that position—a position I know he would not dare to sustain before gentlemen of financial authority. Had the hon. gentleman tried to make a loan without a sinking fund he would not have succeeded in negotiating one; he would not have been able to prove, as my hon. friend does, the confidence which our system and policy have given to the great lenders of money. The market prices of our Dominion loans are the barometer, perfect and unmistakable, which show the measure of confidence in our future and success. Our loans are not speculative, but are taken up for investment by people who expect to hold them permanently, and the slightest breath of discredit, the least distrust, the slightest idea that we were legislating against England, that we were doing something which would sever the golden bond between the two countries, would very soon be reflected in the price of our public securities in the English money market. But we have no such indications of the financial barometer. On the contrary it gives every evidence that confidence in our future is constantly increasing, as is evidenced by comparisons given by the Finance Minister, of prices of our Loan with those of the Australian Colonies. The hon. gentleman from Centre Huron made a very extraordinary statement on Friday night. He said our prosperity was wholly due to the great crops of last year and the year before, and he made in that connection the statement that the imports and exports always reacted on each other, that where there was a large export there would be always a large import. The hon. gentleman is always very fond of quoting the United States, either as an example for us to be warned by, or one which we ought to follow, according as either suits his case. The United States imports in 1879 were $446,532,718, and the exports $728,963,829. I do not see the connection claimed by the hon. gentleman between the exports and imports in that case, and the same discrepancy existed for two or three years before. In this connection I am reminded that we have been patted on the back a good deal by gentlemen who have aired their ideas about Canada in the English reviews and magazines, and who have always compared us with the United States to our disadvantage. I remember particularly the article—in the Fortnightly Review I think it was—by Mr. Anderson, the member for Glasgow, who compared Canada to the slack water between two systems, that of the United States on the one side and of England on the other, partaking of the inconveniences and the difficulties of both and getting the benefits of neither. It occurred to me that it would be very well to see exactly how we stood in a comparison of our trade with the trade of the United States. Taking our population at 4,000,000 and that of the United States at 50,000,000, I find that our imports, in proportion to those of the United States, should be, for the year 1880, only $35,700,000; the imports of Canada were more than double that. I find that the exports for 1879, by the same rule, would only equal $58,000,000, and those of Canada were 40 per cent. more than that figure. I find that the internal revenue and customs together would represent $20,000,000 for Canada, and that the whole expenditure of the United States would represent an expenditure for Canada of $21,250,000; but that is only the expense of the general government. Every State has its own system and incurs large expenditures, which in our system are borne by the Dominion. I find that the receipts would only amount to $21,500,000 for Canada, that the Post Office revenue was a little larger—it would be $2,400,000, whereas ours was only $2,170,000—I find that the debt of the United States would be equal to a debt of $180,000,000 for Canada, and, in addition to that, there were State and city debts amounting to $800,000,000. I find that, of arable land, taking the North-West only, assuming we had 250,000,000 acres, we had 60 acres per head of our population; that the United States, exclusive of Alaska, had but 29 acres per head of public domain. Therefore, I think it fair to say that Mr. Anderson was somewhat mistaken when he said we were but the slack water between the two great systems. I believe we can afford to take care of ourselves, and that the probabilities are that we stand in a much better position than the public supposed, and that proportions relatively between us and our neighbors will be continually increasing in our favor. Hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches may be congratulated on the great success of a system which I believe we have adopted in the best interests of the country. I have, occasionally, when arguments were being used for and against a protective Tariff, cited the example of a kingdom which had not been generally or fully quoted, so far as I knew, in respect to the very stringent policy which it has adopted in the direction of protection. That kingdom is, in some respects, one with which we can compare our own Dominion. It has nearly the same population—it is the Kingdom of Belgium—formerly united with Holland. Political necessities compelled them to separate. It was supposed, at the time of their separation, that Belgium would not be able to take care of herself—that she would either fall into the hands of France, Austria or Prussia. She was, therefore, advised that she would do best to keep up close trade relations with her neighbors as a purchaser of their wares and had best devote herself to the cultivation of the soil—very much as my hon. friends on the Opposition benches advised the people of Canada that they had better not go beyond the plough and axe, but buy manufactured goods with the product of the severest and least remunerative labor—pay, in this way for all the manufactures they consumed, including a heavy profit to the skilled artizan of a foreign workshop, and be hewers of wood and drawers of water to other countries who kindly offered to supply it. The creation of the Belgian kingdom, fifty years ago, was regarded with great distrust. In separating from Holland, which was a commercial country, she being a manufacturing and agricultural country, it was supposed Belgium was taking great risks. Holland and her colonies had been a market for Belgian products. Belgium gave employment to the Dutch ships, and neither country seemed strong enough to stand securely by itself. Belgium had 5,000,000 inhabitants, 15,000 of whom, only, were dissentients from the Roman Catholic faith. She had the Austrian market when she belonged to the House of Austria, a French market when she constituted a part of the French Empire, and a Dutch Colonial market when she was united to Holland; when she parted from Holland she was in the position of a tradesman who had lost one set of customers and had not gained another. In 1840 her position was one of much general distress and decay, but her people are industrious and skillful, and they have been able to get access for their products into neutral markets and to hold their own. Belgian agriculture has doubled since 1830. Her mines have been developed in a greater ratio. Her iron manufactures have become formidable competitors with those of England, where she has undersold the English manufacturer at his own door. Other industries have been cultivated with almost equal success. Her commerce has been steadily increasing year by year and is now second to that of no other nation in Europe—except France and Germany. It is admitted, even by the most unfavorable criticism, that she stood the late commercial crisis better than other countries. She has a Government of advanced liberality of constitution, a Chamber elected by suffrage of all citizens paying direct taxes to the amount of £1 15s. or about $8 a year, holding office for four years, half going out alternately once in two years, and a Senate chosen for eight years. That kingdom, instead of taking the advice of the defunct Bastiat, of Mills and Cobden, and of other gentlemen who, like those sitting on our Opposition benches, would have given her Free Trade counsel, resolved to take care of herself. She established, by the will of her people, electing their representatives by nearly universal suffrage, in the face of all the threats and prophesies of disaster of the theorists of Europe, a most stringent protective Tariff, and what has been the result? The revenue of that country in 1880, was about $50,000,000, and the expenditure very nearly the same. She had an extensive system of telegraphs and railways, belonging to the Government, a revenue from the Post Office of $1,200,000; from registration duties, $1,200,000; succession duties yielded $3,500,000, and miscellaneous taxes, $4,600,000. She owed a debt at 2½ to 3 per cent. of $120,000,000, and at 4½ per cent. $180,000,000. The population was 4,000,000 in 1830, and 5,336,885 in 1876. I find that the Belgian loans stand in as good credit as that of any kingdom in Europe, and the country possesses 1,131,112 freehold proprietors. The imports for home consumption in 1878, were $280,000,000; the exports of home products for that year $214,000,000. She sends to England of woollen and flax manufactures, over $10,000,000; iron nearly $4,000,000. The State owns and operates 2,278 miles of railway, the net profits of which are $7,000,000, and yet this country has a high, in fact almost a prohibitory tariff. Now, I can fancy the condition of mind of the hon. gentleman who is leading the Opposition, if he were called upon to criticize such a financial statement. I can fancy the gloom and the despair with which he would look upon such a state of things, and the eloquence with which he would implore his fellow subjects to throw away their protectionist theories, go back to and unite themselves again with Holland; how he would tell them that with that debt and in that condition of things they could never hope to have any commerce; that France, and England, and Prussia, and Austria would swallow them up, and the sooner they made peace with them and became annexed to them the better it would be. Facts, however, are stubborn things; and an ounce of facts, such as I have adduced, are worth a ton of the theories we have had from the other side. I say that the whole Free-trade argument, from beginning to end, is nothing more nor less than a theory; it is not an axiom; it is not a matter of logic. It cannot be reduced to the certainty of a mathematical proposition. Its beneficial application or adoption depends upon the condition of the country which proposes to accept it; and it is not a horizontal rule which shall be applied universally—or, as in our own case, applied to a country which has a heavy Tariff against it; in other words, to give us a jug-handled free-trade—a free-trade which is all on one side. Hon. gentlemen have not yet ceased to croak about the condition of the country. They have been compelled to acknowledge that there has been an improvement in trade. That conclusion has been forced upon them, but they take it with a very bad grace, because they have been deprived of one of their principal arguments. By the logic of events, as one prop after another is taken from them, the hon. gentlemen will find themselves in the same position as the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) the other night, when he was unable to find his chair, though it would not be quite parliamentary to make any more particular allusion to the hon. gentleman's unfortunate position at that moment. Then we had a long argument from the hon. member for Centre Huron during the discussion of the Budget Speech on Friday, to prove that there had been a misstatement in respect to what was called, on the other side of the House, the Ex-o-dus of our people. The hon. gentleman said in substance that he would accept the statements of American officers, who had been detected in endeavoring to exaggerate the influx into their country, and who will, of course, make every effort to sustain their position for fear of the disfavor of their chiefs at Washington. The hon. gentleman prefers to believe their statements rather than an official document prepared by the proper officer of the Immigration Department, made with authority and laid on the Table of the House—a document which shows that the conclusions of hon. gentlemen opposite, with regard to the so called Exodus, are utterly absurd. Rather than have his argument fail, the hon. gentleman would adhere to the exploded assertion that the country is becoming depopulated; he would make a statement such as that made by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), who said that the farmers were leaving his part of New Brunswick by hundreds, forgetting, however, that somebody must buy their farms, and that farmers were not in the habit of leaving their farms unoccupied, or of giving them away for the purpose of fleeing to another country. The argument is one which refutes itself, and was no doubt received with all the weight to which it was entitled. A western newspaper makes use of the following language, with regard to those who are governed by a desire to belittle their country and decri its resources, for the purpose of making political capital against the dominant party:—

"If the Liberals now in Opposition persist in representing Canada as a good country to get out of, there will be people to believe them and start for Kansas or Dakota who would otherwise remain in Ontario or Quebec. The encouragement of an exodus from Canada will not be the only bad effect of such a policy. Emigrants from Europe will surely hesitate to cast their lot in a land where the conditions of living are so unfavorable that the population already there are compelled to flee as from a pestilence. Our Liberal friends may rely that the best way to get rid of an evil is to recognize its existence and remove the cause; that the N.P. has caused the exodus, and that nothing short of the abolition of the N.P. will bring the exodus to an end. The position is a logical one, if we are quite sure that the N.P. has actually caused the exodus. We go the length that the N.P. has been utterly powerless to prevent it, but we recognize such other causes for it as the revival of the mechanical industry in the United States making a demand for skilled labor; the rapid extension of railways in the United States calling bands of navvies from Canada, and the attractiveness of prairie farms in Dakota and other States being increased by the extension of railway facilities. The Canadian N.P. has undoubtedly made the farmer's return for his labor less than it would have been without the price-raiser in Canada, but when we remember that crops and markets have been better in 1879 and 1880 than for some years before we cannot declare that the farmer's actual comforts are much less in 1880 than in 1877, that it is absolutely driven from our soil. * * * * * The exodus argument, as a political weapon, can only be useful on the assumption that the Canadian people will not put the Tory Government out of office unless they (the people) are convinced that the country will be depopulated by the policy of that Government. It is an argument of fear rather than of reason. We do not believe that it is a necessary portion of the Liberal kit of tools; the people can be shown the folly of protection and the iniquity of Toryism without injuring the reputation of our country and reducing its population in the process, and for these reasons our vote goes for letting the exodus find its way to the background. The Liberal party cannot afford to be thought of as a party of croakers, and if their leaders and press talk and write about nothing else but hard times, the idea of graves and worms and epitaphs will soon come to be associated with their names * * * * * The London Free Press impeaches the accuracy of United States statistics, asserting that visitors, trunks, lumbermen, passengers to Manitoba and actual settlers in the United States are all lumped together to make up the number. The Sarnia Observer combats that view. We sincerely hope that the Free Press is right in this instance, for this country would soon fall behind if it was losing seventeen thousand of its population per month. Whatever the actual extent of the evil, it will certainly be aggravated by making too much fuss about it, and as neither Liberals nor Conservatives desire to bring about that result, we had better pursue our family quarrel on some platform where we shall be less exposed to the inquisitive glances of our neighbors."

Several hon. MEMBERS. From what newspaper do you quote?

Mr. PLUMB. From one whose authority most of our Opposition friends will accept, not one that I often read, however, or very much respect, namely, the Hamilton Times. The ex-Finance Minister insisted upon it that we should accept the exaggerated statements of the United States officials on the St. Clair River, and he said we must also bear in mind that not only were the people flying from us, but that by our iniquitous system, as he called it, we had driven the intending emigrant from our shores; he told the British workingman that if he came here he would be iniquitously taxed on every article of consumption; he told the farmer that, if he came here, he would be the victim of the iniquitous system, as he termed it, which has been adopted by my hon. friend and endorsed by the Conservative party. He said he believed that at this moment, owing to the effect of our policy, the workingman in England was better off, had better wages, could live more cheaply, was better compensated for his labor at home than he could be in Canada. Well, that was only another branch of that patriotic view of the state of things which hon. gentlemen on the other side are inclined to take. But I have some information in regard to that too. An article in the Contemporary Review contained interesting statistics in reference to the wages of the different mechanics of Great Britain, taking the wages in London as giving the fairest and most satisfactory idea of what may be the average throughout the country. I now quote from a resume of that article:

"According to this account, which seems to have been got up carefully and with a great amount of labor, the wages in the building trades were on an average, in 1844, sixpence an hour, or $1.25 per day, at which rate they had stood from 1836. In 1847 an hour and a half was taken off their time on the Saturdays. There was no rise of wages, however, till 1853, when sixpence per day was added, in lieu of the nine hours' day's work which were agitated for. Gradually those wages have risen, till now those current among building operatives may be put down at £1 19s. 4d., or very nearly $10 per week. This, however, would be putting the matter far too high as an average pay. Making the necessary deductions for broken time, etc., the average, it is said, will not exceed £1 15s. per week, or $455 per annum. This is altogether apart from what may be lost by the workman's own fault—by going off work, or being too late, etc. The workers in iron have had very little advance in wages during the last 30 years. They now, on an average, stand about $9 per week, or rather $8.50. Compositors' wages have we are told, in 30 years advanced 75 cents per week, namely, from $8.25 to $9 on day's work, and about 17 per cent. on the prices paid for piece work. The rates, however, are very varied in this trade, though, striking an average, it is said that the weekly pay, whether on time or piece, will not exceed $7, making allowance for slack time, etc. On daily newspapers as much as $12.50 will be earned; and some may even rise, on high class work, to $15, but these are exceptional. In London compositors get $10, but the ordinary general rates over the country are from $6.75 to $8.25. Book-binders, in 1877, averaged from $7.50 to $8, while women and girls averaged from $2.50 to $3. It is said to be difficult to obtain accurate information in reference to certain domestic trades, but as far as can be ascertained, the wages of tailors have, in 30 years, advanced from 17 to 25 per cent. In London those tradesmen will not average more at the present time, than $6.2, though some of the best coat hands may get from $10 to $10.50. It is to be remarked that the introduction of sewing machines has not sensibly lowered wages—rather the reverse. The wages of shoemakers have advanced in 30 years 20 to 35 per cent. It would be a high average to put their weekly wages at $7.50. Other domestic trades may be taken as about the same. While such is the general average of London mechanics, and such the increase of their wages in 30 years, what has been the increase of living during the same time? In answer to this, it is said that beef, which in 1847, sold wholesale for $1 05 per eight pounds, was in 1877 worth $1.47, while mutton had risen from $1.10 to $1.65 for the same quantity. When, however, that meat comes to be retailed to the poorer classes, it is found that the price has advanced not less than from 75 to 80 per cent. All other kinds of meat have advanced in price at least to an equal degree. Bread, thanks to free trade in grain, has kept at very reasonable rates during all the past 30 years—the quality is better, and the price on an average is lower. Vegetables have gone up about 100 per cent. Sugar, tea, fruits, rice, sago, etc., are in a good many cases much cheaper, and in none dearer than they were 30 years ago. House rent in London is high, especially for small houses. Four rooms and a wash-house now command from $2.60 to $2.75 per week, and single rooms are from $1.12 to $1.37½ per week. The demand for these is so great that all the Peabody buildings and all the model dwellings are filled to repletion, and there are so many applicants as would fill as many more. Coal of the poorest kind is 41 cents per cwt., or between $8.00 and $9.00 a ton; while in addition, the poor are cheated both in measure and weight. To arrive at the actual fact the mere quoted prices in the market are not to be taken. Before the workman gets possession the price has been raised considerably. For instance, we are told that on the 17th February last, the highest quoted price for the best coal in London was $4.37½ per ton, but the selling price on that very day to the consumer was $7. Now, what about outlay? It is generally held by those who have given attention to such matters that no man ought to pay in rent and taxes more than one-seventh of his income. Prudent people used to hold that he ought not to pay more than one-tenth, but we fear this is generally now given up as impracticable. Well, if the average yearly of a London first-class skilled mechanic be put down at $455, and this we are assured is a high average, the rent and taxes ought at one-seventh to be $65. But none manage now at this figure. It is generally over one-sixth, or $76; frequently one-fifth, or $91, and sometimes even more. The average then cannot, at the very lowest, be put down at less than $76. One hundred weight per week for coals cannot be called high when fire is needed for eight months for warmth, and all the year for cooking. This would be forty-one cents per week; while school fees, and the weekly twenty-five cents for the club, to which nearly all workmen belong, would make up, with rent and coals, $2.25 to be deducted from the $8.75, the average weekly pay, thus leaving $6.50 to feed, clothe, and comfort five persons—the average household. This would give $2.50 for the husband, $1.50 for the wife, and seventy-five cents for each child, leaving twenty-five cents for incidentals. Then the fact that the husband has generally to take his breakfast and dinner away from home, which either increases the cost or deteriorates the quality, or rather does both, is to be considered and allowed for. The Sunday dinner, the only one the family takes together, cannot be reckoned at less than seventy-five or eighty-seven cents. Deduct all those items, and there is a little over $4 to feed, clothe and doctor the family. Now, it will be noticed that these figures are not given by an enemy of the workingmen, or by one who wishes to disparage London, or England, and its advantages. He has no little game to play as an advocate of the colonies, nor does he desire to draw contrasts unfavorable to England and England's skilled workmen. On the contrary, he wishes to show that the charges of improvidence frequently brought against English workmen are utterly false, as he proceeds to do by giving the official returns of their savings. We, however, take these figures as thus given by a skilled and friendly witness, and we ask anyone to compare and contrast them with what is the corresponding state of things in Toronto say, even as things stand at present. We are often assured that wages are lower and expenses of living are higher in Toronto than in any large city in Britain, London not excepted. Let anyone completely acquainted with the facts make the comparison, in the light of the statistics we have just given and say if such is the case. No one would say that there are more skilled mechanics out of employment in Toronto than in London at this moment."

That was in 1878 when there was said to be an enormous number of people out of employment; that was a period when there was not actually employment for labor in this country, and yet this statement goes to prove that the workingman is infinitely better off in this country than he is in England, that, notwithstanding the contention of gentlemen on the opposite side that the Free-trade policy of England and the abolition of the corn laws have ameliorated the condition of the workingmen, such is not the case. There is no adequate advance in the wages of labor there in proportion to the increased cost of living. The authority I have read is, I think, a sufficient answer to the hon. gentleman who unpatriotically asserts that the policy of my hon. friend under which no single item of household necessity can be shown where there has been an advance due to the Tariff, has so taxed the workingman that he is better off in England than here. The quotation comes from a newspaper in the west which will be considered a good authority by hon. gentlemen opposite, although it has led them into sore difficulties, and plunges them deeper day by day. It is the Toronto Globe. The hon. member the ex-Finance Minister was not satisfied with saying that the workingman was driven away from our shores, but he said he believed the policy adopted by this Government would put an average tax of $10 an acre on every farm in the Dominion. This is almost as extravagant as the statement made the other day by a wild enthusiast in the Globe, that the subsidies and privileges given to the Syndicate amounted to at least $300,000,000, and it can be relegated to the same limbo as that statement. I do not think that a hap-hazard assertion like that should be, for one moment, received by anybody with confidence, even though it is the statement of a man who claims to stand in the authoritative position of an ex-Minister of Finance. But we are told by a witty resident of the hon. gentleman's native city, who, doubtless, knows his characteristics, that you might as well try to get a mule by the hind leg as to try to reconcile a Grit to a national enterprise. I believe that is true. I believe the hon. gentlemen, no matter what their experience is, no matter what unanswerable evidence they may have, will be blind to the fact that the policy which has been adopted on this side of the House has been successful, has been in accordance with the promises we made, and has been acceptable to the public; but they will stand exactly in the position of those who are blind leaders of the blind, and are given over to believe, what I do not think it would be parliamentary to characterize by its right name. Why, Sir, on the morning of the election, the great organ of the Reform party, claiming to have the ear of the whole farming population of Ontario, claiming to mould public sentiment to a degree that no other public print has claimed to mould it, misled the people, deceived the people, hoodwinked the people by this article:

"All that has been going on during the last two months in the constituencies and the journals has been only preliminary to the great battle of to-day. The time for argument is passed. It only remains for us to ask electors to go early to the polls this morning and record their votes for the candidates of their choice, and then lend a helping hand to their neighbors who have no vehicles. Make it a holiday from business—a day devoted to work for the country, for sound principles, for pure morals, for the election to office of honest and straightforward men."

And the electors took that advice, but not as the Globe intended.

"One day in five years is a small tax on the ordinary voter; some have given weeks and even months to the duties of the canvass. Let the day be given by Reformers freely, and they will have their reward in the new lease of power which Mr. Mackenzie and his colleagues will receive. We have before predicted the triumphant success of Mr. Mackenzie at the polls, and have since had no reason to change our view."

The leading organ, it will be seen, made no reference to another gentleman who now leads the Opposition, vice the member for Lambton, deposed. It continues:

"The Dominion will decide by a large majority against the return to power of Sir John A. Macdonald, with his unhappy memory of the Pacific Scandal and his equally unhappy fiscal policy, which would inflict upon the country burdensome taxation, excessive inflation, heavy exactions from all classes, but especially the poorer, great danger to British connection, and much damage to our international trade. One more effort and the work is done."

Well, people did not do exactly as the Globe advised; some things do not come out in this world always exactly as we expect.

"The best laid schemes of mice and men Gang aft agley."

When I saw the ex-Finance Minister rise opposite to my hon. friend, Sir Leonard Tilley, his successful successor, and attempt to stem the torrent, attempt to swim, as it were, against the cataract of Niagara, I certainly felt a little sorrow for that hon. gentleman, because I contrasted his present position with that when I first saw him in this House in 1874, and when we sat in the seats occupied by hon. gentlemen opposite, but we knew enough not to stay there. That hon. gentleman, I say, then arose in his place, amid the cheers of the subservient majority at his back; and, at the close of every sentence of his first financial speech—a speech in which he did his very best to injure the credit of his country for the sake of denouncing his predecessors, a speech full of ranting vituperation and ill-concealed hate—he was cheered to the echo. Every venomous sentence he uttered was received with shouts of applause, peals of laughter and the clapping of hands by the triumphant majority who sat there and fancied they were going to sit there forever. But they faded into mist; and it is a humiliating spectacle to see that hon. gentleman now rising in his place, with none on the benches behind him so poor to do him reverence. Not a man, even of those who were his most subservient claqueurs of old, encouraged him by a cheer. He went on with his dreary platitudes hour after hour to a drowsy House, although some of his quondam followers were compelled to listen to him for the sake of late appearances. But the main part of his following, if he ever had a following, were enjoying themselves in the lobby, in the smoking room, or had left the House. It was a sad and melancholy commentary on an attempt to run counter to public opinion—a commentary on a course which has brought to utter destruction a great party—a party which had some noble aspirations, some high ideas, and which, on the whole, desired to foster the best interests of the country. It must have been a pleasant position for the hon. gentlemen opposite to sit behind one who had been their leader, and hear him utter without change—except that he must have been schooled into a little more respect for hon. gentlemen on this side of the House and for the decencies of party debate—exactly the same arguments that led them over the brink of a precipice in 1878, and will leave them floundering in the slough beneath for many years to come. Their leaders sought to recover themselves by abusing the manufacturers; by telling the farmers that they were hoodwinked and deceived. They accused the manufacturers of wringing foul gains from the pockets of the poor man. They encouraged the small traders to increase the prices of retail articles of all kinds because of the National Policy. I have heard the most absurd reasons given for such unwarrantable increase of the prices of goods which could not possibly be affected by the National Policy. They are now beginning a raid upon railways, as dangerous monopolies. The next crusade will be against capital invested in some other form. That is the policy that warns men that if the gentlemen opposite come back to power, they will strike at every vested interest. Their policy has been, from beginning to end, a policy of obstruction. It is their misfortune to have stood logically committed to such a course by being compelled to oppose the Conservative party which has brought forward all the great measures that have benefitted the country. Their luckless fate has compelled them to oppose every such measure, except for a brief period when their leader struck hands with ours and joined with him fairly and patriotically in bringing about the union of these Provinces. It is a misfortune that these gentlemen should be placed in their present position. We regret it and speak of it more in sorrow than in anger. It has the effect of making the party in power too strong. A strong party always needs a check, and that check should come from the constitutional Opposition. We were told by the ex-Finance Minister that he intended to deal generally, but had only time to deal cursorily, with the points in dispute between the two sides of the House, and particularly between the hon. Finance Minister and himself. From a computation I have made, the hon. gentleman spoke 18,250 words in the course of his brief and cursory examination of the points at issue. When one thinks that the hon. gentleman made use of 18,250 words to sustain thoroughly false positions, to take what is called a cursory view—I do not want to use the word in a double sense, though I think it might be applied in that sense to the hon. gentleman's remarks—one cannot help concluding that if he dealt with the question in extenso, we would have to add to the reportorial staff and lay in a fresh supply of stationery for the official debates. I have no doubt that I will be followed by hon. gentlemen who will take the same line of argument as the hon. gentleman has taken. I understood that a speech is impending from my hon. friend, the amiable, the excellent, the intelligent and logical member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross). That hon. gentleman always pays special respect, attention and tribute to me. He has been pleased at various times to indulge in a kind of pleasantry, which reminds me of Kaulbach's picture of a certain ponderous, long-eared animal, that was trying to frisk before his master like his companion, an active little spaniel. That hon. gentleman, on more than one occasion—for I suspect he has a hand in certain little productions that I see now and again—has done me the honor to say that I have been occasionally guilty of making rhymes. I doubt, if that is a reflection upon one's character, but it seems to be thought a crime of some sort by hon. gentlemen opposite; however, I, at least, am consoled by knowing I have a companion in guilt whom one would least suspect. My hon. friend from West Middlesex himself, who speaks so sarcastically of bards now, for whom I had then great sympathy, came to me, not long ago, with the tremulous, blushing hesitation of a young maiden of sweet sixteen, and confided to me the opon secret that he too was a poet. He told me where I could find the production of his Muse which had been sitting in incubation probably for a weary time, and had at last succeeded in hatching a couple of very limp and very feeble verses, as remotely resembling the healthy offspring of a healthy mind as the little chick hatched by the heating process by the glass hen resembles those that are brought to life by a healthy mother in the natural process of incubation. The hon. gentleman wished me to give my opinion of his verses; of course, in that complimentary sense in which we always endeavor to foster genius, I told him they were very sweet and lovely, at which he blushed again and thanked me, and went away. I am afraid, however, my praise did the hon. gentleman much harm, for I think I have recognized his Muse in some other productions, maliciously signed with my name, in Grit papers, and my encouragement, I am afraid, well meant though not quite sincere, has brought a little deserved punishment on myself. Though I wish to spare the hon. gentleman's tender feelings, I could not do him a greater favor than not to encourage him to go on in that path upon which he entered, and which, I am sorry to say, seems to be strewn with thorns. The hon. gentleman has undoubtedly the ability to make the best of a bad case. He did me the favor to strew my path, not with flowers of nature but with flowers of rhetoric, for he sent into the county before the last election in which I was a candidate for Parliament, and under his own frank, I believe, copies of a speech he delivered in the House, and of which he seemed to be very proud. That speech dealt with averages, but was itself somewhat below the average. I do not know that I ever heard of the speech in the county, but I saw it in one or two farmers houses, and it did not seem to me to have had any great effect; although the hon. gentleman takes great pleasure in persistently asserting that I was elected only by a majority of two, he is probably not aware of the fact that his argument, at any rate, did not aid the candidate who opposed me in such a way as to spare him the expenditure of $17,500 which he confessed he was obliged to make in order to get the small majority of two by which he held his seat for a few weeks. He was finally thrust out of it, disgraced and disqualified for seven years. I think the hon. gentlemen opposite might as well let that matter alone, because I do not think they do any kindness to the unfortunate gentleman whom they are constantly dragging before the public. I wish the hon. member (Mr. Ross) a happy deliverance of the same old speech. And now, Sir, I repeat that this whole country sees with pride and pleasure that every pledge which was given to the public, prior to the elections of 1878, had been carried out by the party that then succeeded to power upon an issue which the people accepted with such unanimity, that, to-day, its advocates in this House stand almost as three to one against the hon. gentlemen on the opposite benches, and I am also delighted to find that every day and week brings additional evidence that the fruition of this policy is what was claimed it would be. The result was not to come in a day, in a week, or a month, but its success was only a question of time; and we now are beginning to reap the benefits of this policy, though the Finance Minister has labored under every disadvantage from the moment he began his work in connection with it, until to-day, and no greater difficulty has been encountered than the utterances of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the course pursued by the press by which they are sustained. The hon. gentleman on the Opposition side (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), who made such a melancholy exhibition of himself on Friday night, claims to be the exponent of public opinion, and ventures to assert that he and his political friends beside him represent the sentiments of the people of Canada. I repudiate any such idea, and the people will repudiate it also, and refuse to accept the theories of those hon. gentlemen as against practical facts and the good practical sense of men who have framed the present Tariff and the policy which has brought back to the country the renewal of confidence and the revival of trade, as well as the prosperity of which it was deprived during the five years of the misrule of the hon. gentlemen who now deservedly sit and will continue to sit on the Opposition benches. We are ready at any time, when it becomes necessary, to take that policy as a watchword and go before the public for its decision upon it. We can sustain it as we have sustained it. We honestly believed what we taught. We were told we were deceiving the people and never intended to do what we promised, and had no idea of establishing a Tariff of a protective character. We were told by the late leader of the Opposition at Kingston, in 1877, that Sir John A. Macdonald would as soon establish a republic as a tariff for protection. In reply to that, the public took the hon. gentlemen opposite at exactly what they were worth, after having seen them for five years on the Ministerial side of the House. The people learned to value rightly their promises and arguments, and gauge exactly their professions and promises. They had seen hon. gentlemen opposite promise one thing out of office and do the very opposite when in office, had seen them violate every pledge they made; and now, when the main army is crushed, humiliated and beaten, to say that the battered remnant represent public sentiment, is the height of audacity. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Paterson, South Brant), with his stentorian tones, will rise by and-by and attempt to say that he represents a modicum of the public opinion of the country. He may have the power of attracting the mob, and in North Ontario at the election there last summer, upon the platform, with his very glib tongue and ad captandum style he was preferred to his leader; and this preference has persuaded him that he may claim to be a leader of public opinion. But we are perfectly willing to leave the hon. gentleman to his small self congratulations, and where he will be when he again goes before the public for re-election.

Mr. PATERSON (South Brant). What do they say about you in North Ontario?

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. gentleman can state whatever he likes on the subject. My course in North Ontario will be, I believe, endorsed by the Minister of Finance, who I accompanied, by invitation of Mr. Gibbs, and who, I have no doubt, had a better opportunity of judging of it than the member for South Brant, who was not there with me. I do not think it becomes him, then, to allude to what I think he means, because he knows the report is not true.

Mr. PATERSON. Then leave the hon. gentleman alone.

Mr. PLUMB. I have endeavored, Mr. Speaker, so far as I could, to supply a place that could have been far more worthily filled. I acknowledge my shortcomings, however. I am not like the hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly like the hon. gentleman who has just said "hear, hear," (Mr. Paterson) who thinks the sun rises to hear him crow. I do not value myself as that hon. gentleman values himself. But I say this: there never has been an occasion on which the Conservative party—the great party that, I believe, is to mould the destinies of this country for many years to come; the great party to which has been entrusted the mission of uniting it by bands of steel from ocean to ocean—had greater reason to be proud of those to whom it has entrusted the Government of the country; had greater reason to be satisfied with the policy adopted by its representatives, or greater reason to be hopeful for the future; had greater reason to believe that Canada, as a country standing in connection with the great Mother Country, uninfluenced politically by the power that lies alongside of her, will be able to carry out her magnificent destiny and become the proudest and greatest appanage of the greatest sovereignty upon earth.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Before entering upon a discussion of the Budget brought down by the hon. Minister of Finance, you will permit me, Sir, to congratulate the hon. member for Niagara upon the distinguished position which he occupied to-night. That hon. gentleman, Sir, has been singled out on several occasions for marks of ministerial approbation; but I do not know that on any former occasion, since I have been a member of this House, has he occupied such a distinguished position as that of representing or attempting to represent the Minister of Railways. The hon. gentleman expressed his regret at the absence of the Minister of Railways. I join in that regret. I have regretted that up till to-night the hon. Minister of Railways has been unable from severe illness to occupy his wonted place; but, after listening to his representative for two or three long weary hours, I regret it still more; and if we have to submit to the infliction of such a representative for many weeks longer, I do sincerely hope that the most vigorous efforts will be made in order to secure the speedy recovery of the hon. Minister of Railways that he may take his place in this House and represent himself. I said that I congratulated the hon. member upon so distinguished a mark of ministerial approbation. He has been variously distinguished by similar favors. Wherever any missionary work has to be done; whenever a "mob of settlers," as he called the rural electors of North Ontario, are to be enlightened; whenever a distinguished associate has to be found for Ministers in their peregrinations in the country, the hon. member for Niagara is at once applied to. He has been ready with his assistance on former occasions, and I have no doubt he will be equally ready in the future. I hope the hon. member will not retire.—

Mr. PLUMB. I am modest.

Mr. ROSS. I say that while the hon. gentleman has ever been ready to accompany Ministers in their peregrinations, he has been equally ready to retire at their request. It is a matter of notoriety that in his recent tour in North Ontario, where it was expected that he would accomplish marvels for the Government—where one would suppose—

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that I requested—

Mr. ROSS. I did not say so. I say that the hon. gentleman went to North Ontario, where it was expected the hon. gentleman would electrify the mob of settlers in that riding as no other member could electrify them, but it appears from the public prints that the hon. gentleman's services were not so acceptable as he supposed. The hon. gentleman will permit me to read a short article on the subject.

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to an explanation.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman rises to interrupt, and I do not intend to give way to him.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). He made the attack.

Mr. PLUMB. I made no such attack as the hon. gentleman is making on me.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. ROSS. The Toronto Telegram is the paper from which I shall quote, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will recognize a friend in the writer, for the Telegram is not a supporter of the Opposition. It says:

"Mr. J. B. Plumb's orations in North Ontario were more oppressive than impressive, as the Tories of Uxbridge found to their cost. After the meeting in that village which was addressed by the Finance Minister and the 'sweet singer of Niagara,' the local managers are said to have telegraphed to the managers at the next place of meeting to get Sir Leonard Tilley to occupy most of the allotted time, as Mr. Plumb was doing them harm by his prolix inanities. The hint was, it seems, taken and acted on, but Mr. Plumb will not feel at all pleased with this explanation of the shortness of the time allowed him."

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to say a word. I do not know to whom he refers, but so far from any such communication being sent by me, or with my knowledge, I can only say that I only heard of it afterwards, and that of course I knew nothing about the committee. I may say, further, that the two addresses delivered by the hon. gentleman were among the most effective I ever heard.

Mr. ROSS. I knew the hon. member for Niagara would receive a compliment from the Minister of Finance. The quotation does not say that the Minister of Finance was telegraphed to. It says: "The local managers are said to have telegraphed to the managers at the next place of meeting." That might have been done without the knowledge of the Minister of Finance, and probably was, and probably the effect of it was to secure the quiet retirement of the hon. gentleman from the field, for the time being. I was, however, calling your attention, when I so disturbed the member for Niagara, to the mark of approbation which the hon. gentleman has received from the Ministry time and again. Recently a more distinguished mark of ministerial favor was conferred upon him than upon any other member of this House. There is an item in the Public Accounts to the small tune of $125, though I presume it is quite large enough for the service received.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot refer to a matter which took place in Committee.

Mr. ROSS. It appears in the report which the Committee has made to the House and a copy of which I have in my desk.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is quite in order in that case.

Mr. ROSS. I am glad the hon. member for Niagara has taken his seat again, for nothing pleases me more than to see his smiling face. I was about to say that there is an item of $125 in the Public Accounts as a payment for 5,000 copies of a speech delivered by the hon. member for Niagara. It is a small item, but it is, perhaps, more than the speech was worth. It is a small item compared with the amounts which have been paid for literature of a similar kind, written by less noted gentlemen than the member for Niagara. I congratulate him on this mark of distinction; for it is the first time such a mark of distinction was conferred on a member of Parliament. Although the edition was a small one, although it was only one-fourth, or perhaps one-fifth as large as the editions of some of the penny-aliners, who have written pamphlets for the departments, I have no doubt the hon. gentleman regarded it as a very distinguished mark of approbation. But that is not all, the hon. gentleman has other work to do. He is, Sir, a Jack-of-all-trades in this House. If any hon. gentleman on this side has to be attacked, presto the hon. member for Niagara rises to his feet, and, in the language of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), he is over ready to throw "rhetorical dead cats" across the floor of the House. If a matter has to be investigated of a questionable character, who so ready to undertake the task as the hon. gentleman from Niagara. If it is in the interests of his party that he should speak against time, if any disagreeable task has to be performed, all that is necessary in order to get it done is to pass a note to the hon. member for Niagara and the work is done, with that ability which characterizes all his public utterances. Sir, these marks of favor have a significance. I feel quite sure that the hon. gentleman sitting so near the Ministerial benches, within one desk of the Minister of Justice, has for many years cast longing eyes upon the coveted position. He knows that there is no man on that side of the House so well qualified to hold a portfolio as the hon. member for Niagara, and I have no doubt his impotency is difficult to be disposed of. What is done to appease the hon. gentleman? He is just asked to represent the Minister of Railways. To the member for Niagara that is the next thing to holding the portfolio of the Minister of Railways. He is asked to permit, graciously to permit, the copyright of his speech to be handed over to the Minister of the Interior to be circulated in this country and in England, and that satisfies his ambition. He is as gratified with that as if he held the portfolio of the Minister of the Interior. Strange, and it is a matter I cannot understand, how a man of his surpassing ability, of his profound knowledge, of his wonderful erudition, of his sublime powers of imagination, can be so easily appeased. Is it not an illustration that great men have their failings? Put toys, a little bauble, a gewgaw into the hands of a child, and it is as satisfied as if that gewgaw was a coronet. Give to the member of Niagara some little favor, some little condescension, if it be but a passing smile, if it be but a simple recognition when he goes around bowing from desk to desk to receive the congratulations of hon. members, and the hon. gentleman is just as satisfied with these simple marks of favor as if they were the most distinguished positions, in the hands of the Crown. The hon. gentleman charges me with having sent to his riding a copy of a speech I delivered in this House on the subject of averages. I have no recollection of it. Perhaps that speech found its way into the hon. gentleman's county—he said he saw two or three of them there. Sir, it would be wholesome reading for people accustomed to hear my hon. friend. I do not know but there may be some truth in the hon. gentleman's statement. I have been looking over the majorities he received on three different occasions, and I fancy, from the result of the last election, that his constituents must have received some copies of my speech. Let us see. At his first election he received a majority of 30, but he was, unfortunately, unseated. He received at the next election a majority of 103. Then these ill-omened speeches of mine on the subject of averages went into his county, and the hon. gentleman was defeated. Sir, his popularity is declining. He who, on his first acquaintance with his constituents, could receive a majority of 30, had something to boast of. When at the next election he could command a majority of 103, that was something to be proud of. When again he was able to bring out a majority of two, through the intervention of the Court, he thinks of all others that he is entitled to reverence. The hon. gentleman also charges me with consulting him in regard to some poetic composition. Well, perhaps that is true. I cannot vouch for the fact, I have my doubts about it, but I can promise the hon. gentleman that I will not do it again. I promise him that if he purposes to follow the trade of poetry I shall abandon it. I am willing that he should have the copyright. I think it is all that this Dominion can bear to have one such poet as my hon. friend. If I had as much ability as I may have ambition I might aspire in that direction. I will now assure my hon. friend—and I think I am guilty of no breach of confidence—that if the hon. gentleman wishes to persevere in that task in which he has been engaged, I will not interfere with that copyright. The hon. gentleman said that in the campaign of 1878 the country was carried because the cry of the Conservative party was "Canada for the Canadians." Sir, it was a very good cry. I think the hon. gentleman is under estimating the effect of that cry. Does he not recognize that the elections of 1878 were carried because he had taken the platform and gone up and down through the Province of Ontario? Does he not recognize the fact that the elections of Ontario were carried, not because the cry was "Canada for the Canadians," but because the hon. gentleman had written verses on the subject? I might give numerous illustrations of what the hon. gentleman wrote. The result of the election was not the ability of the present First Minister, neither was it the National Policy, neither was it the cry of "Canada for the Canadians," but because the hon. gentleman was able to circulate through the public prints of Canada those poetic effusions which so impressed the people as to decide them to vote for the party the hon. gentleman represented, illustrating again the old saying:

"Let me make the songs of a people and I care not who make their laws." When people are treated to such verses as this:

"Protection for our coal, protection for our oats, Protection from the ravages of those old Yankee bloats."

Who is there that would not feel that the fate of the country was at stake, and that the man who could write such poetry as that must have been led on by some divine enthusiasm to rescue this country from the quagmire of degradation and destitution into which it was fast sinking through the mismanagement of the Liberal party? I do not propose to follow my hon. friend any further on this line. Indeed, I think perhaps it was unnecessary for me to pay him so much attention. I can thank the hon. gentleman for anticipating me in the gentlemanly manner in which he did; I can thank him for taking notice of so ignoble and humble a member of the House as I am, once in a while—I esteem it a great condescension indeed. But let me say, seriously, that notwithstanding the stale rhetoric of the hon. member for Niagara, notwithstanding the buoyancy with which the hon. the Finance Minister brought down his Budget the other night, there are certain circumstances in the financial condition of this country worthy of our serious consideration. With our present heavy obligations, with the necessity of going at an early day into the English market as borrowers, with such a prospect before us it is our duty carefully and seriously to consider the present financial condition of this country. I do not, like the hon. member for Niagara appeared to do, look upon the national debt as a small affair. It is a serious affair for a young country like this, with our resources undeveloped, to be adding to that national debt from day to day. This was the view taken in 1877, when the debt of Canada was some $16,000,000 less than it is now, by the hon. Senator Macpherson, speaking in the Senate, when he used these words:

"I ask if this increase in the actual burdens in connection with the public debt is not a serious matter? I look upon it with alarm when I consider the unprofitable and useless objects for which the capital is being expended from day to day."

Sir, if it was alarming in 1877 when this speech was made it is surely more alarming at the present moment. There are two or three facts in connection with this indebtedness which must not be lost sight of. The first fact is, that our debt at the present moment amounts to $156,942,471, an increase of 100 per cent. since Confederation, 14 years ago, next June, when we had a debt of $75,728,641. Our present debt represents $39.23 for every man, woman, and child in the Dominion of Canada. And with our present obligations, within the next year the debt of Canada will represent $50 per head. More than that, our present indebtedness represents a mortgage of $9 on every acre of improved land in the Dominion, a mortgage of $900 on every 100 acre farm of improved land. Or, to put the case in another form, it represents $4 an acre on every acre of land in the possession of citizens of the Dominion, or $400 on every 100 acres of land improved and unimproved, averaging them. That is a serious matter. Let the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) go into the rural districts, among those mobs of settlers to which he refers, and let him tell the farmers that, through the intervention of the great Conservative party of this country, our indebtedness has increased 100 per cent. in fourteen years, and there is at the present moment on their 100 acre farm, mortgages which must be redeemed at some time, or the interest on which must be paid, and what will they say? They will say it is a serious matter; it is serious to the taxpayer, it is serious to this Legislature. And it is serious in another aspect. That debt represent a fixed charge on the revenue. We pay annual interest on our national debt to the amount of $7,773,868, or an average of $1.94, or nearly $2 per head. That is not all. For besides our interest account, we have a fixed charge for subsidies, a fixed charge as interest, so long as Confederation lasts. Taking interest and charges for subsidies, the people have to contribute, in order to meet fixed charges, the sum of $2.63 per head. This is a serious matter, and it is even more serious when we compare it with the position of our neighbors to the south. The debt of the United States is considered a serious matter, but it only represents $35 per head as against our $39. Their debt is on the decline, our debt is on the increase. The interest charge of the United States represents $1.41 per head; our interest charge and charge for subsidies together amount to $2.62 per head. Now, serious as this indebtedness is, and serious as those obligations are, we might look upon them with complacency, if we felt assured that the tax-paying resources of the people were equal to the emergency. The Minister of Finance rather boastfully spoke of the tax producing power of his Tariff. It requires no ability to invent a Tariff that is tax producing; the hon. gentleman has invented a Tariff which is certainly tax producing. But what concerns me is not the tax producing capacity of the hon. gentleman's Tariff, but the tax producing ability of the consumers. If every workingman feels to-day that on every dollar he consumes for the necessities of his family, twenty cents must go to the public exchequer, does he not feel himself burthened? Every working man thus spends on the necessities of life eighty cents out of every dollar, 20 cents going towards the revenue. Just fancy the situation. A workingman at $1.00 per day, earns, taking 313 working days in the year, $313. He expends that sum on the necessities of life, and I desire the House to notice that the necessities as well as the luxuries are taxed, and more heavily taxed in many instances. How does he divide the money? That money must be spent for the maintenance of his family; but before the family's wants can be satisfied, $62.60 must go where? Into the public exchequer, leaving him the balance of $250.40, for the maintenance of his family. This is a serious matter, and although it may be one of the good points of this Tariff, that it is a revenue producing one, yet it is a serious matter, in the face of our heavy obligations, in the face of our increasing indebtedness, in the face of the large fixed charges now resting on the Dominion. Face to face with that fact, we have the other astonishing fact that this Government, instead of endeavoring to relieve the tax payers of this country from a heavy annual expenditure, are going on increasing the expenditure. The hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb), with his usual bravado, challenged us to investigate the public expenditure, and to show whether that public expenditure was at fault. I will accept his challenge, and I think I shall be able to satisfy even the hon. gentleman that the expenditure is unjustifiable. What is the record of the Conservative party in respect to the public expenditure? Let me give a point or two from the balance sheet of the last Public Accounts. I find that, from 1867 to 1873-74 they increased the annual charges for interest and subsidies by $2,285,508; they increased the ordinary or controllable expenditure in the same time by $4,693,778; and they increased the total annual expenditure by the enormous sum of $9,832,829. The hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) justifies that expenditure, and charges the Liberal Administration with extravagance. What did we do? In the few years we occupied the Treasury benches we reduced the controllable expenditure by the sum of $1,781,566; and that, notwithstanding the fact that we had to borrow large sums to meet the obligations imposed on us by the previous administration; notwithstanding the fact that, to meet the interest charged for the borrowing of that sum, we had to expend $1,324,447 more than our predecessors, we were able to show at the close of our career only an increase of $186,841 in the total annual expenditure of the Dominion.

Why, is not that a satisfactory record? Whereas hon. gentlemen opposite added $10,000,000 to the expenditure in their six or seven years of office, the Liberal party, extravagant as it was said to be, were able to manage public affairs, discharge the obligations which hon. gentlemen opposite had incurred, meet the increased expenditure for interest, amounting to nearly $1,500,000, and yet retire from office having increased the whole expenditure only $186,000. And what has it been since? Why, these hon. gentlemen seem to have scarcely warmed their seats and yet we have $724,985 added to the charge for interest alone. In these two short years they have added to the controllable expenditure $421,342, whereas the Liberal Government were able to reduce the controllable expenditure by $1,781,566. They have done more than that. While we in four years added only $186,000 to the total annual expenditure of the Dominion of Canada, hon. gentlemen opposite, whose cause the hon. member for Niagara champions with so much enthusiasm, added in two years $1,346,476. These are facts which I mention at the present moment, not to point out the extravagant tendencies of the Government, but to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the serious, or as the Hon. Mr. Macpherson put it in 1877, to the alarming character of our financial position; and if this will not arrest hon. gentlemen in their career of extravagance, I know not what will. The hon. member for Niagara said he was prepared to justify every expenditure of his friends during the last two years. I will give him an item or two of that expenditure. With regard to the first item that occurs in the Public Accounts, that of civil government, we found that when the Liberal Government assumed office in 1873 the departmental salaries amounted to $548,498. We were burdened with large additions to the Civil Service made just previous to the retirement of the previous Administration. During the four years the Liberal party occupied the Treasury benches, the charges for departmental salaries were reduced to $545,528. But no sooner had hon. gentlemen opposite resumed office than this expenditure began to rise again. In 1878-79 it rose to $566,301, and in 1879-80 to $613,160, an increase of $67,632 in two years. Will the hon. member for Niagara justify that expenditure? Take the whole expenditure for civil government and the following facts are disclosed: when the Liberal Government assumed office in 1873-74, it amounted to $909,265; during their four years of office that was reduced to $823,369, a reduction of $85,896. Since the advent of the hon. gentleman opposite to the Treasury benches, that expenditure has gone on until it has reached the enormous sum of $898,605, and the Minister of Finance, whose ideas of economy seem to me to be some what peculiar, has brought down an estimate asking this House to vote $960,368 for this service for next year, or an increase of over $137,000 over and above the largest sum required by the Liberal Administration. I call the attention of the hon. gentleman opposite to that alarming fact.

Mr. JONES. We have got the money.

Mr. ROSS. Yes; they have got the money out of the consumers, out of the taxpayers, out of the laboring men, whose particular friends they professed to be; those who consume flour, bread and coal, and who have to deprive themselves perhaps of some of the necessaries of life in order that these hon. gentlemen might gratify themselves by putting their friends in office. A return brought down last year shows that from the 13th of February, 1879, to the 3rd of February, 1880, 554 new appointments were made by hon. gentlemen opposite, and that after deducting those who were deceased, those who were transferred to other offices, and those whose services were dispensed with, 313 of these appointments were new appointments, and will the hon. member for Niagara justify that? Has it come to this that hon. gentlemen sitting behind the treasury benches are prepared to throw challenges across the House and say: "No matter what the extravagances of their leaders may be, no matter how heavy the burden may be upon the taxpayers, no matter how large a surplus the Minister of Finance may have to spend, these expenditures will go on increasing regardless of the interest of the taxpayers of the country." In the management of the next department, that of the administration of justice, we were charged with extravagance. Well Sir, what do we find? We find that in 1878 the expenditure in that department was $564,920, while last year it was $574,311, or an increase of $9,390, and the Minister of Finance is asking for next year $599,430, or an increase of $34,510 over and above the largest amount expended by the Liberal Administration. Does the hon. member for Niagara justify that expenditure as being in the interest of the public? Then I come to the item of Immigration; and you will recollect that during the administration of the Liberal party there was nothing for which they were more severely censured than for their expenditure on immigration. We were told that it was not in the interest of this country to encourage immigration. We were told that there were large numbers of people in this country without employment, and that it was no time to encourage people from other countries to come and settle amongst us. But no sooner had hon. gentlemen opposite taken their seats on the Treasury Benches than they began to increase the expenditure in immigration. In our last year it amounted to $180,961, last year it had run up to $183,204. And that is not all. While they have increased the expenditure on immigration, the results have not equalled those of the previous year. In 1879, 40,492 immigrants landed on our shores; in 1880, 38,505 landed, showing an increased expenditure with diminished results. That is not all. While bewailing the misfortunes of our people unable to find employment, while bewailing the large number who were daily leaving Canada, they assured the people that if they were only once back on the Treasury benches the exodus would cease. Yet, since they have assumed office, the exodus has gone on with increasing rapidity. I will just give one illustration of the enormity of that exodus. In the public prints some time ago appeared a report of what Mr. Taylor, who was the means of bringing large parties of emigrants from Ottawa to Manitoba and the North-West, said. He told us that out of a total of 4,638 emigrants whom he conveyed to the North-West in 1880, only 886 went to Manitoba, while 385 went to Dakota, 331 to Illinois, 1779 to Michigan, 36 to Iowa, 43 to Nebraska, 87 to California, 12 to Colorado, 28 to Montana, 113 to Ohio, and 17 to Kansas. Thus, out of a total of 4,638, our North-West Provinces only got 886. This fact ought to induce hon. gentlemen opposite to reconsider the charges they made against the Liberal party. If the hon. member for Niagara were only entrusted by some of the Ministers to the delicate duty of withdrawing, from his place in the House, the charges made by him and by others against the Liberals because of the expatriation of our people, he would confer, in so doing, an honor on his party and render his country a signal service. Now, we come to another item in regard to which serious charges were made against hon. gentlemen on this side—the item of superannuation. We were told that we were superannuating officers with the view of making places for our friends, and that the expenditure for superannuation was increasing very rapidly. Perhaps it did increase too rapidly, but the hon. gentlemen who blamed us have not diminished that expenditure themselves. During our last year we expended $106,588; hon. gentlemen opposite, last year, expended $127,792 on this item, an increase of $21,204. If to that you add the amount expended for unforeseen expenditure, you will find that the actual increase last year amounted to $29,549 on superannuation. Will the hon. member for Niagara justify that expenditure? The hon. gentleman whom he professes to represent to-day, said in his speech in the House in 1878: "No age entitles a man to superannuation, while the Government requires his services and wishes to retain them, for the age placed in the Act is merely nominal; and thousands of the most intelligent and intellectual men in the country are sixty years of age." The charge brought against the late Government by the hon. Minister of Railways in 1877-78, was that they passed a Superannuation Act in order to provide for their followers, and that charge was based entirely on the fact that we had increased the expenditure under that head. Taking up the line of argument of the hon. gentleman whom the hon. member for Niagara represents, am I not justified in saying that the increased expenditure under the head of superannuation is unjustifiable, and made with the view of getting rid of gentlemen in order to fill their places by supporters of the Government? On looking over the superannuation list, we find that 69 of the gentlemen superannuated are under 60 years of age, that several of them are under 40, and we find, further, that 49 of them have had ten years added to their time of service. We find that although the Superannuation Act has only been in force for ten years, 355 gentlemen are now drawing their share of this $127,600. We have had since the Act came into force $800,857, and have received from the civil revenue $435,531, leaving a balance of $365,325 to be contributed out of the public revenue, or an average of $36,000 per annum. This is a serious matter. I agree that it may be in the interest of the country to provide for the superannuation of those rendered incapable from age or illness of rendering further service to their country, but the power to superannuate is one that ought to be exercised judiciously and honestly; and although I am not prepared to say now that hon. gentlemen opposite have not exercised that power honestly and fairly, I contend that hon. gentlemen opposite should be extremely careful before taking any more money out of the public revenue for the purpose of increasing superannuation expenses. I come next to the Militia Department, a department to which the hon. member for Niagara referred, and by his mode of referring to the expenditure of that department it would appear that he blamed us for reducing its expenditure by $500,000. I know of no other department in the public service that would better bear reduction. From no other do the people get less value. There is no interest in this country that needs an expenditure of $600,000 or $700,000 annually for the maintenance of a militia force. We are at peace with all the world; we have no prospect of immediate war. There is no necessity why we should keep up a force which is merely a nominal one, which is neither drilled or disciplined so as to be effective. What has been done by the United States? They have disbanded their forces until the number has been reduced to 25,000 men. If the United States, having such large interests and such extensive commercial relations as they have, can defend themselves with 25,000 men, surely the Dominion can defend herself with less, and at the expenditure of a smaller amount of money than we are now expending. In 1878 the late Government was blamed for expending the large sum of $618,136 on the militia service. Hon. gentlemen opposite spent last year $690,018 or an increase of $72,000, and I see by the Estimates for this year that they are asking for $748,100, or an increase of $129,946. I would not be disposed to begrudge that money if I believed it was wisely expended. We have the expenditure something like the following: For the maintenance of the civil branch of the Militia Department, $43,396 expended; for maintenance of "A" and "B" Batteries a very large sum; and out of the total of $690,000 taken last year, only $159,227 went into the pockets of the volunteers. Now, what do we keep up a Militia Department for? Evidently to drill our young men in the military service. Yet, here we are going to spend $750,000 next year—we did spend $690,000 last year—and less than one-fourth, or a little over 20 per cent. of that amount actually went to the purpose for which it could be alone effectively spent, and we are pursuing a similar policy this year. The present system is cumbrous, and if the present Minister of Militia can see some way of reducing that expenditure, he will not only confer a great boon on the taxpayers, but a great boon upon the volunteers themselves. Last year, forsooth, they were called out for nine days drill, and paid for only six days drill. Under the late regime, the volunteers were paid their expenses coming and going, and if they remained in camp over Sunday they were paid as well. But last year they were not paid for coming to and going from camp, nor for the stay over Sunday. They must be brought down, and put on the smallest pittance of 50 cents a day, and receive only six days pay for nine days work. And why? That the gigantic military machinery may be kept running, a machinery not effective for its purpose. If it is going to be effective, it can only be made so by the drilling of our young men. I admit it is effective so far as the maintenance of our Military College is concerned. I approve most heartily of that establishment, and of the proposition of the late Minister of Militia to endeavor to drill the young men in our high schools and collegiate institutions. I believe that was a step in the right direction. But every dollar we spend hereafter in this department, unless expended with the view of securing better equipment and drill for our volunteers, is a dollar wasted, and I, for one, will call hon. gentlemen opposite to account for that expenditure. I have said the machinery is cumbrous, and, I shall show it is. In the first place, we have a Minister of Militia, who is not paid more than he ought to be, I suppose, $7,000 a year; then there is a Deputy Minister, who gets like the other Deputy Ministers, $3,200 a year. Next comes a Major General, who receives $4,000, and an Aide-de-Camp, $1,000. I do not begrudge the Major-General the salary, but I disapprove of the policy of inviting a gentleman from England or any other country to act as a Major General over the forces of Canada. I disapproved of that policy under the late Administration and I disapprove of it now. I believe we have men better acquainted with the spirit and genius of the people of this country, and who could devise a cheaper and more effective system of drill than could be devised by any gentleman trained in English military schools, where everything is done regardless of cost. Then we have an Adjutant-General, at $3,200, I believe a very valuable officer, and 12 Districts Deputy Adjutant-Generals at $1,700 each, and nine Brigade-Majors—you see how the steps go down—receiving for travelling expenses and other allowances, last year, various sums from $1,160 to $3,000, odd. You have a regular gradation in the Minister of Militia, the Deputy Minister, the Major-General, his Aide-de-Camp; then the Adjutant-General, the Deputy Adjutant-General, and the subordinate officers. In this branch of the department alone the country expended, last year, $56,201, and for drill instruction only $42,575, or less than we spent on the maintenance of the departmental staff in Ottawa. Is not this expending money in the wrong direction? I am aware the system has prevailed for many years. But I am taking this opportunity, while not blaming the Government for the present system, to express my grievance that the Militia system of Canada is ineffective so far as the expenditure of money is concerned. I believe the volunteers are enthusiastic and loyal; but if there is any efficiency in the service, it is maintained, not by a judicious expenditure, but through the loyalty and enthusiasm of those volunteers, who receive only 20 per cent. of the whole expenditure on the Militia service. I now come to the item of miscellaneous, which is somewhat miscellaneous, exhibiting an undoubted increase under that head also. For the last year of the late Government it reached $81,167, but last year rose to $183,718. The estimate for this year is a little less. I might mention, in justice to hon. gentlemen opposite, that a large portion of the expenditure last year under the head of miscellaneous, was made up of the large grant to the sufferers in Ireland and of that to the people of Hull, grants amounting to considerably more than the increase under this item. Besides these there are, however, a number of peculiar items; for instance, the firm of O'Connor & Hogg, for professional services, got $16; Senator Fabre, for visiting France in connection with the Tariff, $1,000; for a number of books purchased from Lovell, written on the administration of Lord Dufferin—and a very unfair historical narrative it is—$96; I find the Hon. J. J. C. Abbott, for ninety-eight days' services in England, in connection with the Letellier matter, received $1,960; paid to Messrs. Langevin and Abbott, for expenses to England, including those ninety-eight days, $3,680; to W. H. Fraser and others, for assisting in incubating the National Policy, $2,136. I come now to the next item, which is the most alarming of all, for it is assuming the form of a fixed charge upon our revenue—namely, the expenditure upon the Indians which, in the last year of the late Government, amounted to $421,508. Last year it reached $694,572. There is a supplementary estimate of $212,281, making an increase of 100 per cent. on the Indians as compared with the expenditure of the late Administration. The present Government excuse that outlay on the ground that starvation prevailed in the North-West among the Indians. I doubt if that accounts for all this increase, however, I think the Department of the Interior to which the Indians belong, is allowed to run itself, if I may use a common expression. I have no doubt that, unknown to the head of the department, there is more extravagance and fraud in Indian affairs than prevail in all the other departments put together, and that is saying a great deal. In looking over the expenditure on the Indians, I see enormous or significant items at least. Under the head of supplies to the Indians, the following prices may be picked up at random: in some cases the purveyors to the Indians paid $2 a bushel for peas; $2.50 for corn; $2.50 for wheat in the North-West, where it can be bought ordinarily at 60 cents a bushel; $2.50 for barley. Then we have $227 a month for herding cattle, 25 cents a pound for sugar, 12 cents a pound for beef, 25 cents a pound for nails, $50 a barrel for pork, $1 a pound for tea, $1 a pound for tobacco, $80 a thousand for lumber, and $12 a ton for hay in a country where hay is indigenous and grows very freely. These figures are taken at random, and they are not the only significant figures contained in the report under the same heading. Now, hon. gentlemen will endeavor to cover these figures under the plea that the starving Indians were the cause of this increased expenditure. I venture to say that if they properly attended to the furnishing of the supplies for the Indians of the North-West, they could cut down that expenditure nearly $200,000. We were blamed because our supplies were bought from Americans, and that a chance was not given to Canadians to furnish them; but if you look at the Public Accounts, I believe you will find that these same Americans are still furnishing these supplies by way of St. Paul and other places, and that some of the instances there given have reference to supplies so furnished. I come now to the next heading—that is the expenditure of the department presided over by my genial friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bowell). You will remember how that hon. gentleman, from nearly the same place that I now occupy, told the Liberal party in 1878 that they were grossly extravagant. I will not charge him with extravagance. I might even, if I were disposed to do so, pay him the compliment, though in the strictest confidence, of saying that I believe he administers his department well; but I have to say also that its expenditure is increasing, and that is the very charge that he brought against us. I find that the expenditure of that department for 1878 was $714,527; last year it was $716,126, and now the hon. gentleman asks for $732,119. No doubt he will be prepared to justify that increase; perhaps it is justifiable; it seems very reasonable and very little fault can be found with it. But one circumstance is worthy of notice. You will remember that the statement was made in the fly-sheets of the late Opposition that the expenditure at the port of Montreal was rapidly increasing, while the revenue was declining, and I believe that was the case. But it was further stated that the old Government were engaging men by the day for the purpose of influencing the electors of that city. You will find it stated in a speech of the Minister of Railways in 1878, that the only reason why the Minister of Customs of that day expended $18,000 in daily wages, in 1877, in the city of Montreal was for the purpose of getting political power over these people in order to compass the defeat of the present member for Cardwell (Mr. White). If I were disposed to indulge in innuendoes, I might say that the hon. Minister of Customs expended, not $18,000, but $27,699, in the payment of daily wages, only for the purpose of keeping the three gentlemen who represent the city of Montreal in their seats. I do not, say so. I have no reason to think that such was the case, but I do say that I have as much reason for saying so as hon. gentlemen opposite had for making such insinuations in 1878. Let us look at the next department, that of Excise; and in speaking of it I will quote what Senator Macpherson said of it in 1877:
Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

"It is incredible that the necessities of the service call for so large an increase in the expenditure."

Now, in 1878 the expenditure of that department for the collection of excise amounted to only $215,024, and that was the expenditure which Senator Macpherson could not understand was called for by the necessities of the public service. I wonder if the hon. Senator can understand why the interests of the department now call for an expenditure of $219,284. It is remarkable that the expenditure for the Excise department is increasing while the revenue is largely reduced. That was the charge which was brought against the late Government with regard to the expenditure for Customs. We were told that, because our receipts from Customs were diminishing, we should reduce the expenditure. Here we have a case exactly in point, for the revenue from excise has largely diminished last year, while the expenditure is increasing rapidly. In Ontario the revenue from excise fell off last year $400,160, while the expenses of collection increased $2,414. In Quebec the revenue fell off $334,307, and the expenditure increased $1,479. In Nova Scotia the revenue increased two per cent., while the cost of collecting it increased 12 per cent. The total revenue from excise fell off $626,244, while the expenditure increased $4,259, and hon. gentlemen are asking for next year the sum of $271,856, or an increase of $56,832 over the extravagant expenditure of the Liberal Administration. I put this on the same grounds as hon. gentlemen put their argument with regard to the Customs Department in 1877. If they asked us to reduce the expenditure under that head because the revenue was decreasing, certainly we are justified in asking them to reduce the expenditure under the head of excise when we find that the revenue under that head is also decreasing. Next let us look at the Weights and Measures—one of the most vexatious subjects of discussion in this House. Under the so-called extravagant management of the Liberal Administration this service cost $96,484 in 1878, and we collected $30,034. In 1880 the same service cost $60,566, and this Government-only collected $15,372; or in other words, under the Liberal Administration it cost $3 to collect a single dollar of revenue under the Act, while under the careful and judicious management of the present Government it costs $4 to collect a single dollar of revenue. Let us look now at the Post Office Department, which was, for a long time, under the management of the present Minister of Public Works. I find there has been a large increase in the expenditure of that department. The estimated expenditure for the current year is $218,562 more than the amount expended in 1877-8, and it is remarkable to notice where the expenditure occurs. I am free to admit that it is in the interest of the public to extend the postal service with the expanding civilization of this country. It is natural and reasonable to expect an increase in the expenditure of this Department. But you will notice that the increase is not in providing accommodation for the public as much as it is in paying liberally those who serve the Government in this particular. Notice that the increase in the expenditure for the conveyance of mails was only $20,765, whereas the increase in salaries amounted to $145,873. I would be willing even to advance the salaries of Postmasters, were it absolutely necessary. I am willing to admit a necessary increase in that department, but that increase in salaries is more than seven times as great as the increased expenditure for conveyance, and it is for that reason, I find fault and ask the attention of the Post Office Department to this matter. Now I come to the Department of Public Works. We were told in 1877 that the Public Works of this country were badly managed, indeed that they were extravagantly managed. Let us look at two or three points in connection with the management of Public Works. I find that the revenue from the Canals in 1878 exceeded the expenditure by $31,252, whereas in 1880 the expenses exceeded the revenue by $22,863. I ask the attention of the Minister of Public Works to that fact. Going into details I find that the revenue from the Welland Canal has fallen off, since 1873, $52,782, whereas the expenditure has increased $12,267. On the Chambly Canal the revenue fell off $1,623, and the expenses increased $8,005; or, putting it as I put it before, while the revenue in 1878 exceeded the expenses by $31,252, in 1880 the expenses exceeded the revenue by $22,823. The same is true of slides and booms in the same Department. Since 1878 the revenue decreased $38,374, and the expenditure increased $10,999. In all, the Public Works, leaving out railways, I find that the revenue decreased $6,164, and the expenses increased $44,094. Now, Sir, you will permit me to make a few remarks in regard to the Intercolonial Railway expenditure. I regret that the Minister of Railways is not here; however, his absence is no excuse for my not referring to matters contained in the report laid upon the Table. You will remember the boast that was made in this House, that under the management of the present Minister of Railways the expenditure on the Intercolonial was being reduced very rapidly; in fact, it was said the revenue would very soon be equal to, if not in excess of the expenditure. That boast was made by the Minister of Railways himself in his speech delivered at London during the Christmas holidays. That boast would be a worthy one if it were justified by the statements contained in his own report laid upon the Table of the House a short time ago. Let me notice how that apparent reduction in expenditure is made. I challenge the most rigid analysis of the statement I now make. You will find by his own report that in 1877-78, when the hon. member for Lambton retired from the management of that department, there were on hand $345,422 worth of stores. At the present moment that account is reduced to $163,889; that is to say, instead of keeping up the supplies for ordinary railway purposes as he found them, the Minister of Railways has been drawing upon the supplies of his predecessor to the extent of $181,533. Now, in order to estimate the respective expenditures under the two heads it will be necessary for us to add that amount to the expenditure last year, for that amount has actually been drawn from the amount that stood to the credit of the Intercolonial when the present Minister of Railways took charge. You will also notice in the report that in 1878 the late Minister of Railways expended $192,778 for fastenings, new sidings, and rails laid upon the road during that year. Last year the Minister of Railways only expended $7,962 on steel rails. The hon. gentleman takes credit for the reduced expenditure; the true credit which he should take would be the difference between the amount required for steel rails in 1880 and the amount expended in 1878. In order to keep the road in a proper condition the late Minister of Railways spent $31,056 for sleepers and ties; in 1880 the present Minister spent $18,695, in that way effecting a saving of $12,361. Again, the late Minister expended in 1877-78 on repairs, snow sheds and fences, $37,752, while the present Minister expended last year $27,367. Now, if you turn to the report of the Minister of Railways you will find that in 1880 the total expenditure on the Intercolonial is put at $1,603,429, to which must be added $379,195 saved from the necessary expenditure incurred by the late Minister. So that, taking that as a basis of calculation, what do we find? Instead of there being a deficit last year, which was put by the Minister of Railways in his report at $97,131, the only honest deficit that can be given is $486,326, or a greater deficit than that which existed under the late Minister of Railways in 1878, when it was $432,325. The conclusion of that argument is, that because the wants of the Intercolonial did not require the expenditure of $180,000 for steel rails, because the Minister of Railways drew $180,000 on the stores, which was like drawing on the rest of a bank account, because he spent less money in the maintenance of the road, having found it in such a good condition of repair that he required to spend less money, he was able to give us all these reductions and show an expenditure such as I have already named. If he wishes to compare his actual reasonable expenditure on the Intercolonial with the fair and honest expenditure of the late Minister of Railways, he will find that his deficit in 1880 was $54,000 greater than the deficit of the late Minister. I come now to discuss another branch of this subject. The Finance Minister and the member for Niagara were very loud in their boasts of the beneficial effect of the National Policy. It would almost appear from their remarks that they credited the National Policy with all the prosperity which this country enjoys. Following up the same line of argument, the hon. gentlemen might claim credit for the prosperity in the United States, in Great Britain, in France or in Germany. Is the Finance Minister prepared to show that the prosperity which this country enjoys is due to the National Policy? Had we no depression previous to 1872-73, and did not the country rise from that depression to a much higher degree of prosperity, without a National Policy, than it enjoys at the present moment? Was not the depression in the United States just as serious, and perhaps even more serious than the depression in Canada? Did a National Policy change the condition of affairs there? Was not the depression in England very serious? Were not thousands of operatives crying for bread; were not the iron furnaces extinguished for several months; were not all the industries of England depressed? And yet without any National Policy the trade of England revived. Sir, it is an idle boast for hon. gentlemen opposite to claim that the prosperity which prevails in this country is due to the National Policy. A stimulus may have been imparted to certain branches of industry because of the high Tariff. We always admitted that a high Tariff might stimulate certain branches of industry. We admit that still, but the hon. Minister of Finance must admit with me that the present prosperity of this country is not due to the National Policy, but to the bountiful harvests of the last two or three years. Sir, this is a fact which is undeniable. Does not the hon. gentleman know that the harvest of 1877 was a poor one indeed, that our supplies of food even were not equal to the necessities of our people. According to the report of Mr. Patterson, Secretary of the Montreal Board of Trade, I find we were short, in 1877, of wheat and flour supplies to the extent of 2,363,000 bushels. This difference in 1877 was a serious thing for a country like this; but since then we have had bountiful harvests and we have exported largely, last year of wheat alone, 7,000,000 bushels. Now, the moment you admit the fact, that the exports of agricultural products have so largely increased, that the exports of animals and their products have largely increased, and when in that connection you consider that the mainstay of the industrial prosperity of this country is its agricultural prosperity, you can come to no other conclusion than that the prosperity of Canada is due to the bountiful harvests and not to the National Policy. There may be other circumstances subsidiary. For instance, there has been a revival of trade in the United States; there was a large demand for our bread-stuffs in England, consequent on the poor harvest there last year, the effect of which was high prices. There was also the revival of trade elsewhere in Europe. The effect of that revival was felt by the Dominion, and as we had produce to send them and the markets were good, money became plentiful and cheap and prosperity began. The hon. Minister of Finance must not forget, for instance, this fact, that we exported in 1880, $4,500,000 more of agricultural products than in 1878, and that there was also an increase in the exports of products of the forest. The hon. gentleman must not forget the fact, which he must know, that our industries, being dependent upon the prosperity of those industries I have named, will know no prosperity, except as they and the whole country are prosperous. I can tell the hon. gentleman that if there is a poor harvest this year, if we have to buy our grain in the American market or wherever we can get it, neither the National Policy nor fifty National Policies could rescue this country from hard times and depression. If disaster should overtake the agricultural interests so as to destroy our crops, the effect would be depression and financial disaster. Sir, the trade of the United States revived almost contemporaneously with our own. Let me give the House this fact, that in 1878 the United States exported only $680,683,000 worth of produce. Last year they exported $835,793,000, showing their industries had revived also, and on account of the intimate commercial relations between Canada and United States, the trade of the Dominion was affected. Then the business failures of this country have declined. Why? Just because the depression had passed away as a natural consequence. Look at the enormous failures in 1877, 1878 and 1879. In 1877 the liabilities of our insolvents amounted to over $25,000,000, in 1878 to $23,000,000, in 1879 to over $29,000,000, whereas in 1880 the value was a trifle less than $8,000,000, thus showing that in the natural order of events the trade of the country was assuming a proper basis, was becoming more firmly established; and when to those circumstances you add bountiful harvests in 1878, 1879 and 1880, you complete the sum total of the financial prosperity of this country. Then the Finance Minister claims it is of great advantage that the balance of trade is now apparently in our favor. There is no more fallacious reasoning than that of endeavoring to deduce prosperity from a favorable balance of trade. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Trade Returns of this country, he will find the following facts. If he will take the years 1872, 1873 and 1874, during which the trade of Canada was exceedingly prosperous, he will find there was a balance of trade against us of $105,873,000. If he will take the years, 1876, 1877, and

Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

1878, during which our commerce was depressed and our business at a standstill, the balance of trade against us was only $49,454,600. According to the reasoning of the Finance Minister, then, we would be prosperous when not prosperous, and business would be depressed when everything was buoyant. The same applied to the United States. Take the year 1878, when the failures in the United States amounted to several hundreds of millions of dollars—yes, to over $200,000,000—the balance of trade in favor of the United States that year was $257,786,000. Last year the balance of trade in favor of the United States was $100,000,000 less; and yet who will say the United States were more prosperous in 1878 than in 1880. Look at the commercial prosperity of England. Why, the simple fact that the balance of trade against England is £177,000,000, while her factories are busy, her ships sailing every sea, when every industry is active and trade buoyant, would leave us according to the reasoning of the hon. Finance Minister, to look not for prosperity, but for depression. Take the case of France. In the three or four years following the Franco-Prussian war, what do we find when industries were depressed, when destitution and famine prevailed in certain portions of that unfortunate country? The balance of trade invariably in favor of France. But when prosperous times came, when the nation relieved themselves of their liability to Germany, what do we find? In 1876, the balance of trade was £16,500,000 against France; in 1877, £11,000,000; and in 1878, when she was much more prosperous than in 1872 or 1873, the balance of trade against her was £44,000,000. The hon. Minister of Finance will prove nothing by an argument based upon the balance of trade; and the hon. gentleman who has had such long and intimate connection with the financial affairs of this country, should not have pinned his faith to such fallacious reasoning. The hon. member for Niagara this afternoon showed that Belgium, for instance, last year, imported $280,000,000 worth and exported $214,000,000 worth, making a balance of trade against her of $66,000,000, and yet Belgium was selected by the hon. gentleman as an instance of industrial and commercial prosperity. If the Finance Minister will look over the Statesman's Year Book in the Library, he will find that Spain, Turkey, Austria, Russia and Egypt have a balance of trade in their favor, while Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, Norway and France have a balance of trade against them. I prefer to attach my faith to the theory of the balance of trade as illustrated by Great Britain and France and other countries that are prosperous, rather than that we should try to reduce our imports, so as to have the balance of trade in our favor. The hon. Finance Minister, in his financial speech, attempted to show that this Tariff, of which he and his friends boast so much, does not discriminate against Great Britain. We brought that charge against the Tariff in 1879, and I repeat it now. I say this Tariff does discriminate against Great Britain. I am not putting the matter on the ground of loyalty, I am merely stating the fact, and I will give the hon. gentleman the benefit of my information on the point. In 1878, before the change, the average tariff on dutiable goods from Great Britain was 19.58, and from the United States 23.34, a difference of 2.76. Has the hon. gentleman maintained that difference? Not at all; the tariffs are now as near as may be alike. In 1880 the average tariff on goods imported from Great Britain was 24.03 and from the United States 23.06, a difference of .74; or, comparing our present Tariff with that of 1878, there is an increase of 4.45 per cent. on goods imported from Great Britain, and only .74 on those imported from the United States. That discrimination is all the more pronounced when we apply it to certain articles. Take the following articles, for instance, and let us compare the average duty paid last year on the imports from Great Britain, as compared with that paid on those from the United States:

Articles Imported.	From United States.	From Great Britain.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
Books.....	14½	12½
Cottons (bleached or unbleached), sheeting, drills and ducks.....	30	25½
Guighams, plaids, eyed, &c.....	36½	30
Jeans, denims, drillings and shirtings.....	33½	29½
Blankets.....	41½	33½
Cassimeres.....	31½	26½
Ordinary Flannels.....	30	29

I call the attention of the Finance Minister to these facts in proof of our contention that, wisely or unwisely, the Tariff is so peculiarly framed that instead of encouraging importations from the Mother Country it discourages them by a discriminating duty averaging at least four per cent. We were told, when this National Policy was introduced, that it would preserve the Canadian market for Canadian manufacturers. Everybody knows that the cry went up from far and near that Canada was being made a slaughter market for American manufactures. Has the case been very materially altered? Is not Canada a slaughter market to-day for American manufactures as it was in 1878?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. ROSS. I will show hon. gentlemen that it is. If you deduct provisions, cattle, grain, corn, and other breadstuffs from the importations, the balance will be manufactured goods, will it not? Deducting these from the entire imports of 1878, we have a balance of $41,287,274 representing the manufactured goods which were imported for the purpose of being slaughtered in the Canadian markets. Applying precisely the same rule to last year, we find that we imported then from the United States nearly a million dollars more than we did in 1878 to be slaughtered, as it is said, in this country. I am not objecting to slaughtered goods from the United States, but hon. gentlemen who framed this Tariff to prevent the importation of American manufactured goods will find on every page of the Trade and Navigation Returns the Tariff has failed in that respect. In some instances we do not import so much perhaps, but in other instances we import more than we did in 1879. Of books, we imported in 1880, $877,761 worth, as against $990,112 in 1878; of brass manufactures we imported in 1878, $108,000 worth, and in 1880, $224,000 worth; and yet we hear not a word from hon. gentlemen opposite that these importations of brass are interfering with our brass workers in Canada. In 1878 we imported $85,429 worth of carriages, and, in 1880, $137,379 worth. Our carriage makers were told that the duty was so low that American carriages were coming in and driving the Canadian manufacturer to the wall. The importation of carriages has increased 50 per cent. under the present Tariff, which we were told was going to keep Canada for the Canadians, to prevent Canada from being made a slaughter market, and build up all our industries. In 1878 we imported $32,197 worth of copper manufactured; in 1880 we imported to the value of $125,191, an increase of nearly 400 per cent. Of cottons, on which the duty has been increased by this Government, we imported in 1880 $7,835,164 worth against $7,370,222 worth in 1878, thus showing, no matter how the cotton industry may have revived under this Tariff or the improvement in the financial prosperity of the country, that our Canadian market is not protected against importation on that account. Of flax, and goods manufactured from it, we imported in 1880 $1,124,548 worth against $977,853 worth in 1878, showing a very large increase. I might take up other items of a similar kind and I would find similar results. Paper and its manufactures was imported in 1878 to the value of $573,834, and in 1880, $804,934. Although in some particular instances we have not imported foreign manufactures in 1880 as largely as we did in 1878, yet taking the total of our imports of foreign manufactures for 1880, it will be found that the amount of foreign goods placed in the Canadian market, whether slaughtered or otherwise, will be equal to the importations of 1878, so that, so far as preserving Canada for the Canadians and protecting the Canadian market from being made a slaughter market for foreign manufactures, we have no protection at all. I do not complain of this. It is not the policy of the party I support to complain of it. We are willing to buy our manufactures, so far as it is consistent with our own interest, in that market where we can get them cheapest and of the best quality. I am merely pointing out this fact as an instance of the utter failure of the National Policy to preserve our Canadian market to the Canadians. We were told that the National Policy would so foster our Canadian manufactures that we would be able to supply the markets of the world, that under protection the trade of the United States had rapidly increased, that their cottons went to Manchester and that we would find American cutlery in Birmingham and Leeds, underselling English goods in the English markets. We were told that the development of our manufacturing industry would be so great that all the world would come to Canada to buy her manufactured goods. What has been the result? The hon. member for South Brant the other night proved that so far from fostering the manufacturing industries of this country in the matter of export, the National Policy had materially depressed our manufacturing industry. In 1878 we exported manufactured goods to the value of $1,127,755, and in 1880, to the value of $3,242,617. If you deduct scrap iron, as the hon. member for Brant said, and one or two items that can scarcely be called manufactures, you will find that we exported of our manufactured goods from Canada less by $1,000,000 than we did in 1878 before the National Policy was inaugurated. I call the attention of the hon. Finance Minister to this as a signal instance of the failure of the National Policy, in so increasing our Canadian manufactures, and in producing them so cheaply that we could take them into the markets of the world and undersell foreign manufacturers. Then we were told, that the effect of the National Policy would be to revive the industries of the country. Let us look at one or two of these industries that were to be particularly benefitted. We were told it was going to materially improve the mining industry of the country. Take the Province of Nova Scotia, and what do we find? In 1878 Nova Scotia exported of the produce of her mines to the extent of $470,729, and in 1880, only to the value of $458,853, shewing a decline. In New Brunswick there was a slight increase. In British Columbia there was a decrease of about $90,000. In Ontario there was an increase; but will the hon. gentleman claim that as due to the National Policy? Was it not due to the fact that large quantities of our Canadian ore was taken out at Madoc and elsewhere and not manufactured in Canada, but sent to Cleveland and Buffalo to be smelted? On every page of our trade and manufacturing returns you will find that the National Policy has not fostered the manufacturing industry. The exports of Quebec manufactures amounted in 1880 to $1,272,405 against $1,689,720 in 1878, or a reduction of nearly half a million of dollars. Nova Scotia, in 1878, exported manufactured goods to the extent of $556,537, and in 1880, $401,032, a decrease of $150,000. New Brunswick exported in 1878, $181,211 worth of manufactures, and in 1880, $311,470 worth, a large decrease. The decline on the whole amount, is about $1,000,000. With regard to the fisheries we find a similar result. New Brunswick, for instance, in 1878, exported $800,000 of the products of the sea, and in 1880, $631,000 worth. The exports from Prince Edward Island, in 1880, amounted to $349,787, and in 1880 to $293,913. Those facts prove the utter helplessness of the National Policy to fulfil the purpose for which it was intended. One of the other great boons that the National Policy was to confer on Canada was that not only would it revive our industries, but it would give us a home market for the produce of our farmers. This was a particularly strong argument used in the rural districts. The farmers were told that they exported so many bushels of wheat, so many bushels of oats and barley, so much butter and cheese, so much of the small farm produce. Place us in power, said these great men, the Liberal-Conservatives, and all this produce will find a ready market at home. The hon. Minister of Railways said at London during the campaign of 1878: "Gentlemen you have to send your produce to Liverpool. Who pays the cost of transit? The producer. Put us in power and we will build up the manufacturing industries—create consequently a home market where you will get better prices for your produce than you now do." Has the National Policy benefitted us in this respect? In 1878 we exported 7,267,000 bushels of barley, and in 1880, 7,239,000; in 1878 we exported 2,340,000 bushels of oats, and in 1880, 4,717,000. Instead, therefore, of getting a home market it would seem that we had to find a foreign market for twice as much produce in 1880 as was required in 1878. We exported about 1,500,000 bushels of peas, about 500,000 more bushels of wheat, about 70,000 more bushels of flour; and, following throughout the whole of the agricultural products of this country, we find we had to export in 1880 about $4,000,000 worth more of our agricultural products than in 1878. If a home market was provided as promised, those exports would not take place. That, at least, was the reasoning of hon. gentlemen opposite and their line of argument, adopted, to prevail upon the agriculturists of this country to support their policy, and which carried them into power. I use them to-day in the light of these facts from the trade and navigation returns. Do they not see a failure of this policy to provide a home market for the produce of the farmer? In 1879 we exported 14,179 horses, and in 1880, 21,393. The home market was not, then, sufficient as regards this item. In 1878 we had to find a foreign market for 29,925 head of cattle. Yet the farmers were told that, with the National Policy in force, a home market for them would be found. In 1880 we exported 54,944 horned cattle. In 1878 we exported 242,989 sheep, and in 1880, 398,746. In 1878, poultry, $67,448 worth, and in 1880, $141,034 worth; and of articles for which a home market was to be particularly provided, such as butter, we exported largely: butter, in 1878, 13,006,628 lbs.; in 1880, 18,535,362 lbs.; of cheese, 1878, 38,054,294 lbs., and in 1880, 40,368,678 lbs.; meats, 13,380,176 lbs., in 1878, and in 1880, 12,983,721 lbs. So in this respect, whether you take farm products, animals and their products, the products of the dairy, or anything that comes under the category of agricultural products, the National Policy has proved a failure. It fails to provide a home market, fails to get better prices—at least the Finance Minister admitted, though with some hesitancy, that he supposed the farmers got a better price for wheat at certain seasons, but he doubted whether the Tariff raised the price generally. He said he supposed the farmers got a better price for their oats, perhaps two or three cents a bushel, but the consumers paid ten cents per barrel more for their flour. That admission, taken with the facts I have cited, is all that is necessary to prove the utter failure of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite to provide a home market for the farmers, such as they promised in 1878. There is another very important item which I must refer to, on which a great deal has been said—I refer to wool. We were told, for instance, that there was a duty of 12½ cents on Canadian wool shipped to the United States, and it was argued by the supporters of the present Government, that if the Conservative party obtained power, that would be regulated; the argument being put in such a form as to lead the farmer to suppose he would get an increased price, by 12½ cents, on his wool. But what do we find? In 1878, we imported 6,230,084 lbs. of American wool; that was the competition the Canadian farmer had to contend against as compared with the foreign producer, and that competition was not reduced in 1880, but was increased. In 1880 we imported 7,870,118 lbs., the competition in this respect being against the Canadian farmer. Why, if the Finance Minister designed to keep the Canadian market for wool for the Canadian farmer, did he not put such a duty on foreign wool as to compel our manufacturers to consume all the Canadian wool? In a certain form, last Session, he professed to put three cents a pound on certain wool coming into the country, but he took good care to impose it on wools not produced in the country. I told him then he would not reap a single farthing of income from that duty, and he did not. So that duty is a delusion and a snare, calculated to mislead, though probably imposed with an honest intention. In 1878 we had to find a market for 2,445,893 lbs. of Canadian wool, and hon. gentlemen opposite all said that was a great calamity, and that the wool should be consumed by our own manufacturers. Put us into power, they said, and we shall find a home market for it. Well, they got into power, and the Canadian farmers who restored them to office had to find, in 1880, a foreign market for 3,619,181 lbs. of wool, or about 50 per cent. more than in 1878. They were told, also, that they would get a better price for their wool than in 1878, when no duty was imposed. But in 1878 the farmers sold wool, when no National Policy existed, for 29½ cents per lb.; but in 1880, there was a great reduction, the farmer having to accept a trifle less than 25 cents. Could anything prove more conclusively that the Government policy in this particular, at least, has been a lamentable failure? The Finance Minister told us in his Budget Speech of 1879 that he would so arrange the Tariff as to assist, very materially, the coal industry of the country. I was curious, therefore, to inquire as to the accuracy of his calculation in this respect. He said on that occasion:

"In dealing with this matter, the Government had to consider what, in their judgment, would give barely the market of the Dominion to the coal deposits of Nova Scotia, because they are principally there. We know that, upon this subject, there has been some conflict of opinion; but the judgment of the Government is that, while the average import of coal into the Dominion of Canada during the last few years has been from 800,000 or 900,000 tons, and while the anthracite coal will continue to be largely imported, the Nova Scotia coal will take the place of a part of it. In the estimates of the Government, out of the 800,000 or 900,000 tons now imported, probably there will still be 350,000 tons of anthracite, and perhaps 150,000 tons of bituminous still imported, giving to the Nova Scotia coal the balance of 400,000 tons, with, of course, an additional output, if, as we expect, our policy is successful, in consequence of an increased demand for coal to supply the growing manufactures of the country."

The calculation of the hon. gentleman was that the imports of coal would be reduced by 400,000 tons, and that, by the operation of the duty of 50 cents a ton, Nova Scotia coal would take the place of the foreign to that extent. What are the facts? We imported, in 1878, 894,856 tons, and in 1880, 977,493; so that the import of coal has not been reduced by the Tariff of the hon. gentleman. I fail to find where the United States coal has driven a single ton of foreign coal from the Canadian market. Let us apply this all round and see the results. I take, for instance, Ontario first: it imported, in 1878, 593,725 tons, and in 1880, 667,164 tons, a very large increase. In 1878, Quebec imported 256,752 tons, and in 1880, 261,416, an increase also. Nova Scotia herself imported 10,592 tons in 1878, and 12,519 in 1880, so that the Tariff does not even keep foreign coal out of Nova Scotia. Now, the hon. gentleman will say that the Tariff has increased the exports of coal from Nova Scotia—that it has enabled the producers of that Province to dispose of a great quantity of their home production to foreign markets. But the facts do not justify such a position. In 1878 Nova Scotia exported 140,210 tons of coal, while under the Tariff of hon. gentlemen opposite she exported in 1880 only 132,796 tons. If the Tariff was to benefit anybody, or be of service to any part of the Dominion, it surely would have done something for Nova Scotia; while the fact is that Nova Scotia imported more coal last year than in 1878, and exported less, and I say that no more satisfactory proof of the failure of the Tariff could be found anywhere. The only increase which has taken place on the exports of coal from the Dominion was from the Province of British Columbia, and I do not suppose that the hon. gentleman will claim that that increase was due to the National Policy. Take the item of salt. I remember how the member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) waxed eloquent on this subject, how strongly he urged that a duty should be placed on salt so that Canadians might have their own market; and I am informed that his agitation of that subject materially affected his election. In 1878 we exported 789,599 bushels of Canadian salt, and in 1880 we exported only 492,467, or only about one-half of that exported before the National Policy was put into operation, and in addition to that our imports have largely increased. This Tariff was to give Canada for the Canadians, and give us our home market; but we find that while in 1878 we imported a little over 3,000,000 bushels of salt, in 1880 we imported 3,793,600 bushels. But there was one industry which those hon. gentlemen took especially under their charge. The Finance Minister and the Minister of Railways claimed that of all the industries in the country the shipping industry was the one which should be carefully protected, and we would naturally expect that under the policy they inaugurated the shipping industry at least would be materially benefitted. But such is not the case. I find that Quebec in 1878 built 14 ships, while in 1880 she built only 5. Nova Scotia in 1878 built 47 ships, while in 1880 she built only 26. New Brunswick, 12 in 1878, and 10 in 1880. British Columbia, 1 in 1878, and none in 1880. Prince Edward Island, 36 in 1878, and only 17 in 1880. Let us take the results by the tonnage. The tonnage of the shipping built in Quebec, in 1878, was 13,911 tons; in 1880, 3,563. Nova Scotia, 17,536; in 1880, 2,555. New Brunswick, 6,034 in 1878, and 3,281 in 1880. British Columbia, 799 in 1878, while in 1880 the industry had utterly perished in that Province. Prince Edward Island built 8,049 tons in 1878, and 5,098 tons in 1880. The total value of the shipping built in Canada in 1878 was $1,577,244, and in 1880 it was only $464,327, or a trifle over one-fourth. While I shall not go into the details of some other matters which I had intended to offer for the consideration of hon. gentlemen opposite, there is one particular point brought out in the financial statement of the Finance Minister to which I wish to refer. The hon. gentleman proposes to bonus a line of steamers for the purpose of developing the trade with France. Now Sir, I think the system of bonuses which is about to be inaugurated by the hon. gentlemen opposite, is an unmixed evil, though perhaps a necessary concomitant of the wrong and obnoxious fiscal policy which they have introduced. If we take the example of other countries which have largely developed their trade, we will find that they resorted to no such system. Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot point to a single instance in which the British Government bonused a line of steamers to develop a trade; but, on the contrary, the policy of that country has been to allow trade to follow its natural channels. But what has the hon. gentleman done? He has fixed a tariff of 41 per cent. on the goods which we import from France, and then, in order to revive the trade which he has destroyed by his enormous Tariff, he offers a bonus to a line of steamers to ply between France and the Dominion. It seems to me, that the rational course for the hon. gentleman to pursue—if he would accept the advice of so humble a member of the Opposition as myself—would be to reduce the duties and thus offer inducements to the people of France to send their goods to this country, which are now shut out by an almost prohibitory tariff. The whole trade of France with Canada is not a very large item; it only amounts to a trifle over two millions. Our exports to that country last year were only $812,829; the imports at that rate would be a trifle over a million—a total of $1,928,075—or in other words, about the one hundred and fiftieth part of the entire trade of Canada. Now, look at the absurdity of the proposition made by the hon. gentleman to tax the people of this country by $50,000 a year for a trade of such small dimensions as that, when, on the other hand, he shuts out that trade by a prohibitory tariff of 41 per cent. We have heard a great deal about this trade with France. I think we sent Sir A. T. Galt on an expedition to France and Spain for the purpose of cultivating close commercial relations with these two countries. It was said that he would be able to negotiate such a treaty with France as would enable us to send our shipping to the ports of that country upon the same terms as that of other nations; but we heard nothing more about it until the Budget came down, and then it was in the shape of a proposition to form a line of steamers to the tune of $50,000 a year. Is this the result of the travels of Sir A. T. Galt and his private secretary, Mr. Barnard, for the purpose of creating better commercial relations with France? But the hon. gentleman intends proceeding further with his system of bonusing, for he intends, he says, to grant a subsidy to a line of steamers for the purpose of developing a special line of industry in his own Province—that is, the cattle trade. Now, speaking for my friends in Ontario, I am free to say that any advance made out of the revenues of this country, that is fair to our Province, for the purpose of developing any special industries of his Province, would be heartily supported. However, there is something invidious in bonusing a line of steamers to run alternately from St. John and Halifax to Liverpool for the special purpose of fostering the cattle trade of the Maritime Provinces. I fear I may be charged with speaking from a sectional standpoint, but is it fair to the great cattle industry of the Province of Ontario that they should have to send their cattle to Quebec and pay the regular freight to Liverpool, while they are met in St. John and Halifax by a line of steamers heavily bonused, and consequently giving lower freights to those who send their cattle by that line? From the city of London, near my constituency, we have to send cattle to Quebec, a distance of 633 miles. Supposing cattle were shipped from St. John to Quebec, the distance would be only 588 miles. As it is now, the people of the Province of New Brunswick can ship their cattle from St. John to Quebec and have a shorter distance than we have from London, and we send a large number of cattle from Middlesex without any bonus. Halifax is only 680 miles from Quebec, and Windsor is 753 miles from Quebec, or further than Halifax by 50 miles. Let me ask the Minister of Finance, is he treating this large industry in Ontario fairly in bonusing a line of steamers from St. John and Halifax to Liverpool for the benefit of that industry in the Lower Provinces, without considering for one moment a line of steamers for the benefit of the Ontario farmers? This is another form of the obnoxious Tariff. Injure an industry by certain obnoxious regulations, and then stimulate it on the other hand by a bonus—a sedative and a stimulant alternately in order to preserve an equilibrium. If the hon. gentleman would serve our cattle industry, let him relieve our farmers from the obnoxious duty imposed upon them by this policy. Let him take the duty off American corn which enters largely into the fattening of our Canadian cattle, and we will not ask any bonus for a line of steamers from the city of Quebec. We are prepared to go to the markets of Europe and compete with all the world for our fair share of the cattle industry. There are two features in the Budget that are exceedingly important. The first is the fact that our national debt is increasing rapidly; and secondly, the standing charges upon the revenue of this country, instead of being judiciously pruned and cut down, are being increased. Hon. gentlemen opposite cheered the Minister of Finance when he said that after expending $26,500,000 for public purposes he would have $1,500,000 of a surplus. I am not prepared to cheer such a statement. I believe a deficit is a serious thing politically and financially, but a surplus is not an unmixed good. Instead of applauding the Finance Minister because he has a surplus, the honorable gentleman should look upon that as a serious matter for their party. When they had a surplus from 1867 to 1873 they were led on in a career of extravagance by which heavy burdens were imposed upon this country, and large public works undertaken which are not paying running expenses. When the late Government found there was a deficit they reduced the expenditure, but now we are under a new regime, and immediately that we have a surplus, instead of reducing the taxation, what are honorable gentlemen opposite doing? Carried away with the infatuation of a bouyant exchequer, they are rushing again into increase expenditure. Mark you, it is an easy thing to increase the expenditure, but it is a difficult thing to reduce it, as hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House know well. Then let me mention another serious matter, and that is, that while we have a tariff, as honorable gentlemen opposite say, calculated to foster the industries of this country, they should be careful not to attach themselves too strongly to their tariff, because it is a serious imposition upon the laboring classes of this community. A tariff that taxes our fuel and our food, that takes 20 per cent. out of the earnings of every working man of the Dominion of Canada, is a serious tax upon the productive industry of this country. It is not such a tariff as a young country like Canada requires. Hon. gentlemen need not point to the British Colonies in New South Wales as a parallel instance of a heavily burdened community. The only basis upon which a comparison can be made between Canada and any other country, is the ability of our people to meet the demands which the Tariff may make upon them. To tell every citizen of this country that of all his earnings the Government must have $5 to carry on the expenditure of this country, to tell an average family of five persons that the Government must have $25 of their earnings, is a serious matter for the laboring man, and may yet become a serious matter for hon. gentleman opposite themselves. We undertook this tariff in emulation of American institutions; why we undertook it is more than I can understand. Now the first conception of the tariff was as a means for securing political advantage; and when that political advantage was secured we copied the American tariff. I, as a member of the liberal party, was not satisfied with that tariff when it was first introduced, and I am not satisfied with it yet. I admit readily that under the present circumstances the tariff has succeeded in producing revenue. The revenue required is so great that the tariff must be a very high one, but the tariff this country requires is one that, while producing the necessary revenue, does not tax the necessaries of life, and does not compel the consumer of dutiable goods to pay more than a proper margin of profit for the same as manufactured in our own country. One thing is certain, hon. gentlemen opposite will not be able, at the present rate of expenditure, to reduce this tariff, nor can the Liberal party reduce it to any great extent from the simple fact that the necessities of the country are so great. All I can see that can be done now in regulating the fiscal policy of this country, is such a judicious re-adjustment of the Tariff as will give us the necessary revenue without unduly pressing upon the laboring classes of the community. It is obvious to every impartial mind that those who can pay taxes must pay taxes in Canada for all time to come. It is apparent to the most superficial observer, that with our fast increasing debt and expenditure, we must be heavily burdened, and that instead of Canada being a cheap country to live in, as it once was, Canada will become a dear country to live in; and instead of our being able to show the English immigrant that he can live here more cheaply and enjoy more immunities from taxation than in his own land, we shall have to confess that he will have to pay more taxes, and enjoy fewer privileges. This must weaken our advantages in opening up this country and developing its resources. I can only say that I trust hon. gentlemen opposite will pause in their career of increasing expenditure, and that they will as soon as possible relieve the industrial classes of this country from every unnecessary duty and from all charges that are not indispensably necessary in the interests of the country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to follow the hon. gentleman in his introductory remarks. I am quite satisfied that when he comes to read the report of that portion of his speech which had the hon. member for Niagara as its subject, he will himself regret very much what he has said. But, Sir, on the general question which the hon. gentleman has discussed, I desire to offer a few remarks. I agree with the hon. gentleman, that a national debt is not a small matter, and that we ought not to underestimate its importance; but I think hon. gentlemen in this House, and the public outside will agree with me when I say that a national debt in itself is a less evil than the perpetual disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to exaggerate that debt, and to make unfair comparisons of it with the debts of other countries. The hon. gentleman has told us—evidently with the object of exciting the alarm of the people of this country—that the national debt has doubled since Confederation. He has told us that the debt to-day is $156,000,000, whereas at the time of the Confederation of the Provinces it was only $75,000,000. Well, Sir, if the hon. gentleman had stated to this House and the country that we have assets to show for that increase; assets which are worth to our country directly and indirectly far more than the increase of the debt, he would at least have been doing an act of simple justice to his country. What is the fact? Of the increase in the debt during that time nearly $45,000,000 is due to the Intercolonial Railway. Apart from the question as to whether that railway is making any return to us for the capital invested in it, apart also from the question as to whether it is altogether paying its running expenses, I venture to say that there is no one who fairly appreciates the interests of this country who will not admit that in the development of the country, in the improvement of the districts through which the railway passes, in the advancement of the trade of the country, and in all those incidental advantages which an important line of communication of that kind gives to the country, that expenditure has well repaid the people of Canada. Of that increase, about $17,000,000 was expended on the Pacific Railway. Hon. gentlemen opposite are at least responsible for that expenditure. It was made in accordance with their policy, and not in accordance particularly with the policy of gentlemen on this side of the House. It was an expenditure absolutely essential to the development of this country, and which, in its effects on the interests of this country, will return us infinitely more than the mere interest upon that $17,000,000. Then upwards of $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 of that increase was simply a transference of the burden, and I am not going to discuss that question, on which I believe there is some difference of opinion among gentlemen on the other side of the House—from the Province to the Dominion, and is, therefore, so far as the people are concerned, not an increase of burden at all, but simply a transference from one account to another account. There is another portion of the debt which, I admit, is a serious portion, and that is about $7,000,000 of deficits, which hon. gentlemen opposite had while in office. That is an addition to the debt which we have reason deeply to regret. When the debt of this country goes on increasing in consequence of the expenditure being in excess of the revenue year after year, then I think everyone will admit that we are on the downward path, and that for the extent of the increase of the debt caused by that fact, we have serious reason for alarm. But happily the day for that kind of debt is past, and instead of having eras of deficit, we are entering, I trust, on eras of substantial surpluses. What is the record of the two parties in that respect? About $10,000,000 of revenue in excess of the expenditure was expended on public works in this country on capital account by the Conservative party when they were in power before. When hon. gentlemen opposite came in, instead of money being expended out of the revenue on capital account, we had year after year a system of deficits, which hon. gentlemen could only justify or explain by declaring that if you took away the sinking fund from the public debt—a payment which we were bound to make to the public creditor out of the public revenues—after all, the deficit was not a very large one. But the hon. gentleman followed a course which I am sorry to see is followed too often by hon. gentlemen who think with him, namely, that of comparing our debt with that of the United States, and telling us of the great burden that debt was on the people of the United States, suggesting, rather than boldly stating, that the conditions of this country are as bad as those of the United States. Will the hon. gentlemen tell me that a debt expended in works of public improvement, of material development, works calculated to promote the commercial and industrial wealth of the country—is to be compared with a debt caused by war, entailing the destruction of property and not the enhancement of its value, destitution and not prosperity. If this debt of the United States, of which hon. gentlemen are so proud of speaking, had been all incurred in works of material development, as the debt of this country has been incurred, I venture to say the people of the United States, prosperous as they are to-day, would be in a vastly different position from what they are. It is, therefore, no fair statement of the case to compare a debt for every dollar of which we have material assets to show, with a debt incurred, as the United States debt unfortunately was, in consequence of a great war which lasted four years in that country. But the hon. gentleman might also have told this House and the country that although the bald statement that the debt to-day is $156,000,000, whereas at Confederation it was only about $75,000,000, may be true, it does not represent fairly the liability of the people of this country. He should at least have told them that whereas in 1867 we were paying an average interest of 5.55 per cent., to-day we are paying an average interest of 4.15 per cent., or one-tenth per cent. less than we were paying then, a very material fact in estimating the burden of our debt, which is the question we are now dealing with. The hon. gentleman, not satisfied with telling us that our debt is so serious a matter as to be a cause of great alarm to the people, and a great burden on them, told us that the taxes imposed were very serious, and he drew a picture of a head of a family, a laboring man earning his dollar a day, or $320 a year, who as he sits down to his daily meal contemplates the fact that 20 per cent. of his earnings goes into the public treasury, or $60 a year. Did the honorable gentleman stop to consider what that would amount to in the aggregate? $300 a year is not certainly the average income of families in this country. Let us be thankful for that at any rate. But if it were, what would the tax amount to? It is not too much to say that there are 800,000 families in Canada, so that we should have a contribution on Customs alone, for it was to the Customs duties the hon. member referred, of $48,000,000 to the public Treasury, in order to meet the statement of the hon. gentleman, which was not made for a patriotic motive, for he told us in his concluding words that whoever was in office it would be almost impossible to reduce materially the taxation, and, therefore, he could not hold out any hope to this unfortunate head of a family earning $300 a year, that he would be able to get off with less payment if the hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side of the House. The statement was simply made to alarm every man who thinks of Canada as a place for settlement, and who, when he came to think of what would be his position in this new country might turn up the speech of the hon. member for West Middlesex and learn that after all when he came here 20 per cent. of his earnings would have to go into the public Treasury. He would naturally seek some other country where he believed so large a portion of his earnings would not be absorbed in taxes. When the hon. gentlemen dealt with the question of expenditure he told us that under a Conservative administration the expenditure in this country had increased from 1867 to 1874 not less than $9,000,000. Well, I am not going to analyse that statement as to the precise figures, let us say that it is $9,000,000. Was that a fair statement for the hon. gentleman to make? Did he not know that during those seven years we annexed Prince Edward Island, and purchased the North-West territory, and had to undertake the government of them; that we got in British Columbia and had to undertake the government of that province; that we increased the subsidies to the different Provinces and assumed debts which before were paid by the different Provinces. All of these are a fair and reasonable justification for that increase of debt, and if the hon. gentleman wants an authority to affirm the statement I have just made, I will refer him to the circular issued in England by the late Minister of Finance, in which he says, that every increase of expenditure was an increase made for the development of the country, in works of general utility, which would give an adequate return for the expenditure in the enhanced prosperity they would create. The hon. gentleman entered into a comparison of the expenditure of the late Government and the expenditure of this. I do not propose to deal at length with that question, because as the Estimates go through Committee we shall have explanations on every item, and there will be an abundant opportunity to discuss the principle or the policy of any increase that may have been made, or any charges that may have been imposed on the public Treasury. But what is the fact. In the first year in which hon. gentlemen opposite had complete control of the affairs of the country, that of 1874-5, they managed to spend for civil government $909,265.73. Last year the present extravagant Government, with all the accumulations of expenditure with which they have been charged, managed to get on with but $898,605.16. Then I find that the ordinary expenditure in 1874-5 was $7,868,696; in 1875-6 it was $8,569,774, and last year, with the enormous increase made by this extravagant Government, amounted to $6,963,852. That was the position on the general question of ordinary expenditure. On the ordinary expenditure of charges on revenue, I find, and I take these figures from the same statement which the hon. gentleman has quoted, that in 1875-6 they amounted to $4,796,238, in which was not included the Intercolonial Railway expenditure. In 1876-7 the charges on revenue amounted to $5,194,896; in 1877-8 they amounted to $5,301,124; last year this extravagant Government expended only $5,227,113. With regard to Public Works I find that the expenditure in connection with their management in 1876-7 amounted to $2,352,832; in 1877-8 to $2,471,437; and in 1880 to $2,329,626. That was the position under the extravagant Government for whose advantage lectures have been given by hon. gentlemen opposite in relation to the importance of economy. The hon. gentleman then came down to some details. He referred first to our Militia. He told us that the United States managed to get on with 25,000 men, and it was absurd we should have so large a Militia as we have. Did the hon. gentleman not know that those 25,000 men were 25,000 regular soldiers in the regular pay of the United States. Many of them, unfortunately for themselves and their country, are engaged in the western territory quelling Indian troubles and other difficulties; while we, in Canada, have of the same class of men only "A" and "B" Batteries, containing 240 men. Why did the hon. gentleman make such a statement to go to the country and the people outside of the country, and which would lead intending settlers to believe that we actually kept up a larger army than the great nation to the south of us. Why, Sir, he knows well enough, and in frankness ought to have stated it, that the 25,000 men of whom he speaks were 25,000 actual soldiers enlisted regularly in the service of the United States. But the hon. gentleman tells us he is very much opposed to the manner in which the Militia expenditure takes place. I am not sure I should not agree with him on some points, but surely when he comes to deal with this matter of the enormous proportion of the expenditure on the staff, he might at least have remembered that he and his friends are responsible for that kind of thing. Who was it that first brought in the system of brigade majors in this country. It is a remarkable fact, it was the Liberal Government of the late Sandfield Macdonald in 1863. Curiously enough they were appointed by that Government after the previous Conservative Government had been defeated on a Militia Bill proposing a different system. To whom are we indebted for the major-general? To the Government of the member for Lambton, before whose time we never heard of a major-general, with his aide-de-camp, to whom reference was made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross), as if, in this connection, some crime had been committed by hon. gentlemen on the Ministerial side. Then the whole system of an extensive staff—and I have always thought that the expenditure as compared with the expenditure on the volunteers has been too high—which the hon. gentlemen condemned, his own friends brought into being, and he himself supported them in that policy. One of the points made by the hon. gentleman was that there is an increase in the Estimates. Let us see what it is. I find there is a decrease in the salaries of the military branch, the district staff, of $1,700, and a decrease for the brigade majors salaries, transport, &c., $3,000; decrease on military schools and drill instructors in colleges of $3,000; decrease in the pay and maintenance of the guard at Rideau Hall, $5,000; decrease in the matter of district deputy adjutant-generals, $1,200, and as to allowances to them $500. These are reductions all in the direction in which the hon. gentleman says they should take place. I find that the only substantial increase in connection with the Militia estimate is for drill pay and all incidental expenses connected with the drill and training of the militia, nearly $75,000. So that the policy of this Government is precisely in the direction which the hon. gentlemen opposite has been advocating. They proposed to give more money for the drill of the men, more encouragement to the men who give their time in order to fit themselves, if occasion should require, for the service of their country, and less to the staff which he has been condemning. Perhaps at some future time, and I hope it is not very remote, we may be able still further to reduce the staff. I am bound to confess my agreement with the hon. gentleman that a major-general is altogether an unnecessary appendage to our Militia staff. No doubt if war broke out, the Militia of the country must be under an Imperial officer. But I do not think this office promotes the interests of the Militia, or adds to the good feeling of that body. I am speaking of the great mass of the Militia, not of the few officers who act as satellites round the major-general—in regard to whom I must say that I believe that they do not wish an Imperial officer with the grand sounding title of a major-general, with his aide-de-camp, who know nothing of the genius of the people of the country, or of the peculiarity of our Militia system, and who are apt to consider that the country is conferring a favor upon the Militia by permitting them to wear a uniform, instead of the Militia conferring a favor upon the country by wearing a uniform. Then the hon. gentleman dealt with the question of the Indians and their supplies. There is no doubt this is a very serious question for Canada. It is a very serious matter to have, in a territory so extensive and difficult of access as it has been in the past, roaming bands of Indians who may give trouble at any time. In the old times, when the North-West Territories were under the Hudson's Bay Company, periodical famine and difficulties were wont to occur. The policy of the Hudson's Bay Company, an absolute monopoly, with complete control of the fur trade, was to feed the Indians, and take from them security that, when the time for bringing in the furs came, they should be paid for their relief. The Government in some respects unfortunately have to undertake a similar work to-day. Now the Hudson's Bay Company have no longer a monopoly of the fur trade, free-traders being all over the country. In every place, when the treaty money is paid to the Indians—as I had an opportunity of seeing a couple of years ago when I was in the North-West—you have free-traders selling and dealing with the Indians in competition with the Hudson's Bay Company in regard to furs and other things. No longer does the system of tutelage between the Indians and the Hudson's Bay Company prevail. The Government having taken possession of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory have to see that no serious danger of any outbreak among the Indians exists. A single shot in anger by one of the large bands of Indians in that region would be a much more serious matter for the country than the feeding of a tribe for the whole winter, and that is the alternative we have to consider. It is a question of fight or feed, and it is very much cheaper to feed than to fight. But was it fair for the hon. gentleman to quote the prices of certain articles supplied the Indians of the North-West—of wheat for instance—to tell us the Government paid $2.50 per bushel for it when in the North-West it could be had for 60 cents? Does he seriously mean that wheat could be got in the North-West proper for 60 cents? The year before last, for instance, when wheat was 70 cents at Winnipeg, it was selling at $2 to $2.50 at Prince Albert, and $3 at Edmonton, 400 miles further west, and in this western country it is cheaper to give this high price to the farmers and settlers going into it, and who have been greatly advantaged by the market created by the purchase of these supplies, as an incident of their position. It is better to pay such prices than to buy the grain at 60 cents at Winnipeg and take it up by the Saskatchewan, or in Red River carts across the plains. So it is unfair in discussing this question to leave the impression that because wheat is quoted at Winnipeg at 70 cents, the Government have been paying $1.90 more for it for the Indians than it could be obtained for, because people are apt to confound Winnipeg with the whole North-West region. Then the hon. gentleman referred to the Post Office-expenditure, saying there was an enormous increase in the salaries of the Postmasters. Does he not know there has been an entire change in the method of transacting business? He had an opportunity of knowing it recently from a discussion in another place. Formerly the Postmaster deducted his fees, and the balance was transmitted, and was all that appeared in the accounts. Now he sends in a statement of his whole receipts, and the fees are charged as salaries.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The expenses would be two and a half millions, as you will see by the Auditor-General's Report.

Mr. WHITE. I do not quite catch the hon. gentleman's remark.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That has nothing to do with the actual expenditure estimated for. The point to which the hon. gentleman refers is fully explained in the Auditor-General's Report. He has nothing in his report of the expenditure he has heretofore defrayed out of receipts, and as I understand he repaid the Postmasters and they continued it. It certainly is no part of the Estimates now brought down.

Mr. WHITE. It increases the estimate certainly. It goes into the Public Accounts as a payment, whereas formerly it was not in the form of a payment. Under the present system it is charged as a salary and goes under the general heading of salaries.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. Minister knows better than that.

Mr. WHITE. The hon. gentleman need not be insolent. I do not know better than that.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman mistakes me. I said the hon. Minister of Finance knew better.

Mr. WHITE. Then you were insolent to the Minister; that is all.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. What I said was perfectly correct.

Mr. WHITE. The hon. gentleman should remember that during the last year there has been a very large number of new post-offices opened all through the North West Territory which involved an enormously increased expenditure, in comparison with the receipts. It is an essential feature of the settlement of that country if we are to settle it—that postal facilities shall be supplied to every part of the North-West, and we must incur the liability connected with these increased facilities. We are at this moment, with regard to that country, at that period of its history when our expenditures relating to our receipts are at the greatest; every year hereafter the balance will be larger in our favor, but in the meantime the fact is established that that large territory had to be opened for postal communication, and as a consequence a large increased expenditure must take place. Then the hon. gentleman told us, with regard to Railways, that the contention of the Minister of Railways, that he had reduced the working expenses, was not justified by the facts; and he told us that he arrived at that conclusion by taking the amount to the credit of stores in 1878 as compared with what it is to-day. The hon. gentleman ought to know that a large number of these things were practically lying idle, and that so far as the working of the railway was concerned, those things never entered into it as an element at all, until they were asked for by the railway and used in connection with the railway. The mere fact that in the storehouses there was a certain quantity of stores, in no way added to the ordinary annual charge in connection with the expenses of the railway. I will read a statement from an authority which hon. gentlemen will admit is certainly not partial to our side of the House, though I should be sorry to say it was not impartial. I mean the report of the Auditor-General. The income from the Intercolonial Railway, including the Prince Edward Island and Windsor Branch, in 1879, was $1,409,955.60; working expenses, $2,233,496; excess of expenses in that year, $813,540.74. In 1880, the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway were $1,506,298.45; Prince Edward Island Railway, $113,851.11; Canada Pacific Railway, $104,975.69; Windsor Branch $141,197. The working expenses were, for the Intercolonial, $1,603,429; Prince Edward Island Railway, $164,640; making an excess of expenses over earnings in 1880 on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, the other two not being included in the statement of 1879, of $147,920, as against $813,540 in 1879.

Mr. ROSS. That does not touch the items to which I referred.

Mr. WHITE. I have already dealt with them. I do not know that it is necessary to refer further to the remarks of the hon. gentleman with reference to the finances of the Dominion. As I have already stated, when we are in Committee of the Whole, and when the Estimates come to be discussed, I have no doubt that the Finance Minister and the other Ministers who have charge of the various Departments for which the estimates are taken, will be able to furnish us with abundant justification for the items of those estimates. In some respects they do show an increase, and, in the very nature of things, that will probably continue to be the case in this country. If those increases have relation to public works which will improve the country; if they relate to a policy or to enterprises which are calculated to develop the interests of the country, then, as a matter of fact, instead of being expenditures in the sense of burdens upon the people, they are expenditures in the sense of a wise and prudent provision for the advancement of the best interests of the country.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Will the hon. gentleman allow me, before he passes to another point, to read a short extract from the report of the Auditor-General regarding the Post Office expenditure?

"Total expenditure for 1880, $2,286,611.14, of which $1,518,271.05 was paid by cheques against letters of credit; the remaining $468,340.09 represents the salaries and allowances, etc., of the country postmasters, which are deducted by them from their collections—the net amount only being transmitted.

"H. A. WICKSTEED,
"Accountant."

Mr. WHITE. Precisely. I now propose to refer to some arguments which the hon. gentleman used with reference to the National Policy. First let me call attention to the fact that we have, happily for us and the country, a very different tune from the hon. gentleman opposite. Last year the whole burden of their song was that there was no increase in the prosperity of the country, that this National Policy had even retarded that prosperity, that while there was a great advance, a great reaction—

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. True still.

Mr. WHITE. I am glad to hear that hon. gentleman say "true still;" I hope his party will say true still; but I tell them that every word they utter in the sense indicating a determination to go back, or, as the hon. member for West Durham said the other night, to revert to the policy that formerly prevailed, is at any rate a word that we will not quarrel with on this side of the House. Last year they told us this policy was retarding the prosperity of the country, that we were not advancing as we ought to advance, and as, if their policy were in force, we would advance. This year they are compelled to admit that we are more prosperous; they are compelled to admit that there has been an advance in the well-being of the country. It is true they attribute it to a number of causes other than the National Policy, but the fact at any rate is admitted, and let us be thankful to them for it. It is nearly three years since we have been able to get from hon. gentlemen opposite an admission that this country was worth living in at all. But the hon. gentlemen have told us that this National Policy has not been a success, because on certain articles manufactured the export has decreased. We had a very elaborate statement the other day from the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), to the effect that on 35 articles of manufacture in Canada the export had decreased no less than $1,485,025. Well, Sir, I have taken some little trouble to examine into those particular items of export. I admit at once that there is some difficulty in arriving at anything like a comparison. I wish most sincerely that some one could devise some means by which the Trade Returns could be so classified that it would be possible to make exact comparisons in relation to any article manufactured or exported. However, as to a large number of these articles there is no great difficulty, and I have certain facts which I desire to lay before the House. As to the large decrease of exports, the Finance Minister disposed of about half of it in connection with the export of ships. I do not intend to refer to that at all, as I understood the hon. member for South Brant accepted the explanation of the Finance Minister, regretting only that he had not had an opportunity of hearing it before he made his statement. Then, outside of ships there is still, according to his statement, on these 35 articles, a decrease in exports of $751,207. Now let me take one or two articles in connection with that. Ready-made clothing was one of the articles to which he referred. Recollect that hon. gentlemen admit that this country is more prosperous than it was, and therefore I presume they will admit that people use as much clothing as they did formerly when the country was not so prosperous. Now, the decrease in the exports of ready-made clothing was to the value of $16,000, according to the statement of the hon. member for South Brant, and I accept his statement as being correct, without even a suggestion of verifying them from the Trade Returns. But in order to find out what has been the effect of the National Policy upon the clothing trade, the hon. gentleman should have stated that the Canadian clothiers, by the reduction of imports, have secured an enormous local market for their productions, which they had not before. In 1878, the imports of ready-made clothing into Canada were $898,013, while in 1880 the imports had decreased to $470,322, a difference of $427,691. Yet the hon. gentleman tells us that because the export has decreased $16,000 that trade has been ruined by the National Policy. Then, I take another article, that of hats and caps. According to his statement I find that the decrease, though not large, was sufficiently large to justify him in referring to it. He told us that the exports in 1878 were $572, and in 1880 $400, making a decrease of $172; and thereupon he drew the conclusion that our hat and cap trade in Canada had been greatly injured by the National Policy. If he had looked at the imports of that article as well, he would have found that while in 1878 we imported $719,406, in 1880 we imported $620,275, or a decrease of $99,171, against a decrease in the exports of $172. And yet the National Policy has ruined the hat trade. It may be taken for granted that people have not worn fewer hats, because it is said that the very first people who feel the return of prosperity are the hatters. When times are dull a man takes his old hat to the hatter's and gets it ironed over; but when times are good he buys a new one. We find this, that during last year we imported $99,171 less of hats and caps than in 1878, and to that extent at any rate the hatters kept the markets of the Dominion of Canada and supplied the local trade. Then, coming from the head to the feet, there was another item to which the hon.

gentleman referred—the article of boots and shoes. He grew somewhat pathetic over it, as this quotation from his speech will show:

"Then we come to boots and shoes, the item that created so much concern a few years ago, that item of which there was only $200,000 worth imported, while there was $17,000,000 worth made in the country during the late Administration—what has been the effect of the tariff introduced by those hon. gentlemen upon that industry? Why, in 1878, after supplying $17,000,000 or $20,000,000 worth to our own people, we were able to export to other countries $236,345 worth. But what have we been able to export during the past year? Only $163,147 worth, a decrease of $71,198, a decrease of nearly one-third in that item in 21 months. In two years more, at the same ratio of decrease, that item is wiped out altogether from the list of exports."

Mr. PATERSON, (Brant.) Wiped out as an article of export, having regard to the former part of my argument.

Mr. WHITE. If the hon. gentleman will look at the former part to which I referred, he said: "What has been the effect of the tariff introduced by the hon. gentleman upon that industry?" not upon the export.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes; the whole argument is that:

Mr. WHITE. The whole argument, the hon. gentleman is kind enough to admit, is that the industry has been affected injuriously by the National Policy. Now, what is the fact? The importation of boots and shoes between 1878 and 1880 decreased $138,442. That difference, at any rate, was supplied by the local manufacturers of boots and shoes of this country.

Mr. PATERSON. Would you give me the official figures.

Mr. WHITE. The imports in 1878 were $246,295; in 1880, $107,850; showing a decrease of $138,442. That, I say, was supplied, at any rate, by the manufacturers of this country. But there is another view of the subject which it is well worth looking at. The hon. gentleman referred to the decline in the exports of leather—sole and upper. In 1878, according to his statement—and I have taken his statements in all matters of exports—the exports of leather, sole and upper, amounted to the value of $563,221, while in 1880 it was $403,703, or a decrease of $159,518. Why should that have been cited as an evidence of injury done to the country? Leather, naturally, is raw material. As leather, until it is manufactured into something, practically it has no value. It is raw material, the raw material, principally, of boots and shoes. I find the increase—because the case is reversed in this matter—in the imports of leather, between 1878 to 1880, was no less than $208,672. Hon. gentlemen will tell me: "Here are the exports of leather decreasing, and the imports of leather largely increasing, so that the tanning interest is being destroyed by the National Policy." But there is another test that may be applied, and that is the test of hides. Hides, again, are the raw material of the tanner. If there has been a largely increased importation of hides, it is quite clear that we imported them for the purpose of having them tanned in Canada. What do we find? The increase in the importation of hides between those dates amounts to $315,122. So we have this remarkable fact, an increase of more than half a million dollars worth of hides required mainly for the tanneries, and an increase in the importation of leather, which is required mainly by our boot and shoe makers, of $209,000, making a total of over $750,000. Then we have, in addition, a decrease in the exports of leather of $159,518, which may also be added to the other amounts, showing that it may fairly be estimated that leather to the value of $1,000,000 was consumed in 1880 by the manufacturers of boots and shoes more than in 1878. This is an argument which cannot be confuted, and, therefore, instead of the decrease in the exports of boots and shoes, in view of the decrease also in the imports, affording ground for regret, it is proof that that industry has been greatly benefited by the National Policy. That is the inference, but there is no man who knows anything of what is going on who does not know that the facts bear out the inference. At Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, wherever large boot and shoe establishments are found, premises are being enlarged, new buildings are going up, a larger number of men are employed, the proprietors are more hopeful, more prosperous, making more money, and doing more business; everywhere there are indications that this special branch of industry has taken an enormous stride, and that it is chiefly due to the National Policy. There was another item to which the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) referred. Of ale, beer, and cider, he found we exported $13,331 worth less in 1880 than in 1878; but the hon. gentleman should have told the House that we imported $30,459 less than in 1878; so that those who regard the manufacture of ale, beer and cider as an undertaking to be encouraged will have the assurance that it has not been injured by the National Policy. Another article to which the hon. member for South Brant referred was that of tobacco. He found the decrease in exports for 1880 to be $35,711; but he should also have told the House that the decreased importations of manufactured tobacco reached $146,263, and anyone who knows anything of cigar and tobacco factories will admit, and I dare say it is within the hon. gentleman's cognizance, they are more prosperous to-day than in 1878. Taking the thirty-five articles which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, the decrease on which amounted to $1,485,025, and deducting from them the export of ships, the explanation of which was given by the Finance Minister; deducting leather, respecting which we have abundant proof that the decrease was not matter for regret, but for rejoicing, because the leather was manufactured in Canada, where there was a home market; deducting hemlock bark, which may fairly have been used in tanning the extra half million dollars worth of hides imported; deducting those articles, there was a decrease in the exports of 1880 as compared with 1878 amounting to $575,622. Yet what do we find? In five articles out of the thirty-five articles—clothing, hats and caps, boots and shoes, ale, beer and cider, and manufactures of tobacco—there is a decrease in importations of $842,026. So, in those few articles alone, the decrease in the importations is greater than the decrease in the whole exportations by the large sum of $266,404. I ask whether these facts do not abundantly answer the statement of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) that we have sorely injured this country by the National Policy, because as to certain articles of manufacture the export trade has been decreased. The hon. Minister of Finance, in his statement the other night, made the remark that the decrease in the exports might be a matter of advantage to the country, and hon. gentlemen opposite were disposed to sneer at that statement. The ex-Minister of Finance was especially emphatic in his sneer at that statement. He declared it was one which he could not for a moment understand; but if the hon. gentleman would only look at the matter he would admit this: that up to a certain point, if the manufactures of a country afford ample employment, factories running full time, all the capital invested fully employed, and yet we can find for all the products a market at home, the manufacturer is better off than if he had to send the products abroad. It is only after we have fully supplied the home market that the question of exportation becomes an important question. Then it is a matter of importance to enable the manufacturers to enlarge their sphere of operations, to increase their capital and premise; and in that sense it is a matter of exceedingly great importance. But at the start of manufactures—and we are only practically starting them in this country, and only now getting into a condition for the thorough development of our manufacturing industries—and until we have supplied the home market, the question of exportation does not enter at all into the question of the prosperity of these manufactures. In England the case is vastly different. There, the manufacturing industries are so fully developed that the home market will not begin to consume what the mills running on full time will supply, and therefore the test is to be found in the value of the exports. But in this country, until our manufactures are in a condition to supply fully our home market, the question of exports does not enter into the calculation.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Why do we export any manufactures at all if the home market is not supplied?

Mr. WHITE. If the hon. gentleman cannot answer his own question, I am sorry for it. I am not here to answer conundrums.

Mr. PATERSON. Will you please answer it. If we cannot supply our own market, why do we need to export? That is a conundrum.

Mr. WHITE. One of the troubles of hon. gentlemen opposite is this. One of the things that has got them into their difficulties with the people—and into difficulties with the people they have got—is, that they have been throwing such conundrums as this at the heads of the people. If you can manufacture and sell more cheaply in Canada under a 30 per cent. tariff than you could under a 10 per cent. tariff, what is the use of a 30 per cent. tariff? But the people have been learning by experience that under a 30 per cent. tariff the larger production enables them to sell at a less price than they could under a 10 per cent. tariff, if the article was manufactured outside. There is another question, and only one, to which I desire to refer, and that is a subject which has been discussed so frequently in this House and out of it, that I might almost be pardoned if I left it alone altogether. I refer to the question of the sugar duties, as an illustration of how the people of this country have been burdened by this Tariff. My hon. friend the Finance Minister, in his statement the other day, gave us the average prices of sugar in this country during the last year, and the price in New York, with the duties under the old Tariff and the charge of 35 cents per hundred added, and as a result he found that the price in Canada was about 25 cents a hundred, or one quarter of a cent a pound more on granulated sugar than it would be under the old Tariff, if his mode of calculation was good. In dealing with this question, so far as the price of this sugar is concerned, we are fortunately dealing with a question outside of the realm of speculation altogether, and can come down to a matter of mathematical proof. We had three years' experience without a refinery, when all the granulated sugar consumed in this country had to be imported, chiefly from the United States; and we are thereby enabled to learn, by comparing the prices in gold in bond, which prevailed during those three years in New York, which is the market from which comparisons are taken, with the prices obtained in this country, whether the proposition made by the hon. Finance Minister, regarding this particular industry, is a fair one or not. Now, in 1876, taking the price of sugar in New York, and adding the duty under, what I may call for convenience, the Cartwright Tariff, and the charge of 35 cents, the price should have been in this country $9.05. I am speaking of the average for the whole year, and that average has been obtained by taking the price on three days in each month, which hon. gentlemen must admit is a fair method. As a matter of fact the average price in Canada during that time was $9.50—45 cents a hundred, or nearly half a cent, a pound more than it should have been on the principle stated by the hon. Finance Minister. In 1877 the average price, by the same method, should have been $10.15; the actual average was $10.66—51 cents a hundred, or over one-half a cent a pound more than the consumer should have paid. In 1878, under the old Tariff, the average price ought to have been $8.89, whereas the actual average price was $9.33, a difference of 44 cents a hundred. The difference between the average price on this method and actual price during those three years, was no less than 46½ cents a hundred, or very nearly one-half a cent a pound. On the same method of calculation we have during the past year been paying one-fourth of a cent a pound more, not one-half; so that instead of our paying more in consequence of this industry being promoted in Canada, we have been paying one-quarter of a cent less, and that method of calculation, which cannot be gainsaid, but is open to enquiry by any hon. gentleman, is certainly as fair, in reference to the three years, when we had no refinery, as to the one year when we had refineries. There is another point with reference to that one-quarter of a cent. With the duty of 30 per cent. instead of 25 per cent. on sugars under No. 14, notwithstanding the advantage which is given to the refiner of a rebate on the duty on packages of direct importations, the duty just about makes up the one-quarter cent more which he has to pay. The percentage of duty paid on packages imported in 1880 was 46.49; on the same packages under the old Tariff it would have been 44.7. The difference amounts to about 2.42 per cent. between the actual payment and the payment under the old Tariff, and that is as nearly as possible the one-quarter cent extra referred to by the hon. Finance Minister. But one cannot look at this matter as a mere question of the price of sugar. It is not a question after all whether the people of this country get their sugar at a little higher or a little lower price in consequence of the establishment of a refinery at Montreal, at Moncton or at Halifax, and I am glad to know that there are going to be refineries in different parts of the country to compete with each other and give the advantages of that industry to different parts of the country; but a question as to the general interests of commerce as affected by this industry in Canada. I had the honor, two years ago, on the floor of this Chamber, of quoting, in relation to this sugar industry, the opinion of a leading free-trader of the United States, a gentleman whose opinions had been quoted very often by hon. gentlemen opposite, the Hon. David A. Wells. He took it out altogether of the ordinary list of articles upon which he deprecated protection; he held it was an article so exceptional in its character, and in the advantages which it offered to the country, that it ought to be dealt with differently, and ought to be protected. Now, what do we find? Take our West India trade. I find by the report of the Montreal Harbor Trust that the imports of sugar into that port in 1878 were 12,289,843 lbs.; in 1879 the imports were 64,375,656 lbs.; and in 1880 they reached 74,952,000 lbs. Will any hon. gentleman tell me that it was not to the advantage of this country that this large quantity of sugar should be carried in vessels from the West Indies to Canadian ports, rather than have the refined sugar imported into the country over American railroads. The arrivals of West Indian vessels in the port of Montreal were as follows: in 1875, 9 vessels, with a total of 3,689 tons; in 1876, 3 vessels, 553 tons; in 1877, 3 vessels, 655 tons; in 1878, 7 vessels, 1,216 tons; in 1879, 33 vessels, 16,587 tons; in 1880, 45 vessels, 17,617 tons. Will any hon. gentleman pretend to say that the trade of the Dominion has not been greatly benefitted by this large tonnage between the two countries. The hon. Finance Minister, referring to the expenditure made by refiners in Canada in the carrying on of their business, said that it benefitted the Dominion to an amount equivalent to the difference of duty between that received now and that received under the late Tariff.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I said it was more than the amount of the duty, but I see the report makes me say the former.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Mr. WHITE. Upwards of $300,000 have been expended by the two refineries of the city of Montreal, and the expenditure will be largely increased when the refineries in Halifax are in good working order. There is an extraordinary attempt to excite the feelings of the country against this particular feature of the Tariff. The hon. member for Centre Huron, in a speech which he made in Centre Huron last year, talked of 3½c. being added to the cost.

