debt, as well as to abolish, if possible, the toll on our canal system, he expressed himself to the same effect. I am sorry to say, however, that the Globe has thought proper to attack the Government when it appeared probable that the Government would assume this debt. The Montreal Herald thus replies to the Globe attack:

"If Ontario has any interest in opposing the assumption of the Lake St. Peter debt, the reasonable conclusion would be that the Toronto Globe might confine its discussion of the subject to the limits of that Province. The last effort is an indirect appeal to the city and district of Quebec to make demands upon the Government which have already been assumed. The Globe says:—'In view of the attempt to foist the St. Peter's channel debt on the Dominion, the merchants of Quebec insist that the Government shall assume the cost of the ancient city's harbor improvements. Their demands are as just, and no more so, than those of Montrealers.' Our contemporary must be aware that the Government has already practically accepted the situation, so far as the harbor of Quebec is concerned, and we are not aware that that port has any demand to make, arising out of a set of circumstances similar to those in connection with the channel debt. The Globe, wilfully, we regret to say, goes out of its way and grossly misrepresents the facts when it mixes up the harbor of either Montreal or Quebec with the improvements in the lake and river. Why not argue the Lake St. Peter question on its merits, and without going to Quebec for assistance in a cause which Ontario should be ashamed to oppose, through the medium of the Toronto Globe. We have never asked one cent from the Government towards the maintenance of the harbor of Montreal, and more than that we have no intention of making overtures to Ottawa to assist us in carrying out our own legitimate work. But why should Montreal be taxed for creating a water stretch 181 miles to admit of vessels of 5,000 and 6,000 tons, as against 400 tons at the period of commencing the scheme? Who is deriving pecuniary benefit from this great undertaking but those who are trading in the West and North-West? And yet we are, because of the petty jealousy of the press of Ontario, to be obliged to carry a load which really should be borne by the whole Dominion—at least Toronto ought to be the last quarter from which we should anticipate such unfriendly criticism. The Globe again says:—'If the Dominion should make a present to Montreal, why not to Quebec and hundred other places?' Quebec is not entitled to any consideration for deepening or improving the River St. Lawrence which she has not received, and we do not think the Provincial Capital will make any demand on that score; though the Globe would gladly encourage that city to raise a claim if its effect would result in the burking of any measure of relief for Montreal. We make the declaration again, that we desire no aid to maintain the efficiency of our harbor, and we hope the Globe will cease asserting that our memorial to the Minister of Public Works embraces the harbor, or any portion of it. Toronto has had public money spent upon its harbor, but Montreal has always taken care of its own and intends to do so in the future. The Harbor Commissioners of this port might as well be asked to pay the interest on the cost of the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, which was built as much to gratify Ontario (the Province which forced us into Confederation) as the Maritime Provinces. Halifax is to have $30,000 expended on elevators. We offer no objection; but why not call upon Montreal to pay the interest on the outlay? Quebec has its graving-dock, Dufferin Terrace, fortifications and harbor provided for. Toronto has had over $30,000,000 expended on canals in order to reach her by water, thereby cheapening transportation. The Globe further declares that Montreal undertook this great work for its own gain. The work was undertaken for the Government, and has been recognized as a public improvement since the first dredge was placed on the lake, and whatever indirect advantage the port of Montreal may have derived, it cannot be compared to the extent to which it has promoted the commerce of the West. Our contemporary, in closing its comments, says:—'Were the existing order disturbed by throwing the St. Peter's debt on the Dominion, the Government would have no resource but to increase the public debt enormously by assuming the cost of past works, future improvements, and maintenance of all the harbors.' We repeat that those lines are intended to convey an erroneous impression. Our harbor debt is not before the Government for consideration, and the question of making Montreal a free port remains to be discussed in the future, and it is not intended to approach the Federal Government. We are, however, entitled to every farthing we have asked, and, if the truth were known, the Globe should be the last newspaper in the Dominion to retard the national progress, though it occasionally can only see, and dimly, too, sometimes, through King street glasses. After all, it looks as though the hon. Minister of Public Works was going to cheat us out of our rights. The Bill, which was promised two weeks ago, has not yet been brought down, and our three representatives seem to have lost sight of the measure, not one of them having done battle for their constituents so far.

Although the action of the Government will relieve the harbor to the extent of $37,000 a year, and no doubt benefit its trade, it will entail upon the Government only a charge of $7,000 a year, because they can borrow, at reduced interest, all they want at five per cent. Yet I am happy to say that, owing to the increase in the revenue of the Port of Montreal and this proposed reduction of $37,000 in its charges, the Commissioners anticipate a gain to the harbor of $100,000 this year, in excess of the estimate of the Finance Minister. I am justified in making that statement on reference to the enormous increase in the trade of the port that has of late taken place. Doubtless with the reduction of the charges, we shall see a further increase of the trade. The amount of tonnage for the last few years was as follows:—

In reference to the question of making Montreal a free port, when the deputation to the Government last year urged that scheme, and the western deputation pleaded for the reduction of the tolls upon the canals, and towage and other charges, many leading merchants of Montreal thought it would be desirable for the Government to assume the whole harbor debt of nearly $1,900,000, incurred for the deepening of the channel to Montreal. Many of the largest proprietors of real estate felt it would be in their interest to exert their influence in the corporation, to secure its assumption of the debt of the Montreal harbor proper. The Harbor Commissioners' debt forms a different account, being for the deepening of the harbor between Montreal and Quebec, the other debt being for the improvements within the harbor itself. This debt for the harbor improvements, which I hope the Government will never be asked to assume, reaches $1,883,000. Had the Government assumed the whole of the other debt, such arrangements might be made as would enable the city to assume the harbor debt proper. However, I do not think the Government will at present go so far; but they have made one step in the right direction, and made a reduction which will afford a very sensible relief. The Commissioners may not be enabled to make such reductions as will greatly assist the port trade. Last year they expended $20,000 for the erection of permanent sheds for the better accommodation of the cattle trade, so progressive of late which has recently assumed gigantic dimensions. I am further informed that they contemplate building a wharf for this trade, specially, to cost $100,000. Surely the hon. gentlemen can see this is not purely a local question, that the whole country is interested in those increased facilities for its trade and no Province more than Ontario. The number of cattle exported from Montreal in 1879, was 26,176 head, and last year, 1880, 50,817. Total value of live stock exported in 1879, $2,681,090; in 1880, $4,100,360, increase of nearly 100 per cent. in a year. I am certain that the trade will go on increasing, and that it will be very much greater next year, especially if the embargo on American cattle should be taken off in England, so that this cattle trade should come by the St. Lawrence route. In that event I believe the increase would be fully 100 per cent. I trust that by this time next year the Finance Minister and the Government, of which he is so distinguished a member, will be prepared, not merely to give the sum of $37,000 to this purpose, but to deal with the whole subject successfully. I am satisfied that if he does, no measure which has ever been passed by this or any other Government would receive a more hearty and general support by the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. McLENNAN. If this were a question of whether or not the Harbor Trust of Montreal should have some relief in prosecuting their improvements, I do not know that it would become me to take any part in the discussion, but I believe the question is one of great importance, far beyond any interest which the harbor of Montreal has in comparison with any other place where ships lie. I think, Sir, it is a question which does not merely affect the harbor of Montreal, nor the Province of Quebec, but that its great interest applies to the whole Dominion of Canada; in the first place, perhaps, is the Province of Ontario, which is now the largest producing Province, and by-and-bye it will apply in a still greater measure, I believe, to the great North-West, when that country comes into line, and comes to be a large exporter of produce. And it is a question as to whether we shall keep the ground upon which we have so well entered in this country, as a country, and, moreover, a greater, whether, following the example of our Mother Country, we shall maintain the proud position we have already achieved in connection with the business of navigation. We stand at this moment the fourth marine power in the world, which is a pretty big thing to say for the young Dominion of Canada. The ingenious author of "Endymion" has said it was a clever thing of Great Britain to assume the sovereignty of the seas, because upon the surface of this globe there is more water than land, and, therefore, it assumed a very large extent of sovereignty. I hope we shall be able to take our part in that great sovereignty, because on our side of the globe we have a great deal of water too, and up to this time we have been making a good use of it. The question in respect to this deepening of Lake St. Peter, is the question whether we shall bring the sea 200 miles nearer to the heart of the Dominion than it would have been in its natural state, and I think, when it is considered in that point of view, it will be admitted at once that this is the very greatest national question we can discuss at this moment. When the canal system of this country was begun some years ago, we had no railways to speak of, and I think it happened fortunately for the country that a great deal of energy and a great deal of money was devoted to making these public highways. There was an idea maintained some years ago that we could get by our water communication a greater breadth and sweep than appears likely from the situation of things to-day. There was an idea at one time that we could connect, by means of our canals, our lake navigation with the ocean. Experience has led us to abandon that prospect, and we must be content to-day to bring the ocean as near to the lakes as we can, and I think everybody who has considered the subject, will admit that once we make that connection with the harbor of Montreal we have met the sea—so far as we can go to meet it from the inland waters. It is true we have continued improving our canal navigation, and we hope, some day, to have a communication, with twelve feet of water, reaching to Montreal; but it is well ascertained now that a navigation of twelve feet is not a navigation that can be used upon the Atlantic Ocean. All the experiments have established that point beyond controversy. The tendency as a result of these experiments has been to increase the size of the vessels coming to meet us in the harbor of Montreal, and the problem now is to cheapen the process for the larger class of vessels. And I find as a result of these experiments, that the size of these vessels has been increasing year by year. I find, by a statement made up by the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, that in 1874 that port was visited by 731 vessels, averaging 590 tons. In 1879, five years afterwards, 612 vessels—a smaller number—visited the port, but their average tonnage was 828 tons, showing a very rapid rise in size. Still further, the following year the 710 vessels that came into that port averaged 885 tons. It may be stated, however, that a much larger bulk of the traffic is performed by steamships of a very much larger size than these averages. The average size of the steamers in 1880 was 1,341 tons. It happens, however, that all the trade of the port cannot be accomplished, as I shall presently have occasion to show, by these large steamers. They may serve the larger purpose of carrying the great productions of trade between the Port of Montreal and the great ports of Liverpool, London and Glasgow, to which the large volume of trade concentrates; but it is very necessary that the smaller class of vessels should be maintained in the trade, for a great many of the services have to be performed to out-ports and ports of call to which our cargoes of produce are so often consigned. The question that meets us in connection with this traffic is that of the competition with the Atlantic ports of the United States, for which it is not necessary to improve 200 miles of inland navigation in order to reach them, and we find this competition is very sharp and it is growing. Before looking at some comparisons of the cost of tolls and charges on goods coming by way of the Atlantic ports, I may state that in this competition we meet a people very much older than we are. Fifty millions of people, whose capital is ready for use in every venture of trade, is very much more in proportion than fifty millions against four millions, because they have not only the accumulation of fifty millions as compared with four millions, but they have the accumulation of the capital that results from fifty millions who are a great deal older and better established in their position than our four millions. And we have to compete with them in the face of the fact that whereas we are beginning with our best means and resources to export a good deal of the produce of this new country, our imports are very much smaller than theirs, and we have not only to compete with them for the carrying of our produce outward, but they are competing very closely with us for the carrying inward of our own very moderate imports as well as theirs. I will quote some statistics that have been prepared by the Secretary of the Board of Trade of Montreal, who has discovered among other things that the through rates of freight for merchandize, for instance, from Great Britain to Toronto or other ports in Ontario, are practically the same, whether the ocean terminus is at New York, Boston or Montreal. There are no wharfage rates on imports at either of the two former ports, New York or Boston, on merchandize in transitu to inland ports, either in the United States or Canada. On the other hand, the harbor revenue at Montreal, in 1879, amounted to $269,596, as was stated by one of the hon. members from Montreal, and the dues levied on imported and exported merchandize appear to have been 56 per cent. of that income. The effect is simply to add about $180,000 to the cost of property carried to and from the Port of Montreal, which could have been saved in the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore. I find that the charges on ordinary goods shipped to and from Montreal ranges from 30 cents to 50 cents per ton. Here is a statement showing the effect of wharfage charges on vessels at the several Atlantic ports. Taking for example a vessel of 1,500 tons, the ordinary charge for wharfage, per day, will be in Boston $7.50, New York $10.50, Philadelphia $4, Baltimore $2, Montreal $11.25; that is to say, the charges at Montreal are half as much more than at Boston, nearly three times as much as Philadelphia, and something more than at New York. The pilotage maintains something like the same proportion. The pilotage of a vessel of 600 tons, drawing 18 feet of water, to and from Boston, amounts to $117.90; New York, $172.80; Philadelphia, $162; Montreal, $193.50. The rates of freight at these different ports are, of course, governed by competition, and it is well known that within a period of twenty years the rates at all these ports have fallen until the ocean freight is about one-half, and as regards inland freight I find from a tabular statement that from 1861 to 1880 the freight, taking as a basis a bushel of wheat or corn from Chicago to those ports, has fallen from 27 cents to 11½ cents, that being the lowest point reached, the average rate last year being 13 cents to American ports. Fortunately for the traffic, by our route the inland rates have fallen so that the average rates of freight from the West to Montreal are something under those rates, otherwise it would be simply impossible that carrying by this route could continue. But there is another fact of still greater importance, and that is the position with respect to canal charges. When I first had something to do with this trade, twenty years ago, the toll on a bushel of wheat through the Erie Canal was 6½ cents; to-day that has been reduced to one cent. And that is not alone the measure of the value that the city of New York and the State of New York, and all the United States together attach to this traffic, because it is well known there is a recommendation before the Legislature of New York at this moment, to make traffic through these canals absolutely free, and that proposal has been endorsed by the Board of Trade of the city of New York. The tolls on our canals—I do not complain of them, because I believe they are very little more than are necessary to maintain the working of the canals, to the extent they are beyond that I think they might be reduced—have not practically been changed for twenty years. Under these circumstances, it is rather a marvel that we have any trade at all by the St. Lawrence route. We are assisted, of course, by this fact of the cheaper inland navigation by this route. We have been assisted very much during the last two or three years by the great increase of the cattle export trade in which we have some advantages over the United States. I find that the shipments of cattle in the Port of Montreal have grown until last season they reached the value of nearly $2,000,000. During the early period of the growth of our steam marine, the one line that existed at that time was assisted by a subsidy for carrying the mails. That assistance still holds, but the traffic apart from that has been sufficient for the establishment of two or three other lines, and the trade is still increasing, and, I hope, will continue to increase. I think we owe something to the tenacity of private enterprise, and I think I might say further, we owe a little to Canadian patriotism, because I believe there are people in this country who carry out the homely principle of the Hebrew matron, who dwelt with her family "among her own people." I believe there are people in this country who prefer to develop their own route, to exercise their industry and enterprise at home, and who are not carried away by the flash and the glitter of free trade and cosmopolitanism. I need not refer further to the figures in connection with the burdens upon this trade. The expenditure upon the deepening of Lake St. Peter up to this moment is, in round numbers, about $1,500,000. The channel is made to a depth of 24 feet, which admits a class of vessels of a size which has been found so far to be profitable in the Atlantic trade. If this were the only burden upon vessels coming to the Port of Montreal it would be a small matter, but it does not touch the Port of Montreal at all. It is really a question that concerns the Dominion of Canada, just as much as every mile of our canal navigation. The expenditure upon the harbor of Montreal has been, apart from this, about $1,800,000, and that harbor requires about as much more money to be expended upon it. On account of these burdens imposed upon its trade it becomes difficult for the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal to go on and expend any more money. I would call the attention of the House to the fact that while this is a resolution to assist the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, it is a resolution to assist them in improving the navigation of the River St. Lawrence, not to improve the harbor of Montreal, a thing that is not at all asked for. We have been told in the newspapers that the harbor of Glasgow has been made from the mouth of the Clyde in order to make a great port at that city. When we consider that the city of Glasgow is only twelve miles from the mouth of that river, the parallel scarcely holds, and there is really nothing in it upon which a comparison can be made. The same thing applies to any port or river that exists in Great Britain. The fact is, there is no parallel we know of to this work in the St. Lawrence, and no other parallel upon which it could be maintained that Montreal should pay for deepening the channel of Lake St. Peter for a distance of forty miles. I have drawn attention to this fact because I think the Minister of Finance is amenable to reason. I will not say the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, acting in this instance in the interest of the Dominion of Canada, have asked him for bread and that he offers them a stone. I believe he offers them a crust, and it is only a crust. Now, we have undertaken some great expenditures in this country in order to put ourselves in a position to be our own carriers for all times. I think that is a matter of great importance to us, one that will give us great importance if we maintain it. We have undertaken lately to spend $25,000,000, beside some land, of which we do not compute the value just now, to build the Pacific Railway. It was an act of faith. I do not ask any member of this House to withdraw the confidence with which they voted that money. We have expended about $46,000,000, on the Intercolonial Railway, and I think we certainly have a brace of elephants on our hands in those two railways. We have been munching away at a camel as we went along for some years past until we have spent about $31,000,000 in the improvement of our canal system, and we have something to show for it. We have a well-established trade now by the route of the St. Lawrence. Having liberally put our hand to this work and having expended a large amount of money, I really think my hon. friend might consider and get himself well up to the mark, and not allow himself to be checked by this small gnat of $1,500,000, to keep a trade we have actually got and which our American neighbors are trying to take away from us. I find in this memorandum, passed by a resolution of the Board of Trade of New York, that a fear is expressed that the competition of the Welland Canal and the Canadian route may take away a portion of their western trade. We are now, I believe, carrying about one-seventh of the grain exported from the city of Chicago by the Canadian route; but we are not carrying it by favor of the Americans, but because our merchants have gone there and bought it, and if there is anything beyond that, it is the stuff that has been bought by British merchants and their agents in Chicago, and sent over this route. What our friends on the other side are afraid of is, that we shall keep this small portion of the trade, and they are proposing to reduce the last vestige of charge on their canals, for fear that we may take away more of their trade. I ask the hon. Minister of Finance to reconsider this resolution, and see whether he cannot get up his courage to undertake this $1,500,000, in order that we may maintain something that by our own energy and enterprise we have actually got, and that is in some danger of being taken away from us by the greater power and resources of the Americans. If the hon. Minister could see his way to do that it would leave the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal free to prosecute the improvements that are necessary in order to make the harbor of Montreal complete, and to afford facilities for that trade which they fully expect will grow in the future, I have no more to say except to thank the House, and to express my confidence that the men of Ontario, who have so large a stake in this trade, will agree with me that this is a national question.

House resolved itself into Committee on the resolution.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Has any sinking fund been created?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No.

Resolution reported, read the first time and the second time, and concurred in.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced a Bill founded on the resolution.

Bill read the first time.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS.

Bill (No. 87) respecting Naturalization of Aliens (from the Senate)—(Mr. Langevin)—was again considered in Committee.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION OF STEAMBOATS.

Mr. POPE (Queen's) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 84) to amend the Acts relating to the Inspection of Steamboats.

Mr. McCALLUM. I trust the Government will not insist on going on with this Bill, introduced at this late stage of the Session, when steamboat owners have not had sufficient notice of it to enable them to show to the Government what effect it will have on their property. The Steamboat Inspection Act has had one or two amendments already, and several Orders in Council have been passed bearing on it. I hope the hon. Minister will let the matter rest as it stands, as no accidents have taken place under the law, and next Session a Committee or Commission could be appointed to draw up a new Act altogether. On the 28th March last, an Order in Council was passed, which changed the whole law, and the people knew nothing about the change, although Parliament was in session at the time. This Order in Council provided that all small pipes that are screwed into the boiler shall have a flange attached to them. For thirty years nothing of this kind was insisted on, and no accident, except in one case, when the fireman was scalded through carelessness in screwing in the pipe. I do not like this country to be governed by Orders in Council. This one was passed without the steamboat owners knowing anything about it, and the result was that when their steamboats were inspected they had to stop working two or three days, in order to get this flange or run their boats, as was done in many instances, without having them inspected. The object of steamboat inspection is to protect life, yet there is a certain class that does not come under the law—what are called steam yachts. The reason given is that they are not used for hire, but in many instances they carry a large number of people. Were those lives to be exposed to danger because they did not pay fare? Those yachts were not required to have a qualified engineer to run them, while a small tug with only three men on board, each of whom knows how to run an engine, must bear the expense of an inspection. There is now $28,000 to the credit of this fund. Are yachts to be excepted because their owners are rich? Under the law, a second-class engineer can take charge of a boat of 150 tons measurement; this grade of certificate qualifies them to do it. Under the old law they measured vessels in order that the tonnage should contribute towards paying a proportion of the expense. A man who was qualified to take charge of a boat of 150 tons, under the old law, may not be qualified when she is measured under this system. This is not the thing to be permitted in the interest of this country. Steamboat owners have not had time enough to consider this Bill. I would ask the hon. Minister of Marine to let this Bill stand over until next year when, if I have a seat in the House, in so far as I can, I will assist him to perfect it, in a way to make it satisfactory to the people, by giving protection to life as far as possible and keeping our steamers safer, that we may not lose as many as at present.

Mr. GAULT. I hope this Bill will be allowed to stand over until next Session. I believe there is no necessity for it at present. It would give a great deal of trouble to steamboat owners, without much good result. A company that supplied additional boats, to give increased accommodation to passengers, would suffer seriously from such a Bill.

Mr. COCKBURN (Muskoka). I endorse the views expressed by the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum), because I have no doubt that this Bill is second only in importance to the General Railway Act, and that the time has long since arrived when the various Acts should be consolidated. A very unsatisfactory part of this law consists in leaving so much to be done by Orders in Council. Resolutions of certain inspectors or other parties are sent to the Governor in Council; he initials them and they become law; and steamboat owners may be running their vessels in violation of those Orders, because not known. Many portions of the law are a dead letter. Therefore, I think it is too late in the Session for legislation of this sort. I think it is the duty of the hon. the Minister of Marine to prepare a Bill embracing a complete system of inspection laws between this and next Session, and introduce it early enough next Session to have it fairly considered. There are at present charges of favoritism made against inspectors under the present system. The Act requires to be consolidated, with a different system of examining engineers established. There might profitably be examinations on the system of the Provincial Education Departments. There are six different grades of engineers, first, second and third, with assistants for each. I think there are many anomalies in the present system, and that the Orders in Council system should be abolished. We should have a full and comprehensive measure, and every case provided for by statutory enactment. Examination papers, with written questions, should be prepared for candidates for promotion, or for license, to answer. The questions should be intelligent, practical questions for engineers or assistant engineers, and the results should be governed entirely by marks of merit. I can assure the hon. Minister that steamboat proprietors do not desire to make steamers less safe, but do desire a system intelligible and reasonable, with present anomalies and inconsistencies removed, which cannot well be done by this Bill during the present Session.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I differ from hon. gentlemen who have just spoken, as I think that this Bill, or some of its provisions, ought to be passed this Session. From the present defects and anomalies of the law, great hardships may befall steamboat owners if this Bill be not passed. Whatever irregularities existed in past years were found out. Some officers of the Customs, at all events, took steps last summer, to prevent steamboats running because they had not those certificates, and succeeded. I know some steamers were stopped running for ten days till permission was obtained from the department, which was given, though there was no authority for it. That permission was given in direct violation of the law, till some means could be obtained of complying with those onerous hard regulations. In 1878, when the Steamboat Inspection Act was passed, we had a system of measurement of vessels in the inland waters. It was provided that boats of fifty tons, and under, should carry one life-boat; and boats of 100 tons, and under, two, and so on, up to 200 or 300 tons; but in 1879 a new Act was passed, introducing a new system of measurement; all the upper decks are measured and all the space above the tonnage deck is included, thus increasing the registered tonnage of those vessels to three, four or eight times the previous amount.

In answer to Mr. McCALLUM,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am speaking of steamers that ply on the St. Lawrence and Bay of Quinté, and boats that are not capable from their dimensions of carrying the requisite yawl boats prescribed by this Act. Take some of the ferry steamboats that ply across the St. Lawrence at Brockville, or between Kingston and Gananoque, and which are unable to carry yawl boats, seventeen feet long, the same as are carried by the mail steamers, the provision is unreasonable, and ought to be required. And yet there is no section in the Act which gives a discretionary power to any officer of the Marine and Fisheries Department, or any steamboat inspector, to say, a boat of smaller dimensions, that may be handled easily, and carried on the deck of one of those small steamers, will suffice. That is a provision that should be changed, in order to give power to the inspector, or Minister of Marine in the report of the inspector, to authorize the carrying of boats of different dimensions where a proper case is made out. I have already laid certain communications before the hon. Minister, and I have now in my hand a letter from Mr. Gildersleeve, urging, strongly, that some discretionary power should be given to meet extreme cases. He has a small boat in Montreal, which under the Act in force in 1868 would require to carry only one boat, while by the present law she will have to carry three or four, and a metallic lifeboat in addition—a number altogether out of proportion to the size of the boat. The remainder of the Bill does not, so far as I can see, vary one iota from the present law, except that it applies the Act to steel-plated boilers as well as to iron boilers. It leaves yachts out of the provisions of the law, because as these are personal property, and as men may go into them or not, just as they please, there is more necessity for inspecting a man's carriage or sleigh which travels the street. There is another provision of the law to which attention has been directed in the letters I have received. It provides that every steamship plying on inland waters shall carry not only a steam whistle which may be used in time of fogs, but a fog-horn driven by some mechanical contrivance. This provision is intended for vessels at sea, which have only steam as their motive power, so that while under sail and not under steam, the fog-horns may be used. This clause of the Act should be altered, otherwise the inspector cannot give certificates to these boats, and they will be precluded from running all summer, because the Customs officers cannot give them clearances without the certificate, and a great deal of hardship would be worked. I hope the Bill will receive its second reading, and that it will go to Committee where, if necessary, amendments may be made.

Mr. COCKBURN. I agree that legislation is required, but I object to the Bill being introduced so late in the Session.

Mr. SNOWBALL. This is a matter which requires more attention than we can possibly give it at so late a period of the Session. There is one point to which I desire specially to direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine, and that is, the provision requires engineers to undergo so many years' experience on the water before they can receive a certificate. Engineers on land are not required to undergo such an inspection or to have had so many years experience, although they have a great many more lives in their charge. Most of our best engineers pass their apprenticeship in machine shops, factories, etc., on the land; and as our boats run so short a season, it is difficult to qualify our engineers in that way, and the result is that a great many of our engineers are little better than firemen, who have been used to shovelling coal and so on. They manage to undergo examination, answer a few questions, and receive a certificate. Many of them are utterly useless when a boat is at sea or at all in danger, and we have frequently to take a practical engineer from land, keep him on deck so as to be ready to act in an emergency. I think some change should be made in the Act in this respect, for although it is intended for the protection of life, in its practical operation, it very often works the other way. Attention has been directed on the opposite side of the House to another matter of importance. Small steamers are required to carry boats, when it is almost an impossibility that they can do so. For example, I have a steamer, one and one-half tons burthen, and yet she is required to carry a boat altogether disproportionate to her size, and I have either to decline making the required declaration or allow the boat to be carried contrary to my judgment. I cannot see why a yacht carrying a pleasure party should be exempt from the operation of this Act just because it is private property, for the lives of those on board are just as valuable as those on any other vessel. The absurdity of the law may be judged by the fact, that if such a boat with two men aboard, tows a canal vessel, she is liable to the operation of the Act, which, if she carries a pleasure party of many times that number, she is not within the Act.

Mr. JONES. The subject before the House appears to be one of considerable importance, judging by the different opinions which have been expressed on both sides of the House. I hope the matter will not be pressed this Session, and that during recess the subject may receive full discussion. I think the public will agree that inspectors should be allowed some discretion in the matter; for instance, with regard to fines, which are now $400. In another year the country will be prepared for another Act.

Mr. POPE (Queen's). There is no desire on the part of the Government to press this Bill, or to impose any further unnecessary restrictions on steamboat owners. There is but little difference between this Bill and the present Act. It is little more than a re-enactment of the Bill now in force. There are no restrictions imposed by this Act which are not imposed by the old Act. The Government propose this Bill because it is reported by the inspectors that steel plates are in use in the United States for boilers, and, as they have been introduced into this country, it is necessary there should be some additional test. If boat owners go the additional cost of getting steel plates they should be allowed some additional favor in the minimum test of their boilers. This measure has been recommended by the Government inspectors of boats who can have no interest in this matter, and as they are skilled in the business their opinions are entitled to consideration. An accident occurred in Montreal through a tap being blown out of the boiler, resulting in the death of one man, and the Grand Jury censured the Government Steamboat Inspector for allowing taps to be used in this way. This was represented to the Government, and an Order in Council was passed, and I think it is the duty of the Government, wherever they have power, to pass Orders in Council necessary for the safety of life and property. I will point out the difference between this Bill and the existing Act. The Bill says: "the limits of such pressure shall not exceed 150 pounds to the square inch in the case of a boiler made of iron plate, or 190 pounds to the square inch in the case of a boiler made of steel plate." Heretofore the highest pressure allowed was 150 pounds, but now a greater pressure is to be allowed on steel boilers than on iron boilers. Again, as the law now stands, it is necessary that there shall be an examination at least every year, and when certificates are now given they hold good for the season during which boats are running. The Bill gives power to the inspector to fix the time for a less period than a year during which the inspection shall hold good, and in the case of an old boat or a weak one, the Government inspector has power to shorten the time during which the inspection holds good. Many complaints have been made to the department during the last year or two against the present regulation for the carrying of boats. Small steamers running on rivers are obliged to carry a boat seventeen feet long; in some cases the boat is nearly as large as the steamer. This provision will be modified so as to give discretionary power to the hon. Minister, on the recommendation of the Government inspector, to allow steamers to carry smaller boats than at present are required by law. It is considered inconsistent and unnecessary, and does not add to safety. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Jones) has asked that this Bill should remain over till the next Session. I introduced it last Session in obedience to a general expression of opinion of members on both sides of the House that it was necessary. However, if there is now a feeling in the House that it had better go over for another year, the Government do not desire to press it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. After the expression of opinion we have heard on this Bill I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

CONSOLIDATED INSURANCE ACT, 1877.

The following Bill was introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 102) to amend the Consolidated Insurance Act, 1877 (from the Senate).—(Mr. Ouimet.)

Mr. OUIMET. I desire to call the attention of the Government to this Bill. It appears that insurance companies may withdraw from doing business in this country, and when they do their assets are disposed of in the manner provided by sections 17 and 18. It is provided also by section 13 that all these insurance companies, when they take out a permit, must give a power of attorney to one person in Canada; but there is no provision for any power of attorney being given when these companies withdraw from Canada, and not having any agent to represent them here, they cannot be prosecuted or sued by persons holding their policies. This Bill heretofore proposes to amend section 13 of the Act, and to provide that foreign companies, even after their withdrawal, shall give powers of attorney and that writs or protests may be served on them by mail, in an envelope, duly registered and stamped. I think this is very important, as cases of great hardships have arisen in Montreal in connection with persons holding policies of foreign companies.

Mr. GAULT. I think people who insure in foreign companies ought to understand that they can only make their claim at the head offices of those companies. The Government ought to bring in a Bill to protect the policy holders, as there is nothing to prevent these companies coming here and taking the money of our people, without giving adequate protection to policy holders.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I would also call attention to the fact that there was a deposit of $100,000 in the hands of the Government, on account of the Globe Mutual Insurance Company of New York. That was paid over by the Government to some persons for distribution among the insurers, after the company had gone into litigation, yet the insurers find themselves involved in litigation in the United States in order to get their money. This litigation, I am told, is absorbing a large amount of money in costs and other ways, and the result will be that the Canadian policy holders will get nothing. I think that some restrictions should be placed on these companies, so that when money is deposited with the Government it may be available for those for whom it is intended.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex.) I may add to the instances already given of grievances in connection with American insurance companies, one relating, I think, to the Atlantic Mutual, which took a number of risks in Canada, which is now insolvent, its affairs being in litigation, and whose policy holders are receiving nothing. Its affairs have been in a mixed state for almost two years, and I think, the Minister of Justice would confer a great boon upon Canadian policy holders in such companies, if he devised some short process of winding up such companies, and protecting the policy holders forthwith.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In answer to a question put to me about a fortnight since, I stated that the Government were giving this matter consideration. I may say that a draft Bill was prepared, but I fear that at this period of the Session, it will not be possible to have it passed. At any rate, any Bill we might pass would not affect the cases referred to; it could not be retroactive, but affect only cases which might arise in the future. If my memory serves me, the parties in the litigation referred to claim that as the companies are conducted on the mutual principal, parties insuring in Canada can only participate in the distribution of assets, in the same manner and to the same extent as those insuring in the United States or elsewhere.

Mr. OUMET. The object of this Bill is to force companies to appoint attorneys or agents here, so as to allow the service of legal proceedings or those companies in a certain way. To day we have no recourse at all against these companies in Lower Canada except by calling them by advertisements in the papers—we cannot have them served in the United States. The object of this Bill is to force them, if they receive premiums, to name an agent in Lower Canada.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The Act need not be made retroactive, but if it explains that the intention of exempting mutual companies referred only to those that are purely mutual, it would meet the case.

Bill read the first time.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 84) to amend the Consolidated Railway Act (from the Senate). He said: The principal feature of the Bill is the definition of the word "capital." In the debates on the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, there was some difference of opinion on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite as to the meaning of the word and the extent it would cover. This Bill defined the meaning in the sense understood by hon. gentlemen on this side. It is defined as follows:—

"1. The said word 'capital' as used in the said sub-section meant and means the paid up stock and share capital of the Company with interest added for periods during which no dividend is paid, to the exclusion of all subsidies and bonuses and of the debt of the Company: And this interpretation of the said word shall apply to all railway companies affected by the said sub-section or by any amendment of the said sub-section in which the said word is used, which is or shall be incorporated with the special act or charter of any railway company."

Mr. COLBY. Very recently a considerable number of charters have been granted in which "running powers" have been granted in favor of one or several corporations over the lines of other railway corporations. In no instance is the meaning of the word defined. This would be the proper place in which to give the term its precise meaning.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think it would be prudent to do so now. It would be better to wait until the Government has leisure to make a proper definition, in which "running powers" may vary a good deal according to circumstances. When given over a long stretch of railway, certain additional privileges such as means of obtaining supply of fuel and water should be allowed that would not be required when given over a small stretch. I believe there has been no definition of running powers in any English Act as yet. The subject is very important, and one which will have to be considered in another aspect to which my hon. friend has alluded. But it has been supposed that because we have been giving running powers in particular cases, of railways desirous of using every eligible strip of territory important as links of communication, east and west—it must not be supposed it would be a necessary and prudent thing to apply compulsory running powers to all railway charters to be granted. I am in favor of applying compulsory running powers, provisionally, to all cases in which it is reasonable they should be applied. But I do not believe it can be affirmed that, as a general rule, it is reasonable.

Mr. COLBY. That is not my statement.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend rather implied that, because he said we have been inserting that lately in general Bills. However, I think it would be unfortunate to attempt to legislate on the subject. The hon. gentleman whom I asked to explain the clause dealing with this subject contented himself with simply reading it again. I could have read it for myself, and did so. I think the hon. gentleman might have pointed out what the operation of the clause would be with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway. According to my own understanding of the powers given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, it seems to me this clause would not operate satisfactorily, or accomplish what was suggested during the debate on this subject, about really to be accomplished. It will be remembered it was generally avowed that the resources which the Company was about to obtain from the public, including its borrowing powers upon the lands, would be adequate—its borrowing powers and cash subsidies which, by a slight actual payment on the capital stock and work, were estimated at a certain value. It will be remembered that calculations were gone into, indeed not disputed by the other side, seriously, which indicated that somewhere about $5,000,000 was, perhaps, the outside of the actual cash in the way of share capital which would be acquired by this railway company. The statement made from the Ministerial benches was that this power to levy tolls or rates, or rather the limitation of this power of the Governor in Council and Parliament to reduce the tolls, in the case in which those tolls should be exceeding ten per cent. of the capital, was to apply to the actual paid up capital of the Company. Nothing was said at that time of the interest for the period during which dividends should not be paid. Not a word was said to Parliament of that important addition to the mass on which interest profits are to be paid at the rate of ten per cent. It is a new introduction altogether. But more than that, the discussion being based upon the view that but a small amount of share capital would be really required, we are now face to face with a plain scheme which makes it the direct interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway to adopt those modes of action which it was suggested during the course of the debate might be adopted in order to render nugatory any restrictions as to its profits based upon the amount of its capital account. We all know that the greater part of the interest rate of railways in the United States, of the capital account, is very much larger than the real, genuine expenditure upon those railways represents, that the capital account has been swollen by stocks issued, not at par, but by bonds sold at great discounts in many instances, by watered stocks and fraudulent bond issues. We all know that the capital account, as it stands, is something wholly different from what the real cost of the railway was. Take the statements which are made by hon. gentlemen here and in England, very much to the detriment of railway enterprise in Canada, with reference to the capital account of our great railway—to the several construction accounts—to the subsequent swelling of the capital account, or to all those things which indicate an original swelling of the capital account to a point far beyond the genuine cost of the work—take off this fund created not many years ago, when there was an issue of ordinary stock to something like £10,000,000 sterling, at 20 per cent., on which but £2,000,000 was realized by the company; and, for this, the £10,000,000 sterling emitted, besides, has been added to the capital stock of the Grand Trunk Railway. That debt was created—not for the purpose of renewing construction, but for steel-railing the road. But, at any rate, if that were to be added to the capital account, although the renewal of its rails ought to have been provided for out of ordinary revenue—the only thing properly, on the most liberal construction, that ought to have been added to the capital account was the difference between the cost of the steel and iron. But the whole £10,000,000 were added to that account for only £2,000,000 cash, which makes of the clause a totally illusory showing as to what the real capital account of the Grand Trunk Railway is; and the same results to a very notable extent have been seen with reference to some other railroads in the United States.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. BLAKE. When the House rose I was endeavoring to show, from the circumstances under which the Grand Trunk Railway capital account had been increased, that the capital stock of a railway company formed an entirely delusive indication of the cost of the railway. Another important illustration in the same sense is given us in the capital account of the Central and Union Pacific Railways; for a recent report of the authorities of the United States indicates that while the apparent cost of those roads was something over $300,000,000, the actual cost at present prices would be about $75,000,000. The practical result of all this is, that it is easy to swell the capital account; and when you reflect that in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway the provisions are such that there is no security for the capital stock representing money actually paid to the apparent value of that stock, it will be observed that every facility is afforded for the undue increase of the capital account. In virtue of the provisions of the charter it is competent for the Company to dispose of the capital stock at such prices as the directors may choose to affix to it, and for a consideration such as they may choose to take for it. It is therefore competent to them, for example, to arrange a construction company which may be paid partly in securities of the railway company, partly in cash, and partly in its capital stock—this construction company being composed practically of the corporators of the Company. That is what took place, as we know, with regard to the Union Pacific when the Crédit mobilier was established, and large blocks of the stock of the Union Pacific were handed over to those contractors—who were really the Company itself—at nominal rates. Well, you give an inducement to the railway company to enter upon this plan, while under other circumstances there would have been no inducement to the swelling of the capital stock beyond reasonable limits. Your present proposal is a direct inducement to them to enter into these courses, because you tell them that they may make returns free from the power of the Government, and they will offer rates up to ten per cent. on the capital stock and the interest thereon, and therefore you tell them that the larger they swell the capital stock so much the greater will be their power to obtain dividends on the enterprise uncontrolled by the Government. The natural result will be that they will make such financial arrangements in such a way as will give them that freedom, such as shall insure the emission—I do not say for money, but for a small consideration—to themselves probably of the whole block of this capital stock. And we do not provide that, unless for the years in which they receive a dividend upon it, interest shall be added to the amount so created for ten years during the construction, and on this aggregate they may have ten per cent profit uncontrolled. Of course, it is easily managed. It may be said they will not abstain from dividing profits in order to secure this result; but during these ten years there will be a very easy application of all the profits they will make from the running of the completed portions of the road. They will be engaged in construction during the whole of that time, and instead of dividing the profits, they may use the profits on the completed portions in their hands, and facilitate the work of construction of the remainder. Again, they may make a division as soon as they acquire, from time to time, large portions of the lands, and that would not be a dividend on capital stock. On the whole, it is tolerably clear that they may, without any practical inconvenience, make arrangements by which, without their being really represented by money, or at all events money to the extent of more than four or five millions, the whole shares of the $25,000,000 capital stock may be omitted, and a charge made of the interest of the capital stock so omitted, amounting altogether to about $40,000,000, on which they might obtain dividends, uncontrolled by the Government, up to the extent of 10 per cent. That is practically the result which may be achieved under this clause. I quite agree that that is a better result than what was to be looked for under the Bill lately before Parliament. But it is not the result which we were told would be secured. I believe, if the expectations of the Syndicate are largely carried out; if the calculations of the Government are largely verified, it would be unnecessary to expend more than $5,000,000 of money in the shape of capital stock, and they will have a nominal capital by the time the road is completed of $25,000,000, with $15,000,000 interest, or in all $40,000,000, bearing dividends within the meaning of this clause, and there will be no efficient control over the rates in future.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have been treated by the hon. gentleman to a very elaborate argument upon what appears to be really a small matter. The definition of the word capital in the first section of the Bill is not the general interpretation of the word capital in Acts of Parliament generally, but is simply the meaning of the word capital in the Railway Act of 1879, so far as regards the collection of the tolls. It may be remembered that when we were discussing the Canadian Pacific Railway, the argument was used that they might raise large sums of money on the lands they were to receive, they might steal that money, issue bonds to any extent, throw the road on the public or on the bond-holders, and that the 15 per cent was too large and they would have a monopoly of rates. There was no use arguing that the Government had a check, because no tolls or rates could be imposed except under approval of an Order in Council. There was no confidence in the Syndicate, because it was a monopoly, and no confidence in the Government because it was the Government. The Act of 1879, to which this clause relates, provides that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time reduce the tolls on railways, but not without the consent of the Company unless their profits were over 15 per cent on the capital actually expended. No matter how the road had been built, whether by bonds or paid up shares, 15 per cent must be the profits on the capital expended before the tolls could be reduced. That rate was now diminished to 10 per cent., and it was proposed that subsidies should not be counted. It seems to me that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have gone up a great deal more that was ever asked or expected from any other railway company; yet hon. gentleman opposite were not satisfied. If it is watered or bogus stock, it is not capital expended on the road. There is nothing in the objection taken by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and the hon. gentleman appears to have raised it just for the purpose of making it.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, and reported.

MARINE TELEGRAPH LINES.

Bill (No. 97) to establish a Marine Telegraph between the Pacific coast of Canada and Asia—(Mr. Langevin).—read the second time, considered in Committee and reported.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

226. Ottawa drill shed, amount required.....$ 550 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman state, with regard to this item of $550 for the Ottawa drill shed, what has been the contribution of the Government to this building, and what that of the municipality.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The total amount expended was $27,555. I cannot say whether this was all Government money or not.

227. Ottawa Geological Museum $9,250 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What has been the total cost, up to date, of the purchase and fitting up of this Museum?

Mr. LANGEVIN. $29,938 up to 30th December last. The $9,250 are for a number of changes and improvements in the building required by the Chief of the Geological Staff. The cost of the building was $20,000.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. And we are spending about $20,000 more on it.

Mr. LANGEVIN. There was a contract for the building amounting to $10,000, and additions called for $3,500 or $4,000 more. The floors near the front of the building were found to be not on the same level as those in the portion of the building on George Street. We had to put on a new roof and took that opportunity to place the floors on the proper level. The repairs make it a very good building, which will meet all the requirements of the Geological Museum.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. From whom was the property purchased?

Sir JOHN. A. MACDONALD. It belonged to Mr. Sked once; but he had mortgaged it to a loan company.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think this building is suitable for the purpose of a Geological Museum, as it will be insufficiently lighted, and because, by its contiguity to carriage ways, it will be open to the admission of dust.

Mr. LANGEVIN. On the contrary, the building is well lighted, and as to the dust, unless we had a building out on the Common, we could scarcely effect any improvement in that respect. I do not think a building more suitable could be obtained in any of our large cities.

Mr. GAULT. I think it is a pity the Museum was removed from Montreal, as that was the most suitable place for it.

237. To pay Wm. Kingsford, Esq., Civil Engineer, as compensation for lost of employment as Engineer in charge of Harbor and River Works, Ontario and Quebec, &c., at the rate of $3,300 per annum..... $1,650 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is this gentleman now employed by the department?

Mr. LANGEVIN. No.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I forget the tenure of his office. He was for a very long time employed in the public service. Why was he dismissed?

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Kingsford was employed for a long time in the department, but the special work for which he was employed was no long required under the new arrangement of the department. We, therefore, dispensed with his services, and the question of compensation came up. He claimed compensation on account of his having been discharged. The tenure of his office was not very clearly explained by papers in the department, and Mr. Kingsford produced a letter from the late head of the department to show that, though he was not a permanent officer, nevertheless the Government of the day had thought he should have some more firm position than an ordinary clerk or engineer, and, therefore, he was paid by the year. Mr. Kingsford having claimed a year's salary the matter was referred by us to the hon. Minister of Justice in order to know how far I could go in that direction. The hon. Minister of Justice reported that Mr. Kingsford had no legal claim; nevertheless, after considering the matter, I thought some compensation should be given, and I recommended accordingly that Mr. Kingsford should be paid six months salary.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then no fault was found with him.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I made no complaint against Mr. Kingsford; he was discharged because of the changes in the department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is no one employed to do work at the harbors of Quebec and Ontario?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The Chief Engineer of the Department now does that work. We have not any special engineer to look after the engineers in Quebec and Ontario, in Mr. Kingsford was employed; now the Chief Engineer does it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Who is the Chief Engineer.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Perley.

Mr. MACKENZIE. And who does the work that Mr. Perley formerly did in the Lower Provinces.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Boyd has been employed during the summer to superintend the works there, but after the season he returned to headquarters and assisted Mr. Perley in preparing plans.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Can the hon. gentleman give a statement of the expenditure on engineering surveys in Quebec and Ontario last year.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I have a comparative statement of the cost of those surveys in 1878, 1879 and 1880. In 1878, under the old régime, Mr. Kingsford being then employed, the staff numbered nine, number of surveys eleven, total expenditure $14,715, cost of each survey $1,337. In 1879, after the change had taken place staff numbered twelve, surveys thirteen, total expenditure $16,007, cost of each survey $1,231. In 1880 the staff was increased to sixteen, engineers and assistants, surveys forty-four, amount expended $19,794, cost of each survey $449. Hon. gentlemen will see that, though the expenditure was larger, the number of surveys was also largely increased, while the average cost was reduced; and that was the object desired to be accomplished in making the change.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman talks about the number of surveys, but it entirely depends on what the surveys were. There have been a large number of a very trifling character. The fact remains that the hon. gentleman dismissed an old and faithful servant and took on a new man.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman should not say that, because it is not so. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman says that because he does not know better. Mr. Kingsford has not had any successor. The men employed were the ordinary surveyors or engineers that were employed in the time of the hon. gentleman. We did not employ a superintendent of those surveyors, as the hon. gentleman did when he placed Mr. Kingsford over them. That office is abolished, and these engineers were placed in charge of the Chief Engineer's Department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Did the hon. gentleman employ other engineers who had not been employed before Mr. Kingsford's dismissal?

Mr. LANGEVIN. There may have been some; it is quite possible; but they were only employed for two or three months—perhaps four or five months—at $4 a day and their travelling expenses, while Mr. Kingsford's salary was $3,300.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then the fact remains that the hon. gentleman could not find any employment for a man who, I am bound to say, deserved well of the department—a man who is a political opponent of mine, and therefore, I have nothing to say on that account. I have endeavored to treat all the engineers alike, no matter what their politics. Here is a gentleman dismissed who, confessedly, is an able engineer, dismissed unceremoniously, and for a reason that is not an honest reason. The hon. gentleman's reason is very like that for dismissing the inspectors of weights and measures. The law was changed so that the law would dismiss them. The hon. gentleman goes through the farce of changing the arrangements in his office, and so in his small way legislates Mr. Kingsford out of his position and employs other engineers after that, who have been employed to this day. This is the sort of usage that is meted out to men who have rendered good service to the country. I am surprised the hon. gentleman is not ashamed of the treatment he has meted out to that gentleman and to several others in the department.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman may try to be as offensive as he pleases, but he will not compel me to be offensive to him. I shall not lose my temper, but I shall try to be civil, and I hope the hon. gentleman will do the same. Mr. Kingsford was discharged—I will not say dismissed, because I understand that in the English language the word dismissed means that a man is sent away for good cause, while the word discharged means that he was not required any longer, though he might be a very good man. Therefore, I say Mr. Kingsford was not dismissed but was discharged. I have always found him an able man. It was not I who put him into the department, but it was the hon. gentleman, and therefore I had no reason to find fault with Mr. Kingsford being in the department because I put him there. But his usefulness was gone, the office was no longer required and therefore it was abolished, and Mr. Kingsford left the service. Thinking that, under the circumstances, Mr. Kingsford should have an indemnity I have asked my colleagues to have this put in the Estimates. Mr. Kingsford could not be offered another position in my department because I have none to give him. The officers I require only serve for a few months at a time, and in that way I am able to curtail very considerably the expense, while they are only paid for the work they do.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am not aware I said anything offensive such as the hon. gentleman complains of. I certainly had no intention to be offensive. I am not aware of anything I said which he could call offensive.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman spoke of my small way of doing business.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; I said he legislated Mr. Kingsford out in a small way, meaning the legislation of a department as compared with the legislation of Parliament. In the parallel case, I said the inspectors of weights and measures were legislated out of their positions, and the hon. gentleman legislated Mr. Kingsford out of his position in a small way, and if the hon. gentleman understood me to be offensive in that, he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. LANGEVIN. There is another thing. The hon. gentleman said the reason I was giving was not an honest reason. I do not think that is very complimentary to any member of Parliament. I never treated the hon. gentleman in that way.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have no complaint to make of the hon. gentleman's statement, and I do not think he has much reason to complain of my treatment of him. The reason why I said it was not an honest reason, was that I believed that Mr. Kingsford was treated precisely as the inspectors were—that the arrangement was changed for the purpose of getting rid of him.

Mr. LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement of course.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Kingsford has not been replaced; if he had been, the hon. gentleman would be right in his assertion. I have saved his salary. I have saved a great deal in the other provinces also by getting rid of the staff that were there with those local engineers. I do not think the hon. gentleman knew that; I only knew it after I had been a certain time in the department. When I found that they had nothing to do and were a source of expense in many ways, I got rid of them all.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Where?

Mr. LANGEVIN. In New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Ontario.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I was not aware of any Government engineers being in New Brunswick.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman did not know it. I did not know it for several months, but as soon as I discovered it I dismissed them all.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would like to know where they were.

Mr. LANGEVIN. In St. John and Halifax, the staff of Mr. Kingsford.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There were none in Halifax that I am aware of. We paid none in Halifax. I think there were two assistants to Mr. Perley in St. John, but I am not aware of any other engineers. I think the hon. gentleman is wrong.

Mr. LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman wishes I will give him a statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I hope the hon. gentleman will bring a statement. In the meantime we find his economy results in this way: In my last year this business costs $14,000; in the next year, under the hon. gentleman it costs $16,000—I give the round figures. In this last year it costs $19,000. This is economy going backwards.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman says that in his last year he expended $14,000, and that in the next two years I expended $16,000 and $19,000. That is perfectly correct, but the hon. gentleman should add that the number of surveys for his $14,000 were eleven; for my $16,000, thirteen; and now that the system has been perfected, for $19,000, I had forty-four surveys. The surveys in the time of the hon. gentleman cost $1,337 each, while they now cost $449 each.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But one survey may be equal to a dozen, and no doubt in this case it is so.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am glad to hear the hon. member for Lambton complain of the dismissal of public servants without just cause; but I do not think he has found an example in the case of Mr. Kingsford. The hon. Minister of Public Works has given a very satisfactory reason for the removal of that officer—an economic reason; he has shown that he has saved public money. But the hon. member for Lambton forgets that he himself dismissed a public servant for the simple reason that he would not support the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) on a certain occasion—I refer to the case of Dr. Strange—and re-appointed an officer to replace him without any trial or enquiry. He dismissed him in a manner most obnoxious to a volunteer officer—by stating that Her Majesty had no longer need for his services. I think it does not lie in the mouth of the hon. member for Lambton to make this complaint against the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I doubt whether any particular service will be done in the passage of the Estimates by bringing up a transaction five years old. But I take occasion to say that Dr. Strange was dismissed for the grossest possible violation of his duty, he being a public officer in the pay of the Government and deliberately electioneering in Kingston.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Yes; in favor of the present Premier and against the other candidate, and he was warned repeatedly that if he, as a Government officer, so interfered in elections, he would be dismissed. He was most righteously dismissed.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. Minister of Public Works says he was not at all influenced in his conduct towards Mr. Kingsford by any political considerations. I think Mr. Kingsford is under the impression that the hon. gentleman was influenced by certain charges made against Mr. Kingsford in connection with some things that happened at Rimouski. I may say also that the person who opposed me at the last election accused Mr. Kingsford of interfering in the political contest in Bothwell. For that accusation there was not the shadow of foundation. I never discussed politics with Mr. Kingsford for ten minutes in my life, and only then to learn that his sympathies were not with us, but with hon. gentlemen opposite. But I never supposed for a moment, that Mr. Kingsford was in the smallest degree influenced politically in the discharge of his duties as an engineer. The whole accusation made against him in my constituency was that, not long before the election, he was passing through Morrisburgh, and telegraphed to the Custom house officer, who is himself not a politician, asking him to see him while the train was passing. I do not think he was off the train for five minutes, and I do not think any person saw him but Mr. Duff, the Custom house officer.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Any accusation which may have been made against Mr. Kingsford for anything he may have said or done previous to our coming into office was not noticed by me. We never reproached him or any other officer for taking part in any election before we came into office; but if these officers while we are in office, should go and canvass against the Government, that would be taken notice of.

Mr. MILLS. Or for them.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I have no doubt that would be a much more menial offence, but one unlikely to occur.

238. To reimburse Mr. G. A. Brown the amount contained in a bag of silver, stolen from a valise during his journey from St. John, N. B., to Cape Breton, for the purpose of making payments in connection with Cow Bay Breakwater and Gabarus Harbor..... $150 00

Mr. LANGEVIN. This officer, I am informed by the head officers of my department—I do not know him at all—has always been a most deserving man. He has frequently, as paymaster, had large sums of money entrusted to him. On this occasion he was robbed of his bag containing $150, and in order that there might be no delay in paying the men, he replaced it from his own personal funds. In a letter addressed to the department, he asks, on account of the precautions he has always taken, not to be held responsible for the loss.

245. Additional amount required for laying of cable on New Sub-marine Cable Route between Vancouver Island and mainland via Nanaimo and Point Grey.....$1,500 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not object to the item, but I understood last Session the Government would not send Mr. Gisborne home to buy the cable, but order it by letter or telegram.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Such was the intention, but on enquiry we found it advisable, in the public interest, that the officer should go to England in person, and the result justified our decision. The cable was purchased at a much lower rate than it could otherwise have been, and having been personally selected by the officer who visited the stocks of the best houses, its quality is guaranteed. It has been laid down in the Gulf from one point to another and has worked admirably.

242. Amount required to complete payment for mail service between Victoria, B.O., and San Francisco..... $4,760 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is this additional amount required for?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I think to pay for the service during the gap period between the old and new contracts.

243. Amount required to cover expenses connected with the bringing out of the screw corvette "Charybdis" $5,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the total amount expended on this vessel up to date? Is this the first vote asked for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the first vote asked for; but it is proposed to reduce it to $5,000, by sailing the vessel across the ocean in summer with a company of sailors instead of with a lot of engineers and other expensive officers. I think there has been £400 expended in this vessel.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is this a new departure? What is the intention of the Government? Is this to be the foundation of a fleet? We had a fleet before in the days of Minister of Marine Mitchell, with which we were to wage war against the Yankees. Is this to be such a war vessel?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. She is to be a training ship.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Whom are you going to train?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Young Canadians who desire to embrace a nautical life or enter the merchant marine.

Mr. MILLS. The acquisition of this vessel was considered important enough to receive notice in the Speech from the Throne. One would have supposed the Canadian Government was receiving a very handsome present, but the vessel's boilers appear to be worn out and her timbers unsound. The Government have to wait till the weather is fine and the Atlantic less stormy, in order to bring her out. It was hardly worth while for the hon. gentleman to make such an ado about this old vessel that we have bought and have put such a eulogy into the mouth of His Excellency on the subject. The hon. gentleman gave us to understand we are to pay for her a great deal more than she is worth. The Finance Minister now announces they have been bickering with the English Government with regard to her value; that they have pointed out the Canadian Government have been imposed upon by the English Government with regard to an old craft of which they did not know the value; and now the First Minister tells us that the item will be cut down a half, and the ship brought out when the weather is fine. This is a very extraordinary conclusion a very high sounding announcement; and if the hon. gentlemen were to put in the Governor General's Speech everything else of no more consequence to the country, we should have hardly got through by this time with the reading of all the items and paragraphs the Speech would have contained. I do not know how the hon. gentleman should have so mistaken his political perspective as to have put alongside the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate such a matter as this old gun vessel the Charybdis.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) does not evidently like ships of war; he is a man of peace. But here we are: the Charybdis is our ship, and between the cost of the Charybdis and the difficulty of Sylla on the other side—we do not spell it with y—we are well attacked. But, seriously, though this vessel is not a new one, I do not think Her Majesty's Government could afford to give us a new one—she has been a ship of war in the Chinese seas for some years and has stood monsoons and simooms and rounded the Cape, arriving in England safe. And if she has survived all those tests, she can surely cross the Atlantic. Though old the ship is valuable yet, and ought not to be broken up. She will serve as a training ship for our young men wishing to enter the merchant service, which we wanted very much. The surveyors in Her Majesty's navy are very rigid in condemning ships which might sail in the commercial fleet for 20 years. As a block ship the Charybdis might defend the port of St. John. We have reduced the item by deciding upon employing a less expensive crew to bring the vessel out. We will thus dispense with the engineers, stokers, etc., and we could put her into the harbor of St. John where our young men could be sent to form a portion of our commercial navy.