Mr. ANGLIN. He did not say that.

Mr. WHITE. I am going to read the hon. gentleman's explanation. The hon. gentleman need not be impatient. I do not propose to misstate his arguments in any way whatever. He stated that the Tariff added three and one-half cents a pound to the cost of the sugar to every consumer in Canada. There was not a gentleman who read that speech, even the hon. Finance Minister who read it and referred to it in Toronto, who did not take away the impression that the hon. gentleman intended to convey the idea that the policy of this Government had added three and one-half cents per pound to the cost of sugar. I would venture to say there was not a gentleman in that audience who did not come to that conclusion. If he did not mean that, what was the object of referring to the three and one-half cents at all? If he had a duty on sugar, which I will show you was in its practical operation on the consumer, more heavy than the present, why did he refer to the three and one-half cents unless for the purpose of exciting feeling against it? The hon. gentleman, the other night, explained his statement in this way:

"So in making his other statement that I had declared that each family in Canada had latterly to pay three cents per pound more for its sugar, surely the hon. gentleman, who had evidently that statement before him—because he declares in another part of his speech that I knew the total importation was about 116,000,000 lbs.—must have known that when I defined the loss as $1,177,000, it was quite impossible that that could represent more than one cent per lb. He appears to be unable to distinguish between these two simple propositions; that the loss to the people of Canada over and above the money that goes into the Treasury is one cent per lb., and that the duty fixed on the sugar consumed by the people of Canada is 3 cents to 3½ cents per lb. These are not difficult things to distinguish."

But surely the hon. member for Centre Huron could not expect the audience to bear in their minds these different calculations, and give to his statement a meaning which it did not bear on its face. What is the fact? In 1877, taking the prices of sugar here and the prices in New York in bond and making a calculation, the people of Canada paid, under the tariff of the hon. gentleman, in consequence of the duty and handling, over New York prices, $3.64 per 100 lbs.; while in 1880 they pay but $3.23 per 100 lbs. over New York prices. What was the object of the hon. gentleman in referring to this matter of the 3 cents or 3½ cents at all, if it was not to create the impression that by the act of this Government that enormous burden had been imposed on the people. Not only has there been an attempt in this way to create a prejudice against it, but we had an hon. gentleman, from whom better things should have been expected, endeavoring in Toronto to excite public antipathy against a sugar refinery in Montreal, because the head of that refinery had made a great gift to a university. That hon. gentleman, a chancellor of a university, did not hesitate, in the city of Toronto, before a large public assembly, to make it a crime upon the head of that establishment because he had given $50,000 towards the establishment of a museum in connection with McGill University. We have not many wealthy men in Canada who are willing to devote their money to objects of this kind. We have many institutions which require such assistance from the wealthy men of the country, and it is certainly not calculated to promote that kind of benevolence, when hon. gentlemen occupying high positions, such as the hon. member for West Durham, make it a crime, in a public assembly, against the Redpath refinery that Mr.

Peter Redpath had given $50,000 towards a public institution, and stated that the amount was wrung from the earnings of the people through the higher prices which they had to pay for their sugar. Does the hon. gentleman know that in the city of Toronto the Hon. Wm. McMaster recently erected a church? Who complains of that? Who does not honor him for it? What would be said of the man who, before a public audience, would say: "Sir, you took that out of the earnings of the people; you might have sold them your cottons and dry goods at so much less; you might have given that enormous profit to your customers throughout the country; but, instead of that, you took from them every dollar you could get, and now you seek to pacify your conscience by building a church." Mr Jos. Mackay, in Montreal, who is not a manufacturer, but an importer, has recently distinguished himself—as I would be glad to see many merchants and wealthy men of Canada distinguish themselves—by erecting an asylum for deaf-mutes in Montreal. What would be said of the man who would charge him with having robbed the people by making them pay too much for their goods, and now wanted to make atonement? It was an unworthy attack for the hon. gentleman to make. He, of all men in this country, occupying the position of head of one of its leading Universities, instead of discouraging the wealthy from giving donations to institutions of this kind, ought rather to have applauded the action and acknowledged the honorable motives that prompted it. But the ex-Finance Minister, the other night, told us that this Tariff was equivalent to a mortgage of $10 upon every acre of land in the country. Just look at that statement. An ordinary farm would be about 200 acres, which, at $10 an acre, would produce a mortgage of $2,000; which, at 7 per cent, would compel a farmer to pay $140. The increase by the present Tariff, for which hon. gentlemen on the Ministerial side are responsible, is, say 5 per cent. That gives margin enough. That would amount to a store bill, because it is only on store bills that taxes are paid by farmers, of $2,800. Now, I see the hon. member for South Wentworth looking at me, and I would ask him how many farmers in this country with 200 acres, have to meet a store bill of $2,800? It is statements of this kind that, I venture to say, are doing the hon. gentlemen opposite a very great deal of harm. If we listened to them, our people would appear much poorer than they are—in fact, in a state of abject poverty. While one hon. gentleman tells us that every farm is mortgaged to the extent of $10 an acre through this Tariff, another tells us that $60 out of $300, or 20 per cent. of all the earnings of the unfortunate poor man, goes to the tax collector. Under these circumstances, one would imagine that our people were in wretched circumstances. One or two tests will apply to these statements. Take, for instance, the Post Office Savings Banks—a pretty good test, because I believe the average deposits are small, that the office will not take over $1,000 from any depositor, and will not allow a family to divide itself as to put in a larger amount—the object being not to encourage withdrawals from the banks and the ordinary business of the country. On the 30th September, 1878—I do not refer to that month for the purpose of hurting the feelings of hon. gentlemen opposite, but because it is a good month for the purpose of the comparison—the number of open accounts was 26,097, and the amount on deposit $2,798,310.66. In 1880, same date, the number of open accounts was 32,804, and the total deposits, $4,226,723.86. What is still more extraordinary is the fact that in the four months since that time, up to the 31st January last, the number of open accounts was 36,361, raising the total deposits to $5,125,135.11. That, Sir, I am bound to say, is a very considerable indication that the people of this country, after they had mortgaged their farms for $10 an acre and paid their 20 per cent. of all their earnings to the tax-gatherer, appeared to have a great deal of money left for deposit in the Savings Banks. Then, I find that the number of deposits made in January last in the Post-Office Savings Banks was 7,014, and the amount deposited in small sums of on an average of $60 each, reached $432,889. The only month in the whole history of the Post-Office Savings Banks in which there was anything like so large a number of depositors and so large an amount deposited, was in August, 1879, when the Consolidated Bank failed and the Exchange Bank closed its doors and there was a general panic throughout the country in consequence; people seeking the Post Office Bank rather than the savings banks department of the chartered banks. In that month there was 6,022 depositors, who deposited $409,077. In January, 1879, there were 3,970 persons opened accounts in the Post Office Bank, to the amount of $219,462. I take now another institution which may be said to offer a very fair test of the circumstances of the people—the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal, which is perhaps the largest savings bank in the Dominion. On the 1st of October, 1878, it had 17,793 open accounts, with deposits amounting to $3,524,239, and on 1st of October, 1880, the open accounts numbered 20,668, with an amount of $4,379,662. I would like to know whether under these circumstances, it can be said that the people of this country are a poor people? Hon. gentlemen opposite may rely on this; that there is nothing which the Conservative party, at any rate, more desire than that they should pursue on this question their present course. We saw only the other day in the Montreal papers a letter from a gentleman who is a Liberal and has done good service in the Liberal cause, whose influence and power in connection with elections in that city I personally have very good reason to know something about—I mean Mr. L. O. David. The other day he published a letter declaring that the Liberal party had abandoned all idea of going back on the National Policy or returning to their old policy, because that they, as wise men, having regard to the public sentiment of the country and to the industries built up under the influence of this tariff, had resolved to maintain it in its integrity. It was stated, also, that the member for West Durham and an hon. gentleman in Quebec, Mr. Mercier, who may be said to be a leader of the Liberal party, actually, although not nominally, had given assurances to this effect. Parliament happily being open at present, we can have the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite on the subject. They are doing their best—I do not, for one, regret it, because I believe that, apart from the National Policy, having regard to the general interests of this country, to its development, improvement and advancement, that it is important that they should not be in office—to create the impression in the mind of every man in Canada, who has a dollar invested in business, that his interests and the interest of the country depend on those hon. gentlemen being kept in Opposition. They choose to take that course. They choose to say, to-day, that they are willing to oppose this National Policy, that they regard it as injurious, while every man outside Parliament believes it to be the reverse. When we find that such men as a gentleman in Montreal, who is well known as an active politician in that city, whose influence as a Liberal I have good reason to know something of—I mean Mr. William Clendenning—when we find such gentlemen as he writing to the newspapers and declaring that, notwithstanding what hon. gentlemen may say, the fact remains that things are more prosperous, that the boom is upon us, that every industry is prospering, we have no difficulty in estimating outside public sentiment. I say, if the hon. gentlemen choose to ignore these indications of public sentiment outside, then upon their own heads be the evil of it. Only yesterday morning, in the city of Montreal, I met a manufacturer on the street. I asked him how business was prospering with him. He replied that it was booming. I said: "That is due to the National Policy." He replied: "Yes." I said: "You did not believe in it not long ago." His reply was: "Well, I did not believe that you were sincere in advocating it. I did not believe that your party would have the courage to bring down such a policy as we now have, else I would have taken a different course in your election in the city of Montreal." That gentleman is simply a type of many gentlemen in this Dominion who have come to realize that the welfare of Canada is bound up in the party which looks to the development of the country in its broadest sense—which looks to the development, not only of the industries of the country, but of every interest in the country, as this Government has done since it has been in office. I am satisfied that when this question of the National Policy comes up for review by the court of last appeal—the people—in 1883, hon. gentlemen opposite will be glad, if they can, to hark back from some of the statements they are making to-day, and to declare that, although they opposed the National Policy in the first instance, they are not now going to go back upon it, and they will be anxious to sneak back to the Treasury benches—if I may use the expression—under cover of a pretence of friendship to the policy which they have done so much to destroy. Happily, however, they are now making a record which will render it difficult for them to take such a course, and I, for one, do not regret that they are making that record.

Mr. CHARLTON moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock, midnight,) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 23rd February, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

WHEAT CARGO OF THE "BOYNE."

Mr. GAULT enquired, Have the Government collected the duty on the cargo of wheat wrecked on board the ship Boyne; and if so, what is the amount collected?

Mr. BOWELL. The duty has been collected on grain, ex-ship Boyne, as follows: 13,723 bushels of wheat, at 15 cents, $2,058.45; 45,559 bushels of Indian corn, at 7½ cents, $3,419.93; total, $5,478.83. That was the whole cargo, but the parties have the right, reserved to them, to a refund for any portion of the cargo that might not be taken from the vessel.

IMPROVEMENT OF CASCUMPEC HARBOR.

Mr. HACKETT enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place an amount in the Supplementary Estimates for the improvement of Cascumpec Harbor, Prince County, Prince Edward Island?

Mr. LANGEVIN. This matter is at present under the consideration of the Government.

STEAMSHIP LINE BETWEEN ST. JOHN, HALIFAX AND LIVERPOOL.

Mr. WELDON enquired, In reference to the subsidy proposed to be given to a line of steamships to be run between St. John and Halifax, alternately, and Liverpool, is Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

it the intention of the Government to ask for public tenders for the service?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is the intention of the Government.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

Mr. DESJARDINS, in moving for copies of all correspondence, Orders in Council, petitions, Commissions of enquiry, returns and other documents, respecting the management and administration of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, since the 1st January, 1880, said: It has been the lot of this institution to have drawn, since it was established, more than its share of public attention. Almost every year, since 1873, we have had complaints and enquiries of all kinds relative to that institution, and in many instances dismissals have been made. It is well known that lately another dismissal has taken place, and we have now the enquiry as to what reasons have induced the Government to that decision. It is well known that during its first years this institution was far from being a success, that the first two years of trial had disastrous results; but these were explained by the fact that the building, which was intended for a reformatory school, had not the necessary requirements for a penitentiary, and, besides, the staff was inexperienced and untrained. With inadequate means and an inexperienced staff, it was not to be wondered at that the institution did not meet expectation. In 1875 important changes were made. The first warden was dismissed and another appointed; at the same time a radical change was made in the laws regarding the administration of the penitentiary. The wisdom of the change I was not ready to admit then, and I think now that, after the experience of some five or six years, we have more reason than we had then to doubt its wisdom. In fact, it was admitted then the change was rather an experiment than a law to be admitted as being a decided improvement on the former one. Under the operation of the new law complaints increased to such an extent that in 1878, on the demand of hon. members of this House, a Commission was appointed under the provisions of the Act of 1875, and two men of great authority in those matters were named to investigate into the whole question. We have now their report. The object of the enquiry was to ascertain what was the morale of the institution, its discipline, the efficiency of its staff, and its financial condition. Those Commissioners visited first the Kingston Penitentiary, which was acknowledged to be the first institution of the kind in the Dominion, and to rank among the best on the continent. Their motive in visiting the Kingston Penitentiary was, as they explain:

"We were the more anxious for such a visit to the oldest of Canadian penitentiaries, because we were aware that that establishment had not been subjected to the same discouraging aspersions and complaints as had been its sister institution in the Province of Quebec; but, on the contrary, was esteemed at headquarters as being well managed and as presenting a highly satisfactory condition of affairs."

The result of their visit was to convince them there was scarcely nothing to desire in that institution. They then went to the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary in July or August, 1879, and spent there some two months, to see what was actually going on, what were the deficiencies, and what was the remedy required. They came to the conclusion that while there were some defects in the administration, the institution could compare favorably with the other, taking into account the fact that the Kingston Penitentiary had been established since 1835, whilst the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary was only in its infancy, and had a building insufficient for its purpose. They found that:

"As respects the personnel, morale, and other higher considerations and conditions bearing upon the primitive and reformatory character of these institutions, we owe it to justice to state our conviction, that on these higher grounds the St. Vincent de Paul is not in any way inferior to the Kingston Penitentiary."

"By way of drawing your attention to the more manifest defects and requirements of these two important institutions, we may at the outset state that both suffer from a defective system of accounting; that St. Vincent-de Paul Prison suffers further from its general state of incompleteness, an insufficiency of plant, fittings and acreage."

At the end of 1876, a change of warden having taken place in the meantime, the inspector was able to report as follows:—

"We are happy at being able to state with the experience of fourteen months of Dr. Duchesneau's régime before us, that the Penitentiary, in all the details of its management, has been entirely reorganized and improved." It is worthy of remark that during these evil times the lack of discipline and general demoralization existed more among the under officers than among the convicts, whose morals were saved from the worst consequences by the faithful and unremitting exertions of the Chaplains and some other superior officers, whose struggles for good, under the most disheartening conditions, deserves the highest praise. The change of management did not, however, immediately effect the revolution which might have been looked for. Incompetent and unworthy officers still exercised their baneful influence. They could only be weeded out as circumstances came to the knowledge of the warden which justified their dismissal. These defects have now been, for the main part, remedied, and we believe the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary now possesses, with very few exceptions, a good and thoroughly efficient staff.

"This remark we feel justified in making without reserve, having carefully examined the rolls, the causes of removals, the minute books and records of the institution, and having found our opinion derived therefrom fully confirmed by a personal inspection of result.

"The morale of the institution appeared to us to be really excellent. There was in the appearance, the conduct, the health and industry of the convicts, no indication of the existence of vicious practices or of immediate evil dispositions, nor even of determined indocility; on the contrary, the aspect and general behavior of prisoners we invariably found good to a remarkable degree.

"We followed them for days at church, in the school, in the shops, at outside work, and at night in the dormitories, and can bear testimony to their general good demeanor."

"There are, of course, offences committed against the prison rules, most of them of a trifling character, some of a more serious kind; but, we repeat it, the general conduct of the bulk of the convicts and the spirit evinced by them is as good as can be expected to result from the very best application of means of reform which can be used in connection with the population of a penal institution. At church, where the ceremonies of worship are carried on with imposing solemnity, the convicts deport themselves with becoming dignity and exhibit all the exterior signs of a proper respect for religion. Their church music would do credit to many churches conducted under happier auspices.

"The proficiency of the convicts at school, as well as in the various trades, is another proof of the spirit pervading the establishment. Men, and some of them at an advanced age, who could neither read nor write, have learned to do both, and others have very materially increased the stock of elementary knowledge they were possessed of when they entered. They avail themselves eagerly of the means of improvement placed within their reach; the libraries are small, but, to all appearances, judiciously selected, and the books are in constant circulation and generally well cared for.

"Most of the convicts, it may be said, who had no trade before entering the prison learn one there, and if sentenced for long terms, or if particularly apt, they not unfrequently make themselves master of two.

"The health of the convicts, so particularly and exceptionally good at St. Vincent de Paul, is also in a measure an evidence of a high state of the morale of its population, the influence of which is discernible in every department, and under all circumstances."

This was really giving a good certificate to the efficiency of the staff of the establishment, and telling highly of the wise precautions taken by the authorities of the penitentiary and of the efficiency of its medical officers; especially when it was despite the overcrowded condition of the penitentiary—for in several instances they were obliged to accommodate up to forty convicts in the same room during night, and they had to use damp and dark cells for the others. They remark further, that the healthy state of the institution at St. Vincent de Paul is remarkable, and continue thus:

"The continuous exceptionally healthy state of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary would be remarkable under the best of circumstances; it is much more so when it is considered that a notable portion of its population is lodged at night in temporary dormitories of insufficient space. Since its establishment in 1873, this prison has been not only free from all contagious, epidemic or endemic diseases, but also from ailments indicative of morbid or depressing influences of a general character. Such a state of things is so exceptionally good that it is hardly to be expected that it can maintain itself, at the same point, as the normal condition of things."

As to the efficiency of the staff in 1879, they say:

"The present staff appears to us to be well adapted to the duties imposed upon them, from the warden to the lower grades. Unavoidably, there are several degrees of fitness, as is always the case; all are not equally good or efficient. We have, indeed, reason to suspect that there are a few of the under-officers, and fortunately but few, who are lacking in some important requisites for their office."

These facts, meantime, are easily explained. It was found that the system of accounting was deficient here as at Kingston itself, formerly, and that led to some regrettable occurrences. The attention of the officers at headquarters was called to the fact, and I understand that remedies have been found for that state of things. As regards the insufficiency of the buildings, the Commissioners go on to say:

"The permanent buildings at St. Vincent de Paul, so far as they are completed, are well suited for penitentiary purposes. They are severe in style and very substantially constructed. They are, however, insufficient even for present wants, not to speak of the future requirements of the Province of Quebec. At the end of our short sojourn at St. Vincent de Paul there were within the walls of that institution 312 convicts, 141 of whom were lodged at night in temporary quarters. Of these sixty occupied strong cells in a portion of the building never intended for that purpose and lacking the proper space of many thousand feet. Fifty-six occupied wooden cells, insecure and badly situated; twenty were in an associated dormitory, and eight in the dungeon cells. By this time, however, eighty-nine recently finished cells will have been fitted up in the new wing."

Well, that state of things might explain, to a certain extent, the great number of complaints since the opening of the institution. In fact, it has been too much the fashion of the authorities here to compare the requirements of St. Vincent de Paul with those of the older prison at Kingston, and to judge of the expense of each per capita, instead of judging of the expense needed on account of the new penitentiary not having been put in the same position and on the same footing as the other; and to the delays in granting the necessary aid to the St. Vincent de Paul institution, and the necessary sums to proceed with the works necessary, and the requisite buildings, are to be largely attributed some of the disturbances and irregularities that have taken place, and which have caused so much complaint. But, after having received such a report as that of Messrs. Taché and Miall, and getting it published throughout the country, the public could not help being surprised on hearing that after such a report new enquiries were asked for and granted, and that the Inspector went to the penitentiary and instituted a new investigation and enquiry regarding its whole facts and history; and if we may judge by the result, it is very apparent that the conclusions at which the Inspector arrived are entirely different from those which I find in this report of Messrs. Taché and Miall. It now remains for us to see if, really, those continual investigations are justified by the faults or deficiencies of the officers. From what I know, my belief is that the changes in the law of 1875 have had much to do with the troubles which have occurred in that institution. I think it was a great mistake to do away with an independent body of directors who had made a special study of the subject, and who had devoted their time and attention to the well-being of such establishments, and to centralize the control of such institutions in a political department here. The change, in my opinion, has had the effect of leading many politicians to believe that that penitentiary had become a new field open to the exercise of patronage, and the perpetration of jobs and other things of that kind which, undesirable anywhere, are especially so in connection with such institutions as this, whose principal end is to protect society from the criminal classes, and to exercise a beneficial moral influence upon those who come within their walls. I think we should give to the officers of such an institution that confidence and freedom of action which are necessary if they are to initiate measures for its well-being. My opinion upon that point is corroborated by the report made by Messrs. Taché and Miall, who say:

"The study of the subject of prison management, if pursued free from the influence of preconceived ideas, must lead an unbiassed mind to the conviction that such institutions should be governed and directed by an organization or body of men free from immediate political or other extraneous influences."

I know that for some years in the past that institution has been denounced on account of its officers interfering in elections. I know that it has been widely circulated that accusations have been brought against some of these gentlemen for having left their duties to engage in political canvassing in Ferreboune, Laval, Montreal and my own constituency. It was known that leave of absence was too easily granted in the days when canvassing was in vogue, and that fact led to uneasiness and complaints which culminated in the last enquiry and the dismissal of the late warden. If those reports were well founded it would give more strength to the concluding remarks made by Messrs Taché and Miall, and would call for the immediate action of the Government. These gentlemen say :

"Such organized bodies exist in every civilized country, whether under the name of Inspectors, Superintendents, Directors, or Commissioners, and are generally constituted into Boards, whose relation to the executive officers of each establishment are somewhat analogous to the relation subsisting between Parliament and Cabinet, under a constitutional form of government. Their duties are consultative, deliberative, and in a measure, legislative. They decide upon what general principles the prisons shall be governed, and their decrees, when approved by the Minister of State, are carried into effect by the local executive.

"Such was the condition of the question in Canada before the passage of the Act of 1875, which we are bound to call an unfortunate deviation from the usual course pursued in almost every country aiming at the reform of its criminal population."

Proceeding further, they show how difficult and how inefficient must be the control which can be exercised over the institution by a department like the Department of Justice, when so far removed from the institution :

"A Government department might almost as well undertake to treat, at a distance, the patients of our public hospitals, as direct, by correspondence, the life and conduct of a penitentiary. The officers and clerks of a department can hardly be considered as ex officio authorities on prison matters, and if directors or inspectors are made under-officers of a department, they lose, by the very fact of occupying such a position, the freedom, the status, the immunities which are necessary to the proper discharge of their important and often delicate functions, at the same time the feeling or sense of responsibility, on account of their trust, is materially backward."

I think the experience we have had goes far to prove the truth of these remarks. I have to say, however, that the first two years of the operation of this law showed, perhaps, better results than the experience of late years. It is to the credit of the Minister of Justice of that time that he directed all his efforts to bring all the penitentiaries into a state of efficiency, and while he held that office he took care not to allow political bias to interfere with the success of its management, but, on the contrary, sought to govern the institution from the high point of view from which all such institutions should be governed. He was succeeded, however, by a Minister of Justice who did not appear to attach that importance to the administration of the affairs of the penitentiary with a view to the social welfare of the community, and who was, if I am correctly informed, too much disposed to obtain from the institution all the political influence which he possibly could. It is to that state of things that we owe the enquiry which took place, and the report from which I have been quoting. The late warden has been dismissed. Another one will soon be appointed to succeed him, and if the law remains as it is, if the relations between the Department of Justice and the management of the penitentiary continue to remain as they are, it is probable that the next warden will not keep his place any longer than the one who has been dismissed. I think it is very important, for the well-being of any institution of that kind, that prompt remedies should be applied to the evils complained of.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). There is no objection to the papers being brought down. I am very glad, indeed, my hon friend has given me an opportunity to lay them on the Table of the House. I do not intend to speak of the history of the Penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul, but I have one or two observations to make upon statements he has made as to the action of the department over which I preside with reference to that institution. I shall not discuss the question he has raised as to whether the policy initiated some years ago with reference to the government of those institutions is a wise one or not, or whether it would be better, as in former years, to have these institutions managed by a board, instead of putting them under the superintendence of an Inspector of Penitentiaries, under the control of the Department of Justice. I will only say that in 1878, when I took charge of the department, I found that there was, and had been for some time, a state of things existing in that institution not at all conducive to its proper administration, or to the proper management of its affairs. At the earliest convenient moment, I caused the Commission to be appointed to which the hon. member refers, composed of two very able men, Mr. Taché, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, and Mr. Miall, of the Department of Inland Revenue. The report of these gentlemen resulted in an arrangement of some matters connected with that institution which from that time to a recent period, at any rate, conducted largely to the quiet and smooth administration of its affairs. However, during the last summer a complaint was made by a member of Parliament, a very influential gentleman, living in the neighborhood of the institution, of a very serious character, containing numerous charges against the warden of that institution. It is quite true, as the hon. gentleman states, that this gentleman spoke of the warden in a highly complimentary manner as to the way in which he had managed the institution. Subsequent to that date written charges were placed in my hands by a gentleman occupying a high position in public life, as well as in the community where he resides, making charges of so serious a nature against the warden's personal character and habits, as well as his mode of administration, as to make it imperative that an investigation should be held. That investigation was ordered as provided by law. The Inspector of Penitentiaries proceeded to St. Vincent de Paul and sat for many weeks, taking an enormous amount of testimony, being assisted for a considerable portion of the time, at his own request, by the Deputy Minister of Justice. On the evidence so taken the Inspector of Penitentiaries presented a report, and upon this report, confirmed by myself, the Government came to the conclusion that it was in the interest of the penitentiary that Mr. Duchesneau should cease to be the warden, and the result was that he was superseded, and the institution is now managed by the deputy-warden, acting as warden in the meantime. This is the state of the case, and I shall be happy to lay upon the Table, for the information of the House, the evidence on which the Government decided to take the course I have mentioned.

Mr. MASSON. Do I understand the dismissal of Dr. Duchesneau was in consequence of the truth of the accusations, or certain of them, made against him by the gentleman of whom the Minister speaks, or whether it was on account of the inability of the warden to conduct the affairs of the penitentiary with the staff at his disposal? In the one case the dismissal casts no odium upon the warden; in the other case it casts a great odium upon him.

Mr. McDONALD. The only answer I am just now able to give to that question is, that the Government felt compelled to dismiss the warden on the evidence taken by the inspector.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry to learn that it has been found necessary to supersede the late warden of the penitentiary, and I think that my hon. friend's observations, if I rightly caught it, deserves at least this degree of attention: that since very grave inferences are to be drawn from the statement of the Minister, there ought to be no delay in laying these papers on the Table of the House, so that we may know what the exact degree of impropriety or inability of the late warden has been. It may be quite consistent with that gentleman's perfect rectitude of demeanor morally, and his honor, that he may have been found incompetent for the situation; on the other hand, the observation of the Minister certainly impressed me very painfully, as they seem to have impressed the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Masson), that the sustained charges were of a very grave character. I may say that I was responsible for the original appointment of Dr. Duchesneau. I made that appointment under a very grave and pressing sense of the responsibility that surrounded me, and I watched with very earnest care during the remainder of my tenure of office, and made very frequent enquiries as to the progress of St. Vincent de Paul under the practical re-organization which then took place, and I must say that the reports which I received from various quarters, and the indications of opinion from various sources, not politically favorable to myself, were that upon the whole there had been every marked improvement in the condition of the institution, and that the warden adequately fulfilled the duties of his charge. I had the gratification of learning that such was the opinion expressed by the hon. gentleman who formerly represented Laval in this House, and who has ever since occupied a seat in the Senate, Mr. Bellerose. It is, therefore, with the greater regret and surprise that I learn that such a feeling has existed as to require the supercession of Dr. Duchesneau. Of course, I have no information whatever on the matter from any human being, and I will not, in the slightest degree, prejudge the case. On the contrary, I give that confidence to the hon. gentleman which is quite due to him, and I presume that the papers to be laid before us will be found to justify his action. I may, however, be permitted to say a word with reference to the important question which the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) has raised—whether the step taken in 1875, though not under my administration of the Department of Justice, was a step of progression or retrogression. So far as I could judge from the tolerably constant recourse I was obliged to have to the proceedings of the board, which ceased to exist a good while before I took office, I was not favorably impressed as to the efficiency of that particular board, and I will add that I am not favorably impressed, as a rule, with the efficiency of boards as instruments of management. I believe there is a great deal of good sense in the remark made by an English epigrammatist, that all boards are screens; they are good machines for accomplishing the will of another. I agree with the view expressed that it is impossible to administer the penitentiaries without an Inspector. But there is an Inspector, and his duty is to visit the penitentiaries very frequently. That is absolutely essential. But my belief is that there is much to be said in favor of the view that those who ultimately exercise authority should exercise it, to a large extent, openly; and if your board is a screen for the Government, if your board of inspectors or directors of penitentiaries are men holding their offices at pleasure, and whose action is controlled by the Government, it is very much better that you should have a person who is ostensibly controlled by the Government than persons who may act under a screen, and under whose apparent action the will of the Government may be carried out. I believe a more direct responsibility exists under this than under the old system. Both systems, very wisely in my opinion, left nominally and actually a large control to the wardens of these institutions. The lower grades, under the Act, are appointed by the wardens, and the higher offices by the Government. I believe that is not an unwise arrangement, and I believe it ought to be adhered to in the spirit as well as the letter. My rule, when I held the office held by the hon. gentleman opposite, was not to interfere in the least degree with the appointments made by the warden, only informing him that he should be held strictly responsible for the efficiency of the officers he appointed. If any other rule were adopted—I do not insinuate that any other rule has been adopted—I think it would be a misfortune, because I believe the warden is the only person who can really judge of the efficiency of the officers under him. I think they ought to understand, in order to do their duty properly, that they, to a large extent, owe their offices to him. The hon. gentleman seems to assume, as the report of the Commission seems to assume, that by having three men instead of one, a board of inspectors instead of an inspector, you remove them more effectually from political influence. I do not think you do it, or it was not done when the old board existed. The hon. gentleman objects to officers interfering in elections. In the election of 1874, I heard that the officers of the Kingston Penitentiary, which the hon. gentleman often speak of as a model institution, were driven together in sleighs to the polls, under the auspices of the warden of that institution, for the purpose of interfering in the election. But that was done in the good old days, under the influence of a board from which you hoped to eliminate political influence. You cannot eliminate political influence in that way. But if the common sense of this House and the country is, that the penitentiaries should be conducted with a sole regard for the public good, that the measure of power which is given to the wardens as to patronage, should be really exercised by them, and that contracts should be let with a single eye to the welfare of the institutions and not as a result of political influence, then we should be able to see that that rule is carried out, and very much better under the present system, I think, than if you had a board under which the Government might screen their action, or the hon. Minister of Justice might indicate his will by a nod or a wink. I do not wish to imply that there has been any impropriety on the part of the hon. gentleman; all I wish to say is, that if there is a chance of political interference or impropriety, it is more likely to be exercised, while there would be less security as to the direct responsibility of the hon. Minister, in the establishment of a supposed independent, but really dependant, board.

Mr. OUMET. Mr. Speaker, it is not to answer an attack made by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) that I now rise, but it is merely to say that I have my share of responsibility in the facts that have taken place recently at St. Vincent de Paul's; I have my share of responsibility in the fact that a second enquiry was especially granted against the warden of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, and this is the reason: In the report whereof the hon. member for Hochelaga has read extracts, he will find an allusion to a certain conspiracy concocted by four of the subordinate employees of the penitentiary against the physician of this institution, Dr. Pominville. These employees gave sworn evidence, it would seem, to the effect that Dr. Pominville had neglected his duties, especially with regard to the families of the employees of the penitentiary entrusted to his care. These four employees, after having given this sworn testimony, thought fit, on an enquiry being made by Mr. Moylan, inspector of penitentiaries, to retract their charges, and even went so far as to state under oath the contrary to what they had said before, insinuating that they had been induced, by false representations, to make their former statement. The Commissioners said in their report that these four employees should have been condignly punished, that is to say, discharged from the penitentiary. However, after the Penitentiary Inspector had made his enquiry, as I stated just now, and on account of certain attenuating circumstances, with the consent of the Minister of Justice, the Hon. Mr. Laflamme, were, so to speak, pardoned and maintained in office. After this very complimentary report with regard to Dr. Duchesneau had been made, one would say that a great weight had been lifted off his bosom, and that he believed himself above the attacks of his opponents, and that he should wipe out of existence all those who could in any way harm or embarrass him in the penitentiary. So the very next day, after the report had been approved of by the Government, and Dr. Duchesneau had received a letter informing him that he was exonerated from all blame, these four employees were discharged without the least warning. What reason had Dr. Duchesneau for dismissing these four employees? He had none. The Penitentiary Inspector and the Minister of Justice had considered the question; they had thought that it was better to deal leniently or mercifully with these employees, and, as I have already stated, they were maintained in office. After having received a severe reprimand, why, I again ask, did Dr. Duchesneau see fit to overlook that fact and discharge these men? Naturally enough, these four men made a complaint to the Government; they also complained to me, and, therefore, as I had a good deal of other information coming from authentic sources, tending to show that Dr. Duchesneau was practicing in the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary what the Liberal in England has always called personal government for personal ends, I deemed it my duty to ask for an enquiry, especially as it was within my personal knowledge that Dr. Duchesneau had taken an active part in all the elections of 1878, and before, in 1876, in the election of Hon. Mr. Laflamme, as Minister of Justice. And if, in 1878, I and the candidate for Jacques Cartier, together with his friends, were not thrown into the River St. Lawrence, it was not the fault of the employees of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, who, with the knowledge and consent of Dr. Duchesneau, who was present at the meetings, endeavored to prevent us from speaking, and formed the plan of throwing us into the river running on the other side of the road. Such, Mr. Speaker, are facts that came to my personal knowledge. Now, I can state that as soon as Dr. Duchesneau set foot in the penitentiary at St. Vincent de Paul he discharged, as far as he could, all the Conservatives. I do not reproach him with that; I have no spite against him on account of it; but the hon. member for Hochelaga spoke of partizans who wanted to enjoy the patronage of the penitentiary and profit by the jobs. As to the last question, I do not think that I need pay any attention to it; but as to the first, I say that the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, like all other institutions under the control of the Government, owes a certain amount of patronage to the Government and to their friends; and I say that Dr. Duchesneau had not the right to interfere at St. Vincent de Paul in order to discharge these employees. I must say that I never interfered, and that I know no one in our party who has done so in order to have an employee discharged on account of his political opinions; but I maintain that when an employee is discharged and has to be replaced, the patronage should not be exercised by the warden for purely personal ends and in favor of his own party. I say, that if it happens that a Liberal is at the head of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, when a Conservative Government is in power, he should not profit by his position in order to take in all the political outcasts, all those who were thrown on their own resources when their party lost power, and give them fat sinecures, whilst our friends are seeking for employment. That is what I maintain; and I say that Dr. Duchesneau profited by his position in order to favor his party and his personal friends, to the detriment of the friends of the Government that are in power since 1878. Well, I maintain that is a sufficient reason; I say that is an act of partizanship sufficient to justify me in asking for an enquiry into the conduct of Dr. Duchesneau, especially in view of the fact that Dr. Duchesneau was directly accused of having himself concocted the conspiracy by means of those four subordinate employees, in order to get the physician of the penitentiary discharged, and replaced by one of his friends, Dr. Germain, of St. Vincent de Paul. Why, Sir, are we going to tolerate in the Penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul a man who makes use of his authority to concoct conspiracies against his subordinates, and in order to induce other employees to testify against their colleagues, against their co-employees? I must now state that during the whole time that Dr. Duchesneau was at St. Vincent de Paul, we had nothing else but that; he was very skilful in one thing, and, moreover, he is skilful, generally speaking, for he is a man of talents and of a serious turn of mind, but he is particularly skilful in hatching conspiracies against the employees that he wanted to discharge, in order to replace them by some of his friends; and I could give the names of those who have fallen victims to these conspiracies. Well, is not that an abuse of power that deserves to be censured by the Government? Is not that an abuse of power about which a member is in duty bound to have an investigation made? That is what I have done. I asked that an enquiry should be made, and it was made. I do not know what came out of this enquiry, but I know that the warden of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, Dr. Duchesneau, has been discharged because accusations, even graver than those I mentioned, have been proven against him; for if really the report is what I think it is, I must say that I entirely approve of the conclusions arrived at by the hon. Minister and the Government. After all, Sir, it must not be supposed that Dr. Duchesneau could not be removed. I know that a powerful member in Government circles was protecting him, and it was on that account that whilst the enquiry was going on, and whilst the report was being taken into consideration by Her Majesty's Government, telegrams were arriving every day at St. Vincent de Paul, and Dr. Duchesneau was continually announcing to his friends: "I shall be exonerated from all blame, and we shall wipe out all those who have borne testimony against me." That was what was being said every day at St. Vincent de Paul, not at the suggestion of the person mentioned as belonging to the Senate, but while that hon. gentleman was absent from St. Vincent de Paul. I say, Mr. Speaker, that that was sufficient, in my opinion, to prove that Dr. Duchesneau was not worthy to remain as warden of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. I never knew a man more arbitrary in his actions, more arbitrary in his opinions and in his conduct, as the warden of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. Let it be borne in mind that I am only giving my personal opinion. I was not present at the investigation; I have not read the report; I do not know what has taken place there, but I state what has come to my personal knowledge, and that makes me believe that the Government was perfectly justified in discharging Dr. Duchesneau as warden of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary; and I even say that the facts that have come to my personal knowledge are sufficient to allow me to express the opinion before this House, that even should the report be no stronger than the hon. member for Hochelaga has stated, I would endorse, with all my heart, the discharge of Dr. Duchesneau as warden of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. Now, Sir, it has been stated that it would be better to change the law. I have nothing to say about that. The law was passed, I think, under the Liberal Government—in 1874 or 1875 I believe—and I am of the opinion that hon. gentlemen opposite should explain it, as at all events they are responsible for it. However, I agree with the hon. member for West Durham, who stated that it would be better to have a direct responsibility, which cannot be reconciled with the partizans and jobbers of which the hon. member for Hochelaga spoke, so that injustices may be committed and the responsibility thrown upon persons who are not responsible to Parliament.

Mr. MASSON. It has been stated by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) that there was great difficulty in dealing with Dr. Duchesneau for some time, because a most powerful influence in the Government was supporting him. In fact, I did protect Dr. Duchesneau so far as I could do it honestly and fairly; I did prevent him from being dismissed on the ground that he was a political opponent, because my policy and that of this Government when I was a member of it now—I do not know what the policy of this Government is—was, that a man should not be dismissed because he was a political opponent. I stood by Dr. Duchesneau at that time, not only for that reason, but because I knew myself that St. Paul Penitentiary was an admirably administered institution. I knew that, and I said so, not only when sitting on the Treasury benches, but when I sat in Opposition. The year after Dr. Duchesneau was appointed the question came up in the House, and complaint was made against the then Government of the day for having appointed him, a political opponent, and a bitter personal opponent of my own politically, because I thought him a most efficient officer. How did I know that? Not only from what I read and heard, but by visiting the penitentiary, examining the state of affairs, and ascertaining the position of matters when he took charge, and the condition at the time of my visit; and seeing the results achieved, I was satisfied Dr. Duchesneau was an efficient officer. After I became a member of the Government, the Minister of Justice himself asked me to look into the St. Paul Penitentiary affairs, and visit it and make up my mind respecting it. I did so. I visited the institution, and was convinced that the institution was as good as any in any part of Canada—as good as Kingston Penitentiary—and having formed that opinion, I told the Minister of Justice of the fact; and when I saw people wishing to get rid of Dr. Duchesneau, was it not my duty, having seen the results of his administration, to see that an efficient officer was not dismissed because he was a political opponent of ours? That officer was, however, dismissed, although, according to the report of Mr. Taché and Mr. Miall, two men who, it will not be asserted, are great Radicals, especially Mr. Taché, Dr. Duchesneau was a most efficient officer; and such is, I believe, their opinion yet. I will read a clause regarding the condition of the penitentiary when Dr. Duchesneau took it and its condition when he left it:

"This institution has suffered, and probably still in some measure suffers, in reputation from the misfortunes and mismanagement of its first years of existence (from 1873 to the end of 1875). The state of affairs then existing caused the then Board of Directors to report in 1874, that, 'Its administration has not given satisfaction.' 'Matters went from bad to worse, and, in 1875, the present Inspector reported that the administration in every essential respect had become demoralized adding that in his opinion he was confirmed by the reports which he received from the deputy warden, the chaplain and chief keeper.' At the end of 1876, a change of warden having taken place in the meantime, the inspector was able to report as follows: 'I am happy at being able to state, with the experience of fourteen months of Dr. Duchesneau's regime before me, that the penitentiary, in all the details of its management, has been entirely reorganised and improved.' It is worthy of remark that during these evil times, the lack of discipline and general demoralization existed more among the under-officers than among the convicts."

At this point I desire to say a word to the Minister of Justice. It need not be matter for surprise that the subordinate officers should have some grudge against Dr. Duchesneau for the action which he took to prevent that demoralization which was due largely to those sub-officers themselves, and bring the institution into that state of efficiency in which it is to-day. No doubt that is the cause of the great displeasure of some officers of the penitentiary at the present moment. Messrs. Taché and Miall have given an example of the excellent administration of the penitentiary last year. They state:

"We cannot better close our remarks upon this point than by mentioning that while there we witnessed the performance of one of the most-irksome general movements which can test the discipline of both officers and convicts. A circumstance arose which called forth an abrupt order from the chief keeper to lock all the prisoners within their cells, and this in the midst of a working day. All sorts of conjectures, as to the reason of such an unusual measure, must have been raised in the minds of both under-officers and convicts, who were equally ignorant of its cause, yet the order, thus sudden and unexplained, was executed with promptitude and precision, without confusion, noise or murmur; the only thing perceptible being an apparent eagerness to obey, mingled with a little anxiety and more than ordinary caution."

I think that having established the facts as I have established them, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) was rather hard on me in directing the attention of the House, invidiously, to the circumstance that there was a powerful man supporting Dr. Duchesneau in his position. I acted in this matter as I would act again if I were again on the Treasury benches. When a public officer does his duty, I do not look to what party he belongs, and I act accordingly; and in this case I still believe, unless there is strong evidence in that testimony, that a mistake has been committed in dismissing Dr. Duchesneau, at least as he has been dismissed. I know that wardens of this penitentiary, against whom I wish to say nothing, have been discharged, or rather their services were dispensed with when the institution had fallen, under their care, into a sad state of demoralization, and who are now receiving allowances of $1000 a year as gratuity, while Dr. Duchesneau, who took charge of St. Paul Penitentiary when it was in the bad condition and at the low standard described in the report of Messrs. Taché and Miall, and brought to its present creditable position, instead of being treated as other wardens had been treated, had been dismissed, his salary being stopped from the day of his dismissal, and being obliged to vacate his residence at one month's notice.

Mr. OUIMET. When I made allusion to the powerful hand in the high ministerial sphere that was protecting Dr. Duchesneau, I certainly alluded to the hon. member for Terrebonne, but not, as he has stated, in any invidious way. I only alluded to it to show that while the investigation was going on, and after it had ended, Dr. Duchesneau was going around the village of St. Paul, saying everywhere that he was protected by that powerful hand and defying any one to have him dismissed. I mentioned that, not to throw blame on the hon. member for Terrebonne. I know the hon. gentleman protected Dr. Duchesneau because he thought Dr. Duchesneau had rendered services to the penitentiary, because he thought he was a very good officer. He did not know these petty facts which were known by every one in St. Vincent de Paul. I mentioned it only to show how indecent it was for Dr. Duchesneau to go round the village howling before every house that he was protected by the hon. member for Terrebonne and could defy all his enemies, and that as soon as the report would be adopted by the Government he would sweep out the whole penitentiary. As I said, I am not responsible for Dr. Duchesneau's dismissal. I am only responsible for having gone to the Minister, laid before him facts which were within my own knowledge and other facts that had been mentioned to me, and asked him to cause this enquiry to be made. This enquiry having been made, my responsibility ends there.

Mr. DAOUST. Mr. Speaker, although I quite agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) with regard to Dr. Duchesneau's political conduct at public meetings, which conduct is not such as civil servants should generally indulge in, it was, nevertheless, not a sufficient reason to cause me to speak on the subject. But I heard the hon. member for West Durham say that before Mr.

Duchesneau was appointed as warden of the St. Paul Penitentiary, sleigh loads full of the Government's employees at the penitentiary went to vote for their political friends. I cannot say that such is not the case, but I know nothing of it personally. I was at the time deputy-warden of St. Paul Penitentiary, and I have never heard of any cabal on the part of the employees in favor of this or that candidate.

Mr. BLAKE. I referred to the Kingston penitentiary.

Mr. DAoust. I had understood the hon. member to refer to the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. At any rate, I will state a few facts. In 1873, when the Liberal party came into power, the most influential friends I had in the county of Two Mountains sent a deputation to me to ask me if I would again stand for the county, as they thought that I was shortly going to be dismissed from my post on account of political opinions. I thought, however, that there could be no reason to dismiss me, unless I had committed blameworthy acts during my administration. At the beginning of 1874, during the general election, Mr. Lafamme, who was one of the leading members of the party in power, asked me, through one of his friends, to visit him in Montreal, in order to come to an understanding with him. When I arrived in Montreal, he asked me to work in favor of Mr. Prevost's election; I refused, whereupon Mr. Lafamme threatened me. He said: "You are in our power, and if you do not accede to my request, you will be liable to be dismissed." I replied that that was not a reason for me to go through the county of Two Mountains to advocate Mr. Prevost's political ideas, which I had always opposed. However, at the request of a few friends, I went through the county to discover if it was really the intention of the electors to oppose, at all hazards, the Government then in power, and on my return I told him that all the most influential electors were determined not to support Mr. Prevost. Yet, notwithstanding the wisdom I displayed under those circumstances, I was dismissed; no reason being assigned for my dismissal. I was charged with being too mild and too faithful. I have nothing to say against Mr. Duchesneau's administration. I know that he took a very active part in politics, for, on several occasions, he visited the county of Jacques Cartier. On one occasion the hon. member for Laval told him that he was out of place, in neglecting his duties at St. Vincent de Paul, to come and take an active part in the elections at Saint Claire and other places in the county of Jacques Cartier. I regret that I misinterpreted the remarks of the hon. member for West Durham, who was alluding to the Kingston penitentiary. I thought he was alluding to the county of Laval. As far as I know, no officials of the county of Laval ever took an active part in the elections which took place whilst I was deputy-warden of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I have no doubt the hon. member for Terrebonne gave Dr. Duchesneau the benefit of his protection, because he thought Dr. Duchesneau was worthy of it. Up to the time the second enquête was asked for, I had no reason to believe that Dr. Duchesneau, though he had been an opponent of ours before his appointment, and perhaps afterwards, was not an efficient officer. The Government thought the complaints made were sufficient to warrant an enquiry. For my part, I am sorry that there should have been complaints against Dr. Duchesneau. I will take this opportunity to say to the hon. member for Terrebonne, that the same policy that existed when he was in the Government, with regard to officers appointed by our opponents, still exists. We stand by that policy. We stood the other day by that policy against the wishes of a number of our friends. The officer in question was protected; he is still in office and will remain there, unless he should do anything to warrant his dismissal. As long as officials conduct themselves properly, they will not be disturbed, no matter by whom appointed. I have no doubt the papers will show that politics had nothing to do with the action of the Government in this matter.

Mr. DESJARDINS said he had a word of explanation to say to the hon. member for Laval, who appeared not to have perfectly understood his (Mr. Desjardins) remarks. He had not the intention of attacking in any way the merits of the last report on which the dismissal of Dr. Duchesneau was based. One of the great causes of the evil that existed now was due to the fact that the penitentiary was under the immediate control of the Minister of Justice, who could not attend to the management of this institution; and until a board of directors be named to control its affairs, every year will see the same inconveniences and complaints arise.

Mr. LAURIER. It is evident from all that has been said here up to the present time, that it is premature to discuss the dismissal of Dr. Duchesneau at this juncture; in my opinion, it is doing an injustice to Dr. Duchesneau to speak of his dismissal, and to seek to justify it in the manner that the hon. member for Laval seeks to do. Simple justice requires that before condemning him, the documents upon which the Government decided to dismiss him should be laid before the House; in my opinion, the hon. member for Laval had no right to speak of Dr. Duchesneau as he has done, and if I take the hon. member for Laval literally at his word, I am obliged to believe that he has been misinformed with regard to the greater number of charges he has brought against Dr. Duchesneau, because he has been misinformed in the case of at least one charge that he has preferred against him. Among other things, the hon. member for Laval has accused Dr. Duchesneau of dismissing a certain number of minor officials because they had conspired to bring about the dismissal of the surgeon of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. If I have well understood the words of the hon. member for Laval—and I believe I am not mistaken—he charged Dr. Duchesneau with having at a certain date, to wit, after the investigation held in the matter by Mr. Moylan, dismissed these officials out of revenge, whilst under the influence of a feeling of his responsibility towards the Government. Now, I say that the hon. member for Laval has been misinformed on this point, and I may conclude that, if he has been misinformed in one case, he has been misinformed in other cases. When I say that he has been misinformed, I can prove it by the report of Messrs. Taché and Miall, because in the report made by these gentlemen, instead of charging Dr. Duchesneau with dismissing these minor officials, as the hon. member for Laval pretends—

Mr. OUMET. Dr. Duchesneau dismissed those employees the day after the adoption of the report—the moment he had heard of its adoption.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, then, if he did so, it was at the suggestion of the Commissioners. This is what the report says:

"In connection with this subject, we think it our duty to mention an occurrence which took place some time ago, in which three or four under-officers allowed themselves, as it were, to be enlisted into a sort of conspiracy against the superior officers of the institution; the medical attendant; and at the request of a party outside the walls of the penitentiary, they were induced to sign communications conveying unfounded charges and false statements in regard to this physician, which they themselves afterwards admitted to be such. Upon their admission of guilt, they were, through the generous pardon of the person thus offended against, retained by the warden, and are reported by him to have, since that date, given no cause of complaint. We could not pass by the incident unnoticed, or without recording our condemnation of an offence which, being in its nature a grave moral wrong, showed, at the same time, on the part of the wrong-doers, a fatal want of proper esprit de corps which should animate a body of men who, above all others, have to rely, sometimes in the face of great perils, upon the honest dealings towards and generous help of each other. Notwithstanding the generosity of the superior officer in overlooking and freely pardoning those implicated we doubt the wisdom of retaining in position men who had proved themselves so utterly recreant to even the commonest decencies of social intercourse."

Well, if Dr. Duchesneau dismissed those four minor officials the day after the report was adopted, that is no reason to condemn him, he is not to be blamed for it to-day, because in doing so he was simply carrying out the wish of the Commissioners appointed by the Government.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I do not rise for the purpose of justifying the action of the Government in this matter. I prefer to let the papers, when produced, speak for themselves. I simply rise to notice, briefly, some of the observations made by my hon. friend, the member for Terrebonne (Mr. Masson). It is quite true I was aware that the hon. gentleman was a friend of the late warden of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary—that is a friend in the sense of having sustained an officer in whom he had confidence, as regards his integrity and competence. But I think Dr. Duchesneau did not require the strong arm of anybody, much less that of my hon. friend, to encircle him while an officer of that institution. So far as I was concerned, he had, as a public officer, the entire confidence of myself, the head of the department, and in this respect was fully sustained; and, so far as I am aware, he also enjoyed the confidence of the only officer of the department having any official intercourse with the institution. I never allowed, at any one time, or under any circumstances, any political relations of Dr. Duchesneau—in fact, so far as I have learned anything of them; it has been from the member for Terrebonne himself—to influence my action. I knew nothing whatever of those relations. I found he discharged his functions with credit, integrity and ability, and I gave him the confidence which, as head of the department, I was bound to extend; and I will undertake to say that I believe, if he were appealed to, he would confirm my statement. But, no matter what the character of such an officer may be, or in what position he may stand, when charges are made of a character affecting his relation with the institution over which he presides, and which may be of a personal character, as well no matter what confidence he may enjoy—I believe it my duty to take the course I did in this case, to make an enquiry, to ascertain whether the allegations made by respectable authority are well founded or not. That was the course I took, and I submit it was a proper and just one. Then the result of the proceedings taken in consequence of that determination on my part was of such a character that, without saying one word reflecting on Dr. Duchesneau, as to render it expedient that he should no longer continue in his office, I shall gladly, at the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition, lay the papers on the Table at the earliest moment. They are very voluminous, however, and I shall be obliged, in order to give the House an opportunity of investigating this question this Session, to bring down the original papers, rather than spend time making copies. I entirely concur in the observation of the hon. gentleman, as to the responsibility attaching to the head of the department in relation to the discipline and power which a warden of such an institution ought to exercise in all cases, and in regard to his subordinates in the penitentiary. The law casts upon him the onus, the responsibility of appointing a large number of the guardians and other officers of the institution. I quite concur with the leader of the Opposition that in no sense ought the authority of the warden to be interfered with, and that, being given to understand he is held strictly responsible on account of those officers, their appointment, and dismissal, and censure, whatever course he thought proper, he should be allowed to pursue. On that principle I have acted since I accepted my present position, and I quite agree with the hon. gentleman as to what the law and the proper administration of the department in this respect requires at my hands.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman and the Government are exercising proper prudence in abstain-ing from giving the House any indication of their opinion of the merits of this controversy. But it must occur to the House that it was a very painful position for a gentleman—who, at least, was respected, judging from statements during this discussion—till lately, to find himself in, that circumstances should seem to have been disclosed which warranted his dismissal. It is, at all events, a misfortune to that gentleman that some time must necessarily elapse before the country will be in a position to judge of the circumstances of his dismissal. It is not for me to express any views on the merits of the question, unless, perhaps, to speak of my deep regret that Dr. Duchesneau should be placed in his present position before the country. If I had absolute confidence in the professions of the hon. Minister who sits opposite me, that nothing but a strict regard for the administration of public affairs ever influence him in his action, I might feel unhappy at the thought that Dr. Duchesneau was ruined. If I did not know the circumstances in this case, I might accept the conclusion that he must be guilty of some unfortunate criminal act that made it necessary to discharge him. But I know that it sometimes happens that peculiar pressure comes upon Ministers from the Province of Quebec, compelling them to make dismissals sometimes even against their own will, and that they are not very buoyant, hopeful and enthusiastic in defence of their position. I think the House and the public may fairly hold in abeyance their judgment upon this particular case until the papers are before us. Having listened to the member for Laval, who charges Dr. Duchesneau with having stated at St. Vincent de Paul that he thought the member for Terrebonne would protect him, I think this is the chief offence mentioned. It may be possible, however, that the House and country will take a different view of this gentleman's conduct in the matter, from that of the hon. gentleman. For myself, speaking from my knowledge of the member for Terrebonne, I have confidence in his ability, integrity and justice, and that he would have said at any time to this Government, in case of unfair attacks on any officer, that he would not join in them. I would not have considered the doctor's remark any crime, because it simply showed the confidence in the member for Terrebonne that everybody would have expressed. After listening to the hon. gentleman's remarks, including those respecting a former investigation, and the motives which induced him to shield Dr. Duchesneau, under a sense of the position in which he stood—because he was not a partizan of hon. gentlemen on the Ministerial side—I confess that, while not prepared to pronounce a judgment upon what has happened—yet, knowing the influences that prevail in my Province, and the disposition, I think the unfair disposition noticed in it, towards political opponents—and having listened to what the hon. gentleman said as to his motives for doing what he did—I should say to the House, and to those interested in the welfare of the penitentiary and of the service, we may fairly wait a little before coming to a conclusion, apprehensive, at the same time, of discovering another instance of the dismissal of a gentleman through the pressure of persons opposed to his political opinions.

VENTILATION OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ROCHESTER moved that a Committee be appointed to investigate and thoroughly examine into the method of ventilating the Parliament Buildings, and also the source whence fresh air is brought into the buildings, and as to their sanitary condition generally, and that the said Committee have power to send for persons and papers, and sit during the recess and to examine into systems of ventilation and hygiene adopted elsewhere, and also to recommend to the Government to appropriate such amount as may be deemed necessary for carrying out a thorough plan of ventilation of the whole buildings; and that the following gentlemen compose the Committee, namely: Messrs. Plumb, Orton, Charlton and Grandbois; and that a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that their honors will unite with this House in the formation of a Joint Committee on the subject. He said: In making this motion I may say that I believe that the majority of the hon. members of this House agree with me in thinking that some change should be made in the ventilation of this building, though there will no doubt be a difference of opinion as to the means which should be adopted to bring about this change. I think there were some statements made in the report of the engineer in charge of these buildings, which was presented by the Minister of Public Works the other day, that were not exactly correct. In this room there are, I believe, some half-a-dozen thermometers placed within five or six feet of the floor; the object in placing them there being to maintain a uniform temperature throughout the room of from 60° to 62°. The great trouble is, however, that while the temperature of the air may be uniform where the thermometers are hung, a cold draught of air often circulates on the floor, when this House and the galleries are crowded, as they frequently are. In this respect at least the ventilation seems to be defective. As I am neither a mechanical nor a civil engineer, I do not pretend to suggest a remedy, but I certainly think it is time a change is made; for if one-half or one-fourth the statements which are made by eminent scientific men on this subject are correct, we must be suffering fearfully from the effects of the bad atmosphere. The engineer of the buildings states that he can remove the air from this room and replace it in 17 minutes. I do not say that this cannot be done, but I very much doubt it. I may say that since putting this notice on the paper I have had a conversation with the Minister of Public Works, who informs me that it was the intention of the Government to place a sum in the Estimates for the purpose of securing the better ventilation of the Chamber, and under those circumstances I have no desire to press my motion. I wish to remark, however, that in 1872 or 1873 a Committee was appointed upon this very subject, and though its recommendations were ignored, I have been told by members of that Committee that had the changes they suggested been carried into effect a very great improvement would have taken place. The Government may rest assured that not only among the members of this House, but among those who throng the galleries to listen to the discussions, the impression is wide-spread that the illness of so many members of the House is due largely to the defective ventilation of the building. I have no doubt that, as an hon. gentleman hinted the other day, there may be some other circumstances which, perhaps, may cause the illness of some hon. members, but I have equally little doubt that the bad ventilation has something to do with the matter.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I have just a few words to say in regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Carleton. I do not think that his motion is in order; but, apart from that, I may say that the necessary means are being taken and will continue to be taken to secure the best possible ventilation of this building. As I stated to the hon. gentleman, it is the intention of the Government to ask a vote of money from Parliament to help us in doing that. I must say that our efforts have been mainly confined to the ventilation of this room, and that the corridors and lobbies and the large rooms in the building have not been properly ventilated. As I stated the other day, they were arranged for another order of things, and Confederation having taken place and the number of members having been nearly doubled, a change is required in the disposition and ventilation of the building. Our intention is to do that. I do not think that a Committee could do much more than the scientific men whom we will have to employ to render us assistance. Under these circumstances the House may rest assured that the Government will do all they possibly can to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen.

Mr. COCKBURN (Muskoka). I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that it is not alone the ventilation which is at fault. We in this corner of the room have, perhaps, a different experience from other hon. members, but whenever a wind blows from the north-west we feel a cold draught strong enough to quench a candle. I am inclined to think that the late member for Carlton, N.B. (Mr. Connell), fell a victim to that draught. This is a question which, aside from the ventilation of the Chamber, the hon. Minister of Public Works should take into consideration.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I am glad the hon. gentleman has given me the hint; but, as he knows, I have not power to restrain the winds, and if he feels the force of the north-west wind in his corner, I can assure him that we here have reason to complain of the wind from the south-east. Although the matter is a difficult one to regulate we will do the best we can. We cannot have perfect ventilation in the House without more or less draught, so that hon. gentlemen will have to submit to some little inconvenience in that respect, though we will endeavor to reduce the draught to a minimum.

Mr. COCKBURN. I cannot accept the explanation of the hon. gentleman, for I cannot see why this Chamber cannot be ventilated without draughts, if private residences can be so regulated.

Motion withdrawn.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. BLAKE moved for a statement of the dates of the following proceedings with reference to each election to the House of Commons which has been followed by a petition under either of the Acts, for the trial of Controverted Elections before Judges:—1. Date of polling; 2. Of return; 3. Of publication in Gazette of return; 4. Of filing petition; 5. Of service thereof; 6. Of answer thereto; 7. Of commencement of trial; 8. Of termination of trial with a statement of the number of days actually occupied therein; 9. Of delivery of judgment; 10. Of transmission of judgment to proper officer; 11. Of Speaker's action thereon; 12. Of first proceeding in appeal; 13. Of setting down for appeal; 14. Of day for which the appeal was set down; 15. Of commencement of hearing of appeal; 16. Of conclusion thereof; 17. Of delivery of judgment, in appeal; 18. Of transmission thereof to proper officer; 19. Of Speaker's action thereon, together with like information as to any appeals which were not final. He said: There has doubtless been an improvement in point of the time at which election trials have been concluded since the passing of the two Controverted Elections Acts which have been placed upon the Statute-book. Nevertheless, I think it will be generally agreed that there is considerable room for reform in the way of expediting the decision of these trials. A very marked contrast exists in this particular between what we have been able to accomplish and what has been accomplished under the English Act. We have hardly received the news of the polling at the late British election before we began to receive account of members who were unseated. Trials followed very shortly after the polling, and the decisions almost immediately upon the trials. I think that both with reference to the trial before the Court of first instance, and also with reference to the procedure in appeal, there is room for reform. It is true that the law provides in a marked manner, that it shall be the duty of the Judge to prosecute these proceedings with rapidity, but there are some defects in the regulations, or in the practice under them, which has resulted in a very dilatory proceeding in many cases. I think that legislation upon this subject, which will probably take place to some extent on other points before the close of this Parliament, might be well preceded by a return such as that I have moved for, which will give us the dates of the various proceedings that have taken place, and the practical working of the Act in this regard.

Motion agreed to.

GRADUATES OF THE MILITARY COLLEGE.

Mr. BLAKE moved for a statement of the names of the graduates of the Military College holding first-class and of those holding second-class certificates obtained in the last annual examination; of the names of those who have gone into the British army; of the names of those who have been employed by the Canadian Government; of the names of those who have left Canada for the United States, and of the residences and occupations of the remainder, so far as ascertainable. He said: As far as I understand there were some fourteen persons who obtained first and second-class certificates at the Military College at the last examinations. From such information as I have been able to get, I believe four of these have left our shores and joined the British army. I have been told that two at least have gone to the United States. I am not aware that any hold positions under this Government, although I believe there have been several applications for situations in the Civil Service. I think it important that we should know, as far as we can, the situations of those to whom we have given this very good general and technical education at this institution, and it is with that view I ask for this information.

Mr. CARON. I shall be glad, indeed, to bring down all the information which is in the possession of the department on the point referred to by the hon. leader of the Opposition. Four of the successful competitors at the examination have been recommended for admission into the British army in those posts which the British Government placed at the disposal of the Canadian Government. Of course, information concerning these can be easily obtained. As to information concerning the cadets who have left Canada for the United States, it may not be in the power of the department to furnish it, but such as we can obtain will be placed at the disposal of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. I venture to suggest to the hon. gentleman that it would be well to make such arrangements as are practicable, with the consent of the cadets, for obtaining such information in the future. If we are giving these persons this excellent training for a particular purpose, it is just as well that we should know their whereabouts afterwards, in case we wanted to call upon them.

Motion agreed to.

CASCUMPEC HARBOR.

Mr. HACKETT moved for copy of engineer's report of survey made at Cascumpec Harbor, Prince County, Prince Edward Island, during the summer of 1880, with a view to improving said harbor, together with copies of all letters and other correspondence received by the Department of Public Works since the 1st February, 1880, having reference to the same subject. He said: This harbor is a very important one, and is the only harbor of refuge on the north side of Prince Edward Island. Some years ago this harbor would admit vessels of a heavy draft of water, but owing to the formation of sand there at the present time, vessels drawing nine or ten feet of water cannot enter. This is a great evil for that part of the country. Any person who is acquainted with the north side of Prince Edward Island, will understand that when vessels are caught in a storm by the north-east winds, not having a harbor of refuge in which to go, they are driven ashore. During the last few years great loss of property has occurred and serious loss of life. Since 1875, eight or ten vessels have been lost owing to their not being a suitable harbor of refuge; they were driven ashore, and vessels and crews were both lost. This matter was brought to the notice of the Government during the late Administration, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who then represented Queen's County, Prince Edward Island, spoke in reference to the matter as follows:—

"Years ago, vessels ran to that harbor for shelter, but now, the water was so shallow that not above three or four vessels a year sheltered there. The whole of the trade of that district had been destroyed, ships had been lost there and all hands drowned within the last few years, and something should be done for this harbor."

This was the opinion of the hon. gentleman in 1878. Unless something is done soon for the improvement of this harbor, the trade of that part of Prince Edward Island will amount to little or nothing. It is the western terminus of the Prince Edward Island Railway, and it is the only point west of Summerside where a deep water harbor can be had. American fishermen, who carry on their business on the northern side of the Island, might make use of the harbor very largely for shelter in case of storm and for landing their cargo, and thus the harbor, if improved, would be a great source of revenue. There is a sand bar at the mouth of the harbor, which is continually shifting, and something should be done to concentrate it and thus deepen the water. Thirty or forty years ago two outlets were cut in this bar, and the flow of water through the main channel was consequently greatly reduced; but it is the opinion of engineers that the closing of these two outlets would be sufficient to deepen the water. There is a rock bar within and not very far from the sand bar, and I believe the engineer has reported in favor of blasting that, thus removing it and increasing the depth of the water. At the early part of the Session I had strong hopes that some provision would be made in the Estimates for the improvement of this harbor, and I am very much disappointed that nothing has been done. This is not merely a local matter, but one concerning the whole trade and navigation of the Dominion, as it is well known that the fisheries on the north shore of Prince Edward Island are very valuable, and that vessels from all parts of the Maritime Provinces prosecute their business there and would use this harbor. In the interests of the fishing industry of the Maritime Provinces, of humanity, in the saving of life, and of the trade of the northern part of Prince Edward Island, I hope an appropriation will be put in the Supplementary Estimates for the improvement of that harbor.

Mr. POPE (Queen's). There is no doubt that this harbor is a very important one. It was formerly frequented by American fishing schooners, as it is the only harbor on the north side of the island except one which schooners could enter. As the fishing schooners are larger and have a greater draft of water than formerly, it is not safe for them now to enter that harbor, owing to the sea breaking over the bars. There are two bars there—the outer being a sand bar with about 9 feet of water, and the inner a rock bar with about 12 feet of water. There is very little use of dredging the sand bar, because it is a sort of quicksand which shifts at every storm. Two or three channels have been cut through that sand bar, and there is not as much water running through the main channel, or the same scour that there used to be. If these channels were closed, and the water were driven through the main channel, I am satisfied, from the experience of the past, that there would be plenty of water there. I do not think it would be sufficient to cut away the rock, as the outer bar is a mile beyond it. I do not know whether the Minister of Public Works will see his way clear to putting an amount in the Estimates this year for this work, although I should be very glad if he would do so. I hope, however, that he will endeavor to ascertain from the highest authority what are the best means of improving the harbor, as I should not like to see any money expended unless it would result in some good.

Mr. LANGEVIN. This matter has not been forgotten by myself or my colleagues. We would have certainly forgotten our duty if we had lost sight of this matter, because the hon. gentleman brought it several times to my notice. Whatever good will we may have, we cannot, however, do everything in one year. We have to see what are the works called for in the different parts of the Dominion, and then decide which of these works should be undertaken now, and which delayed. Under the circumstances, this harbor, though I understand the importance of the work, may have to stand over, though I am not in a position to say to-day it will have to stand over until next year. We may be in a position to ask Parliament in the Supplementary Estimates for a vote for this; nevertheless, I cannot promise that, first, because it would not be my duty to do so before the matter was laid before the Council, and, secondly, because I have no right to anticipate the vote of the House, though the matter will be looked into again.

COLCHESTER LIGHT-SHIP.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex), in moving for copies of all telegrams and correspondence relative to the loss of the Colchester Light-ship and to the application of the owners of the said light-ship for indemnity, said this light-ship had been stationed at Colchester Reef, which is the most dangerous point in our inland navigation from Kingston to Thunder Bay. The light-ship owners were originally paid by the underwriters and shipowners interested in the inland navigation; but of late years that source of income had entirely ceased, and some nine years ago the Dominion Government gave the owners $500 per year, for some years, as indemnity. Three or four years ago that amount was increased to $700. It is contemplated now to build a lighthouse on that reef at a cost of $20,000, which, at 4 per cent. interest, would entail an expenditure of $800 a year. The services of the men employed will cost $800 to $1,000 more, which, with the other necessities for oil, &c., will raise the amount to about $2,000 a year; while the owners of this light-ship, which is to be replaced by the lighthouse, received, at the highest rate, but $700 a year from the Government for the same service. During the severe gales at the beginning of the winter, the officers in charge of the light-ship, telegraphed the hon. Minister of Marine, asking permission to withdraw. They received an answer notifying them to remain at their post. The consequence was the light-ship was driven from her position by the ice, the men were rescued with difficulty by a passing steamer, the vessel was cut in two by an ice shove and went to the bottom. These men who lost their vessel in the Government service ask for some indemnity for their loss. All they received from the Dominion for the last three or four years was $700 per year, out of which they had to furnish stores, oil and other necessities to rig out their ship. In November last when I first heard this light-ship had gone adrift, I telegraphed down to the Department of Marine to authorize the employment of a tug to go to the rescue of the vessel. Had that authority been given the vessel would have been rescued at a cost of $150 or $200, but the department did not consider it was justified in spending any money to rescue the property they had chartered and to save the men who had served the interests of the department so faithfully for a long period of years.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The following Bills were considered in Committee and reported:—

Bill (No. 7) to incorporate the Wrecking and Salvage Company of Canada.—(Mr. Gault.)

Mr. POPE (Queen's).

Bill (No. 15) to incorporate the Metropolitan Fire Insurance Company of Canada.—(Mr. Beatty.)

Bill (No. 34) to incorporate the Dominion Salvage and Wrecking Company, with which has been amalgamated Bill (No. 22) to incorporate "The St. Lawrence Wrecking and Salvage Company of Canada."—(Mr. Girouard, Jacques Cartier.)

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 21) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)

(In the Committee.)

On clause 4,

Mr. WALLACE (Norfolk) moved in amendment that the third and fourth lines of the word "vote" in the fifth line be stricken out, and the following substituted in lieu thereof: "sanctioned by the votes of a majority of each class of shareholders of said company affected thereby." He said that it would be unfair to legislate away the rights of the people without giving a chance of consenting.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK said that this amendment had been discussed in the Railway Committee where it had been rejected. The proposed Bill was simply intended to clear up some doubts which had arisen since 1873 with regard to the payment of dividends upon the preference stock of the company. It would be giving the third preference stockholders the right of saying what dividends should be paid to the first and second stockholders. They would be giving them a most unfair advantage. The Bill had been very fully considered in Committee, and the promoter of this Bill had stated that he could not accept the amendment now proposed.

Mr. WALLACE said they were not legislating for the Bill, and if the Bill passed in its present shape a gross injustice would be done to the third preference stockholders.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK raised the point of order that no amendment could be proposed to any Private Bill in Committee of the Whole House, or on the third reading of the Bill, unless one day's notice of the same was given. No notice having been given of this amendment, he submitted that it was not in order.

The CHAIRMAN sustained the point of order.

Bill reported.

CORDWOOD ON THE ST. FRANCIS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 2) to regulate the floating of cordwood on the navigable portion of the River St. Francis.—(Mr. Vanasse.)

Bill reported with amendments and concurred in.

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bills were read a second time:—

Bill (No. 16) to explain and amend the Act to authorize the transfer of the Windsor branch of the Nova Scotia Railway to the Western Counties Railway Company.—(Mr. Cameron, Victoria.)

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate "The Montreal Board of Trade and Exchange" (from the Senate).—(Mr. Girouard, Jacques Cartier.)

WRONGS TO CHILDREN PREVENTION BILL.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 46) to prevent and punish wrongs to children.—(Mr. Richey.)

Mr. McCARTHY said he thought the Bill should only apply to wire-walking, dancing, and things of that kind. He did not think that playing musical instruments should be made a misdemeanor.

Mr. RICHEY said he was not willing to abandon the tenth clause because it really provided the only means by which the Bill could be carried into effect.

Bill reported.

WORKSHOPS REGULATION BILL.

Mr. BERGIN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 6) to regulate the hours of labor in the workshops, mills and factories of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. CAMERON (South Huron). The House ought to have some explanation of this Bill before it receives its second reading. It contains about 200 clauses, some of them involving very important and difficult questions. A Bill of this kind ought to receive some consideration before going to its second reading.

Mr. PLUMB. This Bill was brought before Parliament last year, and my hon. friend, who is a professional gentleman, if he has any objections to this Bill, should have been prepared to make them now. I think it is unfair to the hon. gentleman who presented the Bill, which is avowedly for philanthropic purposes, to be met at the outset by such a captious objection. I believe this Bill to be in the interest of humanity and morality, and consequently in the best interest of the country. I do not know whether my hon. friend from Cornwall intends to press his Bill, but I may say that I am perfectly in accord with its general principles, and when the time comes to advocate that Bill, and to ask Parliament to pass it, my hon. friend will find me at his side ready to assist him in giving effect to the philanthropic object with which he has brought in this Bill.

Mr. LANGEVIN. This Bill is a very lengthy one and will require a great deal of consideration. No doubt the hon. gentleman himself has given to this matter a great deal of consideration, and he desires great credit for having brought it before Parliament. But I think that a measure of this kind ought first to be referred to a Committee, with power to send for persons and papers, and an enquiry into this matter will be a lengthy and a very costly one. It is, nevertheless, a matter that requires investigation, and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will feel that, having done his duty in bringing the matter before Parliament, and considering the late period of the Session, he may now allow it to stand over till next year. In the meantime, the Government will be prepared during recess to name a Commission of enquiry, to obtain the necessary data and information, so as to be able next Session to meet Parliament, either with a Bill, or at all events, to co-operate with the hon. gentleman when he brings this or a modified measure before Parliament.

Mr. BERGIN. The object for which I introduced this Bill has, to a certain extent, been accomplished by the remarks that have fallen from the hon. the Minister of Public Works. The early part of the Session was taken up entirely by the Pacific Railway discussion; and it was only within a few weeks that it was possible to reach a measure of this kind. The Government looked upon it as so important and deserving so much consideration that, at their instance, I postponed from day to day bringing forward this measure, a measure that I looked upon as essentially in the interest of this country. I accept the suggestion of the Government with the greatest pleasure, because I feel that there is very great force in the remarks made by the hon. the Minister of Public Works. He has pointed out what must be patent to everybody in this House that, at this late period of the Session, it would be impossible to bring witnesses here and enquire thoroughly into the question during the short period that remains to us. I am sure the House will learn with the greatest pleasure, as I do, of the intention of the Government during the recess to institute an enquiry into this question, and if it be found, as I hope it will be found, that there is no great necessity for this legislation, why, Sir, we, who have been laboring under the idea that it was necessary, will feel great relief. If, on the other hand, it be found that I have been correct in my belief that there is necessity for this legislation, then we shall be able to legislate next Session intelligently. It is always well that in legislating for the future we should look into the past, and that legislation should be preceded by an enquiry. I concur heartily with the Government in their suggestion, and under all the circumstances I consent to withdraw the Bill.

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 9) for the better securing the Independence of Parliament and for the prevention of corruption, said, the object of the Bill is simply this: We have very recently decided on creating a corporation of a very remarkable character. To this corporation we have given privileges and powers such as have never been given to any corporation I have heard or read of before. There are certain obvious and plain reasons which are contingent on the granting to any such body of such powers as we have bestowed upon it, and these reasons, in my judgment, greatly intensified by the fact that the corporation we have created is really and truly in the main a foreign corporation, or so intimately connected with a foreign corporation, that I am justified in describing it as such. And, moreover, it is quite within the power of the persons possessed of that charter to hand over to foreigners all the franchises, powers and privileges which have been granted to them. Under these circumstances, and bearing in mind that there will, in all human probability, arise conflicts of interest between the people of Canada and the corporators, I feel that it would be only just and proper on our part to attach certain serious pains and penalties to the abuse of their powers by any of these corporators, as other corporations have been known before to do, and attempt to use the very powers which this Parliament has entrusted to them, for the purpose of corrupting or interfering with the course of legislation in this country. Due precautions are undoubtedly needed in a case of this kind. Existing precautions have proved futile. Were I so disposed, which at present I am not, to revert to our past history, I could produce evidence to show that even in Canada such risks and dangers have not been altogether unknown. But I prefer, in order to present the matter fairly before the House, to refer to the proofs derived from the experience of the neighboring Republic, as to what practices such corporations had been in the habit of indulging in. In 1873 the New York Legislature caused a Commission to be issued for the purpose of investigating the proceedings of the various railroad corporations carrying on business in that country. Here is an extract from the report of that Commission, in which they refer in particular to the doings of the somewhat notorious Erie Railway. A report of a Committee of the same Legislature appointed in 1879, remarks:

"It is further in evidence that it has been the custom of the managers of the Erie Railway, from year to year in the past, to spend large sums to control elections and to influence legislation. In the year 1868 more than one million ($1,000,000) was disbursed from the Treasury for 'extra and legal services.' For interesting items see Mr. Watson's testimony, page 336 and 337.

"Mr. Gould, when last on the stand, and examined in relation to various vouchers shown him, admitted the payment during the three years prior to 1872 of large sums to Barber, Tweed, and others, and to influence legislation or elections; these amounts were charged in the 'India-rubber account.' The memory of the witness was very defective as to details, and he could only remember large transactions; but could distinctly recall that he had been in the habit of sending money into the numerous districts all over the State, either to control nominations or elections for Senators and members of Assembly. Considered that, as a rule, such investments paid better than to wait till the men got to Albany, and added the significant remark, when asked a question, that it would be as impossible to specify the numerous instances as it would to recall to mind the numerous freight-cars sent over the Erie road from day to day."

The report concludes in these words:

"It is not reasonable to suppose that the Erie Railway has been alone in the corrupt use of money for the purposes named; but the sudden revolution of the direction of this company has laid bare a chapter in the secret history of railroad management such as has not been permitted before. It exposes the reckless and prodigal use of money, wrung from the people to purchase the election of the people's representatives, and to bribe them when in office. According to Mr. Gould, his operations extended into four different States. It was his custom to contribute money to influence both nominations and elections."

A report of a Committee of the same Legislature appointed in 1879, remarks:

"The political influence of these corporations should be understood. Not less than 30,000 voters are in the direct employ of the railroads of this State—a number sufficient to have turned the scale in any election in recent years. These employees are doubtless divided in political sentiments, yet in times like the past and the present the question of remunerative employment is of paramount importance to the individual employed as compared with the success of either party. The political sentiments of corporations have been aptly and truly described by a prominent railway man who testified: 'In a republican district I was republican, in a democratic district I was democrat, in a doubtful district I was doubtful; but I was always Erie.' The possible exercise of this most political power, direct and indirect, not to discuss its exercise in the past, seems to your Committee an unanswerable argument in favor of instituting governmental supervision of railroads and holding them in their management to a strict accountability."

Now, Sir, this House has chosen to create a gigantic corporation and to confer upon it most gigantic powers. I propose that a broad and clear line of demarcation shall be placed between ourselves acting as representatives of the country and the shareholders and directors of this great corporation. I would have them forbidden under very severe penalties having any dealings of any kind, much more to contribute or assist in any kind of way for political purposes, or forward the elections of members of this Legislature or of Local Legislatures. The penalties which I propose by this Bill to inflict upon them are briefly these: Whereas a corporation in their corporate capacity, they should be proved guilty of such practices as those, I would have their charter forfeited. Where in their individual capacity, whether it be as shareholders or directors or officers of the company, they should presume to interfere in any way with the elections of members of this House or any Local Legislature, then I would have them punished directly and personally by imprisonment, by the forfeiture of their stock; or if any other measure appears more desirable to the hon. gentleman, I will be only too willing to receive their suggestions and incorporate them in the Bill. While as regards members of the Legislature, I would render them liable under heavy penalties, and this should apply not merely while they were members of the Legislature, but for a considerable period after they had ceased to be members. The time I have not ventured to specify, but I consider a period of not less than three or five years after a man ceased to be a member of a Legislative body by no means too long a period in such a case as I have described to punish them, should they receive any gift or donation from such Company. Now, as to the probable effect of such a measure. The House must remember in all such cases detection is necessarily very difficult, and we must have regard not merely to the gravity of the crime, which is a very grave one, but also to the difficulties which surround the detection of crime in such cases. One thing is certain, were the House to adopt such suggestions as are embraced in the Bill, they might rest tolerably certain that neither the corporation, nor the shareholders, nor the officers of the corporation would be likely to make themselves liable to such penalties as I have described. They would, moreover, and it is not an entirely insignificant feature in the case, have a very excellent excuse for refusing to contribute should they be solicited. A case can readily be imagined, when the corporation having to receive great benefits from the Government or Parliament, and considering that, perhaps, it has very important questions to be voted upon, questions in which they have great interests at stake, they would find it very difficult, unless some such penalties were provided, to refuse a hint or request conveyed to them by men who had the power of granting them very important concessions or refusing them very important favors. The point to which I suppose most objection might be taken is that with respect to the forfeiture of the company's charter. I might remind the House that we already, according to law, at any rate, have the power of forfeiting their charters, as, for instance, in the case of banks, if they transgress the conditions on which they are allowed to carry on their business. I might add, too, that in case—which is not only possible but may easily happen—of this Corporation transferring its whole stock to parties resident in a foreign country, and they having the power to carry on their business in a city situated outside of our territories, the forfeiture of the charter is the only effective punishment we could inflict on such a body. I look upon the question of dealings by the Legislature with great corporations, and particularly with great railway corporations, as our own experience and the history of the United States and other countries show, to be fraught with new dangers of which we had formerly very little experience; and, therefore, I propose, as we have departed from precedent in creating such a company, we should deal with them in a mode which up to the present time has not been found necessary or expedient to deal with other corporations that might come before us. For these reasons, and not desiring at this late stage of the Session to enter into any long explanation as to the details of the Bill, I beg to move the second reading.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman, who wishes that the Pacific Railway Company should not be at any time in a position to contribute to the election expenses of any member of this Parliament or of the Local Legislatures, has not thought proper to extend the operations of such Bill to all companies. Why should he select this Company especially, instead of other companies? There are larger companies now existing in this country, and new ones are seeking incorporation. Why should not the hon. gentleman have made those companies subject to the same provisions? I do not think the Pacific Railway Company has done anything to subject it to the suspicion that the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) wants to throw upon it. That Company has acted in the most fair way; they have dealt with the Government in the manner which any respectable company would deal with it; they came down, stated their terms, which were discussed by the Government and laid before Parliament. The body was incorporated by an immense majority of both Houses of Parliament; nevertheless, the hon. member for Centre Huron comes down and wants to throw suspicion on it. I must say it is an insult to the Company and to the Parliament that incorporated it. I will not enter into the details of the measure. The best way to meet the hon. gentleman, under the circumstances, is to move an amendment. I now beg to move:

"That the Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months."

Mr. PLUMB. I did not suppose that the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) would venture, in view of the recollections which are within the memory of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, to bring forward such a Bill and introduce it into Parliament. But the hon. gentleman lacks one peculiar quality which, I think, would add very much to his influence as a member of Parliament

He has no sense of humor. If he had, he would probably remember the discussion that took place in 1877, in this House, on violations by hon. gentlemen very high in position on his side of the House, of the Act for securing the independence of Parliament, resolutions so gross that they rang through the country; and when these gentlemen were arraigned by Parliament, a Bill was brought in for the whitewashing of these gentlemen. One of the first to vote on that Act was the hon. gentleman. That hon. gentleman has told us that Gould and Vanderbilt are the proprietors of railways in the United States, and through their means and influence have purchased members of Congress. The hon. gentleman, through his own conscience, places so low an estimate on the morality of the representatives of the Canadian people, that he thinks they are the creatures of railway corporations, and may be purchased by men such as Gould and Vanderbilt. The hon. gentleman in this opinion insults every gentleman who sits in this House. He says he wishes to draw a hard and clear line between ourselves and those who may come here for parliamentary aid. The hon. gentleman had nothing to say in that discussion in the last Parliament, where he was a leading spirit, one of the foremost members of the Government, and when the leading members had been convicted of the grossest violations of the Act of Parliament. He never raised his voice when the indignation of the country was aroused at the gross violations of the independence of Parliament—violations so gross that it was necessary for the Government to bring in a whitewashing Bill to prevent these gentlemen being ruined by the fines they had incurred. He did not raise even a feeble note of dissent at the acts of the hon. gentlemen who then occupied the place of arbitrator between the feeble minority and the great majority—acts of violation so gross that the Minister of Justice had no argument to bring in favor of that hon. gentleman, except that the Act of Parliament provided that anyone who had a contract with the Government, who was receiving money from the Government, who was its subsidiary, was no longer a member of Parliament, and that the very day he became a contractor, his seat was vacated—thus begging the question because that hon. gentleman who was proved to have been a recipient of Government money, sat in the Speaker's chair and dispensed justice between the powerful majority on the one side and the feeble minority on the other. I regret the hon. gentleman has compelled this side of the House, in dealing with his Bill, to bring up his record against him. Now the hon. gentleman says that it is in his interest, and that of the feeble minority he represents, to insinuate that the majority of this House may become in some way or other amenable to some possible violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. By the hon. gentleman's speech, he insults every man that sits in the House of Commons. With regard to the Independence of Parliament Act, I may say that the legislation of 1877 showed that when hon. gentlemen opposite were on the Ministerial side of the House, it was perfectly possible to violate that Act and to be whitewashed afterwards. That Act stands on the record now weakened by the Act of the majority in 1877. So far as originally that Act had force, it was enough. It provided there could be no possible interest given to any member of Parliament in anything outside of what he might legitimately do as a member of Parliament, but what would vacate his seat. But we saw that a Parliament under the rule of the Reform party was packed with contractors. We saw, then, sitting here, many members who owed their particular interest to the fact that they held existing contracts with the Government. How could they vote or be expected to express an independent opinion upon any matter brought in by a Government subsidizing them day by day? We, of the small minority, at the time, caught them in the act. What happened then? Why the Government of that day brought in a Bill whitewashing those who had been guilty of a violation of the Act—guilty of taking contracts under the Government while elected as independent members of Parliament to sit upon the acts of that Government, thus violating the whole spirit of constitutional government; violating the whole spirit of representative government, and every principle of constitutional liberty; and when detected in the act, what happened? The hon. gentleman who has introduced the Bill, who was one of the foremost members of the Government, brought in a Bill to relieve those gentlemen of the pains and penalties to which they had rendered themselves liable. If a Bill like this is wanted, and we should be so unfortunate as again to be subjected to the rule of the hon. gentlemen opposite, we know perfectly well, from analogy, what will happen again. If the hon. gentleman's friends found the proposed Act a stringent one, they would not be subjected to its penalties; he would be one of the foremost members to bring in another whitewashing Act to relieve them from its penalties. But I can assure the hon. gentleman that this Parliament has not sunk so low as to render it necessary for him to propose such legislation. I thank God there are men on each side of the House to whom legislation of this kind is a taunt, an insult; and I know perfectly well what will be the record in regard to this Bill in view of the record which stands against its author in the damning fact of the Act of 1877.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. If the glowing observations of the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House mean anything, they mean that the provisions of a Bill which would make it an offence for a member to commit bribery, or receive a bribe, would be an insult to the House.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. They mean besides that, in the event of such bribery there should be no power in the House to inflict punishment. Now I do not feel the force of the hon. gentleman's argument in this respect. I am sure he is of that class of thinkers who really believe that the corruption in this country is all on the one political side. I do not credit the newspapers he reads, and the authors of the stories which appear in them with so much innocence. But he has the habit of expressing such views in such a tone as appeals to my sense of fairness, and so I am compelled to admit, I believe he really thinks what he says. But if he had not attacked a colleague of mine—a gentleman who at the time he speaks of occupied a prominent position in this matter—unfairly and unjustly, I would not have risen on this occasion. While he says that Parliament would be insulted by this Bill, he states that a recent Parliament was packed with contractors.

Mr. PLUMB. So it was.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. He does not hesitate now to insult that Parliament by such a remark. I give him credit in saying that I do not believe he understands the difference, or comprehends that it is at all wrong to insult a body that is opposed to him. I do believe he considers it notoriously wrong to criticize his own party. Such is the facility the hon. gentleman has shown in applying a different rule to different parties. He should have known when he attacked the late Speaker that that hon. gentlemen had committed no offence against the Independence of Parliament Act, except in a legal and technical sense.

Mr. PLUMB. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," but with his great legal acumen and skill he should have known that, however perfect was the Independence of Parliament Act, everybody from the day of its first enactment in England, for years past, has found it very difficult of administration, very difficult to mete out justice where deserved, and discriminate against acts of infringement, where really no offence was committed. The hon. gentleman should have remembered that, at the time when this subject engaged the attention of the House, when the position of the late Speaker was under consideration—and I am not here to say that the circumstances were not to be regretted—the fact was recalled that a Committee of the Parliament of old Canada, of which Sir John Rose was Chairman, and before which the principle at issue was considered, expressed the doctrine which made such acts possible in this House; and that the principle laid down by their report practically exonerated the hon. gentleman from all wrong doing, but found it necessary that the law should be amended in order to meet what—the particular doctrine on which the hon. member for Niagara takes his stand? Not at all—but the difficulty in which many hon. members found themselves. I am sure that the hon. gentleman does not remember that a single one of his own friends was not compelled to resign in consequence of the violation of that Act. I do not know a great deal about Ottawa county, or whether the hon. gentleman might not have found a defence in speaking of the hon. gentleman from Ottawa; but, so far as I am advised, that was not the only instance in which difficulties arose. But the question having been considered by both sides in Committee, and the wisdom of Parliament having been applied in its settlement, with the concurrence of both parties in both Houses, the hon. member for Niagara now singles out a particular case, and culminates old exploded accusations against an hon. member although the report of a parliamentary Committee is in evidence against his assertions. This is another evidence that the hon. gentleman cannot see both sides of the shield—cannot see through it, and will not walk around to see its second side. It is to be regretted he pursued this course. He alludes to corruption in elections. Nobody pretends there has not been corruption on both sides; but the hon. gentleman should know that it was the party now in Opposition that framed the legislation that made it possible to reach corruption, and improper, and dishonest and corrupt elections. An hon. gentleman says, "Oh," but I do not believe he doubts my statement.

Mr. PLUMB. What is the means to which you refer?

Mr. HUNTINGTON. I gave the hon. gentleman the means used in one election.

Mr. BOULTBEE. You spoke of the means of reaching corruption—what means?

Mr. HUNTINGTON. I mean legislative authority. I mean the machinery by which this purging has gone on as it never went on before. I have seen under the old system, which I dare say the hon. gentleman prefers, year after year parliamentary Committees sitting in cases in which the grossest corruption has been practiced, and after other means of securing delay has been exhausted, the members of these Committees took sick so as to delay the proceedings.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the hon. gentleman recollect of a single case in which a whitewashing Act was passed by this side of the House.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. I recollect a great many things of which the hon. gentleman shall hear if he lets me alone, but I have heard nothing which induces me to believe that hon. gentlemen are sincere in their fulminations against corruption. There is nothing in their history to show, whatever may be their individual opinions, that it has not been their settled policy in all time to oppose endeavors to have purity of elections secured by Parliament or the Courts, either by active measures of legislation, by throwing cold water upon such efforts, or by waiting until public opinion forced them to abandon their chosen ground. I say that attempts to suppress corruption are not indignant to their soil, and that they have only been made by these gentlemen to effect a particular object. So far as the Bill before the House is concerned, I have not much to say about it. It is a matter of no particular importance to me—speaking for myself—whether this measure, which the Minister of Public Works chooses to regard as an insult to members of the House, passes as it has been drawn or not. I do not believe that these gentlemen will use their means to corrupt the people of this country; I do not think that hon. gentlemen will be able to draw on them for another ten thousand, or in fact for any ten thousand, but I quite concur with the opinion expressed by my hon. friend on my left (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) when he says that these gentlemen will not always be the corporators of the Company, that it is possible that so gigantic an enterprise, with such franchises, privileges, and inducements as are presented by the corporation which has been created by this House, may fall into other hands. And I say that it is not at all unlikely, that if such should be the case, that men like Jay Gould, or Vanderbilt, or forty other generous and liberal hearted men like them, may be the successors of this Company, and may send out their money as liberally as they now send out their cars. It may be that interests may arise under this contract—for hon. gentlemen appear to believe that the Bill has special reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway—which would be dangerous to this country, a contract which includes not only the building of that railway but its operation for all time to come. A contract which is in the hands of a Company who will in a certain, and in no inconsiderable sense, own the whole North-West, and who will necessarily exercise an influence out of all proportion to that wished by the Government of this country, if not with regard to the number of its employees, undoubtedly with regard to the amount of influence and the circumstances under which it may be exercised. I say, therefore, that under such circumstances it may be advisable to pass such a measure as the present. To say that it is an insult to those particular gentlemen who compose the Syndicate, that Parliament should have thought necessary, having given them extraordinary privileges, to pass this Bill to protect Parliament from the danger of corruption, is to talk nonsense. I can understand that hon. gentlemen might oppose this Bill on principle, but I do not think that they can make any capital with the Syndicate by pretending that this Bill is an insult to them. I do not think that Parliament should show itself careful of the administration of the affairs of this country, careful of those great affairs which might become monopolies, which might endanger the free institutions of this country, which might jeopardise the very exercise of the franchise of this country, which might even interfere with the independent expression of the opinion of Parliament itself—I say it would be no disgrace to Parliament, and no insult to any class of people. I think, therefore, that hon. gentlemen have gone altogether out of the record in pretending that the operation of this law will apply to the men who happen for the moment to be in power. Let hon. gentlemen look at the history of railways in the United States for the last ten years. Let them look at the manner in which the people of the United States are struggling against the enormous monopolies which prevail there.

Mr. PLUMB. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." I believe he has not the slightest idea that railway monopolies can apply to this question. The hon. gentleman sits over there and supports the leader of the Government, and whatever the right hon. gentleman says, he says. I do not know whether he was that member of Parliament who was asked how he was going to vote on a particular question "Oh," he said, "I was sent here to support John A. If John A. is right, then I am right, and if it is wrong I am not responsible." I believe the hon. gentleman does not at all understand that there is a lesson to be learned from the railway history of the United States, which may apply here. Will the hon. gentleman tell me—because if he leaves aside his partizanship he knows all about this question—will he pretend that he could not name four railways in the United States which, if they choose to-day to exercise their power in unison and if they were willing to coalesce, could not elect the President of the United States? I have seen it stated by high authority that this could be done. I do not know whether it would take two or half a dozen, but these enormous influences that have grown up in the United States, these enormous monopolies that control such immense capital, have become a source of real danger to our neighbors. And while they are struggling to avert that danger it is no insult if they say that they are afraid the president of a railway might by improper means corrupt a constituency or even a Legislature. There are multitudes of people in the United States who believe that some of their legislators are influenced by the enormous expenditure it is possible for railway companies to make—I do not believe that this Legislature, or any Legislature that has sat in this country for years past, could be corrupted by any direct offer. The corruption, if there is any, is the blind adherence which we allow ourselves to devote to those who lead us. I am not going into a discussion of the question of party, but there is no doubt that to some extent both parties are open to criticism in that sense. But it does not follow that because the 210 gentlemen who sit here to-day are all above such a thing as undue influence, it does not follow because every man who sits here to-day would refuse $ 0,000 for his vote if he knew he would never be found out—it does not follow because we occupy that position to-day we will be liable to occupy it for all time.

Mr. PLUMB. Let the hon. gentleman speak for himself and not for us.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. I am talking to a petulant but a very genial audience, so far as I hear from it. Peppery is not a parliamentary term, but still the fire from the flint does not burn much, as the hon. gentleman told us the other day. I am speaking, not for myself, not for the hon. gentleman, I am speaking generally of what every man of common sense knows is a possibility; I am speaking of the means by which Legislatures and constituencies may be unduly influenced. Does the hon. gentleman wish to tell me that there is a distinction to be drawn between the Conservative party and the Liberal party? Sir, parties ought to be the representatives of principles. Individuals are fallible, except the hon. member for Niagara, and so much so that there has been a petition specially put up for us all, that we be not led into temptation. If the hon. gentleman is above, as I believe he is above, temptation—he certainly is above reflection upon these subjects—I will not say benefit—if he is above it, then the insult cannot reach him. We propose to pass a law affixing pains and penalties to particular offences which everybody knows may be committed—they may not be committed now, they may not be committed for ten or twenty years, but they may be committed. It is no answer to say that to prevent crime or to legislate against improper acts, is an insult to somebody who occupies, at the moment, an official position, and therefore, you undertake to prevent this legislation altogether. Why, you might as well say that if you undertook to legislate that bank presidents should not sign papers of the contents of which they had not been cognizant by an examination of the vouchers, that it would be an insult to all bank presidents; and yet we have had juries in this country who hold, not very long ago, that such remissness did constitute a crime. You might as well say that the public opinion which demanded legislation compelling all bank presidents to take cognizance of the state of affairs in their banks, was an insult to bank presidents. How do you know how long these gentlemen have been in their places as presidents? How do you know how long the officers of any great corporation are to continue where they are? Because the gentlemen who are at the head of our affairs to-day are honest and beyond temptation, that is no guarantee that we shall always have public men beyond the reach of temptation, and that our experience may not some day be that of the United States.

Mr. McCUAIG. In reading this Bill it appears to me to be a reflection upon the Pacific Railway Syndicate. I think my hon. friend who introduced that Bill had no right to reflect upon that Company. It is as much as to say that all the other wealthy corporations of this country are honest and that these men are scamps. Of course we know that banks and railway companies exercise a certain influence in favor of certain candidates, and I do not say that they have no right to do so. Now, if my hon. friend had placed all corporations in the same category, I might perhaps have given him my vote, but as it is I cannot possibly vote for this measure. The third clause reads:

"No person being or having been a member of the Senate or House of Commons shall be allowed to hold or acquire any stock in any company so incorporated or to be incorporated as aforesaid, until years after the said party has ceased to be a member of the Senate or House of Commons unless the same shall devolve on him by descent or by limitation, by marriage or as trustee, legatee, executor or administrator; and any such person so holding or acquiring any such stock except as aforesaid shall be held guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labor, for a period of not more than two years."

Now, I maintain that is equivalent to saying that a man may not buy such stock without being dishonest, but that he may inherit it and be perfectly honest—a provision which seems to me to be unfair. If a man is necessarily dishonest because he owns or purchases such stock, then there should be provision for his selling it if he should happen to inherit it.

Mr. ANGLIN. The assertion that it is an insult to members of this House to propose that there shall be further provision made to preserve the independence of Parliament is a manifestly absurd statement. It is, in fact, a statement that it is an insult to members of Parliament to have the present Act upon our Statute-book. It is a declaration that no Act should ever have been provided for the purpose of preserving the independence of Parliament, by imposing penalties upon those who may do what would be fairly presumed to influence their votes and conduct in this House. Now, Sir, Parliaments have for many years past—almost for centuries past—thought it necessary to legislate for the purpose of preserving their own independence and putting each individual member of the House in such a position that his motives in supporting any particular measure or line of policy should not be flung open to suspicion of corrupt influence or corrupt purposes. Parliaments quite as respectable as this have felt that, in passing measures of this kind, they would not expose themselves to the reproach of not trusting themselves, or not confiding in their integrity of purpose or of offering an insult to any portion of their body. They felt rather that they were fairly entitled to the thanks of the community for taking measures necessary, or at all events salutary, for the purpose of maintaining the fountains of legislation pure and undefiled. I confess that, with regard to this Bill, there is ample room for question whether it does not go too far in some respects and not far enough in others; and I felt satisfied when the hon. gentleman moved the Bill that there was not the slightest possibility of its being passed under present circumstances. The hon. gentleman from Niagara (Mr. Plumb) chose to make an attack of a personal character upon hon. members on this side, and to assert that when we were on the other side we showed no such regard for the independence of Parliament; that, on the contrary, we deliberately, wilfully and knowingly violated the Statute then on the books, and that, indeed, we were guilty of what he called the grossest violation of the independence of Parliament. That hon. gentleman sometimes uses strong adjectives when they are scarcely applicable, and his special appeals on a question of that character are not of such value in the estimation of the House or the country as to make it necessary to pay any great attention to them. But when he chooses to be historical he should, at all events, endeavor to be correct. He should have admitted, in the first place, that whatever violations of the Statute were committed, were committed quite as largely on one side as upon the other.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. ANGLIN. Quite as largely.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. ANGLIN. Quite as largely, I repeat, among the small minority of that time as among the majority; and lists were circulated about this Chamber which, I suppose, everybody saw, and which were probably correct, showing that there were somewhere between thirty and forty members who had knowingly or unwittingly been guilty of violating the Independence of Parliament Act, as that Act was construed by members of the Committee, while three gentlemen of the majority had to resign their seats in consequence of the interpretation of this Act—two members of the Government and myself; three gentlemen of the minority also resigned—the members for Ottawa City, Northumberland, N.B., and Restigouche. The hon. gentleman should have stated that when that charge was preferred in this House, a resolution was moved by the leader of the Opposition at that time, which, after full consideration, was voted down by a large majority; that the enquiry subsequently held was not even suggested by the minority, but was held at the instance of the Government, the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) being, I believe, the mover of the resolution to refer the whole matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, for thorough enquiry into the law and the facts of the case. That enquiry was held, and it was shown before that Committee, that, in the old Parliament of Canada, some years previously, a Committee, of which Sir John Rose was the Chairman, in its report distinctly held, and the House acted on the report of the Committee, that what was known as an implied contract was not such as should vacate the seat of a member of Parliament, and that interpretation of the law no doubt was acted upon by a large number of members of this House up to the time of the enquiry in 1877. The enquiry then held resulted in a very much stricter interpretation of the Statute, and it was held for the first time by a Canadian Parliament, that implied contracts should render void the seat of a member of this House. With regard to the two members of the Government who had in consequence to resign their seats, everybody who knows the facts must be aware that they derived no profit from their so-called contracts. They had gone into a joint-stock company for the purpose of publishing a party organ in Halifax, and when the change of Government took place, the printing and advertising of the district went there as a matter of course, without any thought on their part. With regard to my own case, the printing and advertising in the city of St. John, were transferred from the papers on the Tory side to those on the Liberal side, one of which was the paper of which I was the proprietor. I no doubt derived some profit from the printing done in the office of that paper, but I had no contract with the Government. The hon. gentleman says they unearthed it; but there was no discovery to be made. My name appeared in the Public Accounts chargeable with the receipt of moneys under these circumstances. Moreover, the Government of the day, feeling that the work should not be continued in that way, had caused it to be discontinued fully a year before any action was taken by gentlemen of the Opposition, so that at the time the question was raised the newspaper of which I was proprietor had long ceased to do any work for the Government. I believe the Government in that matter acted quite properly. I know I never remonstrated with them, although I do not think I was acting illegally in allowing that work to be done in the office of that paper. These are the facts which the hon. gentleman adduces as evidence of great corruption on the part of those who were at that time in the majority. He says the majority introduced a Bill to whitewash the gentlemen engaged in those transactions. Well, the whitewashing will extend to both sides of the House, and it was owing to the fact that there was a misunderstanding as to the scope and purport of the Independence of Parliament Act that an Act was introduced to make plain those motions of the Act on which there was doubt. It was never asserted that an implied contract was a contract. It was only after the matter was, at the instance of the Government and their friends, at my own instance, referred to a Committee, that it was first alleged and afterwards decided that there was an implied contract, and that it rendered the seat of a member of Parliament void. The hon. member for Ottawa City, if what I heard at the time was correct, was one of the very few who had an actual contract with the Government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think so. I think there was a contract existing between the firm of which he was a member and the Government for the supply of a quantity of lumber, and under that contract supplies had been furnished for a number of years. I do not think the hon. gentleman had the slightest idea that he was violating the Independence of Parliament Act. The hon. member for Northumberland, New Brunswick, had no idea at the time that he had a contract with the Government, although he was also supposed to have violated the Independence of Parliament Act. This was not a gross case at all of violation of the Act. It was stated, and I believe correctly stated, that the paper of which the hon. Minister of Customs was joint proprietor at that time had done a considerable amount of printing for the Departments.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is in error. The printing ran back ten or fifteen years before I was a member of the House. The Committee charged an account of the Leader against me, and of this, I believe, the hon. member was cognizant.

Mr. ANGLIN. I knew nothing about it. I did not interfere in the slightest degree in the proceedings of that Committee, except to appear before it to give my testimony and then withdraw. I had no suspicion, whatever, that the hon. gentleman was amenable to the Act.

Mr. BOWELL. I was to the amount of fifty-two and two-third cents.

Mr. ANGLIN. The principle is the same. The violation to that extent is a violation equally with a larger amount.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman would rather have the $18,000.

Mr. ANGLIN. I would, or the honest profit made on it. The principle was the same in the hon. gentleman's case. It happened that his paper ran under the same proprietorship for some time after he became a member of the House, and thus he became liable to the operation of the Act. The violations described as gross were of an entirely different character, and down to that time nobody contended they were violations. The enquiry was had, in the first place, at my suggestion, but at the instance of the Government, on a motion of the hon. member for West Elgin. Before that Committee the whole facts were simply and clearly stated, the law was enquired into, and to my recollection the first suggestion implying the contract was one which, under the law, would render a seat void, came from the present hon. member for West Durham. Leading supporters of the Government took the ground that the law had been violated, and as far as the whitewashing Act, as the hon. member for Niagara has called it, was concerned, it was intended to relieve members on both sides of the House who were known to be innocent of any wilful violation, and who could not be accused of having done anything to render the Independence of Parliament Act less forcible or vigorous. I went back to my constituents and was re-elected. Two members of the Government went back, one of whom was re-elected and the other defeated, although not one cent of public money, on account of what is called a contract, went into his pocket, directly or indirectly. What the hon. member for Niagara chooses to say of me, matters very little. The facts were put before the public long ago, and I am satisfied with their verdict.

Mr. BOULTBEE. I do not see that the hon. member for Gloucester has supported the Bill of his hon. friend very strongly, because the only remarks he made about the Bill were to the effect that he thought it contained provisions that, on account of their stringency, did not entitle it to pass. So far as his own case is concerned, he was found out by a Committee of his own friends—

Mr. ANGLIN. There was no finding out.

Mr. BOULTBEE. To have received a large amount of money under contract with the Government, and the report was kept back until a few days before the close of Parliament. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman thought he was doing anything very wrong at the time; but, at any rate, it came within the cognizance of Parliament, though the report was kept back until Parliament rose, and he was then elected again. No doubt the man who goes back to his constituents with $18,000 or $20,000 of Government money in his pocket, stands a better chance than a man who goes before them without that sum; therefore, there was no trouble about the hon. gentleman's re-election. With regard to the Bill, you have to take the utterances of the hon. member for Centre Huron and those of the hon. member for Shefford together, before you can get its true inwardness. If the hon. member for Centre Huron had not been supported by the hon. member for Shefford, we never could have known why the Bill was brought in. While we are bound to admit that the hon. member for Centre Huron is honest in this thing, and brought in a Bill which he thought would apply to himself as well as to others, yet so hopeless seem the chances of its ever being applied to him or his friends, that it is not likely any large sum of money will be spent to secure their influence. But the hon. member for Shefford, in those eloquent tones of his which carry conviction, no doubt to himself if to nobody else, says he does not believe the Bill will be at all necessary at present; he has a very high opinion of the Syndicate—it is said he is somewhat intimately connected with it; but whether he is or not, he affirms the fact that the Bill is not at present necessary, that the members of the Syndicate are honest, square, and straight as are the members of this House. In the far distant time of the future, however, years hence, when all our heads will be silvered with the impress of age, another Syndicate and another House will exist, and some remote descendant of the hon. member for Centre Huron may be approached by the new Syndicate, the descendants of the present one. In his anxiety for the purity of his country in future years, in his desire to keep everything straight and honest, he wants to guard against those remote dangers when either he or his descendants will be in power. My own view as a practical man, is that in cases of this kind our attention should be devoted to the present. If we can keep ourselves all square and right, if hon. gentlemen opposite can keep us right, and if we, by sitting up all night, can keep the hon. member for Centre Huron straight, we have got all we can do. The member for Shefford wants to know if any distinction should be made between the two sides of the House. He asks the member for Niagara if he wants to make such a distinction, and affirms strongly that there is none. Well, now, we can only form our views on this matter from the facts. It is rather remarkable—I am speaking from memory—that not a Conservative member has ever been disqualified for corrupt practices or personal corruption. No man on this side of the House, I believe, has ever suffered that untoward fate. It is unfortunate for gentlemen on the other side, but they have got to make the best of it. It only shows that those loudest in their professions of purity—and I have no doubt that the members for Shefford and Centre Huron have been very loud while stumping the country—and their claims to this purity belong to a party which has had members disqualified for personal bribery. It may have been through misfortune simply, or an accident, but it is rather peculiar that the accidents have been all on the Opposition side. It does not speak very well for that party. It would seem that until their record was somewhat balanced, and they can show some instances of similar misfortune on the Conservative side, they should be less loud in protestations of purity—less adventurous in bringing in Bills like this, that not only outrage all our sense of right, but our sense of what should be the effect of the constitutional laws we try to enact. This Bill outrages every man's sense of decency. I think that no man in the Canadian House of Commons, where we have men of liberal views and charitable towards their neighbors—men not willing, perhaps, except in the heat of party warfare—and my tongue may be, perhaps, as bitter as that of others—coolly wishes to favor a Bill to be passed in each House, deliberately pointing out every man engaged in a large undertaking as being a man of such a character that it is necessary to protect the country against their efforts by exceptional legislation applied to them alone. Angry words are soon forgotten, but the member for Centre Huron tries to mark those men who may take a certain course—to mark them with a stain of ignominy which will attach to them and their descendants. The slur he attempts to cast upon them, that they are corrupt, would cause them to be spoken of as disgraced by those by whom the proposed legislation would be enforced. He reads some record of what takes place in a neighboring country, which he and his friends so much admire, and of whose institutions they think so highly that a few are in favor of a closer connection with it, and ultimately, perhaps, annexation. But I would ask the House, nearly half of whose members belong to-day, and say if here, in this Canada of ours, with such representatives of the people, there is any danger of one of those great corporations dominating the affairs of this country? Why, an hon. member rose in that Committee and suggested that if the Grand Trunk Railway was going to be interested in a certain Bill, it would have no chance of passing this House. I rose myself and spoke in the Committee on this subject, because I thought it unfair to say anything of the kind. I think those great railway corporations get very scant justice. They are borne down upon every occasion. Far from the danger of their dominating the country, on the contrary there is every desire to curb and keep them down. There is no danger of this House, at any rate, being controlled by those companies. There was one remark that sounded suspicious; made by the member for Shefford. He said, because great privileges are granted to this Syndicate an exceptional law is required; but there never was greater trash uttered in this House. Why are great and extraordinary privileges given these men? Because they are undertaking a work of a magnitude which stagger the energies of the country, and which made it necessary to give great concessions. I do not think too many were given, but that they needed all received to carry out this great work. Does that render it necessary to attach to them a stigma and enact harsh penalties such as are not fixed in the case of any other corporation? Instead of exceptionally offensive and injurious legislation in that case, they should be relieved of all difficulties and penalties so as to leave their hands free to carry out this great undertaking. The member for Shefford also—but it is scarcely worth noting—threw a species of sneer at the blind adherence to their leaders exhibited by many Conservatives in this House. I have not seen very much of this blind adherence in the carrying on of this party Government. No Government could do its business were it not sustained by a loyal as well as intelligent following. I do not know—I speak for myself, and may be termed by hon. gentlemen opposite a subservient follower of this Government—but I do not undertake to follow them unless they propose measures that fairly commend themselves to my intelligence; and the measures of the Government have been of that kind. No doubt, men in the Opposition ranks are not to be tied by such a harsh rule. They are mere free lances. But surely it does not lie in the mouth of hon. gentlemen on the front Opposition benches to speak of a blind adherence on our part; because there never was a party on the face of the earth that voted so blindly at the beck of their leaders as hon. gentlemen opposite. I will notice one illustration of the member for Shefford with respect to the banks. He said, what would be thought of any legislation with respect to the banks requiring them to do so-and-so, and transact their business in some particular manner and under some harsh restrictions. I reply there would be no objections if the legislation was proper and applied to all the banks; but it would be monstrous to enforce extreme penalties on one particular bank if it did not carry on its business in a particular way, while exempting all the other banks. I say such a measure would not be considered in this House for a moment. It does, then, seem that this Bill of the member for Centre Huron was the unthought-of offspring of some moment of bitter chagrin and bitter disappointment, and that its design was to strike a blow as well at the Syndicate as at the House. It was an unworthy act. It is unworthy of us in our position—because ours is a high position—for any man to attempt to stamp, by legislative enactment, a mark of disgrace on a set of men, who stood with untarnished reputation before the country until this exceptional legislation was attempted to put the bar sinister of disgrace upon them for the rest of their lives.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The hon. gentleman who treated this Bill as an exceptional measure, forgot that its principle is, in a measure, already embodied in our Independence of Parliament Act. The 7th section of that Act provides that:

"This Act shall not extend to disqualify any person as a member of the House of Commons, by reason of his being a shareholder in any incorporated company having a contract or agreement with the Government of Canada, except companies undertaking contracts for the building of public works, and any company incorporated for the construction or working of any part of the Canadian Pacific Railway."

So that long before this Syndicate was thought of—years ago—Parliament felt that the case of a company incorporated to construct and work the Canadian Pacific Railway was an exceptional case, and that special provision should be made for it, and special provision was made for it. And why? Because this Government must necessarily for years, and perhaps for all time, have enormous interests involved in connection with such a company. We have been discussing the contract entered into with the Syndicate. We have been told, for instance, that if the Syndicate failed to carry out certain parts of the contract the Courts may be appealed to to enforce performance. We have been told that if they break the contract, actions for damages may be brought against them. In fifty different ways the Government and the Syndicate may come into collision on questions of enormous interest and vital importance to the country. Parliament has provided already that no shareholder of such a Company shall be a member of this House. And why? Because his interests as a shareholder in that Company might clash with the interests of the country, considering the nature of the transactions between them. The present Bill contemplates merely an extension of the same principle. Parliament felt that an exception should be made with regard to that Company, and I say that my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. McCuaig), who admits that this principle is a proper one if applied to all companies, has failed to notice that it is extended to all companies who have contracts for the construction of public works, and especially the Canadian Pacific Railway. It appears to me that the hon. gentleman, who said this Bill was an insult offered to the Company and to the House, has forgotten the nature of the Independence of Parliament Act. That Act is now 100 years old. It was first of all passed to meet the case of contractors and placemen. It is not said in the Act that contractors and placemen will corruptly use their votes, or act corruptly in their capacity as representatives of the people, but it was felt that that would be the temptation, and the tendency has been legislation in preventing them holding seats in Parliament. Parliament has never considered that it was insulted by making provision for its own purity. Would the hon. gentleman say that it is right that a company, having transactions with the Government such as this Company have, should contribute to the expenses of an election of any candidate to this House? Will my hon. friends opposite say that a law which prohibits such an act is anything but a right law? If Parliament is composed of honest men, if the candidates for seats in this House are honest men, and if the Company is composed of honest men, where is the insult? You may as well say that honest men are insulted because we pass laws against theft. It is because it is wrong for such a company to contribute to the election expenses of a candidate for Parliament, or make gifts or presents to a member of Parliament, that such a measure is proposed.

Mr. HESSON. What is the use of the hon. gentleman asking for a further Bill of this kind?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Boulton) goes back in his recollection to what, he says, the Reform party have been guilty of in the way of bribery. We, too, can go back and recall instances which are notorious and which show such provisions are absolutely necessary. Legislation of this kind is necessary to prevent the repetition of what Sir Hugh Allan did in 1872. It is necessary to prevent what the Northern Railway were proved to have done in years gone by, according to the almost unanimous report of gentlemen on the Committee of investigation of both sides of politics. I do not refer to these matters for any other purpose than to show that the history of our country proves that in regard to this railway such a provision is quite justifiable and necessary.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). Would you consider it an insult if an Act was introduced to prohibit the Guelph Lumber Company from practising the things mentioned in this Bill?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I say it is quite right that companies which have contracts with the Government for public works should be prohibited from contributing to the election funds of candidates for Parliament.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The Bank of Montreal, for instance?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Yes; if they entered into a contract like this. I say, that so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, it is an exceptional case. With regard to the investigation in 1877 before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which I was member, the Committee found, in the case of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), that the practice had existed since Confederation, at all events, of giving advertisements to newspapers owned by members of Parliament, and that no fault had been found with that practice. They also found in the report of an Election Committee, presented by Sir John Rose, it was decided that the giving of work to a printer was not a contract within the meaning of the Act, so as to avoid a member's seat. But the Committee found that, although the hon. member for Gloucester had acted bona fide, still, under a strict construction of the Act, he had violated it. That report was unanimously adopted by the members of the Committee, irrespective of party. It is a her late in the day for any hon. gentleman now to single out the hon. member for Gloucester from all others, whose cases were brought before Parliament at that time. I remember that the greatest zeal was shown by the Conservative party at that time for the independence of Parliament. We did not hear a single word about insulting Parliament, by a strict attention to the purity of its members. In fact, some went so far as to say that men should lose their seats who had unwittingly received a few dollars from the Government for work done. They went so far as to say, in their construction of the Act, and perhaps they were right, that the purchase of a few barrels of flour from a member for the surveyors in the North-West, or the insertion of an advertisement in a newspaper belonging to a member, were transactions that ought to void the seat of the member. It was found that such transactions as those had been unwittingly committed by several members, and even the acts of their clerks were held to constitute a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act. What is called the whitewashing Act was simply this, that no member who had unintentionally and unwittingly committed a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act should be subject to the penalties, but before he escaped the penalties, it must be found to the satisfaction of judge and jury that he had not knowingly committed a breach of the Act. I think eight Conservative members voted for that Act. It was felt at the time that it would be extremely harsh for the first time to enforce a law that had never theretofore been strictly construed in this country, and to subject men to enormous penalties, as well as the forfeiture of their seat, for offences they were not conscious of having committed, and did not intend to commit. That is the history of what is called the whitewashing Act of 1877. Now, I ask you whether any hon. member of this House opposed to this Bill has undertaken to show that what it aims at is not a proper thing? Will any hon. member get up in his place and say that it is right, considering the position in which this country stands to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that they should be permitted, if so disposed, to contribute to the election of members of this House? If they say it is right, then let them vote for the amendment moved by the hon. Minister of Public Works; but if they say it is wrong, and agree that Parliament should be protected, that the purity of Parliament should be defended, then let them, at all events, give this Bill further consideration. We may differ as to some of the penalties—I am not prepared to say myself that I would agree to all this Bill contains—but to the principle of the Bill I do agree, and I think on further consideration the hon. members of this House will come to the conclusion that it is no greater insult than the Independence of Parliament Act itself, which has hitherto received the hearty approval of all parties.

Mr. McCALLUM. The hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are always in favor of independence of Parliament when they are in Opposition. It is their policy, it is their platform; but when they get on the Ministerial side they change their policy, or forget to carry it out. My hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) says that this Act has been in force for 100 years. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you have ever known a time when the independence of Parliament was violated so much as it was by the hon. gentlemen opposite while they were in power? The hon. members of the late Government had contracted themselves, among them the Minister of Militia and the late Speaker. The hon. leader of the Opposition, before attaining to power, spoke loudly in favor of the independence of Parliament, but when he became leader of the Government he let contracts to members. I think every hon. member on both sides of this House is honest enough to keep clear of corruption. I see no necessity for this measure, and I shall vote against it.

Amendment (Mr. Langevin) six months' hoist, carried on the following division:—

DUAL REPRESENTATION.

The following Bill was introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 67) to repeal "An Act to render Members of the Legislative Councils and Legislative Assemblies of the Provinces now included, or which may hereafter be included within the Dominion of Canada, ineligible for sitting or voting in the House of Commons of Canada."—(Mr. Ouimet.)

House adjourned at 11:40 o'clock, p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

THURSDAY, 24th February, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

INTEREST ON MONEYS SECURED BY MORTGAGES.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings), in introducing a Bill (No. 68) relating to interest on moneys secured by mortgage on real estate, said: During last Session a Bill was introduced by the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) which went before the Committee on Banking and Commerce. That Bill contained a clause that any mortgage drawn, say to run for ten years from 1st July, 1880, any party wishing to pay interest on the mortgage at the end of five years would have the right to do so. This Bill is introduced to provide that any party who borrowed money five years previous to 1st July last, shall have the right, by paying three months interest, of repaying their mortgage to the parties from whom the money was borrowed. If, when the Bill comes up for the second reading, any further explanations are required, I shall be happy to give them.

Bill read the first time.

WAYS AND MEANS.—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Sir Leonard Tilley, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty."

Mr. CHARLTON. I crave the indulgence of the House to-day for a short time, for at this stage of the Session I would be loath to inflict upon others what I would be loath to receive myself, a long speech, and I will be as brief as I can be under the circumstances. I may, at the outset, ask leave to make a definition of terms. In the discussion of the question now before the House we have heard a good deal about Protective tariffs, Free-trade, Revenue tariffs, &c. Free-trade in the abstract, that is the system under which no duties whatever are imposed on imports, is a system which, under the circumstances, it is impossible for us to have in Canada. The antipodes of this is the system which we now have—Protection. The aim of Protection is to exclude importations of a certain character, to exclude the importation of all goods which may be manufactured in the country. The object of Protection is not to cheapen, not to render more abundant, but to make dear and create scarcity. Protection is a policy conceived, not in the interests of the masses, but in the interest of a few; and if Protection did not advance the price of goods, it would fail of its object. The object of Protection is to advance the price of goods. The object of Protection is to increase the cost to the consumers of the various products, the manufacture of which it may be desired to promote in the country. Then we have, besides Free trade and Protection, what is called a revenue Tariff. A revenue Tariff, strictly defined, is a tariff imposing duties upon such articles as cannot be manufactured or produced in the country. This policy of confining duties to articles that cannot be produced in the country, is one that enables consumers to escape all but direct taxes, taxes which go for the benefit of the Government. If duties are imposed on articles produced in the country, or are to a certain extent produced in the country, the domestic products will be increased in price as well as the articles imported. It is estimated by good authorities that the domestic production is increased by two-thirds of the duty on the imported articles; hence a tariff which imposes duties on any articles manufactured to any considerable extent in the country, imposes heavy burdens on the people, in addition to the taxes which they have to pay into the public Exchequer. A strictly revenue Tariff is one that, under all the circumstances, we can scarcely expect to have in Canada. We must expect in this country to have a tariff that will impose duties on other articles than such as are not produced, and cannot be produced, in the country. Now, the character of the Tariff supplanted by that now in force was one that afforded what is called incidental protection. It was not, strictly speaking, a revenue Tariff. It was very far removed from a revenue Tariff, for it imposed duties on a great number of articles which were, to a considerable extent, produced in Canada. Those duties did, to a considerable extent, foster the growth of the manufacture of those various articles, and to this extent the Tariff which was supplanted by the present one, was what is known as a Tariff affording incidental protection. But, Sir, the difference between such a Tariff and a protective Tariff is this: The objection to a purely protective Tariff is that it excludes all the goods that may be manufactured in the country. A Tariff affording incidental protection, while levying duties on goods that act as a protection, to a certain extent, to manufactures, at the same time secures what may be termed free competition. It does not exclude goods; it raises the price somewhat, and it affords a safety valve which prevents exorbitant prices by affording free competition. This Tariff, which was supplanted by that in operation, imposed no duty on coal, nor upon food, nor upon raw material. In this respect it was vastly superior to the present Tariff, as well as in respect of imposing lower duties upon articles that may be and are manufactured in the country; and in this respect the Tariff supplanted by the present Tariff was more equitable in its operation. Under the former Tariff I have always contended, and now contend, that the manufacturers of this country were in a prosperous condition. I believe that the degree of prosperity enjoyed by them was as great as the prosperity enjoyed by any other class of business interests. It is evident that the growth of our manufactures has been very great. The census of 1871 gave as the product of the manufactures of Canada the large sum of \$211,000,000. It was estimated, on good authority, that the products of the manufactories had been still further increased in 1878, to \$275,000,000. The manufacturing interests of this country were progressing rapidly and favorably. Their growth, too, was not a forced, but a regular growth—it was both a considerable and healthy one. We are told that if the Liberal party comes into power again, there will be a complete overturning of the present system. The member for Cardwell (Mr. White) the other night told us that if the Opposition regained power, they would overturn all things—there would be a complete revolution. If the Liberal party comes into power, as a matter of course, so far as the fiscal policy of the country is concerned, there will be changes made to a greater or less extent. But there are obligations resting upon Canada—obligations that are already very great, and that do not promise to be reduced—obligations which will, on the contrary, inevitably be increased, and those will render it necessary, for many years to come, that heavy taxes should be imposed—taxes not only as great as the people will be willing to submit to, but greater, I fear. This being the case, no hope, no promise or expectation can be held out that any Tariff enacted by the Liberals will be less burdensome, will impose smaller duties than the Tariff supplanted by the present one. Of course, individuals may express on this subject individual opinions. I have no doubt we should consider ourselves fortunate if a maximum rate of 17½ per cent. was imposed. I should not, however, be at all surprised if the rate should be 20 per cent.—that is my individual opinion, which binds nobody. If the Liberals come to power, as, in the course of time, probably, they will, they will be bound to have regard to existing interests. A policy has been adopted which they protested against. Under that policy certain interests have been evoked, and certain interests have grown up. Those interests will be entitled to some consideration—to what degree I do not say. Those interests would naturally exert a certain influence, and would receive the fair degree of consideration they are entitled to without robbing other interests to benefit them. However, I think we may safely promise that if the Liberal party came into power, many obnoxious features of the present Tariff will be eliminated, and that the new Tariff will probably afford as high a degree of incidental protection as did the old, and under which the progress made in manufactures, was as great as could be reasonably desired. The idea proclaimed, that the Liberals are enemies of the manufacturing industries, is a false idea. The Liberal party take as much delight in seeing those industries prosperous as their friends on the opposite side. It affords us satisfaction, and the greatest gratification, to see new manufactures starting and manufacturing demands increasing—to see the manufactured products annually swelling in volume and amount. In the promotion of those industries we desire to adopt a proper policy. The difference between us and the honorable gentlemen on the Ministerial side is, that while remembering our manufacturing interests, we remember also, the farmer at the plough, the fisherman at his nets, the lumber man in the forest. We desire to dispense equal justice to all those interests. We desire the growth and prosperity of all, and protest against the promotion, growth, and prosperity of one at the expense of all the rest. The difference between hon. gentlemen opposite and us is, that we wish an equitable and fair policy calculated to promote the best interests of all. The gentlemen opposite, however, take one industry under their protection, a pet industry, and impose burdens on all the rest for its benefit. Although it was claimed that the present Tariff was conceived and passed in the interest of our manufactures, it injures the great iron industry, and the manufacture of agricultural implements. It imposes a heavy duty on the raw material used in this business. In one establishment in my own riding, the proprietor estimates the cost of iron to be \$2 greater than before this Tariff, while he can secure no corresponding advance in the price of the manufactured article. It is an injury to the iron founders to impose a tax on coal and pig iron, the raw material used by this branch of industry. The Tariff is also an injury to the mill owners in some instances, by imposing a restriction upon the importation of wheat, by which certain large mill owners are enabled to import extensively in bond. It is also an injury to the lumber interest by increasing the cost of supplies. The hon. Finance Minister, the other day, conceded as much, that the cost of producing lumber was increased one per cent. by the National Policy. If he had multiplied that figure by ten, he would have been nearer the truth. I have no doubt that in New Brunswick the cost of producing lumber is increased by ten per cent., and that in Ontario and Quebec at least by five. As a practical lumberman, this is my opinion. I do not know that any important manufacturing industry has been resuscitated by this Tariff with the exception of the sugar refining business. I doubt whether our manufacturing industries are very much more prosperous than under the late Tariff; and, certainly, the cost has been enormous compared with the benefits derived from this policy so far as the promotion of those industries are concerned. It certainly, in addition to injuring the industries I have mentioned, injures the fisherman; it imposes heavy duties on his food and clothing, while he derives no benefit whatever from this policy. It injures the farmer. It injures the railways also, by imposing duties on coal, and obliging them to put an additional price upon the transportation of local freight. It benefits, in short, as all protective tariffs do, comparatively few industries at the expense of the mass. The effect of increased prices consequent upon Protection, is seen in the diminution of the exports of manufactures. The export of manufactures under Protection is invariably small. No matter how great pains may be taken to foster domestic manufactures, or to what extent they may be enabled to command the home market, it is an invariable accompaniment of Protection that the export of manufactured goods is inconsiderable under a protective system. Now, Sir, the export of manufactured goods in Canada has fallen off largely. I find that in 1874, the exports of ships built at the Port of Quebec alone was \$796,000; in 1875, it was \$789,000; in 1876, from the Dominion, it was \$2,189,000; in 1877, \$1,576,000; in 1878, \$1,318,000; in 1879, \$529,000; in 1880, \$464,000. Now, here is a steady and a very rapid diminution in the export of this article under the National Policy. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, the other night, undertook to explain this by saying that in one year, owing to the inflation of this branch of industry, great numbers of vessels had been built which had to be sold at sacrifices, at any price, in order to cover advances, and in order that ship builders might pay their debts. But I find that this exportation of ships was very large for more than one year. It was very large for the whole Dominion each year, from 1874 to 1877 inclusive. I find that the diminution after the National Policy came into force was very rapid and very marked. The other night the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) told us, in reference to this question, that the export of manufactures is only of importance after the market at home is fully supplied; that if we are increasing manufactured goods for the supply of the home market, it matters little if the exports have fallen off. Well Sir, I want to ask if, when we were exporting this large amount of ships in the year I have mentioned, we were not first supplying the home market, and supplying it as fully as we are doing to-day? I want to know if we were not first supplying the home market in reference to all those articles that comprised the bulk of our exports before exporting to foreign countries? We were doing so; we were supplying the home market as fully as we are doing to-day, and in addition we were exporting to a much greater extent than at present. Now I come to the consideration of the farmers' interests. When this National Policy was adopted as a party cry, the farmer was appealed to, and certain promises were made him if he would give his support to this policy. Two particular promises were made. The first promise was that he should be afforded protection, that upon the grains imported from the United States duties should be imposed in order that the price of grains he had to sell should be enhanced. This promise, and the promise that a home market should be created by the operation of this policy which should absorb the production of the soil and give him better prices, secured his support. Now, in reference to the question of the effect of duty imposed on imported grains, let us see whether that policy, in its operation from 1878 to the present time, has succeeded in raising the price of grains higher than would have been the case if we had had free trade in grain. I shall not trouble the House with extended quotations. I shall only give quotations in September, 1878, June, 1879, March, 1880, and February, 1881. I will first give the quotations of wheat. Wheat on the 17th of September, 1878, was quoted: Fall wheat in Toronto, 97 cents; spring wheat, 97 cents. In Detroit, fall wheat, \$1.01½; in Chicago, spring, wheat 89 cents. It will be seen that those grains were higher in the United States than in Canada, and that it would have been impossible to import them at that time when the Government told the farmers that they were in need of protection. On the 30th of June, 1879, the price of fall wheat in Toronto was \$1.01; spring wheat, 97 cents; fall wheat in Detroit, \$1.10; spring wheat in Chicago, \$1.07. Prices were still higher in the United States, at those points than they were in Toronto. On the 15th of March, 1880, fall wheat in Toronto was \$1.28; spring wheat, \$1.26; Detroit, fall wheat, \$1.24 $\frac{1}{2}$; Chicago, spring wheat, \$1.23. None of those articles would have paid the cost of freight laid down at Toronto at that time. On the 1st of October, 1880, fall wheat in Toronto was 95 cents to \$1.02; spring wheat, \$1.00 to \$1.10; in Toledo, \$1.04; Chicago, spring wheat, 93 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents. On the 19th of the present month fall wheat in Toronto was \$1.08 to \$1.10; spring wheat, \$1.08 to \$1.17; in Chicago, spring wheat, \$1.02. Wheat could not have been transported from Chicago to Toronto and pay the freight, without reference to duty, at the prices in Toronto. We now come to oats. On the 17th of September, 1878, oats were 30 cents per 34 lbs. in Toronto, and 20 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in Chicago. On the 30th of June, 1879, they were 38 cents in Toronto, and 34 $\frac{1}{2}$ in Chicago; on the 15th of March, 1880, 39 cents in Toronto, and 37 in Chicago; on the 1st of October, 1880, 24 cents in Toronto, and 31 cents in Chicago; on the 19th of the present month, 36 cents in Toronto, and 35 in Chicago, the bushel at Chicago being 34 lbs., though the local bushel there is 32 lbs., but I have made the difference between 32 and 34 so as to make the prices correspond with the weight. Next take barley. On the 17th September, 1878, barley was \$1.05 a bushel in Toronto, and \$1.25 in Oswego; 30th of June, 1879, 60 cents in Toronto and 80 cents in Oswego; 17th of March, 1880, 70 cents in Toronto and 97 cents in Oswego; 1st of October, 1880, 70 cents in Toronto and 85 in Oswego; on the 19th of this month, 90 to 96 cents in Toronto, \$1.15 to \$1.30 in Buffalo. There is little danger of barley being imported, or of the home market being flushed with barley. I am sorry my hon. friend the First Minister is not in his seat, as I would like to ask him a question with reference to his remarks made at Strathroy, about the necessity of putting a duty upon barley. We will now take rye. On September 17th, 1878, rye in Toronto was 56 cents a bushel, in Chicago 45 cents. It would have paid to import barley at that time. After the duty was put on rye, in June 30th, 1879, it was 50 cents a bushel in Toronto, and 53 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in Chicago; March 15th, 1880, 80 cents in Toronto and 73 cents in Chicago; 1st October, 1880, 73 cents in Toronto and 83 cents in Chicago; 19th of February of the present year, 85 cents in Toronto and 88 cents in Chicago. Butter, on the 17th of September, 1878, was 21 cents a pound in Montreal and 25 cents in New York; June 30th, 1879, 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in Montreal and 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in New York; March 15th, 1880, 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents to 21 cents in Montreal, 15 cents to 36 cents in New York; October, 1880, 18 cents to 20 cents in Montreal and 16 cents to 33 cents in New York; 19th of the present month, 29 cents in each city. Cheese, September 17th, 1878, 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents to 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in Montreal and 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents to 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in New York, for the same grades; June 30th, 1879, 6 cents in Montreal, 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in New York; March 15th, 1880, 14 cents to 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in Montreal and 11 cents to 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in New York; October 1st, 1880, 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents to 13 cents in Montreal, 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in New York; February 19th, 1881, 14 cents in Montreal, 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents in New York. These quotations show clearly that it was not necessary to impose a duty on any of the articles I have named, in order to exclude them from the Canadian market; they show that the prices were as high in that country as they were in Canada; they show that Canada was not a better market than the United States; and they show the duties on grain and flour were entirely unnecessary and inoperative. There is one grain, it is true, the price of which has been affected by the duty: that is, Indian corn, of which our imports were largely in excess of our exports. I have some figures which, I think, will demonstrate that the importation of Indian corn is an advantage rather than a disadvantage. Let us see what the effect of that trade was in 1877, when, it will be recollected, there was a short harvest, and when our exportations were very small. Our net export of grain, flour and meal in that year was \$2,597,000 worth. We imported from the United States in corn and cornmeal, 6,348,000 bushels in excess of our exports. The average prices of our exports were: flour, \$5.50 per barrel; oats, 42 cents per bushel; barley, 71 cents per bushels; peas, 85 cents per bushel. The cost of the meal we imported was \$3 per barrel, and the corn 51 cents per bushel. Our net import of meal was 292,000 barrels. Now, if we had bought that quantity of meal at \$3 per barrel, and sold the same quantity of flour at \$5.50 per barrel, the country would have gained \$632,000 by the transaction. Under these circumstances, there would not be much advantage in excluding the meal and consuming the flour. Our net import of corn, after deducting the meal, was 5,176,000 bushels, in excess of what we exported. Now let us see what we should have gained by keeping out the corn. If we had consumed 2,970,000 bushels of oats, the amount of our surplus in that year, instead of the corn we imported, we should have lost fourteen cents a bushel, on 1,800,000 bushels, the equivalent in weight of the oats, \$252,000. If we had substituted our entire export of 1,745,000 bushels of peas at 85 cents, for its equivalent of 1,870,000 bushels of corn at 51 cents, we should have lost \$23,600. If we excluded the quantity of corn that represented our total export of oats and peas, and had consumed the latter, we should still have consumed 1,736,000 bushels of barley in place of 1,506,000 bushels of corn, the balance of what we imported, and lost \$466,000, the excess in value of the barley over the corn. If this computation is correct, it shows that in consequence of importing 292,000 barrels of meal and 5,176,000 bushels of corn, and exporting a corresponding amount of flour, oats, peas and barley which we should have consumed if we had not imported the corn, we were \$1,873,000 better off than we should have been if we had excluded the corn and consumed other coarse grains instead of it; and if we allow for freight charges on oats, peas and barley to port of shipment, and on corn to points in the interior where consumed, \$435,000, the advantage to the country from the importation of corn, in 1877, was \$1,438,000. Well, Sir, I am sure that is a trade which it is not wise for us to endeavor to destroy. Now, the net imports of corn and meal were, in 1876, 2,200,000 bushels; in 1877, 6,348,000 bushels; in 1878, 4,300,000 bushels; in 1879, 1,146,000 bushels; in 1880, 2,513,000 bushels; and for the first six months of this year, 1,267,000 bushels; and the imports for the next six months will, undoubtedly, be heavier. At the present moment, if we imported corn at 50 cents a bushel free of duty and export oats 35 cents a bushel, we should make on every bushel of corn we import, 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents; if we replaced the corn we import with barley at 96 cents, we should make 63 cents on every bushel; if we replaced it with peas at 62 cents, we should make 8 cents on every bushel; and if we replaced it with barley at 85 cents a bushel, we should make 20 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents on every bushel. If this is true, the duty interferes with the exchange and greatly lessens the profit, although it does not entirely prevent it. The trade returns show, notwithstanding this duty, which was calculated to prevent the importation of corn, that last year we imported over 2,500,000 bushels, and this year we shall probably import a larger amount. The duty has had no appreciable effect on the growing of corn on the corn-growing belt in this country. Many of the farmers do not know practically that the duty has been imposed, and I do not think the price of corn is higher than it was before the National Policy was adopted, as compared with the price of other coarse grains. Were it not that I do not wish to weary the House, I might enter at considerable length into an explanation of the reason why this is the case. The duty on grain has been in operation since 15th March, 1879. In the year 1879, ending 30th June, we had exported \$14,817,000 worth of grain, flour and meal. That was the net export of the country. Under the operation of the duty, instead of that amount being diminished, it had swelled the following year to \$17,000,000; and the export for the first six months of the present fiscal year amounts to \$10,500,000. Why, after the imposition of this duty for the purpose of increasing the price, should the quantity exported have increased so largely? And if that quantity has increased so largely, is it not apparent to any man that there must be a fallacy in supposing the duty can affect the price? If we have no home market, but have a large annual surplus which we must export, the duty must be inoperative as regards any effect it can have on the price, and the price must be governed by the rates in foreign markets. The hon. Finance Minister admitted that the other night. I recollect last year in this House, I challenged the hon. gentleman to assert that the duties on grain could have any effect in raising the price, except in the case of corn, and the hon. gentleman, with great prudence, refrained from expressing an opinion. This year he tells us the duty has had no effect, except under exceptional circumstances. If our wheat were all sold; if there was a shortage, and it was necessary to import wheat for home consumption, then the duty would have an effect on the price; but so long as we have a surplus to export, he admits, and every man of common sense will admit, that the duty has no influence on the price. I dare say the hon. gentleman's admission is made with a view to making a change in these absurd duties. He sees clearly they are mischievous in their operation, and thinks he is firmly enough planted in the saddle to disabuse the minds of the farmers as to this portion of the Tariff by taking off the duty. Well, the hon. gentleman and those associated with him can lay no claim to originality in this sell which they perpetrated on the farmers in 1878. They copied the sell, they copied their arguments and statements from the source where the same policy had been followed, and the same results produced as here. For twenty years heavy duties have been imposed on all grains imported into the United States, and for twenty years the United States have gone on, year after year, exporting enormous quantities of grain and flour. For twenty years the prices of these articles have been governed by the process ruling in foreign markets, and for twenty years the farmers have been deluded into the belief that in some way the duty has worked to their advantage.