Mr. MILLS. How many guns?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that she has any.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. If she has no guns, how many of these youngsters are to be put on board this training ship, and what will they cost, as I take it for granted that an annual appropriation will be required for training and maintenance. I know that on the other side of the Atlantic there are a considerable number of these ships which have been turned to good account as a sort of nautical or rather reformatory school for the training of unfortunate lads picked up on the streets of great cities. I take it for granted that the hon. Minister does not intend to turn the Charybdis to that purpose. Are instructors to be kept on board, and are these lads intended for mates in the merchant service? If they are merely to be turned out as sailors they are likely, like other sailors, to go into every service under the sun, almost before they leave the training ship.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, before we ask for a vote for the maintenance of this training school we are bound to be prepared with a plan for the ratification of Parliament, of the description of the work we expect to perform and the nature and extent of the tuition. I would be much opposed to commence by making the Charybdis a mere reformatory or prison for the training of young convicts.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. They are not convicts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, of castaways, waifs or vagrants such as those the hon. gentleman has referred to. I think we should rather make it a school for the training of the upper class of sailors such as mates and so on. Those who are unable from idleness or want of ability to pass the requisite examinations will always be valuable on account of the instruction and experience they may acquire as common sailors.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I suppose the hon. gentleman took care to inform the Government of the United States and other Governments, that his intentions in this matter are strictly pacific.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; our intentions are solely confined to the Atlantic. We do not intend to go to the Pacific.

Mr. MILLS. No doubt we should be very thankful to the English Government for the great favor they have shown us in selling us this vessel; but after hearing the reference to it in the Speech from the Throne many were somewhat disappointed when they read in the newspapers the character of the vessel, and I do not think there is very much room, after all, for the glorifications which the hon. gentleman has taken to himself for this step in laying the foundations of a great naval power upon this continent.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think it would be well if we could get some idea of the cost of this vessel to the country hereafter, for we are now undertaking rather a serious obligation. The report we have received as to the condition of the Charybdis is based upon a survey of an officer of high standing on the other side of the Atlantic, and it appears that the boilers were considered to be in such a condition that it was deemed dangerous to take her across the Atlantic in winter, by the more favorable southern route, to say nothing of the more difficult northern route. It will take a great deal more than is now asked to put the vessel in proper condition. It will cost a great deal more than $5,000. Perhaps the hon. gentleman may have occasion to send her across the Atlantic, but if she gets back safely she will remain the whole of the next year lying idle. During all that time it will cost a great deal to maintain her equipment. This vessel must be well manned with officers if these young gentlemen are to learn anything of their business. As far as defending St. John without guns or officers, it would be rendering us more defenceless than we are already. We ought to have some idea of what it will cost to put this vessel in an efficient condition and to render her serviceable for any purpose. My impression is that in the condition of our society it will be difficult to find young men to take service on a vessel of this kind. There are a large number of vessels leaving our harbors every day, and young men who desire to learn anything of marine service can always find room on board these vessels, and receive all the instruction there, and in the schools on shore, that they may find necessary. In the Lower Provinces we have never been at a loss for able and intelligent officers of marine. If this experiment is to be tried we ought to have a full statement of the probable cost.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have already stated that before the House is asked to vote any additional sum, full information will be given as to the scale of the proposed institution. Of course, it can be commenced on a modest scale or on a large scale, as Parliament chooses. However, we thought that at all events the hon. gentleman would not object to a school of this kind being established in the vicinity of St. John. If we have a training ship at St. John or elsewhere it must be an old vessel, just as the training ships in England are old vessels that are being utilized. The hon. gentleman does not seem to want it, and perhaps he had better move to have the $5,000 struck off.

Mr. KILLAM. It strikes me that if a vessel was wanted for a training ship, it would have been better to buy a good ship for half the money on this side of the ocean. I am sure that those who will want officers for mercantile vessels will not want the sort of officers brought up on board this vessel.

245. Gratuities to two members of Montreal Water Police.....$ 5c7 30

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not remember ever having seen any items of this kind in the Estimates before. I think this is the first occasion on which any considerable gratuity has been paid.

Mr. POPE (Queen's). It is well known that policemen should be in the prime of life, but there are two old men, seventy-five or eighty years of age, who have been for many years on the water police in Montreal. As they had served faithfully for many years, it was thought just to give them a retiring allowance.

Mr. GAULT. I have known Sergeant Wilson for over twenty-five years, and a more steady, reliable man is not in the force in Montreal. I think he is well entitled to this gratuity.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It is clear that men of that age are not qualified to discharge the duties of policemen, and I would like to know if no rule has been laid down as to the age in which men shall cease to occupy positions in the water police. That is the case in other branches of the service and should be so here. It is well to bear in mind that these gratuities are now proposed for the first time, establishing a precedent which will be used in regard to all the police employees who attain a certain age and are discharged.

Mr. POPE. This is the first time that gratuities have ever been asked for policemen. This is done simply because these men have served faithfully for many years, and were no longer able to perform the duties of that position.

246. Geological Survey.—Additional amount required to complete this service.....$10,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What special work is expected to be done for this sum?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The $10,000 is made up as follows:—Printing the Geological Report, $3,300; advances in order to get the parties off to the season's work early, $4,500; preparation of maps for the report, $1,200; and expenses for the removal of the staff from Montreal to Ottawa, $1,000.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the cause of the additional cost of $300 for printing the report?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is on account of the report which will appear next year. The work of preparation has been commenced earlier than usual.

Mr. MILLS. The report has heretofore been printed privately in Montreal, for the reason given by Mr. Selwyn that there was great danger of inaccuracy if it were printed where he could not supervise the work. But now that the Geological Branch is to be removed to Ottawa, the reason for printing it privately will no longer exist, and I do not see why it should not be printed like other public documents by the public printers of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The present report, I take it, is now in hand. When Mr. Selwyn and his staff are here, I presume—although I speak without having consulted Mr. Selwyn—that the report will be printed here.

Mr. MILLS. When is the staff to be removed from Montreal to Ottawa?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On the opening of navigation.

252. To refund to the representatives of the late A. M. Delisle, shipping master's fees paid into the Treasury by him in error whilst acting as Collector of Customs at Montreal..... $2,457 29

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There were certain duties performed by the late Collector of Customs in Montreal for which he received certain fees separate and distinct from his duties as Collector of Customs, that he paid into the Treasury. His successor, Mr. Simpson, collected the fees and appropriated them, with the assent of the late Government, to his own use in addition to his salary. The heirs and executors of Delisle claimed they should be placed in the same position as Simpson, by receiving the fees for the registration of vessels, which Mr. Delisle should have appropriated, but did not. The Government, after consideration, placed those executors in the position claimed.

Mr. BLAKE. This seems a very extraordinary proceeding. The late collector, it is said, did not receive those fees, but paid them into the Treasury. I suppose he understood they did not belong to him, yet the Government decide to surrender them to his executors.

Mr. JONES. They did belong to him.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know whether they did or not. As a general rule, officers take all that belongs to them, and occasionally what does not.

Mr. JONES. He was honest; the present collector is honest too.

Mr. BLAKE. I know nothing about the present collector. But the late collector did not think the fees belonged to him, and the Government do not think they belong to them. That was the state of things during all his incumbency. But the next collector claims the fees, and I suppose the Government was not entitled to them, or they would not have let him keep them. I do not understand why the system satisfactory to the late collector and the Government should be now changed, and the fees taken out of the Treasury and given to the collector.

Mr. POPE (Queen's). I will correct the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) who, I think, misunderstood the Finance Minister. In the most important ports the shipping masters are appointed and paid by fees, 50 cents for every man put on the articles, and 50 cents for every man discharged. The Collector at Montreal for years received these fees and paid them in, and the Collector at Quebec retained them, as he had a perfect right to do. The fees were paid in by mistake by the Montreal collector till they amounted to over $2,000. Mr. Lash, Deputy Minister of Justice, gave it as his opinion that the Delisle executors were fairly entitled to the fees claimed. The collector is, by virtue of his appointment, shipping master, and has a right to collect the fees.

Mr. BLAKE. Is Mr. Simpson now receiving them?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Why, if Mr. Simpson has nothing refunded to him, should the fees be refunded to the representatives of the dead man?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Mr. Simpson received the fees up to a few months after the present Government was formed, when it was decided that, instead, there should be a rearrangement of his salary. Our action placed the Delisle claimants in the same position as Simpson was put in by the hon. gentlemen opposite. Simpson's salary has been increased, and the fees are now paid into the Treasury.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Why draw the line at Delisle? Why not go back to the other dead people?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Delisle was collector many years, and his executors state that while he lived he claimed he was entitled to this money, and that as his successor had been allowed it, it would not be right to make any invidious distinction between the late and present collector.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It should go to Delisle's predecessors, too.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They do not ask for it.

Mr. JONES. The present collector does not receive those fees, as I understand; but now the Government intend to give them to the representatives of the man dead.

253. Amount required to pay Sir A. T. Galt for services and expenses during June, July, August, and September, 1879, whilst continuing trade negotiations with France, Spain, etc., (revote)..... $4,058 32

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is a revote, the money having been appropriated last Session. But the advance was made by the Bank of Montreal, and the year expired before the details came in. So we have to ask a revote.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman any information to give us about the negotiations themselves? What about the results and the renewal of negotiations?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is a hope of their renewal, and Sir A. T. Galt is awaiting a favorable opportunity of renewing them.

Mr. BLAKE. The only proof of those negotiations is the payment of divors sums for them. What is their total cost so far?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The items are given under different schedules, and my hon. friend is good at adding up.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I asked on one occasion if Colonel Bernard's superannuation salary had been paid to him in full while engaged in those negotiations, for which he was also paid. I was told that I should get the information on concurrence last year, but did not. I presume I shall get it now.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think he was associated with Sir A. T. Galt in this work, and that in addition to whatever he received for it, he was paid his superannuation allowance.

254. To cover expenses connected with the Civil Service Commission..... $5,000 00

Mr. CASEY. I am glad that the report of those Commissioners has at last come down, but if we really intend to go on with a reform of the Civil Service, we have lost a great deal by the fact that the report has not come down until the very end of the Session. I am not inclined to blame the Commissioners for slackness or negligence, for I am inclined to think that the reason for the delay is that the Commissioners were nearly all connected with the Civil Service, and that, therefore, their time was pretty fully occupied by their regular duties, so that they could not, perhaps, get on any faster. The fact remains, however, that a Commission which was instituted in June last did not report until a short time ago. We were not led to expect last Session that action on the subject would be delayed so long. First, we were promised a Bill last Session, and at the end of the Session the Premier in stating that he had given up the idea of bringing in a Bill then, remarked that the Bill had been prepared before the beginning of the Session. For some reason or other, probably in order to obtain fuller information, it had been postponed for that year, but the hon. gentleman said that it would be matured during the summer and brought down at an early period this Session. The issuance of the Commission was delayed for nearly two months after the Session closed, and the Commissioners took nine months to report. So that it does not look as if the Government were anxious to formulate any measure of reform in the Civil Service. The report seems to indicate that the Commissioners have gone thoroughly into their work, and that they have taken a great deal of trouble to enable them to form an elaborate and finished opinion as to the evils of the present system, and as to what should be substituted for it. I am glad to notice that their opinions on both these points concur so exactly with those which I have been pressing on the House for several years. Neither they nor I can, of course, claim originality for these views, because they are taken almost without alteration from the system at present in operation in England; and the fact that it is not an untried or theoretical system is the strongest argument in favor of the proposed scheme. The Commissioners conclude that a system which has been found to work almost perfectly in England, in curing the evils attached to political patronage, would have the same effect in Canada, and they strongly urge its adoption. Although the report has only lately reached us, I do not suppose the Government have been altogether ignorant all this time of the evidence which has been taken, or the conclusions of the Commissioners, so I think it is not unreasonable to ask the Government whether they have formed any opinion as to the advisability of carrying out the views of the Commission or some of their views in the future. If the Government do not do so now, perhaps they might in concurrence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says truly that the report is a valuable one, but he is mistaken in supposing that the Government had any means of knowing what conclusions the Commissioners were arriving at, or what conclusions they would arrive at. That would be contrary to the spirit in which all such Commissions should be conducted, because it might naturally be held, and would be held rightly, that if there was any communication between the Government and the Commission the independence of thought and action of the Commission would be destroyed and the report would be practically worthless as an independent expression of opinion. The Government simply selected men whom they thought were fitted for the work of the Commission; they were told their duties and they were left to the performance of those duties—really the only way in which a valuable report could be got. It appears also from the report that it was not an unanimous report, but that there are some differences of opinion, and those different opinions we have not yet received. The hon. gentleman deserves credit for pressing this matter as he has done before the attention of Parliament for several years; he did so before the last Parliament as well as the present. The great matter is with all deliberation to get established a good principle for the working of our Civil Service at headquarters, and in the outside service, and in order to get that people should not grudge a little delay. The Commissioners will, I believe, carefully select for the purpose of representing the departmental sections of the inside service. A gentleman of large experience was placed at the head of the Commission, and a Montreal gentleman specially qualified, and independent, was also a member. So that they were selected with a view to trying to obtain an independent expression of opinion from competent persons as to the present system and the best means of remedying it. There was placed at their disposal a very full collection of reports on all the continental systems as well as the system which obtains in England. The report of the commission is a very good one and shows the ability and care with which the members addressed themselves to the subject. The appendix is very voluminous, and there is a large body of evidence that will in due time see the light. The Government are now fully charged with all the means for arriving at a final conclusion as to the policy which they will propound to Parliament in the future. There was prepared for last Session a Bill on the subject, but there was so much difference of opinion among those I consulted that the hon. gentleman thought it better on the whole to appoint this Commission. I did not, nor did the Government, ever ask the Commissioners to form any opinion or express any opinion as to the question of standard examinations or any thing of that kind, but left it as much as possible to the Commissioners to report on the best means on the whole. I am sure the time has not been lost, and the Government will be in a better position to deal with the subject by having this valuable report before them.

Mr. CASEY. Although I cannot expect the Premier would give the House details of the proposed scheme, I thought he would have been prepared by this time having so nearly made up his mind, to say whether he approves of the general principle of substituting competitive examinations for appointments by political favor. That may perhaps be a subject on which there is a difference of opinion between himself and those whom he has to consult. The objection to a change will be less towards the end of a Parliament than at the beginning, as the offices will be to a considerable extent filled up by that time. An objection to the introduction of any such scheme as is proposed by the Commission, should the Government decide to adopt it, was that the party out of power for the time being might have filled all vacancies before the close of Parliament. This Session, being the middle Session of the Parliament, would have been a most propitious time for the introduction of such a scheme as that submitted by the Commission; and for that reason it is much to be regretted that the Government did not hasten the report, and had it submitted at the beginning of the Session, or immediately after the close of the Railway Debates. In the Order in Council appointing the Commission, the Government made a very full confession to previous knowledge as to the present state of the service, which is worth while to recall to their recollection. They set out five points :

"1st. That many changes in the character as well as the extent of the service required in each department had developed themselves.

"2nd. That the duties of some departments and of some branches of each department and of certain officers in each department, had been varied, diminished or increased.

"3rd. That many men had by old age, incapacity, bad habits or continued idleness, become unavailable for useful purposes.

"4th. That the number of men in each department had increased, it was thought, out of proportion to the needs of the service.

"5th. That young men had been appointed who, from want of education or strength of constitution, or general unfitness, had not made and would not make efficient public servants."

The Government seem to have been pretty well informed before they appointed the Commission as to the Civil Service, because there are only some of the items of information they gave the Commission. I do not think the Commission has told us anything which we did not previously know; but the Commission was necessary to carry out details of the scheme, and the Government, at this stage, should have stated their general policy as to the principle of competition or nomination.

In reply to Mr. MILLS,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In anticipation of having a report on this subject, the Government has proposed the filling up of a good many offices, and anything like a readjustment of officers. They have avoided as much as possible hampering themselves or their successors, until the report has been considered.

256. Payments made to the Hon. Hector Fabre, for expenditures connected with special services in France.....$2,931 11

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know what are the special services which have been rendered by Mr. Fabre. Last year a somewhat similar sum was placed in the Public Accounts for the same purpose, yet we have not seen any report from Mr. Fabre of what he has been doing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the Order in Council has been laid before the House.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not remember seeing it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am much mistaken if it was not laid before Parliament. Mr. Fabre is intimately acquainted with the chief men connected with the French Government at that time, and we thought it very useful that he should collect information, since both the Imperial and Canadian Governments were making arrangements for a renewal of the commercial treaty originally settled between Napoleon and Cobden. The Canadian Government applied for leave to be represented, and as Mr. Fabre was intending to go to France we invited him to do so, and he went. Of course we only paid his expenses, he got no salary. At Paris he had extensive communication, especially with the financial branch of the French Government, and he also rendered great service in writing up the whole Canadian case in the Parisian press and keeping the subject steadily before the French mind. We considered it of great importance to have there a man of Mr. Fabre's literary skill to draw the attention of the French people to Canada, and to the importance of a reciprocity treaty.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I asked for some information about this gentleman's proceedings last Session and none could be got. Now we have another large sum brought down to pay for certain expenditures. What are these payments for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To pay his expenses.

Mr. MACKENZIE. His expenses never reached $4,000 during the time he has been there, not half of it. I understand one of the Ministers in the other House acknowledged the Government was disappointed in the results of this mission. I do not wonder, when, after two years and a-half, they are not able to produce one scrap of writing to show what he has done. Where are the articles in the Paris press? How are we to know they were written by him? I happen to know something of this case. I refused an application from that quarter to perform this sort of service, and the gentleman went immediately into opposition in the Senate, and his paper went into opposition to the late Government. In the meantime the change of Government took place, and they applied, singularly enough, so the hon. First Minister tells us now, to Mr. Fabre if he would not do this for them. I would like to know if the right hon. gentleman has not made a mistake, if it was not Mr. Fabre who applied to him?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Fabre never applied to me.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Did he never apply to the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I do not think so.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then what member of the Government solicited Mr. Fabre's services?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think any of them did.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It appears it was an accidental meeting between Mr. Fabre and the Government. The result of all is, that the country is amerced in the sum of $4,000 for nothing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Where is the work? If the hon. gentleman had commuted with him and paid him one-half, they would have him here and got his vote—as they are scarce of votes in the Senate—as the country has nothing for it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The country had the advantage of his services for a long time, but they may now have ceased. The hon. gentleman might as well ask, what has Sir A. T. Galt done? What has the British Government done? I suppose the hon. gentleman follows current events. England cannot hurry France. England has been in continual negotiations with the French Government for the purpose of adjusting the Cobden treaty. Diplomats act slowly, and negotiations are still going on. I know that on several occasions Sir A. T. Galt has been warned to be ready to take part in negotiations which were about to be resumed between England and France. He will do just as Lincoln said—keep pegging away. It is of great value to Canada that we should have a commercial treaty with the great French market. The hon. gentleman must see that at present it is quite impossible to bring down in any specific way whatever any of these communications.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Sir A. T. Galt, I am bound to say, did give us at least a narrative of his journey. That is all it amounted to. There was a pleasant account of some conversation he had with the Spanish Minister, with expressions of his opinions in regard to the country and people; but anything regarding his commercial negotiations never appeared in any of his papers. The result of the visit of Sir A. T. Galt to France, of Mr. Bernard, and afterwards of Mr. Fabre, has been that instead of getting any advantage for ships built in Canada to sell in France, the shipping arrangements made in France are more hostile than ever; they exclude foreign-built ships to the benefit of native industries. A bounty is paid of two francs and a half, I think, to vessels for every thousand miles they sail, and under that bounty new steamship lines have been organized and sail in various directions. Not one particle of benefit has been derived from the visit of these gentlemen to that country, and one cannot help thinking that there was very little ground for making these appointments except to provide for political friends.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has said that Mr. Fabre's relations to the Government in this particular have ceased for some time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Then I suppose that some report has been presented to the Government by Mr. Fabre of what he has done.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has been no report. He has been in continual communication with Sir Alex. Galt, and has reported to him.

Mr. BLAKE. He has not reported to the Government which pays him except to render certain accounts which we see here. Is this money for his maintenance while in Paris?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I suppose so.

Mr. BLAKE. And the hon. gentleman thought it was particularly desirable that he should get into relations with the Financial Department of the French Government of the same character as we see in the estimates?

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for Lambton does not seem to be aware that Mr. Fabre's visits have had similar results to those of Sir Alex. Galt. The hon. gentleman has told us of the nice accounts of his travels which Sir Alex. Galt has given. I happen to subscribe for Mr. Fabre's paper, in which he has given most charming accounts of the French operas and plays, and of everything occurring in the social circles of Paris. It is certainly of great advantage to Canada, to have in Paris a gentleman who so uses his literary talents. If the country is not quite satisfied with the return made by Mr. Fabre, the Government should at least be satisfied, for whatever he may write to the French papers, he writes very elegantly in his own paper in favor of the Government of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to telegraph to Sir Alex. Galt to-morrow morning and ask him whether Mr. Fabre has reported to him or not. We can easily obtain that information before concurrence.

258. To repay Mr. Geo. G. Dustan for expenses connection with the preparation of the Tariff $453 75

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In 1879, when the Government were dealing with the Tariff, they placed themselves in communication with the leading men in the different parts of the Dominion who possessed more knowledge on the various subjects than the members of the Administration could possibly possess. The sugar question, then, as always, was an exceedingly difficult question. Mr. Dustan was regarded as having great experience in such matters, and he was invited, among others, to come to Ottawa and confer with the Administration relative to the duties on sugar. Mr. Dustan came here, with other gentlemen who were interested in the refining and importing interests. We heard their arguments on both sides, and after deliberating with them, came to a conclusion. Subsequently the Government again sent for Mr. Dustan, and one or two other gentlemen representing the refining interest, to reconsider the question which had been before them on the former occasion. Mr. Dustan therefore made two trips from Halifax and remained here about ten days on each occasion. When we had disposed of the matter, I asked Mr. Dustan what his expenses in coming here were, saying that I was prepared to pay them. Mr. Dustan's answer was, "I will not take a cent from the Government, because I am in hopes, with the plant I have, of establishing a refinery in Halifax, and I will not have it said that I have received a cent, because it might be said I am here working in my own interest." Circumstances occurred, however, which made it impossible for him to use any of his plant. Under these circumstances, unable to derive any advantage from the change in the Tariff, he said, "My circumstances are now such that I feel that I have a right to receive the amount of my expenses to Ottawa." The Government therefore ordered it to be paid.

Mr. BLAKE. He came in his own interest to represent the views of refiners as to what taxation should be imposed on the people to benefit them, and received compensation from the Government for his attendance. It was the sugar refiners, therefore, we are now told, who prepared the Tariff.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They did not prepare it. The representatives of the sugar importers, men engaged in the West Indian trade, also attended. We did not accept the recommendations of the sugar refiners. We took an intermediate course, and our course satisfied both interests.

Mr. BLAKE. The estimate says:—"To repay Mr. Dustan for expenses incurred in connection with the preparation of the Tariff." Mr. Dustan then prepared the sugar tariff.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. He gave his views as did others whose expenses were paid.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Where are the expenses of the importers?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They did not ask any. We offered other parties their expenses. Some refused; others, who were experts, accepted.

Mr. BLAKE. The rest of them took it out of the people in taxes. As Mr. Dustan could not go on with his refinery, his expenses were paid by the Government.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is hard to ask the House for this amount when the figures are before us shewing that while the people pay increased prices for their sugar, the revenue is decreasing from that source.

261. To provide for the cost of obtaining stamps and for the stamping of imported and Canadian Tobacco, under the provisions of 43 Vic., Chap. 19, and for other expenditure in connection with securing the duty on Tobacco $12,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the duty received on this?

Mr. BOWELL. The amount collected on Canadian leaf in 1878-9, when the duty was 10 cents, was on 1,402 lbs., $40.20. At that time it was believed a large quantity of Canadian tobacco was grown in different sections of the country, which not only went into home consumption, but was also used in the manufactured generally without paying duty. The duty was reduced to 4 cents the following year, and was collected on 43,743 lbs., $1,749.76; for the seven months from 1st July to 31st January, 1881, it was collected on 191,321 lbs., at 4 cents, $7,652.90. If the increase is in the same ratio for the other five months, it will show a duty paid on 327,984 lbs., or $13,119.36. This shows that although the duty has been reduced from 10 cents to 4 cents, yet by the exercise of close supervision by the revenue officers, the revenue has gradually increased.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I suspect that would take the place of a larger amount of foreign tobacco which pays higher duty.

Mr. BOWELL. It would to a certain extent, but not to any appreciable extent, because it was grown almost as extensively before as now, but there having been no supervision over the growers, the tobacco went into general consumption without paying the duty. Since the appointment of the Inland Revenue officers, they succeeded in obtaining payment of duty on 191,000 lbs., when previously only 1,402 lbs. paid duty.

Mr. BLAKE. Was not the great bulk of the revenue collected in Joliette?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; over $4,000. The amount was 112,777 lbs. From Montreal district, the amount was 7,370 lbs.; from Quebec, 6,511; from Sorel, 27,295; from St. Hyacinthe, 14,241; St. Johns, 4,546; Terrebonne, 2,948; Three Rivers, 147,666; Beauharnois, 867½ lbs.

Mr. BLAKE. It looks as if the late Minister of the Interior who represented Joliette, had used persuasion with his own constituents to make them honest and pay the tax. It looks as if he and not the revenue should get credit for this large increase.

Mr. BOWELL. It proves there was at least one honest Minister in the Government.

265. To enable the Department to purchase instruments for testing Petroleum, and to pay expense in connection therewith, under the Petroleum Inspection Act, 1880 $7,500 00

Mr. BLAKE. Are these instruments of the flash test or specific gravity sort?

Mr. BOWELL. We wish to get a new instrument lately invented in England which, after consideration, we deem the best—it is of the flash test kind.

Mr. BLAKE. That is the instrument to be used under the Act lately introduced?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. The reason I make the inquiry is that, according to my view, it is a quite different instrument that would be purchased under the item of 1880—one that might turn out useless. The date should be altered.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is right; and that was our reason for lowering the test under the present Act, as the test is better with the present instrument. I suggest that the year be altered. The Minister told me he intended to change the figure to provide for the new test and meet the requirements of the Act.

270. Additional amounts for pay of Land Guides. $2,500 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. How many land guides are there in the Government employ, and what salaries are paid them?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are only two at present. There were three during the winter including the chief. During the summer there were Hayter Reed, the chief, and nine or ten guides altogether. All were paid off but three. Mr. H. Reed has since been made a stipendiary magistrate, and gone west.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Complaints have been made—I am not prepared to say how far justified or not—that many land guides speculate to a great extent in and sell Government lands that they have got possession of to the emigrants under their charge. If true, this may become a very serious abuse; because it is quite evident that it is incompatible with the position and character of these people that they should be authorized by the Dominion and at the same time land speculators on a pretty large scale. I am not pledged to the fact, but the statement was made extremely freely to me at various points in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The plan which was mentioned last Session, and which I think was generally approved of, was simply this: immigrants going to Winnipeg from abroad had the prairie before them, and no means of knowing where to go to, and especially foreigners, for if they went from Ontario they would pretty well understand the nature of the country. We thought, therefore, that it would be well if a certain number of guides were appointed, so that after a party of immigrants had selected their location, one of these guides might accompany them and take care of them. These guides were detailed for this service by Mr. Reed, who, I think, will be admitted by all to be an excellent man for the position. Of course the charge of land speculating is easily made; it might perhaps be true, but if it be true it is an abuse. The general rule is, I think, these parties of immigrants go to the land offices and enter for homesteads on any particular locality which they have been lead to believe will suit them. If it were true that these guides, acting from sinister motives, were endeavoring to sell lands to immigrants or acting as agents in that way, they would at once be dismissed as unfit for the position. This ensuing year it is not intended to fill the place of Mr. Reed—of whom we thought so much that we appointed him a stipendiary magistrate—but Mr. Hespeler, an officer of the Agriculture Department, who understands the business, will act as head of these guides and will save us the salary paid to Mr. Reed. We think it would be well to retain the corps of guides for the present, but of course as settlement progresses back from the line of the railway the necessity for this service will disappear. The matter which has been mentioned by the hon. gentleman will, however, be enquired into.

Mr. MILLS. I think these guides serve a very good purpose and that no better man could have been put in charge of them than Mr. Hespeler. I think there is more danger of speculating among the various agencies than among the guides, and from what I can gather it has happened that these land agents have acted as agents for speculators. Persons have gone to an agent and asked to be entered for a particular lot as a homestead, and have been told that the lot was taken up, when they knew from their own personal knowledge that it was not. The only conclusion they could come to was that the agent was acting for some speculator, who would allow them something for locking up particular lots. There is no doubt whatever that the greatest danger to settlers will be the temptations held out to land guides to act as agents for the purchase of land.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The land guides should be precluded from speculating in lands for outside parties, and I would certainly make short work of persons so offending.

Mr. MILLS. Special instructions should be given to that effect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Such instructions, I am informed, have already been given, and if the parties break their instructions they show themselves to be unworthy of their office.

274. Amount required to enable the Department to push forward Land Surveys without waiting until the 1st July $100,000 00

In answer to Mr. MILLS,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Surveys will go on just as they did in the hon. gentleman's time.

Mr. MILLS. It was suggested before in the department, and I do not know but that was the plan the hon. gentleman had adopted, of laying out lots extending backwards a sufficient distance to include the necessary quantity of land, in accordance with the system of surveys he proposed to adopt, along the rivers so as to establish a dense settlement along the line of railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; that is not the intention.

Mr. CHARLTON. Last year the Premier estimated that the cost of surveys of Dominion lands would be some 2½ per cent. of the receipts from land sales. I would like to know if, in the light of further experience, he expects to realize those anticipations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not able to answer that question just now.

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has not yet made any report or official request to the Government to approve of any certain line for the railway, and no plans have been sent in as yet. There have been informal communications between the Department and the Company, showing generally where they desire to have their line, and that line will be perfectly agreeable to the Government.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That is, it will pass by what are known as the Assiniboine Rapids?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I indicated some months ago that they would come to this point, and I was strongly contradicted by some of the hon. gentlemen opposite. That will bring them considerably south of the line which was laid out by the Government for the second one hundred miles.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; they run considerably south.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

Mr. MILLS.

DOMINION LANDS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved a third reading of the Bill (No. 77) to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

Mr. MILLS. I beg leave to move:

That the Bill be recommitted to Committee of the Whole House, with instructions to amend the 4th clause, by providing a limitation of the area of land which may be sold to one person.

He said: I think, from the discussion we had on the law last evening, and from the admission made by the hon. gentleman himself, it is pretty clear that this power is more than is necessary for the administration of the department. The hon. gentleman himself admitted it was not desirable to sell so large quantities of land, even to herdsmen, as it was intimated that certain persons wanted. I think, therefore, there can be no objection to this motion.

Motion lost on division.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to enter my protest against the provision of this Bill, which was protested against by myself and other members of the Liberal party last Session. On that occasion, I moved the following resolution:—

“Resolved—That in the opinion of this House, the proper policy with reference to the disposition of the public lands of Canada should be, so far as practicable, to sell such lands to actual settlers only, on reasonable conditions of settlement; and in lots or quantities limited to area which can be reasonably occupied by the settler; and that the sale of public lands to speculators, free from conditions of settlement, is impolitic and calculated to injuriously affect the settlement of the country, by keeping large quantities of land locked up for years, and by obliging the settler thereon ultimately to pay a price much larger than that which is paid into the public Treasury for the same.”

I am sorry that the Government insist upon pursuing that injurious policy. If we are to become a nation, our hopes centre in the North-West, and it is of the utmost importance that our policy with reference to the sale of public lands in that Territory should be a wise policy. It cannot be denied that the settlement of any new country is retarded by speculative purchases, without any advantage to anybody but the speculator; and the evil of speculative purchases is aggravated by the fact that the Government facilitates these purchases by selling lands on credit. The Government last year tacitly admitted the existence of this evil by asserting that it would remedy itself by local taxation on non-resident lands. I notice, however, that they have not followed out that principle, because they have granted a very large area of lands to a company and exempted them from taxation. This Bill, if it becomes law, will introduce into the North-West a system of tenantry. Persons like Mr. Basseby undoubtedly make large purchases with the object of settling tenants upon their land. It should be the policy of this Government to create a large number of freeholders and to prevent as far as possible that system of tenantry which now prevails in England, Ireland, Scotland, and various parts of Russia. We are building for the future, and the experience of the United States and Canada should teach hon. gentlemen occupying the Treasury benches that the policy they propose to introduce under this Bill must prove inimical to the interests of the best portion of this country. The public domain is the people's heritage, and should be held as the sacred trust of the people; no middleman should be allowed to come between the Government and the people who have to cultivate the lands of the North-West. The land gambler is a public enemy; and the Government, in facilitating the operations of these men, are taking a course which is inimical in the last degree to the interests of the people. The United States Government, which has had great experience in the management of public lands, last year appointed a commission to report on the best policy regarding public lands, and that commission reported in favor of the absolute reservation of lands for homestead settlement, and against speculators. I maintain that settlement should be made a condition of sale. I therefore move:

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend Clause 4 by enacting, that except where otherwise provided by Resolution of this House, all lands shall be disposed of subject to conditions of actual settlement.

Motion negatived on division.

Mr. HOLTON. Without detaining the House, I move:

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend Clause 4 by providing that the unappropriated even numbered sections in each township shall be disposed of only upon condition of actual settlement.

Motion negatived on division.

Mr. BLAKE. Last Session we urged very strenuously on the House that those lands which were to be sold not on condition of actual settlement should be sold only on condition of the price being paid in cash at the time of sale; and we indicated to the House what we thought would be the evils to flow from sales made on credit for speculative purposes. Only last night I read to the House from the report of the Minister of the Interior a statement that some of these evils—not the largest part, in my opinion—had already begun to manifest themselves—an irregularity and dilatoriness of payment which the officer stated it seemed would only be cured by making very stringent provisions for the cancellation of sales in cases of default. In my opinion it would not be possible for any Government to carry on extensive sales not on condition of settlement and the conditions of time proposed by the officer. There is only one cure, and that is to give up the time sales to speculators and provide, as we proposed last year, that sales shall be only for one price, payable at the time of sale, I move:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole with instructions that they have power to amend Clause 4 by providing that the price of Dominion lands sold without conditions of settlement shall be payable in cash at the time of sale.

Motion negatived on division.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

Resolutions reported from Committee of Supply, considered.

On Resolution 119 (March 4th)—River Saskatchewan improvement, $20,000,

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think some information was promised about this work. To what extent will the river be made navigable? What depth of water at the low season does the Government hope to supply by this expenditure?

Mr. LANGEVIN. My information is that the length of river will be about 900 miles, and the depth of water $3\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 feet at low water.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That will not be done for $20,000 and the $12,000 furnished by the Hudson's Bay Company.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The improvements will cost only that.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I shall be glad if the hon. gentleman can secure the three or four feet of water spoken of for that expenditure, which, from my information, I somewhat doubt. However, the vote is a proper one.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The water is in the river, and we have only to make certain dams, and do a certain amount of dredging. I understand the vote will be sufficient.

On Resolution 121—Harbors and rivers generally, $6,000,

Mr. MILLS. When this item was under consideration in the Committee, I spoke of the dredging in the Sydenham River, to remove some obstruction in the shape of sunken timber, &c.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I found that some dredging took place, but it was with great difficulty that the slabs and other obstructions could be removed. I am not in a position to say to-day that we will be able to have machines to carry on this work; but if it is possible, as I hope it will be, the work will be prosecuted.

Mr. MILLS. The plan followed in the Marine and Fisheries Department is to use dynamite, and it works very successfully.

On Resolution 122—Dredging, $122,700,

Mr. KILLAM. I would like to ask the Minister how the dredges in the Lower Provinces—the large dredges, the "St. Lawrence" and "Canada" especially—are likely to be employed this summer?

Mr. LANGEVIN. They will be employed upon a number of works in the various Maritime Provinces; but, of course, I cannot say at what point any particular dredge may be employed.

Mr. KILLAM. My object in mentioning the matter is this: Considerable improvement has already been made in Yarmouth Harbor by straightening it at one point, but another point still remains to be cut. If one of the large dredges is to be used at the Intercolonial terminus in St. John, I thought that during the freshet season, when it could not work properly, then it might be sent to finish the work at Yarmouth.

On Resolution 127 (March 8th)—Maintenance and repairs of steamers, $120,000,

In answer to Mr. GAULT,

Mr. LANGEVIN. I know that the "Rimouski" is not a very pleasant little tender, and people that have crossed the Atlantic without being sick say, that when they go on board that vessel they become so sick they will never go again. But I do not think the Government are in a position this year to ask for a vote of money to replace her. The matter will be considered during recess.

House adjourned at 1:20 o'clock, a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 16th March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT.

Mr. OUMET moved that the Order for the second reading of Bill (No. 94) to explain and further amend the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, and the Act of 1879 amending the same (from the Senate), be made the first Order for this day.

Mr. BLAKE. The motion is not in order. The hon. gentlemen has a notice on the paper.

Mr. OUMET. On account of the importance of the subject, this House should be unanimous in affording an opportunity for the discussion of this Bill. The fact that this Bill is now before the House has directed public attention to it, and it will be for the benefit of even the temperance cause that it be discussed, and thrown out if the majority of the House so decide, rather than it should be left over for consideration next Session. The temperance cause, that is those persons not teetotalers, would also benefit by it.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not observe that the hon. gentleman has addressed the House on the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled the motion out of order.

Mr. OUMET. I hope the Government will give an assurance that time will be given for the consideration of this Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. The Finance Minister is leading the House, and will answer the hon. gentleman's question.

BEACON LIGHTS AT BLACK LAND GULLY.

Mr. GIROUARD (Kent) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to make provision this year for the erection of beacon lights at Black Land Gully, Kent County, New Brunswick, in conformity with resolution passed by County Council of said county, praying for the same?

Mr. POPE (Queen's.) A petition numerously signed by the people of the County of Kent, was sent to the department, asking that beacon lights be placed at that particular place. Information has been asked from the agent of the department, and the matter is now under the consideration of the Government.

THE CLAIM OF JOSEPH CHARLES LISLOIS.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to compensate Mr. Joseph Charles Lislois for the amount lost by him through the burning of one of his buildings, set on fire by a spark from a Government locomotive on the Intercolonial?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The Government will give the matter its consideration after the present Session.

PORTS OF BUCTOUCHE AND COCAIGNE.

Mr. GIROUARD (Kent) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to dredge, during the course of next summer, the ports of Buctouche and Cocaigne, in the Province of New Brunswick?

Mr. LANGEVIN. During the season dredges will be used at the particular spot where public interests require them. I cannot say at present where they will be used. The hon. member must have seen that an amount has been set aside in the Estimates for the Kent harbor.

IMPORTATION OF MILITARY STORES.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK enquired, Whether the Commandant of the Royal Military College has authority to import military stores for the use of the College, and whether any military stores which could have been manufactured in Canada have lately been imported by the Commandant of the Royal Military College or by the Militia Department; and if so, were they imported for the use of the College, or for the Militia generally, and what was the reason for so doing?

Mr. CARON. The Commandant of the Royal Military College has authority to import military stores for the use of the College. Some stores have been imported by the Department of Militia, which might have been manufactured in Canada, had there been in Canada the required samples. These stores will, hereafter, be used as samples for the manufacture of the same articles in Canada.

SALARIES OF CONDUCTORS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant to conductors on Intercolonial trains in the Province of Quebec a salary equal to that of the conductors in the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia?

Mr. OUMET.

Mr. POPE (Compton). The train conductors on the Intercolonial Railway are paid at three different rates. Those who have had very long experience get $60 a month; those who have had less experience, but still considerable, $2 a day; and junior conductors, $1.50 per day. That system is universal over the whole railway.

THE PILGRIMS LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether the Government had appointed a keeper to the Pilgrims lighthouse; and, if so, who is he?

Mr. POPE (Queen's.) A new appointment was made in January— that of David De-jardins. Charges were preferred against the former keeper, an investigation took place, and it justified his dismissal.

THE GROSSE ISLE SEMAPHORE.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to construct a semaphore at Grosse Isle, with a connection at Montmagny?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is not the intention of the Government to construct that semaphore this year.

LIGHTSHIP AT ST. THOMAS.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to take into consideration the necessity of placing a lightship on the shoals at St. Thomas?

Mr. POPE (Queen's). It is not the intention of the Government during the present year.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place under the immediate control of a man speaking both English and French that part of the Intercolonial Railway which is entirely in the Province of Quebec, and to put that Province on the same footing as New Brunswick and Nova Scotia with regard to the general management of the road?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The matter having been represented to the Railway Department last year, a special officer was appointed as Assistant-Superintendent over that part of the road from Rivière du Loup, or lower down, to Lévis, and that officer, although bearing an English name (Mr. McDonald), is admitted to be by all who know him a French-speaking man. He is at present fulfilling the duties of assistant, and from what I know of the department I am convinced that, when the time comes, Mr. McDonald's services will not be ignored.

SUPERINTENDENT ON THE INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to render justice to the Province of Quebec by appointing to that part of the Intercolonial Railway which is in that Province a Superintendent perfectly familiar with the French and English languages?

Mr. LANGEVIN. As the Government has already two officers, a Superintendent who speaks English, and who, I am convinced, understands French a little, and an assistant who understands both languages and speaks them well, it would not be possible at present to appoint an officer holding the same rank; but the time will come, I have no doubt, when the representation made to-day will be taken into consideration.

THE INTERCOLONIAL BRANCH.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether the Government had been informed of an expression of public opinion at a meeting of the leading representatives of trade and commerce at Quebec on the 11th instant, and whether it had the intention of replying to it by building at a date not far distant a branch of the Intercolonial from St. Charles to St. Joseph de Lévis?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The Government has been informed of an expression of public opinion at a meeting of the leading representatives of trade and commerce at Quebec on the 11th instant. As to the second part of the question, the hon. member has already been answered, and he will please excuse me from repeating that answer.

CANADIAN ASIATIC CABLE COMMUNICATION.

The following Bill was read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 96) to establish a Marine Telegraph between the Pacific Coast of Canada and Asia.—(Mr. Langevin.)

THE VAGRANT ACT.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou) moved the second reading of the Bill (No. 90) to remove doubts as to the power to imprison with hard labor under the Act 32 and 33 Victoria, Chap. twenty-eight and the Act 37 Victoria, Chap. forty-three respecting Vagrants. He said: This is simply a short amendment required by the omission in an amendment to the Vagrant Act to insert the words "with or without hard labor" after the words relating to the time of imprisonment, and one of the Judges, in administering the Act, held that without these words hard labor could not be imposed.

Bill read the second time, passed through Committee, read the third time and passed.

OFFICIAL OATH FOR GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou) moved the second reading of the Bill (No. 91) to prescribe an oath to be taken by employés on telegraph lines under the control of the Government.

Mr. ANGLIN. Does the hon. gentleman really think it advisable to multiply those official oaths which have so often been disregarded? Does he think that, when the sense of duty does not impose a sufficient restraint on persons who are entrusted with secrets in the telegraph offices, the taking of an oath will compel them to do so? I think the tendency of modern opinion is that official oaths are essentially objectionable, and that they are, after a time, disregarded.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Custom house oaths have, of course, a peculiar signification. I should be very glad to think that people employed in official capacities would follow the obligation of honor so far as to render the safeguard of an oath or affirmation unnecessary. I fear we cannot come to that conclusion just now. The Bill was introduced at the instance of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, in whose charge those public works are. Those telegrams sent in the discharge of his duty, that hon. gentleman thought it advisable and desirable to surround with the safeguards of the law.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will state what provisions of the Criminal Law exist with reference to this subject. Is there any provision making it a crime to disclose the contents of telegrams?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Not that I am aware of.

Mr. BLAKE. My own opinion is that we ought to do whatever is proper to prevent disclosures, and that the utility of the work very much depends—I do not speak of Government messages merely—on its being understood that there is absolute secrecy maintained—as much privacy, in fact, although you have to use two or three men in telegraphing, as there is in the transmission of a sealed letter. But it does seem to me that the true way to enforce it would be to make some provision in the Criminal Law constituting it an offence in any person who receives knowledge of the contents of a telegram passing through his hands, disclosing them. That might apply to all telegraph employés, and all messages private or public. That would be a much better measure than the hon. gentleman proposes, and one more likely to accomplish his object. I fear, without such a law, we should experience a certain laxity in dealing with the large mass of private telegrams. The hon. gentleman proposes a distinction between private and public telegrams—to say to an operator, you must take an oath not to reveal a Government telegram—or to tell the whole class of operators that the Legislature makes a distinction, and exacts of those who receive Government telegrams, a solemn oath that they will not divulge their contents, while it does not think proper to exact any such oath of those who receive private telegrams. Looking at the whole interests of the country, considering the vast amount of interests represented by telegraphic correspondence, I do not hesitate to say it is of more consequence, from year's end to year's end, that there should be an absolute confidence in the secrecy of this correspondence of the general public, than in that of the Government. The Government can always secure itself by using a cypher and a private code, which the great bulk of private individuals cannot. I am very anxious that everything should be done to preserve secrecy, and I recommend that instead of this Bill, the hon. gentleman should introduce a short Bill, making it a misdemeanor on the part of any employé who, in the discharge of his duty, gets knowledge of the contents of a telegram, making any disclosure on that subject.

Mr. McDONALD. The Bill is not so confined as my hon. friend supposes. It refers to all messages passing over a Government line. So a Government line is completely controlled by the Bill. It refers to all operators on the line, and all messages public or private. There may be a great deal in the observations of the hon. gentleman—that it might be well to extend this protection to private lines. But I doubt whether it should be done hastily. At any rate it is a new question, and I think the House would not be ready hastily to adopt his view, without more consideration. The present Bill can do no harm. It will provide safeguards so far as it extends; and if, after consideration, we find it would be fair and proper to extend it to all other telegraph lines, we can do it early next Session.

Mr. PLUMB. I was very much surprised that the member for Gloucester should have cast a universal slur on that excellent and worthy body of men employed in the telegraph offices. He said those gentlemen were not going to be bound by any oath, that the oath and obligation would gradually become with them less and less imperative, and that, in fact, after they had taken an official oath, they would break it. If this Bill is examined, it will be found the secrecy enjoined by the oath to be taken is not confined to one class of messages, as was stated by the member for West Durham. There is a penalty attached to the breaking of the oath which, in reality, reaches the point urged by the hon. gentleman. If either of those gentlemen had examined the Bill personally, before commencing in such a hurry to urge objections, he would have seen he had no ground whatever for such objections.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. In the general Act respecting telegraphs, in the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, there is a clause that covers the point in respect to private telegrams, providing a penalty for the revelation of their contents. I do not know whether that Act is technically in force in respect to the Dominion. I find this among clauses of the telegraph law which was in force in old Canada, and which have not been expressly repealed. This provision sufficiently covers the case raised by the member for West Durham, in the old Province of Canada. With regard to the operators on the Government telegraph lines, it does seem to me that if they are excepted from the operation of this clause, some provision should be made to prevent the disclosure of messages passing over those lines. Certainly there is no indignity cast on young men in the telegraph offices, in requiring them to take such an oath, when Ministers of the Crown, themselves, take an oath that they will not disclose the secrets of the Government. I do not see, then, why telegraph officers may not be bound in the same manner to preserve secrecy in the matter of Government telegrams. I certainly think they ought to be so bound. The clause in the Consolidated Statutes to which I referred, thus reads :

"Any operator of a telegraph line, or any person employed by a telegraph company, divulging the contents of a private despatch, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be liable to a fine, not exceeding $100, or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months, or both, in the discretion of the Court before which the conviction is had."

I would recommend my hon. friend to consider the propriety of re-enacting this clause in his Bill, making it applicable to all telegraph lines in the Dominion.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I suppose, under the general law that applies to telegraphs, Government measures have the right of priority. If this language is, as I supposed it was, large enough to cover that, it is obvious that the words of the Act must apply to all operators in respect to the discharge of their duty to the Government, and there comes the distinction that I venture to state. You are proposing to them that they should take an oath with reference to a particular part of their duty and not with reference to another part.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The language of the oath itself would cover all the duties of the operator.

Mr. BLAKE. But the circumstances under which the oath is taken are specific. It would be better not to have this preamble and to provide that all telegraph operators shall take oaths. We ought not to enlarge the region of promissory oaths. There exists a general Statute, providing for the substitution of formal declarations, instead of oaths. I would very much prefer, if the hon. Minister adheres to a solemn declaration, that it should be simply a statutory declaration and that the consequences of a breach of that solemn declaration should be such as are provided in the Statute.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou) moved that the Committee report progress. He would look into the matter.

Committee rose and reported.

House resumed.

SUPREME COURT JUDGES OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Bill (No. 95) to increase the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the Province of Prince Edward Island—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou)—was read a second time, considered in Committee, read a third time, and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved the second reading of Bill (No. 98) to amend the Inland Revenue Act, 1860. He said: This Bill amends section 83 of the present Act by providing that all tobacco manufactured in Canada shall, before it is offered for sale, be packed in packages as follows, and each package shall be duly stamped :

"(a) Cavendish and all pressed tobacco shall be packed in rectangular boxes, each containing not more than one hundred and ten pounds of tobacco ;

Mr. MACDOUGALL.

"(b) Cut tobacco of all kinds and scrap shall be packed in packages, each containing not more than one pound, but any number of such packages not exceeding together one hundred pounds in weight may be inclosed in an outer case or package, provided each of the lesser packages have been separately stamped ;

"(c) Snuff shall be packed in packages each containing not more than ten pounds ;

"(d) Common Canada twist may be put up in rolls or coils each not exceeding two pounds in weight ; and every such roll or coil shall be secured by cording or otherwise and enclosed in a paper or other band or casing so that a stamp may be securely attached thereto ;

"(e) Cigars shall be packed in rectangular boxes each containing not more than two pounds."

Another of the more important provisions of the Bill is that tobacco imported in packages, other than those above mentioned, shall be bonded in a Customs warehouse—the bond to be for a sum equal to double the amount of Customs duty to which the tobacco is liable. The conditions, are that the duty shall be paid and that the tobacco within a certain time shall be repacked in such packages as those above mentioned and duly stamped, or be defaced or destroyed. "The stamps are to be removed when the packages are emptied, and the stamped packages are not to be retained after the contents have been removed." These are the main provisions of the Bill, and they have been rendered necessary by the serious losses which have occurred to the revenue by abuses with regard to packages and stamps.

Mr. ANGLIN. This Bill seems to me to impose very vexatious and unnecessary burdens upon those engaged in the importation of tobacco. The tobacco trade is as old as Canada, and no such annoying refutations have ever been found necessary before. Why should the importer be required to import his tobacco in packages of a particular size, on penalty of having the packages bonded, opened and repacked, to say nothing of other annoyances? Surely means may be found of exacting the duty without resorting to such troublesome regulations as those.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. I wish to say to the hon. gentleman that all the annoyance of which he speaks will be but small compared with the amounts of which the revenue is defrauded under the existing law. These packages and their designations have been based upon those in use in the United States and other countries.

Mr. GILLMOR. The hon. gentleman should know that tobacco is packed in such a way that it makes a solid mass, and that it will be quite impossible to put it in these packages without tearing it all to pieces.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. There is no doubt that these regulations will prove a source of serious annoyance to importers of tobacco. This provision reads as follows :—

"All imported manufactured tobacco which is not packed in packages, of the respective kinds mentioned in said sub-sections a, b, c, d, and e, shall be bonded, * * * such tobacco shall, within such limited time and in accordance with such condition as may be fixed by regulation by the Governor in Council, be packed in packages of the respective kinds mentioned in said sub-sections?"

I would like to know if the hon. gentleman, before introducing this measure, consulted with those in the trade who will be more or less affected by this section. I doubt whether the attention of the trade has been called to it.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. I do not see why we should have consulted the trade on that point, because I do not see in what particular this is going to injure the trade. The inconvenience is not so great as the hon. gentleman imagines, and it is far less than the inconvenience resulting to this country by being defrauded and robbed of its revenue as we have been for the last two or three years. It was necessary to have such law in order to prevent smuggling. As I said when I first explained the law, it was becoming a frequent practice, after the duties had been paid, to empty the boxes and fill them again with smuggled tobacco. Cases were discovered where the same boxes had been filled two or three times with smuggled tobacco. That was the reason which induced the Government to present this measure.

Mr. ANGLIN. There can be no objection to any provision which is necessary for the purpose of preventing the boxes being fraudulently, though it may require the boxes to be absolutely destroyed, or to be so opened as to destroy the seal or stamp. Anyone who has seen a package of tobacco from the United States knows that it is impossible to re-pack it according to this system. If the contents of the box weigh five or ten pounds more than the quantity contained in the boxes here, there is no way by which that larger quantity can be put into these smaller boxes. It seems to me this is a very unnecessary and harassing regulation to the importers in this country. Goodness knows they are hardly enough dealt with already by the existing Tariff. As the law stands at present, if a man enters a box of tobacco at less than its weight he subjects himself to heavy penalties—the whole may be seized. The present regulation is one of those various products hatched in the Inland Revenue Office, which trouble this House and the country from year to year, which harass, worry and annoy the importers of the country. That seems to me to be the great object of this department.

Bill read the second time.

House in Committee on said Bill.

On clause 2,

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has not yet told us how this tobacco is to be repacked. When it is packed in a box it becomes quite solid, it would be impossible to unpack it, and pack it in another box of a different size. He might as well prohibit the importation of tobacco altogether, as to undertake to subject it to such a regulation as that now imposed.

Mr. DOULL. I think this Bill is very objectionable in some particulars, and I would like the hon. Minister, if possible, to defer this for another year in order that the manufacturers may have an opportunity of being consulted. In my county there are two or three tobacco manufacturers who have machinery for putting up tobacco in certain packages, and it would subject them to serious loss if they were required to put up their packages as prescribed by this Bill. I think it is only fair to the manufacturers that they should become acquainted with the changes which it is proposed to make in law, because it will certainly subject them to serious loss. If the hon. Minister insists upon pressing the Bill, I shall have to move some amendments.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I think the manufacturer^s should be given a little time to understand the Bill. I have had communications from manufacturers in my county, and they object to some clauses in the measure. I am disposed to support the view of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Doull), and ask the Minister to allow the Bill to stand for a year so that manufacturers may become familiar with the changes proposed. Its terms will fall very heavily not only on importers but on Canadian manufacturers. The law has proved very onerous to manufacturers owing to the interpretation placed on the clause respecting Canadian tobacco. Instead of paying 4 cents duty per lb., a manufacturer manufacturing Canadian tobacco in the same way as the common roll and twist has, according to a ruling of the late Minister of Inland Revenue, been called upon to pay 14 cents duty. I understand that the question was submitted to the Minister of Justice, and that department, after a lapse of twelve months, decided that the ruling of the Minister of Inland Revenue was incorrect. A statement was made in the House the other night as to the revenue derived from Canadian tobacco, and the amount stated was perfectly ludicrous. To my personal knowledge three times that amount would be raised in Essex if the matter was put in proper shape. It is evident that in Lower Canada the law has not been enforced, and we are losing ten times the revenue collected during the last twelve months. I have received a letter from a manufacturer in Montreal, who knows that I represent a county in which tobacco is grown, and who has had dealings with some of the growers in Essex whose only market is Montreal. They have to send their product 600 or 700 miles, because the regulations of the department prevent Canadian tobacco from being manufactured in the same factory as imported leaf. This gentleman, Mr. Porcheron, writing to me respecting the debate that occurred on this subject, says :

“ Although Sir Leonard Tilley says the law was made to suit every one's interest, concerning home grown tobacco, I beg to differ with him, and give him ample proofs to the contrary. There is now lying in warehouses, Montreal, about fifty thousand pounds of Canadian tobacco, grown in in Essex County, which, under the present system, cannot be sold at any price, because the moment the tobacco was shipped from the grower it was subjected to a duty of 14 cents, while growers in the Province of Quebec are allowed to manufacture rolls and twist at 4 cents, and sell it directly to consumers for less money than the duty called for by the Government, which is 14 cents, when manufactured by a specially licensed manufacturer, and 20 cents when manufactured by a manufacturer of foreign tobaccos. Now, Sir, if you wish to know what a manufacturer of Canadian tobacco is, and what is his way of doing business, I shall tell you : these manufacturers buy their tobacco in the Province of Quebec, by one, two, or three hundred pounds, and manufacture it to retail again in competition with the grower. Of course, they must produce the same half cured tobacco, so as to make it cheap, and the Ontario tobacco is left aside. If the manufacturer of foreign tobaccos was allowed the privilege to make rolls and twist, for my part, I could dispose of 50,000 pounds a year, in a market which cannot be reached by small manufacturers. I cannot afford to keep two separate factories in order to comply with the present law, even if the duty was lowered to 4 cents. Hoping, Sir, that you will bring these facts before the Government, and try to get us the privilege to manufacture rolls and twist at 4 cents.”