Mr. PLUMB. That is a great compliment to the intelligence of the farmers.

Mr. CHARLTON. Very great. I understand the farmers in some parts of the country have shown dawning symptoms of intelligence, and do not care to have the hon. member for Niagara address them at their mass meetings. They will probably grow in intelligence until they see clearly the fallacy of the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite. For twenty years the United States farmers, and for twenty years our farmers, have been protected in this way, and we have been guilty of the mutual absurdity of keeping out grain from each other's market. The Americans sell in Europe and we sell in Europe, but neither must send any grain across the line, without paying duty, although neither buy for the purpose of home consumption. We were told that this policy would result in the building up of vast manufacturing establishments, the creation of a great consuming population, the formation of a home market, which would consume the surplus products of the soil. Let us see whether this promise has been realized. The hon. Finance Minister tells us that through the operation of this policy, 14,000 operatives have been added to the operatives of Canada. He did not say whether this was the net increase or not. He did not say whether he deducted from this amount those that had ceased to find employment on account of defunct industries. Had he done so, I believe the number would be very much less than that stated by the hon. gentleman. I ask the hon. Minister whether, in stating the 14,000 additional operatives had found employment since the inauguration of the National Policy, he supposes that if that policy had not been inaugurated, if the former Tariff were continued in force, there would have been any additional operatives added to our population.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The amount would have been very slight indeed.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman says this in face of the fact that the products of the manufacturers of this country, in 1870, reached the value of $211,000,000; that, in 1878, that production had increased to the amount of $275,000,000; that our industries were steadily growing; that there has been, owing to other causes than the operation of this Tariff, a great revival in business which would inevitably have given an impetus to our manufacturing industries. I do not believe that under the operation of the old Tariff, the addition to our manufacturing population would have been 4,000 less than it has been. I believe it is quite possible the addition would have been almost as great. Certainly, if we examine all that has to bear on this case, we must come to the conclusion that the increase in the number of operators would, under the old policy, have been very large. What progress has been made towards consuming the surplus? How near has my hon. friend approached to the redemption of his promise: that if this policy were adopted, the whole agricultural surplus would be consumed in this country? In 1877, the net export of grain, flour, and meal from Canada, amounted to $2,600,000. In 1878, it amounted to $12,250,000; and in 1879, to $14,877,000. The National Policy then came into operation. Let us see how rapidly this amount diminished. In 1880 it had not diminished, but had grown from $14,877,000 to $17,000,000, and the amount is still increasing. Through the courtesy of the hon. Minister of Customs, I have obtained a list of the exports for the six months ending 31st of December and I find that they amount to $10,500,000, indicating most clearly that in place of a home market being afforded, the exports of produce are swelling from year to year. Nothing could demonstrate more clearly the utter fallacy of the promises of the hon. gentleman. At this rate, when will we have a home market? Why, the exportation of agricultural produce from Canada would have fed 1,000,000 people. It would have required an addition of 1,000,000 instead of 14,000 to have consumed this agricultural surplus of 180. Let us see how near the United States have come towards insuring a home market that would absorb their agricultural surplus, after twenty years trial of the policy that has been in operation here two years. In the year ending 30th of June, 1880, the United States exported $283,000,000 worth of bread stuffs. They had come that much short of furnishing a home market, by the operation of the protective policy inaugurated in 1861. And the American consumer has submitted to taxation for these twenty years in order to build up a home market that comes within $283,000,000 of absorbing the bread stuffs raised in his country. What may we suppose is the aggregate amount of that taxation? The best authorities estimate that, through the operation of protective duties, the cost of all domestic goods of the same classes as those upon which these duties are imposed, has increased by two-thirds the amount of the duty. Now the average duties in the United States for the last twenty years have been 40 per cent. The average production of domestic manufactures affected by those duties for twenty years in that country was $3,000,000,000. If those domestic articles have been enhanced in cost to the extent of two-thirds of that duty, the amount is $800,000,000 a year, or $16,000,000,000 for the twenty years. If, however, the cost of these $3,000,000,000 of domestic goods produced annually has been enhanced to consumers only one-half of the import duties, that amounts to $600,000,000 a year, or $12,000,000,000 for the twenty years. I do not give these figures on my own authority; they are given as the authority of some of the best political economists in the United States. I have no doubt the figures are substantially correct; that American consumers have paid in twenty years $12,000,000 a year for the purpose of bringing about a state of things that would absorb the productions of their country, leaving only the small surplus of $283,000,000, or $50 per head. I believe the policy has done more. I believe the injurious effect of the policy has not been measured even by this. I believe, in addition to the imposition of this vast taxation on the producers of the United States, that the operation of that policy has been to retard the commercial progress of the world; that its operation has been to make times harder across the ocean, to reduce the ability of the consumers in England, France and other countries to buy, and that, in addition to paying those $16,000,000,000 or $12,000,000,000, as the case may be, the producers in the United States, during all those years, have received lower prices for their productions than they would have done, if either Free Trade or a revenue Tariff had permitted a freer interchange by its operation. Perhaps it may be necessary to say something about the operation of Protection in the United States. I know the argument has been used, that if our population is drifting off to the United States in considerable numbers, that country being a protective country, the inference is a fair one that Protection is a good policy. Well, there are a variety of reasons which operate to make the United States prosperous at the present time. Some three years ago the country returned to specie payments, and I think that had a very considerable effect on its prosperity. Then, the country has had two extraordinary harvests, the most extraordinary known in the history of the country; and combined with the fact that the country has had those great harvests, is the other fact, that there were two years of scarcity in Europe, causing an unusual demand for the agricultural products of the United States at high prices. This could but produce its effects. We felt the effects of the same causes here. The fact is, the extraordinary demand at unusual prices must necessarily have effected the prosperity of the country, and they have had an effect on it. Then again, no better field could be chosen for the operation of any policy than the United States. It is a miniature world. It has every variety of soil and productions, it extends from ocean to ocean, and from the temperate zone to the tropics. The products of the temperate zone, and nearly all the products of the tropics, are produced in abundance. It possesses a vast consuming population, millions of inhabitants are engaged in the business of raising cotton for exportation to manufacturing countries. These millions afford a great market for the manufactures of New England. Another element of prosperity is the fact that in the last eleven years the United States received 3,592,000 immigrants. If they brought an average of $100 each, according to the estimates of some authorities, the country received an accession of wealth from that source of $360,000,000 in eleven years. In such a country the evil effects of a bad fiscal policy are minimized. But if we look carefully over the field we will find, even in that happily favored country, some evil effects of Protection. I have already named some of its evil effects. If we look at the shipping industry of the United States, I think we will find a very striking illustration of the evil effects of Protection or some other policy. I find, in 1856, the United States carried in its own vessels 75 per cent. of its commerce; in

1879-80, it carried only 23 per cent. For the last fiscal year the sum paid for outward freights was $88,000,000, inward freights, $45,000,000, making a gross sum of $133,000,000. If the American marine had been in a position to carry 75 per cent. of its freights, as in 1856, it would have amounted to $99,750,000; but as it carried only 23 per cent., the sum realised was only $30,500,000, leaving a loss of $69,000,000 for the merchant marine of the United States in one year in the matter of freights through the fiscal policy of the country. The entire number of sailing vessels engaged in the interoceanic trade was 4,682. Of those 884 were American; 882 belonged to the little Kingdom of Norway, only two less than the total number of vessels belonging to the United States. The total number of steamships engaged in foreign trade was 590. Of that number Great Britain supplied 447, the United States but 46, about 34 of which were engaged in the West Indies and Mexican trade. Even China and Japan are at this moment more enterprising, and appeared to be making more progress in regard to ocean steam marine than is the United States. That increase was due to the protective policy of the United States, and to the fact the Tariff totally prohibits the importation of vessels. American shipowners cannot buy or build and compete with foreign nations, and it is only in the coasting and inland trade that the American shipping industry has any prosperity whatever. The United States after twenty years of Protection, last year, exported $104,000,000 worth of goods, including refined petroleum. Their exports of manufactured cottons reached $10,853,000 last year. In 1860, under the operation of a revenue Tariff, they amounted to $10,933,000; an amount greater than that sent off after twenty years of Protection. Last year they exported, of woollen goods, two-thirds of a cent per head, or $346,000 worth, after twenty years of protection by duties from fifty to seventy-five per cent. In the United States the people were told this Protection was but a temporary measure—that while industries were in the infant and struggling condition it was necessary; but that after a time, when they were firmly planted, it would be removed. But those industries are still infant and struggling industries; they still demand Protection, they are still unwilling, and always will be, to dispense with Protection. It is a feature of Protection, that it keeps industries in swaddling clothes, and unable to compete with the free, unhampered industries of the rest of the world. Such is the case of the United States to-day, and such may be expected while Protection is continued. I call attention to the reason why Protection will prevent the United States or any country from engaging extensively in foreign trade, and there is no question that in the United States cotton goods can be produced as cheaply as any where in the world, and they should be able to export extensively. What prevents them from exporting to Buenos Ayres, Chili, South Africa, and other countries, and competing successfully with English manufactures? It is this: if the United States export cottons to Buenos Ayres, for example, they must take wool in exchange, or whatever other produce that country can give; but the United States manufacturer cannot take wool back to the United States, on account of the heavy duty on it. The products of such countries as Buenos Ayres must, therefore, be taken to England or Europe for a market, whence their price is brought to the United States, thus making a triangular operation. It is thus impossible to compete with the English manufacturers, who can take foreign goods home with them, in exchange for their manufactures, and enter them free of duty. It is similar in the case of Chili, where the foreign manufacturer must take payment in copper ore, which cannot be imported into the United States. Protection utterly prohibits the United States manufacturer from exporting his goods to any extent. If the Republic adopted a common sense system in this respect, I have not the slightest doubt that in twenty years it would become the greatest manufacturing country of the globe. It has a great accumulation of capital, great natural resources, a great population, great industries and ingenious artizans, and with a proper policy would become a great exporting country. But as long as it adheres to Protection, it will remain as it is, supplying its own wants at vast expense, and utterly unable to compete in the markets of the world, with France, England and Belgium; and if Protection is not the thing in that broad, favorable field of the United States, with all its natural advantages, what may we expect from it here, in the limited field of the Dominion? We have heard from all the speakers on the Ministerial side of the great business revival in Canada, and that it is due to the National Policy—the Finance Minister and members for Niagara and Cardwell have advanced that claim. Well, fortunately we have a business revival which is very marked, and which has resulted in swelling our revenue and increasing the prosperity of our people. Now, what has brought about this revival? The Finance Minister, I presume, will still say it is his pet, the National Policy. I think we can point to other reasons for it, however. In the first place, there has been a great revival in the United States. We are, for instance, receiving now in Toronto, 96 cents a bushel for barley, that in 1879 brought only 60 cents. Lumber is also high, as high, perhaps, as during the civil war. The lumber interest was never more prosperous than at present. The advance in the price of lumber and the increase in its exportation is most manifest from our Public Accounts. That advance came less than a year ago, just at the time of closing up the Public Accounts for the fiscal year 1880. The lumber trade of the country makes an unusual account. Although the export of lumber increased $3,000,000 over the preceding year, yet that is a very small proportion of the great increase, that the next return will undoubtedly show, in that branch of industry. Coupled with the improvement in the United States, and with the increased prices we have received for lumber and barley, and various other articles we exported, we have had two abundant harvests, while there have been two years of scarcity in Europe, occasioning an unusual demand for our productions. The result has been to us prosperous times—the result of influences outside of Canada—the result of something besides monopolies and the policy of our Government. If the National Policy has had any effect upon our prosperity, as it undoubtedly has had, it has been simply to lessen that prosperity; without it the prosperity would have been greater. I hear the laugh of the member for Niagara, and I assert again that our prosperous circumstances are due to causes exterior to this country—to an improved demand for our productions in the United States, and to an improved, an unusual demand for them in Europe, and to unusually high prices, and that this prosperity would have been greater, but for the policy of taxation and depletion adopted by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

In reply to Mr. WHITE (Hastings),

Mr. CHARLTON said: The hon. gentleman speaks about the day of judgment for the Opposition. There is a day of judgment coming, before the bar of public opinion—a day of judgment for all the falsehoods and follies hon. gentlemen opposite have palmed off upon an intelligent but unsuspecting people. The Finance Minister wishes to usurp in our affections the place of a benign Providence in regard to our prosperity, to usurp the place due to beneficent Nature. Had he lived in the good old days of heathen Rome, there would have been a movement to make him a demigod, on the ground that he had created all this prosperity. The sun has exerted its warming influence upon the earth, the rains have descended, the husbandman has seen the fruits of his summer's toil gathered in unusual abundance, events outside Canada have conspired to benefit us in various ways. Providence and Nature have combined to make our lot an enviable one by improving our condition, when my friend the Finance Minister steps in and says: "That is not the case; it is not the abundant harvests in Canada, it is not the unusual demand in Europe and the improved demand in the United States for our products; it is not these things, it is the taxation I imposed, it is the depletion I occasioned; it is the pimples upon the body, that have been fostered by me, that are the cause of the health of the patient." I believe that we may thank Providence and Nature for the blessings we enjoy, and that we have very little to thank the Finance Minister. In this connection I now wish to call attention to some figures which will throw at least some light upon the improvement in our condition. I wish to draw a comparison between the unusual volume of exports for the last two or three years, as compared with the five years preceding. I give the net exports of grain, flour and meal. I take the exports of those articles produced in Canada, and those not produced in Canada, and deduct the total imports. I reduce all to bushels. I reduce flour to bushels in the proportion of $4\frac{1}{2}$ to a barrel; oat meal in proportion of 10 to a barrel; and corn meal to a proportion of 4 to a barrel, which, I presume, is substantially correct. I find that the net exports of flour, corn and meal for 1874, were \$11,900,000, in round numbers; 1875, \$3,950,000; 1876, \$13,850,000; 1877, \$2,590,000; 1878, \$12,260,000; 1879, \$14,870,000; 1880 \$17,000,000; for the first six months of the first fiscal year, \$10,500,000. Now, Sir, if we analyze this, we will find that the net export for the five years, ending in 1878, was \$49,590,000; the net exports for the two and half years, ending 31st of last December, amounted to \$42,421,000. The average annual export for the five years of the first period was \$9,900,000; the annual average export for the two-and-a-half years of the last period was \$17,600,000, and the average for the last two-and-a-half years of the first five years was \$9,570,000. Now, Sir, the exports for the last two-and-a-half years lacked but \$7,900,000 of being as great as the exports for the five previous years. The total net exports for the two and half years since June, 1878, were \$42,400,000; the net exports for the two-and-a-half years previous to that period were \$21,720,000, or nearly twice as great as for the two-and-a-half years since June, 1878, and within \$7,900,000 as great as for the last two-and-a-half years for the five years of the regime of the hon. member for Lambton. Has this had any effect on our prosperity? The fact that we exported in the last two-and-a-half years nearly as much as in the preceding five years of grain, flour and meal, the fact that the exports of the produce of the forests are swelling very rapidly in amount, together with the fact that these large increased exportations of agricultural products, must necessarily have benefitted the business of this country, business could not help being favorably effected by these causes. The prosperity of this country is due to these things. Let any gentleman examine our Trade and Navigation Returns carefully and considers these facts, and he cannot fail to admit that the prosperity of the country must necessarily be greatly increased by this state of affairs. I think it would be well if the Finance Minister would recollect some things that we find in Holy Writ. He might read the Book of Proverbs to great advantage. He might also read of a Prime Minister who once advised a king in years of plenty to provide for years of scarcity, and he might take that lesson to himself. Here we are in the full tide of prosperity, with two unusually good harvests coeval with two bad harvests in England, which create an unusual demand, while the revival of business in the United States has created a great demand for our lumber and other articles. This is a combination of circumstances such as now, in all probability, we may not see again for years. Yet the hon. Finance Minister practically says, that as this day is so shall all days be, only much more abundant. He does not remember that we may have again years like 1877, when our net exports shrunk to less than \$3,000,000; that we may have another succession of five years such as those since 1875, during which the hon. member for Lambton was First Minister of the Crown. But he goes on and provides for a scale of future expenditure based upon a calculation that all the years of the future will be such as these two exceptional years which have just passed. I hold that in doing this he is not prudent. I hold that in doing this he is likely to impose burdens upon this country that will be found very onerous in the future. What do we find the United States doing with their swelling revenue, with this great tide of prosperity that has set in upon them? Are they increasing their expenditures lavishly? No, Sir, they are using those revenues to decrease the debt. They reduced it \$66,000,000 last year, they will reduce it \$100,000,000 this year; and in twenty years they will have wiped out their debt, while we shall have increased our debt as to be unable to meet our annual obligations.

Mr. PLUMB. Yet they have a high protective Tariff.

Mr. CHARLTON. We have heard all we want to hear of the hon. member for Niagara for at least a month to come. He reminds me of an old gray hen cackling over a goose egg under the agreeable impression that she laid it herself. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), whom I am sorry not to see in his place, attacked my hon. friend for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) the other night, asserting that he had made a mistake in some computations with reference to the amount of charge per acre that the public debt of Canada imposed upon the improved lands of the Dominion of Canada at the present moment. The hon. member for West Middlesex, evidently without having made a close computation, gave in round numbers an estimate of what the public debt of Canada amounted to upon each acre of improved land in this country. The hon. member for Cardwell asserted that that computation was utterly preposterous. Let us see. The hon. member for West Middlesex asserted that the present debt of Canada amounted to a charge of $9 per acre upon all the improved land in Canada. Now, I assume the debt at the present moment is $162,000,000 in round numbers. On the 30th of June last it was nearly $157,000,000, and at the rate of increase of the previous year it would now exceed $162,000,000. The number of acres of improved land, in 1871, was 17,780,000, including Prince Edward Island. If we divide the figures representing the public debt by the number of acres of the improved land, we will have about $9.10 and a fraction over upon every acre of improved land in this Dominion. My hon. friend did not take into consideration the fact that the quantity of improved land has increased since 1871, as it undoubtedly has. The population of the country probably has increased 10 or possibly 15 per cent. I estimate that the increase in the improved land has been 25 per cent., and that certainly should cover the increase. If the increase had been 25 per cent. since 1871, the number of acres of improved land, to-day, would be 22,225,000. If that is correct—and I think it will at least cover the increase in improved land—the public debt of $162,000,000 represents a sum of $.28 for every acre of improved land in this Dominion. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), in the course of his remarks, took occasion also to justify the Government in increasing the public debt. He told us that it was a matter of no great importance, and that we had no reason to be alarmed over the fact that we owed $162,000,000. That was a mere bagatelle to the mind of the hon. gentleman. What was $162,000,000, asked the hon. gentleman if we had value for it; if we got, for example, $15,000,000 on the Intercolonial? Does the hon. gentleman call the Intercolonial good value for that sum? In my opinion, if the Government can sell it for $3,000,000 they had better do so. Then said my hon. friend, we have $13,000,000 which is due to the transference of burdens from particular Provinces to the whole people; and is not that all right. And, by the way, I believe we are to have another addition of this kind by the transference of a local burden from the city of Montreal to the whole Dominion. This may be a very nice thing for the localities, but it is rather hard on the Dominion. Then we have a great many other public works—we have a canal almost under our noses, the Rideau Canal—and how much is it worth? We have abundance of investments of that kind. We have the enormous sum of $162,000,000 invested in non-productive property, some of which, so far from paying us anything, is costing us large sums in interest; such, for example, as the Intercolonial, upon the cost of which we are paying interest, and which also costs large sums for running expenses. Such investments as these are something like self-righteousness—the more of them we have the worse we are off. The Government of the day have given an enormous sum as a subsidy to the Syndicate for the very reason that a large portion of the road—the section north of Lake Superior and that in British Columbia—will be unproductive, and will cost millions to run them. That is a policy which will inevitably land us in inextricable difficulty, and if we do not cease to pursue it, it will prove to be a policy which cannot fail to result in the ruin of the country. I have trespassed upon the time of the House a little longer than I had intended, though there are some other topics upon which I have thought of making a few remarks. I have aimed to vindicate the policy of the late Government, and to show that, so far as the farmers of this country are concerned, they have been deluded by the promise that the National Policy would increase the price of their grain by the creation of a home market which would absorb their production. I have endeavored to show that the measure of prosperity we are now enjoying is due to other causes than the new Tariff; that we are but sharing with other nations a prosperity due to a combination of fortuitous circumstances apart altogether from trade policies, but a prosperity which I again warn hon. gentlemen we cannot expect to enjoy for many years. We should be cautious. We should retrench our expenditure and reduce our debts; and we should so manage our affairs as to guard against the possibility of finding ourselves involved in those troubles, in which we shall surely become involved if the prosperity we are now enjoying should not continue.

Mr. CHARLTON,

Mr. COURSOL. I know that the feeling of the majority of this House is, that this debate should be concluded as soon as possible. Nevertheless, I shall claim the indulgence of the House for a short time, in order to make a few remarks, and offer a few statistics, which may be of interest to the large city which has done me the honor of giving me a seat in this House. I am fully conscious of my shortcomings. When I venture to address the House on the general topics which are discussed, but especially so when that discussion has relation to matters affecting the city of Montreal—for I know that that city might require for the proper representation of its large and varied interests more ability than I can command. I share in the satisfaction which this House must have felt in listening to the precise, clear and remarkably able speech of the Finance Minister. The Budget speeches of a Finance Minister are always watched with a great deal of interest by members of this House, by the press, and by the country, as they are regarded as the barometer which indicates the rise or decline of the prosperity of the country. The Budget speeches of the hon. Finance Minister are always well received, and they deserve to be. They always contain some cheerful news for the country; and they always show how farseeing are his views, and how accurate are his calculations. Accuracy and prudence appear to be the special characteristics of the hon. gentleman. I remember well the year 1878, when we went to the polls upon the platform of the National Policy. I pledged myself to that policy; we won a victory over our opponents, and I was anxious to see how the Finance Minister and the able statesman at the head of the Government would redeem the pledges that were made at that time. We were all rejoiced when, in 1879, the Finance Minister predicted that a new era was about to arrive in our commercial history, that new life was about to be infused into our industrial interests. This year had hardly elapsed when the dawn of brighter days was seen throughout Canada. Last year he announced a further improvement in the condition of the country. Notwithstanding the denials made in this House by the leaders of the Opposition party—gentlemen of high standing and great ability—notwithstanding the denials of their organs and the press, who have worked faithfully to decry the National Policy and hinder the advent of an improved condition of things, the whole country is now prepared to justify the Finance Minister in his adoption of that policy, and to say that it has been abundantly successful. We have been taught that Governments were made for the people, but later we were led to believe that the people were made for the Government, and we were taught that for a period of five years. We have had a Ministry who soared into so high a region that they viewed with complacency and indifference the misery and woes of those in humbler places. But the present Finance Minister took no such lofty and elevated view of the subject. He at once saw what he could do by practical and philanthropic legislation, he enacted wise laws, and he carried them into effect, and the result has been greatly to the benefit of the country. The Finance Minister, anxious to see with his own eyes the operation of his policy, visited the principal manufacturing cities of the Dominion. I believe, Mr. Speaker, the Finance Minister visited all the principal cities in the Dominion, and if his visit to Montreal created a deeper impression there than in the other places he visited, it was, perhaps, because our city being more populous than other cities, our sufferings were greater; it was, perhaps, also due to the fact that the people compared their position in 1878 to their position in 1879, and 1880 and 1881. The comparison was so strikingly in favor of the policy of the present Finance Minister that one and all approved of that policy. A rapid glance at the commercial condition of Montreal will show what the National Policy has done for the country at large, and our city in particular. It will show, too, the beneficial effects of that policy. We see factories which three years ago were working half time, now working full time. We see manufactories which were idle again in operation, and under the revival of trade, caused mainly by the National Policy, the manufactories are perfecting their working power to a degree which is really marvellous. We have manufactories springing up in every part of the city. We have, at the present moment, capital seeking investment which is entirely due, I believe, so far as Montreal is concerned, to the National Policy. I shall take the liberty to cite a few statistics to show what improvements have been made in Montreal, to show what position Montreal was in in 1878, and the number of manufactories then shut up. I regret I could not collect more, and most of those I have, I give from memory. They refer to the number of manufactories that were closed in 1878, the number of manufactories that have been in operation since, and the number of new manufactories established since 1878. Now, Sir, we have, among the new factories in Montreal, a new corset manufactory started by Mr. S. Lander from the United States. This manufactory will be on a large scale, and it is confidently anticipated that the return will pay the parties who have put their capital in the business. There is also the Hudon Company's new bleachery, where they turn out white cotton cloth. I could read extracts from Montreal papers, and from papers published throughout the Dominion, speaking of the improvements in that manufactory, which will not only benefit the proprietors, but the people at large. When the improvements to this manufactory are completed, they will employ 300 additional hands. We have a new skate factory, which will be opened in March, by Dr. Brewster. The machinery will cost $25,000, and here will be made 1,000 pairs of skates per week. We have Berger's lead works, whose capital will amount to $125,000. This establishment was started in 1879, and the value of the goods turned out from that establishment will be $200,000. It employs at the present moment only fifty hands, but that number will be very shortly increased I am informed. We have H. Steinson & Co., biscuit manufacturers; it was started in 1878, and employs seventy-five men. We have George McDougall, manufacturer of charcoal, etc. This manufactory was closed in 1878; they now employ some 200 men. We have also the Montreal Rolling Mills Company, now putting up a new building for the manufacture of boiler tubing, gas and water pipes, etc. It is a new manufactory in Canada and will employ a large number of hands. The number has been said to be between 200 and 300. We have also a large hammer and tool factory which will cost a large amount of money. The amount I have not been able to ascertain. We have the Merchants Cotton Manufacturing Company, now being organized with a capital of $400,000, to make superior bleached cotton. It will have 250,000 spindles, and is to be located in or near Montreal, and will employ probably 500 hands. We have F. Abbott & Co., from Boston. They manufacture organettes, a new musical instrument, and but for the present Tariff this manufactory would never have been established in Canada. They will employ about 250 hands. We have also the Williams Sewing Machine Company. Now we come to the silk factories. It has been said for a long time that a silk factory would be established in Montreal, but capitalists who were anxious to establish a manufactory of that kind were not prepared to risk their capital and lose their time when they had no protection. They waited until this Tariff came into operation, and finding that the Government were sincere and prepared to carry out their pledges, and that the Finance Minister knew how business affairs should be conducted, they concluded they had no further risk to run. They became fully convinced that they could safely embark their capital. It was an easy matter to bring skilled artisans from Lyons. I believe there are two or three manufactories in the United States where silk is manufactured equal to the best Lyons silk. I believe there is one in New Jersey, and I read a paragraph in a newspaper some time ago to the effect that samples of that silk had been sent to connoisseurs, and especially lady connoisseurs, who had found it equal to imported silk. I believe a gallant Frenchman has sent a present to some ladies in Montreal. I believe that exhibition of French gallantry was the result of another silk manufacturer sending a sample of his goods to some ladies in another city. We have Corriveau's silk factory. It was started in 1890, to make broad silk, an article never manufactured before in Canada. They employ seventy-five hands, this year their producing power will be treble; buildings and machinery are to be erected to produce three times as much as at present. They will employ this year 150 hands. The Canada Silk Company is another institution, it is a new factory recently started for the purpose of manufacturing all kinds of sewing silk. It will give employment to about sixty hands, and they expect to employ as many more as soon as they are in full working order. We have also Belding Paul & Co.'s silk factory. They make all kinds of sewing silk, thread and twist; in 1878 they employed sixty hands, now they employ 110. They are also undertaking the manufacture ribbons, and if that proves successful they will employ several hundred more men in that branch alone. The glass works of W. & D. Yuille, which were closed by American competition from 1876 to 1879, when they were started again, now employ 350 hands. The proprietors are perfectly satisfied, perfectly happy, in the hope of making in a few years a handsome profit from the large amount of money they have put into this business. There are also the new electro-plate works, which were started last year, and now employ forty hands, with the probability of a large increase. The work done by that company is simply magnificent—as fine as anything done in the United States or Europe. The new wall-room-paper factory, started in 1880, employs forty hands. Then there is Redpath's sugar refinery. It now employs 500 hands, and pays out over $200,000 per annum in wages, in addition to which it indirectly furnishes employment to an enormous number of men, and it does a great deal of good. I can only say that I hope sugar refineries in this country will succeed, and that they will become more numerous; but they must watch their interests very closely, as there is another industry which is likely to come into competition with them, and that is the beet-root sugar industry. The Government of Quebec, by their liberality and foresight, have assisted and encouraged that industry, and in a few years, if it is developed, the country will reap a great benefit from it. I hope this Government will be generous enough to extend some privileges to those gentlemen who are endeavoring to establish this industry in this country, and also to relieve them, to some extent, from the duties on their machinery. We have also the new chinaware and white earthenware factory at St. Cunégonde, near the city. In 1878 the works were assigned in bankruptcy, but in 1880 they were started again under the new Tariff, and they now employ 80 hands. This year the works are being extended to double their capacity, and next year they will employ 160, or perhaps 200 hands. Now, Sir, I have spoken of a few new establishments only; I have not a complete list, as I had not time to obtain a list of them all. I shall now, with your permission, mention the foundries of Montreal, where steam engines, boilers and locomotives are manufactured. There are also being now manufactured in Montreal, for the Grand Trunk and the North Shore Railways, cars of the finest description, which can compare with the best Pullman cars. Some of those made for the North Shore road excited surprise and admiration from all who saw them. All this is directly due to the National Policy. In Montreal there is the nail factory, the horse shoe factory, the rubber factory, and the carriage factories. Gentlemen opposite may laugh, but if they had seen Montreal a few years ago, if they had been witnesses to the misery of many of the business men there, if they had seen the stores locked up for half the day, if they had seen the despondency of many of the large manufacturers, if they had seen how Montreal was made the slaughter market of American goods, they would have thought differently. Then there are the soap factories, the boot and shoe factories, and the brass foundries. We have among our manufactures, railway lamps—articles not previously manufactured in this country—coal oil lamps and burners. The first man who obtained a patent for these small ordinary burners in the United States made a large fortune, and I hope those who now make them on the improved pattern will also make their fortunes. We have also the manufacture of door hinges and knobs. In this connection, I cannot refrain from mentioning the name of our old manufacturer in Montreal, Mr. Chanteloup, who is well known all over Canada and in the United States. Mr. Chanteloup keeps a large establishment of brassware. In 1878 he was nearly ruined, thus sharing the fate of men like Messrs. Fleming, Brouse, Mitchell, Garth and others, all large manufacturers who could not find a market for their goods, owing to insufficiency of demand, and, therefore, could not give employment to a large number of their hands. In 1879, Mr. Chanteloup wrote a letter to the Montreal Gazette, which I find referred to in the Industrial World, a paper published in Ottawa, as follows:—

“Mr. Chanteloup, a large metal manufacturer in Montreal, has just performed a public service by writing a letter to the Gazette, in which he points out what Protection is doing for the country, in the development of many minor industries in the metal-working branches. He observes a great change since the new Tariff came into operation. From five to six hundred workmen are employed in Montreal alone, in the making of tools for ships, and many articles of small hardware, which before were all imported from the States. It was some time ago stated that, within a very limited radius in Montreal, there were then five thousand more hands employed than in 1878. Mr. Chanteloup's statement enables us to understand how this might probably be quite within the truth at the time, and how many more thousands will yet find employment under the genial, beneficent influence of the new policy. He mentions, further, the manufacture of coal oil lamps, telegraph instruments, clocks, church bells, brass buttons, gold and silver-plated and other articles for military and marine equipments—as broaches that before could not be profitably carried on in Canada, but are now well established. We are reminded here of the town of Berlin (west of Toronto, on the Grand Trunk), which before turned out buttons in small quantities, but which now has a considerable portion of its population employed in that manufacture alone. We might also mention other branches of industry—perfumery, fancy soap, envelopes, paints and oils of certain kinds, shoemakers' sprigs, tacks and brads, painted or figured cotton window shades, saddlery hardware, and other malleable iron goods in immense variety, locks and other builders' hardware, tools for various trades, articles of brass work, small and large, (and the list might be greatly extended), the manufacture of which has either been created in Canada, or largely extended by the legislation of 1879.”

Now I shall quote from the Toronto Monetary Times of 24th December, 1880, the following extract:—

“At no time within the last ten years have matters connected with the manufacturing interest in Montreal, given so much evidence of activity. The demand for factory premises and power is almost unprecedented, and it is stated that several Montreal firms, which wished to secure the lease of premises with water privileges on the canal, that have been vacant for several years, were somewhat surprised to find that they had already been engaged. At Cote St. Paul and the St. Gabriel Locks, it is stated that there is not a vacant factory, several American manufacturers of shovels, implements and general hardware, having engaged all the available premises, to begin operations in the spring. The number of applications for permits to erect steam engines in the city has been larger this year than for a number of years back.”

The statement has been made in one of the commercial papers, and it has been going the rounds of the press that there were 419 boilers made in Montreal during the two years 1879 and 1880, representing an aggregate of 12,570 horse-power. These boilers, further, represent a large amount of machinery to be kept in motion, and which necessitate the employment of a large number of men. Opponents of the National Policy might ask whether I pretend that the revival in trade and manufacture is due entirely to Protection. I am not prepared to say that the National Policy has worked alone these wonderful changes, but I am convinced that without Protection the improvement would not be nearly so great as it has been. We are so situated that our manufactures would have remained crushed for years under American competition were it not for the policy inaugurated by this Government. We would simply have continued in our position as brokers for American manufacturers, and our market would have been still a market for American goods. Not having the capital at our disposal of older countries such as England and France or as the United States, we could not have been able to compete against them without the aid of the National Policy. Our people would not have had the courage to risk their capital in large manufacturing enterprises were they not assured that this policy would be permanent. They waited for the National Policy, and are convinced now that they can go on, and are willing to do all they can to support it. In a short time, you will find not Canadians only, but Americans coming to this country, to bringing their energy and talent and money here, and establish manufactories. Is there a country in the world more adapted to manufacturing than Canada? As we travel through the country, we can everywhere see water powers that can be utilized. But I need not go beyond my own city in order to discover facilities for manufacturing. Americans can come to Montreal with their capital, invest it there with advantage. We are not prepared to shut out our country to the Americans. We make them graciously come to our shores where they can obtain cheaper labor than is to be obtained in the United States. There is a large future in store for our country—a future full of encouragement. I have no doubt in regard to the future of this country, possessing, as it does, so many men of intelligence, capacities, and means, if they exhibit prudence in the conduct of their affairs. Prudence goes hand in hand with intelligences, and I am satisfied that under these conditions the prosperity of Canada will be assured. The hon. gentleman who has taken his seat said that last year the price of wheat in Chicago had risen largely, and that it was due partly to our own policy. The hon. gentleman ought to have known that about fifteen or eighteen months ago there was a ring, as there has always been more or less in those large cities, especially in Chicago, to keep up the price of wheat, and they kept it up from twenty to twenty-five cents over the market prices. To use a common expression they cornered it, and they kept it there until they were forced to sell. These are the kind of arguments that are advanced to prove that our country under the National Policy is not prosperous. We also had another argument made by the hon. gentleman, of a most ingenious character. He undertook to prove that, by the importation of Indian corn in 1877, the Canadians made a clear profit of $400,000. Well, Sir, this must have been a matter of great surprise and gratification to the hon. Minister of Finance. But this $400,000 must be somewhere. Some day we may, perhaps, be astonished by the announcement that the late Finance Minister has discovered the whereabouts of that sum. But, seriously, I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman believes what he says; he cannot, however, expect others to believe it. I was not in the House at the time, but I never heard that $400,000 had been made in that way. I would be most happy if any hon. gentlemen would show me how that saving was effected. Something has been said with reference to farmers. We were told by hon. gentlemen that the National Policy had ruined the farmers. Although I live in a city I know something about farmers. Farming interests are represented in this House, and some hon. gentlemen are farmers themselves. I believe they will corroborate me when I say that the farmers are satisfied. Farmers were never better satisfied. They are selling their products at remunerative prices. They are happy under the present system. The hon. gentleman also alluded to the shipping interest of the United States as an argument that a protective policy was ruinous to a country. The United States have lost their shipping to a great extent because they were not prepared to build again. The hon. gentleman's comparison of the national debt of the United States with ours was not a fair one. The debt of the United States was incurred in war, ours was incurred in the development of the country, in fostering its industries, and in augmenting its prosperity. Now, Sir, a great deal has been said about the exports and imports from and to this country. I hold in my hand a statement of what our position in this respect actually is. I have first to refer to the number and tonnage of sea-going vessels entered at the port of Montreal during the following years: 1876, 602 vessels, tonnage 391,180; 1877, 513 vessels, tonnage 376,859; 1878, 516 vessels, tonnage 397,266; 1879, 612 vessels, tonnage 506,969; 1880, 710 vessels, tonnage 628,271. The aggregate receipts of grain, flour and meal at Montreal for the following calendar years, from January 1st to December 31st, was, in 1877, 18,825,184 bushels; 1878, 21,934,170; 1879, 23,192,749; and in 1880, 26,187,324. The aggregate shipments from Montreal were, 1877, 17,346,678 bushels; 1878, 20,899,187 bushels; 1879, 22,725,944 bushels, and in 1880, 27,091,130 bushels. The shipments of the same from Montreal, in sea going vessels, were in 1877, 14,161,683 bushels; 1878, 16,372,425 bushels; 1879, 19,180,413 bushels; 1880, 24,562,373 bushels. By the wise action of the Government in that respect, Montreal will increase its facilities for access, and it has taken the preliminary steps towards the tunnelling the St. Lawrence near that city. That is an enterprise which I hope will be successful. It is in the hands of capitalists who are able to push it through, and the surveys are being made by an engineer of high reputation, Mr. Walter Shanly. Montreal is desirous of being accessible from all points. She knows that her position is such that trade must necessarily reach her from all quarters, and she is anxious to have her harbor dues so reduced, that vessels may anchor at that port as cheaply as, and if possible more cheaply than, at the ports of Boston, New York or Baltimore. It may be well to mention that the Harbor Trust is now saddled with an enormous amount of interest, contracted for the deepening of Lake St. Peter. That work was a national work, carried out for the benefit of the Dominion; it was so considered by the hon. gentleman who for so many years so ably led the Liberal party. It is in Montreal that vessels from across the seas will distribute their goods for the western parts of Canada. It is there that vessels from the West will leave their goods for shipment to the Maritime Provinces, and it is there that they will obtain their return freights. I am sure that both the Maritime Provinces and the Provinces farther west, in their desire for the prosperity of the Dominion at large, will say, as business men, that they want the trade of the world, no matter whether it may come by the port of Montreal, Quebec or Halifax. What they want is the best port, no matter where that port may be. It would not be fair that the Harbor Trust of Montreal should bear all this expense; or that they should be compelled to levy such high tolls, that it would drive away trade instead of attracting it. We have formidable rivals in the ports of the United States, which are progressing at a very rapid rate, and it is only by such a scheme as that of which I have been speaking, and possibly by the expenditure of large sums of money, that we can hope to compete with them. I trust that this scheme will be favorably considered by the Government. I have no reason to know whether they are favorably disposed towards it at the present moment or not, but I think they ought to be. I believe that this House, and the country at large, would support them in so regarding it. It behoves this Government, who have done so much for this country by the National Policy, who have given new life to all our industries, to win this last mark of public approval, whatever may be their fate hereafter. I am satisfied that the present Government—and their successors will be in the same position—will not lose sight of our interests in that particular; and if they do not, if they continue true to their course, true to themselves, and true to the people, they will continue to possess the confidence of the public, and certainly the confidence of the loyal, the patriotic, and the great Conservative party of Canada.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). I notice that in all the speeches made from the other side of the House, one prominent assertion is invariably made, and that is to charge the late Government with the depression which existed from 1876 to 1878. They also claim that by their restoration to power, and by the operation of the National Policy, prosperity was restored to the country. Now, when it is known that, from Confederation down to 1873-74, the country had seven or eight years of great prosperity—that every industry of the country, including that of agriculture, was prosperous and profitable; that the imports of the country had grown from $78,500,000 to $128,000,000; that the exports had increased from $57,000,000 to upwards of $90,000,000; that the revenue of the country had increased from $13,500,000 to $24,500,000 that our expenditure had also increased from $13,500,000 to $24,500,000—when it was known that all these rapid increases took place during these years of prosperity, we might be sure that when a depression did come it would tax the people of the country to the utmost and be felt very severely throughout the whole Dominion. Depressions are certain to follow periods of prosperity. I might call the attention of the hon. gentlemen opposite to the depression that existed between 1858 and 1864 in all parts of this country. In old Canada there was a deficit then of $12,150,000. We paid interest at the rate of eight per cent., and her bonds were selling at 75 cents on the dollar. It was under Tory rule this great depression existed, with this great falling off in the revenue. We have had periods of depression in the past and we will have them again. The Government are pursuing the same course now that they did between 1868 and 1873. They are not only increasing our revenue by increasing the taxation, but they are increasing the expenditure to an enormous extent. As we go on increasing our expenditure and our taxation, the result will be, by-and-bye, that when another period of depression comes, as come it surely will, we shall have other deficits larger than those which have already taken place. When the late Government came into power they assumed a debt which necessitated a provision for nearly $4,000,000 of additional taxation, as a result of the imprudent policy of their predecessors. It must also be remembered that importations at that time decreased very largely, not owing so much to the quantity as to the value of the goods that were imported. During the years 1876, 1877, and 1878, there was a depreciation in the value of the goods imported from Great Britain of from 35 to 50 per cent. Iron goods depreciated in value from £12 to £6 per ton. Hardware depreciated some 35 per cent. Cotton and woollens depreciated largely, and during those three years this depreciation was so large that the revenue loss was equal to $4,300,000. That estimate was made by experienced importers based upon careful data. That sum would more than pay the deficit that took place during these three years of $4,100,000 under the late Government. If we take into consideration that decrease in the revenue, and also the enormous burdens assumed by the late Government as a legacy from their predecessors, is it any wonder that these deficits occurred? The hon. the Finance Minister referred in his speech to his having left the country in 1873 in a prosperous condition, to having a surplus each year and a large revenue to meet all the expenses. He said that, on his return to Parliament in 1879, he found the country under great depression and everything in a most lamentable condition. The improvement that has since taken place he attributes almost entirely to the National Policy, leaving but very little to the credit of Providence. The depression that took place during our Administration, existed not alone in Canada but throughout the United States, Great Britain and Europe. The cause of our present improved condition is due to many causes, and very largely to the increased prosperity in the United States, which has reacted upon this Dominion. The increased prosperity in the United States has stimulated a demand for Canadian lumber, and for some others of our products. The citizens of Ottawa are aware of a greatly increased lumber trade, and in almost every instance the lumber has found a market in the United States from this locality, and in Great Britain for the Maritime Provinces.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. BURPEE. In addition to the advantages we have derived from the improvement of the lumber trade, we have had, during the past two years, excellent agricultural crops, and our exports have been exceedingly large, not only in grain of all kinds, but in animals and their products. During the year ending June 30th, 1880, the excess of our exports of lumber, animals and their products, and grain over our exports for the year 1879 was $10,000,000; during the six months ending December 31st, 1880, our exports of these same productions exceeded our exports for the six months ending December 31st, 1879, by $10,000,000 more. During these eighteen months $20,000,000 worth of our lumber and agricultural products were sold in the markets of the United States and Great Britain, and that amount of cash came into this country. This has put a vast amount of money into circulation, and gives our manufacturers an increased trade also. I do not wish to ignore the fact that our manufacturing industries contribute largely to the prosperity of this or any other country where they exist; but I contend that under a revenue Tariff, with the exception of the sugar refiners and the cotton and woollen manufacturers, our manufacturers were in as good a position as they are now under a protective Tariff. In 1871-72 our manufacturers were exceedingly prosperous in all parts of the Dominion. But in a period of great depression, they naturally suffer in common with other industries. Compare the excess of our exports of lumber and farm produce of amounting to $20,000,000 during the past eighteen months, which sum came into the Dominion, with the previous three or four years of depression, when there was a decrease in those exports of over $15,000,000. When we consider these large exports, I think we find in them an explanation of the prosperity we now enjoy, which are in no way benefitted by the National Policy. The net increase in the exports of 1880, as compared with those of 1879, was: of lumber, $3,593,000; of animals, $3,507,000, and of agricultural produce, $2,700,000, making, in round numbers, $10,000,000. To show how our exports of farm produce have increased in grains alone, I may say that in 1877 the excess of exports over imports was 2,489,000 bushels; in 1878, 10,313,000 bushels; in 1879, 12,653,000 bushels, and in 1880, 21,597,000 bushels. The excess of exports over imports in wheat and wheat flour was 6,889,000 bushels; in barley 7,226,000 bushels, and in other grains 9,408,000 bushels. To show in another way how our production of grain has increased, I may say that in wheat and wheat flour our production was less in the year 1877 than our consumption by 2,402,921 bushels; but in 1878 our production exceeded our consumption by 3,688,000 bushels; in 1879, by 6,324,000 bushels; and in 1880, by 6,889,400 bushels, showing a surplus for last three years of 17,000,000 bushels over production. All this proves that our farm products have very greatly increased within the last three years, which accounts very largely for our increased prosperity. From 1870 to 1874 our increased expenditure followed closely up with our revenue, and from the statement of the hon. Finance Minister as to the expenditure of 1881, and the estimated expenditure of 1882, the same process is going on now under the new system of taxation by the same Government. As our revenue and expenditure increases, our debt increases also, and if the Estimates for 1882 are carried out our debt will reach $184,000,000, which is equal to about $43.50 per head of the population. With this increasing expenditure going on year after year, and this growing debt, we shall find, when the times change, as they surely will, when the crisis comes, when an end comes to the speculative and extravagant expenditures now going on, we will be driven into the same depressed condition as we were in 1876, 1877, and 1878, and we shall experience deficits immeasurably larger than any we have had since Confederation. The expenditures in the North-West are assuming immense proportions. According to the statements made and the Estimates brought down, the expenditure on the Indian service will reach $350,000 this year. On looking over the Public Accounts for several years back, I find that for the items of the North-West Mounted Police, Indians, Dominion lands, Dawson route and Dominion forces, our expenditure each year was as follows:—In 1871, $949,000; in 1872, $1,081,000; in 1873, $795,000; in 1874, $1,052,000; in 1875, $1,191,000; in 1876, $1,479,000; in 1877, $1,124,000; in 1878, $980,000; in 1879, $1,100,000; in 1880, $1,500,000; or a total of $11,793,000, that the North-West and Manitoba received out of the public Treasury since 1870 for these five items. The hon. Minister referred to statements in previous speeches about the charge that their policy would break up the Union of the Provinces. I do not believe there is any danger of breaking up the Union. Our people are an enterprising people who will stand almost any emergency, and our country will have prosperity as well as times of depression. I have faith enough in the country to believe there is no danger of breaking up Confederation, but what a Government have most particularly to guard against is, keeping our people from being discontented. The policy of this Government is not one calculated to make the different Provinces contented; it is not such as was promised at the time Confederation was formed. Then it was understood, especially by the Maritime Provinces, that our taxes would not be increased, now they are more than double. In that respect those Provinces are very much disappointed. They are discontented at the largely increased expenditures made and going on in the western part of the country, and with their trade relations with the western Provinces. They were led to believe that their manufacturers would increase rapidly, that they would have a large export as well as import trade between those Provinces. To-day, however, their exports are not very much larger than they were before Confederation, while their imports, several millions annually, are excessively large, and increased by the operations of the National Policy. The hon. Finance Minister, in referring to the taxation of the different Provinces, spoke particularly of the Lower Provinces, but unfortunately he compared the years 1879 and 1880, when it is well known the new Tariff was in operation a part of 1879. The comparison between those two years was, therefore, an unfair one. The hon. member for Niagara referred to the duty collected in New Brunswick which, he said, in 1877 was 28 per cent. and to-day but 21½ per cent. That is an error in the return. The duties on our imports in 1877 were 15½ per cent., instead of 28 per cent. as stated, thus showing an increased rate of 6 per cent. instead of a reduction. To show the nature of the trade in the different Provinces and the taxation, let us compare Ontario and Quebec with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick since Confederation. In 1866, the imports of Ontario and Quebec amounted to $53,832,139, and the rate of duty was 13½ per cent. The average importation for 13 years from 1868 to 1880 for Ontario and Quebec was $75,147,541 annually, making an increase in the year 1880 of $21,345,222 over the year 1866, and the duty in 1880, as compared with 1866, was 19½ per cent., an increase of 5½ per cent. The imports of Nova Scotia in 1866 amounted to $13,025,433, and the rate of duty was 9½ per cent. In 1880, the imports amounted to $6,133,938, a decrease of $6,886,000 between the two years of 1866 and 1880, while the rate of duty was increased from 9½ per cent. in 1866, to 20 per cent. in 1880, an increase of 10½ per cent. for Nova Scotia, against 5½ per cent. for Ontario and Quebec. The decrease of imports for the thirteen years, from 1868 to 1880, as compared with 1866, was $55,000,000, or $4,238,000 a year for Nova Scotia. In New Brunswick, in 1866, the importations were $10,000,794, and the rate of duty was 10 per cent.; in 1880, the imports were $3,996,698, and the rate was 22 per cent., an increase of 12 per cent. If we take the importations of 1866 for New Brunswick and apply the Tariff of 1880 to each item, we would obtain for Customs alone $2,845,000, or 28 per cent. tax as against $1,033,609 in 1866. This shows most conclusively the rate of increased taxation upon importations of the Maritime Provinces. If we take an average of thirteen years for New Brunswick, between 1868 and 1880, we have a decrease in the importations as compared with the year 1866, of $33,000,000; and we now pay a Customs taxation of $2,845,000 per annum as compared with $1,033,000 for 1866. The rate, in 1866, of Ontario and Quebec, was 13½ per cent.; in 1869, it was reduced to 11½ per cent., and in 1880, we got back to 19½ per cent. The rates for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were as follows:—In 1866, Nova Scotia, 9½ per cent.; New Brunswick, 10 per cent.; in 1869, Nova Scotia, 13½ per cent., New Brunswick, 14 per cent.; in 1880, Nova Scotia, 20 per cent., New Brunswick, 22 per cent. This shows the nature of our taxation. It is not at all likely that our consumption in the Lower Provinces is any less to-day than it was in 1866. The probability is it is a great deal more. Our people have increased as a consuming population, whether they have increased in number or not. There is no doubt but our imports in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to-day are larger than in 1866, and this enormous falling off in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick imports, is supplied from Ontario and Quebec, and this will increase as taxation increases. In Nova Scotia, in 1866, the Tariff of to-day, if applied to the importations then, would have produced $3,156,000 of Customs; so that the taxation of the Lower Provinces, under the operation of the Tariff to-day, is considerably over double what it was before Confederation. I produce these figures to show that, in addition to the enormous increased burdens of taxation, the great decrease of their trade is a cause for dissatisfaction, and no wonder. The very fact of the importations of New Brunswick being reduced from $10,000,000 in 1866 down to $3,996,000 in 1880, is something that is alarming. The hon. Minister of Finance referred to the statement made by me in the year 1879, in this House, that the Tariff, if applied, item after item, to the importations of 1878, would produce increased taxation, something like $7,000,000, doubted the statement. I most distinctly stated that if the Tariff then introduced was applied to the importations of that year it would produce that result. There is one plain way of proving the truth of the greater part of the calculations at once. In 1878, the imports for consumption amounted to $91,199,577, on which a duty was collected of $12,795,693. In 1880, the Tariff, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns, averaged 19.70%. That applied to the importations of 1878 would produce a revenue of $18,126,000; which gives an excess to the importations of 1878, of $5,330,000. That does not prove the whole case. The Tariff has changed the importations of certain articles in such a way that it will produce more if it is taken item by item and applied to the imports of 1878; but, in order to make it plain, I have just taken the Tariff of the two years, and the result is an excess of $5,338,000. I maintain also, as I will show further on, that we have lost in revenue $7,730,000 on the sugar duties; that is loss of revenue other than what it would have been under the old Tariff. And that must be added to the $5,330,000, making $6,060,000, of which I spoke in 1879. This it is impossible to contradict, and if we applied the Tariff item by item it would produce the difference between that and $7,000,000. With regard to manufactures, I do not think, with the exception of the cotton and woollen factories, and sugar refineries, the manufactures taken together are any better off under the present Tariff than under the revenue Tariff of 1878, in consequence of the increased taxation on machinery and raw materials.

Mr. RYAN (Montreal). What about the silk manufactory?

Mr. BURPEE. We will come to that by-and-bye. The Minister of Finance the other day compared the prices of cotton goods in Canada with those in the United States. Such is not a proper comparison. The duty on cotton goods coming into the United States is equal to 50 or 60 per cent. It would be very strange if Canada could not produce cottons as cheaply, under those circumstances, as a highly protected country like the United States, and no argument in favor of the cheapness of cottons in Canada was applicable by a comparison of prices in the United States under a highly protective tariff. I would like to know on what principle we admit machinery of all kinds for the manufacture of cotton and woollen goods free of duty and tax heavily other manufactures. We admit the raw material, dye-stuffs, and machinery used in these manufacturing industries, all duty free. Last year the profits of the cotton factories were from 30 to 40 per cent. on the manufactured articles; they are enjoying enormous protection, and are declaring profits equal to 40 per cent. The question arises as to why cotton and woollen manufactures should be so highly protected, and have all machinery free, while much less aid is given to other industries struggling for existence. Why should not the carriage manufacturers, the boot and shoe manufacturers, the founder, furniture and agricultural implement maker have their machinery free also. I have obtained statistics from these manufacturers, and I find the following comparisons under the Tariff of 1878-79, as to increased taxation: carriage manufacturers, tax on machinery increased from 10 to 25 per cent., materials from 13½ to 23 per cent. Boot and shoe manufacturers: machinery, from 10 to 25 per cent.; materials, from 10 to 19 per cent. Foundry manufacturers: machinery, from 10 per cent. to 25 per cent.; materials from 4½ to 14½ per cent. Furniture manufacturers: machinery, from 10 to 25 per cent.; materials, from 5½ to 8½ per cent. Agricultural implement makers: machinery, from 10 to 25 per cent.; materials, from 6½ to 16 per cent. Pail manufacturing: machinery, 10 to 25 per cent.; materials, 6½ to 20 per cent. The same remarks apply with respect to sewing machines, musical instruments, &c. Those increases of duty on the raw materials and machinery used for manufactures are equivalent to the additional duty placed on the manufactured article imported from abroad, and these facts substantiate my statement that, with the exception of cotton and woollen manufactures and sugar refineries, the manufacturers are no better off than under the former revenue Tariff; indeed, they have this disadvantage, of being compelled to use more capital to carry on their business than under the old Tariff. With respect to the lumber business, the Finance Minister stated that the increased duties were only about one per cent. I have taken pains to ascertain the increased rate of duty on lumber supplies in New Brunswick, and I find it has been increased from 10½ to 22 per cent. This industry has an estimated capital in Canada of $100,000,000. Its exports and consumption are $30,000,000 worth annually on an average. The cost of labor in this lumber trade is estimated at sixty-five per cent. of the value of the lumber; all this shows that this is an industry very lucrative to the country, and which should not have been subjected to such additional taxation. This trade so fluctuates that very few engaged in it for a series of years make fortunes, but the country benefits, as it gives employment to 84,000 men, and supports 400,000 of the people of Canada. This calculation has been carefully made by some of the most experienced lumbermen in the country, and I believe the Finance Minister will find it perfectly correct. The member for Montreal (Mr. Coursol) spoke of the shipping trade, saying the Tariff in regard to the shipping interest was perfectly satisfactory. I know that it is not to the shipbuilders in New Brunswick. A number of the most experienced shipbuilders in New Brunswick submitted to the Finance Minister an estimate of the taxation under the new Tariff, at $1.85 cents a ton, as compared with 80 cents before, which, I presume, includes some things manufactured in the country. But I maintain, and so will the country and shipbuilders, that whether the products of the country be included or not, the new Tariff raises their price to an equality with the articles imported. It is a sound principle of political economy that under protection prices will increase in proportion to the duties on the imports. In 1865 the duty per ton on ship materials was 52 cents; in 1863, 60 cents; in 1878, 80 cents; 1879, accepting an estimate prepared by shipbuilders, which I think is correct, it was at least $1.85 cents per ton. I believe the new regulations as to drawbacks made last year is satisfactory, so far as the mode of its payment goes. But the shipbuilders complain that it is not large enough, and does not make up what they have to pay in addition to the Tariff of 1878. To show how the shipbuilding industry has declined, of late, I will give some statistics with regard to the Lower Provinces, beginning with Nova Scotia. The tonnage of ships built in Nova Scotia in 1872, was 52,882 tons; 1873, 63,000 tons; 1874, 74,769 tons; 1875, 81,800 tons; 1876, 69,087 tons; 1877, 50,530 tons; 1878, 47,639 tons; 1879, 50,975 tons; and in 1880, 38,252 tons. In New Brunswick there was built in 1872, 36,465 tons; 1873, 42,701 tons; 1874, 46,663 tons; 1875, 47,966 tons; 1876, 38,794 tons; 1877, 33,115 tons; 1878, 26,306 tons; 1879, 52,135; and in 1880, 14,528. This shows that the shipbuilding trade in the Lower Provinces is now reduced to the smallest proportions known since the year 1830. The Finance Minister also referred to the exports of shipping, to show that the increase in the amount in 1878 was largely due to a transfer in shipping from the people of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, to parties to whom they were indebted in Great Britain. I never heard that argument before, and I believe there is nothing in it. The shipbuilding in the Lower Provinces has been maintained in the hands of the original owners almost exclusively—and the exports form only a mite of what is built. It is rare that ships built are not owned by a large number of persons who can afford to hold their shares. The result would be, in the case of great depression, the parties who built and owned them would not sacrifice, or sell at an unremunerative price. In that year the shipping that was sold was something like $40 per ton, which would not have been the price if it had been transferred under mortgage to other parties. The shipping sold in previous years will answer the argument used by the Finance Minister. For example, in 1876 we exported shipping to the amount of $2,189,270; in 1877, $1,576,244; in 1878, $1,218,145; in 1879, $529,824; and in 1880, $464,327. This shows that there has been a great falling off under the new Tariff, even with the few ships we build for sale. Increased taxation from time to time does very much militate against this industry in the Lower Provinces. We might bring a parallel case to show the nature of increased taxation on the shipping interest. If we go to the United States, we find that, in 1856, 75 per cent. of their carrying trade was done in their own vessels; in 1870 it was 35 per cent., and in 1880 only 17 per cent., showing that the carrying trade of that country has almost entirely gone out of its hands. High taxation has driven its ships from the sea. With regard to manufactured goods, we do not find that the great increase in manufacturing in Canada, so much talked about, has stopped the importation of foreign goods, as the following table will show:

Agricultural Implements.....	$126,326	$241,523	143,725—

Miscellaneous.....	4,561,149	4,763,878	4,210,521—

So we might go on with many other articles, and show that the importation of goods into the country is not stopped by putting on a large taxation. The same result is shown by the returns in the Canada Gazette for the last six months. These statistics prove that all the protective tariffs you can put on a country will not have the effect of decreasing importation if the country is prosperous. The following figures show the increases which have taken place in the imports by the United States of British goods in 1880, as compared with 1879:—

Cottons.....	$ 10,001,056
Flax.....	8,077,038
Glass-ware.....	2,000,000
Iron and steel.....	44,271,972
Leather.....	4,648,179
Silk manufactures.....	8,175,292
Sugars.....	6,895,485
Tin manufactures.....	7,075,806
Tobacco.....	1,500,000
Woolen goods.....	28,251,697
Zinc, etc.....	3,459,000
Agricultural produce.....	154,548,882

These figures show that what is true of Canada under a protective system has been demonstrated by the experience of the United States. Now, with regard to the sugar question, the following figures show our importation of that article in 1878, with the value and the duty:—

Quantities in lbs.	Value.	Duty.
No. 13 and above.....	93,480,878	$5,419,715	$2,289,840
9 to 13.....	10,624,336	517,528	209,066
Below 9.....	1,108,065	44,825	16,749
Melado, &c.....	16,854	438	173
Syrups, &c.....	3,711,747	115,101	51,974
	108,951,920	$6,097,617	$2,567,802

Now, if we add the increased quantity imported in 1880 to the imports of 1878, and maintain the same proportion of quantities as 1878, the application of the 1880 Tariff would produce a revenue of $2,753,941, whereas the revenue produced only $2,026,692, thus showing a loss to revenue amounting to $727,249. Now, with regard to the taxation upon sugar, I have made an analysis of the prices in New York and Montreal for the 12 months ending in June last. I received a regular weekly circular from a large sugar house in New York, showing the prices of their sugar in bond for each week during that period. I took the average from these circulars. I find that the average for the year is $6.13 per 100 pounds, adding the duty according to the Tariff of 1878, that is $2.53, and we have $8.66. I make the average for Montreal during the same period five cents less per hundred pounds than the Minister of Finance, that is, $9.70. Deducting $8.66 from $9.70 we have $1.04, which represents the additional taxation on every hundred pounds of granulated sugar sold in the Dominion, under the new Tariff. So far as Montreal is concerned, as it is close to the refiners and the cost of carriage is small, the amount will not, perhaps, be quite so large, but for other parts of the Dominion the cost of carriage will be greater than from New York. Last summer the carriage of sugar from Montreal to St. John cost 35 cents per 100 lbs., while from New York to St. John it was only 15 to 20 cents per 100 lbs. That rate would also apply to the western part of Canada, to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Therefore, it is a fair presumption that the excess of charges on the largest proportion of consumers in the Dominion would offset what was consumed in the city of Montreal. I think the comparison is a correct one, and it shows that $1.04 per 100 lbs. is the additional taxation on sugar consumed in Canada, and a loss to revenue, as compared with the old Tariff, of $727,249. The diversion of trade, caused by the operation of the refinery business, affects, to a great extent, the shipping interest that was referred to by the Minister of Finance. Sugar, whether imported raw or refined, has to pay the freight. Wherever the sugar is imported to it pays the freight, and as it is mostly brought to Montreal, the freight is collected there. The trade has been diverted almost entirely from Ontario and the Lower Provinces to Montreal. In 1878, Ontario imported 59,000,000 lbs. of sugar; in 1880, Ontario alone imported 18,299,000 lbs.; in Quebec in 1878, the importation was 31,364,000 lbs., while in 1880, it had risen to 83,504,000 lbs. In 1878, Nova Scotia imported 7,966,000 lbs.; in 1880, 8,614,000 lbs., a very slight increase indeed, when you consider the promises that were made of a great increase in the importations of West India sugar to Halifax. In 1878, New Brunswick imported 6,730,000 lbs.; in 1880, 3,949,000 lbs. All this shows conclusively that the sugar trade has been diverted from Ontario and New Brunswick to Montreal. I do not intend to take up the time of the House any longer. I think I have shown conclusively that the Tariff has not operated in the interests of our people, and that the increase of taxation, necessitated by the increased expenditure, will produce, before many years, deficits larger than those we had in 1858 and 1864.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). It appears to me that if the hon. gentlemen opposite had followed the example of the hon. and gallant knight for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), and confined themselves more to the general subject, we would have got through this debate more expeditiously. The proper time to enter into a comparison of details is when the House is in Committee, where the Ministers can give the reasons for any slight increase in expenditure which may have taken place. I listened with great pleasure to the speech of the hon. the Finance Minister, and was much gratified at the exhibit he presented us of the prosperous state of the country. I was also much impressed with the manner in which the hon. and gallant member for Centre Huron delivered himself of the funeral oration on the period of deficiencies, now happily past, which came so fittingly from the hero of deficits. I think that his manner was impressive and well adapted to the occasion, and that he seemed, himself, to feel the solemnity of the speech he was delivering. I think it is hardly fair to taunt the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House with the undemonstrative silence with which they listened to the speech of the hon. the ex-Finance Minister. I think they showed a due appreciation of the situation. It was really a study to witness the severe expression on the benign countenance of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). He seemed to have the air of a perpetual lay delegate to a pan-Anglican Synod as he sat there and listened to the funeral oratory of his gallant friend. But although hope is said to spring eternal in the human breast, and although the hon. gentleman had expressed the hope that when he returned to power he would restore the period of deficiencies, still hope did not seem to animate him on that occasion for he sat far more the picture of despair than of hope. I regret that the hon. and gallant knight is not in his seat, as I desire to make some comments upon his career. I was going to refer to a speech he made on one occasion when he informed his audience, and through them the Canadian public, of the feelings which inspired his manly bosom when a student at old Trinity he heard how his beloved native country, Canada, was being dragged through the dirt by the Reform Administration of the day; how the corruption and iniquities of that Administration made his heart burn within him; how he swore to himself that if Providence would spare his life he would devote it to rescue his country from the hands of those pseudo-Reformers. Contrast the resolution of his earlier years with the performance of his later years; he presents, indeed, a melancholy spectacle to-day, like memory standing by the grave of hope. He little expected in those earlier years that he was to be the financial hero of a period which will be associated in the minds of the people of Canada with the greatest depression and fiscal mismanagement which we have seen for a generation. For my part I do not know how other gentlemen are affected, but I cannot bear to see the tears of bearded men. I cannot bear to see gentlemen overcome by their feelings as deeply as I saw one or two hon. gentlemen when the ex-Finance Minister was delivering himself of that funereal oration. Crossing the House I quietly took one of my hon. friends opposite out into the smoking-room. While he was wiping his tears away I asked him, "What ails thee, brother? Why weepest thou?" As soon as his feelings would allow him utterance he confided to me that he was weeping at the thought of what might befall his children when Mr. Blake returned to power and re-introduced that system which prevailed during the late Administration. I comforted him with the assurance that probably neither he nor I would live to see that day, and he seemed to take a great deal of comfort from the assurance. There was one improvement I noticed in the speeches of the hon. members for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) and North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), which gave me pleasure, as it doubtless did to the House, and that was the absence of the attacks upon the manufacturers and industrial classes generally, which characterized their utterances in previous years. We did not hear so much from the hon. member for North Norfolk about manufacturing robbers who are going to prey upon the vitals of the country, about men who are going to amass riches at the expense of the workingmen and artizans. We did not hear so much about the ruin that is going to be wrought, the depopulated towns and villages, as we did when that hon. gentleman spoke on this subject the two last years. The hon. ex-Finance Minister and those who followed him were compelled to admit that the country is prosperous, although they had told us that it would have been more than a miracle if the hon. Finance Minister could bring about the prosperity which he had declared he could, and although they still decline to admit that the National Policy has had anything to do with producing the prosperity. Very satisfactory it is to have their admission that the country is prosperous, although they wrestled hard against making the admission, and tried to fence themselves about with various reservations as to what this and that particular industry had effected. They still look forward in the hope that a bad harvest may enable them to gloat over the misfortunes of the farmer, so long as it will give them a little political stock-in-trade. I think I am justified in saying that on all occasions in this House and out of it, they make a most unseemly display of exultation when any misfortune befalls any section of the community or any Province of the Dominion. They seem to think they can only attain to power when the country is suffering; I believe these gentlemen would really prefer to see the country suffer if they could return to power than to see it prosperous if that prosperity were to be coincident with their exclusion from office, and I believe that is the opinion held by the bulk of the country. If we are to judge by the fact that since the general election their candidates have on all occasions failed to obtain any advantage at the polls over the Ministerial candidates, we must see that they have not in the slightest degree rehabilitated themselves in the good opinion of the constituencies. Even the Moodys and Sankeys of the Opposition who during the past two years, in tuneful harmony, have been singing the praises of deficits and harping to the ruin of the country—even they have ceased to employ themselves in that congenial occupation. Even they now admit that the country is prosperous, and instead of attempting to convert the miserable sinners on the Ministerial benches they, rather by what they leave unsaid than by what they say, more than half admit their conversion to the views of the hon. Finance Minister. We on this side of the House have been taunted from time to time with the failure of an immediate return to prosperity, which they say the right hon. leader of the Government promised, should the election of 1878 turn in his favor; but I think we may very reasonably infer from that that the depression turned out to be so great, and the financial ruin of manufacturers and business men generally prevailed to such an extent, that it was impossible under the most favorable circumstances for the reaction to be more speedy than it has been. But I claim that there was an immediate reaction; that as soon as it was known that the right hon. leader of the Government was to be reinstated in power, and that the hon. and gallant knight of St. John was to be again Finance Minister, a feeling of confidence inspired the people generally, and they felt that they could rely on the man who had managed the affairs of this country so successfully up to 1873, and who when he left office to assume the highest position in his native Province, left a large surplus in the Dominion Treasury. They felt that men were coming into power who would, by wise legislation, protect the industries of the country, and foster its struggling manufactures. Although there was not much activity in manufacturing centres until after the policy was developed, now two years ago, still since it was developed a great additional impetus was given to manufacturing industries throughout the country; and on every hand we see a return to that prosperity with which this country was blessed from 1867 to 1873. This is admitted by the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, although they attempt, from time to time, to misrepresent the cause of that prosperity, and have even insulted the intelligence of the people, by attempting to prove that it exists in spite of the policy of the hon. Finance Minister. We may say it is barely a year since this policy has had an opportunity of having any effect, and already we see factories being reopened and enlarged which were closed during the time of the late Administration; we see new factories springing up in every Province in the Dominion, and we find by the commercial newspapers of the country that the indications for the coming season are such as to lead us to hope for a large increase of our manufacturing industries in the future. In a recent number of the Montreal Witness, I find a very able and intelligent letter from the general manager of the Merchants' Bank. Mr. George Hague, who is noted as one of the most cautious and careful financiers in the Dominion, whose success as the head of every financial institution with which he has been connected, has been so marked as to entitle him to the confidence and respect of the entire commercial community in the business centres of Ontario and Quebec. Mr. Hague says:

"Montreal ought to direct more of her energies toward making herself a manufacturing centre. We have given too exclusive an attention to our export trade. Our pride in the masses of grain that have passed through our city during so many years would be modified if we considered what the final outcome of it has been. We have shipped millions of bushels year after year, and have done our best to rival in this respect the great shipping ports of the United States. If the statistics were favorable we have plumed ourselves on our advancing commerce. If unfavorable we have endeavored to draw to ourselves still larger quantities of the produce of the West. . . . We have made a beginning in manufacturing enterprises already. And nothing is needed but a persistent cultivation of the advantages we already enjoy to make this city one of the great manufacturing centres of the continent. Her population would increase, the growth of wealth would be steady, and industries would take root that would be a perpetual source of advantage to all classes of the community. . . .

"There is scarcely a single article imported from the United States that we ought not to manufacture in Montreal. There ought to be one of the largest car-building establishments on the continent here. There is every possible facility for it. All kinds of machinery, tools, plated-ware, brass fittings such as are turned out of the factories of Connecticut, ought to be produced here likewise. We once had a locomotive engine factory. This however, started under unfavorable auspices, and was never properly managed. But what is to prevent Montreal making all the locomotives that are used by all the railways in Canada? We are beginning to manufacture silk. If New Jersey can make as good silk as Lyons, why cannot this Province of Quebec? We have proved our ability to manufacture gray cottons. Why not have every kind of cotton produced here? It is a good sign, and a step in the right direction, that another large cotton-mill has been projected under the auspices of a number of our most enterprising citizens.

"It is for the benefit of all these enterprises that there should be trained up among us a population of skilled artisans and mechanics. This is one element of profit and prosperity. It is in this manner that all the great industries of Great Britain are carried on—cottons in Manchester, woollens in Leeds, worsteds in Bradford, hardware in Birmingham, cutlery in Sheffield. In each of these places a whole population is to be found trained for generations in the pursuits of their respective cities or districts. We cannot in Canada have a whole city devoted to one line of manufacture, but we can, with such facilities as are possessed by Montreal, make it a great centre of manufacturing industries, which only need to be wisely planned and effectively managed to become a constantly increasing source of wealth."

I have referred to this letter on account of the business standing of the gentleman who wrote it, and also because I wish to draw attention to the way in which this sensible practical advice is treated by the organ of gentlemen opposite in Montreal. Here is what the Montreal Witness has to say on the subject of encouraging the manufactures of Montreal:

"The hopes of Montreal as a centre of manufactures are discussed by a high authority in an article in this paper. We advise no one to invest much, counting on the permanency of the protective system. If protection has any valid excuse, it is to be found in its services as a wet-nurse to infant industries. Unfortunately, it is a very rare thing for an industry not to rebel against being weaned. This demand of big babies for protection is, however, no reason why the fostering advantage which at present exists should not be made use of in the interest of industries which shall be able in a year or two to live unstimulated lives. We must repeat our advice to investors, however, to make their calculations independent of the advantages which protection gives."

Evidently the Witness has not much faith in the assertions of the hon. member for North Norfolk, that if we had a change of Government there would be no change in our financial policy. In this connection I might refer to the discrepancy between the declaration of the hon. member for North Norfolk and that of the hon. leader of the Opposition. The latter hon. gentleman is opposed to the present policy. He wished to go back to the policy prior to 1878; while the hon. member for North Norfolk, who is one of the coming Ministers in that Ministry, which I fear will wait many years before it is formed, has trimmed his sails to catch the popular breeze in Ontario, and wishes the people to believe there will be no serious change of policy, that they may even count on improved protection in certain industries, and that in certain industries which do not stand in a favorable position to-day as compared with others the discrepancies will be removed, the rough ways will be made smooth, and vested rights will be protected. A letter from Mr. L. O. David of Montreal, was I think, referred to by the hon. member for Cardwell. Mr. David has announced to his friends in Quebec, that he still intends to remain an ally of the Rouge party in that Province, because the party, as a whole, have given up their opposition to the protective policy. I do not know how he will like the assertion made by the leader of the Opposition, that it is the intention of the party which he leads to go back to the policy which existed prior to the elections of 1878. Possibly the rash statement of the hon. leader had to be toned down by one of his financial mentors. The hon. member for North Norfolk, who is in that happy position that no matter what side he may take on that question, he can always come before an appreciative audience in Ontario, and prove to them he took the side they favored. He is the most prudent of all politicians; he is all things to all men. Hon. gentlemen opposite, having given up the crusade against the protective policy, having admitted that the country is prospering, that the prophecies of the Opposition party were fallacious, that manufacturers are not robbers, that artisans, mechanics, and farmers are not dupes, have nothing to fall back upon. The only strings to their political bow are the Pacific Railway contract, which, fortunately for the country, has settled a question which has given great anxiety to the minds of the people, by defining the pecuniary expense to which the people may be exposed; and the imaginary exodus which hon. gentlemen opposite have conjured up, and by which they wish to alarm the people with respect to the conduct of the Administration. I am satisfied with the explanations of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Immigration, based on the reports of officers of the Department who have had an opportunity of making personal inquiry on the very spot through which the emigration by the Grand Trunk and Great Western passes. The statistics given by the United States officials, only show the aggregate number of persons going through at that point, whether to the North-West, or simply making an excursion with a view to returning, and do not show the number of persons leaving Ontario with the intention of making their home in the States. Although it has been clearly established that the exodus is altogether a matter of imagination on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, they still continue to harp on that string, and still try, as they have always tried, to deceive the people with representations which, when they come to be examined, have nothing to sustain them from a rational point of view. But even supposing the statements regarding the exodus were half true, it proves this, that if any emigrants are leaving Canada for the United States, at all events they have sufficient settlers' effects to enable them to go to the consul and obtain free passes as bona fide settlers, whereas we know that thousands and tens of thousands of broken and ruined men slunk to the States during the Mackenzie regime whose names were never taken down, and the number of whom were never entered in the returns of United States officials. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) adverted to the difference between the parties led by the hon. member for West Durham and the Prime Minister. Such allusions are unfortunate on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, for the Conservative party will compare favorably with the Liberal party. The party to which the hon. member for North Norfolk belongs, is a party rich in promises, pretending to be an honest and moral party having a desire for economy and good government, standing as watch-dogs and guardians of the popular rights when on the Opposition benches; but when they obtained power they changed indeed. Then where were their promises and their economies? The contrast was strongly in favor of the Conservative party, and the hon. member for North Norfolk, when he throws taunts across the House, had better refrain from contrasting the party with which he has allied himself with that led by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when in Opposition, again and again told the people they were going to reduce the controllable expenditure, diminish the number of officials, and reduce the expenditure on public works; and when they came into power they had to build an additional wing to the Departmental buildings in order to furnish accommodation for their friends. Certainly in that respect the promise and fulfilment are wide apart. As regards expenditure for public purposes we all know the history of the party. Take one instance from many: $250,000 were expended on Fort Francis Lock, which is to open up the waters of Rainy River, which owing to natural obstructions commence nowhere and empty into no place. I have thought of a motion asking for a statement of the salary of the lock-keeper, the tonnage of vessels that have passed through during the last two years, and what fees have been received by the Government, so that we may obtain some idea of the interest received on the $250,000 which has been sunk there by the caprice of a Minister who was pledged to economy on public works. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House, or I might give many instances of the economical and efficient manner in which those hon. gentlemen when in power dealt with the financial affairs of the Dominion. I might take up the Blue Books and answer the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), and show how again and again the party he supports exceeded the expenditure estimated by the Finance Minister for the current year. Take the militia estimates, for example. On one occasion the late Government, or the Minister of Militia, cut them down on the eve of the General Elections, probably to make the people believe they were practising great economy. Possibly that Minister may have had a more insidious design—may have thought he was helping in some small measure to bring about the happy era when the “rag would be hauled down,” too.

Mr. ANGLIN. That is awfully smart.

Mr. PATTERSON. I hope the hon. gentleman is not smarting under the remark. I will tell the hon. gentleman, for I have a friendly feeling towards him, being a fellow-countryman and an admirer of his ability, that I was seriously tempted, when alluding to a certain transaction that occurred some years ago, to say a word in reference to his conduct, but I refrained. Whether he is capable of smarting I do not know. Some men's hides are so tough that you can make no impression on them. I was going to say that the member for North Norfolk was nothing, if not the farmers' friend. He delights in getting up and showing how they are robbed, and how very much more the farmers in the United States get for their grain than the farmers of Ontario and the other Provinces of the Dominion. He has told the House that the farmers of the United States are hoodwinked and duped, and that they are sadly wanting in intelligence. I think, in spite of the assertions of the hon. gentleman, that there is no shrewder and more intelligent class on the continent than the farmers of the United States. I am quite satisfied that the diffusion of knowledge throughout the United States, and the great circulation of intelligent newspapers, have educated those farmers to a full appreciation and knowledge of their situation and requirements. We saw not long ago a Presidential election which turned on the very question of Protection which the hon. gentleman denounced to-day; and if it had not been introduced into that contest, it is almost a moral certainty the result would have been entirely different. Those farmers, unlike ours, have an opportunity every two years of electing representatives to Congress, and still, notwithstanding those opportunities, they have again and again re-elected gentlemen favorable to Protection; and the men whose Tariff Policy has been Free Trade abandoned it during the late Presidential contest, asserting that, no matter what party is in power in the Republic, they intended to adhere to Protection.

Mr. BÉCHARD. That is the reason why they were defeated.

Mr. PATTERSON. The member for North Norfolk has made the assertions we heard from him to-day, with regard to the prices of grain in Canada and the United States, again and again, and they have been as often refuted in this House. I have statements showing the price of wheat in Chicago and Toronto at different periods, which, with the permission of the House, I will read for the hon. gentleman's information. Those statements of the member for North Norfolk, whether correct or not, seem to answer his purpose very well, when disseminated among his constituents, judging from the frequency of their repetition. I have here quotations from the Globe showing the averages for spring

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex).

So that Toronto was highest in 1878, 1½c.; 1879, 4c.; and in 1880, 1½c. The arguments of the member for North Norfolk, with regard to the farmers, have been answered again and again by much abler men than I am, but he never answered the answer. I should like to read a few extracts showing the former views of the hon. gentleman on this subject. This was at the time before Protection became a party question, and when the hon. gentleman thought he could ride back to Parliament, and possibly into office, on the strength of the cry of protection for the farmers. These remarks of the hon. gentleman have been read in the House on several occasions, and we are all familiar with them. We all know that there is not a corner of any Province of the Dominion, in which this hon. gentleman, Proteus-like, cannot turn to book, page and paragraph, to satisfy the prejudices or the desires of those whom he happens to be addressing. It does not matter whether incidental protection is wanted or a revenue tariff, or out-and-out free trade, or the old-fashioned protection which was in force in Great Britain in former years, the hon. gentleman is equally adapted to its advocacy, and can equally suit himself to the audience which requires it. It seems to me that hon. gentlemen opposite undervalue the intelligence of the farmers of this country, when these farmers do not happen to support them with their votes. We all remember the indignant tirades with which the farmers of Ontario were abused, because they would not bow the knee to Baal and elect the candidates of these hon. gentlemen in September, 1878, but I assure them that their efforts to prove that the farmers are the most injured and oppressed people on the face of the globe, will not go down with the farming community of western Ontario, at all events. I can tell the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), who has so much to say on the exodus question, that in my part of the country, so far from there being an exodus of our farmers, some of the farmers, constituents of the gallant knight, are settling upon the undeveloped portions of my county. I am glad to tell him, too, that when these gentlemen are removed from his melancholy presence, and outside the influence of his gloomy views, they are becoming more hopeful and more Conservative in their tendencies every day. It is not to be wondered at that people should desire to leave the constituencies of these melancholy gentlemen who, like the melancholy Jaques, can see nothing but gloom and despair, and get outside the sound of their lamentations. The constant wailings of these gentlemen would be enough to discourage any man from pursuing his ordinary avocations; and I do not wonder that the people who are represented in Parliament by those unhappy gentlemen should flee to the east, the west, the north and the south to get away from men who spend their days in telling the people they are overburdened with taxation and that the ruin of the country is inevitable. But it is not alone the farmers who are contented, but the workingmen and the artisans who are engaged in the factories which are springing up all over the Dominion. An hon. friend has drawn my attention to some statistics regarding the deposits in the Post Office Savings Banks, showing that these deposits have largely increased during the last two or three years. The total deposits in 1878 were $2,754,000 while the deposits for the year ending 30th June, 1880, were $5,125,000 or nearly double what they were before the change of Government. But to show that this gratifying result is not local, but general, I will give the statistics of the deposits in post-offices taken at random throughout the country:

Hamilton	$204,000	$263,000
Kingston	107,585	129,575
London	83,062	94,266
Montreal	87,533	349,854

I suppose that a good deal of the money deposited in Montreal is deposited by men employed in the Redpath refinery and other factories which have started up in that city, consequent upon the change of Administration; and I fancy that these men do not, like the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), regard the Redpaths as robbers:

Ottawa	$93,461	$303,609
Quebec	30,275	71,590
Toronto	329,000	376,000
Brantford	34,000	42,651
St. Catharines	13,460	34,693
St. Thomas	30,000	34,621
Guelph	24,609	49,855
Woodstock	25,000	29,311
Brockville	59,000	81,433
Windsor	18,000	44,629
Vankleek Hill	24,000	52,097
Belleville	41,920	60,513
Prescott	34,884	53,664

These figures show that our workingmen are obtaining such wages that they are not only able to pay their way but to make deposits in the savings banks, for most of the deposits in these banks are made in small sums. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to read a few extracts from the Montreal Witness and other newspapers of the Dominion, showing the increased prosperity which has either actually taken place or which may be counted upon in consequence of factories established, or investments made for the purpose of establishing factories in the near future. Speaking of the iron industry, the Witness says:

"All the iron shops throughout Montreal are doing a very large business both in engines and boilers. There is an exceptional demand for stationary and steamboat engines for Manitoba. Several steamboats are in process of construction at Thunder Bay and on different rivers in that Province.

"The Montreal Rolling Mills Company have claimed exemption from taxation in Ste. Cuneconde on their new business, namely, the manufacture of gas and iron pipes, at which a large number of hands will be employed.

"Mr. E. E. Gilbert has constructed and forwarded to the Coaticook Cotton Company a one hundred and fifty horse-power engine. This is the largest stationary engine yet erected for the rural districts.

"The Montreal Rolling Mills are erecting a new building for manufacturing iron tubing, and have ordered an eighty horse-power engine from the same firm."

I am informed by the hon. member for Montreal West (Mr. Gault), that 250 men are to be employed in that industry, so it is just possible that the views of Mr. George Hogue may be realized when he speaks of Montreal becoming ing a great manufacturing centre. Referring to the woollen factories, the Witness goes on to say:

"Apart from the large number of woollen factories in operation over the Dominion, through the enterprise of joint-stock companies, it is not a little gratifying to observe that individual firms are now and then erecting mills for the manufacture of woollens, which, during the harder times and a duller demand, they went abroad to purchase. We have spoken of several of these from time to time, but the latest is that one now being pushed forward most energetically by Messrs. Gault Bros., of this city, at Campbellford, Ont. This firm have hitherto purchased all their flannels, but the demand has increased so extensively of late that the erection of the mills named has been found an imperative necessity. The factory will be 150 by 60 feet, and five stories high. There will be a dye and storehouse, each 70 by 40 feet, two stories high; also offices and a spacious residence for the manager. The buildings will be of brick and stone. Work on the flume—for the mill will be propelled entirely by water—was begun last week, and the contracts have been let, the buildings to be completed in July next."

The Montreal Journal of Commerce has the following:—

"Messrs. Nicholson, Wilson & Co., a wealthy firm in Simcoe, Ontario, are preparing to build a brick building three and a half stories high, 31 by 50 feet, with additions for manufacturing cane sugar and refined cider. George Jackson, of the same place, is going into the fruit drying business on a large scale. John Aliger is forming a connection with some American capitalists for the purpose of extending his foundry business. The brewery at Simcoe, which for some years has been idle, is now being worked by Harry Findlay in a successful and satisfactory manner."

This is in North Norfolk, and I am sorry the hon. gentleman who represents that riding is not here. I hope the additional laborers who will be employed there will be convinced by that hon. gentleman that their employers are not robbers who are preying on their vitals, but that they are trying to develop the industries of the country and are establishing factories which will afford these men constant occupation. That is the way my hon. friend must put it when he goes to Simcoe. Here are some more items:

"Mr. W. J. Stafford has secured the old foundry premises at Lancaster, Ont., and proposes converting them into a boot and shoe factory. Perseverance is genius."

"The Canada Brush Works of this city have been removed to Lancaster, Ont., where the proprietor, Mr. Albert J. Ulley, has purchased seven acres of land with the dwelling and premises for the new factory thereon. There was scarcely any interruption through the removal. New machinery will be put in next spring, and the business enlarged to meet the growing demand. Many of the cotton-mills in the Dominion are supplied from these works, and the proprietor has received four prize medals for this class of goods."

"Parks' Cotton Mills at St. John, N.B., are undergoing extensive improvements and additions. A large wing is being added, and another engine of 90 horse-power has been added. It has already in operation 14,000 spindles, and gives employment to 375 hands, all told. The factory is principally employed in the manufacture of cotton yarns, although its 50 looms yield some excellent fabrics, for which a market is found all over the Maritime Provinces, Ontario, Manitoba, and even British Columbia. Mr. Parks may justly feel proud of the success which has attended this enterprise."

I may interject the statement here, that to-day I met a very intelligent gentleman who had recently been all through the Maritime Provinces on business. He takes no active part in politics, although his relations are with hon. gentlemen opposite. He assured me that the discontent which was represented to exist in the Maritime Provinces was all the pure invention of disappointed politicians and their followers, that there was hardly a word of complaint heard in Halifax or St. John, and that all was heard was galvanized and inspired by the disappointed politicians on the other side of the House, and the little clique of people who surround them, and who hope that by coming back to office they may again get a pull at the Treasury chest.

"Mr. Alex. Gibson, of Fredericton, N.B., who recently made a tour through Massachusetts and inspected the principal paper mills in that State, with a view to profiting by their experience and improvements, has arranged for the erection of large paper mills next spring at Marysville, on the river Nashwaak, a tributary of the St. John. Mr. Gibson, who is a large capitalist, intends to manufacture the finer kinds of writing and printing paper, in which, when the New Brunswick railway is completed to the Rivière du Loup to connect with the Intercolonial, he expects to be able to compete with Quebec and Ontario rivals."

"The extensive foundry premises at Chatham, Ontario, formerly occupied by Jno. D. Ronald as a steam fire-engine manufactory, have recently been purchased by Fleming, Erret & McLeod, who are having the premises thoroughly fitted up as a manufactory of agricultural implements. The new firm, being thorough practical and business men, say they are going to run their factory to its full capacity, make everything in their line saleable, and sell everything they make."

"The construction of the proposed new mill at Chambly has been commenced. The building is to be 180 feet long, 55 feet wide and four stories high, with basement; there will be a capacity for eight sets of flannel machinery, a though it is proposed for the present to add only four sets, which will be ready when the building is completed, making, when complete, a ten-set mill, the capacity of the machinery now in operation being six hundred thousand yards per annum. When the new mill is put in operation the output will be increased to one million yards of flannel per annum, and building capacity and power to add to the further production of four hundred thousand yards, should the market require it."

"Mr. E. A. McDonald, of Kingston, Ont., is building a toy factory in that city for the manufacture of large wooden toys, rocking horses, and children's carriages. He expects the building will be ready to enable him to begin business in the spring."

I hope he will be able to present the ex-Finance Minister with some toy with which to employ himself during his leisure hours with more profit to his health, his liver and the people of the Dominion, than by manufacturing statements to the injury of our credit at home and abroad.

"A new cotton-mill is to be erected in St. Paul (near Montreal), a bonus of $5,000 and exemption from taxes for twenty years having been granted by the municipality."

"Some gentlemen from Montreal and Cohoes, Massachusetts, have been looking round Galt, Ontario, lately, for a place in which to establish a knitting factory. Negotiations for the purchase of the premises on South Water street, formerly occupied by Mr. Robinson as a woollen factory, have been entered upon. The purchase was made with the view of at once establishing what is called a 'three-set mill.' The movers in the enterprise are Messrs Claxton, of Montreal, Sweet, of Cohoes, and A. Warnock, H. McCulloch, D. Spiers and others, of Galt. At a special meeting of the Galt Council the request that the company be exempted from taxation for ten years was unanimously agreed to. The goods to be manufactured will be of cotton and wool for the lighter kinds of underclothing, and about 50 hands will be employed, with the probability of a large increase."

The following extracts are taken from the Monetary Times of Toronto:—

"Messrs. Bryce, McMurrich & Co., are improving their Columbus woollen mills. By means of new machinery their capacity is to be enlarged to turn out annually $100,000 worth of fine flannels, blankets and tweeds."

"The former owners of the Newcastle woollen mills, which were burned, and will not at present be rebuilt, have purchased the old Hespeler property at Hespeler, and are fitting it up as a three-set mill for the manufacture of flannels, etc.

The Hespeler factory formerly gave employment to a large number of men, but under the fostering influence of the late Administration, gave up the ghost, and now under the malign influence of the present Finance Minister, it is resuscitated.

"The Nova Scotia Forge Company of New Glasgow, shipped to Point Lévis the crank and shaft for the machinery of the Quebec Graving Dock, which were forged at their establishment. This is said to be the heaviest work of the kind ever done in the Dominion. One of the shafts is over 16 inches in diameter and weighs nearly four tons. The machinery for the Graving Dock is being supplied by Messrs. Carrier, Laine & Co., of Point Lévis."

"At a meeting of the directors of the Hudon Cotton Company, held at Montreal recently, it was resolved to again enlarge these mills by an addition measuring 222 feet by 80 in width. When this is completed, the mill will be nearly twice the size of any other cotton-mill in Canada, the total length being 800 feet, with an average width of 85 feet. The new addition will be devoted to the manufacture of finer bleached goods, as nearly approaching the quality of Horrock's best as is possible. The new 500 horse-power engine, just put in, being the second of this capacity, will drive the looms in the wing recently erected. Some 700 hands are now employed, and when the addition just decided upon is completed, the number will reach 1,000.

"The Corriveau Silk Mills at Montreal are now in full operation, with an annual capacity of about 150,000 yards. Only broad silks are made, of a quality comparing favorably with the best grades of imported goods; indeed, it is claimed for the domestic ones that they are superior to French and English silks, inasmuch as they are perfectly free from the chemicals used so often for the purpose of giving weight and stiffness to other goods, which causes them to wear shiny and to cut at the creases. These are made in black colored and figured, in the latest shades and designs. Messrs. Gault Bros. & Co. have arranged to take the whole make of the mill, and will hereafter import only the cheaper lines of foreign silks, feeling satisfied that the home-made article will eventually meet the demand for the better class of goods."

To go back to Ontario, I see there has been a little stir in Hamilton, that city of the dead, as hon. gentlemen opposite would fain have us believe. A cotton yarn factory has just been started there by Messrs. Leonard & Co. The Monetary Times also states:

"Hamilton, with characteristic enterprise, is providing for a new industry in her midst. Arrangements have been made for the erection early in February, of a factory on St. Mary street, 30 x 130 feet, three stories in height, for the making of lamp burners, ship and locomotive head lights, lanterns, bird cages, pressed goods, etc. The firm which will occupy these premises is that of Messrs. J. H. Stone & Co., who will probably employ at starting between eighty and one hundred hands. The most of the machinery has to be imported from the States, some of it is of a delicate and costly character, but the engine and shafting will be made at home."

To return to Quebec, we find that:

"Smelting works have been erected at Drummondville, Que., by Mr. John McDougall, car wheel manufacturer, etc., of Montreal. The iron is made from bog ore, which is plentiful in this section and is smelted with charcoal, several hundred men being employed in wood-chopping, gathering ore, and other departments of labor. The works have a present capacity of from eight to ten tons of cold blast iron per day, which is easily capable of being increased, and it is probable that a second furnace will be erected next summer. Mr. McDougall is also the owner of the St. Francis Smelting Works, at Rivière aux Vaches, in the county of Yamaska, which he acquired several years ago; at these iron of the same kind as above is made. The product of both these works is utilized by Mr. McDougall at his Montreal mills in the manufacture of car wheels, for which this description of iron is specially adapted."

In the Maritime Provinces, we find:

"A brush factory is to be established at Coal Branch, N.B., on the Intercolonial Railway, which will employ 40 hands, and be in operation on 1st May next. Mr. Harry J. Newman, formerly representing English manufacturers of brushes in Brazil, will be the proprietor. He has already ordered from Britain machinery and material."

Hon. gentleman opposite should turn their attention to this kind of information instead of shutting their eyes to it. Their attention is turned to anything that savors of ruin and decay; but the decay has taken a rather unfavorable turn, and the patient, whom they foretold would die, is being resuscitated in a marvellous manner. Whether it is to be attributed to the policy of the Government or not, it corroborates the statement made to me by a gentleman who visited the Maritime Provinces lately. He said that it was only among the disappointed politicians of the Opposition and their little cliques of hangers-on, that the depression was felt in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia; that depression was in reality, merely a political depression. I see that in New Brunswick:

"Six snow ploughs for the Canadian Pacific Railway were completed at St. John, N.B., and shipped to the North-West some days ago, under contract by Messrs. Rainnie & Dunlop, the iron-work and trucks being built by Adam Bros., of Carlton. They were shipped the whole distance in box-cars, to be put together on arrival, and their cost is stated, including carriage for all the miles distance, at $1,600 each."

I see in the Monetary Times that in addition to the hoop and barrel factories of Ontario, another is about to be established:

"The Pike & Richardson Cooperage Company, Limited, seeks incorporation with a capital stock of $100,000. As the name indicates, they are to manufacture barrels, hoops, etc. John B. Pike, Wm. Richardson, Duncan Charles Plumb and Valancy E. Fuller are to be the first directors of the Company."

To return to Kingston, Ont., I find that:

"Messrs. Mills & Cunningham, of Kingston, are now on a tour through the States, inspecting some of the principal charcoal and iron factories, with a view to utilising the knowledge gained thereby in connection with the charcoal works about to be established in Kingston and referred to in a previous issue."

A good deal of capital was made by hon. gentlemen opposite a short time ago over the statement that the Hamilton Clock Factory had closed, notwithstanding the encouragement given to it by the Finance Minister. I am glad to see in the Monetary Times that it is about to be re-opened. That paper says:

"The Hamilton Clock Factory is about to be started again, if the Spectator, of that city, is correctly informed. For four years it had lain idle, but now Mr. John Keyworth, of New York, who has been, it is said, manager of some prominent American factories of the same kind, is about to re-open it about the 10th February. He has brought with him a variety of patterns and designs, and says the premises and machinery are very suitable for making a good article and quite a variety. Clocks are to be made for export as well as for the home trade."

To return to Quebec it is stated that :

"Messrs. A. L. Grindrod & Co., the proprietors of the Magog Woollen Mills, in the Province of Quebec, finding their present quarters inadequate, have determined to enlarge their works by adding another story, which will enable them to put in a third set of machinery. The contract for the erection of the additional story has been given out and work will commence next month."

According to the same source of information :

"The managing director of the West Farnham Beet Root Sugar Co., has sailed for Germany, to obtain the machinery required for the factory now building. It has been decided to fit up the factory for a capacity of 200 tons of beet roots per day, instead of 120 tons, as at first proposed, the cost of the larger quantity not being much greater."

According to the Montreal Daily Witness, a new manufacture has been started in Quebec. The Witness says :

"The manufacture of corsets in Quebec Province has never been entered upon very extensively, and those who have engaged in the enterprise have appeared to do so more as a matter of experiment than with any expectation of heavy ultimate profit. The manufacture is, however, again about to be taken in hand on a scale surpassing all former ones, Mr. F. Lauder, of Montreal, but who has been for a number of years connected with one of the leading corset manufacturing companies in the United States, is about to start a factory in the city. He is at present in New York purchasing machinery for the purpose, and has been negotiating with local cotton-mills for a supply of material used in the manufacture of corsets. Mr. Lauder promises to invest a substantial amount of capital in the new enterprise, and operations may be expected to begin within a few weeks.

The Witness also refers to the new factory established in connection with the Hochelaga Mills and the wonderful growth of cotton manufactories in Canada. It also states ;

"The old Congregational Church on the corner of Craig and Amherst streets has been purchased by Dr. Brewster. The doctor has gone into the manufacture of skates, and has already received orders which will necessitate the manufacture of 1,000 pairs of skates per week, and give employment to about forty hands. The machinery, which costs $25,000, is being erected on the premises with all possible despatch. This is the only factory of the kind in the Dominion, and will be opened the beginning of March."

Those little items which I have culled out for the information, pleasure and gratification of my hon. friends opposite are taken either from their own journals, or from journals which are non-political—I have taken none from Conservative organs, because I thought those hon. gentlemen would not have placed the same reliance in them as in the others. The ex-Minister of Customs, in his speech referred to the value of our export of shipping, to make a point against the Tariff, and then he proved to us almost immediately afterwards that there had been greater activity in the trade, in 1880, than in 1878. I could not understand his logic, because one of his statements was controverted by the other. We have heard the hon. gentleman before dealing with statistics, and knew that nothing could be more fallacious than some of his conclusions, which are easily susceptible of refutation. The hon. gentleman also seems to think that, because a larger Customs revenue is realized on certain articles than when he was Minister, that the Government are to blame. It strikes me that this is something for which we should praise the Administration. If the late Minister had conducted the affairs of this department with the efficiency and ability of the present Minister, there would have been a different story as to some of the details of the Customs receipts. The late Minister of Customs thought more of the interests of his political friends than of the interests of the country when in office. I do not think, however, he drew attention to the fact that the controllable expenditure of the Department is now less than for several years, although the revenue has largely increased, and that, too, although we now see all the legitimate expenditure of that department. That expenditure is not now put into contingencies, horse-hire and travelling expenses, everything being faithfully and truly entered under its own heading. The present hon. Minister does not indulge in the exposed practices of the late Minister, but is doing his duty in such a manner as to call forth the encomiums of even such a determined opponent as the hon. member for West Middlesex. I referred, when I first rose, to the melancholy position of the hon. and gallant gentleman opposite. I am sure we all admire the hon. member for Centre Huron; because, whatever his defects, he sits here very gallantly and always bears a smiling countenance to his foes; and although the fox may be gnawing under his expansive shirt bosom, he never shows it by shrinking or hesitation, but faces us all with that imperturbable smile which I am sure compels our admiration. That hon. gentleman will go down to posterity as the hero of deficiencies, the hero of failures. In fact, so systematic had those deficiencies and failures become, when hon. gentlemen opposite were on the Treasury benches, that the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) had almost added as an axiom to his system of political economy, that the prosperity of a country has to be gauged by the amount of the deficiency of its revenue as compared with its expenditure. I have seen it stated in the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite that deficiency was a healthy and wholesome state of affairs—that it was a blessing to a country when it possessed a Finance Minister like the member for Centre Huron, who could, with such ingenuity and financial skill as he again and again displayed for four successive years, come down to the House with an average deficiency of only $2,000,000. The aggregate of the deficits of the hon. gentleman amounted to nearly $9,000,000, and that, although the late Government increased the taxation in their first year, to the tune of between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000. Now, will that party contrast the experiences of its five years' rule with our experiences last year. Instead of deficits, we are enjoying a surplus. Contrary to the principles of political economy, as inculcated by the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, and by themselves, also, the Finance Minister has been guilty of coming down to the House with a surplus. Instead of the cheerful prospect of annual deficits, he comes down with a surplus of $2,000,000 for 1881, and a prospective surplus for the ensuing year of nearly an equal amount. The country has ceased to be a slaughter market for our American neighbors. No man in the Dominion need be idle at present for 24 hours if he wants work. Contrast this with the older countries of the world. Contrast it with the condition of Great Britain, where the workmen are going about the cities saying, We have no work to do. And that is in a free-trade country where the theories of these political economists are given full scope and sway. In this country we have manufacturing industries increasing; as I have shown our workmen are fully employed; they are depositing their savings in the savings banks and other such institutions. Our farmers are happy and contented, and they have the fullest confidence in the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government and his able Finance Minister, who have fulfilled every promise they made before the elections. Notwithstanding that hon. gentlemen opposite try to make us believe that the country is being ruined and that the Government are to be driven from office. When Charles the Second was warned by his brother that attempts were being made to assassinate him, his reply was that no one would assassinate him to make his brother king. So I do not think that the people of this Dominion, so long as they retain the good sense which is characteristic of this northern race, will drive from power the present Premier and the Finance Minister for the sake of returning to office, hon. gentlemen who will be known in history as the heroes of the period of deficiency.

Mr GUNN. I rise to offer a few remarks with regard to the operation of the present Tariff. During the debate on the Tariff, now nearly two years ago, I called attention to the results which I predicted would follow from the proposed tariff on sugar. That tariff has now been in operation nearly two years, and certainly we have had one clear period of twelve months during which we may judge of its effects. I was rather surprised that the hon. gentleman, when he brought down his Budget, did not amend the Tariff in that particular, for I believe he has had a great many complaints from importers belonging to his own party and those who have asked him to permit the higher grades of sugar to come in at $\frac{1}{2}$ c. and 30 per cent and to have the standard No. 16 instead of No. 14. The importers of the country have been shut out from the trade altogether, and I would ask the Finance Minister to get disinterested information on the subject with a view of considering whether a change should not be made. According to the statement of the Finance Minister, the refiners, last year, handled 300,000 barrels, equal to 87,000,000 lbs. of raw sugar, thus three-quarters of the entire trade has gone into the hands of the refining firms leaving only one fourth for all the importers. I do not know what proportion the new refiners will have, or how much of the trade will then be left to the importers, but certainly it must be a very small proportion. Last year I estimated the entire consumption of the Dominion at 120,000,000 lbs. of raw sugar. The actual quantity entered for consumption was about 117,000,000 lbs., which paid a duty of \$2,026,692. Of this 19,000,000 lbs. was entered over No. 14 at the rate of \$2.55 per hundred, producing a revenue of \$477,563. Outside of the refiners there was only 10,000,000 lbs. more, entered between Nos. 9 and 14 at \$1.73, and producing \$173,000 revenue. The other 88,000,000 handled by the refiners, paid a duty of only \$1.55 per hundred pounds, or \$1,360,000; that is to say, the people outside of the refineries on one-fourth of the sugar paid \$650,000, while the other three-fourths paid only \$1,350,000. The one-fourth paid about one-half as much as the three-fourths, showing a large protection to the refiners and a large loss to the revenue, as well as an increased price to the consumer. If we imported all the refined sugar we would have 100,000,000 lbs. of pure sugar which would have paid duties at the rate of \$3.10, or a total of \$3,100,000 instead of \$2,000,000. Take average value of this month's price in New York and Montreal; the latter 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. cash, equals \$9,250,000; former at 6c., 35 per cent. ad valorem and 1c. specific duty amounts to \$3.10 duty. Together, \$9.10 equals \$9,100,000, or \$150,000 dollars less than Montreal, with excess of duty already stated amounting to \$1,250,000. The balance goes into the pockets of the refiners. The Finance Minister referred to a sample of good sugar and said that people could bring it in, but surely the hon. gentleman can see that it is too dark. The very fact that it has not come in is sufficient evidence that the Tariff keeps out sugar fit for consumption. One of the largest importing firms in this country, who also do an importing trade with other countries, has, I believe, appealed to the Finance Minister to change the Tariff because it is throwing all the advantages in favour of the refiners. I have a letter sent to my firm by an importing firm in Montreal, and I shall trouble the House with an extract. With the permission of the House I will read the letter:

"MONTREAL, 23rd February, 1881.

"MESSRS A. GUNN & Co.,
Kingston.

"DEAR SIR,—We have no doubt that you, like ourselves, have felt the hardship of our present sugar tariff, in excluding, by the high duty of 35 per cent. and 1 cent per lb., those choice raw sugars which sell the most readily and give the most satisfaction to consumers.

"We have waited, hoping to see some more important firm than our humble selves take up the subject, but as we hear of no agitation so far, we now respectfully request your co-operation, and ask you to lend your influence in obtaining from your importers and others their signatures, to some kind of petition to Parliament that shall express our mutual views.

"The present Government lay great stress on their desire to foster a reciprocal trade with the West Indies. The refiners import largely, but do not export, and it seems that they will eventually obtain a monopoly of the sugar importing business, because, on the one hand they will not buy refining sugars brought here by others, except at a loss to the importer, and on the other hand the grade No. 14, Dutch standard in color, and below are not choice enough for the majority of consumers of raw sugar. Thus the grade that merchants can import to any advantage is narrowed down to a very small limit, and we think that refiners will use every endeavor to kill what little trade there is left. They have forbidden their West India agents to allow any sugars for grocers here to be shipped on vessels bringing them sugars.

"Were the tariff re-adjusted so as to admit choice raw sugars not over say No. 16, we believe a reciprocal trade would ensue. In former years our old firms Jos. Tiffin, and J. Tiffin & Sons, used to export to the West Indies, nails, shooks, lumber, oats, peas, etc., and we think that, if the change in duty indicated were made, it would be practicable to do so again, and employment thus be given to Canadian vessels. So far, nearly, all the sugars brought here, especially by refiners, have come in British and foreign vessels.

"What we would ask of the Government is to alter the Tariff so as to allow raw sugars above No. 9, Dutch Standard, and not over say No. 16 (instead of No. 14 as at present) to come in at 30 per cent. and $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per lb. when shipped from place of growth direct to a Dominion port.

"We think the matter should be attended to promptly, but quietly, so as not to alarm the refiners, who will be very unwilling to see their enormous profits of the last two years curtailed in any way.

"Trusting to learn your views on the subject by return mail, together with any further information or hints that you may be able to afford us.

"We are, dear Sir,

"Yours truly,

"TIFFIN BROTHERS."

The refiners took 88,000,000 lbs., at a duty of \$1.55, and the trade paid \$2.55, making a difference of 70 cents per 100 lbs. This difference is equal to \$516,000. Last year the refiners sold their granulated sugar at 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents. The equivalent of 88,000,000 lbs. of raw sugar is 77,000,000 lbs. of granulated sugar. If this sugar had been brought in from New York under the old revenue Tariff of 1878, 25 per cent. and 1c., at the average value of last fiscal year ending 30th June, 1880, \$6.52, it would have cost \$9.15, after paying a duty of \$2.63 per 100 lbs., \$2,025,100, instead of \$1,360,000, which you have collected, showing loss of revenue amounting to \$665,000. This 77,000,000 lbs. costing, duty paid, \$7,045,500, instead of refiners' price, 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ c., \$7,507,500, showing a margin of profit to the refiners of \$462,000 which, with the loss of duty, makes \$778,000. There is no reason why they should not handle the whole of it. Already they have absorbed three-fourths of it, and they must soon absorb the other fourth. The very people that are supposed to protect the revenue, meet you at the Customs-house with a sample of sugar, which they say is No. 14, and you tell them the sugar you offer for duty was bought in Liverpool at 22 shillings on the same day that only No 12 was 24 shillings. The appraiser will show you a sample from Ottawa that he calls the standard, and he will tell you that your sugar is over No. 14 in color and must pay the highest rate, 35 per cent., and this stops the trade that would give the revenue if entered at 22 shillings rate according to value $\frac{1}{2}$ c. and 30 per cent., \$48.60 per ton. You insist on this sugar going to the refinery under a duty of \$4.60 per ton, losing thereby \$14 per ton. The result of this policy is to take money out of the Treasury and put it into the pockets of the refiners. It cannot be satisfactory to the people of this country to know that they are paying over half a million dollars more for their sugar than they would pay if there was competition between the refiners and the importers. The refiners should be satisfied to give some of the trade to the importers, but instead of that, the law is so fixed that they have seized upon the whole trade. All this has been often pointed out to the Finance Minister, but he has not thought it worth while to look into the matter. When we are losing \$1,000,000 a year it is his duty to take the side of the people, and prevent that waste. He has no right to advocate the refiner's cause; he is the paid servant of the people and is sent here to protect their interests only. My-hon. friend from Cardwell (Mr. White) was sent here to look after the interests of his constituents, and not to defend the monopoly of the refiners. If he can procure sugar one half cent cheaper to the people, it is his duty to do it. Here is the

hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Valin), who is a large sugar importer, yet he is obliged to send his ships to Boston and other American ports, because, he says, there is no use in bringing sugar to Montreal. I blame that hon. member, and other hon. gentlemen in the trade, because they did not stand by me when this question was up before the House at the inception of the refiner's tariff. I spoke against it then, and I consider it my duty to speak against it now. If the Government would consent to the nomination of a committee, I am confident I would be able to convince them that in this sugar question they are misled, and are following a mistaken policy. Why not refer this matter to German, French, English and American refineries, and after hearing them, decide what is right? It is very unfair that this trade should be confined to one or two firms. It is all very well for the hon. Finance Minister to speak of the large number of hands employed in the refineries; but consider what it is costing the country to give them employment. The hon. gentleman spoke of the cost of coal, labor, bank exchange, interest and rent to the Montreal refiner; but all these things are included in the price of American or English refined sugar. 87,000,000 lbs. of raw sugar, as near as I can make out, cost $3,000,000; shipping charges, the cost of casks and other charges, on which no duty is paid, amount to $1,250,000; the duty amounts to $1,360,000, and the cost of refining amounts to $794,000, making a total cost of $6,400,000. This sugar, sold at the average price of granulated sugar, would be worth $7,500,000. I think the merchants of Toronto, Hamilton, London, Halifax and Quebec are all dissatisfied with this Tariff, and I do not see how they could feel otherwise, so long as three-fourths of this whole trade is concentrated in the hands of two or three firms. In 1878, Ontario had 55 per cent. of the trade; in 1879, the refineries—having been in operation for about three months, it dwindled down to 46 per cent.; and in 1880, it was only 15½ per cent. That, I feel quite satisfied, is a very unsatisfactory state of things to the people of Ontario, who so largely supported the present Government.

Mr. BOULTBEE. The debate, Mr. Speaker, has to-night assumed a good deal of importance, as dealing more with abstract principles than mere matters of detail. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken, seems to have demonstrated that it is a great misfortune for Canada that there is any sugar at all. He gave us a good deal of statistical information as to the amount of sugar we did, or might, or could receive in the future; but I do not think that has any special bearing on the present argument. The present discussion has to do with the policy of protection to Canadian manufactures, and we have heard that matter treated in a very extraordinary manner. I listened with a great deal of attention to the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and, so far as I could gather it, the purport of his remarks was about this: that a tariff must be either a purely revenue producing tariff or one which, while it produces revenue, incidentally gives protection to home manufactures. Well, Sir, I apprehend that in that definition no one will differ from him. As a corollary to what he suggests—he does not affirm it—that the late Tariff was one that incidentally protected Canadian manufactures sufficiently. We take issue with that; we say it did not. Further than that, we gather from his utterances and those of every hon. gentleman on that side, that if they get back to power they will reverse the principle adopted by this Government, and revert to the Tariff that was in force prior to 1878. What were the effects of that Tariff? The whole country knows well that under it an unfortunate state of things existed. Our manufactures were not succeeding, and we were not receiving sufficient revenue to meet our expenditure. The hon. member for North Norfolk and those on the same side of the House enunciated the opinion that that was a tariff which was advantageous to the people of this country. It seems to me unfortunate that those gentlemen should take that position, and declare, should they ever have the opportunity, to revert to the old Tariff and bring back the old state of things. Why did the people go against the late Government? Why did they stand as one man against the present Opposition? Because they found that these were men blind to the true interests of the country, who are led away by a desire to carry out the arbitrary ideas which they fulminate, and which are opposed to the sterling common sense of the people. In Montreal the other day I met a gentleman who, until the last election, had supported the Opposition, who through the term of a long life had until then been a Reformer pure and simple, but who was a man largely engaged in manufactures, and who had come from another country many years ago to cast his lot in Canada. I asked him what he thought of the way affairs were going on. He said he was quite satisfied with the course of the present Government, that they were doing their best to develop the best interests of the people; and as for the Opposition, he said—I am using his own words—that they were so besotted in the narrow-minded ignorance of their own party convictions that they were unable to see in what direction the interests of the country lay. There are many other men in Montreal who, like him, have become ardent supporters of this Administration owing to the policy they have adopted. It seems to me that when we grouped the various Provinces of the Dominion into one country and under one head, the interests of every patriot lay, the duty of every patriot was to try and bind together in one homogeneous whole the people of Canada. Did we find hon. gentlemen opposite, that small, scattered party, trying to bind the country together? We find hon. gentlemen on every occasion trying to set interest against interest, Province against Province, man against man; saying to Nova Scotia: "You should have the duty on coal increased;" to New Brunswick: "You should get the duty taken off flour;" to Ontario: "You are being milked for the benefit of the other Provinces;" to Manitoba: "You should have more extensive privileges." We find them a set of demagogues of the worst class. I make no personal allusions; I say this is shown by their actions. Taking them by their utterances on the floor of this House, in which the interests of any Province has been discussed, those hon. gentlemen have tried to set Province against Province, and the whole of the Provinces against the Federal Government. They seek to appeal to the great mass of the electorate. They appeal to those men whose votes bear a proportion of five or six to one. They say to those men: "The taxes are made to discriminate against you; they are made in favor of the rich and against the workingmen." They are trying to array the electorate against those men in this country who are always seeking to bind the Dominion together. I say, gravely, representing as I do a county in which there is a large number of the class of voters whom they are trying to influence, that there are no men who are so much benefitted by the imposition of a tax which, while it increases our revenue, keeps out, to such an extent as we can do so, foreign goods of the kinds which we can ourselves manufacture. I affirm the principle, and I believe it to be a sound one, underlying every principle which conduces to national greatness, that no country was ever great, wealthy and strong until it manufactured, as far as it reasonably could do so, all the goods it required for its own consumption by its own people. While the excellence of foreign goods may tend to make the goods manufactured in the country higher in price for the time, I do not believe that affects the principle. It is to the advantage of the country to place an embargo on foreign manufactures so long as we can manufacture the goods ourselves. No country ever becomes wealthy and great and noted among the nations so long as its wealth is held by a select few. It is not until wealth is diffused throughout the length and breadth of the land, through the hard hands of workingmen, receiving good and satisfactory wages, that a country becomes great and strong. It is by the imposition of duties on foreign manufactures and by increasing our own, that we will come to a time of high wages for all men. I illustrate it in this way: I take a small town of 1,000 or 2,000 people, inhabited by a millionaire or seigneur, and who has attracted round him 1,000 or 2,000 people drawing scanty wages, perhaps 75 cents a day, employed for 200 days in the year with farmers starving in the lowest grades of poverty, no advancement or intelligence, and no mechanics' institute to develop intelligence. What does this village support? A miserable tavern, one grocery and an attenuated blacksmith's shop. Everything is falling into poverty. Change the condition of things. Take away the millionaire and establish a large factory, where the hands shall be employed at profitable wages—not 75 cents a day and working two-thirds of the year, but at $1.50 or $2 for the whole year. It will then become a flourishing town with many stores, hotels, &c., with everything flourishing and improving, because high wages are paid. That is the course which was adopted by the people in the foremost rank among the nations of the world—those of our mother land. The people of England adopted a protective policy, for the protection of its home manufactures, so stringent in its terms that it absolutely excluded any competition from other lands. The people of the mother land possessed in no greater degree the elements of wealth than do the people of Canada. Our lands are as fertile as any in the world, our minerals are most valuable, and our people are intelligent. Under such conditions, and well guided by those who have the control of the Legislature, why should our people be inferior to any? They only need to repose full confidence, as they did during the last election, in those hon. gentlemen who lead the present Government, and to distrust hon. gentlemen opposite as completely as they did at the last election. They have only, I say, to place their confidence in men who are fully inspired with a desire to place this country foremost in the countries of the world, and to foster and develop its various interests, and is not merely seeking for low party advantage to pander to any people or party. I heard an hon. gentleman opposite—I think the member for North Norfolk—say that de-pite the marvellous system of protection in the United States, its imports under that close system had increased. It is one of the most wonderful effects of the protective system, and one that has been noted by political economists, that the closer and harder you make it—the more you protect the earnings of the people and their internal industries—the more you create among them a system of national wealth, and develop their means—the larger do their imports become; because the people, raised above toiling for the mere necessities of life, can procure luxuries from abroad. By shutting out articles that the industries of the country can produce, you give the people the means, by enhanced wages, of purchasing those luxuries. I should ask if there be in the members of the Opposition or among the supporters of the Government, or in the people of Canada, one element of that patriotism which alone can inspire and build up a nation and make of us a people whose name shall be honorably heard from one confine of the world to another, what is the condition to which we are inexorably bound if we hope for this success? It is that instead of this miserable, carping criticism of the Opposition, this carping at everything, this trying to set Nova Scotia against New Brunswick and Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces against Ontario, and of saying to the fertile prairies of the West: "Your interests are not identical with those of Ontario and the Maritime Provinces," we should favor a policy of mutual respect and cordial union. If we have any desire to make this country what it should become, we should sink all party differences, go in for a great united Canada, working hand to hand and shoulder to shoulder. It is difficult, doubly difficult, to divert the course of trade when some portions of this country have such intimate connections with the United States, with the affections of so many among us bound up with that country, with so many admiring its political system and desirous of bringing about annexation. It takes long years for us in Ontario to come into close connection with the Maritime Provinces, and extend our commerce so as to embrace the remotest parts of the earth. But when, gradually, year after year, we have drawn the links closer that bind Ontario and the Maritime Provinces, when Quebec and Ontario become as one, which they are becoming, because there is no difference of principle between their representatives, and in an intelligent and free spirit they may be bound together by those common interests which are going, I trust, to make a great nation of these Provinces, as there is no real dividing line between their inhabitants—let us get rid of those miserable little exhibitions of party feeling designed and calculated to excite sectional prejudices. Let us each give away or concede something, and attempt to build up our common interests. Let us remember that our country extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and that through the enterprise of our people we are extending a railway from the one ocean to the other, and also perfect telegraphic communication; that we are going to have not only speedy means of transit, but with it the means of developing, not only our national wealth, but our national ideas and energies—those ideas and energies that make a nation great. If we can only do this and be animated by a proper national feeling, and forget our miserable prejudices, if the member for Centre Huron could forget those bitter feelings that animate him sometimes, if the member for Gloucester could lay aside the prejudices of the circle in which he lives, if the hon. member that lately gave us a lot of statistics, which I could neither hear nor understand, with the object of discrediting the Tariff, if the members for North Norfolk and South Brant, and the member for South Perth, honest, sturdy Englishman though he be, with his strong sense of right, though, perhaps, warped by his party allegiance, and the member for Westmoreland, with his hearty countenance and ample form—if we could join all these gentlemen with the representatives of the French race, many of whom I respect, and make them forget their petty, personal distinctions, and unite with the grand aim of promoting national feeling and our national interests, a glorious work would be accomplished. This Canada of ours might then, with its great material resources, with its splendid lands, unrivalled mineral resources, and forests inferior to none on earth, become a nation of which we might all be proud, and which, instead of becoming a mere appendage of the mother land might become, even in the time of our lives, a strong ally of the empire, and a remarkable instance of the splendid results which unity and patriotic co-operation can produce.

Mr. BATERSON (South Brant). I had not intended to take any part in the Budget debate, because I think the idea prevails strongly on our (the Opposition) side that the business of the House should not be prolonged; and we are all very anxious to transact the remaining business and return to our homes. But I simply rise to offer a few remarks in reply to a statement made the other day, of which I will have to ask an explanation. Alluding, incidentally, to the speech we have just heard, and many others from the Ministerial side on a par with it, I must say the course of hon. gentlemen opposite is one of self-glorification, because the business of the country is in a better state, and we are enjoying an era of prosperity. No gentleman on this side of the House pretends to deny the fact. Gentlemen on this side, as well as on the other, have experienced in their own business a tangible proof of the statement made. No one pretends to say that the country is not more prosperous than in 1878. We are in full accord with hon. gentlemen on that point, but what we say, having perhaps a little more reverence than hon. gentlemen opposite, is that we recognize the hands of Providence in this matter. We say that the prosperity we are enjoying is due to Providence alone, while hon. gentlemen opposite would rob Providence of that glory which belongs to Him, and almost imperiously claim for their legislative action what was simply due to Him. Surely they will not claim that the country has to thank their fiscal policy for $5,000,000 worth of an increased crop last year; or that it stimulated the products of animals to the extent of nearly $1,000,000. I say that the man who claims that the wealth which has accrued to the country by these $9,000,000 is due to anything in the shape of tariffs or legislative action by any Government, takes a position not worthy of a man who professes to recognize the hand of Providence in the bestowal of his gifts to man. And I say that the manufacturers must share in the benefits which such an increase in the wealth of the country brings about, and is the reason that those who buy their manufactured goods—that is, the farmers—have more money in their pockets, and are consequently able to buy more of their goods. Where would the manufacturers have got their money, or their increased prosperity, if the farmers had not had more money in their pockets to buy the goods they make? It is an insult to common sense for any hon. gentleman to rise to pursue a line of argument such as has been indulged in with reference to this matter. And I repeat here what I stated the other day, that the great bulk of our manufactures—I except two or three lines—are in a worse position under the operation of this Tariff than they were before. I pointed to the decrease in the exports of the manufactured articles as unmistakable evidence in that direction; and although hon. gentlemen have attempted to weaken the force of that statement, that statement remains unimpeached by anything that has been said against it. And what was the line of argument which the Finance Minister took? He admitted that in thirty-five articles of export there had been a decrease of $1,500,000, but he said: "I find you have a decrease of $700,000 on ships, and there are some other articles in which there have been increases, making a total reduction of $885,000." He says: "Take out ships and you have only decreased the amount by $113,000." I ask if it is a reasonable line of argument to be taken by the Finance Minister of this country, that if the exports in twenty-two lines of goods have not decreased, then the thirty-five lines of manufacture which have decreased have not been injured? I ask the hon. gentleman if it is not possible to so frame a Tariff that certain manufacturers shall be benefitted while others are injured? Nobody pretends to deny that the present Tariff has stimulated the production of cottons and refined sugar; but what we on this side say is that while it may have benefitted these industries, it has done so at the expense of the country, and that so far as sugar, at any rate, was concerned we would have been better without such a tariff. What we contend is that a tariff should be arranged—and that a tariff will be arranged when these hon. gentlemen are succeeded by others who ought now to be in their places—which while benefitting the sugar refiners of the country, will prevent them from extracting quite so much from the pockets of the people. When the Finance Minister said that he deducted $700,000 on account of ship-building, I asked him what right he had to take it? And he said that these people were forced to sell their ships because hard times prevailed in 1878, and their vessels were mortgaged. I ask him if that is a fair answer to my question? I ask him how it was in his former period of administration? In the good old days when as hon. gentlemen opposite say Canada was prosperous and everything was flourishing? Were ships sold for mortgages then? Because I have to inform him that double the amount was sold in that year that was sold last year. The hon. gentleman's argument will not hold water, and I tell him that his Tariff has injured that business as it has injured many others. The hon. gentleman said that my argument was answered by the fact that we had increased our own consumption, that if we do export less it is because we have imported less and the difference has been made up of home manufacture. The hon. Finance Minister treated us to some statistics which he has collected from some source I know not what, but at all events he was pleased to give them to the House. While I have the greatest deference for a gentleman holding the high and exalted position of Finance Minister of this country, I also remember the fact that in one sense we both stand in the same position as members of this House; and I say, when he gives us reports and statistics regarding the different manufactures of this country, we have a perfect right to demand of him that these statistics and reports shall be laid on the Table of the House and printed, so that we may learn whence he obtained his information. I do not pretend to say that the Finance Minister came here and deliberately stated what was not true. I believed he obtained these reports as he stated; but I do say that the manufacturers have imposed upon the credulity of the hon. gentleman, and that statements should be published so that the people living in the communities where these manufactories are, may read them, so that they would be able to say whether they were true or not. Am I warranted in drawing the inference that the Finance Minister was imposed upon? I reply that his own speech proved it. What does he say with reference to one of these industries? He says he has returns showing that the boot and shoe industry has increased 25 per cent. during the past year alike with regard to the amount of production, the labor employed, and the fact that factories which were formerly running on two-third's time are now running on full time.

Mr. GAULT. So they are, in Montreal.

Mr. PATERSON. There is where the hon. gentleman makes a mistake; that is where the hon. member for Cardwell makes a mistake; that is where the Finance Minister, representing the whole Dominion, makes a mistake; they mistake Montreal for the Dominion of Canada. Let me point out the absurdity of that statement of the Finance Minister. What are the facts with reference to the boot and shoe trade? He tells us that 25 per cent. more men are employed, that the product is 25 per cent. greater; that in addition to that, while the factories in 1878 were running on two-third time, they are now running on full time. The total manufacture of boots and shoes in Canada will come to $20,000,000 per annum. The total difference between the imports of 1880 and 1878 is $163,000.

Mr. WALLACE (South Norfolk) Imports are not manufactures.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman does not grasp my idea. We imported in 1880 within $135,726 worth of boots and shoes as much as we did in 1878. That amount less has been imported in 1880 than in 1878. There was $135,000 worth only of boots and shoes exported that were made in this country, and three-fourths more shoemakers were employed in order to produce one-fourth more of the total product, which would be $5,000,000 worth of boots and shoes made, and in addition to that the people worked one-third more time.

Mr. WALLACE, (South Norfolk.) The people did not wear the same quantity.

Mr. PATERSON. The Finance Minister did not say that. If the hon. member for South Norfolk is prepared to go into statistics to show that the people went barefoot more in 1878 than in 1880, let him do it. Then we have upon this same question the statement of the hon. member for Cardwell. The Finance Minister, engaged in a multiplicity of duties, might not see that in making this statement he showed that his whole figures were totally worthless and useless, for if that be his statement with reference to boots and shoes, we are warranted in suspecting his statements with reference to these other products. But the hon. member for Cardwell had not that excuse. He ought to have known. He undertook to criticize my figures with reference to exports. On the item of leather he admitted that there had been a decrease in imported leather as well as exported. Then he said there was $500,000 worth more of hides imported last year than the year before, which also served to swell the production of boots and shoes. Putting these two things together he makes $750,000 worth more of leather that was worked into boots and shoes during 1880 than in 1878. Well, the whole total of extra shoes that we wanted was $123,000 worth. Now, these statements of hon. gentlemen opposite show how utterly worthless their figures must be when they say that we imported $750,000 worth more leather in order to manufacture $135,000 worth more of boots and shoes. It will not do for the hon. gentlemen opposite to take the position that the people are wearing less. I ask the hon. member for Cardwell, why do we make any exports of manufactured articles at all if the home market is not fully supplied?

An hon. MEMBER. Supply the home market first.

Mr. PATERSON. But you have an export trade in addition to supplying the home market. It proves one of two things—either that you have supplied the home market in full and have a surplus to export, or it proves that the price in the foreign market is as good as the price at home or we would not have sent it to a foreign market. If the price is as good in the foreign market as at home, of what value has been the legislation of these hon. gentlemen to keep the home market for our people? With reference to many of these articles in which there has been an increase in the exports, there has been no decrease in the importation, as many articles come into this country as before, showing that manufactures are in a worse state than before. Take agricultural implements. In 1878 we imported $93,309 worth; in 1880, $91,804 worth, only $2,000 less imported, while the export decreased one-third. Take carriages. In 1880 we imported $85,429 worth; in 1878, $137,376 worth, an increase in the imports and a decrease in the exports; and will you tell me the carriage-makers are in as healthy a condition now as then? The Finance Minister maintained that the decrease of imports prove that the decrease of exports was not a matter of vital consequence; hence, by a parity of reasoning an increase of imports and a decrease of exports at the same time prove that the industry is materially damaged. Take leather. I need not go into the figures, for the hon. member for Cardwell admitted that there had been an increase. Take the sewing machine industry. Employing thousands of hands, an industry that is not second to the cotton industry, an industry that, I venture to say, so far as employment of skilled labor is concerned, stands higher even than the cotton industry. In 1878 we imported $101,404 worth; in 1880, $119,681 worth. There is that great industry in which the imports have increased and the exports decreased; and will hon. gentlemen tell me that that industry has not been injured? I might mention many other articles, all proving that you have your imports to as great an extent while your exports have decreased. While the Tariff may have stimulated the production of cotton to a certain extent, and to a slight degree the production of earthenware turned out by the one potter we have in this country, its operations cease there. The manufactures of agricultural implements, of sewing machines, of boots and shoes, of soaps, of candles, and of many other industries, have been injured materially by this Tariff. Let me tell one fact to the hon. gentlemen opposite. If you ask the individual manufacturer in Canada how his business compares with what it was in 1878, he will reply: "My business is better." If you ask me if one of the lines of industry I am engaged in—the steam biscuit and confectionery manufacture—is more prosperous in 1880 than it was in 1878, I say yes. But why? Because since the Tariff of the hon. gentleman came into force nearly one-half of the manufacturers in that line have closed their shops, and the few who struggled through now find an increased demand and are making a little money. The same remark will apply to the boot and shoe and other industries in the country—their business is better, but the reason is that many who were competitors in 1878 have gone under; their shops are closed, their machinery is lying idle, and consequently they find themselves with an enhanced demand and better prices.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). Will the hon. gentleman state where the machinery is lying idle?

Mr. PATERSON. I will tell him that he could have bought in Guelph the other day, for $2,200, a lot of machinery and business that was lying idle, that cost the proprietor $14,000; I could point him to shops in other towns where machinery was sold for one-fourth of what it cost; I could take him through the country and show him shops after shops that were busily employed during the administration of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), the doors of which have since been closed. As soon as business revives, the same competition will go on again with its ruinous results, and the same cry will go up from the manufacturers, that their margins have been diminished until what was once a lucrative business has become a losing one. Let the hon. gentleman wait for a few years, and I venture to predict that this will be his experience with the cotton manufactures which his Tariff is now stimulating. The country has improved; $9,000,000 has been brought into the country through the operations of a kind Providence with which the tariff had nothing to do, and with an increased demand, with money in the pockets of the farmers to buy, and with less men to produce manufactured articles to-day than in 1878.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. PATERSON. I say, yes. Hon. gentlemen may say no as long as they please, but they cannot give the facts to prove their statement. I repeat that the total number of men engaged in manufactures in Canada to-day is less than the number in 1876.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Prove it.

Mr. PATERSON. I gave one line. The hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) says, "It's all wind." There was a time when I paid some attention to the utterances of that hon. gentleman, but I pay no attention to them now. The other day he gave me a sufficient insight into his character when, after the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) had gone to consult him in private conversation, he thought it not beneath him to make a public declaration of it, and turn it against him. A gentleman who can do that may interrupt me with impunity, and I do not feel it my duty to regard what he says. I want hon. gentlemen opposite to observe this point also. When they talk of the improved feeling among the manufacturers of this country, they speak as though the manufacturers alone had improved. When the hon. Finance Minister asked the manufacturers to send in to him a statement of the condition of their balance sheet, and what the Tariff had done for them, did he ask the same from the importers of this country? They are the very opposite of the manufacturers, and his Tariff was designed to injure them. Let him ask them for a similar statement, and they will tell him that they are doing an increased business and are richer to day than they were in 1878. If the importers are doing better, this certainly proves that the manufacturers are not doing better because of the Tariff. But I consider it a mere waste of time to attempt to refute the statement that the country is more prosperous than it was in 1878. Every man knows that; no man denies it; the only difference between us and hon. gentlemen opposite is that we see that our prosperity is due to the blessings of Providence, and acknowledge it, while they attempt to attribute it to legislation. Let me refer to a statement made by the hon. Finance Minister that I endeavored to make a flank movement upon him in making the statement I did a day or two before he made his Budget speech. It was not worthy of the hon. Finance Minister to make that statement. I challenge any hon. gentleman to read the remarks I made on that occasion, and say I went out of the record. I put a motion on the notice paper; I wished to arrive at a certain result. I made no comment until the return came down. I then found it was only a partial return, but from what it contained it proved to be so unsatisfactory in its nature that I had occasion to make another motion, and in making that other motion I took occasion to point out to the hon. Finance Minister what I had a right to direct his attention to. I pointed out that there was a very serious decrease of exports in our manufactures, that that decrease was due to the fact that his Tariff had hampered our manufactures and placed them at a disadvantage in a foreign market, that he said he would compensate for that disadvantage by a system of drawbacks, and that he had not allowed those drawbacks. Every word I uttered was pertinent to that one subject. I could not be accused of anticipating his Budget speech in moving on a certain line and in not deviating in the slightest from it. When the hon. member from Centre Huron was Finance Minister, much as he was depreciated by hon. gentlemen opposite, he was able to manage the affairs of his office.

Mr. RYKERT. Deficits.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman, by his interruption, will cause me to speak longer than I intended. The late Finance Minister, at any rate, let him be incompetent or not in estimation of the hon. gentlemen opposite, was able to give his Budget Speech 19 days after the House opened in 1874, 12 days after it opened in 1875, 15 days in 1876, 12 days in 1877 and 15 days in 1878.

Mr. FARROW. What has that to with it?

Mr. PATERSON. It has this do with it, that the present Finance Minister, instead of taking twelve or fifteen days, took seventy days to bring down his speech. While the hon. Finance Minister might reasonably have expected me to wait twelve or fourteen days, it was too much, after making me wait seventy days, to find fault with me because, on the sixty-eighth day, I could not let my motion stand any longer.

Mr. HESSON. It always takes longer to work out a surplus than a deficit.

Mr. PATERSON. But the Finance Minister has a deficit. The hon. member for North Perth does not seem to be cognizant of the state of our finances. We have a deficit about as large as we had under the reign of my hon. friend. No doubt the late Finance Minister had a deficit. And why? Because, in a period of depression, when the people found it difficult to procure fuel and clothing, he refused to heap on the already overburdened people any additional taxation. Had he added to his Tariff the 6 per cent. additional taxation which the present Finance Minister has levied, would he have had a deficit? Does the hon. gentleman not know that if the hon. member for Centre Huron had added on the classification of his goods the 6 per cent. additional of taxation that has been imposed by the present Finance Minister he would have had $4,000,000 more revenue than the present Finance Minister has out of his. Hon. gentlemen opposite think the whole duty of a Finance Minister is to put 30, 25, 60 or 65 per cent. on goods, because some Americans came here and told them to do it, without looking at the operation of these duties. Let them take the tariff as classified by the late Finance Minister, and add the 6 per cent. to it, and they will find that instead of having a deficit they would have all the money the present Finance Minister has obtained, and $4,000,000 additional; and we would have, besides, free coal, free breadstuffs, sugar a cent a pound cheaper. I thank hon. gentlemen opposite for having used the word deficit, as it has enabled me to make this statement. I did not intend to speak on this question, but I thought it would be as well to make the statement now rather than make it on the adjourned debate on my motion, when the hon. Finance Minister might say I should have done so before the Budget debate was closed. Everything points to the fact that the present Tariff is anything but a scientific one, that it affords no more protection to the great bulk of manufactures than the late Tariff, while it takes $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 more out of the pockets of the people. I call the attention of the hon. Finance Minister again to the fact that in the great bulk of Canadian manufacture the imports in 1880 were as great as in 1878, and to the alarming fact that in thirty-five lines of manufactures there has been a decrease of exports of $1,500,000. I ask him to find some remedy whereby he may give to these manufacturers who find their export trade failing, the drawbacks to which they are entitled, in order that they may be able, at any rate, to retain their export trade. Do I see any symptoms of change? No; I find that the hon. Finance Minister has introduced into his Tariff an increase of duty on tubing from 15 to 25 per cent. I commend this fact to the attention of the hon. member for North Huron, who is interested in salt wells, an industry which he knows was passed over by the hon. Finance Minister, an industry which the hon. Finance Minister could not protect. But the hon. gentleman can join with me in protesting against this increase of duty which will add 10 per cent. to the material cost of sinking every well. This same tubing goes into the manufacture of boilers and work-hops in the Dominion; instead of aiding our manufactures, here is another turn of the screw by which he is going to hamper the export trade of our manufactures, because we are told by the hon. Minister of Customs that no drawback would be allowed on this tubing because it is a manufactured article imported into this country. Why, take the article of tin. Tin is not made in this country, surely it is a manufactured article. And yet that sheet of tin comes into the country and is made into lobster cans, on which a drawback is allowed. But boiler tubes are more needed here; they are imported, but no drawback is allowed because it is said they are finished articles. They are, however, no more finished articles than is the sheet of tin a finished article. Take it in any way you like, there is no doubt that manufacturers, instead of being placed in a better, will be placed in a worse position by the amendments to the Tariff, and that the Government is injuriously affecting the important industry of boiler-making and machine shops by placing an extra 10 per cent. on all tubing not made in the country. I believe there is to be a tube factory established in Montreal; that $10,000 will be put into the enterprise. But that establishment will only make one kind of tubing, it would only make butt tubing, and not lap-welded tubing which enters largely into manufactures in this country. Therefore, in order to protect that little $10,000 establishment, an additional 10 per cent. has been placed on all imported tubing, such as is used for our oil and salt wells, and machinery purposes. The Finance Minister will probably say that is so up to certain sizes, but that includes the manufactures of which I have spoken. Hon. gentlemen opposite will see two points clearly; that there is no necessity for them to argue that trade has improved, as we are as cognisant of the fact as they are, the only point of difference being as to the cause. We say that $9,000,000 extra coming into the country as the result of the harvests is not due to the Tariff. We admit that those $9,000,000 benefitted the manufacturers as well as other persons; that as the result of that our manufacturers have been benefitted and from no other cause. Moreover, the Tariff, with the exception of two or three industries, has placed our manufacturers in a worse position than they occupied under the Tariff as arranged in 1873, and that is incontrovertibly proved by the decrease of exports while the imports have not fallen in like ratio.

Mr. FARROW moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL.

The following Bill was introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 69) respecting the Ville Marie Bank (from the Senate)—(Mr. Desjardins).

House adjourned at 12:25 o'clock, a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 25th February, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPORT.

Mr. POPE (Queen's) presented the annual report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

AMENDMENT OF CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT.

Mr. CASGRAIN, in introducing a Bill (No. 70) to amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1878, said: I desire to call the attention of the Government to this Bill. It is framed with the object of removing certain injustices to the taking of water under the Railway Act. I understand a Bill has been introduced in the Senate to amend the General Railway Act, but it appears to be uncertain whether it will be proceeded with. The Bill, I believe, is not yet printed, but if it should come before this House, I may then put this amendment in the general Bill proposed by the Government.

Bill read the first time.

LOAN COMPANIES.

Mr. BRECKEN introduced a Bill (No. 71) to provide for empowering Loan Companies to carry on business throughout Canada.

Bill read the first time.

WAYS AND MEANS.—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Sir Leonard Tilley, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty."

Mr. FARROW. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words before the debate closes, and I assure the House I will not occupy its time very long. As speeches have been delivered by lawyers, doctors, the Finance Minister and ex-Finance Minister, bankers and other hon. members, I thought it desirable that the farmers' side of the question should be presented. Having been a representative of that class for about thirty years, and being still not ashamed of representing it, perhaps a few words in that direction might be advantageous, and will show the farmers, in my riding at least, that there was some one in the House of Commons to stand up and advocate their claims. During the last eight or ten years I have seen some great changes in the House of Commons. I have seen the defeat of what I call my Government; I have seen the bringing in of the new Government who are now in Opposition, and I may say that I watched with great interest the proceedings of that Government. From the promises they made to the country, we expected great things of them, but I need not tell the House that all their promises were failings, that, in other words, they seemed to go back on all their promises. My hon friend and neighbor—because I claim him as a neighbor—the member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) fell into troublesome times. Some people say he was born with a silver spoon in his mouth. I am not going to discuss, at the present time, what advantage that is to a man, but I should think it would be a very great advantage. If a man comes into the world poor, if he does not inherit a patrimony and has got to work and struggle his way into existence, it is certainly a hardship, and it is a hardship which many of us have had to undergo. However that may be, the hon. gentleman has not had a very smooth course, politically; one great drawback to his success seemed to be that he was too dogmatical, and that he set himself up as a standard beyond which there was no other. What he did not know was not worth knowing, and although the country had to suffer for it, our party has to thank that gentleman more than any one else for bringing us into power. We all remember the time when deputation after deputation came here to interview the hon. gentleman, and to tell him that they must have protection for the industries of this country, which under his Tariff were being sacrificed to the interests of the United States. But he turned around and told them, in effect, that they had better go home and mind their own business; they did not know anything about the state of this country. He was too dogmatic, too heady, he was too—what shall I characterize it—

An hon. MEMBER. Cheeky.

Mr. FARROW. Yes; cheeky and bumptious, if you like; and the country rose up en masse, on the 17th September, 1878, and said that if their rulers were too dictatorial, if they would not take advice, we will change them. They had a right to do so, and they did do so. They brought in a new lot of men who inaugurated the new policy which they had promised the country in 1876, and, so far as they possibly could, they have fulfilled the promises they made to the people, though I am one of those who find a little fault with them. I think that in giving our eastern friends protection on coal, and refusing to give us protection on salt, they acted too much like the patriarch, in giving his favorite son a coat of many colors. We hope yet that the Government will accede to our wishes and give us protection on salt. While on this point I may say that I am sorry that the member for Centre Huron and the member for South Huron have not given me the slightest help in securing protection for this struggling industry; and I believe if they would come out squarely in favor of protection for salt the Government would not long refuse it. I wish to say a few words about the agricultural industry—about the most important industry in this country. I, for one, consider the farmer as of more importance than the lawyer. The toiler who gets up early in the morning, eats his breakfast, and then betakes himself to the field to plough and sow his broad acres, is a man who adds something substantial to the wealth of the country, and is a man far superior to the lawyer. I hope my hon. friends will excuse me when I say that I think we have too many lawyers in this House, and that we might very advantageously exchange half a dozen of them for that number of good farmers. I know what the farmers want, and I know that they are such an independent and sturdy lot of fellows that if they cannot get it from one Government they will from another, and they certainly will not permit themselves to be humbugged. The farmers wanted protection and they got it, and they thank this Government for it. I have carefully noted the opinion among the farmers, and they thank this Government for giving them protection on grain, wheat, corn, flour, oats, and all kinds of cereals. Do you mean to say the farmers have not enjoyed greater prosperity during the reign of this Government than during the reign of the last Government? Why, everyone admits that they are more prosperous now than then. But the Opposition pretend that Providence has blessed the farmers with better harvests than they ever had before. The Opposition would try to make you believe that a different sun shone on this world, that the rain drops were charged with extra fertilizing powers. Why, it is all nonsense. I affirm that we never had such good crops since 1854 as we had in 1877, and not only that, but that we had the best prices. I am going to read from the Globe of July 26th, 1877:

"From all sides the news reaches us every day that the fall wheat, of which a much greater breadth than usual was sown this season, is not only far above the average in the amount of the yield, but is the finest sample of grain we have been favored with for a long time. In many places there will be twice the average yield, and from fifty to sixty bushels to the acre will be no uncommon return in many parts of Western Ontario. There is reason to believe that spring wheat will not be much more than an average crop, if it reaches that point, though at its present rate of progress it is impossible that it may turn out much better than is now expected. The other spring grains are, however, excellent crops. Oats are in many places better than they have been for years, and so are peas and barley, though neither of these are of so much importance as wheat. Root crops promise well, and there is every likelihood of an excellent yield of fine potatoes in spite of the ravages of the Colorado beetle. On the whole, the prospect is a very cheering one for the farmer, and as all classes depend upon him all will share in the pleasant anticipations he is now fairly entitled to indulge."

Could anything be more cheering? Could anything be more satisfactory? I remember well working in the harvest fields in 1855, and I remember the excellent crops we had then. Why, then, had we not better times? Where did all the money go to that was received from those crops of 50 to 60 bushels per acre? Let us examine the public accounts for that year. The Globe said: Gentlemen, we can see daylight through the darkness. But the Finance Minister, looking through his spy-glass, kept coming down and saying: "It is dark, dark, dark. But I think I can see a little light about as large as a man's hand; I think we can see a silver lining." We all followed him as our captain. But the next year he came down and demolished the whole prospect again. He said: "It is dark, dark, very dark." Well, this good harvest and these good prices did not benefit us at all, according to the argument of the hon. gentleman opposite. We had the largest deficit that year of any other year. I think the hon. gentleman opposite ought to rise and explain. Let the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) who declaimed so loudly against this policy, get up and explain the reason of those deficits. What became of that money? Why had we not prosperous times? Echo answers why. They cannot explain it. We had an excellent harvest in 1877, and we had good prices for our grain, as I will show from the Globe. Fall wheat, in 1877, was $1.25 a bushel; in 1879, $1.20. Five cents a bushel on all the wheat that was raised in Canada would be a large sum of money, yet it failed to bring the promised good time. We were still in darkness and financial difficulties, plunged head and ears into debt, and could not extricate ourselves at all. The price of spring wheat was $1.15 a bushel, barley 65 cents, oats 33 cents, and peas 66 cents; in 1879 peas were only 64 cents. Let my farmer friend from Wentworth (Mr. Rymal) get up and explain why the times were bad in 1877. The fact is their policy was wrong, and the country told them that; their own friends told them that. Why, their French supporters, I understand, came and begged of them to change their policy. I am convinced, if the hon. member for Lambton had changed his policy, he would have been in power to-day. But that shows the difference between the Liberal Conservative and the Grit party. They know too much, and they will not accept any advice; whereas we do not pretend to know much, only we are willing to carry out the wish of the great body of the people, and as long as we do that we shall be in power. The National Policy a drawback to this country! Let it not be said so on the floor of this House or in any of the constituencies. I should be afraid the farmers would drum me out of my riding if I insinuated anything of the kind, because they know better. They have even blamed the Finance Minister for not going forward faster. They say, where are the great iron industries which ought to be created by Protection? We have plenty of iron ore waiting to be utilized, and instead of buying our steel rails from foreigners, we ought to make them ourselves—instead of shipping our iron to the United States at about $4 a ton and getting it back at about $60. If the Government would protect the iron industry, so that furnaces could be established here and in the Maritime Provinces, it would be a great boon to the country. The farmers believe this, at any rate, that the National Policy by protecting their wool, raised the price last year from twenty-two cents a pound to thirty-two cents a pound. I would like to see the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) go among them and tell them this is all a hoax. Why, they have their money in their pockets, in the banks, or in improvements on their farms, and they would not believe him. Tell them that the duty has not advanced the price of coarse grains. Let the hon. leader of the Opposition go into the County of Bruce, which he formerly so honorably represented, and tell those sturdy farmers that it is all a lie, that they are deceived, and, with all deference to his great talents and ability, they will tell him that he knows nothing about it. Look at what they got for their butter and cheese last year. Some of the farmers made fortunes last year, and I am glad of it. They say everything is going like clockwork with them now; they are living comfortably and happily; they are enabled to obtain plenty of comforts and luxuries; they are getting organs, organettes, and pianos into their houses; they are improving the education of their children, many of whom go to the grammar schools and some to the colleges. Although we have only a few farmers in this House to-day, you may depend upon it that in a few years there will not be as many lawyers and doctors and bankers here as there are, but sturdy, healthy yeomen will take their places, and I say, God speed the time. Now, I ask, who likes to see an army of beggars in the country? Who likes to see an army of men who are willing to work and can find no work? It pained my heart, when a few years ago we saw two or three hundred men in this city who could get no work, coming up to this House for assistance. I ask, have these things not changed? Has not the desert blossomed like the rose? Are there men in Ottawa to-day crying out: "Give me work to enable me to support my wife and family?" A man engaged in the lumber business of this city told me the other day that he had hunted this city for men and could not get them. We have not this army of men seeking employment now. Years ago, in walking up and down the streets of this city, I met unemployed men by scores and felt sorry for them,

Occasionally, I would go into a store and ask the proprietor what was the state of business. The invariable answer I got was that it was very depressed. One merchant said to me: "We cannot sell, there are so many bankrupt stocks for sale; with the exception of about three houses, all the firms on Sparks street are bankrupt, and are selling their goods for a mere song." That was the state of things under the Administration of the late Government, notwithstanding the good harvests and good prices for cereals. There are not the same number of bankrupt stocks now, and I notice we are getting good prices for our oats, pork, butter, rye and all cereals. Are we paying, I ask, too dear for our whistle? Are the farmers now paying excessively high prices for what they want? Are they paying too high for their coffee, tea, sugar, rice, clothing? If they are, it will alter the case completely. But I can tell you this. I have been a close observer. I have gone into the store, and have interrogated the merchants as to how last year compared with years gone by, in respect to prices. They tell me we can get, with all the little fluctuations, a little more now for our dollar than we could formerly. I was glad to hear the hon. Finance Minister say that sugar was cheaper now than it would be under the old Tariff, because his statement bore out my experience. The farmers are perfectly satisfied with the prices of their cottons, their woollens, and their Canadian tweeds, that give such good wear. I was glad to find my hon. friend from Montreal West, (Mr. Gault), a practical and experienced man, say that better values were given to the people for their money to-day than at any previous time. His statement coincides with the experience of the farmers who, I can tell you, are wide-awake men; who are so wide-awake that when they hear they can get a cent more per bushel for their wheat twenty-five miles off than nearer home, they will hitch in their horses and bring their wheat that distance. You need not say these farmers are not shrewd men; they are as shrewd as any kind of men you can meet. I have much pleasure in reading the following extract from the spring circular of Messrs. Samson, Kennedy & Gemmel, of Toronto:

"The year begins auspiciously to all in the dry goods trade. Values are firm; no excess of goods is apparent. Money is in free circulation, and the consumptive demand is enlarging. Merchants, both wholesale and retail, throughout Canada, have been taught a lesson during the past four years which it is hoped they will not easily forget; but will allow a sound Conservative policy to take the place of reckless trading. It is evident that an improved state of things prevails. Dark clouds that hung over the commercial and financial world during the years 1876 and 1879 have disappeared and confidence, which is essential to prosperity, has again returned. The year 1880 has been characterized by an unusually small number of bad debts. It may not be uninteresting to state (the figures are taken from reliable sources) that the number of failures in Canada in 1876 were 1,728, with liabilities amounting to $25,000,000.

In 1877 the number was	1,892,	with liabilities	amounting to	$24,000,000.
" 1878 " "	1,697,	" "	" "	29,000,000.
" 1879 " "	1,902,	" "	" "	8,000,000.
And " 1880 " "	only 907,	" "	" "	only 8,000,000.

"It is, therefore, highly gratifying to be able to present figures which show that a marked state of prosperity prevailed in 1880, as compared with the three years previous, and that we believe the prospect for the future is bright and very encouraging, unless we bring upon ourselves a speedy re-action by a departure from sound business principles."

I think the man would be bold, if not audacious, who should tell me that 14,000 workmen extra employed in this country, representing 42,000 mouths, were not a benefit to it. That is what we have in Canada. Do you say send these men to the United States to work in the mills, or to England to work, and let us import the cloth and different other manufactured articles we use? Who would recommend that? Not one, you might as well tell me the sunshine was not beneficial and the rain drops were of no use, as that those 14,000 extra mechanics now employed in this country, who, with their families, make up a total of 42,000 persons, and who consume our cabbages, turnips, onions, butter and cheese, and agricultural products that will not bear transportation, are of no use to it. It is nonsense to say the opposite. I thank the House for the attention with which it has heard me on this occasion.

Mr. FLEMING. I scarcely expected to be called on to say anything on this occasion, but I cannot help protesting against the statements made by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, that he spoke for the farmers of Ontario, in claiming that they were perfectly satisfied with this National Policy. I do not wonder at hon. gentlemen opposite doing everything in their power to keep up the belief in the public mind, that this National Policy is a benefit to the country. Their political existence depends upon that belief. They grasp at that policy as drowning men grasp at straws. The member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) asks—why is it that after the abundant crop of 1877 good times did not come right away? He put the same question, I believe, to me last year, and the answer I then gave is equally good now. If he could show me that the export of the wheat crop of 1877 was larger than the export of wheat from the crop of 1878, I would acknowledge there might be something in his contention. I think a very good reason why good times did not come all at once after the crop of 1877, which was a very good crop compared with that of the previous year, was that the previous year's was a comparatively poor crop. To show that it really was so, I will call attention to the fact that in 1876-77, the year previous to the one which the hon. gentleman cited, we imported of wheat and flour, reduced to wheat at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ bushels per barrel, 7,059,834 bushels; and we exported 4,803,070 bushels; excess of imports over exports, 2,256,764 bushels. We had to buy that quantity to make up the deficiency in the country, and to pay for it, in cash, \$2,183,653. Did not that help to leave the country bare? Did not the people feel the evil results of that bad crop? The next year the crop was good, but a great portion of its surplus had to go to make up the deficiency of the previous year. The exports for 1877-78 were 10,655,845 bushels, and the imports 7,050,751 bushels, being an excess of exports of 3,615,094 bushels, or but very little more than the deficiency of the previous year. We could not expect any great revival of prosperity in a year succeeding one exceptionally bad. In 1878-79 our wheat exports were 12,381,047 bushels, including flour. We imported 5,639,051 bushels, leaving an excess of imports over exports of 6,781,996 bushels. So that it required those two years, and if there are better times now—which we admit cheerfully, there having been so many more bushels of wheat raised and sold, and so much more money brought into the country—we should undoubtedly expect a revival from that cause. But look at the trade returns for last year and previous years, take the produce of the forest for 1875-76, which amounted to \$20,337,469; animals and their produce, \$14,548,253. The agricultural products in 1876-77 were \$19,279,726. Last year, animals and their produce, \$18,504,005; agricultural products, \$22,287,128. Now, these greatly enhanced exports last year made a great addition to the wealth of the country; apart altogether from the National Policy, there could not fail to be better times at present than in 1876-77. The member for West Huron says that the farmers are fully satisfied with the National Policy, because with it they get better prices for their produce; but he did not prove his assertion. They may have got better prices on account of the depression and the poor crops in England; but he should show they got better prices for what was consumed in Canada than if there had been no National Policy.

Mr. FARROW. I can produce evidence to show that, though in England there was not the same depression the past year as before, prices were better in 1877.

Mr. FLEMING. The hon. gentleman's statement amounts to this, that last year the English crop was better than that of the year previous. The year previous there was a very poor crop, consequently there was depression in England. There certainly was very very great depression among the agricultural class in that country. During the depression a general election occurred. What did the leader of the English Opposition, Mr. Gladstone, then do? Did he go round and tell the people of England: "I have got a grand panacea for your poverty and trouble, a patent remedy that will cure your disease. Put me in power and you will have better times?" Did he say so? No. I beg to call the attention of the House to a speech made by Mr. Gladstone, during his tour in Scotland before the elections. He said:

"Do not suppose that I have come among you as a quack doctor, and with a nostrum in my pocket which I am ready to offer to you as an infallible cure for agricultural difficulties. * * * * * What have you to ask from a candidate, or from a member of Parliament, or from a Parliament? You have not to ask from them, or from any but yourselves, that your trade and occupation shall be profitable. It is your own intelligence, care, thrift, and industry, which alone can insure success in your sphere of life, and if it were possible for you merely to fold your arms and to throw upon your candidates and members of Parliament, all the responsibility of finding you a lucrative occupation there, not only would you fail in that end, but you would also lose the masculine qualities which have made Scotland famous, and you would become really unworthy of being citizens of such a country. What is it then that you have a right to ask? I have said before, that you have a right to ask perfect freedom in what you buy and what you sell, and so far, I think the law has tolerably met your free and just demands. There is nothing that you buy, for which you pay a price, enhanced by anything except the real necessities of the Government. You no longer pay prices enhanced against you for the supposed interest of particular classes."

That was the way in which Mr. Gladstone met the people of Scotland previous to the last general election. How very different was the course taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. They said: "Your success does not depend on your own energies, but on the adoption of a particular kind of tariff, which will impose additional taxes." But referring to the subject of which I was speaking when interrupted by the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow), I desire to call attention to the fact that several articles were cited by that hon. gentleman for which he said the farmers were receiving better prices, and among them he named wool. Now, wool was not protected when the Tariff was first introduced. There was, however, a duty placed on wool last year, but according to the Trade and Navigation Returns no wool of that class was imported, consequently the farmers could not get any benefit for the three cents duty imposed last Session.

Mr. PLUMB. But there was a duty placed on the manufactured articles which raised the price of wool.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). It did not rise in price.

Mr. FLEMING. There are no doubt difficulties in the way of arriving at a conclusion as to the benefits or injury received by the farming class from the Tariff. If it were possible to extract from the causes that have produced a better state of things, the factors mentioned by the hon. member for North Huron, the rain drops and sunshine, we could then find just how much benefit was due to the National Policy. But surely no hon. gentleman would claim that the National Policy made the sun shine more brightly or the rain descend in greater abundance, for they were beyond man's control. Those were in truth the chief causes of better times, not the National Policy. I contend the National Policy has not benefitted the farmer, because it does not enable him to obtain better prices for what he sells, than he had before it was adopted. Suppose a farmer goes to a mill or to a wheat buyer with a load of grain. The buyer does not say to the farmer: "I will pay you so much for the wheat which will be ground into flour for export to England, but I will give you five cents per bushel more for the balance of the load, because I will send it down to Montreal and sell it to the workmen employed at Redpath's refinery." The buyer simply says: "I will give you a price for your load in accordance with the price indicated in the English market." The western farmer obtains no benefit from the additional number of men employed at Montreal. The hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) is a strong advocate of farmers' interests, but he has not left on the House a favorable impression as to the intelligence of the farmers in his constituency. He has mentioned as a proof of their wisdom, smartness and prudence that they would carry a load of wheat 25 miles in order to get an additional cent per bushel. Suppose a load of 50 bushels was carried a distance of 25 miles and return, 50 miles in all, the additional sum received would only be 50 cents; if they would do that it did not speak much for the intelligence of the farmers of North Huron. I ask, however, the aid of the hon. member for that constituency in pressing on the attention of the Government the question of allowing a drawback on corn used in feeding cattle for export. When a duty on corn was first spoken of in this House, the Finance Minister was asked as to whether he would not allow a drawback to farmers who used American corn for feeding cattle for shipment to England. The answer given was that there would be a great deal of trouble about the matter, and that distillers would require a large quantity of corn. It appears that the Government had afterwards acceded to the request of the Starch Company of Edinburgh, to grant a rebate on corn used in the manufacture of starch, they did not say then that they could grant no such rebate because there was a great deal of corn used by the distillers. I wish to call attention to the comparative insignificance of the starch industry as compared with the industry on whose behalf I asked the Government to grant a drawback. I am happy to see that there are several members of the House interested in the important trade of exporting cattle—important especially to the Province of Ontario. Speaking from my own experience and observation, I am certain that if it were not for the practice of stall feeding cattle in late years, the fertility of our soil would have been very much decreased. According to the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1878-79 the exportation of cattle and sheep amounted to $3,084,741, while the exports of starch amounted only to $863—the comparative importance of one industry being about one-quarter of one per cent. of the other. There were 46,569 head of cattle exported, and 308,093 head of sheep. To transport these cattle and sheep would require 6,000 cars and 11 steamships, while the starch would not fill one car, there would be room for 5,000 pounds of freight besides. The feeding of these cattle and sheep at home would employ 4,000 men for four months in the winter season of the year, when it is a matter of great difficulty to find employment for farm hands. A farmer can hire men for the whole year for very little more than he would have to pay them for eight months services in summer. There are, besides, to be considered, the men who are employed on the railways, and on the steamers while crossing the ocean. By the census of 1871, there were five starch factories in Canada, employing seventy-two men, and giving a product of $222,664 worth, or $3,092 to each man, and the $863 worth exported was equal to the product of one man employed for three-and-a-half months. The Minister of Customs and the Government granted the request of the starch manufacturers, and, from whatever cause, the trade in starch has since very largely increased, as last year there was no less than 643,057 lbs. exported. I am not able, of course, to say that that increase is solely due to the drawback on corn, but certainly these are the facts of the case, and I think it is worthy the attention of the Government, whether it would not be well to grant a drawback upon corn used in feeding cattle for export, seeing that it has apparently so beneficial an effect on the starch industry. When the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) was speaking of drawbacks the other day, the Minister of Customs stated that they could only give drawbacks on the raw material. That statement differs from the statement made by the Finance Minister in 1879, when he stated that they would give drawbacks on all goods used in manufactures exported, and I think it is scarcely fair not to allow it on the goods mentioned by the hon. gentleman, for it very often happens that what is the manufactured product for one man, is the raw material for the other. I did not intend to have spoken on the present occasion, or I should have gone rather fully into statistics regarding the North-Eastern States of the Union, which were in much the same position with regard to manufacturing industries as the older parts of the Dominion. The argument used upon the farmers in those States when manufactures were first started, was that these establishments would, bring the field and the factory side by side, so that the farmers would have a home market for their grains. But instead of advancing, we find that the farmers in these States have been falling back in the march of progress, and that I fear will be the experience of Canada, if protection continues to be given to manufactures to the detriment of other industries. Protection is a very nice thing if the farmers get as much as they give, but it is certain that some lines of manufactures are getting more than they are giving the farmers in return. It is easy to see that the property invested in some kinds of manufactures is increasing in value, while, on the other hand, there is no doubt that farms in certain portions of Ontario are decreasing in value. Indeed, one great evil of a protective system is that, by a fictitious and arbitrary means, it compels capital to return a larger interest upon investments in one branch of business than in another. Hon. gentlemen opposite surely do not contend that sitting in a council chamber and making a few strokes with a pen, they can add to the wealth of a country, though they may possibly interfere with its distribution. In former times, Toronto, Hamilton and Brantford did a large business in the importation of sugar, but now the trade has been taken to Montreal, the business was interfered with by the working of the Tariff. I only rose to protest against the statement of the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow), that the National Policy, so called, is in the interest of the farmers.

Mr. GIROUARD. I do not intend to inflict a speech on Protection upon the House. Protection was accepted by the people of this country at the last election, and I believe it has already produced good results. Not only do we hear no more of soup kitchens and bread riots, but the manufactures of this country are in a flourishing condition. In fact, the judicial statistics quoted by the leader of the Opposition a few nights ago, showing the decrease of law business in Montreal, are the best proof of more prosperous times. But my chief object in rising was to make a personal explanation, though not altogether unconnected with the subject under discussion. During the debate of the Pacific Railway contract I stated before this House that the Liberals of the County of Jacques Cartier, which I have the honor of representing in this House, were in favor of this contract. I stated that I held several meetings, more particularly at Point Claire, where, out of 350 electors, I only polled 53 votes, and that the electors pronounced in favor of the Pacific Railway contract. Since that debate closed I have been taken to task by some of the Liberal organs. At first, the Patrie stated that the meetings I held in Jacques Cartier were of such a private nature that they could not be considered as an expression of the opinion of the country upon the subject. Some of the Liberal papers stated, moreover, that the electors of Jacques Cartier were complaining in silence against the conduct of their member in this House. Later on, I saw a correspondence in the Star, signed "Pointe
Mr. FLEMING.

Claire," the writer stating that he never heard anything of this Pointe Claire meeting where the contract had been ratified. Afterwards, the Patrie again came to the charge and challenged me to meet the Liberals of Jacques Cartier at Pointe Claire, and there to ascertain if they were really in favor of the contract. I have received some unsolicited communications from my electors, and have communicated with others, and I may say that these communications did not come from my political friends, but from those who strongly opposed me in former elections, and who were strong supporters of the ex-Minister of Justice. I beg leave to read those letters, for they will show that the statement I made in this House was correct—and I am very careful to make no statements which I do not know to be correct. The first letter is from E. C. Monk, a law partner of the late Minister of Justice. I met him in the city of Montreal, and he informed me that he had been requested by the Liberals of Jacques Cartier to meet me at these meetings. I wrote him a note from Ottawa asking him to state in writing what he said to me in Montreal, and asked him for permission to use his letter. The answer shows that the Liberals of Montreal knew of these meetings, and requested a Liberal of Mr. Monk's talent and eminence to meet me, and he refused to do so:

"128 ST. JAMES STREET,
"MONTREAL, Feb. 17th, 1881.

"MY DEAR MR. GIROUARD,—I have this moment received your note of the 1st inst., and perceive that in our hurried conversation on the street the other day you must have misunderstood me, but only in a slight degree. "The 'prominent Liberal' was a 'St. Annes' and not a Montreal patriot, and my reason (given in writing) for not joining issues with you upon the Pacific contract, was that I understood your visit to St. Annes, and the meeting proposed, to be one at which I considered my presence, and particularly my interference, utterly uncalled for.

"E. MONK."

Here is another letter signed by Mr. Andrew J. Dawes, a member of the well known firm of Dawes & Co., Lachine, who has always opposed me in former elections. This is his statement:

"LACHINE, 6th February, 1881.

"DEAR SIR,—I have read your speech on the Pacific Railway with pleasure. I being a Liberal, and a strong supporter of the late Minister of Justice, you may be astonished if I tell you that I fully concur in your views and the policy of the Government you are supporting. I expected that the Opposition would take a more patriotic course. The large number of amendments proposed by them has convinced me that they intended only to embarrass the Ministerial side of the House. The contract had to be accepted as a compact. In my estimation the Opposition was not only wrong, but rendered itself ridiculous in the eyes of the public, and I have no hesitation in saying that in future you may rely upon my support.

"Yours truly,
"A. J. DAWES."

Here is another letter which will show exactly the policy of this Government.

Mr. SPEAKER. This matter seems not to be connected with the subject before the House.

Mr. GIROUARD. We are moving the House into a Committee of Supply.

Mr. SPEAKER. Very well, you may go on.

Mr. GIROUARD. I supposed that when we were discussing a motion to go into supply it was open to any member to allude to other matters, particularly if they were not altogether unconnected with the main question. The letters I am about to read contain an approval of the policy of the Government, and one of the principal features of that policy is the policy of Protection. One of these letters is from Lachine. I did not ask for testimonials from those parishes where the Conservative party is in a majority, such as St. Laurent and Isle Bizard. I have gone to Lachine where, in 1876, the ex-Minister of Justice had a majority over myself of 180 votes, and to Pointe Claire where at the last election, I had only fifty-three votes out of 350, and Ste. Geneviève, where the Liberal party is also in a majority. This letter is signed by J. B. O. Martin, mayor of the Parish of Lachine and a prominent Liberal:

"LACHINE, le 5 février 1881.

"CHEZ MONSIEUR.—Vous me demandez de vous dire ce qui s'est passé à Lachine, lorsque vous êtes venu expliquer à la porte de l'église, le contrat du gouvernement pour la construction du chemin de fer du Pacifique. En réponse, bien que libéral, je dois à la vérité de dire que vous nous avez expliqué le contrat et les principales clauses qu'il renferme, et après nous avoir déclaré que vous étiez d'avis de l'approuver, vous nous avez invités à faire nos objections, ce que quelques uns d'entre nous avons fait, entr'autres moi-même, comme maire de la paroisse. Vous nous avez donné des explications qui ont été jugées satisfaisantes, et tout le monde, libéral comme conservateur, s'est déclaré content, et vous a remercié et applaudi.

"Vous pouvez publier cette lettre.

"J'ai l'honneur d'être,

"Votre obéissant serviteur,

"J. B. O. MARTIN.

The next letter is from Dr. Pillot, of Ste. Geneviève, also a Liberal:

"STE. GENEVIÈVE, le 7 février, 1881.

"D. Girouard, Ecr., M. P.

MONSIEUR LE DÉPUTÉ.—Je ne puis tarder plus longtemps à vous faire connaître quelle a été ma surprise de voir dans ces derniers jours certains journaux se commettre aussi gravement contre la vérité à votre sujet. Ce sont des avancés gratuits et mensongers au dernier point, que ceux de la Patrie et du Star. Comme un de vos commentants, je crois de mon devoir de protester contre cette conduite à l'égard de mon député et de réclamer de l'exactitude des faits. Le journal la Patrie, a prétendu que lors des fêtes de Noël et du jour de l'An, vous êtes venu par le comté rencontrer vos électeurs, sans avoir prévenu vos adversaires pour éviter la discussion. La chose est d'autant plus fautive, que tout le monde à Ste. Geneviève, savait huit jours avant quand vous seriez ici et vous êtes venu au jour dit. Il me semble que jamais avis ne pourrait être plus clairement donné. Aussi il y avait foule pour vous entendre et vous avez été écouté avec silence et intérêt, je pourrais dire avec des marques non équivoques d'approbation par toutes les personnes présentes, libéraux comme conservateurs, puisque, après avoir longuement et sagement discuté la grande question du contrat du Pacifique, vous avez demandé si quelqu'un n'aurait pas quelques remarques, suggestions ou blâmes à faire, que vous étiez prêt à y faire droit, et pas une voix ne s'est élevée si ce n'est pour approuver. Par ces faits, vous pouvez donc constater que le Star aussi lui a déraillé et a parlé en toute ignorance de cause. Ce que vous avez dit dans votre discours sur le contrat au sujet de votre visite ici, vous étiez vrai en le disant, M. le député, et bien qu'il soit avéré que j'aie toujours accordé mes sympathies au parti libéral, je dois à la vérité de déclarer que vous avez agi ouvertement et loyalement. J'ajouterai que, si le régime protectionniste que votre gouvernement nous a donné, m'a fait réfléchir pour le bien de mes concitoyens, cette grande entreprise du Pacifique que vous venez de décider pour l'honneur de nos engagements et le développement de notre pays, si bien exposée par vous, me donne fortement à croire qu'il y a vraiment du patriotisme dans la politique que vous apportez.

"Il vous est loisible, M. le député, d'user de cette lettre si cela vous convient, et croyez moi,

"Votre, etc., etc.

"ANTOINE B. PILLET, M. D.

"J'oubliais de dire qu'il y a à Ste. Geneviève plusieurs personnes en état de parler en public et en particulier—un jeune libéral bien renseigné et pouvant fort bien faire la discussion,—et ils étaient présents.

"A. B. P."

The last letter I have to read is from the Mayor of Point Claire, a Liberal of forty years standing, and the Mayor of his parish for about twenty-five years. He says:

"POINTE-CLAIRE, 6 février 1881.

"CHEZ MONSIEUR.—Vous m'écrivez qu'un correspondant du Star insinue que vous n'avez pas parlé du Pacifique lorsque vous êtes venu à la Pointe-Claire le jour de l'An, et que cette assemblée doit plutôt être considérée comme un échange de bons souhaits du nouvel an qu'une expression d'opinion au sujet du Pacifique, et vous me demandez comme maire de cette paroisse, présent à cette assemblée, de vous écrire en quelques mots ce qui s'est passé en cette circonstance, avec permission de vous servir de ma lettre comme vous l'entendrez.

"Je ne puis concevoir qu'un résident de la Pointe-Claire, présent ou non, nie le fait que vous soyez venu à la Pointe-Claire, après la messe du jour de l'An à la porte de l'église, expliquer à tout le monde le contrat du Pacifique. Vous nous avez dit combien le gouvernement donnait et vous nous avez aussi fait mention de certaines clauses auxquelles l'opposition faisait objection et que l'on est convenu d'appeler les clauses créant plusieurs monopoles et privilèges en faveur du syndicat. Vous nous avez aussi dit que bien que vous n'aimiez pas certaines conditions du contrat, que cependant vous étiez d'opinion qu'il valait mieux l'accepter que de laisser l'entreprise entre les mains du gouvernement, et que pour cette raison, vous vous proposiez de voter pour le contrat.

"En terminant vous nous avez invités à faire nos objections, si nous en avions nous promettant de les prendre en considération. Non-seulement personne n'a objecté, mais immédiatement vous avez été vivement applaudi, et en vous retirant du perron de l'église, il y a eu tapement des mains, levée de chapeaux, enfin expression non équivoque de sympathie et d'approbation de votre conduite parlementaire.

"Votre obéissant serviteur,

"LÉON DESLAURIERS.

"A. D. GIROUARD, ECR., M. P.
"Ottawa."

I think, after this testimony, I need care very little for the challenge of La Patrie.

Mr. ARKELL. I was always under the impression that the duty of an Opposition was to watch closely the actions of the Government, to oppose all bad legislation that might be brought forward by the Government. But this Opposition appears to oppose everything, whether good or bad. For several years previous to 1878, the people of this country were decidedly in favor of a change in our fiscal policy, which they regarded as absolutely necessary to the welfare of our agricultural and manufacturing industries. The people, by a large majority, on the 17th of September, 1878, returned a Government which promised to bring in the policy we have to-day. During the Session of 1879 six long weeks were occupied by the Opposition in opposing the Tariff brought down by the hon. Finance Minister. I thought they should have been satisfied with the opposition they displayed on that occasion, until the new policy had had a fair chance. But in the Session of 1880, four or five weeks were spent in the same fruitless opposition to the carrying out of this policy; and this Session we have the same experience. Everything that could be dragged into these debates has been utilized by the Opposition to poison the minds of the people against this Government and their policy. I think it must be patent to every man who has looked carefully into this subject, that the National Policy has worked admirably, and that a large majority of the farmers, manufacturers, and all classes of the people, are decidedly in its favor. During this debate the Opposition have tried to prove that the exodus from this country has been due to the National Policy. Previous to 1872, during the time of the depression, the farmers had very little money to invest, but since then they have been making money. I will not say that is all due to the National Policy; but I will say that if the Conservative Government that went out of office in 1873 had remained in power, the exodus from this country, instead of being to Dakota, Nebraska, and elsewhere in the United States, would have been to our own North-West Territory. It is most unreasonable to suppose that farmers will go into a territory 300 or 400 miles away from railway communication. Had we such communication in the North-West, people would have settled there instead of going to the western States. I think that a new era is now opening, and that in two years from this the people of this country and immigrants, instead of seeking homes in the western States, will settle in our North-West. The hon. member for North Norfolk said the other night that the farmers of the United States had not benefited by Protection. I would like that hon. gentleman to go across the line and make that statement on any public platform there. The majority of farmers would tell him he had better go home. The hon. member stated that Protection had ruined the price of goods throughout the country, and that the manufacturers had made millions of dollars on the advanced prices. It is only necessary for us to look to the United States—the most protected country in the world—to see the absurdity of his pretension. In no country can goods be bought cheaper than in the United States, and not only do the manufacturers there manufacture for the home market, but they send their goods to all parts of the world, even to Great Britain. This National Policy has only been working for the last eighteen months. Give it a fair chance; it will require from three to five years to bring it to perfection. We do not hear people say they pay more for their goods than formerly. That cry is merely one got up by politicians for purposes of agitation. Hon. gentlemen opposite think that by keeping up this agitation, they will be enabled to come back to office at the next general elections. I can only say that the people are not prepared to place the National Policy in the care of the tender mercies of hon. gentlemen opposite, who may make up their minds they will have to remain in Opposition another five, and probably twenty years, if the Conservative party will only carry on affairs in a proper way. It has been stated that farm implements have become enhanced in price under the new Tariff. The hon. member for North Middlesex (Mr. Coughlin), who is well acquainted with agricultural matters, tells me that the manufacturers of agricultural implements are selling more goods and cheaper than previous to 1878. The hon. member for Annapolis spoke the other day of economy and of reducing our indemnity. I believe that hon. members would be in favor of reducing their indemnity, if we could shorten the Session. I believe the business of the country could be done as well in two as in four months. It is not pleasant for hon. gentlemen on the back benches to have to listen to long speeches, delivered particularly on the other side of the House, and some even on this side. I am told, that in the British House of Commons the speeches seldom exceed thirty minutes in length. If that example were followed here we could get through our business in half the time, and it would be done as well as at present. The country has been flooded with political literature. About a cart load of that material is on hand, about to be sent out now; and I was informed that about half a million of the speeches of the hon. leader of the Opposition were sent out into every county of the Dominion. I can assure hon. gentlemen that one-half of these speeches will never be read. People in the country do not lose their time reading long speeches; they will read a speech of ten or fifteen minutes duration, but not one that takes a day and night to wade through. If their speeches were shorter, hon. gentlemen would stand a better chance of having them read. If the Opposition acted in the true interests of the country, they would allow this National Policy to have two years' trial; and if it does not work well they will then have a good case to go to the country with. The Conservatives are prepared to take the responsibility of that policy; they are satisfied they have a good cure, and are prepared to defend the National Policy, and the great land monopoly in the North-West. If the Syndicate carry out their agreement, by two years hence hundreds of thousands of people will be settled in our North-West, and the people will, with one accord, unite in supporting the policy of this Administration.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I desire to explain, for the information of the Committee, that the copy of the resolutions I now submit have been altered somewhat from those laid on the Table a few days ago. The following is the amended resolution:—

The following to be added to Schedule D of Prohibited Articles:—

Foreign reprints of British Copyright Works, Copyrighted in Canada and of Canadian Copyrighted Works.

The amendment of the item respecting wrought iron tubing, by the insertion of the words "two inches in diameter" after the words "per cent.," was simply to make the matter clear. Item 12, respecting lead, old and scrap, as amended, reads: "lead, old and scrap and pig, 40 cents per cwt.; bars, blocks and sheets, 60 cents per 100 lbs." It was proposed to omit the item concerning silk velvets and velvet. The reason for doing so was, that they were not previously aware that silks and velvets were being manufactured in Canada pretty extensively; and it was desired to afford this industry encouragement. From item 34 were struck out the words "curtains and tassels." Item 39, imposing 25 per cent. on satins of all kinds was struck out, because velvets and satins are being manufactured in Ontario. No. 45—silk velvets, 25 per cent. ad valorem, was also struck out.

On item 44, wincies,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY said the amended item will read as follows: "Wincies when the material is not over one-fourth wool, of all widths, 20 per cent. ad valorem; checked, striped or fancy, not over 25 inches wide, 20 per cent. ad valorem; checked, striped or fancy dress wincies, over 25 inches wide and not over 30 inches, when the material is not over one-fourth wool, two cents per square yard and 15 per cent. ad valorem. Then all checks, striped and fancy wincies, over 30 inches wide, shall be subjected to duty as woollen goods when the material is partly wool." Then we propose adding to No. 45, "cocoa-nut matting, 25 per cent. ad valorem." These are the changes proposed in the resolutions as printed and laid on the Table.

Mr. ANGLIN. Will the hon. Finance Minister be good enough to explain why he varies the duty on those textile fabrics according to the width? I think it will prove a source of great trouble and annoyance to importers to have on one width one duty and on another a different duty.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is the reason: the narrow width is for dress goods for ladies, and is not manufactured in the Dominion, but imported; and therefore no difficulty will arise in adopting this principle for that class of goods. When you come to wider articles, containing a certain portion of wool, they are sometimes called wincies, and sometimes tweeds, and various other names; and it is to simplify matters by taking everything under that width that the change is proposed.

On item 1, agricultural implements,

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT said it would be convenient if the hon. gentleman would give a brief explanation of the causes that induced him to propose those alterations:

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It has been a rule of the department under the present law, to classify these articles with agricultural implements. But still, different opinions have arisen on the subject with different collectors of customs, and it is in order to prevent any future difficulty that we propose to state distinctly in the Act, that mower and reaper knives are agricultural implements, and subject to the same rule.

On item 2, books, &c.,

Mr. BOWELL said: This is to cover a class of printing not now covered by the Act. Certain sheets, for instance almanacs, come into the country in sheets printed in many cases on a first-class quality of calendared paper, which when plain is 22½ per cent., but, if printed upon, in the shape of an almanac, not containing any advertisements or notices of any business, it can only be ruled as among the 20 per cents. The object is to cover that class of printed matter which comes into the country largely, particularly in the beginning of the year.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. You are practically raising the duty from 20 to 30 per cent.

Mr. BOWELL. No; the intention was, as I have said, to cover all that kind of work which has come in very largely the last year or two. Speaking particularly of almanacs, I have never seen one coming into the country before without a certain number of advertisements. If they had advertisements they would be treated under the law as advertising sheets and charged either at 30 per cent., or one cent each;

but when we came to discuss the matter, we found they did not come under any particular class, hence in order to have uniformity we put them at 30 per cent.

On item 3, cocoa-nuts,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY said: Some of my hon. friends have smiled at the idea of reducing the duty on cocoa-nuts, and I think the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) said it would not be a very important matter, so far as encouraging a direct trade was concerned. I can assure him, however, that it was considered of sufficient importance to induce a member of the Government of Jamaica to visit Ottawa for the purpose of endeavoring to have the duty reduced as a means of cultivating direct trade. There is a steamer there owned by the Cunards, and engaged in this trade, though it receives no subsidy, and they were anxious to encourage the direct trade as far as possible.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Was there any other business for it than that?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Fortunately under this Tariff we have a large direct importation of sugar from the West Indies, and this reduction is made to afford further encouragement for a direct trade.

Mr. ANGLIN. We have heard of several strokes of financial genius, but surely this reduction of the duty on cocoa-nuts is the greatest of them all. It also seems that other Governments than our own go on extraordinary missions to other countries. Twice a Commissioner came all the way from Jamaica to have the duty reduced on cocoa-nuts. I would suggest an explanation of the principle upon which the Government charge a higher rate of duty upon sugar imported by way of the United States than upon that which is imported directly. Last year the quantity of Canadian shipping employed in the foreign trade of Canada was small indeed compared with the quantity of British and foreign shipping engaged in the same trade. If we are to have a protective Tariff in Canada, why not let all our industries have the benefit of it? Why not admit all classes of goods brought into the country in Canadian bottoms at lower rates than those in foreign bottoms, and so encourage this waning industry? The Minister of Finance tries to account for the falling off in our shipping by saying that, in 1878, there was an extraordinary pressure on the shipowners of the Lower Provinces, which compelled them to sell their vessels owing to the trade being small and unprofitable, and that, therefore, liens had been exacted upon them by parties in Great Britain to cover advances which had been made to the owners of these vessels. I think that will be regarded in the Maritime Provinces as a very extraordinary reason for the decline in the shipping trade. I think there are few vessels professedly owned in the Lower Provinces on which the capitalists of Great Britain have any mortgage whatever. Therefore, I believe it was simply impossible that a sale could have been forced by any such process as that. But, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Burpee), the sale in that year was not merely large, but the sales in preceding years were much larger than in that year, and the extraordinary feature of the case is that the sales in these later years had been so very small. Another fact is that the amount of tonnage owned by shipowners, instead of being larger a few years ago, is smaller and is becoming smaller. Now, why not carry out this protective policy in the interest of shipowners? Why confine it to cocoa-nuts? Is the shipping interest of this country, one of the greatest interests we have, to be satisfied by the fact that we have cocoa-nuts brought into Canadian ports at one half the rate of duty charged upon those brought into other ports by other means? I think a cocoa-nut policy is simply an exemplification of the inconsistency of the Government, and their inability to comprehend the true nature of the policy which they are attempting to carry out in this country.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do not think my hon. friend's statement should be allowed to go unchallenged, because it comes from one who passes as the leader of the representatives from New Brunswick, and in whom is centred all the abilities which the other members lack. I am afraid my hon. friend has not thoroughly considered this subject before giving his views to this House. He has talked about cocoa-nuts. I took down the expression, and I find he has mentioned cocoa-nuts eleven times. If his desire was to impress us of the importance of this cocoa-nut question, and to get his views into the Hansard, I think he has succeeded. I am pleased to see anything coming that increases our trade. If we tax things on this side of the House fault is found with us; if we take the duty off fault is found. What can be done that will satisfy the hon. member? A friend near me says he will be satisfied if I should explain to him how the milk gets into the cocoa-nut, but as that has never been explained I shall not attempt to do it. He says the shipping interest has suffered from the decline of the West India trade. That trade has nothing to do with the shipping interest. The West India trade has increased. He refers to a small class of vessels that had been used as coasters for carrying shooks to the West Indies. That trade grew up suddenly and ceased suddenly. The vessels became worn out and not adapted to the West India trade. They had fulfilled the mission for which they were constructed. That has nothing to do with the West India trade. If a vessel goes to South America with a general cargo of merchandize from Great Britain to Rio Janeiro or Peru, when she comes back if, in seeking for freight, she runs up the West India Islands, such as Barbadoes, St. Vincent, St. Kitts, or Nevis, does my hon. friend mean to say that any legislation of ours will prevent her from taking such freights as are offered there to the competitors of the world? After these vessels have discharged their cargoes they offer themselves in the market to bring back a return cargo to any part of the world. Suppose the vessels come from France or Spain; the captain takes up the prices current, and says: "If I take a cargo of molasses for instance to St. John or Halifax, and then can take a cargo from that port to France, that brings me back to the point from which I started." It is a calculation of freight rates. Is there any scheme of the Minister of Finance that can control the rates of freight in those foreign markets? My hon. friend must know that it is not so. You never will be able to control the price of freights. You cannot have all the stuff that is brought into this country carried by our own ships. My hon. friend knows that, but he is endeavoring, with others, to make trouble among our ship building interest. He knows we have a large shipping interest in New Brunswick. Only the other night I got a complaint from New Brunswick "another gross injustice, 20 per cent. put on cordage." This news had been sent down to the people, and before they could be undeceived they believed that the Finance Minister had increased the duty on marlin to 20 per cent., when it was only ten per cent. before. That is entirely incorrect. It is still ten per cent. I think my hon. friend would be doing more for the interest of New Brunswick if he would not decry the action of gentlemen on this side, if he would allow them to bring in measures that are good. I tell him sincerely that if he would give credit where credit is due, he would strengthen himself very much in the Province of which he claims to be such a prominent representative. As regards the sale of tonnage, we all know that there were many unhappy circumstances which tended to make a large sale of tonnage in the Lower Provinces. It was not due to the Tariff, but to other unfortunate circumstances, among them the fire in St. John which crippled some firms, who had to release their tonnage.

It had to be sold, and the ship-building industry did not suffer from the Tariff at all. I am prepared to say, and it has been substantiated, that the tax upon shipping materials imposed by the Tariff is fully compensated for by the drawback that is given them.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. gentleman has chosen to reply to a speech which he imagined I would make, or intended to make, not, however, to remarks that I did make. I said nothing whatever in regard to coasting vessels employed in the West India trade having been thrown out of employment; nothing about the trade between the West Indies and the Lower Provinces having been reduced. I said nothing whatever about the fact that our trade in shooks has become a small trade, if it exists at all. What I did say was—that whereas an attempt was made to protect other industries, to enable persons whose capital was invested in Halifax to make larger profits than they would otherwise be able to make—nothing was done in that respect for the very important shipping industry.

Mr. DOMVILLE. How does the hon. gentleman propose to protect the shipping industry?

Mr. ANGLIN. There is nothing new at all in the proposal. We had navigation laws for a long time in existence. They were contemporaneous with the protective system in Great Britain, and were only abolished when the people of Great Britain began to perceive the folly and absurdity of that system. They are an essential portion of the protective system, and should be a portion of that system—if it is a good one—in a country such as this, where there is so large an ocean frontier, where so many people are engaged in maritime pursuits, and where we have already attained the third or fourth position among the maritime nations of the world. If Protection is of any use it should be carried out as a whole and applied to the maritime industry; otherwise, it is lame and incomplete. It is possible, by a system of laws, such as the old navigation laws, to enable our own vessels to do all our own trade, and to earn very much larger profits than they are now able to earn.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am certainly becoming very much encouraged with the success of this policy. It must have been observed, by gentlemen on this side of the House especially, that there is a modified sentiment on the other side of the House this Session, on this question of Protection. My hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) began to hedge the other day, when he intimated that when 1883 arrived, it was just possible that there might be a sufficient number of vested rights established to warrant the new Government not to interfere with them; and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) has not spoken as strongly on the Tariff as he did last year. He has not spoken on the subject at all, until now, and his speech is a marked improvement on his speech of a year ago. Now he is the champion of Protection; his only complaint is, that we are not going far enough, and applying the policy to the whole shipping interest. He must believe the policy to be beneficial, otherwise he would not urge its extension on the House. It is said in business that small favors are thankfully received; but my hon. friend is not satisfied with the small favor, though he seems to be coming around to our side. While we have granted a small favor to the shipping interest of the Maritime Provinces, it is certain that as the sugar trade extends, the vessels owned by the people of those Provinces will have increased freights both to and from the West Indies. It may be that the shippers of lumber or fish do not derive all the advantages that they might, and, therefore, we are going step by step in the development of this policy, and I rejoice that, instead of my hon. friend rising, as he did last Session, and attacking the policy from beginning to end, he has now come so far over to our views as to complain that we have not extended it as far as we ought, or as far as we hope to do. I did not state the whole case. For instance, the manufacture of confectionery, to which my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson) referred the other night, is an important industry which has been pressing itself upon the attention of the Government. Cocoa-nuts enter largely into the manufacture of confectionery, and, therefore, in reducing the duty upon them, we are not only encouraging the trade with the West Indies, but assisting that particular industry. Therefore, I am gratified beyond measure that my hon. friend, instead of sitting there and saying nothing, has pronounced in favor of this policy by complaining that we are not going far enough. If he will allow us a little time we shall go on perfecting it, and, perhaps, we shall eventually reach the point which he desires us to reach.

Mr. BLAKE. After what has been said, I hope it will be clearly understood that such arrangements will be made for freights from Halifax to the West, that we may get our lollipops cheaper in Ontario, and that the freight from Halifax will not deprive us of the advantage of this half a cent reduction of duty.

Mr. ANGLIN. If I did not speak on this question, it was because I left my seat for a minute or two, and the motion was in the meantime carried. I have not altered my views as to the essential falseness of the policy of Protection, and the consequences it must entail on the country. But I have pointed out that while the Finance Minister and his colleagues have not hesitated to impose taxes on the clothing and fuel of the poor classes of this country, they deal very tenderly indeed with the shipping industry of the country, and make very faint attempts to do anything to give employment to our own vessels. The hon. gentleman has, it is true, provided that vessels coming direct from the West Indies to our own ports shall be admitted at a somewhat reduced rate of duty, but he has not gone further, and provided that sugar should be brought in British bottoms—and I believe a great deal of the sugar brought in has been brought in foreign bottoms. In 1878, although there was a comparatively large sale of tonnage, owing to the depression of the shipowners, we built in Canada 106,976 tons of vessels of various classes, a small amount as compared with previous years, but a large amount as compared with 1880, when the tonnage built was 68,765 tons, or 38,221 less than the tonnage of 1878. If we look at the importation we will find that in the year 1878, 770 British vessels, representing 798,476 tons, and foreign vessels, representing 587,000 tons came into our ports. These vessels did the largest share of our foreign trade. It is quite within the power of this Legislature to alter that matter very materially by giving to Canadian vessels a very large proportion of our trade. If their policy is to be fully and impartially carried out, it ought not to be confined merely to give certain manufacturers a monopoly of the Canadian trade, but should be extended so as to benefit our shipowners as well. That would be rendering their policy in a certain sense more just, or rather less unjust, because it is impossible to render any policy of Protection just and fair. If it is to be advantageous to one class, it must be unfair to the great majority of the people.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Does the hon. gentleman propose that none of the sugar that comes into the country shall come in foreign bottoms? Does he advocate that all our imports must come in Canadian bottoms?

Mr. ANGLIN. I want the system of Protection, if carried out, so carried out that all goods imported into this country in Canadian bottoms should be admitted at a lower rate than those imported in British or foreign vessels. Some such provision should also be made in regard to the exportation of our lumber and agricultural products and other goods, so as to encourage the exportation in Canadian vessels. I do not say that ought to be done, but it should be done if the protective system is to be fully and fairly carried out. If other industries are to be protected, it is only just our shipping interest should receive the benefit of our system.

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend started with advocating a certain line of protection with regard to shipping. I was surprised to hear him argue that nothing was to be imported except in Canadian bottoms. When I asked him if that was what the country should understand, he replied no, he did not advocate that at all, but it might as well be advocated. What are we to understand the hon. member has been advocating? He would have led the people of New Brunswick to believe he was advocating that imports should only come in in our vessels, and then he says he does not advocate that at all.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The difficulty does not lie in the argument of the hon. member for Gloucester, but in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite, whom it is difficult to make comprehend the simplest argument. I admit the seriousness of the difficulty. It is extremely difficult to make those hon. gentlemen understand the logical result of their own policy and theories. I have been trying to do so for a long time and have not succeeded. It is in the nature of the case. No protective system has yet been invented which could do justice to all. The hon. member for Gloucester has given an elaborate illustration of the extreme difficulty—I may add the impossibility—of doing justice to that industry, on the prosperity of which the inhabitants of the Maritime Provinces so largely depend.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House again in Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to correct a misapprehension that exists in the mind of the hon. the Finance Minister. That hon. gentleman, in referring to some remarks made by me yesterday, stated that evidently the Opposition were taking new ground. As an evidence of this, he said I showed a disposition to hedge upon the Protection policy, and proceeded to say that I had, in fact, stated that if the Liberal party came into power vested interests would receive due consideration, and that I doubted whether the duties would be reduced. Now, that conveys to the House and to the country an incorrect impression as to what I did say. The position I took was this: I stated that the Tariff that was supplanted by the one now in force did afford incidental protection to the manufacturing industries of this country, and was not a purely revenue Tariff. I stated that, in consequence of the heavy obligations that were being incurred by the Government, it would be impossible to reduce, to a very great extent, the rate of taxation; that we could not, under the circumstances, resort to Free-trade nor to a purely revenue Tariff, or one imposing duties only upon articles that are not, and cannot be, produced in the country. I stated that, if the Liberal party came into power, it would undoubtedly give fair consideration to all existing interests; but I stated most distinctly that, in all probability, and in the nature of things, the Liberal party would refuse to consider one interest at the expense of others, and would refuse to bestow undue protection upon an interest at the expense of other interests, or at the expense of the great mass of the people. I stated that, in all probability, we would consider ourselves fortunate if the maximum under the new Tariff was not as high as the previous Tariff of seventeen and a-half per cent. I gave it as my individual opinion, which binds nobody but myself, and implicates nobody but myself, that in all probability if the Liberal party came into power again, it might be found necessary to place the duties at twenty per cent. instead of seventeen and a-half. The Tariff, nevertheless, would be a revenue Tariff, affording incidental protection, as did the last Tariff. It would be a Tariff conceived in the interest of all classes, and the statement I made was that if the Liberal party came into power they would take into consideration the interests of all classes that had grown up, but that they could not in any case benefit one interest at the expense of others, and adopt unfair measures for the promotion of one interest at the expense of others. That is the position I took; and as it seems to have been misunderstood by my hon. friend the Finance Minister, I deem it proper to make this explanation.

On item 3, cocoa-nuts,

Mr. PATERSON (South Brant). The duty that is being placed upon this item, as explained by the Finance Minister, is with a view to benefit the direct trade and at the same time to benefit manufacturing industry. I wish to point out that while the Minister's design may be good, I doubt if the manufacturers will benefit by it. As far as the direct importation of sugar is concerned, an attempt was made by the Finance Minister to encourage it by granting a remission of duty on the casks coming by way of Halifax and Montreal, while the duty was levied on them coming from American ports. No doubt some sugar has come indirect, but I have the testimony of wholesale men that it is very unsatisfactory to the trade. A large wholesale dealer in my own city had ordered his sugar to come in that way in order to save the duty which the Tariff was designed to save for him; but he had not been able to bring in his sugar that way because nothing but sailing vessels coming to our ports—and they sail at very unfrequent intervals—could bring the sugar. On account of delay he lost the whole season's supply, and he consequently countermanded his order and had it brought by steamship to an American port. He consequently had to pay the extra amount of duty on the casks, with extra difference in insurance between a steamship and a sailing vessel, while the delay in its arrival made it almost of no use to him. If that be true with reference to an important article of merchandize of which large shipments are made through our own ports, I would ask the Finance Minister if he may expect any very direct trade in an article as small in its consumption as the article of cocoa-nuts? I would say to him that as it is an article of manufacture, and a raw material at that, he would do no injury to his revenue and would do a little more benefit to the manufacturer, if, instead of making this discrimination of 50 per cent. in the duty, he would strike it out of the dutiable list altogether and place it in the free list.

Mr. DOULL. It is not often I agree with the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, but on the present occasion I agree thoroughly with the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) in his views with respect to the shipping industry. I think it is in no way protected. When I talk of the shipping industry I mean the ship-owning industry. The shipbuilding industry is certainly protected. The present duty places the shipbuilding industry on a more favorable footing than it was under the former Tariff. Our shipping industry suffers, not from the want of Protection by the Dominion Government, but in consequence of the restrictive laws of Great Britain, which place our ships at a disadvantage as compared with foreign ships. These restrictive laws do not apply to British ships as they do to colonial ships, because the ships of Great Britain consist chiefly of iron, while ours are chiefly wooden ships. As an illustration of the operation of these laws, I may state that they give to one-fourth of the crew of a vessel the privilege of lodging a complaint that the vessel is not seaworthy, and of having an inspection; and if that portion of the crew can point out a small decayed portion of the vessel, though it may not affect her seaworthiness, and it lead to her being opened, and the owner may be put to thousands of dollars of expense. The consequence is, that the owners of wooden vessels are forced to sell their vessels to foreigners before they are old, and frequently at one-third of their value, as the foreigners are not subject to these restrictive laws. This is the reason that foreign vessels are doing so large a portion of the carrying trade of this Dominion. The treaty arrangements of Great Britain with foreign countries, not only give foreigners the privilege of entering into the carrying trade between the Dominion and European ports, but into our coasting trade as well. They have thus an undue advantage over our own ships, and they are likely, ultimately, to drive them out of their own legitimate trade. I would, therefore, impress on the Government the importance of giving the necessary protection to the shipping industry, an industry on which the Lower Provinces depend, probably more than on any other, and one which is calculated to greatly advance the general interests of the Dominion. I would, therefore, urge the Government to take this matter into their serious consideration, and see if they can discover some means of relieving us from the unfair competition we have to contend against.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. With reference to the suggestion that we should strike this item out, I may say that it will most likely benefit the line running between Halifax and the West Indies. As we give no subsidy to that line, it is considered desirable in this way to encourage it as well any as other line that may engage in the direct trade, and call at any port in the Dominion, whether Halifax, St. John or Montreal. But there is no reason why we should take the duty off altogether.

On item 4, cordage,

In reply to Mr. WELDON,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY said the object of this item is simply to define that marline, which has come in free under the designation of lines and twines, shall pay 10 per cent. when used for rigging, and 20 per cent. when used for other purposes.

Mr. WELDON. I understand, then, that if it is used in the fisheries it will have to pay the duty. It is but little used in ships, but principally in making up lobster cans and other purposes of the fisheries.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is largely used in the rigging of vessels. A certain portion may be used in lobster cans. There has been a difficulty in the administration of the law, and it is for the purpose of settling that difficulty we bring in the amendment.

Mr. ANGLIN. The difficulty in the administration of the law can be settled quite as well by making it free. The hon. Minister does not now pretend to say he can do anything to protect the interests of those engaged in the factory business. The cordage is, I believe, used very largely in the preparation of lobster pots, which are now made in enormous numbers all over the gulf. Like the cocoa-nut, this is perhaps a very small matter, but though small, it may prove vexatious to a struggling industry—one in which the profits some years are fair, and other years small. As one representing a large number of fishermen, I claim that this cordage should be exempt from all duty or be charged at the lowest rate.

Mr. CURRIER. This article is, I presume, used to a larger extent by lumbermen than by the shipping or the lobster trade. I do not see why the lumber business is not as deserving of protection as any other, and I hope the hon. Finance Minister will do the lumbermen justice as well as others.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It has, as a general rule, been paying a duty in the inland ports of 20 per cent. for the purposes named. It is only because in some localities it has been entered as lines and twines for the fisheries, though a large portion went into use for ship purposes, that we are obliged to bring in this amendment. This amendment does not change the law in any respect.

Mr. WELDON. Let it all come in at ten per cent. or under the same category as the other lines and twines imported for the fishermen, and give the fishermen the benefit.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is not used generally for the fisheries. When used for the fisheries it is used simply for the lobster pots, and though entered for lobster pots it is used for many other purposes for which it ought to pay duty.

Mr. BUNSTER. The hon. Finance Minister is mistaken when he says it is only used for lobster pots. In British Columbia it is very largely used in the salmon fisheries. We are laboring under this disadvantage in British Columbia, that the Americans do not acknowledge us in the treaty with Canada, as we were not in the Confederacy at the time it was made. Twines used in our fisheries should be free of duty. Last season we exported some 5,000 tons of fish. The probability is next season we will export some 10,000 tons or 50,000 tons; hence the desirability of the Government, in seeing that our fishermen are protected, and not impose a duty on nets used in catching fish, inasmuch as the Americans make us pay a duty on the tin that we use in canning our fish. The proposition is reasonable. I think I have established a case in the interest of our Province. This duty is injurious to the river interests of British Columbia.

Mr. OGDEN. The member for Vancouver is entirely mistaken, and does not understand the question. He says they use manilla marline in British Columbia to catch fish. I do not think there is another man in the House, who knows anything about fishing, who would substantiate that statement. We are not talking about twines, but about manilla marline which, in the fisheries is only used for making lobster pots, and that article is produced in this country abundantly, in Montreal, Quebec and elsewhere. In Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, the finest marline in the world is made. The hon. gentleman talks about something the fishermen in British Columbia do not use at all. I am surprised he made such a serious mistake. I suggest that he have his remarks left out of the Hansard, that the fishermen in British Columbia may not see that he is entirely ignorant of the manner in which their fishing business is carried on.

Mr. BUNSTER. I did not address my remarks to the hon. member for Guysborough, but to the Minister of Finance. I perfectly understand what I was talking about, and also know the wants of our fishermen as well as that hon. gentleman. I have been consistent in this House, and never gave a false or deceptive vote like the hon. member for Guysborough. Deny it if you can. I did not come here to receive his instructions. I speak here honestly and sincerely in the interest of our fishermen, appealing to the Government which I have supported through thick and thin, and when I consider there is an error, it is my duty to draw attention to it. I never voted in this House for the Temperance Law.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member ought to be called to account for the use of that language.

The CHAIRMAN. I call the member for Vancouver to order. You must address yourself to manilla cordage.

Mr. BUNSTER. Well, I say this duty of 20 per cent. is an infliction on our fishermen of which they should be relieved, and I hope the Minister of Finance will consider the point; I hope he will make an exception, at any rate, so far as British Columbia is concerned, if he does not intend to remove the duty from the whole Dominion.

Mr. CURRIER. I hope the Finance Minister, before passing this item, will consider whether it would not be fair and just to have but one scale of duties on this article, which, if it be what I think, is very largely used by the lumbermen. I think that as no protection is given them they should receive some protection in regard to this article. I hope the Finance Minister will consider the matter, to see if he cannot make the duty ten per cent. all round.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not aware this article is used extensively by lumbermen. The object of this proposition is to make clear the intention of the Government. We found in some cases it was admitted free under another head, and it is for the purpose of declaring distinctly what portion shall pay ten and what twenty per cent. that we make this proposition. It was not intended by the Act to admit it free.

Mr. BUNSTER. I have not heard from the Finance Minister what he intends to do so far as British Columbia is concerned.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We will take the matter into our serious consideration before the third reading.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Manilla marline ought to be admitted free when imported specially for the use of the fishermen.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Lines and twine are, but marline was not free, though in certain places it has been entered free as lines and twines.

Mr. BOWELL. The Finance Minister has explained that in certain ports of the Dominion, Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto, this manilla cordage paid 20 per cent., while in some of the Lower Province ports it has been admitted at 10 per cent. under the clause of the Tariff which admits certain materials at that figure; and that in other places it has been admitted as lines and twines for the fishermen free. The intention of this amendment is simply to make the duty uniform throughout the Dominion. I do not think that the cordage here referred to is the manilla cordage or twine used for laths. This is a tight cordage, the same as other cordage, only made out of manilla.

Mr. FLYNN. I believe this class of line should be admitted free of duty, as it is largely used by the fishermen. If this resolution is adopted they will have to pay a duty on this kind of line, a large quantity of which is used for nets and other purposes. This question is an important one to the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. WELDON. I hold that the duty should be taken off cordage used on ships. The best cordage is made abroad, and there is no more important part of a vessel than its rigging. If all cordage for ships cannot be admitted free, let all manilla ropes be charged at the rate of 10 per cent.

Mr. DOMVILLE. We have a factory in St. John, where as good cordage is made as in England. The hon. gentleman has cast a slur on our factory; and, indeed, hon. members opposite are constantly casting a slur on our industries. His statement is an insult to the intelligence of the manufacturers of his own Province, and the people of St. John will not take his view. There are also cordage factories at Halifax, Montreal, Kingston and elsewhere, which are perfectly capable of manufacturing all we require. The shipowners are very well off. They are well protected now, get a good drawback, and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) has done an injustice to the manufacturers of the Lower Provinces.

Mr. ANGLIN. After some conversation with gentlemen who are better acquainted with the working of the fisheries than myself, I find this is a matter of more importance to the fisheries than would be at first supposed. A very considerable quantity of this particular kind of cordage is used by them in the prosecution of the fisheries, for nets, buoys and other purposes. Without questioning the quality of the cordage made in the Dominion, or whether that made at Dartmouth is the best in the world, we know that wherever a duty of this kind is imposed the persons producing it charge not only the cost of production, but also as much as will bring the cost of the article very nearly up to the cost of the imported article, and therefore the additional percentage became a burden on those who used the article. If this clause be adopted 20 per cent. will be imposed on this class of lines, and of this the fishermen will have to pay 19 per cent. It may be said that the amount will be small and that they will not sensibly feel it, that they will get accustomed to high prices and will not know where they are hurt; but hurt they will be to that extent. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Currier) appears to be satisfied with the explanation that this kind of cordage is not used for tying up laths and for mill purposes. If that is so the hon. gentleman is still compelled to take one horn of the dilemma. My particular interest is with respect to the fishermen, for the county I represent sends out a larger number of boats than any other county in New Brunswick, and almost as any county in the Maritime Provinces. They are hard working, industrious people, who are subjected to a great many hardships, and whose incomes derived from fishing are too small. They cannot afford to have further burthens placed upon them. They are already taxed heavily for their clothing and necessaries of life, and it is unreasonable to propose that the tax on the cordage used by them should be increased to 20 per cent.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Is the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) aware as to what the imports on that line of goods were into New Brunswick and Nova Scotia? When the hon. gentleman talks about the present proposal inflicting a great hardship on the fishermen, that it is going to ruin the fishing trade, and when he appeals to hon. Ministers to give justice—has he any idea as to the quantity of imports?

Mr. ANGLIN. I do not know that the hon. member has any right to question me in so impertinent a manner, or to take me to task. It is about time that we, the representatives of New Brunswick, began to resent the treatment of the hon. member. We have hitherto not cared to show any resentment, but the hon. gentleman may find that he goes a little too far occasionally. I do not know, nor do I think he knows, where I can find the information in the Trade and Navigation Returns. I have been assured by those acquainted with the business, that a considerable quantity of this article is used, and if a duty of twenty per cent. be imposed, it will be a considerable loss to our fishermen.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The hon. gentleman has no right to threaten me as to how I should be chastised by the other members from New Brunswick. I wish to tell him that I am not to be boycotted, and that I am perfectly willing and able to take care of myself inside of this House or out of it. If the hon. gentleman wants to find the information he asks I may tell him that the total imports of cordage for that purpose into New Brunswick was $663.20.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. For what purpose?

Mr. DOMVILLE. For all purposes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Twines were admitted free.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am now speaking of cordage which my hon. friend thinks it is unjust to tax. The total value of the imports into Nova Scotia was $2,716, and in New Brunswick, $3,316.

Mr. MACDONALD (Queen's). The hon. member for Gloucester wants to know why the article of cordage he referred to should not be allowed to come in free, as lines and twines do at the present time. The reason is that, in this country, we manufacture a very good article of manilla cordage, while we do not manufacture lines or twines. So that it is proper to give it some protection. The hon. gentleman also said that if 20 per cent. were imposed upon cordage, the fishermen would pay 19 per cent. of it. This might be the case if the whole manufacture was in the hands of one firm, but when there is a proper competition the matter will rectify itself. We can manufacture cordage as cheaply and as well as any other country. The hon. gentleman has also the fishermen under his charge as regards other matters, and he says their clothing is taxed to an enormous extent. It is true of clothing, as of other articles we are manufacturing, that year by year we are getting a better article at a lower price than we used to import, and I, for one, cannot see that our fishermen are paying an extra price for these articles.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) who gets up to instruct us all about the Trade and Navigation Returns, knew of what he was talking, he would have known that lines and twines for the use of fishermen were imported free, and are not included in the column to which he referred. He, or nobody else, can tell us the quantity of manilla cordage.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I know perfectly well what I am talking about, but I regret that the hon. gentleman mixes manilla cordage with lines and twines. The proper heading in which to find it shows that some two thousand and some odd dollars worth was imported into Nova Scotia, and three thousand dollars worth in New Brunswick, giving some $500 or $600 each.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The Finance Minister has just told us that it came in free.

Mr. BOWELL. At some ports.

Mr. ANGLIN. How many?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot now tell you.

Mr. ANGLIN. That, at all events, was the common sense view which the collectors took of the matter, and I think it is a great mistake on the part of the Government to make a change. The argument which has been used by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Macdonald) is the argument of a thorough-going Protectionist. He says that the fishermen now get their dry goods, clothing, &c., as cheaply as before; but we find from the Trade and Navigation Returns that, last year, there were imported of cassimeres, doeskins, tweeds, and articles of that kind, which constitute the great bulk of the clothing of the fishermen, $2,177,209 worth, upon which was paid a duty of no less than 31 per cent.; and the hon. gentleman will have great difficulty in persuading the consumers that the manufacturers sold these goods at the cost of production, whatever he or other extreme Protectionists may believe. The very fact that these goods are imported to such an extent shows that the manufacturers are charging every cent they possibly can upon the goods they produce.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman assumes that this article is used by the fishermen alone, but that is not the case. That article is largely used in the rigging of vessels, and persons have taken advantage of that fact to have it imported free when it was not intended for the purposes of the fisheries. Since the lobster fisheries have been developed the article has been used, to a certain extent, in that industry. This article has been found in some cases to have been imported for the fisheries, and it is also made in the country, and is sold cheaply at import prices. When we found that this industry was being deprived of what legitimately belonged to it, by being entered for a purpose for which it was not entitled to be free, then we considered it desirable that it should be so defined that it should pay the duty which was originally intended, that is 10 per cent., when used for ship purposes.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. Minister stated at the outset that it was only used for this purpose in a very small quantity. Then, why not put the duty at ten per cent.? The same principle is put forward in regard to lines and twines, in order to encourage the fishermen and their industry. This lobster business has developed to a large extent in the Maritime Provinces, and why should it not have the same advantage as the fishery industry? Something like $10,675 is paid for cordage for ship purposes throughout the Dominion, of which Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island pay between $8,000 and $9,000. That tax is not put upon the shipowners, but upon men who run little coasting schooners and fishing boats, and who are generally poor men.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They get it at 10 per cent.

Mr. OGDEN. I understood the hon. member for Gloucester to say that manilla marline was largely used by the fishermen for setting nets. Such is not the case, manilla marline is a small cord about three-eighths of an inch in circumference, it is generally used for knitting what is known as lobster heads to put into traps. It is not used at all for any other kind of fishing. Although we have had the privilege of getting it under the provision given to the fishermen under the heads of lines and twines, and have been allowed to admit it free of duty, yet I do not know of one pound of manilla marline having been imported from the United States within the last three or four years. The supply is ample in this country. The hon. member for Gloucester referred to the truthfulness of my statement that the best marline was made at Dartmouth. I do not wish to advertize the Dartmouth rope works, but I have used tons of this marline myself within the last two or three years, and I can vouch for its being of equal quality to that of American manufacture, and our fishermen prefer it. I can guarantee that there is not one pound of marline used in any other fishery, unless it be for making seal nets, which we do not go into very extensively in Nova Scotia.

Mr. FLYNN. The hon. member for Gloucester stated that this manilla marline was used for other purposes than lobster boxes. I endorse that statement. I represent a constituency that largely prosecutes that industry. I am aware of the kind of cordage they use, and I do not hesitate to say that, independently of lobster boxes, it is used in my county for various other purposes. It has been urged that if there is a better article made in the Dominion, then why put a duty on it if it is not imported? But we admit lines and twines free of duty for the purpose of encouraging the fishery industry; then why not admit cordage for the purpose of encouraging the lobster business?

Mr. ANGLIN. I do not question the veracity of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Ogden). I am not at all competent to say whether his statement was perfectly correct or not. He tells us that he uses tons of this very manilla marline in the foreign fishing business. As other persons must also use large quantities of it, it would follow that hundreds of tons at least were used in the Lower Provinces.

On item 6, glass and manufactures of,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The object is to make moulded glass pay duty, as it formerly came in free, as not coming under the designation of pressed glass. "Or fruit" refers to jars which some persons import not as fruit jars, and it is intended to make them pay the duty. Side-lights and head-lights are made in the same factory as chimneys, and difficulties have arisen from their not being specified.

On item 7, iron and manufactures of,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The change made here is for the purpose of making axles, rivets and nuts pay the same duty, whether of iron or steel. Beams, channels and angles, parts of iron bridges, are reduced from 15 per cent. to 12½ per cent., as we have no machinery in the country to manufacture them, and they have to be imported.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do not wish to detain the House now, but when we go into Concurrence I shall try and urge the Minister to do something for the pig-iron industries of this country. I see that our imports of iron and steel amount to $10,000,000, and that over 59,000 tons of pig-iron are imported. Pig-iron can, and I think should, be made in this country.

On item 8, wrought iron tubing,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY said: Wrought iron at present is charged 17½ per cent. This particular article was not manufactured in the Dominion when the Tariff was first introduced, and the duty was fixed at 15 per cent. It is now about to be manufactured, and the duty is therefore proposed to be increased to 25 per cent. on all below two inches in diameter. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) said the other day, this would affect tubing used in the manufacture of boilers. The result of my enquiries is that the iron tubing used for boilers is two inches and upwards.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No doubt the hon. member has endeavored to get all the information he could. I will simply give him the information I received in reference to this. I am told the tubing under two inches diameter does enter into the manufacture of boilers. Locomotive boiler tubes run down from 1½ inches to 1¼ inches; the tubes in our oil wells go under two inches, and almost all the tubes in farmers' boilers, steam pressures, &c., are under two inches, and are made out of lap-welded tubes which are not and never will be made in the Dominion, as the demand here will never be sufficient to warrant the erection of the expensive machinery required to make them. I am further informed that the Montreal Rolling Mills are about to erect a mill at a cost of $10,000 to make this butt-welding tubing. What I ask the hon. Finance Minister to do is, to subject all butt-welding tubing to 25 per cent. duty, leaving the lap-welding as it is at present. Boiler plates are now charged 12½ per cent. Fancy the position in which you will place a large establishment in my own city, as well as many others of the same kind, which get no remission of duty on the boiler plates and the tubing that enter into the construction of their boilers, while those plates and tubes amount to more than one-half of the boiler. What I propose is that the whole duty on the tubing not made in the country should be given back to these manufacturers. Otherwise you will destroy the export trade, and that trade being destroyed you will certainly not have the duty on the articles imported that enter into the manufacture of the articles exported. If you charge a duty of 25 per cent. on the tubing not made in the country, and the manufactured article, of which the tubing amounts to one-half the cost, pays the same amount of duty, you are, in a round-about-way destroying any protection this manufacture of boilers has at all. All I ask the hon. Finance Minister to do is to use the word "butt-welding" which will cover the article that is produced in the country, and leave the lap welding stand at the same rate of duty as now.

Mr. McCALLUM. The hon. member for South Brant says that tubes less than two inches in diameter are used in boiler-making. That is not my experience. Small tubes soon get closed up with soot and smoke, and there are no boilers to-day made of tubes less than two inches in diameter. The hon. member says butt-tubing should be admitted as a raw material. Boiler plates may be a raw material for boiler-makers, but butt tubes are not, for it requires very little labor to put them in the boilers. It is too small in diameter for boilers.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We have received no communication that there is any objection to tubing of two inches diameter and above for boilers. We do not wish to disturb that; but as a smaller description of tubing is to be manufactured in the country, it was thought quite consistent with the policy of the Government that we should recognize that industry and place it in the 25 per cent. list. I am not, therefore, in a position to accept the hon. member's suggestion, owing to the difficulties which would likely arise.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the annual value of the exports which you expect to be affected by this change?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The classification is such that we cannot tell.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought that when the hon. gentleman, as a sort of Providence of industries, was making enquiries, he would make some sort of calculation as to the amount of industry he would produce by this alteration of the Tariff. How many representations have been made to him as to the starting of manufactories of tubing?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We have ascertained that parties were preparing to manufacture this tubing, and we thought we should give them this encouragement, and therefore, in accordance with our policy, we propose to give them the 25 per cent. as we give it to other iron manufacturers, for that article.

Mr. BLAKE. I enquire whether the hon. gentleman had made any investigation as to the annual expected product, in this country, of this particular tubing?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have not.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The Finance Minister did not answer the suggestion of the member for South Brant, as to the possibility of allowing those manufacturers who import this article for the purpose of constructing machinery which is afterwards re-exported, a rebate of duty. I know nothing, either from the Protection or Free-trade point of view, which need interfere with his doing that if he sees fit. From his own standpoint, if he desires to promote Canadian industries, it appears to me it would be a proper thing, indeed, if any manufacturer wishes to import articles of this kind, and the Finance Minister gets proof that he re-exports them, that he should receive a rebate. That is in accordance with the Free-trade theory and common sense. Nor do I see any great difficulty in the way of making proper Customs regulations to meet this proper suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In the interest of my suggestion in that matter, I can appeal to the principles of Ministers themselves. [The hon. gentleman here read a letter from an importer in order to illustrate and support his views on the subject.] He continued: The firm which forwarded this letter to me favor somewhat the Government policy, and say they use some of the butt-welded as well as the lap welded tubing; but that if the butt-welded is to be produced in Canada a duty should be put on it, in order to give the producers a fair amount of protection. They say with reference to the lap-welded tubing—because the firm coming into existence cannot and does not propose to make what would not be used here by the boiler-makers and oil-well owners—that a distinction should be made, and that the protection designed for that mill should be given to its only product, and not be made the means of imposing a tax that would not benefit them, while injuring others. I think there would be no difficulty with the Customs officers in determining that point.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will take this matter into consideration before final action.

Mr. BOWELL. The principle adopted by the Customs Department has been to allow a drawback on the raw material which enters into the manufacture of articles in this country, but not on machinery wholly made abroad and simply put together in Canada.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Why should one manufacturer, if he exports, not be entitled to as much protection as another who does not? If there is to be protection let all alike share in it. Supposing tubing is made in this country and in the United States, there is a heavy duty on what comes from the United States; but a certain amount goes into boilers made here that are exported. In that way the protection the tube-maker has in Canada would be wiped out; but he would have full protection on all the boilers they used, and the tubing imported from the United States, sold in Canada. They are protected to the full extent of the Canadian home trade. The only discrimination against them would be on the very minor amount that goes into the foreign export trade.

Mr. BOWELL. With regard to the general question raised by the member for South Brant, it is scarcely worth while discussing it at the present moment, because it has been so often discussed in this House before. We contend that those articles which have been protected can be purchased in this country, notwithstanding the duty, owing to the competition, as cheaply as they could under the 17½ per cent. tariff of the late Government. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) must see that if we impose a duty on a particular article to encourage its manufacture in this country, we should, if possible, reserve the market for that manufacture. I have no doubt that such articles can be obtained of as good quality and as cheap as in the United States,—but some manufacturers, as in the case mentioned by the hon. member, have been in the habit of using a particular imported article, and they do not care to use any other. This manufacturer thinks that a particular American saw suits his purpose better than those manufactured now in Galt or Montreal, though others say that Canadian saws are equally as good. At any rate, if we were to give him a drawback upon the duty which he pays on his imported saws, the protection to the saw manufacturers of Galt and Montreal would be swept away. The hon. gentleman says that this remark applies only to those which are exported. I admit that, but I contend that in carrying out the policy of the Government, even that portion of the market should not be taken from our home manufacturers, especially when, as the price shows, their saws are just as good and just as cheap as those imported from the United States.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As the Minister of Customs does not wish at present to discuss the general question, I shall only offer a few remarks for his consideration when the question does come up. We impose a duty on grain for the benefit of our farmers—in the case of wheat 15 cents per bushel. American wheat passes through our country in bond; it does not injure our farmers; it goes into another country and we get the benefit of handling it. This would be precisely the case with some of the drawbacks to which I have referred. Boiler tubes for instance, would come into the country, they would enter into the manufacture of boilers, giving employment to our own workmen, and would then be exported to a foreign country. If you impose a duty on American grains coming into the country without allowing a drawback on the duty paid, the result would be to shut off our export trades, and in that way damage the country. And in the same way, by imposing a duty on the articles to which I have referred, and which are certainly the raw materials in their respective lines of manufacture, and by refusing to allow a remission of the duty, you are doing exactly the same thing as you would be doing by refusing a rebate of duty on wheat imported for exportation. I contend that the two cases are exactly parallel.

Mr. HESSON. Surely the hon. gentleman does not pretend to say that the importation of boiler plates or tubes, and that of wheat, are identical in their effects upon the revenues of the country. The wheat which we import in bond gives employment to our workmen in grinding it and putting it into barrels.

Mr. PATERSON. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that wheat is the raw material of the farmer? Surely he knows that it is his manufactured product. The manure and the soil are the raw material.

Mr. HESSON. Wheat is not the finished product when it is not consumed. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that this wheat gives employment to our workmen and our capital by manufacturing it into flour and sending it out of the country. The hon. gentleman asks that we should allow a rebate of duty on boiler plates and tubes when he knows that would tend to kill one of the industries which the National Policy was intended to foster and build up, and it would be far better for him if he would advocate the manufacture of such articles here instead of the importation of them from a foreign country. If iron, for instance, was imported for the purpose of making these plates, he might then very reasonably ask the Government for a remission of duty on the raw materials.

On item 7, chains,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I may say, with regard to these chains, that though they are called $\frac{1}{2}$ inch chains they measure about $\frac{1}{8}$ of an inch over.

On item 12, lead,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is for the purpose of making a specific duty instead of a 10 per cent. duty. We have one or two industries of this kind; and, from the undervaluation and fluctuation of prices, it has been considered desirable to make the duty specific.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Bars and sheets are made 60 cents; is not that more than 10 per cent.?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is a fraction over I think. It is a partially manufactured article, but still the same principle is applied.

On item 13, leather,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is to obviate some difficulties that have arisen in the working of the old Act. By naming all these articles and fixing the rate of duty, we shall obviate the difficulty that has arisen of having different rates of duty charged in different ports.

On item 15, liquorice root,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. As the Tariff stands at present liquorice root is in both the free and the 20 per cent. list. This strikes it out of the 20 per cent., list and leaves it in the free list.

On item 16, marble finished,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. As there is 10, 15 and 20 per cent. upon the raw material; it is now proposed that the duty on finished marble work imported shall pay 30 instead of 25 per cent.

On item 17, oil cloth,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. A difficulty has arisen with different customs officials with reference to the rates of duty on these articles. In order that there shall be no mistake we make the duty specific.

On item 19, plated ware,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. A different practice has been pursued in different parts of the Dominion on this subject. Plated knives have been in some places under the Tariff entered at 20 per cent. others at 30 per cent. It is in order to settle that difficulty that they are made uniform, and to define exactly what cutlery is.

On item 21, silk in the gum,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was supposed when we introduced the Tariff that this article, which is a raw material for the manufacture of silk, should be admitted at 15 per cent., but it appears it was not covered by the words that were used, and the amendment now proposed is for the purpose of enabling silk to be imported at that rate.

On item 22, German silver,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. With reference to this article there has been some questions in the different departments as to the rates of duty that should be paid, and it is proposed to state distinctly that that article shall be included under this head. The item with regard to silk is struck out altogether.

On item 21, silk in the gum,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We have changed this so as to include satin, as we learned, since we introduced these changes, that parties have recently invested capital, purchased machinery and begun its manufacture.

On item 32, gun cartridges,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Cartridges having in some cases been made of brass and in others of paper, different rates of duty have been imposed. This change is to secure one uniform rate, no matter what the cartridge is composed of.

On item 44, wincies,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY said this wincey question was one of considerable difficulty, and the Government adopted, after much consideration, this means of obviating the difficulty. It has given a great deal of trouble to the importers through the different rates charged at different ports. We hope by this change to simplify the duty, and prevent the difficulties that have occurred in the past.

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY said a great deal of this stuff has simply a scarlet stripe, which is the only portion of wool it contains. It is the object of the Tariff to use terms that will simplify the matter, and secure uniformity of action.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think there will still be a great deal of difficulty in connection with this duty. But my chief objection to the proposal is, that while it admits narrow widths, to be used in ladies' dresses, at 20 per cent., it imposes on the wider kinds, which, I am told, are used very largely by the working classes for shirts, because classed as woollens, 40 to 50 per cent. in many cases. That is quite consistent with the whole tenor of the legislation of hon. gentlemen opposite, which discriminates against the poor and in favor of the wealthier classes. The burdens on the poor occasioned by the duties on woollens, several million dollars worth of which are annually imported, are already too heavy. They are defended, however, by the argument that it is necessary to shield home manufacturers from foreign competition. I entirely dissent from the policy of the Government on this particular item.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Anglin) has altogether misunderstood the object of the change and of the law itself. Instead of increasing the duty it rather reduces it on many of those articles; because, under the present Tariff, all goods, if it be interpreted literally, that contain two or three threads of wool, might be subjected to two cents per square yard and 15 per cent. ad valorem. Under the proposal before the House, all the goods used for ladies dresses are defined, the duty being 20 per cent. The statement that the goods used for shirtings have to pay the duty charged on woollens, is not the fact. The articles used for shirtings, defined here is made of cotton and a large proportion of wool, and pay two cents a yard and 15 per cent. ad valorem, which is precisely the duty under the existing Tariff. But the difficulty mentioned, arises in the way in which many of the appraisers and collectors impose the duty on the narrow goods used for ladies' dresses and that are not used for shirts. It is only when they contain a large quantity of wool, and are of greater width than the article used for shirts, that the wool duty applies.

In reply to Mr. ANGLIN,

Mr. BOWELL said the articles 30 inches wide are not used in the manufacture of shirts.

Mr. DECOSMOS. I wish to call the attention of the Government and Finance Minister to the unfavorable operation of the Tariff respecting sugar in British Columbia. It compels the consumer to pay more than he otherwise would, if the duty was not collected on the article passing in transitu through San Francisco. Of the $51,000 duty paid on sugar in British Columbia, coming from all parts, some $38,000 have been paid on the quantity imported through San Francisco. One of our enterprising merchants opened a business connection with a house in Nicaragua, and his sugar passed through San Francisco, as there was no other means by which it could reach British Columbia but by the Pacific Mail Company's steamers. When it arrived at Victoria, all the charges of moving it from the interior, the charges for packages were considered, and the duty was collected upon it, levied at the San Francisco market value. This system operates very injuriously to the consumers in our Province, and to the enterprise of our merchants. What we require is this: that on all sugar passing in transitu through San Francisco, or any other port, the duty should be levied as though it came direct from the port of production. When I said that $38,000 were paid on the sugar that came through San Francisco, it must be apparent that we are paying a greater amount of duty, in proportion, than the people at the eastern side of the Dominion. It is therefore with a view of repealing that portion of the Tariff that compels sugar passing in transitu to pay duty on its market value, say at San Francisco, that I direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to the subject, and I trust he will adopt some means, either by allowing the Committee to rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again, or by some other course, by which the people of British Columbia can get relief from the operation of the Tariff. I may state that our country, as everyone knows, has a small population; it is in its infancy, and yet it imports 1,000 tons of sugar, molasses, syrup and such articles. It is, however, too small a quantity of sugar for us to keep up direct trade with the Sandwich Islands or Peru; but if the Tariff were changed so as to place our importers on a par with those who import sugar direct to the Maritime Provinces, we will have no objection whatever to offer.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We propose that the Committee shall report progress after it has got through the resolutions to-night. The hon. gentleman called the attention of the Government to this subject a short time ago. An amendment will be proposed. The Committee will report progress and ask leave to sit again. In the meantime the Government will take the question into consideration, and decide whether it is necessary to include it in a resolution or Bill. The subject has not been lost sight of.

On item 45, cocoa-nut matting.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This article is now manufactured in the country, and it is proposed to make the duty 25 per cent. instead of 20 per cent. as it stands now.

On the Free List,

Mr. ANGLIN. I desire to ask for an explanation why steel is made free for another year? Is there any probability that we will have steel works established, or does some railway company want to get in their rails?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is because there is no industry of the kind established in the country. Parties are, however, contemplating the establishment of works in the Ottawa Valley. Whether they will do so or not remains to be seen, and the declaration of Parliament is that, if they establish works, a duty will be imposed on imported steel after the expiration of this time.

Mr. CHARLTON. While the Committee is engaged in considering the Free List, I rise to express my regret that the Government has not seen fit to extend that list somewhat. I called the attention of the hon. Finance Minister and the hon. Minister of Customs last year to the injurious operations of the export duty on saw-logs. I had hoped to see that duty removed. The amount of duty derived is quite insignificant, the sum last year being less than $2,500. So far as regards the lumber interest of western Ontario, the duty is very detrimental to that interest. A very large trade has grown up on the western lakes in round timber, drawn from the forests of Michigan, and taken to lake ports, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, and Buffalo. That trade, last year, amounted to over 100,000,000 feet of round timber, a quantity worth, on the market, over $1,300,000. The use made of the timber is to saw it into bills wanted for immediate use, bills of small size and which cannot very well be filled from a distance; and this trade does not in any way come into collision with the ordinary lumber trade. There is not the least jealousy between the lumber interest of the west and the round timber interest. None of these 100,000,000 feet towed down the lakes are manufactured into mercantile lumber. The parties engaged in the business receive high prices for bills, and mills situated in the cities have always additional advantages of being able to utilize the offal, such as slabs and saw dust, which, in most cases, I believe, covers the cost of manufacture. We have on Georgian Bay and on the eastern coast of Lake Huron as good facilities for engaging in this large and profitable trade as the people of Michigan; but the export duty of $1 per thousand deters our people from participating in the trade. It surely interferes with business in the west; it is a duty productive of no good; it is one which injures the lumber interests, and it is one which in the interest of the country ought to be removed. It is absurd that this duty should have remained on the Statute-book so long, for, as I have shown, it is yielding no revenue and is doing harm. As regards the Ottawa Valley, it is contended that if the duty is not imposed, saw-logs will be taken from Ottawa up the Richelieu into Lake Champlain and manufactured into lumber there. I do not think that is practicable, and if it were, the difficulty could be obviated by defining a saw-log to be a piece of timber less than twenty feet in length, which would exempt the class of timber towed in the western lakes from the operation of the duty. I do not raise this question for the purpose of making political capital or to cavil at the policy of the Government; but I regret that the Finance Minister has not given his attention to the removal of an impost so absurd and so pernicious in its operation as this one is. I can assure him it prevents the owners of timber lands in the west from engaging in a lucrative trade, amounting to over $1,250,000, one which confers great profits on a large number of men, and one in which our own lumbermen might just as well participate. If the difficulty I have alluded to, with regard to the lumber in the Ottawa valley, should interpose, I think a practical remedy will be found in the suggestion I have made, that is by classifying the logs, so that long timber would be exempt from duty.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will consider it.

Mr. BUNSTER. I beg to ask the attention of the Finance Minister to the question of powder, which has a great deal to do with the material interests of British Columbia. We have a small population, and we have no manufactory of powder in the Province. Our resources are largely mineral—gold, silver and coal—and I think that in order to develop them, the Finance Minister should throw the duty off powder, instead of retaining the very high duty of five cents a pound. Some of our miners use as much as fifty pounds of powder per week in opening the bowels of the earth. I know the Finance Minister means honestly by our Province, and I think he will see that it is only fair that this duty should be removed.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am afraid I cannot ask the House to accommodate my hon. friend, by putting powder on the free list. I believe arrangements have been made by which Canadian powder can now be supplied, even to the miners of British Columbia; and as the facilities for transmission increase I have no doubt that the price will be still further reduced.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will not object to pay a little more for powder when it is manufactured in the country.

Mr. BUNSTER. The hon. Finance Minister has thrown out a suggestion, but I think he ought to make a compromise with me. Let him throw off the duty until the railway is built to British Columbia.

Mr. ANGLIN. If he would put a duty on pig tails, it would answer the purpose.

Mr. BUNSTER. I thank the hon. member for reminding me of that; and if the Finance Minister will only put a duty on rice, we will probably catch the pig tails. I say it is a disgrace that there should be five cents duty per pound on powder, and only one cent per pound on rice.

Mr. BLAKE. We make powder but we do not grow rice.

Mr. BUNSTER. You might throw some rice on the troubled waters and help me out of this difficulty. If we cannot grow rice, we have a very good substitute in the shape of potatoes, especially in my part of the country. We are only a small Province and small in our representation in this House, but you invited us to come in, and told us that you would hear all our grievances.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). We are using you well.

Mr. BUNSTER. Yes; we have been getting deeper into the well ever since we came in.

Mr. OGDEN. I quite agree with the hon. member for Vancouver in asking that the duty should be reduced on powder. The people in my county are largely engaged in gold mining, and they use a good deal of powder. I agree with the hon. gentleman, and I hope the Finance Minister will take into his favorable consideration the reduction of the duty upon powder. But I am surprised, I am amazed, to hear an hon. gentleman who says that he represents a fishing constituency, come forward and ask to have 25 cents a pound duty placed upon rice. We use wild rice around the edges of the lakes, to decoy ducks, on the Gatineau River. They come there in the summer to lay their eggs and hatch their young, and duck hunting affords sport to our fishermen as well as food to many of our poor people in the winter. I am surprised to hear an hon. gentleman, who is said to represent the laboring class, to represent a fishing community, stand here and ask to have a duty imposed upon rice. It is all very well for the hon. member for Vancouver Island (Mr. Bunster), who, perhaps, at this very moment has a Governor's Commission in his pocket, to stand here and ask to have the poor man's food taxed; but I, as the representative of a fishing constituency of faithful and honest men, who are willing to work hard for a living, hope and trust that you will not permit such a thing. I hope the Government will let the hon. member for Vancouver Island just go ahead and pay his attention to the reduction of duty upon powder, and let us have rice free. Rice pudding I know is a very important article of food in the hotels of Ottawa. We enjoy it once in a while, and, therefore, I hope the hon. member will not persist in asking this House to impose a duty on rice, because if the Government should do so I should certainly vote against them for the second time since I have been in Parliament.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the foregoing resolutions and the alterations made in the duties of Customs on the articles therein mentioned shall take effect on and after the 26th day of February instant.

Resolutions ordered to be reported; and (at 11:30 o'clock, p.m.,) the House adjourned.

Mr. BUNSTER.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 28th February, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. DOMVILLE moved that the time for the reception of reports on Private Bills be extended for a period of ten days from 1st March, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

THE BANKING ACT.

Mr. DOMVILLE, in the absence of Mr. ORTON, introduced a Bill (No. 73) to explain section 52 of the Banking Act. He said: Section 52 says that banks shall not be liable to a penalty for usury, and goes on to state that they shall not take, exact, or recover any rate of interest exceeding 7 per cent. This Bill is to explain the fact that it is not the intention of the Act that banks shall be allowed to take, receive, exact, or recover any rate of interest above 7 per cent; and if they do, they are bound to refund the difference between that rate and what they receive to the borrower.

Bill read the first time.

EUROPEAN, AMERICAN AND CANADIAN CABLE COMPANY.

The following Bill was read the second time:—

Bill (No. 72) to incorporate "The European, American and Canadian Cable Company Limited," (from the Senate).—(Mr. Currier.)

MAILS BETWEEN ARTHABASKA AND THREE RIVERS.

Mr. BOURBEAU enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint a mail conductor to travel on the branch line of railway between Arthabaska and Three Rivers?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I have the honor to inform the hon. gentleman that such is not the intention of the Government.

UNDER VALUATIONS FOR CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. KRANZ enquired, Whether, in view of the fact that it has been stated that children's carriages and like articles were imported last year from the United States, and entered for duty at a less value than the market price ruling then in the United States, any provision has been made to check these undervaluations; and if so, of what nature?

Mr. BOWELL. It has been found, on examination, that the discount allowed by manufacturers on that particular kind of goods is 28 per cent. in the United States, while the discount allowed to Canadian purchasers is 33 per cent. In other cases where articles are purchased for exportation to Canada an extra 25 per cent. discount is allowed. All the invoices entered at those reduced rates have been ordered to be amended, and the price increased to the value of the articles, and duty has been added and collected accordingly.

SHELburne HARBOR.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to make provision, in the Supplementary Estimates, for the erection of a fog-whistle at the entrance of Shelburne Harbor, Nova Scotia?

Mr. LANGÉVIN. It is not the intention of the Government to make provision in the Supplementary Estimates this year for the erection of a fog-whistle at that place.

THE QUEBEC JUDICIARY.

Mr. BEAUCHESNE enquired, Whether the Government are aware that, of the two Judges charged with the administration of justice in the district of Gaspé, one resides at Quebec and the other at Montreal? Whether it is the intention of the Government to allow that state of things to continue any longer? Whether the Minister of Justice has considered the representations which have been made to him in relation to this matter by the County Council of the County of Bonaventure?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). It has been brought to the notice of the Government that the Justices of the Superior Court of two of the districts of Gaspé resided, one at Montreal occasionally, and one at Quebec. No complaint on the subject has been made to the Government with the exception of a communication from the County Council of Bonaventure addressed to me, which is now receiving the consideration of the Government, and the Government will communicate with the Government of Quebec on the subject.

CARGO OF THE SHIP "BOYNE."

Mr. GAULT enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to refund to the owners and insurance companies the sum of $5,478.3, the amount collected as duty on the cargo of damaged wheat and corn from the ship Boyne, the duty having absorbed the whole proceeds of the sale of the cargo?

Mr. BOWELL. It is not the intention of the Government to make the refund, there being no law to justify it.

INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Mr. GRANDEBOIS enquired, Does the Government propose to extend the law so as to allow its Insurance Superintendent to investigate the affairs of all life and fire insurance companies; and also put a stop to all unlicensed mutual fire insurance companies known as "Counties Mutuals," in the Province of Quebec, and "Life Co-operatives."

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Government have that subject under consideration. I will let the hon. gentleman know in a day or two.

MAIL SERVICE ON LAKE CHAMPLAIN AND ST. LAWRENCE RAILWAY.

Mr. VANASSE enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to establish a mail service on the Lake Champlain and St. Lawrence Railway?

Mr. LANGÉVIN. It is not the intention of the Government.

BRANCH POST OFFICE AT MONTREAL.

Mr. COURSOL enquired, Whether the Government are aware that a large portion of the public of Montreal will suffer inconvenience from the closing of the branch post offices at Montreal; and is it the intention of the Government to order the closing of the said branch offices?

Mr. LANGÉVIN. There is no intention of closing the branch offices in Montreal.

CLAIMS OF CONTRACTORS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY, SINCE JANUARY 1st, 1880.

Mr. MACKENZIE moved for copies of all Orders in Council respecting the claims of contractors on the Intercolonial Railway, since January 1st, 1880, also of all instructions issued to Mr. Shanly, respecting the same, and correspondence relating to such claims. He said: In the absence of the hon. Minister of Railways it is not my intention to discuss these notices at the present time. As the hon. the Minister of Public Works has been attending to the business of the Minister of Railways, I presume he has got these papers ready as well as the papers asked for in the other notices, seeing that the notices have been on the order paper for weeks.

Mr. POPE (Compton). The papers have been prepared upon all the motions the hon. gentleman has upon the paper. I hope to be able to lay them on the Table tomorrow or next day.

Motion agreed to.

HARBOR OF TORONTO.

Mr. MACKENZIE, in moving for any report made by Government engineers respecting works in the harbor of Toronto, since January 1st, 1880, with map showing the locality of the new channel being dredged at the western entrance, said: I make this motion because it is my conviction, from information which has reached me, that the hon. Minister of Public Works has allowed himself to be advised wrongly in regard to this harbor. Instead of following up the work which has been done for a number of years past, and gradually widening and deepening the channel at the Queen's wharf, the engineers of the hon. gentleman have made an entirely new cut through the end of the Island beach which protects the harbor, and which, instead of doing good, has, I believe, done incalculable injury to the harbor. What I am anxious to ascertain from the hon. gentleman is, whether this has been done on the report of any engineer other than those who have already reported upon it. The hon. gentleman is, of course, aware that several reports are in the department on the subject of the Toronto harbor, but I do not think any of them recommend a new entrance to be made in the place where dredging has been carried on during the past year. I see it stated in the public newspapers that some authority from the United States is now inspecting the harbor. That may be a wise step, or it may not. I should be very glad, indeed, if any new light could be thrown on the subject, but so far as our experience for the past two or three years enables us to judge, all that was necessary to be accomplished was to widen and deepen the western entrance, and to guard against the shoals which are constantly opening and closing the eastern entrance.

Mr. LANGÉVIN. Of course, the papers will be brought down. I should have preferred the hon. gentleman to have allowed the information to be laid before Parliament before expressing any opinion on the action taken by the engineers of my department. The hon. gentleman may rest assured that the works undertaken there have been undertaken on the advice of the engineers, and the papers will show the reason therefor. They will show that there was formerly a refilling of the entrance every year, so that the work had to be begun anew, and soundings showed that a greater depth of water could be obtained where the new channel has been begun. The subject of protecting the harbor of Toronto has received the special attention of the department and the Government, and we have engaged an engineer of great ability, Captain Eads, who has achieved great success in improving the navigation of the mouth of the Mississippi, and who has been engaged, during the past three or four months, in fulfilling an engineering Commission from the Mexican Government, to examine the harbor of Toronto, especially the eastern gap, and to give his opinion on what works may be necessary in order to improve the harbor permanently. He is now looking over the papers to put himself au fait, and then he will come and examine the harbor.

Motion agreed to.

PORT HOOD WHARF.

Mr. MACDONNELL, in moving for all correspondence and communications between the Government and the Commissioner, or party in charge of the expenditure and repairs made on the public wharf at Port Hood, during the last summer and fall, relative to the present state of said wharf, and to the further sum necessary to complete said repairs; also a return of said expenditure so made, said: The wharf at Port Hood was built before Nova Scotia entered Confederation by the Local Government of Nova Scotia, at a very great expense. It was built in connection with the extension of the railway from Truro to the harbor of Pictou, in order that the island of Cape Breton might enjoy the benefits of the railway system of Nova Scotia. That wharf was transferred to the Dominion as a part of the public property of the Province, and thereby became a charge on the Exchequer of the Dominion. It has always been treated as Dominion property. From time to time, since the year 1867, it suffered severe injuries, and at different periods was repaired by the Dominion Government. In the spring of 1879, while here attending to my duties in this House, I was informed that that wharf had suffered some injury, and that its state was such that if not repaired in a short time it was liable to become entirely destroyed. I directed a letter in April, 1879, to the then hon. Minister having charge of the Public Works of the Dominion, who, I am sorry to say, is now absent through severe illness; my letter pressed on the hon. Minister the necessity of securing that valuable public property from further injury or total destruction. This letter received no attention. What I then anticipated only proved too true, for some months afterwards the wharf was cut in twain by a severe storm. It remained in that condition for a long time, to the very great inconvenience of the public, and last spring I again brought the subject to the notice of the hon. Minister. Again I received no satisfaction. I then applied to the present Minister of Public Works for permission to have that property belonging to the Dominion, and in which the people were deeply interested, repaired at private expense. I was about to recommend that a public or a private subscription should be made by the residents of the county, and of adjoining counties, in order to meet the expense of repairing the wharf. I received no satisfactory answer to that letter. Having gone home about a month before the prorogation of Parliament last year, I again wrote to the hon. Minister, asking for the second time that I might be allowed to have this public work repaired by means of private subscription, and I was informed that the sum of $3,000 was granted for the purpose in the Supplementary Estimates. I wrote to the Government asking that the repairs be at once undertaken. They were not undertaken till late in August, and the whole western side of the island, a distance of 110 miles, was left without any proper communication with the shore for the steamers and other vessels that visited the place. At length the work was undertaken in the fall—a season of the year most unsuitable for work of any description on that exposed shore, owing to the severe storms then prevalent. It so proved in this case. When the work was only half through, a storm carried away a large portion of the new wharf—two large piers—and the amount provided proved insufficient to meet the cost of repairs. The wharf has remained in an unfinished state ever since.

Mr. LANGEVIN. When did that last storm occur?

Mr. MACDONNELL. The hon. gentleman should know. He was informed by his engineer when it occurred. It occurred during the progress of the work, and if the hon. gentleman had properly discharged his trust, he would have undertaken the work at a time when it could be conducted with safety. I accuse the hon. Minister of having caused, by his incompetency or neglect, a loss of thousands of dollars to the Dominion. All that was necessary was for the hon. gentleman, in response to my various applications, to write a single note to one of the many engineers of the Dominion who are sauntering around the streets in want of employment. The loss to the Dominion directly by the carrying away of the wharf is not the only loss, the public have suffered through the want of that structure. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that, although this is a little local work, it is of more than local interest. It is not only the Province of Nova Scotia, and not only the county of Inverness that are interested. I have seen dozens of mowing machines and other agricultural machinery imported from the Province of Ontario into the county of Inverness, Cape Breton, which had to be landed at that port in small boats. I saw various cargoes of lumber during the past summer which had to be thrown into the water and floated ashore in the shape of rafts, all owing to the culpable neglect of the hon. Minister. It is all very well for these hon. gentlemen to treat the public interest in this way, simply because a certain county does not return a representative to support them. That is the only reason why this work has been treated as it has been. The matter is not a local one; it is a matter of yesterday, but it is a property that was transferred to the Dominion as a part of the public property of Nova Scotia at the time of the Union, and I charge these hon. gentlemen with having violated the terms of Confederation when they neglected to uphold a work of this kind. As well might they discontinue an important mail line, or discontinue to uphold a railway in a Province, simply because that Province returned men opposed to the Government. I have approached the hon. Minister on various occasions. I have asked him if it was his intention to put anything in the Supplementary Estimates for this work, and I could receive no satisfaction. Now, having made this statement, I am prepared to uphold what I have said. I leave the matter in the hands of the Government. If they will continue to neglect this work and the public interest—and it is not the county of Inverness only that is interested in it—the fault will be theirs. We have a steamer running regularly between Pictou and that port during the summer months, discharging cargo at it and plying through the Straits of Canso; and other counties are interested in this work—counties which send to this Parliament faithful followers of the Government. I, therefore, hope the Government will not continue to disregard this work. I hope they will feel that while they have so immense power at their back, they owe to the country a due discharge of their duty, and due vigilance in regard to the public interests of the Dominion.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. MacDonnell) must see, after his excitement has passed, that when he wrote to me to suggest a public subscription to raise the funds necessary for the improvement of this work, that I could not have accepted his proposal as a serious one. If a public work requires to be put in order, a vote must be asked for it in Parliament, which will not be begrudged. The hon. gentleman must see, if the answer he received was not a satisfactory one, that he could have received no other. Votes for works, by Parliament, are granted from the 1st July to the 1st July following; therefore, until the 1st July comes we cannot expend the money on any work. The hon. gentleman will kindly remember that a large number of works have generally to be undertaken in all parts of the Dominion, and that they require as much attention as this special work in which he is naturally interested.

Mr. MacDONNELL. I am no more interested in it than anybody else.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Those works being so numerous have to be taken in turn, and in this case I do not think the hon. gentleman can complain much when he says the works were undertaken in August. I do not know the exact circumstances he speaks of, but it shows that the work must have been a very slight one, when the storm carried away two or three of the large piers he refers to, and that the department were quite justified in taking a little time to consider the matter, and see whether the grant, small as it may have been, should be expended just at that moment. Therefore, the hon. gentleman has no right to complain. This work has been attended to like all others. It may be unfortunate that the storm spoken of came on just at that moment, but I have no control over the winds and waves. The like of what occurred at that place occurred elsewhere. He complains that he came to me several times and asked me, without result, whether I would put a vote in the Supplementary Estimates. If he would consult others who have felt the responsibilities of office, he would find that to such a question he could receive no satisfactory answer.

Mr. MacDONNELL. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman could expect no answer from me to such a question. When the Supplementary Estimates come down he will see, like all other hon. gentlemen, whether the work was considered one that should have a vote proposed to it. I have already told him twice, this matter will be investigated, in order to see whether the work can be provided for in those Estimates.

Mr. MacDONNELL. This subject has been before the Government a whole year. I suppose the hon. Minister of Public Works is considered a very excellent administrator, and that I can take for granted that he was aware of the state of this public work. If so, he has known its state for nearly twelve months; and it was his duty, in the case of a work so important, to have provided for it in the chief or main Estimates. His not doing so left me but one course—that of discharging my duty by making an enquiry in this House, as to whether he intends doing anything in this matter at present. I long refrained from making any enquiry; but the Session is drawing to a close, and I should be subjected to a severe criticism by those who sent me here to watch over their interests if I did not bring this matter before the House. It is a matter in which Inverness is not alone interested; because from Ontario we get all our farming implements, and the major part of our manufactured goods, and they are landed at this place.

Mr. LANGEVIN. In his first speech the hon. gentleman spoke of Supplementary Estimates, and therefore I had to answer his question as I have just stated—that I could give him no information on that point.

Motion agreed to.

MR. MUNRO'S LAND IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. DeCOSMOS moved for an order of the House for the report made by Mr. J. W. Trutch, respecting the land of Mr. A. Munro, situated within the Indian Reserve at Cowichan, Vancouver's Island. He said: In bringing this matter before the House I shall have to read considerable correspondence. In the first place, I may read the statement made by Mr. Munro, and sent in to the Department of Indian Affairs in this city, which is to the following effect:—

"STATEMENT re LAND IN COWICHAN VALLEY, B.C.

"Land in the vicinity, outside the Indian Reservation, was sold last year at $12.50 and $15.00 per acre. Present value, say—200 acres at $15.00—$3,000.00.

"Railway construction will enhance the value."

In support of that statement here is a certificate by two leading land agents of the city of Victoria, Messrs Lowenberg & Heisterman:

"We, the undersigned land agents in Victoria, do hereby certify that the land known as Mr. Munro's land, Sections 15 and 16, Range 7, Quamichan District, which is a tract of fine, rich bottom land in the Cowichan Valley, is worth now at least $15.00 per acre, and that it could readily have been sold by us if open for purchase, but the Indian claim and occupation of it prevents all effectual negotiation.

"(Signed),

"D. LOWENBERG.

"H. F. HEISTERMAN.

"Victoria, B. C., 7th July, 1879."

From these statements the House will gather the amount of Mr. Munro's claim in respect of this land. I will now read some extracts from official reports regarding the Indian claim and occupation of A. Munro's land in Cowichan (sections 15 and 16, range 7, Quamichan district). The following is from the report dated 16th January, 1878, by the Indian Reserve Commissioners to the British Columbia Provincial Government:—

"Several Indians have built houses and cultivated and fenced portions of land in Cowichan, belonging to Mr. Munro

"The Indians say that Sir James (then Mr.) Douglas gave them the whole flat for a reserve, including the land on which they had encroached, but it appears that the Government of Mr. Douglas sold this land to Mr. Munro at about the same time the reserve was made, and that Mr. Munro has all along been the legal possessor of it

Mr. Munro's comments are as follows:—

"The Indians never consented to the sale; but this was unknown to me at the time. They claim the land as part of their reserve, and have hitherto held it as such, notwithstanding repeated efforts to dispossess them. Thus they have ever remained the real or actual possessors, while I, in the empty capacity of 'legal possessor,' have been assessed and have had to pay the yearly taxes and other outgoings."

One of the Commissioners, writing for himself and the other Commissioners, in a letter to me, dated 4th January, 1877, says, inter alia:

"As I have told you personally, I believe that the Government have sold to you land which had been previously assigned, or is claimed to have been assigned, to the Indians as a reserve."

Another of the Commissioners, in a letter to me of 20th January, 1878, says:

"I agree with you that the land should never have been laid off as it is."

The late Minister or Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, with whom Col. Powell, the Superintendent, corresponded specially on this matter in the summer of 1877, held that the land in question pertained to the Indians, and that its possession ought to be secured to them or for their benefit. The Commissioners further say :

"Whatever may have been the case at one time, we think that after what has passed, the incorporation of this land within the Indian Reserve now would have a bad effect on the minds of the Indians.

"The Commissioners think that Mr. Munro should take steps, and that he should have taken steps long ago, to compel the Indian trespassers on his land to submit to the law."

Upon this Mr. Munro thus comments :

"I do not ask that it be so 'incorporated.' All I seek is reasonable compensation; and for this the Government may do with the land whatsoever seems to them best. The property is said to be admirably adapted and situated for an Indian Industrial Model Farm."

The Commissioners proceeded to say :

"The Indians have made considerable improvements on the land, thus increasing the difficulty and hardship of removing them. It is possible that the enforcement of the law may cause trouble, and perhaps bloodshed; but in the Commissioners opinion there is no other alternative than to turn the Indians off, reserving the old grave-yard upon the land, as marked by the Commissioners. * * * At the same time the Commissioners ask the attention of the Provincial Government to that portion of the enclosed memorandum which states what the Cowichan Indians generally said to the Commissioners about their treatment by the formal Colonial Government."

Mr. Munro comments as follows :—

"This has not been communicated to me, but is understood to have been an expression of dissatisfaction on the part of the Indians."

Referring to the memorandum mentioned by the Commissioners, Mr. Munro remarks :

"It is easy to say this. The case was duly submitted to the Commissioners themselves, and what have they done? I have done all I possibly could—by myself and others and through the proper authorities—short of provoking the Indians to actual conflict. At my own cost, many years ago, I had the land surveyed, and stakes and posts put in, but these were removed. Their own Superintendent, Colonel Powell, advised and urged the Indians strongly to surrender the land, but in vain. Mr. Sullivan (then Superintendent of Police), Mr. Morley and others, as representatives of the law, were sent up at different times to endeavor to remove them or persuade them to remove. Mr. Sullivan went so far as to commence pulling down their fences, but, though a brave man, he was compelled by threats of violence from the enraged Indians then assembled to desist at once.

"The manner in which, on another occasion Mr. Rogers, who attempted to build and settle on the adjoining section No. 14 (likewise claimed by the Indians as part of their reserve), was driven off by them, and forced to have his pre-emption cancelled, shows what the Indians were and are prepared to do if put to the test in maintaining their claim to this land.

"This is very probable if the 'enforcement' be made despite justice, considering the rights they claim and the extensive improvements in buildings, &c., made by them.

"There is an alternative. The land can be recovered from me on reasonable terms. If 'turned off' they will go back and retaliate whenever the pressure is withdrawn—so that the continuance or repetition of force (a costly process) will be necessary to keep them off; and even then peaceable possession cannot possibly be had in defiance of them.

"As regards the grave-yard here specially mentioned, the Indians have just as much right to it as to the rest of the land. So have I. While doubtless it is highly proper that the Indians should have the grave-yard, the Commissioners had no power to assign it, as has been done, independently of me and my rights of property. I say, then, take the whole of the land as well. That is the only settlement of the difficulty that is likely to be either satisfactory or permanent."