There is no tobacco manufactory now in Quebec for the manufacture of Canadian tobacco ; hon. gentlemen have closed it up owing to the ruling of the late Minister of Inland Revenue, by which he decided that, although farmers might make rolls and twists on paying a duty of 4 cents, and sell them to grocers all over Quebec, yet when the tobacco was taken to a factory it immediately became subject to 14 cents per pound duty. I ask the President of the Council if it has not been decided by the Department of Justice that that ruling is incorrect.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. That fact is not within the knowledge of the public. I hope the fact will be made generally known, so as to encourage the growers of tobacco and afford the means of re-opening the only tobacco factory for the manufacture of the native article which existed in the Dominion, and which was closed in consequence of the late Minister's ruling. Mr. Porcheron wrote me again as follows :—

“ I think your views are correct as regards the effect of a four cent duty on home grown tobacco, but we want a law that would compel every grower to account for the quantity of tobacco grown. With a lower duty on all grades it would induce farmers to grow every kind of tobacco now required by the manufacturer, it would do away with illicit manufacturers, and, as you say, the revenue would not suffer. If a change is to take place, inspectors of tobacco would be a great benefit to growers as well as manufacturers. The inspection system in the United States is perfect, and gives such facilities to sell their tobaccos that, in fact, it would be impossible for us to buy if they were to do away with it. The inspector needs to have very little experience ; the work consists of taking out samples from hogsheads at different parts, to tie them together and to seal them ; these samples can be sent to tobacco manufacturers or brokers, and the tobacco disposed of at very little cost, while now, as the law stands, we have to take the seller's word that the tobacco is all right. Government warehouses should be opened in every central point where tobacco is grown. These warehouses would be the market to buy home grown tobacco ; the cost would be very small, if any, as the warehouse charges and inspection are generally charged to the buyer. Perhaps you are not aware of the quality of tobacco which is grown in this Province. I know one farmer who can get 35 cents per pound for rolls and twists, and he has 6,000 pounds of tobacco. I have seen the tobacco but could not tell the difference from Virginia tobacco. If the tobacco question was looked into thoroughly, I think we could start the finest industry in the Dominion. We could make enough for our own consumption and even enough to export. I have seen some Connecticut seed grown in Canada, suitable for cigar wrappers which would bring 40 cents to 50 cents if properly cured."

What I wish to urge on the Government, is that the manufacturers of the imported leaf should be allowed to manufacture Canada twist in their factories, and only pay the four cents duty charged on the grower who manufactures it, and that they should be allowed to mix it with the imported leaf by paying the fourteen cents duty. The finest quality of tobacco can be grown in the Lake Erie counties, and we have tobacco factories which are debarred from using it, because they have to pay twenty cents a pound of excise duty. Under these circumstances, our farmers are forced to seek the Montreal market, and when they pay the freight and the duty, they have very little left. One Essex warehousekeeper has 100,000 pounds of tobacco warehoused in Montreal unsaleable. The clause in the Bill relating to cigarettes, will have the effect of imposing on them the same duty as is imposed on cigars. On this point, I may read the following letter from a manufacturer of the imported leaf:—

"I have been informed that it is proposed to increase the excise duty on cigarettes to 40 cents per pound.

"The Inland Revenue Act for 1880 required that all cut tobacco should be put up in packages of one pound or less. We cheerfully complied with this requirement, although it entailed a large additional expense in the manufacture of our goods.

"The difference between putting up cut tobacco in pails and in twentieths of a pound (the popular 5 cent package) is fully 10 cents per pound.

"We now propose to further sub-divide the twentieth of a pound package by making it into twenty cigarettes. This will still further increase the cost of manufacturing.

"It was not thought necessary to increase the excise duty when cut tobacco was put up in twentieths of a pound packages. Why, then, should it be deemed necessary to increase the duty when, by further sub-dividing this package, the cost of manufacturing is increased. The tobacco is the same, the stamp used is of the same denomination. It cannot be claimed that there is any additional expense to the Government in this manufacture.

"But it is claimed that cigarettes should be classed with cigars and pay the same excise. A moment's consideration will prove the falsity of this reasoning. Cigarettes are made from 'cut tobacco,' cigars from 'leaf.' Cigarettes are sold by the package, usually ten or twenty in each; cigars are retailed singly, an ordinary cigar selling for the same as ten cigarettes. The retail price of cigarettes being so well established, viz. ten for ten cents or one cent each, it will be difficult, nay impossible, to increase the price. The margins now, to the wholesale and retail trade are so small that the manufacturer cannot increase his price, hence if any advance is made in the excise it will fall entirely on the manufacturer. The manufacturer is so taxed now, that he cannot stand more and continue his business. It is true that in the United States cigarettes are classed with cigars, but they by no means pay the same excise duty, cigars paying $6 per 1,000, and cigarettes $1.75 per 1,000.

"By a recent decision in one of the higher Courts of the United States, cigarettes were decided to be cut tobacco. It is proposed among manufacturers to act upon the strength of this decision in moving for a decrease in the excise to correspond to cut tobacco."

I would ask the attention of the hon. Minister to this letter. The writer is a large manufacturer who has recently established a manufactory at Windsor for the manufacture of tobacco on a very large scale. I would be sorry any action on the part of the Inland Revenue Department would cause this gentleman to close up his factory and go back to Detroit. I think his argument as regards the duty on cigarettes being made the same as on cigars is very forcible. I would ask the hon. Minister not to press this Bill through until further information is had.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. I must compliment the hon. member for Essex on the manner in which he always attends to the interests of his constituents, and to that great industry the Canadian grown tobacco. The hon. gentleman brought up again the question he raised some days ago, as to the inferiority of the position of Ontario grown tobacco compared with that of Quebec. According to the construction of the law, the hon. gentleman must see they are both on a perfectly equal footing. Under sub-section 10 of section 35 of the law of 1880, the manufacturer may use that tobacco on payment of 4 cents excise. My hon. friend also seems to think that, in Lower Canada, no duty is paid, that the law was evaded. There has been a wonderful change in that respect in our Province. A statement made from the records of the Inland Revenue Department shows that, under the law of 1878, when the duty was 10 cents, 1,420 lbs. paid duty; under the law of 1879-80, which imposes but 4 cents, per pound, 43,744 lbs. were grown, yielding a revenue of $1,749; and under the new provisions of 1880, and more stringent enforcement of the law, in seven months, 191,321 lbs. paid duty, yielding $7,652, equivalent, at same ratio of increase, to 327,000 lbs. and $13,120 duty for the year. In deference to the opinions expressed on both sides, I will take into consideration their objections and I move that the Committee, in meantime, report progress.

Mr. BOURBEAU. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the particular attention of the hon. President of the Council to the fact that farmers do not enjoy sufficient advantages to make them take out licenses to grow tobacco for the trade. The inspector, who has charge of the county, which I have the honor of representing, resides in Montreal. As I have already had the opportunity of stating, the counties which I represent are generally unlucky with regard to the patronage bestowed on them by the Government, and in this case, as well as in previous ones, we unfortunately have to state that our inspector resides in Montreal; now, it is somewhat difficult for the farmer of our county to procure licenses enabling them to grow tobacco for the trade, at 12½ miles distance. I mentioned the fact a few days ago to the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, when he told me it was the easiest thing for the farmers to write to Montreal for a license, but as a large number of farmers do not possess sufficient education to write a letter, I think that the suggestion of the hon. Minister will not suit them. I would therefore call the attention of the hon. President of the Council, who represents here the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, to the fact that there should be, in every parish where Canadian tobacco is grown, an official to give these licenses and to sell the stamps, which are to be affixed to tobacco going into the market. I would also call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that it was understood, last year, that the licenses issued to traders buying the tobacco in leaf to hand it over to manufacturers, should be issued gratuitously. But contrary to that understanding, the tobacco inspector who visited our county demanded the sum of $50 to grant those licenses, which the law has styled "brokers' licenses." We know that if we have to pay $50 to procure such licenses, the trader will refuse to take one out, as this trade does not bring in much to him. These licenses should, therefore, be issued to the traders gratuitously. Nevertheless, notwithstanding the understanding come to last year, the inspector who went through the County of Arthabaska, exacted $50 for issuing such licenses. I think there is a mistake here, and I hope the hon. Minister will give his particular attention to the fact, and that he will cause instructions to be given to inspectors so that in the future they will grant these licenses gratuitously, in the same way as they are granted to farmers. I also hope that farmers will be allowed to take out licenses in the parishes where they reside.

Committee reported.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

The following Bill from the Senate was read the first and second time:—

To amend the Indian Act of 1880.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

ACTS RESPECTING GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 96) An Act to amend and consolidate the laws relating to Government Railways.—(From the Senate.)

He said the Bill is designed to consolidate the several laws relating to the Government Railways, which have been collected and compared. There are some new sections, though not of any great importance, including one regulating the mode of obtaining lands.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain why it is thought necessary to amend and consolidate the laws as to Government railways, particularly with reference to questions of construction, just at the time when we are ceasing to have any Government railways?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). We still own a considerable amount of railways.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not speaking as to the working, but as to the construction of Government railways.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The law is still in existence, and it was thought better to include all those sections which may be applicable as to material and otherwise, to the roads already existing, in one. At any rate, in this progressive age and country we cannot tell how soon the Government may have railroads again.

(In the Committee)

On clause 11,

Mr. MILLS. We have been legislating in this way for a long time, but in my view it has all been wrong. I think the manner in which the title to such property shall be registered, or how it shall be conveyed to the Government by the railway company, should be in conformity with the local law. In my opinion all the provisions we have had for many years upon the subject of the expropriation of public lands are all ultra vires.

Mr. McDONALD. This question has already been raised, and perhaps with some force. But my opinion is, that in cases where the railway itself is within the competence of this Parliament all the consequences of that fact follow as a matter of necessity, and by constitutional right all the powers necessary to carry out the main intent rests with this Parliament. For instance, take the case of a company where the railway within the Province itself is declared to be for the general benefit of Canada; that gives control of the legislation with reference to that corporation to this Parliament. Surely the power of this Parliament would be incomplete and inoperative if we were not able, as of right, to declare in what form such private rights as were necessarily interfered with should be dealt with. This proposition has been very clearly stated by an eminent Judge of the Supreme Court, and it supports my view, that in all instances where private rights are affected by the general subject of legislation of which this Parliament is competent, the legislation by the Local Legislatures in reference to those private rights must be subordinate to the paramount power of this Parliament.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman assumes that the power given to the Government by the 91st section of the British North America Act carries with it all the implied powers, even though some of those implied powers may be expressly given in the 92nd section. The opinion of Judge Story was that where power is expressly given to one Legislature it cannot be impliedly claimed under some other power given to another Legislature. When the power is expressly given to the Local Legislature under the power to take property for the use of railways and canals, the hon. gentleman cannot claim to deal with the manner in which that property is to be registered or transferred. You have a right to take property, but you must take it in conformity with the provisions of the local law.

Mr. HADDOW. In my county there are a great number of cattle killed on the track of the Intercolonial Railway, and in most cases this is owing to insufficient fences. A gentleman who resides on the flat islands about ten miles above Campbellton, last summer lost a valuable mare which swam across the channel and got killed on the track owing to the fence being down. He wrote to Mr. Pottinger, the Superintendent, and Mr. Pottinger replied, stating that the mare was running at large, that she gained access to the track from land not belonging to the owner of the mare, that the law did not require fencing for the protection of any but the owner's property, and that he therefore refused to pay the man's claim. This mare would not have got on the track if it had been properly fenced, and when animals were killed in consequence of the railway being insufficiently fenced, it was but right that the owners should be paid.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Care must be exercised by the owners of cattle. It would never do to make the Government railway or any other railway liable for the consequences of the carelessness or indifference of the owners of property that might be injured. Otherwise it would be very easy for people living along the route, if he wanted a market for a cow or horse, to let it slip on the track at the right time, and his money is made. My hon. friend will see, by subsequent sections, that there is very little to complain of, that the railway company really do not ask for any greater exemption or protection than would any private proprietor. It would not be fair to ask the company to do more than this, to say to every proprietor: "We will give you a good fence all along your property where our line runs through your land; but where it does not, we will not be liable. Where your animals, through your carelessness in not putting up fences which you ought to put up to keep your cattle within your limits, escape at other portions of your property, either at the side lines or the rear of the property, we cannot be held responsible."

Mr. CAMERON (South Huron). Suppose the company's fences are allowed to be down on A's land, and B's animals get on A's land and thence on to the railway track, should not the company be held responsible, even though their fence was in good order through B's property? Now it is the duty of the company or Government to keep that fence up. If they fail in that duty, why should they not be responsible? Or take the case of a piece of ground that is a common, like an island, it is the duty of the Government to fence the railroad track as against that common. Suppose that animals are allowed to run at large, if my animal escapes to the railway track and receives injury, because the company keeps the fence down, should they not be held responsible? It would not be right to exempt them from responsibility. The Ministry ought to make provision for such responsibility.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). That proposition of my hon. friend (Mr. Cameron) would, if enacted, leave the railway open to all sorts of claims, and, I think, very improperly. In the case he puts, there appears a hardship; it would look as if the fence being down on the railway property indicated such negligence as should make the company liable. But suppose the railway fence is entirely what it ought to be along a neighbor's land, and he carelessly leaves a gate open letting an animal on the track?

Mr. CAMERON (South Huron). There is then no negligence of the company.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Surely in such a case the railway should not be liable.

Mr. CAMERON. No; there is no negligence. You have provided for that.

Mr. McDONALD. The principle on which the provision is based is this: that the company should not be liable for a defective fence, except where the injury is caused by the railway or the employes themselves. But for anything beyond that, they should not be liable.

Mr. CAMERON. I only say the railway company should be liable where it is guilty of negligence. You provide for the case of leaving a gate open in the next clause.

Mr. McDONALD. The next clause does not; it means the gate of the owner himself. It does not mean the gate of a neighbor. It refers to the carelessness of the owner himself.

Clause agreed to.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. WELDON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 55) to amend the Acts relating to the New Brunswick Railway Company.

Bill considered in Committee and reported.

Mr. WELDON moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I have no desire to take up the time of the House at this stage of the Session, nor have I any wish to prevent the passage of this Bill. It has been argued that I have some object in preventing this Bill from becoming law this Session; but that is not the case. I wish to see the Provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick joined by a railway, but I want that railway to come under such regulations as I believe are necessary for the well being of both Provinces, and in accordance with the spirit of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879. By the British North America Act of 1867 certain powers are conferred upon the Local Legislatures and certain other powers upon this Parliament, and I find that certain conditions are presented before a Railway Act may be incorporated by Act of the Dominion, namely, that such a railway must join the Provinces, and that it must be in the general interests of Canada. But though, by the preamble of this Bill, it is claimed as a Dominion, yet they only conform to such portion of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879 as suits their purpose. If that Act is good for one railway it is good for another, and though I have searched I have not been able to find any precedent for a local Railway Act coming to this Parliament, and acquiring powers separate and distinct from the Consolidated Railway Act. In Committee I managed to bring this company under the operation of the general law in regard to tolls, and had I not done so they could have charged such rates as they pleased, for their is no competition now, nor is there likely to be any, and such a monopoly would have been objectionable to the people along the line of the road. I find by a New Brunswick Railway Act that they have the right to expropriated lands, and when the parties whose lands they take want to be settled with, or to get any satisfaction, they cannot come and seek the benefits of the Consolidated Railway Act. I also object because it is perfectly competent for the Provincial Legislature to give them fresh rights. There has been an Act passed chartering the Central Railway of Canada, and that Act gives the company the right to amalgamate with other lines, so that this company could amalgamate with the Central, and pass through the various counties down to that of St. John. It is, of course, for the Government to say whether they will allow a Bill like this to break the established rules of Parliament—allow them, in fact, to take what they choose, and leave what they do not like. I find also in this charter a clause which ought certainly to be struck out, namely, clause 16, which is as follows:—

"And whereas the New Brunswick Land and Lumber Company (limited) incorporated under 'The Canada Joint Stock Companies' Act, 1877,' was formed in order to acquire the land grants of the said New Brunswick railway company, it shall be lawful for the said railway company to take and hold shares as stock in the said New Brunswick Land and Lumber Company (limited); and the resolution of the shareholders of the said railway company, passed at a special meeting on the 28th day of October last, to guarantee to the holders thereof the principal of and interest on any bonds executed by the said New Brunswick Land and Lumber Company (limited) as part of the consideration of the lands so acquired and purchased, and the guarantee of the said railway company endorsed on the said bonds in pursuance thereof, are hereby confirmed."

Consequently under this section they are enabled to become part of another corporation. How far this will extend I cannot tell; I do not find any authority which will allow one corporation to become part of another corporation. So far as I can see, where they have to assume the assets for their own protection they may hold them, but where they come to Parliament and state that they are able of themselves to become part of another corporation, I cannot find any precedent for it. Here are three legislations jumbled up into one—the Dominion legislation by this Parliament, the Canada Joint Stock Company Act, making them a colonization and lumber company, and, thirdly, the Acts of the New Brunswick Legislature giving them certain powers. Anybody seeking to get any satisfaction under this Act must look all round. Therefore, I urge on my hon. friend, and I do not think I am asking too much, to alter the clause so as to make the general provisions of the Consolidated Railway Act apply to this railroad. If this is not to be carried out hereafter, now is the time for the Government to take into serious consideration the question whether they will amend that Act, or whether they will bring this railway under it. If the Government think this road should not come under it, then I have marked my protest. On the other hand, if the Government having passed an Act which is to govern all railways, are going to abrogate their powers, then I have nothing more to say. I will read what the Consolidated Railway Act of Canada says in section 2:

"The said section shall also apply to every railway constructed, or to be constructed, under the authority of any Act passed by the Parliament of Canada, and shall, so far as they are applicable to the undertaking, and unless they are expressly varied or excepted by the special Act, be incorporated with the special Act, from part thereof, and be construed therewith as forming one Act."

I admit there may be exceptions in special legislation which might be excepted from this. That is all perfectly right. But it was never contemplated that the whole Act should be an exception except such portions of it as the Government wish to apply to New Brunswick. As the leader of the Government has come in since I began my remarks, I will repeat that I want it to be decided whether this railway is to come under the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879 or not. If it is not to come under that Act then he had better repeal it, or allow all railways to come under any Acts they like. But I have done my duty. If anything turns up hereafter, if there is a question of taxation in my county, if I find a neighboring county in which lands have been taken complaining that they cannot come to Parliament for justice, then I have done my duty. I will close by moving in amendment:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole House, with instruction to amend the same by adding the following section in place of section 6:

"The Consolidated Railway Act of Canada, 1879, shall apply to the railway company incorporated under this Act, and the Acts passed by the Legislature of New Brunswick incorporating the company, and the Acts inconsistent with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed."

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is a very important railroad for both the Province of New Brunswick and the Province of Quebec. My constituency and the neighboring constituency, represented by the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Grandbois) are more deeply interested in this road than any other counties. It runs 150 miles in those two counties. It is forty years since this road was projected. It has, so far, been built by our own resources, and we trust now that no obstruction will be made to the passing of this measure. I was much pleased at the conduct of the promoters of this Bill in Committee the other day. They seemed to be disposal to meet the propositions made by those interested in the Bill, in order to make it satisfactory to all parties. I think the Bill, as it stands now, is worthy the support of the members of this House. The people in those two counties have assisted to build the Intercolonial Railway and other Government works; they have paid dollar for dollar with the other people of the Dominion, and now when they are prepared to build this road at their own expense and with their own land, I think it would be unfair for this House to refuse to pass this measure.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) thinks this Bill is going to destroy this company for ever. It is, however, merely to amend the Act relating to the New Brunswick Railway Company, and his motion, if passed, will repeal the whole Act incorporating this company. This is a very important Bill in the interests of New Brunswick. This road taps a large American territory, and we obtain certain rights and privileges under the charter, and that charter we claim should not be interfered with, unless there is some general principle violated. The hon. gentleman has undertaken to point out that the Consolidated Railway Act should apply to the whole, and he puts forward a reason with regard to the lands. Now, all the lands that have been taken for the railway are subject to the Consolidated Railway Act. Further than that, we proposed in Committee to shorten the present line and take out the curves, and I proposed that that change should come under the Consolidated Railway Act. But where a charter is in existence it would be improper to apply an Act without seeing clearly whether its provisions might not interfere with rights and raise questions perhaps of doubtful legality. But so far as regards the proposal with respect to tolls, I adopted the suggestion of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and with respect to bridges to be built on the extension of the road, the Consolidated Railway Act will apply. Under these circumstances the House should not pass the amendment interfering with the rights of those persons who, as the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Costigan) has said, are doing a work which will not only prove a boon to New Brunswick, but will greatly benefit the whole Dominion.

Mr. LANGEVIN. This Bill was considered in the Railway Committee, and the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) stated his objections to it fully and forcibly, but failed to convince the Committee. A large majority of the Committee were against his amendment, and therefore the Bill was passed as it now appears before the House. The Bill has, however, since been amended somewhat in the direction of the objection taken by that hon. member, but the main objection is, that the clauses of the General Railway Act of 1879, and the amendments that may be passed this Session, do not apply to a railway which was incorporated by the Local Legislature of New Brunswick. The hon. gentleman wanted the General Railway Act to apply equally to a company incorporated in New Brunswick, and the extension of that company's charter as is now to be given by this Bill. The Committee were opposed to that, and there is a good deal of force in that contention of the promoters of the Bill, that they have certain powers and privileges under the Act of New Brunswick, and that those rights and privileges they wished to preserve intact, in so far as the railway incorporated by the Legislature of New Brunswick is concerned. They have no objection that the General Railway Act shall apply to the extension to Rivière du Loup. A clause to that effect has been inserted in the Bill, as also a clause by which the provisions of the General Railway Act, and the provisions respecting tolls, shall apply to the whole railway. That is one of the most important features, because the tolls are, by the General Railway Act, to be regulated by the Governor in Council; and such being the case, my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Domville) would do well to content himself with recording his objections to the Bill, and not divide the House.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do not see any provision in the Bill from which it appears that the Consolidated Railway Act will apply.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The sixth clause.

Mr. DOMVILLE. If the hon. gentleman, as a Minister of the Crown, thinks it would apply, one of my objections is removed.

Mr. BLAKE. The provision as to tolls applies to the whole road.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Another point I would like to ask is, how lands will be taken? Under the New Brunswick Act the company can take all the land they choose.

Mr. WELDON. If we take any new lands, we will take them under the Consolidated Railway Act.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Under these conditions I will withdraw the amendment.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I desire to call the attention of the House to some of the language used in the Act which appears to be unsuitable, because we undertake to repeal an Act of a Local Legislature. We use the word repeal with respect to certain clauses in the local Act, which is superseded by this Act. My impression is that there is something more than sentiment in this case. I deny that this Parliament has authority, or ought to assume authority, to repeal an Act of the Local Legislature when the Act passed has been within their competence. There is something offensive and unsuitable in the language used, and I believe the object can be attained by avoiding the use of words which imply the assumption of the power to repeal a local Act. The third section says: "The fifth section of the Act passed by the Local Legislature of New Brunswick is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor." That can be accomplished by simply saying that notwithstanding the fifth section the stock of the company shall be so-and-so. In the sixth section the same words are used, and the same object could be secured by using the word superseded. That is not perhaps a parliamentary or legal expression, but it accurately describes what we are doing. As this is the first time under my notice in which Parliament has undertaken directly and explicitly to repeal local Acts, I think it proper to call attention to the language used in the Bill. I do not want to complain of the Bill. It has been very fully and carefully considered by the Railway Committee, and, upon the whole, it is one in the public interest and one which should pass.

Mr. BLAKE. It does not seem to be necessary to do what the hon. gentleman proposes. It is admitted that we have power to do what is proposed, and the simple question is one of technical language. As I understand the law as it stands, we have declared a railway which was up to that moment within the exclusive control of the Provincial Legislature a railway for the general benefit of Canada, and we have taken it within our exclusive legislative control. From that expression "within our exclusive legislative control" it is quite clear that we have absolute power to legislate respecting it; and how that absolute power can exist unless we have power to repeal existing legislative provisions with respect to that corporation which we do not want to continue, I do not see. If "supersede" means something different from "repeal," let us understand distinctly what the difference is. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that, except in the class of cases in which we deal with Acts of the Local Legislatures passed before Confederation, but on subjects which come within the Federal Legislature after Confederation, we have not the power of repeal. But dealing with a corporation as to which we now have exclusive legislative power, it follows that we have power to repeal the local Acts touching that corporation as if they were Acts of the Federal Parliament. We have dealt with several companies in this way, among others, the Canada Southern Railway and Northern Railway Companies; we have constantly legislated, regardless of overriding Legislatures; and if we have the power which we have assumed, we may as well repeal.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Will the hon. gentleman say that we used the word "repeal" with reference to these local Acts?

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know what word we used, but I know what we did.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I should like very much to make a motion, but if the Minister of Justice and the other law authorities in the House think there is nothing in the objection, I will not press it further.

Mr. BOULTBEE. One of the hon. members stated that in clause 16, there is power given to this company to hold shares in some land company, which desires to purchase some lands which this railway company has acquired. It seems to me that we have not before granted the power to one company to hold shares in another, as I think it would have the effect of giving this company a sort of double bonding power, which might become injurious.

Bill read the third time and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were severally read the third time and passed:

Bill (No. 85) to incorporate the British and Colonial Insurance Company (from the Senate)—(Mr. Beaty.)

Bill (No. 72) to incorporate the European, American and Canadian Cable Company (Limited) (from the Senate)—(Mr. Currier.)

Bill (No. 42) to amend the Act incorporating "The International Railway Company.—(Mr. Brooks.)

Bill (No. 74) to incorporate "The Napierville Junction Railway and Quarry Company" (from the Senate)—(Mr. Coursol.)

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

House resolved itself into Committee for the further consideration of Bill 96—To amend and consolidate the laws relating to Government Railways.—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Sub-section 29, Clause 80, is new, it provides that any person refusing to produce his ticket or pay his fare, when requested to do so by the conductor, shall forfeit $20, and in conviction shall be imprisoned in the common jail for a period not exceeding 30 days.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this a general law?

Mr. McDONALD. No; it is a new proposal.

Mr. BLAKE. Why should we make that a crime on a Government railway which is not a crime on a private railway?

Mr. McDONALD. It is a fraud if persons with no money to pay their fare go on a Government or any other train, for which they should be punished.

Mr. BLAKE. My main proposition is, that the Criminal Law ought to be general in its application, and that if it is good for the Government railways, it is good for all the railways, and therefore we ought to make it general.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. McDONALD. I cannot see the force of the hon. gentleman's reasoning. We are dealing with public property, and say that any person attempting fraud in regard to it, should be punished in a certain way. That proposition seems consistent with what is proper and right, irrespective of the way in which private persons may think proper to deal with their own property and rights. I do not see why the managers of public property should not insist upon some such clause to guard the public interests.

Mr. MILLS. If the Government enter upon a commercial pursuit, like the running of a railway, there is no more reason why the non-payment of a fare to it should be made a criminal offence, than the non-payment of a private company. You might make the same regulations with regard to a ferry boat or any other conveyance. It is not the particular ownership or control of a conveyance that should settle the penalty, but the nature of the act itself. One member of a family might have the tickets of all the rest, and his failure or refusal to produce them might be taken advantage of by a disagreeable conductor to subject them all to fine or imprisonment, under the proposed regulation. The 59th section is open to exactly the same objection. It is proposed to fine a person $-0 for walking upon a Government railway track, though no such regulation exist with regard to any other railway. There is no more impropriety in walking upon a track owned by the Government than on one owned by private parties. It seems to me this is an extraordinary provision to insert in this Bill; if it should appear anywhere it should be in the General Railway Act.

Mr. JONES. I think that such a clause would be liable to operate harshly in this country. It would be entirely different in England where the trains are fenced off and where no one is allowed upon the platform without a ticket.

Mr. McDONALD. The clause is not, of course, an essential one, and, with the consent of the House, I have no objection to striking it out.

In answer to Mr. MILLS,

Mr. McDONALD. I do not think the 59th clause will operate harshly, because it is better to fine a man for walking on a railway than that he should be killed or maimed.

Mr. MILLS. Why should the clause apply to Government railways more than to others?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the provision is a good one that is no reason why it should be objected to here.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 107,

Mr. BLAKE. If it is within our legislative competence to declare that the money in the hands of this officer is not subject to attachment, execution, or garnishee, it necessarily follows that the Judge will not, if we make that law, make an order for its garnishment, etc., and it seems to be surplusage.

Mr. McDONALD. The Judges do it now. They see there is no law for this garnishee, and therefore the order is made.

Mr. BLAKE. If we have power to make the first part of the clause, it renders the second part unnecessary. The latter part ought to be struck out, and I am not sure but the former part too.

Mr. McDONALD. It is merely directory.

On clause 110,

In answer to Mr. MILLS,

Mr. McDONALD. This provision means any Court having jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLS. You are undertaking to provide for procedure in Court. I do not see why these clauses should be here at all.

Mr. McDONALD. If we have legislative competence to enact the first part of the clause, we surely have power to direct in what mode that law shall be carried into effect.

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman proposes to use the Courts for the administration of the laws of Canada, he might do the same thing with regard to bills and notes.

Mr. McDONALD. The clause says the Judge who shall be called upon to act, is a Judge having jurisdiction in the matter, so that if my hon. friend be right that the Local Legislatures have not jurisdiction, then the application would ex necessitate be to the Court of Exchequer.

Mr. BLAKE. That does not touch the point, because the local Courts have jurisdiction as a rule, to execute the laws of Canada, and we establish our own Courts only when we suppose that our laws are not sufficiently executed by the local Courts. The administration of justice and the procedure in civil cases are under the control of the Local Legislatures, and you intend to execute this law by means of a local Court, the procedure of which is under the control of the Local Legislature, and you must leave the procedure in control of that Legislature which creates and carries on the Court, else we find one set of procedure in cases which come to this Parliament, and another set of procedure in other cases. It seems to me that all the civil suits which are brought by any Court in any Province must be brought in accordance with the procedure in these Courts which are of local creation.

Mr. McDONALD. The objection urged by my hon. friend cannot prevail. Assuming, as I do, that the position of the hon. leader of the Opposition is sound, it is still within the terms of the clause. Assuming that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is right, still it is within the terms of the clause, because in any case the Judge having jurisdiction under the Local Legislature Acts. If the Exchequer Judge only has jurisdiction he acts; so that the terms of the clause meet the objection in every way.

On clause 111,

Mr. BLAKE. I think this is open to the objection I made, unless you intend to confine these actions to Courts created by the Parliament of Canada. It is not intended, I am sure, to prevent actions from being brought in all the places where actions may be brought in the local Courts. It must be intended to permit these actions to be brought there or else there is denial of justice. Being brought in the local Courts, the procedure must be regulated by the Local Legislatures.

Mr. McDONALD. In order that I may look into this, we will allow this and the five following clauses to stand.

Committee reported.

MILITIA AND DEFENCE.

Bill (No. 99) further to amend the Acts therein mentioned respecting the Militia and Defence of the Dominion of Canada—(Mr. Caron)—was read the second time, considered in Committee, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House further considered resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

On resolution 150 (March 10),

Salaries and Disbursements of Fishery Overseers and Wardens.....	$92,800 00
--	-------------

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT asked for an explanation respecting the close season for lobsters.

Mr. POPE (Queen's). The question of extending the season for fishing lobsters has been raised by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Killam.) During the last two years the lobster establishments have very largely increased, and there is consequently danger that the large area of ground will be over-fished and the fishery destroyed. I have endeavored, in the regulations prepared by the Department of Fisheries, to meet the views and interests of those engaged in the fisheries, and they were adopted after I had consulted very nearly all hon. members from the Maritime Provinces representing the districts where lobsters are caught. The hon. member for Yarmouth spoke to me to-day on the subject, and asked that the fishermen be allowed to take them on the south side of Nova Scotia at the same time as they were allowed on the north shore of New Brunswick and the coast of Prince Edward Island. I do not think that is generally wanted. I do not think it would be fair to the fishermen in the Gulf, on the north shore of New Brunswick and the coast of Prince Edward Island, because we know that very often the ice, particularly in spring, lodges on the shore and lobsters are caught in the ice. Until the ice moves out lobsters will not move into shallow water. It is often the last week of May or first week in June before the ice leaves those shores and lobsters can be caught, whereas on other coasts they can be caught in April. The fishermen can fish very much earlier on the south side of Nova Scotia, than on the south side of New Brunswick, the coast of Prince Edward Island, or the eastern coast of Cape Breton. The regulations were such last year, that they could fish inside the Gut of Canso until the 10th of August, whereas, on the outside, about the shores of Nova Scotia, they were obliged to stop on the 1st of August. Many of the men largely engaged in this business, who first complained of the Order in Council, were the loudest afterwards in approval of it. This description of fishery is so important in Prince Edward Island, that the lobster exports of that small Province last year amounted to about $750,000, and there are about forty now establishments now being erected there. There is no disposition on the part of the Government to fix any rules or regulations which might bear hardly on the fishermen; but it is absolutely necessary, in their own interests, that there should be some restrictions, so that this industry should not be destroyed. This matter should be fully considered; and as it is my desire, as far as possible, to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen on both sides who are interested in this business, I shall be glad to hear their views and suggestions. If it is found to be in the general interest that the Order-in-Council should be amended and the time changed, there is no reason why that should not be done.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I am glad to hear the hon. Minister express his views in the way he has done. Last year I sent a large number of petitions to the department from the fishermen interested in this industry, asking for certain changes in the close season. They contend that they are really only permitted to fish about two months and a half in the year. On the south shore of Nova Scotia they did very little fishing before the 20th of April or the 1st of May, and after the 1st or 15th of July the lobster becomes soft shelled and the catch is very small indeed. I know that, owing to the condition of the markets abroad, many of the packers of lobsters find it difficult to carry on their business profitably. Last year the hon. Minister extended the time of fishing from the 1st to the 10th of August, and many of the packers made arrangements to fish and pack only until the 1st of August. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he can state positively whether the ten days' extension will be given this year.

Mr. POPE. I regret that I cannot give a positive answer to the hon. member. A great deal will depend on the members themselves who represent these interests. Last season those engaged in the business were asked to get together, and decide what they wanted, and the unanimous decision of the packers appears to be that they did not want to be stopped in the middle of the season. Their principal objection was that if they were stopped in midsummer their men would become scattered so that they could not get them back again, and their season's fishing would be lost. They, therefore, asked, rather than that the close season should remain as it was, that it should be from the beginning of July to the middle of August.

Mr. FLYNN. Regulations which will suit certain districts will not suit others. In some places the fishermen cannot begin until the first of May, and, therefore, they have only May, June and July. I think it would be more satisfactory if they were allowed to fish in May, June, September and October; they would then have fishing for four months and a close season of eight months. The fishermen have to go to great expense in fitting out for lobster fishing, and while they are engaged in it they cannot engage in other fishing. Therefore it is difficult for them to make a living for themselves and their families if they are allowed to fish only three months out of the twelve. There are two interests to be considered in this matter—the interests of the fishermen and the interests of the packers. It may be to the interest of the lobster packers that there should be a close season; but I contend that the interests of the packers should not influence the Government in the matter. Their object should be to have such a close season as will prevent the destruction of that fishery, and promote the interests of the fishermen. By giving the fishermen the months of May and June in the spring, and the months of September and October in the fall, that would allow eight months for a close season which would be quite enough to protect the lobsters.

Mr. OGDEN. I do not exactly understand the nature of this discussion, as I was not in my seat when it began. As near as I can understand it, certain hon. gentlemen want to extend the time for lobster fishing. I cannot see why they should ask for this extension when the interests of the packers and fishermen are so closely identified that you cannot separate them. There is a great deal of difference in the way of preserving fish and lobsters. The former can be cured with salt, dried in the sun, or smoked, or in some other way preserved for a length of time and then taken to market, whereas the lobster must, within a few hours from the time it is taken from the sea, be boiled and canned. If there are no canners to take this valuable shell-fish off the fishermen's hands, there is no sale for the article; consequently, the fishermen and the packers must work together, and I have yet to hear of one packer who is anxious to have the time for fishing extended one day. Last year, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries saw fit to extend the time ten days, making the close season ten days less than it was the previous year; yet I do not know of a single packer on the coast of Nova Scotia who took advantage of those ten days. They all promptly closed operations on the 10th August. The extension was not asked for by the packers of Nova Scotia, and I think was only taken advantage of by a few packers in Prince Edward Island. From what little I know of the business, I know it was never in so depressed a state as at present. I have in my possession letters from packers in London who have gone there from New Brunswick, saying that this year is going to be the hardest year they ever experienced; they are only sorry they have to pack during the whole season. If the packers cannot sell their fish, it is of no use for the fishermen to catch them. I have had communication with nearly every packer in Nova Scotia and many in Prince Edward Island, and I have yet to learn of one who will say he wants an extension of time. For my part, I would be perfectly willing there should be no restriction, but I know that all along the coast of Nova Scotia, where we have been packing from ten to fifteen years, the lobsters have become scarce in numbers and diminished in size, so that the cost of packing there is nearly double that in Prince Edward Island where some forty establishments have been started this year. These establishments propose doing a flourishing business, and may, perhaps, pack and sell their goods at a profit, because the cost of production is one-half there what it is in Nova Scotia, where the fishery, owing to want of protection, has become thoroughly exhausted. It matters but little to me whether you give a close season or not. I am a packer, yet I represent a fishing constituency, and I believe that every step I have taken in this House to advocate a close season, I have taken in the interests of the fishermen. At three different places where I do business, I have erected valuable factories, with valuable machinery, and to remove that machinery to some other place would render it almost worthless. If we continue to exhaust the fish supply in those localities the business will leave them, and the men who depend on that industry will have to leave also. It is to my interest and the interest of our people that this valuable industry should be perpetuated. In order to do that, we must have a close season that will protect the fisheries. I know that the steps the hon. Minister of Marine has taken since he took charge of the department have been in the interests of the fishermen, the packers and the country at large. I hope no change will be made. If you rescind the Order in Council which to-day regulates the lobster fishery interest, in less than three years you will not have in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island a lobster to protect, and there will be no necessity to legislate on this matter at all. I think the present legislation is about right. Hon. gentlemen who ask to have the time changed cannot thoroughly understand the question. I do not pretend to say that I am right and everybody wrong, but I have had twenty-five years experience in the matter and ought to know something about it now; but whether I do or not, everything I have said or done has always been in the interests of my constituents and of the country. I hope that for the present there will be no change made in the regulation. The hon. Minister may see fit to make a change and the House endorse his action; but, nevertheless, I believe such change will not be beneficial.

Mr. HADDOW. I have always contended that the month of September was most important to the packer, and if by giving that month to the packer and the fisherman, it becomes necessary to take away any month, I would suggest that operations be closed from the middle of July to the middle of August. Let them, during that season, be prohibited from packing or canning, and take September instead. This suggestion must commend itself to any person who considers the matter, because in the hot season it is difficult to can the goods in a manner likely to be most successful. We do not find, on our coast, the Baie des Chaleurs, the fish in such a large quantity then, and they are besides fuller and better in September.

Mr. BRECKEN. The subject matter under discussion seriously affects Prince Edward Island. Last year we exported as much as $750,000 worth from the Island. I have been in communication with gentlemen who are engaged in this business and the difficulty, according to them, is to ascertain what is the proper time to establish a close season. In the interest of this very important and wealthy branch of trade, it would be well for those engaged in it to meet and give their representatives some idea of their experience. I am aware that the temperature that would be conducive to the interest of the fisheries in Nova Scotia would not suit those of Prince Edward Island. It is very difficult to ascertain when the swarming season commences. I think, really, the responsibility does not rest upon the Minister of Marine half so much as upon those engaged in this industry. We had a very large export from Prince Edward Island last year; and I think there will be the coming year, perhaps, thirty or forty factories established. If the trade would give their representatives the benefit of their experience, we should all know how to legislate in its interest. If this industry is not protected, it must be very soon exhausted.

On resolution 75,

Canadian Pacific Railway, between Thunder Bay and Red River, including Pembina Branch...$3,285,000 00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We propose a reduction of that item by $28,000.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. In respect of what?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is proposed to reduce the item for the Pembina Branch—$50,000—by $28,000, making it $22,000.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What will the policy of the Government be with reference to this Thunder Bay Branch—to the imposition of tolls? Does the Government intend, or does the First Minister conceive they have the power to fix the tolls now on such portions of the road as they may hand over, and later as the road is finished, then to have a new set of tolls for the new branch? The question is one of very great importance. I understand he thinks they can do it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. So, in voting this money for the Thunder Bay Branch, the question of tolls from Winnipeg or Selkirk to Thunder Bay will not necessarily be fixed until the whole of the branch is constructed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly not.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I presume the hon. gentleman has given full consideration to this matter?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. At Winnipeg or Selkirk several railroads will probably ramify together. But I need not tell him that tolls which might justly enough be levied on the portion west of Winnipeg ought never to be allowed by the Government to be levied on that portion extending eastward from Winnipeg and Selkirk to Thunder Bay. This is a matter upon which the House at large would no doubt like to hear the Minister state the intention of the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad the hon. gentleman has asked the question, because it affords me an opportunity of stating the intention of the Government in that regard. The position of the road will be annually, and indeed continually altered until it is finally completed. At every hundred miles added there are considerations connected with the road, and which would make it inexpedient and impossible that one scale of rates should apply. So the Government will from time to time approve of a scale of tolls for a limited period. No tolls can be collected unless an Order in Council is passed, and any Order in Council passed will fix the tolls for a limited period—say for a year and then they must come again. By continually keeping a short limit, the Governor in Council keeps a continuous check until the road is finished, when, of course, there will be an adjustment of the tolls.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. This is an important announcement and no doubt a proper one, but can that be done in strict conformity with the terms of the Act. As I read it, if you fix a scale of tolls for any distance, no matter how short, that scale remains fixed for all time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; because, if you pass an Order in Council fixing the tolls for a limited period, there is no Order in Council after that period expires, and they must apply for a new one. Looking at the clause, the power might be held to be an exhaustive one, but it will not be so unless you give an unlimited time.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that the contracts are let for the construction of the missing link between Lake Superior and Red River. What about the charges to be made to the Government or the contractors on rails and other supplies carried over the extremities while the work is going on?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government will see that arrangements are made for the carriage of this freight before the tolls are fixed. That will be fully taken care of.

Mr. ANGLIN. I must say that I am astonished at the statement which was made by the leader of the Government with regard to the Orders in Council fixing the rates of tolls, though, I shall be delighted if his view should be the correct view. It is a view, at all events, which is now propounded for the first time. During the whole discussion of the subject we argued on the assumption that the rate of tolls once affirmed of by the Governor in Council must remain until the Company had earned more than ten per cent on the capital whatever that capital might be held to be.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I made the same statement during the discussion.

Mr. ANGLIN. It appears to me, though the right hon. gentleman is a much better authority than I pretend to be, that the Statute does not clothe the Governor in Council with any such powers—powers which would enable the Government to fix the rate of tolls arbitrarily, from year to year and from month to month. It seems strange that this doctrine was not propounded by anybody during the discussion of the contract.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I stated distinctly before, that there would be a limitation. It must be borne in mind that the collectors, if they act under an Order in Council, must accept that Order in Council and be bound by it. They cannot collect tolls except by an Order in Council, and that Order in Council prescribes the tolls for a limited time, there is no Order in Council after that time expires.

Mr. ANGLIN. Does my hon. friend really interpret the law so as to give him powers arbitrarily to withhold assent to a scale of tolls, which might be a fair and reasonable scale, unless the parties submitting them to Council were willing to accept the limitation? The Governor in Council certainly has large powers, but I really think he does not properly and legitimately possess any power of that kind—a power which says, if you do not accept our approval of a scale of tolls for a certain time, we will not give you our approval at all.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course it is clear that the power which the hon. gentleman says he is going to exercise, is a power which he must have under the general law, or he cannot have it at all. It is, therefore, a proposition that under the general law it is competent for the Government of the time to approve of any Tariff of tolls brought forward by any railway company absolutely. I hold that it is a proposition which is opposed to the whole spirit of the law on that subject, because the law provides that the first Tariff of tolls shall not come in force until approved of by the Government, and, after that time, there is power to collect rates. But as to the Canadian Pacific Railway, there is an express provision that that power of revision shall be subject to the clause which limits the power of Parliament, and that clause says that the tolls may be revised only when the income exceeds 15 per cent., or as it is now to be altered, 10 per cent. Therefore, neither the Governor in Council nor Parliament can interfere with the terminal tolls once established until more than 10 per cent. of the money or capital has been realized by the company. That is the theory of the clause, and I apprehend it will not be found to be lawful for the Government to obtain an additional power of having a fresh Tariff submitted to it, from time to time, by saying: "We do not approve of this Tariff of tolls to last until it has reached an income of more than ten per cent., but we approve of it for a month or a year, and at the end of that time our approval ceases and the Tariff ends." I do not think that will be legal; I should be glad if it were, but I think the hon. gentleman, in order to make it lawful will have to alter the law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not intend to alter the law. This power the Government will exercise, and as it is in the interest of the public, and as I know the Syndicate will not object to it, there is no use arguing the question, there is the power.

Mr. BLAKE. That is just the point, it is not there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is the law. If the Government have not the power to make the stipulations I mentioned, then the law does not authorize it. But from my point of view we have that power. The Order in Council should be taken as a whole, we intend to exercise it, and I do not suppose the hon. gentleman will object to the exercise of it if it be in the way of protecting the interest of the public against a cast iron scale of Tariff which may be very reasonable now, but which may be very unreasonable ten years hence.

Mr. MILLS. This is a good reason for inserting for the provisions in the contract, but it is not a good reason in support of the line of policy the hon. gentleman proposes to take. He estimates that they are going to exercise a power which the law does not give them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I say it does. We differ.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman knows the Governor in Council has just such power as the Act gives. The Act gives the power of regulating the tolls, and having regulated the tolls it fixes the time when they may regulate the tolls again. If the Act fixes the time the Government cannot fix a different time. The Act provides that when the tolls are once fixed, they are so to remain until the company derives a certain profit from them; when that time arrives, then the Government may intervene again. If the hon. gentleman is right in his construction he has the power of defeating that provision of the contract which provides that the Government shall not intervene until a certain toll is obtained. The hon. gentleman cannot, by imputation, import into the contract a provision that will defeat the express right secured by the contract. If the hon. gentleman does this in the public interest, then it would have been in the public interest if he had accepted those amendments that we suggested from this side.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There were no such amendments suggested on that side of the House. We have changed position altogether. The hon. gentlemen opposite are now fighting the battle of the Syndicate, and saying that the Government shall not have power to keep the tolls down.

Mr. MILLS, No.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events it is clear that if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company agree to that arrangement they are bound by it, so that really the hon. gentlemen are actually telling the Syndicate not to agree to any such reasonable arrangement. That is the argument of the three hon. gentlemen who have spoken.

Mr. MILLS. We are just discussing what the law is.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. We are discussing a legal question. All on this side are agreed in desiring that the First Minister should do as he says if he has the power. It is a mere question as to whether he has or has not that power; that depends on the construction of the law which I will not pretend to discuss. But I understand from him distinctly, that he does not intend to fix the tolls on the whole road at once; and I understand from him, although not quite in so specific a manner, that, as regards the Thunder Bay Branch from Winnipeg or Selkirk, eastward, he purposed to take special care in regard to that being a road over which several lines might run, that the tolls on that part should be reasonable. I presume he could fix, in any case, different rates of toll for different portions of the road.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That, I presume, will be the case. The company must submit their scheme of toll to the Government, and their adjustment or readjustment must be determined by discussion with the company, and after the taking of evidence. It would be quite absurd now to fix the scale of tolls for a railroad which will not be built until 1891. It is quite absurd to suppose that an Order in Council passed now to protect the Pembina Branch would protect the whole line of road from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

On resolution 8,

Department of the Interior $54,500 00

Mr. MILLS moved in amendment:

That the said resolution be not now agreed to, but that it be resolved, That the estimate for the inside service of the Department of the Interior for the year 1876-78, including the Indian Branch was $44,561, and for the Police Branch then under the control of the Secretary of State, was $2,700, making together $47,260; that the estimate for the same service for the year 1881-82 is $72,080; that this sum is excessive; that the staff is already larger than any explanation given in this House warrants; and that the said item be reduced by the sum of $7,000.

Surveys of Dominion Lands..... $300,000 00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) moved :

That the following words be added thereto : " And that no part of the said sum of $300,000 be expended in publishing the speech, or speeches, of any member of the House of Commons, as appears by the Public Accounts to have been done, with part of the money appropriated in 1879 under this head, by the publication of a speech, or speeches, delivered by Messrs. Plumb, Langevin, White, and Sir Charles Tupper."

Amendment negatived on a division.

SIR RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. We ought to know whether it is the intention of the Government to devote any portion of this vote to the circulation of literature of that kind. The House should know whether the Government has resolved on the policy of publishing speeches of independent members of Parliament. For the publication of speeches of members fair ground might be had, and it is doubtful whether any but the Budget speech should be published.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As a general rule, the Finance Minister's speech might well be published. The hon. gentleman has always been of that opinion, because he has always taken care that his speeches were published and at an increased cost each year. The price was very modest at first, but every year it increased as the speech became more valuable with the experience the hon. gentleman gained. I take it this is a railway and a Pacific Railway session, and the speeches of the Minister of Railways on that subject are quite as important, and the public look for them just as eagerly, as even for the most eloquent and elaborate speeches of the late Finance Minister. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the Government will only publish information that they think, on their responsibility as a Government, will be really useful to the country and which the country will look for.

On resolution No. 205,

To pay Mr. D. Girouard for railway ties lost in transit in 1872..... $2,640 00

Mr. GIROUARD (Kent). Mr. Speaker, before that item, which has already given rise to some discussion, and the correctness of which leaves more or less to be desired, is passed, I hope I shall be allowed to say a word concerning this claim which I have against the Government, for losses sustained in 1872 in the fulfilment of a contract to supply a quantity of ties to the Intercolonial Railway; for I would like, in so far as it lies in my power, to dispel from the minds of certain hon. members whatever doubts they may seem to have with regard to my transactions with the Government at that time. In 1871, I obtained from the Government a contract to supply ties on a few sections of the Intercolonial. I obtained that contract, as may be seen from the dates, long before I had the honor of being elected a member for the county I now represent. It is not the case, as one has sought to make people believe, that I was favored by the Government when getting that contract, for I got it as being the lowest tenderer; as such, it seems to me that I had the right to see that justice be rendered me, i.e., that the contract should be awarded to me. Now, it appears that that misfortune was the cause that not only did the former Government refuse to recognize my just claim during a term of five years, but also the cause that I incurred the hatred of a member who sits on the other side of the House, and who seems to take an interest in damaging me in the eyes of my constituents. I think I may dispense with entering into details with regard to that claim; the explanations given the other night by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Costigan) and the documents now before the House, referring to the transaction and adducing testimony worthy of belief from people explaining it, are sufficient to prove conclusively that I am entitled to my claim. But, Mr. Speaker, I must here say that, for some time past, I have been subjected to unworthy attacks on the part of a newspaper published at St. John, N.B., which paper, it is said, is the organ of a member sitting on the other side of the House. That paper seems interested in damaging me in the eyes of my constituents, but as its mendacious accusations are not worth the paper they are printed on, I leave all its vile calumnies to the contempt of those who have ever honored me with their trust. I may, perhaps, be allowed to read a paragraph, or rather an article, published in the St. John, N.B., Freeman, dated 7th August last :

Railway Sleepers.

" A correspondent of the Telegraph, who styles himself ' Economy,' calls upon Mr. Anglin to state what he knows about the claim made by Mr. F. Turgeon on the late Government, and now, it is said, renewed. It is not necessary that Mr. Anglin should make a newspaper statement in this case, as the facts are well known. Mr. F. Turgeon, who had a sub-contract from Mr. Girouard, M. P., then acting, as was supposed, for M. Renaud, M. P., alleged that of the sleepers got out by him, and placed on or near the railway track, several thousands were rejected by the inspectors; that Mr. Girouard refused to take those rejected sleepers off his hands, or to pay him for them; that they lay where he had placed them and remained his property; that they were subsequently taken by parties working on the railroad and laid on the road. If this statement, which Mr. Girouard at first contradicted directly and positively, and afterwards sustained by an affidavit, were true, Mr. Turgeon would, undoubtedly be entitled to the fair value of those sleepers he claimed, we believe, about $1,200; but Mr. Brydges on making enquiry, reported that no sleepers belonging to Mr. Turgeon, no sleepers that had not been bought and paid for, were used on the road. Repeated applications and enquiries always led to the same result, and Mr. Stevenson, the Intercolonial Railway paymaster, when he was questioned on the subject, stated that all the sleepers at first rejected on that section—including those " culls " for which Mr. Turgeon claimed, were subsequently taken and paid for at a lower price. He stated, moreover, that Mr. F. Turgeon spoke to him more than once about those culls, and never pretended that they had not been paid for, but complained that the price Mr. Girouard allowed him for those culls was too small. If the statement of Mr. Turgeon is true he should be paid. If the report of Mr. Brydges, based on the evidence of the officers of the railroad, is well founded; if Mr. Stevenson has not misrepresented the facts of the case most grossly, any payment now made on account of those sleepers would be most improperly paid. Perhaps Mr. Simard, who, it is said, has been sent to enquire into this and other matters, may discover something that neither Mr. Brydges nor any of the officers of the railroad, nor Mr. Stevenson, knew. There are several other claims made by persons in Bathurst parish and Petit Rocher for injury done to their lands and houses, for cattle killed on the railroad, etc., which certainly are not without merit."

Now, Mr. Speaker, thinking that the editor of that paper was without the information I had already given him on the subject, I took the liberty of writing a confidential note to him, which he communicated to his readers. This is what he writes :

" EDITORIAL NOTE.—Those Sleepers.—Mr. Girouard, M. P., irritated, it would seem, by the Freeman's statement, that he was acting, as was supposed, for A. Renaud, M. P., in supplying sleepers for one of the sections of the Intercolonial Railway, has written a very angry and a very foolish letter, in which he tries to be very insolent. Although he marked the letter private, in justice to him, we publish his denial of the statement, and allow it to go to the public for what it is worth.

" He says: ' I never was acting for Mr. Renaud, for my contract was a bona fide one, and not a Government favor. I got my contract from the Government, not as a favor, but because my contract was the lowest one.'

" Mr. Girouard also says that he does not think that the statement, which he made respecting the sleepers, for which the sub-contractor claims payment, are contradictory."

Now I think, that in order to obtain justice, considering that the editor of that paper took the liberty of publishing a private letter, I will read to this House the interesting portions of that private letter. This is what I wrote on the 6th August, 1880 :

" [Private.]

" BUCTOUCHE, N.B., 6th August, 1880.

" Hon. T. W. Anglin, M. P.,
St. John, N.B.:

" DEAR SIR—I noticed in the last issue of your paper (dated 7th inst.) an editorial note in re railway ties. I must say that note did more or less surprise me. Your insinuations that Mr. Girouard, M. P., then acting, as was supposed, for Mr. Renaud, M. P., are, I may say erroneous, uncalled for and very improperly made.

"You will please remember that I never was acting for Mr. Renaud then M. P., nor for you when speaker in the House of Commons. I never was a tool for Mr. Renaud nor you in order that a large sum of money may also be misappropriated (as you say) for 'Culls' or I say 'Printing Jobs,' for my contract was a bona fide one, and not obtained as a Government favor. Your paper stated that 'I at first contradicted directly and positively, but afterwards sustained by affidavit Mr. F. Turgeon's statement.'

"What I stated in that affidavit which I have made at your instance is, as far as I recollect, this: 'That Mr. Turgeon had sleepers delivered on the line not received nor paid for by me and that if the said quantity of ties had been used by the Government, I considered he was (Mr. Turgeon) in equity entitled to be paid'—I do not see anything wrong in this—I got my contract from the Government not as a favor, nor as being in partnership with any one, but because my tender was the lowest one.

"You insinuated that I have made two statements in contradiction one to the other. What I have stated with reference to Mr. Turgeon's claims I am still prepared to maintain it.

"Yours very truly,
"G. A. GIROUARD."