I will now read from the report dated 21st March, 1877, by the Indian Reserve Commissioners to the hon. the Minister of the Interior :

"Cowichan.—There were two cases which presented peculiar difficulty; one, that of Mr. Munro, the other of a Mr. Dods.

"The first having paid his money in 1859, at the rate of £1 sterling per acre, had been allotted a tract of 200 acres which cuts directly into a portion of the general Reserve.

"Mr. Munro, finding that the Indians hankered much after this place, had, by letter addressed to us before we left Victoria, offered to place the piece of land in question at our disposal on consideration of his being reimbursed his original outlay with moderate interest. The adoption of this measure we should have been disposed to recommend as expedient to the settlement of the whole question; but on enquiry our views were altered. We found that the plot had been fenced and occupied by a party of the Somenos-Sept, headed by a man named Sin-a-Meetza, and that Mr. Superintendent Powell had some time ago warned him that he was acting illegally and summoned him to desist. Nevertheless, Sin-a-Meetza had continued, and improvements to a very considerable extent had been, by him and his companions, since effected on the land.

"We feel, therefore, that to recommend any measure which, if carried out, might tend to confirm Sin-a-Meetza in his usurped possession would be at present inadvisable. We determined, therefore, in ignoring Sin-a-Meetza's possession altogether; and on this determination we acted at the final conference which took place on the day of our departure."

On this document Mr. Munro thus commented :

"In writing to me on 4th January, 1877, the Commissioner already quoted said: 'In conversation with my brother Commissioners, it has been suggested that to enable us to approach the Government with the view of obtaining authority to settle your land claim, a distinct proposal should be made by you as to the amount that you would be willing to receive in liquidation of your claim, should the Commissioners judge it advisable to confirm possession to the tribe of the land (purchased by you) which they unquestionably have taken possession of. * * * I am satisfied that the Government of the day will not consent to pay any very large amount in liquidation to enable us to assign the land under the tenor of our commission.' This, which conveyed to me the intimation or suggestion that I must be satisfied with a moderate rate of interest on the purchase money which I had paid, agreed with the offer I had previously made to the Commissioners as expressed in their report opposite. I had no further communication or reply from the Commissioners; but the explanation given in their said report seems to show that their views were altered on slight grounds, and with little care for the loss and hardship to which I had been for so many years, and still am subjected. I am far from wishing or intending to make any undue reflection on the Commissioners. Doubtless they found some difficulty in the case, but that is no good reason for evading a settlement of it."

Mr. Munro further comments as follows :—

"It was not necessary to recommend any such measure, but fair consideration and relief should be given me. The consequence of this determination was to confirm the Indians in their course, as will be found further on. Mr. Superintendent Powell, having, within the past month or so, personally seen it, is now aware (November, 1879) that the Indians have my land 'compactly enclosed.'"

I will now read from a report dated 18th October, 1877, by Superintendent Powell to the hon. the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs :

"Reserves.—Between Comox and Victoria the scarcity of land not owned or taken up by white settlers I believe prevented the Commissioners from adding materially to the cultivable extent and value of existing reserves though, in some instances, by adding woodland, they have been made much more satisfactory than before.

"At Cowichan some disagreeable instances of Indian encroachment of long standing still exist, which are regarded with anxiety and alarm by white settlers, and no doubt will soon have to be settled in some way to prevent further trouble."

On that statement Mr. Munro thus remarks :

"My land was at their disposal on fair terms. My land has never been out of the possession of the Indians. It has always been claimed by them as part of their reserve, and as such it is held by them to this day, notwithstanding all efforts to turn them off."

I will read from a letter dated 27th September, 1877, written by H. Fry, Esq., J.P., Cowichan, to Indian Superintendent Powell :

"His (Mr. Munro's) two sections 15 and 16, range 7, Quamichan, are between the Indian reserve of Quamichan and Somenos, and have long been squatted on by Indians who boldly claim the land, although they have repeatedly been told that it is not theirs. This is the place about which Mr. Sullivan was sent up about some years since. The land is fenced in, and there are several buildings on it, one a very large one, and a portion under cultivation. I should say there are improvements to the value of several hundred dollars put on by Indians, many quite lately, since the Commissioners were here.

"I regret, in common with every white settler here, that nothing was done by the Commissioners when they were here last spring. Their attention was called to the matter, but they said they had nothing to do with putting Mr. Munro into possession of his property, and now the Indians are bolder than ever. * * * I have not seen them (the Indians), nor do I think it advisable that I should. Some very energetic measures will have to be taken, and until what course is decided on it is as well to leave them alone."

Mr. Munro comments on that letter as follows :—

"They claim and hold it as part of the reserve. It has never been out of their possession.

"The Commissioners did nothing beyond assigning to the Indians part of my land as a grave-yard. The whole question has been left entirely unsettled as it was. The reasons, if any, for this are difficult to comprehend.

"In their report the Commissioners say simply that their views were altered, and that they had determined on ignoring the Indian possession altogether.

"In another report they say that the Indians should be turned off, regardless of all consideration and consequences; while admitting elsewhere in the same report, that the Indians had made considerable improvements, having built houses on and cultivated and fenced portions of the land, thus increasing the difficulty and hardship of removing them, and that the attempt to do so may cause trouble and perhaps bloodshed."

In a letter dated 3rd March, 1879, T. J. Skinner, Esq., J.P., Cowichan, to A. Munro, writes:

"I do not know if you are aware that an old Indian graveyard on your land was, last summer, staked off by the surveyor, under orders of Indian Commissioner, as their reserve."

Now, Sir, I will read a general statement made by Mr. Munro:

"The purchase was made originally with the view of the land being settled on and occupied as a farm, not by me, but by a family then desirous to come from Scotland for that purpose. I did not know until afterwards that the Indians had any claim upon it, that they had not consented to its sale, or were opposed to its alienation from themselves.

"In consequence of their determined hostility (which continues to this day) it became necessary ultimately, at no small loss and inconvenience, to abandon the hope of the land being occupied by those for whom it had been intended.

"Thereupon I had to relieve them from the purchase, and to assume the whole risk and burden as my own, ever since then paying the yearly taxes and other expenses, which now, in the aggregate, amount to a considerable sum, and having, besides, a great deal of trouble and anxiety about the matter from first to last.

"By my own exertions, and through the instrumentality of the proper authorities from time to time, I have, during the whole period, done all in my power to obtain possession of the land, or fair compensation in lieu of it, but without success hitherto; and thus I have been wrongfully deprived all these years of both the land and the money paid for it.

"Had I undisturbed possession (which, however, seems to be unattainable) I could have sold the land; but the opportunity of selling has been lost repeatedly, for no one will purchase such a disputed title.

"It is needless to recapitulate the facts given in the accompanying memorandum. In the face of them all it must be evident that the Indians had sufficient grounds for defending their property, that they have complete possession, and have made extensive improvements; that it would be very difficult, as well as a hardship and injustice, to remove them; and that if the attempt be made they will again strenuously resist it—eventualities all demanding the most serious consideration of the Government.

"In these circumstances, the wonder is, that the Commissioners did not, as they might so easily and properly have done, arrange this important question amicably. Clearly from their own statements they were about to do so, but, for some insufficient cause, their 'views were altered' and they 'determined to ignore the Indian possession altogether,' at the same time ignoring my helpless position, and allowing me to be the sufferer. This was, no doubt, for the Commissioners, the easiest and simplest way of treating the difficulty. But was it commendable in them to leave so grave a matter unsettled?

"The reasons for this 'alteration of views' on their part, so far as explained in their Reports, were, it must be said, sentimental and evasive rather than weighty.

"The question of a settlement or no settlement by peaceable means, is not, however, and should not be, a matter of little consequence to the country, the Government, or myself. It is really more than a matter of sentiment, theory or caprice on the part of one or two of the Commissioners.

"Undisturbed possession cannot possibly be had in defiance of the Indians. If, regardless of the difference between right and wrong, they should be forcibly expelled without consideration for their rights and property, they will assuredly re-enter and retaliate at the first opportunity, and a continuance of force will thus be indispensable to keep them in subjection. But this (to say nothing of its general unsatisfactoriness) would be a costly process, many times more so in all probability than would be an honorable settlement by peaceable means.

"Instead then of recklessly going to extremities that, besides being costly, would probably end in 'bloodshed' as the Commissioners forecast, would it not be infinitely better, in every view, to do promptly what the Commissioners, when under the guidance of their better judgment, were about to do 'as expedient to the settlement of the whole question' (using their own language)—but from the doing of which they weakly allowed themselves to be diverted—viz., to redeem the land by a fair reimbursement of my outlays, and then magnanimously give (confirm) it to the Indians, or make it otherwise beneficial to them, as they be most advisable?

"Such a settlement of the difficulty (essentially fair to all parties) is the only one that can reasonably be expected to be either permanent or satisfactory; while the alternative of expulsion and repudiation of Indian rights, if adopted, must lead to a disgraceful and disastrous failure.

"There would appear to be only the two alternatives—either to give me unmolested possession of the property (which is clearly impracticable, looking at all that it involves) with fair compensation for the loss already sustained by my exclusion from it for so many years, or to redeem the land by reimbursing my outlays upon it with interest at a moderate rate.

"It is to be hoped that the more humane and reasonable alternative will prevail.

"Respectfully submitted by
"ALEX. MUNRO."

"Victoria, B.C., 29th Nov., 1879."

I have some further correspondence that I will read to the House:

"Hon. J. W. Trutch,
" &c., &c., &c."

"VICTORIA, 14th September, 1880.

"DEAR SIR,—Having been informed that instructions have been sent here by the Dominion Government (Indian Affairs Department) for a conference between the Provincial Government, yourself, and Superintendent Powell, with a view to a settlement of my claim in regard to land at Cowichan purchased and paid for by me, but which is occupied by Indians, I beg to inquire respectfully whether any instructions have been received by you, and if so, when the conference is likely to be held or a settlement made.

"The nature of the case and the delay that has already occurred will, I trust, be a sufficient excuse for my troubling you about it.

"I have the honor to be,
"Your very obedt servant,
"ALEX. MUNRO."

To this Mr. Trutch sends the following reply:—

"VICTORIA, B.C., 14th September, 1880.

"SIR,—I am directed by Mr. Trutch to acknowledge the receipt of your letter to him of this day's date, and to state that Mr. Trutch has already conferred on the subject matter of this letter with the Indian Commissioner, Dr. Powell, and with the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works of this Province, the Hon. Mr. Walkem, but he is not aware of any authorization having been issued by the Dominion Government for the settlement of the case.

"I have, etc.,
"H. S. ROSSUCK,
"Secretary."

Mr. Munro then addressed a letter to Lieut.-Col. Powell, Indian Superintendent at Victoria:

"VICTORIA, 16th September, 1880.

"DEAR SIR,—In answer to inquiries made concerning the delay in settling my claim with regard to land in Cowichan occupied by Indians (heretofore brought under your notice). I have been informed by a letter dated the 2nd ult., from Mr. Vankoughnet, Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, to Mr. DeCosmos, that 'on the 20th of February last instructions were sent to Victoria, B.C., for a conference to be held on the matter between the Local Authorities, the Agent of the Dominion Government, and the Indian Superintendent at that place, with a view to a report being furnished this department on the subject of Mr. Munro's claim,' and that as no report had then reached the department 'a letter was addressed on the 26th ult., calling attention to the previous communication on the subject and requesting an early reply.'

"In these circumstances I beg to inquire respectfully whether those instructions have been received by you, and whether, if the conference has been held a report has been or will soon be furnished to the department as requested. I am, of course, anxious that this matter, which has hitherto put me to serious loss and trouble, be brought to a settlement without further unnecessary delay, and hope you will excuse the present application.

"I have the honor to be,
"Your very obedt. servant,
"Lieut. Col. Powell,
"Indian Superintendent,
"Victoria."
"ALEX. MUNRO."

Mr. Powell replies as follows:—

"INDIAN OFFICE,
"VICTORIA, B.C., 16th Sept., 1880.

"SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of even date, stating that you had been informed that 'on the 20th of February last instructions were sent to Victoria, B.C., for a conference to be held on the matter between the Local Authorities, the Agent of the Dominion Government, and the Indian Superintendent at that place, with a view to a report being furnished' the department on the subject of your claim; also, that a letter was addressed on the 26th ult., calling attention to the previous communication and requesting a reply.

"In reply, I have to state that no instructions from the hon. Superintendent General, in regard to the subject of your letter, have, as yet, come to my hand, no conference has therefore, so far as I am aware, been held upon the matter, and hence no joint report has been, up to the present time, furnished the department in the manner referred to in your letter.

"I have, etc.,
"J. W. POWELL,
"Indian Superintendent."

Mr. Munro then addresses the following letter to Mr. Trutch:—

"VICTORIA, B.C., 17th September, 1880.

"SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th inst., in answer to mine of the same date.

"As you inform me that you have conferred on the subject in question with the Hon. Mr. Walkem and with Mr. Superintendent Powell, I beg to inquire whether it is your intention to make a joint report with those gentlemen at an early date, as seems to be expected at Ottawa, and whether, if so, or in the event of your reporting separately on the case, the purport of the report will be communicated to me.

"I need hardly say that this long-standing difficulty is of not less public than private import, and that in view of the serious loss and trouble it has so long inflicted on me personally, I am anxious to have it properly settled without unnecessary delay.

"I have the honor to be

"Your obedient servant,

"Hon. J. W. Trutch,

"Agent Dominion Government, etc., etc.

"ALEX. MUNRO."

Mr. Roebuck replies:

"VICTORIA, B.C., 17th September, 1880.

"SIR,—In reply to your further letter to Mr. Trutch in reference to your land at Cowichan, I am directed by Mr. Trutch to state that he has not been directed to make a report on this subject conjointly with the Superintendent of Indian Affairs and the hon. the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works, and that he is not in a position to communicate to you the opinions he has formed upon the questions involved.

"I have to add that Mr. Trutch sincerely regrets the loss and trouble you represent your having suffered in this matter, and that it would give him great satisfaction to be able to assist in a settlement of this long standing difficulty, but that he does not exercise any executive functions in relation to the Department of Indian Affairs in this Province.

"I have, etc..

"(Signed) H. S. ROEBUCK,

"Secretary."

Mr. Munro also addressed the following letters to me:—

"VICTORIA, B.C., 30th August 1880.

"Hon. A. DeCosmos, M.P.,
"Ottawa."

"DEAR SIR—Since writing and telegraphing you on the 9th ultimo in response to your favor of 23rd June, I have received your telegram of the 6th inst., and several notes dated 17th and 25th July and 6th inst., the latter enclosing Mr. Vankoughnet's letter to you of the 2nd idem, all regarding my unfortunate Cowichan land business, and I beg to thank you warmly for your kind attention and promise of future advocacy if necessary.

"I fear there will yet be occasion to trouble you before the matter is settled. You will have observed from Mr. Vankoughnet's letter that, in so far as he is concerned, the business is no further advanced than it was at the beginning, that is to say, he disputes the claim as agent of the Dominion Government, and wishes to throw it on the Province. How the gentleman can thus 'go back' on all that has been written, said, and done, I am at a loss to understand, seeing that you yourself, last year, and Mr. Walkem, early this year, were personally assured by the chiefs at Ottawa—as the result of it all—that the claim would be settled immediately in the way you both recommended, convinced as they were of the justice and expediency of this under the exceptional circumstances of the case.

"In again raising, in the face of this, the point put forward in his letter, Mr. Vankoughnet seems to overlook the essential fact that this is not a question merely as to the obligation of the Province to furnish the Dominion Government with a certain quantity of land for the use of Indians, but is the far more grave and difficult question of depriving Indians of a particular piece of land which they claim as a valuable part of their reserve, and which has never yet been out of their possession notwithstanding repeated efforts (short of actual violence) made to remove them.

"Mr. Vankoughnet says that, so far as he can see, my claim should be against the Local and not the Dominion Government. The Local Government think differently. Their reasons have been explained by Mr. Walkem and yourself at Ottawa to the satisfaction of Sir John Macdonald as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and thereupon the Premier, at different times within the past 18 months, gave both yourself and Mr. Walkem to understand that the claim would be settled in accordance with your views of it. Clearly, it is a case for the Governments to settle. It is not right to keep such a matter in suspense for years, neither is it right nor creditable, after what has transpired as stated above, that the question of responsibility should still be open to dispute, if it really be so.

"Though not a little surprised and disappointed at the present state of matters, I shall at once wait on the Executive and the Indian Superintendent here, for the purpose of urging them, as earnestly as I can, to move effectually. I acquainted you, at the time, that the Superintendent himself, so lately as last October, on returning from Cowichan, acknowledged to me in the fullest manner that the Indians were 'completely in possession' of the land. What is wanted? Surely not a conflict with the Indians, which, besides being expensive to the Dominion, would be otherwise unsatisfactory and reprehensible; for, to quote the language of the late Indian Reserve Commissioners in their official reports to the Government, the land in question 'cuts directly into the general reserve. The Indians have made considerable improvements on the land, thus increasing the difficulty and hardship of removing them, and it is possible that the enforcement of the law (any attempt to remove them by force) may cause trouble and perhaps bloodshed.'

"I need not say any more at present, but beg to refer to my memorandum of 29th November last, a copy which I had the pleasure of handing to you here.

Mr. DeCosmos,

"On ascertaining the result of my intended application to the Government and Indian Superintendent, if not sooner, I shall avail myself of your permission to write again. Meantime, apologizing for this trouble, and again thanking you for your kind assistance which, I beg to assure you, is highly appreciated.

"I remain, dear Sir,

"Yours faithfully,

"ALEX. MUNRO."

"VICTORIA, B.C., 20th September, 1880.

"Hon. A. DeCosmos, M.P.

"DEAR SIR,—With reference to my letter of 30th ult., I now beg to say that I have since had several interviews on the subject with the Hon. Messrs. Walkem and Beaven and Mr. Superintendent Powell, and with the latter gentleman and Hon. Mr. Trutch I have also had some correspondence, copy of which is enclosed.

"I have done all I possibly could in urging these several parties to deal effectually with the case, but to little purpose, I am sorry to say, in consequence of not having been able to trace the instructions which Mr. Vankoughnet, in his letter to you of 2nd ult., says were sent here under date 20th February and 26th July last. Unfortunately he does not state to whom they were addressed—saying only that 'on the 20th February, instructions were sent to Victoria, B.C., for a conference to be held,' etc., etc., and that as no report has reached the department, 'a letter was addressed on the 26th inst. (July), calling attention to the previous communication and requesting an early reply.' These instructions have not reached the Local Government or Superintendent Powell, as you will see by the Superintendent's letter enclosed. From Mr. Trutch's letter it would be seen that he does not say whether any instructions were received by him or not, although I made the inquiry.

"In the circumstances the members of the Government and Superintendent Powell have felt themselves powerless to do anything. Mr. Trutch has probably, on some occasion, mentioned the matter in a casual way to both parties separately, but it seems that there has not been any 'conference' held on the subject, and consequently there is no report forthcoming, in accordance with the instructions quoted by Mr. Vankoughnet. Undoubtedly Mr. Trutch has reported alone or will do so.

"If therefore (notwithstanding the previous resolution to settle the case, come to by Sir John Macdonald first with yourself in 1879, and subsequently with Mr. Walkem in 1880), a joint conference and report be really wanted, definite instructions to that effect should be issued immediately to each of the parties. If Mr. Trutch has reported, or prefers to act separately, the other two gentlemen, viz., Messrs. Walkem and Powell, will, no doubt, readily confer and report, either conjointly or separately, on being requested to do so.

"It is not for me, I think, to discuss the argument now mooted by Mr. Vankoughnet, side by side with the 'instructions for a conference and report,' viz., that, as my payment was made to the Local Government, and as that Government is under obligation to furnish all the land required for the use of Indians, therefore my claim should be against the Local Government.

"If it be really necessary to traverse that ground again, yourself and Mr. Walkem are far more capable and competent to do it. But I am still under the impression that this has already been done conclusively, and that it was after full consideration of the exceptional circumstances of the case that Sir John Macdonald agreed with both you and Mr. Walkem to a settlement of it—some of those considerations being, that when the transaction took place this Province was a Crown Colony; that under the present altered Constitution it would be a complicated and difficult, not to say impossible, process to obtain re-payment; and that the alternative of ejecting the Indians by force, in order to give me quiet possession of the land (an attempt which, according to the opinion of the late Indian Reserve Commissioner, expressed in an official report, 'might cause trouble and perhaps bloodshed') would be not only undesirable, but also a costly duty devolving on the Dominion Government, which it would be, on the whole, most advisable to obviate by discharging my claim on the reasonable footing proposed.

"As pointed out in my last letter to you, it should be carefully remembered that this is not a question as to the Province furnishing a little more or less land for Indians, but that it is the very different question of depriving Indians by compulsion of a particular piece of land on which they have made considerable improvements in buildings and fencing, &c.; which they prize as a valuable part of their reserve; and which has never been out of their possession, notwithstanding repeated efforts—only short of actual force—made to remove them, all as shown in former correspondence.

"Will you kindly do the useful in this apparently interminable troublesome matter, and if possible induce the Government to take an earnest practical view of it, and come to a final decision? The delay, as you well know, is injurious in many ways, and not to me only—is so, for even in Indian estimation, it is a disadvantage and is irreparable to all concerned to have such a dispute with Indians so long unsettled.

"I am, dear Sir,

"Yours faithfully,

"ALEX. MUNRO."

I have been induced to ask the indulgence of the House in order that this matter may be placed where it can be readily reached by hon. members. The very lengthy correspondence that I have read, gives a clear idea of the grievance of Mr. Munro. I will state that about two years ago the Deputy Minister of Ontario, the Deputy Minister of Justice and myself, had a conversation about this matter, and it was understood the Government would pay Mr. Munro what was considered value for his land. When Mr. Walkem was here last year an arrangement was made by the Minister of the Interior that Mr. Walkem, Superintendent Powell and Mr. Trutch, Indian Agent, should report on the case for the information of the department. Dr. Powell says that no instructions were sent to the department here, and he denies there was any conference on the subject, though Mr. Trutch asserts there was. Mr. Vankoughnet says he referred the matter to Dr. Powell in February, and in August. Mr. Trutch made a separate report, I am informed. I asked Mr. Vankoughnet if such a report was sent in with reference to Mr. Munro's claim. He told me it had. I asked then to see it. He said he could not let me see it without the permission of the Minister. So I was unable to see the report. On October 16th last, I believe, I received from Mr. Vankoughnet, on behalf of Mr. Munro, a letter stating that the Superintendent of Indian Affairs had instructed him to say that Mr. Munro's only course was to assert his right in a Court. That is the last official communication respecting this matter that has come under my notice. Now, Mr. Munro has fairly stated the case as to the danger of using force to recover his land; and I may draw the attention of the House to the fact that the Indian nation interested in the matter number 38 tribes, with a total number of 2,964. In case force was used, an Indian difficulty might arise, entailing serious results. The Indians are spread over the country from Fuca straits to North of Nanaimo, 140 miles, and along the coast, from Westminster to near Bute Inlet, 150 miles more. I think that the only course the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs can pursue, in order to do justice to Mr. Munro and not irritate the Indians, would be to purchase this land, pay the price Mr. Munro paid for it in 1859, and, give him a moderate interest on the amount for the intervening period. If that were done the Government need not pass the land to the reserve, but might compel the Indians upon it to pay rent for it equal to the interest of the purchase money paid to Mr. Munro.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose my hon. friend and colleague from British Columbia, who has felt it his duty to move in this matter, in the interest of Mr. Munro, will be satisfied, after having made his explanations, to leave it before the country and the House. The report of Mr. Trutch is of a confidential nature, and cannot be brought down. The object of the Government in engaging his services, was to secure a confidential report with reference to all Dominion interests in British Columbia. It would destroy his influence if his confidential report were laid before the House. But all the reports made by the head of the department and the chief executive officers will be brought down. I take it that the object of my hon. friend's motion was merely to lay Mr. Munro's case before the House. His case is simply this: Twenty-one years ago Sir Jas. Douglas, then Governor of British Columbia, sold Mr. Munro this lot, which he found an eligible one, and for which he paid. Everybody knows that Sir Jas. Douglas was thoroughly conversant with the rights of the Indians on the Island and the mainland. He must have been satisfied that this lot which he sold belonged to British Columbia, and that he, as representative of the sovereign, had a right to sell it. At that time there was no pretence that the Indians were squatting upon it. Munro might have gone into possession of the lot, but did not. He may have bought it for another, or may not have liked to occupy it, on account of the proximity of the Indians.

Mr. DECOSMOS. The person in Scotland for whom it was purchased did not come out at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, then, the Indians squatted on it, and now he claims that we should expel the Indians and pay him what he paid 21 years ago. interest besides, and all the expenses of travelling and so forth. The Commissioners appointed to consider the claim reported as my hon. friend (Mr. DeCosmos) has read, that the Indians had no case, and that Munro had no case and should be left to assert his remedy in Court. The matter came before my predecessor, the Minister of the Interior, who upheld that report, and came to the conclusion that, if Munro's title-deed gave him the land, all he had to do was to attest his rights, that if the British Columbian authorities sold that land when it really belonged to the Indian reserve, it was for the British Columbians to reimburse Munro his expenditure in connection with land they had no right to sell. That was the position of the matter when I came into office. My Commissioners reported that Munro had a right to recover the land under his deed, and should be left to his legal remedy. It was, however, represented to me by my hon. friend and Munro that there would be a collision with the Indians if legal proceedings were taken to expel them from this farm, and, possibly, bloodshed. Of course, all will agree that that result was to be avoided by every possible means. After discussing the subject with Mr. Walkem, I asked him to look into the matter, to confer with Messrs. Powell and Trutch, in the first place, and ascertain whether the Indians really had any original claim to this farm as an Indian reserve; to see if it was the duty of British Columbia to compensate Munro for the loss of his farm, and if, on the other hand, there would be danger of an angry collision with the Indians if that land was taken from them, and if the Indian reserve was insufficient. It seems that the Indians not only squatted upon it, but made it an Indian graveyard; and it is known that they pay great respect to the resting-place of their relatives. Mr. Walkem was asked to consider, in fact, whether the Indians ought to get this land, or were restricted in their reserve. If that should be found the case, I would not hesitate to come to Parliament for a grant to pay Munro a reasonable price for his land, and supposing it to be in the public interest to buy it and add it to the present Indian reserve. I would therefore suggest that these gentlemen should meet, and I think that really the Province of British Columbia has no intention or desire either of maintaining the title of Mr. Munro, or of compensating him for it, if it should be proved that it belongs to the Indians. Mr. Munro, however, by making this enormous claim is in fact defeating his own object; but if the land is his he has a right to appeal to the Courts there, and it is the bounden duty of the Province of British Columbia and of the Courts there to give him his land. If, however, after the whole matter is discussed, the conclusion should be come to that it would be best all round that the Dominion should buy the land and add it to the reserve, the land would have to be acquired at its present value, and not by going back and paying interest for a period of twenty-one years.

Mr. DECOSMOS. You would gain by going back.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must say I have my doubts about land in the Cowichan Valley being worth $15 per acre. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. DeCosmos) would care to invest in very much of it at that price. The late Minister of the Interior, I may say, came to the conclusion that the report of the Commissioners was correct, and I came to the same conclusion. At the same time I will follow the matter up, and if I find that this land should be bought for the sake of peace, and that the Indians really want to acquire it as is strongly alleged by those who attend to the interests of the Indians. I should not hesitate to come to Parliament and ask for the amount necessary at a reasonable valuation of the land.

Mr. BUNSTER. I am surprised to hear the member for Victoria (Sir John A. Macdonald) express a doubt that the land in the Cowichan Valley is worth $15 an acre. His statement simply shows his want of information; and I, as a member from that part of British Columbia, cannot allow such a wholesale misrepresentation of the lands in the Cowichan Valley to pass unnoticed.

Mr. ANGLIN. How many acres are there?

Mr. BUNSTER. Considerable. Not being a surveyor, I cannot tell the hon. gentleman exactly; but I wish to tell the hon. member for Victoria (Sir John A. Macdonald) that there are lands there as well worth $100 an acre as one dollar is worth another.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. How many acres are there?

Mr. BUNSTER. About 200. There is plenty of land in that valley which you cannot buy for $10 per acre, and upon which the proprietors are making far more than the interest on that amount. There are many of our industrious farmers who make from $40 to $50 an acre upon their lands, and that simply by their own labor, without counting the cost of extra help. I am surprised and sorry at the remarks of the First Minister, and I only hope that he will come out and see our country for himself, so that he may be able to form correct judgments about it.

Mr. DECOSMOS. I take it that this Parliament employs the Ministry to do its work, and I think that Parliament has a right to require reports of any business which the Ministry may transact—and especially a departmental matter such as this one is. From the manner in which the First Minister has spoken of the character of Mr. Trutch's relations to the Government, we must infer that Mr. Trutch has been sent out to British Columbia as a spy, with a view of his prying into any little matters which may happen in that Province, and reporting to the Government thereon. I think it would be better for the Government to appoint honest, capable and responsible men as its officers, so as to do away with the necessity of appointing a person as a spy upon matters which may happen there and then to report to the Minister, without one being able to see his reports. I certainly condemn all such arrangements, and upon a motion upon which I intend to speak at a later period, I shall take occasion to speak a little more plainly and a little more fully upon the matter. If, however, the hon. Minister will say that he will send out instructions to Mr. Walkem and Mr. Powell to hear evidence upon and examine into the whole question and report upon it, the matter will be advanced one stage in the right direction. But I certainly do not feel disposed to withdraw the motion, especially in face of the fact that Mr. Vankoughnet wrote a letter to me on behalf of Mr. Munro, which was really based on the report which I now ask shall be brought down. And now we have the statement made by the head of the department, who has charge of Indian affairs, to the effect that Mr. Munro should have recourse to the Courts of law, and there assert his right before the House can get a document on which the letter I have referred to was based, on the instructions given by the hon. Minister, I, for one, protest against such proceeding, and I shall continue to do so until the time arrives when I shall see spies and confidential reporters on behalf of the Government driven from the shores of British Columbia. So far as the remarks of the hon. Minister about the price of land in the Cowichan Valley are concerned, Mr. Munro has no objection to referring the question of price to competent judges or arbitrators. I may also remind the hon. Minister that I presented a certificate from two responsible land agents stating that they could sell the land at $15 per acre, and I know myself that the land in question is as good a piece of land as there is in that part of the Province.

Hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. BUNSTER.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope my hon. friend will consent to withdraw his motion. I regret that he should have used the language he chose to use with respect to Mr. Trutch, a gentleman who is respected by everybody who knows him—a gentleman in the best sense of the word. On account of his experience and his interest on the subject, we sent him there as a confidential agent with respect to various great interests which the Dominion have in that Province. My hon. friend has himself been a Minister, and he knows that the confidence in such cases is what gives value to the report, and that such a person can give valuable confidential information to a Government—information which would be valueless, but that it is confidential. Such reports are for the purpose of supplying information upon various interests free from the possibility of its being afterwards properly or improperly used by persons whose interests might be affected by those reports. Of course the Government are responsible for all their acts, no matter under what advice, and the Government must assume the responsibility in the present case. I hope, however, the hon. gentleman will not press his motion.

Mr. BLAKE. While I agree with the hon. gentleman upon the question that a Government may, upon proper occasions, employ a confidential agent, still it seems to me that his general proposition is one which is open to considerable observation. If it is understood that they have a gentleman employed in the public service in British Columbia, who is to act as confidential agent with reference to all things which may take place there, to receive confidential instructions from the Government, and make confidential investigations and reports of them, I think that is new machinery to our system of government altogether. As to the particular subject in hand, which has been exposed to us at great length, and with much lucidity, by both the hon. members for Victoria, I really fail to apprehend what there could be confidential in the nature of their report. You find various reports from various public officers, and you find the matter in dispute stated, and why we should have these high questions of confidence and non-confidence, and secret communications, with Mr. Trutch's opinion on the question, one fails to understand. One is much indisposed to question a statement made by the Government if it is not in the public interest to be brought down; but when that statement is made as the hon. Minister now makes it, because he has got a confidential officer there, and all these reports must be secret, then I must say, it seems to me to be rather extraordinary. I did not know we had any such officers in our service, unless they be attached directly or indirectly to the Excise Department.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will not enter into the general question just now, but I will just mention to the hon. gentleman one reason why this report should not be brought down: it is because this report brings up to a considerable degree the delicate question of the relations between the Indians and the Government in British Columbia.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is all settled.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; it is not, unfortunately.

Motion withdrawn.

TELEGRAPH LINE FROM NEW WESTMINSTER TO YALE.

Mr. BLAKE moved for the advertisements for tenders for the building of the telegraph line from New Westminster to Yale, copies of the tenders received therefor, and of the written action thereon; also, for copies of any reports by, or letters from, Mr. Gisborne, Inspector of Dominion Telegraphs, or Mr. Wilson, or any other officer, on the subject of that telegraph line; also, for copies of any papers connected with the arrangement under which it was constructed, and a detailed statement of the cost, with the names of the persons employed, their residences at the time of hiring, and the sums paid to them for travelling expenses and wages during their journey; also, copy of the contract for the poles; also, copies of any letters or reports as to the line since its construction disclosing its defects; like papers with reference to the telegraph line from Point Atkinson to New Westminster. Also, all letters and papers with reference to the break in the telegraph cable in British Columbia, its attempted repair, the arrangements for a ferry to replace it and the cost thereof. He said: The information which I have received on this subject, and which induces me to make this motion, is to the effect that tenders were invited by the former resident engineer in British Columbia, for the construction of a line from New Westminster to Yale. Two tenders were received, one at $26 a mile, and the other at $28. Subsequently the Inspector of Dominion Telegraphs arrived and went over part of the line, and condemned the system of letting it by tender and determined to adopt another course. In pursuance of that other course, during the winter, the contract was let to one Ryder to furnish the poles, the number being much in excess of the number required, thirty-five poles to the mile I believe, while twenty-seven was the proper rate. Instead of carrying out the arrangement for letting by tender an arrangement was made whereby Mr. Gisborne, jun., and two more persons residing in the Maritime Provinces, were employed and sent all the way out from the east unto the west, at a very great cost to the Administration, to do this work by job, they being hired for a certain time to do this and some other work. The transaction is said to be not satisfactory, pecuniarily or otherwise. The work was very expensive, and while it was to have been done in two months, it took five months. It was unsatisfactory as to the location, in some places it was put up at points where the poles were washed away by high water. Then not merely were the poles placed too close together, but the wire was strung too tight, the result was that it was broken, I am told, in hundreds of places when the frost came. Considerable expense was incurred in repairing the breakage, and this expense will continue until the wire is slackened. The same gang of men was employed to build the line from Point Atkinson to New Westminster, and that also was done much more expensively than was necessary. With reference to the cable, it is said there was considerable mismanagement in the laying of it. It would seem, from a statement I have, as well as from a public statement, that the cable was not laid at the proper time, and that it must have been either badly laid, or there must have been a short supply. It is said that operation is also extremely unsatisfactory. I do not vouch for the accuracy of all these statements, but I give them as they were made to me from, I believe, a reliable authority. I consider they furnish sufficient justification for this motion, and require some explanation.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Of course, I was not aware of the details which the hon. gentleman has just laid before the House. I endeavored to obtain information on the subject of his motion, but unfortunately the officer on whom I relied to give me that information was so ill as to be unable to furnish me with it. The other officer, Mr. Gisborne, was in British Columbia attending to this matter, and could not give the information. As in the case of other public works, there may have been some difficulties in the way. The cable laid in the Straits of Georgia was found to be too short, but the end was buoyed up, and the matter is now being looked into, and I have no doubt that before long a cable will be laid across those straits. With regard to the repairs on the line near New Westminster, the officer there, Mr. Wilson, I think, enjoyed specially the confidence of Mr. Gisborne, the head of the branch of the department, and when the papers are brought down the hon. gentleman will see that the pay of that officer is small compared with the services he has performed. Of course, I do not know the hon. gentleman's source of information. Persons dissatisfied because they did not obtain employment may have made complaints to his correspondent. But I am very glad the hon. gentleman has given me this opportunity of making this statement, and before the Estimates are passed I hope to be in a position to give him more detailed information which will satisfy him that all possible precautions were taken to save the public money.

Motion agreed to.

SPECIFIC GRAVITY OF COAL OIL.

Mr. BLAKE moved for copies of all correspondence, statements and representations upon which the Government acted in proposing the legislation of 1879 and also the Legislation of 1880, as to the specific gravity of coal oil used for illuminating purposes; and for copies of any correspondence, statements and representations on the subject of the operation of either of the said Acts, and any suggestions received as to the amendment of the present Act in that respect. He said: There are, at least, four ways in which the people of this country have been vexed in regard to their light. There is a duty on crude petroleum, there is a duty on the refined article; and there has recently been a modification of the safety test, with regard to which there is a question whether it was not framed so as to give a further advantage to the producers of Canadian oil over the producers of American oil. The fourth circumstance which affects the price of coal oil is a provision which appears to have slipped into the Statute-book unnoticed. I was not in the House in the Session when it was first enacted. I have looked, however, at our journals and the official debates, and I have found that the resolution on which the Bill of 1879 was introduced and the speech of the then Minister of Inland Revenue, Mr. Baby, had no reference to a prohibition to sell or use for illuminating purposes oil exceeding a certain specific gravity. On the contrary, the report of his speech shows that it was designed to make the test of flashing for the safety of burning oil, and the test of specific gravity is in relation to quality. But it got into the Bill without debate or comment of any kind that I can see. I recollect very well the circumstances attending the measure passed last Session. There was a considerable amount of investigation going on during the Session on the subject of the flash test. A motion was on the paper by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) from an early period. There was an indication on the part of the Administration that they were about to propose a modification on that subject, and towards the end of the Session, when it was exceedingly difficult to discuss anything, resolutions were brought forward. These resolutions did not themselves deal with the subject of specific gravity; but in the Bill, which, if I remember rightly, was read the second time, committed and read the third time, in the space of five minutes, a clause was introduced altering the law as to specific gravity. Whereas the Act of 1869 had provided that no oil should be sold with a specific gravity exceeding 807, the law so changed provided that no oil should be sold with a specific gravity exceeding 802. The consequences of that change were extremely serious. First of all, I inquire why illuminating oil is prohibited from being sold if it exceeds a certain specific gravity. From what I have heard in this House, or from the oil refiners themselves, I conclude that the safety of the oil has no relation to the specific gravity. It is a test, I understand, simply of quality, not of safety. Why, then, should we prohibit the public from obtaining an oil, inferior in illuminating quality if you please, but perfectly safe? It is contrary to the general principle on which it is proper to act with reference to staple commodities. We do not, as a rule, prohibit the public from acquiring what they wish to acquire, unless the public safety requires that there should be a restriction. The public safety does require a flash restriction, and the question is, what is the proper flash test? But the safety of the public does, in no sense, as far as I can ascertain, require this test of specific gravity. You are extending without cause the principle, and extending it in a manner which, I think, is wholly indefensible. What is the consequence of this extension? The consequence is that you are wasting a very great proportion of the crude oil, and you are increasing the expense of producing the refined oil. Our oil is naturally dense, much denser than the American oil. I have learned from refiners that it has been found extremely difficult to refine the oil up to the point of 820; not unfrequently does it require a second, perhaps a third refining, in order to get it to the point. The transaction involves, in the first place, a waste of a very considerable proportion of the crude oil, so that where out of a barrel of crude so many gallons of fair illuminating oil can be obtained, if you do not apply this prohibition, the yield will by virtue of the prohibition be reduced by several gallons. Secondly, it involves considerable additional expense in manufacture to produce oil of a gravity of 802. Therefore, as to quantity and expense of production, the legislation requires that more crude oil shall be used, and that greater expense shall be incurred by refiners to produce illuminating oil than is necessary. Were the Government to apply the principle of the General Inspection Act of 1874, and have illuminating oils inspected and graded, first, second and third class, the public would be protected; but it is wholly indefensible to prohibit the sale of that which may be useful to the public, and both diminish the quantity of refined you can get from a barrel of crude oil and increase the cost of producing refined oil. For these reasons I desire to know the true inwardness of this law, to know upon what representations the Government was induced to propose such an exceptional provision. I desire this information all the more because I observe in another branch of the Legislature this unfortunate Act is once more before us. A Bill has been introduced there altering again the Act of 1879. Therefore we will have the subject before us in a few days, by which time I hope this information may be made accessible.

Mr. ORTON. The remarks of the leader of the Opposition are very important. I fail likewise to see why this law should exist; I do not see why coal oil should not be graded the same as flour, fish or any other commodity. The effect of this law is no doubt to increase very largely the price of coal oil. I will ask the indulgence of the House while I read an extract from a letter I have received on this subject:

"If you desire to get coal oil at proper prices for the benefit of the consumer, when the Inspection Bill comes up get the clauses requiring it to be of a certain weight 8 lb. and 2-100ths struck out and get it graded like flour, fish, hides or any other inspected commodity. See 37 Vic., c. 48 (1874).

"This gravity business is the last kick of the thing who have been running the business for the last eight or nine years, and if upset will, I fancy, effectually stop them.

"I believe Mr. Atkins personally does not approve of gravity, so you have half of the battle won."

I certainly believe the writer is correct, and that the fact of keeping up this gravity test is one of the main elements in keeping up the price of coal oil.

Mr. COLBY. I am disposed to concur in the main with the observation made by the hon. member for West Durham. In the Bill which I introduced on this subject last year I did not think it necessary, in the interest of the public safety, to place any restriction with regard to the gravity of the oil. I proposed simply that a uniform test should be applied, and that test, from the information I could then obtain, I deemed to be sufficient. I have no more information than has my hon. friend as to the reasons which caused the gravity test to be introduced into the Government Bill. It may have been introduced on the representations of skilled persons, that the gravity of the oil, to a certain extent, concerns its safety. It is pretended by many refiners that it does, but I think there should be a broad margin. I do not think we should be prohibited from using oil, simply because it is of a certain gravity, unless it can be shown that it is unsafe. The argument of those who approve of the gravity test is that if the oil does not stand this test, it has a tendency to heat the metal, and consequently to affect the safety of the oil. That may be true to a certain extent. It would be well for the Government, before the Petroleum Act passes, to give special attention to that, and see whether a point cannot be fixed in which safety can be assured; but I think the principle of prohibiting people from using any staple commodity because it is not of the best quality, is an indefensible one. I cannot see any ground upon which it can be successfully defended. Let it be inspected and graded like any other article, if it be advisable, but not excluded.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. There is no correspondence such as the motion asks for. The Government in regard to the gravitation test was inspired, most likely, by three motives: first, the scientific one; next, the safety of the public, and, in the third place, a desire for protection. However, their chief care was public opinion, and if this principle of gravity was proved, as in the flash test, to operate in a manner to injure the public interest, it might be changed, perhaps, in some way. For my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition must know that in the Senate the Bill to secure the flash test in the inspection of petroleum was amended in the Senate, and that at present both American and Canadian oils were placed on a new footing. Later, however, when that Bill comes up in this House, I will be in a position to answer more thoroughly, on the part of the Government, the question which has been put.

Mr. BLAKE. There is no correspondence then to produce?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Then I withdraw my motion; but I take this opportunity of intimating that I will move an amendment to strike out the prohibitory clause as to specific gravity when the Bill comes before this House.

Motion withdrawn.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

HARBORS ON THE NORTH SHORE OF LAKE ERIE.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex), in moving for copies of reports of surveys for harbors made by the late John Lindsay, Esquire, C.E., on the north shore of Lake Erie between Point Pelee Reef and the mouth of the Detroit River, said: For several years past successive Administrations have admitted the necessity of a harbor in the neighborhood indicated by the motion. The subject has been brought under the notice of Parliament from time to time, with the result of the promise that, when the state of the public finances permitted, such a harbor would be created. Two or three years ago a gentleman was appointed as a Commissioner for our inland waters, and he laid before the Minister of Customs a report, which was placed on the Table of this House. In that report it is stated, among other important facts, that during the seven years, ending 1878, 250 wrecks occurred in that section of the lake between Point Pelee Reef and the mouth of the Detroit river, where it is proposed to establish a harbor.

Shipowners, underwriters and others interested in our inland navigation, have forwarded largely signed petitions to the Government, praying for a harbor in those waters. Some have petitioned for the harbor in one place, and some have preferred other places, not a few praying for the selection of Pelee Island. It is not for me to suggest at what place the harbor should be established. The Government have professional men and engineers competent to decide that point. But I think the information obtained on this subject has satisfied the Government of the necessity of such a harbor, and that something ought to be done in the direction desired, not merely in the interest of the people of Essex—because this is not a local question, but in the interest of our inland navigation. At a point where so many wrecks have occurred in so short a time, some protection should be afforded our shipping. I trust that the Minister of Public Works, who, I am satisfied, is desirous of doing all in his power to further the interests of the section from which I come, as well as those of every other portion of the country, will, when the necessary information is procured, see the importance of completing this work, and thereby affording protection to a very large section of our people, the mariners, who navigate our inland waters.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I thank the hon. gentleman for his opinion of my impartiality towards Ontario, as well as every other Province of the Dominion. That opinion is perfectly right. I do not look to the situation of any public work, but only to the requirements of the country. There has been a survey of the coast in question, and a report, I think—at all events there are notes of the engineer—from which I believe we can make out the result of his investigations. I cannot now say what the Government will do in the matter. Likely it would require a large sum to execute such a work. Though the finances of the country have improved largely of late, we cannot undertake in one year every public work that is necessary. We have to make a selection of the works most required. However, the matter will be investigated at the proper time. I have no objection to the motion.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. DECOSMOS moved for a copy of all reports made by Mr. J. W. Trutch, respecting a railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo, and between Emory and Burrard Inlet. He said: It is not my intention to dwell at any length on the subject of this motion. It is an important one with respect to the western Province, but I will reserve my remarks upon these two sections of the Pacific Railway until the Estimates are under consideration. We want, however, the reports that have been communicated to the Government by Mr. Trutch, to be laid on the Table of the House, in order that we may intelligently discuss the matter in Committee of Supply. In looking over the report of the Minister of Railways, I do not find a single utterance with respect to these two sections, nor do I find anything in the appendices of the Chief Engineer. Under such circumstances it is quite natural that we should ask for the evidence in the hands of the Government, coming from the special agent of the Government, Mr. Trutch, and I trust the Government will bring it down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no objection to this report.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. DECOSMOS moved for a return containing all the correspondence that has passed between the Government and Mr. J. W. Trutch, since January, 1880, respecting Indian affairs in the Province of British Columbia. He said: It is known that Mr. Trutch has corresponded with the Government on the subject of Indian affairs. It is known that he has made recommendations, and I know of no good and sufficient reason why his correspondence respecting Indian affairs should be withheld. There is good reason, on the contrary, why the correspondence should be laid on the Table of this House. I find in the Estimates that the sum of $26,788 has been paid down for Indians; and I find opposite the names of the Indian Commissioners the sum of $24,140, in all $50,928. When the Province of British Columbia entered Canada, I believe the maximum amount was about $500 or $1,000, and since Confederation has been adopted $50,528 have been put in the Estimates. I can assure the House the people of Columbia have no desire whatever to continue a system of expenditure in our country under which the Treasury will be depleted. The report sent by Mr. Trutch will, I hope, be brought down by the Government. But why Mr. Trutch should be selected instead of Col. Powell, an equally respectable, intelligent and well-educated gentleman, to make reports from British Columbia to the Department of the Interior, I do not know. In my opinion it is quite impossible that a person who is an irresponsible agent, as he appears to be from what we have heard to-day, should pass in reports influencing the affairs of a Province of the Dominion, and those reports not be laid before the House in due course. In dealing with the Estimates we want the fullest information that can be had, in order that we may deal with questions intelligently. Whether the reports are withheld or not, the agent of the Government has special objects in making his recommendations, and he recommends persons to fill offices which can be filled at a cheaper rate, with greater efficiency, than by the persons so recommended. I trust the report will be brought down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not going to discuss with the hon. gentleman whether the appointment of Mr. Trutch was a proper one or not. When that policy was submitted it was approved by Parliament and it will be maintained. As to the personal attack made by the hon. gentleman on Mr. Trutch, who is a man of high standing and unexceptionable character, I cannot understand the reason of it. As to this correspondence, any letter the submission of which will not be opposed to the public interest, I will bring down, but not a single letter which I think ought not to be brought down.

Mr. DECOSMOS. I was not aware that I made any personal attack on Mr. Trutch's character.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You called him a spy.

Mr. DECOSMOS. I called him that. The people of British Columbia call him a spy, and I represent the people who do so.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY LANDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. DECOSMOS moved for a copy of all reports, correspondence and telegrams between Mr. J. W. Trutch and the Government respecting railway lands in British Columbia. He said: I desire to offer some remarks regarding this motion in order that I may place before the House a subject which has previously engaged its attention. In moving this resolution I feel I have an unpleasant duty to perform; nevertheless, I am prepared to make the motion, and not shrink from the discharge of my public duty. During last Session the members for British Columbia were alarmed by a statement made that application had been made by Mr. Trutch for all the arable lands in British Columbia, and unless those lands were transferred to the Dominion Government, the railway subsidy, so called, would be withdrawn. I was asked to telegraph to the Government of British Columbia and endeavor to persuade the Government of that Province to consent to the demand made over the name of Mr. Trutch on behalf of the Dominion. I refused distinctly, knowing intimately the history of the union of British Columbia with the Dominion, and that the Government of Canada had no claim to any land within that Province, except within the railway belt, or to the same extent of land that might have been alienated by Crown grants or pre-emptions. They thought I was working against the interests of the Province, and that I should have joined with them in making such a recommendation. I am glad to say that, so far as I now know, the hon. members from that Province concur in what I said last Session, that the Government of Canada has no claim whatever on any land except those within the railway belt and those contiguous thereto, in order to make up what had been alienated by Crown patents or pre-emptions. In the next place, the question was presented to the Legislature of British Columbia, and that Legislature took a similar view to that which I have stated here. They passed an Act giving the Dominion of Canada everything to which it was entitled under the 11th section of the Terms of Union. The press took up the question and urged different views, not knowing the history of the railway clause in the Terms of Union, or the history of the railway land clause. Many people believed the claim was just, and almost persecuted the Local Government of the hour, seeking to embarrass them by pressing them to take a certain course. No longer ago than last November, some hon. gentlemen will recollect that a telegram flashed across the wires, stating that the claim had been renewed, and that unless the Government of the Province transferred the land, the railway land subsidy would be withdrawn. I have understood since, that that was a false statement; it was put forward, possibly, for some special purpose, but I have understood since that no such claim was made on behalf of the Dominion Government in the Province. During the present Session the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) deliberately stated in the House that a fraud had been perpetrated on the part of British Columbia when the land clause of the Treaty of Union was before Parliament. He went so far as to say that the Province had conspired with the Government of the day with the object of palming off poor lands for good lands. He went further, and declared his belief that the whole railway clause was in consequence void. Hence the question becomes an important one to British Columbia and an equally important one to the Dominion. It is desirable that no false information should be disseminated, deceiving the community and causing them to discuss subjects which have no foundation in fact. Now, Sir, I feel it is my duty to explain to this House the origin of the railway land clause in order that Parliament and the country may understand how it originated, and with that explanation I believe the country will be satisfied. I may premise that I gave considerable of my time during the last year to collect everything relating to this question that could be found in the Parliamentary library. Nothing escaped me, so far as I am aware, with respect to the land clause. Owing to the telegram I referred to, I caused the papers to be printed in order that they might be at my disposal, or at the disposal of this House, whenever occasion required. Now, Sir, let me draw the attention of the House to page 3 of this pamphlet, of which hon. gentlemen may get a copy. On page 3, and in section 11, clause 2, will be found the Terms of Union with British Columbia. It will be remembered that a claim has been sent in to the Government of British Columbia, that all lands found valueless within the railway belt, between Yellowhead Pass and Burrard Inlet, shall be made good from arable lands throughout the other portions of the Province. That clause reads as follows:—

“TERMS OF UNION.

“And the Government of British Columbia agree to convey to the Dominion Government, in trust, to be appropriated in such manner as Mr. DE COSMOS, the Dominion Government may deem advisable in furtherance of the construction of the said railway, a similar extent of public lands, along the line of railway throughout its entire length in British Columbia, not to exceed, however, twenty (20) miles on each side of said line, as may be appropriated for the same by the Dominion Government from the public lands in the North West Territories and the Province of Manitoba. Provided that the quantity of lands which may be held under pre-emption or by Crown grant within the limits of the tract of land in British Columbia to be so conveyed to the Dominion Government shall be made good to the Dominion from contiguous public lands; and provided further, that until the commencement, within two years as aforesaid, from the date of Union, of the construction of the said railway the Government of British Columbia shall not sell or alienate any further portions of the public lands of British Columbia in any other way, than under right of pre-emption, requiring actual residence of the pre-emptor on the land claimed by him. In consideration of the land so conveyed in aid of the construction of the said railway the Dominion Government agree to pay to British Columbia from the date of Union, the sum of 100,000 dollars per annum, in half-yearly payments in advance.”

In this I find nothing at all about the quality of the lands; all we find is the quantity of the lands—that they should not exceed 20 miles wide on each side of the railway, and that any lands sold under the provision for Crown grant or pre-emption should be made good from contiguous lands. Now, Sir, I wish to explain the origin of the railway clause. On page 1 of this pamphlet I read:

“TERMS PROPOSED BY BRITISH COLUMBIA TO CANADA IN 1870.

Sec. 2.—“The population of British Columbia shall, for the purpose of financial arrangements, be estimated at 120,000. British Columbia not having incurred debts equal to those of the other Provinces of the Dominion, shall be entitled to receive half-yearly, in advance, from the General Government, interest at the rate of five per centum, per annum, on the difference between the actual amount of its indebtedness at the date of Union, and the proportion of the public debt of Canada for 120,000 of the population of Canada at the time of Union.”

Sec. 3.—“The following sums shall be annually paid by Canada to British Columbia, for the support of the Local Government and Legislature, to wit:

“An annual grant of $35,000, and a further sum, equal to 80 cents per head, per annum, of the population; both payable half-yearly in advance, the population of British Columbia being estimated as aforesaid at 120,000. Such grant equal to 80 cents per head, to be augmented in proportion to increase of population, when such may be shown, until the population amounts to 400,000, at which rate such grant shall thereafter remain.”

“(Amendments proposed by the Legislative Council: ‘That the Government be respectfully requested to strike out the figures $35,000 and insert in lieu thereof $75,000.’) (‘That figures ‘400,000’ be altered to ‘1,000,000.’)

SUMMARY.

80 cents per head on 120,000 inhabitants	$96,000
Subsidy	35,000
Interest on difference of debt at 5 per cent.	82,000
	$213,000

Now, the summary of this provision amounts to this: eighty cents per head of 120,000 of a population, $96,000; subsidy, $35,000; interest on difference of debt at 5 per cent., $82,000; total, $213,000. These were the terms proposed by British Columbia through its delegates to the Dominion Government. Now, let me give you a truthful account of the reason those terms were changed. I read from page 4:

“To understand this question thoroughly, it is necessary to know the origin of the Railway Land clause of the Terms of Union.

“On reference to pages 1 and 11, it will be noticed that British Columbia proposed that her population for financial purposes be estimated at 120,000; ‘but finally agreed to accept the basis of the actual population, namely, 60,000.’ On the basis the subsidies stood (see page 2) as follows:—

5 per cent on difference between actual and allowed debt	$33,289 71
60,000 inhabitants at 80 cents per head	48,000 00
Annual subsidy	35,000 00

Total

That is all the subsidy the Government would agree to give, having reduced the population from 120,000 to 60,000.

“This total was nearly $100,000 less than the Legislature of British Columbia had authorized the delegates to accept. Unless that sum could be made up in some way, it was useless to continue the negotiations. As no expedient was at hand to make good the deficiency, the negotiations were adjourned till next day. Next morning, Sir George Cartier entered the Privy Council Chamber and stated that Parliament had offered Newfoundland $150,000 a year for ever for all her Crown lands, and that he proposed to give British Columbia $100,000 a year for ever for a belt of land not exceeding 20 miles in width on each side of the railway. This was promptly accepted and Mr. Trutch immediately drew up the Railway Land Clause.

"Any one who will carefully examine the Railway Land Clause on page 3, and recollect that Mr. Trutch drew it up, cannot but feel fully convinced that so well drawn a clause would have contained a provision providing for the selection of land 'suitable for farming or other valuable purposes' in lieu of lands, within the railway land belt that, 'on investigation,' might be found valueless, if such subject had been discussed between Sir George Cartier and himself.

"It will be seen, on page 4, that when Mr. Trutch moved in the Legislative Council the adoption of the Terms of Union, he said that 'he could not do better now than pass them in review and comment upon their relative advantages.' He stated that the nominal population of 120,000 was objected by the Canadian Government and was fixed at 60,000 as the basis of the financial portion of the terms, and that 'The railway subsidy was in return for a belt of land 20 miles on each side of the line of the road.' Not a word is mentioned about selecting good land any where throughout the Province for what might be found valueless in the belt. So the Railway Land Clause was accepted by the Legislative Council without inquiry and interpreted according to the true intent and meaning of words and sentences, although Mr. Trutch stated (page 4) that 'the delegates were present to explain the exact meaning of every clause as they understood it at the time of the making of the Terms.'"

Now, Sir, it was stated here that the Parliament of Canada had been deceived, and that there was no land there. With regard to that, I will direct your attention to another statement which appears here:

"The mountainous and sterile character of a large part of the Province was well known to the delegates, and to Mr. Trutch in particular; for he carried with him to Ottawa a copy of a map of the Province generally known as 'Trutch's Map,' intended for publication, which represented the country generally as a 'Sea of Mountains,' and which was taken to the photographer of the Public Works Department to be copied. The Dominion Government cannot, then, plead ignorance of the rough and mountainous character of the country."

I hold in my hand a copy of this map taken from the negative prepared in the Public Works Department in 1870. Anyone who looks at this map can see that fifty miles above Westminster there is a vast gorge in the mountains, and the whole line, as at present located, passes through high mountain ranges. The Government of 1870 were not deceived so far as the delegates were concerned, for they brought the original draft of this map here, and the negative remained ever since in the Public Works Department, where I found it. The map of May 9th, 1870, is inscribed thus:

"Map of British Columbia, compiled and drawn by J. B. Saunders at the Lands and Works office, Victoria, from the latest authentic information, under the direction of the Hon. J. W. Trutch, Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works, and Surveyor General."

When Mr. Trutch came here again, he brought with him a map with additions up to January, 1871, which is inscribed:

"Map of British Columbia, to the 56th parallel north latitude, compiled and drawn at the Lands and Works Office, Victoria, British Columbia, under the direction of the Hon. J. W. Trutch, M. Inst., C.E., F.R.G.S., Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works and Surveyor General, 1871."

Any one who looks at these maps will find that the Province represented on them is a sea of mountains. Then the question would arise, where was this fine, arable land to be found. In order to show that no deception on this point was imposed on the Parliament or people of Canada, I will read again:

"The fact is the Dominion did not want the lands. It was only an excuse to give the Province a subsidy sufficient to carry on its Government and make internal improvements—on the same principle as the $150,000 had been offered to Newfoundland. Mr. Anglin stated that 'the Minister of Customs had admitted that it was only an excuse to give the money, and that the lands were not wanted.' Any contention, therefore, at this day, about the quality of the land in the railway belt, is most mischievous.

"Sir Alexander Campbell, when he moved in the Senate the adoption of the address for the admission of British Columbia, stated very frankly the views of the Government as to the value of the railway lands as a source of revenue. He said: 'It will be remembered that, in the case of Newfoundland, we agreed to give her $150,000 per annum for land for ever. It was not believed in that case, nor is it in this, that the land would yield any revenue equal to that sum; but it was valuable in some respects; and it was felt necessary to assist Newfoundland beyond the 80 cents per head of her population.'"

"This statement alone, taken as a governmental utterance, and as an expression of the views of the Dominion Government as to the value of the railway lands at that time, ought, in itself, to quiet forever all contention about the quality of the land in the railway land belt."

I think so too. But, unfortunately, in an evil hour, I believe, the tempter came to the Government, and persuaded them that there was something wrong about the land, and a claim was put forward for lands outside the railway belt. Now, I will read what Mr. Anglin said with reference to the value of these lands:

"Mr. ANGLIN. * * * He contended that it was not open, or honest, or manly to give $100,000 for lands along the line of railway; for the Minister of Customs had admitted that it was only an excuse to give the money, and that the lands were not wanted."

"Mr. MILLS. An open confession."

"Sir GEO. E. CARTIER. A Catholic confession."

"Mr. ANGLIN. A Catholic confession was an open and a full confession, and he wished the Government would make such a one (Applause) * * * Beyond the Rocky Mountains, the country was again hilly and rocky. In reference to that point, he quoted from an article in the Victoria Colonist to corroborate what the hon. member for Lambton had said the other night with respect to the sterile character of some parts of the route. He (Hon. Mr. Anglin) liked to be frank, and would say that the article was written to support one railway scheme against a rival railway scheme. The article spoke of the 'Horrible Frazer River Country,' 'the appalling character of the difficulties,' 'sterile mountains of enormous height, from which land slides perpetually in summer, and avalanches sweep down in winter, carrying all before them. The cost of the railway in these defiles would be money thrown away, and a millstone on the neck of the Dominion. These extracts of which he might read more, would serve to give some idea of the country. Now the question came up what must be the cost of the railway through such a country as that? The cost of forwarding supplies far into the interior to support the men engaged in the work must be enormous, and the wages of the men would also be very large.'"

Those who have paid attention to the reports of engineers on the located line of railway will find that members of Parliament at the time were very well posted as to the general topography of the country. I will read a few extracts from what appeared in the debate about Newfoundland, when the admission of that Province was under discussion in 1869. Hon. Mr. Smith said:

"Then we have to pay $150,000 for Crown land which were worth nothing. Last year, the revenue from these was $2,500, whereas the cost was $6,000. Yet, we here gravely propose to pay $100,000 a year rent and manage them besides."

That was the opinion held and put forward, not only by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Sir Albert J. Smith), but by several other gentlemen as to the value of lands in the Province of Newfoundland. On that ground Mr. Campbell made the statement that he did not expect any revenue from the lands that would repay the expenditure of $150,000. Mr. Blake said:

["HOUSE OF COMMONS. GLOBE REPORT, JUNE 10, 1869"]

"* * * The proposed barter of the public lands of Newfoundland for $150,000 a year was a sham bargain. The Dominion would never reap pecuniarily and directly any advantage from these mines and minerals. Under these circumstances, if the choice were between giving $150,000 a year to Newfoundland and taking her lands, and our giving $150,000 to Newfoundland and leaving her land, he would unhesitatingly vote in favor of the latter of those two propositions. He believed the prosperity of the Colony would be largely enhanced by the adoption of the latter alternative, and the pecuniary result to Canada would be largely enhanced by it."

I have no intention of pursuing this matter further in making quotations. I will say to this House that I have no charge to bring against the right hon. the leader of the Government of having led Mr. Trutch into making this claim. I am aware the right hon. gentleman knew nothing at all about these terms at the time they were negotiated by the Government of Canada and the delegates of British Columbia. He was then sick. I believe this claim for arable land is set up by Mr. Trutch, and by nobody else. I have his own statement with relation to the manner in which the terms were negotiated. Mr. Trutch undoubtedly knew that the Government of Canada was entitled to nothing more than the twenty mile belt on each side, and he ought to have so informed the Government last year before the Orders in Council were passed. Had he been an honorable man, he would have refused to act in the capacity of agent in putting forward such a claim, knowing it had no foundation in the terms of the Union. On the contrary, having acted as agent in the matter, he deserves not to be employed by the Government of Canada, and I trust that the Government will see that it is necessary to allow that gentleman to earn his labor in some other way than by setting up a claim to which the Dominion have no right. No one who has read the reports will find that the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) ever put forward any claim or made the slightest suggestion of a claim on behalf of the Dominion, for anything outside the railway belt, except so far as getting contiguous land for such land as had been alienated by Crown grants or pre-emption. At the time when British Columbia was asked to make a reserve on Vancouver Island of 3,200 square miles, 2,048,000 acres, I was President of the Executive Council and Mr. Trutch was Governor. I can assure this House, without divulging any secret, that there was never any question raised anywhere in that Province with respect to getting arable land for rock, or swamp, or mineral land. It was not until the last Session of Parliament that this question was raised and the infamous act, in my opinion, perpetrated by that gentleman who should instead have directed this Government, if possible, not to claim anything beyond what they were justly entitled to. I submit the resolution to this House with the hope that I have spoken long enough to give hon. members on both sides an idea of the injustice of the claim put forward over the name of Mr. Trutch. I think it only right to say, in closing, that I do not hold the Government responsible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is a matter of no consequence whether the hon. gentleman holds the present Government responsible for that or not. The Government is responsible for it. Whatever claim Mr. Trutch has advanced has been by special instructions from the Government. All the Government wants is that British Columbia should fairly carry out the engagement made at the time of the Union between her Government and the Canadian Government.

Motion agreed to.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS WITHIN THE PRECINCTS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. LONGLEY moved that it be resolved, that Mr. Speaker be requested to issue an order prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within the precincts of this House. He said: I am told by some hon. members in this House that my motion is altogether unnecessary, inasmuch as there was a similar motion submitted to this House seven years ago. I am told that that motion is still alive, but it has seemed to me, from observation, that that motion must have become obsolete. It is said that even our bodies change in seven years. I do not know. I may say that it is just seven years since the motion to which I refer was placed on record. It is contended that Mr. A. becomes Mr. B., and so on; but I believe that there is, speaking in a physiological point of view, some truth in the remark that our bodies do change in the space of seven years. Whether that will involve a change of opinion or not, I am not quite certain. There is one spirit that never changes—the spirit of a man. We do not, any of us, believe in the transmigration theory; but at any rate, if the motion to which I have referred is considered by the House to be still in force, I am not, by any means, so intent upon pushing my resolution to-night as to seek to urge it unduly. But what I am, as one member of the House, very desirous of seeing is, that the sale of intoxicating liquors within the precincts of this House—I mean by the term precincts not only this Chamber, but all around and about the space we are supposed to have control over—should be terminated. I do not, by any means, presume to enter upon the domain of the House at the other end of the building. I cannot, however, but think that if this end were accomplished this Parliament would present itself to the people of the Dominion in a much higher and very much more favorable attitude than it has exhibited itself in, and can exhibit itself in, while it is notorious there is a bag kept beneath this Chamber. I am not quite so extreme as some of my hon. friends imagine. I do not expect by this means absolutely to stop the grog of all the members of this Chamber. I only wish I had the power. I think I would exert it, and in exerting it I should think I was doing a very great good to those over whom I had, for the time being, control. Now, I admit, if it be necessary—because I think the admission would carry a sort of reflection upon this House—that it is indispensable that there should be a small modicum of wine now and then distributed or drunk about this Chamber—or something stronger if you will—there are various facilities for getting the article about this city, as is too obvious in every street we tread. I will not undertake to descant upon this fruitful theme, because I am speaking to a class of gentlemen who understand more about this subject, perhaps, than I can claim to know; but, strange to say, in my humble judgment, a very wise use of the knowledge they possess. I submit, in all candor, whether there have not been some exhibitions in the saloon below which have by no means been creditable to the parties implicated. I think there is no denying that fact. I am not disposed to cast reflections upon anybody, but what I see with my own eyes I am inclined to believe. I am afraid that the statement would not be contradicted, that at certain hours during this Session of Parliament the place below has been almost flooded with persons from outside.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LONGLEY. I am delighted to hear that “Hear, hear,” but I find that many of my hon. friends are very willing to agree that outsiders should be de-rived of their grog; but if you come to make a personal application away goes all their enthusiasm, and away go all their votes, I am afraid. Now, I submit whether or not all of us, conceding a little one to another, and looking at our credit and to some extent to our own safety, and looking also to the fact that if that bar below is kept open outsiders, as I term them, will come in, would it not be better to abolish the evil altogether. That is the point to which all my remarks lead, and I shall feel a measure of satisfaction which I would have no words to express if the House would consent, either that the motion placed on record seven years ago should still be considered in force, or that the present motion should be adopted. I confess that inasmuch as we are under a new regime I would personally prefer that the House should pass this motion, whether it be regarded as the revival of an obsolete motion or in the way of starting anew. I trust the House will take into favorable consideration the few observations I have ventured to make, and that we shall have this, I was going to say nuisance—and I do not think the word would be improper—abolished.

Mr. McCALLUM. The hon. gentlemen was kind enough to say that if the motion, which was passed some years ago, was revived, he would not press the present resolution. As that motion was made in another Parliament and the instructions given to another Speaker, I do not think it could now be enforced. If the hon. gentleman would confine his motion to the closing of the bar, I shall support him, but when he goes so far as to abolish drinkables altogether, he might as well go farther and abolish eatables, for there is just as much danger from over-eating as there is from excessive drinking. As to the disgraceful scenes which we hear of, I have been in Parliament for thirteen years, and I say that if you take 200 men out of any church, you would not find more temperate men than the members of this House.

Mr. LONGLEY. The hon. gentleman, I know, has no desire to misrepresent me. I did not say I had witnessed disgraceful scenes.

Mr. McCALLUM. I did not say you did. I wish to read a short extract from the Ottawa correspondence of the Toronto Globe of last Session:—

“Mr. Longley, of Annapolis, will on Monday move that the Speaker be requested to issue an order prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within the precincts of the House of Commons. This is a step which will probably meet with public approval. The bar in the House of Commons is in every respect a public bar, and not confined to the use of members. Drunken strangers frequently, and even intoxicated members occasionally, are to be met in the corridors or stairs leading from the basement to the main floor. If it were not for the fatal facility with which members obtain intoxicating liquor within a few steps of their Chamber, the brawls and scenes which have disgraced not only this but previous Parliaments would never have been witnessed.”

I repeat that I have been here for thirteen years, and I have never seen any brawls here as the result of indulgence in intoxicating liquors. We have heard strong language hurled across the floor of the House, but it was not owing to liquor drinking; and I, as a member of this House and one who does not drink himself, would no more think of preventing members from taking a glass in the evening than I would of depriving them of their cup of tea.

Mr. WRIGHT. While I agree with much that has fallen from the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Longley) with respect to the desirability of closing the bar, I certainly agree with him as to the desirability of excluding strangers, yet I think that many unfair and unjust insinuations have been sent broadcast over the country with regard to the conduct of members of this House. I agree with the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) that you cannot find anywhere 206 or 207 more temperate gentlemen than those composing the membership of this House, and I think it is especially cruel and unjust that these insinuations should be sent abroad with regard to those of our number who have been ill. Does anyone suppose that the hon. member for Lambton has been injured by the existence of a bar down stairs, or that the Minister of Railways suffered at all from the same fact. Both of these gentlemen are, I believe, practically teetotalers. I believe the Minister of Finance is one who has also been ill. Will anyone say that his illness was at all to be attributed to the bar down stairs? I think the insinuations to which I have referred are grossly cruel to the memory of those two hon. gentlemen who have passed away from us, who are mourned by us all, and who were notoriously among the most temperate men in the House. Those members who have been ill, instead of being of the number who indulged in the social glass, have been among the most temperate members of the House. I think this matter is one which you, Mr. Speaker, should regulate; I think that the restaurant should be managed somewhat in the fashion of a club with a committee of members to arrange matters in connection with it. I am in favor of excluding strangers, but I object to the insinuations being thrown broadcast over the country. I think the statement of the Toronto papers that if matters in the Local Legislature with regard to the drinking habits of its members are in a bad state, they are worse here, is unfounded, and I think no more temperate body of gentlemen can be found anywhere than the members of this House.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am sorry to hear the imputation cast against members of this House that they are in the habit of indulging too frequently in strong drink. I have vanity enough to think that I am not one of the class referred to, and I do not think the hon. member for Annapolis will consider me inimical to the Order he represents so worthily when I protest against the insinuation that there is any necessity for such a motion as has been made on the present occasion. I certainly agree with the hon. member in his remark that it is unfortunate there is a place in this House where intoxicating liquors are sold to strangers, where persons can enter and obtain liquor, as though they were in the town, where establishments are under license regulations, the supervision of inspectors, and under the laws. I think it is desirable we should put a stop to it. I do not believe any of the illness which has arisen among members of the House has been occasioned by the fact that they belonged to the class addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors; and I agree with the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Wright), that it is an unfortunate aspersion on some of those whom we have lost, that reflections should be cast on their characters, as it were indirectly—for I do not think any one would directly say a word against them—owing to the fact that they were addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors. I beg to move in amendment:

“That the Speaker be requested to issue an order closing the bar within the precincts of this House for the sale of intoxicating liquors.”

Mr. LONGLEY. Perhaps we should be thankful for small favors, but the amendment, I must frankly say, does not by any means satisfy me. I think I can give very good reasons why it does not satisfy me. It is but a piece of the policy which characterizes all attempts made to patch up that which cannot be patched up; in other words, it is an attempt to regulate an irregularity. That is not an original expression, but it is the expression of one who sifted this question most thoroughly; and it is an expression of sentiment that must receive a thorough endorsement on the part of every reflecting man. There is excess in the thing itself. The habit grows and it grows even where people least anticipate its growth. The amendment seems to sound well, to be quite a concession, and some hon. gentlemen opposite no doubt feel they are entitled to a large meed of praise for the concessions which they have proposed. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) who has moved the amendment, reserves to himself the privilege under it of asking half-a-dozen of his friends who may visit Ottawa down stairs, to treat them at any time he pleases; and that I think, is one of the reasons why a number of hon. members are reluctant to consent to forego that privilege. I shall be obliged if the hon. mover of the amendment or any other hon. member will tell me what difference there is in the way of example, of morality, or of wrong doing, between a resident of Ottawa going down voluntarily to the bar and getting what he wants, and his being taken down by others, by no means better than himself, and treated by them. So that under the amendment that which we condemn might be carried on almost as successfully and nearly to the same extent as it has been going on during the last three months. I hope we shall not for a good while to come, after this question has been ventilated a little, see such exhibitions as were witnessed this winter below stairs; and I do not wish to reflect on hon. members when I say that. But I say this, that the members of this House are not, every one of them, above suspicion in that respect. And I can say more, if I am pushed to an extremity, as some hon. gentlemen may find out. I know exactly the ground on which I stand on this matter. We do not like to say, we ought not to say, what we think. We ought not and dare not, in fact, impart all we know, and especially in regard to those who have passed away.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame, shame, shame!

Mr. LONGLEY. The half is not told and the half is not known in regard to this iniquity anywhere. But I do not wish to continue this line of observation. I am not, however, satisfied with the amendment; I desire to test the opinion of the House on it, and if hon. members think it will do them credit individually, or do the House credit as a body, to refuse to abate in a proper way this nuisance, let them do so. For my own part I prefer to be consistent, and keep my position good. By adopting the motion we will do credit to ourselves, contribute to our safety and to our self respect. But that is a matter of private opinion on the part of hon. members, and I am quite willing to submit my motion to the decision of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have been long enough in Parliament to have seen motions of this kind frequently made and carried. I have seen them made in Quebec, Toronto, Ottawa, and always for the same cause, and that an influx of strangers being allowed to go to the House of Commons restaurant. I believe it is the cause of very great irregularity, there is no check upon it, and members are in a great measure to blame for it. It is very natural for a member receiving here a number of his constituents as guests to ask them to take a glass of wine, and the restaurant is the most convenient place for doing so. That has been the chief cause of all these irregularities. The resolution that was passed seven years ago is a standing instruction to the Speaker, but the reason why, in effect, that resolution is absolutely valueless, arises from two causes. In the first place this House has no control over the Senate restaurant, and the consequence of preventing the sale of wine in the Commons restaurant was that everybody went to the Senate, and made the fortune of the man in one end of the building, instead of the other. That trebled the custom of the man in the Senate restaurant, and rendered the Commons restaurant valueless. The person who had the Commons restaurant said it did not pay him, and no man could be got to keep it selling food alone. For that reason shutting up the bar was no check whatever. Then again, it was known that you cannot prevent a member from doing what he likes. He can bring his own bottle of wine or his own flask if he likes. If the man who keeps the Commons restaurant happens to be a wine merchant outside members can purchase from him. The resolution was found to be of no value and could not be enforced. That is the reason why it has faded away. If you want to prevent all irregularities, if my hon. friend would add to the resolution that not only the bar should be closed but that all strangers should be rigidly excluded, I think the hon. gentleman will get something that can be carried out. The original resolution of the hon. gentleman will have the same effect as the old resolution. It is found to be of no value, no check, no use whatever. The resolution of the hon. gentleman will fail in making any improvement at all, but by shutting up the bar and keeping out strangers he will make real and substantial improvement in the removal of the irregularities complained of.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I am sorry that I cannot, from my own experience and observation, entirely concur with the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman. I do not see any reason, on grounds of morality, or right why members of Parliament, whose home this is, when their constituents visit Parliament, many of them for the purpose of consulting with members upon important public matters which may be under the consideration of Parliament, should not be at liberty to take those gentlemen to the rooms down stairs—for those are really the only rooms available—for the purpose of consulting with them. I do not see why we should tie our hands, why we should vote ourselves incapable of conducting ourselves like gentlemen, and prevent ourselves from conferring with our friends in the country when they come here, merely because some gentlemen in this House desire to make themselves popular outside by advocating a particular crotchet of theirs on every occasion. I am not an advocate of temperance in the way that particular gentleman advocates it, but I began my public life as a strong advocate of temperance and prohibition, and I believe I drafted the first prohibitory Act introduced into the Legislative Assembly, and I drew it up with great care. But I have lived to learn that that mode of effecting temperance in a free and civilized community like ours is not the proper mode. I am firmly of that conviction. I am willing the experiment should be tried under the Scott Act. I believe we cannot satisfy public opinion until that experiment has been fairly tried; therefore, I am disposed to give every encouragement to the experiment in order that people may be satisfied that they cannot force upon the public, in a free country, particular notions about eating and drinking. I believe it is not in accordance with the genius of our institutions, and our civilization that any portion of the community shall force upon us their habits and ideas in regard to the way in which we shall live or what we shall eat or drink. I protest, as a member of this House, against the insinuation, or the implication that results from this motion, that we are a body of drunkards—for practically that is what it comes to. During all my experience as a member of Parliament, I do not remember a House more notably sober. I avow upon my honor that since I have been in this House I have not seen a member of Parliament intoxicated—not this Session at all events—and I am in the habit of going down stairs pretty often. As I live some distance away I take my meals below, and I have seen nothing of that kind. I admit that I have seen persons who appeared to be strangers, and others, servants of the House, exhibit signs of intoxication. Therefore I agree thoroughly with the suggestion that the bar, if we can properly call it a bar, or the place where liquors are served to members, should be closed to strangers. Members should have the right of procuring refreshments with their meals, whether wine or beer. I take a glass of beer occasionally, and I find it beneficial to me. I consider myself a sober man; I do not believe I was ever intoxicated in my life. Therefore, I claim the right to take my meals below and to have a glass of beer or wine with a friend. I can do it elsewhere, why should I be debarred from doing it here to please the hon. gentleman. I say this very motion, this discussion, is an advertisement to the country that something is wrong in this House which I do not see to be wrong, except in the matter to which I have referred. Therefore, I shall vote with great pleasure for the amendment of my hon. friend, which shuts up the bar; but I claim that the members of the House should have the privilege to order a glass of beer or a bottle of wine if they desire it. While that is the law of the country, while we have not actual prohibition prevailing everywhere, I do not see why we should advertise to the country that we are not capable of conducting ourselves properly in this respect.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). When this matter was brought before the House in 1874, the resolution moved by Mr. Chisholm was as follows:—

"That Mr. Speaker be requested to issue an order prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within the precincts of this House."

That resolution was carried, after little discussion, by the House, and, as the right hon. gentleman has said, has been a standing instruction to the Speaker. It appears, however, from what has been said, that that order has been disregarded by some means or other, and disregarded, as the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Longley) has said, in a manner that has not added to the dignity of the House. I cannot speak myself from observation during this Session; but I know that in 1874, when that order was passed, it was felt to be due by this House to the sentiment that prevailed in the country, that we should, as a House, avoid everything that had the appearance of intemperance. I do not know whether that order was then more necessary than it is now. It was then the unanimous opinion of the House—there was no division upon it—that it would add to the dignity of the House and to its influence in the country that we should protect in this way, as far as we were able to control the matter ourselves, against the too common sale of intoxicating liquors. For two or three years that order was tolerably well respected. The attention of Mr. Speaker was called to it once or twice with closed doors, and I think an order was given to the Sergeant-at-Arms to see that all intoxicants were removed from the restaurant. I think the order was pretty well carried out. I do not think the House lost anything by yielding to it; and I doubt very much if the House will gain by returning to the state of affairs which prevailed previous to the adoption of that order. I am not going to draw a line between a bar and the use of liquors, which some hon. gentlemen may think pleasant or healthful with their meals. I am going to draw the line where it was drawn in 1874. I think we should revive in its integrity the order then given, and say that so far as the House of Commons is concerned, there will be no intoxicating liquors sold within the precincts of the House. I think nothing will be lost to any gentleman in this House, or their friends, if such an order is carried out. I do not think the hon. member for Annapolis was actuated by any desire to cast any reflection on the members of this House or their friends who visited them. If circumstances occurred which made it appear that the respect or dignity of the members of this House suffered from the sale of liquors below, or if strangers visiting here by their intemperance cast discredit on the members of this House with whom they associate, I think the hon. gentleman was perfectly justified in moving the resolution he did. I think he should do what every hon. gentleman should try to do—maintain in every possible way the respect and dignity of this House—and I trust the motion he has made will be sustained. If members wish to use intoxicating liquors, let them go somewhere else for it or carry a flask with them; and even if they do suffer a little inconvenience in consequence, I think we shall gain very much. I certainly shall support the motion of the hon. member for Annapolis.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I feel it incumbent upon me to say something on this matter, inasmuch as the hon. member for Annapolis a few days ago asked me to second a motion to close the bar of this House, and I promised to do so; but when he made his motion, it turned out to be a different thing from what I had agreed to second, and I therefore declined to second it. I have been in the habit of taking my meals at the restaurant from the beginning of the Session until two weeks ago, and I think I have been as often there as any hon. member, and I have yet to see a gentleman there the worse of liquor. As a young member, when I first entered this Parliament, I was induced to expect to see a scene of great dissipation, from insinuations and slanders circulated throughout the country; but I was agreeably astonished to find myself among a community of over 200 gentlemen, who were almost absolutely sober. I do not think I ever saw any person within the precincts of this House, belonging to this House, in any degree the worse of liquor. If this motion is carried, what will be the result? You cannot prohibit gentlemen from taking a glass of wine if they choose to do so; and if we are not to have the privilege of asking our friends to the restaurant of the House, where shall we go? We shall go to the saloons, the restaurants or the clubs of the city. I would like to know if that would be a more pleasing exhibition than going down stairs to the restaurant of this House. If this motion is carried, I suppose the hon. members for Annapolis and West Middlesex, according to their peculiar ideas, will next bring in a motion to prohibit hon. members from taking a glass anywhere. But so long as we live in an age of progress and in a civilized country where every man has the right, so long as he does not break the law, to eat and drink what he pleases, such a measure can never be carried out. I claim to be a temperance man; no man ever saw me the worse of liquor

I do not say it boastfully; I can take my glass of wine or beer when I like—or I can take two or three—and I do not feel the worse of it. But these hon. gentlemen who claim to have all the virtues of the temperance cause embodied within themselves, are doing more injury to the cause of temperance by their intemperate way of treating the question than they would do if they confined themselves to moral suasion and their own good example. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Annapolis refer in the way he did to the scenes we have witnessed within the precincts of this House. I do not know how it is that these hon. gentlemen, who claim to be such models and paragons of temperance, always see the drunken men, while no one else apparently sees them. Is it possible that they have been in places where respectable people do not go? I speak thus warmly because I feel that a slur has been cast on the reputation of the hon. members of this House, and I for one do not feel inclined to support—

Mr. LONGLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Hon. gentlemen may say in derision, "hear, hear," but all I can tell them is that they are doing more harm to the temperance cause than if they would advocate it in a different way. I have very great pleasure in supporting the amendment of my hon. friend. I think it is wrong that there should be an open bar down stairs; and I think strangers ought to be excluded from the restaurant, except when introduced by a member; but I submit that when friends come to see me on matters of business, I have a perfect right to entertain them at the restaurant, and the motion is rather too much of a good thing, and interferes with the liberty of the subject in a way I will not support.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I intend to vote for the motion of the hon. member for Annapolis, for the reason that this House has already affirmed the principle of prohibition in the most emphatic terms. I have some embarrassment in voting for it on one account only, and that is, that being myself a teetotaler, I am reluctant to impose a self-denying ordinance on others who do not feel with me. But this House has declared that a mere accidental majority in any constituency may impose that ordinance on those who do not think with them; and I think, to be consistent with itself, this House should prohibit intoxicating liquors from its own precincts.

Mr. BOULTBEE. It was said by one of the most sagacious statesmen that I ever knew, that this is an age of humbug and we are ruled by humbugs. I must confess that when I heard the utterances of the hon. member for Annapolis and other hon. gentlemen the other night, when they spoke against the amendment I brought in to the Scott Act, I gave them credit for honest integrity of purpose in trying to do what they thought was right, though I thought they were somewhat narrow-minded and prejudiced, and very unjust in the way they were willing to ruin the business and property of the people without giving them any compensation. But a motion like this, I cannot help thinking, is a wanton insult to this House. I take it as a personal insult to myself and that they mean it as such, because both those gentlemen have referred in their remarks to the necessity that exists for passing such a measure as far as the members of the House are concerned. It is a melancholy thing to send forth to the people the statement that we, here assembled and making laws, are not able to restrain our appetites. Of course, we know there are men who drink nothing from reasons of their own; who, on the same principle that they abstain from eating a particular food because it does not agree with them, abstain from drinking altogether. There are a certain set of men with weak brains and stomachs, who, finding they cannot take anything without getting drunk, very properly become total abstinents; but it is most extraordinary how soon, when one of those gentlemen has taken the pledge, he poses as a sort of saint standing on a pedestal above other men, who, having superior brains and common sense, can indulge moderately, and have no fear of making beasts of themselves. Never in this country will you impose a prohibitory law and make it work. To impose such a law here is humbug, because it will not be regarded. The hon. member for Annapolis says he understood this thing thoroughly, that he has studied it in every phase. I must confess, if we are to believe what he says, he has mixed in very strange society, for though I have knocked all over the world, and have seen a good deal of life, I have never witnessed the scenes he has depicted. Whether in his youth he was led away by an appetite he could not control, and mixed in society which does not qualify a man to lecture his fellow-creatures, or whether he sought those scenes with the view to cure the evils he has described, I know not, but I think that I never witnessed such scenes as he depicted the other night. What is the use of our making this miserable penny-trumpet sound about our closing the bar, when everyone knows that even were the order given it would not be closed? The law is always evaded in some way or other. I live in the hotel kept by the proprietor of the restaurant; I take my meals here, and I have never seen hon. members to any extent the worse for liquor. I may have seen a man who, on entering this Legislature for the first time, got a little bit jovial, and drank more than he should, but I am proud to say that everyone of those voted with the hon. member for Annapolis. I take exceptions to the proposition of my sage leader, that we should exclude all parties from going down to the restaurant. If effect were given to that, a member would be placed in a very humiliating position, when he could not take a friend of his from his constituency down to have some social refreshment. I think my hon. leader cannot have thoroughly considered the proposition he made. Let us consider this matter with some sort of respect for ourselves. Let us come to the determination that we are an assembly of gentlemen who are able to control themselves. Let us not be guilty of the empty folly, the poor farce of voting to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, when everyone knows the sale will go on just the same as it did before the prohibition. I do not care what the hon. Premier of the House says. You will not alter by one iota the taking down of constituents into the restaurant, or library or smoking-room. Members have authority here, and no servant that we employ would prevent a member from bringing his friends through the lobbies. While believing the hon. members for Middlesex and Annapolis were honest in the position they took with regard to the Scott Act, I believe this thing to be a bit of offensive petty clap-trap intended to hurt the feelings and annoy the sense of honor of those who are opposed to them on this question. To members in the House who deal with each other as gentlemen, who meet each other from day to day, who are glad to see each other well, and sorry when any are ill, to propose this motion is an offensive position to take. It is a gross insult to put upon those who do not agree with those extreme temperance gentlemen. They know such a motion amounts to nothing; therefore it is only an empty vaunt—an attempt to shove their principles down our throats, when they know they can give no effect to them. They think to entrap us into votes here that will be flung in our faces at future elections. I will go as far as any reasonable man in promoting what I think a proper temperance measure; but if I please to eat and drink I shall eat and drink, and I have never found at any election, in any part of the country, that the sensible, honest advocates of temperance had any objection to those who maintained the same views as myself, who want to promote temperance by such means as proper example and persuasion, but not by trying to legislate men out of their rights. So far as the motion of the member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) is concerned, as it is an amendment to the main motion, I shall vote for it; but I am ashamed to do so, because it is understood that no effect will be given to it—it will be a dead letter, so I shall, therefore, be only voting for a nugatory motion.

Mr. LONGLEY. As respects the remarks of the member for East York (Mr. Boulton), I think they may be allowed to pass for what they are worth. I shall simply notice what he has termed my extravagance in representing the scenes I have witnessed here as a result of the saloon below. My imagination is not sufficient to depict the gross results of the liquor traffic. But if the member for East York has ever wandered about in the vicinity of the gin palaces of London—

Mr. BOULTBEE. I never go there.

Mr. LONGLEY. It is a pity the hon. gentleman should not visit those places, for he would there have a glimpse of the degrading results of this traffic which he seems so insidiously bound to uphold. He should wander about the streets of Glasgow and witness the degradation, the unsexing of women due to this evil, when he would know something of the effects of this liquor traffic. We have them here in a mitigated form. I want simply to make a remark or two in reply to the hon. member for Hamilton. He says truly that, before I decided to move this resolution, I invited him to second it. He seemed to respond with great alacrity. But as soon as he found that there was a little stringency about the motion—

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). The motion was to close the bar.

Mr. ORTON. I rise to a question of order. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Longley) has lectured the House long enough; and as he has spoken to his motion already, he should not be allowed to proceed in this strain.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Annapolis says he wants to make some personal observations; but he must confine himself to the matter in hand.

Mr. LONGLEY. I want to reply to the member for Hamilton.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order; chair, chair.

Mr. LONGLEY. I was going on to say that so soon as the hon. member for Hamilton found there was a little stringency about my motion, and that it was designed to have some effect, he shrank from seconding it. That is just what I have always found on the part of men who merely profess to be on the side of temperance. I do not wish either myself, or those with whom I am associated, to be misrepresented, and I say this: not only hon. members here, but the world at large, are under a debt of obligation to the present temperance men in the country. But for their efforts I am afraid we should all of us be beyond reclaim. I beg to state on behalf of those who have been assailed to-night as temperance fanatics, that we do not seek to impose the restraints that are alleged against us; we simply want to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors about this House. The central point of our creed is that no man has a right to carry on business to the injury of his neighbor.

Mr. ORTON. I again rise to a question of order: the hon. gentleman has addressed the House a great many times, and I do not think we ought to allow him to go on; he is simply speaking on the general question of temperance.

Mr. LONGLEY. I wanted to reply to the remarks of a personal character made, and I shall proceed no further.

Amendment (Mr. Kirkpatrick) agreed to on the following division:—

YEAS :

Messieurs

Bannerman,	Langevin,	Pope (Compton),

Grandbois,

Mr. LONGLEY. I move that the motion be amended by adding the words suggested by the hon. leader of the Government: "and that strangers be excluded from the precincts of the House."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman has the right to move that the words be added to the motion as adopted.

Mr. LONGLEY. I hope the right hon. leader of the Government will allow me to put his name on the motion as seconder.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the hon. gentleman can move it. He cannot move an amendment against his own motion.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. member for Annapolis has already spoken on the motion, and has no right to speak again.

Mr. LONGLEY. As I understand, Mr. Speaker has decided that I am in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. An amendment adding words to the original motion may be moved; but, upon reflection, I do not think the hon. gentleman can move it.

An hon. MEMBER. Somebody else can.

Mr. LONGLEY. I wish to say a few words—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. LONGLEY. After the motion to amend has been passed, I think I have a right to speak—

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand, we are now on the main motion as amended, and I think, the hon. gentleman is at liberty to speak upon that question.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman intend to speak to the main motion as amended.

Mr. LONGLEY. Certainly. I wish to show the leader of the Government that deference which I desire always to show to him, and that is the reason why I am desirous to add the words he suggested. I do not think we would then have anything to complain of, and I think the House will be disposed unanimously to accept the suggestion of the Premier. As a matter of course, I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the general question, but I think it would be a great advantage to preclude strangers from the precincts of the House in the sense in which we have been speaking. It has been conceded by nearly everybody who has spoken, that the presence of strangers downstairs is a most objectionable feature.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). I move in amendment that the following words be added to the motion as amended: "and that strangers be excluded from the refreshment saloon of the House of Commons."

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I move in amendment to the amendment that the words "unless accompanied by a member," be inserted after the words "House of Commons."

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). I think it is the general feeling that the amendment to the amendment should be accepted in lieu of the amendment. I, at any rate, am willing to accept it.

Amendment to the amendment agreed to.

Motion as amended agreed to.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA MILITARY ASYLUM.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to authorize the Minister of the Interior or the Minister of Militia, by notarial deed, to cancel and annul a certain emphyteotic lease made in the name of Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for War, to the corporation of the Canada Military Asylum, of a lot of land in the city of Quebec, since transferred under the Act 40 Vic., Chap. 8, to Her Majesty for the purposes of Canada and of the said Act and classed under the said Act by the Governor in Council as not necessary to be occupied for the defence of Canada, and to sell and convey the said lot and its appurtenances to the corporation of the Church of England Female Orphan Asylum, which is now, with the consent of the Crown, in the occupation of the same, for the sum of six thousand dollars, the capital of the rent now paid for it by the said corporation, and to pay the said sum into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, to the end that a separate account may be kept thereof and certain pensions payable by the said Canada Military Asylum and charged on the said property, may thereafter be paid out of the said Consolidated Revenue Fund.

He said: The resolution explains the object which is sought to be attained by it. Very many years ago the Canada Military Asylum was established at Quebec, with certain trustees resident in Quebec, and officers then of Her Majesty's service. The rent was fixed at $360 a year, and the fund was applied to the granting of certain pensions to officers and widows of the soldiery. The asylum was used for the soldiery as well as for other persons, and it was under the joint charge of that joint corporation. Since then the troops have been withdrawn, and the land has been handed over to the Government, and it has been declared that this land is not wanted for military purposes. For very many years the building has been occupied by the Church of England Female Orphan Asylum, and they have paid the remaining pensions. There are no means of obtaining a surrender of the lease, because there are only two officers and two persons left. The children of the remaining old soldiers are always received at the asylum, the conductors of which are very anxious to have the title conveyed to them. It has been offered for sale, and the utmost that can be got for it is the sum mentioned in the resolution, $6,000. The resolution is for the purpose of enabling the Crown to convey to this corporation the land on which the asylum now stands, and the sum of the purchase money will be paid over to the Crown, and the Crown, from the interest obtained therefrom, will pay the remaining pensions to the two or three widows and children still chargeable on the fund.

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand the hon. gentleman, this is, in fact, a sale at its full value of this property to this corporation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the reason this formal legislation is necessary for that purpose?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Because this corporation holds a 99 or 999 years lease from Her Majesty's service, and we are advised by the law officers that there is no means of getting rid of such a lease.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Was it offered for sale by public auction?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By advertisement, I believe.

Mr. ANGLIN. Will the hon. gentleman give us some idea of where the property is situated, and its extent?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is on the Grande-Allée, between the St. Louis Gate and the toll gate. It has been occupied by this corporation as an orphan asylum for many years, by the consent of all the inhabitants of Quebec of whatever religion; it is called the Protestant Asylum, and not far from it is the Catholic Asylum. The object of this resolution is merely to give them a title of the property, of which they were placed in possession in 1861, to be used for the purpose to which it is now devoted. It is about 300 feet square.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. If the only real purpose of this legislation is to invest this property in the Government, I do not see why we should go any further than the exigency of the case requires. If the difficulty in the way of selling to anybody were removed, the Government would have power to dispose of the property in this or any other way. If, on the other hand, it is necessary that there should be a parliamentary sale to this particular corporation at the price stated, it would be convenient that all papers with reference to the value, &c., of the property should be laid on the Table. I would like to know whether there is any other property in a similar position, and with reference to which our action to-day may form a precedent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not aware of any other property in the same position as this. In order to ascertain the value of this property, advertisements were issued calling for offers. It was not put up at public auction, because, in the first place, the title was not good, and, in the second place, because it was the desire of the Government that this corporation should get the property at a reasonable rate. The reason for asking for this form of conveyance is, that I am advised by the law clerk of the Senate, Mr. Montizambert, who is a Lower Canada lawyer, that there are no means of obtaining a surrender of that lease, and therefore this is an Act of the Legislature to authorize the Government to cancel the lease and convey the property to the corporation occupying it.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD introduced a Bill (No. 76) relating to the Canada Military Asylum at Quebec.

Bill read the first time.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Mr. CARON laid before the House the report on the state of the Militia of the Dominion of Canada, for the year 1880.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION BETWEEN THE PACIFIC COAST AND ASIA.

Mr. LANGEVIN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That it would be of great advantage to Canada that telegraphic communication should be established between the Pacific Coast of the Dominion and Asia, and that certain facilities and advantages should be granted to any company willing and able to establish and maintain the same.

2. That with this view, it is expedient to provide that if Sandford Fleming, Esquire, who has submitted a plan for the formation of a company for the said purpose which has met with the approval of the Governor in Council, and such persons, not less than five in number, as may be associated with him in the undertaking, do before the 1st day of October next, apply for letters patent under the Act 40 Vict., chap. 48, incorporating them as a company for the purpose aforesaid, and show to the satisfaction of His Excellency in Council, that they have complied with the preliminary requirements of the said Act, and are able and ready to establish and maintain such telegraphic communication as aforesaid, letters patent may be issued incorporating them for such purpose, under the said Act and the Act 38 Vict., chap. 26, with the powers and privileges, and subject to the obligations provided by the said Acts, and with the exclusive privilege of landing a telegraphic cable or cables on the said Pacific Coast during twenty years; but subject also to the following conditions:—

(1) The telegraphic communication between the two continents shall be completed within five years from the date of the charter, and shall be thereafter regularly and efficiently maintained;

(2) The rates to be charged for messages shall be moderate and subject to approval by the Governor in Council;

(3) Any further conditions which may be inserted in the Act to be passed in this behalf or in the charter granted under it;

(4) Default on the part of the company to perform the said conditions shall subject them to the forfeiture of their charter.

He said: Mr. Sandford Fleming some time last year communicated with the Government on the importance of having telegraphic communication open from Canada to Asia. The Government, on the report of the hon. Minister of Railways, considered the matter, and thought it of such importance that they should grant, subject to the approval of Parliament, conditions or advantages to Mr. Fleming and the company to be formed by him, in order to secure that communication, and that it should be a Canadian one. The importance of securing telegraphic communication with Asia may be well appreciated now when we are expending large sums of money to build a railway across the continent and complete our railway communication from ocean to ocean. We are not going to the Pacific Ocean for British Columbia alone, but in order to compete there for the trade of the world, for the trade especially of those countries with which we will, no doubt, be more intimately connected by trade—I mean China and Japan. Under those circumstances, it cannot be a matter of indifference whether we should have telegraphic communication between those countries and Canada or not. We must have felt more than once the difficulties of our position at different periods when, having to communicate between Canada and England, we had to do so across the United States territory. These lines might possibly not be open to us at certain periods. Communication between America and the continent of Asia should not be left entirely in the hands of our powerful neighbors and friends, the United States. It should be a pride for us, as a country, that in all matters of this kind, when we can afford it, Canada should have a share in these great works. Under these circumstances the Government passed the following Order in Council:—

17th June, 1880.

On a memorandum dated 20th May, 1880, from the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals, representing that a proposition has been received from Mr. Sandford Fleming having in view the extension of the Pacific Railway Telegraph to Asia by sub-marine cable.

That the scheme, which has been treated at length by Mr. Fleming in his last report as Engineer-in-Chief of the Canadian Pacific Railway, comprises the formation of a company and the grant of certain concessions on the part of the Canadian Government, namely:

1st. The exclusive privilege of landing a submarine cable on the Pacific coast of Canada.

2nd. The privilege of placing a wire for cable business on the posts of the Pacific Railway when erected, and that Mr. Fleming requests that these concessions may be made to himself individually, as an initiatory step.

That the report of the Chief Engineer of Government railways in operation, holds that great advantage would accrue to Canada through the carrying out of this scheme.

The Minister accordingly, upon such report and the advice therein contained, recommends that the concessions stated be granted to Mr. Fleming upon the following conditions:—

1st. That a substantial commencement of the work be made within three years, and that the cable be laid across the Pacific Ocean within five years from the date of the completion of the overland line.

2nd. That after the cable connection is made the sub-marine telegraph be satisfactorily maintained for purposes of traffic, and be operated efficiently.

3rd. That unless otherwise authorized by the Governor General in Council, the maximum rates of charges be not higher than those mentioned in Appendix No. 24 of the Canadian Pacific Railway Report of 1880 above referred to.

4th. That the Government reserve the right to take possession of the whole at any time after completion under payment of a sum equal to the capital expended, together with a reasonable percentage added.

5th. That the suggested terms of arrangement be subject to the approval of Parliament.

The Committee submit the above recommendation for Your Excellency's approval.

Mr. Fleming having had communication of this document, and feeling that the time had come for him to ascertain how far he could succeed in the undertaking, communicated with capitalists in England and in Canada. He has ascertained that a powerful company could be formed if Parliament would put the company in a position to receive a charter and have the privileges asked for. His intention is not to ask for any special powers, for the right to lay a telegraph line across the Atlantic Ocean or across the Dominion of Canada. He intends taking advantage of all the existing lines, or the projected telegraph lines, between the Pacific Ocean and the Atlantic Ocean, and, therefore, using the posts of those lines for his wires, and when he reaches the shores of Alaska, through Canadian territory, he will have the choice of a number of cables. The company will not ask for any special privileges, but will use those cables. The company intend to start from Nanaimo, where there is already a telegraphic line, and go as far north or north-west as Quatsino, one of the extreme points of the Island of Vancouver. From Quatsino the cable will be laid in as direct a line as possible to Walvis Bay, in Japan. Between Quatsino and Walvis Bay the Aleutian Islands will be touched and the communication made useful to them. But that is not a necessity, and the cable may be laid without touching those Islands. From Walvis Bay the line will be extended across the Island of Yesso to Satauporo. The Island of Yesso is, I understand, about as large as Newfoundland, and enjoys about the same climate. But the interior of the Island has not been explored, and therefore it is impossible, just now, to say whether the line should go across that Island, or follow the shores. At all events from that point, the line will reach Yokohama, and Yeddo will probably be put in immediate communication with all the important telegraph lines of Asia. I understand that Japan has no less than 8,000 miles of telegraphic lines; therefore it is important to be in communication with that country, especially when the communication between Shanghai and Hong Kong is complete, and that communication from that point with India, Calcutta and Singapore exists. Thence lines extend to Australia, as far as Melbourne. So by this cable across the Pacific Ocean, under the charter petitioned for, Canada would be in communication with the whole continent of Asia, and with Australia. Our telegraphic communication across our own continent being complete, and also our telegraphic connection with England, one can understand the importance, not only to Canada but to the Empire, of the communication now proposed. Fleming and Company do not ask any subsidy from the Government, but simply the privileges mentioned in the resolutions. Our telegraphic lines on Vancouver Island reach as far as Nanaimo, and the Government may find, when this matter comes up again, that it may be to the advantage of the Dominion to extend the lines to Quatsino, instead of leaving it in the hands of a company. But just now the power asked for is to lay a cable across the Pacific from Quatsino as far as the Island of Yesso in Japan. The privileges asked for are very short. The most important one is that this company shall have the exclusive privilege of landing a telegraphic cable or cables on the east Pacific coast for twenty years. Without that assurance it would be impossible for any company to undertake a work of this kind, and sink five, six or seven million dollars in the Pacific. No company would enter upon such a work without exemption from competition for this period, except, perhaps, with the object of being bought out. Therefore those privileges are asked for. One of the conditions the Government imposes on the company is that "the telegraphic communication between the two continents shall be completed within five years from the date of the charter, and shall be thereafter regularly and efficiently maintained." I do not think that hon. gentlemen will consider this delay is a very long one, especially for a work of this kind. When we go into Committee I will ask for a change of the date from the 1st October to the 1st January next. Mr. Fleming has informed me, since the resolutions were introduced, that, having to go to England to arrange matters in regard to the scheme, and also to Japan, it would be four or five months before he could return; and that, therefore, it would be risky to make the date 1st October. The additional three months would give him the time not only to complete his arrangements in England, but also in Japan. Powers or concessions have been obtained for this company in Japan to land on its coast their cable or cables. The Japanese Government are perfectly pleased at the prospect of a cable between the two continents.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Have they given a twenty years' monopoly too.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I cannot say. I understand the company have an exclusive privilege in Japan also.

Mr. CURRIER. There is a Bill before this House at the present time for the purpose of incorporating a company to lay cables over this same ground, and not only from Europe to Canada, but from British Columbia to China and Japan, and this company do not ask Parliament for exclusive privileges for twenty years, as is proposed by the resolutions. I think that it is only fair and just that the company to which I refer should be placed on the same footing as the other, especially as they do not ask for exclusive rights. The company has been regularly formed in England, the articles of association are complete, and they are prepared to put up $800,000 in cash as a guarantee that they will carry out their undertaking within five years.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the European, American and Canadian Cable Company?

Mr. CURRIER. Yes; that is the one.

Mr. LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Bill he will find that it does not refer to a Pacific cable at all. The preamble reads:

"Whereas the persons hereinafter mentioned have, by their petition, prayed that an Act of incorporation may be granted to them for the purpose of establishing telegraphic communication between the Dominion of Canada, the United Kingdom and other countries."

Are we to be tied down simply because there is a Bill before the House proposing to establish telegraphic communication between the Dominion of Canada, the United Kingdom "and other countries." Again, they speak of their destination in the words "or elsewhere" and there is no mention whatever of laying a cable across the Pacific. It does speak of a cable across the Atlantic, so that I think my hon. friend has been misinformed as to the purposes of the company, so far, at least, as they are expressed in the Bill, which is what we must judge by. The word "Pacific" is not mentioned in the Bill, so that there will be no clashing between the two companies. One will build a cable across the Atlantic, the other across the Pacific, and the two cables will be connected by a telegraphic line across the continent of America upon Canadian territory.

Mr. CURRIER. This company is formed for the purpose of laying, maintaining and working sub-marine cables between Great Britain and this continent—between Europe and the Dominion of Canada—by way of Sable Island, and also to lay branch lines to the West Indies and a line from British Columbia to China and Japan. This is the ground they propose to cover, and I am prepared to satisfy the House, or any Committee of the House, that they are able and willing to do the work, and that they have the means subscribed for the purpose.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The articles of association may make the declaration mentioned by the hon. gentleman, but, so far as we are concerned, we have to do with the Bill before the House, which is just as I have stated. This is not the first time that powers have been asked by petition or articles of association, but which have not afterwards been confirmed by Parliament, which limit the powers as it may see fit. As I stated before, there is no mention of the Pacific Ocean; it is simply "other countries" or "elsewhere," and they might as well seek to carry their lines to France, or Africa, or Australia. It is evident that we cannot have our hands tied in that way.

Mr. BLAKE. I think that if anyone is seeking to tie our hands it is the hon. Minister of Public Works, by the resolution he proposes, rather than the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Currier). The tying proposal comes from the other side of the House. I quite admit that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Langevin) may be able to convince the House—I do not desire, in the slightest degree, to prejudice the question—that it is necessary that we should secure the operation of this line by means which the hon. gentleman admits are, on general principles, objectionable—that is a twenty years monopoly. But if it be the case, as stated by the hon. member for Ottawa, that a respectable corporation has been associated in England for the express purpose of laying this and other lines; if this company is prepared to deposit with the Government the sum of $800,000 as a guarantee that they will do the work in the same space of time as is proposed by the corporation which the hon. Minister favors—to maintain it and operate it afterwards without the monopoly—then I say that at first sight there is a considerable difference between the merits of the respective schemes. The sum of $800,000 is certainly a considerable guarantee upon such a work; and I think we shall at least have to consider a little more, and have a little more explanation than the hon. gentleman appears at present disposed to give us, before we should decide in favor of the scheme which the hon. gentleman seems to favor. Now, I say that the question of monopoly is a very serious one. It is a very serious one with reference particularly to telegraph lines, communication by which has reached such enormous progress and development in the last few years. It is of the greatest consequence that we should carefully consider any plans which involve an exclusive right to telegraphic communication at all. I hold that to be very clear. If we do find ourselves in the end obliged to do so, I think it will be incumbent upon us to watch with the greatest care the surrounding provisions. For instance, if I rightly understood the provision of the Order in Council which the hon. gentleman read, it was that the rates should be not exceeding those which are mentioned in a certain report of the Pacific Railway survey. My own impression is that it would be objectionable in the last degree to establish a minimum for cable messages for twenty years to come. I think there may be such improvements before twenty years are over, such expansion of traffic, that any figures which are made to-day would be perfectly fabulous in a short time. It may be otherwise, but we ought to have our hands perfectly free. It also occurs to me that this company does not offer, as far as I can judge, what have been found to be essential guarantees for maintaining telegraphic communication by a long stretch of ocean. As far as we can judge an essential guarantee is more than one cable; we cannot depend upon a single cable. They propose to have power to lay a cable or cables, but they do not propose to put themselves under any obligation to lay more than one; and if you do not insist upon laying more than one, all they will be bound to do in any reasonable interpretation of "one telegraph line," is to repair a breach as rapidly as possible when a breach is made, and in doing that they will, in the spirit, maintain telegraphic communication. I think, therefore, that unless things are shown to be different in the Pacific from the Atlantic, any provision partaking of the character of a monopoly ought to have some measure of security. These are the only observations I desire to make at this moment, because I think none of us have been able thoroughly to apprehend the whole effect of the hon. gentleman's statement and the particulars of the Order in Council, without an opportunity of giving them a more careful consideration. I desire to say, further, that we ought to have some evidence before us of the concession which the hon. gentleman says he is informed has been granted by the Japanese Government. He ought to know that in some way or other. Does the hon. gentleman know it by telegraph or by word of mouth? If he knows it by any formal document it should be laid before this House.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I think it is well to go slowly when it is proposed to create a monopoly for twenty years in telegraphic communication so important as that will, no doubt, become hereafter between the Dominion of Canada and the continent of Asia. We ought to be very careful to see that the only way in which that communication can be obtained is not by the granting of a monopoly. I have been informed—I do not know how truly, I think it is the case—that the basin of the Pacific, even more than the Atlantic, presents the characteristic that the best available point for crossing it is opposite the territory of British North America; that in fact the depth of the Pacific Ocean, when you go as far south even as California, is so great that it is almost impossible with advantage to lay a cable across there, while in the Atlantic it has been found that the most advantageous point for laying a cable is opposite that part of the continent of America which belongs to Canada. If that be the case, and we possess on the Pacific seaboard, as we do on the Atlantic seaboard, the best available point for laying a cable, it is very important that we should be careful not to restrict our hands, and in fact the hands of the whole world, as we would practically be doing, by giving an exclusive privilege which would prevent the attainments and continuance of an efficient cable service across the Pacific Ocean. I do not know what information the Government may possess as to the ability or desire of other countries to lay a cable across the Pacific Ocean. I know nothing of the company which the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Currier) has just spoken of, but he states that that company is prepared to undertake the laying of this cable. I am aware from the public press—and I do not speak from any other information at the present time on this subject—that a company has recently been formed in the United States for the purpose of, and with functions enabling them, to lay a cable across the Pacific as well as across the Atlantic, and if the fact be that which I have previously referred to, namely, that Canada presents the best point to start from, we ought to be very careful to see that we are not granting an expensive privilege too soon, or without an absolute necessity for doing so. I think also that there is inconsistency between the spirit of any such legislation as that which we are now asked to sanction, and the existing law, the Marine Electric Telegraph Act of 1875, which is still on our Statute-book, notwithstanding more than one effort to repeal it. That provides that any new company which has exclusive privileges to land in Newfoundland or elsewhere, shall be tabooed from the coast of Canada, and yet while that is the law of Canada we are asked here to grant extensive privileges on the other side of the continent to a company to lay a cable from the Pacific coast. Moreover, these resolutions provide that the company so to be incorporated shall be subject to the provisions in this very Act, namely, the Act 38 Victoria, Chap. 26. That Act provides:

"Each of the companies mentioned in the first section of this Act, or which may become incorporated in Canada under the next preceding section, is prohibited from entering into any agreement for the transmission or interchange of messages, or for participation in profits, or for the union or consolidation of capital stock, with any company or association of persons, which at any time may possess or acquire any such exclusive privilege of landing wire or cable for a marine telegraph, in Newfoundland, or the Danish possessions, and where an equal or reciprocal right is not conceded as in the proviso to the said next preceding section mentioned."

Now, this company that is proposed by Mr. Fleming and his associates would, inasmuch as it is declared to be subject to this Act, be prohibited from making an arrangement with the Anglo-American Company, because that company possesses exclusive privileges on the Atlantic side, and yet the new company would have exclusive privileges on the Pacific side, an inconsistency to which we ought not rashly and without the very strongest necessity, commit ourselves by parliamentary action. For these reasons I confess I look with considerable hesitation upon the propriety of passing these resolutions or committing ourselves, with the information now before the House, to the creation of a monopoly for twenty years, such as proposed.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think in any case the House ought to be put in possession of the plan which is said to have been made by Mr. Sandford Fleming to the Governor in Council, as well as the Order in Council. The hon. gentleman was good enough to read one of those documents, but I think both ought to be printed and placed in the hands of the House before we are asked to go on with the consideration of this subject. Of course, if the hon. gentleman thinks it more convenient to go into Committee and give explanations there, I have no particular objection, but I really think we ought to have detailed information before we are asked to proceed further with a question of this magnitude.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman, in replying to the hon. member for Ottawa, complains that the proposal to extend the line beyond the limits of Canada to the western side of the Pacific coast, was mentioned incidentally only. The hon. Minister proposes to organize this company, if it has not already been done, under the Act Chap. 26, 1875. That is an Act passed by the Parliament of Canada for the purpose of enabling companies to organize anywhere and construct marine cables; and yet the wording of that Act is as follows:—

"This Act shall apply to every company or association of persons hereafter authorized by any special or general Act of Parliament of Canada, or under the provisions of this Act, to construct or maintain telegraphic wires or cables, in, upon, under or across the gulf, bay or branch of any sea or any tidal water within the jurisdiction of Canada, or the shore or bed thereof respectively, so as to connect any Province with any other Province in the Dominion, or to extend beyond the limits of any Province."

The only words the hon. gentleman has upon where to base the organization of this association and give it power to go to Asia, are those at the end of the paragraph: "so as to connect any Province with any other Province of the Dominion, or to extend beyond the limits of any Province." The Act under which this association is proposed to be organized will not read well. There are several clauses besides the one mentioned by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), that could not possibly apply to this case, as there were special circumstances demanding attention at that particular time. I cannot sit down, however, without expressing myself very strongly against the creation of this monopoly; and I am glad to find that, although the sentiment of the House recently was strongly in favor of monopolies, that it is now expressing itself very strongly against them. I am glad also to find that the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Currier), although he voted a few days ago that $1,600,000 was absolutely unequal security, he now thinks $800,000 quite sufficient to enable the company to be organized.

Mr. LANGEVIN. In reply to the observations made by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), I may say that the tariff of rates is not to be fixed by these resolutions. As to the question of the number of cables, the company may lay down more than one cable, but we do not make it obligatory for the company to do so. It is in the interest of the company, if they decide to spend millions on this enterprise, to see that after one cable has been laid it be supplemented by others, to enable them to obtain the returns they must expect from their investment. Of course there must be a beginning. The company must be authorized to raise money to lay a first cable, and then, no doubt, they would afterwards proceed to lay a second and third cable. With respect to the attitude of the Japanese Government, in a letter written by Mr. Fleming to me the other day he tells me this:

"The Japanese Government have also endorsed the scheme, and conceded landing privileges at a suitable point in Yesso. It is satisfactory to know that substantial progress has been made in that direction."

Of course, I do not expect Mr. Fleming could obtain more information than that, because the matter has been in progress only a short time. I have no doubt this information will be supplemented by fuller information before the report of the Committee is assented to by the House. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) spoke of the basin of the Pacific Ocean, and clearly showed that the best point to lay a cable was from the Canadian shores, opposite British Columbia, across to Japan. It is the shortest route, and the one where a cable would be least liable to be disturbed. Perhaps the following figures, regarding cable distances, will possess interest to the House:

To be Constructed:
	Eng. miles.
From Nanaimo to Quatsino	230
From Quatsino to Walvis Bay at north-east angle of Yesso, including stock	4,240
From Walvis Bay to Satsuporo	300
Total to be constructed	4,770
Established:
	Eng. miles.
From Satsuporo to Nagasaki, near south-west angle of Japan	1,100
From Nagasaki to Shanghai	530
From Shanghai to Hong Kong	300
Total established	1,930

The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) remarked that the Acts mentioned in the resolutions were in conflict on certain points with the resolutions now introduced. The intention is that, after the resolutions have been assented to and the Bill introduced upon them, a clause will be introduced to remove the discrepancies between this and the general law. My hon. friend from Victoria thinks it may be too soon to do what we propose. Well, sometimes a little delay causes us to lose a great opportunity of obtaining a great advantage for the country. Our neighbors across the line are alive to the importance of this communication, and Mr. Fleming and his friends have not begun a single hour too soon. If we do not secure this great advantage for Canada now, foreign companies may take the matter up, and we may lose it, at least, for many years. The hon. member for West Durham and other members have spoken about the exclusive privilege to be given to this company for twenty years. There is no doubt that in ordinary undertakings, exclusive privileges should not be given. But from the information I have, I believe that we cannot expect capitalists to invest millions of money in this undertaking, unless they have some security that next Session we shall not be incorporating two or three companies to compete with them. They are not going into this matter simply on patriotic grounds. Mr. Fleming, no doubt, shows a good deal of patriotism in undertaking it; but, like all other men, he would not wish to sink his money and have no return for it. Mr. Fleming, writing to me to-day on this subject, says:

"My object is to see a telegraph to Asia, established as a great Canadian line, and I will gladly join with those most likely to assist in accomplishing this speedily. Nothing can possibly be gained by opposition, except to defeat the whole scheme."

Mr. MACKENZIE. Whose opinion is that?

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Fleming's. He agrees with me in the importance of dealing with this matter speedily, and not leave the opportunity to be taken advantage of by our enterprising neighbors. I have it from Mr. Fleming himself that, without the exclusive privilege mentioned here, he does not believe the company would undertake the work. My hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Currier) desires this other company to have the power which is sought for in this resolution. That would be defeating the very object the Government have in view. We believe one company should be incorporated to establish this line, and in order to do that, it is necessary for them to have the exclusive privilege. That privilege is limited to twenty years, which, in the life of a man, is a long time; but in the life of a nation is short. If we can secure this line, it will put England in communication with Asia through our own territory. We must not be dependent always on our neighbors. Having made these observations, I hope the hon. gentleman will allow the motion to pass.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I think that the Government should not press this matter. It is too important to be decided in a day or two; we ought to have an opportunity for deliberation. The principle of giving exclusive right for twenty years to Mr. Fleming and half-a-dozen others associated with him, to build a telegraphic communication from British Columbia to Asia, is one that involves an enormous concession. After the hon. member for Ottawa has stated that a bond fide company has been organized with a view to construct this work, and is willing to put up $800,000 as a guarantee of their sincerity, it seems to me the Government should delay the resolutions in order to give this proposition ample consideration. Surely the hon. Minister does not desire, when no necessity exists for it, to give the exclusive monopoly for twenty years, of telegraphic communication from British Columbia to Asia, to Mr. Fleming and his associates. It is not in accordance with the sentiment of the House that such a concession should be made, and before we are asked to make it we ought to have every means of information before us; we ought to see the plan of Mr. Fleming and the whole correspondence in reference to the subject.

Mr. DeCOSMOS. Every hon. gentleman will agree with the hon. Minister of Public Works that it is desirable to have a cable connecting the shores of British Columbia with those of Asia. But I question whether there are a very large number who are willing to grant exclusive right for twenty years for this cable communication. I am not prepared to cast my vote in favor of a monopoly for twenty years. I have a special reason for making that statement beyond the question now before the House. I introduced the first Telegraph Bill ever introduced to enable a company to stretch their wires on Vancouver Island. In 1864 we offered a company the twenty years exclusive privilege of operating the line. When the Bill went to England, I believe it was referred to the Board of Trade, or some other council there, and a despatch came out asking the Provincial Government to repeal the exclusive privilege. In 1865 we had to pass a Bill of which this is a portion of the preamble: "Whereas it is contrary to the policy of Her Majesty's Government to grant exclusive telegraphic privileges." I take it that so long as we are under Imperial rule, so long will the Imperial Government insist that no monopoly shall be granted. I am not aware that any monopoly has been granted with respect to telegraphic communication in connection with Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Mr. DeCOSMOS. I look upon this Bill as simply a money-making Bill, like all Bills of a similar nature. It is admitted by the Minister of Public Works, that unless Mr. Fleming can get the exclusive privilege for twenty years he does not want to have anything to do with forming a company. To bring it right down to the point, it is simply this: Mr. Fleming or his associates believe they can make money by getting an exclusive right which they can sell in the markets of the United States, Great Britain or Europe, and they will be very handsomely paid indeed. I trust this House will follow the policy laid down by Her Majesty's Government in 1864-65, and deny to any company the exclusive right for twenty years, or longer or shorter period, of operating telegraph lines in any portion of this Dominion. The United States Constitution recognizes no such thing as a monopoly, nor does the constitution of any State recognize it. I can say, with respect to the line contemplated, what great advantage can Mr. Fleming and his associates gain, even in the money market, except to make a sale of it at once. 250 miles south of Quatsino Sound, we have Cape Flattery in Washington Territory, and from there a cable can be stretched across the ocean on very nearly the same line as the proposed cable. I understand it has been proposed in San Francisco to stretch a line across the ocean to Japan and China. At present they have to go round by the way of Europe and across Asia, to reach those countries. In view, therefore, of the one point, that of monopoly, I sincerely trust this House will not recognize any such principle.

Mr. LANGEVIN. After hearing the remarks of the hon. gentleman, it is only due to the House that I should ask the postponement of those resolutions. Perhaps the hon. member for Ottawa will be in a position to communicate to my department this statement that he was kind enough to make to the House, and put the Government in a position to deal with the matter on Thursday.

Mr. CURRIER. I have no objection to what has been suggested by the hon. Minister of Public Works. I rise to correct a little mistake I made in naming $500,000. The amount is $750,000—£150,000 sterling—which the company are prepared to put up before the House adjourns.

Mr. McCARTHY moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bills were read a second time, considered in Committee, and reported:—

Bill (No. 58) to provide for the salaries of an additional Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench and an additional Judge of the Superior Court in the Province of Quebec.—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou.)

Bill (No. 64) to continue in force for a limited time the Act passed in the forty-third year of Her Majesty's Reign, entitled: "An Act respecting the administration of Criminal Justice in the Territory in dispute between the Governments of the Province of Ontario and of the Dominion of Canada."—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou.)

UNIFORM CURRENCY.

The following Bill was read the second time, considered in Committee, read the third time, and passed:—

Bill (No. 66) to extend the Act establishing one uniform currency for the Dominion of Canada to the Provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island.—(Sir Leonard Tilley.)

SUPPLY.

House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

26. Dominion Police $13,500 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the number of the force at present?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Twenty, I think. It is either twenty or twenty-one—I am not sure which—but at all events the number is the same as last year, and one more than two years ago.

28. St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary $82,740 69

Mr. BLAKE. Is the number of inmates the same as last year?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Yes

Mr. BLAKE. Will you state why the number of guards has been increased?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The Inspector called my attention to the fact that four more guards were necessary, and I directed him to make a special report on the subject, which he did, strongly urging the addition. I shall be able to hand the hon. gentleman the report this evening.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I notice that Kingston, which has nearly double the number of inmates of that of St. Vincent de Paul, has only 77 officers, while the latter has 60. Of course there may be special reasons for this large staff but the disproportion is considerable.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The observation is quite just, but I have found it quite impossible to lessen the number.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the state of the penitentiary structure? Is the work of construction complete?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The work of construction is completed and the new wing is occupied, though a further extension is required, because, as the hon. gentleman probably knows, almost every year we have to send some prisoners from that penitentiary to Kingston. It is contemplated to add another wing, but at present works of construction are not in progress.

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I am told the reduction is in consequence of work that had been heretofore carried on under the direction of the warden, and is now transferred to the Public Works Department. Consequently, the warden has been able to make a reduction in his estimate for tools and material. The decrease in maintenance, the warden states, is in consequence of lower prices in articles this year than last.

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The increase in the item for uniforms from $1,182 to $2,891, arises from the greater number of guards and officers in the institution requiring uniforms this year than was the case last year. It has been asked for by the acting warden to enable him to uniform the whole of his staff, as is now allowed in the other penitentiaries.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. How many uniforms would that represent? I would like to know what the uniforms cost, as a matter of information. Supposing that forty or fifty were required they would cost $60 or $70 a piece.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I have not a memorandum of the number of uniforms required.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe there is one sergeant instead of two; is it intended to have but one in the future?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I think that is a great improvement. If this is a superannuation it should have been accompanied by a re-adjustment of salaries, that would have given the other sergeant something more. That is what we contemplated doing.

27. Kingston Penitentiary.....$126,894 29

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). No new uniforms are required the coming year; $1,878 is considered sufficient to make the necessary repairs, which is a saving from last year of $1,155. On the item of maintenance the warden has been able to effect a saving of $3,146, on account of the lower prices of supplies. On the item of working expenses it is necessary to add $3,600, in consequence of the advance in the price of fuel and some other articles. On capital account $2,100 has been placed in the Estimates, to enable the warden to complete the forcing pump, for which the sum of $5,000, voted last year, has been found insufficient.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman determined upon adding a new industry last year, that of a grist mill.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). We did not proceed with it I have not got the details to show upon which items the economy has been effected. The warden has sent them down in full; they must be in the office, and I will be glad to hand them to the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. Minister will give us some details as to the way in which these convicts are employed.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The hon. gentleman will find more information in the report laid on the Table than I can give. My hon. friend, I dare say, knows more about Kingston Penitentiary than I do, as I have only been there once. I understand that a large number are engaged on the farm, a large number at quarrying, and from 70 to 80 in a lock factory; there are also a variety of other industries.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am shocked to hear from the Minister of Justice himself that the present Government are carrying on in this penitentiary industries which compete with free labor. I recollect when the Prime Minister was condescending enough to attack the late Government on this question. The Minister of Militia also delivered a lecture last year on the iniquity of allowing competition between convict and free labor. Yet we now learn from the Minister of Justice that a new industry has been started, which employs seventy or eighty men.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou).

Mr. GAULT. It is a very old industry.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It was dead for years; but this Government, which professed when in Opposition, to favor the protection of free labor against convict labor, has revived this industry, and put seventy or eighty convict mechanics into competition with the same number of free mechanics. I want the Minister of Militia to explain why he has accepted office in a Government which violates his principle in so shocking a manner. If he wants time to consider what he should do, I have no objection to wait another day.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The ground of that vexed question is too sacred for me. Ever since I have had a seat in this House, the hon. gentlemen opposite and the leader of the Government have had a tilt with reference to this subject, and I prefer to leave it in such able hands. With reference to the lock industry, I have only to say that I found it in operation when I accepted office, and it still continues. I take for granted that it was in operation before, under the direction and with the assent of the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I hope the hon. gentleman will not assume that I am interfering with the right of himself and the leader of the Government to discuss that question to the fullest extent.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman cannot get off in that way. It is in his department, and he has to state the principles on which the Government has acted. I ask him what the Government are going to do in this matter?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Do not spare him on my account.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I know what the principles of hon. gentlemen opposite were when they were in Opposition; they had none at all, and the Minister of Justice now proposes to follow his leader in that respect. Let us know whether this shocking competition with free labor is to continue or not. I have not yet received an answer from the Minister of Militia.

Mr. CARON. I think the hon. gentleman has ill-selected the item on which to get up this discussion. There could be no competition so far as the lock factory is concerned, as it happens to be the only lock factory in Canada.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. gentleman's colleague, the Minister of Finance, will tell him there has been a lock factory for several years at Moncton, the existence of which he regards as a proof of the triumph of the National Policy.

Mr. CARON. The lock factory at Moncton has only commenced.

Mr. ANGLIN. It was opened three years ago.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I congratulate the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie) on the vigor with which he is able to administer these rebukes—long may it be so. I am informed, however, by the hon. Minister of Finance that this lock factory at Moncton was only built last summer, and therefore no injury has been done to this infant industry. I think that when the manufacture of locks becomes seriously compromised by convict labor, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will find some other means of employing these people. Depend upon it, this industry at Moncton, as soon as it is hurt, will cry out, but until they or other parties complain, I think we may not disturb ourselves. I still am of the opinion, I have always been, that convict labor, whether in common gaols or in penitentiaries, should be employed as much as possible in industries that are net in existence or likely to be in existence in the Dominion. I have no doubt that the ingenuity of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and those who have the management of the penitentiaries, will discover various means of employing convict labor so as not to interfere in any appreciable degree with industries outside.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is there any industry introduced into the Penitentiary of Kingston within the last two years which differs in any respect from the industries used there between 1873 and 1878, and if so, what?

Mr. MILLS. The hon. Minister of Militia says that when this industry which has been started at Moncton becomes strong, the Government will give it some consideration. The hon. gentleman seems to think that while it is weak it does not require any consideration. It must show its ability to thrive without Government support and in spite of Government opposition, before the Government will come to its aid. Then the hon. First Minister tells us, the Government will take care that the convicts do not learn a trade which will be of any possible use to them after they leave the institution. They must only be employed on certain branches that do not come into competition with any branch of industry in the country, so that when they are discharged they will find they have been engaged in employments for which they cannot find any use. Convicts have not a very large amount of capital, and will have, therefore, to seek employment from those who furnish the capital and conduct the existing industries of the country. But the hon. gentleman will not permit them to learn, when serving their term of imprisonment, any industry of that sort, because that would be competing with the ordinary industries of the country. When those men are taken from outside and confined in the penitentiary because they have been doing nothing but seeking to live at the expense of others, they are put to forcible labor, but the right hon. gentleman says: "We will take care that by your labor you hurt nobody else." If they were outside, working at an honest industry, they would not be hurting anybody else, but because they are put within four walls their labor must prove disastrous, and the Government will take good care that they do not do more harm by their industry than they did while outside by their idleness. If the hon. gentleman is right, those men are infinitely more detrimental to the ordinary interests of the country when confined than when running at large. If that is the view of the Government, it seems to me that the penitentiary should be locked up and the criminals left free outside, where they may do some mischief, but less mischief than they would do working at industries which will come into competition with similar industries in the country. The hon. gentleman has given us a very excellent demonstration of the general policy of the Administration. The same principle which the hon. gentleman has enunciated with so much force and so much perspicuity—for we have no difficulty in understanding him—is the one which applies to the fiscal policy upon which the Government has sought to conduct the affairs of this country since the elections of 1878.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I admit I am not a humanitarian and a universal philanthropist like my hon. friend. I do not think it is the duty of a Government to educate, at the public expense, the thieves, scoundrels and rogues, in order that they may compete with the honest artizan outside; that is the policy of the hon. gentleman. The convict is either a mechanic, a laborer or a professional man. If he has a trade or a profession he can work at it when he gets out; if he has not, he can work as a laboring man. I do not think it is the duty of a Government to reward crime and vice by educating men beyond the trade with which they entered the penitentiary. That is not the object for which penitentiaries are built. They are built for the purpose of punishing crime, for the purpose of isolating parties who have joined the criminal classes, in order that by retirement from their evil associations they may, perhaps, be weaned from their criminal courses. I am sure that the artizan, the tradesmen and the workingmen of this country will not agree with the hon. gentleman that it is with their money we should educate criminals to a higher degree of skilled labor than when they entered the penitentiary.

Mr. MACKENZIE asked if any of the convicts, since October 1878, in the penitentiaries, were taught trades.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I cannot tell whether they are or not. I have no doubt if men are required in the blacksmith or other shops, they are taken from the general body of the convicts. So far as I am individually concerned, I dare say men, not belonging to permanent criminal classes, are better with a trade than without one. I am not dealing with that question now. I will endeavor to obtain what information the hon. gentleman requires, if he will send me a memorandum of it.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. First Minister has made great professions on this occasion, as he made great professions for five years, when he was in Opposition, and denounced the conduct of the Government with reference to the occupations of convicts in the various penitentiaries. What change has he made in their occupations? Has any successful effort been made to make a change? Has anything been done to carry out what the hon. gentleman loudly professed for five years, when he had not the power to carry his professions into practice?