I read that private letter because the editor of the St. John, N.B., Freeman thought fit to quote only that part of it which suited his purpose. As a matter of course, I never acted for Mr. Renaud, any more than I did for the Freeman, for the Toronto Globe, or La Patrie, which seek to make a scandal of this transaction. La Patrie pretends that I was silent for five years. That is false. The documents before the House prove that I renewed my claim in 1876, 1877, 1878 and 1879. As to the remarks made by the Globe, I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that I am called upon to answer the malicious and vile insinuations of the organ of the Opposition. It is sufficient to be acquainted with the spirit that presides over the editing of that paper to deter one from answering it. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) told us the other night that I had informed him that Mr. Costigan, the hon. member for Victoria, had received a certain sum of money belonging to me, without being authorized thereto by me. Mr. Speaker, I assert that this is false. I deny it in toto. I never said anything of the kind to the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin). Now, if we examine the report before this House, I see that Mr. Brydges has stated that my contract was cancelled in 1873. I have to say that I never at any time received any notice that my contract had been cancelled in 1873. Moreover, it is easy to see from the correspondence that followed, that this is a mistake on his part. I think that this legitimate claim, which the Government has just recognized, exercises in a special manner the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin); the integrity of that hon. gentleman must of necessity compel him to be thus exercised. When one has been Speaker of the House of Commons, and when one has dabbled in jobs to the extent of being obliged to resign both Speakership and membership, one is certainly entitled to rail against those who tardily receive the legitimate value of their work. Mr. ex-Speaker is displeased that one should pay me what is due me, but he was as silent as a corpse when he pocketed some twenty thousand dollars for having printed a few blank forms for the Post Office Department. Moreover, the hon. member has ever had a double set of weights and measures, which is a very convenient precaution for a man like him. I have always thought that the man who would take the trouble of closely examining his political career would discover edifying things. I am but young, Mr. Speaker, but here is among others, an incident of which I was a witness. I will relate it, and I am sure that if there is in this House a member who does not yet know the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), religion's champion, virtue's guardian, he will have to know him at once. No one, moreover, is ignorant of the fact that all the noise made at present over that enormous sum of $2,643 without any interest emanates from the saintly and pure representative of Gloucester (Mr. Anglin). In 1873, Mr. Speaker, I came to Ottawa to press that claim for the second time. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), who had my case in hand, invited me into his office, and gave me to understand that I might possibly get paid, but on certain conditions. These were the conditions: I was to support Mr. McLeod, member for Kent, then in England, or come forward as a Liberal if I stood for election. He told me that this was most important, and that if I wanted to get paid I must at once announce that I would come forward as a Liberal candidate. I took a note of these words at the time, and quote them literally. I answered him that my political opinions would not change for the sake of money, and returned the same day to New Brunswick; and notwithstanding the violent opposition I had to encounter, I was elected over Mr. McLeod, and that without changing my political color. As such, Mr. Speaker, I think that I represent to-day the views of my constituents, and I might even say those of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin). Now, in this case, I think I have done all that a man who has rights and who seeks to have them established, should have done. I know that one has, and that one is still doing, all that is possible to discredit me in the eyes of the public, but I can say that the acts of my calumniators have only had, and will only have, for a result the raising me higher in the estimation of my constituents; and if the printing jobber has any doubts on the subject, I invite him to come into the county wherever he likes, and he will soon be convinced.

Mr. ANGLIN. I am sorry that the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Girouard) has made a statement which requires me to answer it at some length, which I will do largely from the correspondence regarding this matter. He denies he ever stated to me that he had not authorized Mr. Costigan to draw certain sums. I think that Mr. Brydges and others can be produced to prove that he repeated such statement in Mr. Brydges' presence; that he made a claim for several thousand dollars over an above the amount claimed for this particular quantity of ties. I find, even in the papers before the House, in the report of the hon. Minister of Railways, that the claim was $6,500. I think he never pretended at first that any quantity of ties was lost, and that even at the high price paid for them, they would amount to that sum. However, this claim was made, but it does not appear in any paper I have seen. I stated simply, the other morning, the facts: that Mr. Girouard wrote to me asking me to help him to press his claim upon the Government, arising out of this account. I replied, in writing, I would be happy to assist him in pressing any fair claim, asking him to send me a copy of his account and such statements as would enable me to deal intelligently with it. He answered by the extraordinary statement that he had no account, and asked me to apply to the department for a copy of it. I did so, and the account was sent to me. I found copies of two different accounts both treated as one transaction, and that various sums were charged as having been paid; among others, some through Mr. Costigan. I sent back the statement to Mr. Girouard, and he wrote me back, almost immediately, that he had never authorized Mr. Costigan to draw those sums. I replied, that if the department paid money without Mr. Girouard's authority, they ought to pay him over again. My impression now is—though I am not clear on the point—that I sent his letter enclosed in one from myself to Mr. Brydges, drawing his attention to this extraordinary statement and asking him to cause an inquiry to be made into it. I would be rather surprised if that paper was not to be found in the papers of the department; upon that basis the claim was pressed a considerable time. I think I began in 1876 that triangular correspondence that caused me a great deal of trouble, continuing it till I came here in the Session of 1877, when I went in person to the Railway Department and brought the matter up again. I was met on the part of Mr. Brydges and the officers with the statement that the sum claimed had been paid, I think, on the authority of a power of attorney, and that Mr. Girouard had been settled with in full and had sent his receipt in full—that there was nothing due him. They denied all responsibility on account of the ties admittedly lost—the number I do not know. The railway officials repudiated altogether all liability on account of those ties. With regard to the other question, Mr. Brydges told the officers to look up the receipt and shew it to me. I said I could not question his word, and did not press for or see the receipt. But I think I then wrote Mr. Girouard that I could not see my way to pressing his claim any further, informing him of the statements made me. He replied he had never signed a receipt in full; that on one occasion, when he received a large sum, he was asked by Mr. Stevenson to put his name on a piece of blank paper, that Stevenson said he had no time to fill up the receipt, but would do so afterwards; but that there was no intention on his part to sign the receipt in full. That statement was met by a point blank contradiction in the department. The officers said he had signed a receipt, regularly drawn up, for a regular settlement in the regular way. My correspondence with Mr. Girouard ceased towards the end of the Session of 1877. I did not see or hear from Mr. Girouard till about the middle of the following Session, when Mr. DeVeber, then a member of this House, who had some transactions with Mr. Girouard, informed me that he was here to press that claim, and asked me to have a talk with him about it. I told Mr. DeVeber I had done all I could in the matter, and had been forced to the conclusion the claim was unfounded; that the only question that could be raised was about the sleepers lost; that the officers of the Government all concurred in the assertion that there was no responsibility of the Government for the sleepers, and that there was no other claim to meet. However I saw Mr. Girouard, who repeated his last statement that there was a large claim of his unpaid, and we agreed to call on Mr. Brydges the next day. On our going to the department Mr. DeVeber insisted on seeing the receipt in full, but, though looked for, it could not be found. He then thought that a rather suspicious circumstance, and insisted the receipt must be produced. It could not be found, when it was thought desirable that all the secondary evidence should be produced. Mr. Stevenson was sent for. I was not present when he was examined, but Mr. DeVeber afterwards informed me, as did Mr. Brydges, that Mr. Stevenson stated most positively that he never accepted the delivery of those ties from Mr. Girouard or any one on his behalf; that he took them into Bathurst Basin where they were not wanted; that he was bound by his contract to deliver them at Petites Roches, 10 or 12 miles further up in the Bay of Chaleurs, and that after their remaining there some time he attempted to take them up the Bay, and that on the way they were lost. While Mr. Girouard says that he gave delivery of the ties to Mr. Stevenson, and that they were duly and formerly accepted by him, Mr. Stevenson positively contradicts the statement, and argues very plausibly, at all events, that it would have been absurd and a gross violation of his duty to accept the delivery of ties where they were not wanted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Stevenson swears to the direct contrary of that statement.

Mr. ANGLIN. I am repeating his own statements.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are in the papers produced.

Mr. ANGLIN. I am but repeating the statements of Mr. Stevenson, who added that he insisted that Mr. Girouard should deliver the ties at a different place, that he attempted to take them up, and that on the way they were lost. He asserted moreover, and to myself more than once, that instead of asking Mr. Girouard to sign a receipt in blank, he had a distinct, full settlement of the whole account; that Mr. Girouard expressed himself as fully satisfied with that settlement; that he accepted the balance which appeared to be due to him of something like $4,500; that then and there he filled up a receipt in Mr. Girouard's presence; and that after it was filled up Mr. Girouard signed it. Mr. Duplessis, the accountant of the department, was not present at the time the enquiry was made, as he was ill of paralysis, of which he subsequently died. Application was made to him, however, for a statement of the facts, and he wrote a note in which he stated that he was present when this settlement was made, that it was a settlement in full, and that Mr. Girouard expressed himself as fully satisfied with that settlement, and signed a receipt. So satisfied was Mr. DeVeber with this evidence, that he abandoned the case as I had previously abandoned it. That was my whole connection with the case. It gave me a good deal of trouble, but I thought at first that Mr. Girouard had a good claim; but the evidence was so overwhelming on that point that I withdrew from the matter. If it could be shown that delivery was made to Bathurst Basin to any duly authorized official of the railway, Mr. Girouard's claim for payment for the value of those ties is a good and valid claim. On that point there can be no question; but that is the point upon which the whole dispute turns. The hon. member for Victoria the other night seemed to think that it was I who stated that he had drawn money without authority; but I never said anything of the kind. I said to Mr. Brydges that I thought Mr. Girouard had so stated; in fact, I think I sent him a letter, which will be found in the department. The rumor got abroad that such an assertion had been made by Mr. Girouard, but it was not of my making, and I never attached much importance to it. I thought it my duty to submit the claim to Mr. Brydges for consideration, but it was not seriously pressed, because it was met by the statement that no matter what might be the nature of the business between Mr. Costigan and Mr. Girouard, the money drawn by Mr. Costigan was drawn under power of attorney, and paid over properly by the department, so that the dispute was a matter between themselves. With regard to the other statement made by the hon. gentleman that I had said some time or other that he would be paid this account if he would become a Liberal and support Mr. McLeod, it is utterly false and untrue; there is not the slightest foundation for any such statement. All that passed between us about the election in Kent was this: he himself informed me that he intended to be a candidate, and that if he was elected, he would support the Mackenzie Administration. I never asked him to do so, and at all events at that time I had withdrawn from the case, and it was then in the hands of Mr. DeVeber. I never led him to believe that he would be paid unless he fairly established his claim, and I never did anything else than assist him in putting his claim fully and fairly before the proper authorities—Mr. Brydges and other officers. The statement of the hon. gentleman is certainly an extraordinary statement; I could hardly have conceived it possible that he could have made such a statement; but in the county where we are both known, I am perfectly willing that my statement of the affair should go against his. I am rather surprised to find Mr. Stevenson making a statement in the case which is directly opposed to those he has previously made.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I have now had the opportunity of looking over these papers, and I find two or three letters and a report which seems to set forth, tolerably clearly, the rather contradictory testimony that appears to have been given on this subject. We have first a letter, dated 5th April, 1878, addressed to Mr.

Brydges, by Duplessis, who I believe is now dead. It is as follows:—

“OTTAWA, April 5th, 1878.

“C. J. Brydges, Esq., Ottawa.

“DEAR SIR,—I beg leave to say that I was present in the Intercolonial Railway Office at Ottawa in November 1873, when Mr. W. H. Stevenson, paymaster, paid Mr. G. A. Girouard $3,738.09 which sum was well understood at the time by Mr. Girouard to be in full of all demands for sleepers for Sections 9 and 15, and I further state that I saw Mr. Girouard sign the receipt for the same and expressed himself well pleased at the settlement.

“I have the honor to be, dear Sir,
“Your obedient servant.
THOS. C. DUPLISSIS.”

Mr. Stevenson's letter of the same date is as follows:—

“C. J. Brydges, Esq., Ottawa.

“DEAR SIR,—In reply to your communication in re G. A. Girouard, I beg leave to say that I settled with Mr. Girouard in the office of the Intercolonial Railway at Ottawa, in full for all sleepers delivered upon Sections 9 and 15 of the Intercolonial Railway, and paid him same time in the presence of Mr. Thos. C. Duplessis, accountant, $3,738.09, in full for same as per receipt.

“And further state that Mr. Girouard expressed himself as very well pleased at the settlement and payment for the same. No sleepers were delivered by him afterwards.

“I have the honor to be your obedient servant,
“ (Signed) WM. H. STEVENSON.”

Then we have the report of Mr. James Cowan, Official Arbitrator, as follows:—

[No. 21,844.]

“With respect to the claim of G. A. Girouard ($6,455.66), for sleepers lost in the Bay of Chaleurs, Mr. Girouard bases his claim on a guarantee against loss, said to be given him by W. H. Stevenson. Mr. Girouard, in his evidence says: ‘After I had delivered all the sleepers at Bathurst, except four rafts, Mr. Stevenson said to me that these four rafts were to be delivered at Petit Rocher; I said to Mr. Stevenson that according to his instructions I had prepared the rafts to be delivered at Bathurst Bay, that they were not in a fit state to be taken up the Bay of Chaleurs, when he replied, that if there was any loss sustained or additional expense incurred, the Government would make it good. There was no person present when I had the conversation with Mr. Stevenson.’ Mr. Girouard proved very satisfactorily the loss of the sleepers, and adduced in support of his claim, a letter from Mr. Stevenson to Sir Charles Tupper, in which Mr. Stevenson, among other things, says: ‘That if Mr. Girouard proves the loss as above stated, I think that in equity he is entitled to it’ Looking on this as too indefinite, I postponed presenting my report until I had an opportunity of examining Mr. Stevenson. In his evidence he says: ‘Was paymaster on the Intercolonial Railway when Mr. Girouard delivered sleepers at Bathurst Bay; I never asked him to take four rafts nor any rafts from Bathurst Bay to Petit Rocher, and never told him if there were any loss the Government would make it good; would not have done so, because Bathurst and not Petit Rocher was the place where the sleepers were wanted.’

“I look upon this testimony as conclusive against the claim of Mr. Girouard.

“All which is respectfully submitted.

“Official Arbitrator.”

“Ottawa, November 3rd, 1879.”

After that the First Minister and Mr. Shanly respectively reported in favor of Mr. Girouard's claim. Now it is apparent that there is a serious contradiction in Mr. Stevenson's evidence. There remains the official decision of Mr. Cowan, who looked into the whole case against Mr. Girouard's claim, and there remains also this letter from Mr. Duplessis in which he states he was present when the full receipt was given. The evidence of Mr. Stevenson may no doubt be contradictory, but the whole affair appears to me to be in an unsatisfactory shape. Further than that we have the decision of the Official Arbitrator, Mr. Cowan, against this claim, after inspection and after hearing evidence, which was afterwards reversed by Mr. Shanly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad this matter has been brought up because, in justice to the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Girouard), it requires a full explanation. I have no hesitation in saying that a more just claim than that presented by the hon. member for Kent could not possibly be presented to the Government. The hon. member for Gloucester said that Mr. Stevenson had told him several times that he had never accepted those ties at Bathurst because they were wanted at Petit Rocher, and Mr. Stevenson swears that he could not be responsible for the loss of the ties between Bathurst and Petit Rocher, because they were wanted at the former and not at the latter place. Now the case stands thus: Mr. Girouard had contracted to deliver ties along the line of the Intercolonial Railway; he prepared those ties and put them up in rafts sufficiently strong, took them to Bathurst where Mr. Stevenson says they were wanted. Therefore he had performed his contract, because he had taken the ties to the place where Mr. Stevenson says they were wanted. But Mr. Stevenson says he could not have taken the risk of ordering them to be taken to Petit Rocher, because they were wanted at Bathurst. I would ask if there is any common sense in that. Mr. Girouard having performed his contract, and after being warned, as is sworn to by his foreman, that these timber ties were not put up sufficiently strong to be taken to Petit Rocher without risk, of his own accord he did run that risk which proved fatal to the raft, because the whole thing was broken up. The case is clear. They were wanted at Petit Rocher; they were lying there at Bathurst. Mr. Stevenson must have felt that he had done an injustice to this man, because he recognized his claim as equitable, and how could it be an equitable claim if against his wish, after they had been delivered at the place where Mr. Stevenson wanted them, he had, of his own accord, taken them to the place where they were not wanted. The truth of the matter is that Mr. Stevenson had given that authority, and finding himself getting into a scrape, thinking that he would be discharged or censured for doing this, he tried to get out of it, and he denies it. Otherwise there could be no sense in his statement that Mr. Girouard had an equitable claim. He could have no claim at all if they were wanted at Bathurst, and contrary to Mr. Stevenson's desire, he had taken them away around to sea at his own risk, and carried them to a place where they were not wanted.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Does the contract specify where these ties were to be delivered?

Mr. GIROUARD. The terms were that the sleepers should be delivered at every five miles, or at any other place named by the officer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let me read the affidavit of Dominique St. Léger, of the parish of Dorchester, in the county of Westmoreland, which is as follows:—

“I, the undersigned, Dominique St. Léger, of the parish of Dorchester, in the county of Westmoreland and Province of New Brunswick, school-teacher, make oath and say:

“1. That G. A. Girouard, of Buctouche, in the county of Kent and Province of New Brunswick aforesaid, Esquire, in or about the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, entered into a contract to deliver a certain quantity of sleepers on the line of the Intercolonial Railway.

“2. That I was then acting as agent of the said G. A. Girouard when he delivered the sleepers aforesaid.

“3. That I know Mr. Wm. H. Stevenson, the paymaster on the said Intercolonial Railway, and the said Mr. Girouard told me that the said Mr. Stevenson had first ordered all the sleepers which came down from Bathurst River, to be delivered at Bathurst at or near where now stands the Bathurst station, but subsequently insisted that four rafts of the sleepers so delivered at Bathurst should be taken to Petites Roches and delivered there; that in consequence thereof the said G. A. Girouard told me to take the said four rafts of sleepers to Petites Roches, which I did do as far as I could, as so requested by the said Wm. H. Stevenson.

“4. That I then told the said Girouard it would be very dangerous and very expensive to take the said sleepers from Bathurst to Petites Roches, as the said rafts would have to be built up in rafts purposely, so as to be able to withstand the rough sea in taking them out in the open bay, in order to take them to Petites Roches, a distance of about fifteen miles.

“5. That the said Girouard then, in reply, told me that the said Wm. H. Stevenson had promised him that whatever expenses or losses he, the said Girouard, would sustain in so taking the said sleepers from Bathurst to Petit Rocher, the Dominion Government would make it good to him, the said Girouard.

“6. That in the summer of the year 1872, I saw the said Stevenson in reference to the said sleepers being taken to Petit Rocher as aforesaid, and that I remember the conversation which took place between him (the said Stevenson) and me.

"7. That the said Stevenson told me that he had agreed with the said Girouard about the said sleepers, and whatever expense or loss the said Girouard would incur or sustain in so taking the sleepers to Petit Rocher as aforesaid, would be paid to the said Girouard by the Government aforesaid.

"8. That from the instructions so given me by the said Stevenson as agent aforesaid, I took the said four rafts of sleepers in the summer of the year A.D. 1872 from Bathurst to Petit Rocher aforesaid, when by the high winds, storm and rough sea, the said rafts got broken up on the way, and a very large quantity of said sleepers got loose and was lost, and the G. A. Girouard suffered a very serious loss thereby."

So it appears that they were delivered at Bathurst. They were put together in rafts in a slight way because it was in the open sea. It was contrary to common sense that he should run the risk, when he was warned by his foreman not to take them to Petite Rocher unless he was told by Mr. Stevenson and guaranteed by him against loss. This man swore that Mr. Stevenson actually told him the Dominion Government would indemnify him for any loss incurred in taking them from Bathurst to Petite Rocher. Under these circumstances what can be said in the papers? We have only the statement of Mr. Stevenson, a person interested, who had placed himself in a dilemma by giving this guarantee to Mr. Girouard and trying to back out of it, and told falsehoods about it, because he states in the papers that the ties were wanted at Bathurst, and yet he told the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) they were not wanted at Bathurst and were not accepted there, because they were required at Petite Rocher. So Mr. Stevenson has been proved by the hon. member for Gloucester to be a man whose word is not to be believed, because he either told a lie to the hon. member for Gloucester or signed a lie on the papers before the House. There is no getting out of that. Then as to Mr. Girouard giving a receipt, every word that Mr. Duplessis says is true. Mr. Duplessis says that Mr. Girouard signed a receipt in full for the ties delivered. But Mr. Stevenson says they were not delivered, they were lost at sea, and he refused to pay for them; but the account was correct as to the ties delivered, and a receipt was obtained, but Mr. Stevenson subsequently wrote a letter stating that Mr. Girouard has got a just and equitable claim for consideration under the circumstances. It is quite clear that Mr. Stevenson found he had got into a scrape, having given the guarantee of the Dominion Government without their authority, and that he ran the risk of censure or dismissal, and, therefore, he concocts this story. It is said Mr. Girouard gave a receipt in full. The receipt was for ties admitted to have been delivered, for which he was paid in full, leaving the claim for the ties that had been lost to subsequent adjustment. That is the whole case. I must say that this practice, and it was a very improper practice, in the Department of Public Works during the last few years to insist, if there was a dispute, that a receipt be given in full of all demands, was contrary to law and justice. If there is a difference between the department and a party as to the amount actually due, a receipt should be taken without forcing a man, on account of his necessities and because he required the money, to sign a receipt in full of all demands. The practice followed was one contrary to law and had work hardship in many cases. A certificate was given by Mr. Cowan to Mr. Girouard stating that he had a proper claim on account of the ties. Afterwards Cowan saw Stevenson, and behind Mr. Girouard's back without giving him an opportunity of cross-examining Stevenson or calling his foreman, and upon Stevenson's statement Cowan, as an arbitrator, decided that he must take the report of the paymaster as being conclusive in regard to the claim.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The contract should be placed on the Table.

Mr. ANGLIN. I regret that the matter was not investigated by the Public Accounts Committee, where the facts could have been accurately ascertained. Mr. Stevenson is a gentleman with whom I am thoroughly acquainted, and he appears to be a man of very great intelligence. I can hardly imagine that he would make so incoherent a statement as he appears, according to this statement, to have made. If he wanted the ties at Bathurst there was no reason why he should have instructed Mr. Girouard to have them taken down to Petit Rocher. The other statement made by Mr. Stevenson is coherent on the face of it, though it may not be truthful. The case involves more than this particular payment to Mr. Girouard; it involves the question whether the First Minister was actuated by proper motives in reporting in favor of that amount being paid. His statement is a very fair statement, but the whole question should be investigated by the Public Accounts Committee, so that it may be put beyond all reasonable doubt.

On resolution 230,

Winnipeg Immigrant Reception House—amount required for extension $4,500 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. POPE (Compton). We have always experienced a difficulty in consequence of not having any separate apartments for immigrants afflicted with contagious diseases. We now propose to extend the accommodation for the reception of immigrants as well as for the sick.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is it intended to provide sleeping accommodation?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. How many will be accommodated?

Mr. POPE. About 200.

246. Geological Survey, additional amount required to complete this service $10,000 00

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Will any portion of the vote this year be expended in the western part of Nova Scotia. In May, 1879, I addressed a letter to the Department of the Interior, signed by the hon. members for Lunenburg and Queen's and myself, drawing the attention of the hon. Minister to the importance of having a geological survey of those counties. In June, 1879, the hon. member for Lunenburg received a letter in reply, stating that an officer of that branch of the Department would commence explorations in the south-western part of Nova Scotia that year. No officers appeared in any of those counties. Last year, I wrote to the Geological Survey Department, drawing their attention to the matter, and was informed they knew nothing about it and could not promise that an officer would be sent to that section that year. Will any portion of the grant be expended there this year? It is unnecessary to show how important it is to have this section explored.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said it was a matter for decision by the Director of the Geological Survey, and he would make enquiries of that gentleman about it.

252. To refund to the representatives of the late A. M. Delisle, shipping masters' fees paid into the Treasury by him, in error, whilst acting as Collector of Customs at Montreal $2,457 29

Mr. BOWELL. It was the duty of Mr. Delisle to collect, under the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, certain fees as shipping master. These fees were always retained by the collector. Mr. Dunscomb collected similar fees and retained them. Mr. Delisle, not being aware of the law, paid those fees into the general revenue. Mr. Simpson, on being promoted to the collectorship of Montreal, collected the fees and retained them until the fall of 1878, a few days before the late Government went out of office, when they appointed a shipping master to perform that duty. Before this item was paid, I made enquiries into the matter and found that Mr. Laflamme, had reported on the case recommending the payment of the sum to Mr. Delisle. I was not satisfied with that opinion and referred the case to the Justice Department, and Mr. Lash made a report on it, on receipt of which the Order in Council was passed recommending the payment of the sum. In order that the House may thoroughly understand the case, I will read Mr. Lash's opinion:

"I have considered the application made by Mr. Delisle, late Collector of Customs at the Port of Montreal, for refund to him of fees collected by him in his capacity as Shipping Master of Montreal and paid over to the credit of the Receiver General as alleged by him in error.

"Mr. Delisle, in performing the services and in collecting the fees, assumed to act under the provisions of the Imperial Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and under that Act the persons performing those services and collecting the fees are entitled to retain them. I think that the 159th and 125th sections of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, was his authority for so acting.

"It does not appear from the papers sent me why Mr. Delisle paid the fees collected by him over to the Government.

"You informed me that he received no salary from the Crown as a remuneration for these services, and that no arrangement was made with him respecting the fees. Whatever may have been the strict legal position of Mr. Delisle as to the performance of those duties and the collection of the fees, one thing seems perfectly clear, and that is, that in the absence of any arrangement between him and the Government respecting the fees, the Government had no right to them whatever, and should return them.

"The fees collected by Mr. Delisle were in remuneration for services actually performed by him, and in respect of which the persons who paid the fees received the benefit.

"Assuming that no arrangement was made with him respecting the fees under which the Government would be entitled to retain them, I think that the amount received should be returned to Mr. Delisle's legal representatives, he having, I am informed, died since making his application.

"I notice from one of the papers sent me that Mr. Dunscomb, the collector of Quebec, performed similar services there for which he received fees, and which fees were retained.

"I may mention that under our Act respecting the shipping of seamen, Chap. 129, Statutes of Canada, 1873, persons performing similar services are entitled to similar fees for their own benefit. Papers returned."

Upon that authority, which was backed by that of Mr. Laflamme, the Government decided to pay the money to the heirs of the late Mr. Delisle.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Under the head of the item for Dorchester Penitentiary, I would like to ask this question: At the time the prisoners were removed from Halifax to Dorchester, a part of the staff were paid till the 31st October, and a portion were not paid beyond the 31st July. What does the Minister of Justice propose to do in connection with the petition recently sent to the department asking for the payment therein mentioned of Messrs. Black, Carmody, Wright, and Corregan?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). My answer is, they were paid all they were entitled to receive.

On the order for the House to go into Committee of Supply, to consider the Supplementary Estimates,

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words with reference to the Supplementary Estimates, and to put a motion in your hands. The House and country too, I think, must look with considerable astonishment, and perhaps with considerable alarm, on the enormous extent of the Estimates prepared for our consideration. In 1878, as everybody is aware, the total expenditure of the country was, as nearly as possible, $23,500,000. I perceive that, by the very first Estimates that were brought down for the present year, no less a sum than $25,305,000 was required. By the Supplementary Estimates which we have just passed, $461,000 was added to that amount, and by the further Supplementary Estimates about to be discussed, an additional sum of $260,000 is required, making, for the service of 1881, a sum total a little in excess of $26,000,000. Now, for 1882, by the first estimate brought down, just discussed, the sum of $26,189,000 was required to be provided, and the second, on Supplementary Estimates, demanded, further, $285,000, making in all, allowing for some small deductions, a sum total of $26,465,000, required for the service of 1882, to which, beyond all doubt, other Supplementary Estimates will be added before the sum total needed for this can be attained. Now, in addition to this very large increase, we knew from the statements of hon. Ministers themselves, that very considerable further charges, and further charges of a fixed and permanent character, will undoubtedly be inflicted upon this country. These are things of themselves sufficient to call for the very serious consideration of the House; because there is one feature peculiar, I think, to Canada, with regard to these charges, to which I desire to draw the special attention of the House for a few moments. I am not aware of any other country, at any rate of any young country, in which the fixed charges bear so very large a proportion to its annual expenditure as in Canada. We are asked to provide for $26,500,000, in round numbers, for 1882. Now, I find that for those charges which we absolutely fixed, that is to say, the interest and subsidies, no less than $12,874,000 are demanded; that as other charges on the revenue which, as hon. gentlemen are aware, are in their nature fixed charges also and cannot well be reduced, the sum of $5,396,000 is demanded; and the permanent charges on account of Indian annuities can hardly be put at a smaller sum than $500,000. The result is the absolutely fixed charges upon our revenue, I may say, amount to $19,000,000 as against an expenditure of $26,500,000, and to these $19,000,000 will be added in a very few years further fixed charges of no less than $2,000,000, making a total of fixed charges now incurred, or likely soon to be incurred, of $21,000,000. I find further that, of the charges which are customarily called ordinary expenditure, a very large amount indeed consists of sums which are, to a very great extent, entirely beyond the control of this Government. Every man who has had any experience in the administration of public affairs knows that when once you have granted an increase of the salaries of the employes of the departments, it is a matter of extreme difficulty to reduce them, and that charges for the judiciary and penitentiaries are also very difficult of reduction. At present our judiciary and penitentiaries require the sum of $900,000. The cost of our light service, making full allowance for a reduction in the number of lighthouses to be constructed, amounts to $450,000. Civil government and superannuation reach $1,100,000. Certain portions of our public works, known as rents, repairs, etc., amount to $500,000, which it is practically out of our power to reduce; while for our North-West Police and legislation we need $850,000. The result of all that is to show that a very small proportion of our income is susceptible of reduction, no matter how great the public necessities may be. That is a position of affairs which requires serious consideration. We have, it is true, a large nominal income; but our fixed charges are so great that our exceedingly small reduction of our gross income, say a reduction of ten per cent., would involve a reduction of fully thirty per cent., perhaps more, of our net income. That is a position of affairs which, I think, should call for very serious consideration on the part of the Government and the House, and should make the Government exceedingly chary about going on and increasing further the expenditure—particularly the expenditure of a fixed character which, as I have said, it is almost impossible for them to reduce. Moreover, we must bear in mind that there are certain risks ahead. It is quite true that at present—no thanks, in my judgment, to the hon. gentleman's policy—in consequence of the extraordinary development of certain industries of ours, over which they could exercise no sort of control, we have a considerable surplus; but we can recollect when in 1879 the total products of the forest amounted to barely $13,261,000, while in all probability this year, judging by the returns which have been published, they will equal $27,000,000. Here is a very large accession to the power of the public to purchase goods from which a revenue may be derived, and I do not think that the most thorough-going protectionist will dare assert that this most important factor in our present prosperity is in any shape caused by the success of the hon. gentleman's policy. All they have ever dared to claim as regards the lumber trade is, that it has not suffered so severely at their hands as we contend. That is all they have ventured to claim, and yet it is from the great growth of the lumber trade that the greatest part of the new income which he expects to receive will be derived. So that we know perfectly well that one or two indifferent harvests would largely reduce the purchasing power of our people. We know, too, that even the success of his policy may largely reduce the revenue he expected to derive from it, for, as he stated in the Budget speech, if the people were to go into the manufacture of goods on which he imposes taxes, a serious reduction of the imports, and therefore of the revenue derived from those imports, might be expected. It is not beside the question to compare our position in some important respects with the position of the United States. At the present moment, our annual indebtedness is increasing at the rate of from ten to eleven millions per annum according to the Estimates of the hon. gentleman. Now, I find from President Hayes' address to Congress, that on the 1st December the United States debt amounted to $1,886,000,000, which debt was being reduced to the extent of 60 or 70 millions, so that on the 1st of July, 1882, the debt of the United States will be about $1,750,000,000. Our net debt at that date, according to the estimates of the hon. gentleman, will be $175,000,000, and the result will be that with a population of 4,000,000, as against a population of 50,000,000, we will have a very considerably larger debt per head than the Americans have to bear; while it is also true that, estimated per capita, our total expenditure would be considerably larger than the American expenditure as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury. The proportion will probably be something like twenty per cent. more than the American expenditure.

Mr. PLUMB. No.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking from the American returns. I think I know what I am talking about and I require no correction from the hon. gentleman. It is out of the question to suppose that this comparison will not be made to our serious disadvantage; and it is another reason for the reduction of expenditure and the exercise of more prudence than they have shown in increasing these enormous commitments. As to the excuse they make that they have plenty of money and that therefore they are justified in expending it, that excuse is totally fallacious. That money is got by unjust and oppressive taxation, which they ought to reduce; and, in the next place, poor as that excuse may be, even if it were an excuse for adding to our ordinary expenditure it is no excuse for adding to our fixed charges. They are but pursuing their old policy which resulted in seven years in nearly doubling the total amount of expenditure of the Dominion. We remember when these gentlemen raised our expenditure from $13,500,000 to $23,500,000; when they left behind them legacies of debt which involved an addition of several millions to the annual expenditure, so that it was no wonder, when the period of depression arrived, that we were met with a succession of very serious difficulties. Without further prelude I move in amendment:

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, That the expenditure for the year 1878 was $23,503,158.—That the expenditure for the year 1880 was $24,850,634.—That the Estimates for the year 1882 amount to $26,475,680.—That a very large proportion of this expenditure consists of fixed charges, or of charges of a permanent character, which when once created are either incapable or very difficult of reduction.—That recent legislation and the completion of existing engagements will result in a steady increase of the fixed charges within the next few years.—That experience has shown, that the consequence of rapidly increasing the fixed charges is to produce great embarrassment in the public finances.—That the House views with regret the proposal of the Government to expend for the year 1882, $1,615,018 more than the expenditure for 1880, and $2,962,494 more than the expenditure for all purposes in 1878.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It might be a sufficient answer to the hon. gentleman to repeat the statement I have made on former occasions with reference to the taxation of the people of Canada to day as compared with their taxation in 1874-75, 1875-76 and 1876-77. I made the statement distinctly, and my statement has not been controverted except in an indirect way by stating that my calculation was based on an excessive population at the present time. But if I take the estimate of the leader of the Opposition, in the speech he made last year, of 4,050,000 as the population, it will be found that the expenditure of the present year, based upon that estimate, will show that the expenditure of the present year is not at all undue. From that I deduct the surplus, because I assert most distinctly that as we have this surplus on hand and not expended, we should deduct it to show what our actual expenditure has been. The hon. member has compared our taxation to that in the United States. Now, if read right, the public expenditure last year in the United States, as shown in their Public Accounts, deducting the surplus they had for the liquidation of a portion of their debt, and deducting our surplus, I think the hon. member is wrong in stating that our taxation is 20 per cent. higher. I think he cannot establish it from the Public Accounts of the two countries. But when we are considering the taxation of Canada we should bear in mind a fact that was stated by an hon. member in this House during the present Session, that a large portion of the expenditure of the Dominion goes to the Provinces, and saves the people of the Provinces from a local taxation that has to be paid by the people of the several States. But there is another distinction to be drawn between the causes that produced the public debts of the two countries. I might, if I had it before me, quote the language which the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, used in London when he was asking for a loan there, and when he said the debt of Canada was mainly contracted in public works which were directly or indirectly remunerative. The hon. gentleman has called attention to the Supplementary Estimates now submitted. He says that for the current year we are asking for $264,000 in addition to the Estimates that had been previously laid on the Table of the House. What is the fact with reference to that? My statement was that, as compared with the estimated income, the Estimates of the current year amounted to an expenditure of only $64,000. Why? Because of the $264,983 in the Estimates chargeable to Consolidated Revenue, $200,000 is an additional sum required which was not voted. For the management of the Intercolonial Railway, $1,600,000 is required, because the business of the country has happily increased, and the business of the road has required this increased expenditure in the management. But while we have to provide for an increase of $200,000 in the working of that road, we have, from the increased business, more than $200,000 of revenue in excess of what was estimated by the Public Works Department twelve months ago; so that, as far as the balance is concerned, we are practically in a better position than was represented in the statement I made. This shows the difference between the actual position and the statement I made six weeks ago. The position now is effected to the extent of $64,000, and no more. With reference to the Supplementary Estimates, many applications were made for expenditures of various kinds all through the Dominion, especially after it became known that we were likely to have a surplus of $2,000,000. The result was that when we considered the Supplementary Estimates we had before us something like $800,000 in addition. If we take from the $285,000 the $59,000, and $25,000 more that was in the Estimates, and that is not now considered necessary, it will leave only $200,000—just the sum I estimated would likely be required in the Supplementary Estimates. Consequently, about $64,000 is added to the estimated expenditure of the current year, which I am satisfied, from the returns as they still come in, will leave us, notwithstanding this and other expenditures for the current year, a surplus of $2,000,000. The hon. member has called attention to the expenditure for 1877-78, and to that proposed for 1881-82, and then he speaks of the increase that has grown out of that. Well, Sir, if the hon. member came into possession, for instance, of a railway, to-morrow, and that railway required him to expend $500,000 a year in its management; if he received but $500,000 in return, it is quite true that, at the close of the year, he would not be better off than at the commencement. But, suppose a person should say to my hon. friend: "Your expenditure was $10,000 last year," and, suppose my hon. friend would say: "I have a revenue coming in equal to that, I am in as good a position as before." That is about our condition, as I pointed out the other day. For instance, take the Post Office item by way of illustration. The receipts of the Post Office Department for 1876 were $1,114,000, and for 1877, $1,705,000, showing a difference of $590,366; but the expenditure rose from $1,705,000 in 1876 to $1,818,000 in 1877; but the increase in receipts was more than equivalent to the increase in expenditure, the difference being $565,773. Last year it was $590,366. That fact affords hon. gentlemen opposite an opportunity to point to the extravagance of the Government, while they are giving accommodation to the people, expending more money, receiving more money, and having a less balance against the country than before. With respect to the Intercolonial Railway, the Government have expended $2,000,000 on the purchase of the Rivière du Loup Branch. They have been called upon to pay not only the interest and sinking fund on the debt, but they had to increase the cost of management on the 120 additional miles. The Government have, moreover, during last year, opened almost 100 miles of railway in the North-West. That, of course, involves increased cost of management. As to the Intercolonial there is no longer the half million average yearly deficit of hon. gentlemen opposite, but the Government receive a sum sufficient to pay the expenditure, and that circumstance has enabled them to reduce taxation. Hon. gentlemen opposite entered into engagements and increased the public debt, and since the present Government took office, the interest on debt and sinking fund was increased by $1,250,000 for the year to which the hon. gentleman referred for comparison. The present Government have increased the expenditure on public works, and on canals, although they hope in coming years to receive an increased income from these sources. Hon. gentlemen opposite never give us credit for additional receipts, and in discussing public questions before the country they point out that the expenditure has increased; but the amount of taxation per head of the population on which the increased receipts have a bearing, is never placed before the House and the country. By the transfer of the Pembina Branch to the Syndicate our expenditure will be reduced, but our receipts will also be diminished. Suppose we were to turn to hon. gentlemen opposite and say: "We have diminished the expenditure by $100,000 in the last year." They would retort that it was due to the transfer of the Pembina Branch, and that while the expenditure would be reduced, the receipts would also decline. That is our answer to the argument of the hon. gentlemen opposite. The test by which the Government wish to be tried is what Excise and Customs duties are necessary to meet our expenditure. We place ourselves on that platform, and assert that, though we have taken money out of the people's pockets, it has been placed in the public treasury, and that the rate of taxation to-day, if compared with 1874-5 and 1876, is not so great according to the population. On that platform we stand, no matter how hon. gentlemen opposite may resolve for the purpose of affecting the country. The people will understand it, and will approve our position, for we can show that, per head of the population, we have not increased taxation, while we have developed the country, affording increased facilities for postal and railway service.

Mr. RYKERT. I feel it important, in view of the grand banquet to come off in Montreal and of the approaching election in East Northumberland, to make a few comparisons nearer home than the United States. The hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) has seen fit to make comparisons with figures drawn from the United States. I propose to make a comparison with the hon. gentleman's own figures, and see how the balance will stand as far as the Government is concerned. The hon. gentleman and his party in the early part of this Session, and on the first vote of want of confidence, attacked the question of the Pacific Railway. Their stock-in-trade was that the Government had thrown away from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000. Finding the country did not recognize the importance of their statements, hon. gentlemen adopted a new rôle. They found fault with the surplus, and complained that an enormous amount of taxation had been imposed this year. They complained of the surplus, for having had deficits during five years, they felt annoyed that a Government should be found equal to the emergency, and able to produce a surplus during the coming year. Many of the hon. gentlemen were trying to play the old rôle and complain of taxation. It seems extraordinary that the ex-Minister of Finance should on every occasion, when he speaks on financial affairs, whether in this House or in the country, make the statement that the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald during the seven years succeeding Confederation had increased the national debt by thirteen and a-half millions, especially when it is known that he and his Government during their five years of office increased the public debt from $99,948,461 to $140,362,069, or an increase of over forty millions. He neglects to tell the House that he increased the interest on the public debt from $5,081,473 in 1873, to $6,553,314, when he went out of office. Now, let us compare the figures and see how the balance-sheet stands. If these hon. gentlemen had anything to complain of, we should have heard them at the Public Accounts Committee, when investigating the expenditure of the year ending June, 1880. After ransacking the Public Accounts for months, they discovered something like $17,000 in various items for last year to which they have taken exception, and all their complaints have finally culminated in an attack on the hon. member for Niagara because $125 was spent for the publication of his speeches. Now, the estimated expenditure in 1873-74 was $31,003,433, of which the Government proposed to expend $9,974,240 on Public Works chargeable to capital. In 1878-79, the last year of the régime of these hon. gentlemen, they asked for $39,334,382, of which they asked only $8,305,900 for Public Works. The present Government propose to expend, in 1881-82, $43,467,626, of which $14,213,850 will be expended on capital account, an excess of $5,912,950 over 1878-79. The total excess in the expenditure of 1881-82, over that of 1878-79 is $4,153,243, showing that the actual expenditure of the Government in 1881-82 will be $1,279,707 less than that of 1878-79, when the large item for capital account in excess of 1878-79 is taken into consideration. Now, the estimated expenditure charged to the Consolidated Revenue Fund for 1881-82 is $26,189,896, while that for 1878-79, the last year of the hon. gentlemen opposite, was $23,699,073, or an increase of $2,489,823. What are the causes of that increase? It is made up as follows: Public debt, $1,288,727; management, $32,108, for which the late Government is almost wholly accountable; the census, $200,000; public works, $257,824; ocean and river service, $119,879; subsidies to the Provinces, $36,633; Indians, $157,767; public works chargeable to capital, $141,911; and post office, $176,500; or a total of $2,411,379, or a difference of $78,444 over the expenditure on account of the Consolidated Revenue Fund over 1878-9. That is the total increase, notwithstanding so much has been done by this Government to develop the country and extend our public works. Now, let us compare a little further. We find that in 1878 the total amount of revenue was $22,375,011, and the cost of collection, $5,301,124; whereas in 1880 the total amount of revenue was $23,307,406, and of collection, $5,227,113; showing an increase in the revenue in 1880 of $932,395, and yet a decrease in the cost of collecting it of $71,011. By making a further comparison we find that the cost of collection has been largely increased by hon. gentlemen opposite, and largely decreased by hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. In 1873-4 there was collected from Customs and Excise $17,414,845, and the cost of collection was $739,469, or $4.24; in 1878 there was collected $17,641,495, and the cost of collection was $929,571, or $5.28; and in 1880 there was collected $18,303,770, and the cost of collection was $935,410, or $5.11, or 17 cents less than 1878. Now, we find that the total expenditure on account of the Consolidated Fund in 1878-9 was $24,445,381, and in 1879-80 $24,850,634, or an increase of $394,253; but recollect that the charges on account of the public debt amounted in 1878-9 to $11,952,641, and in 1879-80 to $12,659,657, or an increase of $707,026, brought about by the extravagant conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite, showing a difference in favor of this Government of $312,773, when the amounts for which the late Government are responsible are taken into consideration. I know these hon. gentlemen do not care to hear these figures, but I thought it would be well to let them have them in time to digest before they go on any of their missionary tours. The ordinary expenditure of 1880 was $6,963,852, and the charges on account of revenue $5,227,113, or a total of $12,190,965. In the year 1878-9, the last year of the late Government, the ordinary expenditure was $6,941,577, and the charges on account of revenue, $5,561,562, or a total of $12,502,739, showing a difference in favor of 1880 of $411,774. Comparing the ordinary and controllable expenditure of the first three years under Grit rule, and the past three years under Conservative rule, we find that in 1873-4 the ordinary expenditure was $8,324,076; in 1874-5, it was $7,868,690; in 1875-6, it was $8,569,714; showing a total of $24,762,540; while in 1878-9 it was $6,941,577; in 1879-80, $6,963,852; and in 1880-1, $7,718,968; or a total of $21,624,397, thus showing a difference in favor of this Government of $3,138,143. These hon. gentlemen have, as before stated, increased our national debt by $40,413,638, and the interest has increased from $5,081,473 to $6,553,314, owing to the increase of that debt. Taking the five years of the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald, prior to the accession to power of hon. gentlemen opposite, we found that while the former spent for Civil Government $3,507,110, the latter expended $4,525,262, showing a difference in favor of Sir John A. Macdonald's Administration of $1,021,152. We recollect that while these hon. gentlemen were going about the country on their missionary tours, one of their texts was the great number of clerks to be found in every direction in all the Departments; and we naturally expected, after the speech of the hon. member for Lambton in propounding the policy of his Government of which retrenchment was to be the distinguishing feature, that his Government would at once reduce the number of clerks. But what do we find? In 1873-4, 334 clerks were employed against 402 in 1878-9, a large increase as the result of their Administration. And if the hon. member for Centre Huron had had his own way, what would have been the result? He proposed to increase the salaries of all civil servants—starting with $500 instead of $400—but the Bill was withdrawn through the moral suasion of his own friends. Otherwise we would have been in a worse state of poverty than even that in which we were when he stood helplessly by, arms folded, confessedly unable to remedy the situation. Take the item of contingencies, a very important item, and one that is no doubt fresh in the recollection of hon. gentlemen opposite. I recollect when these hon. gentlemen had a sort of "squeeze out" at Belleville; the champagne cost $300. For a long time it was difficult to find to what this expenditure was charged, but finally we found it was put among the dusting accounts of charwomen and dusters. During the last three years of their administration, hon. gentlemen opposite expended on contingencies, $510,000; during the past three years this Government has expended $414,250, showing a saving in its favor on this item of $95,750. On looking over the expenditure of this year compared with that of 1878-79, we find that in ten important items of controllable expenditure the Government has saved $237,133, to which no reference is made by these fault-finders, which fact alone shows that the Government has an eye to economy. No doubt hon. gentlemen opposite, with their honest sincerity of purpose, will place before the people these figures that I have quoted. What we desire is a fair comparison of the acts of the present Government compared with those of their predecessors. We want these gentlemen, who have so loudly proposed economical principles and dilated on the extravagance of the present Government, to place these facts before the country fairly and squarely. Let the people judge both Administrations by their acts. Notwithstanding all that has been said by the hon. member for Centre Huron, I cannot find, during the five years of his term of office, any development of the great interests of the country, whereas now in every direction there are all the indications of vital prosperity. I think that the hon. member for Brant, when he discusses the question of imports and exports, will come to the conclusion that the result of the policy of the Government has been not only to economize but to reduce the burdens of the people.

Mr. PATERSON (South Brant). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Rykert) has given us some figures to deal with in regard to the expenditure of the late Government. I will just give him a conundrum to study. The present Government, according to him, have been making extraordinarily great savings, apparently, as compared with the late Administration. We take that for granted, because the hon. gentleman has said so. But we do know they have increased the rate of taxation enormously, taking much money out of the people's pockets, and we still find them with as large a deficit as occurred under the preceding Administration. My query is—where has the money gone.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Different expenses in connection with the Indian Service, for the year, Manitoba and the North-West $256,302 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the explanation of this proposal?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has been no distinct separate vote for this service before. It is intended, among other things, to provide for the cost of farming instructors for the Indians. The item is severed this year from the others for the North-West service. Arrangements have recently been made in connection with the farm instructors to prevent, if possible, further destitution among the Indians. We propose to reduce the item to $168,079, a saving of $44,302. The item includes $125,191 for destitute Indians, $90,000 of which are already spent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. gentleman sure he is making no mistake in dealing with these items?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no mistake.

Mr. MILLS. I asked information, and was promised it a few evenings ago, in reference to the products of the farms. Cannot the hon. gentleman tell us the result of the farming operations with the Indians?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think so.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not think the Report of the Department of the Interior has been generally distributed; but from my cursory examination of it there appears a general complaint, on the part of the agents, that the land assigned to the Indians was largely under water—where the fault lies I do not know. If we are to do anything for those unlucky Indians, they must have dry land to practice on.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So far as I can judge, they make a demand themselves, and it ought to be specially looked at.

To defray expenses incurred by the Pacific Railway Commission $12,500 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Details were to be given in regard to this item.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There was some question asked as to the time these parties were employed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And as to their salaries.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is $5 a day and expenses—the only salary that has been paid. The Pacific Railway Commissioners have been sitting every business day from the beginning of July last year, excepting the time required to go to and from Maui—
Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

toba. In reply to another remark by the leader of the Opposition, the Chairman says that he has arranged with Mr. Dumble, a barrister, for the performance of his County Court business, at a rate of compensation agreed upon between them. Mr. Miall, while the Commission was sitting, has spent part of his time in the Commission and the remainder in his Department.

Mr. BLAKE. If part of the vote is to be spent in paying salaries, I think we should know how much is to be expended in that way.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We will give the information on concurrence.

Committee reported; and (at 1:55 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

PRAYERS.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House further considered resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

On Resolution No. 251 (16th March).

Amount required to cover expenditure incurred by Pacific Railway Commission..... $12,500 00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The same compensation is fixed for members of this Commission as was decided by Order in Council, with respect to the Civil Service Commission, namely, $10 per day, for the two Commissioners, Judge Clarke and Mr. Keefer, who are not in the Civil Service, and Mr. Miall, a member of the Civil Service, $3 per day, and the Secretary $5 per day.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bill was considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 96) to amend and consolidate the laws relating to Government Railways (from the Senate)—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou).

The following Bill was read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time on a division, and passed:—

Bill (No. 100) to provide for the allowance of drawback on certain articles manufactured in Canada and used by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—(Sir Leonard Tilley).

MONTREAL HARBOR COMMISSIONERS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 101) to amend the Act 36th Victoria, Chap. 60, respecting the Lake St. Peter debt.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The other day when this Bill was under discussion, the members for Montreal were accused of having neglected its interests in this matter. In justice to those hon. gentlemen I must say that they had more than twenty interviews with me on the subject, and wrote me, I believe, about forty letters each, working as hard with all my hon. colleagues. If that is neglecting the interests of Montreal, I hope they will be as much neglected in the future.

Mr. GAULT. I regret exceedingly the smallness of the measure meted out to Montreal on this occasion, and that the Cabinet have not seen their way to assume the whole of the debt incurred in deepening the channel to Montreal, which would have been but a simple act of justice. That debt was incurred for the benefit of the whole Dominion. There is not a bushel of wheat that passes through that channel to Quebec that is not taxed three or four cents on account of that debt. I hope the House, next Session, and the Government, will relieve the Harbor Commissioners of this Lake St. Peter debt.

Bill read the second time, reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT.

Mr. McDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 84) to amend the Consolidated Railway Act (from the Senate) as amended in Committee of the Whole. He said: At the last sitting of the Committee, sections 1 and 2 of this Bill were passed; but some doubt was expressed as to the meaning of section 3, which was intended to make clear an apparent doubt in sections 10 and 11, and explain their operation. Instead of section 3, I propose a clause somewhat clearer in language, the meaning intended to be conveyed being this: That until Parliament exercises its prerogative under this section, the Governor in Council may fix and regulate the tolls under section 10; Parliament, of course, having it in its power at any time to exercise its functions with reference to the power given it in section 11. I also propose to amend sub-section 2 of section 3, by adding to the end of the clause requiring returns, these words: "And shall, in addition to the information contained in the schedule, contain such other information and returns as shall be required by the Governor in Council." That will enable the Governor in Council to require a modification of the schedule, to procure such other information as may be required.

Mr. BLAKE. To the second amendment there is no objection; but as to the first, it appears to me that the clause the hon. gentleman now proposes to amend meant something, while it is rather doubtful if this clause means anything. I, however, think the hon. gentleman and myself are agreed in a view which renders that clause unnecessary and perhaps harmful; because I have always contended—and I have never heard any asseveration to the contrary in the course of the debate—that this sub-section has the effect of giving unlimited power to the Governor in Council to revise the tariff of tolls. It is a singular, and perhaps an anomalous position that the power of Parliament should be limited, while that of the Governor in Council is unlimited. It is not proposed to change that anomaly, and if it were to be changed it ought to be changed by rendering the powers of Parliament more extensive, but the hon. gentleman now proposes to limit, to a certain extent, the powers of the Governor in Council by saying that as soon as Parliament exercises any control over these rates, the power of the Governor in Council shall cease altogether. If we are agreed as to the construction of the 10th and 11th clauses, as I think we are, why not leave the power of the Governor in Council as it is?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). It appears to me that there will be no need for the exercise of the powers which are granted to Parliament until the Governor in Council declines to fix the rates, and thereby in the opinion of Parliament fails to do justice to the community. I agree with the hon. gentleman that it is rather a curious anomaly that the powers of Parliament should be limited by Statute with those of the Governor in Council, and that it certainly looks as if the phraseology might be so construed. But I think greater certainty might be given to the construction by the clause I propose, and that no harm can be done by it, because Parliament in exercising the power given by this clause can modify and control the rates under the terms of the 11th section, as circumstances may warrant, and can also if it is thought proper review the form of the 10th section which we are now re-enacting. So as the Governor in Council did his duty by fixing rates which could be justified to Parliament, there would be no occasion for Parliament to act.

Mr. BLAKE. My argument is that you are producing this result. Once Parliament has acted under the 11th section, by your restriction you take away the power of the Governor in Council to act thereafter. The clause should be made clear, if it is not clear; but I do not wish to deprive the Governor in Council of the continuing power which it has under the 10th clause, but so soon as Parliament has acted, under this provision, that power will cease.

Mr. McDONALD. I have no objection—after consulting with my colleague—in deference to the feelings of the hon. gentleman and of the House on the subject, to strike out the third sub-section altogether.

Bill reported.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CASGRAIN moved the following amendment:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend it by adding the following clause:—

The thirty-eighth sub-section of the ninth section of "The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879," is hereby amended by the addition thereto of the following proviso:—"Provided always that the right to take and use water, hereby conferred upon the Company, shall not be exercised unless and until the household and farm requirements, as to water, of the proprietor of the land have been first supplied, and that the exercise of such power shall not injuriously affect such supply, the Company being entitled to take and use the surplus of the water only."

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I regret that I am not able to assent to the amendment for the reason that I have not been able to consult with the department so as to ascertain how it will affect the working of the road, and the general interests of the department. Had I been able to obtain the necessary information, I possibly might have been able, on behalf of the Government, to assent to the amendment, but as it is I must ask my hon. friend not to press it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I regret the Government cannot accede to this amendment, because the Bill as it now stands, does a serious injustice to some individuals. In fact, you can no more deprive farmers of the use of water, than of air. In the instance which I desire to meet, the parties have been actually deprived of the use of water all last summer, over the extent of three farms where the gravel pit has been dug for the Intercolonial Railway. Their water was diverted entirely to the use of the engines, and farmers had to drive their cattle a distance of a mile and a half to water. The railway company might have taken water from a brook in the neighborhood.

Amendment lost on division.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) moved the following amendment:—

That the Bill be not now read the third time but that it be re-committed to Committee of the Whole House with instructions to amend it by adding the following clause:—

"Any railway company subject to the legislative control of the Parliament of Canada and the Council of any Municipality through which any railway subject to the legislative control of the Parliament of Canada, now does or hereafter may run, and the owners or occupiers of lands abutting on any such railway, may be authorized and empowered by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to connect any township drain, or any drain on the lands abutting as aforesaid, with the ditches on either or both sides of such railway, or may construct under such railway any culvert or culverts that may be required to carry off the waters from such lands as aforesaid, or from the railway ditches: Provided, that such authorization shall not be given by the Railway Committee until they shall have been satisfied by the report of some competent engineer that the road-bed of the railway will not be injured by the work so authorized—that such work shall be performed and such culverts constructed under the superintendence of a competent engineer approved by the Railway Committee—that such culverts and works shall be ever after maintained in good and efficient order by the municipality or the land owners or occupiers so authorized to construct or perform the same, and who shall be respectively liable to the company who may be proprietors of the railway for any damage they may suffer from any such culvert or work, or from any non-compliance with the provisions of this Act in respect thereof.”

He said: I move this amendment in accordance with the wishes of a number of my constituents, who are peculiarly situated in relation to the Great Western Railway which run through their farms, cutting them off from the Detroit River. Their farms are long and narrow, after the fashion of the French farms, and the railway company—not having been hitherto subject to the General Railway Act, but to the special charter and amendments from time to time made by Parliament—deny these people the privilege of draining their lands in the natural direction to the river. I think it is the duty of the Government to grant to these people the relief which is asked for by the County Council and the municipalities interested.