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I would like, when the hon. Minister of Justice brings down the information asked for, that he would give some idea of the receipts obtained by the several penitentiaries from the labor of their convicts.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The hon. gentleman will find, in general principles, the information asked for in the report of last year.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It would be very interesting to see whether any progress is made from year to year in making those institutions self-supporting.

Mr. BLAKE. The whole object of the change which was made some time ago, as to the date of the annual report, has been defeated by the course pursued in its preparation. The report was formerly prepared for the civil year, and was laid on the Table not later than 1st February; but we provided that the report should be dated up to 30th June, like the usual reports, in order that it should be prepared at such a reasonable time before the Session that it should be laid on the Table of the House by 1st February. Notwithstanding that this report is for the year ending June 30th, 1880, I see it was presented to His Excellency only on 30th January, 1881. It is very unfortunate if we are not to have the report in print for use during the Session. We might at any rate have the statistics up to a late date, to give us the late results. At present we have a stale report in point of time, and that in manuscript which we cannot read.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). No doubt there is some reason for complaint in this matter. But the explanation given by the officer Mr. Moylan, which is true, is, that last summer he spent several weeks superintending an investigation at St. Vincent de Paul, and it was late in the season before he could undertake the preparation of the report, when there was not enough time to have it printed and laid on the Table in the usual manner. I trust in future there will be no delays.

Mr. BLAKE. The great bulk of the Penitentiary Report consists of long and detailed reports given to the Inspector by the chief wardens of the various penitentiaries, and the Inspector's arduous labors at St. Vincent de Paul at the close of the year need not have prevented those reports, as they came in at the end of last June, from being in the printer's hands and made ready for us.

Mr. ANGLIN. I notice a very considerable increase of the salaries of officers and of the whole expenses of those establishments since 1878, when hon. gentlemen opposite obtained office. The number of officers has also been increased from sixty-nine to seventy-seven. Why were these increases found necessary? During the late Government's Administration, strong objections were made to such expenditure by the party now in power.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The Estimates show that the number of officers for the Kingston Penitentiary is the same this year as last. There may be an additional guard or messenger employed occasionally, but I know of no addition to the general staff, or any alterations whatever for the last two years.

Mr. ANGLIN. There are six additional employés on the list, four of them guards at Kingston, since 1878.

House resumed.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

House again in Committee of Supply.

29. Dorchester Penitentiary..... $14,285 00

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). There is an increase of $100 on account of teamsters, and a reduction of $2,000 on account of uniforms. On maintenance there is an increase of $862, owing to an increase of ten upon the prison population of last year. In working expenses there is a reduction of $10,000. It will be in the recollection of the Committee that last year there was the sum of $16,000 placed against this item in consequence of anticipated expenses connected with the removal of prisoners from Halifax and St. John to Dorchester. That work having been accomplished, the amount is reduced to the ordinary working expenses. The capital account is increased by $700 on account of material and the construction of a main drain and a pump apparatus in connection with it. In the industries there is an increase of $1,134. We propose to make an extension of this building, and we shall utilize, as far as possible, the labor of the prisoners in taking the stone from the quarries in the neighborhood, and this $1,134 is for the purpose of buying the necessary tools.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. How many convicts are there in the penitentiary?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The prison population is, I think, 120. We were obliged the other day to send some ten or twenty to Kingston, and there is now room in the penitentiary for eight or ten, so as to provide for any contingency.

Mr. BLAKE. May I ask how many female convicts there are in the Dorchester Penitentiary?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I think only three or four.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me that it is likely—I hope it will be the case—that there will very seldom be as many as three or four. I know there are very few in Kingston, which takes the whole of the female penitentiary convicts from Ontario and Quebec; and I think it would be well to consider whether it is an economical plan to have the separate apartments, which are necessary for the staff, in keeping up female wards in the institution, when the average female population will be only two or three. I notice that there is a matron and a deputy matron, with their wages, rations, apartments and all the incidental expenses which are necessary in separate accommodation, and which must be far in excess of what would be required simply for the cells of the women. For a long time it has been arranged on reasonable business considerations that there should be no female wards in St. Vincent de Paul—the female convicts being sent to Kingston—and I think it would be well to consider whether such a plan would not be a reasonable business arrangement with regard to Dorchester. I would ask the hon.

Mr. BLAKE.

gentleman in this connection if he would state shortly what are the results of the closing of the old penitentiaries of Halifax and St. John. With reference to the important questions of how many of the staffs of those two institutions the hon. gentleman was able to employ at Dorchester, and of what guards, how many have been superannuated, and at what cost and to what extent gratuities have been paid. It is not likely the hon. gentleman was able to take on all the staff, but no doubt he was able to take on some of them.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I have not the information to-night, but I will be able to supply it very fully in the morning. Every man who was willing and fit to be transferred was taken over, and the only one who was superannuated was well entitled to that consideration. The maintenance of female wards is no doubt a serious item, but as the hon. gentleman will recollect, female prisoners were kept both at St. John and Halifax, and transferred to Dorchester. It was a long distance to send them to Kingston, and I was not able then to determine what number I might possibly require to keep in Dorchester. I am quite free to admit, however, that the question of effecting a saving in that particular is well worthy of consideration.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I would call the attention of the Minister to the fact that by the Estimates of 1878 Halifax and St. John together has only thirty-five officers, and those included two wardens, two accountants, four chaplains and two surgeons. Of those no less than five, of course, were saved by the amalgamation, yet I observe here that forty-four officers are required in Dorchester Penitentiary, and prima facie the increase from thirty-five to forty-four appears unusually large.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The increase is in the guards. The penitentiary, since it was opened, has been, until recently, very poorly protected. There were 130 people there, with no means of confinement whatever. At St. John there was a wall, and half-a-dozen guards could have care of as many convicts as fifteen or twenty guards at Dorchester. During the summer the convicts have worked in the field, on a large farm of 400 acres, and also in the quarries. It was absolutely necessary, in the opinion of the officers, that the number of guards should be largely increased. We shall probably be able to reduce the number by the end of the year. The officers are: warden, deputy warden, accountant, surgeon and chaplain, the same as in other penitentiaries, except that there are a keeper and a matron at Dorchester, which the other institutions have not.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Last year we were given reason to hope that a saving would be effected in the charges of management. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that at Kingston, for 775 convicts, there are only seventy-seven officials of all kinds; at St. Vincent de Paul there are sixty officials for 400 convicts; here, for 130 convicts, forty-four officials are required, three times as many, proportionately, as are required at Kingston, and about double the number required at St. Vincent de Paul. I should hope when the requisite erections are put up the number of keepers can be reduced.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The disproportion is only in the guards. There are forty three of these at Kingston, twenty-four at St. Vincent de Paul and twenty at Dorchester. At Kingston, however, the institution is so well protected that a relatively smaller proportion of guards is required, and the same observation applies to St. Vincent de Paul. I hope when the wall now being constructed at Dorchester is completed, that we shall be able to dispense with some of the guards. It is also to be remembered that the chief part of the industries of the convicts at Dorchester is carried on outside the walls, while at the other two institutions the industries are mainly conducted indoors. The whole population at Dorchester is engaged on the farm, in quarrying and other outside work.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman say what industries are projected or now conducted at Dorchester besides the quarry and the farm?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). None. At Halifax and St. John, as my hon. friend knows, the convicts made wooden work, buckets, brooms, &c. That has not been attempted at Dorchester. The warden says he has full occupation for the people in clearing the ground and completing the works to the establishment. It will be a question what we shall be able to do with them hereafter during the winter months.

Mr. BLAKE. In so large a prison population as 130, there is always a certain number who cannot be employed in outdoor occupation. Quarrying is unsuited to many people, as are also many agricultural operations. It is essential, to any reasonable efforts to carry out penitentiary arrangements, that there should be some occupation for the prisoners. Therefore, I think it devolves on the hon. gentleman to call upon his officers to consider what would be the best employment to bring forward for indoor employment for the Dorchester Penitentiary during the winter months. It was the habit of the prisoners at Halifax and St. John to make their clothing and shoes; I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has this industry carried on still.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). There is a repair shop for tailoring and shoe making, but the clothing has been obtained from Kingston. I concur in the hon. gentleman's suggestion about indoor employment, and will ask the views of the warden on the subject.

Mr. BLAKE. With regard to the sum for the guard in capital account, I was responsible for the item of this description. It was not intended to cover works of that kind. There is a new building not yet finished, and the expense of a drain in that building, $700, is put down as part of the construction expenses. I think it would be very objectionable that the expenses for building should be charged to maintenance, if that is what the hon. gentleman proposes. I desire to ask whether the new works at Dorchester will be done by convict labor or let out by contract, and constructed partly by convict and partly by free labor, or whether it will be done by free labor.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). On the new works at Dorchester, convict labor will be utilized in getting out stone and every other mode in which such labor can be utilized. With respect to the $700 under the head of capital account, that sum should have been given through the Minister of Public Works, but the warden asked for it in this form because he proposed to do the work by convict labor, and this sum would be required for material.

Mr. BLAKE. All expenses for construction should come under one head, and those for maintenance under another.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is undoubtedly correct, and this practice has been followed with respect to the new works at Dorchester Penitentiary. Two contracts must be completed, but convict labor will be utilized as much as possible.

Mr. BLAKE. What additional accommodation will be provided?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The new wing will give accommodation for 100 more inmates.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). In reply to the enquiry made by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) before recess, I beg to state that the staff of Kingston Penitentiary for 1877-78 numbered 71; for 1878-79, 76; for 1880, 76; at present, 77.

Mr. ANGLIN. The number of officers at Dorchester is altogether out of proportion to the number of convicts. One officer might perform the duties of accountant and store-keeper. Then there are hospital keeper and steward. The carpenter, mason and blacksmith instructors have now nothing to do as such. Then there is the schoolmaster; I do not know how many children he has to teach, but I presume his office might be very well amalgamated with that of the accountant. There is also an engineer and machinist at $780 a year; the hon. Minister did not tell us what he had to do.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The engineer and machinist has charge of the steam-heating apparatus, which heats the whole building, and a steam engine outside for sawing and other work, so that there is perhaps no harder worked man in the establishment. The steward must necessarily have his hands full, as he has to provide for 130 people every day, and to supervise the cooking and serving of the food. The storekeeper has to take charge of all the stores of every kind, and to serve the prisoners with clothing and other articles. The idea of having a schoolmaster is, that if the younger prisoners should desire to learn, they should have the opportunity to do so. Of course, if it is not the desire of Parliament that these young persons should learn anything while there, this small sum can be saved; but I do not think it would be possible to obtain a competent person to undertake the not very agreeable duty of trying to thrash a little knowledge, and I hope a little virtue, into the heads of young convicts for less.

Mr. ANGLIN. Last year, when the Estimates were under consideration, I called the attention of the Minister to the necessity of providing the Catholic chaplain, who lives some distance from the penitentiary, with the means of procuring a horse. The Minister of Justice intimated that he would add $100 a year or so for that purpose. I would like to ask him why no such provision has been made.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I will be honest—I forgot all about it. I do not recollect that it was discussed while the Estimates were passing last year, but it has been brought my attention since. The Catholic chaplain, I understand, lives some six or seven miles from the penitentiary, and this time twelve months we will, perhaps, take the matter into consideration.

Mr. BLAKE. The Finance Minister has threatened a supplementary vote. I would recommend him to bring it down then.

Mr. JONES. I do not think we want any supplementary votes for penitentiaries. I think they are carried on in a most extravagant way. Why should we have stewards—who are simply head waiters—schoolmasters, chaplains, and the best food and clothing for these fellows, and teach criminals everything to enable them to compete with honest labor outside? Why do we not carry on our penitentiaries as they do in England? They do not give a premium for men to get into the penitentiaries to spend a pleasant winter there as we do.

Mr. BLAKE. I think there is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman says. I recollect once enquiring with reference to the dietary in the Kingston Penitentiary, and I found that it was thought necessary to have the very finest quality of flour and beef. I was told that it was considered those convicts could not do a good day's work unless their system was sustained with eatables of the quality to which I referred. My own strong impression is that very much might be done by an operation which might, by the warden, be considered a revolution in the dietary as the hon. member has said.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I was surprised the other day to see in the medical report from one of the penitentiaries that the health of the convicts made it absolutely necessary the dietary should be increased. I do not suggest any amendment in the law, but if any amendment in the direction of making it unpleasant for the people who reside in penitentiaries should be considered, it would be well they should be reminded every three months or so they were not in a first-class hotel. Whether the public mind is prepared for such an improvement as that I am not aware.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. To-morrow will be Ash Wednesday. Why not make the convicts keep Lent?

30. Manitoba Penitentiaries..... $21,541 28

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The staff is the same as last year. In uniforms there is an increase of $346, and in maintenance $59.03. The working expenses have been reduced by $1,942, in consequence of substituting heating apparatus, similar to that at Dorchester, for stoves. For capital account no vote is required.

Mr. SCHULTZ. In what manner was the capital account expended last year?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I will ascertain and let the hon. gentleman know. I have not the information at present.

31. British Columbia Penitentiary..... $17,523 63

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The salaries of the warden and chief keeper have been increased $100. The cost of maintenance has been increased $1,147, the estimate being based on a population of sixty instead of forty-five, the number last year. The capital account has been increased by $450, to enable the warden to purchase a horse and buggy for the benefit of the chaplain. The warden says:

"I have received more than one complaint that the chaplains in that Province have been without the means of discharging their duties to the prisoners in those institutions, and it is recommended that an item be placed in the Estimates to supply that defect."

Mr. BLAKE. What item is that in?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Capital account.

Mr. McINNES. It is only a mile and a quarter. I do not object to the item for a horse and buggy for the conveyance of the chaplain, but I think it would be much more in the interest of the institution to increase the warden's salary to something like the amount paid similar officers in the Dominion. He receives only $1,200, while the Manitoba warden gets $2,000. The keepers and guards in British Columbia are as well paid as elsewhere, and the warden should be put on the same footing, living being expensive in that Province, as much so as in Manitoba.

Mr. JONES. I cannot agree with the member for New Westminster (Mr. McInnes) as to the propriety of increasing the salary of the British Columbia warden. The fifty convicts of that nice convict establishment in British Columbia costs $17,523 a year, or nearly $292 per head. I do not think our different Provinces should vie with each other in increasing the expenses of their different penitentiaries. They should strive more to reduce the expenses. I think $1,200 a year is quite sufficient for taking care of fifty convicts. Our system is a vicious one, and the cost of our penitentiaries should be reduced.

Mr. McINNES. The Manitoba Penitentiary provides for only fifty convicts, its warden receives $2,000 a year, while the British Columbia Penitentiary cares for sixty, its warden getting but $1,200. I am not more desirous than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones) of increasing penitentiary expenditure, but I think, as a matter of justice, the salary of the British Columbia warden should be increased to the amount paid in Manitoba.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend (Mr. McInnes) and I will agree as to one thing; that is, that penitentiary expenses ought not to be so increased as to produce inconsistency. He wants to make a change from last year in his Province, but there is a change made: in Manitoba the chief keeper gets $800 a year, in British Columbia he got $800 last year, but most improperly, with a very great disregard to the principle of equality, it is proposed to raise it to $900 this year. My hon. friend must at once perceive that, to be consistent, he should vote with me to keep this increase out of the Estimates. The expenditure of those small penitentiaries is necessarily greatly disproportionate to the work they do, and should be kept down to the lowest point possible. I do not see how it could be expected, in such a small Province as British Columbia, as regards population, that there should be sixty persons in its penitentiary at once. I objected last year to the increase of the salary of the warden of the Manitoba Penitentiary, as very unwarrantable; but I do not see that it follows we should have another increase this year for the benefit of the British Columbia warden. His salary is sufficiently large. The cost of the maintenance of the convicts in British Columbia is but $83 per head, and that at the St. Vincent de Paul institution $83, so British Columbia cannot be so expensive a country to live in as we have been led to believe. The warden in British Columbia is not, I notice, a very correct calculator of distances, as he misrepresents or mistakes the distance the chaplain has to travel, as is now proved by the testimony of the member for New Westminster, who is, however, proposing an increase wholly indefensible. Over four miles these unfortunate men, to minister to the spiritual wants of the convicts, have to walk afoot if they are not provided with horses. But the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McInnes), who lives on the ground, and must know, says it is hardly a mile and a quarter. I do not think that under the circumstances this special charge should be increased.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I must say that the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McInnes), have put an entirely new phase on the matter, and if the House will allow me to take the vote I shall see that it is not expended, if I find upon enquiry that any misrepresentation has been made by the warden. With regard to the increase in the salary of the deputy warden and chief keeper—for he really combines those offices—it was made on the same ground as the increase in the salary of the warden of Manitoba penitentiary last year. He is a man of the highest character, and admirably fitted for his duties, and rather than lose one whose retention in the office was very desirable, if not essential, I agreed to increase his income. I did not feel, however, that I would be justified in increasing the salary of the warden, notwithstanding that I was very strongly pressed to do so by my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. McInnes).

Mr. McINNES. With regard to the salary of the warden, I do not blame the present hon. Minister of Justice so much for neglecting to raise it, as I do the hon. leader of the Opposition, for when he was Minister of Justice he appointed him at a salary of $1,200, or $200 less than the warden of the Manitoba Penitentiary, when the cost of living is certainly less (if there be any difference) in Manitoba than in British Columbia. If it was necessary to pay the guards as good salaries in British Columbia as in Manitoba, I think the wardens should not have been put on a different footing. I think it an injustice that such an officer should receive a paltry $1,200, and that he should certainly receive $1,400 or $1,600.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). In reply to what was said by the hon. member for West Durham, I may say that the per capita cost of maintenance in British Columbia is $83.72, as against $73.14 in St. Vincent de Paul.

47. To meet expenses in connection with care of public archives..... $5,000 00

Mr. ANGLIN. I should like to know what has been done, and what is likely to be done, for the money we have been granting year after year under this head, and whether the expenditure is, or is not, to be a permanent one?

Mr. POPE (Compton). I may say that this money is voted, not really for the care of our own archives, but for copying valuable documents in London pertaining to the history of this country. A large number of them have been copied, and the work is still going on. It will be completed this year, as nearly as I can ascertain. The work is being looked after by Abbé Verrault, of Montreal, and by Mr. Brymner, of the department. It was strongly recommended to the House by a Committee some years ago.

Mr. ANGLIN. Seven or eight years ago.

Mr. POPE. That may have been the time when the recommendation was made, but the work has not been continuous since then. Sixty or seventy very large volumes have been copied; and among those which are now being copied is the Haldimand collection, which will be completed this year. I will bring down the full particulars.

Mr. BLAKE. What will be the total charge in connection with the care and collection of the public archives?

Mr. POPE. Altogether?

Mr. BLAKE. Yes.

Mr. POPE. I will say about $15,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Do we understand that, as the matter is at present organized, this sum is really spent in keeping these archives?

Mr. POPE. Almost all of it. Of course, after they come here something is spent in putting them into shape.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there any officer in charge here, permanently, who gets anything for that?

Mr. POPE. No one but Mr. Brymner. His sole duty is not confined to these papers. His chief work, for a number of years, has been in making a collection of all the archives of the several Provinces.

Mr. BLAKE. If we have an officer in our service who has some permanence of employment, the proper course would be to take a vote for his salary.

Mr. POPE. So we do. There is a vote taken for his salary every year. Possibly it is not in this vote.

Mr. BLAKE. My desire is that the Public Accounts should be, so far as possible, representative of the true state of things, and that when we have an officer in our employment we should have a vote for his salary.

Mr. POPE. I can assure the hon. gentleman that he will find a vote for his salary in the staff of that department.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That vote was first taken in 1872-73 for the sum of $4,000, which was afterwards increased to $5,000. Consequently, to the end of 1882, we will have voted for this service about $48,000. I do not think the whole of that amount has been spent, but it has been taken.

Mr. ANGLIN. Can the hon. member inform us when we may expect this work to be completed?

Mr. POPE. That depends entirely upon the House. I think it is very important we should complete this collection, and I am going to ask the House this year to vote this sum with the hope that it will complete the collection. It will be then for the House to consider how long the work shall be continued. It pertains to the history of the country. In the United States they copy almost every document of this kind.

Mr. ANGLIN. Besides those being collected, there are many other documents equally valuable as material for the future history of this country. When we are voting money for a service of this kind, we ought to have some idea of the extent to which we are to go.

48. Patent Record..... $7,200 00

Mr. ANGLIN. I would like the hon. Minister to state, on his responsibility and from his experience as Minister, whether he thinks this paper is worth that sum to the people of this country.

Mr. POPE. When this paper was first established it cost us $4,000 a year. The late Administration thought it was worth keeping up, and they increased the amount to $7,000. I have been urged by friends of the hon. gentlemen opposite to publish a larger number of copies, but I declined to do so. I say, upon my responsibility as a member of the Government, that I think it is worth that sum.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that sum has been spent every year.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. What number of copies are printed?

Mr. POPE. I do not remember. Two copies are sent to every member, and it is sent to every public institution.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I think this paper is of very little use to members. I was going to ask whether any number of copies are preserved for the purpose of being bound, or offered for sale, as is done in England and the United States. Men of a mechanical turn of mind might desire to possess themselves of bound volumes of this paper. If it is bound and put on sale the expense of the publication might be partially met, or its usefulness demonstrated. If it is merely for the purpose of furnishing the members of this House and public institutions with a few copies, it seems to me it is a large expense for a very little advantage.

Mr. POPE. There are twelve or fifteen pages in each number. We do not publish it for sale, but the gentleman who publishes it has a large subscription.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. This is a bonus, is it?

Mr. POPE. It is what we pay him. In the first place, it was connected with the publication of another paper, the name of which I forget. I said: "If you think you can publish this for $4,000 a year I will join you; I think it will be useful." He said he could not afford to continue it without additional aid, and the sum was increased accordingly to $7,000 by the hon. gentlemen opposite. I have since asked him if he could not publish it for a less sum, and he said he could not. There is a very considerable sale for the publication both in Canada and the United States.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. The work is of very little use to us unless all the numbers are collected and made complete for the year.

49. To meet expenses in connection with preparation of Criminal Statistics..... $5 000 00

Mr. BLAKE. It is time the hon. Minister of Agriculture gave in the Estimates details of this vote. At first it was uncertain what state the service would assume, what staff would be required, and what sum would be obtained for the Provinces. But three or four years have passed, and the Public Accounts Committee last Session obtained details in respect to the service, and it then appeared there were certain salaried officers employed. The vote ought to be reformed, and details should be given in future.

Mr. POPE (Compton). Of the vote last year $341 had been expended. The returns do not come to any considerable extent, until after this time, and a large amount of the vote therefore remained unexpended. This was, of course, outside of the salaries paid to the officers who are steadily engaged in compiling the statistics.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a staff comprising two, three or four men employed, and there is no reason why their salaries should not appear.

Mr. POPE. As it was a new matter, we did not feel that we should establish a new staff and bring men into the Civil Service until the system had a trial. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman was worthy of all attention. No doubt after the census has been taken we must settle on some policy with respect to obtaining the statistics of the country, and nothing would give me greater pleasure than to place on the permanent staff the gentlemen who are now doing the work, in place of having them employed as extra clerks.

50. To meet expenses in connection with the Census. $200,000 00

Mr. BLAKE asked that this item be allowed to stand until the papers promised had been brought down.

Mr. BUNSTER. I desire to ask whether it is intended to take the census in British Columbia completely, the number of the white, the Indian, the Chinese and the foreign population; so that we may give the people of Canada an intelligent view as to how we are intruded upon by those whom we do not require.

Mr. POPE. We intend to take it as completely as we can. There will be very great difficulty both in the North-West and in British Columbia, in getting the whole population, and it will be very expensive to do so. We cannot take the census there as nicely and exactly as we can in the older Provinces, but we will do the best we can. With respect to the remark of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), I do not desire to put the vote until all the papers have been brought down.

Mr. BUNSTER. I consider the answer I got from the Minister of Agriculture was an evasive one. I would like to impress upon him the desirability of seeing that the statistics of British Columbia are properly taken, particularly those relating to the Chinese, of whom I believe there are some 7,500 in the Province. Last month, I am credibly informed, there arrived not less than about 1,600. I wish to know if the hon. Minister has given the officers in British Columbia instructions to take an accurate census of our population.

Mr. POPE. We intend to have it made as accurate as possible.

Item allowed to stand.

51. Dominion Exhibition $5,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. Where is this exhibition to be held next year?

Mr. POPE. In Halifax. This is the same amount as was given in aid of the exhibition in Montreal last year, and that in Ottawa the year before, and as will, perhaps, be given for one in Toronto the year after.

Mr. SCHULTZ. I would suggest a more central point, namely, Winnipeg.

52. Immigration and Quarantine $158,100 00

Mr. BLAKE. I understood that this matter was recently relegated to a private corporation and was not to appear in the Estimates at all. Am I mistaken?

Mr. POPE. I am afraid you are.

Mr. ANGLIN. We were certainly led to believe that the Syndicate would be much more efficient agents for the promotion of immigration than the Government, and that we could look for a great reduction in the immigration expenditure. Apart from the expenditure at the various ports in Canada, very much of which I think might be fairly reduced, we find from the statement before us that the whole European staff is to be maintained. I would like to know what has become of that magnificent project for promoting emigration from Ireland to our North-West. The papers brought down showed that the Minister of Agriculture, at the instance of the High Commissioner, who seems to be at the bottom of the whole project, proposed to the Imperial Government some plan of encouraging emigration from Ireland to Canada. Beyond the simple acknowledgment of the receipt of this Minute of Council, and the promise that it would be referred to the proper authority in England, there was nothing else, and we have heard nothing of the matter since. If the whole scheme has not been utterly abortive, I think the time has come when we should know what has been done in this matter.

Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. HESSON. It would not be wise to withhold our hand now, for the reason—and the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat will agree with me—is a good one, that we are likely to have a large immigration from Ireland.

Mr. ANGLIN. Why?

Mr. HESSON. On account of the trouble there. Well, people will not choose to live longer in a country where they cannot have peace and quietness. We ought to extend our grant, because our revenue justifies a more liberal expenditure. We ought to be more liberal in connection with our expenditure on German immigration. That expenditure has been very limited indeed. A paltry sum has been voted to ask a German delegation to visit this country and report on its resources. I call on the hon. Minister to increase very largely the amount fixed for that purpose—to induce the people of Germany to elect delegates to visit this country and report on its resources and capabilities, as was done in the case of Great Britain. Whilst the Americans are receiving such large accessions to their country from Germany, we have been receiving none, because this and previous Governments have neglected to disseminate in that country a reasonable amount of knowledge as to our capabilities and resources. This is a mistake on our part, for Germans are very successful as farmers, and a most desirable class of people to have. I know of no European nation that are more of a migratory character than the Germans. They have peopled nearly the whole of the western States. I hope the Government will see the propriety of making greater efforts to bring to this country a large German immigration this year.

Mr. MACMILLAN. In the item with reference to the city of London, the amount given to the immigration agent there is $800, considerably less than that allowed to any one of the immigrant agents at Halifax, St. John, Manitoba, or the North-West. A great many immigrants come to the city of London, and I do not think there is a more efficient officer in the department than the agent in that city. I would like very much if the hon. Minister could see his way clear to increase his salary, at any rate, to an amount equal to the lesser sum paid at St. Johns. With regard to the North-West, the agent there is not incapable by any means, but he cares very little about what is being done to the immigrants in any way whatever. I was informed he never by any chance met a train on its arrival at St. Boniface. People who arrive there have come nearly to the end of their destination, have exhausted nearly all their means, and the person who is appointed there should be one who would take a great deal of trouble and do all he possibly could to get the immigrants settled. The agent has too many things of his own to attend to. It is as well the hon. Minister should see the work is properly carried out. I might also refer to St. Paul, where a great many immigrants arrive on their way to Winnipeg, but never arrive there. We have an excellent agent there, but he has no office accommodation or means of seeing to the maintenance of those immigrants, consequently as they have to remain over there a period of two or three hours, the American agents, who have every facility at their disposal, take up as many of them as they possibly can, and settle them in their country; and by this means I will venture to say we lose quite one-half to two-thirds of those who originally set out with the intention of going to Winnipeg, but who never get beyond the American frontier.

Mr. BUNSTER. I see no provision is made with regard to British Columbia. At the request of Canada, British Columbia has reserved a twenty-mile belt of land on each side of the railroad, but there is no agent in the Province at present to locate on those lands settlers who arrive. A great injustice has been done British Columbia in not appointing such an agent. Why has an exception been made in so far as British Columbia is concerned?

Mr. POPE. I can say, in answer to my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Macmillan), that though there may be some truth in his complaint as to our loss of emigrants by their passing through the United States, it is greatly exaggerated; a loss of one-third to one-half is too large a proportion to set down. It will be impossible for us, so long as our emigrants have to travel that territory—which is but a temporary convenience—to make the same provision for our immigrants that would be practicable in our own country. The accommodation of our emigrants in Canada is as good as can be found anywhere. In Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and London immigrants are well treated. I have heard no complaints from them. The same is the case at Duluth, where we hired the buildings of the Union Pacific Railroad for their accommodation. A large portion of our immigrants go over the road from that point, and not by St. Paul, where we have no buildings but temporary ones; and this must be the state of things till our railroad to Manitoba is completed. Though I do not expect too much from the Syndicate in this matter, they must greatly augment our efforts in favor of immigration. I expect a larger immigration from their efforts, and hope we shall obtain many German emigrants. Our agents are not allowed in Germany; but much can be done by the system of other agencies. We cannot give exceptional advantages to the Germans, for they would excite discontent among other nationalities. We desire greatly German immigration, but must leave its encouragement mainly to the Syndicate. We also hope for a better, a self-supporting class of emigrants, including Irish emigrants. I asked the British Government to co-operate with us, or if they would not, that associations in the old country should be formed, to bring out poor people to Canada, taking security on their farms for repayment of their passage money. I still hope for a large immigration from Ireland, but scarcely before the subsidence of the present political difficulties, as many feel they should not emigrate while there may be a prospect of fighting battles for their native land. I hope quiet in Ireland will soon be restored, and that we shall receive, through the co-operation of old country societies and such noble persons as the Duchess of Marlborough, who proposes to expend £4,000 or £5,000 in the cause, a large Irish immigration. Several other noble persons have made similar suggestions, and I hope for great results from such efforts. The vote proposed is $10,700 less than that of last year, viz.: $150,100. The last vote was expended as follows: to recoup New Brunswick, an old claim, $10,000; balance of previous year about $15,000; making $193,307; expended to February, 1881, $144,106; still available, $49,201; add refunds, available, $15,000, making a total of $64,201 still available. The vote has been thus expended: transport, $46,263; publications, $14,888; New Brunswick, $10,000; agencies pay list, $9,011; remitted to the High Commissioner, $29,973; general expenditure, $17,516; special agents, $10,856, making in all $144,160 out of the sum voted, the balance being available for the rest of the season.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman state generally by what mode it is proposed to expend the large item of $100,000.

Mr. POPE. I have been reading the items for the past year.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; but about the future? There is $10,000 for New Brunswick, for instance.

Mr. POPE. That was included in the vote.

Mr. BLAKE. It was not included in the vote last year.

Mr. POPE. It was included in the expenditure.

Mr. BLAKE. This, then, is one of the sums included in the $100,000.

Mr. POPE. No; it is not.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not find it elsewhere.

Mr. POPE. I know it was voted—in the Supplementary Estimates, I think.

Mr. BLAKE. But this comparative statement includes the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. BUNSTER. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the remarks which I made a few minutes ago, and which he appears to have forgotten.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister said he was about devoting special attention to get self-sustaining immigrants to come into the country, and there is no class so self-sustaining as the Chinese.

Mr. BUNSTER. I am afraid the leader of the Opposition is trying to put words in the mouth of the Minister of Agriculture. But if he did say that, then I must sympathize with him in his great error of judgment. If the Minister will make the explanation I asked for, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. HESSON. I wish to correct a wrong impression which has been formed with regard to my remarks upon German immigration. I said nothing about special efforts in assisting Germans to come to this country, as I think the result of that system has largely been to bring out an undesirable class of immigrants. My view was to disseminate satisfactory and safe information regarding this country in Germany, and in the German language, as is done in Great Britain and other countries in Europe, and I think this could best be done by the pamphlets which are published by the department. I did not imply that we should bonus German emigrants, but I think if you give assisted passages from Liverpool, Dublin or other places, you should also give them from Hamburg. There may be difficulties in the way, but I do not think they are insurmountable, and if the American agents are successful in bringing German emigrants to the United States, I do not see why our agents should not be equally successful.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). I would like to ask the hon. Minister what arrangements are made for the transport of immigrants to their destination after they arrive on this side of the Atlantic; whether special rates are offered for their transport from the seaboard to the interior, and whether if there are such special rates, they are the same to all parts of the Dominion east or west? Only a few days ago I had a letter from one of the most flourishing settlements in New Brunswick—a Danish settlement—complaining that last year, a number of their friends, whom they had induced to come out, found, when they arrived at Quebec, that they had great difficulty in reaching New Brunswick without paying an excessive rate. They found that they could go to the North-West Territory at a lower rate though the distance was so much greater.

Mr. POPE. This is the first time that the matter has been brought to my attention. As to the arrangements for the transport of emigrants, we had an arrangement with the Government of Ontario that they should pay two-thirds—we paying one-third—and we had the same arrangement from all ports in the Lower Provinces. Previous to that we used to pay the fares of the indigent emigrants, and we found that in the aggregate they amounted to about one-third. I am sorry to say that last winter the Government of Ontario gave us notice of their refusal to continue that arrangement with the present appropriation. If we were to engage to pay the fares of emigrants to Ontario, the whole sum would be exhausted in that way alone, so that I think we shall have to require these people to pay their own fares. With regard to fares from the other side of the Atlantic, the only arrangement we have—with the exception of one with regard to female servants—is with the steamboat men, who make a reduction in consideration of the traffic which immigration affords them. I can assure the hon. gentleman, however, that whether emigrants arrive at Quebec, Halifax or St. John, they are all treated alike in every respect.

Mr. BLAKE. You have not answered the enquiry of my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Bunster) with regard to what arrangements have been made by the dissemination of literature or otherwise for bringing the Chinese into this country.

Mr. BUNSTER. I hope my hon. friend from West Durham will pardon me if I tell the Minister of Agriculture that I made no such enquiry. My feelings and the feelings of the people who sent me here are against encouraging Chinese immigration, as I have frequently stated on the floor of this House. But I would respectfully call the attention of the Minister, for the third or fourth time, to the great injustice which is done to British Columbia in not having an immigration agent there to look after immigrants who land upon our shores. The Americans have their agents on the shores to take our immigrants away when they land there. It is nothing more than right that Canada should have an agent there to direct the immigrant where to go and settle, inasmuch as British Columbia has complied with the request of Canada and has reserved lands for railway purposes. I will again respectfully ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture why he has so grossly neglected British Columbia in not giving her an agent as well as the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. POPE. I can assure my hon. friend my attention has not yet been called to the matter. I shall take it into consideration, and I hope to be able to satisfy him that everything necessary will be done for British Columbia. I think I must rebuke the hon. member for West Durham for being facetious over so serious a matter.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it a very serious matter to ask us to vote $100,000 in a lump, without having any definite information of the purposes for which the vote is required?

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. member did not give us any information as to the proposed or supposed negotiations between this Government and the Imperial Government touching the possibility of directing to our shores a large proportion of the expected Irish emigration. He stated that the Duchess of Marlborough, and certain other private individuals, were disposed to co-operate with our Government in bringing out people here; but of the larger Government scheme the hon. gentleman said nothing. If there is anything of the sort, of a scheme, between the two Governments, we ought to have it before us.

Mr. POPE. I did say that we had made a proposition, and the hon. gentleman has seen it. I am not at liberty to say anything further about it at present. I stated that I hoped we should be able to induce a large emigration to this country, but I stated we did not expect to do so, so long as the present political agitation existed in that country.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman intends to assist immigration in a pecuniary way, of course he will have to obtain authority from this House. Does he expect to be in a position to ask for any vote for the purpose of assisting this immigration, or does he propose, in case of his negotiations coming to a successful termination, to use part of this vote for that purpose? In the latter case, there would be little left for the purpose of assisting any organized system of immigration.

Mr. POPE. My hon. friend has mistaken the point altogether. I have never said that I was going to spend a single dollar upon Irish immigration. My hon. friend has seen what the proposition was from the papers on the Table. It was to induce the British Government, through an association or in some other way, to assist these people to come to this country and settle them upon land, upon which the Government should take a lease for the money advanced. The only offer this Government made was, that they should care for these people and give them the same attention as the British agents gave them. We took upon us that before the patent was given to the settler we would see that this money was paid to the party who advanced it.

Mr. ANGLIN. It is well that we have this explanation from the hon. Minister, because it will dispel a very general illusion. The statement of the Premier himself, as well as the papers laid on the Table by the Government, all created the impression that the Government intended to expend a large portion of the public money for the purpose of assisting Irish immigration. Nobody understood what the hon. gentleman now says was the meaning of the proposition put forward, that the Government of Canada should merely apply to the Imperial Government to do something of this kind. The impression created by all the statements was, that the Canadian Government itself, seeing a grand opportunity of inducing a large emigration into the North-West, determined to avail themselves of it. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) says he expects a large number of people will leave Ireland shortly because of the troubles now prevailing there; but the peaceably disposed will not be disposed to remain where they are surrounded by such troubles. The hon. Minister of Agriculture takes an entirely different view of the state of Ireland. He is of opinion that it is hopeless to expect a large immigration from that country until after the troubles have ceased. I think there would be no difficulty in bringing out many well selected immigrants from the more distressed parts of Ireland—not wealthy men, with money to invest, but such as the hon. gentleman seemed to have in view when he prepared the memorial to the British Government. But his whole scheme seems to have vanished into thin air. That being the case, it is of course not to be wondered at that it is the intention of the hon. Minister to proceed next year in the same humdrum manner in which he proceeded last year and the year before, through the steamboat agents and proprietors. But the hon. Minister now asserts that he makes no cash payment to the proprietors of any of the steamboat lines.

Mr. POPE. I never did.

Mr. ANGLIN. Well, there was an entire and a strange misconception on that point. With regard to German immigration, I think we all desire to see it promoted by all fair and proper means. The late Government did all they could to promote German immigration, and although there are several flourishing settlements in Ontario, it is remarkable that Germans seem to prefer the United States. I do not think we have had a very satisfactory explanation of this item from the hon. Minister. I do not see why he should speak of assisted immigration if the steamboat proprietors themselves bring the immigrants out. I do not think we have had from the hon. Minister such a review of this whole question, in view of the great expectations which have been aroused in consequence of the creating of the Pacific Railway Syndicate, as we were fairly entitled to expect. The hon. gentleman says they will do a great deal to promote immigration to Canada. Perhaps they will, but he is prepared to pursue the same methods as before. There is nothing new—nothing to lead us to believe that any special efforts will be made. He has told us nothing of the results of that wonderful stroke of genius in bringing those delegates from Europe to report upon the capabilities of Canada. We know that these gentlemen did come out and afterwards published letters. We know that one or two of them have not reported very favorably of Canada as a country to which farmers of capital should come.

Mr. POPE. Which one?

Mr. ANGLIN. Mr. Cubitt, I think, was one.

Mr. POPE. Mr. Cubitt made a very fine report.

Mr. ANGLIN. I saw a letter from Mr. Cubitt in which he said that farmers accustomed to social refinement and unaccustomed to do the labor of their own farms should hesitate to come to this country. The hon. Minister should have been glad to let us know the success of his experiment. We all rather approved of it, but have not seen any performance resulting from it. I do not know that I shall insist further on explanations in regard to this matter since the hon. Minister refuses to give them.

Mr. SCHULTZ. The hon. member for Gloucester is somewhat mistaken in his estimate of the value of this English farmers' delegation. There was one of them, I believe, who, in a speech somewhere in England, did say that which certainly was not in the interest of Canadian emigration, but all the others not only spoke in public but placed on record in other ways perhaps the most favorable account of that country which had been given by travellers through it. I believe a very great portion of the emigration last year was almost the direct result of the records of these tenant farmers when they went back to England; and their own personal feelings may be evinced by the fact that one of the gentlemen came back and bought a farm, and is now living in Manitoba, another has sent his nephew, and another his son out there. With regard to the prospects of Irish immigration, I notice in the last number of the Nineteenth Century a very able article written by Mr. J. H. Tuke, who visited Manitoba last year. That gentleman, who seems to have come in contact with the leading members of the Government, sums up the result of his enquiries in these three suggestions:

"1. That the emigration shall be undertaken by the joint action of the Imperial and Canadian Governments, the former supplying the capital at a low or nominal rate (say 2 or 3 per cent.) repayable over a term of years, and the latter undertaking the entire care and oversight of the emigrants, and the recovery of the advances made to each family.

"2. That a Colonization Association should be formed composed of a number of leading English, Irish, and Canadian gentlemen, to whom the Home Government should, under carefully considered regulations, make the advances required, also repayable at a low rate of interest over a term of years; or that the Association should obtain the money by shares in the market as a commercial transaction.

"3. That the Home Government should appoint an Emigration Commission, consisting of two or three well known and competent men, to whom the whole work of emigration should be entrusted. In this case, as in the first, the Home Government would advance the necessary capital, but the Commission would arrange for the recovery of the instalments."

I think I can see in that the economic disposition of the head of this department. I can only say that if the writer is correct in his estimate of the means to secure that emigration, and his exhaustive knowledge of the subject renders that probable, it would enable us without great cost to attain the emigration desired.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. Instead of Mr. Tuke writing these things, and my hon. friend commenting on them, if the hon. Minister of Agriculture would say whether that is the policy he has adopted, this discussion might, to a great extent, be saved. The fact is; my hon. friend went to England and made suggestions of this kind to the British Government, and the question now to be answered is, has the hon. gentleman received any encouragement from the British Government? If he is not in a position to tell us, as Mr. Tuke seems to tell us, that any results have been arrived at, at what Session of Parliament will he be able to give us that information? The hon. gentleman has left us to suppose that the thing is in abeyance; he refused even to say that negotiations were in progress. He might have told us that, even if he refused to say what the negotiations were. While the conception was a very magnificent one, it seems there was a collapse in carrying it out.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman's complaint of want of information from the Minister, reminds me very much of a countryman of the hon. member for Gloucester, who, on being told at the post office that there was no letter for him, asked the postmaster when he expected one. I understood the hon. Minister of Agriculture to say distinctly that the state of the proposed arrangements between the two Governments did not warrant him in making a statement to this House, at all events, as far as the action of the Imperial Government is concerned. We can quite understand the reason why that state of affairs exists at present. It does not require a Minister to tell us that matters are not in that condition, either in England or Ireland, which can enable a Government, like that which now rules the country, to give any great attention to the question of emigration to Canada. I was a little surprised at the querulous tone of the hon. member for Gloucester, who usually treats public questions with great fairness. From his former position in this House, I would hardly have expected the attempt that was made to discredit, to underrate, the successful measures adopted by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, with reference to the advertising of our country to the very best class of farmers in the Mother Country. Whatever differences we may have with regard to political questions, it is only just to acknowledge the patriotic acts of our Government. What has been the result with respect to that movement? We have had a number of very intelligent English and Scotch farmers visiting our country, who, probably, but for the suggestion made by the Government, would never have seen this country. After a careful examination they have made speeches and disseminated information about our country, which has put it in a better light than it ever stood before. A great movement is evidently going on with respect to land, not merely in Ireland, but in England and Scotland also. I believe that for the next few years there will be a large emigration to this continent from the tenant class of farmers. A very large number of persons from the Mother Country are quietly settling in the older Provinces. They do not report themselves to the emigration agent; they do not require assistance, they have sufficient means to carry them through; and they bring their families and household goods with them, and then purchase farms from those in our own country, who believe they can better their fortunes by selling out and removing to the west. That is exactly the process which, I believe, is most in the interest of the older Provinces. The Canadian farmer who has cleared his farm and brought up three or four sons, and who finds it difficult to obtain land enough for them, except at a very great expense, can sell out his homestead for $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000 to a farmer of the class I have described, who is not, by his previous habits of life and education well fitted to go into the wilderness, and take up in the North-West a large quantity of land for his sons and family. Those are the very best, the most useful class of settlers for a new country. On the other hand, those English or Scotch farmers, accustomed to the most superior modes of agriculture in the Mother Country, are the very best kind of settlers we can have on the vacated farms of the older Provinces; this process is going on, I am glad to believe, to a very large extent, and chiefly on account of the action taken by the Government. I have heard this process spoken of as a happy thought of the Minister of Agriculture, who, from his practical experience, I should think would be well able to make other suggestions of this kind which may probably turn out as successful as this one. This, at all events, is of the greatest value to the country. I do not feel much apprehension from the actions of gentlemen like Mr. Cubitt, who do not think that Canada is a country to which any English gentleman farmer, who does not require to work for his living, can remove to great advantage. Speaking from my experience, as one brought up on a farm, and for some years connected with agricultural movements, and having read and written considerably on the subject, I have a very strong opinion that the very worst class of farmers—those most likely to bring discredit on our country—is that class of gentlemen farmers, a few of whom have, from time to time, found their way to Canada. The country is not suited to them; the profits of Canadian farming are not such as to maintain a gentleman farmer in the extravagant habits he acquires in the Mother Country. The result is he breaks down and becomes a burden to the neighborhood, rather than an advantage; he grumbles and growls, and if such men get out of the country, it is to its advantage. My hon. friend seems to think it is a blot upon the management of the Minister of Agriculture that a man like Cubitt has advertised abroad that that class of persons ought not to come to Canada. I think that that is a very fortunate circumstance in the history of the movement, for I do not believe Canada would derive much advantage from that class. What we require in the old Provinces, as well as in the new, is a class of men not afraid to put their own hands to the plough, who will superintend, at all events, and understand the work of the farm in a new country. The class of persons whom I met, who came out from the old country, was just of this character, keen, clear-headed, practical men, who had themselves superintended small farms, who had worked in the field with their men, and, being well informed, constituted the very best class who could be induced to come to this country and become emigration agents for Canada. I am happy to find, after looking over their publications, that they appreciated Canada and its true merits. I believe that no native Canadian, intelligent though he might be, could have presented our country under more favorable conditions to the very class in the old country whom we ought to desire to attract, especially men of capital. No agency could accomplish this object more thoroughly and successfully than those parties. A word or two with regard to foreign emigration. The hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson) who, I assume by his name, is of German origin—at all events he represents a constituency where a very large number of Germans reside—

Mr. HESSON. I have the honor to be an Irishman.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. If that be so, I think some German has been in Ireland at a particular period. At all events, I think the Germans make the best class of settlers; and it would be of great advantage to us to have in the North-West, and in the uncultivated parts of the older Provinces, a large German immigration. It should be encouraged, but there are large difficulties in its way. The Government of Germany seems anxious to maintain an armed neutrality in Europe, and does not like to see its young men, whom it is designed to train to the use of arms, perhaps for future service, leave the country. In fact, every obstacle that the Government can throw in the way of emigration, short of the imprisonment of their own people, is resorted to. No emigration agent from Canada or the United States would be allowed to encourage the poorer or emigrating classes to leave their country. He would be arrested or put under police surveillance all the time, and the Government would find it easy to invent excuses for putting him in prison. The result is that the means of attracting German immigration, suggested by my hon. friend, would not be tolerated by the Government of Germany. But there are other means of reaching the people. The newspapers of Scandinavia and Germany would be very glad to publish information with regard to Canada or the United States if paid for it; if the law has not been changed within the last year or two, there is no means of preventing the diffusion of that kind of information. If information with regard to the advantages of Canada, especially the North-West, were disseminated throughout those countries, I believe the result would be a very good kind of immigration, so far as it might extend, to this country; because the immigrants would be useful laborers and settlers wherever they could take up lands. My hon. friend is aware of the fact also; he knows that I was present at an interview between an agent of the new line of steamers that is established between the Scandinavian ports and New York. That line is, under the management of a gentleman who was a prominent agent of the Allan Line in Copenhagen, and he believes a good continuous stream of emigrants from the North of Europe may be attracted towards the western States and western Canada. Of course his desire will be to secure the advantages the Government of Canada may offer, and the class of persons who may be desirous of going into our country and taking up land there in company with some of his relatives are exceedingly anxious to make a preliminary settlement. The truth is that in all these settlements of people speaking a foreign language, you must begin by planting a colony. You must get a small number of families at some particular point, and if they succeed and write home to their friends and relatives that this country is all that it was represented to be, and that they have every reason to be satisfied with their condition and prospects, you have then the best emigration agents you can possibly establish. But some little expense must be incurred, and some trouble taken by the Government in assisting these early settlements or nuclei, if you are to have a large settlement of that class. I know not to what extent the Minister of Agriculture may have contemplated or engaged in such a system of settlement, but I am convinced that with our illimitable North-West we should endeavor by that means to have it settled by people from the different nations of the world—by Germans, by Scandinavians, by Highlanders, and people of Irish and English blood. We want to mix these various nationalities, so that in the course of two, or three generations we may develop, as I believe we will, a new and distinct type of humanity in this northern half of the continent. We especially want the northern races—those who come from northern climes, who, being accustomed to a cold climate, will not be frightened when the thermometer goes down to 30 or 40 degrees below zero for a few days—men who will be capable of resisting these climatic influences, and will be satisfied with a good soil, free institutions, and cheap, honest and patriotic Government. I believe they will find all these conditions in Canada under our constitution, whether hon. gentlemen opposite or those on this side of the House may govern the country for the time. So far as my observation goes, none of the emigrating classes from the old world are dissatisfied with the institutions of Canada. On the contrary, I believe they are well affected towards these institutions. They are satisfied with the freedom they enjoy—freedom from the enormous taxation to which they are subjected in their own countries, freedom from the grinding military service which is too commonly the lot of the poorer classes in the older countries—free from those disagreeable and discouraging circumstances under which they live in their own country—those influences which impel them to emigrate. When they settle in our country and are able to report to their friends and relatives the happier condition in which they find themselves here, they become the means of forming streams of emigration which flow into our country and occupy our unsettled lands. It seems to me that the expenditure this year, as compared with last, is an adequate expenditure, because we hope under the arrangements made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate, who must of necessity undertake measures to promote immigration on a large scale, that it will be found to the advantage of the country—and the Government, I have no doubt, will act upon that view—that the operations of the Government and of the Syndicate in that respect should be combined, or at all events that they should run in parallel lines, and that they should agree upon some common system. Under these circumstances I am not surprised that no very large expenditure should be asked for immigration purposes, and I trust that the efforts of the Government will be assisted and supplemented to a large extent by the operations of the Company.

Mr. HESSON. I quite agree with the views which have been expressed with regard to the importance of the results which we may expect to flow from the reports of the delegates who were here last year. I am satisfied that the favorable and unbiassed report of an agent who is chosen because the people have confidence in him will do more good than the efforts of several salaried local agents who are supposed to put the best face upon matters, and who may not always represent things in exactly a true light. The representations of these delegates to the people in their own localities will be found to be far stronger inducements to immigration than the offering of assisted passages or the payment of premiums a certain time after arrival in this country. I think also that this system of delegates which has been found so successful with regard to England, Ireland, and Scotland, might be efficiently carried out with regard to Germany, without at all interfering with the close system to which the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Macdougall) has referred. I know that the German Government will not allow anything like propagandism for the purpose of inducing their people to leave; but I am certain that if that active and energetic people of 40,000,000 are put in possession of proper and reliable information with regard to this country, we may look for a certain amount of immigration from that country. With regard to the system of establishing small colonies as a means of promoting larger immigration, I am quite in accord with what has been said by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Macdougall). In my own county, as well as in Waterloo, Huron, Bruce and other counties, there are large and flourishing German settlements which show what may be accomplished by that people in a country like this, and if the Ministry were to hold out some inducements for the extension of that mode of inducing settlement, I am certain it would result in the propagation of views in Germany with regard to Canada which could not fail to bring many more Germans to our shores.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I should like to have some explanation with regard to the item $6,000 for salaries of special agents in Europe, and $7,000 for travelling expenses for the same. I noticed by the Public Accounts that a sum of $10,665 has been paid for the travelling expenses of agents in connection with the London (England) agency, and I see also there is $1,200 paid to a special agent in the eastern States, and $1,300 for his travelling expenses; also over $1,200 for the salary and contingencies of a special agent at Gimli. I would like to know what work is laid out for those travelling in Europe; also, what are the special duties of the agent travelling in the eastern States. I can understand the duties of an agent at Duluth and Glyndon, but I cannot see the need of an agent in the Eastern States.

Mr. POPE. The agent in the eastern States is a French-Canadian gentleman named Lalime, who has been employed for a long time. His business is to distribute information to the French-Canadians in those States about our North-West, and he has been successful each year in inducing considerable numbers of them to settle in Manitoba. The English agent is Mr. Dyke, of Liverpool. He has travelled through England distributing information. For instance, the pamphlet published by the farmers' delegates he has circulated in large numbers, sending them to every postmaster in his district. He has also been very useful in looking after the interests of Canadians engaged in the cattle trade. The agent in Glasgow is Mr. Graham, whose business is similar to that of Mr. Dyke and Mr. Lalime. Then we have Mr. Connolly at Dublin, and Mr. Foy at Belfast, both performing similar duties. There is also a gentleman in Germany doing the same work, and these, with the exception of London agents, are all the travelling agents we have.

Mr. ROSS. What about the agent at Gimli?

Mr. POPE. That is Mr. John Taylor, and he was charged with looking after the Icelanders. A great many of them have now left owing to the rise of water which drowned them out. I have given instructions to inquire into the need of retaining Mr. Taylor's services, as I think we can dispense with them now.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Macdougall) apparently understood me to complain of the policy of the Minister of Agriculture in inducing the English and Scotch agents to visit this country. On the contrary, I said the most of us on the Opposition side of the House approved of the experiment, for it was considered as such. What I complained of was that when this vote was asked for the Minister of Agriculture was not prepared to furnish the information which I believed we were fairly entitled to. I never expected such great results from the experiment as the hon. Minister did. We have received information on the subject this evening, but not from the hon. Minister. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Schultz) has told us that they have received three settlers in the North-West as a direct result of the visit of those delegates. One of the delegates himself purchased a farm there; another settled his son there, and another his nephew. More than that we have no authentic information of. The hon. member for Halton has told us a pleasing story of the effects of that visit. He thinks the visit has already resulted in sending to us numbers of gentlemen farmers from England and Scotland who, while possessing capital, engage themselves in the labors of the farm. They are coming into various parts of Ontario quietly and without reporting themselves, and are purchasing farms already improved from Canadian farmers who desire to remove to the North-West. This is a pleasing picture, but we cannot be sure that it is not overdrawn. I am inclined to think there has been no considerable number of farmers of that class induced to come to this country by the visit of those delegates. We frequently see the sales of farms in various parts of Ontario recorded in the papers, but rarely is it stated that these farms were purchased by gentlemen of that class from the old country. The farms seem rather to pass from the hands of Canadians to the hands of other Canadians. It would be well if we had some authentic information on that point.

Mr. POPE. What do you want?

Mr. ANGLIN. We want to know what good the money expended by the hon. gentleman has done for the country. I should like to know what results have flowed from the visits and reports made by delegates. The hon. Minister did not tell us, while the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Macdougall) appeared to think he could not do so. Several hon. gentlemen could however have borne testimony, if excellent results had been obtained. I do not believe any large amount of testimony of that character can be given. With respect to the quotation made by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Schultz) from an article by Mr. Tuke, in the Nineteenth Century, the House does not know who Mr. Tuke is, or where he obtained authority to speak on the subject. He reports that he had an interview with the Minister of Agriculture. Whether he proposed the scheme to the Minister, or the Minister proposed it to him; I do not quite understand; but at all events, we have learned this much, that the scheme must have originated in some quarter other than in the fertile brain of the High Commissioner, who, I had supposed, was the first one to suggest it to the Minister. If Mr. Tuke suggested it, had he any authority from, or did he represent, the Imperial Government? With respect to Irish immigration the scheme amounts to nothing. The Dominion Government expects the Imperial Government to do a great deal, while the Imperial Government expects the Canadian Government to do a great deal, and to take all the trouble, merely receiving from them countenance and moral support. At all events, for the present, the grand scheme is, to say the least, in abeyance. As no further information is to be obtained on the subject, perhaps the Minister will explain how the reduction from $7,000 to $4,300 occurs in the London office, and whether the gentleman who was in charge of the Immigration Department, before the High Commissioner was appointed, and who, it was understood, was not to be employed further, but was to leave with a gratuity, is or is not employed by the Government.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am sorry the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) has seen fit to attack the Government for bringing out emigrants to this country. The hon. gentleman has done nothing but find fault with the Government, instead of suggesting some means by which people can be brought to settle New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I take up the public journals and I find accounts of people leaving the Province. I say the people are going away, I admit it. Such newspaper statements are no more correct than some statements made in this House on the same question. It is an assumed proposal, the people may leave and they may come back. We have seen people who left Ireland and do not want to go back. I hate to see the efforts of the Government, which has done so much for the country—and which if it did not bring about good times, assisted the various enterprises—disparaged, for they have endeavored to bring and place immigrants in the North West, and I hope they will endeavor to frame some means whereby they will add to the population of the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. POPE. With respect to the expenditure in the London office, Mr. Dow receives $2,500, the secretary gets $1,200, and Mr. Dickson $600.

Mr. ANGLIN. I wish an explanation of the reduction.

Mr. POPE. Last year Mr. Annand was at the office. He is not there now; he has left. With respect to Mr. Tuke, he is a gentleman of great experience and education, a man who has the confidence of the British Government, and who came to this country (I have no right to say so) and might have travelled through it at the instance of the Imperial Government; and the result of his visit will be found in his report in the Nineteenth Century. With regard to Mr. Cubitt, perhaps he wrote some letters that might not have been what would please hon. gentlemen; but a better report has not been made by any delegate, either last year or this, than the report of that gentleman, which I received a few days ago. He gives a good, pleasing account of the country, especially the North-West. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) thinks the Government should have done something to promote immigration to New Brunswick. I have tried to do something for New Brunswick. In order that people should come to this country, it is necessary that they should have confidence in the reports of the country. I asked the people to elect these men for themselves; they came to see the country, and went back and made their reports. I did not send them to the North-West only, but also through New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec, and they have reported on all these Provinces as fields of immigration. If hon. gentlemen will turn to the reports of these gentlemen, they will be satisfied that no better course could have been taken. When in England last year, from one part of the country to the other, I heard enquiries of these men. Canada owes a great deal to these men, who, by their reports and lectures, disseminated a great deal of reliable information, which would not have been believed if it had been given by some Canadian whom they did not know. Hon. gentlemen opposite will not draw me into giving information with regard to the action of the British Government, which I think I should not give at this moment. I take no credit for the document on Irish immigration. The whole credit of that is due to the High Commissioner in England, who alone conceived the idea, and I believe good results will flow from it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Anglin) asks what fact can I point to as showing that any good has resulted from the visit of the tenant farmers. I can say that the sum now to be voted is a paltry sum in comparison with the amount of money some of these tenant farmer immigrants have brought into the country. I can point to a dozen immigrants in Toronto, who have been induced to come out by the influence of these men, and who to-day are carrying about their pockets $100,000 and more. I can point to a class of people coming to settle amongst us, of whom we may well be proud—people who will have a great influence in inducing their friends in the old country to come out; and I believe we are laying the foundation of a class of immigration such as we have never had before. This is what I can point to for the expenditure of last year, and I intend to pursue the same course in the future.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like the hon. Minister of Agriculture to give us some more definite information with reference to the number of French-Canadians the agent in the New England States induced to leave there and go to the North-West.

Mr. GAULT. I can speak from personal experience. On board the train, between St. Paul and Winnipeg, there were three families from the eastern States going to Manitoba; they were not French-Canadians, but English immigrants. There was also a family from Georgia, going to settle in Manitoba. Last week, I believe, between one and two hundred immigrants arrived in Montreal on their way to Manitoba. I think the Minister of Agriculture is entitled to the very best thanks of the House and the country for having brought out these tenant farmers from England, Ireland and Scotland.

Mr. KRANZ. Having been a German immigrant myself, I may make a few remarks on German immigration. The reason why German immigration to the United States is so large is that a great many Germans emigrated there years ago, and their friends are always following them. There is hardly a family in Germany who has not one or more members in the United States or Canada. Germans generally emigrate to a country where they have some friends. The larger territory and population of the United States must certainly attract a larger immigration than Canada. I can, however, point out in the county of Waterloo a few families who have drawn after them hundreds of others, and I believe the founding of German colonies in the North-West is the proper way to encourage a large German immigration to the North-West. I cannot complain of the action of the Government in furthering German immigration. I think they have done about all they could do. All we require to do is to make Canada better known in Germany, which can be done by means of pamphlets and the press generally. I do not agree with my hon. friend from North Perth, as to the utility of delegates. If they went back to Germany I am afraid they might get into trouble with the German Government. I think one or two agents in a seaport, or the interior, who could circulate reliable information would be all that is required. The German Government will not allow agents to go through the country and persuade the people to emigrate, but the Government has no objection at all to trustworthy information being given on the condition and resources of the country. Another mode of circulating more knowledge about Canada would be to enter into communication with agricultural societies in Germany, and to send samples of our grain and different manufactures, as well as of minerals, to agricultural and industrial exhibitions. No doubt the Syndicate will do a great deal to further German immigration. As I understand, they will float some of their bonds in Germany, and thereby make Canada known to the capitalists of Germany who when they hold those bonds will take an interest in the country, and thus make practically good immigration agents for Canada. Some years ago, the Ontario Government issued pamphlets stating how much the laborer could earn, &c., and promising each immigrant a bonus of $6 per head. I know I have obtained many payments of these $6 for immigrants, but that order has long been rescinded. This pamphlet is, however, yet circulated in Germany. Last summer immigrants showed me those pamphlets and asked me where they could get the $6. I explained that was an old law, but they felt dissatisfied and wrote home that they were induced to come here under false pretences. These pamphlets should be all taken up and the Government should take steps to prevent the steamboat agents from circulating them.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. Minister of Agriculture has not answered my question yet with reference to the efficiency of his labors in New England. I want to find out what are the prospects of inducing Canadians that now find homes in the United States, to return to Canada.

Mr. POPE. A considerable number have returned.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is rather indefinite.

Mr. POPE. At one time, not since I was in office, a certain amount per head was given by the Government, also a certain commission for all emigrants on the other side. These have been done away with, and has, to a certain extent, lessened the number returning, because there is no inducement so strong to the emigrant as cheap passage rates.

Mr. GAULT. The National Policy is bringing on fifty immigrants from Belleville, New Jersey, to Montreal.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The National Policy is the very worst inducement to get immigrants to come out here. The knowledge that we have been foolish enough to imitate the American folly, and inflict enormous taxes on every one that comes here, has a good deal to do with the immigration.

Mr. GAULT. Mr. Graham, a gentleman from Manchester, thoroughly versed in manufacturing, says that England is superstitious about free-trade, but is bound in the end to adopt protection.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. A very valuable authority. If the hon. gentleman will consult any of the periodicals of standing in England, or what English Ministers or other persons choose to state, he will find that those who are really capable of forming English opinion are expressing an opinion about our great policy which is not calculated, in the slightest degree, to assist the Government in bringing in immigrants. And looking into the particulars which deal with that subject he will find that our fiscal policy has had a very prejudicial effect on the minds of a very great many persons who would otherwise have come to this country—of a better class of emigrants who would have brought capital with them—and naturally enough. No man can go into any Canadian town and enquire the price of articles and goods in general use and consumption without seeing that our people are unhappily greatly weighted down by this policy.

53. Immigration and quarantine.....$36,266 00

Mr. BLAKE. For a great many years there have been carried under the head of contingencies and unforeseen expenses of Grosse Isle a number of sums, including entire salaries and portions of other salaries. All I wish is to systematize the accounts, with a view to its improvement, so that all that is a regular current charge, in the shape of salaries, should appear under that head, and disappear from that of contingencies.

Mr. ANGLIN. I believe that the expense of those quarantine establishments could be reduced very materially without impairing their efficiency. Emigrants now for the most part, come out in steamers; there is less sickness among them, and no need of such expensive establishments as the old times called for. Some quarantine provision is necessary at Quebec, but little or none elsewhere. We have, I see, an item $600 for boat hire in the Lower Provinces. Speaking of St. John, N.B., there is no need of it I think, though years ago it was necessary, as the physician of the port lived at the mouth of the harbor, and had to be rowed to vessels to be examined. Now he lives in the city and only visits vessels when required.

Mr. POPE. He requires a boat now.

Mr. ANGLIN. There is no necessity for this boat hire at Halifax either. Moreover, if chaplains are needed at Halifax, we should also have them at St. John. With regard to the item for the Tracadie Lazaretto, I think it my duty to state that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has done his whole duty in this respect, and the institution is now in a much more satisfactory state than before.

Mr. DALY. With regard to the observations of the hon. member for Gloucester, I can testify that the item for boat hire at Halifax is necessary, as the medical officer must have it kept ready when he wants to visit vessels in the harbor. This is no new appropriation, it having been an estimate for many years. The present Government have dispensed with the services and care of the two inspecting physicians formerly employed, thus decreasing instead of increasing the appropriation.

Mr. ANGLIN. How many times in the year is the boat required by the physicians at Halifax?

Mr. DALY. It is constantly required.

Mr. POPE. With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for West Durham, in looking over these items I really cannot see how any improvement can be made in the manner of presenting them. You have here opposite each officer the salary which is paid him. As to the general expenditure, let me say that when I took charge of the department I cut down that item of Grosse Isle from $13,000 to $9,000, and the latter amount has been the expenditure ever since. As to the other remark which was made by an hon. member, I may say that it will be found that there are not now two chaplains at Halifax.

Mr. BLAKE. I have told the hon. gentleman how I think he should arrange these items. My information is from the printed report of the Auditor General, and from the analysis of the accounts which is made in that report, it appears that the amounts which the hon. gentleman takes in his estimates is for six months' salary of these officers, while these officers' services always last longer—I believe between two and three months—because the season is longer.

Mr. POPE. Not between two and three months. It may be one month.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman states that the rule is that the period which extends over the six months is only a month, then I have nothing more to say; but that certainly is not the impression which I gained through an analysis of the accounts for the last fiscal year, which appears in the reports of the Auditor-General. Then the hon. gentleman did not say a word about the subject of the chaplains at Grosse Isle, whose whole salaries go in under the head of contingencies.

Mr. POPE. I was not aware that there were any chaplains there.

Mr. BLAKE. So it appears; and the House did not know that there was $400 for chaplains at Grosse Isle. The Minister tells us that he himself did not know it.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman has all at once struck out on a new track. I tell him that I did not know whether there was a chaplain there; but surely this question of $400 which he says he has found in the report of the Auditor-General—which I did not know of and which I believe he did not know of until he found it there—is not such an alarming matter that he should become so excited about it.

Mr. BLAKE. The manner in which the hon. gentleman meets my remarks seems to me to be somewhat extraordinary. I first made a suggestion and the hon. gentleman did not answer it. Then I repeated my suggestion and he said he did not believe there was such an officer there. I say that this proved the importance of my suggestion, because neither the House nor the Ministry was aware that a salary was being paid to such an officer. Now, if he will look at the correspondence between his own department and the Auditor-General, he will find that his deputy says that by instructions he will not make any change in keeping these accounts, and that he is determined that the suggestion that the salaries shall be charged as salaries shall not be accepted. And he gives the reasons, which I do not think, however, are good reasons, for retaining these salaries under the head of contingencies.

Mr. POPE. I wish to say to the hon. gentleman that I do not intend to be dictated to by the Auditor-General as to how I shall keep the accounts of my department. I shall endeavor to keep them in a proper and satisfactory way, no matter what the Auditor-General or my hon. friend may say—a way which I think will be satisfactory to the country.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree that the hon. gentleman should not allow himself to be dictated to by the Auditor-General nor by me, but I submit that he will be dictated to by the House, and I submit also that the House will not allow itself to be dictated to by him, and what we have to learn is whether the House and the Government agree that it is the proper system to have a fixed charge for the salaries of permanent officers concealed under the item of contingencies. I do not say it is improper, but I say that we have no opportunity of judging when it is put in this shape. The suggestion which I made to the hon. gentleman I had previously made in another place to his colleague the Finance Minister, who said that my observation was deserving of consideration, that he would consult his colleague with regard to it, and that my general view was correct. The hon. Minister of Agriculture differs from his colleague, and I hope the Finance Minister, who is interested in keeping the accounts on a proper footing, will recognize the propriety of the suggestion and see that it is at least taken into consideration.

Mr. POPE. I did say that I did not believe there were any chaplains at Grosse Isle, but that I was not aware of it. I said I would not be dictated to by the Auditor-General, nor by the hon. gentleman, nor do I intend to be. I expect to be controlled by the House, but I did not expect that the remark I made would cause the hon. gentleman to make a noise which could be heard half a mile off. I always endeavor to treat the hon. gentleman with the deference due to a leading member of the House, but I certainly gave him no provocation for adopting the manner in which he addressed me.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. For the information of the House, I will read the letter which appears in the report of the Auditor-General, as having been sent by the hon. gentleman to the Auditor-General:

“DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
“OTTAWA, CANADA, 27th February, 1890.”

“Sir,—The attention of the Minister of Agriculture having been called to a paragraph in your letter of the 26th inst., in which you say:—

“I still hold that the salaries of the chaplains are not a proper charge against contingencies. If the department wish to retain them, their salaries should be estimated for, and I trust they may be so classed in the Estimates soon to be submitted to Parliament.”

“The Minister desires me, in reply, to state that, in his opinion, these payments are purely of a contingent nature, and in this view they have been purposely withheld from the list of regular salaries in the Estimates.

“Therefore, the Minister does not intend to alter the Estimates, but, on the contrary, it is his intention to have them submitted to Parliament in the usual form.

“I have the honor to be, Sir,
“Your obedient servant,

“J. LOWE,
“Secretary of the Department of Agriculture.”

“J. L. McDougall, “Auditor-General,
“Ottawa.”

And yet the Minister did not know that these chaplains were retained and employed at Grosse Isle. I wish the hon. Minister may have a better memory for the future.

Mr. POPE. I do not pretend to say that my memory is very good, but I say that very likely this matter may have been brought before me; very likely I gave those instructions, and very likely if I were asked I would give the same instructions to-morrow.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I wish to ask the hon. gentleman a question which I trust will not unduly excite him. The hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) who is absent to-night, was anxious to know whether cattle imported from England, for the special purpose of improving breeding stock, have to go through the course of quarantine.

Mr. POPE. Certainly.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillmor) thinks that as these cattle are specially selected from stock supposed to be in a healthy condition, a quarantine would not be required with regard to them.

Mr. POPE. I am happy to give the hon. gentleman and the House the information he desires. The hon. gentleman will remember that at one time our cattle were prohibited from going into the United States at all. Cattle passing through this country were subjected to eight days quarantine, while the quarantine at their ports for such cattle was ninety days, so that our cattle were prohibited altogether. For that reason they prohibited our cattle altogether from going into the United States. I made an arrangement with those people to the effect that we should have the same quarantine for all cattle coming from Europe and other infected countries, that they had, and by that means we got the prohibition taken off our cattle. There is a false impression that leads to a great deal of inconvenience, and that is that people can ship cattle from the United States to Canada by quarantining them. That is impossible. We are obliged, in order to keep the English market open to our cattle, to prohibit altogether cattle coming from the United States. The moment we removed that prohibition we would be scheduled on the other side and kept out.

Mr. ROSS. Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that the quarantine is on cattle imported from England, and the prohibition on cattle coming from the United States?

Mr. POPE. Yes. The quarantine is for ninety days.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

VACANCY IN EAST NORTHUMBERLAND.

Mr. BLAKE moved that the Speaker do issue his writ for the election of a member for the east riding of Northumberland, in place of Joseph Keeler, deceased.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It was decided last Session, on the suggestion of the hon. member for West Durham, that there was no necessity for a motion of this kind in similar cases.

Mr. BLAKE. Nothing of the kind. On the occasion of the decease of the late member for Chateauguay, the writ was moved for and granted.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It was in opposition then to the hon. member's own suggestion, because, under the Election Law as it now stands, upon a death being certified to the Speaker he issues his writ as a matter of course.

Motion agreed to; and (at 12:10 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned until Thursday at 3 o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 3rd March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DOMINION LANDS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD introduced a Bill (No. 70) to amend the Dominion Lands Act. He said: The Bill provides for several amendments to the Dominion Lands Act which appear to be called for. One of the amendments proposed is to diminish the size of the common road through the country west of the surveys from 100 feet to 66 feet. It has been found that 66 feet is quite sufficient in the Province of Ontario and elsewhere. The present surveys allow 100 feet at the suggestion of the original settlers who were accustomed to have wide trails, but it is believed now that these involve a wanton waste of land, and additional cost on the municipality. There are one or two clauses altering the mode of survey in order to provide for diminishing the width of the roads. There is also a provision to enable the Governor in Council to make sales, in special cases, on terms and conditions for the purpose of settlement and so on. At present a party can only obtain 160 acres for homestead, and 160 acres for pre-emption, but under this proposed provision parties can buy tracts for the purpose of settling their tenantry or immigrants upon lands in the North-West. There is an alteration in the Act enabling the Governor in Council to provide for such cases. The Bill also provides that, in order to facilitate immigration, lands may be entered in advance. The emigrant leaving Europe has now no security that he will obtain his lot when he arrives; because it is "first come, first served." It is well known that German emigrants generally send out agents in advance—to the United States hitherto—and they select the tracts, and the emigrants afterwards proceed there with their doctors, blacksmiths and artisans, in fact as a community. The Bill provides that, within certain limits, parties who bona fide come forth to organize communities may have lands, for a reasonable time, reserved to them, so that the colony or community when it arrives may not be broken up. There is also a provision by which an agent can enter the names of emigrants for a location before they arrive in this country. The Bill contains a provision by which parties who undertake to assist their tenantry, or companies formed for the purpose of aiding immigration, may, within certain fixed limits, be enabled to agree with settlers that the money advanced to bring them out and settle them on land here shall be a charge upon the homestead, on the parties signing an agreement to that effect. These are the principal provisions of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. It is much to be regretted that a Bill so important as this should not have been brought down at an earlier period of the Session.

Bill read the first time.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to amend the Act 34 Vict., Chap. 7, respecting certain Savings Banks in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, by enabling the Governor in Council to fix a less rate of interest than four per cent. per annum, as that to be paid to depositors by banks chartered under the said Act, and by making better provision as to the payment of dividends out of the profits of the bank, and as to notices of the annual or other meetings of the shareholders, and to continue the charters granted under the said Act until the first day of July, 1891, subject to the said amendments and the provisions of the said Act as amended by the Act 36 Vict., Chap. 72.

He said: I proposed a somewhat similar resolution, and I think a Bill was introduced, last Session, extending the charters of these banks for ten years. It was amended in the other Branch, and sent back for approval to the House of Commons, simply extending the charter one year. This proposition is to extend the charter for ten years from July next, to require certain returns to be made, and authorize the Governor in Council to reduce the limit of interest which is now fixed at four per cent. It also deals with notices of annual and other meetings of shareholders not provided for in the charter at present.

Mr. ANGLIN. Ten years extension is more than we ought to assent to. Since Sir Francis Hincks insisted on those institutions becoming chartered institutions with a capital, &c., we never hear of distributions to charitable institutions, such as were made formerly, to my knowledge. They are worked now entirely for the benefit of shareholders, and the question is whether they ought to be allowed special privileges, or simply be made banks as others are, taking money at one rate of interest.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Since these banks have been incorporated under their new charter, they have distributed a very large amount of money. The last amount paid by the Montreal City and District Savings Bank was $10,800.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister does not wish to convey the idea that the charter prescribes a gift on their part, I think it is purely voluntary.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Ten years ago, when the Statute was being discussed, I think the amount that was considered as the share of the poor in these institutions was determined, and the interest on it at six per cent. was the amount to be distributed.

Mr. ANGLIN. When those banks were chartered they had very large surpluses remaining on hand. In St. John's, the Government determined it should go toward the support of the General Public Hospital. In Montreal, it was allowed to remain in the hands of the company who succeeded the directors under the old system. The hon. Minister now says there was an understanding, or an obligation, that they should pay interest at six per cent. on the amount so remaining, which was considered the property of the poor or the taxpayers. $10,000 is very much less than was distributed by these banks in former years.

Mr. LANGEVIN. It was always between $10,000 and $11,000.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Parliament has not the right to tell these corporations what they should give to charitable institutions. The question might come up whether we should not put some restrictions on the way they employ their capital—whether they should be allowed to lend it out on banks stocks or not. They might be compelled to give to the Government a certain amount of their savings, as they should do under the Act. The hon. gentleman should say how their loans are placed—in what class of securities. They are lending the money of the public on such a class of securities as they think best. Of course, if the securities are good, there is no harm; but the public should know the nature of the securities.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think, from what I know of the operations of savings banks, that there ought to be any provision which would enable the directors or managers to make any considerable profit out of deposits. It is evident that there is an anomaly in permitting savings under your charter to be deposited in a bank which is not, to a large extent, a charitable institution. I think there ought to be, on the part of Government and Parliament, and all who have to deal with this matter, every endeavor to keep up for the poor, to induce them to make deposits—the poor who ought to be the main depositors in the savings banks—the highest rate of interest consistent with the entire safety of their deposits. I think that those institutions should not in the slightest degree be encouraged to be speculative institutions. I think the deposits should be invested at the highest rate commensurate with safety, and that the managers, shareholders and others interested should not be permitted to make speculations out of the hard earnings of the poor; the deposit of which is intended to be encouraged, in those institutions. I had not seen this resolution before this moment, and I do not quite understand its entire scope, but if its intention is in any way to prejudice the interests of the class which we wish to encourage by institutions of this sort, I trust that it will not be pressed. I have seen that in the case of some of the larger savings institutions, charters have been granted after a large depositary had been established, and that the proprietors of those institutions were making a very large amount of money out of the large deposits which a confiding public had entrusted to them. I object entirely to that principle. I think that those institutions should be, as far as possible, charitable in their nature, and that their managers should have no emoluments. I believe certain persons would manage them cheerfully without pay. I think that this proposed step in the establishment of those institutions may tend to create a condition of things entirely objectionable, if not deplorable. I have not seen any good reason for giving the power to reduce this rate, although I know perfectly well that what is considered high interest, usually means poor security. But I do not believe we have yet arrived at the point where it is necessary to reduce, in this particular case, the interest on the investments of the poorer classes to below four per cent. But I conceive that the reason why those depositaries are encumbered with money, and have more than they can invest, is not that the poorer classes are flooding them with funds, but that other people, able from their knowledge of business to find other sources of business, have thrown their money into those institutions. I think it would be very easy, in the interest of the public, to restrict the amount of deposits which should be received, in which case there would be no difficulty in giving poor depositors the higher rate of interest.

Mr. GAULT. The City and District Savings Bank of Montreal has been a most admirably managed institution. Before its charter was granted, all profits were added up and given to the poor of Montreal, making a large sum semi-annually. But the bank has had to put up a capital of $3,000,000, on which, I believe, a call of 40 per cent. has been made, so that the directors and shareholders are responsible to the poor for their deposits. I cannot see why some share of profit should not go to the gentlemen who invest their money in those institutions. I know, to-day, they cannot invest their money, a very large amount of which they have lying in other banks to their credit, on which they receive but three per cent.

In answer to Mr. PLUMB,

Mr. GAULT. To-day they have a capital of $3,000,000. The bank is in quite a different position from that which it occupied when it was simply a charitable institution. I have no doubt it will continue to give, in the future, the same satisfaction as in the past.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I want to know whether the $10,800 to which the hon. gentleman refers is not the interest of a certain sum of $180,000 which was formerly set apart by sec. 3 of 36 Victoria?

Mr. GAULT. It is.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to object to the measure at this stage. If this $10,800 be the interest at 6 per cent. on the $180,000, a poor fund, it is in no respect a division of any portion of the profits of those gentlemen, but a payment on account of a trust fund created at the time when, practically, the good will of the business was given to them in 1871, which was confirmed in 1873, and they do not give now any portion of their profits; in short, they merely pay interest on the sum set apart by Act of Parliament for the benefit of the poor in Montreal. If there is any other gift to mention, the hon. member for Montreal can state it.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I rather think the hon. gentleman has just stated the thing correctly. But I will remark, in reply to the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb), that what is proposed is simply an extension of this bank's charter with certain conditions not contained in the original Act. It was considered desirable to add the new section proposed to the provisions of the original charter.

Mr. GAULT. So far as I know, there has been no profit for four or five years to this bank. It is only in the past year that it realized a little profit from the increased value of its bonds.

Resolution considered in Committee and ordered to be reported.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

That it is expedient so to amend the Act 40 Vict., Chap. 10, amending the Acts respecting the Customs, as—

(1) To make better provision respecting the abatement of ad valorem duties on goods imported by water and damaged, and to extend such provisions to goods imported by railway or other land conveyance and damaged:

(2) To make better provision with respect to oaths and declarations required by the Act, and as to appraisement of goods for duty, and the collection of additional duty in cases under valuation:

(3) To provide more effectually for ensuring the payment of duties on goods warehoused, and for the punishment of frauds on the revenue by smuggling, using false invoices, or by certain offences with respect to goods warehoused:

(4) To make better provision for the decision of cases respecting goods seized and detained for breach of the Customs Laws:

(5) To empower the Governor in Council to transfer, for a time to be named in the Order, to the list of goods which may be imported free of duty, articles (whether natural products or products of manufactures) used as materials in Canadian manufactures, and to grant a drawback on the duty paid on articles so used or a specific sum in lieu of such drawback.

He said: It has been found necessary, in the working of the Customs Act, to make some slight amendments to that

Statute. The first amendment I propose to make is for the purpose of remedying a difficulty which exists at present with regard to allowances on goods which have come into the country by rail. At present a reduction can be made on goods which come into the country by water and are damaged, but there is not a similar provision with regard to those which come in by rail. Provision is also to be made for the better ascertaining of the amount of damage upon certain articles or goods. At present, if a bale of goods becomes damaged it is often put up at auction, and the amount which it may bring is the amount upon which duty has been collected. In other cases the valuation of the goods is made upon their value in Canada instead of in the country where they are purchased. The intention is to allow the rebate in value upon the price paid in the market whence the goods were purchased. The next clause will provide which officers in the Customs shall have the power of administering oaths. At present the law is so general that this power is interpreted to devolve upon any officer from the collector down to the preventive officer; we propose to amend the law by confining this power to the collectors, sub-collectors, surveyors and chief clerks. The next proposed change also has reference to the oaths to be administered and to the correction of a clerical error. At present power is given to the Governor in Council to limit a change in the oaths which it may be necessary to administer to importers, but no power is given to enlarge the oath. This latter power it is proposed to give when necessary; we also propose to take the final decision with regard to the valuation of goods out of the hands of the collectors. At present if any difficulty arises in the Customs in regard to the appraisement of goods, by the appraisers adding to the invoice and the importer objects, the appraisement must be approved by the collector. If the merchant objects to the increase in the valuation, then by giving notice, two merchant appraisers may be appointed to whom the question is referred, but in case they do not agree the collector who has previously given his decision becomes the final umpire. We propose to take this power from the collector and confer it upon the Commissioner whose decision shall be final. The proposition is also made to amend the 46th clause of the Customs Act, by striking out certain words upon which a great deal of difficulty has arisen, from the fact that, as administered by my predecessor and myself, the law prohibits any reduction in the invoices when presented for duty. The practice has been when goods have gone up in value, and the invoice is presented upon which the duty is to be paid, for the appraisers and collectors to exercise the power of raising the value of the goods to the market price existing at the time at which they were exported from the country in which they were purchased; but though the goods may have gone down in value from 20 to 50 per cent. the law strictly forbids any reduction in the invoice. We propose to strike out the following words:—

"And the value of any goods for duty shall never be appraised at less than the value for duty, as it would appear by the invoice and bill of entry."

I think the House will readily admit that when an importer is obliged to swear that the price at which he is entering the goods is their true market value at the time of exportation, he is placed, under the law as it now stands, in a position in which he should not be placed. The proposed change will enable the collector to add to or take from the value of the goods, according as their value has risen or fallen between the time of purchase and the time of exportation. By the next amendment, penalties will be imposed when goods are allowed to be removed from the custody of the Customs, unless the duty has been first paid. We have found that the revenue has suffered by the first practice of allowing parties to remove their goods upon the understanding that the duty shall be paid at a future time. We intend to prevent that by fining any collector or officer of the Customs who will do anything of the kind. It goes further, and is intended to prevent what has been in the past termed the constructive bonding of goods, that is, allowing goods to go into consumption by receiving a bond from the importer, which is filed away in the department at Ottawa, or, perhaps, at the different ports, and is forgotten, while such articles may have been consumed, or in the case of machinery, worn out, the revenue losing to that extent. I think the House will agree with me that all importers should be placed in the same position, and that no advantage should be taken of a permission made in the past of allowing men to bring any influence to bear either upon the collector, or the Government, or the Minister of Customs, and through that influence to obtain a bond which will enable him to keep goods for any length of time and cause a loss to the revenue. I have had a number of cases under my observation during the last few years; one case was in the west and another in Montreal, and in both cases, in closing their bonds, and compelling them to pay their duties due the Government, I have collected from them something like $10,000 each before they could release their bonds. Whenever articles of that kind are imported, the better way would be not to give any collector power to grant the admission of goods under such bonds; this power should only be exercised by the Governor in Council, who should assume the whole responsibility in the matter.

An hon. MEMBER. Does that include grinding wheat in bond?

Mr. BOWELL. That is quite another thing. It does not interfere with bonding warehouses as they now exist, or with the permission which is now given to any merchant to bond his goods, but it prevents the bonding of goods which are to go into immediate consumption without payment of duty, and it will effect all articles alike. It is proposed also to amend the 64th clause, which provides that goods in whole packages cannot be ex-warehoused unless the duty amounts to $20, unless it be the remaining stock that is in warehouse. The proposition is to allow exportation of any whole package that is taken out of the warehouse and exported, if the merchant desires to do so. The amendment to clauses 76 and 81 of the Customs Act is merely the addition of a few words, forfeiting the goods which have been seized. The amendment to the 91th clause is merely technical. The clauses 119 and 120 gives to the Minister of Customs almost unlimited power in the disposal of all goods seized under the violation of the Customs Act. For those clauses I propose to substitute others by which, after an investigation into any violation of the Customs law which comes before him, he shall give his decision, which shall be final, unless the parties aggrieved think proper to appeal to the courts of law. My principal object in so amending this law is to take from any Minister the power which is given to him in clauses 119 and 120 of the Customs Act, which enable him, no matter how gross the violation of the law may have been, or how long the man may have been smuggling, or to what extent he may have defrauded the revenue, to relieve the offender, if he thinks proper, of the whole penalty. That is a power that ought not to be given to any Minister. If the law is to be enforced, the Minister, after having come to a decision, can tell the party what the provision of the law is by which he must abide, otherwise he can appeal to the courts. These are the principal amendments to the law. Then there is a clause with reference to the payment of drawbacks, which is made a little more liberal. The present law gives power to the Governor in Council to grant a drawback upon any article which enters into the manufacture of another article in this country, but it gives the Government no power to do that which the House will remember the Government was urged to do a few nights ago. We propose to add to that clause the words: "or for granting a certain specific sum in lieu of such drawback," which will enable the Governor in Council, if they deem it necessary in the interest of any industry in this country, to ascertain what the amount of such article would be and give a sum in lieu of it. The same principle prevailed in the Customs Act of the United States in which, after having gone thoroughly into an investigation of the goods that are consumed in the manufacture of any particular article, the Government may declare by an order of the Treasurer what sum shall be paid in lieu of the duties which would have been paid if the article had been imported. The amendment leaves it optional with the Governor in Council to take such action as they may deem necessary with respect to the question of drawbacks, in order not only to facilitate the administration of the law, but to make it less troublesome to those who are more directly interested. I move the House into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COURSOL. If these resolutions are adopted I hope they will enable the Minister of Customs to see that the law is more effectually carried out than it has been heretofore. As the law is at present the department has not always been able to do justice. I am credibly informed that smuggling has been carried on to a very considerable extent from the United States into certain parts of this Dominion. If the information I have received is correct $150,000 worth of goods have been smuggled into this country every year across one particular portion of the boundary. That would be a very curious return which would show to this House the quantity and value of goods that have been smuggled into this country from the United States and other foreign countries. Different ports have different ways of doing business. Some charge high duties, while others charge low duties, and some add to the invoice price, while others do not. I think, therefore, that it is desirable that the hon. Minister of Customs should establish uniform rates and fixed rules as to the valuation of goods at the different ports, so that importers should not have any advantage one over another.

Mr. DE COSMOS. Before speaking on this question, I wish to enquire whether it is the intention of the Minister of Customs to repeal all the provisions of the Customs Law with respect to drawbacks, and introduce an entirely new provision.

Mr. BOWELL. No; the 11th sub-section of section 125 of the Act provides:

"For transferring to the lists of goods which may be imported into Canada free of duty, and for all articles (whether natural products, or products of manufactures) used as materials in Canadian manufactures; and for granting a drawback of the whole, or part of the duty paid on such articles which may have been used in Canadian manufactures; and any such materials transferred to the free list by such Order in Council shall be free of duties of Customs for the time therein appointed for that purpose."

For this I propose to substitute the following clause:—

"For transferring to the list of goods which may be imported into Canada free of duty, any or all articles (whether natural products or products of manufactures), and any such materials transferred to the free list by such Order in Council, shall be free of duty of Customs from the time wherein appointed for that purpose; and for granting a drawback of the whole, or part, of the duty paid on articles which may have been used in Canadian manufactures; or for granting a certain specific sum in lieu of any such drawback."

Mr. DE COSMOS. The question of drawbacks has been agitated at the extremes of the Dominion—in Nova Scotia and British Columbia. The Nova Scotia objection has reference to the specific drawback on tin and materials used for carrying oysters, lobsters and some other kinds of fish; in British Columbia objection has been taken for a number of years to the disallowance of applications for a drawback of the whole duty on materials used in canning salmon. When I read the Statute respecting drawbacks, I find it very difficult to determine what are manufactures and what are not. In the Trade and Navigation Returns canned fish are placed under the head of produce. In the interpretation clause which the hon. Minister proposes to introduce, I think canned fish, such as oysters, lobsters and salmon, should be defined as manufactures. The importance of having liberal provision made for retaining all duties paid on canned fish must be manifest to every hon. gentleman when it is observed that nearly one-tenth of the total export of fish from the Dominion consists of canned fish. Last year the total export amounted to about $7,000,000, which, capitalized at four per cent., would amount to $175,000,000 as the total value of our fish to this country. I have prepared a few statistics on this subject, which I will lay before the House. The total value of all kinds of fish exported from the Dominion in 1879-80 was $6,579,656; of which Ontario exported $32,982, Québec $397,864, Nova Scotia $4,353,441, New Brunswick $631,746, British Columbia $317,410, and Prince Edward Island $293,913. There may be some mistake in the return from British Columbia for last year, as I find by a return of the Fishery Inspector of British Columbia that the total value of the fish product of 1879-80 was $713,328, and of 1878-9 $643,493. The total export of canned fish for 1879-80 was as follows:—At Québec, oysters, $109; lobsters, $27,940; salmon, $1,296; total $29,345. New Brunswick, mackerel, $1,008; lobsters, $157,726; salmon, $1,758; total $160,492. Nova Scotia, codfish, $120; lobsters, $604,459; salmon, $5,116; total, $608,675. British Columbia, salmon, $294,555. Prince Edward Island, lobsters, $128,882. Total value canned fish, $1,221,949. An industry so great as this—amounting to over 20 per cent. of the whole exports of fish from the Dominion I take it—requires the serious consideration of the Minister of Customs and his colleagues. I will now refer to the capital invested in canning salmon in British Columbia, in 1880:—The value of vessels, steamers, canoes, boats, nets, etc., was $87,025; 12 canning establishments, $104,000; total value, $182,025. Men employed: 40 sailors, 1,178 fishermen, 665 shoremen, making a total of 2,243 men employed during the season. In addition to the canning of salmon in British Columbia, we have another new and growing industry, and one of the most promising and profitable, I believe, to be found on the shores of the American continent to-day. During last year, in the fur seal fishery on the west coast of Vancouver Island, 13,500 fur seals skin were taken, valued at $12 each, making a total of $162,000. To conduct this business there were employed: 7 schooners, 27 sailors, 180 Indian hunters, 93 canoes. With respect to the drawback proposed by the hon. Minister of Customs, so far as I can gather from the Bill, he proposes that the Governor in Council shall have power to grant a drawback of the whole export of the duty. I find that objections were urged by Nova Scotia, as well as by British Columbia, with regard to placing a specific drawback upon materials used in canning fish. Last year a memorial was drawn up and signed by a number of gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces and some hon. members from British Columbia. The concluding portion of the memorial is as follows:—

"10. That we, therefore, respectfully urge that the existing Order in Council, granting only 34 cents per box on tin plate used in canning be rescinded, and that an Order in Council be made authorizing the payment to the exporter of canned lobsters and salmon, of a sum equal to the actual duties paid on material used in the canning of lobsters and salmon exported."

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Daly) and myself waited on the Minister of Customs, and he had the agreeable duty to perform at that time of promising that an Order in Council would be passed, granting a drawback of the actual duties that were paid. It happened, for some reason or other—it may have been a wise one, but the reason I have not yet discovered—that the Minister, instead of carrying out the promise made to the hon. member for Halifax and myself, had an Order in Council passed granting 50 cents drawback on each box of tin used in canning fish. That undoubtedly was liberal in comparison with the terms of the previous Order in Council. The Order in Council in force before allowed 34 cents; but the new Order in Council made it 50 cents, an increase of specific drawback of 16 cents. It appears that even that is unsatisfactory, as I will hereafter show this House. I will read a report of the Board of Trade of British Columbia on the subject of drawbacks. It is dated September 15th, and reads as follows:—

"The Committee appointed to consider the subject of drawback of duty on tin plates, etc., used in the manufacture of cans for preserving salmon, reported as follows:—1st. Prior to the year 1879 drawback of the actual amount of duty paid on tin plates was allowed, viz., 5 per cent. ad valorem, but on other material no drawback was allowed; 2nd. By an Order in Council, 11th June, 1879, the drawback was fixed at 34 cents for each box of tin plates used, and no drawback was allowed on other materials; 3rd. The above rate of 34 cents was by an Order in Council of 20th May, 1880, increased to 50 cents per box; 4th. The Committee is of opinion that no specific rate can be fixed, which, viewed from both sides, will fairly meet the case—the fluctuations in prices of material are great and violent, as instanced in the last two years, and so long as the duty imposed is ad valorem while the drawback is specific, it is probable there will be a considerable difference between the two. In 1879 tin plates cost in England as much as 32s. per box, and a similar article could be purchased not long ago, during the present year, at just half that price, viz., 16s. The duty paid in the former year (1879), was 80 cents per box, against which the drawback allowed was altogether inadequate, while at prices lately paid, the drawback will somewhat exceed the duty, although it will not equal the duties on all materials used in salmon canning; 5th. The Committee is therefore of opinion that the case would be best met by a drawback of the actual amount of duty paid on the undermentioned articles, being allowed, viz., on tin plates, slab tin, pig lead, muriatic acid, and copper bolts.

That is the view held by the Board of Trade of British Columbia, and I find that in Halifax there is grave objection urged against the specific drawback also. In a letter to the Evening Chronicle of Halifax, there are statements showing how unfairly it operates. The letter was written in July last and reads as follows:—

"THE DRAWBACK ON TIN PLATES.

"To the Editor of the Citizen and Evening Chronicle :

"SIR,—Importers of tin, and all connected with the lobster trade, will appreciate the service rendered by the Chronicle in the late discussions respecting drawback on tin plates. I was particularly pleased with the exposure of the unsoundness of the principle now adopted by the Government, of a fixed rate of drawback on an article which pays ad valorem duty, and the value of which fluctuates greatly in the British market. In March, 1879, the duty paid on tin plates was about 40 cents per box; in May a little less. Later, the price of tin rose rapidly and the duty increased. In September it was 45 cents, in December 61 cents, and in February of the present year it was as high as 77 cents. On some of the invoices entered with these rates of duty, the importer is entitled to a drawback at the rate of 34 cents per box; on others, under the latest regulation, 50 cents. The Government pretend to repay the importer the duty levied on the article, but the figures I have given fully confirm your argument that under the plan adopted by the Government, the importer is deprived of what is admitted to be his right. Under the old regulation, in force when the Mackenzie Government was in power, the importer received a return of the actual amount paid; not a cent more nor a cent less. Why this simple and honest plan was abolished and the present stupid system adopted is a puzzle to the trade. It is absolutely certain that while the unsound principle is retained, the drawback must nearly always be unjust to the importer or to the revenue. The chances are not one in a hundred that the fixed rate will be just the amount paid. If it is more than the amount, it does a wrong to the revenue, and on that ground should be changed. But the Government take pretty good care that the revenue shall be protected, for they keep the rate so low that the importer, or the packer for whom he acts, is the sufferer. If I export a lot of tin to Newfoundland, I get a drawback equal to the amount I have paid. When I export it in the shape of lobster cans to Europe, I get a drawback of only 51 cents per box, although I may have paid 77 cents!"

I have obtained further information as to the duties paid on tin used in canning fish in Nova Scotia, and the drawbacks received, and I made an analysis of it which I will lay before the House. From 1st April, 1879, to 15th June, 1880, when a specific drawback of 34 cents per box of tin was allowed, the drawback received and duties paid compared as follows:—On one invoice 26 cents were paid and 34 cents drawback received, or 8 cents received in excess of duty paid; on thirteen invoices 35 cents to 39 cents were paid, or 1 cent to 5 cents more than drawback received; on ten invoices 40 cents to 49 cents were paid, or 6 cents to 15 cents more than the drawback; on four invoices 50 cents to 54 cents were paid, or 16 cents to 20 cents more than the drawback allowed. That was up to the time the new Order in Council came into operation. Under the new Order in Council a drawback of 50 cents per box was allowed on tin imported after 1st July, 1879. That gave the following result: One invoice of ten imported into Halifax paid 34 cents duty and received the drawback 50 cents, or 16 cents in excess; ten invoices paid 36 cents to 39 cents, and received 50 cents drawback, or 11 cents to 14 cents in excess of the duty; fourteen invoices paid 40 cents to 49 cents, or 1 cent to 10 cents less than the drawback; two invoices paid 50 cents and received 50 cents drawback; twenty-three invoices paid from 51 cents to 57 cents, or 1 cent to 7 cents more than the drawback received; nine paid 60 to 69 cents, or 10 cents to 19 cents in excess of drawback; fourteen paid from 70 cents to 73 cents, or 20 to 23 cents in excess; one invoice paid 80 cents, or 30 cents more than it received; another paid 90 cents, or 40 cents in excess of the drawback. This appears to me to be convincing proof that, instead of a specific drawback, as has been stipulated in the recent Order in Council respecting drawbacks on the material used in canning fish, an ad valorem drawback should have been provided. The object of granting a drawback is to foster the production of articles for exportation, in which the raw material is combined with imported material. The operation of the specific drawback gives a bonus to one class of importers who import at less than specific rate, and deprives another class of the portion of the duty they have paid above the specific rate. I may further remark that no provision is made in the Order in Council for a drawback on slab tin, pig lead and muriatic acid and copper bolt; material used in the canning of salmon, lobsters, oysters, etc. I believe one reason urged why a specific rather than an ad valorem drawback should be established, is that an ad valorem drawback would cause a great deal of trouble to examine the accounts respecting the imports of materials used in canning fish. After analyzing a return produced in this House, I find that the total number of drawbacks granted was only 213, and of that number Bathurst stands for 8; Chatham, 21; Dalhousie, 2; Richibucto, 14; Shediac, 3; St. Andrews, 4; Halifax, 111; Charlottetown, 25; Summerside, 1; Victoria, 22, and New Westminster, 2. Now, the objection raised by the Government, that it would be very troublesome to find out the actual duty paid, cannot be sustained. When we have eleven Custom Houses distributed over the coasts of the Maritime Provinces, and two on the Pacific Coast, it appears to me the division of labor, so far as enquiring into the nature of those drawbacks is concerned, must become very light. Certainly, in a city like Halifax, where they have such a large stock of officials, the labor cannot be very great, although that is where the largest number of drawbacks were paid. In relation to the amount of drawbacks paid on canned fish, $12,811.17, Bathurst received $315.30; Chatham, $144.05; Dalhousie, $79.26; Richibucto, $954.99; Shediac, $106.88; St. Andrews, $402.28; Halifax, $4,565.16; Charlottetown, $1,580.65; Summerside, Prince Edward Island, $24; Victoria, $4,604.40, and New Westminster, $44.20. Now, the port that received the largest sum for drawbacks was Victoria, the next largest going to Halifax. In the one case, there were only 22 drawbacks, and in the other 111. I find that $2,380.26 were paid in drawbacks on the tin used in packing starch, oatmeal, oil-cake, wire-fencing and meat, and for pilot bread in Quebec and Halifax. The total amount, therefore, of drawbacks granted on tin is about $15,000. I urge on the hon. Minister of Customs that, as there is an objection to specific drawback with reference to the materials used in the canning of fish, it would be desirable to grant an ad valorem drawback inasmuch as the materials pay an ad valorem duty. The merchant, I believe, has no desire to get any bonus under the operation of those specific drawbacks. He wants to have his business based on solid principles; and under an ad valorem drawback, the fluctuations of the market would enable him to get the exact duty paid, and the encouragement which, I believe, was the intention of the framers of the drawback originally. The resolution submitted, to my mind, will operate unfairly. The words read "and to grant a drawback on the duty paid on the articles so used." It is not proposed to grant a drawback of the whole duty on articles so used, or a specific sum in lieu of such drawback. I think I have shown that a specific drawback is objectionable. The present system does not meet the wishes of those engaged in the fish canning business in British Columbia. Another reason why we should give full consideration to this question of drawbacks in British Columbia is this: all the tin and other materials imported into that Province for canning purposes come from Great Britain, a distance of 17,000 miles, round Cape Horn, and up the Pacific. Those materials have to be ordered nine months in advance of use, there being a six months' voyage; this compels the canners to pay interest on the price of his goods imported. In the next place, the chief market for the canned fish is England, and thus the materials are sent back again. The material for canning is thus sent 17,000 miles further before the canner can get a return for his labor and capital invested—a part of the materials thus travelling 34,000 miles. So the British Columbia canner must suffer loss in comparison with his rival in the Maritime Provinces, who has the advantage of steamers constantly and rapidly crossing the Atlantic to and from England. A canner in any of them, short of tin, can flash a telegram to England, and in a few days get his tin. If he wishes to ship his lobsters or oysters, he can quickly send them by rail to Halifax, and thence to England without losing six months in bringing tin from England and six in sending his canned fish to that country. Therefore, the Minister of Customs should consider the position of the trade in British Columbia, which is now one of the largest canned fish exporting Provinces in the Dominion. They ought to take the matter into consideration and remit to our canners the actual duties they pay on all the materials they use in canning salmon.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). This is a matter of considerable importance to Prince Edward Island, for, although the smallest Province in the Dominion, I believe it is becoming the largest producer of canned goods of any Province in Canada, not excepting the large Province of Nova Scotia. I believe our exports of canned fish for the current year will amount to near three-fourths of a million. It is an industry which has only grown up within the last two or three years, but it is assuming very large proportions, and it is likely still further to increase. I do not know that there is any great dissatisfaction with the present drawback under the rates which rule in Great Britain, but under the prices which ruled at the beginning of last season it would have been a great injustice. I can see no reason why there should not be a drawback for the full amount of the tin imported, and I hope the Government will take the matter into serious consideration. The other articles used in this business, all put together, would amount to a larger figure than is now allowed to take the place of the drawback. The canning, not only of fish but of all kinds of meats and other articles of diet, is a business which is also largely increasing, and I have no doubt the Government will give it the attention which it deserves.

House resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. DeCosmos.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. ANGLIN. I hope the hon. gentleman will give his attention to the question of the entire remission of the duty upon the articles used in canning fish—an industry which is now becoming an important one upon the Atlantic as well as upon the Pacific coast. It is a business which has not always been a very profitable one; indeed, in many cases, there has been actual loss, owing to the demand not having kept pace with the growth of the industry. The acids used in cleaning the tin, and other articles, are dutiable, and though the amount may not be large it is a serious consideration for those engaged in the business.

Mr. BOWELL. The Government will give every attention to the arguments which have been advanced by the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia (Mr. DeCosmos), but both he and the hon. member for Gloucester seem to imply that the amount of the drawback upon the articles going into the manufacture of tin cans had always been paid by the previous Government.

Mr. ANGLIN. I said nothing about the previous Government.

Mr. BOWELL. No; but that was the conclusion which must be drawn from the remarks of the hon. gentleman. Reference was made to an article in the Halifax Chronicle in which it was stated that prior to a certain time the Mackenzie Government had paid such and such drawbacks. Even that article shows that the drawback was paid on tin alone, and no other principle has been recognised so far as I have been able to ascertain. Even the American Government, which pays so much attention to this subject, is not so liberal in that respect as we are in this country. The question of giving the full amount of the drawback on every conceivable article going into the manufacture of tin cans, is certainly worthy of great consideration. But I have grave doubts, from the short experience I have had, whether the canners would receive any more on the whole than they would by receiving a specific amount. But I readily concede this point, that, as the fluctuations in the market takes place, the amount which is to be paid should be calculated accordingly; that is, that the one rule of 34 cents which was in existence for sometime, should not be the fixed amount for all time to come. My hon. friend refers to the question of paying back those drawbacks as one of no particular moment in regard to the amount of labor which it imposes upon those who have to make the calculations. In order to sustain that position he quotes the returns from eleven ports, from which those exports have taken place which have received drawbacks. But this drawback is not paid by the collector at any of the ports. In fact, it will never be safe to entrust that power to the collectors, except, perhaps, at such ports as Halifax, Victoria, and other important ports. If we gave the power of granting drawbacks to every collector in the Dominion, I am afraid we would soon get into difficulty, and that a very large amount of money would be paid out which ought not to be paid out. All these claims have to be sent to the department, and one reason why I adopted the principle of paying a specific sum in lieu of this drawback, was to avoid the difficulty of making the calculations, which the practice has imposed upon the department, in making a thorough investigation of every invoice which covers all the articles referred to by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. DeCosmos). I notice that the principle has worked admirably with reference to the drawbacks which we have been paying to the shipbuilders of the eastern Provinces. I have heard no complaints from any gentleman engaged in this important business. While I am not prepared to say, at the present moment, that I quite agree with the hon. member for Gloucester, that we should return to the old principle of making calculations upon every demand we receive, and referring back to invoices received months or years ago, or perhaps not sent from the port to the head office at all, still I may say that the remarks made by the hon. gentleman upon this question shall receive the earnest consideration of the department.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. If I understood the hon. the Minister of Customs aright, he proposes to modify the law in one direction which is now logical and symmetrical enough; that is to say, he proposes to allow parties to receive a rebate when the value of the goods they have imported has fallen. There is no gainsaying the logic of his proposition, but it occurs to me that the result will be that the Customs' authorities will be fully advised of all the reductions that take place between the date the goods were purchased and the making up of the invoice; but I doubt if they will be equally well advised of the cases in which goods have been purchased at a low rate and a large advance has taken place. It seems to me the importers will have a very considerable advantage in dealing with the Customs' authorities, who cannot be supposed to be cognizant of the changes in the market as well as the persons who are constantly dealing in the market. Then I see that in clause 5 the hon. gentleman proposes to empower the Governor in Council to transfer for a time to be named in the order, the list of goods to be imported free of duty. I would suggest that it would be better to defer the granting of a power like this until next Session, and then the sense of the House should be taken as to whether all these things should become a part of the law of the land. I do not object, speaking for myself alone, to the experiment being made for a reasonable length of time, but I think it is precisely one of those things upon which, after a certain time, the Government should take the responsibility of submitting to the House such changes as may be deemed desirable.

Mr. BOWELL. This is no new principle. It is in the Customs Act as it now exists. There is no limit in it at which these articles shall be declared free. The law says that we may transfer to the list of goods which may be imported into Canada free of duty, any or all the articles being natural products which are used as material for Canadian manufactures. When the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and their attention was called to the fact that a certain raw material was used in some particular manufacture, they frequently found it advisable to place that article upon the free list. There is no restriction as to the time it shall remain on the free list, that being left to the discretion of the Governor in Council. It is not proposed to extend this privilege in any respect, except that the latter part of the clause, provides for the payment of the drawback when difficulties arise in arriving at an exact sum, this is amended so as to empower the Council, after the approval of the Treasury Board, to declare that a certain sum shall be given in lieu thereof.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I am quite aware of the existence of this power; I am merely suggesting whether it would not be better, when we are altering the Act, to cause all these things to be brought formally before Parliament for discussion and approval. As to the other point raised by the hon. Minister, that the Government, having once placed an article on the free list, could, by an Order in Council, re-impose the tax, my impression is that they could not, that that would have to be done by Parliament again. But that is a legal question on which I give merely my impression.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). It seems to me that the duty on tin cans, which the hon. Minister has referred to, is equivalent to a drawback. It seems to me the difficulty is no less by giving a specific sum than it would be by paying back the ad valorem duty. The value of the tin increases and decreases almost every three months of the year, and the officer has the trouble of ascertaining the value of the imports from time to time, in order to know what to give back to the importer of the cans. I never learned the reasons why the practice of giving the ad valorem duty back was changed to that of giving a specific amount. I think a more convenient method of arriving at the true valuation of goods is to average the prices for a series of years, than to ascertain the change of price between the time of shipment and the time of arrival in the country.

Mr. BOWELL. When this matter was discussed a short time ago, I stated that the practice of the department when the hon. gentleman was a Minister, was to collect duty on the value of the goods at the time of their exportation from the country where they were purchased. The hon. gentleman then, as now, denied that statement; but, according to the affidavit which he himself put upon the Statute-book, every importer has to swear that the price of the goods mentioned in the invoice is the "fair market value of such goods at the time and place of exportation." Many difficulties arise under that law, as goods are frequently purchased months before they are exported. The object in changing the law is to prevent merchants from being placed in a false position.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It appears from what the hon. member for Victoria has said, that there has prevailed in the department the rule of imposing this specific duty without the authority of the Act. Instead of granting a drawback on certain duties that are paid, he has taken power to grant a certain specific sum. It appears from the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria that that rule has been followed in the department hitherto. He has told us that in granting drawbacks on the lobster cans, instead of returning the amount of duty paid, a certain specific sum fixed by the hon. Minister, regardless of the duty, has been given as drawback, that sum in some cases exceeding and in others being less than the amount of duty. With regard to the difficulty to the revenue pointed out by the hon. member for Centre Huron, I do not see that there is any danger in that respect. Within the last twenty-one months, some millions of dollars worth of manufactured goods have been exported upon which not a single cent of drawback has been allowed. The present hon. Minister of Customs has followed the traditional policy that when the Government once gets hold of some money it will not give it up. I would ask the hon. Minister whether the wording of this resolution does not empower him to grant drawbacks on certain articles that, I judged from his remarks the other day, he considered it beyond his power to grant, namely, finished articles used in the manufactured article. This sub-section of clause 125 gives him power, not only to allow a drawback on natural but also on the products of manufacture that enter into another article that is to be manufactured in the country. In that class, boiler plates and tubes, which are finished articles according to his interpretation, would be entitled to a drawback when they enter into the construction of a boiler to be exported to a foreign country. I would like to learn from the hon. Minister whether he intends to pursue a more just policy in future than that which has hitherto prevailed, and which has had a very prejudicial effect on our export trade.

Mr. BOWELL. When we reach the hon. gentleman's motion, I will be able to convince, even him, that the department has acted quite correct in not having paid the drawbacks to which he has referred. The question of granting drawbacks on manufactured articles is a question of policy, not a question under the law. The Government having adopted a policy for the purpose of encouraging manufactures in this country, it would be unfair to pay a drawback on articles manufactured in the country,

Mr. PATERSON. But if they are not manufactured in the country?

Mr. BOWELL. The duty will still operate as an encouragement to their manufacture, so long as they can be manufactured in the country. But if they can be imported and exported again without paying duty, the question arises whether that would be encouraging home manufacture. Under the old law, machinery not manufactured here was admitted free, and it was found a large portion of the machinery admitted under that class was found to be manufactured in various parts of the country. The question is open for discussion. My own opinion is that if we desire the manufacture of these articles, we should impose a duty on the foreign article.

Mr. PATERSON. The policy I recommend simply points in the direction of extending foreign trade. When I represent that there has been $2,000,000 worth of articles exported in a few lines of goods on which not a single cent has been returned as drawback, there must be obstacles interposed by the department that can hardly be justified. If he really does not want to lose the export trade of manufactures altogether, there must be a more just and liberal policy than the present pursued. The proportion of the export trade is very small in comparison with the entire trade. The manufacturer of one line of goods entering into the manufacture of another line, is protected to the full extent of the home demand. It is only the minor portion exported on which he loses the benefit of protection. If you kill off the export trade altogether, you will not benefit your home manufactures. But if you keep your export trade alive, by giving this remission of duties on the raw material—and you cannot do so without it—you will have done no harm to the home manufacturer, who will still have enjoyed the protection afforded by the Tariff on all the products sold in this country. The only case in which he will lose anything is the minor amount exported, and unless encouragement is given the export trade it will cease, when the manufacturer cannot hope for any benefit.

Mr. BOWELL. No drawback was paid in the past under either the former Administration which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) supported, or that which preceded it, on manufactured articles. What I maintain is this: if the duty paid on the raw materials of Canadian manufactures be remitted to the manufacturer, he stands in a better position than before its imposition. How it can affect or destroy the export trade is something the hon. gentleman has failed to show. Under the old Tariff no drawback was paid to any manufacturer. The only exception made was in the fish trade, the drawback on tin for cans. But, in order to assist the manufacturers in Canada, and place them in as good, if not a better, position than they occupied prior to the higher duties, the Government agreed to give them a drawback on all the raw material that enters into their manufactures. How that is to destroy the export trade I cannot understand. If the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman be correct, an American manufacturer could make all the parts of a sewing machine, import it into Canada, set it up and export it again, so that the only labor performed in regard to it would be the putting together of its parts and setting it in running order, which would render unnecessary such a manufacturing establishment as that in Hamilton, employing 200 or 300 men. Its proprietor is now able to compete successfully in the United States with the American manufacturers themselves. I think, with regard to his case, that we have arrived at a solution that will be satisfactory to him, and which will place him in a better position than before the framing of the present Tariff, enabling him to carry on still more extensively that important industry which he has so successfully established.

Mr. PATERSON. The case is different as compared with the old Tariff, under which this manufacturer paid no duty on such raw materials as pig iron. This manufacturer might fairly say, I am entitled to a drawback to the extent of the $2 a ton imposed upon the pig iron.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no dispute on that point, because the pig iron is a raw material.

Mr. PATERSON. He has not got that drawback.

Mr. BOWELL. Then it is his own fault.

Mr. PATERSON. It is strange, if drawbacks are procurable, that on $2,000,000 worth of manufactured goods exported not one cent of drawback has been paid. There must be a fault somewhere. The duties have been, besides, increased on the other articles used in this and other manufactures, such as on tubing for boilers, boiler plates, bar iron and other things. Therefore, you may expect claims for drawbacks where none could be made before, and unless you grant those claims your policy will tend to kill off the export trade. As an illustration, take the duty on wheat—it is a finished article too—but when it was objected that the duty on it would kill our carrying trade, the Government provided for its passing through the country in bond. By a parity of reasoning, boiler tubing and other parts of boilers, such as are not manufactured, should be relieved of duties. So close is the margin of profits on those boilers exported, that the slightest discrimination against our manufacturers will enable their United States competitors to drive them from the foreign market. The remission of those duties would preserve this industry to the country, with all the labor and expenditure in connection with it. Otherwise you will kill off the export trade and bring in no boiler tubes from a distance. The Government would lose nothing, while the country would gain by the payment of drawbacks on exported manufactures to the amount of the duties on the raw materials.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. BOWELL introduced a Bill (No. 78) to amend the Act 40 Victoria, chapter 10, entitled: "An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting Customs."

32. Salaries and contingent expenses of the Senate.....	$55,938 00
---	-------------

Mr. BLAKE. I would like to ask the Government what are their intentions with regard to superannuation allowances and services in connection with the library. Heretofore, so far as the Senate was concerned, these charges have been paid out of contingencies. Are they included in the present vote?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They were formerly paid out of contingencies but the matter was brought under the consideration of the Government and they resolved for the present, at all events, to strike them out. It is just a question whether the law can be met in that way, but we have the matter under consideration and if necessary we will deal with it in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. BLAKE. The fact that the estimate for the Senate was the same as last year, led me to ask the question, and I thought if these charges are not to be voted the contingencies ought to be reduced by the amount.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Certainly, that was the intention.

Mr. BLAKE. It does not appear to have been done. I of course do not object to the vote at present, but my hon friend will see that it will be much more convenient, when we come to concurrence, to have the estimate reduced by these amounts, if, as the hon. gentleman says, it is the intention to strike them out.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Certainly. They are to be dealt with separately.

33. Salaries (House of Commons), per clerk's estimate.....$29,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. There are several increases here.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is $400 to be restored to the salary of the Sergeant-at-Arms by which amount it was reduced last year, and $200 to the accountant whose salary was previously reduced less that amount. Last year the then leader of the Opposition called attention to the reduction, and urged that the salary of the accountant should be placed at the old figure, for reasons which he (Mr. Mackenzie) stated. The $400 addition to the salary of the Sergeant-at-Arms is voted because he is now performing the duties which he performed three or four years ago in connection with the Post Office. Those two amounts make the $600 increase.

34. Expenses of Committees, extra sessional clerks, etc.....$12,800 00

Mr. MILLS. A few years ago we asked $10,000 for this purpose, and the hon. Minister of Customs proposed that that sum should be reduced by $2,000 and that reduction took place. Now the hon. the Minister of Public Works is asking $4,000 more for this particular service than he said was necessary when he was sitting on the Opposition side of the House.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I do not know whether the circumstances are exactly the same to-day as they were then. A large expenditure has been incurred every year for shorthand writers to expedite the work of committees. If by paying $3,000 or $4,000 more we can shorten the Sessions, the Treasury will not be the loser by it.

Mr. ANGLIN. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to tell us what Committees are sitting this year requiring shorthand writers? In some former Sessions we had some very important enquiries which entailed an extra expense, but I am not aware that we have any enquiries going on this Session.

Mr. LANGEVIN. This vote is for next year. The experience of the last two Sessions teaches us to provide for the future. If no witnesses are called and no shorthand writers are employed, then this $1,000 may be saved. But as we must provide for all ordinary expenses of this kind, we propose to ask for $1,000 for that purpose, and to reduce by $500 the allowance for sessional clerks.

Mr. MILLS. How many Sessional Clerks are employed at the present time?

Mr. SPEAKER. Twenty-five.

Mr. BLAKE. Twenty-five are paid, but how many are employed?

Mr. SPEAKER. The whole of them are employed all the time.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has referred to his experience in former Sessions. I think in the first Session of the present Parliament, when the reign of economy began, there was something like 100 sessional clerks here. A great many of these men were staying around here for months doing nothing. One of these gentlemen, a Mr. E. King-Dodds, was appointed towards the close of the Session, and I believe he informed Mr. Speaker that he was about to engage in an election in the west, and that it was necessary he should leave in order to attend to his constituency, Mr. Dodds being a candidate for election to the Local Legislature. Mr. Dodds could not remain, and yet, as he had nothing to do, he could not understand why it was that the Government insisted upon keeping him. He could not understand why he should not be paid just as well when he was away as when he was here, seeing that he had nothing to do.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. MILLS. When the Committee rose at six o'clock, I was referring to the case of E. King-Dodds, who was appointed sessional clerk towards the close of the Session of 1879. At the close of one week, or at the beginning of the next, he left the city and went west to canvass a constituency, and he was paid in the meantime $160. Seeing that he had nothing to do, that he was anxious to leave, and that, according to rule, his pay could not go on if he did leave, the difficulty was obviated by antedating his appointment some 40 days, and he received $160 for services never performed. I am inclined to think that was not an isolated case. I believe there was a case in Lower Canada where a gentleman was appointed and was not even aware of his appointment, but who, to his surprise, received his compensation as extra sessional clerk some days after the Session was over. Then, I believe, on that occasion, the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Domville), had one of these gentlemen who was employed at $4 a day, furnished him as a private secretary, because, I suppose, it was thought he was more usefully employed in that way than he would be if he was allowed to kick his heels about the corridors with nothing to do. Then, I believe, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Bunting), had another extra sessional clerk furnished him as a private secretary—so I have been informed. Then, on the present occasion, I think there was a translator employed for some time in the public service, Mr. Gelinus, who early last summer was appointed editor of the Minerve newspaper in Montreal; and while he was actively engaged in the discharge of his duties as editor of the newspaper, he was also paid as a public servant of this House. During the month of December last he received $100 as permanent translator, and he received $60 for that month as extra sessional clerk. I believe Mr. Gelinus, although he has resigned his position as translator, is still receiving pay as extra sessional clerk, while he is devoting himself to the conduct of a newspaper in Montreal. Hon. gentlemen will understand that the contingencies of the House will necessarily be very much larger under these circumstances. The hon. gentleman will, perhaps, be able to explain to the Committee how it is that Mr. Gelinus, in the month of December, received $100 as a translator, and $60 as extra sessional clerk. I refer to this as an instance of the way in which the public money is being expended. No doubt hon. gentlemen, in imposing so large a tax on the people of this country, feel it necessary to do something with the money they have obtained, and it may be they think that the best way in which this money can be applied is in supplementing the salary of the editor of a newspaper, by paying him as extra sessional clerk. I have no doubt that if the Committee of Public Accounts were to examine the clerks of the House, the accountant, and some of the hon. gentlemen opposite, we might obtain information which would, no doubt, lead to a very considerable economy in the expenditure of Parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member refers to the Session of 1879, but it must be remembered the experience of that Session was altogether exceptional. During that Session a good many clerks were employed, perhaps more than were required. The gentleman to whom the hon. gentleman refers, Mr. E. King Dodds, I do not know personally. I think some persons applied to me for leave of absence for one gentleman—I do not remember whether it was Mr. Dodds or some other person—but I told them that it was possible that the presence of that gentleman would be required here. They told me that he had an engagement to deliver some lectures in Ontario on temperance. Perhaps it was to carry on an election—I do not know. Mr. Gelinus was employed as a permanent translator, and I learned by public rumor that he was attached to the Minerve, a newspaper published in Montreal. I called his attention to the fact that he could not occupy that position while he was engaged as a permanent officer of the House. He postponed his demission to the month of December, and on the first of December drew his salary for that month. I have since done away with the system of drawing salaries in advance. I insisted on his resignation and he gave it to me, though I did not ask him to repay what he had received for December. He afterwards applied to be employed as a supernumerary clerk.

Mr. BLAKE. I am afraid somebody has been—shall I say—humbugging Mr. Speaker about Mr. Dodds, because that gentleman is well known as a crusader against the Scott Act. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) mentioned that, on the occasion on which these pressing engagements were pointed out to Mr. Speaker, he was induced to give Mr. Dodds leave of absence from his less pressing engagement as one of the noble band of sessional clerks of the first Session; he received pecuniary assistance to enable him to fulfil his engagements to the extent of some $160 for forty days.

36. Publishing Debates $18,562 50

Mr. BLAKE. This is an increase; but I observe that in the Supplementary Estimates $10,000 is asked for, additional to that voted last year, indicating that the Debates are going to cost $25,000. Yet, for next year, you only ask for $18,562.

Mr. STEPHENSON. It is well understood that the extra efforts put forth this year to facilitate the publication of our debates, involves extra expense. The experiment of this year is something new, and from all I can gather, from the remarks of hon. members on both sides of the House, it has been an eminent success. I think there is no person who is a judge of the work performed, but will say that the success is such as never was attained in any Parliament or country in the world before. Our printers have been very prompt in getting out the debates, and the reporters have done their work very efficiently, so far as I am capable of judging. All this work could not be done without expense. We know that, heretofore, we have had very great complaints of delay in connection with the publication of Hansard; instead of having been a report valuable for present use, it was but a volume for future reference. But, so far as the Hansard has gone this year, it has been available at once. Not a single day has passed without the report of the previous day's debates being laid on the Table of the House, by the afternoon. Sometimes the printers have worked till six and seven o'clock in the morning in order to produce the copies to the members at the required time. If this experiment continues to be a success, so much the better. Should the scheme, hereafter, prove a failure, we shall perceive it by the end of the Session, and probably adopt the proper means to remedy whatever faults may appear.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness). You are not now dealing with the manner in which the official reporting has been performed. I admit the work is done most efficiently and satisfactorily. The question is, what the cost will be? We are having another change, and may expect the expense for this year to be greater than that for the past, owing to the greater efficiency and success which attends the publication of the debates this year; and should the debates of the current year cost $25,000, the reporting for the present Session will cost more than $25,000.

Mr. BOWELL. I have just been informed by the Clerk of the Debates Committee that, while the deduction drawn by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken is, on its face, correct, it is really not the fact; that the $10,000 in the Supplementary Estimates, now asked for, is to recoup the Committee an amount they had to take out of last year's Estimates to pay for the printing and reporting of the debates of the year previous. The Clerk also says that, owing to difficulties with the reporters that year, the full amount had not been paid, and that in order to pay up the amount due after the vote had lapsed, this money was taken out of the appropriation for the reporting of the debates and paid on that account. So that really the printing and reporting has not cost the sum of $25,000, as would appear from the Supplementary Estimates. The item should have been charged to the account of last year. The sum of $18,562.50 is the exact sum that he thinks will be required to cover in full the reporting and printing of the Debates for this year.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the actual cost of the work for 1880?

Mr. BOWELL. The clerk says about $16,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Under the circumstances, I think, the hon. Finance Minister will have seen the propriety of laying on the Table as soon as possible a statement showing exactly how this item of $10,000 is made up. If there has been an over draft or an irregular charge, I would like to know how it comes, and also the real expenditure for the three years past.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The information will be brought down.

38. Grant to Parliamentary Library $3,500 00

Mr. MILLS. Why is the grant so small this year?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Last year $7,000 was granted, and subsequently $3,500, for the purchase of books. It was stated it would require the whole of the $7,000 to pay up the arrears due by the Committee. We acted in accordance with the suggestion of the Library Committee, to appropriate last year $3,500, and take it out of the usual vote for this year.

41. Salaries of officers (additional) and contingencies of Library $5,250 00

Mr. BLAKE. What change has been made in regard to this item?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not know what has led to the decrease. I think the officers are ranged under an arrangement made last year. There may have been some reduction.

Mr. BLAKE. So far from the estimate of last year being inadequate, there had been a slight error made by the Librarian, and there was a question how the recommendation of the Library Committee should be carried out. Yet we find the estimate is diminished. I do not object to that decrease, but I suppose there has been some change in the staff.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Government made no change. We were very glad to see the reduction and not enquire into it as it was a reduction.

43. Printing, printing paper and bookbinding... $70,000 00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I asked at the beginning of the Session for information as to the relation in which we stand toward the Parliamentary Printer. None has yet come down. Last Session the contract was cancelled on the Report of the Printing Committee, yet the printer is still going on with the work at contract rates. I have no objection to that, nor no fault to find with the way in which the work is done. It is well done, though perhaps tardily, not owing, perhaps, so much to the fault of the printer as to the early Session. It is unfair to the Printing Committee that this matter should be in its present form. If the contractor has a valid contract, or if he is doing the work on sufferance, we ought to know it.

Mr. BOWELL. The printing stands as the House left it last Session.

Mr. ROSS. Cancelled.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not aware that it is, nor do I think that the Votes and Proceedings prove it is. To cancel the contract requires the sanction of both Houses. The report of the sub-Committee recommending its cancellation and suggesting a mode of procedure in the future, was by some mistake not made a part of the Committee's report, and the matter dropped. In the other branch, objection was taken to some informality in connection with the report and it was not adopted. This being purely a matter for the House to deal with, the Government took no action on it. With reference to the motion for papers in this connection, there were no papers or correspondence.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The hon. Minister is mistaken. The report of the Committee recommending the cancellation of the contract was the thirteenth report, which was adopted by this House and concurred in by the Senate. This House has, therefore, no contract for the parliamentary printing. If there was no correspondence, the hon. Minister need not have waited so long to inform us of the fact. Suppose the hon. Minister would wish to transfer that work to another printer, what is there to hinder him? Or what is there to prevent the contractor, seeing there is no contract, and as he has done the work, charging regular trade rates instead of contract rates. The hon. Minister should have informed the Committee of the position of matters so that the Committee could take the action they were bound in law to take.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has not been prevented getting information; there was none to give him. If the hon. gentleman, who is a prominent member of the Committee, felt so keenly on this matter, it was his duty to push it to an issue. It was the duty of the Committee to ask from the Clerk all the facts in connection with the matter. The Government have nothing whatever to do, as a Government, with the parliamentary printing. I have told the hon. gentleman there was no correspondence. So far as I was personally concerned I knew nothing about this motion, because my attention was not called to it until the hon. gentleman asked for papers, and then I made immediate enquiry as to whether the Secretary of State had any correspondence connected with the matter. The answer was, "No." The matter is one exclusively with the House; and so it stands to-day. I was very glad to hear the hon. gentleman's remarks—in which I am fully in accord with him—as to the manner in which the printing is done, but I cannot understand what object the hon. gentleman wants to reach by the observations he has made, unless it be to make the suggestion to the Parliamentary Printers that, under their contract, they are at liberty to charge three or four times more than they are receiving. If I understand aright the position in which the matter stands, I do not consider the contract is cancelled. If my recollection serves me aright—and I am open to correction, because I have not looked into it for some time—the other House did not cancel the contract. I know that some difficulty arose. I remember very well that the hon.

member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) took objection to some part of the report or to its adoption, and objection was taken on a point of order by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), whether it was for the purpose of staving it off I do not say, but it had that effect. If the report of the Printing Committee, to which a report of a sub-Committee was attached, had been adopted by this House, then the Government, or the Committee acting under that report, would have been in a position to have taken steps in order to make arrangements for letting the work under another contract, because the suggestion was contained in the report that a certain procedure or a certain scheme should be adopted for advertising for new tenders. That portion of the report never having been adopted by either House, the Government were not in a position to interfere in the matter in any way. I am quite satisfied that if the Government had taken the matter in hand and advertised for tenders, and thus taken the matter out of the hands of the present Parliamentary Printers, who are doing the work at very reasonable rates, one of the first attacks made on the Government would have been that of interfering with a matter which properly belonged to the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not propose to interfere in the discussion as to the past, but it seems to me that after what has occurred, it is necessary that a word should be said as to the present position, and what is due to the House itself. The report of the Joint Committee on Printing was this:

"That in view of the facts which have been elicited during the investigation into the circumstances connected with the awarding of a contract to Messrs Maclean, Roger and Company for the printing of Parliament from the 1st of January, 1880, a report, based on the evidence taken in this case, be made for presentation to both Houses of Parliament, to the effect that said contract was obtained through irregular and improper means, and should therefore be cancelled.

"Appended to this report will be found a report of their Sub-Committee, appointed to report as to the best means of preventing in future similar irregularities or improper practices in the tendering for such contracts, and to consider the best method for the performance of the printing in future."

Now, the difficulty that occurred upon that occasion was this: it was made to appear—the Minister of Customs himself stated the fact—that the main Committee had adopted the report of the sub-Committee and ordered it to be made part of their report, and the report which was intended to be submitted to the House.

Mr. BOWELL. That is as I understood it.

Mr. BLAKE. And we all came to understand that that was the true state of the case. Then the matter stood over. Shortly after, in confirmation of that view, the Joint Committee presented a subsequent report in which they made the report of the sub-Committee part of their report. However, that was too late to move the adoption of that sub-Committee's report, but the House did agree to concur in the report of the Printing Committee. This House and the other branch of the Legislature have concurred in the view that the contract in question was obtained by irregular and improper practices; and if that be so it does not become the House to leave the matter in its present shape. Either we must rescind our resolution, that the contract was obtained through irregular and improper means, and should therefore be cancelled; or we should act on our resolution. If the Committee have to take further action it should do so, whether they be steps of action or suggestion. I am not now imputing any blame to the Government, because I think the hon. Minister of Customs has stated very properly that this House would view with considerable jealousy any action of the Executive which might appear to be trenching on the domain of the House in dealing with this matter. Without determining exactly the dividing line that general statement is one which will meet with the approbation of the House; but it is due to the Committee that the House, having passed such a resolution, should, if it thinks the resolution was improperly passed, rescind it; if it thinks it was properly passed, act upon it. The other branch of the Legislature had the report presented to it, with the report of the sub-Committee, just in the same form in which it was presented to this House. I have not yet found the place in the Minutes to show whether the report was adopted by the Senate or not; but it is enough for my purpose that this House did pass that resolution, and should either act on it or rescind it.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). I may state why I made the motion in respect to the contract for printing. The Printing Committee had no knowledge whether the contract was cancelled or not. We were not in a position to take action until we knew whether the contract was really cancelled or not, or whether the Government had made any fresh arrangement. I made the motion in order that we might possess information on which we could act subsequently. The failure of the Government to bring down an answer to my request was one of the reasons why the Committee had not better cognizance of the matter at an earlier day. When I began to despair of obtaining information from the Government, I moved in the Printing Committee that the Chairman be instructed to ascertain in what relations we stood in regard to the contract for printing. That motion was early in February. There has been no meeting of the Committee since until to-day, and to-day we got the information that the Parliamentary Printer was doing the work the same as before.