Mr. McDONALD. There is no doubt that the question referred to by my hon. friend is one of great importance to the county referred to. As far as I have been able to learn from the petitions and from communications with my hon. friend, the inhabitants of that district suffer very considerable annoyance from the railway company in relation to this important question of drainage. It may be, and probably is, a matter well deserving the serious consideration of Parliament; but, at the same time, my hon. friend will see there are many objections to this amendment now being made to the Bill. In the first place, it is an entirely new question—one which has not been discussed, and in regard to which the facts are not fully known—affecting the rights of the railways on one hand, and the protection of the public on the other. There is also the question of the power of this Parliament to entertain the proposed legislation. The difficulties are of such a character, as my hon. friend will see, as to make it impossible for the Government to consent to its insertion in this Bill. I hope, therefore, that he will agree for the present to withdraw his motion, and in the early part of next Session I have no doubt every consideration will be given to the grievance of which he complains.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). On the assurance of the hon. Minister of Justice that there are constitutional doubts as to the competency of this House to deal with the question, and that the matter will be considered next Session, I shall be content to withdraw my amendment. But if the Government do not act in this matter, I shall certainly bring it up again next Session, and leave it to the sense of justice, which I am sure reigns in this House.

Mr. MILLS. I have no doubt a serious grievance exists in this case, but I think the subjection of railway corporations to the same obligations as other landholders rests with the Local Government. If we incorporate a railway company, we do not remove it from the control of the Local Government. It holds real estate, by the same right and on the same conditions as other property holders, and if it neglects to build a culvert on its road where a culvert is necessary, or to do its proportion of any work affecting it, it can be subjected to the compulsion of the Local Government. I admit that this is a proper thing to be done, but it should be done by the Local Legislature.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). My first impression was, though I do not presume to have formed a definite opinion on the subject, that the Local Legislature is the proper body from which to obtain a remedy of this grievance. But I was assured, by interested persons, that, as the Great Western Railway was a Dominion railway company, the

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex).

Local Legislature had not power to interfere. I am glad to have my hon. friend's assurance, and I will take steps to communicate with the Attorney-General of Ontario on the subject.

Mr. McDONALD (Picton). Of course it is too late to discuss this point. My hon. friend is naturally very careful with reference to the rights of the Local Legislatures, but he will see that many difficulties arise in connection with his view of the question. What would be the result if he were right? The supreme Legislature of the country, having power to confer a charter upon a railway company and to give it all the powers necessary to the enjoyment of its chartered rights and privileges—the fundamental portion of which rights and privileges is the possession of land on which to lay its track—would be liable to have those rights destroyed by the Provincial Parliament. This is manifestly a question of very serious importance, and one which we have not time to discuss fully to-night.

Bill read the third time and passed.

THE INDIAN ACT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of the Bill (No. 103) to amend the Indian Act, 1880, said: The first three clauses are for the purpose of prohibiting Indians from selling the produce of their farms, except under certain regulations. They might sell their produce to traders for spirits, and the consequence would be that their maintenance during the ensuing winter would devolve on the Government. Complaints are sometimes made that thriftless Indians cut down valuable sugar bushes for firewood, and clauses 4 and 5 give the Governor in Council power to pass regulations prohibiting that. Clause 6 authorizes any one Judge, Judge of Sessions of the Peace, Recorders, Police Magistrate, District Magistrate or Stipendiary Magistrate to act as a justice of the peace. The next clause is to alter the clause in the present Indian Act relating to the punishment of sellers of intoxicants to Indians. Under the present law it has been held that spirits must be consumed in the wigwam, or place of abode of the Indian, and if consumed in a white man's house the Act does not apply. Clause 9 gives power of search for spirits sworn to have been brought into the reserve. Clause 10 is for the purpose of giving the Indian agent, in certain cases, power to act as a justice of the peace for the protection of Indians. The next clause provides that although the Indian Act provides that a conviction must take place on the evidence of one credible witness other than the informer, still the informer may be sworn and give corroborative evidence. It has been held that the informers testimony could not be received; but that was a wrong decision. The last clause gives the Governor in Council power to appoint assistant Indian Commissioners.

Mr. MILLS. I see no objection to the Bill with the exception of the last clause, in which power is taken to appoint assistant Indian Commissioners. It appears as if it were intended to place all the Indians, from Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains, under Commissioners. That would be a very great mistake because the facilities for intercourse between the Indians of the various parts of that territory and the central office are very much less than between any part of Manitoba Superintendency and Ottawa. There is, however, a matter which should be provided for. There is no authority to enable Indians to sell any proceeds of their industry. Any one who purchases horses, wheat, lumber or other articles from Indians, does so at his own risk, and the articles may be claimed again by the Indians from whom he made the purchase. In many places there are Indians engaged in wheat growing, who have a surplus beyond their own requirements, and who raise cattle and horses, and yet they have no legal authority by which they can sell them. The result is that the Indians obtain lower prices than they would do if they could make a good title. I am now speaking of what has come under my own observation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will consider the point before the third reading.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The powers taken in this Act are very stringent, but the hon. Minister probably has good cause for his action.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Act will only apply to the North-West.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But some of the Indians are sufficiently advanced to grow crops, which argues a certain amount of civilization, and consequently a certain amount of manhood. My view of the Indian question is that any particle of manhood in Indians should be encouraged, and not repressed. This Bill places them in a position of absolute tutelage. I do not object, because the hon. Minister may have found an absolute necessity for it, but it is an extreme measure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You cannot judge the wild nomad of the North-West by the standard of the Indian of Ontario. The experiment of seeking to induce Indians to settle down on reserves and change their habits is only in its infancy. In some cases the experiment may fail, that is what I fear; but I must say there will not be many. Some Indian have killed their oxen to save themselves from starvation, but sometimes from mere wantonness or disregard of the utility of the oxen in the cultivation of their farms. We have, however, had only one year's experience, and not very successful experience of the farming experiment, from the fact of the summer frosts greatly damaging the initial exertions of these people. There is great danger lest any crop which the Indians might raise should be disposed of to traders, and the Indians thus be thrown on the humanity of the whites, or on the Public Treasury. Of course, if there is a surplus, it will be used in the same way, for the benefit of the band. There is no danger of the Indians being wronged by this at all events.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

276. To provide for a Saving's Bank agent at Wallace, N. S. $200 00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is for an additional office in Wallace, Nova Scotia, a town more than twenty miles from the shire town.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the population?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think about 1,500.

282. Immigration and Quarantine, Quebec $3,000 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. BOWELL. The Minister is not present at this moment, but I believe this sum is to pay for a considerable extension which it has been found necessary to make to the sheds at Quebec, owing to the fact that cattle have now to remain in quarantine for ninety days. So inadequate has been the accommodation, that cattle have been quartered in the sheds connected with some of the fisheries.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is ninety days quarantine absolutely required? Does not the disease develop in a shorter period than that?

Mr. POPE. It does in many cases. I can say that this was not insisted upon by the British Government, but the hon. gentleman will remember that we were entirely deprived of the power of sending our cattle to the United States, because they said: "You bring cattle from England; we have ninety days quarantine for English cattle and you have only eight days. These cattle come into our country, consequently we prohibit your cattle altogether."

283. Amount short estimated to provide for the retiring allowances of five County Court Judges, British Columbia. $266 66

In answer to MR. BLAKE,

Mr. McDONALD. This is to meet a miscalculation in arranging the retiring allowance of the County Court Judges. The Judge in whose case the former error was made, and which was corrected in the General Estimates, had been receiving $3,000 up to within a year ago. The present Auditor-General some months ago ascertained that he had been paid all this time an amount in excess of the statutory allowance. It was brought to his notice, but he protested strongly it must have been an error in framing the Statute, inasmuch as he was to receive the sum that he had been paid continually since the admission of British Columbia into the Union, and the correspondence seemed to lead to that conclusion. But this is not with reference to that question at all, but with reference to the provision made for the retiring allowances of the Judges.

Mr. BLAKE. My recollection of the circumstances, connected with the fixing of the salaries, differs from that of the hon. gentleman, I think it will be found, from the old correspondence, that the amounts paid were unequal in this respect, that one of the Judges was sent from time to time to the upper country when the climate was more vigorous, and when a higher scale of expenses was allowed in consequence of the increased cost of living. But that extra allowance did not belong to his office permanently, but only belonged to him while he was in the upper country. Consequently, I doubt that he is entitled to the retiring allowance, because it was put on at the time he was temporarily in the upper country.

285. Additional subsidy to steamer between Grand Masan, N. B., and the main land $1,500 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The original vote was $1,500, and was for mail communication with the County of Charlotte and the Islands. This is for the purpose of extending steam communication with the city of St. John as well as the County of Charlotte and the Islands, for which this additional sum is asked for.

286. Steam communication from Port Mulgrave, at the terminus of the Eastern Extension Railway, to East Bay, Cape Breton $6,000 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. McDONALD. The road called the Eastern Extension, leaving New Glasgow in the County of Pictou, is extended to the Gut of Canso, a distance of eighty miles. This is for steam communication direct from the terminus of the road, through St. Peter's Canal into Bras d'Or Lake, and thence to East Bay, a distance of thirteen miles from the town of Sydney. That gives direct steam communication from Halifax or any other point to within thirteen miles of the town of Sydney, and that is the only stage conveyance in that distance. Until this road was finished the only communication was either by stage from New Glasgow, or in the summer time, by steamer from Pictou through the Gulf into the Gut of Canso, and thence by stage to Cape Breton. The contract is only made for one year, the experiment being tentative.

290. To provide for a subsidy of $1,500 a voyage for five voyages, of steamers from Prince Edward Island to Great Britain and back $7,500 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is to some extent an experiment. No engagement has been made with any line of steamers yet. One steamer made one or two voyages from the Island to Liverpool, but the experiment did not pay sufficiently to induce it to make it permanent. No formal proposal has been made to the Government, but it is expected that an arrangement will be made for placing a steamer on that route, which will make five trips from the Island to England and back during next summer, for the conveyance of the products of the Island, especially cattle.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Will Prince Edward Island be the terminus, or will the vessel come to other points, touching at the Island?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is no stipulation that it shall not go elsewhere. It is merely to afford accommodation to the farmers of the Island to ship their produce.

292. Intercolonial Railway—Rivière du Loup
Branch Rolling Stock (re-vote, $150,000)...$291,600 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know what has been the total amount expended in providing rolling stock for this branch, and how much more is likely to be required.

Mr. POPE (Compton). This vote is to complete the purchase of rolling stock. Up to the present time, very little money has been paid for rolling stock on this branch. With this vote it is proposed to purchase: Engines, $67,900; three engines, $39,000; three first-class cars, $15,000; three second-class cars, $8,400; four conductor's vans, $2,800; six cattle cars, 3,960; 112 box cars, $73,920; 120 flat cars, $57,600, and 50 coal cars of ten tons each, $33,000, making, in all, $301,580, of which $10,000 has already been expended, leaving a balance of $291,580. In 1877 the expenses of running this road amounted to about $1,800,000, whereas last year they amounted to something over $1,300,000, being a diminution of nearly half a million dollars. A good deal of this is brought about by economy in the management of the road. My hon. friends opposite may say that the road is not in as good a condition; but the best engineers and men who have examined it thoroughly say that it was never in a better condition than it is to-day. It is represented to me by the engineers that this is the last year that we shall experience a loss in the running of the road. The total loss last year was about $90,000; but during the last half of the year there has been a profit of something over $20,000; and we hope in the future to be able to run it at a small profit. I think, therefore, that hon. gentlemen opposite ought to give us some credit for what we have done.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I shall be very glad indeed, if the expenditure of the road is made to come within its income, and the road, at the same time, kept in good order. As to the reduction in the expenditure during the administration of my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) very large sums of money, expended for steel rails, which might very well have been charged against capital, were charged to Revenue Act. From the estimates in my hand, I should say that if allowance were made for the expenditures so incurred, there would be extremely little difference between the actual expense of the Intercolonial Railway, as now administered, and as he administered it.

Mr. POPE (Compton). My hon. friend will find that in 1879 the working expenses, steel rails not included, were $1,841,000.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I am not aware the hon. member for Lambton administered in 1879.

Mr. ANGLIN. I had hoped we would have had an opportunity earlier in the Session to discuss this whole question of the management of the Intercolonial Railway. It is a subject that occupied a good deal of our attention last Session, when very extraordinary statements were made respecting the amounts saved under the present Administration. Hon. gentlemen opposite endeavored to draw a contrast between the management of the road under this and the late Administration, very much to the advantage of the former. Had the hon. Minister of Railways and his friends chosen to confine their claims to the amounts actually saved by certain reductions of salaries, and by the dismissal of certain officials, there would have been nothing to complain of. For anything in the way of economy effected by the Administration, hon. gentlemen on this side are always prepared to give the Government the fullest credit, but when we are told that in consequence of those economies so large a sum as $500,000, $600,000 or $700,000, was saved, we are compelled to question the accuracy of a statement so monstrously absurd. The deficit in 1878-9, the first year in which the present Administration managed the road, was the largest of all the deficits. I do not say the Government was to be blamed for that; I simply mention it as a matter of fact. We find that the late Administration added to the work of expenses the cost of putting down steel rails on the whole of the roads in the Lower Provinces, amounting to nearly a million dollars, and that expenditure, which they might as well have charged over ten years, they charged over five years, making $200,000 per year, and those five years expired last year, 1880. Up to that time, therefore, $200,000 a year was charged which was not charged in the accounts of the following years, making a reduction, not a saving, of that amount for which this Government are not entitled to any credit, although they considered it in their comparison of expenditure. There is another item that entirely escaped the observation of hon. gentlemen opposite, and that is the narrowing of the gauge of the roads in the Lower Provinces, rendering it necessary to reconstruct the whole of the rolling stock. In the course of that reconstruction, it was found that some of the locomotives and cars would not be worth the cost of narrowing to render them fit for the new gauge. They were, therefore, condemned, and new locomotives and cars constructed in their stead. The cost of fitting the new stock to the old gauge was $100,000 per year for several years, including the last year in which the hon. member for Lambton had charge and the first year of the present hon. Minister. Anyone who chooses to look into the accounts will find that, in the first year of the present Administration, there was extra expenditure necessitated through the change in the law which required all the bridges to be elevated. You will find that the deficits are made up of these several expenditures, and on looking carefully into the savings effected, they will be found to consist mainly of the dismissals of a few officials, and the cutting down of a few salaries. Hon. gentlemen opposite have no right to claim the saving of any such sum as $500,000. It is a question whether there has been any good management, and whether the economies claimed by hon. gentlemen opposite have been true and real; and it is a question whether the rolling stock has not suffered in consequence of those economies. Last year I was able to show that at a time when there was a great quantity of rolling stock, the hon. Minister of Railways had no less than twenty-one locomotives standing in the workshops awaiting repairs, when several others in use were very unfit for service. Those facts should be known, and should prevent the boasting of Ministers as to the extraordinary success of their management of the road. Then the hon. gentleman boasts that the roadway was never in better condition. Now, we had an unfortunate accident a very short time ago between Sussex and St. John, caused by the spreading of the rails, which never would have occurred had the road been in proper condition. The rails separated because the sleepers were too old; the spikes drew, I suppose, and did not hold them. The cause of the drawing of the spikes was, probably, that the sleepers could no longer hold them. A deplorable accident consequently occurred, occasioning much damage of property and some loss of life. It is a question whether this accident was or was not the result of this wonderful economy. Similar accidents occurred in Prince Edward Island, where it was said the spreading of the rails was owing to the rottenness of the sleepers. The Superintendent of that Island road was dismissed a short time after the accident. It was evident it was necessary to find a victim somewhere, upon whom to throw the responsibility. But we have found since, however, that he was a young man in the prime of life, notwithstanding all the doctor's certificates to the contrary, and he was the Superintendent at a salary of $1,700. If we had time to go into these accounts, I could set all the items of reduction on one side, and of increased expenditure, and all the items of damages caused by false economy on the other, and show the account would not result very much to the advantage of the Government. I have heard, moreover, that some of the salaries formerly cut down, have been restored to the old standard. Some contemptible parings have been made, one salary of $300 having been cut down to $140. We have had, also, the office of the Minister of Public Works and Railways divided into two offices, curtailing a large increase of expenditure, partly rendered necessary by the removal of a portion of the work from Moncton to Ottawa. I have never been able to find out what Mr. Black has done for his large salary. No such office was ever before found necessary. Putting all these things together, I think it will be truly found that the boast of economy in the management of this road has but very small foundation; in fact, that the economies claimed are, in many respects, questionable—that they reach no such result as $500,000, $300,000, $100,000, or even $50,000—that these apparent savings are the result, seemingly, of ceasing to charge to the road such sums as $200,000 for rails and $100,000 a year for rolling stock, and the termination of the other extraordinary expenditures I have spoken of.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman has no right to make the statements heard. The expenses he has alluded to are all taken into account in calculating the cost of running the road. It happens very often, and for various reasons, that rails spread. It sometimes comes from excessive heat. I have seen rails nearly new, soon become as crooked as a rail fence, from heat.

Mr. ANGLIN. This case was in winter.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman is entirely astray when he says the expenses of the road are not all taken into account in the calculations before the House.

Mr. ANGLIN. I did not say that.

Mr. POPE. I will give the hon. gentleman the figures of the expense in all cases, exclusive of the steel rails. In 1879-80 the working expenses of the road, including all the hon. gentleman has gone over, were $1,603,429.91; earnings, $1,506,298.48; loss of that year, from running, $97,131.23. In 1878-9, working expenses, exclusive of steel rails, $1,811,797.19; earnings, $1,294,099.69; loss, $517,685.50. Now, this account includes all the hon. gentleman has been talking about. The road now is in better order than it was at that time. But let us go a little further and see what has happened during the last six months, and whether we are as culpable as the hon. gentleman tries to make out, or whether I misrepresented the facts. During the last six months of 1878-9—the cost of running the road was $949,031.57; earnings of the road, $731,442.17; loss, $217,589.40. For the six months of 1879-80, working expenses $753,469.13. The earning of the road for the six months of 1879-80 was $721,277.42, and the loss on running the road for these six months was $32,191.17, as against $217,985.40 in 1878-9. The working expenses for six months of 1880-81 were $3891,115.42; the earnings $917,384.73, or a profit of $26,269.30, as against a loss of $217,985 for the corresponding six months of 1878-9.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. gentleman began his last statement by saying that he would allow the sum of $200,000 on account of steel rails, but I pointed out that there was $100,000 besides this required for the adaptation of the rolling stock to the change of gauge.

Mr. PLUMB. We do not charge that against the expenses of the six months.

Mr. ANGLIN. If the hon. gentleman wishes to make a fair comparison—

Mr. PLUMB. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that that amount should be counted as part of the expenses?

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I request you, Mr. Chairman, to keep order. The hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) with his customary impertinence is deliberately interrupting the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin.)

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. member for Gloucester is able to take care of himself without the assistance of the hon. member for Centre Huron.

House resumed.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. ANGLIN. As I stated before recess I did not contemplate going into a thorough review of the Intercolonial Railway, nor do I now intend, in the unhappy absence of the Minister of Railways, to impugn the management of that railway during the past year. My object was only to protest against the statement so often made and repeated on the other side, that a sum varying from $500,000 to $750,000 a year has been saved in the management of that road owing to the administrative skill, energy and honesty of hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly of the Minister of Railways. I wanted to show that that statement was a manifestly and palpably absurd statement. In the first place, I protested against a comparison being instituted between the expenditures for the year ending on the 30th of June last with those for the year ending on the 30th of June previous, for the purpose of showing that the present Administration is more skilful or more economical than the Administration of the former Government, because the road during the greater part of the first of those years managed by the gentleman who is now the Minister of Railways; and I stated that the expenditure for the year ending on the 30th of June, 1879, was very much the largest ever known upon the Intercolonial. I added that I did not wish to impute any blame on the Minister of Railways, I merely directed attention to the fact, but the acting Minister of Railways chooses to make my statement the basis of a calculation by which he hopes to prove that the present Administration is so much better than the former. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken, for that large amount of money was made up by reason of expenditures which might fairly have been charged to income—which were necessary expenditures for the proper equipment and the putting the road in a proper condition of repair. The Minister himself refers to the fact that there were very extraordinary expenditures in that year owing to the passage of a law which rendered it necessary to make the height of all the bridges, snow-sheds, etc., on this road, so much above the top of the trains. Mr. Pottinger states that some of the wooden bridges were found unsafe, and that iron ones were substituted. In other places a large number of ties were put in, and there were many other unusual expenditures, such as ballasting, additional buildings, masonry of culverts, water works, etc., making, in all, $214,908. Then there was an account of the annual suspense account, including charges on account of steel rails, which was not an actual expenditure, but a mere matter of book-keeping. That and other expenditures make up $210,674. Add these together and we have $442,500 to be deducted from this very large sum of $766,000, that would leave but about $340,000. From that we have to take this other $100,000 I spoke of as having been expended in the adaptation of the old rolling stock to the change of gauge. The acting Minister of Public Works cannot, of course, be expected to be familiar with all these matters; he has not had time to direct his attention to them, otherwise he would have mastered these facts and would not have made such assertion. But if we are to talk about the saving affected by the present Government, we must look at the expenditure under the previous Government. Here again I find in this very same report of the Minister of last year an important statement upon that point which I think will render much further discussion unnecessary. We had last year the extraordinary fact that the business of the road had decreased. Now that there is some increase the hon. gentlemen on the other side want to take credit for it. If they are entitled for the increase this year then they must be entitled to discredit for the decrease last year, by a parity of reasoning. But I do not hold them at all responsible for that decrease last year, except in so far as the operation of the National Policy must tend to diminish all trade. Despite the operation of the National Policy this year, other causes operating more beneficially have increased the revenue of the road. During the year ending 30th of June, 1879, as compared with the last year of the Administration of the hon. member for Lambton, there was an actual decrease in the receipts of over $84,000. Yet, in the natural order of things, a railroad once open should go on increasing its revenue from year to year, because the trade would naturally flow to it in greater volume from year to year. Instead of that there was a decrease of nearly $85,000. The Minister, in his report this summer, after accounting for the extraordinary increase of expenditure in his year, says:

"The excess of expenditure over revenue is $766,183, as against $432,326 in the year previous, which was the last year of the Administration of the hon. member for Lambton."

Now, Sir, I would put it to any man of common sense if there is a possibility of saving $500,000 a year where there is a deficit of nearly $433,000. It is preposterous to make such a statement as that. You cannot take the greater out of the less, still less can you take the greater out of the less and have a balance remain; yet that is what the hon. Minister is attempting to do; $432,326 was the deficit of the year ending 30th June, 1878, and out of that, to ascertain the real deficit, you must take this $200,000 of railway suspense account, which would reduce it to $232,000. Take out the other $100,000 on account of the change in the rolling stock, and you bring it down to $132,000 as the whole deficit.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. gentleman may say "hear, hear," but these are the figures furnished to this House by his own colleague, a gentleman who was not at all disposed to exaggerate the merits of his predecessors. The sum of $132,000 covers the ordinary working expenses as well as the expenditure during that year for sidings, buildings and works of that character which the former Government always charged to public expense. These were carried on during that and the previous year to a large extent, and this last year so much was done by the present Minister of Railways in the first year of his Administration that very little remains to be done now. Ties have still to be supplied, but not in such large quantities as the report shows. But there is the fact that the total nominal deficit in the last year of the Administration of the hon. member for Lambton was that $432,326, and that included $300,000, which was simply a matter of book-keeping charge.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Narrowing the gauge was a separate matter.

Mr. ANGLIN. I spoke of the narrowing of the rolling stock rendered necessary by the narrowing of the gauge, and that spread over a number of years.

Mr. POPE. That does not come in there.

Mr. ANGLIN. That cost $100,000 a year, and in the year I am now speaking of, that sum was paid.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. For what was it paid?

Mr. ANGLIN. For narrowing the gauge in the Lower Provinces and rendering it necessary to reconstruct the whole rolling stock.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was charged to capital account.

Mr. ANGLIN. No; it was not.

Mr. POPE. Every dollar of it.

Mr. ANGLIN. Either the hon. gentleman is mistaken, or the gentleman who was then at the head of the railways had stated what was incorrect, for I have seen his statement under his own hand.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Where is it?

Mr. ANGLIN. I have not got it, but I have read it.

Mr. POPE. It was charged to capital account.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. When I referred to that fact last Session, I observed that the Minister of Railways was startled by it, and he left his seat, and after consulting with his officers, he came back and did not venture to say then that it was charged to capital account. It was part of the same transaction as relaying the road with rails, which might also have been charged to capital account, but was not. This statement I give on the authority of Mr. Brydges, Superintendent of the road, and can be corroborated by the hon. member for Lambton at any time. The hon. gentleman talked loudly a while ago about making increases wholesale in the earnings of the road. We are all delighted to perceive that business all the world over is increasing; all railroads in Free-trade countries and Protectionist countries are doing an increased traffic, and we are glad to learn that the earnings of the Intercolonial Road have also increased somewhat. But when the hon. gentleman chose to institute a comparison between the earnings this year and three or four years ago, he should have had the honesty, if he had not forgotten the fact, to state that we purchased the Rivière du Loup Railway, 125 miles, for which we paid $1,500,000, and expended upon it another $100,000, and this branch of the road is one of the best paying of the whole line, and having its terminus near to the largest city on the line. We were told before we purchased the road that under the management of the Grand Trunk Company it was in a dilapidated condition, and that there was a net profit of only $28,000 a year. Now, if the hon. gentleman would take up the accounts of last year—I do not speak of the last six months, for I have not the figures before me—and compare them with those of the previous year, either for passengers or freight, he will find in the engine and train mileage no increase that could not be accounted for by ordinary causes.

Mr. POPE. I did not say there was an increase.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. gentleman was boasting of the increase and gave tables for 1877-78-79-80. He did not draw attention to the fact that within the last year, the Government had purchased an additional railway that added very materially to the gross receipts of the road. If the hon. gentleman will look fairly at the whole matter, he will be satisfied that the Government, so far from claiming to have effected a saving of a quarter or half a million, cannot claim that they have saved anything in the administration of the road. They made the attempt by cutting down salaries and by discharging trackmen and others who, it was presumed, were not required. It is not to be supposed that the employment of laborers of that class would be such a matter of patronage as to bring about overcrowding. I do not pretend to say at present, at all events, in the absence of the Minister of Railways, whether the road has been managed with prudence and economy, or whether steps have been taken by the Minister or officials to increase the traffic, but I protest against the assumption of hon. gentlemen opposite that the Government have saved half a million or any other considerable sum of money by economical management of the road.

Mr. BLAKE. What has been expended on rolling stock for the Rivière du Loup Branch?

Mr. POPE. The total paid on stock delivered is $101,378.

Mr. BLAKE. So the total will be about $392,000 on the stock of that branch?

Mr. POPE. Very nearly so.

Mr. BLAKE. The mileage is about 125?

Mr. POPE. 126 miles.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The vote now asked it is expected will fully equip and complete the 126 miles, not only as regards the track, but as relates to the rolling stock. The stock that was upon the road previous to the purchase of it by the Government was eighteen engines for 126 miles. The vote now asked for, with the expenditure previously made, is for the purpose of placing on that section of the line fifteen engines as compared with eighteen on the same distance of the old Intercolonial; five first-class cars against eight, five second-class cars against six, two postal cars against three, two baggage and express cars against three, four conductor's vans against seven, six wood cars against twelve, 120 box cars against 193, 120 flat cars against 181, fifty coal cars against seventy-nine, four snow-ploughs against four, four flange-ploughs against three, three wing-ploughs against three. The amount asked for is considered sufficient to complete and supply the Rivière du Loup Branch with rolling stock.

Mr. BLAKE. Why I asked the question was because the hon. member for Lambton, when speaking on the subject of rolling stock for the Pacific Railway, said he estimated it at the rate of the Intercolonial while placed at $2,000 per mile.

Mr. POPE. It is a short piece of line, and rolling stock is required in proportion.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I wish to say a few words on this subject, and in doing so I do not wish to appear to be criticising the department too severely in the hon. Minister's absence. All sympathize with the Minister of Agriculture, who was obliged, at the eleventh hour and even later, to take charge of the department, which involves the consideration of a great many details. I dissent entirely from the general tone of the hon. gentleman's remarks. He wished this House to understand that the Intercolonial Railway was managed much more economically now than it was during the Administration of the hon. member for Lambton, and he sought to impose on the hon. member for Lambton the responsibility of managing the road in 1878-79. This is decidedly unfair. The hon. member for Lambton retired from office in October, 1878, and for nine or ten months of that year the Intercolonial Railway was under the management of the present hon. Minister of Railways. It would be only fair, therefore, to charge the hon. member for Lambton with the proportion of the year during which he had charge of the Railway. If the hon. gentleman had wished to be quite fair, he would have compared 1877-78 with 1879-80, and on that basis he would reach a very different result from that which he has laid before the House. In estimating the deficit of last year it would have been but fair for the hon. gentleman to have considered the increased receipts of last year as compared with the receipts of 1877-78. The working expenses of the road are one thing, the receipts another. The Rivière du Loup section of the Intercolonial Railway was added since 1878, and if it was a good paying road, there was an additional source of revenue, in 1879-80 which did not exist in 1877-8. I find, for instance, that the receipts from passenger traffic in 1877-8 were $475,256.86, and in 1879-80, $490,338.66; the receipts from freight in 1877-8 were $801,704.84, and in 1879-80, $915,486.53; the receipts from mails and sundries in 1877-8 were $101,985.07, and in 1879-80, $100,473.32. The total receipts of 1879-80 exceeded those of 1877-8 by $127,352. The hon. gentleman does not claim that the increase in the receipts was due to the management of the Minister of Railways. He could not put forward such a claim. The increase in the receipts of a railway like that is not governed by management so much as by the general course of trade. The improvement of business, the additional use made of the Intercolonial Railway for eastern-bound freight, and the additional length of road along which traffic is obtained, I have no doubt, account for the increased receipts of 1879-80. Now, let us see wherein the marvellous economy of the present Minister of Railways exists. In 1877-8 the expenditure in laying steel rails was $192,778, against $7,962 in 1879-80, or a decrease of $184,816. If the hon. gentleman had been fair, he would have added that sum to the deficit of last year in that particular item. The expenditure for sleepers in 1877-8 was $31,056, and in 1879-80, $18,695, a difference of $12,361. In timber and lumber for repairs to bridges, snow sheds and fences, the expenditure in 1877-8 was $37,752, and in 1879-80, $26,367, a difference of $10,485. In the maintenance of the road, there is a reduction in 1879-80, as compared with 1877-8, of $255,557. Taking these three items together, the increase of $127,352, the deficit of $97,131, and the reduction of $255,557 in maintenance, we should find a deficit last year of $486,010, against a deficit in 1877-8 of $432,326. The reduced expenditure, as I have already said, is owing to economy in what is held to be a vital part of the judicious management of the railway. If the hon. Minister of Railways will save money in the laying of sleepers or steel rails, or in the building of snow sheds and fences, to what is that owing? It is owing either to the excellent condition in which he found the road when it was passed over to him by the hon. member for Lambton, or to another and a very serious fact, that he is neglecting to keep the road in proper condition. When he wishes to make a comparison between last year and the year 1877-8, let him not take the expenditure into consideration alone, but let him also take the receipts. If the hon. member for Lambton, with $127,000 less in receipts, could manage that road and have a deficit of $432,000, then, allowing the same earnings and thus taking $127,000 from the receipts of the hon. Minister of Railways, his deficit would, on his own showing, be over $200,000. Besides that there is the additional item of $255,000 which the present Minister of Railways refrained from spending on the construction of the road, but which was absolutely necessary to be expended by the hon. member for Lambton. I contend we have not, on the face of the report, a single fact, except the reduction in a few instances of salaries, which goes to show that the road is more economically or better managed than it was in 1878. I have an additional fact on the other side that a series of accidents occurring time and again, tends to create a strong suspicion that instead of the road being maintained in efficient working order it has greatly fallen out of repair, and perhaps serious consequences to life and limb as well as to the pocket of the people may accrue from this mismanagement. Of course, I know that the acting Minister of Railways may not be in a position to give all the details in regard to this item, but I thought that having heard the unfair statement which he may have innocently made, and which, going to the country, would redound to the glory of the present Minister of Railways, it was my duty to put these facts before the House, as deduced from the report. These facts are incontrovertible, and the hon. gentleman will waste his time unnecessarily in endeavoring to explain them away.

Mr. POPE (Compton). The hon. gentleman has tried to make out that the aggregate receipts of the road per mile have been very much increased by the addition of the Rivière du Loup Branch. Will the hon. gentleman be surprised when I tell him that the aggregate mileage receipts of that branch are about $1,300 per mile, while upon the whole road they are about $1,700 per mile. It is useless for hon. gentlemen opposite to try to shirk the expenditure for 1878-9. I have not said one single word about the hon. member for Lambton, but I have shown that the expenditure has decreased, and the road is being run much more economically of late years, than it was during his administration. When the hon. Minister of Railways came into office in 1878, he found a system of extravagance existing in the expenditure, and engagements had been entered into which had to be carried out. Consequently, that year, the expenses for which he could not be held responsible, were very large. In 1876-77 the deficiency was $309,228. The hon. gentleman tried to hoodwink this House by saying that the cost of steel rails was included in this amount. I say the amount of deficit every year is entirely exclusive of steel rails.

Mr. ROSS. No; the steel rails were charged to revenue.

Mr. POPE. In 1877-8 the loss on the road was $232,326. Now we come to the year 1878-9, for which the late Administration is responsible, as it was late in the month of October when he came into office, and it was not in his power to make any very great saving during that year. We find that year that the loss on that road was $547,687, besides the rails. In 1879-80 the loss was $97,131, as against $307,000 in 1876-7, $230,000 in 1877-8, and $547,000 in 1878-9. That is the true position of the case. The past six months of this year show, not a loss, but an actual profit of $26,000. My hon. friend says that we get that out of the Rivière du Loup Branch. I have shown him that the earnings of that branch are $1,300 per mile, as against $1,700 per mile for the whole road. Whatever may have been the means which the hon. gentleman has used to reduce the expenses, he is entitled to all the credit of the reduction, and that reduction has been made without impairing the quality of the road, which is as good as ever it was. The mail train runs over at the rate of 621 miles in 21 hours.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). My hon. friend has just proved my position. My statement was that in 1877-8 there was a deficit of $432,326. After deducting the expenditure on steel rails, my hon. friend says there will be a deficit of $230,000. I will start with that as a basis. Say that there was in 1877-8 a deficit of $230,000. Coming down to 1879-80 there was a deficit of $97,000, according to the admission of the hon. gentleman. Notice the argument which, I say, the hon. gentleman failed to answer. There was a reduction of $255,557 in the expenditure on maintenance of way and works last year, as compared with 1877-8. So that the whole of the economy which the hon. gentleman seems to insist on so strongly, is absorbed in the reduction of this expenditure. I do not say the road was badly managed. I do not say that it is, but I to say that there is a very great risk in reducing reasonable expenditure in the maintenance of the road, on bridges, fences, and all the other material that enters into the equipment of a road, because, by reducing this expenditure, the road becomes practically unsafe. There is another point to consider: not only does the road become unsafe in the meantime, but whoever succeeds the Minister of Railways will have largely to increase the expenditure, and thus mismanagement will appear as against good management at another time. This is a point the hon. gentleman has lost sight of.

Mr. POPE (Compton). Where does the hon. gentleman get his figures?

Mr. ROSS. I have taken them from your statements.

Mr. POPE. That the road was in bad shape?

Mr. ROSS. I did not say it was in bad shape, but that reducing the expenditure in the management of the road looks suspicious. I cannot understand how, if it required so much money in 1877-8, it could do with $250,000 less in 1879-80.

Mr. POPE. That is science.

Mr. ROSS. Perhaps there is some science in it. It remains to be seen, however, whether it will achieve any good results. It may be a stroke of genius on the part of the hon. gentleman; and if so, we shall be delighted to acknowledge it. In the case of the Minister of Agriculture, I do not know when he effected any such brilliant operations as those of the Minister of Railways in the maintenance of this road. I admitted, however, a slight reduction of salaries had been effected. The amount required for the roadway and fences, in 1877-8, was $288,438, and in 1879-80 $230,124. There is a reduction of $58,000 in the wages paid those connected with the working of the road. But that is a small portion of the reduction to which I have called the attention of the Minister of Railways. It does not go for one-fifth of the $255,000 voted for the maintenance and working of the road. How does this reduction come about? I cannot understand, but we shall have to accept it. The fact remains that the economy practised on the Intercolonial Railway was not in the reduction of salaries, but in the expenditure for maintenance.

Mr. POPE. The member for Gloucester says it was not in the salaries.

Mr. ROSS. Four-fifths was saved in the maintenance of the road; and this fact destroys entirely the boast of the Minister of Railways, that reductions would be made in salaries. The case is clearly established that we have an Intercolonial maintained, not with a deficit of $97,000, as is claimed, but with one which amounts to as much, if not more, than the deficit during the administration of the member for Lambton, if the accounts were made up on the same basis as in the year 1877-8.

Mr. POPE. I deny it.

Mr. ROSS. It is easy and convenient to deny it. I have proved my statement from the figures of the Minister of Railways, which is more important than a mere denial.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I had not the pleasure of hearing the opening remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. But it strikes me that the hon. gentleman is very anxious to find some reason for the change which has taken place in the expenditure of the Intercolonial, which appears to this House and to the country, I am sure, a very beneficial change in the direction of economy and good management. The point has been reached which I never expected to live to see, the working of this road at a profit. But it will not satisfy the hon. gentleman nor his friends, and he hopes it will not satisfy the country—that under this Government we have reached a stage in the history of the Intercolonial at which there is a saving beneficial to the country effected, and not a loss to report. The attempt is made to show the saving took place in this, not on the other item, so that therefore it should not pass to the credit of the Government, because it was effected in maintenance.

Probably the expenditure for maintenance during the Administration of the hon. gentleman's friends was one of their extravagances—one of those things in which it is said political managers do sometimes indulge. That may be the case or not; but so far as the country and the majority of the House is concerned, it is enough to know that in this instance there has been a saving—we are not particular as to the item or the particular department in which it was secured. I suppose it was made where it could be made, and where extravagance existed before; and whether it was in the item of maintenance or not, there it is, and the road is maintained. If the road can be maintained at $250,000 less than during the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, it shows either that it is not efficiently maintained to-day or was extravagantly maintained before. He must take one or other horn of the dilemma. The evidence produced in the House shows that the road is efficiently maintained—that travellers find it a good road, and that the Government have expended as much as was proper to secure this good working condition. That is all we can ask, and I am sure it is a very small concession for hon. gentlemen opposite to make—that under the present Minister of Railways, since he has had the opportunity of applying his abilities to the management of this road, there has been, on the whole, a marked saving, and substantial benefits and advantages secured to the country.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The position of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdougall) would be true enough provided always there had been that saving obtained by any honest alteration in the management. But the fact of the matter is simply this: that under the management of the hon. member for Lambton there were a number of expenditures which, I have no doubt, hon. gentlemen opposite, had they been in power, would have changed to capital account. During that hon. gentleman's administration two excessively important changes were made which enormously affected the economical working of the road; one was the substitution of steel rails for iron, which involved a very considerable cost, that was charged to the ordinary expenditure of the years 1876, 1877, and 1878. There was also a very large improvement made in the alteration of the gauge, and a large part of the expenditure so incurred, chiefly in the alteration of locomotives, and so forth, was likewise charged to the ordinary expenses under my hon. friend. Now, before you can make any sort of comparison of this kind, you have to make allowance for those two very important matters, and to point out that the small allowance which remained was due to certain alterations in the purchase of material for the road, and only in a very small degree, indeed, to any saving in the salaries paid. My hon. friends on this side did not cast reflections on the Ministry in this connection. They merely answered an attack made very unnecessarily, I thought, by the Minister of Agriculture upon the management of the Intercolonial by the hon. member for Lambton, who is not here, unfortunately, to speak for himself. Had he been here I know he would have had the whole subject exhausted. I know that the improvements effected in his time have contributed largely to the economical working of the road to-day. Neither the member for Lambton nor the present Minister of Railways is responsible for the fact that there is an improved state of business and a larger traffic over the Intercolonial than before.

Mr. POPE. With respect to this question of steel rails I have given the hon. gentleman the calculations without taking the steel rails into account. I will now give him the figures, including the steel rails. In 1876-7, the losses were $507,228; in 1877-8, $432,326; in 1878-9, when the hon. gentleman had made very large calculations, $716,083; and in 1879-80, $97,121. So that the hon. gentleman will see that he does not gain anything by including the steel rails.

294. Murray Canal, towards construction $25,000 00

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. POPE. The estimated cost of this work is, for 12 feet of water, something like $500,000; for 14 feet, $700,000. The length of the canal will be about seven miles. It has not yet been decided how many guard locks there will be, if any.

295. Canadian Pacific Railway—Compensation to the St. Boniface Hospital, on account of a large increase in the number of patients between the years 1876-1880, inclusive, in consequence of the proximity of the Canadian Pacific Railway Works. $1,783 20

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. POPE. This payment is made in consequence of an arrangement which has been made with the authorities of St. Boniface, by which sick people brought from outside the Province of Manitoba are kept at the rate of 60 cents per day. This arrangement will continue until some other plan is devised, for, of course, we must look after these unfortunates who are unable to take care of themselves. Of course, after the railway is in the hands of the Syndicate we will not require to provide for people connected with the railway.

298. Public buildings in Ontario..... $70,500 00

Mr. MILLS. I observe that $36,500 is asked for public buildings in Hamilton. I have always been under the impression that we had very good public buildings in Hamilton.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman must remember that Hamilton is an ambitious city. I visited Hamilton last summer to ascertain how matters stood, because representations had been made to me that new buildings were required. The Custom House is far from the business part of the city, and the Post-office is too small. Under all the circumstances, I concluded that it was better to have one new building, containing the custom house, post-office, inland revenue, and weights and measures offices. I caused an estimate to be made of the probable price we could obtain for the present custom house and post-office buildings, and find that we can probably obtain about $32,000 or $35,000 for them. The site I propose to purchase is what is known as the McGinnis property, at the corner of King and another street. I caused an estimate to be made of its value by two gentlemen of that city, Messrs. Stewart and Turner. The total cost of the lot is estimated at $36,000.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). According to the hon. Minister of Public Works' own showing, he is incurring a very heavy expense in these works in Hamilton. I think the convenience of the merchants of Hamilton and the public generally would be much better served by leaving the Custom House where it is than to remove it into the city as proposed. The present Post-office is a very good building, in the heart of the city, and I do not see what economy will be effected by sacrificing two valuable properties for a property less convenient, at a cost of perhaps $200,000. I have no objection to the grants for St. Thomas and Chatham, and I do not see why hundreds of thousands of dollars should be expended on public buildings in two or three large cities whose receipts are not proportionately so great as those of other towns which have to put up with public buildings valued at $25,000 or $30,000. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works would have done more for the general good of the country if he had employed the present public buildings in Hamilton, and expended the $200,000 which the proposed change will certainly cost, in putting up buildings in, say, ten important towns in our Province. I wish to ask the hon. Minister why there was such delay in the construction of the public buildings at Brantford last year, whether any loss was sustained, what officials were sustained, and how long, and whether the business is satisfactory at present?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong about Hamilton. The custom house, as at present situated, is out of the way, and an immense majority of the inhabitants want the change we propose to make. If the merchants and inhabitants generally of Hamilton are satisfied, I do not think we should find fault with the arrangement, provided Parliament is willing to grant the money.

Mr. PATTERSON (Brant). Will the Post office be in the same building as the Custom house?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The Post office, the Custom House and the Inland Revenue offices will all be in the same building. This will be a great boon to the city of Hamilton, which is an important place. The value of its exports last year was $1,250,000, against imports, $3,500,000; of goods entered for consumption, $3,369,000; of customs revenue, $718,000; of excise revenue, $327,000; of weights and measures revenue, $1,692; and of postal revenue, $50,000. It is proper, therefore, that such a city should have a good building. In Hamilton, we will have to erect a proper building in harmony with the architectural surroundings and value of the lots. With regard to Brantford, there was $10,000 in the Estimates for 1880-81. That was to complete the keeper's dwelling, to alter a portion of the building, to make roadways, and complete internal fittings. About 12 months building will be completed.

Mr. PATERSON. What was the total cost of present Post Office and Custom House?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I cannot say. We will not be losing by selling the Post Office buildings, or the Custom House.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have nothing to say against the erection of public buildings in Hamilton, but there was no reason for spending $250,000 there to erect a building to accord with the architectural surroundings. The public building at Guelph is a low, squatty one, which is completely dwarfed by the surrounding buildings.

Mr. LANGEVIN. We are not responsible for the Guelph building, which was erected by the late Government, and if it was a dwarf and unsightly building, the hon. gentleman should ask his friends why it was placed there. I assure him that if it should be burnt down, we will not erect such an unsightly building.

Mr. KILVERT. The proposed change in the location was made at the request unanimously of the business men of Hamilton. I can endorse what the hon. Minister of Public Works has said with regard to the situation of the site and the price proposed to be paid. In the same locality a not more favorable site has brought a much larger price recently.

Mr. FITZSIMMONS. I think $8,000 is a very small sum to put in the Estimates for Custom House, Post Office and Inland Revenue Office for Brockville. It is a rising town, and the revenue derived from the Customs and Post Office there for the year ending 30th June, 1879, far exceeds that of other towns which have received grants for public buildings. The following statement will show the importance of the town: The net revenue from Customs and Post Office received in Brockville for the year ending 30th June, 1879, was $51,229.40. This exceeded Belleville by $2,046.22; Cornwall by $4,400.65; Sherbrooke by $50,719.35; Stratford by $4,749.12; St. Thomas by $26,745.89; and Chatham by $27,990.70. The revenue from Customs, Post Office and Inland Revenue in Brockville for the half year ending 31st December, 1880, was $53,841.80, or a total of nearly $105,000 for the year. This town was entitled to consideration long ago. With reference to what the hon. Minister said as to the expense of these buildings, I do not agree with him. It would be far more economical to erect a building that would give the proper accommodation at once than in the course of ten years, to add to it, and expend much more than would have been necessary if it had been properly built at first. I trust that when the site is purchased, the hon. Minister will see his way to giving us a sufficient further sum to erect a proper building having the necessary accommodation for the increased business of the town. Brockville has the most inconvenient public buildings of any town of its size in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. GAULT said he hoped the hon. Minister would keep in view the constantly increasing population of Montreal, and see that its Post Office building was enlarged to suit the service.

Mr. HESSON said that when erecting public buildings, the Government should expend sufficient money to provide buildings that would suit the requirements of the people for at least fifty years to come. The Minister of Public Works should not be illiberal in connection with public buildings intended to serve for many years the wants of the people.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Of course, hon. members would like a larger expenditure in their constituencies for public buildings, than is proposed. But we are not building for the wants of fifty years hence, but for those of to-day and ten or twenty years hence. However, I always take care to accept plans that will admit of the enlargement of those buildings after ten or fifteen years; and, therefore, we need not at present spend larger sums than are proposed.

299. Dufferin improvements, Quebec—To pay contractor for gates, balance of contract, etc.....$7,550 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is this the last item for this work? What is the total cost?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I think the total cost is about $54,000—that is for the St. Louis and Kent gates.

302. St. John Post Office—To complete contracts $10,000 00
do Custom House—To complete contracts.$12,000 00

In answer to Mr. PATERSON (Brant),

Mr. LANGEVIN. Up to 31st December last, the expenditure upon the Post Office has been $103,793, and upon the Custom House, $254,792.

Mr. PATERSON. What are the receipts from those establishments?

Mr. LANGEVIN. About $1,000,000.

308. Harbors and Rivers, Ontario.....$31,000 00

Mr. McCALLUM. I would like to know who has control of the Port Stanley Harbor—the Government or the Great Western Railway? I believe it was leased to the Great Western Railway some years ago, and this arrangement was that they were to expend the tolls they collected in putting the harbor into repair. It is in a bad state just now, and there are a good many obstructions in the harbor. A steamer was sunk there last fall owing to these obstructions. I hope the Government will see that the Great Western Company carry out the arrangement they made.

Mr. LANGEVIN. In 1875, $7,000 was voted for the purpose of adding eighty-five feet in length to the western pier. It was found, however, that the work was not properly done, and thus $1,000 is now asked for the purpose of raising the piers, if, on investigation—for the question is still pending—we find that the Great Western Railway Company are not bound to do the work. The company say that, although the harbor was transferred to them on the 17th of May, 1873, they never took possession.

Mr. ARKELL. I wish to call attention to the fact that $1,000 was voted for the erection of a lighthouse at Port Stanley, and that the present lighthouse is in a very dilapidated condition. If the people think that if they have to wait until the difficulty between the Government and the Great Western Railway is settled, they may have to wait a long time.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The inference from the vote taken was that the harbor belonged to us, but at all events the question will soon be settled, and then the Deputy of Marine and Fisheries will have the lighthouse erected.

311. Indians (Quebec) $500 00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This vote is intended to complete a road now partially opened through the Lake St. John Indian Reserve, in the Township of Oniatouchan, and I think, after the railway is built there, it might properly be made a charge against Indian lands. The road is seven miles long, and the portion already constructed is very creditable to the Indians.

312. Indians (Manitoba and North-West Territories) $36,368 00

In reply to Mr. MILLS,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The sum of $12,668 is asked to supplement the item for schools to a former vote, the object being to establish industrial schools, like those which have been so successful in Algoma—one of them, a Protestant school, and the other a Catholic. It is intended, as far as possible, to collect the most prominent young Indians there, and very likely have them brought up with white people. It is expected that there will be no difficulty in bringing about a certain fusion or mixture of the races, with very great advantage to the Indians. One of the schools will be at Battleford, and the other at Qu'Appelle.

Mr. MILLS. I see that the Minister is now asking $23,000 to pay expenses of farms, which, with the $60,000 already voted, makes a sum much larger than last year, when provisions, implements, &c., had to be purchased. Now these implements are supplied, equipments are furnished, one year's stock is obtained, and the expense seems larger now than before.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The expense of feeding and maintaining the farm laborers last year was charged against the vote for destitute Indians. It is severed now, there is a special charge; this increase is accounted for by the necessity of acquiring food for the farm hands during a portion of 1881. When the farmers were sent to the North-West they were furnished with food for a year, and if they ran short it was intended that they should be supplied from the store for destitute Indians. Extra team horses were also required for the farms, and a small balance is required for contingencies. This increase is further caused by the necessity of employing extra instructors to help the Indians settle down under reservations. Every new band requires some one to work with them. Great loss has also been sustained from the ignorance of the Indians in the use of tools.

Mr. MILLS. Does the $65,000 stated in the Public Accounts, as incurred on behalf of these farms, represent the whole sum expended?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

313. To provide for the cost of a monument to the memory of the late Sir George E. Cartier.....$10,000 00

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The monument will be erected in Ottawa. The site has not yet been chosen, but most likely it will be on the public grounds, or perhaps in the building itself.

315. To pay balance due for conveying His Excellency the Earl of Dufferin and his party in steamer "J. W. Steinhoff" from Windsor to Sarnia and Goderich, in August, 1874.....$152 98

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The amount of the account was $652.98, and the amount paid to the claimant was only $500. After examining the account the Government have thought the balance should be paid.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I was under the impression that all these accounts were settled and receipts taken.

Mr. LANGEVIN. This party has furnished us an account for the full amount, and has shown us a receipt for only $500. The articles furnished consisted chiefly of food and refreshments, and we think the balance should be paid.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think these accounts were all thoroughly investigated at the time, in connection with the late Colonel Fletcher, Military Secretary. As well as my memory serves me, the various patriotic individuals who rendered any services to Lord Dufferin took exceedingly good care to charge the topmost price that could possibly be charged for vessels, vehicles, and all other things connected with that trip.

Mr. LANGEVIN. These were not charged to Lord Dufferin, but to the Government of Canada.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I know Lord Dufferin did not pay these things out of his own pocket, nobody supposed he did. But what I stated was that to my certain knowledge every man who seems to have had anything to do with the Governor-General on those progresses, seems to have made it a matter of conscience to charge as much as they possibly could, and therefore I greatly doubt whether anything more ought to be paid at this time of day, seven years after the whole thing has been settled by the late Government in conjunction with the officers of the household with whom Lord Dufferin was travelling. The whole of this system of bringing down a lot of items dating back a number of years, is replete with abuses, and I doubt whether the House ought to vote those things.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is wrong. If a man has a just claim it ought to be settled, even though it be several years old. The hon. gentlemen opposite have already paid $500 of this claim, and the Government, after examining the account, have decided upon paying the balance.

317. To pay additional salary for six months to the Hon. George Baby, Judge ad hoc, Court of Queen's Bench, Quebec $500 00

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Baby, who was appointed a Judge of the Superior Court, to fill a vacancy, at $4,000 a year, was called to act as a Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Judges of which receive $5,000 a year. As he acted for six months, he was paid $500 in addition to his regular salary.

Mr. BLAKE. And what is Rimouski doing?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is being attended to by Mr. Justice Taschereau.

319. Amount required to pay Commissioners under "Better Prevention of Crime Act of 1878".... $300 00

Mr. BLAKE. It appears to me that this is growing to be a regular item in our Estimates. I understood that it was only when this Act was put into operation by proclamation that any expense was incurred, a Sheriff or some other recognized official being appointed ad hoc on that occasion. Has the Act been put into operation?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The Act was continued this Session for another year, and if the Act is on the Statute-book, it is necessary that commissioners should be appointed.

Mr. BLAKE. There are no commissioners and no expenses incurred unless the Act is put into force by proclamation of the Governor in Council. Is any place proclaimed now?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou.) Both Quebec and Montreal.

Mr. CARON. It has been continued by proclamation for a year in both cities.

326 Canadian Pacific Railway—Fort William to English River..... $11,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. What is this for?

Mr. POPE. It is supplementary, for Contract 25, from Ascension Creek to English River.

327. Pembina Branch $15,500 00

Mr. BLAKE. What is this for?

Mr. POPE. The total expenditure on this branch was estimated at $101,512. The appropriation of 1881 was $86,000, leaving a balance of $15,512 to be provided for.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this the Murphy and Upper contract?

Mr. POPE. Messrs. Hanover, Murphy & Upper were paid $5,318; the Toronto Bridge Company, for iron bridges, $7,000; for ballasting, track-laying, bridging and grading, $81,904; making, in all, $101,000.

Mr. BLAKE. There was a vote of $50,000 taken the other evening; now it is cut down to $15,500, which is a great change of base.

Mr. POPE. We thought the matter over, after the advice and criticism of the hon. gentleman, and acted upon it as he has seen; so we could not have done wrong.

328. Telegraph lines, British Columbia $8,600 00

Mr. BLAKE. How will this be spent?

Mr. POPE. This is to pay a balance due the contractor for loss from his not being allowed to complete his contract. The telegraph poles were burned up while his work was suspended. The matter was left to arbitration, and afterwards submitted to Mr. Lash, who recommended this item.

Mr. BLAKE. Who was the contractor?

Mr. POPE. Mr. Bernard.

331. Amount required for Civil Service Commission, including printing and other services..... $ 5,000 00

In reply to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is expected that this will cover the whole expense.

334. Submarine Cable Route between Vancouver Island and the mainland via Nanaimo and Point Grey—Extra cost of fitting up telegraph barge "Electron" and working S.S. "Sir James Douglas"..... $ 3,750 00

In reply to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. LANGEVIN. It was intended that the barge Electron would be used for this service, but when Mr. Gisborne went over there it was found that the vessel was not strong enough, and it had to be strengthened. A quantity of supplies of various kinds was also required. Our whole system there will cost $21,250. The laying down of the cable this year was delayed by the unexpectedly long voyages of the two vessels which went out there by way of the Cape, and that fact has somewhat increased the expenditure of the current year. Mr. Gisborne telegraphed me lately as to the progress of the work, which he reports as proceeding very satisfactorily. It would probably be completed by the 1st of April. The original estimate was about $4,000 less than the sum which would be actually required.

335. Intercolonial Railway—Halifax extension, additional amount required..... $27,800

Mr. BLAKE. Can the acting Minister give me any further information as to the experimental cargoes which are to be carried over the Intercolonial to Halifax, and thence to Liverpool? I see by the correspondence brought down that instructions were given to keep very minute accounts of the expenses, results, &c. Have these instructions been observed, and, if so, can the hon. gentleman give me the results?

Mr. CARON.

Mr. POPE. These instructions are being carried out, but I cannot yet give the details. I may say that the receipts from the experiment have been something less than $1,800, which would a little more than cover the freights, supposing the traffic was done separately, but it would not quite cover the expense of shipping as it is carried on.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says the instructions are now being carried out. They cannot be carried out now, because the traffic has passed over the line, the expense has already been incurred, and orders were given to keep a detailed account of all expenses.

Mr. POPE. So we have; and the account is being made up in detail, though I cannot give it now.

Mr. JONES. Was any allowance made for freight coming westward?

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. JONES. Then you cannot tell anything about it, because it may be much cheaper if an allowance is made for freight going westward. Of course, freight going eastward tells against the traffic.

Mr. BLAKE. That is one of the conditions to be taken into account, but I do not suppose we will be better able to ascertain this result, because we do not get a detailed account of the freight going east.

Mr. JONES. It is impossible to tell with two cargoes going east the result of the whole traffic. It may give some idea, but you must consider there is always a traffic westward, and that will go to the credit of the eastern traffic.

Mr. BLAKE. The Minister of Railways thinks this is of some consequence, and consequently we are entitled to that information.

Mr. POPE. When I give the hon. gentleman the whole cost and the whole receipts, that it amounted to something less than $1,800, and that that would more than pay freights, but not quite enough to pay for putting it into ships, I think that is enough.

Mr. BLAKE. I want this detailed account.

Mr. POPE. Will the hon. gentleman explain exactly what he wants?

Mr. BLAKE. I will read to him: "Instructions have been given to keep a minute and detailed account of all the expenses." I want to see that detailed account.

Mr. POPE. I will give him all I can get.

Mr. KILLAM. I would like to ask the acting Minister of Railways whether the recent experiment in the way of shipping grain have had such successful results as to make it worth while for shipowners to bring vessels to Halifax in the hope of getting cargoes there in the immediate future; and if it is the expectation of the Government, that with the votes they have got for the construction of elevators and improving facilities for the shipment of grain at Halifax, we will be able next fall, when the crop of 1881 begins to move, to count with any degree of certainty upon any shipments of grain from Halifax which will entitle that city to be ranked as a competing port with other ports upon the eastern American continent?

Mr. POPE. The experiment we made has not discouraged us from the hope of being able to increase our traffic very largely by shipping grain from Halifax. We might not feel very much encouraged if our whole shipments were to be of grain, but when the elevator is built there the transhipment from the car into the ship will be effected with small expense. We believe that we can do a great deal in that way, and that it will be of great advantage to the railway itself.

Mr. KILLAM. Are we to understand then that the Government intend to act in a commercial manner and do their best to make the Intercolonial a competing outlet for the grain, cattle, and other trades of this continent, and place Halifax on an equal footing with other ports on the Atlantic seaboard? Also, I would like to know whether the Intercolonial is expected by the Government to become a competing line with those lines which are now carrying the productions of the great West to the seaboard?

Mr. JONES. We are looking out for ourselves.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for St. John is desirous to know whether there have been any communications with the Department on the subject of a rate for St. John, with a view of shipping a cargo from that port. He was led to believe that there had been some communication, and that a rate had been spoken of somewhere about three cents per quarter less than the rate from Halifax.

Mr. POPE. I do not think there has been any communication with the department on that subject. I have enquired of the Chief Engineer, but have heard nothing.

336 Expenses in connection with the maintenance and repairs of Canals $28,900 00

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works more particularly to the effect which has been produced by the enlargement of the works on the Lachine Canal, and the extension of the mouth of the canal by the ferry across the St. Lawrence. The hon. gentleman is aware that there has been a ferry there for many years past which has afforded to the inhabitants of Chateauguay and of the western part of Huntingdon the means of getting to Montreal—indeed the only means, at a certain season of the year. Perhaps he is not aware that the effect of the extension of the mouth of the canal has been to produce still water and to cause the formation of ice there, so as to prevent the crossing of the boat altogether. Until the present winter this ferry has been made use of by the Grand Trunk Railway for the Caughnawaga division; but owing to the extension of their line to St. Isidore, they have ceased to use it, and to have the same interest in it. The interest in it is chiefly limited to the people of the counties I have mentioned. The mails also were formerly transported by this ferry; but since the withdrawal of the steamboat they have been taken across in canoes, which is an uncertain and inconvenient method. I know no way in which the Government can do justice to the people interested in the matter but by extending the railway wharf at Lachine a little further into the river. If this were done, as it could be at a comparatively small expense, the winter ferry could be still kept up.

Mr. POPE (Compton). The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) has frequently called the attention of the Government to this matter, and they have been watching the effect of the ice at that point, with the view, if possible, of meeting the difficulty complained of; and we hope to find some solution of it before long.

Committee reported.

OATHS OF GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH EMPLOYÉS.

The House again resolved itself into Committee on the Bill (No. 91) to prescribe an oath to be taken by employés on telegraph lines under the control of the Government.

Mr. McDONALD (Picton). I have considered the objection made last evening to this Bill, and I trust I have met it by substituting a declaration for an oath. I also make it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, for any employé to violate the declaration. If any telegraph operator or other person in the employ of a telegraph company, divulges the contents of a private telegram, except when authorized or directed so to do, he shall be guilty of an offence against this Act.

Bill reported and read the third time and passé.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the Report of the Committee of Ways and Means (Feb. 25) be concurred in.

On item 7, iron, etc.,

Mr. DOMVILLE. There is a very important question which I wish to bring before the House and country at present, in order that, next Session, it may receive full consideration. Of course, we know it is too late in this Session to ask or expect the Government to make such alterations in the Tariff as the iron manufacturers considered they are entitled to. I will ask that a memorial from the iron trade of Canada, presented to the Government lately, may be considered as read, in order that it may get a place in the Hansard for future reference. We who are interested in the iron trade do not think we are sufficiently protected at present. We found, before the new Tariff was brought in, that puddled and scrap iron, and such raw material as the rolling mills use, was admitted free from duty, while, manufactured, iron paid but five per cent. Under the new Tariff we find that, the duty being an ad valorem duty, when iron is very high in England, it is in our favor, because it is a progressive duty; that when the duty on pig iron is confined to $2 per ton and 10 per cent. on scrap and puddled bars, at 17½ per cent. on manufactured iron, we are all right. In a low market in England, when the duty is paid, that pig iron pays 17½ per cent., only giving us a difference of 2½ per cent. between the raw and manufactured material. In making the manufactured item, such as bar iron, bolts, &c., and other materials that come in such as the ore, which we need for pettling purposes, and backing up the furnaces, we find we have to pay duty on them; and considering the duty we pay on all the other articles used in the production of iron, we are not at all protected, because we have to pay nearly 17½ per cent. on the raw material. We claim we are either to make iron in the country or we are not. We have got the raw material, coal in Nova Scotia, and also ore. We have the ore, and we claim that we have the consumers, but while we have that from which to produce and the market to which we can sell, the Tariff is so framed that we cannot have the producers; in other words, the producer is at a disadvantage—he cannot turn the one into the other manufactured article. I hope that the Government will set the matter right next year by giving us a duty of $3.50 per ton on pig iron; and if that is done we will keep in the country about $10,000,000, which otherwise we could not do. This is one of the matters which I and others made a plank in our platform at the last election; for we told the electors that, under the policy of this Government, not only would protection be afforded to the manufactures of this country, but to its mines and minerals; and I trust the Government will take the matter into earnest consideration.

The following is the memorial to which the hon. member referred:—

To the Hon. Sir S. L. Tilley, K.C.M.G., etc., Minister of Finance.

SIR,—The undersigned, members of the House of Commons, beg respectfully to address you on the subject of iron production in Canada, and the means to be adopted for establishing this industry on a large scale, and on a permanent basis, as an important element in the building up of the future strength and greatness and prosperity of the Dominion. While recognizing the great benefit which the National Policy of the present Government has even already conferred upon the country, and the still greater mass of good results which it is destined to bring about in time to come, we are, nevertheless, deeply impressed with the conviction that the work of beneficial, patriotic legislation, now so well begun, requires to be carried still further, and that something more is yet necessary to complete it. In manufactures of iron, Canada has already made good progress, and under the new policy is progressing more rapidly than ever before. But in the production of the metal itself, from the ore, and of wrought iron from pig metal, we have as yet made only small beginnings. From the experience gained in these small beginnings this lesson chiefly may be drawn, that something important is yet lacking, to wit—the extension of the National Policy so as to bring within its vivifying influence the production as well as the manufacture of iron. And we are hopeful enough to believe that from the Government which has so signally benefited the country by the establishment of this new policy, and particularly from yourself, as the Minister who from official position has chiefly to do with such matters, the proper measures with a view to this end may reasonably be expected.

Some idea of the magnitude and importance of the iron trades in manufacturing countries may be had from the following figures:—

Tonnage and value of pig iron produced in the countries named, in the year 1877:—

	Tons.	Value.
Great Britain	6,698,664	$78,685,306
United States	2,314,585	34,000,000
Belgium	418,366	5,857,124
Canada	15,000	210,000

The same of coal, in 1877:—

Great Britain	134,610,763	$219,444,054
United States	50,000,000	75,000,000
Belgium	14,329,578	35,000,000
Canada	883,511	1,544,526

In 1878, the production of pig iron in Great Britain was 6,381,051 tons; and in 1879, 5,995,337 tons. The average of the last ten years is about six million tons. We may compare Canada with Belgium, which has about five millions population to our four millions. The figures above show how much, with all our vast natural resources and extent of territory, we are behind the little Kingdom of Belgium in the production of iron.

Total imports into Canada of iron and manufactures of iron during ten years—1870-71 to 1879-80:—

1870-71	$10,311,188
1871-72	12,291,908
1872-73	21,202,753
1873-74	18,878,411
1874-75	15,783,960
1875-76	11,600,897
1876-77	9,330,482
1877-78	8,298,517
1878-79	8,519,211
1879-80	10,217,228
Total in 10 years	$125,435,165

This large amount, of ten years' importation, was made up as under:—

Iron	$33,704,154
Steel	5,408,121
Rails, plates &c., for railways, iron and steel....	31,357,532
	$70,469,807
Machinery, hardware, and iron manufactures generally.....	$54,965,358
	$125,435,165

It will be seen that for the last ten years the imports of iron, steel, and railway iron and steel averaged $7,000,000 per annum, and of machinery, general hardware, and other iron manufactures, $5,500,000 more, or a total average of $12,500,000. The question may be considered whether the greater part of this seventy millions' worth might not have been produced at home, instead of being imported from abroad, all this vast amount of money going out of the country to pay for it. But what a gain to the Dominion it would have been had we produced at home only the half of this consumption of seventy millions' worth.

What the above figures show, may be put in another way, thus: Our average import of iron manufactures generally, including machinery, hardware, and such like, is $5,500,000 per annum. Our imports of the direct products of the smelting furnace and the rolling mill in the shape of pig iron, bar iron, steel, railway iron, etc., averages $7,000,000. What is wanted, is something to create a Canadian production of the latter, as well as the former.

We may assume that it is not necessary here to cite figures and statements from recognized authorities to prove the fact that there are in the Dominion vast treasures of iron ore in great variety, of superior quality mostly, and in quantity practically inexhaustible. It may be taken for granted that yourself and colleagues are well enough aware that in Canada we have iron enough in its natural state and that there is no question as to the existence of the raw material, of excellent quality and in unlimited supply, within our borders. Nor is there any question either of the fact that some of our most extensive iron deposits are in localities very convenient of access, and very favorably situated as regards facilities for transportation. What does appear to be the practical question is, however, the topographical relation of these iron deposits to available supplies of fuel for smelting furnaces and rolling mills. The different kinds of fuel used in iron making are these:—bituminous coal and coke, anthracite coal, and wood charcoal. From bituminous coal and coke nearly the whole of Great Britain's immense production of iron is made, while charcoal is used in various countries, and anthracite only in the United States, to any extent worth mentioning. East of Lake Superior our coal deposits, as far as known, are all in the Province of Nova Scotia; but within that comparatively small area there are inexhaustible supplies of bituminous coal only. Anthracite we might bring from Eastern Pennsylvania, but in our view the effort should be made to develop iron production as far as possible from our own resources entirely. Bituminous coal we have in quantity sufficient; but a main point to be determined is, how best to bring it and the ore together. There are in Nova Scotia considerable deposits of iron ore, lying near to the coal, and there the convenience of the two, each to the other, is not in question. If, however, coal is to be used in connection with the iron deposits in other Provinces, then the question as to convenience and cost of transportation becomes a practical one. On this point we would suggest that coke, made at the pit's mouth in Nova Scotia, might be cheaply delivered in Quebec and Ontario, at or near the various localities where the principal deposits of iron ore, as far as known, are found. On the Intercolonial and other main lines of railway there are always long trains of empty cars going west, which might, just as well as not carry coke to furnaces and rolling mills in Quebec and Ontario, though, of course, facilities for cheap transportation by water are not to be lost sight of. Coke would be a comparatively clean, light and easily handled freight, and its transportation westwards, in cars which would otherwise go empty, should not cost much. With a view to the development of an important inter-provincial trade which would be of large benefit, both to coal mining down by the sea and to iron production along the line of the St. Lawrence and the lakes, the Government might reasonably grant the best facilities and the lowest rates practicable on the Intercolonial Railway. As bituminous coal must be made into coke before being used in the smelting furnace, and as by taking coke from the pit's mouth an enormous saving in weight to be carried would be effected, the advantages of this plan are obvious enough. The supposed disadvantages of having to carry fuel long distances would, in fact, be reduced one half or more, by the simple plan of carrying the light, clean, and easily handled coke, instead of the heavy natural coal. This relates to fuel for smelting furnaces only; soft or bituminous coal in its natural state being the fuel mostly used in rolling mills, or in the making of bar iron.

With regard to the carrying of coal to the ore, and of ore to the coal, a very general and serious misapprehension prevails. Because in Great Britain and the United States most of the old iron mines and furnaces which have long been worked are in the immediate vicinity of coal deposits, it is popularly supposed that all furnaces are supplied with both ore and coal native to the spot, and that without having the two lying together, iron-making cannot profitably be carried on. A few facts will show that while the bulk of the iron production of these countries is from districts where coal and ore are found near together there is in both, but in the United States especially, a large production from furnaces which are supplied with coal or iron ore, or with both, brought from long distances. Great Britain imports large quantities of iron ore from Norway, Spain, Northern Africa, and other places. The quantity of iron ore smelted in Great Britain in 1879 was 15,797,080 tons, and of this 1,417,343 tons, or nearly 10 per cent., was imported from abroad. And the import of iron ore from foreign countries into the United States is now about six hundred thousand tons annually, valued at about a million and a half of dollars. Ore from the Lake Superior iron region, on the American side, is carried several hundreds of miles to furnaces in Ohio and Pennsylvania; Canadian ore, from the Ottawa district and the county of Hastings, is carried all the way to Crown Point and Troy, in Eastern New York, to the State of New Jersey, to Cleveland, to Pittsburg, and other points even further distant. It is just as easy to carry the coal to the ore as the ore to the coal; nay, easier, we should say, if the plan of first reducing the coal to coke be adopted.

In the Maritime Provinces whatever iron deposits there may be, have the coal so near at hand that there the convenience of the supply is not at all in question. In Quebec and Ontario, however, the cost of bringing coal, or coke, as we suggest, from Nova Scotia will always be an important element in the problem of iron-making. Either soft coal in its natural state, or the coke made from it, must be the fuel for furnaces and rolling-mills, with which a large proportion of Canadian iron is made, if an iron-making country Canada is to be. But the problem of iron-making in Canada is not wholly dependent for its solution upon the supply of mineral coal from any source. There might and should be a very large production of Canadian iron from charcoal, the material for which exists in superfluous, overwhelming abundance in "this wooden country." It so happens that the principal Quebec and Ontario mines, as far as discovered, are situated close beside inexhaustible supplies of waste timber, which is positively of no commercial value whatever, except for the single purpose of making charcoal for iron furnaces. In connection with the increasing demand for charcoal iron, the importance of this circumstance can hardly be over-estimated. Every year the use of iron is extending; every year it is being taken for new uses; and it is a remarkable fact that for these new uses the prevailing demand is for iron of great strength and superior quality, capable of standing heavy and long continued strain. In ship-building, in iron bridges, and for many special-railway requirements, charcoal iron or other iron approaching it in quality is in increasing demand, and the demand is sure to keep increasing very largely in time to come. Still more remarkably increased would the demand for this kind of iron be, should the time come when Governments, with a view to public safety, shall insist upon the use of the best iron only in permanent constructions of all kinds, as well as in railway rolling stock, in all parts of the same where the use of inferior iron might put life and property in danger. That legislation will more and more take this direction in time to come is certain, and equally certain is it that an increasing demand for high-class iron will be the consequence. In strength and resistance to strain and shock charcoal iron is before all other, and therefore its greatly extended use in time to come is a moral certainty. The bearing of all this on Canada's unequalled facilities for the production of the best charcoal iron, in large quantity, is obvious at a glance.

As an exaggerated idea of the importance of anthracite, as an iron-making fuel appears to prevail with some people, it may be well to note the fact that in the United States the proportion of anthracite furnaces is decreasing, while the proportion of bituminous coal and charcoal furnaces is on the increase. The New York Iron Age, a good authority, gives the following figures, showing the number of furnaces of each kind in blast on the first of January, in the years 1880 and 1881, respectively:—

	1880.	1881.
Charcoal	93	160
Anthracite	165	162
Bituminous	126	151

In connection with the statement from which these figures are taken, the remarks of the Iron Age are suggestive. "It will be seen," says this excellent authority, "that the number of charcoal and bituminous furnaces in blast this year is greater than at any time within six years, while the number of anthracite furnaces is less this year than last. One of the most marked features of this report is the large number of charcoal furnaces reported in blast. This (the month of January) is usually the season when these furnaces blow out for repairs, or in accordance with a belief that short blasts are better for charcoal furnaces. This year is an exception to the rule. The chief reason for this is doubtless to be found in the heavy demand for cold-blast charcoal iron, arising from large orders for car wheels made from it.

We come here to a point where there are two things to be put together. First, it is shown that the demand for charcoal iron is sure to be a rapidly increasing one. Next, we have the fact that no country in the world can match Canada in natural facilities for the production of charcoal iron. No other iron mines on the face of the globe have such a vast, inexhaustible background of charcoal timber supply behind them as ours. Already, in Sweden and Norway, the supply of charcoal timber is insufficient, and there being no other fuel for the purpose in the country, in order to save the industry from extinction, the Government has interfered to limit the annual make of iron. Other countries, Spain and Algeria, for instance, have iron ore in great quantity, but neither timber nor any other fuel. The inference is clear that Canada needs but to take the right course to become the greatest charcoal iron-producing country in the world. While this should be held established, it leaves untouched the certainty of another fact, that we have within our own borders, and independent of any foreign supply whatever, the material for a production besides of iron from bituminous coal and coke, in quantity to be limited only by the demand for it.

The estimate is made by experts that a blast furnace producing 100 gross tons of iron per day would employ 50 men, at an average of $1.25 per day wages. This would give:—

Wages paid per annum	$18,750
Value of product per annum	600,000

A rolling mill making 100 gross tons per day would employ from 590 to 600 men, at an average per day of $1.50. This would give:—

Wages per annum	$270,000
Value of product per annum	1,050,000

Such estimates as the above may be extended to the various products of iron, through successive stages of manufacture, showing an immense expansion of work and wages for the industrial classes, and the building up of the country's strength, both moral and material.

The high average of wages paid for labor, in connection with smelting furnaces and rolling mills, and the attraction which such employment would have in the way, both of retaining our own population and bringing in more, is a consideration that may well engage the attention of our statesmen. In actual results, no other immigration policy whatever can equal that of providing the powerful attraction of ready work and good wages, to bring in new arrivals, and to retain those who are already here. Create the work and the wages, and to the place where these are, people will flock of themselves, if no disagreeable circumstances forbid. Even very high wages might not suffice to draw English, Irish and Scotch emigrants, or emigrants from anywhere in Europe north of the Alps, to anywhere in America south of the Potomac, and to keep them there. But in Canada, if only plenty of work at fair wages be secured them, emigrants from anywhere in Northern or Central Europe find themselves at home and contented at once. Not only as a means of increasing population, but also of developing a back-bone of material strength for the Dominion, the importance of making iron for ourselves, in our own country, and from home materials, can be overrated. Not alone the labour directly employed in iron-production, but the employment which this industry creates for various interests outside, should be considered. Take for instance one item, the gain to railways and other agencies of transportation alone. Before the Committee of Ways and Means at Washington, last year, evidence was given respecting the outlay made at home by one single industry, that of the production of Bessemer steel, in connection with which the following figures were cited:

Capital invested	$30,000,000
Wages annually	7,500,000
Paid annually for freight, mostly to railways	8,000,000

Leaving out scrap iron, the Bessemer steel works created a market for the following materials, one year's supply:

	Tons.
Pig iron	757,345
Spiegeleisen	67,403
Coal and coke	2,200,000
Iron ore	1,253,000
Limestone	600,000

The interest which railways and other transportation lines have in iron-making at home is no small matter. Making iron abroad creates business for foreign railways; making it at home creates business for our own railways. Above we see the item of eight million dollars paid in one year to American railways and vessels by the Bessemer steel works; were there no such works in America the greater part of this sum would have gone to European railways instead.

In the year 1870 the American Congress imposed on Bessemer steel rails a duty of 1½ cents per pound, or $23 per gross ton. That year the American production was only 39,357 tons, and the home price $106.75 currency, or about $94 gold per ton. In 1880, ten years after, 917,592 tons were produced in the country, and the average home price was about $50 per ton. By the duty a large American production, which otherwise would not have existed at all, has been created. Through this American production being added to the English production, the price of steel rails has been reduced one-half. In this case protection has had the effect of making the article, not scarce and dear, as some contend, but abundant and cheap. It would be strange indeed if doubling the capacity of manufacture were to raise the price. The Bessemer steel works of the United States have now an aggregate producing capacity fully equal to that of the English works, and this addition to producing capacity has been wholly created by the duty.

The rise of the Bessemer steel industry in the United States, and its present magnitude and importance, are shown by the following figures:—

Production of Bessemer steel ingots during nine years:

	Net tons.
1872	120,108
1873	170,652
1874	191,133
1875	375,517
1876	525,996
1877	560,587
1878	732,226
1879	928,972
1880	1,203,173

Production of Bessemer steel rails, same period:

	Net tons.
1872	91,075
1873	129,014
1874	144,943
1875	290,861
1876	412,469
1877	432,160
1878	550,349
1879	683,968

The Weekly Bulletin, which is published at Philadelphia by the American Iron and Steel Association, states as a certainty that, large as the Bessemer steel production of 1880 was, it will be greatly exceeded in 1881.

It is our firm belief that the way to cheap iron, by the creation of a new Canadian supply, in addition to the existing British and American supply, lies through such a measure of protection as will suffice to bring this new Canadian supply into existence. And from inquiries made we believe, further, that such a measure of protection, sufficient to create this new Canadian production of iron, would be found in the imposition of duties on the following basis, namely:—$3.50 per ton on pig iron, with a proportionate increase on bar iron and manufactures of iron. But, while asking for this increase of duties, we do not by any means admit that there would be any permanent rise in prices to consumers in consequence. Fortified by the lessons of experience, many times repeated, we hold it certain that a new or largely increased Canadian production in the various lines of iron-making and iron manufacture would soon bring about the result of more abundant supply and lower prices than before. But without a safe and sufficient basis of protection to rest upon it is idle to expect that capitalists will sink large amounts of money permanently in such costly fixtures as blast furnaces and rolling mills. We have spoken of some small beginnings already made in Canada, but these are only experiments as yet—experiments that may not be very long continued, unless iron-making be placed on the same satisfactory footing as most branches of manufacturing industry already are in Canada. The collapse of these new enterprises would be a most undesirable result, and both at home and abroad would injure greatly the prestige of Canada's new National Policy, now in the way of being made conspicuously successful before the world. The present Government has definitively adopted and boldly acted upon the general principle of building up home industries in the mass by means of protection, with, as we believe, the hearty support and approval of the Canadian people. And what we now ask is that the same principle be extended to the iron making as well as to the iron manufacturing and other industries. We hold that the logic of our country's position requires that we take this other step forward in the path of industrial legislation, lacking which the National Policy still remains incomplete. The present duty of $2 per ton on pig iron merely adds so much to what the consumer has to pay for it, while it falls short of being enough to benefit him by the creation of a new Canadian production of the article, in addition to the supply from present sources. After much consideration of the subject, we come to this conclusion, that what will best suit Canada's circumstances is the imposition of the proposed increase of the duty on pig iron, with other changes to correspond. And we believe we are warranted in assuring the Government that, were the changes made which we suggest, capital for the enterprise of iron making in Canada on a large scale would be forthcoming at once, and that very soon the success of the new step forward would be established by results. Hoping that the Government may see the way clear to such legislation as is above indicated,

We remain,
Your most obt. servts.,
JAMES DOMVILLE,
Chairman.

Edward Haycock,
Secretary.

March 1st, 1881.

Signed besides by nearly forty members of the House of Commons.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I can assure my hon. friend and those who are acting with him that the Government will give the memorial their serious consideration between now and the next Session of Parliament; but I may say that we have given it a good deal of consideration this Session, in consequence of the representations which have been made to us by the hon. gentleman and others. I wish, however, to call his attention to one difficulty which we experience in dealing with the matter. One of his propositions is that scrap iron, etc., should either be admitted at a low rate of duty or free altogether, and it is also suggested that we should have a high rate of duty upon pig iron for the purpose of encouraging the establishment of furnaces. I ask him to consider this question: assuming that we admit scrap iron—which is really the raw material—free, what encouragement there will be for the establishment of furnaces. The question is a very difficult one, but I can assure the hon. gentleman it will receive our earnest consideration during the recess.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The House will perhaps allow me a word or two in reply. I claim that in the adjustment of the Tariff there was not sufficient difference made in order to enable us to be on the same basis as before; and we ask to be placed upon that basis. We believe that while a duty of only $2 a ton is put on pig iron, the Londonderry Iron Works have practically a monopoly, and they will not offer sufficient inducement to anybody else to put up blast furnaces, because they say that with a duty of $2 per ton they have a market, and if you give us $3.50 we have an assured market, we know that we have an assured consumption and we can afford to sell iron as cheap as it is sold to-day. We do not ask the difference in the duty as a bonus to ourselves; all we ask is an assured market. The Londonderry Iron Works have really no competition, because the duty has been so placed that no one else would put up works on an uncertain market. They are unable to sell pig iron and they follow two trades for they are not only pig iron producers, but they enter into competition as manufacturers of iron, for they have a rolling mill; and while they decline to sell pig iron to those who are engaged in the rolling mill trade, they use it themselves, and say they ought to be protected because they are producers of pig iron. You find that in running these furnaces they produce four classes of iron, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4; and they only produce of No. 4, iron fit for puddling enough for their own use; they have none to sell, and consequently they enjoy a monopoly. When the Finance Minister framed his Tariff it would have worked admirably on a high rate of duty, but when the market rules low, it rules very severely against us.

On item 8, "Wrought Iron Tubing," after the word "Manufactured," insert the words, "over two inches in diameter," and after the words "per cent.," add the words, "two inches in diameter, or under, coupled and threaded or not, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I thought that perhaps I had prevailed on the hon. gentleman to exempt boiler tubes.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. My hon. friend's persuasive powers are very great, but he has not succeeded in persuading me.

Mr. DOMVILLE.

Mr. PATERSON. I regret it exceedingly, because I had been led to expect, from his remarks, that as the tubing of which I had spoken and which enters largely into the manufacture of boilers in this country, he would consent to exempt it. I consider that it is a great injustice to manufacturers that they should have to submit to an additional ten per cent. duty on what, to them, is their raw material, and for the benefit of no one. There is a manufactory about to be established in the country to produce the butt-welded tubing, but it will not produce the lock-welded tubing, and it is simply increasing the cost of an article entering into their manufacture. I consider it is my duty to put before the country the position in which this matter stands, and I propose to read the testimony of these manufacturers, in order that we may understand the full nature of this resolution. If this course is forced upon me it is not my seeking; I attempt nothing in a factious manner. It is a point that ought to have been yielded, and would have been if the hon. gentleman had been consistent with his own principles. I have here telegrams and letters from the largest manufacturers of boilers in the country. All these gentlemen state that they use this lock-welded tubing to a large extent, and that the proposed increase of duty will be a great hardship to them. Mr. McDougall, of Montreal, writes as follows:—

"Wm. Paterson, Esq., M.P., "Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your enquiry, I beg to state that the increase in the duty in 2-inch and smaller tubes will not affect me much, as the boilers I manufacture are principally of the largest class, and the tubes used by me are 3-inch and larger sizes. Manufacturers of locomotive boilers, portable and small stationary and furnace boilers will be seriously affected, as the tubes they use are 1, 1½, 1¾ and 2 inches. Butt-welded pipe, I understand, is to be made here, but lap-welded tubing cannot be manufactured in this country, and, on that account, I cannot see what object the Government has in increasing the duty on the latter.

"I am, dear Sir,
"Yours respectfully,
"JOHN McDOUGALL."

The next letter is from the Superintendent of Stores of the Grand Trunk Railway, who writes:

"GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY OF CANADA,
"OFFICE OF THE GENERAL STOREKEEPER,
"MONTREAL, 28th February, 1880.

"Wm. Paterson, Esq., M.P.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your enquiry, I beg to say that the sizes of lap-welded tubing used by us for locomotive boilers are as follows: 1½, 1¾, 1¾ and 2-inch diameter, respectively. If the duty on tubing is advanced it will be a serious tax on this Company. An increase in the duty on butt-welded tubing would not affect us very much, as that class of tubing is not largely used on railways.

"Yours truly,
"J. TAYLOR,
"General Storekeeper."

Then we have a letter from the Secretary-Treasurer of the Canadian Locomotive and Engine Company:

"MONTREAL, 18th February, 1881.

"Wm. Paterson, Esq., M.P.,
"Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your enquiry respecting lap-welded tubing, I beg to say that the proposed increase of duty, if applied to lap-welded tubing, will seriously affect our business, the total protection we have being only 25 per cent. on a finished locomotive, a large portion of our material having to be imported. In tubing we use principally 1½, 1¾, 1¾ and 2-inch. Butt-welded tubing we do not use.

"Yours truly,
"JNO. W. PIKE,
"Secretary-Treasurer."

Another letter is from the Montreal Rolling Mills Company, as follows:

"MONTREAL, 28th February, 1881.

"Wm. Paterson, Esq., M.P., House of Commons,
"Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—At the request of the Montreal Rolling Mills Company, I addressed to them on the 22nd December last, an answer to their enquiry as to how our business as boiler-makers and steam-fitters would be affected by an increase of duty on iron tubing, and therein distinctly stated that any increase of duty on boiler or lap-welded tubing would be injurious to our trade, and only otherwise in regard to butt-welded piping, in case their proposed works were sufficiently extensive to abundantly supply the market. As the boiler tubing is a very considerable item in the construction of most modern forms of boilers, a duty on that article, approximately to the duty upon the complete boiler, would expose us to severe and injurious competition, from our neighbors south, of 45 per cent. For locomotives and small stationary and portable boilers, tubes of $1\frac{1}{2}$, $1\frac{3}{4}$ and 2 inch are the standard sizes.

"I am, dear Sir,

"Yours very respectfully,

"JOHN BRUSH."

I have also a telegram from another large manufacturing firm, the Waterous Engine Works Company, who state that they used 80,000 of this lock-welded tubing during the past year. I hope the hon. gentlemen opposite who are Protectionists, and who profess to regard the manufacturing interests of this country, will take notice of this point. The tubes are a large proportion of the cost of the finished boiler. The duty on the finished boiler is 25 per cent. The Minister proposes to increase the duty on that which is a large proportion of the finished article, to precisely the same amount as the duty on the finished article. One of the manufacturers says it would be better for them to make their boilers in part in the United States, and bring them in, or remove their works to the other side of the line, for they could send in the finished article as cheap as they could make it under this proposed addition to the material they import. Yet gentlemen professedly acting in the interests of manufacturers are found to initiate legislation of this kind. I point out the matter distinctly, so that when I offer the resolution I shall strictly submit as an act of justice to these manufacturers, hon. gentlemen opposite may thoroughly understand it. A large proportion of the raw material of all the large boiler establishments, the Kingston locomotive works, the Grand Trunk Railway, and all the large machine shops in the different towns, is this lock-welded tubing, on which they have only a protection of 25 per cent. on the manufactured article, while the Government now propose to increase the duty on the raw material to the same amount. That is protection to the manufacturers with a vengeance; that justifies the statement I have from time to time repeated in this House, that under the guise of protection to the manufacturers, with the exception of a few industries, the policy of this Administration tends to depress and crush every manufacturing industry we have in this country. Among the largest manufacturing industries in this country are our iron works, foundries, boiler shops, and so forth, and the Minister proposes to inflict a crushing blow on them, and for what purpose? Merely, I believe, because he has information that a firm in Montreal intends to invest some $10,000 in the manufacture of butt-welded tubing. I do not ask that he should not give to these men, who are thus investing their capital, the full benefit of the duty, but do not put a duty on lap-welded tubing, which this company do not propose to make, which no company will for many years be able to make, for the simple reason that there is not room in Canada for even one manufactory of lap-welded tubing. Yet the hon. gentleman proposes to tax this article, which is the raw material of manufacturers who are employing hundreds, if not thousands, of men in the country, and thus depriving them of what protection they have. If I asked the boiler-makers, and the foundry-men engaged in this class of work, the answer would be unanimous that under this Tariff they are not receiving anything like the amount of protection which they received under the previous Tariff. Their pig iron has been advanced $2 a ton.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Pig iron has not advanced $2 a ton.

Mr. PATERSON. The Government have advanced it $2 as far as they could. The price may have gone down, but if the $2 had not been imposed it would be $2 cheaper. I trust that hon. gentlemen have had their eyes opened by this time as to who pays the duty. The very Estimates they brought down for bridge-materials show that they know that the consumer pays the duty. The duty on bar iron, boiler-plates, and other tubing was raised. Hon. gentlemen are going in the contrary direction to their enunciated policy. They have failed in protecting the agricultural and other industries which they promised to protect, and in the manufacturing industry they have given additional protection in only two or three lines. Over three-fourths of the manufacturers of this country are in a worse position under the operation of the hon. gentleman's Tariff than they were before. That is beyond controversy, and the manufacturers themselves will bear testimony to the fact. If the country were obtaining any additional revenue by the adoption of the policy, we might stand it; but the country's revenues have not been increased. My argument is directed, not against this new manufactory of butt-welded tubing, but against putting an additional 10 per cent. duty on lap-welded tubing which they do not profess to make, and in favor of an industry already in existence and employing its hundreds, if not its thousands, of artisans in the workshops of the Dominion. I beg, therefore, to move:

That the said item be amended by exempting lap-welded tubing from the proposed increase of duty.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. member appealed to me on a former occasion in reference to this matter, and he seemed surprised that I did not accept his proposal. He intimated also that it was because he occupied a seat on the Opposition benches. Well, if there is anything in the intimation made by the leader of the Opposition not long ago, that forty gentlemen on this side of the House asked the Government to do certain things, and the Government did not see their way clear to do them, the hon. gentleman cannot feel that the Government refused to accept his proposal because he made it. Persuasive as the hon. gentleman's powers are, if the Government felt inclined to accept his proposal, they would certainly receive it with less consideration, when coming from an opponent who did not profess to entertain the same opinions as we do on the subject of Protection, than if it came from a gentleman who believed with us and supported our policy. The policy laid down by the Government from the beginning, and accepted by this House, is this—that when we can manufacture an article in this country, that article should be protected. To the present time, lap-welded and butt-welded tubing have not been made in Canada, and we imposed on that article $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. less duty than we did on sheet and bar iron, thus giving an advantage to that extent to those to whom the article was a raw material. But when parties can be found to invest their money in an establishment for the manufacture of this article, we are prepared to give them the advantage of an increase in the duty to the extent of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. We knew that welded tubing was not made by this company; but a large portion of this lap-welded tubing is used for boilers for steam vessels, and most of the lap-welded tubing is above two inches. All the boiler-makers in Canada are using two-inch and upwards for their boilers. The foundry-men are not interested. All the lap-welded tubing of two inches entering into steam boilers will come in at the present rate of duty. But this establishment is prepared to manufacture butt-welded tubing of two inches used for small boilers, for gas and water purposes. Great difficulty has arisen among collectors of customs in regard to designating lap-welded and butt-welded. After giving the matter full consideration, the Government are prepared to allow the resolution to stand as it is, and to ask the House to sustain them.

Mr. KILLAM. The Finance Minister has failed to make out a case. I am well acquainted with boiler-makers and foundry-men, and they are dissatisfied with the policy pursued by the Government on this question. Only a few days before I left for Ottawa I had the pleasure of meeting a gentleman who is engaged both in the business of boiler-making and managing an iron foundry. We talked about the protective policy, and towards the close of the discussion he said, "I am inclined to think after all that a moderate protective policy is at all events an advantage to your business." I said, "What do you call a moderately protective tariff?" "Well," he said, "something about like we had in Nova Scotia before Confederation." That is a moderately protective tariff, and if one of the largest manufacturers of iron in the Maritime Provinces held that opinion it is a practical condemnation of the doctrine of the Minister of Finance. On the way to Ottawa I met a manufacturer of stoves, agricultural implements and other iron goods, who said, in answer to my enquiry as to how the Tariff affected his business, that everything in connection with the Tariff seemed to be framed against the interests of Canadian manufacturers, and that he did not see there was anything to be done except to get rid of the Tariff and Government together. The Finance Minister's Tariff is growing from day to day, until it will, before long, equal in size that of the United States. The result will be to prevent our trade with other nations and reduce us to the Chinese condition of dealing only with ourselves.

Mr. GAULT. There are over 25 per cent. more people employed in manufactures in Montreal this year than in 1874-5-6-7, and every manufacturer there is doing well. We hear hon. gentlemen opposite talking about people having left the country: had it not been for the National Policy there would have been a veritable exodus, which they would have had occasion to deplore.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. Finance Minister has not answered the question. I can understand the position that if a new manufactory is started, the duty, according to the Protectionist theory, should be increased on the imported article so as to afford protection to the manufacturer. But this is an article that is not and will not be made in the country, and therefore it is no part of his policy that it should pay duty. He made the statement that this tubing under two inches was not used by the boiler-makers of this country. I have read evidence from the largest firms that it is used largely by them and exclusively, and that welded tubing is not used by them at all. The hon. Minister attempted to make out this must be a small matter because I admitted that no manufacture of this tubing will be in the country, because the quantity used being so small would not supply enough business for it; but the reason is that lap-tubing, to be made profitably, has to be made on a large scale, and with very expensive machinery, and no man in Canada will invest capital enough to enable him to manufacture it in such quantities as to compete against the immense works in which it is manufactured in other towns. The hon. Finance Minister will have the satisfaction of reflecting that he is carrying out, in spite of the protests of the largest manufacturers of the country—to be counted not by one's or two's, but by the score—a policy in this resolution in favor of men who come to him and, according to his own statement, misled him in order to get that provision in the resolution. He is flying in the face of the manufacturers to please men who, according to his own testimony, told him what is not true.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE DUTIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced a Bill (No. 105) to amend the Act 42 Victoria, cap. 15, and 42 Victoria, cap. 18, entitled an Act respecting the duties of Customs and Excise.

Bill read the first, second and third times and passed; and (at 1:15 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 18th March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

A NEW LOAN.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to raise, by way of loan, under the provisions of the Acts 35 Vict., Chap. 6, and 38 Vict., Chap. 4, a sum of money not exceeding in the whole, eighteen million dollars, in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorized by Parliament, as set forth in the Act 43 Vict., Chap. 10, Sec. 4.

He said: This is simply to provide for the sums that have been voted to be expended on capital for the redemption of the debt during the year. I thought at one time of proposing a Bill by which all power and authority that was given with regard to the issue of debentures, except £600,000 sterling, which was guaranteed, would be placed in a general Act covering the whole; but this Bill asks authority to issue a loan sufficient to cover the amount, supposing we expended all that was voted for the redemption of the debt during next year.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What now remains unborrowed and negotiable under 43 Vict.?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not prepared at this moment to state the amount. There will be at the close of the fiscal year some unused authority to issue, but it will be used if required under this Bill. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company deposit with the Government $25,000,000 there will be no loan negotiated, but we do not know that money will be deposited, and therefore authority must be taken.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The House should know the amount remaining unused, and I do not think there will be much difficulty in ascertaining that amount. I see, by Section 4, Chap. 10, 43 Victoria, the hon. Minister of Finance then considered he had authority to borrow $23,645,000. So that $18,000,000 in addition would give him power to borrow $41,000,000, unless there is some error in the Act which does not appear at first sight.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman will bear in mind that since that Act was passed the authority given has been used to a considerable extent. I think I can ascertain in a few moments the authority remaining unused under the Act.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. If I understand the hon. Finance Minister aright, he proposes to do away with all those payments and ends of loans heretofore negotiated. I think that is desirable. Questions might arise as to some of those loans which were given for a great many different purposes, and I should hold it doubtful whether he could devote to general purposes many of those loans. But still, I think, he had better obtain for us, before he puts this Resolution through, a statement of what is available under existing circumstances.

Resolution considered in Committee, reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 106) to authorize the raising by way of loan of certain sums of money required for the public service; which was read the first and second time.

SATURDAY SITTING.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The arrangement made across the floor of the House, last night, was that we should meet to-morrow, to look at the business on the paper and have interchanges of messages with the other branch of the Legislature. For that purpose I do not think it is necessary we should meet at noon on Saturday. Therefore, I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it stand adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 103) an Act to amend the Indian Act, 1880—(from the Senate)—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

PAYMENT OF THE ONTARIO JUDGES.

Mr. BAKER enquired, Whether any correspondence has taken place between the Dominion and the Ontario Governments, respecting the payment by the latter to Ontario Judges of money not appropriated to their use by the Parliament of Canada; and if so, is it the intention of the Government to bring down that correspondence during the present Session?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). The only correspondence we possess is a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, with the resolution of the Ontario Legislature, which I now lay on the Table.

Mr. BAKER enquired, Whether the Government of Canada has taken or intends to take any measures to stop the Ontario Judges from receiving, from any source whatever, payments of money not appropriated to their use by the Parliament of Canada?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have not at present the intention of taking any action in this matter.

IMPORTATION OF WHEAT IN BOND.

Mr. WHEELER enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to amend the Order-in-Council, dated 21st day of April, 1880, respecting the importation of wheat in bond for milling purposes, so as to remove any doubt of such wheat being ground and sold for consumption in Canada, without the duty having been paid thereon?

Mr. BOWELL. The Order-in-Council, dated 21st April, 1880, provides that no imported wheat manufactured in Canada, into flour, can go into consumption in Canada, unless the duty has been paid. Hence there is no necessity for changing it.

MANITOBA BOUNDARIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 98) an Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the Province of Manitoba, said: At the time when this Province was first marked out and separated from the great North-West, it was provided with very circumscribed boundaries, because its population was small and concentrated, principally within the limits then given it. But the opinion was general that those boundaries must be merely temporary. The late Province extended eighty-seven miles to the west of Winnipeg, and forty-five miles to the east, and 102 miles to the north, from the international boundary, and contained 13,464 square miles. Upon the west, the line proposes to run a little west from the international boundary—considerably west of the 101st meridian—between the 29th and 30th ranges of townships, that being selected as the line up to which there are settlements. West of the 29th range the country is of a different description though it is not broken, and it is without settlers. The clauses of the Bill are as follows:—

1. The Province of Manitoba shall be increased as hereinafter defined, that is to say, so that the boundaries thereof shall be as follows:—“Commencing at the intersection of the international boundary dividing Canada from the United States of America by the centre of the road allowance between the 29th and 30th ranges of townships lying west of the first principal meridian in the system of Dominion land surveys; thence northerly, following upon the said centre of the said road allowance as the same is or may hereafter be located, defining the said range line on the ground across townships one to forty-six, both inclusive, to the intersection of the said centre of the said road allowance by the centre of the road allowance on the twelfth base line in the said system of Dominion Land surveys; thence easterly along the said centre of the road allowance on the twelfth base line following the same to its intersection by the easterly limit of the District of Keewatin, as defined by the Act thirty-ninth Vict., Chap. twenty-one, that is to say, to a point where the said centre of the road allowance on the twelfth base line would be intersected by a line drawn due north from where the westerly boundary of the Province of Ontario intersects the aforesaid international boundary line dividing Canada from the United States of America; thence due south, following upon the said line to the international boundary aforesaid; and thence westerly, following upon the said international boundary line dividing Canada from the United States of America, to the place of beginning,” and all the land embraced by the said description, not now within the Province of Manitoba, shall, from and after the passing of this Act, be added thereto, and the whole shall, from and after the said date, form and be the Province of Manitoba.

2. The terms and conditions upon which such increase is made are as follows:—

(a) All the enactments and provisions of all the Acts of the Parliament of Canada which have, since the creation of the Province of Manitoba, been extended into, and made to apply to the said Province, shall extend and apply to the territory by this Act added thereto as fully and effectually as if the same had originally formed part of the Province and the boundaries thereof had, in the first instance, been fixed and defined as is done by this Act.

(b.) The said increased limit and the territory thereby added to the Province of Manitoba, shall be subject to all such provisions as may have been or shall hereafter be enacted, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway and the lands to be granted in aid thereof.

3. All laws and ordinances in force in the territory hereby added to the Province of Manitoba at the time of the coming into force of this Act, and all Courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and all legal Commissions, powers and authorities, and all officers, judicial, administrative and ministerial existing therein, at the time of the coming into force of this Act, shall continue therein as if such territory had not been added to the said Province; subject, nevertheless, with respect to matters within the legislative authority of the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba, to be repealed, abolished or altered by the said Legislature.

4. This Act shall come into force only upon, from and after a day to be appointed, in that behalf, by proclamation of the Governor published in the Canada Gazette.

I move the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS. I think this is a very important measure, and I greatly regret that the hon. gentleman did not submit the measure to the attention of Parliament at a time when it could be freely considered, and when all the members of the House were present, so that they could have taken part in the discussion of a measure which is of very great consequence. Hon. gentlemen will remember that, for some time past, there has been a dispute between the Government of Ontario and the Government of Canada in reference to the limits of the Province of Ontario; that, before the hon. gentleman had negotiated with the Hudson Bay Company for the acquisition of the North-West Territory and Rupert's Land, he and his colleagues contended that the territories belonging to the Hudson Bay Company were in the immediate vicinity of that Bay, and that over the great region of the North-West they had no other claim than that of mere occupation. The hon. gentleman also contended that the Province of Ontario extended indefinitely westward. That contention will be found in a report made by the Commissioner of Crown Lands in 1857, I think, and also in communications addressed to the Colonial Secretary, by the colleagues of the hon. gentleman, viz.: Sir George Cartier, and Hon. William Macdougall. If the House will look at what was done at even an earlier period, they will find that negotiations were carried on with the Indians, and that a treaty was concluded for the surrender of the territory lying to the north-west of Lake Superior to the source of the Pigeon River, or to the height of land. A considerable portion of the land so surrendered was surveyed; it was marked out for settlement; it is occupied by a considerable population, and when the Province of Ontario was divided into electoral divisions, under the British North America Act, the people in this territory lying to the westward of the line which the hon. gentleman has recently contended is the western boundary of Ontario, were given representation in this Parliament, and in the Local Legislature, as part of the Province of Ontario. The hon. gentleman when he was in power before, opened negotiations with the Government of Ontario with a view of settling the question of the boundary. In a communication with the hon. gentleman addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario he intimated that the height of land north of Lake Superior and Lake Huron was the boundary of the Province of Ontario on the north, and that the western boundary was a line drawn due north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. That was the first political document we have in which this contention was ever put forward. The Government of Ontario dissented from the view of the hon. gentleman, and refused to appoint surveyors or lay down a boundary on the line indicated in his communication, as they considered that neither the height of land, on the north, nor the meridional line on the west, marked the true limits of the Province. But when the hon. gentleman retired from office in 1873, the secretary of his Government, Mr. Aikins, had some communication with the Commissioner of Crown Lands. They agreed that a conventional boundary should be established, pending the settlement of the dispute with reference to the boundaries of Ontario; but an Order in Council was passed to give effect to their agreement. Subsequently, however, an Order in Council was passed, and that Order in Council declared that, for certain purposes, until the question of the limits of Ontario was finally disposed of, there should be a conventional boundary. The western extremity of Hunter's Island to the 51st parallel, and that parallel was declared to be the northern boundary. The hon. gentleman before his retirement had also suggested that the question should be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, that proposition was not accepted. It was thought that an inquiry into the facts, which would occupy a very great deal of time, would be inconvenient to a body having so much to do as the Judicial Committee; and it was proposed that arbitrators should be chosen and that they should be authorized to investigate the question, and decide upon the true boundaries of Ontario to the north and the west. The arbitrators were appointed. I need not go on and relate the various communications that took place between the Government of Ontario and the Government of Canada upon the subject. One arbitrator was appointed by each Government, and Sir Edward Thornton was chosen, by the consent of both, to act as third arbitrator. The question was investigated on behalf of each Government; it was argued before these arbitrators and an award was made. No steps have ever been taken to confirm that award, on the part of the Government of Canada, so far as I know. The hon. gentleman has not entered into any communication with the Government of Ontario on the subject. Both last Session and this Session, we have moved for papers on this matter, and, certainly, if the hon. gentleman was dissatisfied with the award that had been made, it was his duty to take the initiative in having it set aside, and having the question finally disposed of between the Government of Ontario and the Government of Canada. We know that, not only with regard to the disposal of property, not only with regard to the explorations, survey, and settlement of the country, have great inconveniences arisen, that inconveniences have also arisen in connection with the administration of justice. I have already mentioned that a conventional boundary for certain purposes was created, and that it was to remain for these purposes the boundary between the Province of Ontario and the Dominion, each acting as trustee for the other, in case a different line should be finally awarded with reference to the lands and property on their respective sides of this boundary line. Well, Sir, this compact between the parties has all the force of an ordinary law, it has all the force of a true obligation, and I have not yet seen or heard that any communication has been made from the Government of Canada, that they intend to disregard that conventional line. If the hon. gentleman intended to repudiate that line, if he intended that the treaty made between the two Governments should no longer subsist, and that it should be disregarded, we would expect that he would have communicated that fact to the Government of Ontario and to this Parliament. The hon. gentleman, in the Bill which he has submitted, has referred to the Act 39 Vict., Chap. 21. I do not know exactly what the hon. gentleman intends by the Bill to be eastern boundary of the Province of Manitoba, but looking at the speech made by his colleague in the Senate, it is clear the hon. gentleman intends that Manitoba shall be bounded on the east by the meridian line drawn north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi River. That view, while it is clear from the speech of the Postmaster General, is the intention of the Government by this Bill, it is not, I may say, the boundary that was marked out by the Act to which the hon. gentleman referred. That Act was subsequent in point of time to the convention between the two Governments, and referring to a line in consonance with the line marked out by the convention. I think it is pretty clear that the Act he refers to does not mark the boundary which is indicated in the Bill now before the House. However this may be, it is pretty clear that the hon. gentleman proposes by this Bill to hand over to the Province of Manitoba a large section of a country that was awarded to Ontario by the arbitrators. I do not believe that any gentleman who will take the trouble of looking at the Quebec Act and the circumstance which gave rise to that law, can doubt that that section of the country belongs to the Province of Ontario. Why has the hon. gentleman, at this last day of the Session, so far as this House is concerned, submitted a measure which he proposes shall be an act of spoliation, so far as Ontario is concerned? The hon. gentleman has not only disregarded the obligations entered into by the Government, he has not only disregarded the convention to which this Government stands pledged, until he formally notifies the Government of Ontario that he does not intend any longer to be bound by that convention, but he proposes, if he can, to provoke a conflict between the Province of Ontario and the Province of Manitoba on this question. The hon. gentleman has distinguished himself in political life for arraying one section of the Dominion against another, and now he proposes on a large scale to repeat the policy of a former period. I can well understand what the hon. gentleman intends. But there is no one on this side of the House who is opposed to the extension of the Province of Manitoba, or who wishes to give her narrower limits than the people of that Province desire, but so far as I know what they wish is an extension westward into the fertile territory, that is, the possession of territory which is capable of settlement, and which, by affording the means of settlement, will increase the wealth of that Province for the purposes of Provincial Government. There has been an award made by a gentleman who had no interest in favoring one party or the other, but the hon. gentleman proposes to disregard that award. If he were disposed to act fairly toward the Province of Ontario he would have notified them of his objections, because, as the defeated party, it rests upon him in appealing from the award, to take the question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or to ask for its being reheard before another body of arbitrators. But this the hon. gentleman has not done. He has not take a single step toward the solution of this difficulty, but by mere brute force—if I may use that expression—he has undertaken to legislate on the question as if this territory was the undisputed possession of the Parliament of Canada. He proposes to hand over to the Province of Manitoba that territory, in order that she may be made a party to the conflict in the discussion. How is this question to be dealt with in the future? The hon. gentleman, once he creates a Province extending indefinitely eastward, cannot take, by agreement or compact with Ontario, that view of settling this question. He has introduced another party, and has withdrawn himself. The Dominion Government will have no claim to the territory which is in dispute, and he will have transferred to Manitoba the question at issue at the present time between the Parliament of Canada and the Province of Ontario. No one, who has given any attention to this question, and to the dispute that has long existed between the Government of Ontario and the Government of Canada, will not feel that the hon. gentleman is seeking to sacrifice the interests of Ontario in this matter. For what purpose? If there had been a Conservative Government in Ontario, instead of a Reform Government, perhaps the hon. gentleman would not have taken the course he has; he would not have attempted to deal with it in the unfair manner in which he proposes to deal with it by this Bill. He proposes by the Bill, to transfer to the Province of Manitoba the whole territory in dispute. Now, it is unfair, at this late period of the Session to introduce this Bill, if the hon. gentleman intended to consider the whole question fairly on its own merits. Before this measure is permitted to pass, I propose moving an amendment to the second section. If the hon. gentleman will accept my amendment, I will withdraw my opposition to the Bill. I propose that, pending the settlement of the dispute between the Government of Canada and the Government of Ontario with reference to the western limit of that Province, the boundary of Manitoba shall not be extended eastward beyond the limit marked out by the arbitrators. The hon. gentleman may extend the boundary westward and northward, as far as he pleases, but I do not think it right or proper that Manitoba should be made a party to the dispute at present existing between this Government and the Government of Ontario. I have just been looking at a map which has some value in the consideration of this question. It will be remembered that Lord Shelburne took an active part in the discussion which led to the settlement of the limits of the United States, and upon this map, which was found among his papers, he marked out the territory, which he said, was arranged to be part of the Province of Quebec before the Act of 1774; and any hon. gentleman who looks at it will see that this territory comprises a much more extensive region than the arbitrators have awarded to the Province of Ontario. This map, following the plan of most old maps, made the boundary ascend the Mississippi River until it reached the junction of the Mississippi and the St. Peter River, now called the Minnesota; thence it descended the Minnesota River, which was considered the principal river, to its source. This map is copied from a map that was before the parties who negotiated the Treaty of 1763. I would refer also to another map of great value, that is one prepared by Mr. Pownall, who was secretary to the Lords of Trade and Plantations. It was prepared by Mr. Pownall in 1775, the year following the passing of the Quebec Act. Upon it the boundary of the Province of Quebec is represented as ascending the Mississippi River to its source, on the west, and following a line midway between Lake Winnipeg and Hudson Bay on the north; and it gives to the Province of Ontario even more extended limits on the north than those awarded to her by the arbitrators. Ontario claims the territory at least as far west as the arbitrators have marked it, and it does seem to me an act of gross injustice to the Province for this Parliament on the last day of the Session, to undertake to incorporate a large section of that territory with another Province on the west. Decency, at least, requires that Manitoba should not be involved in the dispute between Ontario and Canada, that the matter should be left in abeyance till the dispute between these parties is finally disposed of. If it is then found that any territory lying west of the limit marked out by the arbitrators, belongs to Canada, I am satisfied that no one on this side of the House will object to extending Manitoba eastward.