Mr. BOWELL. That information was given by myself at the first meeting of the Committee after the opening of the Session.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman must be mistaken.

Mr. BOWELL. I am positive, because the hon. gentleman put the question as to how the printing was being done, and I made the statement as distinctly as it was made to-day. The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) suggested that the Clerk should prepare a synopsis of the whole proceedings, which has been put in my hands at the present moment.

Mr. ROSS. Admitting that the hon. Minister gave the explanation which he mentions, he did not explain the relations in which we stood to the contractor. The instructions of the Committee to the Chairman were to ascertain in what relations we stood in regard to the contractors. It was of very little value to know that the printing contractors, with the consent of the Government, were doing the work on the same terms as before. Whether a bond fide contract existed between the Parliamentary Printers and the Printing Committee we did not know until informed in reference to the matter to-day. The opinion of the leader of the Government, last Session, was in accord with the observations made by the leader of the Opposition and myself, that the adoption of the report of the Printing Committee would have cancelled the contract. Now, the impression left upon the House last Session when the report was adopted was, that the contract with the Parliamentary Printers was cancelled, and the hon. gentleman's attempt now to make it appear that it was not cancelled is something I cannot understand. So far as the Printing Committee is concerned, I think they are entirely without blame in the matter, for, after having made their report, it was the duty of the Government to have informed us that the contract with the printers had been cancelled, and then we would have taken action in the proper way, but without that information such action would have been entirely gratuitous and beyond our jurisdiction.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I cannot quite understand the logic of the hon. gentleman. The Printing Committee recommended in their report that the contract be cancelled, and the House taking the facts into consideration, passed the resolution which has been referred to by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) cancelling the contract. The Committee had no right to consult the Government or ask our consent in the matter. The hon. gentleman says it was the duty of the Government to have informed the Committee of something which was upon the Journals, and which the Committee ought to have known themselves, the same as any other member of the House. In fact it was not within the province of the Government to have acted as the hon. gentleman suggested; but, on the contrary, it was the special right and privilege of the House to manage the matter. It was the duty of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues to consult the Journals of the House, and take action in the matter; but he wishes to throw the entire responsibility upon the Government, who had nothing more to do with it than other members of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me, if he understood me to express an opinion that the contract was cancelled by this passage of the resolutions. It may be so; but for the moment I am not equal to saying that the actual cancellation could be effected by the passage of the resolutions. It certainly was the opinion of both Houses of Parliament that the contract should be cancelled, but owing to the delay in executing that opinion and the subsequent transactions which have taken place, my suggestion would be that the Government had better take advice as to the proper mode of carrying out this conclusion. My own opinion is that the safer mode of carrying out this conclusion would be by Act of Parliament. The hon. gentleman is correct in one sense in saying that there is no more peculiar responsibility attaching to the Government in this matter than upon other members, but we must also remember that this Committee, like others, is in charge of the Government, that the hon. member for West Middlesex is one of a minority on the Committee, and that, therefore, the responsibility does not fall upon him in any peculiar way. On the contrary the Committee is controlled by the Government, it is very properly framed by the Government with a majority of Ministerialists, and its Chairman is usually a Ministerialist. On the other hand, I think the Committee have been somewhat negligent of their duty in not taking action upon the matter at an earlier period.

Mr. BOWELL. While the Ministry have a majority on the Committee, it does not always follow that the Chairman of the Committee is a Ministerial supporter, for at the present time a member of the Opposition presides over that Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. A member of the other House.

Mr. BOWELL. I also remember that at one time when I was a member of that Committee the Chairman was the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), and that was when my right hon. friend (Sir John A. Macdonald) was in power and leader of the Government. The work of the Committee has, on the whole, I think, been conducted with as little regard to political feeling as possible. I did not understand the Minister of Public Works to rest any special blame upon the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), in the matter, but that from the position he took he has no right to assume or lay it down as a principle that this Government should take action in the matter. I am glad to hear the hon. member for West Durham confirm my idea that the resolutions of the House do not involve the cancellation of the contract. But at the same time I think the hon. gentleman is as much to blame as any other member of the House for the failure of any action on the report, because he objected to the reception of the report of the sub-Committee, because it was attached to the report of the Committee, and did not form a part of it. If this report of the sub-Committee had been adopted it would have involved the advertising for new tenders.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has a little misreclected. On the thirteenth report being presented, the fact was elicited that the Committee on Printing had adopted the report of the sub-Committee, and that its deliverance, intended to be made to this House, was to request the House to adopt the report, to make it part of this report and to adopt the whole. My objection was that the Chairman of the Committee on Printing had, through inadvertence, not carried out the directions of that Committee, because, instead of presenting the report which made the report of the sub-Committee part of its own, and which, in consequence of its being approved by them, committed the House to the whole report of the sub-Committee, he had simply presented a report on concurrence which would not involve assent to the propositions of the sub-Committee at all. The House did ultimately concur in the thirteenth report as it was presented, but in consequence of its being inadvertently prepared, and in a manner which did not meet the sanction of the House, the machinery for action was not there. The hon. gentleman says I am to blame for that.

Mr. BOWELL. The Clerk of the Committee who prepared the report had not the slightest idea, in attaching the sub-Committee's report to the main report, that it would not form part of the report; that in fact, having always prepared his reports in that way, he supposed it was part of the report. My hon. friend will remember distinctly that it was he who took objection.

Mr. ROSS. No; it was the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald. Here is the discussion that took place:—

"Mr. STEPHENSON moved that the thirteenth report of the Joint Committee of both Houses be now concurred in.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended that this motion include the adoption of the report of the sub-Committee?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; the report of the sub-Committee is merely appended for the information of the House.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). The report of the sub-Committee is a part of the report of the Committee, by which it was regularly adopted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman does not read the report as I read it.

Mr. ROSS. The right hon. gentleman will find the words appended to the report: 'All of which is respectfully submitted for the consideration of both Houses.'

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You submit it, but you do not approve of it.

Mr. ROSS. I know the report of the sub-Committee was adopted.

Mr. BLAKE. It would appear that the Committee has imperfectly performed its work. They have only given a partial answer as to the point of cancellation."

When Sir John A. Macdonald proposed that the report of the Committee, without the report of the sub-Committee, be adopted, Mr. Blake said:

"In order to give the hon. Chairman of the Committee on Printing an opportunity to call his Committee together, and remedy the existing defect, I rise to a point of order. It is necessary that two days' notice should be given before the adoption of the report.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I object to this; the hon. gentleman has spoken twice or thrice to the motion.

Mr. BLAKE. I have not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question before us was the adoption of the report. It is quite clear that the hon. gentleman is out of order altogether. He cannot, in any way, make the objection in regard to want of notice."

So that the objection to making the sub-Committee's report a part of the report of the Committee came from the leader of the Government, and it was only on account of that objection that the report was not adopted in its entirety, which would have enabled the Committee to proceed as they intended to do and advertise for new tenders. And it is through the action of the Government this year that we were refused such information as would enable us to move early in the Session. The hon. Minister of Public Works seemed to point his remark to me in defending the Government with regard to this matter. He asked, why did the Printing Committee take cognizance of improper practices in connection with the printing contract at all? My answer to that is, we were instructed by the House to do so. A motion was passed early in the Session instructing the Printing Committee to investigate the circumstances under which the contract was let. We made the investigation, and the report which has been referred to. The hon. Minister of Customs is a member of that Committee, and he is charged with as much responsibility on that Committee as any other member. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Stephenson) is Chairman of that Committee, and, therefore, I think the hon. Minister of Public Works might direct some of his censures to those hon. gentlemen.

Mr. MACDONNELL. While on this subject, I wish to call the attention of the Government to the propriety of making a change in our manner of referring to the Statutes. At present our mode is to refer them as passed in such a year of Her Majesty's reign. Now this is very inconvenient. I question very much if one-half the members of this House know the year in which Her Majesty ascended the throne. People very often have to refer to the almanac for that. It would be very much more convenient to refer to a Statute as passed in such a year of our Lord instead of in such a year of Her Majesty's reign.

Mr. STEPHENSON. I wish to say a word or two on the report of the Printing Committee. Early in the Session this contract was brought before that Committee. The hon. Minister of Customs has correctly stated that it was then distinctly understood that the contract stood in the very same condition as it did last year. The recommendation was from the Committee to the House, but before the House rose another report was made, which I find in the Journals as follows:—

"Mr. Stephenson, from the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament, presented the sixteenth Report of the said Committee, which is as follows:—

Resolved, That as the report of the sub-Committee appended to the thirteenth report of this Committee, was omitted from the said thirteenth report, it is hereby Ordered, That the said report of the sub-Committee be submitted to both Houses of Parliament, as a portion of the said thirteenth report of this Committee."

That report was adopted by this House, but as it was objected to by the Hon. Mr. Scott in the Senate, and did not pass there, the contract stood in the very same position as it did the year before. Since the matter has been mooted, I have endeavored to gather all the information I could, as to how it stands in a legal point of view. I have two opinions of leading lawyers, which agree in substance with the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for West Durham, namely, that any action of this House will be null and void, in so far as the contract is concerned, unless it is incorporated in a Bill.

Mr. MILLS. I concur in the suggestion of the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. MacDonnell), that it would be a great convenience to designate a Statute as passed in a year of our Lord, instead of in a year of Her Majesty's reign. There is no doubt whatever, especially in talking of Statutes extending over many reigns, as is the case with English and Canadian laws, it would be much more convenient to adopt the suggestion from the hon. member for Inverness.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is quite natural some reference should be made to this subject at the present time. I have no doubt many members of this House are surprised that we have no report from the Printing Committee, considering what took place at the close of last Session. I am satisfied that the attention which has been called to the subject by the hon. member for Middlesex will have the desired effect. It is absolutely necessary in my judgment that this matter should be dealt with before Parliament prorogues.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). If the Government hold that the contract must be cancelled by a Bill, then it must be for the Minister of Justice to prepare a Bill. The Minister of Justice being acquainted with the action of the House, could have brought his Bill in this Session.

46. Miscellaneous Printing..... $2,000 00

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). This item seems to me to be a little out of place. Under the head of miscellaneous there is another item of $10,000 for printing; and we have already voted $70,000 for printing under the head of Legislation. Might it not be put under one head? For many years past a practice has prevailed of going outside of the regular contractors for the printing of the departmental reports. In the case of confidential printing that might be done for the sake of secrecy, but such a document as the report of the Chief Engineer of Canals, which cost us over $4,000 at confidential rates, might have been done by the regular contractors for $1,500 or $1,600. I think the Public Accounts of last year will show that about $12,000 was expended for printing at confidential rates outside of the regular contractors, which might have been done by the regular contractors for $5,000 or $6,000. With regular contractors who take the work at low rates, expecting to make a profit on a large quantity of work, I think we might save this money by giving them the work, if it is possible to do so. I do not bring this matter up to censure the Government, because I believe the same practice has prevailed for many years under all Governments alike; but their attention having been called to it, I trust they will see whether the work cannot be given to the regular contractors.

Mr. BLAKE. I would not say for the world where, for it would not be proper, but I heard the Queen's Printer solemnly declare that printing, when not done by the public contractors, was by him certified at confidential rates, which are about double the ordinary contract rates; and he stated that the reason he certified it at confidential rates was not because it was confidential printing, but because the object sought by these outside printers would not be accomplished unless these rates were paid, which object was to bring something good to the friends of the Government. As the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) said, this practice has prevailed under all Governments, and therefore this Government is not specially to blame; but, I confess, was innocent enough not to have known it. It amounts, I believe, to something like $12,000; that is, $12,000 has been paid for $6,000 worth of work—work, which under our contract, and according to the law, would have been done for $6,000. What has become of the other $6,000? It has been given away to the friends of the Government. This is a bad practice which has been pursued under all Governments, but this model Government should cause it to cease. We have departmental contractors, and we have a law which says that all the printing shall be given to them, and I think that should be done, unless under circumstances which show that there is some special occasion for going outside; but it ought to be an occasion arising out of the needs of the public service and not out of the needs of the friends of the Government.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I am glad to see the hon. gentleman come out in a new role. It is always time to do better; but if the hon. gentleman refers to the Estimates for previous years, he will find that this vote of $2,000 for miscellaneous printing was taken during the five years that his friends were in power. The hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Ross) during those five years did not discover the discrepancy he now points out. I am informed that this sum is for the purpose of meeting such expenses as the printing of the Estimates. Under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite, the vote for printing, under the head of miscellaneous, was taken also. It is also for the printing of documents of a confidential character—documents for instance, which the Privy Council have to consider, and which are printed in order to expedite the public business. The printers of Parliament may be very good men, but they may not be men in whom the Government have confidence, and therefore it may be necessary to go elsewhere. Of course, I do not speak of the present contractors; I speak generally. Looking at the matter on broad grounds, the Government must be in a position to give confidential printing to printers in whom they have confidence; and the cost paid therefor will vary according to the necessities of the public service, the amount being in some years $3,000 or $4,000, and in other years $8,000 or $10,000.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me if he thought I objected to the vote for miscellaneous printing. I did not object to that vote at all. I believe as a rule that the printers, whatever their political opinions, with whom contracts might be entered into for the performance of this work, would discharge their duty honestly and honorably. I do not believe that the Government need be under any apprehension whatever that those entrusted with confidential printing would violate the confidence reposed in them; but that is a question of minor consequence, because the amount of confidential printing is not much. The hon. Minister of Public Works does not, however, suppose that the report of the Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals is confidential printing. He cannot suppose there is anything confidential in it; yet the work was given out last year at confidential rates to some friends of the Government. That is the abuse of which we are speaking, and with respect to which the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) properly said, and I repeat it, that it was not an abuse of which this Government alone was responsible, but one of which other Governments had also been guilty. The Queen's Printer said that abundance of printing was given out that was not in its nature at all confidential, and for which confidential rates were charged, the idea being that it was necessary for all Governments to give something to their friends, and that object would not be attained if they were allowed contract rates. The report of the Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals, instead of costing $2,000, cost $4,000. The excuse that it is necessary that confidential matter should be given to a printer in the confidence of the Government, is an excuse that will not answer. Such action has been taken in times past by both Governments, and has resulted in a loss to the country that is not desirable. It should be understood that this loss will not recur.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Reference has been made by my colleague to the Estimates, and I think he was under the impression that they were sent to confidential printers. The Estimates for the last two years have been printed by the contractors. I wish, however, to point out a matter in reference to the communication made by the Queen's Printer. That officer stated that the action respecting confidential printing had not been taken for the first time by the present Government; but the hon. gentleman should have gone further when making extracts, and read the portion in which the Queen's Printer stated that a member of the late Government and head of a department had fixed the rate of charge, and he had to some extent inaugurated those prices.

Mr. BLAKE. Inquiry was made as to one particular class of pamphlets and a rate was fixed for printing them, a lower rate than confidential rates. So if there was any charge fixed it was in the nature of a reduction not of an increase on charges which existed, and it applied to only one particular department.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I agree that it is desirable that all abuses should be reformed. I think it is most desirable that an abuse like this should be discovered by the hon. gentleman and brought to the notice of the country; but at the same time if we exert ourselves in the search for abuses that have existed so long, what will the hon. gentleman have to do by-and-bye when he is called on to discharge the functions of Government. The hon. gentleman was hardly fair in his remarks respecting confidential printing. That class of printing is deemed necessary both in England and here, and it cannot be done in the regular way at ordinary rates.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not objecting to confidential printing being paid at high rates. I think it should be.

Mr. McDONALD. The second-class of printing, which is given as a little patronage, is a class which had always been dealt with in the same manner as at present, and perhaps it was worthy the consideration of the House. It was a very considerable item because the present contractors have already made a claim for over $200,000 for losses sustained by them through my hon. friend and his friends, during the five years of the late Administration, having withdrawn work from them which they claimed they were entitled to under their contract. There is no price allowed for confidential printing, therefore it was never intended they should do that kind of work; but outside of that, they claim that contract work was withdrawn from them and given the friends of the late Government, and on that account they claim heavy damages.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it possible that with these shocking results before them, the Government have, year after year, been giving out their work to those gentlemen?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). No; there is nothing that they can properly claim under the headings of their contract for confidential work.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. member is entirely mistaken. If he will look over the Public Accounts he will find sums aggregating to nearly $12,000, which, I apprehend, from the turn this discussion has taken, must have been done at the rate of confidential printing. Under the head of Geological Survey, there is printing the report, $2,836, in the office of a newspaper controlled and managed by a prominent member of this House. Was that done on "confidential" terms? Under the head of Public Works, the same office printed reports of speeches, delivered in this House, to the amount of $475. That was the same office owned and controlled by a prominent member of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name the office.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The Montreal Gazette. Under the head of Dominion lands, $1,565 was paid for printing; so that, in all, that office must have got $7,000 or $8,000 for printing. Under the head of Public Works and Railways, for publishing the Chief Engineer's report, $1,250 was paid to a newspaper published in Ottawa. Under the head of Immigration, a further amount was paid, and the whole swells to something like $12,000—all, I apprehend, under the terms upon which confidential printing is done. Is that so?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I admitted the work was done, and done outside. The point I was making was, that if the work was done outside, we were not liable to be called upon hereafter by the contractor to be reimbursed for losses sustained by him, because the Government took care that such work should not be considered a breach of contract by the public contractor, and any rates paid outside should be audited by the Queen's Printer.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The Queen's Printer always audited the accounts brought down for work done outside, and the audit was made on the basis referred to by the hon. Finance Minister, 40 cents, I think, for composition, and 25 cents per token for press work. That was the rule applied to the confidential work done in the Citizen office, Ottawa. The Chief Engineer's report printed there was paid for at the rate of 50 cents for composition, and 50 cents for press work, 25 per cent. advance for the former, and 100 per cent. for the latter, over and above what was agreed to years ago as a confidential rate. If the confidential rate is adopted, let it be applied to all works alike. There can be no objection to the Government doing certain work at confidential rates. I do not understand that the Report of the Chief Engineer of Canals can be a confidential report. Another peculiarity is that the report appears in the Public Accounts under two different heads. The first division appears as $1,250, on page 216, and the next, $1,250 on page 216, making it appear as two separate items, designed, no doubt, to have it put through in the quietest way possible. The report was paid for at rates higher than confidential rates, and 150 per cent. higher than the contractors' rates. If it is the business of the contractors to print the report of any department, it is their business to print the report of the Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals. I can see no object that the Government could have had in giving that work to the Citizen office, or to any parties outside the contractors other than that pointed out in another place, namely, to give some little assistance to their political friends. It is no answer to the objection, that the practice existed before, or that a petition of right was presented to the Government for $200,000 for work done elsewhere, but which the parliamentary contractors claim should have been done by themselves. That petition may be true or untrue. Certainly the contractors have not pushed it further than its presentation. But, even if that system existed as well as the liability of the Government in the matter, I think it is the duty of the Government, in the interest of the country, to put a stop to the practice. I did not call the attention of the Ministry to it with a view to find fault, but simply in the interest of the country, and to put a stop to an expenditure which is unfair to the contractors and the public, and which, if followed for political reasons, is a very injudicious and dangerous practice indeed.

Mr. BOWELL. It is quite amusing to witness the virtuous indignation of hon. gentlemen in Opposition, when the question of giving printing to political friends comes up, particularly when we remember the amount of money squandered by them in this way during the years they held power. I do not know that there was any hon. member louder and more vehement in his defence of the action of his leader, when in office, on the occasion of similar charges, than the hon. gentleman, even when that leader once declared he should act as he thought proper on all occasions, and give the printing to whom he thought best in the interests of the country. In reference to the report of the Chief Engineer, I think he will remember that the present Minister of Railways explained, during the last sitting of Parliament, that the reason he gave it to others to print was that the Parliamentary Printers were too busy to print it themselves in good time. In reference to the Geological Report, I am not aware that it has ever been printed by the parliamentary contractors. I think it was always printed in Montreal, where the staff of the Geological Museum reside, because it can be more cheaply got out under their supervision than in Ottawa. I am not, however, on the matter of principle, prepared to say there is not a good deal of force in the remarks respecting the propriety of the general work being done by the Parliamentary Printers. An exception might be made in the case of certain work, including confidential printing. The Minister of Agriculture might have gone beyond the contractors, in giving out work that did not come within the purview of the agreement—the Report of the Tenant Farmers and Delegates who visited Canada—but he sent it to MacLean, Roger & Co., at the regular parliamentary rates.

Mr. TROW. How many copies were printed in England?

Mr. BOWELL. Is there any particular objection to that—is that a violation of the parliamentary contract?

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman is taking credit for having that printing done by the parliamentary contractors, when 200,000 copies of the report were printed in England.

An hon. MEMBER. At what price?

Mr. ROSS. Four cents a copy.

Mr. BOWELL. Well, it cost four cents in England and eight cents in Canada. The member for West Durham is particularly indignant that the Government should spend money on their political friends for this printing. But the Parliamentary Printers petitioned for a bill of right to enter an action for $250,000 against the Government, for printing given to other parties. I have a copy of every item in which they prefer claims, and to a very great extent the work legitimately belonged to them under their contract; and yet the member for West Middlesex was a member or supporter of the Government that gave this $250,000 worth of printing to their political friends. If we squandered $6,000 by giving $12,000 worth of printing to our political friends, on the principle for which the hon. gentleman contends, the late Government must have squandered $125,000 in giving $250,000 worth to their friends. With regard to the item of $2,000 under discussion, the Clerk of the Printing Committee informs the Minister of Public Works that he obtained the information from the Auditor General that the item was used in some manner in regard to the preparation of the Estimates to which he referred. I know this printing was done by the Parliamentary Printers.

Mr. MILLS. I think that the printing of the Geological report was done by the public printers in Ottawa only one year. Then so much complaint was made by Mr. Selwyn, of the inaccuracies, and the difficulty of getting the proofs properly read here, that the old practice of printing it in Montreal was resorted to, as in that city the corrections could be made under the immediate supervision of the officers of that branch. But at present, I understand the geological staff are to be transferred from Montreal to Ottawa; and the former reason for printing the report at Montreal, instead of having it printed by the parliamentary contractors, like all other public documents, no longer exists.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They are not removed yet.

Mr. MILLS. I understand they are to be moved immediately.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. This appropriation is one for next year. The reason for doing the printing at Montreal will no longer exist, and therefore ought to be here the same as other public documents and papers. The Minister of Customs says that $250,000 of printing was improperly done by persons other than the contractors under the late Government, but it would puzzle the hon. gentleman to find one-fifth of that sum. I should like to know where he finds it?

An hon. MEMBER. Supposing the petition had made it $1,000,000?

Mr. BOWELL. Each item is given in the document laid before Parliament.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman need not have recourse to that or any other document, but the Public Accounts, which show that the sum is not one-fourth of what he states.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. BOWELL. How much printing was done by the St. John Freeman and the Halifax Citizen? The hon. gentlemen will find it runs to $50,000 or $60,000.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman knows that the printing done by these papers had been done by them ever since Confederation, and it continued to be done by them under the late Administration.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. MILLS. I say yes; and it is a statement capable of absolute demonstration notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's denial. The question at present is not simply what papers in the interests, of the contractors or according to the contract, should be printed by them, but what documents or papers ought, in the interests of the House and the country, to be printed by the public contractors. It is to the interest of the country that as much of the printing as possible—whether you call it parliamentary printing or by any other name—should be done as efficiently and as cheaply as possible. We know that there are certain classes of printing, such as drafts of Government measures, in charge of particular Ministers, or drafts of the estimates of particular departments, which have to be submitted to Council, and should not, therefore, in the public interest run the risk of becoming public in their immature state, that may fairly be regarded as confidential printing. The Government is very properly entrusted with a certain amount of discretion with regard to such printing; but that discretion should not be exercised with regard to any printing which is not in its nature confidential, and it is a discretion which ought not to be abused. With regard to the documents to which my hon. friends, the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) and the member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) have referred, a wholly different rule applies; for to treat the reports of the Department of Agriculture, or the reports of the Engineers of the Department of Public Works or the Department of Railways as confidential printing is to abuse the discretion entrusted the Government. They have no right to give such printing to outside parties and to have it charged at private rates. The hon. Minister of Agriculture says he got 200,000 pamphlets printed in England at four cents each, but whether those pamphlets are of the same size as those which are printed here for eight cents we are not informed. I do not object to his getting the printing done outside, if he can get it done on more advantageous terms; but that principle is certainly one directly contrary to the policy of the Government, that it is better to get work done at home than abroad, even if it costs twice as much; and that we should by every means in our power encourage local industries and guard them from outside competition. I can understand the action of the hon. Minister of Agriculture from the stand point of this side of the House, but it certainly does not agree with the policy promulgated from the Government benches.

Mr. GAULT. As the name of the Montreal Gazette has been mentioned in connection with this printing, I wish to say, distinctly, that the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) who is absent to-night, is not connected with that paper in any way—even as a shareholder.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that he is conducting it regularly—contributing to its columns every day.

Mr. GAULT. He is not a proprietor or even a part proprietor. I say this in justice to the hon. gentleman who is not here to defend himself.

55. New Militia pensions..... $5,063 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. CARON. The pension of $50 granted to T. Robinson is made under the following circumstances: This man was a volunteer, and while upon active service his arm was blown off by the discharge of a gun. He was subsequently taken into one of the departments as messenger, and after being there for sometime he applied for a pension which is provided for by this item. As messenger he was getting $400 a year, but he is no longer a messenger.

Mr. MILLS. Is not this the Robinson who, on the 1st July, 1877, when practising on Cartier Square, in this city, had his hands blown off by loading a cannon—not in active service, but when the militia were practising? I remember a case of that kind, and after the man had been in hospital for a time, Mr. Jones placed him in the Militia Department. Was he put out from his position as messenger and pensioned off with $50 a year, contrary to the provisions of the law?

Mr. CARON. I think it was on Cartier Square the accident occurred. When I stated he was on active service I meant that he was on ordinary drill which he was required to perform as a volunteer, acting under the orders of his superior officer. While performing that drill he was maimed for life, and a short time afterward he was taken into a department as messenger, from which he was subsequently discharged.

Mr. MILLS. Why?

Mr. CARON. I could not say, for it took place previous to my incumbency. I think, as he was serving his country in that manner, obeying the orders of his commanding officer, he was entitled to some consideration from the Government, and he was granted this small pension of $50 a year. He is a man with a large family, and is in straitened circumstances.

Mr. PATERSON (South Brant). On two or three different occasions I have pressed upon the predecessors of the hon. Minister of Militia the claim of a man who, under precisely similar circumstances, lost his arm, and I was told that nothing could be done for him. I now ask the Minister of Militia if this is a precedent, and if I may press the claim of this man within a day or two?

Mr. CARON. I might be prevented from granting this request on account of the action of my predecessors in refusing it, but if nothing interferes I will be very happy to take it into my most earnest consideration.

Mr. BLAKE. If my hon. friend from South Brant will manage that his unfortunate client shall be put into a position the duties of which he can perform, notwithstanding his misfortune, and then being in straitened circumstances he shall be wantonly dismissed from the office, then my hon. friend may make a claim for a pension.

Mr. MILLS. I think the hon. Minister has mistaken the circumstances. I was in the city at the time, and saw Mr. Robinson when he was carried into the House. The volunteers were out voluntarily, not called out, nor were they serving under the law. The case was considered by the Minister of Militia at the time; it was thought not to fall within the provisions of the law under which pensions could be granted, and therefore no pension was given him. As soon as Robinson was able to be out, the Minister appointed him as messenger. Now, he might discharge the duty of a messenger quite as well with one hand as with two, and the salary he would receive would go some way towards the maintenance of himself and family. But, if he has been dismissed from that position by some predecessor of the hon. gentleman and some one put in his place who could discharge the work no better, it looks as if Mr. Robinson was discharged to make a place for some needy political friend of the Government, and that Mr. Robinson is sent as a pauper to this House. It does seem to me a very improper proceeding—I may go further, and say it is rather an inhuman proceeding. It is perfectly obvious that Mr. Robinson, with one hand off and the other maimed, will be in no position to earn his own living, and $50 a year will go a small way towards it; whereas, as a messenger, he might be as useful to the public as any other man with all his limbs sound. I think that unless the hon. gentleman can show that Robinson has been dismissed for sufficient cause by his predecessor, it is not proper that he should come here and ask a pension for a man who was fairly dealt with by his predecessor in office.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman knew all the facts connected with the removal of this man from his position as messenger, and his total inability to perform the duties even of that position, he would not display so much sympathy for him. His whole speech has been predicated on the assumption that this man was improperly dismissed. The hon. member for West Durham went so far as to intimate that he was dismissed for a political purpose. If hon. gentlemen were acquainted with the facts connected with the removal of this man Robinson from the position of messenger, which was done under the administration of the office by Sir Alexander Campbell, they would not raise one word of objection to the course pursued. The point whether he was entitled to his pension may be raised; and although he was not on actual service under the Queen's regulations, still, if he was performing the regular drill, and, from no fault of his own, met with an accident, I think this House will agree that the Minister who recommended that small pension did nothing more than what was right. And if the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) shows that the volunteer officer he mentioned met with an accident in the exercise of his duties as such, I am quite convinced my hon. colleague, the Minister of Militia, has sufficient sense of justice to recommend him to be put on the list. I believe that in all cases where volunteers meet with accidents of that kind, they should receive our consideration. If there is a class of men who deserve the consideration of their country, it is the men who devote themselves to the volunteer service of this country or the regular service of the old country.

Mr. CARON. This Robinson has never been replaced in the position he occupied as messenger, and consequently, in giving him this pension instead of his former salary, the Government have effected a saving.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The Estimates provide for the same number of messengers as there were last year.

Mr. CARON. No; there is one less.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Not apparently.

56. Pensions to veterans of war of 1812 $25,000 00

Mr. RYMAL. How many of the veterans who have been drawing their pensions are still living? Will the $30,000 granted last year give them $20 a piece. In the county of Halton I think the number has dwindled down from about forty to four or five.

Mr. CARON. Of course the number of veterans who were receiving pensions last year has decreased, though I cannot say exactly to what extent. The question whether the pensions which were applied to those who died can be distributed among those who are living, is still under the consideration of the Government.

Mr. SCRIVER. If you keep it much longer under consideration it will not be of much use, for they will all be dead.

Mr. CARON. Yes; if we keep it too long, but we do not mean to do so. It was brought under my notice after I came into the department, and I need not say that of all classes, the veterans who are receiving these pensions are the class I should like to help. I shall be glad if the pensions left by those who have departed can be distributed amongst those who are living, and, if possible, I shall endeavor to have that done.

Mr. MILLS. Have you fixed a maximum sum ?

Mr. CARON. It is impossible to fix a maximum sum. Whatever balance remained in the hands of the Government could be re-distributed amongst those living.

Mr. McLENNAN. I hope my hon. friend, the War Minister, will be able to give a more definite assurance to the House. When the money was first appropriated it was the generous intention of Parliament to give each man $50. But it turned out that the amount was not sufficient for the number alive. Time has, however, cured that difficulty, and I have reason to believe that to-day the number is very much reduced. When it is reflected that men who served in the war of 1812 must be over 80 years of age, this is no great wonder. Many of them are poor men, and I have really been ashamed to meet, in my own constituency, men verging on ninety years of age who fought for their country, receiving such a pittance in acknowledgment of their services. I believe the services of the active militia to-day becomes very pale indeed when compared with those of the veterans who stood in the field of battle, and who, many of them, suffered personal injury in the defence of their country. It is gratifying to know that the Government is prepared to make a larger appropriation than they ever have made for the very small remnant of those men who fought and suffered for their country.

Mr. SCRIVER. I was very glad to hear the remarks that have fallen from the hon. Minister of Militia in reference to this matter. When the amount was first voted to the veterans of 1812, the intention was to give them $50 a year each, but it was ascertained that a much larger number were living than was supposed. As the number decreased, the amount appropriated was lessened. It was a great fault on the part of the late Administration to have reduced the amount on the decease of a number of these veterans. I would be very glad to see the original design carried out now.

Mr. McCUAIG. For the last two years I have called attention of the House to the position of these meritorious men. As age increases they become more infirm. Several of them in my county are bedridden, depending entirely on their children and grand-children for support, and their families, in many cases, are in very poor circumstances. I hope the hon. Minister of Militia, French-Canadian as he is, will not only remember those men who are still living, but will remember the widows of those veterans who have passed away, and see that they get from a grateful country their proportion of the $50 about to be given to the veterans still living and which I am sure will be voted by this Parliament with cheerfulness and pleasure.

Mr. BOWELL. $30,000 was voted last year, and $30,560 expended. The estimate this year is $25,000, based on the decrease in numbers. Should the $25,000 be more than is required to meet a payment of $20 each, the balance might be distributed equally among the survivors. Great difficulty is found in distributing the money, owing to the impossibility almost of obtaining correct information until the time arrives for paying the pensions. I know in my county, when I was written to by the late Government for information, I found great difficulty in ascertaining the exact numbers for months after the appropriation was made.

Mr. IVES. I am glad to observe the altered tone of the hon. Minister and the House with respect to this account. In the first Session of this Parliament I had the honor to bring this matter before the House in a motion for a return of the number of persons receiving pensions under this provision. I strongly urged that the $50 which was originally intended to be given, should be given even though it took a larger amount than had been appropriated by the Government. I was surprised to receive the answer that the Government had never had the intention of giving $50 or anything else. Last Session I urged the amount should be increased. The answer I got from the hon. gentleman acting then as Minister of Militia, almost led me to apologize that those old men had not all died before the introduction of the appropriation. The hon. gentleman said, in substance, that it was hoped it would not be necessary much longer to continue the payments. I hope the hon. Minister of Militia will at least distribute the whole sum voted this year.

Mr. MASSON. I never said I hoped we would not have to pay this amount for a long time. I said we would be very willing to pay it for many years to come. It is the best indication of the salubrity of our climate, that the 1,200 veterans of 1812 should still be living. We must remember a Government is but the reflex of public opinion. I could not give a different opinion than what I thought was then the opinion of the country. It was well known that under the previous Administration it was the settled policy of the country that $20 a year should be paid. If the Government is but the reflex of public opinion, and that opinion wishes the amount to be increased, any measure in that direction will have no better supporter than I.

Mr. McCUAIG. Those old men are entitled to the consideration of Parliament. Ten men in Quebec, who occupied a public position in the service of the country, received $29,666 as pensions, and two others, it is true, occupying a high position, $9,999. I say those veterans have a good claim, and action upon which should be no longer delayed. I hope their pensions will be increased at least $30 a year.

97. Departmental Buildings, Western Block extension. $5,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the object of this item? Does it settle everything?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The object is to complete the Western Block, including the heating apparatus. We have settled with the contractor, but there is a small balance remaining. The item will cover everything.

98. Addition to Conservatory in Public Grounds. $1,350 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection to this trifling item per se, but it is precisely one of those small items that should be charged to income and not to capital account. Items charged to income will naturally be more carefully looked after.

Mr. ANGLIN. I question the propriety of this item seriously. It is entirely for the benefit or amusement of the people of Ottawa. Was the conservatory not large enough last year?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is too small. There is only one garden to look after, and this conservatory will be separated from the other but four feet, the same heating apparatus serving both.

99. Conversion of Government work-shops into Supreme Court..... $12,500 00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. Minister of Public Works explain this item?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The item is not for the benefit of the Supreme Court, but really for the Parliamentary Library and the greater convenience of members. We have not space enough in the buildings, or enough rooms for the meetings of the members of the different Provinces, who should have rooms for themselves. Besides, the Library is too small, and many books are spoiling in the garrets and cellars. We must elsewhere find room for them. By removing the Supreme Court to the Government Workshops, ample accommodation will be given the Library, and we shall have several additional rooms for the general purposes of the House. Those workshops, when altered, will accommodate the officers of the Court on the ground floor, and the Hall will serve for the Court. There will be two rooms for a picture gallery, in which the paintings presented to the people can be hung.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I have no objection to the picture gallery, but I would like to know if the changes in regard to the Supreme Court, to meet the wishes of the Province of Quebec, will soon be made?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The First Minister will, no doubt, answer that question at another time, and I am sure his answer will satisfy my hon. friend and the House.

Mr. BLAKE. No doubt we are suffering great inconvenience for want of accommodation, and this change, if it be accomplished with reasonable convenience to the public, will be a very great advantage. I hope that the extra accommodation we shall thus obtain from the various departments now used for the Judges and officers of the Supreme Court, will not be absorbed by some permanent or House officials, but be used for the accommodation of the members of the House. Really the present accommodation is now very slight, so that it is very difficult to find any place where we can do business, see people on business, or consult at all. And some of these rooms in the old library were not at all inconvenient for retiring rooms. Has the hon. gentleman any plan or idea consequent upon the redistribution of the library consequent on the change.

Mr. LANGEVIN. No. But I may say that while we are not prepared to say that such and such a room will be used for a certain purpose, we will see that rooms are provided in which members from the different Provinces or otherwise may meet and discuss matters which may be private to themselves.

Mr. BLAKE. I should be sorry to see the freedom of access between this end and the Senate, which was the original idea with regard to the present court room, interfered with any more than is necessary. I should like to ask what is the general plan of accommodation for the Courts. Is there to be a Court room on both storeys running up from the workshops?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The Chief Architect finds that very little alteration will be necessary in order to give a large, roomy and well-ventilated court room quite as good as the one now used. The Judges' room may be situated on the end opposite Wellington street, while the officers of the clerk and other officers of the Court will be below. There will also be a room for a small library and one for the barristers practising before the Court. I would not have believed that we could have got a room as high as the present Court room without going into the second storey, but I believe we can.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works if he can provide any more suitable accommodation than that which is now at the disposal of the official reporters of the debates. They are very much disturbed in transcribing their notes, by the sounds which proceed from the post office and the conversations which take place in the lobbies. If the Supreme Court is to occupy other quarters, perhaps the official reporters might be put into the press room and the press into another room. I am certain that the hon. Minister, who has shown himself so anxious to accommodate members of the House and others, will adopt some means by which these officers, who are engaged upon very important and delicate duties, will be provided with more suitable accommodation.

102. Public Works and Buildings (Nova Scotia) $13,000 00

Mr. LANGEVIN. Sydney Quarantine Hospital, $4,000 is an additional vote. The $4,000 are required for the hospital; $2,000 would not have been sufficient.

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton). This vote for the quarantine hospital at Sydney, if I recollect aright, was first put in the Estimates of 1873 and afterwards in 1874, and was not expended last year. I would like to know whether it is the intention of the Government to proceed with the work this year.

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is.

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. LANGEVIN. In 1875 there was an appropriation of $12,000 made for Pictou Marine Hospital, and it appears in the Estimates for that year, but it was not expended. It would cost $12,000, the same amount as stated in 1875.

103. Charlottetown Marine Hospital $4,600 00

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is expected that will cover the whole. The work is not yet commenced. I cannot tell how many patients it will accommodate.

104. Public Works and Buildings (New Brunswick) $115,500 00

Mr. McCUAIG. Last year I called the attention of the Government to the propriety of capitalizing the rents they pay in the different towns of the Dominion for the various public offices. In the town where I live we pay $400 for the rental of a custom house, excise office and post office. That sum capitalized would give $6,000 or $7,000. I think if one building were built for all these offices, it would cost the Government no more, in the shape of interest, than they pay now as a rental.

In answer to Sir ALBERT J. SMITH,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The item of $77,000 for Dorchester Penitentiary, is for a new wing to the building and to pay some accounts that we owe. The contract was entered into on the 23rd of November last for the erection of a new wing and a boiler house. The addition will give increased accommodation for 100 persons, making in all 220. It is contemplated to erect at sometime or another a wing opposite this one, so as to make the whole building in the form of a cross.

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The item of $9,200, for Post office and Custom house at Woodstock, will be the whole cost, including $4,700 paid for the lot of land. I have not the dimensions of the lot here, but it is a double lot, and is situated in the centre of the business portion of the town. There is no other lot available that is so convenient.

In answer to Sir ALBERT J. SMITH,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The present Marine Hospital building at St. John is very old and not worth repairing. The ground on which it stands is the property of the Government, and we expect that this amount will construct the whole building.

Mr. ANGLIN. I hope if the Government are going to erect an hospital in St. John, they will give us a building that will cost more than $10,000. Twice $10,000 would be more appropriate for a city with such an amount of trade and shipping.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Of course the style of the building must always depend on the place, and I have no doubt the building to be erected in St. John will be in keeping with other public buildings in that city.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the population of Su-sex, for which a preliminary vote of $5,000 is taken for a Post office, Custom house and Inland Revenue office?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is in King's county, and in 1871 it had a population of 5,606. The building will probably cost $10,000 or $11,000.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). At the very utmost, there cannot be over 1,000 people within a radius of a mile.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I do not oppose this vote, though I think the Finance Minister should not let this Session pass without making provision for public buildings in the town of Moncton, the population of which is five times that of Sussex.

Mr. McCUAIG. I am astonished that there is not $10,000 appropriated for a Custom house and Post office in the town where I reside, and which must have a larger population than Sussex.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. Minister of Public Works speaks of the parish of Sussex when he speaks of its population. Sussex, for which this vote is taken, is a village near the railway station, where there are certainly not more than 1,000 people. Some of us would like to see a principle established so that all towns and villages of the same size should be treated alike. In the shire town of my own county we have need for similar buildings. Some money should be spent in the Maritime Provinces for public buildings. The most of it is evidently now going west.

Mr. MILLS. There are no buildings of that kind in either St. Thomas or Chatham, each possessing a population of 10,000. The Government should act on some uniform principle. The late Administration proposed to build custom houses and post offices in places having a certain population, beginning with those most populous, while the present Government was reversing the order and commencing with places with a small population.

105. Public Works and Buildings (Quebec).$128,000 00

Mr. GAULT. In regard to the item of $11,000 for an addition to the Montreal Inland Revenue office, I may say that that building is one of the oldest in the city. $11,000 will not be sufficient to put it in order. That sum should be expended on the present Custom house, and the Inland Revenue Department might be transferred there, so that the public offices would be in the same building.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman will be taken into consideration, but while I was visiting the Custom house this year I found that if anything had to be done in that way, it would be found, in a very few years, that another Custom house would have to be built elsewhere. The other building is further east than the Custom house, and is a detached building, and I am given to understand that if the amount asked for is expended, the Inland Revenue Department will be accommodated for many years to come.

Mr. GAULT. The property belongs to the city of Montreal; it does not belong to the Government, except by long tenure.

Mr. LANGEVIN. That is not so sure.

Mr. GAULT. We are anxious to obtain the building for a Sailor's Home, and are willing to pay a fair price for it.

106. Public Works and Buildings (Ontario). $84,280 00

Mr. BLAKE. What is Rideau Hall Conservatory, $2,500, for? I would like to know when we are going to be done with the expenditure on Rideau Hall? The more we spend, the more we have to spend.

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is very difficult to answer this question; but I think with the expenditure of this item, the building will be tolerably well completed. It is a very extensive and no doubt a very expensive property; but the expenditure the current year is but half that of last year.

In answer to Mr. ANGLIN,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The $8,000 for Cornwall Post office, is for a site. The cost of the building will depend very much on the character of the architecture of the town. I do not think that architecture very remarkable, or that the cost of the building will be very large.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What will the Stratford Post office building cost?

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH.

Mr. LANGEVIN. About the same as the Belleville.

107. Public Works and Buildings (Manitoba).$56,200 00

Mr. BLAKE. What is the principle upon which such votes as the Manitoba Penitentiary, $5,500, are taken? Is it the custom to take all the vote for the repairs of those Public Buildings under another head?

Mr. LANGEVIN. When the amounts are large, special votes are asked for.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest that, in future, it would be better, when the hon. gentleman has taken a vote for a public building, and for a new erection, and part of which is for the restoration or maintenance of a building, that the vote should be split up. In another year, whatever is in the nature of repairs or renewals of any old work should be so stated, and whatever is in the nature of a new work should be mentioned in addition; then we should have our capital in buildings more clearly specified.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I think the suggestion is a good one. The items for new buildings should be so stated, those for renewals and repairs also set down in a way to distinguish them from the others.

Mr. ANGLIN. Has the Minister any idea of the first cost of the Parliament Buildings, Winnipeg?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The whole cost of the buildings will be $80,000. I might say with regard to the Lieutenant-Governor's residence that it will cost $30,000, making $110,000 in all.

Mr. ANGLIN. Are they built with a view to the extension of the Province?

Mr. LANGEVIN. Yes; there is the main portion of the building and the two wings. We are building the main portion in one wing, and the other wing will be built when the requirements of the Province demand it.

Mr. ANGLIN. How many members will the Chamber accommodate?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I cannot say. It is being made to accommodate a good many more members than there are in ours. The work was undertaken after consultation with Messrs. Norquay and Girard, members of the Local Government.

109. Public works and buildings (British Columbia). $30,400

Mr. ANGLIN. What is the state of the British Columbia Penitentiary? I have heard a good many complaints with regard to it. Some of the hon. members from British Columbia gave us a deplorable account of the state of that building.

Mr. BUNSTER. I thank the hon. Minister of Public Works for this small sum for the erection of public buildings in Nanaimo. The inhabitants of that city being very desirous of having these buildings, offered to donate the land if the Government would erect the buildings, and that was done.

111. Repairs, furniture, heating, etc. $241,363 40

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The item $4,000 for grounds, is for keeping the ground in order, the gardener's salary, watchmen, workmen and horse hire.

In answer to Mr. GAULT,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The item of $23,000 for gas, is a large sum, but when it is remembered that we have been here since the 9th of December, hon. gentlemen will understand why it is so large.

Mr. ANGLIN. Why is the water account increased?

An hon. MEMBER. Because the bar has been closed.

Mr. LANGEVIN. When we prepared this item we did not take the closing of the bar into consideration, but I am afraid we shall have to increase it on that account. The city of Ottawa, which owns the water-works, has represented to the Government that since the contract for supplying the Public Buildings was made, the extension of the Western Block has been made, the conservatory erected and hydrants established to water the grounds in summer. Besides, we have the museum, the drill shed and other buildings which require to be watered. For these reasons the city asks for an increase in the appropriation for water. An Order in Council was passed allowing $12,000, provided Parliament assented. The agreement with the city is that this sum shall be in full compensation for supplying water to all public buildings now erected or that may be erected in future; but said increase shall only be paid from such time as a filter properly constructed, shall be attached to the suction pipe supplied from the city water-works, said supply to be taken from a point further out in the river, and the remuneration to date from the 1st of July next, provided always the arrangement is sanctioned by Parliament.

Resolutions ordered to be reported; and (at 12:10 o'clock, a m.,) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 4th March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CHIEF JUSTICE WOOD.

Mr. ROYAL. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to present a petition against the Hon. E. B. Wood, Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, of Manitoba, complaining of himself as such, and signed, amongst others, by A. J. Clarke, Q. C., formerly Attorney General of the Province, and F. T. Bradley, J. P., and Collector of Customs at the Port of Emerson, in the Province of Manitoba.

NOTICES FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. DREW moved that the notice required by Rule 60 to be given by Committees, prior to the consideration of Private Bills, be reduced to twenty-four hours for the remainder of the Session, as recommended by the Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. BLAKE asked if it was customary to cut down the notice at so early a stage of the Session.

Mr. DREW said that if the motion were not adopted two or three Bills might be thrown over.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were severally introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 79) to incorporate the Northern and North-Western and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Co.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

Bill (No. 80) to incorporate the Acadia Steamship Co., Limited.—(Mr. Longley.)

THE ANDREW MERCER ONTARIO REFORMATORY.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou) introduced a Bill (No. 81) with reference to the Andrew Mercer Ontario Reformatory for Females, and the Central Prison for the Province of Ontario.

Mr. MILLS. What is the object of the Bill?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). It is to amend the Bill I introduced last year, amending some clauses in the Act respecting the management of this institution.

Bill read the first time.

INSPECTION OF STEAMBOATS.

Mr. POPE (Queen's) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution:—

That it is expedient further to amend the Act relating to the inspection of steamboats, and to make better provision for the prevention of accidents by the explosion of their boilers from faulty workmanship or material.

It is necessary that the plates which are used in the manufacture of boilers should be properly tested and provision will be made for that purpose. It is also provided that the boiler maker instead of the maker of the plates shall make the required declaration.

Resolution considered in Committee, reported and read the second time.

Mr. POPE introduced a Bill (No. 82) further to amend the Acts relating to the inspection of Steamboats.

Bill read the first time.

SAVINGS BANKS IN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC.

The Resolution adopted in Committee of the Whole, yesterday, respecting certain Savings Banks in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, was reported, read a second time, and agreed to.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced a Bill (No. 83) further to amend the Act respecting certain Savings Banks in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and to continue for a limited time the Charters of certain Banks, to which the said Act applies.

Bill read the first time.

PATENT ACT.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 45) still further to amend "The Patent Act of 1872."—(Mr. Pope, Compton.)

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. POPE (Compton). I propose to amend the first clause by inserting the words "not more than two years have elapsed since the expiration" in the first and second lines. In the fifth line I propose to substitute the words "after such restoration" for "of such restoration."

Mr. BLAKE. I venture to suggest that it would be important for us to have the names of the persons affected by the operation of the law, if they are not to be scheduled. Does the return brought down in the Senate cover all the names?

Mr. POPE. It was meant to cover all cases in which applications had been made. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) told me that he had a case of this kind, and of course all such cases which happened within the year just now expired would come in under this Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. Not all the cases, because the hon. gentleman proposes now to make it two years instead of one.

Mr. POPE. But the time within which the patent could be renewed would be the same. Of course, that return covered all, and a good deal more than all.

Mr. BLAKE. I have received communications from two persons, since the former discussion, who stated cases, one of which certainly does not come within this Bill, and which yet seem to me to be more deserving of consideration than some of the cases for which the Bill provides. One case was that of a man who represented in a letter to me that he had two patents, one of which expired within two days of the time at which the other expired. They were both purchased by him. He thought one of them was worthless and that the other was valuable, and he intended to renew the valuable one and to let the other go. But he was mistaken as to the date at which it expired, reversing the dates in his mind, and consequently, thinking that the valuable one expired last, he allowed it to pass the period of delay fixed by the hon. gentleman before he found out his error. Another person wrote in a similar strain. Now the hon. gentleman proposes to proceed upon the ground of a suggested ambiguity in the law.

Mr. POPE. This is the working of a new law, and these people have allowed their patents in many cases to expire through carelessness. Some hon. gentlemen say: "Let them come back to Parliament and renew it." But that is not an easy thing to do, it costs a lot of money. My own impression is that we should try to relieve those people who had by some mistake allowed their patents to expire.

Mr. BLAKE. But the difficulty is that of drawing the exact line. I have stated a case which, owing to a mistake in the man's mind when he sent in his application, would not be covered by the hon. gentleman's Bill. I am merely pointing out the difficulties of interfering in this way by legislation at all. I do not see how the hon. gentleman can very well give a long delay, and at the same time I do not see why the line may not satisfactorily be drawn at ten days in favor of those who may have unknowingly left the thing undone. As far as the precedent is concerned I should think it more satisfactory if the hon. gentleman had proposed a measure to give relief in some eight or ten cases which he brings before us, and in which he is satisfied there is a case for relief.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). The case I mentioned when the Bill was last before the House would hardly be covered by this Act. The preamble says that:

"Whereas in certain cases there has been a misapprehension as to the true intent and meaning of so much of section 17 of the Patent Act of 1872, as specifies the period at which the extension of a patent may be obtained; whereas it is expedient to provide a remedy for certain cases in which, through such misapprehension, the time for obtaining such extension has inadvertently been allowed to expire, etc."

The case I have mentioned is that of a gentleman who held a patent thinking that it did not expire for ten years, whereas it was five instead of ten; and a couple of days after the five years had expired he found it was only a five years' patent instead of a ten years' patent. Upon my suggestion he put in his claim. Now, it appears to me that the words of the preamble hardly cover a case of that kind; the preamble should go a little further if it is intended to meet a case of that kind. If a bonâ fide case, such as I mention, is made out, of course, the hon. Minister has power to extend the time. Therefore, I would suggest that after the word "misapprehension" in the preamble, you should add "or from other causes."

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Is it intended that this Act shall apply only to past cases, as the recital seems to apply?

Mr. POPE. It is only intended to apply to past cases, and only to be in operation till the 31st of October next.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to the Bill, as it specifies in the schedule the patents of which renewals are asked; and if patents have been allowed inadvertently to lapse, we can renew them; but I do not think a Bill should be passed allowing for the renewal of patents every year or so, because it might open the door to great disturbance of the patent regulations.

Mr. BLAKE. The great difficulty is that which the hon. gentleman has suggested. Once you open the door to the possibility of a Bill every Session, you do away with the necessity of great vigilance on the part of the patentees to obtain their renewals at the expiration of their terms.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. To show the necessity of action, I may mention that one of those cases is rendered necessary because the letter of a patentee applying for a renewal of his patent reached Ottawa a few hours late, owing to the delay of a train. That is a case which came within my own knowledge, and it shows the necessity of this Bill.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. This Bill would not be applicable to such a case.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There is a very good reason for renewing that patent. In special cases, if application were made to the House for renewals, I think the House would not require very minute evidence to be given as to the reasons for granting them. But there is great force in the objection of the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Jones) that this Bill might open the door to negligence on the part of patentees.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course we must remember that the law allows a patentee to get his patent for fifteen years, or if he chooses for five or ten years, at a cheaper rate. That is a reasonable indulgence to him. I should be very glad to relieve these poor people, but while we have a law to relieve them, we should avoid any course of action which may render necessary the interference of Parliament to re-open the question; while in cases arising from accident such as that mentioned by the hon. the Finance Minister, or from ambiguity in the Act, we should of course be prepared to give relief, yet there is danger that the knowledge that we shall give that relief will make such cases occur. It does not say at the moment, or the day, or the hour of expiration.

Mr. BLAKE. It does not mean after the expiration.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have read it to mean before or after the expiration. By taking out the word "at" you will remove all possibility of doubt. The case mentioned by the hon. Minister of Finance is a very hard case, but no law, however general, can prevent Parliament from dealing specially with a particular real grievance.

Mr. MILLS. This is private legislation introduced in the form of a general Act. If the names of the various parties were given, it would be practically a private Act. Under the form of a general Act, the hon. gentleman proposes to take power to issue patents to those who, he says, have misinterpreted the law. My impression is that the law has never been misinterpreted. If parties have failed to renew their patents, it was through negligence or causes similar to those mentioned by the hon. Minister of Finance, and not through misinterpretation of the law. The use of the word "at" cannot convey any other idea than the time of expiration. It is impossible any such ambiguity as the hon. member suggests can exist. The first section contains the words: "the Commissioner of Patents within ten days of such expiration." That means before the expiration, and this Bill will, therefore, not enable anyone to obtain a patent who cannot obtain it now. If the hon. gentleman proposes to deal with any particular case, he should let the House know precisely the ground on which this renewal is based. If the hon. gentleman will bring down a statement convincing the House there is a single case falling within the terms of the preamble of the Bill, it will be time enough when he brings down such statement to proceed with the Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No one has yet pretended that any cases that have arisen under the Act, have arisen because of a misunderstanding of the law on the part of a patentee. They have all arisen from delay on the part of the patentee. The case referred to by the hon. the Finance Minister is one in which the patentee perfectly understood the law, but delayed sending in his application in time. It was received in the department too late, although it was in the post office on the day required. In that case the department might have considered the application which was lying in the post office on the day named, as having been to all intents and purposes in the hands of the department. I have not heard of a single instance in which the difficulty arose from ambiguity in the law. The privileges granted under the Act to individuals are so great, that the individual ought to appreciate it sufficiently to take the usual means provided by law to protect himself in its continuance. If this Bill becomes law, it will be a precedent which I do not see how Parliament can avoid following up hereafter when similar cases arise. If we had a specific number of cases, which it was shown arose out of any ambiguity in the law, that would be a good reason for our taking action in the matter. All interests are not protected in this Bill. If, on the lapse of a patent, a person, not the patentee, has made all necessary arrangements for the manufacture of the article, the Bill provides that he shall, on renewal of the patent being granted, be allowed to dispose of the articles he has made, but does not allow him to go on manufacturing or provide compensation for the liability he has incurred in preparing to manufacture them, though he did so in good faith under the law. A clause should be added that in such cases the patent should not be renewed, or if renewed, the right of the person who took advantage of the lapse of the patent should be secured. I prefer the Bill should not be passed, or if passed should have a schedule added to it, as to particular cases.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. The difficulties pointed out by the hon. member for Cardwell bring home to us very clearly the fact that this Bill is based on a wrong principle. It is a principle of the old patent system, that when an invention has once been given to the public, and when the public are in possession of the knowledge of the process, it cannot be made the subject of exclusive use by the individual. The public are endowed with it. If that should happen to be the case with reference to any of the patents which will be covered by this Bill, we are taking away from the public by Act of Parliament that which is theirs and handing it over to individuals. I do not think that is a very safe or a very wise proceeding. It is certainly contrary to the principles of legislation in a free country like this. From my own point of view, I dislike legislation of this kind. It may be that there are cases of hardship, as has been pointed out by some hon. members, but there is no hardship in the law itself. The hardship results from the ignorance or negligence of individuals who have this right. By their own acts they have lost the advantage, and they now apply to Parliament to make amends for their abandonment of their privileges or rights. The Bill will constitute a very questionable precedent. Of course, future Parliaments are not bound to follow up wrongful or injudicious Acts of the present Parliament; but the parties in similar cases will have a very strong argument, at all events, with respect to hon. members who are now in the House and parties to this proceeding, that Parliament should deal as generously with persons who, in the future happen, by any misfortune—because perhaps it was a misfortune that they were indifferent to their own interests—were indifferent to their position. I think if the Minister of Agriculture, from his departmental knowledge, is aware of cases of hardship to individuals through the strict interpretation of the law, and that in respect to such patents the public have not acquired any valuable interest in them—if they are in suspense as it were—the names of the parties should be entered in a schedule attached to the Bill. I thought, in the first instance, that was the form of the Bill; I remember seeing the original draft, and it seemed that did obviate some of the evil consequences which would flow from such a precedent. But the Bill has been changed in that particular. I am not aware of the reason for the change. I have no knowledge of the patents to be dealt with by the Bill, or of the persons concerned in them; but no provision is made for the purpose of protecting those persons who have invested money in the manufacture of particular articles that are patented. I expected to see petitions presented and correspondence in the hands of members with respect to this Bill; but as hon. members do not agree with regard to its terms, that might explain the absence of petitions.

Mr. POPE. I think clause three covers the point raised by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Macdougall). The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) said I should have renewed the patents. I could not have done so, for such an act would have been a direct violation of the law. In one case my predecessor did renew a patent which had expired, and the document was not worth the paper on which it was written. It is my duty as Commissioner of Patents to investigate the different cases. I am not wedded to the Bill, and if the House thinks a schedule of cases should be brought down, I am in the hands of the House, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. Minister say whether he has himself investigated all the cases of those persons who have applied for a renewal of patents, and whose names are mentioned in a statement submitted to the Senate?

Mr. POPE. I have not investigated them; but they have all applied.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. Minister investigated as to whether in any, and if so, in how many cases, and in which, the parties have alleged that their applications were necessary, because they had mistaken the law?

Mr. POPE. I could not say in which cases that had occurred; but in some cases they had not understood some of the clauses of the Act as I understand them.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I cannot see that the difficulty is so great as some hon. members have made it appear. If a wrong was made out to the House, the House would be willing to grant relief. Now the Minister of Agriculture asks the House to grant relief in a form which as fully protects the public interest and the manufacturers interests, as if he came with a special application for relief in a particular instance. He says, practically, I desire the House to enable me, in the terms in which I propose, to investigate within certain limits as to the application of certain specified persons, the names of whom we laid on the Table, as to whether they are entitled to the relief sought to be given by this Act, and whether, if such relief be given, or be desirable, it should be afforded without injury to the public interest. The only question the House has to decide—admitting the principle that it will be willing when special cases are made out, cases of special injury or misapprehension, to grant relief, is—is it safe or proper to transfer the discretion, which the House itself might exercise, to the Minister of Agriculture as Commissioner of Patents? It appears to me that, within that department lies more especially the investigation of such an application. My hon. friend is responsible to the House and country for the proper exercise of that ample discretion, and he reserves, by the words of the Act, in the fullest sense, the power to subserve the public interest in the direction stated so forcibly by the member for Cardwell (Mr. White), as to the protection of those who may, upon the assumption that the patent has expired, have invested their money in the manufacture of the articles concerned; this question and the question of the renewal of the patent will come under the discretion of, and be subject to, the decision of the Minister of Agriculture. The Commissioner may, in his discretion, after such hearing of the conflicting interests, if any, as he may deem expedient, revive the patent. Therefore it would be the bounden duty of the Commissioner—and the mode of discharging the duty might be prescribed by the House if it thought necessary—to determine after calling before him every interest affected, as to the rights of the parties. But it is a very important power to give to my hon. friend, but not more important nor requiring a higher exercise of discretion than in other respects departmental officers are obliged to exercise every day.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I suppose by the use of the ordinary means by which you notify the general public to look after their interests. I take it for granted that the manufacturers or others likely to be affected by the Bill are men who read the papers and know what is going on; and a notice in the papers or the Gazette, or in any form prescribed, would surely amply notify all those interests in matters likely to be affected. I believe the Bill is a wise one, and that provided the House feels that the discretion proposed to be given the Minister is not too large, the manner in which he proposes to remedy any individual grievance, hardship or wrong, appears less injurious to the public interest and less onerous to individuals than the individual application to this House. The member for West Durham says that this would form a precedent that would be followed. That does not follow. This debate on the Bill, with the strong opinion expressed by hon. members in favor of a general measure of relief, will itself be a notice to persons interested in similar patents, that no Minister can again propose relief, or no private individual come to ask such relief, unless he can urge the strongest possible grounds and reasons for it. So it appears no harm can be done by allowing the Bill to pass.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The difference between the hon. Ministers and myself is this: I do not admit there is either wrong, injury, or grievance in this matter. So we start from different standpoints. The only difficulty is, that certain persons who had privileges under the law have neglected to take the steps which would have enabled them to retain those privileges. If there is any special case where any ambiguity of the law has led to those difficulties, that is a different matter, and in such a case special relief might be granted by naming the case, so that every one would have notice of it. But I have perfect confidence in the ability of the Minister of Agriculture to deal with the matter, if Parliament choose to invest him with that power. But I think that where an Act of Parliament is passed, which specified that certain persons could obtain a renewal of their patents under certain conditions, and which sets forth the rights of other individuals, by a specific form of words, it is really law, and the Minister is practically bound to carry it out. For instance, the hon. Minister of Agriculture says that he thinks the clause that protects the interest of persons who may have acquired an interest in the matter, through the lapse of the patent, gives sufficient protection. I do not think at present they are protected, as to the specific articles they may have manufactured, to the extent of allowing them to go on and manufacture, and continue to use their investments and other means for that purpose. In this respect I think the law is not wise. I have no hesitation in expressing my decided opposition to any legislation which looks to the furtherance of particular and private interests as distinguished from the public interest. In this case certain persons have got patents, and they have chosen to neglect to send in application for their renewal. It is their own fault, and I do not think they are entitled to any consideration on the part of this House.

Mr. BLAKE. It might be a pity to complicate the discussion of the first clause with the phraseology of the third clause, to which the member for Cardwell has alluded. Of course, if the Bill is to pass it would be very easy to mould the third clause so as to protect a person who had commenced the manufacture of a specific article. That is an objection of detail which can be easily met. The hon. Minister thinks that it is met by an existing clause. I think it is very doubtful, but it can be made clear. I want to call the attention of the Committee, and of the leader of the House, to the fact, that the statement of fact that the hon. Minister has made, has removed the foundation from the larger part of this Bill. The hon. First Minister rightly said that the Bill was based on the proposition that there was an ambiguity in the law which had caused misapprehension, and consequently loss to certain parties. I do not think, as to the first extension, that there is any ground for saying that there is any ambiguity, but even if there were, still if it has not operated ambiguously to anybody, and has occasioned no loss, there would be no ground for relief on that score. The hon. Minister has told us he has looked at those cases, and that there is no case of an applicant for relief in respect to the first extension, on the ground that he has been misled by any ambiguity of the law.

Mr. POPE. I said that I had not found such cases, but that three or four gentleman had spoken to me, who had misunderstood the Act.

Mr. BLAKE. That was as to second extensions.

Mr. POPE. Yes; I was speaking of second extensions.

Mr. BLAKE. The House should not be asked to legislate simply because it is possible that some persons may have been misled. The hon. gentleman was not prepared to show that a single individual, even alleges that he has been misled with regard to first extensions. The hon. Minister now says with regard to second and third extensions that three or four persons told him that they were misled. Well, if ambiguity exists with regard to second and third extensions let us deal with it directly, but let us not attempt to get at second and third extensions by dealing with first extensions.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I understand the hon. Minister to say that certain persons have told him that they misunderstood the law, and that that is the reason he now seeks to remove the ambiguity. That there is an ambiguity is quite clear from the fact that hon. members place so many different constructions upon the language of the Act.

Mr. JONES. The Bill, as now presented, is very different from the one which was sent to the Senate. The latter proposed to deal with a certain number of cases which were scheduled, while this measure provides that the Minister may adjudicate upon such cases as may be referred to him for the next two years. It appears, from the discussion, that some hon. members of this House cannot understand the Bill, so it is not to be expected that laymen outside will understand its meaning. I think if the Government wished to change the Patent Act they should have brought in a new measure altogether, instead of patching up the old one.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman asks us to legislate for particular parties, after having said himself that there are no particular cases unprovided for. If I understand him right, he proposes to permit anybody to come before him, and no matter how negligent he may have been, if he says, I misunderstood the law, the Minister will accept that statement as conclusive evidence, and act accordingly. I think these cases should be investigated and reported upon by the Minister, so that the House might judge of their merits. If this Bill is carried it will not meet the cases which have been mentioned. Unless these parties were to come before the Minister, and to make a false statement, nothing will be done, and we ought not to be called upon to proceed under these circumstances.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend who has just spoken says that the promoter of this Bill had not taken any trouble to ascertain the particular cases. On the contrary, when that Bill was introduced into the Senate it contained a schedule of all the cases. But the Senate chose to strike that out, and as I think that that schedule ought to be attached, I would move, for that purpose, that the Committee rise and report progress.

Progress ordered to be reported.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE DISPUTED TERRITORY.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 64) respecting the administration of criminal justice in the territory in dispute between the Governments of the Province of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. Before this motion is put, I desire to say a few words with reference to this measure. It is, of course, one for continuing a measure already on the Statute-book, and, in so far as that specific object is concerned, I do not offer any objection. But I think it well to point out that it does not go far enough—so far as, under the circumstances, legislation is necessary. The state of things in what is called the disputed territory is at present very unsatisfactory. It is extremely prejudicial to the prospect of that territory, and whether it shall be adjudged to belong, in the end, to Ontario or to the Dominion, we have but one common interest to promote its settlement and advance its future. At the present time there is a great uncertainty as to the jurisdiction of magistrates or justices of the peace within the disputed territory. The Act which is now to be renewed does not declare, as I think it well might declare, so far as this Parliament is concerned—and in view of the pretension of the Dominion of Canada, that this territory is within its legislative bounds—what law should govern in the case of civil rights. Of course, if the territory is, as it is believed by many to be, within Ontario, that declaration would have no effect, but it would be an easy and reasonable mode of dealing with the case as one in suspense; and inasmuch as we know that this territory is being settled by people from that Province, and that the administration of justice is attempted to be exercised through the medium of the authorities of that Province, it would be reasonable to declare, in the meanwhile, that the civil law of Ontario should govern. There is also a practical present question left unsettled, namely, whether the license law of Ontario or the prohibitory law of Keewatin, is to affect the territory. It seems to me that that question ought to be settled, and that authority ought to be given to the justices of the peace of Keewatin, at Thunder Bay and in Algoma, to act in the territory under the jurisdiction of the District Court of Algoma. Great inconvenience and expense have arisen with reference to the administration of criminal justice. A person named Horne, accused of murder, was obliged to be brought at heavy expense to Sault Ste. Marie for trial, when he might have been tried elsewhere. Then I think some provision ought to be made for dealing with the sale of timber lands in the disputed territory, in so far as necessary to promote and carry on settlement in the meantime. I think that while it might be reasonable to say that so long as this Parliament does not act on this question, there ought to be caution used in the exercise of the power of alienating the public domain, or at least that no authority should be given to alienate the public domain, there could be no possible objection, as I conceive, to empower to alienate for purposes of settlement and to create a mutual recognition of the titles already given. The question of the prohibitory law of Keewatin and of the license law of Ontario is one of the utmost consequence. What I have to say briefly is, that the Government which has not taken any action in this matter with a view to its settlement, which recognizes the difficulties of the case by bringing this Act into Parliament, ought to have proposed, and ought yet to propose this Session, special and temporary legislation with the view to meet the other difficulties to which I have referred. I do not suggest that any legislation in the present position of this question should be made which should be deemed to be, or which should on its face be, otherwise than non-committal as to the ultimate settlement. But some arrangement for the carrying on of affairs in the meantime ought to be made, more satisfactory than that which at present exist, though this Bill, important as it may be, leaves unsettled difficulties greater than those which it solves.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). My hon. friend will see that the important questions to which he refers are altogether out of the purview of the Act before the House. They are undoubtedly all questions of very great importance to the country affected by the uncertainty as to the boundary line between Keewatin and the Province of Ontario, but which of course, if dealt with, must be dealt with by a separate measure entirely, and not by a measure such as the Bill now before the House. My hon. friend has called attention to a case in which some hardship occurred in consequence of the distance to which a party had been transported to be tried. No such difficulty has been brought to my notice. On the contrary, I have been informed by the officers who have administered the law during the first year, that it has worked very satisfactorily. The important questions outside of this measure to which the hon. gentleman refers must naturally and will engage the serious consideration of the Government.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask whether the Government propose to give to Manitoba on the east an indefinite boundary, or to take the meridian of the north-west angle as the eastern boundary. It is important that the House should know, while this Bill is under consideration, what the intentions of the Government are in this respect, because considerable practical consequences are likely to result from their action.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not a question which can properly be discussed in Committee where we can only consider the different clauses of the Bill as they arise.

Mr. MILLS. When the hon. gentleman proposes to deal with the criminal jurisdiction within a certain disputed territory, with respect to which an arbitration, appointed with the consent of the Local Government and the Government of Canada, came to a unanimous conclusion, I think we have a right to ask him for information on this subject. If the hon. gentleman proposes to say that the eastern boundary of Manitoba shall be the meridian of the north-west angle, it is perfectly clear that this question will remain as it is at present, until the question of the boundary is settled; but if he proposes to say that the eastern boundary of Manitoba will be the western boundary of Ontario, it is perfectly clear that as soon as this Bill is passed, the hon. gentleman will hand over to Manitoba the whole of this disputed territory, and involve that Province in the litigation regarding the western boundary of Ontario, by placing it in the position the Dominion occupies at present. I do not think the representatives from Ontario, no matter what their political opinions may be, or the representatives from other Provinces, who have looked into this question, will approve of the course of the hon. gentleman, if he gives Manitoba an indefinite, instead of a definite, boundary on the east. Therefore, this is a perfectly pertinent question when this House is asked to deal with the criminal jurisdiction of a territory which has been awarded to the Province of Ontario, if, at the same time, he intends to hand over a large portion of that territory to a western Province, by a measure which is not yet before the House, but which was referred to in the speech from the Throne.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the hon. gentleman understood me. Of course, I do not dispute the right of the hon. gentleman to discuss this matter at the proper time; but in Committee, we should only discuss the clauses of the Bill. When the Speaker is in the Chair he can discuss the principles of the measure, but I hold that it was not at all pertinent to discuss the general question of the Manitoba boundary. Of course, though its connection with this measure is rather remote, I would be glad to discuss it with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. If it be the intention of the Government to alter the political condition of the disputed territory before next Session of Parliament, and to hand a great part of it over to the Province of Manitoba, it seems to me extremely relevant to the consideration of this measure; because it is open to one construction in so far as the Government put a portion of the territory into the Province of Manitoba, and another construction in so far as they leave it a part of the territory of the Dominion. It is not, of course, necessary that the hon. gentleman should answer the question now, but it is proper to raise it in Committee, because if he had the information he asks for, my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) might propose a clause confirming the operation of the Act to the part that would remain the territory of the Dominion.

Committee rose and reported.

Mr. McDONALD (Picton) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS. I now repeat the question I put in Committee. This House has a right to know what the Government propose to do. It is perfectly obvious that if the hon. gentlemen were to bring in a Bill to extend the Province of Manitoba indefinitely over the disputed territory, he would not undertake to renew this Bill, and deal with this territory in a way different from that in which the other Provinces have been dealt with. He has only undertaken to deal with it now in an exceptional manner, because he says this territory does not belong to the Province of Ontario. We have therefore a right to know what the intentions of the Government are, because whether the House will permit this Bill to pass without opposition may depend on the answer the Government will give to this particular question. The two Bills are inseparably connected with each other, and that being the case, we have a right to know at this moment what the policy of the Government is on the whole question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has a right to ask the question. He is mistaken in supposing it has anything to do with the British North America Act. Any legislation about the boundaries, enlarging or limiting them, comes under the subsequent Act, not the British North America Act.

Mr. MILLS. It is called the British North America Act of 1872. I followed the title of the Statute.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Act says that the Legislature can enlarge, diminish or alter the boundaries of a Province with the consent of the Provincial Legislatures. When we know what boundaries the Legislature of Manitoba will consent to, it will be time to initiate legislation here. Our legislation must be based on the previous consent of the Provincial Legislatures. As soon as that is received, it will be laid before the House and the policy of the Government declared.

Mr. MILLS. On looking at the 146th section of the first British North America Act, it will be seen that the admission to the Union of any of the outlying Provinces was framed exactly the same as the provisions in the British North America Act of 1872 for the extension and alteration of boundaries. In the case of the admission of Prince Edward Island, the hon. gentleman maintained the Legislature could not act without a previous understanding having been arrived at with the Provincial Government. How was this Legislature, and the Legislatures of the Provinces interested, to come to any understanding unless there is some previous discussion and correspondence between them on the subject? When I was acting as Minister of the Interior, we found it necessary to change the boundaries of Manitoba, but we had correspondence with the Local Government, and came to an agreement with them and introduced a measure. No doubt the hon. gentleman must have come to some understanding with the Local Government of Manitoba, and it would be very satisfactory to know what the understanding was.

Bill read the third time.

NAVIGATION OF CANADIAN WATERS.

Mr. POPE (Queen's) moved the second reading of the Bill (No. 57) to give power to the Governor in Council to suspend the operation of certain provisions of the Act 43 Victoria, Chap. 29, respecting the Navigation of Canadian Waters.

Bill read the second time.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. POPE (Queen's) explained that this Bill was introduced to make our navigation regulations correspond with those in force in England. It was also intended to enable the Governor in Council to make regulations here to correspond with those which may be adopted in England.

Bill amended and reported.

SUPPLY.—RELIEF OF THE DISTRESS IN IRELAND.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the Speaker do leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. ANGLIN. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw attention to the matter of the expenditure of the money we voted last year for the relief of the distressed in Ireland. I find from the papers brought down that the expenditure was very different from that which was contemplated. On the 20th February, last Session, Sir John A. Macdonald moved, after a Message of His Excellency was laid on the Table, "that there be granted to Her Majesty, $100,000 to enable her to aid, to that extent, in the relief of the distress under which so many of Her Majesty's subjects in Ireland are now suffering." I felt myself exceedingly grateful that so handsome a sum should have been appropriated from the public Treasury for such a purpose, but I expressed some doubts as to the manner in which this money would be employed if it were placed, as the right hon. gentleman said he intended to place it, in the hands of the Colonial Secretary to be disbursed by him according to his best judgment. What I said on that occasion I shall read:

"I must, however, express my own regret that the right hon. the Premier did not see his way to send this amount, say to the Mansion House Committee in the city of Dublin. There are jealousies, there are suspicions, there are some doubts expressed as to the mode and manner in which funds already subscribed to various committees in Ireland have been distributed. I do not pretend to say that there is any foundation, in fact, for any of these doubts, but I think it would have rendered this contribution all the more acceptable, and have shown more consideration for the feelings and wishes of the people, if we had resolved to send the subscription to the body which possesses the entire confidence of a very large number of the people of that country, composed, as it is, of some of the first men in Ireland. Unfortunately the British Government has not shown much alacrity in dealing with this terrible famine; they have not shown, at all events, any very great eagerness to save the people from hunger and from death. They talked of undertaking some public works. They have talked of making other provisions which, by-and-bye, may relieve some thousands of people, but months have passed away since it first became known that the people were starving to death, and up to this day I doubt if one thousand, at all events if ten thousand, of all the suffering people have received the slightest relief, because of any action taken by the British Government. Misunderstandings as to the state of the facts in the first instance stood in the way, and also an unwillingness to admit, even to themselves, the horrible fact that large numbers of the people were dying of hunger in a country so near that the cries of the famine-stricken must almost reach the Throne. When the existence of wide-spread famine too large to be denied covered the land, the trammels of red tape caused delay. Whatever the reasons were, we know that the people of Ireland, and Irishmen everywhere throughout the world, are complaining to-day, because the British Government have not shown the promptitude in dealing with this terrible affliction which it was their duty to exhibit. They have been slow and remiss. It is for this reason, amongst others, that I regret to find the right hon. gentleman has thought it his duty to follow what is, perhaps, strictly the official course in this matter, and to transmit this sum to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. But I may venture to suggest, perhaps with impropriety, that it should be accompanied, at all events, by the suggestion that it should be paid over at once to the Mansion House Committee, which has the machinery now actually in existence for the purpose of distributing relief, and with respect to whose distribution of contributions already made there is, I believe, no well founded cause of complaint."

The hon. member for West Durham, speaking afterwards, said :

"I think there was a good deal of force in the observations of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), though I quite agree myself in the course the Government proposes to take as to the channel through which this fund should be forwarded; but it appears to me that, having regard to the purpose which animates us, it would be well that it should be indicated in the communication in some way, that, while we send it through the Secretary of State, the design is that it should be intrusted for distribution to such persons as they think proper, to aid in those efforts which are being made in Ireland. We know the Imperial Government is taking certain measures of its own which, in their nature, cannot produce results so rapidly as this contribution may, if promptly used, and if the circumstances of the case require that it should be immediately used, I hope the intention I have indicated will be made clearly to appear; and that our contribution will not be made part of any scheme for indirect relief propounded by the Imperial Government."

The hon. gentleman thus plainly indicated his view, which I believe was the view of every hon. gentleman in the House, on the subject that this money should be used promptly for the relief of those suffering from hunger, and not by any of the indirect modes which at that time it was supposed the Imperial Government contemplated. Sir John A. Macdonald, equally concurring in those views, said :

"I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman, and it is the intention of the Government, having obtained the sanction of this House, to use the cable immediately for the purpose of informing Her Majesty of this grant, and requesting that it should be applied for the immediate relief of the poor in Ireland."

Well, that was on the 20th February. Looking at the papers brought down I find none of that date. On the 26th February there was a telegram to this effect :

"OTTAWA, 26th February, 1880.

"To the Secretary of State for the Colonies :

"The Canadian Government have placed $100,000 at your disposal for the immediate relief of Irish distress. Mayor of Dublin asks for distribution. Perhaps you would wish a portion to be distributed by him. This is left to your discretion, with request that money distributed shall not deprive recipients of franchise.

(Signed) "LORNE."

This is from the Governor General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Some days after the original resolution passed, a question was raised as to the possibility of a large number of persons being disfranchised should they participate in this relief. The right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government promised at once to cable to the authorities on the other side, conveying the wishes of the Canadian Parliament on this point; he cabled on the 26th February. But, if this be the first telegram sent to the other side by the Canadian Government, it conveyed at the same time the intimation, and for the first time, that this money was to be placed at the disposal of the Colonial Secretary, and it left it entirely to his discretion how the money should be distributed. We, I think, were under the impression that the Governor General, acting under proper advice, had cabled at a very much earlier date. We find that on the 27th, next day, His Excellency transmitted the terms of the despatch conveying the same information, and with a copy of the Address adopted by the House.

"The Marquis of Lorne to Sir M. E. Hicks-Beach.

"OTTAWA, 27th February, 1880.

"SIR,—I have the honor of forwarding to you a copy of an Address which has been presented to me by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, expressing deep sympathy with the Irish people in their great destitution, and granting to Her Most Gracious Majesty the sum of $100,000 for the relief of the sufferers.

"The substance of this Address was communicated to you in my telegraphic message of yesterday's date, a copy of which I now enclose.

"I have, etc.,

(Signed) "LORNE."

"The Right Honorable

"Sir M. E. Hicks-Beach, Bart."

Then we find a great gap from the 27th February to the 5th March, when His Excellency received the following telegram from the Secretary of State for the Colonies :—

"Received at Ottawa, 5th March, 1880.

"From the Secretary of State for the Colonies :

"With regard to Canadian grant towards the relief of distress in Ireland, will your Government decide whether it should be given to Marlborough Fund, or divided between that and the fund of the Mayor of Dublin? The first has received large contributions here, the second has received all the Australian contributions."

My opinion is, that the Government, having so clearly ascertained the views of the members of this House on the subject, ought, in reply to that telegram, to have expressed distinctly the wish of Parliament as to the immediate distribution of the money and as to the most desirable mode of distribution. They seemed to agree with us that the best mode would have been through those two very active and most respectable Committees. However, on the following day, we find His Excellency telegraphed as follows :—

"OTTAWA, 6th March, 1880.

"To the Secretary of State for the Colonies :

"6th. My Government are desirous you should distribute fund. Will be perfectly satisfied if you divide one hundred thousand dollars between Marlborough Fund and Mayor of Dublin.

(Signed) "LORNE."

We have no further communication between the Government and the Colonial Secretary from the 6th of March until the 20th of April following, and this money, which was intended for the relief of the suffering poor in Ireland, remained undistributed during this period. It seems to me that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach used the discretionary powers with which he was entrusted in a very extraordinary way. On the 20th of April he wrote the following despatch :

"Sir M. E. Hicks-Beach to the Marquis of Lorne.

"DOWNING STREET, 20th April, 1880.

"MY LORD,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch, No. 66, of the 27th February, with a copy of an Address presented to you by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada expressing deep sympathy with the Irish laboring classes in their present great distress, and granting to Her Majesty the sum of $100,000 in aid of the sufferers.

"2. I had previously to the receipt of this despatch been informed by a letter from Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co., that they were prepared to pay over an equivalent sum in British sterling as a parliamentary gift from Canada, on account of the destitution in Ireland, and I had already placed myself in communication with Her Grace the Duchess of Marlborough and with the Lord Mayor of Dublin in respect of the best means to be taken for applying this munificent donation to the object for which it is intended.

"3. Your Lordship will observe from the correspondence noted in the margin, copies of which are transmitted with this despatch, that Her Grace's Committee and the Committee of the Dublin Mansion House Fund accepted a proposal that three members of each Committee should unite in forming a Joint Committee for the distribution of this grant, and that the Joint Committee so formed has been subsequently joined by three additional members representing the New York Herald Fund Committee, who have agreed to contribute in the proportion of one-third of the sum expended, to the objects to which the Canadian Fund may be applied. * * *

"5. My telegram, of the 23rd March, will already have indicated to you the general plan which it is proposed to adopt in the application of the Fund for the assistance of the distressed people, and I was gratified to receive your telegram of the 13th instant, in which you informed me that Your Government cordially approve the proposed distribution.

"6. The correspondence now sent and especially the letter from the Joint Committee, of the 8th of this month, will show more precisely the direction in which it is intended that the relief should be given, namely: 1st. In the supply of seed. 2nd. In the construction of piers and harbors. 3rd. In providing fishing tackle. 4th. In other reproductive works, such as drainage of land."

The documents attached to this show that in writing to the Duchess of Marlborough and to the Mayor of Dublin, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach proposed the appointment of a joint Committee to superintend the expenditure of this money and that it should be expended for the purposes he mentions. The suggestion came entirely from himself, and he evinced, as I apprehend he would, a determination not to believe that there were many people in Ireland on the verge of actual starvation—people who were actually suffering from the want of food and clothing, to whose relief this money should have been applied two months prior to that time. He then proposes the expenditure of the money in a most extraordinary way. Two months elapsed during which subscriptions had poured into Ireland from every part of the world for the relief of the distressed, but anyone who watched the progress of those efforts for relief must have been aware that, notwithstanding these subscriptions, a large amount of distress existed, that many people were still at the verge of starvation for a long time; and yet this money, which would have done so much good, was kept until the crisis of the famine—if I may so term it—had passed away. The projects upon which Sir Michael Hicks-Beach proposed to expend the money are very good projects in themselves. All who take an interest in the welfare of Ireland would be delighted to see the Imperial Government make an appropriation for the building of piers or breakwaters as we would term them, to purchase such tackle for the poor fishermen of Ireland as would enable them to pursue their avocation after the famine had ceased. We should also be glad to see a system of drainage established for the reclamation of the waste lands of the island, upon fair and equitable terms; but Sir Michael Hicks-Beach must have been aware that the Parliament of Canada never intended the money they voted for any such purposes as these. He speaks of this sum of $100,000 as if it was millions of pounds sterling, and as if it was sufficient to accomplish a great deal in the way of public works in Ireland. He says that on the 23rd of March he sent a telegram to the Government of this country in which he distinctly informed the Government to what purposes he intended to apply the money. We have not that telegram, but we have the despatch in reply, and I think that, under the circumstances, it is a most extraordinary document. Here it is:

"The Marquis of Lorne to Sir M. E. Hicks-Beach.

"OTTAWA, 13th April, 1880.

"SIR,—I have the honor to send to you, to-day, a telegraphic message as follows:—

"13th. Privy Council desire me to express their cordial approval of your distribution of the sum granted by Dominion Parliament for relief in Ireland, and request me to convey to you their sincere thanks for the trouble you have taken and the arrangements you have made."

"I enclose a copy of an approved Report of a Committee of the Privy Council on which the above telegram was based.

"I have, &c.,

(Signed) "LORNE"

"The Right Honorable

"Sir M. E. Hicks-Beach, Bart."

That report of the Committee of the Privy Council is not among the papers which have been brought down, although it is the one which we should most desire to see, for we would then have the grounds upon which this appropriation of the money, contrary to the expressed wishes of Parliament and of the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government, is professedly justified. I think the House is entitled to that document, and that the right hon. gentleman is scarcely treating us fairly in withholding it. Various reasons were assigned for their not being brought down, and in the end there was something said about their being confidential despatches. It is hard to imagine what confidence there could be about a subject of this kind which ought to be kept secret from the public of this country. There is nothing in the paper to indicate that any such confidential despatches ever passed between the two Governments, and we have it clearly indicated that a certain telegram was sent on the 23rd of March, from the Colonial Secretary, but that telegram we have not here. We have it distinctly stated by His Excellency that there was a certain Order in Council passed; that Order we have, and it is the only paper which would either justify, or excuse, or palliate the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite, if it can be excused at all. I have been told, and I believe it is true, that on the very last day of last Session three papers, of which I hold one in my hand, were covertly dropped on and laid on the Table by hon. gentleman opposite, and these are the papers which it is found so very difficult this year to obtain. Probably the difficulty was not with regard to the papers that have been brought down, but as to the wisdom or prudence of bringing them down at all. I shall not make any motion on this subject; but I consider this large sum of public money was expended, I am satisfied, in a manner entirely contrary to that in which we intended it should be expended, and expended in a manner not calculated to give to the people then suffering from hunger, and cold, and nakedness, the relief which the Parliament of Canada desired so much to convey to them.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The following Bill was read the third time and passed:—

The following Bill was read the second time:—

The following Bill was considered in Committee, reported, read the third time, and passed:—

Bill (No. 59) to incorporate the Moncton Harbor Improvement Company.—(Sir Albert J. Smith.)

The following Bill was considered in Committee and reported:—

Bill (No. 23) to incorporate the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company.—(Mr. Cameron, Victoria.)

SUPPLY.—RELIEF OF THE DISTRESS IN IRELAND.

House resumed the consideration of Sir Leonard Tilley's proposed motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair, for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before six o'clock the member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) called the attention of the House to the return respecting the grant of this Parliament in aid of the suffering Irish, last year. I am not at all sure that the hon. gentleman was acting within his right in then bringing up the subject. I do not really know his object in doing so—whether it was to find fault with the Government, or with some speech, or with the Lord Mayor of Dublin and the Duchess of Marlborough, or with the New York Herald, or with any or all of them. But the circumstances of the case are quite clear, and I do not think that, so far as the Government are concerned, that they are obnoxious to any charge of neglect, or of omission to perform their duty with reference to that vote passed unanimously last Session. The hon. gentleman tried to find fault with the Government, for he said, in the first place, that there had been great neglect—that the vote of $100,000 to relieve the suffering Irish passed on the 20th February, and actually the money was not transmitted till the 26th—that five days were allowed to pass. Now the fact of the vote could not well be communicated to the Governor-General till the next day. The hon. gentleman has looked at the papers for the purpose of making an attack, but if he had examined them carefully he would have seen that, immediately on the vote being passed—the moment after—instructions were sent to Messrs. Glyn and Baring to pay over the money to the Colonial Secretary. Hon. gentlemen may remember that the vote was asked for, in the first place, in consequence of an allusion to it, and a recommendation calling attention to it, in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the Session. That was addressed to Parliament, the Senate as well as the Commons. On the 20th February a special Message was sent down, and a vote of the House asked for. The moment it passed a telegram was sent to our agents in England, asking them to inform the Colonial Minister that the money was at the disposal of the Colonial Office for the purpose in question. But if the hon. gentleman will look at the journals, he will see that the Upper House had a right to be consulted as to that vote, and that they were so consulted. Though the hon. gentleman may not remember the circumstance, I remember that there was understood to have been complaint that the Upper House were likely to be ignored in the matter. On the 24th February the Address was passed and sent to the Senate for its concurrence, and it became a joint Address from both Houses. The hon. gentleman read a passage from his speech of last year, in which he expressed the suspicion that the Colonial Minister would not act correctly, or according to the wishes of this House and Parliament with reference to this vote. All I can say is that it was stated by myself in the House, after the vote, that the Government would transmit the money if the House so ordered to the Colonial Minister. The Colonial Minister was a responsible man; he could consult with his colleagues, and especially the Secretary of State for Ireland, he must have known the circumstances better than we, and we thought we would place the money in his hands and hold him responsible. The House sanctioned that course, contrary to the opinion of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), but I think, in accordance with the expressed opinion of the hon. member for the west riding of Durham (Mr. Blake). The money was transmitted; and it is quite true that in the debate it was stated by the hon. gentleman—and by others I dare say—and assented to by myself, that the money should be transmitted for the immediate relief of the suffering people of Ireland. It was also stated that the money should be so appropriated that the recipients should not in any way be regarded as paupers and deprived of their elective franchise. The address was sent to the Senate on the 25th, though the formal notice was not transmitted until some days afterwards. On the 26th His Excellency the Governor-General sent a telegram which the hon. gentleman has read:

“OTTAWA, 26th February, 1880.

“To the Secretary of State for the Colonies:

“The Canadian Government have placed $100,000 at your disposal in the immediate relief of Irish distress. Mayor of Dublin asks for distribution. Perhaps you would wish a portion to be distributed by him. This is left to your discretion, with request that money distributed shall not deprive recipients of franchise.

(Signed) “LORNE.”

I think that despatch plainly expresses the wishes of Parliament with regard to the purpose to which the money was to be applied. On the 27th His Excellency transmitted a copy of the Address of both Houses:

“The Marquis of Lorne to Sir M. E. Hicks-Beach.

“OTTAWA, 27th February, 1880.

“Sir,—I have the honor of forwarding to you a copy of an Address which has been presented to me by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, expressing deep sympathy with the Irish people in their great destitution, and granting to Her Most Gracious Majesty the sum of $100,000 for the relief of the sufferers.

“The substance of this Address was communicated to you in my telegraphic message of yesterday's date, a copy of which I now enclose.

“I have, etc.,

(Signed) “LORNE.”

“The Right Honorable

“Sir M. E. Hicks-Beach, Bart.”

Thus, then, so far as this Government was concerned, they carried out the wishes of Parliament in transmitting the money to the Colonial Secretary for the immediate relief of the Irish sufferers, and intimating at the same time that the Mayor of Dublin had asked for the distribution of the money and that it was left to his discretion. On the 5th March, the Secretary of State to the Colonies addressed the following Message to His Excellency:—

“Received at Ottawa, 5th March, 1880.

“From the Secretary of State for the Colonies:

“With regard to Canadian grant towards the relief of distress in Ireland, will your Government decide whether it should be given to Marlborough Fund, or divided between that and the fund of the Mayor of Dublin? The first has received large contributions here, the second has received all the Australian contributions.”

It is well known that there were these two great funds—that of the Duchess of Marlborough and that of the Lord Mayor of Dublin, two separate and distinct funds, and it was very obvious that it was the wish of the Colonial Minister that he should not undertake the responsibility of distributing the money, but preferred that it should be undertaken by these two well organized benevolent bodies. Our answer was quite in accordance with the feeling of the House, and we concluded, of course, that the money would be distributed between these two funds. We were not informed, but we presumed that having expressed ourselves as we did they would be satisfied with the distribution of the money being divided between them. The next communication is a telegraphic message from His Excellency to the Colonial Minister:

“OTTAWA, 6th March, 1880.

“To the Secretary of State for the Colonies:

“6th. My Government are desirous you should distribute fund. Will be perfectly satisfied if you divide $100,000 between Marlborough Fund and Mayor of Dublin.

(Signed) “LORNE.”

The hon. gentleman says there is an allusion to a despatch, and an answer from the Canadian Government

Mr. ANGLIN. A telegram.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That telegram was not communicated to us, except confidentially. His Excellency of course received a telegram, and subsequently a letter, both marked confidential, containing matters which the Colonial Secretary considered were confidential between him and the Governor-General. It was communicated to us in confidence, and of course being confidential it cannot be brought down, and I may also say it would answer no good purpose to have it brought down. The Colonial Minister invited the two funds to consider together, by the formation of a Committee, as to the appropriation of the money, and as will be seen by his letters, both to the Duchess of Marlborough, he made certain suggestions. He says in his letter to the Duchess of Marlborough:

“I do not desire in any way to limit the proposals which, after full consideration of the circumstances, a body constituted as I have suggested might be disposed to make, but I may observe generally, that I think it would be satisfactory to Canada, as well as to Ireland if this money were so applied, as not only to relieve the immediate necessities of the moment, but also to secure some lasting benefit to the public.”

That was altogether his suggestions, but at the same time he told the Committee that he did not desire in any way to limit them. As appears by the papers, the two funds I have referred to joined with the New York Herald fund, which was raised through the exertions of the proprietor of the New York Herald, and it was arranged—and it was a sensible arrangement—that these three funds should each have representatives on the Committee which was to divide the money. Afterwards we were informed, as will be seen by the papers, what arrangements were made. All I can say is that we did all we could. We sent home the money for immediate relief, and the Colonial Minister divided it among these three funds. I am quite satisfied that these people, all living in Ireland, and all on the spot, are much better judges of what should be done with the funds than we possibly could be. But, at all events, all this happened without our knowing anything about it. We sent home the money for the purpose of immediate relief, and to be applied in the discretion of the Minister. He made all these arrangements. We were satisfied that the funds were divided between the Duchess of Marlborough's fund and the Lord Mayor's fund. That is all we had to do, and I have no doubt the result was that the money has been applied in the manner which was most beneficial, not only for immediate relief, but for the permanent relief of the sufferers, so far as the money would go. You will observe, Sir, that both the Lord Mayor and Her Grace expressed the strongest thanks, and desired that the strongest thanks should be conveyed to Canada for the munificent gift which had been of so much service.

Mr. BLAKE. I think there can be no doubt whatever that the intention of Parliament in making this grant has been partially frustrated. As my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) said in the course of the debate which resulted in making the grant, there was a possibility of danger, and my hon. friend suggested that that danger would be obviated by our determining upon a particular channel for the transmission of the funds. The hon. Minister proposed that the channel should be the Colonial Secretary, and I agreed that that was the appropriate channel. But I differed with the hon. gentleman if he intended—and I do not think the House understood that he intended it—to invest the Colonial Secretary with entire discretion with the distribution of this fund. In the few observations I made I distinctly pointed out the possibility of such an application being made as has been made, and I pointed out that that would be contrary to our intention. I said:

"I think there was a good deal of force in the observations of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), though I quite agree myself with the course the Government proposes to take as to the channel through which this fund should be forwarded; but it appears to me that, having regard to the purpose which animates us, it would be well that it should be indicated in the communication in some way, that, while we send it through the Secretary of State, the design is that it should be intrusted for distribution to such persons as they think proper, to aid in those efforts which are being made in Ireland. We know the Imperial Government is taking certain measures of its own which, in their nature, cannot produce results so rapidly as this contribution may, if promptly used, and if the circumstances of the case require that it should be immediately used, I hope the intention I have indicated will be made clearly to appear; and that our contribution will not be made part of any scheme for indirect relief propounded by the Imperial Government."

Now, I say that what has been done with this money has been to make it part of a scheme for indirect relief propounded by the Imperial Government. A large portion of it has been spent in building piers and breakwaters. Some portion of it has been spent, I presume, in buying fish nets and boats, according to the scheme of indirect relief propounded by the Imperial Government. When I suggested this danger, the right hon. gentleman said:

"I quite agree with the remark of the hon. gentleman, and it is the intention of the Government, having obtained the sanction of the House, to use the cable immediately for the purpose of informing Her Majesty of this grant, and requesting that it should be applied for the immediate relief of the poor in Ireland."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Those were the words of the right hon. gentleman, but they were not strong enough. Nor did the right hon. gentleman give us all the information. He says there is a confidential despatch and that, unfortunately, he cannot bring it down. He intimates mysteriously that it would not serve a good purpose to bring it down, so that we do not know what was said at an early stage of the Session about this fund. I do not know whether the despatch of the Lord Mayor was confidential too, but as it is not brought down I suppose it must also be a confidential state paper. The Order in Council is not down. Why is not that down? Why should we not see that? What we find is, that instead of an indication that the Secretary was to be the channel, and that the fund was to go to Ireland to be used for immediate relief, we find the statement about immediate relief, it is true, and repeated declarations that the Secretary is to have discretion in the distribution of the money, but all this is contrary to the expressed intention of Parliament. We find a communication that he exercised that discretion, and we find a disapproval instead of an approval of that exercise of discretion. The result is that while we said we wanted to send this money over so that it might be used to feed the hungry and starving at once and immediately, while we pointed out that it might be used for some scheme of indirect relief unless proper precautions were taken, we find that it really has been used for this indirect purpose against which we wished to guard.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think the hon. gentleman should bring down the Order in Council at all events, as that would enable us to judge for ourselves what the Government did, and whether we approve of it or not.

Mr. MILLS. It is clear that the Colonial Secretary suggested a use of this fund which the Government must have known was contrary to the intention of Parliament, and yet it seems the Government had not the courage to tell him so. It is scarcely fair to the House to tell us that a communication relating to a distribution of money which Parliament had voted for a particular purpose, is a document of such a confidential character that it cannot be communicated to this House. I do not think that is a sound position for the hon. gentleman to take. No communication relating to the distribution of money voted by this House, and for which the Ministry are responsible, can be constitutionally withheld from Parliament. It is our right to know how far the Imperial Government were disposed to apply the money to other purposes than those for which it was voted, and we have a right to know how far the hon. gentlemen have exonerated themselves from their responsibility in the matter by protesting against this misapplication of the money. We have nothing before us to show that they did protest. On the contrary, what has been revealed tends to show that they actually approved. The First Minister shakes his head. Well, he spoke here for twenty minutes on this subject, and he said nothing that would indicate his disapproval of what was done. It does seem to me that the right hon. gentleman has not had the courage to protest against the misapplication of the money; that he scarcely dare say that his soul is his own in this House in any matter relating to the conduct of the Colonial Minister. I say he ought to have communicated frankly to this House, everything relating to this matter, and if he felt this money was being misdirected he ought to have said so directly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says no paper can be confidential.

Mr. MILLS. I did not say so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He says that every paper, whether confidential or not, should be sent down here.

Mr. MILLS. All that relates to the expenditure of public money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman knows that there are many papers of this nature that cannot be brought down without the consent of the Governor General, and that the Governor General cannot bring down without the consent of the Colonial Secretary.

(In the Committee.)

112. Harbors and Rivers (Nova Scotia). $38,400 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. LANGEVIN. This property at Cow Bay, for which $6,000 is asked, was purchased from Mr. Archibald a good many years ago. This sum is to repair damages caused by a storm. Unless these repairs were made the whole works would be carried away. The $1,100 for Indian Island Beach is to complete the opening of a channel between the two outer islands for the passage of fishing boats, so as to save them the trouble and danger of skirting the islands. For Brooklyn and Herring Cove, $10,000 is taken in order to protect the woodwork from the ravages of the sea worm. Since 1872, $58,881 has been expended at that point. The vote of $2,300 for Hampton is to extend the present breakwater, and for repairs thereto. With regard to the vote of $8,000 for Great Village River, Londonderry, the river there is very circuitous, being in the shape of a double S, and it is intended to make a cutting at the first part of the first S, and another at the latter part of the second S, so that there will be almost a straight channel from the upper part of the river to the lower. Two small dams will also be made in the bends of the river. $4,000 is taken to raise the present bar at Mabou from two feet to three and one-half feet.

113. Harbors and Rivers (P. E. I.) $38,500 00

Mr. LANGEVIN. The vote of $1,500 for Miminigash breakwater is to complete the repairs there, and renew the crib-work and shore works constructed in 1875-79, at a cost of $4,000; the engineer reports this to be absolutely necessary in order to insure the safety of the works in that locality. $8,500 is taken to complete the works at Tignish.

114. Harbors and Rivers (New Brunswick) $70,090 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT asked if $35,000 would complete the breakwater at Negro Point.

Mr. LANGEVIN replied that was only half the amount that would be required.

Mr. ANGLIN asked if the hon. Minister intended to appoint the same superintendent for Shippegan harbor next year.

Mr. LANGEVIN replied that he intended having another superintendent.

Mr. ANGLIN drew the hon. Minister's attention to an advertisement issued by the present superintendent calling for supply of material. He was glad to hear the hon. Minister's intention. An impartial officer should be sent from the department to superintend the work, as it was exceedingly difficult to get one at the place where the truck system was in vogue, and the stores the men got in exchange for their labor were charged at exorbitant rates, $1 a gallon for molasses, $1 a pound for tobacco, as high as $12 a barrel for flour, and other goods in proportion. The step taken by the hon. Minister, on representations from him (Mr. Anglin), of sending a paymaster down last year was a very wise one, but several of the men had previously run into debt for stores.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Those men will be paid every week or second week, and the storekeeper will not be allowed to make profits out of their earnings. The men's earnings are their own, and they have a right to do with them what they think proper. So soon as I knew this practice prevailed, I stopped it, by sending a paymaster to pay the men. That is what is done in all the works, because the Government is quite able to pay their men as the works proceed, and we want the men to have the full benefit of their earnings and not the speculators.

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. LANGEVIN said: The item of $2,000, which appears in the items for River Tobique and River St. John, is for the purpose of continuing the improvements on those rivers, and removing boulders and obstructions in the channels. $2,000 were invested for the erection of a beacon at St. Andrew's harbor, and to defray the cost of repairs to the beacons. $1,500 were required for the construction of a breakwater at Quaco harbor. $5,000 would also be expended on building a wharf and cribwork at Cocaigne.

115. General repairs and improvements, Harbors and Rivers, Maritime Provinces generally....$10,000 00

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury) asked whether any portion of this $10,000 was to be expended on the Oromocto shoals in the St. John River?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The question was initiated by me lately, a month or a month and a half after having had the matter before me during the summer. I was, however, not satisfied with the information obtained at that time. If public business will allow me during the summer to go down there with the departmental Engineer, I will examine the matter and gather information on the spot. The country has expended money there year after year, and I believe the result has not been such as was expected in the first instance. Under these circumstances I do not intend to ask a special vote for that purpose. Then I will be in a position to advise the Governor in Council in the matter. If it is not the same dredging as required, we shall be able to take it out of this vote.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Have the Government come to any decision in regard to an appropriation to assist in the improvement of the harbor of Moncton?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The matter is still under consideration.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Sheburne). Does the Minister of Public Works propose any expenditure for the repair of the Gordon Bay breakwater in the county of Sheburne?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I have not been able to decide, as yet, whether I shall submit an item to my colleagues, in the Supplementary Estimates, for this purpose. It is still under consideration.

116. Harbors and Rivers (Quebec)..... $112,550 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the item of $1,000 for New Carlisle for?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is required for a breakwater at that port. But it is not enough to undertake the work with, and most likely we may ask a small additional vote to enable us to go on with the work. That is the reason the vote for this purpose was not used last year.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is intended with regard to the item of $2,500 for Carleton, the locality providing $2,500 also?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is for the completion of the breakwater, 200 feet long by 160 wide.

Mr. ANGLIN. From my knowledge of the place and its people, I believe you will find it exceedingly difficult to get the money they promise, as they are mostly poor fishermen. It is hardly fair to expect them to pay the amount. No doubt in their eagerness to get the breakwater they will promise much, however.

Mr. LANGEVIN. As a rule in such cases, I do not exact from the people the money. I ask them, for instance, to give us the stone or timber, and to work at half price, to make up their contribution which, made in this way, they do not feel much. This burden was not imposed on them. Should there be any failure, as suspected by the hon. gentleman, we shall simply have to come before Parliament again. The $7,000 which we asked for Grosse Isle last year was not found sufficient to complete the work, but we expect that the $2,500 we are now asking will complete it.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. With regard to the item for the removal of chains, anchors, and boulders from the St. Lawrence, I should like to ask what sum has been realized from the sale of the chains, &c ?

Mr. LANGEVIN. About $9,000 altogether. The item Etang du Nord, $8,000, is to complete a breakwater. The item Rivière Onelle is to raise a pier, as at present the water passes over it. At Trois Pictoles there is no landing place, and this amount is asked in order to get a small block of land. At Isle-aux-Grues the water is so shallow that the vessels cannot reach the pier except at high tide, and the grant is asked for the purpose of extending it. The $5,000 asked for the River Saguenay is for the improvement of the channel below Chicoutimi, by the removal of boulders, slabs, sawdust, &c.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is the Act, with regard to the removal of sawdust, enforced on the Saguenay ?

Mr. LANGEVIN. Yes. The item of $4,000 for the enlargement of La Grande Décharge from Lake St. John is asked for this purpose, because for some reason or other large bodies of water overflow the lands in the neighborhood at certain seasons and the people are threatening to migrate. We hope to prevent this flood by some cutting at the outlet.

Mr. BLAKE. That is what is being done with reference to Lake Simcoe, in Ontario, but I do not know whether any vote is asked for that purpose.

Mr. LANGEVIN. My attention has not been called to that work, so I presume it has been done by local effort.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it supposed that this work at Lake St. John will add materially to the value of the land ?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It will, at all events, prevent the people from removing.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course the case of Lake Manitoba is different, as we own the lands there while we do not own them in Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is the same as appropriations for piers and breakwaters. We have to look after the general interest of the people who contribute to the revenue, and the people who live near Lake St. John have not the advantage of railways and other facilities for communication which are enjoyed in more thickly-settled communities. We have, therefore, to look after their interests in another way, namely, by preventing the inundation of their land.

Mr. BLAKE. We deal with piers and harbors because they are within our jurisdiction. This work, as I understand, is for grading a lake ?

Mr. LANGEVIN. No; it is for enlarging an outlet, so as to prevent the drowning of the land in the spring.

Mr. BLAKE. It has nothing to do with navigation at all. It is for the purpose of preventing land from being navigable.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The grant of $6,000 to Baie St. Paul is for an extension of a pier there. The local authorities contribute $3,000. The grant of $1,500 to Les Ecureuils is for the purpose of building a small pier to accommodate two or three parishes in that neighborhood. It is a solid pier filled in with stone from near the outlet of the River Yamachiche. The Beaver Lumber Company offered to furnish the lumber if the Government would construct this work, and the offer was accepted. $15,000 are asked for a harbor of refuge at Rivière Nicolet. It appears that, in that neighborhood a large number of rafts and vessels have been wrecked, but by erecting a harbor of refuge at the mouth of the river much property and a large number of lives would be saved.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that the Nicolet River is not navigable, except in the spring, when the water is high. I question very much whether the harbor can be of any use whatever in summer.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The harbor of refuge being at the mouth of the river, when these piers are built the question of dredging will come up, in order to make the river navigable for a considerable distance. We ask for $5,000 for the improvement of the steamboat channel between Montreal and Lake St. Francis. There are boulders and other obstructions in the bed of the river which obstruct the passage of steamers and other small craft. We have received a petition to have these obstructions removed, and this is an answer to the petition. The $4,000 asked for improvements between Bristol and Portage du Fort, is for the purpose of blasting rocks out of the River Ottawa, at the head of Snow Rapids. A vote of $15,000 is taken to improve the navigation of the River Yamaska for a distance of twenty-five miles from Lake St. Peter, so as to render it navigable, at low water, for vessels drawing five or six feet of water. $18,000 or $20,000 more will be required to complete the work.

117. Harbors and Rivers (Ontario)$91,000 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The work in the Cobourg harbor, for which $10,000 is now asked, was begun nine years ago. This vote is for the further prolongation of the western pier, to protect the harbor from storms and drifts of sands, and the prolongation of the eastern pier to a depth of twenty-four feet at low water. This work was undertaken to make a harbor of refuge. We shall afterwards have to continue the eastern pier to the entrance of the harbor, in order to leave between the two piers about 400 feet.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Are the corporation paying a part ?

Mr. LANGEVIN. No; they made a large expenditure before.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What depth of water is secured inside ?

Mr. LANGEVIN. Inside the western pier there are sixteen, seventeen, twenty and twenty and a half feet; inside the eastern pier, after the works to be built with this vote are completed, there will be thirteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen and twenty-one feet; and at the entrance there will be twenty-four or twenty-five feet of water.

Mr. MILLS. I observe that the hon. gentleman has not this year asked for a vote for Morpeth harbor. This harbor was in 1876 surveyed and reported on by Mr. Kingsford and another engineer. The locality contributed $4,000, and placed it in the hands of the Administration, and under the late Administration an appropriation of $15,000 was obtained. Tenders were advertised for and received, and the contract, I think, was to be let about the time we retired from office. When Mr. Mackenzie's successor, the present Minister of Railways, came in, he stated that under the existing state of the finances, the construction of this work would have to be postponed. I asked him if it was the intention of the Government to go on with the undertaking when the state of the finances permitted it, and he said it was. Last year the hon. gentleman obtained an appropriation of $6,000 for the work; but up to this moment, no expenditure has taken place, although the $4,000 contributed by the locality is still in the hands of the Government. I should like to know if the hon. gentleman intends to go on with this work.

Mr. McCALLUM. This expenditure would be entirely thrown away. It would not be possible to make a harbor of refuge there for less than $200,000.

Mr. MILLS. I have resided in that locality all my life, and have had a better opportunity of knowing it than the hon. gentleman. The engineer reported that for $40,000, of which the locality proposed to contribute 25 per cent., a harbor, not only for commercial purposes, but for the purposes of a refuge, could be constructed there, and I am induced to regard the engineer, so far as that is concerned, a better authority than the hon. gentleman. A very large expenditure has taken place at Rondeau; but it is at a considerable distance from the shore, and vessels cannot leave there until there is a wind off the land. When the hon. gentleman says there is no place, he does not know the country. Within a radius of ten miles there is a population of nearly 25,000.

Mr. McCALLUM. I do not dispute that there is a population there, but when the hon. gentleman talks to me about harbors I can tell him that I have built as many harbors as most men in this country, and I am a pretty old man now. To spend $14,000 or $15,000 on that shore, it would be of no use whatever, as far as getting a harbor of refuge for vessels is concerned. It may be an advantage to the municipality, but would be of no use for shipping as a harbor of refuge. I have always opposed that vote in order to have it spent where it would be of use to vessels. I trust before he brings down the Supplementary Estimates, the hon. Minister will bring down an amount to build a harbor at Pigeon Bay, and not expend money at Morpeth harbor.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman had nothing to say against the vote for the purpose of draining lands in the immediate vicinity of Lake St. John. The hon. gentleman does not suppose shipowners will have any particular interest in that matter. If this House is prepared to act on the principle that no money shall be contributed towards a harbor improvement, except with regard to a harbor of refuge, we can understand the position taken by the hon. gentleman, but that is not the principle on which the House has hitherto acted. The farmers pay taxes as well as shipowners, and the facilities afforded them for shipping their farm produce is a matter of as much consequence to them as facilities to those who have shipping afloat. Harbors that will both serve the purpose of harbors of refuge and commercial harbors are entitled to the consideration of the Government. I am not discussing the relative merits of this point and Kingsville, Essex, to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I think a harbor there would be advantageous; but so is this Morpeth harbor. The hon. Minister of Public Works has made an appropriation to improve the channel between Rondeau harbor and the coast. If the hon. gentleman proposes that no such appropriation should be made, he should have voted against it; but as the constituency in which the harbor is situated is represented by a Conservative, the hon. gentleman has nothing to say. With regard to Morpeth harbor, the Chief Engineer recommended it, the late Prime Minister approved it, the present Minister of Railways approved it, the Minister of Public Works has made an appropriation for it; the hon. gentleman must therefore admit that the question is, to some extent, settled as to whether there ought or ought not to be a harbor there. I repeat my question as to whether it is the intention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to expend the money voted last year on this work, and ask for a further appropriation this year.

Mr. McCALLUM. The hon. gentleman finds fault with me because I did not oppose the appropriation for Lake St.

John. I do not know but that it will be in the interest of the country if it is going to keep the lands of the people from being overflowed. This is the first time I heard the hon. gentleman say that Morpeth harbor was not a harbor of refuge. He wants now to get the appropriation for commercial purposes. It is not in the interest of the country to spend money there, when we have spent so much within twelve miles of it. He says, further, that the Minister of Public Works will put an item in the Estimates to make a channel through some shallow water to the shoals, away from the coast. I did not understand the money was to be so expended, but understood that it was to be spent on Rondeau harbor, in order to enlarge the basin so as to allow vessels to ride at anchor. I know that is the intention of the Minister. Rondeau harbor is filling up with sand, the basin not being near so large as formerly, and it will be necessary to enlarge it inside. If the Government have not proposed enough money for that service this year, they will have to do so next year. It is said the farmers want a harbor there. I have shown the House that this place is only six miles from a railway station. I do not think the Government should spend money in order to help the hon. gentleman opposite to secure his election next time.

Mr. ARKELL. Though the hon. member for Bothwell has represented his constituency many years, I believe that while a member of the late Government he never got a dollar appropriated for this work, yet he lives close to Bothwell. His constituents have complained that they could not get him to expend a dollar for the improvement of that harbor.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken, as the Estimates for the last year that we were in office will show.

Mr. ARKELL. Was the money ever spent?

Mr. MILLS. No; a sum was voted by the House on the condition that a certain appropriation should be made by the locality, but the by-law was not carried till the summer of 1878. In the first instance it was contested for some irregularity, and was submitted to the people again and voted upon. As soon as the by-law was carried, an advertisement was inserted in the Gazette and other papers, calling for tenders, which were received. The contract was not let, simply because the late Government were defeated about the time the tenders were received. Messrs. Jackson and McMichael, from the vicinity of Rondeau, informed me that the Minister of Public Works had promised an appropriation for the deepening of the channel from this harbor to the shore of Morpeth harbor, to be used for commercial purposes. That is a proper expenditure in the interest of the country, as would be also the expenditure suggested for Morpeth harbor.

Mr. ARKELL. Though the money was put in the Estimates for Rondeau harbor, for three or four years, not a dollar was expended. A few days before the last elections an engineer was sent up to make a survey, an action that looked very suspicious.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The reason why this amount, though put in the Estimates last year, was not expended was, that it was a question with the department whether the vote would attain the object in view. We intended to make this a harbor of refuge, which it was thought could be done for a reasonable sum. It was found the pier built by the municipality could not be made useful, and that it would be but squandering public money to try to add to it a work of our own. The existing work will have to be renewed altogether. The Chief Engineer of the department states that a mere wharf—not a harbor of refuge—would cost $30,000, and a harbor of refuge at least $100,000. We have not asked Parliament for such a sum, because we cannot undertake a work of such magnitude before we are sure it would not cost $150,000, and before we can see that the work would be of such utility as would warrant our asking Parliament to vote so large an amount. As to the Rondeau harbor, the item in the Estimates is to cover the contract with Mr. McNamee. For the construction of a pile-protection work on the west side of the entrance to the harbor, $2,000 is voted. The amount of the contract is $13,000. Deducting $6,000, the appropriation of 1880-81 will leave $7,000; superintendence and contingencies, $1,000, making in all $8,000. The pile-protection work will be semi-circular, and close an entrance or gap that prevents the harbor from being as useful as it should be.

Mr. MILLS. Am I to understand that a portion of the appropriation is to be applied as Messrs. McMichael and Jackson supposed?

Mr. LANGEVIN. None of it. The matter is still under the consideration of the Government.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. As this is a very important harbor, I would like to know the state of the belt of wood that one time existed near and sheltered that harbor. Has it been preserved?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I am informed by the Engineer-in-Chief that it has been preserved on each side of the harbor.

Mr. DAWSON. Last year there was an item of $10,000 for the deepening of the channel at Little Current. It was not expended, and I see it still put among the estimates of last year. It will be expended, I presume, because the work is very necessary at Little Current. The vessels used in that part of the country are of much greater draught than formerly, and this is the only shallow point on the lake for 250 miles, between Collingwood and Sault Ste. Marie. The deepening of this channel would render it available for the larger class of vessels that ply in those waters at present.

Mr. BEATY. With regard to the item of $12,500 for Toronto harbor, I would like to know whether the sum of $5,000 voted last year for the examination of the harbor, to determine what is necessary for its preservation, is still to be used—whether it is proposed in addition to this $5,000?

Mr. LANGEVIN. It is in addition to the $5,000 of last year. That vote is available, and will be used for the purpose of obtaining an examination of the harbor. Up to the present year the entrance to the harbor was by way of the Queen's wharf towards the other end of the harbor. It had a width of perhaps 250 feet, and the depth of the water was only fourteen feet. That depth was found insufficient, and the cry all round was: "Give us a deeper channel." We found that in order to deepen it we would have to make cuttings out of very hard rock, and necessarily at a great expense. My engineers made an examination and survey of the harbor, and they found that the channel made a sort of semi-circle, and that if, instead of continuing the dredging where it had been going on, the work was done at the other end of the semi-circle, a much deeper channel could be obtained. They found that the sand and other materials between the new and the old channels would disappear and leave a basin which would afford ample harbor accommodation. It is with that view that the work is now being carried on with very perceptible advantage over the work of previous years. I do not blame previous Governments for carrying on those works, as they were proper works to be done; but we have found that better navigation can be secured in another direction. It is the intention to have a thorough examination of the harbor, after the engineer who will be entrusted with the work has examined all reports which have previously been made on the subject, and he will then make recommendations as to the best means of preventing the destruction of the harbor by the gradual washing away of the island. The engineer who is charged with this duty is Captain Eads, an engineer of high eminence in the United States, in connection with works of this kind. It was under his direction that the mouths of the Mississippi River which were formerly so shallow that large vessels could not enter, has been so improved that the largest vessels can enter the river. At present Captain Eads is in consultation with the Mexican Government upon important works, but immediately after his return he will devote himself to an examination of the various reports which have been made upon Toronto harbor. The hon. gentleman may be assured that this matter has not been lost sight of. I consider it one of the most important works in my department, and one which must not be undertaken without the fullest investigation and favorable reports from the best engineers.

Mr. POUPORE. How is it that the item granted last year, of $8,000 for a bridge at Des Joachims Rapids, has not been revoted this year? It is not expended yet, and may not be expended before the 30th of June next.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The Ontario and Quebec Legislature have granted votes for this bridge, and the Quebec Government have already put their vote at our disposal. The Ontario Government, with commendable prudence, no doubt, have thought better to wait until they saw our plans. I do not find fault with that; they have voted the money and they want to know what is going to be done with it. Therefore I have caused plans to be prepared and forwarded to them, and I am expecting an answer every day. I have no doubt they will soon place the money at my disposal, and I shall call for tenders and the work will be proceeded with. My engineers thought we might build the work without calling for a re-vote. That question is now to be considered for the Supplementary Estimates, and if we find there is no risk in that direction we may ask for a re-vote of the whole or a portion of the money. I will now answer the question of my hon. friend for Algoma (Mr. Dawson), since I had not the information when he asked the question. For Little Current we have expended $2,500 last season, and the balance is to be expended this year. Therefore, we shall not require a re-vote. We are asking for $5,000 for the removal of a reef in the River Ottawa below the Union Suspension Bridge. By removing this rock we shall get a better channel and prevent the current from injuring the wharves. We shall then have smooth water along the wharves where vessels may lay.

Mr. CAMERON (South Huron). In regard to the vote of $8,000 for Goderich, I wish to ask a question. During last summer several engineers of the Department of Public Works were making a survey of Goderich harbor. Was the object to extend the north pier with a view of preventing the filling up of the harbor which takes place every year? I would also like to know if the engineers have made a report.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The engineer I sent there was Mr. Gray, and he has made his report. This vote is in consequence of information we have about this harbor. We intend to put in another pier which will prevent the beach, and consequently the harbor, from being destroyed, as it has been lately.

118. Harbors and Rivers (Manitoba). $12,000 00

In answer to Mr. SCHULTZ,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The $7,000 for the mouth of Red River, is for the purpose of dredging the channel to the width of forty feet and to a depth of eight feet below the mouth of the Red River, the said channel to be cut for a distance of half-a-mile across the bar.

Mr. RYAN (Marquette). I see there is an estimate of $4,000 for the examination of the question of overflow in the Fairford and Partridge Cross River. It would be more satisfactory to the people whose lands are inundated to have the work actually done.

Mr. SCHULTZ. I understand that the Local Government had, either concurrently with the Dominion Government, or on their own account, made an examination of this matter last summer. If that is the case, it seems to me the vote of $4,000, slightly increased, would go very far to remove the obstruction at Lake Winnipegosis, which is doubtless the cause of the overflow.

Mr. LANGEVIN. This is a very important question for that region; but we cannot rush into the expenditure without being sure of what we are doing. The Chief Engineer estimates the cost of removing the boulders and other obstructions at $80,000. This estimate includes $34,000 for a dredge, a steam tug and three scows, which could be used again. In a work of such magnitude we require a little time to examine before rushing into the work.

Mr. RYAN (Marquette). If the examination should prove that, with a moderate expenditure, you could reduce the water level of the lake and prevent the overflow, would you be in a position to do so during the coming season?

Mr. LANGEVIN. No; we could not do so unless Parliament put the money at our disposal for that purpose.

119. Improvement of River Saskatchewan in North-West Territories $20,000 00

Mr. LANGEVIN. The improvements in that river will cost between $31,000 and $32,000, of which the Government will pay $20,000, and the Hudson's Bay Company $12,000, and we expect to obtain a depth of nine feet at high water, and between four and five feet at low water.

120. Harbors and Rivers (British Columbia) $2,500 00

Mr. BUNSTER. It will be seen at a glance what injustice is done British Columbia by the small sum which is asked for these improvements. The paltry sum of $500 is not sufficient for the work on Courtenay River; $5,000 should be appropriated for that work.

Mr. LANGEVIN replied that was all the engineer estimated would be required to move the snags from that river.

122. Dredging $122,700 00

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask whether it is proposed to take any portion of the appropriation of $12,000 appearing under the head of Ontario, and devote it to dredging the north branch of the Sydenham River. The late Administration had dredged the east branch of the river. The dredge was then removed to Kincardine, in consequence of a storm having occurred, and it did not return to the north branch. Both rivers are naturally very deep streams in proportion to the width, and a large trade has always been carried on. A considerable quantity of timber has been sunk in the streams, and silt has collected; so that while formerly there was a depth of ten feet, it was now less than six.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The reason why the work was not proceeded with was that it could not be done by an ordinary dredge, which was unable to work among logs and slabs, packed as hard as rock.

Mr. MILLS. The use of a little dynamite would obviate the difficulty.

126. Miscellaneous $80,682 00

In answer to Mr. ANGLIN,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. member for Gloucester will be glad to know that the breakwater at Grande Anse, Gloucester, has been repaired.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). Will the item of $5,000 complete the work at Fort Dufferin, Negro Point, New Brunswick?

Mr. LANGEVIN. Yes.

60. Brigade Majors, salaries, transport expenses, &c. $14,400 00

Mr. ANGLIN. With regard to the item of $14,000 for Brigade Majors, salaries, transport expenses, and so forth, I am told by competent authorities that dissatisfaction exists in connection with the removal of those officers from one place to another, which is stated to be wholly uncalled for, hurtful to the service, and expensive as well.

Mr. CARON. I think the principle is universally recognised in military matters, that it is a benefit so far as the efficiency of the service is concerned, to remove the staff from one station to another. This policy was adopted previous to my assuming charge of the Militia Department; but it is one I entirely approve of. It is to the advantage of the efficiency of the force to move those staff officers from one place to another. Of course it has involved some little expense, which I think was necessary in view of the benefits thereby secured.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Why has not the same been applied to the Brigade Major, in Toronto. It is very extraordinary, if I am correctly informed, that he has not been removed.

Mr. CARON. Colonel Dennison has been promoted to the rank of Adjutant-General and allowed to remain as such in Toronto.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That appears a very extraordinary proceeding. There were very great disorders in connection with that department in Toronto. It appears an extraordinary way of administering the service, that the officer under whose management, apparently, several of the Toronto regiments got into a very bad state, should be promoted. I suppose it is as a kind of reward for those disorders.

Mr. CARON. He is not solely responsible, because he was acting as Brigade Major at the time. One of the reasons why the department has not removed this officer from Toronto is that in a couple of years he will have attained the age at which his services will be dispensed with; and it was considered to be inexpedient to remove him for that short period, at considerable expense.

64. Drill pay and all other incidental expenses connected with the drill and training of the Militia $250,000 00

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). With regard to this item, I am very glad the hon. Minister has increased the expenditure for the drill of the volunteers, because a great deal of complaint was heard last year on account of a new arrangement in connection with their training. The rule adopted last year was to pay the men for only six days' work, though actually nine days on duty. I suppose the hon. Minister has taken this extra amount to enable him to pay the men on their way to camp and on their return, as well as for the Sunday in camp. The allowance made to the volunteers is a very small item in the whole expenditure upon Militia; it scarcely exceeds 25 per cent. of the amount which is spent for the maintenance of the force. I think it is a great grievance that these men who are called away from their ordinary avocations, at which they are, perhaps, earning from $1.25 to $2.00 per day, should be dealt with in a niggardly spirit. We know that large drafts have to be made upon the military enthusiasm of our young men, to keep the force in good order, and if they are dealt with, in a spirit of niggardliness, that enthusiasm will likely be diminished. I notice that Major-General Luard makes reference to that fact in his report. I have no doubt that the hon. Minister is anxious to keep up the esprit de corps of the force, and treat the men kindly and liberally; and it certainly should be the policy of the House to treat them in that spirit, as some inducement to the men to leave their ordinary avocations to perform their military duties. Perhaps the hon. Minister will assure me that the policy of last year is not to be continued this year.

Mr. CARON. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that we should offer every possible encouragement to our militia force, so far as the means at our disposal will allow. The increase in the proposed expenditure is a large one, and, perhaps, the Committee will allow me briefly to explain the changes which have taken place in the policy of last year. It is contemplated that there will be 20,000 officers and men and 1,500 horses to take part in the annual training for 1881-82, and 17,000 men in brigade camps during twelve days. During these twelve days, of course, the officers and men will receive rank pay for every day they are in service.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Going and returning?

Mr. CARON. Yes; and of course the cost of transport, forage, and everything of that kind will be allowed. I have always considered that the system of having only four days' drill was really spending money after a most useless fashion; and I could not have made up my mind to ask Parliament for an appropriation for such a purpose. We know that when a lot of new men go into camp, it takes more than four days to give them even a conception of what drill really means. I consider that twelve days is really as short a time as we could allow with any reasonable expectation that the men would acquire military training, or with the hope of achieving something for the money we expend, and I was happy to be able to recommend this increase for the purpose of giving a longer drill than in former years. Moreover, it is contemplated, as I stated before, to have brigade camps for 17,000 officers, non-commissioned officers and men. It has not been altogether decided how many camps we will be able to have for the money which is asked from Parliament; but I think very likely there will be four in Ontario, three in Quebec, one in New Brunswick, one in Nova Scotia, and a battalion camp in Prince Edward Island. Three thousand men will be drilled at local headquarters, at the time most convenient to them. Those who take an interest in our volunteers know, that, for some of the city corps, it is a matter of impossibility for them to drill in brigade camps, for the simple reason that the season of the year at which such drill is held is so inconvenient for young men employed in banks and offices, that many of them cannot leave their occupations for twelve days' drill. I think we will be safe in allowing $3,000 as margin for these men belonging to city corps, who will have their drill during the winter months, when they can afford the necessary time.

Mr. THOMPSON. How long will they drill?

Mr. CARON. Twelve days. The officers will be paid $1 a day, and the men 50 cents. Those who drill in camps will receive the rank pay.

Mr. McCALLUM. I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to the vote, but there is certainly a feeling amongst the people that we do not get value for the money we spend upon the militia. The question among the people is, whether the volunteer system could not be better organized than it is at present. I am not speaking of my own feelings in the matter, but I have received several letters on the subject. I am quite certain that our volunteer system is not now so complete as it was in 1854, 1865 and 1866, though it costs the same amount of money. I have been urged to ask for the appointment of a Special Committee to inquire into the whole matter, and next year I may move for such a Committee. The feeling among the people is, that the volunteers get but a small portion of the grant, the bulk of it going to the staff. The people would not grudge the money if we got good value for it.

Mr. BUNSTER. We have two companies of volunteers at Nanaimo, and, year after year, they find fault with me for not properly representing their case to the Government. There are two towns about six miles apart—Nanaimo and Wellington—and we should have two drill sheds. I should like the hon. Minister to visit our Province and see what we require, as he did in regard to Manitoba last year. I believe when the Government come to know the importance of this district they will grant two drill sheds, one at Nanaimo and the other at Wellington. The property owners in those towns will give the sites for those buildings and probably contribute something towards their erection.

Mr. CARON. It would afford me great pleasure, if I could, to ask a sum of money to build a drill shed at Nanaimo, but the Estimates were already so considerable, and my hon. friend mentioned it to me so late in the Session, that I fear I cannot do so now. Besides, we should have first to communicate with the municipalities about it.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). The force up there would scarcely require a drill shed. I notice that on the occasion of the inspection by the Deputy Adjutant-General, the force consisted of one officer and 16 men.

Mr. BUNSTER. That requires explanation. The captain of the company was against me in an election, but his men were for me, and they would not turn out. I pledge my word and honor there are two companies. There are 72 men in one and 68 in the other.

Mr. OGDEN. Could not the Government House be used as a drill shed? If there is but one officer and 16 men, perhaps the Governor would kindly take them into his back parlour. I know there are hon. gentlemen in this House who are aspiring to that position, and I know they would not refuse to give the Government House for that purpose.

Mr. BUNSTER. If the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Ogden) knows no better than to make a personal attack on me, when I have been so well supported by hon. members in this House, I shall consider it as a personal insult. If he wants to make an attack on me personally he can do it outside the floor of this House, probably he will find just as good game as he wants.

Mr. BLAKE. Let my hon. friend call out his volunteers.

Mr. BUNSTER. I am advocating the interests of men owning allegiance to the British flag. In asking for these drill sheds I know I shall have the assistance of the senior member for Victoria (Sir John A. Macdonald), because we have just as loyal men there as in any other part of the Dominion.

Mr. DAWSON. I think the militia force should be distributed over the whole country as fairly as possible. In the large district of Algoma, with a frontage of 900 miles, we have only one company, and I think we should be allowed one or two more. There is a company at Sault Ste. Marie, and 300 miles west of that, at Prince Arthur's Landing, Thunder Bay, we have good material for a company. In fact, the young men there have formed themselves into a company, and all they want is the necessary outfit. Again, a little to the east of Sault Ste. Marie and on the north coast of Lake Huron, there is a very considerable population and they are anxious to form a company there. On one part on the Manitoulin Island there is a dense population, and it would be but fair they should have a company. I hope these circumstances will be taken into consideration, and that, as far as they will permit, the people may be allowed to form companies.