Mr. DAWSON. Next to the question of the Pacific Railway, Mr. Speaker, the subject of this Bill is by far the most important one that has come before the House during the present Session; any legislation regarding it must have a far reaching influence in the affairs of this Dominion, and, although its effects will be felt in the future more than the present, that is no reason why it should not receive from this House the deepest and most careful consideration, which I am much afraid it cannot meet with at this late period of the Session. The evidence brought before the Committee appointed to investigate the matter of the boundaries, last Session, affords ample proof that the award was made in the absence of anything like full information on the subject, and even without a due consideration of the information that was available. A great deal of misconception seems to have arisen, in the first place, from regarding the description in a cancelled Commission (that of 22nd April, 1786) as having any important bearing on the subject, and in the next, from claiming too much for a proclamation issued by General Alured Clark, on the 18th November, 1791. The description in the Commission of the 22nd

April, 1786, followed the wording of the Treaty of 1783. In 1791, on the passing of the Constitutional Act, it was discovered that a mistake had been made, and the result was that the Commission in question was cancelled and absolutely and completely revoked by a document signed by the King's own hand, in which are the following words: "Now know ye that we have revoked, determined, and by these presents do revoke and determine, the said recited letters patent" (that is the Commission of 22nd April, 1786) "and every clause, article or thing therein contained." Yet, on the face of this, that Commission was made use of to lead the arbitrators to suppose that the former boundaries of Upper Canada extended to the Lake of the Woods, and is still being made use of to create an impression among the people of Ontario the present boundaries of the Province should extend that far. In regard to the proclamation of General Alured Clark, it is so clumsily worded as to be meaningless in itself, and if the meaning sought to be attached to it by those who claim that Upper Canada should have extended south and west to the utmost limits of the country known as Canada, as in the words of the proclamation were the correct one, it would have amounted to a declaration of war against the United States, for by the treaty of 1783, entered into eight years previously, all that portion of Canada now covered by the great States of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and a large part of Minnesota had fallen to the United States, and if the British Government had wished to recover it, a different means of initiating the process than that of a proclamation of a mere locum tenens, as General Clark was in a remote Province, would have been adopted. But the Committee of last session brought to light the fact that the proclamation was unauthorized and in absolute contradiction of the King's instructions. These instructions were issued on the 16th day of September, preceding by more than two months the date of the proclamation, and in them the Governor was directed to make public a description very different from that contained in the proclamation. He was ordered simply to declare that, Upper and Lower Canada were "bounded as in our said Commission is particularly expressed," that is, as in the Commission of 12th September, 1791, to the Governor General, Lord Dorchester. The instructions in question were not laid before the arbitrators, were not contained in the Ontario book of documents, and there are many other things not contained in that book, and which were not in any way brought to the notice of the arbitrators, notwithstanding that they were necessary to enable them to arrive at a reasonable and just decision. They have arrived at a decision which no person who bestows any attention on the subject can for a moment believe to be the correct one, and they have laid out a boundary which is not the boundary of Ontario. The hon. member for Bothwell, when the subject of boundaries comes up, always speaks of the Mississippi line as being the one intended by the Act of 1774, and he supports this position by referring to that part of the Act which sets forth "that all the islands and countries in North America belonging to the Crown of Great Britain" (bounded by certain lines therein mentioned), "be during His Majesty's pleasure, made part and parcel of the Province of Quebec, as created and established by the royal proclamation of 1763." But in view of all the facts I think it is pretty evident that the Mississippi line was not the one intended by the Act, and it is reasonable to believe that Parliament would not have ignored the terms on which Montreal was surrendered, nor the treaty of Paris and proclamation of General Gage to the French of Illinois. By the terms of the capitulation of Montreal, made by the Marquis de Vaudreuil on the one side, and General Amherst, on the other, it was stipulated and agreed upon, and subsequently confirmed by treaty, that their laws and religion should be preserved to the French; as well in the "countries above" as in Quebec. Now, where were those "countries above?" We have very clear evidence as to where, at least, one of them was in the proclamation of General Gage, in which the following will be found:

"Whereas by the peace concluded at Paris, the 10th day of February, 1763, the country of the Illinois has been ceded to His Britannic Majesty, and the taking possession of the said country of the Illinois by the troops of His Majesty, though delayed, has been determined upon: We have found it good to make known to the inhabitants."

"That His Majesty grants to the inhabitants of the Illinois, the liberty of the Catholic religion, as has already been granted to the subjects in Canada. He has consequently given the most precise and effective orders to the end that his new Roman Catholic subjects of the Illinois may exercise the worship of their religion according to the rites of the Romish Church, in the same manner as in Canada."

And further, in the same proclamation, they are counselled

"To act in concert with His Majesty's officers, so that His troops may take possession of all the forts, and order be kept in the country. By this means alone they will spare His Majesty the necessity of recurring to the force of arms, and will find themselves saved from the scourge of a bloody war, and of all the evils which a march of an army into their country would draw after it."

It is pretty clear from this that the Illinois country was to be treated as a separate Colony, that, in fact, it was to be regarded in respect to the religion of the inhabitants and their institutions, in the same way as Quebec. But the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says, "that as the Act came down from the House of Lords, it was so worded as to embrace the whole country westward to the Mississippi." But, if it was amended so as, by any construction of its reading, not to embrace the whole country westward to the Mississippi, would not this afford, at least, some proof that the Illinois country was not to be included, was rather to be treated as a dependency. In all Commissions, the dependencies, as well as the Provinces, are placed under the jurisdiction of the Governors. But, if all the "islands and countries" were to have been included in the Province, where would have been the dependencies? The instructions of the 22nd December, 1774, to Lord Dorchester, shew pretty clearly that there were dependencies as well as a province, and he is directed in these instructions to see to the peltry trade of the "interior country" according to a plan proposed by "our Commissioners for Trade and Plantations." In these instructions, too, references are made to dependencies where there are "no Canadian possessions," so that it is pretty clear that all the "islands and countries" were not embraced in the enlarged Province of Quebec, although, they were to be under the jurisdiction of its Governor. It is rather singular that these instructions do not appear in the Ontario book of documents, which we are so often told contains everything bearing on the subject of the boundaries. It is evident to my mind, and, I think it will be so to any hon. member who investigates the subject, that Parliament did not contemplate making the Mississippi the western boundary of the enlarged Province of Quebec, when the Act of 1774, was passed, but it is equally clear that the first Commission issued under the Act, did carry the western boundary along the eastern bank of the Mississippi to the southern boundary of the territories of the Merchant Adventurers of England trading to Hudson Bay. This brings us to the vexed question of Commissions to Governors, and the importance to be attached to them. The Attorney-General of Ontario, and other high authorities claim that they are acts of prerogative, and, therefore, just as much law as the Act of 1774 itself, which, in fact, provided for the exercise of the prerogative. It is sometimes claimed that an act of prerogative can only find legitimate expression in an Order in Council; that may, indeed, be the case in the present day, but in those days Commissions to Governors were looked upon as being of equal consequence with Orders in Council. And they were in fact Orders of Council. No one will be so simple as to suppose that a Commission to the Governor of half a continent, more especially when it had to be signed by the King's own hand, was not an Act of the King in Council, and in every way equivalent to the most solemn Order in Council. In the instructions of the 22nd December, 1774, there occurs a passage (page 456 of the Report of the Committee of last Session) which shows clearly the importance which was attached to Commissions in those days, and I shall read it for the information of the House :

"With these our instructions you will receive our Commission under our Great Seal of Great Britain, constituting you our Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief, in America, and in all our Territories thereunto belonging, as the said Province and Territories are bounded and described in and by the said Commission; you are therefore to take upon you the execution of the office and trust we have reposed in you, and the administration of the Government, and to do and execute all things in due manner that shall belong to your command, according to the several powers and authorities of our said Commission, under our Great Seal of Great Britain and these our instructions to you, or according to such further powers and instructions as shall at any time hereafter be granted or appointed under our signet and sign manual, or by our order in our Privy Council."

It will be observed that the description in the Commission covered both Province and territory. Many arguments are made use of for and against the Mississippi line, but I have stated the principal ones, and it is for the House to judge whether that line was the western limit of the enlarged Province of Quebec, or not. If the Act did not make it so, it is quite evident that the first Commission issued under the Act did, and it continued to be the western boundary until the war of Independence swept the Mississippi and the vast regions between it and the Ohio, into the Confederacy of the United States. It will be observed, however, that the same Commission which carried the western boundary to the Mississippi, brought the territories of the Hudson Bay Company to the sources of that river, at least, so that the watershed evidently became the northern boundary of Quebec; but to this subject of the northern boundary I shall refer presently. In regard to the due north line, the word "northward" as used in the Act, does not necessarily mean due north. It may have been a line either to the eastward or the westward of north that was intended, and I could adduce what I conceive to be very strong arguments, to show that an eastward line was contemplated by Parliament, when the Act was under discussion. But the Judges in the De Reinhart trial decided unanimously that the western boundary of the Province of Quebec, as constituted by the Act of 1774, was a line drawn due north from the point of confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi; and three other Judges of the higher Courts, who were examined before the Committee of last Session, gave it as their opinion that that decision was correct, Judge Armour alone expressing a doubt as to whether the watershed of the St. Lawrence was not the boundary westward to the international boundary line. So much for the due north line. It has the opinion of very eminent men to sustain it, but, with all deference to their opinions—and I differ from them with great hesitation—I must say that in my opinion, whatever it may be worth, after a very full and careful investigation of the subject, and a familiarity with it in all its phases, extending over many years, I believe that the due north line will not stand the test of a thorough and impartial investigation. I shall now, for a moment, invite the attention of the House to a more easterly line, and which, if Commissions to Governors are to be taken as acts of prerogative, I believe to be the true one. However, I dwelt at such a length on this matter, when the subject of the boundaries was before the House a few weeks ago, that I need refer to it but very briefly now. I endeavored to show, on that occasion, that Upper Canada entered Confederation and became Ontario, with boundaries defined as in the Commission of 30th March, 1838, to the Earl of Durham, which made the entrance to Lake Superior the western boundary of Upper Canada, and I showed what I conceived to be very good reasons, why the boundary could not have been carried through Lake Superior, and why, in any case, it could not have gone to the Lake of the Woods. Having so recently spoken on the subject of Commissions, I shall now be very brief, and confine myself to saying that a state of things had grown up to the westward of the watershed which rendered it essential that there should be a clear definition of the boundaries of the Province of Upper Canada. That country, I mean the country to the west and north of the head of Lake Superior, had been for a long time treated and dealt with as Indian territory, and it had been declared by two Imperial Acts to be beyond the limits of the Province. Within that territory a colony had grown up, and the southern boundaries of that colony came to the height of land. The Imperial Government had recognised the right of the Hudson Bay Company to form that colony in virtue of their charter. The Hudson Bay Company's claims were being vigorously pressed by a man of extraordinary capacity. They were at that time, too, applying for a renewal, in a new form, of their lease of the Indian territory; the law officer of the Crown had pronounced in favor of their territorial claims; the idea had come to be generally entertained, both in England and in this country, that the true boundary between the Provinces and the Hudson Bay Company's territories, or I should rather say, the territories of the Hudson Bay watershed, was the height of land. With a knowledge of all these circumstances, it would have been impossible for the Imperial authorities to have carried the boundary line westward so far as it has been too often claimed that it should have gone. As regards the height of land line, say what we will, there is much in the contention that it is the natural boundary; if not the actual one. It was for a very long period recognized in this country as the northern limit of Upper Canada, and in 1850 a treaty was made by the Government of the Provinces with the Indians of Lakes Huron and Superior, in which the height of land is defined as the boundary between Upper Canada and the Hudson Bay Company's territories. We cannot, in these discussions, ignore a line which was accepted officially and held good in the public estimation for half a century. The very first Commission issued under the Quebec Act was carefully drawn, so as not to carry the Province of Quebec into the Hudson Bay watershed. In the whole series of old Commissions there is only one which carries the Province to the north of the watershed, viz, that of the 22nd April, 1786. It followed the wording of the Treaty of 1763, and, as soon as the mistake was discovered, it was absolutely and completely revoked, and never again repeated. A great deal of twaddle has been written and spoken about the Mississippi being supposed, in those days, to take its rise much farther to the north than it does, and a silly argument to support this view has been adduced from a clumsily lithographed map, in which the Winnipeg system of rivers is joined to the Lake Superior and Mississippi systems, an error which any one, not wilfully blind, could perceive at a glance. The geography of the Mississippi was, practically, as well known in those days as it is now, and this I endeavored to show, and, I think, with some success, in a memorandum which will be found published in the Ontario book of documents. Sir Travers Twiss, who stands high as a writer on international boundaries, and the rules which should govern them, expresses very clearly the ideas prevalent in England in reference to the boundaries of the Hudson Bay's watershed. On page 458 of the Report of the Committee, last year, will be found a short extract from his works, which runs as follows :—

"If the coast boundary, therefore, was one understood by the parties, the head waters of the streams that empty themselves into the Bay and Straits of Hudson, indicate the line which at once satisfied the other conditions of the Treaty of Utrecht. Such a line, if commenced at the eastern extremity of the Straits of Hudson, would have swept along through the sources of the streams flowing into the Lake Mistassinnie and Abbitibus, the Rainy Lake, in 48° 30', which empties itself by the Rainy River into the Lake of the Woods, the Red Lake and Lake Traverse. This last lake would have been the extreme southern limit, in about 45° 40', whence the line would have wound upward to the north-west, pursuing a serpentine course, and resting with its extremity upon the Rocky Mountains, at the southern most source of the Saskatchewan River in about the 48th parallel of latitude. Such would have been the boundary line between the French possession and the Hudson Bay district; and so we find that, in the limits of Canada, assigned by the Marquis de Vaudreuil himself, when he surrendered the Province to Sir John Amherst, the Red Lake is the apex of the Province of Canada, or the point of departure from which, on the other side, the line is drawn to Lake Superior; on the other, 'follows a serpentine course southward to the River Oubache, or Wabash, and along it to the junction with the Ohio.'

In regard to the award no one can say that it describes the true boundaries of Ontario. It was drawn without the slightest regard to the Hudson Bay Company's territories, to Indian territories, or to Acts of the Imperial Parliament. It makes Ontario run into the clearly defined boundaries of another colony, ignores the Rupert's Land Act, and is, in fact, as much out of place as if it had declared Toronto to be in the North-West Territories. The arbitrators were, no doubt, able men, as well as being men of the highest respectability, but they had not the full facts before them, more especially as regarded the country to the north and north-west of Lake Superior. The history of that country, the struggles of the Hudson Bay and North-West Companies, the proceedings of Lord Selkirk and the action of the Imperial Government, were all alike ignored or unknown, or, at all events, not laid before them in a proper shape. The hon. member for Halton, when the question was last up for discussion, seemed to have taken a leaf from a very prejudiced source, when he stated that the Hudson Bay Company had at one time accepted the line of the Albany, as their southern boundary. The line to which he refers was spoken of soon after the peace of Ryswick, about the first year of the past century. That peace the Hudson Bay Company said left them the only mourners. They had been but thirty years in existence at that time as a company, they had been driven by the French from nearly all their possessions and posts, and would have been glad of anything which did not involve their utter ruin; but while saying that, under the pressure of necessity, they would accept the parallel of 53°, they protested loudly against their rights being so far infringed upon, and a few years later their claims to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson were secured to them by the treaty of Utrecht. The circumstance is an extremely slight one on which to raise an argument in support of the award. It is useless to go back to the Treaty of Utrecht in estimating the claims to the French and the English at Hudson Bay, and this is admitted by the Attorney-General of Ontario, who should know quite as much of law as either the hon. member for Halton or the hon. member for Bothwell.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I would like to ask a question at this point. Is it the hon. gentleman's contention that a Commission issued to a Governor, defining the boundaries of the country, and giving a different description from that set out under the authority of an Act of the Imperial Parliament, would change the boundaries? Assuming that the boundaries were fixed by the Act of 1774, and the Commission recognizing those boundaries in the sense for which the hon. member for Bothwell and other members contend, does the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) hold that a subsequent Commission, standing alone, could limit or change the boundaries of that country?

Mr. DAWSON. I mean to say that the exercise of the prerogative was provided for in the Act of 1774, and that the Commission issued under that prerogative changing the boundaries, was as much law as the Act itself. The Act provided for the exercise of the prerogative, and therefore, a Commission, issued by the King in Council under the authority of that Act, was as much law as the Act itself. I have very good, strong, and high precedents for taking that view. I will quote one authority, and I think when I tell the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Macdougall) that I am about to quote himself as an authority, probably he will see the importance of my contention. In a preliminary memorandum, which the hon. gentleman wrote to the Ontario Government some years ago, and a very nice memorandum it is—in fact it is the only gem in a whole mass of rubbish which appeared in the books of those times—the hon. gentleman says:

"The western boundary of Upper Canada at its western limit or starting point has been, ever since the Treaty of Peace of 1763, or at all events since the 22nd April, 1786, identical or co-terminous with the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods."

Forgetting all the time that the Commission, for which he claims so much (that of 22nd April, 1786), was, in 1791, completely revoked and never afterwards repeated, and that Upper Canada had no existence in 1783. In regard to the Bill now before the House, I am afraid that our friends of the plucky little Province of Manitoba will be thrown off their balance. A prize is held up to them by this Bill which may well disturb their equanimity; they are to have not only a vast and fertile region to the west, but by this Bill we dangle before their eyes the gold of the Lake of the Woods and the forests of the Rainy River region. If the line at the entrance to Lake Superior is to hold good, as the western boundary of Ontario, and it has much to sustain it as the legal boundary, our friends of the Prairie Province will have their sway extended over the clear waters of Lake Superior. The shores of that inland sea, with their rich ores of silver, copper and iron, will be theirs. The silver islets which are coming to light every day will also be theirs. But is it quite fair or generous to Ontario to bring this new element into the contest about the boundaries? Ontario has, for years past, had longing eyes on the forests of Rainy River, from the sale of which she hopes to recoup her nearly exhausted surplus, as she once did from the sale of the forests of Algoma. There are thirty thousand square miles of forest lands on the waters of Rainy River. Nature has planted pines there for the supply of the treeless prairies of the west with the necessary article of lumber. The market will be unfailing and prices must rule high, and if Ontario could only obtain control of these forests, the cost of the construction of her new Parliament Buildings would be a mere bagatelle. By this Bill, we say in effect to Manitoba, fight Ontario for these vast forests of Rainy River, for the gold of the Lake of the Woods and the silver of Lake Superior, and I should think Ontario would hardly like to be brought into such unpleasant relations with our fighting Province. Again, Mr. Speaker, we have a settlement at Thunder Bay, but it is a small one, and the wishes of its inhabitants may be thought to be scarcely deserving of notice, but I can assure this House that the people of that settlement, much as they esteem and like the people of Manitoba, would be very reluctant to throw their lot in with theirs, because, for one reason, a vast wilderness would intervene between them and the new seat of Government, and, for another, they would feel that their wishes had not been at all consulted in the matter. They are, of course, as I have said, a small community, but they are a plucky community, fully alive to their rights and privileges, and they would maintain them with great determination, and would not tamely submit to being tumbled about from one Province to another without so much as an endeavor being made to ascertain their wishes or saying to them by your leave. But I have full confidence that the Government will do nothing rashly, and, in fact, this Bill just leaves the question of the boundaries where it was—unsettled. To avoid any misapprehension as to my own views, in reference to the importance which should be attached to Commissions to Governors, I may say that I believe them to have been acts of prerogative in their most impressive form, in every way equivalent to orders of the King in Council, which they in fact were—I mean that they were really and truly orders of the King in Council, and no one who considers the circumstances of this country at the time at which the Commission to the Earl of Durham was issued (30th of March, 1838), can for a moment suppose that it had not received the most careful consideration of the Imperial Government, before being submitted to the King for signature. As to the due north line, it may or may not have been the true western boundary of Upper Canada, in 1818, when the De Reinhart trial took place; but in 1838 an entirely new departure was taken and new boundaries were assigned to Upper Canada, on the west and north, and it is to the Commission of 1838 to the Earl of Durham, and a long series of succeeding ones, in which the description was never altered, that we must look for a true definition of the boundaries with which Upper Canada entered Confederation and became the Province of Ontario. This Bill is so worded that it might bring the eastern boundary of Manitoba to the neighborhood of Sault St. Marie, and, everything considered, I think it would be better to amend it so as to give to that Province a clearly defined boundary on the east, which might be done by running its present eastern boundary due north to the northern limit of the Province. Afterwards, when the question of the boundaries came to be settled, such additions as might be reasonable might be made on the east.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I am of opinion that the discussion of the question as to where the boundary of Ontario really is, is not likely to be a very profitable one at this stage of the Session. As I understand it this Bill does not undertake to dispose of that question one way or the other, it leaves it open to future adjudication. The only question in my mind is as to the effect that will follow with reference to those persons living under municipal organization in the so-called disputed territory at Thunder Bay and in the townships adjacent. It seems to me that some clause ought to be added to the Bill declaring that its passage shall not affect the existing state of affairs with respect to that matter. I think it would remove difficulty and embarrassment, and, perhaps, legal questions that might arise among municipalities west of the line which is claimed by the Dominion—I suppose we may admit that as the western boundary of Ontario—namely, from the junction of the Ohio northward. I fear that some difficulty may result from that question being apparently left open; but upon the main question, I, for one—and I claim, with my hon. friend, to have given some attention to it—am quite willing to agree that the boundary of Manitoba on the east shall be co-terminous with the boundary of Ontario on the west, because that relieves us of the necessity of providing either for the administration of law in Dominion territory or creating another Province to embrace that territory. I think it is in the interest of the Dominion and of those two Provinces, that their boundary should be co-terminous. Now, if I read this Bill correctly, it leaves this question open. After describing the territory to be included in the enlarged Province of Manitoba, it says:

“Proceeding to a point where the said centre of the road allowance on the twelfth base line would be intersected by a line drawn due north from where the westerly boundary of the Province of Ontario intersects the aforesaid International boundary.”

So that, if it shall be ultimately determined that the boundary of Ontario is a line running from the junction of the Ohio, or at the Lake of the Woods, a line due north from the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods in the one case or the meridian of the Ohio in the other will be the eastern boundary of Manitoba and the western boundary of Ontario. Now, with reference to the question of the boundary, I may say that I am not at all satisfied, as an Upper Canadian, with the action of the Government. I was not satisfied with the action of the hon. gentlemen opposite. They had this question under their control for five years, ample time, one would suppose, to have disposed of it. Measures had been taken prior to their accession to office to deal with. They had a friendly Government in power in Ontario, and it would have been easy, if political friendship has anything to do with such matters, to have brought this question to a decision. They kept it in hand during the whole term of their Administration and transferred it to the new Government as a still unsettled question. Now, as to what ought to be done, I respectfully offer my opinion that under all circumstances, starting with the admission which I think is made on all sides, that the arbitrators appointed to adjust this boundary did not establish the legal boundary of Ontario, and did not affect to do it.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman says “no,” but I think the history of the case clearly leads to that conclusion. They had evidence to show that the Mississippi River was declared to be the western boundary by the Act of 1774, and by Commissions to Governors sent out by Great Britain. On the north they fixed on the Albany River as a convenient boundary, and they found some justification for it in the discussions that have taken place between the Hudson Bay Company and the Imperial Government. But it is not pretended that that was the declared legal boundary of the old Province of Quebec. It is the boundary that these gentlemen chose to suggest as a convenient one for the future. Whether that was within their jurisdiction, I am not disposed to offer an opinion just now. But if the Dominion Parliament choose to agree with the Government of Ontario that the award in that respect is final, the question would be settled. But the Government of the Dominion have not decided to take that line, and the question is still open. It seems to me the proper course to pursue is to bring it to a legal adjudication. We cannot take from Ontario that which legally belongs to it. Any Act of that kind would be ultra vires. It would be competent for Ontario or for any individual living in the disputed territory to raise the question, and to carry it through all the Courts of this country to the highest Court of the Empire. Now, as that is the ultimate means of ascertaining where the legal boundary of Ontario is, on the west and on the north, why should not the Government of Ontario and the Government of the Dominion at once agree upon a case for submission to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and let the whole question be argued and decided there? My hon. friend who last spoke, is a learned gentleman in matters of survey, and has given a great deal of attention to this question, but I must confess that I cannot agree with his method of arguing legal questions; I cannot agree to the doctrine that a Commission issued to a Governor, without any discussion with respect to it, without intending to affect the question at all, is to be taken as final. I believe that, when the prerogative is exercised in a case of this kind, it must be by precise language; it must clearly show the intention in the royal mind to make a change in the boundary. Any accidental omission, any clerical omission or mistake on the part of the Imperial officers, in drawing up the Commission, will not take away from a Province or a distant colony its boundaries fixed by express Act of Parliament, and acquiesced in and acted upon for generations. My hon. friend really must go that far to sustain his argument with respect to subsequent Commissions upon a question of this kind. I do hope that no legal difficulty will arise in consequence of our declaring that the boundaries of Manitoba on the east shall be co-terminous with the boundaries of Ontario on the west. I apprehend that there is some danger politically, and I trust the Prime Minister will consider that question. If we can provide against it, I think it is our duty to do so. This question is likely to become of considerable political importance, and I trust that the supporters of the Government will not be called upon to justify any unnecessary delay or negligence whatever, or from any improper motive, in prolonging this unfortunate dispute between Ontario and the Dominion.

Mr. STRANGE. I beg to say that I agree to a considerable extent with what has fallen from the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I think there is no difficulty at all in finding the easterly boundary of Manitoba and the western boundary of Ontario. As the whole matter of the territory in dispute is a legal question, I think the best way to get the solution is to take it out of the hands of the Dominion Government altogether, and carry it to the Privy Council. I think, therefore, that the members from Ontario need have no difficulty in sustaining the Government in the course they are pursuing in this matter, as it is the most speedy way of arriving at a just and equitable decision.

Mr. ROYAL. I am in favor of the measure proposed by the Government. The unsettled condition in which the question of the western boundary of Ontario was left, was no doubt due to the sudden change in our political atmosphere, which took place on the 18th of September, 1878. Otherwise, this question would have been settled to day, though not in accordance with either law or correct policy as to the Government of this country. In defining the boundaries as they are defined in this Bill, I believe the Government have only complied with the prayer of the Legislature of Manitoba, on the 23rd of December last. On that day, on motion of the Premier, Mr. Norquay, resolutions were passed, of which the second is as follows:

"2. Resolved, That it is desirable in the interest of the Province generally, and more especially of those settlers who have already settled and are expected to settle on those portions of territory about to be incorporated in the Province of Manitoba, that no exemption from taxation should be made of lands belonging to any company. That, with the limited means at the disposal of the Government, it is quite impossible for any executive to render municipal organization such assistance as would be desirable, and the municipalities being thus left to their own resources, it is the opinion of the House that they should have the fullest opportunity of levying at a rate on all lands not the property of the Crown, within their respective limits, without any exception, for the purpose of raising means to prosecute works of improvement necessary to the development thereof."

In my opinion, no law passed by this Parliament can override a law passed by the Imperial Parliament. Amongst other things, municipal taxation was by the Imperial Parliament, placed within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures; and I do not think the Pacific Railway Act can, in any way, limit the power of any of the Provinces to levy municipal taxes. By this Bill, the limits of Manitoba will be extended, so as to give that Province an area about 13 times as great as it now possesses. Manitoba at present covers about 8,000,000 acres of land; after the passage of this Act, it will cover about 98,000,000 acres. Quebec being the largest Province of the Dominion, Manitoba will then stand second as regards area. In view of the legislation we have accomplished this Session in connection with the Pacific Railway, I believe this extension is a necessary part of a good policy. There appears, however to be no provision made in the Estimates for the additional expense which will be entailed by this accession of territory. In this connection, I may read the third resolution passed by the Manitoba Legislature:

"3. Resolved, That it is desirable that the boundaries of the Province should be extended eastwards to correspond with the line marked as the west boundary of Ontario, near the eighty-ninth meridian of west longitude; that the requirements of the prairie portions of the Province could be supplied with the timber of the eastern portion, besides which a port on Lake Superior would thereby be secured to the Province."

Now, Manitoba being a prairie Province, and essentially a wheat growing country, I believe it is in accordance with the natural requirements of the Province that it should have a port on Lake Superior. The fourth resolution reads thus:—

"That this House respectfully urges upon the Government of Canada a careful consideration of the foregoing resolutions, and it is of opinion that an adoption of the same would benefit the Province, and contribute materially to place Manitoba in the position nature intended her to occupy."

Now, I should certainly regret to see the entire expense of maintaining this additional territory thrown upon an already overburdened Province. The population of the new territory, according to the best authorities, is 14,000 or 15,000, while the extent of country which the Province of Manitoba will have to administer will be immense in comparison with the means at its disposal, and I think it would be only fair for this Government to give some assurance that they will administer the law and maintain good government in those at present unorganized and unsettled parts of our North-West. With regard to the Bill itself, I believe the provision is a very fair one, which reserves to the Governor in Council the power by proclamation to say when this Act shall come in force; but I will, however, say that I do not see why an additional burden should be imposed on the Province without providing means for the Province to carry it.

Bill read the second time.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS. Suppose this Bill is carried as you proposed, and you issue your proclamation at once, how do you propose the settlements at Rainy River, Prince Arthur's Landing and elsewhere, shall be governed? Which will have jurisdiction, Ontario or Manitoba, both of which claim it? The hon. gentleman proposes to disregard, by this Bill, the conventional boundary which has been agreed on between the Dominion and Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There never was a convention that settled the boundary line. An arrangement was made between Ontario and the Dominion, by which the Dominion would sell the lands west of a particular line, and the Province of Ontario would sell those east of that line; and when the boundary was finally settled, the accounts for monies received on sale of lands would be adjusted between the two Governments. Whether this Bill will pass or not will not affect that arrangement. The same uncertainty will prevail in either case.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. There is this difference, that at present the Ontario Government assume their right, not only to deal with lands and sell them up to the conventional boundary, but to survey and establish townships, and these townships so organized come under the municipal law of Ontario. Under this Bill, the Province of Manitoba may assume not only that it will have the right to organize townships to the conventional boundary, but also to the point marked on this map. I hope we shall not be met by some Dawson hereafter who will rake up this map and say we have committed ourselves to this boundary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By extending the boundaries of Manitoba, it does not affect the proprietorship of the land. The land in the extended boundary belongs to the Dominion still. The convention is merely as to the sale of the lands, and that convention still exists, notwithstanding that these lands are included in the Province of Manitoba. The Province of Ontario will go on surveying these lands and selling them as it does now, until the boundary is settled. The whole arrangement is simply this; the sooner the boundary is settled the better. It was proposed by the Dominion Government that the question, which is strictly a legal one, depending on the construction of various Statutes, should be submitted to the ultimate Court of jurisdiction. Ontario would not agree to that proposition thus putting herself in the wrong at once. The hon member for Bothwell had been, previous to his taking office in the late Government, a paid agent of the Ontario Government in this matter. There is no blame to be attached to him for that. When the member for Bothwell, who had originally been the advocate for Ontario on this question, entered the late Cabinet, it was as Minister of the Interior, having charge of all the Dominion lands, and it was his duty to fight the battle of the Dominion as against Ontario. The tendency of his mind was shown in his elaborate and able report on the subject, yet he was the person whose duty it was, departmentally, to look after the interests of the Dominion. The Dominion had paid the Hudson Bay Company for the whole of that country wherever the line might be, and the Dominion Government had to look to the interests of the whole Dominion, and not to those of any of the Provinces. For my part, it is a matter of no consequence to what Province the land belongs. But still the Government of the day are trustees for the Dominion. The Premier of the late Government, too, was a prominent Ontario man, Mr. Mackenzie, and under those circumstances, the Government were peculiarly bound to see that the question was left to a tribunal that could speak authoritatively, and I do not see, unless they were afraid of their case, why they should have objected to the Imperial tribunal, to which it must go finally. That is the only way of settling the case. All must submit to that, the highest tribunal in the Empire.

Mr. MILLS. Why do you not take it there?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was an arbitration proceeding, for which the hon. gentlemen opposite had not the consent of Parliament, in a matter involving a territory large enough to make a nation. However, the late Dominion Government and the Ontario Government chose their own men to act in this matter, only one of them, the Chief Justice of Ontario, being a lawyer; and those arbitrators, as the member for Halton said, did not pretend to lay down the true boundaries. And they did not do so, as I know. We have only to read the written statement of one of those arbitrators, Sir Francis Hincks, in the Monetary Times, in which he admitted they did not settle the true boundary, to be convinced. They were appointed to settle the true boundary, but were not asked to fix a convenient boundary. There was nothing, then, to appeal from. A convenient boundary could only be settled by the joint action of the two Legislatures, and the Dominion Parliament, or Government, did not choose to carry out the award made. They say it is not a true boundary—that the Dominion wants simply what by law is their right. The Ontario Government and Legislature have no right to ask more. But they say, no. They passed a law accepting the award, because they saw it added an additional kingdom to Ontario, as was the remark of its Premier, and they will not do anything else. They say—we have got that award, and you must abide by it. With regard to the time of the Session at which this question was brought up, the previous consent, under the Imperial Act, which allows the boundaries of the Provinces to be increased or diminished, of the parties affected, must be obtained by legislation. The Province of Manitoba passed a Bill that could not be accepted, and that was the cause of the delay in this case. The Legislature of Manitoba was prorogued and afterwards resumed to pass a second Bill respecting the boundaries, which was done only the other day. As soon as we got the second Bill, our Bill was introduced into the Senate and passed there, inasmuch as this House was so completely occupied with other leading matters.

Mr. DREW. If I understood the remarks of the Premier as to the selling of the lands in that section, they belong to the Dominion Government, and the passing of this Bill would not give the right to those lands to the Manitoba Legislature.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. DREW. I understood that. Now, whether the lands about Prince Arthur's Landing, or the townships west of it, should be under the jurisdiction of Manitoba or Ontario, I care very little. But I know that the people of Prince Arthur's Landing and Fort William and settlers in those townships to the west are under Ontario municipal regulations. If Manitoba passes a municipal law that will extend to those districts, you will have one set of people electing municipal officers under her law, and another electing them under the Ontario law. You will have two sets of officers selling property for different objects leaving the people affected to enter Court to ascertain who is right and who is wrong. If this Bill passes, Manitoba will have a right to claim that her eastern boundary is marked on the map, at the Landing, and that that is western boundary of Ontario? Has Manitoba not as good a right to assert that her eastern boundary goes to a certain point east, as Ontario to assert that it goes to a certain point west? If that is the case, what is to prevent the Legislature of Manitoba passing a municipal law declaring how the land is to be laid out in municipal districts, how the people are to elect their municipal officers, and the rate of taxation for municipal purposes, and what is to prevent the Legislature of Ontario from doing the same thing? The people will have doubts as to whose jurisdiction they belong, and one set of municipal officers will be passing by-laws under the Manitoba and another under the Ontario Government system. A man wanting to buy property and seeing it advertised by the authorities under each Government, will not know from whom to buy. A purchaser buying from one set of officials may be sold out by the opposite set. Then will come the question as to titles, and what is right and what is wrong, leaving the disputants no other recourse but an appeal to the Courts; and they will not know what Court to appeal to not knowing the boundaries. The member for Bothwell will propose an amendment, I suppose, in effect, that the western boundaries of Ontario shall go to the point fixed by the award until the whole question is settled. I favor such an amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DREW. Surely that cannot injure Manitoba. I am satisfied that the people of Prince Arthur's Landing could be as well governed from Winnipeg as from Toronto; probably they would prefer being governed from Toronto. But I contend that by this Bill the position we should place them in is this—they would not know to what Province they belonged or to what Government they owed allegiance. The question of the boundary of the Provinces we have nothing to do with here; we cannot settle it here, Parliament cannot take from Ontario a foot of land to which it is entitled. But what we can do—Ontario and the Dominion have got on without trouble on this head so far—is to see that this Parliament keeps within its own jurisdiction, so far as it is able, the disputed territory. I think it is the feeling of Ontario as well as of Manitoba that the two Provinces should join—that there should be no territory between them; and I cannot see how serious trouble between Ontario and Manitoba can be avoided if the Bill passes in its present shape.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I wish to say to my hon. friend that if Prince Arthur's Landing is not within the bounds of Ontario, the laws which are proposed to be put in execution there are not laws at all; for the Legislature of Ontario has no right to pass laws affecting that territory if it is within our bounds, and all their proceedings there will be illegal. We would then be perpetuating an illegality. It is no matter whether that illegality is caused by the Province of Ontario or the Province of Manitoba; if this land is not in the Province of Ontario, it is in the North-West Territory, and is covered by the laws of the North-West Territory, which are not the laws of Ontario. Whether the conflict is with the laws of Ontario or the laws of Manitoba is a matter of no consequence, so long as there is a conflict. The people of Prince Arthur's Landing may resist the processes of law; they may say to the sheriff that he is committing an illegality—

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Do not tell them the way, or they may do it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been done already. A man may say to another who brings a suit against him: "This is the process of an Ontario Court, and Ontario laws do not extend here, because we are not part of that Province." The same thing might happen with regard to every process of law and every title, whether the boundary is settled or not. The effect of settling the boundary between these Provinces will compel, I do not say the Province of Ontario, but the present Government of Ontario, to be reasonable, and not to insist upon a boundary which cannot be supported in any Court or tribunal in the world. They will come to terms quickly enough when they find that they must do so. To use an expression which is common in Scotland, it is land hungry they are for that country, and they are resolved to get it rightly or wrongly.

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman was dissatisfied with the award, he could have just as easily have taken the initiative in objecting to it as the Province of Ontario, and why has he not done so? I moved for the papers both last Session and this Session, and there appears to be no communication showing that the hon. gentleman was dissatisfied with the award. From the time that the hon. gentleman took office, in 1878, until the time those papers were moved for, there has been no correspondence with the Government of Ontario, or at all events none has been brought down. If the hon. gentleman was dissatisfied with the award, it was as open to him to appeal as it was to the Government of Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was nothing to appeal against. The award was of no value.

Mr. MILLS. Why did not the hon. gentleman insist on going before the Committee of the Privy Council.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. How could we go?

Mr. MILLS. Though the hon. gentleman could not have gone under the ordinary provisions creating that Committee, he knows that Her Majesty may consider a petition which might be submitted to her by any person in the colonies. When the Government of the day comes to Parliament and ask it to vote the money necessary to carry on the arbitration, Parliament voted the money and the hon. gentleman, who was a member of the House, took no exception to what was being done; and he is just as responsible for the reference to arbitrators as were the arbitrators who referred it. The hon. gentleman says I was employed by the Government of Ontario to prepare a case. That is true; but the Government of Ontario did not indicate to me that I was to endeavor to obtain evidence in support of any particular line. They asked me to investigate the matter and where the true boundary was to be. I formed my own convictions on the evidence I was able to discover. The question had been referred to arbitration a year before I went into the Government; but the case had not been prepared, and it was prepared by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. The hon. gentleman may appoint as a Superior Court Judge a gentleman who has been counsel in a particular case; he does not try the case in which he was counsel, and I did precisely the same thing. The case was taken charge of by the Premier and the

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Minister of Justice who conducted it before the arbitrators, and I had nothing to do with it. All I did with regard to it was to tell the Surveyor-General that he was to give the Council on behalf of the Dominion any information it was in his power to give. We find the Minister of Agriculture acting for the head of the Department of Railways for weeks and months, and surely there was nothing extraordinary about two of my late colleagues taking charge of a matter in which it was not desirable that I should take part.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I repudiate any responsibility for the arbitration; I was in Opposition; I did not belong to the Government, and I did not support it.

Mr. MILLS. You voted the money. There was no division, and you allowed it to pass.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not vote for it. I never voted for it, and the hon. gentleman ought not to say I did. The hon. gentleman asks why we did not bring it to the Privy Council. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should make that statement, for he knows it could not have gone to the Privy Council without the consent of Ontario, because it was a mixed question of law and of fact; the facts were not agreed upon between the parties. But we cannot hand over to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and they would not accept it, an issue involving the matters of fact in dispute, and going over all the evidence, as the hon. gentleman proposes.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman say that it is the duty of the Government of Ontario to yield to his version of the facts?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not at all, nor is it the duty of the Dominion Government to accept their idea of the facts; because, according to my idea, the whole case was given away before the arbitrators. Anybody reading the case would see that it was most wretchedly managed on the part of the Dominion. An inferior man, though a respectable man in his way, Mr. McMahan, was chosen to conduct the whole case, instead of employing the first legal ability in the country, instead of the Minister of Justice himself conducting the case before the Arbitrators. The whole case was thrown away—it looks almost as if it was deliberately thrown away. Never was such a case so given away as the case of the Dominion was on the very face of it.

Mr. DAWSON. The people of Prince Arthur's Landing, which is part of the disputed district and within the country I have the honor to represent, do not know whether the decision will be one way or the other. It makes it very awkward for them, and for the people at Thunder Bay, not to know in what Province they are until this question of the boundaries is settled. They have lived hitherto under the laws of Ontario, and I really think it would be better to have the defined boundary left as it is for the present on the east of Manitoba, where it would not interfere with this disputed territory at all. Otherwise the people of Thunder Bay would be placed in a very awkward position, and would not know which Province to look to. They are a considerable community now, numbering 6,000 or 7,000, and I can assure this House that they are a very intelligent community. They have the greatest esteem for the people of Manitoba, because, like themselves, they have had to battle with the wilderness and hew their way through it to make homes for themselves, but they would prefer to be under the law of Ontario, because they would be too far from the seat of Government in Manitoba, and Thunder Bay would be left out in the cold. The people in that district would be very reluctant to throw in their lot with Manitoba.

Bill reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. MILLS. I move:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, so to amend the same as to provide that, pending the final settlement of the western boundary of Ontario, the eastern boundary of Manitoba be not extended eastward of the limits declared by the award of the arbitrators appointed by the Governments of Canada and of Ontario, to be the western limit of the Province of Ontario.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. DAWSON moved:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend it, so that the present eastern boundary of the Province of Manitoba, prolonged to the northern limit of the said Province, shall be the boundary line of the said Province on the East.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to move an amendment to this Bill. I cannot accede to the view of the hon. gentleman that he has given sufficient reasons for presenting this Bill to the House at this stage of the Session. It is difficult to conceive a more important measure than the present one. We, perhaps, do not realize the extent of the measure in its consequences. I observe, from the report of the explanations given in the other branch of the Legislature by the Minister who there introduced this Bill, that he states that after it becomes law, the area of Manitoba will be 154,411 square miles; the area of Ontario, 109,480; the area of Quebec, in this respect the premier Province, 193,355; the area of New Brunswick, 27,000; and the area of Nova Scotia, 21,000. Well, Sir, it seems to me that some of the considerations which have been addressed to the House, notably by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) should be dealt with in a Bill of this kind. It involves in the first place—although we are not asked at this moment to deal with it—a consideration of the financial condition of the Province of Manitoba. I hold that the practical result of our passing this measure under these circumstances, is to commit ourselves to undefined liabilities with reference to the re-arrangement of the financial condition of that Province. I am not opposed to an extension of the limits of the Province of Manitoba. I believe it to be a great disadvantage that there should be too small Provinces. I believe it also to be important that the Provinces should not have too great an area. I believe it to be extremely important that a Province with a very small population should not be entrusted with an area inordinate, relatively, to its existing population. But none of these considerations, to my mind, lead to the conclusion that we ought to hesitate in enlarging the boundaries of Manitoba. It is, however, an extension westward which is necessary, and which is important to the people of this country to-day. It is to secure to themselves, the stability, the importance and the resources desirable from the filling up of the territory to their west that they desire immediately. I have looked at the map which has been laid on the Table, and, as far as I can judge, the territory proposed to be added to the Province of Manitoba on the east, if you subtract from the remainder of its territory the area covered with water, is at least two-thirds of the whole area of the projected Province. I do not despair of the territories between the present boundary of Manitoba and Ontario being filled up. But they will, necessarily, in the present condition of things, fill up slowly. The attraction is westward, and the intervening territory, just as is the case with the districts to the rear of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, will necessarily fill up very slowly relatively to the west. My hon. friend from Provencher spoke of the importance of having a port on Lake Superior. I could have understood that observation, if our Constitution had been so framed that it was possible for one Province to establish a hostile tariff against another. If it was in the least degree possible for Ontario, or any other Province that might be framed, to shut out Manitoba in any way from Lake Superior, or for Quebec to shut out Ontario from Montreal, it would be important to Manitoba to have a port on Lake Superior, or to Ontario to have an ocean port of its own. It is true the Province itself cannot project railways beyond its own boundaries, whatever they are, but it is equally true that this Legislature can deal, and with one notable exception of which he, at any rate, cannot complain, having regard to his vote, has dealt with them in a spirit of determination to extend railway facilities to a Province wherever there may, and sometimes when there does not appear a reasonable prospect of the project being carried into execution. Beyond that, we have already a railway under way, and very near completion, to Thunder Bay, so that for all practical purposes the Province of Manitoba has, as it ought to have, free, undisputed access to the interior seaboard. These considerations are merely suggested to show that it is wholly unnecessary, in the interests of Manitoba and to gratify any present legitimate aspiration of that Province, to take the step which is proposed with reference to its eastern boundary. That step is, according to the view of the Government and of the majority that is disposed to carry this Bill, to take the boundary of Manitoba down to the point past Prince Arthur's landing, as shown on the map laid on the Table. You have had the statement of the contention of the Government. It is their view that if this law passes, they hand over to Manitoba 154,000 square miles of territory, including in that its present area and all the territory down to and inclusive of Prince Arthur's Landing on Lake Superior. It is true, they say that will only be the effect of this measure if it turns out that this is the true limit of Ontario; but, in the same instant, they tell us that, in their opinion, that is the true limit of Ontario in point of law, and that, therefore, in point of law, the effect of this Act will be to project the boundary of the Province of Manitoba to that particular point. That was distinctly stated in the Senate, where the hon. Minister who conducted the Bill through that House, gave us a declaration of where the line would be. In computing the population, for instance, he gives: of whites around Prince Arthur's Landing and the township of McIntyre, 2,500; the township of Oliver, 500; Fort William and Neebing, 1,250; Mattawan, 250; Sibley, 750; also a number of people along the line of railway works, who have taken up locations, 1,000; making a total of 6,250. He pointed out, also, in other parts of his speech the same result. He, therefore, declared that his view is that in point of law, the effect of this legislation will be to transfer that territory to the Province of Manitoba. Now, I think that the status quo ought to have some effect in a discussion of this nature. I will assume for a moment that the strict legal interpretation of the boundaries of Ontario, its western boundary is to the eastward of Prince Arthur's Landing. What has taken place? As long ago as 1853, the Province of Ontario was supposed to extend beyond this point, and authority was taken to establish the provisional Judicial District of Algoma. Very shortly afterwards, that district was established with undefined boundaries, as far as I am aware, to the westward, but still understood to embrace, and in the practical jurisdiction of the judicial authorities, as they exercised it, did embrace the territory to which I have referred—not all this disputed territory, but the important portion of it to which I have referred. What more? When the Confederation Act was passed, the Imperial Parliament, at the instance of the hon. gentleman who is now conducting the affairs of the country, placed among the Electoral Districts of Ontario, the provisional Judicial District of Algoma. In the British North America Act, you will find in the schedule of the Electoral Districts of Ontario, the provisional Judicial District of Algoma. They may say that it does not define the boundaries in that district, but they were defined by election returns and by your census returns. If you look to the returns of each of the elections, you will find the voters for Fort William and the voters for Prince Arthur's Landing, returning a member to this House from the Province of Ontario. The hon. member for Algoma counts a very considerable majority in Prince Arthur's Landing—I do not think it was quite so strong in Fort William—but I have observed that the votes in the last election were considerable from both those places. They are recorded in your returns of elections; you appointed returning officers for them from the Province of Ontario since 1867; you called on their voters to send a member to this House as a representative of the Province of Ontario. You have recognized as a fact, since Confederation, that this territory—the point to which I have referred at any rate, and I know not how far beyond—did practically belong to the Province of Ontario. With these Acts on our Statute-book, with these declarations of fact, with these declarations of conduct, with the hon. member sitting in this House for thirteen years representing these people, you propose to pass a law which, according to your construction of the case, will hand over that territory to another power. That territory, at present, either belongs to the Province of Ontario, in point of law, or it belongs to the Dominion. In point of fact, the Dominion has, during all these years, allowed Ontario to undertake the expenses connected with the administration and organization of that territory and its development. It has established its municipal institutions there, it takes votes from there; and what the hon. Minister in the other

Mr. BLAKE.

House said was that he was going to take away the village of Prince Arthur's Landing, the townships of McIntyre, Oliver, Neebing, etc., from Ontario—all these places organized under Ontario laws, to which Ontario has had undisputed possession, you, as a matter of fact, propose to-night, at this hour of this Session, to hand over to the Province of Manitoba. What is the reason why you do it at the very last hour of the Session? Why, forsooth! the hon. gentleman says, because the Legislature of Manitoba did not pass a proper Act until a very late hour; and when it did pass that body, he thought it better to introduce the legislation in the Senate first, because this House was occupied. If it has, unfortunately, happened that the negotiations between the hon. gentleman and the authorities of Manitoba did not progress so satisfactorily as to reach an understanding earlier on this subject, if there has been a mishap in the Legislature of Manitoba, that is not our fault. I do not see that this is a just reason for this Act being passed when the period for legislation, the period for discussion and deliberation, has passed. The hon. gentleman proposes to do more than take away in this hurried manner from the Province of Ontario, a territory of which it has been in actual and undisturbed position for these many years. He proposes to involve the Province of Manitoba in a contention with the Province of Ontario, to introduce a new party to the controversy which exists as to this boundary. He proposes to tie the hands of the Parliament of Canada as to the question, what should be done even supposing the boundary of Ontario was found to be a little to the eastward of Fort William? If it were so found and the law were not passed, it would be still in your power so to apportion the territory, so to deal with the boundary, as to give each Province what would in right and justice appertain to it. I think a very strong case might be made even so in favor of the Province of Ontario, in respect to such of this territory as is by this arrangement being dealt with, and from which we have had a representative in this House for thirteen years. But that is to be taken away. The power of this Parliament so to deal with the question as they may think right, when the legal question has been decided, is to be taken away, and in advance a decision is to be reached handing over all that can be legally handed over to the Province of Manitoba. What is the result? You have three parties to the controversy instead of two. Parliament has no longer power to settle this question amicably, to deal with it as statesmen ought to deal with such a question. You part with all that, and the determination and disposal of it will be handed over to another Province. If a trust can be arranged for, if a mode of settlement can be propounded, why has not the hon. gentleman propounded it? The Province of Ontario has an award in her favor. The first Session of this Parliament, the hon. gentleman, when asked to state what action he intended to take, forsooth had lost the papers, which were not to be found in the pigeon-holes, and he did not know what the award was. Duplicates were at once sent down, but they were too late for the hon. gentleman to act. During the second Session of Parliament the hon. gentleman was asked what he was about to do. "It has got to be considered," he said. "We have got the papers which came at the end of last Session, but we have not decided what we will do; wait a bit;" and the hon. member who speaks so much on and takes such interest in the subject, the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson), with the assent of the Government, moved for a Committee of inquiry, which the First Minister agreed to on behalf of the Government, on the ground that inquiry was necessary before action was taken, that there ought to be investigation, so that the House and the Government might have full information on which they might deal with it. Inquiry took place. I am not going to discuss either the extent or finding of the Committee, but evidence was taken, sworn evidence which must be much more valuable, of lawyers, Judges and experts as to matters of law and some disputed matters of fact, and spread on the record. And then there came the recess. This Session came, and no word was mentioned about boundaries or a decision having been arrived at. Three years the hon. gentleman has reigned and he could not tell us what he would do, and now on the last day of the Session he proposes to hand over to the Province of Manitoba a controversy, a dispute on questions which he declares himself unable to settle. If it is so easy to settle it, why did not the hon. gentleman propound a solution of the controversy, and some mode by which this question might be brought to a decision. But the hon. gentleman would not ask Parliament to affirm or to disaffirm the award, but he proposes to shift the whole matter to the shoulders of another Province. What is the result of that going to be? The result is going to be, that, pending the settlement of this question, new elements of disturbance and confusion will arise. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say there are elements of disturbance and confusion to-day. It is true there are. It is true, as is said, the legal question of jurisdiction which any day may be raised in the disputed territory, whether that particular part is part of any one Province, and whether by consequence the laws of the Province have force and effect in that portion of territory claimed to be part of the Province. How do matters stand now at Prince Arthur's Landing and Fort William? The people, as far as that part of the territory is concerned, are content, and for 100 miles further west, because they have a conventional boundary, which I quite admit does not make this part of Ontario, if it is not part, but which practically settles the question for the present. You find that the question is not raised there. You do not find the hon. First Minister proposing to this Parliament to legislate for that portion embraced by the conventional boundaries within the Province of Ontario. Why? Because it would be contrary to the spirit, and as I believe, contrary to the arrangement made in 1874 between the Governments, by which a line was drawn, a conventional boundary was fixed, and certain arrangements made with respect thereto. Since that time the Province of Ontario has been doing all that we require to be done inside that boundary. The Provincial Legislature has passed Acts about it; it has established institutions; it has made different arrangements, and those Acts have not been disallowed, and the arrangements have not been reported against by this Parliament. Matters were allowed to go on within an important portion of the disputed territory to which I refer upon an agreement formally entered into between the two Governments in July, 1874, that a certain conventional line should be drawn, and certain things could be done within it. Outside of that line, Ontario did not interfere; inside, it acted as if the territory was her's without dispute. But the First Minister says, pass the Bill, which he shows you by the map will, from my point of view, take away from you and hand over to Manitoba all the territory westward of Prince Arthur's. And next day what may happen? The Legislature of Manitoba, not bound by this arrangement between the two Governments, nor any conditions proposed to be inserted in the Bill, is perfectly free to act, and may proceed next Session to pass a Bill providing municipal institutions for Prince Arthur's Landing and Fort William—additional confusion to the confusion that now exists, additional uncertainty, and additional elements of conflict are to be wantonly, needlessly and without any good and essential purpose, that I can conceive, being served by the proposal of the hon. gentleman. It seems to me that we should not adopt that proposal, that it is a most unstatesmanlike course. It is a course which shows the hon. gentleman unequal to the emergency; and he proposes, because unequal to the emergency, to shift the responsibility from his shoulders. He cannot so slip it from his shoulders. He will be held responsible by the people of the country for the course which, in these last hours of this Session, he is asking his followers, and through them, Parliament to take on this question, and it seems to me that under these circumstances we shall be doing less than our duty if we do not offer more than one alternative proposition, so that there may be placed clearly before the House the inconvenience and the difficulty which attend the hon. gentleman's proposition, and a better course which, in my opinion, should be adopted. I move:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same so as to provide some definite eastern limit beyond which Manitoba shall not be deemed to extend, pending the settlement of the western boundary of Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The unreality of the motion of the hon. gentleman is shown by the vagueness of its terms. If he had intended really to ask this House to settle the question in the direction in favor of which he speaks, he would have prepared his motion in quite a different way. If the hon. gentleman had desired to settle some definite boundary, he should have stated so in his motion, which is intended simply to defeat the principal motion. One would suppose from the hon. gentleman's speech, that we had taken possession of the western part of Algoma—had deprived Ontario of it and handed it over to Manitoba. We in this Bill interfere with no right that Ontario has or ever had. The possessory and legal right, the equitable claim and constitutional rights, of Ontario will be the same after this Bill passes as they ever were. This Bill does not determine a line or settle any line, but simply says, in effect, that there ought not to be an intervening space of foreign country lying between Ontario and the eastern townships of Manitoba. Everybody knows the description of country lying between the head of Lake Superior and the Lake of the Woods. It has been by the best witnesses pronounced utterly sterile, barren and unfit for settlement. So that if we fixed the eastern boundary of Manitoba a little to the east of Red River, what would be the consequence? That country can never be a Province of itself—never sufficiently important, nor sufficiently peopled. That region must essentially either belong to Ontario or Manitoba. That being the case, how will it stand now? Here we are extending the boundaries of Manitoba, running north, to give the Province sufficient depth from the international boundary, and running west, also, to give it a sufficient spread in regard to latitude, and cutting off the main portion of the North-West region from the barren strip between Ontario and Manitoba. How is that strip to be governed? It cannot be governed by officials that live to the west of Manitoba, because the whole of Manitoba lies between this territory and the North-West. You must have a separate Government, and officers, and separate courts in that small strip of land, and for the straggling, lumbering, fishing, vagrant population that will go into this section. We are asked to keep that section hopelessly in that condition at the expense of the Dominion, with a separate organization, and to do that forever until the boundary is settled. As a matter of convenience, and of necessity almost, for the purpose of saving expense—this barren strip is handed over to Manitoba. Hon. gentlemen opposite say we assert that Thunder Bay and Prince Arthur's Landing all belong to the North-West, and not to Ontario. That is a simple question of law. It may or may not be so. The question of whether it be a portion of Ontario or of the North-West can only be decided by slow trial. Hon. gentlemen opposite also say that by this Bill a great element of disturbance is introduced. It is not so. Supposing at this moment that any person in Algoma or Thunder Bay should be prosecuted or sued on writs issued from the courts of Ontario, any person could dispute that and bring the matter to a trial—any person could resist an Ontario writ on the ground that the place was not a portion of Ontario—that it belonged to the North-West, and that a writ from Ontario could not run in that district. The disturbing questions that could arise there must equally arise whether the country belongs to the Dominion or Ontario, until a line is settled. So there is really nothing in that objection. On the other hand, it is of very great importance, if this strip of land really does belong to the Dominion, that it should hand it to one of the neighboring Provinces—Ontario, or Manitoba. It is unwise to keep it as a territory, and impossible to keep it as a separate Province. It must be given either to Ontario or Manitoba, and we cannot afford to give it to Ontario, if it belongs to the Dominion, because the lands would belong to Ontario. Keeping it as a portion of Manitoba, the lands belong to the Dominion. In reply to the member for West Durham I may say, I stated that a great portion of the lands were barren; but the lands in the vicinity of the Lake of the Woods are better, and valuable for their timber. Now, if this land really belongs to the Dominion, it is the duty of the Dominion Parliament and Government to see the rights of the Dominion maintained. The North-West was purchased with the money of the whole Dominion, and we have no right to give away property so bought without getting any equivalent for it. The hon. gentleman has gone over what occurred in the last three Sessions; the offer made was to leave this question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a high Court of Appeal for every controverted question affecting the Dominion, affecting the Provinces of the Dominion, or affecting individuals inhabiting the Provinces of the Dominion. That was refused, and this arbitration was preferred—it was selected by an Ontario Premier. I will not say by the advice of the hon. gentleman, because he says he refused to have anything to do with the matter. It was left to arbitration; and to show how unwise it was to leave it to arbitration—although the question submitted to the arbitrators was the ascertainment and settlement of the true boundary between Ontario and the North-West,—they laid down a mere conventional, a convenient boundary.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; I could prove it in any Court in the world. They did not affect to set up the true boundary according to law; but they thought this would be a convenient and expedient boundary. They had no right to do this; they went beyond their commission in doing it. They made the same mistake as the King of the Netherlands, when the Government of England and the Government of the United States left to him the settlement of the true boundary between the State of Maine and the Province of New Brunswick. He made a boundary and split the difference. The United States said at once that they refused to accept the award because the arbitrator had dealt with the subject which was not referred to him, that was the finding of a convenient boundary. These three gentlemen took precisely the same course. They did not find the true boundary, and not having found it, their award is a piece of wasted paper, and the claim of the Dominion, according to law, remains unaffected in any way by that ineffective, ineffectual, and illegal award. The hon. gentleman says there was no expression of opinion on behalf of the Government. Why, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), in the first Session of this Parliament, introduced a Bill for the purpose of declaring that this award settled the true line, and for the purpose of enacting the legality. The hon. gentleman found that the Government and the House would not entertain it, and he did not press his Bill. It was known to the Government of Ontario that we refused to legislate on the matter in the way of ratifying the award.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman refers to the fact that I introduced a Bill in the first Session of this Parliament, but he knows right well that the announcement of the Government was that they had not decided on the course they were to adopt. I knew the hon. gentleman had a majority of the House, and I did not wish to press the Bill against that majority and against the hon. gentleman. It is perfectly true that the hon. gentleman suggested, in the first instance, that the question should be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. That was not agreed to, and another Government having the same power as the hon. gentleman—and he will remember that he was once an Ontario Premier as well as the hon. member for Lambton—made a different suggestion; and I do not see why the member for Lambton had not the same right to suggest a plan of settlement as the hon. gentleman himself. The hon. gentleman was just as much a representative from Ontario; he might be presumed to have been at that time as much influenced in favor of Ontario as the hon. member for Lambton, if it is to be supposed that a Minister of the Crown is biased in favor of particular Provinces. An arbitrator was appointed, and they proceeded to the investigation of the subject. (Interruption). The hon. member for Winnipeg is interrupting the debate, which is scarcely decent on his part.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to inform the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that I was not interrupting the debate.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman says the case on behalf of the Dominion was scandalously neglected. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman appointed Judge Ramsay to investigate this question; he did investigate it, and his report was put in the hands of the arbitrators months before the arbitrators was called on to meet. Everything that could be found on behalf of the Dominion was found. The present Judge Ramsay was appointed as counsel for the Dominion to investigate the question, for months, and the information which he accumulated was handed over, when he was appointed to the Bench, to the counsel who took his place in the investigation of the question was concerned. I believe that everything that could be found on the question on either side was submitted to those gentlemen before they met him at all. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) has told us that some documents have been received which the arbitrators did not have before them. I have read the report of last Session, and the appendices of this Session, and I find nothing there that I, myself, did not see before, or which was not embraced in the case either of Ontario or of the Dominion before the arbitrators. The hon. gentleman says that it is important that a strip of country should not be left in the possession of Canada, with Ontario on one side and Manitoba on the other. The hon. gentleman's proposition is that it is necessary that the country should have a Government. He knows that Ontario claims the country as well as the Dominion, and he proposes to substitute for the Dominion a Province which is less able to protect its rights, and to put there the Province in the position of litigants. How will the affairs of that Province be administered when Manitoba is extended to Prince Arthur's Landing, as the hon. gentleman contends it will be by this Bill? Sir, it is perfectly obvious that those who are in favor of remaining in Ontario will come under the Ontario law, and those who are dissatisfied with that and would prefer being a parcel of Manitoba, will come under the law of Manitoba. How, then, are you going to establish order? How are you going to secure respect for law when you undertake to put the Government and the people in the hands of two rival parties, each of which claim the right to provide the necessary municipal and other legislation for the people of that territory. I have before me a statement made by the Government of the hon. gentleman, when he was in power before, and that statement is that it is desirable to come to terms with Ontario on this question, that so long as the matter is in dispute government cannot be established, and in order that peace and order may be restored there and the affairs of government carried on, he suggests that a conventional line should be agreed to; but, he says, that line has not been adopted before for the reason that there are certain Indians with whom it is necessary to treat, and that it is desirable that a treaty should be made with them before a conventional line is established. The hon. gentleman takes a wholly different position to-day. He thinks a conventional line a matter of no consequence, that it is only necessary to disregard any conventional boundary and to hand over to the Province of Manitoba the territory that is claimed by the Province of Ontario. I say, then, that it is entirely impossible that the object that the hon. gentleman proposes to accomplish can be attained by what he proposes to do. The hon. gentleman has told us that the country is of no value. Well, Sir, if that be true, why did he resist in this pertinacious way the claims and pretensions of Ontario? If he is right it was not worth contending about, and he ought to have come down three Sessions ago and proposed a confirmation of this award. The hon. gentleman says he is of opinion that the real boundary will not make this territory part of the Province of Manitoba. Very well; if it cannot be made a part, why, as a matter of form, undertake to make it so? The reason is very obvious. The hon. gentleman feels that he has lost the confidence of the people of Ontario. He feels that he has no longer any prospect of being sustained by the people of Ontario, and the hon. gentleman now wishes to create a conflict between the Government of Ontario and the people of Manitoba. He thinks that he will be able to do this because the Government of Ontario is a Reform Administration. I do not believe he will succeed. The vast majority of the people of Manitoba are emigrants from the Province of Ontario. They look back with fond regard to the Province they have left behind them, and their desire is to extend their territory westward. Now, the hon. gentleman has said that if the Government were to agree upon a conventional line, that would not make it a boundary. Well, we have at present a convention with the United States in regard to the Alaska boundary. We found that a survey would be very expensive, and we agreed with that Government that a certain line shall be the boundary for the time being. It was not the interest of either Government to incur a large expenditure for survey; and does the hon. gentleman believe that any Court would go behind the political agreement between the two Governments? Certainly not. Any convention between two Governments, no matter whether it be a true boundary or not, will not be questioned by the Court; it can only be questioned in this House. The hon. gentleman knows that right well. He knows that no Judge would undertake to try an offence committed west of the conventional boundary of Alaska, on the ground that the offence was committed within the British territory. They would not go behind an arrangement between the two political departments of the Government. The hon. gentleman dissents, but I say it is true. I could cite to him a thousand cases, in the Privy Council reports, involving exactly the same principles. Take the case of Dysamber, in India, where property was taken from a person to whom it was awarded on the ground that the East India Company was a Seignior. The question was taken before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and Lord Selborne said, what the matter was complained of in the House of Commons, that after the consent of the political department of the Government, the court would not interfere. It is precisely the same principle as in this case. What the hon. gentleman proposes, I say, is to invite a conflict between the Government of Ontario and the Government of Manitoba. Instead of undertaking to deal with the question himself, he has undertaken to transfer the difficulty which he himself has created from the Government of Canada to the people of Manitoba. He has undertaken to transfer it from those who alone ought to bear the burden of the contest to a Province whose population is sparse and whose resources are limited. I say the whole policy is most reprehensible, and one that this House ought not to encourage. I will, therefore, support the motion made by the hon. member for West Durham.

Mr. MACDOUGALL I understand that a member of the Government in another place has made a statement that the effect of this Bill would be to place the townships and people in the neighborhood of Prince Arthur's Landing under the control of the Province of Manitoba, or something to that effect. I have felt from the first that we were taking a course which would lead necessarily to very great embarrassment. Now, I am of opinion that the Government of the Dominion and the Government of Ontario having agreed upon a conventional boundary in that region of the world, the two Governments should proceed jointly to deal with the lands, to survey the townships, to treat that portion of the country as under their jurisdiction logally. We, having assented to that arrangement, it does seem to me that it would be very inexpedient to disturb it or to proceed in a way that would involve any risk or doubt as to the security of those people under their present institutions until this question is finally disposed of. In that view, I desire to move an amendment to the amendment, that the words "that the conventional boundary agreed upon between the Government of the Dominion and the Government of Ontario, shall be the," be substituted for the words "to some defined eastern limit" in the said amendment. We have had a case very recently which shows the danger and the impropriety, as it seems to me, of allowing that state of things to exist in that part of the country. A man committed a murder in the disputed territory; he was tried at Thunder Bay, and, I believe, under the jurisdiction of the two Governments, some arrangement having been made so as to prevent a failure of justice, that the authority of both Governments should be had by the judge in conducting this trial. The man was found guilty. His counsel, as I have been informed by very good authority, rested the defence upon a point which utterly failed in the evidence, but did not take exception to the jurisdiction—did not raise the question which, I apprehend, will be raised in other cases if the Bill passes in the shape in which it is. Fortunately for the two Governments, this man, feeling perhaps the peculiar position in which he was placed, the ugly questions which might arise, and the difficult position in which innocent persons might be placed if he were executed, relieved them of that difficulty by cutting his throat. But cases might occur where the victim might not be so accommodating, and very serious questions might result. I do not see any difficulty whatever in simply maintaining the status quo until this important question is settled by such means as the two Governments shall ultimately agree upon. Therefore I prefer to the amendment the hon. gentleman has moved the statement made once for all, that the conventional boundary already agreed upon, and acted upon, the boundary recognized by the people living in that part of the country shall be the conventional boundary until that settlement is made. I think that is due to the Province of Ontario and the people who have settled there, and I do not see why any gentlemen from other Provinces should see any danger in acquiescing in that arrangement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am rather surprised to hear the argument of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), drawn from the convention between England and the United States as to the boundary of Alaska. That is a matter of treaty. Foreign nations can make treaties between each other, but the arrangement between the Dominion Government and the Ontario Government has no analogy to that. By a treaty, France handed over Alsace and Lorraine to Germany. By a treaty, you can give up anything; but this is not a treaty, and the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario are not in a position to enter into any treaty for a cession of territory. The hon. gentleman knows that right well. I would point out to my hon. friend the member for Halton (Mr. Macdougall), that the conventional line of which he speaks has not the effect of giving authority to Ontario up to that conventional line.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. They have exercised it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; they have not. They have assumed that the land at the western extremity of Lake Superior belonged to Ontario. The conventional line lies far in the interior, and was established, not for the purpose of declaring that the eastern half would belong to Ontario, and the western half to the Dominion, but for the sake of convenience, in order to let people buy land, and for no other purpose whatever, no matter whether the land belonged to the Dominion or the Province, so that a Dominion sale, west of that line, would be recognized by the Province of Ontario, just as a provincial sale to the east of that line would be recognized by the Dominion; and when the line was finally defined, they would settle the accounts. It was a mere matter of keeping accounts of the sale of lands. But supposing a murder was committed to the east of this conventional line, and the murderer was tried by the courts of Ontario, the fact of the scene of the murder being east of that line would not make it in Ontario, and that man could defend himself successfully upon the ground that the land to the east did not belong to Ontario.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. It would be another Reinhardt case.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Exactly. A convention in the nature of a treaty between foreign nations has no analogy to this case, because we are portions of one empire. We are not separate powers or entities with power to cede portions of our territories; the only power we have in that respect is that given to us under the Imperial Act to diminish or increase the extent of the Provinces.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I wish to make one remark in reference to the argument of the hon. gentleman as to the purchase of land, that this is either North-West Territory or Ontario territory. I differ from that view for this reason, that all through our discussions on this matter, it was claimed on the side of the Hudson's Bay Company that they possessed and were entitled to the territory beyond the height of land. On this side the land belonged, not to the Hudson's Bay Company, to whomsoever else it belonged, and when we purchased the North-West Territories, I cannot see that we can lay claim to having purchased any territory on this side of the height of land.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is quite right; and to show how ineffectually the Dominion case was presented, I may say that that view of the subject was never presented before the arbitrators; that by the Imperial Act, authorizing the surrender to Canada of Rupert's Land and the North-West, the contention was not raised that that Act says that Rupert's Land shall be held to be whatever was in possession, or deemed to be in possession, of the Hudson's Bay Company; and that Act hands over to the Dominion whatever was claimed—

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Rightfully claimed, I think, would be the construction.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; the language is positive—whatever was claimed to be possessed by the Hudson's Bay Company was transferred to the Dominion. All the documents show that the Hudson's Bay Company always claimed and occupied the territory beyond the height of land.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. MILLS. I was present, and I heard the Act read by Mr. Monk, from Montreal, and if it is not found in the report of the argument, the report does not give all that was said.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The case was discussed by Mr. McMahon.

Mr. MILLS. Both Mr. McMahon and Mr. Monk were engaged in the case. It is obvious that there was no intention of going to that Act for such a purpose; because whatever our boundaries are they are the same as if that Act had never been passed. I do not wish to detain the House, but the hon. gentleman will see, if he looks at the discussion, that there is nothing that has been referred to here, or in the report presented to this House, that was not brought before the gentlemen who composed that arbitration. I know myself that Sir Edward Thornton was looking into the question for months, and it is unfair to the arbitrators to say that they gave a decision without fully considering this question. But that is quite beside the question. We are considering the policy of the course which the hon. gentleman has taken. I say that he is wrong in the reference which he has made. He says that, because Canada is not an independent country, and the Province of Ontario is not independent, that a conventional agreement between them would have no effect. He will find the East Indian Company was sustained over and over again in the agreements with dependent princes, and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council always refused to consider, as a commercial transaction, anything agreed upon between those political parties in their political capacity.

Mr. DAWSON. This territory is not so barren as it is supposed to be. It contains, on the contrary, many resources, including agricultural lands, pine covered lands and gold, silver, copper and iron mines. With regard to what the hon. gentleman has said in respect to everything being before the arbitrators, it is quite clear that a great many instructions sent from the Imperial Government to the Governors previous to the issue of General Clark's proclamation, were not before the arbitrators, and with such information as they had, it would have been impossible for them to arrive at a correct decision.

Mr. BLAKE I desire to place on record my views as to the propriety of making arrangements in any Bill of this description, which are to preserve all the benefits and advantages of the existing conventional arrangement. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that that arrangement is of so little consequence, as he declares it. I read it to be an agreement for the settlement of a conventional boundary, and to provide for the administration of the lands, the proceeds of which would go to the true owners when the true boundaries would be settled. Since then, each party to the agreement has dealt with its own portion, according to the conventional agreement, and the introduction of this new element of dispute will be nothing less than calamitous. I move:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with inst actions that they have power to amend the same, so as to provide that the existing conditions under the conventional boundary agreed upon by the Governments of Canada and Ontario in 1874 shall not, pending the settlement of the true boundary, be affected prejudicially to the interests of either of the contracting parties, or to those of the inhabitants of Prince Arthur's Landing, Thunder Bay, and other parts of the territory which have been under the control of and treated as part of Ontario, and are represented in this House as part of that Province.

Amendment lost on the same division.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Globe newspaper, of Thursday last, published an article concluding with this paragraph:

"Why did they leave the matter to a sole arbitrator at the request of the plaintiffs? And why was Mr. Keefer, of all men, chosen, if the interests of the country were to have been considered? The explanation may be found in the fact that the Hon. John O'Connor was, not long ago, a partner of Mr. T. H. O'Doherty, who acted as counsel for the petitioners, and if it be true, as reported to us, that Mr. O'Connor received $15,000 for his services, the course of the Government and the award of Mr. Keefer are by no means inexplicable."

It is not distinctly stated, but left as a matter of inference to be drawn from it, that $15,000 were paid to me after the award. Now, I will not look for language to properly characterize the statement, but I will simply say that I received neither $15,000 nor any other sum, except the fee which I received as counsel at the trial of the cause which took place in June, 1877, a year and a half before this Government was formed. I may also say that I have had no interest in any law business, either in the firm to which I belonged before or any other firm, since 1st November, 1878. That is all I desire to say with regard to that statement in the article. It is a simple falsehood; false in fact, false in everything.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House further considered resolutions from Committee of Supply.

298. Public Buildings (Ontario). $70,500 00

Mr. BLAKE. While we have not so much to complain of this Session with regard to getting pure air into this Chamber, in certain parts there are troublesome draughts, of which hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House complain. There is almost a whirlwind, sometimes, when the air is renewed. There ought to be some remedy for this evil.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I also have felt those draughts, and particularly when I sat on the opposite side of the House. Of course no remedy could be applied during the Session, but I will take some steps with that object during the recess.

Mr. PLUMB. I regret to see a disposition to adhere to the plan of having the air through these ducts. I wish to protest against breathing such air, that comes through the cellars, air not touched by the sun. Any hon. gentleman who approves of that kind of air is not fit to be in charge of the ventilation of this House.

313. Miscellaneous—To provide for the cost of a monument to the memory of the late Sir George E. Cartier, Bart..... $10,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. It will be recollected when a proposal was made for an address or some other proceeding evincing a desire that there should be a public funeral and also a monument to the late Sir Geo. E. Cartier, that proposal was objected to by the hon. member for Lambton as inexpedient, and the votes of the Liberal party were recorded against it. It is not my intention to say a single word which should in any way detract from the large place which Sir Geo. E. Cartier undoubtedly hold in his Province and in the Dominion at large. But the events which followed very shortly upon that vote, and the political events which have succeeded—the reason why that vote as to the monument has remained unacted upon up to to-day—are all, to my mind, proofs, if proofs were needed, of the soundness of the position which was then assumed, namely, that it is not a right or expedient thing that a party leader should be, at the hands of his political friends, controlling for the time the destinies of the country, given public honors of this description at the expense of the people of this country. I think I could name names which are entitled to that distinction, as much as those of any other man that could be mentioned. I think I could name Joseph Howe and D'Arcy McGee and George Brown as those who are as much entitled to this distinction as any other persons who could be named. Two of them, at any rate, died in the midst of active political life, the third having but recently withdrawn from this Chamber to engage in the discharge of a high political office. No proposal of the kind was made in these cases, or in any other cases, so far as I know; and it seems to me impolitic and invidious that this course should be taken and this precedent should be established. I have, therefore, to record my own dissent to the proposition now before the House.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I regret that the hon. gentleman has seen fit to take this course. When a vote was taken on this question in 1873, there might have been an excuse for his opposing the vote, because our lamented friend had just departed this life, and had recently mixed in the active life of Parliament and of politics generally. But now that eight or nine years have passed, and the political strifes of them days forgotten; now, when Sir George Cartier's name has been recorded in history, and when good deeds only should be remembered, I would have thought that the hon. gentleman would have allowed this vote to pass unanimously. As it was the other day in Committee, of course the hon. gentleman is perfectly free to record his vote against the resolution, but I must say that for the sake of himself and his party, I regret his decision.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I join in the regrets of the last speaker that the leader of the Opposition has felt it to be his duty—as I have no doubt he did—to raise even one voice in opposition to the proposal of the Government to make this testimony to the character and position of one of Canada's great men. I agree with the suggestion made by the Minister of Public Works, that a certain time having elapsed when the feelings engendered by political conflicts may be supposed to have in a measure subsided, it is fitting and proper that this Parliament should recognize the very great services which that deceased gentleman rendered not only to his own Province but to the Dominion and to the Empire. I had the honor of being for some years his colleague, I believe I had the melancholy privilege of being the last Canadian in a public position to see Sir Geo. E. Cartier before his melancholy death in London. Although, in the political conflicts of that period, I often found it necessary in the discharge of my duties to differ from him in his views of public matters, yet when I recall the services he rendered to this country in the carrying to completion that great measure of Confederation, the benefits of which we are now enjoying, when I consider the singular, the unique position he occupied in this country as representing a great section of people whose apprehensions of evil consequences, I know, prevailed to a large extent irrespective of political party; and when I recall the energy and ability which were brought to bear by that gentleman in bringing to maturity and passing into law that great measure,—I think the people of the Province of Ontario whom the hon. gentleman opposite may be supposed to represent, the political party which he leads, will not object to this recognition of the services of Sir Geo. A. Cartier, and I regret that even one dissenting voice should have been raised against the vote.

Mr. MILLS. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I would say that I do not think he knows the political sentiments not only of the Reform party, but of a large section of the Conservative party. I am perfectly satisfied that they would not favor the proposition now before the House. I am perfectly well aware that they will say there have been distinguished men who have passed away before; the Hon. Robert Baldwin, for instance, for whom nothing was done such as is now proposed with respect to Sir George Cartier; such men as Lafontaine and other eminent men on the Reform side, as well as distinguished leaders of the Conservative party. I remember well that when Sir George Cartier was a member of this House, he sat here as an active supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite, and it does seem to me that if hon. gentlemen think that Sir George Cartier merits this recognition at the hands of this country, it should be left to a time when political animosities with which his name was connected, are forgotten.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not happen to be in the House when the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) made his remarks stating the grounds of his opposition of this vote. I join with my hon. friends on this side in the regret that he should have allowed any consideration to have induced him to offer opposition to the vote—a vote which, I believe, will be endorsed by the majority of the people of Canada, without reference to political parties, as a fitting testimonial to the merits of a great public man. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken says there are other men such as Baldwin, Lafontaine and others, to whom no testimonial of the kind was ever offered. Well, Sir, the fact that this was the case is not a sufficient reason why this vote should not pass. Sir George Cartier was here as the representative of an important section of the Dominion. He served long and faithfully in the Parliament of Canada before Confederation, and in the Dominion Parliament. As the result mainly of his efforts, the two races, instead of being drawn up in hostile camps—hostile in every sense—have moved on harmoniously together as subjects of the same Sovereign. Let us look back to the time before he came to the front as a prominent statesman. We all remember the suspicion, the jealousy, the hostility that raged—I can use no other expression—that raged between the two Provinces. He at once addressed himself to the cure of that great evil. He almost changed himself from a Frenchman to an Englishman in his efforts to remove that hostility, and it was his pride to state that he was a French-speaking Englishman. He tried to remove the jealousies which arose from circumstances which I do not wish to allude to more particularly, and to make all the subjects of Her Majesty in this Dominion work together. He acted in that spirit only; very much under his direction some of the burning questions which separated the races, and many of the jealousies which placed them in hostile camps, Mr. MACDOUGALL.

were removed. Sometimes, in order to secure co-operation of the two races, he almost raised the suspicion of his fellow-countrymen that he was too much of an Englishman. But very soon after those suspicions were aroused the beneficial consequences of his conciliatory course toward his fellow-members of Anglo-Saxon origin were so manifest, that he was at length accepted by the vast majority of his countrymen in Lower Canada as a representative man, of whom they were proud and in whom they had confidence. We all remember the circumstances of his death. He did not, like some of those who have been mentioned, retire from public life. He died in harness, a victim to the labors of a lifetime in fighting the battles of his country and carrying on the administration of affairs to a successful issue. We all can remember how death was written on his face as he sat in the place now occupied by the hon. Minister of Public Works. But still he was faithful to his trust, he was faithful to his duty, and he left his house and country to die, I may say, for the country. His death aroused the better feelings, the affectionate feelings, of the people of Canada, without reference to political division, and when his remains were brought over from England to be buried in his native soil, I believe there was a general wail of sorrow that so great a man, so good a man, so true a patriot, had fallen so early. He fell in the path of duty, and this is a fitting testimonial to his memory. I regret that any circumstances—and I am sure it must have been against the better feeling of my hon. friend that a sense of duty should induce him—of course it could only be a sense of duty—to take the step he has done. I am sure it is a painful duty to him; I am sure he must feel painfully the circumstances under which he takes this position, and I must say that I do not think it will strengthen that hon. gentleman in the mind of friends or foes. They will think there is a want of generosity in him, a want of liberality, a want of good taste; and I am sure the country will say that one statesman ought not to show his enmity to another in this way. It is uncalculated for, unnecessary, and in some degree discreditable.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish merely to say that if the hon. gentleman had been in his place and had heard my speech, I do not think that even he, to make a political point, would have stated that I said one word to indicate that I had any enmity to Sir George E. Cartier. He was my personal friend.

Mr. TASSÉ. Mr. Speaker, I think it is my duty to join the hon. members of this House, who have expressed their regret at seeing the hon. leader of the Opposition oppose the erection of a monument to the memory of Sir George E. Cartier. I must confess that I had a better opinion of the generosity and highmindedness which the friends of the hon. member for West Durham generally attribute to him. Sir George Cartier is one of those men of whom an adversary can say: "We fought him, but we are proud of him." The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has told us that those who took the initiative in proposing the erection of this monument, did not represent the opinion of all the Conservatives of the Province of Ontario. The hon. member may speak in the name of the Liberals, but I do not admit that he has the right to constitute himself the interpreter of the sentiments of the Conservative party; for few political men, and certainly not a single French Canadian, ever acquired in a like degree, the esteem and the confidence of the Conservatives of the Province of Ontario, as did the much lamented statesman whose name was Sir George Etienne Cartier. And even in the Province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker, if Liberals opposed him during his lifetime, I must admit with pleasure that of late many of them have done him justice, and I myself have heard, on more than one occasion, eminent Liberals admit that Sir George E. Cartier had rendered signal service to his country, and especially to the Province of Quebec, whose respected chief he was during a noble and glorious career. As has already been said, Mr. Speaker, no man has done more than Sir George E. Cartier to establish on a solid basis—on the basis of justice and that of respecting the rights of everyone—the union of the two great races which inhabit our country; and consequently, no man has acquired a better title to the gratitude and esteem of his fellow-citizens. No man, moreover, has done more to render the French population of this country attached to that English rule under which we have learned to live happy, free and prosperous. He obtained the rank of Baronet for rendering this signal service to the British Crown. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that without Sir George E. Cartier the great system of Confederation which to-day governs this country, would certainly never have been established; without the support that he gave to the scheme of Confederation, that plan would certainly not have secured the consent of the large majority of the electors of the Province which he represented. We also know that Sir George E. Cartier had taken the initiative in the great enterprise of the Pacific railway. We also know that his name is bound up with the codifying of the laws of the Province of Quebec. We know also that during his long career, his name was identified with a number of measures, schemes and enterprises, which greatly contributed to the progress and prosperity of all Canada. Up to the present time, it has ever been, in various countries, the custom to erect monuments to soldiers and warriors only, but I think that a statesman who consecrates all his life, many a night's rest, all his talents, and all his energies to render service to his country, is as much entitled to a monument as he who wins a battle. For these reasons do I once more express my regret at seeing the hon. leader of the Opposition oppose the erection of a monument to the memory of a man who was one of the glories as well as one of the greatest benefactors of his country.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if there is to be an inscription on this monument and what it is to be, if any decision has been come to on that point. I would also enquire where this monument is to be erected. If I ask what is to be the gist of that inscription, it is because I understand that that inscription is to be such as to represent historical facts. The question is not one of passing an eulogium on the deceased, but of representing facts such as they took place from the beginning to the end of his career, so that that monument should descend to posterity as a document.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, I must say that the good works accomplished, and the eminent services rendered by Sir George E. Cartier to his country, constitute the finest inscription that he can have, and that the name of "Sir George Etienne Cartier" alone will say more than any inscription that could be engraved on the monument.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to say one word in behalf of the Province of Ontario. It is my conviction that the great majority of the people of that Province do not entertain the views expressed by the hon. leader of the Opposition—and more particularly of the Conservative party. He has no right to put into the mouths of the Conservative party of Ontario, nor of the Liberal party either, such sentiments as he has uttered just now. This discussion is a most painful one, and I regret that the hon. leader of the Opposition has seen fit, whether in the discharge of his duty or otherwise, to make such allusions as he made in the course of his speech, or, in fact, to object to the vote at all. He says he was a friend of Sir George E. Cartier. If so I can only say, save me from such friends. The hon. gentleman went out of his way to make an allusion to political events, which, he said, made it the more improper that such an appropriation as this should be made—events subsequent to the death of that revered and lamented statesman. It was not becoming of him to do so, and I cannot imagine in what sense the hon. gentleman regards his duty, nor can I believe that, when this discussion goes before the world as one of the last utterances of the Session of 1881, it will redound to that hon. gentleman's credit.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. But for the most unreasonable and uncalled-for language indulged in by the leader of the House to my hon. friend beside me, I would not have said one word on this occasion. Had he been in, as my hon. friend truly said, I do not think he would have ventured to make use of the very extraordinary epithets he chose to apply to the exceeding moderate terms in which my hon. friend recorded the opposition which he felt to this vote. Now, what are the circumstances under which this vote is brought forward? The First Minister and his colleagues know right well that my hon. friend from Lambton and my hon. friend from West Durham had years ago taken a division on this identical question. How could they expect that these hon. gentlemen who record their refusal to be parties to a vote for a monument for the late Sir George E. Cartier, could now go back upon their record and allow that to pass without a protest? The thing was perfectly absurd, and if anyone is to blame for having brought on this discussion it is those hon. gentlemen who, at this distant day, chose to bring on this vote. For the late Sir George E. Cartier I will say this, that I believe that, save one other man, he did more, he risked more, he sacrificed more to bring about Confederation than any other man in Canada. The only man who risked as much and sacrificed as much as he did was the late Mr. George Brown. To those two gentlemen, I believe, the Confederation of these Provinces was largely due, and I am bound to say that to both of them in that respect this country owes a great debt of gratitude. But that does not affect in the slightest degree the position taken by my hon. friends beside me, and I repeat that the Government must have known that this vote could not possibly have passed without a record of dissent by them.

323. To pay balance of contract for converting

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. CARON. The test to which these guns are submitted was much more severe than any test imposed even at Woolwich, and the only gun which failed to come up to the test must be looked upon, though imperfect, as not so imperfect that its utility is impaired. After reading the report on this subject, the hon. gentleman will see that the experiment we have tried in converting these guns has been a most successful experiment. The cost was $255 less than it would have cost to have had them converted at Woolwich. In addition to this, we not only make use of our old guns, which were practically useless for defensive purposes, but gave employment to our own people. The two guns made for us by Messrs. Gilbert & Sons, in Canada, cost us less than they would have cost if they had been imported from England. Sir William Palliser himself admits that this is the case, and they are built strictly on the Palliser principle.

324. Intercolonial Railway—Halifax Extension—
Additional amount required.....$27,800 00

Mr. BLAKE. By what route will the extension be made?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is merely the extension of the old road. It is also for the erection of wharves, the work on which has been going on.

325. Railways and Canals—Intercolonial Railway—Locomotive power.....$22,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister of Agriculture promised further information with reference to the experimental cargoes of grain at Halifax, in concurrence, on this item: I asked for explanations on the first occasion, in dealing with this item, without getting any, and I now ask for information again.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

1. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1881, the sum of $1,214,328.25 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1882, the sum of $27,082,257.66 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolutions reported, read a second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced a Bill (No. 104) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1881, and the 30th June, 1882, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Bill read the first and second time.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In moving the third reading of the Supply Bill, I would direct the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to page 13 of the Public Accounts, wherein is stated very fully the powers of the Government with reference to borrowing:

In close connection with the maturing debt is the question of the borrowing powers possessed by the Government—these powers are of two kinds, the limited and unlimited. I have very carefully gone over the limited part contained in statement of the loans authorized, issued and redeemed as it stands from 1869 to 30th June last, and find after revision that on the 30th June last the Government had at their disposal the power to borrow the sums aggregating $14,897,962.27, and made up as follows:

(a) Amount unissued for Intercolonial Railway $2,433,333 33

I have retained this amount in the statement, although from the prospectus of the last loan making provision for the purchase of the Rivière du Loup Branch, it might have possibly been considered as then used.

(b) Amount unissued from the North-West Territory $1,460,000 00

That has not been used.

(c) Amount unissued for the improvement of the St. Lawrence $1,500,000 00

Against this advances have been made from time to time to the extent of $1,306,000.

That has not been used.

(d) Amount unissued for improvement of Quebec Harbor $1,200,000 00

Advances have been made on this account to the extent of $1,149,140.00.

That has not been used.

(e) Amount unissued for Quebec Graving Dock, $50,000 00
The advances on this account amount to $125,000 00.

That authority has not been used.

(f) Amount unissued for Pacific Railway and Canals $4,866,666 67

Being made up of the Imperial Guarantee £600,000, and a balance unissued of £400,000 out of £8,000,000, originally authorized. The bonds bearing the Imperial guarantee are held as a reserve for the Dominion note circulation.

These bonds are held under the Act of last Session as security for any demands that may be made for the redemption of our notes. The probabilities are that during the current year that over $3,000,000 will be deposited in the Savings

Mr. BLAKE.

Banks and Post Offices over and above the sums withdrawn. While we hope we may not require the power—and do not expect to use it—it is well to have it, in addition to the authority asked for in the Act now before the House.

Mr. BLAKE. Could the hon. gentleman inform me to what extent there remain unpaid, the guaranteed loans that have been issued and not redeemed?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I forget the whole amount of the guaranteed loan at this moment.

Mr. BLAKE. The reason I asked was because I observed there was a controversy going on in England, in which Sir A. T. Galt and Sir John Rose were on one side, and Mr. Gladstone on the other. The two former gentlemen contended that hardly any of our guaranteed loans remained unredeemed, while Mr. Gladstone contended that the whole of the £3,000,000, and part of a subsequent loan, remained unredeemed.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. No doubt Mr. Gladstone is right, and it must have been a clerical error on the part of the telegraphic association or else on the part of the reporters in England. We have not yet paid any portion of the guaranteed loans since Confederation. It is certain we have not paid the Intercolonial loan, and we have certainly got to pay those portions of the £3,600,000 which were issued and which amount to about $3,000,000. We have not made default in any payment, and we have not paid a cent of any of these loans. There is about six millions for which the Imperial Government is liable if Canada made default, and it is to that which Mr. Gladstone alluded, but it is not a liability, I hope, the Imperial Government will ever suffer any inconvenience from. What, perhaps, they may have been alluding to is this: that at first an arrangement was made by which the sinking fund should be invested in the purchase of those particular securities.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think Sir A. T. Galt could not have referred to any guaranteed loan that was issued since Confederation, because none of those have been redeemed. He must have referred to a guarantee given by the Imperial Government before Confederation. The liabilities, of course, were assumed by the Dominion Government, and an arrangement was made by Sir A. T. Galt himself by which the Imperial Government guaranteed a certain amount that has been paid off. The only amount that is not guaranteed at the present moment, are the amounts referred to by the hon. gentleman.

Bill read the third time and passed.

THE NEW LOAN.

Bill (No. 106) respecting the new loan of $18,000,000—(Sir Leonard Tilley)—was read the second and third time and passed.

BILL RESPECTING STEAMBOATS.

A message was received from the Senate, with the following Bill (No. 107) of their own, intitled: "An Act in amendment of the Acts respecting steamboats," to which the concurrence of this House was desired.

On motion of Sir John A. Macdonald, the said Bill was read the first and second time, considered in Committee of the Whole, reported, read the third time and passed; and (at 11:30 o'clock, p.m.,) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 19th March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

COMMUNICATION FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received from the Governor General's Secretary, the following letter:—

OTTAWA, 19th March, 1881.

SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the Session of the Dominion Parliament, on Monday, the 21st instant at 3.30 o'clock.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
F. DE WINTON, Lt.-Col. R.A.,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honorable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

PAYMENT OF SESSIONAL INDEMNITIES.

Mr. McINNES. With the permission of the House, on this the last day of the Session, I beg to move:

That in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that the full Sessional allowance be paid F. J. Barnard, Thomas Scott, and Robert Doull, members of this House, in view of the fact that they were unavoidably prevented by illness from being present during the early part of the Session.

I may say, in connection with Mr. Barnard, that he was, unfortunately, ill for a number of months before the House was called together. Even when he left his home, on the 3rd of January, he was not sufficiently recovered to come over here alone, and was compelled to bring his wife with him, thereby causing him increased expense. I believe the circumstances connected with the case of Mr. Scott are similar. He unfortunately met with an accident a few days before the opening of the Session. I leave the House to say whether, in their opinion, it is not just that the hon. members who have the misfortune to be ill at home should be paid their full Sessional allowance. It is a misfortune for an hon. member to be ill anywhere, but I do not know the country will derive any more benefit from their being ill here rather than at home. I find in the Journals of 1874, on the motion of Sir John A. Macdonald, seconded by Mr. Holton, it was resolved:

"That the Accountant of this House be authorized to pay to Joshua Spencer Thompson, Esquire, member for Cariboo; to A. B. Borron, Esquire, member for Algoma; to Lewis George Harper, Esquire, member for Gaspé; and to Stanislas F. Perry, Esquire, member for Prince, the full amount of their indemnity as if they had been present and taken their seats in the House on 20th of March last, under the special circumstances connected with the election and return in these cases."

I find again that on 11th April, 1876, the following resolution, moved by Mr. Holton, seconded by Mr. Langevin, and resolved:—

"That under the special circumstances of the case the Speaker be authorized to cause the full Sessional allowance of Mr. Ross, member for the West Riding of the County of Middlesex, to be paid as if he had been in attendance from the beginning of the Session."

I believe, in that instance, Mr. Ross was only a few weeks here, whereas the hon. members on whose behalf I have moved were here over two months. I find on 9th May, 1878, it was moved by Mr. Dewdney, seconded by Mr. Plumb:—

"That the Accountant of this House be authorized to pay to T. R. McInnes, the newly elected member for Westminster, the full amount of his indemnity as if he had been in attendance in this House for the full number of days of the Session."

185

Under these circumstances, I trust the hon. gentlemen mentioned in my motion will receive their full Sessional indemnity.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT said the motion was out of order.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said that if this motion was out of order, a similar objection must have applied to the granting of the full Sessional indemnity to the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) a few years ago, which was unanimously agreed to by the House. The present motion was merely an expression of the House that it is expedient that those hon. members should receive their full indemnity.

Mr. SPEAKER. I decided the other day that the House could not pass such a motion. If that motion is carried the Sessional allowance will have to be paid.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. May says:

"But the rules applicable to grants of money, and motions for increasing the burdens upon the people do not apply to resolutions expressive of any abstract opinion of the House upon such matters. Such resolutions have been allowed upon the principle that not being offered in a form in which a vote of the House for granting money, or imposing a burden, can be regularly agreed to, they are barren of results, and are therefore to be regarded in the same light as any other abstract resolution."

I notice that under that rule resolutions upon the following subjects, among others, were allowed: Prince of Wales, 24th May, 1787. National monuments and works of art, 16th April 1818. Danish claims, 9th June, 1841, 26th June, 1851. Scotch inspectors and surveyors of taxes, 23rd June, 1857. River Thames (amendment on going into Committee of Supply), 9th July, 1858. National defences, 9th July, 1859. Recreation grounds, 15th May, 1860. Harbors of Refuge, 6th May, 1862. Sailors' Homes, 24th April, 1863. These expressions of opinion by the House that certain things are expedient have nothing to do with consequences, they are barren of results, and being so are allowed. As there is no clause in the motion that the Speaker "shall be authorized" to order the payment of a sum of money, I think the motion can be regarded as an expression of opinion merely.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it can scarcely be held that the motion would be "barren of results," as it would certainly contemplate the payment of the indemnity, and, therefore, I must rule it out of order.

MR. PATRICK.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I wish to make a statement to the House upon a matter in which I think the House will take an interest. I have been guilty of an omission for which I take some blame to myself, as I intended to have submitted this matter to the attention of the House at an earlier day in the Session when there was a full attendance of members; but the pressure of other duties and the hurry of the Session caused it to be overlooked. I had intended to ask the House to have recognized, as I knew it would most thoroughly, the efficient services of an old officer of Parliament—I mean the late Clerk of the House. Mr. Patrick has served as an officer of this House in various capacities for a period of more than half a century—having been an officer of the Assembly of Upper Canada, and he has performed his various duties with the highest integrity and efficiency. In England it has been usual and proper, when a parliamentary officer is retiring after long services, that the House should specially recognise the services of that officer, and the Clerk and the Clerk Assistant in England have received official recognition of their services. I intended to have moved a motion expressing the recognition of the House of Mr. Patrick's long and faithful services, and I have no doubt that the leader of the Opposition would have seconded that motion with pleasure. It would be of no value to the late Clerk if I should move the motion at this stage of the Session, when there is merely a fragmentary representation of the House present, and I have risen simply for the purpose of stating that it is my intention, next Session, to move a resolution that the House approve of Mr. Patrick's conduct as an officer of the House, and express their recognition of his long and valuable services.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt that when the hon. gentleman moves his motion it will meet with a tolerably unanimous expression of approval on this side. Those of us who have long been members of the House remember with pleasure the assiduity and courtesy with which Mr. Patrick always discharged his duties, which at one time were even more onerous than the somewhat onerous duties we have gone through this Session. Very few of the officers of Canada, I think none except Mr. Patrick, have lived to complete more than half a century's service; I am glad to hear the First Minister express his sense of those services and his intention of giving public recognition of them at the proper time. I quite agree with him that it would be better done when the House is full, because I am certain many members on both sides would desire to give public expression to their sentiments of esteem and respect for that very excellent officer.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), in moving the adoption of the third report of the Committee appointed to supervise the official reports of the Debates, said: This report is in favor of the employment of amanuenses by the reporters. This system has been found absolutely necessary in every other place where there is an official staff for reporting the Debates. The difficulty that occurred this year has been in the reporters being obliged to go out from the table into the office, there writing rapidly for a time, and returning to the Chamber somewhat exhausted, and thereby unable to take shorthand notes so perfectly as they otherwise would do. The result is, that the copy sent to the printers has been bad, as a rule, and the printing has cost a good deal more, according to the Estimates, on account of corrections, than the cost of these amanuenses will be. The effect of this system will be to enable the reporters to do their work much more efficiently, and really to lessen the expense at the end by the improved character of the proofs that will be brought to the hon. members.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. This seems to me very reasonable. I would ask the hon. gentleman, as he is better acquainted with these matters than most of us, if it is an easy matter for an amanuensis to read the shorthand notes of another reporter? I have always understood it was not.

Mr. WHITE. The amanuensis does not read the notes at all. Every one who knows anything about the matter at all is aware that the reporter is delayed very often in reading over his notes by the difficulty of making them out, but by having an amanuensis who writes from dictation, the reporter is enabled to read more rapidly and gets the work better done, as well as being more fresh to do note-taking. It is proposed to pay the amanuenses $12 a week. Payment will be made direct to them, as it was suggested that if the money were paid to the reporters, they might take it and add it to their salaries.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am told by some persons, who have a better knowledge of these matters than myself, that the expense of employing an amanuensis for each reporter will exceed the cost of employing an additional reporter to do their work. If the present staff has too much work to do, it would really be cheaper to employ an additional reporter instead of employing an amanuensis for each reporter. This secretary becomes an employé of the House, and in a short time his salary will have to be increased. It will add to the number of the staff, and must inevitably increase the cost of reporting in a short time.

Mr. WHITE. I may mention that the person who gave my hon. friend that information is incorrect in one respect. An additional reporter would not relieve the staff from that physical exhaustion which comes from the drudgery of writing out the notes rapidly in the time they have before returning to the table to take shorthand notes. It is the labor of writing out their notes which makes it difficult for them to take the shorthand notes as well as they would otherwise do. In Washington, where the staff is much larger than it is here, each reporter has an amanuensis, and some of them have two. The experience of those who are most thoroughly acquainted with this matter is, that if you add another reporter, that would not get rid of the difficulty which, I think, will be avoided by this plan. Much of the cost of the Debates results from the bad copy which the reporters have sometimes turned out through physical exhaustion.

Mr. TROW. I would suggest that if additional reporters are added to the staff, one should be set apart expressly to report the speeches of the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb).

Mr. PLUMB. I "trow" not. I am very glad it has been proposed to relieve these heavily taxed reporters. I plead guilty to having done my share in taxing them in this House, and I feel, as a matter of conscience, that anything that can be done to relieve them, without increasing unduly the public burdens which my hon. friends opposite are groaning under, should be done. I think it is a step in the right direction. I do not agree with the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) that the difficulty will be remedied by employing another reporter. The staff this year have done their work, on the whole, in a satisfactory way, and as we have undertaken to have a correct system of reporting, I think that any reasonable means that will contribute to that result, ought to be employed, or else abolish the Hansard altogether, and trust ourselves to the tender mercies of the newspapers, whose accuracy is proverbial!

Mr. STEPHENSON. I think the House will agree that the system adopted this year has proved more successful than any one anticipated it would be. As far as the expense is concerned, it is well known that the Session has been unusually lengthy, and the House has sat unusually late. So far as we have been able to ascertain, the work done by the reporters is without precedent in any other public body in the world. In the United States they have a far larger staff, and in England, though the system is not quite the same, a far larger staff, relatively, is employed than here. The propositions contained in this report will vastly improve the system we have inaugurated. I do not think there can be any reasonable objection to the adoption of this report.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I think the reporters of the daily papers in the gallery have more work to do than the Hansard reporters, and do it with greater efficiency, because they condense their reports. I think this proposal is the first step towards the abolition of the Hansard. We are now going to increase the expenses indefinitely. Next Session there will be an additional reporter, and he will have to have his amanuensis, and by-and-bye these amanuenses will have to have their secretaries, and in the end we will have a staff of reporters, amanuenses and clerks which will be so expensive and so unsatisfactory that it will have to be abolished.

Mr. STEPHENSON. The $12 a week, which it is proposed to pay these amanuenses, is no more than the sum which is given to the messengers who carry the papers of the hon. member for Essex from here to the post office.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past Two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPORT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD laid on the Table of the House the report of the Department of the Interior, for the fiscal year ending the 31st December, 1880.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

Mr. WRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise to a question of privilege. Innovations are constantly being made in our constitutional system, as appears from recent proceedings in the English Parliament, and though no change has taken place in our constitutional system, yet there have been changes of another character. An eminent statesman, the late lamented Abraham Lincoln, once remarked that it was not proper to trade horses while crossing a stream; but last Session the Liberal party, while crossing the turbid and muddy stream of Canadian politics, changed the old charger which had fought on many a battle field, for a young and untried thoroughbred—very excellent in every respect, though liable withal to balk occasionally, and kick over the traces. At the close of this Session, one of the most important in our history, I have been requested, Sir, by the members of this House, to subject your conduct, as the first Commoner of Canada, as the incarnation of our constitutional system, to the freest and most unsparing criticism. I am aware that the position occupied by the Speaker of the Canadian Parliament is a peculiar one. You are the special custodian and guardian of the rights and privileges of the members of this House. You are, to use an old phrase, its mouthpiece; you express its pleasure or displeasure; and it falls to my lot to give voice to the feelings of the House with regard to the manner in which you have performed your duties in that capacity, whether it has been fair, impartial and courteous, or the reverse. The position of the Speaker of this House is one of strange isolation. From your place you have witnessed many strange scenes—the rise and fall of political hopes, and many a struggle between those who are in and those who want to get in. I have noticed that, though parties may rise and fall, though Parliaments may pass away, the Speaker of this House never dies. You seem, Sir, to have discovered the elixir of life, the fountain of perpetual youth. I entered parliamentary life in 1863, when I formed the acquaintance of Mr. Wallbridge, who was Speaker of the House. He was succeeded by Mr. Cockburn, who discharged his duties well. The next on the list was Mr. T. W. Anglin, who admirably filled the chair in every sense; and he, in turn, was succeeded by yourself. I venture to say that I express the opinion of the entire body of this House when I say that by your knowledge of constitutional customs and parliamentary practices, by your unvarying kindness and courtesy, you have won golden opinions from all. I think it is the judgment of the whole House that you have occupied the Speaker's chair in a manner creditable to yourself, to your Province, and to the Dominion at large. A word, in closing, to those who are about to leave these halls, and who we hope to see return a few months hence. I have no doubt that all will, in their several relations of life, discharge their duties as Canadian gentlemen, and although we may have often to meet on this floor as political foes, we will never meet otherwise than as personal friends.

Mr. TROW. Mr. Speaker, I can most cordially corroborate every word which has been spoken by my hon. friend from the County of Ottawa in regard to your conduct in the chair. I have mingled with the Opposition a good deal during this Parliament, and I have never heard a single sentence uttered otherwise than complimentary of your impartiality as the presiding officer of this House. I regret that some members of the Government have unfortunately been absent from their seats owing to illness. I hope that the Minister of Railways will soon be able to return to his duties, for I know there is no man in this Dominion who more faithfully attends to his departmental duties and to the interests of his party than that hon. gentleman. With regard to what the last speaker has said about the change of leadership of our party, I trust that we will be allowed to make our own little internal arrangements in such matters. A truer, a better, or a more honest man is not in Canada than Mr. Mackenzie. I suppose errors have been made, and errors will continue to be made; even the present Administration has not been free from them. I must say that the Government have done a large amount of business this Session, though I regret that important business had to be put aside on account of the length of the railway debate. Time alone will decide whether the contract with the Syndicate will prove of benefit to the country. I, for one, hope that it will. I have to congratulate the hon. member for Niagara upon his coming to the front to occupy the place of the Minister of Railways, and though we are sometimes impatient when speeches are delivered at three o'clock in the morning, we never have that feeling towards the hon. member for Niagara. In conclusion, I must say that the Session just closing has been a very pleasant one, and, speaking as a very humble member of the Opposition, I must acknowledge that we have been treated with a great deal of courtesy—sometimes, under the circumstances, more than we might have anticipated.

Mr. PLUMB. I agree with hon. members in saying that the moment at which we have to say farewell is a very sad one to all of us. It has, of course, its pleasant recollections for all who remember what has happened during this Session, particularly those on this side of the House who have good cause to congratulate themselves on having achieved one, perhaps, of the greatest triumphs that has been achieved in the history of Canada. It is a Session that will be marked undoubtedly in the annals of this country as one of the most important that ever has been held since the discovery of America. We cannot look upon the scenes of time and tell which grave will germinate and which fall. It is impossible for us to know who are making history, or what the results of that history will be; but I believe those who have taken part in the legislation of this Parliament have had the honest satisfaction of promoting the best interests of the great country which we represent. And I do not say it in any disparagement of the Opposition, that they have taken their stand with a conscientious conviction that they were right. We do not agree with them, but we have the pleasure, when we hear the hon. member for South

Perth (Mr. Trow) speak as he has spoken, of knowing that if we differ, we agree to differ, and we can strike hands in friendly personal intercourse although we may be as far as the poles asunder in our ideas of what is best for the condition of the country. We have endeavored to treat, during all the discussions which have taken place this year, the Opposition with that courtesy which, perhaps, we might, from our great number, have denied to them. We felt a kindly sympathy with their weakness, because we remembered that we were very much in the same condition when in Opposition; but we knew enough not to stay there. Whether our hon. friends will take a lesson out of our book or not, we do not know, and that remains for the future to decide. At all events we hope, and we know, that when we come to the straight fight which has to come, that they will maintain their position with all the skill and force which arguments can give; and if they do not succeed, as I hope they will not, it will not be for lack of argument or of every possible means to enforce their own position. I was sorry to have entered the Chamber and found I had missed the eloquent speech—for I know it could be nothing else—of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Wright). That hon. gentleman, when he rises, has a double advantage over every other member of the House. In the first place, he has the gift of oratory. His lips like those of Plato, touched by the bees of Hymettus, run out their honey; and, in the next place, he has entrenched himself so strongly in the hearts of all members of this Parliament, that whatever he says will be met with approbation, for whatever he says richly deserves it. To the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Trow), I must tender my hearty thanks for the kindly manner in which he spoke of me. It may be possible at some time that I have trenched upon the patience of the hon. member, who has been compelled either to listen to me or go into the smoking room. I am very sorry if I have done so. It is part of the lot of one who takes part in debate that he cannot gauge his own utterances by what he believes to be the sympathy of the House; but I have never intentionally trespassed on the proprieties of debate, and I trust I never may do so. I am hit I always like to strike back, but my heart is like that of the flint and steel. I trust that after my intercourse in Parliament during seven years with hon. members, I can go away with the reflection that I have not made an enemy, and that I have aroused but little antagonism in all the bitterness of debate during the time I have had the honor of a seat in Parliament. I regret more than I can say that we have been deprived during the latter portion of the present Session of one who was a power and authority in himself; and when I look at that empty chair, I believe every member will join with me in expressing the fervent wish that Divine Providence may so order affairs that the hon. member (Sir Charles Tupper) who is now missing from this House, may return with renewed vigor and take his place in the councils of the country with the same might, authority and success which distinguished his career during the long period in which he illustrated the politics of the country. I trust we may all be spared to come together again, and that when we meet we may be able to say that Canada has been progressing in that course of prosperity on which, I believe, it has now entered, and that we shall meet in the chair the dignified, the impartial, the able presiding officer who now sits there, and who has presided up to this time over our deliberations with a competency which has received the endorsement of both sides of the House.

BY-ELECTIONS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I wish to make an announcement which, I think, will be satisfactory to both sides of the House. It is quite clear that every Opposition must admit that a Government to be successful must be strong, and the stronger it is the better. I would like to read two telegrams addressed to myself and which I received to day. The first as follows:—
Mr. PLUMB.

"Your Pacific Railway policy and national tariff was approved by 32 majority in Bellechasse, a Liberal county. I am elected as your supporter.—P. AMYOT."

The second telegram is from Malbaie:

"Though sick and confined to my bed for three weeks, I was elected by my friends on Saturday morning as one of your supporters.—F. X. CIMON."

To this Bill the Royal Assent was given in the following words:—

"In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Third Session of the Fourth Parliament of the Dominion with the following SPEECH.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In relieving you from your parliamentary duties after a long and laborious Session, I desire to convey to you my best thanks for the assiduity you have shown in their performance.

The measure for transferring to a Company of Capitalists the responsibility of constructing and operating the Canadian Pacific Railway will, I am assured, be followed by most favorable results, and ensure the rapid completion of this great national enterprise.

It will be the duty and interest of the Company to use every exertion to dispose, without delay, of the lands granted in aid of their undertaking, and for that purpose to promote immigration from abroad on an extensive scale.

My Ministers will, however, not relax their efforts in the same direction, and it is believed that by the united action of the Government and the Company, a large influx of valuable settlers may be confidently anticipated. Such an immigration must tend to enhance the value of the public domain in the North-West.

While the system of making free grants to actual settlers will be maintained in its integrity, the lands reserved for sale by the Crown will, it is believed, be disposed of at prices sufficient, eventually, to repay the whole of the expenditure of money by the Dominion on the construction of the Railway.

The extension of the Boundaries of Manitoba will confer the privilege of Local self Government on the people already resident in, or who may hereafter occupy, the area now added to the Province, and by enabling the Legislature to establish Municipal Institutions in its enlarged limits, tend greatly to add to the welfare of that interesting region.

The amendment of the Naturalization Laws will, I trust, have the effect of removing the disadvantages under which emigrants from Europe have hitherto labored, and of attracting a large influx of population from the Old World.

The consolidation and amendment of the General Railway Acts, and of the Laws relating to Government Railways has improved and systematized our Railway legislation.

I am pleased to observe that you have not been forgetful of the interests of the Indian population of the North-West. It is greatly to be hoped that the efforts to induce them to forsake their nomadic habits and betake themselves to pastoral and agricultural pursuits will be successful. By no other means can their civilization be promoted, the Indians themselves rendered self-reliant and self-supporting, and the Dominion Treasury relieved of the burden of rescuing them from their apparently chronic state of destitution.

The extension of our Telegraphic system by Cable in the River and Gulf of St. Lawrence, will aid the fisheries and the commerce of Canada and increase the safety of its waters.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In Her Majesty's name, I thank you for the Supplies you have so readily granted, and heartily congratulate you on the improved condition of the Revenue.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I bid you farewell, and trust that when Parliament re-assembles we shall be able to congratulate ourselves on Canada having, meanwhile, enjoyed a season of peace and prosperity.

The Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was then prorogued to the 2nd day of May next.

ORDER, PRIVILEGE, AND PROCEDURE,—Questions of Order :
Quoting Documents not before the House (Mr. Mackenzie). Ruled that point of Order not well taken (Mr. Speaker) 43.
On the right to speak from any part of the House (Mr. Casgrain). Rule read that the member must address the Speaker from his seat (Mr. Speaker) 443.
On M. to adjourn a debate. Second M. objected to (Mr. Blake). Mr. Speaker ruled as follows:—
"The motion for the adjournment of the Debate should be pure and simple, but the motion made by the hon. member for Shelburne is an amendment not coming within the parliamentary meaning of the first mentioned motion, inasmuch as it contains a preamble. I am of opinion that the amendment of the hon. member is in reality out of Order, since it contains a recital of reasons for the adjournment of the Debate. As in the motion for the adjournment of the Debate no preamble can be allowed, so to the motion for the adjournment of the House, no amendment can be made, except as to the time of the adjournment. Under these circumstances I feel called upon to decide that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Shelburne is irregular and cannot be put," 483.
On recording a vote. Member claimed he had a right to record his vote, being in the House when the motion was put (Mr. Bunster). Ruled that "no member shall walk out of or across the House," according to the 17th Rule of the House (Mr. Speaker) 724.

ORDER, PROCEDURE AND PRIVILEGE—Con.

Procedure :

Committee of Whole. False statement by Chairman, attention called to (Mr. Blake) 354; explanation (Mr. Kirkpatrick) 354.
Irregular character of discussion. Ruled that personal explanations are not pertinent to the Debate (Mr. Speaker) 474.
On 2° of C.P.R. Bill. Objected to as not being framed in compliance with Rules of Parliament (Mr. Anglin) 767. Ruled that conditions and Rules of Parliament have been carried out (Mr. Speaker) 770.

Privilege :

Correction of a remark in the "Debates" (Mr. Patterson, Essex) 447.
Calling attention of House to a newspaper article (Mr. Landry) 447.
Calling attention of House to a newspaper article (Mr. White, Cardwell) 495.
Correcting a mis-statement in the "Debates" (Mr. Hesson) 495.