Mr. CARON. It is well that there should be a redistribution of the force as far as possible. It would be useless to attempt to increase the force. Out of the 42,000 men we can only afford to drill 22,000 men. My hon. friend has mentioned one locality where there should be a larger number of volunteers than there is now. I hope when the redistribution takes place it will be possible to afford an opportunity to the hon. gentleman to have in that locality a company of volunteers.

Mr. McCUAIG. I have received a communication from a gentleman who has taken a great interest in the success of our Rifle Association in my country. As it is short I will read it:

“PICTON, 2nd March, 1881.

“MY DEAR SIR,—At the annual meeting of the ‘County of Prince Edward Rifles Association’ held this day, I was requested to write to you to use your influence with the Government, to reduce the price of the ammunition used for target practice by rifle associations. The present price is $16 per 1,000 rounds, and when freight and return freight on the boxes are added it brings the price up to $17.50 per 1,000 rounds. In order to make good marksmen it is necessary that a good deal of practice should be had, but at the present price of ammunition it is very expensive. Our association expended last year over 26,000 rounds, costing the members over $416; this is rather expensive; we think we ought to get it at about $10 per 1,000, even should the Government lose on it. I hope you will use your influence in this matter and induce others to assist you and oblige,

Out of this sum of $964 the Government only contributed $75. I am sorry to hear the disparaging remarks of the hon. member from Monck (Mr. McCallum). Without an efficient staff, it is impossible for us to have an efficient body of men. I notice with regret that whenever these Estimates are brought before the House, there seems to be a disposition to deal illiberally with the militia of the country, the only force we have to depend upon in cases of difficulty. I am sure the country generally are most willing to support our militia in every way, and above all, to keep up an efficient staff, without which we cannot expect to secure a valuable service.

Mr. CARON. My hon. friend will remember that we give a certain amount every year to the rifle associations and that we sell ammunition to them at cost price.

68. Royal Military College $59,000 00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think the money we expend on military instruction is the best money expended in connection with the militia vote, whether that money is expended in drilling our volunteers, in the Royal Military College, or in the maintenance of the Schools of Gunnery. I am not sure, however, but that the Minister of Militia requires to avoid overloading the Royal Military College with expenditure. It was started with the object of giving our young men a thorough military knowledge—an education that would enable them to discharge the highest duties of military officers. The cost of the staff, after the college had been in operation for a couple of years, was only $13,946. In 1880, it had increased to $26,680. I have no doubt, on account of the increased attendance, at the college, a larger staff may be necessary, but its popularity may be affected unless care is taken to prevent its being overloaded with officers. I would also suggest to the Minister of Militia that some provision should be made for our cadets in the Royal Military College. I notice that the hon. member for West Durham has a notice on the paper on this subject, and also that the Major-General calls attention to it. Lieutenant-Colonel Hewitt, the gentleman in charge of the College, in his report, remarks:

“Should the Government, business firms or professional men require men specially qualified in any particular branch—for instance, mathematics, physics, chemistry, civil engineering, architecture, modern languages or drawing—graduates of the Royal Military College proved to be specially qualified in any of these points, and with the additional assurance of character and physique, can be selected from among its graduates with certainty.”

Again he says:

“The cadets have gained their entrance to the college by open competition throughout the Dominion, without favoritism, personal or political, they have improved, maintained or lost their original position by four years’ keen competition among themselves, and I therefore trust that, as it is not possible for Canada to afford permanent military employment to all the graduates of the college, she will employ those (at least the best of them) who do not obtain it, in such other capacities as their college records denote their being most fitted for.”

When the hon. member for Lambton introduced his Bill for the establishment of that college, he anticipated that a number of cadets would be so trained that they would be fit to be placed on the staff of civil engineers. Probably the requirements of the Government for that service will be less in the future than they have been in the past; and as that revenue is, to a great extent, closed, it would be well for the Government to make some provision whereby a certain number of cadets might be appointed to positions in the Civil Service, for which their intellectual and physical training would qualify them. I think they would certainly improve the standing of the Civil Service, and their appointments would be inducements for them to remain in the country. The commissions in the army offered by the English Government, although a kind offer on their part, are of little advantage to us. It simply means that the young men we educate serve the British Government outside of Canada. I should prefer to have their services retained in the country. If the Military College does what I believe it can do, train men well physically and intellectually, it is a great pity our country should be drained of the young men thus trained, and whose services would be of very great value to us, if we only knew where to place them.

Mr. CARON. It is very important we should keep down the expense of the Military College as much as possible,

In the first years after the establishment of the Military College, the amount of money expended for salaries was not as considerable as it is to-day. We had only a few cadets and a small number of professors. All who take an interest in the college know that the professors are men of a very high order of education, who have distinguished themselves in the different branches of the service, and who give the best possible instruction to the cadets under their care. The hon. gentleman also referred to a question which is certainly one of very great importance, that of making provision for the cadets. The first step has been made in the right direction by opening the two batteries, A and B, to the cadets. That is certainly an inducement which some of our young men are anxious to get. The commissions which I consider were so liberally placed at the disposal of the cadets by the English Government, are to my mind much more important than at first sight would appear. These young men acquire a great deal of practical experience by serving in the ranks of the British army, and the fact of their having gone over to England for a few years does not make them cease to be Canadians. All their people and their interests are in Canada, and after a certain number of years they are almost certain to return to Canada, trained men fit for the highest positions on the staff of our force.

Mr. JONES. The hon. Minister of Militia is, I think, not aware of the order passed lately by the British Government, or he would not have said it is well for our cadets to go into the British Service. By that order, our cadets who will have served in the British Service for twenty or thirty years, will not be allowed to receive a pension if they come out to this country and are employed in the Dominion Service. What inducement is there for our cadets, under that law, to enter into the service of the British Government at all. I agree with the hon. member for Middlesex that we must endeavor to give them employment in the country, on our militia staff or in the Civil Service. The following is the order passed by the British Government:—

Royal Warrant, 1881.—Modification.

"After the completion of ten years seconded service under the Dominion Government, Imperial officers may continue to hold their colonial appointments, but they will be struck off the roll of their regiments."

A gentleman who has written to me says:

"I have served 3½ years. The pension department refuse my pension until I sign a document that I have resigned the Dominion service, and the first month I am not able to sign a certificate that I am not serving the Dominion Government, they will stop my pension."

The British Government will pay £450 to a man for hanging round the clubs, but it must not go to a colonist. There is another communication addressed to Captain P. Lewis, who is Artillery Inspector in the Maritime Provinces:

"HORSE GUARDS, WAR OFFICE,
"25th January, 1881.

"Sir,—I have the honor to acquaint you that your retirement upon a pension of £200 per annum will shortly be announced in the London Gazette, but no instructions will be issued for the payment thereof until after a notification has been received that you have resigned your appointment under the Canadian Government.

"I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servant,
"G. G. ARBUTHNOT,
"Deputy-Adjutant General."

Capt. Lewis then handed in his resignation:

"2, ESPLANADE, TENBY, SOUTH WALES,
"26th January, 1881.

"Sir,—Having applied for retirement, with pension, from the Royal Artillery, and being informed by the Horse Guards authorities that I should not be permitted to draw the pension whilst serving under the Canadian Government, I have now the honor to request you will be so good as to forward to the Major Commanding the Militia this, the tender of my resignation of the appointment at present held by me as Adjutant Inspector of Artillery for the Maritime Provinces."

From what I have heard, I believe this order comes from some small man in the Horse Guards' service who has some enmity to us because, instead of going to Woolwich, we have been endeavoring to manufacture our own guns and have bought some Palliser guns. It is not because the British Government want officers, because it was only within the last few years they issued the order that after twenty years' service officers must retire.

Mr. McCUAIG. A false impression has been left on the House by these remarks of the hon. member for Leeds. The British Government does not choose to pay a man a pension when he is earning pay in the Dominion. I think it very proper that if an officer, who is no longer able to do service in England and receives compensation in the shape of a pension, accepts employment in a British possession, his pension should cease. But the moment he loses his position in Canada or resigns it, it is but right that the English pension should be revived. I entirely agree with the hon. Minister of Militia that it is very important for us to have our young men enter the English army, for they would become most valuable men to the British possessions, and would voluntarily return to defend them in case of danger. I have a very strong feeling indeed in favor of the militia service, and I hope Parliament will deal liberally with it.

Mr. SKINNER. I have had much pleasure in visiting the Royal Military College during several years. I have seen the working of the institution, and have one of my boys there. I must say, with all due deference to several hon. members who have spoken on the subject, that I know of no institution in this country as well deserving of the money spent on it, and if five times as much was spent a good return would be given to the Dominion. I desire to read the following remarks from the General's report; and although Generals have hitherto been brought from the old country, I hope the day will come when they will be educated by our Military College. The General says:

"It afforded me much pleasure to see the Royal Military College at Kingston. It appears to me an admirable institution under a most able commandant, Lt.-Colonel Hewett, R.E. One point regarding it I wish to bring prominently before you. Being quartered in Canada previous to the establishment of the college, I remember that its object was then stated to be, to train young men for civil occupations, at the same time imparting military acquirements, so that in after life, though employed in civil occupations, they might, if the emergency arose, make their military training useful to the State. It seems to me that this has not been sufficiently borne in mind, for the highest prizes now offered for the emulation of cadets are not civil appointments in the Dominion, to which the college and cadets themselves belong, but commissions in the Imperial Army, given by the Government of England. I venture to suggest for consideration whether the original intention would not be more beneficially carried out if the first prizes for successful cadets were four civil appointments in their own country, leaving for cadets of more roving inclination, and as second prizes, the four military commissions. Cadets graduating at the Royal Military College would, from their disciplinary education, become very valuable in civil appointments. The college requires also ventilation and additional rooms for the cadets and professors."

With respect to young lads in this country, they require just as much discipline as anything else, and that cannot be better obtained than at the Military College. The pupils have to be gentlemen or they cannot stay there. I hope the Minister of Militia will not be deterred by the remarks of the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), but will spend as much money as the country can afford to support the institution. It appears that pupils will have to pay $300 a year, and therefore the college should soon become self-sustaining. I sent my son there at considerable expense to myself, because I desired that he should take his position in the militia, or any other like capacity. I intend to send two other sons there, and I hope the Minister of Militia will do the best he can to secure their proper education in the college.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think it right to say a few words in respect to the Military College vote in consequence of the remarks made by the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), wherein he seemed to think the staff of the College has been unnecessarily increased in cost during the last two or three years. I am sure if he will reflect he will see that the cost of the staff a few years ago when the college was started could not be expected to be so great as that of the present day when the college is in full working order. I think the college has not failed in any degree to give the country the value which it was thought it should render when it was originated. If the work done by the staff be compared with the Toronto University or any other Canadian University, and the total cost of the two staffs be compared, the comparison will be in favor of the Military College. The salaries of the professors at Toronto University aggregate considerably over $35,000, whereas the salaries at the Kingston College amount to only $26,000. Then the staff of professors of Toronto University teach only five months in the year; the Kingston professors teach ten months in the year, and the professors are not only professors, but do the duty of tutors, and are with the students from early morning to ten o'clock at night. I know from experience that the staff at Kingston is as hard working and does its duty as faithfully as any staff could possibly do. There is one feature connected with the college which was contemplated when the institution was originally proposed by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), and it is one that has not been carried out, yet I hope it will be carried out at an early date, thereby making the college much more popular throughout the country and among the military officers for whom the benefit was intended when the institution was organized—I refer to the formation of classes for the instruction of military officers. That is distinctly the clause in the Act authorizing the establishment of the college. A class should be formed, as soon as the requisite staff is at the college, for the instruction of militia officers who could attend for three, four or six months. That would make the college much more useful to the militia than at present, also more popular and more creditable to the department. The Government should ask a vote to provide the necessary barrack accommodation; at present the students are crowded together, in some cases eight or ten in a room, and classrooms have to be used as bed-rooms, to the injury of the expensive instruments which have to be left in the hall and scattered throughout the building, also additional accommodation is needed for the health of the students and the proper maintenance of the college. I think that the commissioning of cadets in the Imperial service will not deprive Canada of their services. They can thus complete their military education at no expense to Canada, to which they will gladly return should she need their services. But we ought to keep as many cadets as possible in this country by finding employment for them in the public service, to which they would prove a benefit. It would be very much better thus to provide for them, than to give the appointments, as both parties culpably did, to political incapables. No vote will be better thought of than this $75,000 increase for drill pay of the men who, it has been hitherto considered, did not receive enough while the staff and other paraphernalia received too much.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think our cadets should receive more favors or better chances of public employment than the graduates of any other of our respectable colleges. Nor do I think that the interests of the country call for an increase of the expense of this Military College. There has been too much money spent in drill sheds and other militia objects not greatly required.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose this college costs the Government a great deal of money. The military establishment of a similar character in another country has been mainly established to educate promising young men, the sons of poor parents. I suppose the object of this college is the same. I should expect that those recommending young men to this college, would be very careful to favor meritorious persons not able to procure an education otherwise.

If we are putting this large sum in the Estimates for the purpose of educating those able to obtain an education otherwise, I think we are hardly acting fairly to the country. If I find that that is largely the case, I certainly shall consider it my duty to take a very different view of this matter.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is not the case. The cadets are mainly the sons of farmers. The first three graduates of last year were sons of farmers.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The hon. member for Niagara is wrong if he supposes the college is filled by the nominative system. It is, I believe, the competitive system that is followed. Either this college ought to be abolished or sustained. If it is doing any good, or deserves the support of Parliament, it ought to be sustained, in which case the suggestion of the member for Frontenac should be followed, and proper accommodation for the cadets provided. If Parliament thinks it ought not to be maintained, the whole of this expense is useless. If we are to maintain the college, instead of objecting to any reasonable improvement, we should place it in an efficient and proper condition.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I was slightly misunderstood in the remarks I made when the Committee were discussing the item of the Royal Military College at Kingston, for although I referred to the increased expenditure, I did so with a view of protecting the Minister against what might become a public outcry, and of cautioning him therefore against an increased expenditure. We have here a large item of expenditure for these batteries, and there is a radical defect existing with regard to this appropriation. As the member for Victoria said, candidates for admission into the Military College are admitted through a competitive examination, and with regard to those of A and B Batteries they are admitted simply on the recommendation of a Deputy Adjutant General or some other officer, and without any physical or intellectual qualification being required. The result of this system is a serious loss to the country. By a return which the Minister of Militia was kind enough to give me since 1871, when the batteries were established, 2,468 persons were admitted, and of these only 859 were certificated. Since the establishment of these batteries we have expended over a million dollars on the education of these 859 persons, and every person who has been certificated in one of these schools has cost the country $1,167. Now, admitting that the course of instruction there is very good, and that these are valuable men when they are trained, I think the Minister of Militia could so arrange the instructions there so that the same amount of training could be got for less money. I think the difficulty would be largely remedied by requiring an entrance examination and some inspection of the men before entering. The very fact that there have been so many admissions and so few certificates, shows that the system of admission is loose. I was told of the case of a gentleman, living in a city not a thousand miles from here, who, being out of employment one winter, got admitted through an officer to the school of gunnery at Kingston. He spent the greater portion of a year there, drew his pay at fifty cents a day which was more than he could have made by hanging round the city, but the country paid the expense. There is another suggestion which I should like to make to the Minister. We have opened schools for military education at Toronto, Quebec and Halifax; they do not cost much, but I think if A and B Batteries were used for the purpose of instruction the expenses would be obviated, and I think men would get better instructors. Since Confederation we have expended over $13,000,000 on the militia force, and what have we for that expenditure? The hon. gentleman does not venture to say that we have a well-drilled force; we could not expect it; but if we are to promote anything like military education, if we cannot thoroughly drill the volunteers with the small amount of money at our command, we should see at least that we are thoroughly drilling a certain number who will be able to take charge of them in case of an emergency. The only protection this country can have will be well-drilled officers who shall be able to take charge of the men in the event of an emergency arising; and our next look-out should be to have these officers drilled at the smallest possible expense to the country. I think that can be done in connection with those two batteries; and if the Minister of Militia, who seems so anxious to improve the force, will devote his attention to this matter, I think he will benefit the country and will render himself exceedingly useful in the department upon whose duties he has entered with so much enthusiasm.

Mr. CARON. I cannot view the matter in the same light as the hon. member for West Middlesex. The hon. gentleman must remember that these men, besides taking charge of these two batteries, are maintained for the purpose of looking after important fortifications in Quebec and Kingston. I need not call the attention of the hon. gentleman—for he has evidently studied the matter thoroughly—to the importance in a country like ours of having a large force of artillery to protect our rivers and other commercial highways. I think these two batteries form a nucleus of a system of defence which will be of the greatest importance to the Dominion.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman at what period of the year it is proposed to have drill in camp.

Mr. CARON. We intend to have them as near the first of July as possible.

Mr. THOMPSON. Are the officers to have the pay of their rank during these camps?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have had correspondence with a captain in the militia force who states that in 1875 an order of the department was passed that a captain should rank as brevet after five years' service. He says that subsequently that order was changed to ten years. He thinks this arrangement is unfair to those who enlisted under the five-year regulation. Would the Minister state whether the new order applies to those who enlisted under the old arrangement?

Mr. CARON. The change the hon. gentleman has referred to has taken place. It is made ten years instead of five, and applies to the whole force.

Mr. ROSS. Is it the intention this year, in the selection of the Wimbledon team, to select the best men by competition out of the whole Dominion, or to select them on Provincial lines?

Mr. CARON. That is a matter under the control of the Association and not of the department.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The best men are to be selected from the whole Dominion.

Mr. ELLIOTT. The department should select the most convenient season of the year for holding the camps. In Ontario the most convenient month would be June, as the labor on farms is then the least pressing.

Mr. CARON. The date is not distinctly fixed, and before fixing it the views of the different localities where camps are to be held will be consulted.

153. Marine and Immigrant Hospitals $56,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not think this differs materially from what we had before, yet the details ought to be given. Up to the present time the custom has always been to give in detail the mode in which you are going to distribute this vote. When you are taking a lump vote and giving the whole to a particular Province, it is a very different thing to giving the details. For instance, in 1878 a certain sum appears to have been assigned to Nova Scotia, and a certain sum to Halifax and St. John.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is the same as last year. We are in the habit of giving the details, but as the amount and the distribution are the same, the details have not been given.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. But you have power under a vote of this kind to assign the whole to a particular Province, which you had not before. There were four distinct votes taken before.

Mr. MILLS. Each appropriation ought to have been designated. We know that there was a time in England, when the whole subsidy was voted in a single sum, and the Administration could distribute it just as they pleased. It seems to me that if this House is going to exercise proper control over the expenditure, and if the office of Auditor General is to be of any value, the Estimates ought to be given to this House in as much detail as possible. One of these institutions may have expended upon it, by the want of proper care, a much larger sum than the Government contemplated, while a smaller sum would have to be given to the other institutions.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was given in extended detail before, but as the amounts are the same I suppose the department did not think it was necessary. Before concurrence, I will submit the details for each service as formerly.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman take care that the vote is taken that way?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Because unless the vote is taken separately, there is no security that there shall be economy in each establishment.

175. Customs—Salaries and consequent expenses of the several ports..... 732,119 00

Mr. BLAKE. In Toronto there appears to be an increase. It seems to be more expensive to conduct that office when you save the expense of a collector than when you pay him a salary. I believe for a long time there has been no collector there. Are we not going to have one?

Mr. BOWELL. I think so.

Mr. BLAKE. How soon?

Mr. BOWELL. As soon as the Government think it necessary to put one there.

Mr. BLAKE. When was the late collector suspended, and how soon will there be one appointed?

Mr. BOWELL. The late collector was suspended twelve months ago, and the surveyor has been acting in his place. The apparent increase in the service of the Toronto Custom House arises from an error of $1,000 in the Estimates of last year, the transfer of a clerk from Ottawa to Toronto, and the appointment of some temporary officers on the permanent list. The present estimate provides for the salary of a collector. If he is not appointed, of course that will not be expended.

Mr. BLAKE. But the fact that the duties of that important part can for twelve months be discharged efficiently, and without loss to the public, without a collector, by the surveyor discharging the duties of both offices, would seem to indicate that the staff is too large. If, on the other hand, the public service is injured by this officer not being able efficiently to discharge the duties of both of those offices, then there ought to be an appointment. In any case, it seems to me there ought to be a change.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not sure that the public business has been injured. While the surveyor was acting as collector, somebody else was appointed to perform the duty of surveyor.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman's explanation is not very satisfactory. It seems to me that office should not have been left so long vacant, and it ought to be early filled. I do not think it could have been kept open so long except from political motives, or motives not connected with the public service.

Mr. ANGLIN. I hope the hon. gentleman will have very little time to grieve over this matter, and that the office will be filled at a very early date. This is one of the items of public expenditure about which, in former days, a great deal was said. When the hon. member for St. John was head of the Customs Department, he was attacked year after year, because, as it was alleged, he had increased the expenditure of this department or had not reduced it as he ought, and we naturally expected, when hon. gentlemen opposite came to office, that the expenditure would have been greatly reduced. Instead of that it has been increased, so that this year it is only $8,000 more than the estimate of the current year, and the estimate for next year is over $26,000 more than the estimate for 1877-8, the last year the department was under the control of the hon. member for St. John.

Mr. JONES. What revenue had you?

Mr. ANGLIN. The extent of revenue did not very materially affect the cost of collection. The actual quantity of goods imported was nearly as much as in previous years, the falling off in amount being due to shrinkage of values. And last year the revenue was one of the smallest we have had for many years. We had the largest deficit last year we had for many years. The quantity imported this year is not larger than last year's, but prices have advanced. That is the reason the revenue has increased considerably. There is one factor under the present fiscal policy that would justify increased expenditure—that is, the encouragement given to smuggling by the enormous increase in the rate of taxation; but if one-half of what we hear of the smuggling carried on is true, I do not think the hon. Minister has sufficiently provided for that portion of the expenditure. The fact is patent that while these hon. gentlemen when in Opposition talked as if it were possible to reduce largely the expenditure of the Customs Department, they have gone on increasing the cost until it is $25,000 or $26,000 more than it was under the late Government.

Mr. BOWELL. Had the hon. gentleman taken the trouble to enquire into the amount of work done, he would not have made the assertion he has made. The management of the examining warehouses has added a very large sum to the expenditure. In Montreal there was an increase of 112 vessels arrived at that port and increased tonnage, 74,453 tons, and every vessel had to be examined by one or two Customs officers. The hon. Minister then enumerated the various items of additional expenditure. I am convinced that smuggling does not exist to the extent represented. There is one great difficulty we have to contend with, and that is the question of valuation. We would prefer to be punishing severely, so far as we possibly could, persons who falsify their entries.

Sir RICHARD J. CARLWRIGHT. I dare say the hon. gentleman is taking all reasonable pains to keep down the expenses of his department; but the fact remains that they have greatly increased since the time my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Burpee) was Minister of Customs. The fact that the present Minister is obliged to ask $732,000 for this service at present, is the clearest imaginable proof of the gross injustice and unfairness of the accusations made against my hon. friend from St. John. With regard to smuggling, I am informed that the officers of the department must have misinformed the Minister of Customs seriously as to its extent. Some of the most prominent merchants in Canada, who have no political leanings, have told me they are convinced that very large amounts of smuggled goods of various kinds are brought into Canada from the States, and that to their knowledge large quantities are sold at rates at which they could not possibly be disposed of if they paid duty.

Mr. JONES (South Leeds). I have heard something said about the Collector at Montreal going to be shortly superannuated. He is one of the best officers in the Dominion, and his health does not require his superannuation. I think he should be retained in his office.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). The number of vessels that arrived in our ports in 1878-79 was larger than that of 1879-80, if I am not mistaken. I can understand when there is a great increase of vessels in Montreal, additional hands would be required. But an increase in the amount of revenue need not necessitate a great increase in the cost of its collection. There is a number of small ports in the Dominion at which the revenue has greatly declined, yet the expenditure remains the same. So I do not think you can reduce or increase the staff as the revenue fluctuates. But this Government expected a general decrease of importations. If such a decrease occurred, should we not expect a decrease in the cost of collections of revenues? The expense in Montreal must be larger now than in 1878, with the general warehouses. I think there is every reason to believe that the expenditure in that case would be largely increased. But I do not think that the increase of revenue should necessarily involve a large increase for collection.

Mr. ANGLIN. The Minister of Customs scarcely replied to my statement. I took the total amount in gross for the two years without going into the details. I said nothing particularly about the port of Montreal; but now that it has been mentioned, I may say that in former days, when the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Burpee) was Minister of Customs, and when he transferred the expense of warehousing in Montreal from the individual merchants—when he engaged a permanent staff of men employed from day to day, he was constantly charged by his opponents, and especially by the hon. gentleman himself, with extravagance in expenditure, though he showed clearly how the increases had taken place, and that they were necessary. This charge was repeated hundreds of times, though the hon. gentleman who was then Minister gave a perfectly unimpeachable explanation of all the increases. The hon. Minister of Customs speaks of the increase in the number of vessels coming into Montreal last year; but that was not caused by any great addition in the imports, but almost entirely by increases in the exports. The imports came chiefly in steamers, the sailing vessels bringing cargoes of the heavier articles, and there was some addition, of course, to the imports of sugar from the West Indies, though the great bulk of it did not come in that way. I do not say that the increases may not be necessary, but I want to point out, particularly, that whereas under the late Government, charges were made of incompetency and neglect of duty, because of the amount expended on the collection of those revenues, yet these charges were absolutely disproved by the figures of the hon. gentleman who was so ready to charge us with extravagance.

Mr. BOWELL. Notwithstanding the apparent knowledge which the hon. gentleman has of matters connected with the Customs, he speaks with regard to some matters considerably at random, if he will allow me to use the expression. Previous to the accession of this Government to power, there was no proper and correct method of expenditure at the port of Montreal. At that time, a certain amount was charged for storage and cartage, and the amount which they charged the merchants for cartage was double what they themselves paid. Under the old system they used to insure all the goods as they went into the warehouse, and charge against the merchants the amounts paid to the different insurance companies. The surplus in both these funds was appropriated for the payment of extra services, the balance going to the general revenue. When I found that system prevailing, I at once said to Mr. Simpson that it was not a right system; that he should not dispose of this cash from incidental revenues in the manner then prevailing; but that they should place the money to the credit of the Receiver-General, and charge every dollar that was paid for duty. Under that system as much as $10,000 or $15,000 of these profits were paid for extra expenses and charged against the Department; and that is one reason why the port shows a larger expenditure than under the old regime. The hon. gentleman undertakes to deny what I said about the necessity for the attendance of extra employees at the Grand Trunk sheds at the port of Montreal. I do not think it is necessary for me to stand up and repeat the facts over and over again when an hon. gentleman holding his position, simply asserts that what I stated was not the fact. I may also tell him that there was an increase of from 30 to 40 men when my hon. friend from St. John was about to leave the Government a few years ago. It was an increase which I could not understand then, nor can I understand it now. I could account for a few of them, but not for so large a number. I find it almost impossible to keep the staff within proper limits. Last winter there were men who worked there during the whole season, and I refused to pay them, though I cannot say whether the collector paid them or not. It is a constant fight from the first of January to the last of December, notwithstanding the capabilities of the officer to whom my hon. friend has referred.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). With regard to what the Minister has said with respect to the charges for cartage, he will find that the change he refers to took place prior to our time, and that we entirely dispensed with the system. We found in all the ports throughout the Dominion that the carting was done at the expense of the Government, but in Montreal the carting which the merchants formerly paid, from the vessels to the warehouse, was paid by the Government, the merchants only paying the charges from the warehouses to their own places.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. Minister of Customs misunderstood me, or I think he would not have grown so warm. I do not want to contradict any statement he made, but I want to point out that vessels arriving in ballast, though in much larger number, could not add very materially to the work of the Customs, while vessels arriving laden with dutiable goods would give very much trouble. The hon. Minister made a very peculiar statement. He said that after 1873 there were thirty or forty persons put on the pay-list at the port of Montreal, he cannot tell how. He wishes us to understand they were employed without being required.

Mr. BOWELL. These men are all comfortably provided for inside by the hon. gentlemen opposite. I have not increased the number at that port. The hon. gentleman does not seem to comprehend the difference between clerks in the department and those who have been put on temporarily during the summer. These latter have been increased I admit it.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. gentleman probably intended to say so, but he did not. But I wanted particularly to draw attention to the fact that while the volume of our trade inward has not largely increased—and there is no great necessity for watching the trade outwards—notwithstanding that, the cost of collection of the Customs has very considerably increased.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. BOWELL. How could we keep our statistics if we did not keep account of the exports? You said it was not necessary to look at them.

Mr. ANGLIN. That does not require much trouble.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I see under the head of Nova Scotia that there is a slight increase at Yarmouth.

Mr. BOWELL. This is caused by the transference of two officers. One has been transferred from New Glasgow, at $500, and another, Mr. Bowen, is to be transferred from Cape Breton to Yarmouth. At the Port of Sydney there is a decrease in the amount of salary paid to Bowen, and it is charged to Yarmouth.

Resolutions ordered to be reported; and (at 1:40 o'clock, a.m.,) the House adjourned.

PRAYERS.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I ask the indulgence of the House for a few minutes while I make a personal explanation. At the end of August last, I was invited by the Conservative candidate in North Ontario to attend a series of meetings with the hon. the Finance Minister, and at that request I met the Finance Minister on Wednesday 25th August, and proceeded with him next morning to the town of Uxbridge, where we held a meeting. We went from there to Port Perry, from there to Cannington, thence to Beaverton, and came home on Saturday morning. The tour was undertaken at the request of Mr. Gibbs; and soon after my return I saw in the Globe newspaper the following article:—

"Mr. J. B. Plumb's orations in North Ontario were more oppressive than impressive, as the Tories of Uxbridge found to their cost. After the meeting in that village which was addressed by the Finance Minister and the 'sweet singer of Niagara,' the local managers are said to have telegraphed to the managers at the next place of meeting to get Sir Leonard Tilley to occupy the most of the allotted time, as Mr. Plumb was doing them harm by his prolix inanities. The hint was, it seems, taken and acted on, but Mr. Plumb will not feel at all pleased with this explanation of the shortness of the time allowed him."

I would have paid no attention to that article in the Globe—as I do not pay any attention to what is said in the Globe about myself—but an hon. gentleman in this House, the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Cockburn) on 10th January, ventured, I think in very bad taste, to allude to that article. That hon. gentleman said:

"I happened to be in a constituency last summer, not on a missionary tour, but because I had friends there. This was shortly after the North Ontario election, and I must admit that some of my friends there contributed to the large majority of the present member for the riding. The hon. member for Niagara was sent to the constituency, and I believe that a telegram was actually sent to the U. E. Club by some young Conservatives in the riding, urging that body to recall the hon. member for Niagara."

I do not know that I would have taken any notice of that statement, except that I met the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Cockburn) the next day, and I asked him how it happened that he made an attack on me, remarking that he had used very offensive words on that occasion. I presume the hon. gentleman is somewhat in the position of some of the uneducated dwellers in the mining and other districts of England, who, they say, are able to carry on their business and their social intercourse with only 350 words. The hon. gentleman has a very limited vocabulary, and therefore I cannot blame him if he uses those words most familiar to him in making a statement. I, however, asked the hon. gentleman: "Why did you attack me?" He replied: "You insulted me in your speech of 5th January." I asked: "How?" He answered: "You called me an eloquent speaker." I said: "I concede that that is actionable, and I admit you had the right to take your revenge." I would not have noticed it further even then, but the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) not only took up that newspaper paragraph, but he adverted to the statement of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Cockburn), and enlarged upon it. He said:

"I say that while the hon. gentleman has ever been ready to accompany hon. Ministers in their peregrinations, he has been equally ready to retire at their request. It is a matter of notoriety that in his recent tour in North Ontario, where it was expected that he would accomplish marvels for the Government—where one would suppose—"

There was, at this point of the hon. gentleman's remarks, an interruption.

Mr. MacDONNELL raised a point of order, that the hon. member for Niagara was referring to what had occurred during vacation.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled that the point was not well taken.

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. member for West Middlesex further said:

"I say that the hon. gentleman went to North Ontario, where it was expected the hon. gentleman would electrify the mob of settlers in that riding as no other hon. member could electrify them, but it appears from the public prints that the hon. gentleman's services were not so acceptable as he supposed. The hon. gentleman will permit me to read a short article on the subject."

There is, in this extract, an attempt made to force on me the expression "mob of settlers," which I did not use and which I deny having used. The hon. gentleman then read the article already quoted, which he stated had come from the Toronto Telegram, and he said:

"The Toronto Telegram is the paper from which I shall quote, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will recognize a friend in the writer, for the Telegram is not a supporter of the Opposition."

That article appeared in the Globe, and did not, so far as I am able to ascertain, appear in the Telegram at all. I then enquired from the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Wheler)—

Mr. SPEAKER requested the hon. member to satisfy himself with a personal explanation.

Mr. PLUMB. I intend to do so. In my endeavors to find out the source of the report, I was referred by the hon. member for North Ontario, to whom I applied, to a leading Conservative in the town of Uxbridge. I wrote a letter to that gentleman, and I have to-day, for the first time, an opportunity to state the contents of that letter. That letter is to the following effect:—

"Having just heard from Mr. N. F. Paterson that Mr. Wheler, our representative in North Ontario, had mentioned my name amongst his friends in Ottawa as an authority for stating that during your late visit to our riding in the interest of Mr. W. H. Gibbs, our friends considered you did the party more harm than good by your speeches, and as a consequence they had to resort to means for choking you off by getting other speakers to speak against me, I take this opportunity of giving this statement an unqualified denial. I never made a statement nor anything to that effect; I never said a word, nor did I hear a word spoken by any of our party which would in any way reflect upon the propriety of your political speeches, or your usefulness to the party."

Then, Sir, a statement was made that a telegram was sent to Port Perry, asking the hon. the Finance Minister to take up the time at the meeting to be held there, so as to prevent me from speaking. I have received a letter from Mr. Paterson, the chairman of the meeting at that place, giving this statement the most unqualified denial, and stating that if he had known it in time he would have brought it up in the county Conservative convocation. I then telegraphed to the U. E. Club, enquiring whether a message had been received of the character stated by hon. gentlemen on the floor of this House. I shall read my telegram and the one which was sent in reply:

"March 7th, 1881.

"To Secretary U. E. Club, Toronto:

"It is asserted that during the North Ontario election campaign, after the Uxbridge meeting, 26th August last, a telegram was sent to your club, or to you, requesting my withdrawal, and asking that another speaker be sent in my place. Was any such telegram received? If so, what, from whom, from whence, and by which line? Answer immediately.

"J. B. PLUMB."

"OTTAWA, March 7th.

"(No. 154. Time, 2.03.)

"By Telegram from Toronto to J. B. Plumb, M.P.

"No such telegram as you refer to was received here.

"T. W. FISHER,
"Secretary."

As these statements are made on the floor of the House I thought it was worth while, in justice to myself, to take up the time of the House for a moment to show that there was no sort of foundation for any of them. I do not accuse hon. gentlemen of intentionally misrepresenting the facts, but I do say that when the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) stated that the paragraph which he read was found in the Toronto Telegram, he was not quite stating the exact state of the case. I challenge the hon. gentleman to find any such statement in the Telegram.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, order.

Mr. PLUMB. I now call upon the hon. Finance Minister to state whether any—

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman should be satisfied with the very great indulgence which the House has shown him.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RAILWAY.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 23) to incorporate the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company.

Mr. BOULTBEE. By a communication which I received from Toronto, I learn that an arrangement was made in that city between parties representing the corporation and the solicitor promoting the Bill, by which it was agreed that clause three should read thus:

The Company and their agents and servants may lay out, construct, finish and operate a double or single independent line of railway running easterly in the city of Toronto, in the Province of Ontario, through the counties of York, Ontario, Victoria, Durham, Peterborough and near Carleton Place via the towns of Peterborough and Perth, with power to construct a branch line to the town of Lanark, and, from the said point, at or near Carleton Place, through the County of Carleton to the city of Ottawa, and across the Ottawa River, at or near the city of Ottawa, into the Province of Quebec, to effect a junction with railways in that Province.

That clause comes there signed by W. H. Lockhart Gordon, on behalf of the promoters, by John Hallam, the Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the City Council of Toronto, and it is vouched as correct by the Mayor. I do not know very much of the facts, but as such an arrangement appears to have been made, and as the matter has been put in my hands as one affecting the interests of Toronto, I beg to move that the Bill be re-committed with instructions to add the clause which I have read.

Amendment lost on division.

Mr. BOULTBEE. When this Bill was in Committee it excited a good deal of interest, and a great deal of time was spent in discussing it. As soon as discussion arose upon the Bill in Committee it seemed to be admitted on all hands that if it prevailed it would be virtually annulling and killing, in fact, the whole charter held by Mr. Gooderham for the Toronto and Ottawa road. In the early discussion that principle seemed to be affirmed, and there seemed to be a consensus of feeling that if this charter were granted by the House, which would have the effect of killing the charter now in the hands of Mr. Gooderham and others, there should be a clause in it providing that compensation should be given to Mr. Gooderham and his co-incorporators for the money they had expended, and in consequence of that feeling a clause was moved by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) providing that the old company should have compensation if this one went into effect. Now I felt myself strongly, and I feel strongly now, that it would be an unfair thing in this Legislature to give a charter the admitted effect of which would be to destroy another charter over the very same ground, unless we provided for compensation being given for the charter which would be affected. It was not denied in the discussion that took place that Mr. Gooderham and his fellow incorporators had not been in possession of the Toronto and Ottawa charter twelve months, and that since they had been in possession of it during eight or nine months they had used great activity in prosecuting the survey which was necessary, and had expended a good deal of money in addition to what they had paid for the charter; and under these circumstances it certainly did occur to me, and I hope it will occur to this House, as a measure of common justice, that if the value of this charter was to be completely destroyed, some compensation should be given, especially when the very first gentleman whose name appeared on the application for the new charter, is one of those who sold out the old charter less than twelve months ago. The circumstances are very peculiar. Mr. Gooderham and his co-incorporators had a right to get bonuses for building this road, they have several bonuses now, but this new Bill we are now discussing came before the Committee coupled with the proposition that they would ask no bonuses. However, we find on examining the Bill that they take power to get bonuses also. The effect of that was completely to kill the old charter, because it would be impossible to realize those bonuses when there was another charter granted to build a road over the same ground, but avowedly asking for no bonuses. When this clause, which was proposed by the hon. member for West Durham, came to be voted upon in Committee, a great many of the Committee having gone away, it was suggested by the promoter of the Bill, the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) that Mr. Leys, who was appearing for the incorporators under the old charter, should declare that he was willing to take a money compensation and give up all his rights, and then the member for North Victoria was willing, on behalf of the incorporators of this new Bill, that the clause should become a portion of the Bill. It was suggested by gentlemen on the Committee that this would not be the action of Mr. Leys, who was acting as solicitor for the old incorporators, nor the action of those gentlemen in any sense, but the action of the Committee, seeing that before they would grant the charter to build a line over precisely the same road that the old charter covered, it was felt that the Committee had a right and could justly impose those conditions on the old company, while it was not at all incumbent for the solicitor, acting there for the old Bill, to give up all the rights he had, because that would be imposing action on him by the Committee. I do not think that was the opinion of the Committee, and I trust it will not be the decision of this House, because the result of the action we are taking now will be the destruction of the charter held by Mr. Gooderham and his co-incorporators, and will involve a loss to them of $50,000 or $60,000. I suggest to this House that it would be an unfair thing to legislate away the rights of those gentlemen without providing a measure of compensation, and I, therefore, beg leave to move the following amendment;—

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to add the following clause: "The Toronto and Ottawa Railway Company, hereinafter called the Toronto Company, may, within one month after the passing of the Act, by registered letter, address to and transmit to the Company hereby incorporated, an account of the amount actually expended by the present proprietors of the Toronto Company in the purchase made by them of the stock and charter and assets thereof, and also of the amount actually expended by the Toronto Company, since such purchase, in the prosecution of the enterprise, and of interest on such amounts. The Company hereby incorporated shall, within one month thereafter, by registered letter, addressed to _____, notify the Toronto Company, in case it disputes the said account, and name an arbitrator; in that case, the Toronto Company shall, within fourteen days thereafter, name an arbitrator, and the two arbitrators shall, within fourteen days thereafter, name a third; and if they make default therein, a Judge of the Exchequer Court may, on the application of either of the companies name such a third arbitrator. The arbitrators, or a majority of them, shall decide on the true amount. The Company hereby incorporated shall within _____ months after the passing of this Act, pay to the Toronto Company the amount of the said account, or in case the same is disputed, the amount ascertained by the said arbitrators. Upon such payment, the Toronto Company shall deliver to the Company hereby incorporated all plans, surveys and reports by it obtained, and shall execute to the said Company a covenant to concur in, and at the expense of the said Company hereby incorporated, promote legislation for the dissolution of the Toronto Company, and meantime not to make use of its corporate powers."

Mr. BOULTBEE.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). My hon. friend has stated that the effect of this Bill is to kill the Gooderham charter. I deny that in toto. It does not make any reference whatever to Mr. Gooderham's charter which was obtained from the Ontario Legislature. Mr. Gooderham can go on after this Bill is passed and build his railway, particularly as it is stated he has secured a large amount of bonuses. My hon. friend says this Bill will prevent him from getting any more bonuses. Mr. Gooderham cannot get any more bonuses, at any rate, as the existing law in Ontario requires an absolute majority of all the votes in any municipality to carry a bonus by-law. Mr. Gooderham has held his charter since March last—it was formally transferred by vote of the shareholders in June last. He did nothing until after notice was given of the application for this charter. He then suddenly became alive to the necessity of doing something, and he sent an engineer out after the snow had fallen in December. During the intervening months it had been openly charged that Mr. Gooderham was acting in some way in the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway. I do not propose to discuss whether that is so or not. Mr. Gooderham denied it, but a section of the public has not been satisfied with his denials. It is very questionable, as the hon. member for Westmoreland (Sir Albert J. Smith) pointed out, whether an amendment of this kind is constitutional or not. We are not taking away Mr. Gooderham's charter, or amending it in any way, and why a rider should be attached to this Bill, granting him compensation when his rights are not interfered with I cannot understand. That this Parliament should say to the whole world that we are stipulating for the bargain and sale of a local charter, I think is not fair or right. After Mr. Gooderham's solicitor stated in the Railway Committee, that he did not want this amendment, and that he intended to oppose this Bill to the bitter end, I think it would be treating the promoters of this Bill most unfairly to provide that, after its opponents sought in every way to kill it and did not succeed, they should get compensation. I offered in the Railway Committee, that if Mr. Gooderham would state that he would accept the proposal of the hon. member for West Durham, and as a consequence withdraw his opposition to this Bill, we would give him compensation within twenty-four hours. The promoters of this Bill have done everything honest and fair, and Mr. Gooderham should either accept or reject their offer. He should not blow hot and blow cold at the same time. The hon. member for East York, referred to me as the promoter of this Bill. I say I have not, directly or indirectly, in myself or in my clients, professionally or personally, any interest in this matter.

Mr. BOULTBEE. I had no intention of stating that the hon. gentleman was a promoter of this Bill in the sense in which he regards the term. But I think the hon. gentleman was also slightly mistaken as to the statement of Mr. Leys. Mr. Leys did not say that he did not want this amendment inserted, but that he would not be a party to it.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I should like to ask whether Mr. Gooderham's company have agreed to accept compensation. If they have, I will vote for the amendment; if they have not, I will vote against it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can quite understand why the solicitor of the Toronto and Ottawa Railway did not assume the responsibility of accepting the proposition, because by doing so he would be simply giving up the claim for which they have been fighting—the hon. gentleman says, by all means, legitimate or illegitimate—but I am not aware that illegitimate means have been used, and I think the hon. gentleman was not justified in making that statement. The solicitor, of course, could not give away what he considered to be the rights of his company, but that does not interfere with the question, whether when we grant a new charter which, everybody must admit, destroys the hopes altogether of the Toronto and Ottawa Company, we should not make it a condition, in granting the new charter, that the old company should receive a fair compensation for surveying and engineering expenses. The hon. gentleman admits he offered to pay those expenses in order to induce the Toronto and Ottawa Company to sacrifice its right. If he did not think the claim was a fair one he would not have made the offer. The offer is an admission that this company, under its charter legitimately got by Act of the Local Parliament which, in the public interest this Parliament overrides, has a just claim to this money. We ought certainly to compel the new company to pay the expenses that the old company, the destroyed company, has gone to in laying out their road, and it is provided that all the plans, all the work, in fact, that has been done, shall ensue to the benefit of the new company. It is also provided that this old company shall thereupon agree to dissolve their corporation so as to give the whole field to the new company. It seems to me it is a mere matter of fairness and justice the money should be paid to the Toronto and Ottawa Company.

Drew,

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton) moved:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the 19th section by adding the words "Great Western Railway Company" after the words "Credit Valley Railway Company," wherever they occur in such section.

The object is that the Great Western Railway Company may have the same right of amalgamation that the Credit Valley Railway Company has in this Bill. Originally, as the Bill was introduced, there was a general amalgamation clause. It was thought, in the Committee, that that was giving too much power, and it was limited. At that time it was not supposed the Great Western wished to have any power of amalgamation, but since seeing this amendment, they request they may have the same right as the Credit Valley on the west, and the other companies on the east.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria) said the promoters of the Bill had no objection to the insertion of the name of the Great Western Railway Company in that clause, provided the third reading of the Bill, to-day, would not thereby be delayed.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole.

Amendment read the third time, reported and agreed to.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. CURRIER moved in amendment:

That the Bill be again re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to add a clause providing that the company shall pay to H. J. Hubertus the sum of $2,000, to indemnify him as the original promoter of a line of railway between the City of Ottawa and the City of Toronto; said sum to be paid within six months after the passing of the Act.

I may say that Mr. Hubertus was the first projector of the line between Ottawa and Toronto. He spent a great deal of time and money in making an exploratory survey with Mr. Keefer, the Engineer. I think the report of that survey is before the country, and that Mr. Hubertus is entitled to remuneration for his services. I know that he went to a good deal of trouble and expense to obtain the charter, which was afterwards transferred to Sir Hugh Allan by the provisional directors, with the expectation that he would proceed with the work without delay. He did not do so, however, and the charter lapsed. Still, the work performed by Mr. Hubertus and the engineer employed, forms part of the accumulated work for which Mr. Gooderham will be paid if he gets anything. If the company, therefore, is bound to pay anyone, Mr. Hubertus' claim should be recognized.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have much pleasure in seconding the motion of the hon. member for Ottawa. I happen to know something of this transaction, and can state that Mr. Hubertus was the first originator of the scheme for the construction of a railroad between Toronto and Ottawa. I know that he has expended a very large sum in this connection, and has received but very small remuneration—I think only something like $1,000—and that he was to receive $2,000 of stock from Sir Hugh Allan.

Mr. CURRIER. He has received nothing.

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, if he has received nothing, I think his present claim is a just one. The promoters have derived all the advantages from his outlay and labor in the furtherance of this scheme, and I think he should be paid a fair amount in return.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to say a few words in favor of the motion of the member for Ottawa. I live on the line of this road, and know that the gentleman whose claim he advocates, was the first promoter of this railway. Mr. Hubertus went to a great deal of trouble and expense, and spent much time in promoting this scheme; and I think that the company that builds that road should find some means of remunerating him, he being comparatively poor, for the services he has rendered.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I cannot help congratulating my hon. friend from Ottawa on the principle he has just discovered—that of the compensation of original promoters—if this claimant was the original promoter.

Mr. WRIGHT. He was the original promoter.

Mr. WHITE. But even so, the charter has gone through half-a-dozen different hands since he had it. He had the charter originally, perhaps, but made an arrangement with Sir Hugh Allan for the purpose of handing it over to him for a certain remuneration.

Mr. WRIGHT. And never got paid.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Hubertus was promised some paid-up stock of the company for his services. He may never have got it, but if not, he has a claim against Sir Hugh Allan yet.

Mr. WRIGHT. The idea of compensation in such cases has been fully recognized. The present promoters have offered to pay Mr. Gooderham all his expenses, should that prove acceptable, and all opposition to the Bill cease. Mr. Hubertus has never opposed the Bill, but simply comes before the House and asks compensation for the amount expended by him in connection with this project.

Mr. BOULTBEE. This motion affords a beautiful illustration of the difference it makes to some parties as to whose ox is gored. The hon. gentlemen who move and second this motion, voted against a much more just one a little while ago, and against respecting the vested rights in the matter, though we have heard a good deal about vested rights since. It seems to me that personal interest has something to do with their course.

Mr. CURRIER. The case is quite different. Mr. Gooderham and his friends refused to accept compensation, whereas Mr. Hubertus is willing to accept it.

Mr. BLAKE. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Currier) agree to move for compensation to anybody that will take the money?

Amendment lost on division.

Mr. McCUAIG. I have a motion in amendment to move and will briefly state its object. In 1874 certain parties managed to get a railroad charter for a railroad from Toronto to Peterborough, to connect with Quebec. It was called the Huron and Quebec Road. In 1875 the company was organized, Mr. Cameron, the gentleman who has charge of the present Bill, became a director of that road, and so remained till 1877. He omitted to pay certain calls and his stock was forfeited. Some time afterwards Mr. Howland became a director in Mr. Cameron's place, having obtained his stock. Matters so remained till 1880, when Mr. Gooderham, anxious to proceed with this work, paid Mr. Howland $33,500, for his own rights and the rights and interests of all those associated with him in the charter granted in 1874, and proceeded in good faith with the construction of the road from Toronto to Ottawa, having already made a trial line over the whole distance of 235 miles, and staked 80 miles of that distance, for the purpose of going on with the work in the early spring. The principal men now petitioning for this charter (Messrs. Howland and others) are the men to whom Mr. Gooderham paid the $33,500 cash for the charter, under the provisions of which he is prosecuting the work, and which Mr. Howland with others, by this Bill now before the House, hope to defeat. The Gooderham parties have shown, from the moment they became proprietors of this charter, good faith in endeavoring to carry it out. I do not believe that Parliament should abrogate its functions and transfer them to the Railway Committee whose decisions are generally controlled by half-a-dozen members. When a charter has been obtained the holders should be upheld in their endeavors to carry the work to a successful conclusion. Parliament grants too many charters, some of them of a speculative character, the parties obtaining them having no desire to carry out their terms; yet, when men enter bond fide into the task of building a road, they are met with the opposition of the very members who obtained the charter. It looks very much as if this was one of those cases. It has been said that the parties are moved by only one consideration, that of securing railway communication with Quebec. It is most important that such connection should be formed; but the people should be certain that the parties were acting in good faith. The parties declared that they did not ask for municipal bonuses; but that was a mere statement, and no security was given. I beg to move in amendment:

That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee with instructions to add a clause providing that this Act shall go into force on 1st January, 1882, but not then if the Toronto and Ottawa Railway Company shall have satisfied the Governor in Council that they are proceeding bond fide with the construction of their railway under their Act, and that they will complete their line from Toronto to Ottawa within three years.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think we have been exactly doing justice to ourselves in the hurried manner in which we have allowed this Bill to be forced upon the House. We have been told we are to grant a charter for a railway to run in a direct line to Ottawa on the ground that it is a great public necessity. I admit that necessity. We are told we are to grant the charter because another charter has been in the hands of certain parties for several years, and their laches did not entitle them to the consideration of the House. I regret to say that it is a statement not borne out by the facts, according to the manner in which it has been presented to the House. We never have had any measure presented before the Railway Committee with more skill, determination, and I might call it by some other name, than was this Bill. There was a time when a member could rise in the Committee and ask for explanations without his being accused of wasting the time of the Committee, when we had not a powerful lobby in the Committee who occupied nearly the whole time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PLUMB. If I am out of order I will endeavor to keep within the rules. I believe that those who desire, in the public interest, to have this road built, are doing themselves great injustice by the course they are adopting. I have no doubt it is a matter of great interest to Quebec, and I have seen many hon. members from that Province voting with the promoters of this Bill. In granting this charter they should secure a direct line, but they have not secured it. They should see to it that they are not playing into the hands of a company by granting it a charter, to be hawked about from hand to hand as a piece of merchandise. They should see, moreover, that they were not interfering with the rights of others, who were acting in good faith. Hon. members, I think, will hereafter regret the hasty manner in which they have overridden rights which should be respected. I must disclaim a desire to do anything which will obstruct the construction of the road which I believe the public desire, and which I believe will be built, into whatever hands the charter may pass. But I wish to secure for the public solely, in whose interests I am acting, the best and most practicable line; and I say that there is no evidence to show that the gentlemen who hold another charter, men of known honor and integrity, are trifling with the important interests in their hands, and no reason why we should not accept their statement when they say that they are not working in connection with any other line. I say that we are bound under the principles which govern and which ought to govern the Legislature of the Parliament of Canada, to support the resolution of my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. McCuaig). To my friends from Quebec, I would say that there is not the slightest danger but that their road will be built; it is a project whose success will be assured alike by the power of public necessity and the powers connected with rival railway interests. The line which I have taken in regard to this matter, has been misrepresented and misconstrued before the Railway Committee and elsewhere. I have not been, nor am I now desirous of obstructing the prosecution of this railway, and I desire to place on record my view, that we will be doing ample justice to the promoters of this Bill, whose whole contention was that those who hold another charter were not acting in good faith—if we afford them an opportunity of stating that they were acting in good faith. Hon. gentlemen say there is an alternative proposition, but it is the alternative which a man is given when a pistol is pointed at his head, and I for one, disbelieving in such coercion, shall heartily support the resolution of my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. McCuaig).

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I have only a word or two to say with reference to the amendment. As I understand the logic which sometimes, though not always, distinguishes my hon. friend who has moved it, he says because the Toronto and Ottawa have done nothing in ten years, we should give them a little time longer. My hon. friend from Niagara complains of the hurried manner in which the Bill has been forced through the House; but surely a private bill which was discussed in the Railway Committee for three whole days, and to which discussion my hon. friend from Niagara contributed his share, cannot be said to be hurried through the House. The hon. gentleman says, also, that there is no danger but the road will be built by somebody; but if the proposition of my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. McCuaig) is carried, it means postponement for another year. If the House is of opinion that such a postponement should take place it will support the amendment, but I must ask my hon. friends to vote it down.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I find myself in a position of some little difficulty with reference to the proposition now before the House, and I will shortly explain how that difficulty arises. During the early part of the discussion with respect to this application by certain gentlemen for a charter over this line of railway from Ottawa to Toronto, I received from the County Council of my county a resolution asking me, if I could see it to be my duty to do so, to support the Quebec and Ontario Railway charter. I was somewhat surprised at this, and I made some enquiries. From the information which I received I came to the conclusion that the Credit Valley Railway, which passes through that constituency, had some prospective interest in the proposed charter, and I therefore understood the way in which the resolution came to be passed. I have since had communications from leading gentlemen in the constituency bringing the same pressure to bear. I came to the conclusion that some one interested in the application for the charter had set in motion these movements in my county for the purpose of bringing a little pressure to bear upon me, and I confess that they did not influence my judgment very much with respect to the propriety of this Parliament granting a charter under the circumstances. I find now that the question is before Parliament and we are called upon to sanction by our action the propriety of granting a charter for a railway over a section of the country which is already notoriously occupied by an existing company engaged in the actual prosecution of the work. I am of the opinion that this is not a proper course of proceeding for the Parliament of this Dominion to take. I believe that while we recognise the right of the Local Legislatures to grant charters for the construction of railways, it is our duty to respect the action of the Local Legislatures in this direction. In this case I deny that there has been any laches on the part of the present corporators for the construction of this railway, which can fairly be urged in favor of those who now come in and ask the franchise privilege and right to occupy the territory and construct the railway—dealing with the question in that simple view. I think with regard to the gentlemen whose names have been mentioned in connection with the charter of the Toronto and Ottawa—the gentlemen who purchased and sold the rights of those who are said to have been guilty of laches—if they were here in their own persons urging the rejection of this measure, we should not feel disposed from their manner of dealing heretofore to pay much attention to them. They have had a charter in their hands for a long time, and the country cannot be expected to wait, even for a Session, for gentlemen who may hold a charter for merely speculative purposes. But it was established before the Railway Committee, that the present owners of the charter have proceeded with due diligence; that they are known to be men of high character, and capitalists of considerable means; that they are proceeding with the surveys, and have located some fifty or sixty miles of the road; that they have valuable contributions towards the construction of the road, in the way of municipal grants; and that they have asserted, over and over again, that there is no covert understanding between them and rival lines for the purpose of delaying the construction of this road. I think we are bound to take a statement of that kind, considering their standing in society. In the face of that, to grant an application of other gentlemen, no better than these so far as I know, and with their hands already full of gigantic railway projects—I say to grant a right to such applicants, in derogation of this previous right so granted and recognized by this Parliament, is not an expedient or proper thing for Parliament to do. I was absent from the House when the division took place a short time ago, but I understand that some amendments have been carried and others rejected, but it seems to me that the motion of the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. McCuaig) to defer giving force to this charter until the bonâ fides of the holders of the present local charter has been proved, is a reasonable proposition, and that it preserves the dignity of Parliament, and the honor of Parliament, in dealing with a matter of this kind. I shall, therefore, notwithstanding the request of my constituents for whatever reason, feel it my duty as a member of Parliament, representing not one constituency but the whole people of this Dominion, and having, so far as my vote is concerned, its honor and dignity in my possession, to vote for the amendment of my hon. friend.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). As a member of the Committee of Railways and Canals, I voted in favor of granting this charter. I considered at the time, and I still consider, that no due diligence had been used by the promoters of the Ottawa and Toronto charter. They have a charter of ten years standing. The road has not been built, in fact very little has been done in that direction. What did we do last year, when the hon. member for Huntington (Mr. Scriver) moved for the incorporation of the Huntington and Montreal Railway Company? We required from the proprietors of a previous charter a declaration that they would be in a position to go on with the building of the road within a certain time. If that declaration was not made, the Committee expressed their willingness to grant another charter. What has been the course followed by the proprietors of the existing charter in this case? Did Mr. Gooderham and Company come forward and say they were going to build this road within twelve months? No. He sent a letter to the Committee stating that he was not acting in collusion with the Grand Trunk, that was all; not a word about his intention, about his readiness, to build that railway within ten months. Not only was there no proof of due diligence, but there was proof of a want of diligence; and further from that there is no declaration on the part of the owners of that charter that they intend to go on with the execution of the work. For that reason I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. MACDONELL (Lanark). This railway runs through my county and my constituents are very materially interested in it. When this Bill was first introduced I was very much in favor of it, but it has now a different form. It is asking for powers to run a railway between Toronto and Ottawa, at or near Carleton Place. When it went through the Committee on Standing Orders I supported it in that form. When it was introduced into the Railway Committee, certain alterations were agreed to, one or two of which I object to, and I think the people of Quebec will also object to them when they understand their purport. When it went before the Railway Committee, the clause providing that the road should run viâ the towns of Peterborough and Perth was amended, giving the company power to construct a branch line. The effect of that alteration in the original Bill is to deflect the line some ten miles south of the village of Carleton Place. Under the old charter held by Gooderham & Co., the town of Perth had granted some $90,000 to have the railway run by the way of Perth and the city of Ottawa. This new clause must have been inserted into this Bill some way or other through the influence of the town of Perth. This clause really gives this company power to build a line ten miles longer by going viâ Perth, and if we sanction this arrangement we are wronging the people of Quebec by giving them a longer line of railway than the present charter would give them. According to the present charter, the line is to run from the city of Toronto viâ the town of Peterborough, in a direct line, as near as possible to Ottawa, which line is nine or ten miles shorter than the one now proposed. I am aware that these clauses were not inserted at the suggestion of the promoters of the Bill, for their map shows a direct line between the cities of Toronto and Ottawa, and Mr. Gordon informs me that it is ten miles shorter than will be the case under the new clause. Then why should this Parliament accord a charter to the town of Perth to have a line running by that town while sacrificing another line ten miles shorter? For this reason I think some consideration should be shown to the charter which is now on the Statute-book. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) says that charter has been in existence for ten years; true, but Mr. Gooderham and his company have only had it in their hands for a short time. They have surveyed the road 225 miles, and have actually located more than ten miles, and are now working at it. I think it is only fair that the men who have got the first charter, and are now doing the best they can to carry it into effect, should have some consideration shown them, and some further time given them, as proposed by the resolutions by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McDonald). I am sure that the interests of the people of Quebec will suffer if this House grants the proposed charter. As a commercial line, the one first proposed is certainly worthy the support of the members from that Province.

Amendment lost on division.

Mr. MACDONELL (Lanark) moved:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be re-committed, with instructions to strike out of the third section the words, "and Perth, with power to construct a branch line to the town of Lanark."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 84) to amend the Consolidated Railway Act (from the Senate).—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou.)

Bill (No. 85) to incorporate the British and Colonial Insurance Company (from the Senate).—(Mr. Beaty.)

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The following Bill was further considered in Committee, and reported :—

Bill (No. 18) to amend the Act incorporating the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company.—(Mr. Boulton.)

The following Bill was considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed :—

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the Montreal Board of Trade and Exchange (from the Senate).—(Mr. Girouard, Jacques Cartier.)

CREDIT FONCIER OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Credit Foncier of the Dominion of Canada.—(Mr. Ives.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COURSOL. While I am fully aware of the importance to the country of such societies as the one before the Committee—loan societies, building societies, insurance companies, &c.—I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that we are about to pass a measure which, as a legal man, I have no hesitation in saying is contrary to the Confederation Act. One of the fundamental principles of our Constitution in regard to the relations between the Federal and the Provincial Legislatures, as laid down by the Earl of Carnarvon, when the British North America Act was under discussion in the Imperial Parliament, will be violated, in my humble judgment, if we should pass the Bill now before the Committee. We must not forget that the different Provinces of this Dominion have their own Legislatures, and if we wish to preserve the autonomy of the Provinces, and to make the Provinces satisfied with their legislative bodies, and with the powers of the Federal Parliament, we should carefully guard against any legislation being mistaken by this Parliament which properly comes within the purview of the Local Legislatures. There is already a good deal of dissatisfaction on this subject, and I hope that before long a decision will be given upon it by the highest court of the country, as it is high time that the question should be put beyond dispute. I am not aware whether the Minister of Justice has been asked for, or whether he has given an opinion on this subject; but it is probable that one day or the other the law officers of the Government will be called on to give an opinion on the subject, and that the Supreme Court of the Dominion will be called on to render a decision as the highest Court of Quebec has already done. Before quoting the opinion of an authority which will be respected by all—I mean the late Minister of Justice, Chief Justice Sir A. A. Dorion—the Committee will, perhaps, allow me to read an extract from the speech of Earl Carnarvon in the House of Lords on the 19th of February, 1867 :

“My Lords, I now pass to that which is, perhaps, the most delicate and the most important part of this measure—the distribution of powers between the Central Parliament and the local authorities. In this, I think, comprised the main theory and constitution of Federal Government; on this depends the practical working of the new system. And here we navigate a sea of difficulties. There are rocks on the right hand and on the left. If, on the one hand, the Central Government be too strong, then there is risk that it may absorb the local action and that wholesome self-government by the provincial bodies, which it is a matter both of good faith, and political expediency to maintain; if, on the other hand, the Central Government is not strong enough, then arises a conflict of State rights and pretensions, cohesion is destroyed, and the effective vigor of the central authority is encroached upon. The real object which we have in view is to give to the Central Government those high functions and almost sovereign powers by which general principles and uniformity of legislation may be secured in those questions that are of common import to all the Provinces; and, at the same time, to retain for each Province so ample a measure of municipal liberty and self-government as will allow and indeed compel them to exercise those local powers which they can exercise with great advantage to the community. In Australia there is at present a tendency towards the disintegration of the vast territories which are called colonies, because those who live at great distances on their extreme borders complain that they cannot obtain from the Central Parliaments the attention which they require. In New Zealand, on the other hand, an attempt—and not without success—has been made to combine considerable local powers with a general Government at the centre.

“The principal subjects reserved to the Local Legislatures are the sale and management of the public lands, the control of their hospitals, asylums, charitable and municipal institutions, and the raising of money by means of direct taxation. The several Provinces, which are now free to raise a revenue as they may think fit, surrender to the Central Parliament all powers under this head except that of direct taxation. Lastly, and in conformity with all recent colonial legislation, the Provincial Legislatures are empowered to amend their own constitutions. But there is, as I have said, a concurrent power of legislation to be exercised by the Central and the Local Parliaments. It extends over three separate subjects—immigration, agriculture, public works. Of these the two first will in most cases probably be treated by the Provincial authorities. They are subjects which their ordinary character are local; but it is possible that they may have, under the changing circumstances of a young country, a more general bearing, and therefore a discretionary power of interference is wisely reserved to the Central Parliament. Public works fall into two classes: First, those which are purely local, such as roads and bridges, and municipal buildings—and these belong not only as a matter of right, but also as a matter of duty, to the local authorities. Secondly, there are public works which, though possibly situated in a single Province, such as telegraphs, and canals, and railways, are yet of common import and value to the entire Confederation, and over these it is clearly right that the Central Government should exercise a controlling authority.”

Now, what are the powers of the Local Legislatures? The subject of emigration, agriculture and public works belong to the Dominion and Local Parliaments concurrently. I ask this House whether this Bill comes under the head of either of these three subjects. Are we prepared to take upon ourselves a jurisdiction that belongs to the Local Legislatures? The Dominion Parliament, I may be answered, has already passed laws of this description, and they have not been repealed. But if they have not been repealed it is for the reason that they have not been to any Court. One point, however, was raised in Quebec, I refer to the case of McClanaghan vs. the St. Ann's Mutual Building Society, Montreal, a judgment of the Superior Court was appealed to the Court of Queen's Bench composed of Justices Dorion, Monk, Ramsay and Cross. The latter Court dissolved the injunction which the appellant had obtained against the society. Chief Justice Dorion said :

“While these proceedings were pending in the Court below the Local Legislature of the Province of Quebec passed a Statute re-enacting, as to the Province of Quebec, all the provisions of the Dominion Act, and also another Statute ratifying all the proceedings adopted under its provisions. The last Act, however, was not to affect pending cases. These two Statutes, 43 Vict., Chap. 32 and Chap. 33, were sanctioned on the 31st October, 1879.

“The judgment has been rendered and the appeal taken since the passing of these two Statutes, and since the proceedings of the society to wind up their affairs have been ratified by the Quebec Legislature. We cannot agree with the Court below that the Dominion Parliament had the right to pass the Act 42 Vict., Chap. 48. This Act is not in the nature of an insolvency law, for it is intended to apply to all building societies, whether solvent or not. It is, therefore, essentially an Act affecting civil rights, which, under the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, comes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Local or Provincial Legislatures.”

Now, is this an Act which affects civil rights only? This Act is called the Crédit Foncier Act, which means borrowing money upon landed credit. It must be done by a mortgage made according to the laws of the Province where the mortgage is held. I may be told that if we pass this Act to enable the company to lend money in every part of the Dominion, the mortgage will be given according to the law of the Province in which the transaction is made. I say the thing cannot be done because the land upon which the loan is made must form part of the domain of such Province. I am aware that there is a general desire to favor this company on account of its lending money at so cheap a rate, but I do not suppose the members of this House can have any personal motives in passing this Bill, that they may be enabled to borrow money themselves. I say that if we go on passing laws upon the principle of this Bill, which encroaches upon the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures, we shall drive the Provinces into legislative union. It may be that certain parties would be willing that the Local Legislatures should waive their rights, if legislative union could thereby be promoted. But the time for legislative union has not yet arrived. The Local Legislatures have rights guaranteed them by the Confederation Act, and it is their bounden duty to defend those rights. I have no other object at the present moment in raising this discussion than to enter my solemn protest against this Act being passed by this Legislature. I desire that the rights of each Province should be respected. I am afraid of the encroachments that this Legislature is making upon the local bodies. If this Act is passed I am positive it will be appealed to the highest Court. In the meantime, perfectly convinced that this Act is unconstitutional, and believing that I am not alone in that opinion, I move that the Committee now rise, as I intend afterwards to move the six months' hoist.

CREDIT FONCIER FRANCO-CANADIEN.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 31) to enlarge and extend the powers of the Crédit Foncier Franco-Canadien.—(Mr. Girouard, Jacques Cartier.)

Bill amended and reported.

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bills were read the second time:—

Bill (No. 79) to incorporate the Northern, North-Western and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

Bill (No. 80) to incorporate the Acalia Steamship Company (Limited).—(Mr. Longley.)

ONTARIO AND THE UPPER CANADA LAND IMPROVEMENT FUND.

Mr. HESSON enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to make provision, this year, for the payment of the sum found to be due to the Province of Ontario, under the name of the Upper Canada Land Improvement Fund, as ascertained by the award of Arbitrators appointed under and by virtue of the British North America Act; and if not, why not?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The question of the account between Quebec and Ontario is not yet settled. When it has been settled, the Government will enter upon the consideration of the subject of the hon. gentleman's motion, with a view to the settlement of the account of that Province.

ACCIDENT ON THE PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. JONES enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to make compensation (where compensation is justly due) to those persons who, being railway passengers paying fare, were injured by the accident on the Prince Edward Island Railway, which took place in August, 1880; or is there any distinction recognized between sufferers by that railway accident and those who have suffered by accident on other railways, as to their right to such compensation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Those matters are in litigation under petitions of right, and we must leave the parties to the remedies they have chosen themselves.

PROPERTIES IN SOREL.

Mr. MASSUE enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to offer for sale the properties they hold in the town of Sorel?

Mr. COURSOL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have no specific intention to offer those properties for sale; but if any applications be made for any portion of the ordnance properties at Sorel, and if the Government think it for the public interest to entertain them, they will do so.

PAYMENTS TO ONTARIO JUDGES.

Mr. KAULBACH, in the absence of Mr. BAKER, enquired, Whether any, and how many of the Judges of the Superior Courts in Ontario, receive from any and what source payments of money other than such as are appropriated to their use by law, viz., by the Parliament of Canada?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe the Judges of the Superior Courts in Ontario, receive an allowance of $1,000 a piece, from the Ontario Government, as Commissioners under the Act.

BREAKWATER AT MISSISQUOI BAY.

Mr. KAULBACH, in the absence of Mr. BAKER, enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for the erection of a Breakwater at Missisquoi; and if not, why not?

Mr. LANGEVIN. Inasmuch as the railway under construction in that region is some miles distant from Missisquoi Bay, the Government are not in a position to consider this question. When the railway reaches Missisquoi Bay the matter will be considered by the Government.

CONSTRUCTION OF A BRANCH LINE ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether the Government had taken into consideration the petition signed by one hundred and seven members of the House of Commons, and the several other petitions of the taxpayers of the country, asking for the construction of a branch line of the Intercolonial from St. Charles to St. Joseph de Lévis, as well as the proposal of the Lévis and Kennebec railway Company by which the directors of the said company offer to build, conjointly with the Government, a part of the said branch line; and what action the Government intended to take upon the whole matter.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor of informing the hon. member that the Government has taken into consideration, and is still considering, the petition and proposal contained in the question he has just put. I am not prepared to give the hon. member a final answer to day, but before the close of the Session the Government will give him an answer which I think will satisfy him.

QUEBEC AND LEVIS FERRY BOATS.

Mr. LANDRY moved for copies of all correspondence exchanged between the Government and sundry individuals with regard to a system of ferry-boats between Quebec and Lévis, to connect the Intercolonial with the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, immediately after the completion of the proposed branch of the Intercolonial from St. Charles to Lévis. He said: Mr. Speaker, in making this motion, I wish to call the attention of the Government to the important question which arises from it. The answer just given by the Government to a question put by me, as to whether it had given its consideration to a petition signed by 107 members of this House, concerning the construction of a branch of the Intercolonial from St. Charles to St. Joseph de Lévis, as well as to several petitions signed by the taxpayers of the country, this answer, whatever the hon. Minister of Public Works may say, is not such as to satisfy me and has in no way the character he chooses to attribute to it. By that petition we ask that a branch road be built off the Intercolonial from St. Charles to St. Joseph de Lévis, and what is the answer we get. Nothing to show that our request is granted. This is not the first time, Mr. Speaker, that this question has come before the House; it is not the first time that the Government's attention has been called to it. When, in 1879, the Government was buying that portion of the road extending from Rivière du Loup to the Chaudière curve, the question was in a way brought before the House. In a speech delivered at the time by the hon. Minister of Public Works, now the Minister of Railways, this branch and its usefulness were incidentally referred to. As soon as the Government had purchased that portion of the road, petitions were circulated for signature, numerous petitions were signed throughout the country, and sent to the Government; amongst others, I will mention a petition forwarded by the Boards of Trade of Quebec and Lévis, which, amongst others, contained the following allegations:—

“ It would also prove of great advantage to the Intercolonial Railway to have easy communication with the Port of Quebec, especially after the extensive harbor works now in course of construction will have been completed, as they certainly favor the development of the trade of the Dominion ”

Further on, the Board of Trade called the Government's attention to the following facts :

“ That the Corporation of the Town of Lévis have informed the Lévis Board of Trade that they would assist the proposed undertaking in granting to the Government easy terms for the right of way on their property as the Government may require for the construction of a station and freight sheds.”

Not only did the Boards of Trade of Quebec and Lévis take up the question, but in all the municipalities between Lévis and Gaspé, the municipal councils met, passed resolutions approving this plan of a branch of the Intercolonial from St. Charles to Lévis, and asked the Government to build it. On the 8th March of last year, the question came up before this House. I made a motion at the time, asking for a report of the survey made in 1879. On that occasion the hon. Minister of Railways stated that the importance of the undertaking had not escaped the attention of the Government, that it would have surveys made, that it had already made surveys to ascertain what were the obstacles likely to be encountered, what would be the grades, and what would be the approximate cost of construction. Such was the answer of the Minister of Railways. During the month of March, a deputation composed of several members of this House, directly interested in the building of the road, waited upon the hon. Minister of Railways and called his attention in a special manner to the subject, when he there and then promised the deputation that a new survey should be made. This survey took place during the vacation, between the Session of March–April, 1880, and the 9th December of the same year, and during that interval fresh petitions were circulated for signature throughout the whole country. At first, we had resolved upon asking the municipal councils to favor the scheme, but the people thinking that direct action on their part would have a greater influence with the Government, signed petitions to it themselves. On the 15th December last, I had the honor to move in this House for the report of the survey made in 1880. It is now three months since I made this request, and unfortunately we have not yet been able to have the report laid upon the Table of the House. This report was made on the 19th January last, a month and a half or nearly two months ago. During that time, Mr. Speaker, the deputation became exercised, and a petition was signed by 107 members of the House, who asked the Government to grant the said branch. When I mention that that petition was signed by 107 members, it is to show, Mr. Speaker, that it was signed by a large majority of the House. Unfortunately,

I had not the time of seeing all the members, but I feel sure that many more would have signed the petition with pleasure. But the Session was rapidly approaching its end, and I wanted necessarily to present the petition before the last day of the Session. That is why I have not been able to get it signed by as large a number as I would have wished. However, such as it is, leaving the Ministry aside, there is, in favor of that petition, a majority of 27 of the House as it stands to-day. Such is the petition that is before the Government. In the meanwhile, a new proposal has reached us. The Lévis and Kennebec Company has offered the Government to build a portion of the road, the most expensive and difficult portion at that, and, which starting from deep water, goes to St. Joseph de Lévis. That part of the road comprises about four miles, and passes through the most valuable properties, and that is the part the Lévis and Kennebec Company offer to build in conjunction with the Government. That Company has the intention of extending its road to deep water, starting from near the St. Henry station, on the Intercolonial, and coming down by a cutting to St. Joseph de Lévis. On this route, there are four miles which extend in the same direction, and almost through the same land as that through which the proposed branch would pass. For this reason, the Lévis and Kennebec Company thought it was to its own advantage, as well as to that of the public, to unite with the Government in order to build jointly that part of the road. There remains more behind; should the Government and the Company fail to agree on the subject, the Lévis and Quebec Company offers to build, the Government to share half the expense, the whole of the line, on condition that the road shall start from St. Henri, about six miles above St. Charles station. Mr. Speaker, I will not discuss the merits of the question, the importance of which has been proved by the action of the membership of this House, of the Board of Trade, and of the people. From St. Charles station to Lévis the distance would be 12 miles according to the proposed road; with the Intercolonial Railway such as it stands to-day, i.e., having its terminus two miles above the proposed terminus, the distance between St. Charles and Lévis is 23 miles, and that distance would be increased to 25 miles, were the present station of the Intercolonial to be moved to the place where it will be when the branch road is completed. There is, therefore, in favor of the proposed line a difference of 13 miles on a distance of 25 miles. This makes an enormous difference in favor of the proposed line. Now, I will not urge that local interests alone demand this line; there are greater interests at stake than that; there are interests of traffic and trade to be considered, and these must take precedence of local interests. Moreover, those who signed our petition, whilst belonging to other Provinces, did not, whilst doing so, think only of local interests; they raised a corner of the curtain which hides the future from our gaze, and saw that all the interests of the Dominion were at stake in the settlement of that question. At the present time there is from here to Halifax a distance of 1010 miles by the Intercolonial Railway, which goes to the Chaudière, and thence by the Grand Trunk; whereas, were the St. Charles Branch built, it would enable us, by means of a system of ferry-boats, to shorten by 84 miles the distance to Ottawa by the North Shore Railway; the distance would then be 926 miles only. Well, Mr. Speaker, what is merely a pleasure for the traveller, becomes a necessity for trade purposes, and trade will give its preference to the shortest road. It is from that point of view that the hon. members of this House have considered the question, and they trust that the hopes held out to them by the Government through the hon. Minister of Public Works will not be vain ones. There are too many interests at stake that we should think for one moment that the Government will not accede to the wishes of the population of the whole country and of this House. To sum up, Mr. Speaker, we have to-day, to strengthen our hopes, a question wherein are wrapped up several interests; on the one hand we have the corporation of Lévis offering to enter into an agreement with the Government so as to sell to it the land necessary to the building of this road at the lowest possible price. We have the powerful support of the Boards of Trade in various localities of the Province. We have, moreover, a petition largely signed by the members of this House, and I will add that we have a formal promise, made to us by the Government last year, and we hope that this year the Government will fulfil it. In conclusion I loudly proclaim, without fear of being in any way contradicted, that the Government is in honor bound to fulfil a promise solemnly made. It promised us this branch road; let it grant it to us, if it values its word and its honor.

Motion agreed to.

CLAIM OF JOSEPH CHARLES LISLOIS.

Mr. LANDRY moved for copies of all correspondence exchanged between the Government and Mr. Joseph Charles Lislois, with regard to a claim put forth by him to recover a sufficient amount of compensation for the loss of one of his buildings by fire; also copy of the report of the official arbitrator to whom that claim had been referred. He said: In the month of September, 1879, a barn belonging to a certain Mr. Lislois, situated on the line of the Intercolonial, was destroyed by fire. He pretended that the fire was set to it by one of the engines of the Intercolonial. An enquiry was held, and the truth of this assertion was proven by facts. The official arbitrator visited the spot and drew up a report establishing that the said barn had been destroyed by a spark from the funnel of one of the locomotives. Mr. Lislois then filed his claim with the Government; in reply, he was told that the Government was not bound to indemnify him, because it appears that the funnel of the locomotive was furnished with metallic wirework, and that, consequently, if a fire did take place, it was very wrong of the fire to burn his barn. I think, Mr. Speaker, that when the Government looks at the report of the arbitrator, it will gracefully render justice, and that that man, having lost his barn through a fire set by one of the engines of the Intercolonial, will have no trouble in getting the Government to grant him compensation.

Motion agreed to.

UNION SUSPENSION BRIDGE ON THE OTTAWA RIVER.

Mr. TASSE moved for a statement of the expenditure on, and revenue derived from the Union Suspension Bridge on the Ottawa River from 1867 to 1st January, 1881. He said: Mr. Speaker, it is useless to speak of the importance of the bridge referred to in the motion I have just made. That bridge is well known to all the members of this House. It is a bridge that has an inter-provincial character, binding as it does the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec together. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is about the only bridge, perhaps it is the only bridge, that pays a toll to the Federal Government. On the same Ottawa river, at Portage du Fort, there is another bridge which spans the Ottawa, and which does not pay any toll. I believe that some years ago the tolls demanded were reduced one-half, and I think that the time has come to abolish them entirely. I think that by abolishing the tolls demanded on the Chaudiere bridge the Government would grant the petition of thousands and thousands of people who are compelled to use it. I do not know what has been the revenue derived from the bridge for a certain number of years, but according to last year's statement, I think there is a considerable surplus over the expenditure. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Government should consider the propriety of opening this important bridge to the public, free of tolls, as it has an inter-provincial character, and binds together the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. WRIGHT. I trust that the Government will grant the request which the hon. gentleman has made. The subject is one of great interest to the constituency I represent, as the bridge is the main link connecting between the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and between the City of Hull and the Capital of the Dominion. Sir, I have been credibly informed that the tolls collected on this bridge would more than pay for the original cost of construction, and I would most respectfully submit to the hon. Minister of Public Works that it would be only right and fair that this bridge should be declared a free bridge. Many years ago a bridge was built over the Ottawa at this point by the late Colonel By, of the Royal Engineers, at the time of the construction of the Rideau Canal. Subsequently the present structure was erected, and since that time tolls to a very considerable extent have been collected; but I think the time has arrived when the Government should declare this bridge free to the public. For my own part, the farmers of my county furnish the citizens of Ottawa with a large amount of supplies, such as hay, grain, wood and other articles of agricultural produce, and I think it would be well if this Legislature and the Local Legislatures might take into consideration the necessity of removing the tolls from those main highways, so that the farmers should not be taxed for carrying their produce to market. My own opinion is that these tolls and taxes on roads are survivals of a barbarous age when taxes were levied on men's hearts, when such imposts as ship money were collected; but such taxes as these, which were the ordinary sources of revenue of the Governments of that time, are incompatible with the light and civilization of the nineteenth century. The other day I was reading the adventures of a traveller in the wilds of Africa, who pointed out that each time he travelled through the dominions of these barbarous potentates, he was taxed for the privilege of wading through their muddy domains. We know that the bold barons of ancient times were in the habit of perching their vassals upon a convenient rock, from which they might swoop down and collect their tolls from passers-by. We have also the authority of the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) that the ancestors of the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government, and of the hon. Minister of Justice—brave and gallant ancestors I am sure they were—were gentlemen of predatory dispositions, and that they collected their tolls in a remarkable, simple and summary manner. I think anyone who drives out in the vicinity of this city will be able to sympathize with the feelings of the Flemish traders, when the ancestors of these hon. gentlemen swooped down upon them, and when, on every occasion, they had to put their hands into their pockets and pay toll. I find, Sir, that in England all these tolls on roads and bridges have been removed. We all remember reading in the newspapers a few years ago about the great pageant, and the imposing ceremonials which took place when the Prince of Wales declared that the tolls on the great bridges leading into London should no longer be collected, and that those bridges should, for all time to come, be free to the people. I can imagine a ceremonial which would be much more interesting to us who are permanent or temporary dwellers in this little city, when His Excellency the Governor General, assisted by Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise—who we all hope will soon return to us in good health—when these exalted personages, aided, and I may say abetted, by the Minister of Public Works, shall proclaim that tolls shall no longer be collected upon this bridge, and that no such barrier to this perfect communication of the union between the stately Province of Ontario and the beautiful Province of Quebec shall no longer be permitted to exist. I think we may fairly ask the Minister of Public Works to exercise that wise liberality of statesmanship, and that prescience which characterizes him, in bringing about the result which I am sure we all so much desire.

Mr. BROWN. I will have a great deal of pleasure in supporting the views of my hon. friend who has just sat down. We find that the Government are disposed to build the Murray canal, which will give a perfect channel of inland navigation from the ocean to the heart of Ontario, and as they intend to take the land required for that purpose I think the least they could do would be to remove the tolls.

Mr. CURRIER. I have much pleasure in supporting my co-representative of the city of Ottawa, and my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Wright) in the motion which is before the House. I believe the bridge in question is the only one over the Ottawa river upon which tolls are collected; and I believe the only means of free exit out of the city is by way of New Edinburgh. We should have a free means of egress at the western end of the city, especially as so many hon. members are accustomed to cross the river if for no other purpose than to visit my hon. friend from the county of Ottawa (Mr. Wright.) To say nothing of the expense, it is, as everyone knows, a matter of great annoyance to have to stop and pay these tolls. I hope the Minister of Public Works will see his way to abolishing these tolls.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. member for Ottawa County has pressed the motion with his usual wealth of illustration, and we have had the knights and barons of predatory instincts brought in to prove that this bridge should be free of tolls. As to my Highland ancestors, I fear they did not have much to do with either bridges or breeches, and that the absence of those barbarous habiliments enabled them to wade without the necessity of bridges at all. The hon. gentleman says, we swoop down on the inhabitants crossing that bridge after the manner of the robber bands; but I think it is my hon. friend who is the robber in this case, in trying to get hold of a portion of the public revenue. My hon. friend has referred to the very eloquent speech of the Prince of Wales, upon the occasion of throwing off the tolls upon Waterloo Bridge, London; and if the hon. gentleman will be satisfied to have this bridge thrown open upon the same terms as was Waterloo Bridge, I, for one, shall not object. I think that the tolls were not taken off that bridge at the expense of any portion of the public revenue. I think the county of Surrey and the southern side of the river joined the city of London to pay that off. It was not out of the public Treasury that Waterloo Bridge was rendered free. If my hon. friend will take that as an illustration we can have no objection. I do not know whether other parts of the country will feel bound to take the same position.

Mr. WRIGHT. None precisely situated like this.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I know it is specially connected with both Provinces, and it may be well for Parliament to make that bridge a present to Ontario and Quebec in order to make it, not a golden or a silver link, but a free link, an elastic link. Of course, Parliament is paramount, and I suppose the hon. gentlemen will desire that it should still remain Government property.

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then the Government should keep up the tolls, and keep up the bridge. I think the proposition is going a little further than this House would sanction. It is true that the bridge is a portion of the great highway between Ontario and Quebec, and I daresay that some arrangement might be made by which it should be free and open to the public. The simple question for the Government is in regard to the public Treasury, whether we can be justified in coming down to Parliament and ask the Parliament to make a present of the bridge to the Provinces, and at the same time to keep it open to the people. Upon that question Government have not yet come to any conclusion, but they will take it into their consideration.

Mr. BLAKE. May I ask the hon. the Minister of Public Works whether he has any information as to the condition of this bridge, and as to how soon serious repairs may not be necessary upon it? I was told the other day, when I was crossing it, when it was swaying in a disagreeable manner, that it was reported the bridge needed repairs.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I am not surprised the bridge should have swayed to and fro when the hon. gentleman was passing over it. The bridge is examined three or four times a year. It was examined very lately, and was declared to be perfectly safe. The floor of the bridge requires to be renewed, and for that purpose I have asked for the sum of $4,000. But even as it is, it is safe, and the wire and cables are in a perfect condition. I had them examined lately, because I was uneasy myself in passing over it.

Mr. BLAKE. You felt that motion too?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I have no doubt the motion was much less violent than when the hon. gentleman was passing over it.

Motion agreed to.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness) moved the following resolutions:—

1st. That it appears by the Public Accounts that the cost to the country of the Sessions of Parliament is yearly increasing.

2nd. That such increase of cost is largely due to the increasing length of the said Sessions.

3rd. That it is the duty of Parliament to adopt every means consistent with ample and wise legislation, and the due discharge of public business, to curtail as much as possible the duration of its Sessions, and thus, in this respect, to retrench public expenditure.

4th. That it is the sense of this House, after several years of experience, that the publication of the Hansard offers irresistible inducement to many of its members to make unnecessarily lengthy and frequent speeches to the great prolongation of said Sessions.

5th. That the discontinuance of the Hansard would save the Dominion the sum of $18,362.50 now paid for its publication, and the additional sum which would be saved by the consequent shortening of the Sessions, and would, besides, enable the Members of both branches of Parliament to return at a much earlier date to their homes and private business.

6th. That, therefore, the official reporting and publication of the speeches and debates of this House be discontinued after the expiration of the present Session of Parliament.

He said: In moving these resolutions I desire to disclaim all intention or desire to cast any reflection upon the manner in which the work of reporting and publishing the debates of this honorable House has been conducted this Session. I think this work has been done very efficiently, and has given a great deal of satisfaction. I am aware that many hon. gentlemen are loud in their complaints of the manner in which this work is done, but I think that if the speeches of many hon. gentlemen were reported verbatim et literatim, they would have much greater reason for dissatisfaction and complaint. For my own part, though I speak but rarely in this House, I find that I am reported better, perhaps, than I speak, and I have no doubt that many hon. gentlemen in this House can say as much of their own speeches. I have heard from hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, both from those who are among the first speakers in the House and from those who speak but rarely, expressions of doubt as to whether it was prudent to continue the Hansard, whether the official reporting of the debates did not cost more than it benefitted the House or the country. There is but one chief argument in favor of continuing the Hansard, namely, that by it we have a record of all what is said in this House, a record of the views of hon. gentlemen upon every subject that is brought before the House. I admit that after the debates are revised by the hon. gentlemen we have a tolerably correct record of what is said. But, Sir, admitting that, what are these reports worth? The only use to which they are put is to enable hon. gentlemen to contradict each other. During the present Session, and particularly during the lengthy debate on the Pacific Railway—lengthy, I contend, because of the existence of the Hansard—hon. gentlemen referred to the Hansard of this and of previous Sessions for the purpose of contradicting each other. Notwithstanding that hon. gentlemen were confronted on various occasions with their utterances of previous Sessions in contradiction to those of this Session, I have not known a single hon. gentleman to be dislodged from the position he took on that question; and I do not think it desirable that any hon. gentleman should be dislodged from a position correctly taken by him simply because he is confronted with his former utterances. If the existence of an official record of the debates tends to make a man persist in erroneous opinions, it would be better that we should not have it. Are the benefits to the House or the country from the existence of the Hansard commensurate with the large expenditure of $25,000 a year required to keep it up? I say they are not. Some hon. gentlemen may contend that the Hansard is useful for the interpretation of Acts of Parliament. That is an untenable argument. If the laws passed in this House are so ambiguous or obscure that they must be interpreted by the debates of hon. gentlemen thereon, we must, to be logical, go further and incorporate those debates with the laws. I contend that the existence of the Hansard has a tendency to prolong the Sessions of Parliament, which is a much more serious matter than the cost of its publication. After an experience of nearly twenty years, I know there are many hon. gentlemen who address this House simply because they get their speeches recorded in the Hansard, and recorded in a manner which surprises themselves, and they are thus induced to try again. I have seen hon. gentlemen get up to make a speech for the first time, and give utterance to their opinions in the most tremulous and imperfect manner; and I have known them afterwards to show their speeches around among their fellows, expressing most profound surprise at their own eloquence. These hon. gentlemen ought to be aware that in many instances, at all events, these speeches were the productions of able reporters and not the hon. gentlemen themselves. It is in the interest of the country and of this House that the Sessions of Parliament should be curtailed as much as possible. There are many gentlemen well suited to occupy positions in this House who are deterred from offering their services to the country, owing to the great length of time they would be required to absent themselves from their business and their homes. As an educator of the people, as a vehicle by which the knowledge of the proceedings of this House is communicated to the people, the Hansard is of no value whatever. We must thank the able reporters in the gallery above us, to the number of eighteen or twenty, for making the people in all parts of the country acquainted with the proceedings in Parliament. Without intending to reflect on any of the reporters, I say that the services to the country of the reporters in the gallery are infinitely greater than those of the reporters on the floor of this House, while the former are not paid a single cent for their services; and if we had no official reporters here the press of this country would be encouraged to more perfectly discharge the onerous and important duties which they, its proprietors, impose upon themselves. I believe there is a feeling in the country against the Hansard. The great body of the electors very rarely, if ever, read it. Each hon. member receives three uncorrected copies, of which he sends away two and keeps one. He returns that copy to the reporter largely corrected—I will not say incorrectly corrected, but I do not think I would be far from the truth if I did. Thus the reports that go to the country through the official Hansard are doctored reports of the utterances of hon. gentlemen. The sum of $25,000 may appear to be a very trifling sum to this rich Dominion which has to-day a surplus of $2,000,000; but there are many public works in this country, many public works in the shape of harbors and piers in the Maritime Provinces, to which one twentieth of that sum would be a very important boon, and yet when the hon. Minister of Public Works is asked for a trifling sum to assist those works, the answer invariably is: there is nothing in the Exchequer; although we can afford to expend $25,000 on a matter which is of no earthly use, except for the amusement of hon. gentlemen by enabling them to cast at each other the reports of the past Session in order to contradict the utterances of the present Session. If we compare the speeches in our Hansard with those which we find in the Hansard of the English House of Commons, and those made in the House of Representatives of the United States, as recorded in the Congressional Globe, we find that the speeches of hon. gentlemen in this House, as a rule, are three times as voluminous. Should the motion, which I have the honor to submit to the House, not be carried, I think we shall have to adopt some measure in order to circumscribe the utterances of hon. gentlemen. Nothing has been more usual I am sorry to be obliged to say so, but I consider it my duty to refer to this matter—than to see hon. gentlemen, for three or four long, weary hours, utter the most insipid platitudes, the only effect of which was to clear the House to a great extent, and fill the smoking room and other rooms with hon. members. I know that many hon. gentlemen are opposed to the Hansard. I hope they will vote according to their convictions, and save to the country a large amount of money.

Mr. LANDRY moved the following amendment:—That all the words after “said Sessions” at the end of the fourth paragraph be struck out and replaced by the following:—

That it be resolved consequently, after the present Session of Parliament there be only published in the Hansard a synopsis of the speeches delivered in this House, thereby saving a considerable sum of money.

Mr. LANGEVIN. In reply to the hon. member, who made his motion in French, a thing I do not at all complain of, far from it, I must call his attention to the fact that his motion opens up a great difficulty. The hon. member wishes for a synopsis of the speeches. But who is going to make that synopsis, and what guarantee have we that the synopsis will be made so as to please the members of the House? That synopsis will have to be made either by officials of the House, by the reporters, or by persons connected with the press. Well, notwithstanding all the impartiality that may be attributed to these officials, the synopsis thus made will not reproduce the idea of the speaker, or it will contain but a part of what has been said, there being frequently left aside an essential part of the speech, or at least a part essential according to the idea of the speaker; therefore do I think that it is far preferable to spend a little more money and to report the speeches in full; for after all, to save a few thousand dollars to-day, will be found to be but false economy in the future, when one will have to refer to debates that took place at the present time. The hon. member may remember the debates that took place at the time of Confederation. It would be much to be regretted to-day, had we not those debates. Every day do we refer to the debates that took place at that time, in order to explain some portion of the Constitution; in order to show the object of the fathers of the Confederation; and if we had not the full report of these speeches such as they were delivered, we should oftentimes be puzzled to know what was the object, what was the intention, what was the idea of those who ruled the destinies of the country. It is even to be regretted that, in England, where the matter was discussed at the conference, there were no reporters to transmit to posterity the speeches delivered, or the reasons for which charges were made at that period; to sum up, I think the hon. member would do well to withdraw his motion, and to allow a vote to be taken on the principal motion. The principal motion places the question before us in a perfectly open manner. The question is, do we wish the Parliamentary details reported, or do we not? Well, I think that hon. members themselves will decide that, if we want a report of what takes place in Parliament, we must have not only a part of the speeches, but the whole of them, as they were delivered. I understand that certain members pretend that the reporting of the debates tends to increase the length of the speeches, and prolong the Session. Well, hon. members have the remedy in their own hands. If we wish to shorten the Session, we must shorten our speeches; but I am still wondering who is the member of this House whom one could accuse of having made a speech longer than necessary, simply to see it reported in the Debates of the House? I do not think the hon. member could name a single one, and I do not think that he brought this charge against any member of this House. I know that long speeches are made, and, as for myself, I have been guilty of such a speech during the Session. Yet I do not think the hon. member proposed that amendment to prevent it being reported in the Debates, and, as a matter of fact, I have not looked at the translation, that was made at the time, of the speech that I delivered. I hope, therefore, that the hon. member will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. LANDRY. I have only a word to add to the motion I made in amendment. We have before us a motion asking that the Hansard be completely abolished. The reasons given are, perhaps, slightly true. It is useless to disguise the fact; there are many speeches delivered in this House, which would not be delivered were they not reported; the expense does not only consist in the printing, but also in the considerable time that members are kept in the House to continue legislating. It is not a loss of $18,000 or $20,000, but it is the time that is wasted. I do not favor the complete abolition of the Hansard, for I am aware that it is a precious source of information. When, as the hon. Minister of Public Works has told us with so much à propos, we wish to look up in the past interesting debates or questions which come up fresh again after a number of years, one is glad to have a book to refer to. Therefore do I say that the Hansard should be preserved, but it should be altered in such a manner as to cause to disappear the objection made to it. It is said this is not easy. It is true that it is not easy if one does not try; but it seems to me that the English Hansard is far less bulky than ours and that the speeches are not reported in full.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. I beg pardon, they are reported in full.

Mr. LANDRY. We may be under the impression that they are fully reported, but I believe that such is not the case. In the first Hansard the speeches were not reported in full; a mere résumé was given. I think that the word "synopsis," that has been used just now, does not meet the idea of my amendment. I want a résumé; the papers are published every day, and no one complains. When there are complaints, they are plainly heard in this room. Complaints have been made against the present system of the Hansard. At the present time the printer is blamed; it is neither the fault of the translators nor of the reporters; it is the fault of the printer. At any rate, the French Hansard is two months behind. Here lies, I think, a more serious objection against the publishing of the Hansard; and I think that notwithstanding what has been said, a concise résumé would answer the purpose as well, and that a large sum of money would be saved to the country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The statement contained in the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Inverness is very generally accepted, but as a matter of fact is hardly accurate. The statement is that the long Sessions have been due to the Hansard, through the temptation it gives to hon. members to make longer speeches than they otherwise would make. I have taken the trouble to refer to the lengths of the different Sessions of the Parliament of Canada since Confederation. It will be seen, on making such reference, that the Hansard has had very little to do with the lengthening of the Sessions. The first Session of the Dominion Parliament lasted for three months and twenty-five days; but every one knows that during that Session a number of very important questions were at issue, and that consequently it was not, by any means, unnecessarily prolonged. It was the nature of the questions discussed which rendered the Session longer than any that has occurred since. The second Session, that of 1869, lasted two months and seven days; the third Session, 1870, lasted three months and three days; the fourth Session, 1871, two months and five days; the fifth, 1872, two months and three days; the sixth, 1873, two months and sixteen days. In 1874, the first Session of the third Parliament, the Session only lasted for two months, but hon. gentlemen will remember very well that the condition of public business, as well as the condition of parties in the House rendered a lengthy Session, at that time, almost an impossibility. In 1875 the Hansard was first published. If the argument that the publication of Hansard has tended largely to increase the length of the Sessions, we should have had a very much longer Session in 1875, yet I find it was but four days longer than the Session of 1874—two months and four days. In 1876 the Session lasted but two months and two days, although hon. members had their speeches then reported in full in the Hansard. In 1877, it lasted two months and twenty days. In 1878, the last Session before the elections, which, as a rule, is comparatively lengthy, because the desire to make a record for the coming elections induces hon. members to speak oftener than they otherwise would, the Session lasted three months and three days. In 1879, it lasted three months and two days, and in 1880 it lasted two months and two days. From that record it will be seen that the publication of the Hansard from 1875 downwards had really no perceptible influence on the length of the Sessions. If hon. gentlemen, who remember anything of Old Canada, will refer back to a period ten or twelve years previous to that time, they will agree with me in saying that the Sessions in those days were much longer than since Confederation, and that the speeches, though not fully reported, were very much longer than they have been since. Now, I find that in the Provinces, for instance, where it might naturally be supposed that the Sessions would be very much shorter than those of the Dominion Parliament, owing to the smaller number of members, and the comparatively less important subjects which engage the attention of the Legislatures of those Provinces, as compared with those which come before this Parliament, and where they have no Hansards, it may fairly be said that their Sessions are relatively, though not actually, as long as those of the Dominion Parliament. For instance, in Ontario the Sessions from 1877 to the present year have averaged two months. Two months for the Legislature of Ontario, with its number of members, is longer, in fact, having regard to the questions which engaged its attention, than three months for a House of 206 members with the larger subjects engaging our attention. Then as to Quebec, I find that in 1877-8 the Session of the Legislature lasted two months and nineteen days; in 1879 it covered four months and ten days, although there was no Hansard, or official report. The very great length of that Session was simply due to the circumstance of an extraordinary political contest between the two parties.

In 1880 the Quebec Session, a summer Session, which everybody was anxious to terminate, and during which very little business was done, lasted two months. It may be said that this particular Session of Parliament is an illustration of the evil effects of the Hansard in encouraging long speeches. This Session will probably be longer than any Session since Confederation; but it must be remembered we have had before us for disposal, a very much more important question than any that has engaged our attention since Confederation. Moreover, we met in December, and it must be remembered that the temptation and anxiety to get away from Ottawa does not come upon members strongly till towards spring. It must be remembered, further, that as regards the debate on the Canadian Pacific Railway, hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side, particularly during the earlier part of the Session, were anxious—and very properly from their point of view—in order to give an opportunity to the public outside, to express their opinions on the question, to postpone to as late a period as possible the vote upon the resolutions. No one will pretend that the Hansard had anything to do with the delay thus occasioned. It had nothing to do with the policy, deliberately adopted, and properly from the standpoint of hon. gentlemen opposite, to give the greatest possible opportunity to the public outside to express their opinions on the question of the Canadian Pacific Railway before the final vote was taken. When that vote was taken, for reasons quite sufficient in themselves, a fortnight passed during which we practically did nothing. The Hansard had nothing to do with that result. Hon. members did not then take advantage of any question brought up to make long speeches. Afterwards we had the Budget Speech and the debate that followed it, and no one will pretend that it was a lengthy debate, or that hon. gentlemen were tempted to speak longer under the circumstances, than if there had been no Hansard published. So I think I may fairly assume that the length of the speeches has not been increased by the publication of the Hansard. On the contrary, I am rather inclined to think that the speeches have been shortened in some respects. The right hon. Premier points out that on the 9th March we shall have been only three months in Session, and that we had an adjournment during that time of fully ten days; and, as I have said already, we had a considerable delay in the middle of the Session on the conclusion of the long Pacific Railway debate. Under the circumstances, then, I think we may fairly assume that the publication of the Hansard has not tended in any way to lengthen the duration of the Session. I do not think it has tended to induce hon. members to speak at undue or unnecessary length, and for this reason: they will remember that they are of record in regard to everything they say, and very few hon. members desire to bear the reputation of speaking in Parliament simply for the sake of speaking. Hon. gentlemen usually speak because they have something to say. This is supposed to be a deliberative body, in which, when hon. gentlemen have opinions to utter, they desire to express them in such a way as may seem to them good. I think that the Hansard has tended to improve the character and the tone of our debates in Parliament. I believe that no one can look at the debates in Parliament to-day, and at those of former years, to which I have referred, without realizing that the tone of our debates at present has greatly improved. A few speeches, nowadays, may be longer, but the fact is probably due to a disposition we all have to exhaust every subject we take up, without much reference to what has been said before. That is a practice that obtained in former years also, however. I can well remember when a prominent public man, now no more, used to speak six or seven hours, regularly, in particular debates. As to quoting from Hansard, it is true that we quote the opinions of hon. gentlemen, sometimes, as therein recorded; but I can also remember that when such long speeches in former days were made, large portions of them were made up of quotations from the journals which, after all, took up as much time as we now see spent in citations from Hansard. Under the circumstances I may fairly assume that the Hansard has not tended to increase the length of the Session or the length of the speeches. Hon. gentlemen who make long speeches are, as a rule, reported any way. The only effect of doing away with the Hansard would be to shut out all record of what might be said by three-fourths or four-fifths of the members of the House. The newspapers, however desirous they may be to publish a fair and complete report of everything said in Parliament, cannot always effect that object. The conditions under which their reports are taken render that impossible. The newspapers of each party will undoubtedly give the public the speeches of its leading men in full. They would lose nothing by the abolition of the Hansard. But the other members of each party, whose speeches to themselves, their constituents, and very often to the country at large, may be just as important, influential and valuable, although not, perhaps, as long or pretentious as those of certain leading members, would be practically shut out altogether were its publication stopped. The newspapers do not publish those speeches of the less prominent members with any degree of fullness. When you come to think of what the newspapers have to do, you can readily understand how almost impossible it is to expect from them anything like a complete record of the views of Parliament, through the ordinary channels of the press. Those gentlemen who work so hard in the gallery, so faithfully and efficiently to give good reports of the proceedings in Parliament, have, say, a couple of them to a paper, to take down the reports, transcribe them, and send them to the telegraph office to be transmitted to Toronto or Montreal. The reports have then to be transcribed by the operators at their destination, and be sent to the night editor, or proof-reader, to be prepared for the printer, who sends them in print next morning to the public in all parts of the country. Hon. members can readily understand that it is quite impossible, under the circumstances, in view of the fact that in Ottawa itself we can get nothing like a full newspaper report of the debates, how utterly impossible it is that we can have anything like a moderately complete report of the speeches in Parliament and of its business, so far as the press is concerned, wonderful as have been its efforts in recording the proceedings and debates of Parliament. Therefore, I do not think that on either of those grounds we ought to give up the Hansard. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) suggests the plan of a condensed or summarized report, like the specials of newspapers, so as to lessen the cost of the printing. Well, speaking as one who knows something of this kind of work, I should be very glad—were it possible to accomplish such a scheme—to have at our tables, here, reporters entirely competent for that kind of work. I think it will be obvious to everyone who understands the subject, that it requires a man of infinitely greater skill and ability to prepare a condensed report of a speech than to give a full report. In all my experience in the gallery, extending over twenty-six years, I only remember one gentleman who was what may be called a thorough adept at that kind of work, a gentleman who, unfortunately, this year, I regret to say, is unable to take his seat in the other Chamber of Parliament—Senator Penny was, perhaps, the only man who could properly and fairly give what might be called a condensed report of speeches. The tendency of shorthand writers—I do not say it at all disrespectfully, for there is no class of men for whom I have as high an admiration as shorthand reporters, and the art seems to me to be perfectly wonderful—is this: when they undertake to condense shorthand notes, to give the first part and omit the last part altogether. The difficulty is to follow clearly a speech, to ascertain precisely what the speaker is drifting at, what is the point of his argument, and in order to do that the reporter must be just as well acquainted with the subject and as able to make the speech himself as the speaker who is delivering it. Under those circumstances I think the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) will find it impossible to accomplish the result which he desires. I am aware that the gentlemen now engaged on the Hansard staff are all of them reporters of very great experience, and, as the results of this Session have shown, reporters with whom we have every reason to be entirely satisfied as to the work they are doing. I believe in the debates, or conversations which take place in the Committee of the Whole, in Supply, and which are not as important as the longer and more formal debates, condensation does take place to a very considerable extent. It will be admitted that the Hansard this year has been a very great improvement on that of any previous year. We are able to get every day laid on the Table, about the time the House meets, a full record of the speeches of the previous night. We have, by that means, a report of the whole debates that can be preserved, and the habit which unfortunately prevailed in former Sessions, of practically substituting one speech for another when the manuscript was placed in the hands of some hon. members, does not and cannot prevail under the system that now obtains. I am aware that, as regards the French copies some difficulty has arisen. The matter has been the subject of enquiry by the Committee charged with this work, and from all I have been able to gather the fault this year lies with the printers; I do not say so absolutely because there is a dispute between the translator and printers. But hon. gentlemen who speak French, I trust, will remember that this is the first year of the present experiment. Last year, at this period of the Session, the English debates were as far behind as the French debates are to-day, and the French debates were correspondingly further in arrears. I have no doubt, if it is the opinion of Parliament that Hansard should be continued—and I hope that will be the decision of Parliament—that for next Session such arrangements will be made at the commencement of the Session as to enable us to get out the French edition within at least forty-eight hours from the time of particular debate; and in view of the fact that the reports have to be translated and printed, and then the proofs carefully read, that, I am satisfied, would be entirely satisfactory to the hon. gentlemen who speak the French language. I hope the view of the House will be that Hansard should be maintained. It has not tended to increase the length of the Session. It has tended, I believe, to improve the tone of the debates in Parliament, it has made hon. gentlemen realize more fully their responsibility for what they were saying, because of the knowledge that what they say becomes part of the permanent record of Parliament, and it gives us that which in no other way, situated as we are at Ottawa, and owing to the difficulties of transmitting reports to newspapers and publishing anything like full reports, we are able to obtain, a permanent record of the proceedings of Parliament. The hon. member for Inverness (Mr. MacDonnell) intimated that that was of no value. I am not going to discuss that question. It seems to me that in a new and young country like this, where we are building up our institutions, it cannot be otherwise than of great value to those coming after us to have a complete record, not only of the proceedings of Parliament, but of the motives which led to those proceedings as indicated in the speeches of hon. members.

Mr. SPROULE. During the first Session of this Parliament, when this subject was under discussion, I held that it was important, in the interest of the country and of the House, that some official record should be taken of the proceedings. I adopted this view from the fact that contradictory statements were made on public platforms, and that each party brought forward in support of its view quotations from the different organs of the two political parties. I thought then, and I have had no reason to change that opinion, that if there was one thing more than another important in connection with the history of Parliament, it was to have a correct record of the proceedings of the House. It is important from the fact that we can fall back on the official record, knowing it cannot be contradicted by members of each party. I can endorse what has been said by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) in reference to the speeches of certain hon. members of the House. It is a well-known fact that only a small proportion of the large number of members find their speeches reported in the newspapers; and when the papers go among the constituencies the people generally come to the conclusion that, judged by their speeches, the business of Parliament might be performed as well by two dozen as by two hundred. Again, it is important to the House to have an official report, on account of the statistics collected in the speeches. Many of the hon. members, in respect to public questions, go to a great deal of trouble in gathering statistics which possess general interest, and enable us to come to a correct conclusion and judgment on questions such as those connected with Public Works. The statistics which have been so gathered and placed in a condensed shape, can be subsequently referred to by hon. members. Again, I think the official report is advantageous, in respect to the legislation of the House on account of the different languages spoken here. One hon. member moves a resolution in English, and another hon. member moves an amendment in French, and a large number of members are in ignorance of what is said. That may appear in the French papers, and a translation may be published in the English journals; but we have the advantage of the intelligence of hon. members speaking both languages when their remarks are translated and placed on the records of the country, so that we can turn to them at any time. Again, it is not very probable that an official report lengthens the Session, and I think the speech of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) is satisfactory in respect to that matter. If we remember the length of the Session of the Ontario Legislature, where there are 86 or 88 members, and that the average length of the Ottawa Session, with over 200 members in this House, is only three months, there is no proof that the official report has a tendency to lengthen the Session here. The amount of money expended on the official record is the best spent money during the Session. The action of the Committee charged with the publication of the Debates has been very commendable; the report appears in a satisfactory shape, and we should congratulate the Committee on their being able to lay before the House each day a correct report of every speech delivered in the House. We are thus enabled to draw our own deductions from the arguments presented to the House, and we have the use of the reports almost immediately after the speeches have been delivered. In view of these considerations and the experience we have had through this Session up to the present time, I see no reason to change the opinion at which I arrived during the first Session of this Parliament, in regard to the publication of the Debates; and it will give me pleasure to know that it is the wish of Parliament to maintain the official record, so that the Debates may be handed down to posterity.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, perhaps it will be proper to this discussion, if every one will ask himself, what purpose does the House desire to accomplish by the publication of the Hansard? I do not know whether there is absolute unanimity as to what its particular purpose is. If the House regards the discussions which take place on public questions as a means of informing the House, and, in a secondary sense, the country, and convincing the House—although we know that parties as such cannot easily be convinced—that is one purpose; but, if it is held that part of the advantage of Hansard is, as has been spoken of by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), too, as a means of cultivating the art of speaking and inducing younger members to spread themselves out, as their leaders are doing, because the newspapers do not properly report them, that is entirely another purpose. I do not believe, Sir, that there is any necessity for that kind of protection for young members. The younger members of this House will always be overshadowed by their leaders. If the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government makes a speech of two hours—and I by no means wish to say that he often does so—an exhaustive speech upon any particular subject, he deals with that subject in such a manner as to bring out almost all the points which are important or of interest to the country from his particular point of view. So with the hon. leader of the Opposition—and I mention these hon. gentlemen, because of the position they occupy—if he makes a speech of two or three hours, his side of the question is likely to be pretty thoroughly presented. Now, if the object of Hansard is to enable the younger members to repeat these arguments in varied and diluted forms, in order that they may see themselves in print, and that their constituents may be able to know two or three weeks hence that Messrs. Smith and Jones made speeches as well as Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. Blake—I say, if that is the object, then let us have it cultivated, let us have its ample folds extended, let us extend a system which is growing—I do not say it has grown into an abuse—a system which I do not think will tend to elevate the tone of Parliament. There is no doubt that, as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has pointed out, the existence of Hansard induces hon. members to collate valuable statistics and other information, and up to a certain point that may be desirable; but if one hon. gentleman is to be cultivated into the habit of making three hours' speeches, why not all? Why not have 200 members occupying 600 hours on every question which may come before the House. It seems to me that the newspapers may be trusted to furnish such reports of our debates as the public requires, apart, perhaps, from the inconvenience which results from the fact that the party newspapers do not pay much attention to the utterances of those whom they usually do not support. But when we see an hon. member delivering a speech—perhaps a good and able speech—with the greatest sang froid, handing his extracts to the reporters at the Table, and proceeding utterly careless whether or not he is listened to by hon. members in this House or not, continuing to talk to people outside of the House, then, I say that, in that view, Hansard is not fulfilling what I consider to be its function. Though I cannot vote either for the amendment of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) or the motion of the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. MacDonnell) I think the debate which has taken place will do no harm, and I do not think the time is distant when the House will have to deal with the question which has been suggested in the last two speeches, namely: a better Hansard is not a necessity for the purpose of protecting the younger members against the treatment which they receive at the hands of the newspapers.

Mr. JONES. I have only a few words to say on the question before the House. I believe that we should have a record of our debates, and I am in favor of Hansard, but I believe in Hansard coming fairly and correctly before the country. I have frequently seen it the case that speeches from both sides of the House have been materially changed from what hon. gentlemen have said, and that the report finally published has not been a fair résumé of the speeches. During this Session Hansard has been very much better than before, except perhaps with regard to the French translation. The reports in English are, however, laid on our desks within twenty-four hours after the delivery of the speeches. I do not believe that one moment should be allowed to hon. members to correct their speeches, and I believe that the effect of such a system would be that our time would not be so much taken up in long speeches. I do not think that the system proposed by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) of the reporters making a synopsis or résumé—I do not think would work well, or even at all, it would amount to a change in the character of the speeches on both sides of the House. I believe that the speeches of hon. members of this House should be reported verbatim et literatim, and if that plan was followed I do not think we should have so many speeches of four or five hours in length. I know that it is of importance that the leaders on both sides of the House should lay before the public their views in almost every possible form; but I believe that when hon. members have expressed their opinions, even in the heat of debate, they should be recorded as delivered, and, therefore, I opposed the proposition that longer time should be afforded for the purpose of correction. I believe what we really wish to say is better said in the heat of debate than in the process of careful revision. When a man is speaking he perhaps says something which he would not deliberately put in writing, and when he gets his Hansard he erases a few words—an “and,” or a “nor,” or a “shall,” or a “may”—and the result is to change the whole tenor of a sentence, and perhaps of a speech. I have seen this done, and I have known of it in my own personal experience, though I do not speak much in the House. I shall move an amendment to the amendment as follows: That the words after the word “Session,” at the end of the fourth section be struck out, and that the following be inserted:—

That the speeches of the members of this House be reported by the Hansard reporters verbatim et literatim, and that no time be given for alterations and corrections, and that no member of this House shall be allowed to speak more than one hour without the consent of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a matter which more particularly interests the body of the House. As the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Huntington) has truly said the leaders on both sides are sure to be fully reported by the press of the day; and therefore they will not suffer much, nor will the Government of the day suffer much, if the Hansard were done away with and the country was obliged to trust to the reports in the newspapers, be they long or short, according to the supposed interests of the papers. But it is in the interest of the main body of the House that I think it will be a mistake to adopt any of these resolutions, and that we should proceed as we have been doing in having the debates taken down carefully and printed as speedily as possible so as to prevent the possibility of the great abuse which has grown up of hon. members being rather ashamed of the speeches they made and re-writing them for Hansard. It was unfair and untrue, because no such speeches were made in the House, and it was unjust to the hon. members who happen to reply to that speech. If you open the Hansard of two or three years ago you will find an hon. member making a speech, and that speech is replied to, and the speech in reply had but very little reference indeed to the speech of which it was an answer. This is all cured by the system we have adopted of having the speeches printed and published within a very short period after they were delivered. That prevents any serious tampering with the speech as taken down by the reporters. With respect to the amendment, I think if it were carried out it would not suit either my hon. friend who moved it or the majority of this House. Certainly it would not suit me. It might suit some hon. gentlemen who speak with peculiar verbal accuracy and finish their sentences and round them off as if they had been prepared. Some have that happy faculty; I for one have it not, and I should be very sorry to have my speeches published verbatim et literatim. It is well known that objection was taken a good many years ago in England by some members of Parliament who complained of the reporting in the Times as being unfair, and insisting, in the language of the amendment to the amendment, that the speeches should be taken verbatim et literatim. The Times took those hon. gentlemen at their word, and for two or three weeks it published their speeches verbatim et literatim until those gentlemen had to go on their knees to request it to discontinue that mode of publishing their speeches. Then again, as to limiting the length of speeches, as proposed by this resolution. We have not got any obstructionist in this House, so that it is scarcely necessary to have the cloture introduced into Canada, and they had pretty hard work to introduce it in England. I should be sorry if circumstances should ever arise in Canada, rendering it necessary to interfere with the freedom of speech in anything whatever. As to the proposition that a résumé should be made, I quite agree with the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) that it would require a greater degree of ability to prepare an honest and satisfactory résumé of a speech than to make the original speech. As you cannot expect to find such men that system would result in an utter failure. Not a single member would be satisfied with the résumé of his speech; every member would be complaining of the résumé of his speech. Then we are driven to the original resolution to do away with the Hansard altogether. As I said before, that rests with the House. But I think it would be a retrograde step, it would be unjust to the great body of the House. If we can afford it—and we can afford it—every hon. member who represents a constituency has a right to have his speech reported; for we are all equal here, we are all equally interested and have equal rights and responsibilities; we all have the same rights; the youngest member has the same right, as the oldest member, to have his utterances as fully spread out in the official report as the leader of the House or of the Opposition. It would be a retrograde step, it would be a mistake, it would be a historical blunder. We all know the regrets that are expressed by every literary man, every political man, every statesman, and every historian, that the speeches made by the great men in the days of old were, in consequence of the practice of Parliament, lost forever. I think it was the younger Pitt who said that he would rather have a lost speech of Lord Bolingbroke than all the lost pages of Livy. We have no speeches of Chatham; no speeches of Bolingbroke; none of the great speeches made in the Long Parliament, at the time of the fight between freedom and tyranny, in the time of Charles I. We all know how eagerly historians have looked up every little sentence which can be discovered, any casual note taken, any remark made by any of the leaders of public opinion from the time of Queen Elizabeth until now. If you open a history and read about those days you will find how imperfect are the notes of Cavendish, the mere scraps preserved by Strange, or Gray, or by any others who took notes of public utterances of the statesmen of those times, and yet how eagerly they are scanned in order that historians may find out the motives that moved the body of Parliament—not merely the leaders of Parliament, but the great mass of parliamentarians, because it is the general opinion of Parliament, and not the opinion of the leaders of the day that shows what the public pulse is. It is the expression of opinion by the mass of the members that shows really what the feelings of the people are as expressed by their representatives. Even in Canada how deeply interesting would be a Hansard showing the debates in the old Province of Upper Canada, or of Lower Canada, giving the discussions in 1791 and 1792, when the two Legislatures were formed. If we had that, it would be the most interesting volume in the world, and every Canadian would read with the deepest interest the speeches on the subjects that engaged the attention of the members of Parliament of those days. He would learn what the chief subject of interest of the people, what the style of speaking and the manner of thought, not of one or two great leaders, but the great body of the representatives of the people, were in those early days. And we are in a great measure without a colonial history. We have no means of tracing out the very groundwork of all our legislation—the motives and impulses of those petty municipal questions which were the chief subjects of interest in the early days, and which have expanded into the large subjects which are now engaging the attention of the people and the Legislature of Canada. As a matter of history, it is of the very greatest importance that the remarks of every hon. member, who has a responsibility as the representative of the people, should, if we can afford it—and we can afford it—be as fully recorded in the official report as those of a leader. I hope we shall not commit such a great mistake, I hope we shall not make such a relapse into barbarism as to throw over the only means by which after generations shall be able to learn what were the subjects of interest engaging our attention, what was the style of speaking and the style of thought, and what were the moving impulses of the people and their representatives in Parliament.

Mr. JONES. I ask permission to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment to the amendment withdrawn.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness). I am surprised to hear the eloquent and warm speech delivered by the right hon. leader of the Government. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the reporters in the gallery are not a good means of recording for future generations what occurs today. The hon. gentleman referred to the time of Charles the First and Cromwell, and the early days of Canada. There were not short-hand writers in those days; there were not such papers as the Globe and the Mail. I have seen the Finance Minister take the report of his speech from the columns of the Globe in preference to the report made by the official reporters; and the speeches made by the leading members of this House will be as faithfully recorded by the reporters in the gallery as if we retained the official reporters. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) took some pains to ferret out arguments against my resolution; he even went into a comparison of the various Sessions since Confederation. If the hon. gentleman had not wished to advance a disingenuous argument, he would have informed the House that in the early days of Confederation we had to grapple with questions which are now settled. We had to legislate for the Confederation; we had to pass such laws as the Insolvent Act and the Election Act; we had to frame our Criminal Code, and to revise it from time to time; we had to reconcile Nova Scotia and the other discontented Provinces that came into the Union; and we had to bring British Columbia and Prince Edward Island into the Union. We have not such a variety of subjects of general legislation today. How much general legislation will there be in the Statute-book of this Session? Take up the Statutes passed in 1875, and you will find no legislation beyond a few amendments and private Bills. Therefore, I say that a comparison of the duration of the Sessions is no criterion by which we can judge of the effect of the existence of the Hansard in prolonging the Sessions of Parliament. Hon. gentlemen say that the proceedings of this House must be recorded. Sir, we have two or three clerks here; we have the Journals of the House, in which is recorded most minutely everything that occurs here, and the desultory and irrelevant debates are not such as we should transmit to posterity, because they are no more faithful than the arguments of two advocates in a court of law. The arguments are purposely worked and colored. Take, for instance, the speeches of the Finance Minister and the ex-Finance Minister, and they will puzzle the people of the present day, to say nothing of future generations.

Mr. OGDEN. I should regret very much if either the original motion or the amendment were carried; and I have no doubt the mover of the amendment will withdraw it as he has been requested to do. I believe the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. MacDonnell) is not sincere; he only wants to make a little show.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. OGDEN. I say he is not sincere, for many hon. members perhaps remember the day when he was making a very important speech in this House. There was then no Hansard, but there were many ladies and gentlemen in the gallery, and many clever newspaper reporters in the press gallery—perhaps no more so than those there to-day, because I believe there is as good a staff in the gallery to-day as ever sat in the Dominion Parliament—and this hon. gentleman stood up, and fearing that he was not heard, shouted: "Do you hear what I am saying in the gallery? If you do, write it down." There is no gentleman in the House who is more desirous of having his speeches scattered broadcast throughout the country than the hon. member for Inverness.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Or deserves it better.

Mr. OGDEN. Yes; that is understood. One hon. gentleman says, let the speeches be condensed. It is well enough for those who speak for two or three hours to have their speeches condensed; but if we who occupy seats on the back benches, who speak only once or twice in the Session, and then only ten or fifteen lines, had our speeches condensed, they would amount to a simple "Hear, hear," "Yes, yes," or "No, no" I must protest against any of these resolutions being adopted. I shall vote for having the publication of the Hansard continued at any cost, because I think my hon. friend from Inverness and myself have a right to have our speeches published broadcast over the country; and if we are ever destined to make our mark, I think the Hansard should be the medium through which our constituents should know we are the proper men in the proper place.

Amendment negatived on division. Resolution negatived on division.

PRAYERS.

EXACTIONS BY PAWNBROKERS.

Mr. ORTON in introducing a Bill (No. 86) to prevent exactions by pawnbrokers, said: I desire to offer a few words in explanation of this Bill. The intention of the Bill is to prevent exactions by pawnbrokers. The Pawnbrokers Act was passed at the time the usury laws were in force in Canada, and under that Act they were permitted to exact 20 per cent., and while those laws were in force the pawnbrokers could not exact more than 20 per cent. interest. Since the usury laws were repealed the pawnbrokers can exact any rate of interest they like, and it is well known that in many cities pawnbrokers exact 100 and 150 per cent., and those heavy rates of interest are levied on the poorest class of the community. I think a great injustice is perpetrated by the pawnbrokers, and that some legislative action should be taken respecting the matter. Although it is now late in the Session, I hope the Government will facilitate the passage of the Bill for the relief of that class.

Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that, for the remainder of the Session, Government business shall have precedence on Wednesdays after routine proceedings.

Motion agreed to.

BEET ROOT SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That in order to encourage the introduction of the manufacture of beet root sugar in Canada, this House declares that such industry shall be exempted from the payment of Excise duties for eight years, from the 1st of July, 1881.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. Minister had better give his reasons for proposing this alteration. I think a nearly similar proposition was sanctioned by the House about eight years ago, on which no action has been taken. The House would like to know what reasons there are for supposing that if this offer extended for another eight years this industry will be prosecuted. I suppose the hon. gentleman would hardly bind himself not to lower the duties, although he might bind himself not to put on any Excise.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It will be remembered that in 1873, a gentleman, then occupying a seat on the other side of the House, moved a resolution declaring it desirable that no excise duties should be imposed upon sugar manufactured from beet root for ten years. Up to a recent date no steps were taken to establish this industry, but within the last twelve months several parties have expressed their determination to enter in the manufacture of beet root sugar in different parts of Canada, provided they were assured by the Government that no Excise duty would be exacted for a term of years. It became apparent to the Government that if this assurance could be given by the House, parties were prepared to invest their capital in this enterprise with the view of testing whether it would be successfully carried on. When I was making my Budget Speech, one of my colleagues placed in my hands a telegram from one of the promoters of this industry, stating that he had purchased machinery and that operations would be commenced this season. I believe there are two other companies in a like position, though, perhaps, they have not made the same progress that has been made by the other company. I am satisfied the experiment is now to be tested, providing this resolution is adopted by the House. When this resolution was proposed in 1873, there was a general feeling in the country, and especially among the representatives in the House from the agricultural districts, that this was an important industry, and should receive encouragement in the shape of exempting from Excise duty the sugar manufactured from beet roots. After that resolution was passed it became my duty, as Finance Minister, to visit England for the purpose of negotiating a loan. I also visited France, and enquired into this particular industry, and I satisfied myself that if two conditions could be realized the industry would be a success; first, the percentage of saccharine matter contained in the beets grown in Canada, and, second, whether the farmers of this country could be induced to produce a sufficient quantity of beets. I visited one of the largest manufactories in France, and secured the fullest information from the gentleman who had charge of it, and I am satisfied, from all the evidence I can obtain, that this industry may be successfully carried on in the Dominion of Canada. The objects we desire to attain are, in the first place, to secure a higher cultivation for a large portion of the soil, and, in the next place, to encourage our export trade in cattle by producing a large quantity of the refuse of the beets after the syrup has been extracted, which has been found in France very good for fattening cattle. The Government, after considering the whole matter, decided to ask the House to offer this encouragement of exempting from Excise duty sugar manufactured from beet root for a period of eight years.

Mr. MILLS. This is rather a singular resolution to come from the hon. gentleman. I see that he does not ask the House to adopt this resolution in the interest of the agriculturists who are to raise the beets, but it is to encourage the manufacture of those beets into sugar, whether they are grown in Canada or in some other part of the world. Now, the hon. gentleman, in this National Policy for which he has taken so much credit, has not only exempted manufactures from taxation, but he has imposed a special tax upon similar products coming in from abroad, with a view of giving to the producers a higher price for the articles which they manufacture than they otherwise would receive. Now, it seems to me that articles which are primarily produced in the country by the agriculturists are to stand upon a wholly different footing, and they are asking, not to be protected, not to have the prices of their products artificially increased, but they are asking for some assurance that the hon. gentleman will not subject products of their industry to a special burden. As a Free-trader I can support a proposition of this kind, but I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman proposes to deal with tobacco in the same way, whether he is going to tax this product of the farmers of Canada and subject it to a special burden. The hon. gentleman has, so far as I know, except in the production of beer and ardent spirits, imposed no Excise duties upon any article manufactured in Canada. The manufacturers of cotton are protected by heavy duties. There is no apparent increase in prices which they are enabled to obtain in consequence of this increase of taxes that is taken from them in the form of an Excise duty and handed over to the public Treasury. The hon. gentlemen do not go to the cotton manufacturer, as they do to the manufacturer of whiskey, and say to him: "We have imposed a Customs duty which enables you to ask a higher price than you would otherwise be able to obtain, and we ask you to hand over that excess to the Government." The hon. gentleman has not done that in a single instance. But the hon. gentleman is not only unwilling to let the agriculturists alone, but he insists that the products of their industry shall be subject to special burdens. I remember a few years ago, during the American war, that growing tobacco sold as high as $100 an acre. That industry has been completely wiped out by the Excise regulations which the hon. gentleman has seen proper to adopt. The interests of the agriculturists are sacrificed to the exigencies of the public revenue. But a wholly different rule prevails in regard to the manufacturer, to whose interest the public revenues are sacrificed. In this case, the hon. gentleman has gone so far in the direction of Free-trade as to declare that those who choose to engage in the production of beet root sugar, shall be left alone, and no special tax shall be imposed on that industry. He does not go so far as to say—and I think he acts wisely—that he will give them special protection, and that they shall have no protection from abroad. But I would ask again, whether the hon. gentleman intends to put the agriculturists of Canada on the same footing as the other industrial classes, and whether tobacco, which is one branch of agricultural industry, shall be exempt from special burdens, or sacrificed to the interests of the public revenue.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am rather surprised that my hon. friend should say that this is a proposition adverse to the interests of the agriculturist—

Mr. MILLS. I did not say that.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Because if there has been one proposition submitted for the consideration of this House since 1873, which, more than another, has been looked to with great interest by the agriculturists of the Dominion, it is this proposition. It is a proposition to encourage this particular industry, that three or four industries may be started, and if these prove successful, additional employment will be given to thousands and tens of thousands of our farmers. And, as I stated before, after the saccharine matter is extracted, the residue is very valuable for feeding and fattening cattle, so that our cattle trade will be greatly benefitted. The interest of the hon. gentleman appears to be directed to the article of tobacco; there is no proposition to impose taxes on home-grown tobacco as against foreign tobacco. This proposition is not exclusively or specially in the interest of the producer of sugar or the manufacturer, but in the interest of the agriculturists of the whole Dominion.

Mr. MILLS. I do not propose to permit the hon. gentleman to misrepresent me. I do not object to the proposition; on the contrary, I supported it when it was introduced into the House before; but I point out that it is a proposition to leave a particular industry alone, and not protect it. I ask the hon. gentleman whether he proposes to deal with the tobacco industry in the same way.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is no proposition in reference to tobacco. There is no parallel between the two.

Mr. COLBY. I think no proposition was ever received with greater favor by both sides of this House and the country, than that made by Mr. Joly in 1873, and which is now taken up by the Finance Minister. It was at that time felt to be a proposition in the interests of the farming classes of this country—not of one section only, but of the Dominion at large; because the cultivation of the sugar beet, if it can be made a success in this country, can be made a success in probably all the Provinces of the Dominion. If it was important at that time that this undertaking should be encouraged, I think it is doubly important now, because as the North-West is speedily opened up and becomes the great wheat growing region of the country, the farmers of the older Provinces will have to give their attention more to stock raising, dairying and other industries, such as that proposed to be encouraged now. Therefore, I am quite certain there will be no objection to this proposition from any section of this country. I find one fault with it, however, and that is that it does not go far enough. The late Finance Minister made an enquiry as to the probability of any industries being stimulated by an extended period of exemption from Excise duties. Notwithstanding the liberal inducement which has been on the Statute-book for many years, capitalists have not been emboldened to embark in this enterprise. Not only has the Dominion offered to exempt such enterprises for ten years, but the Province of Quebec has offered a considerable subsidy to the first enterprise of the kind which might be established. The reason capitalists have hesitated to invest in the industry is that the manufacturer cannot depend on an adequate supply of his raw material. It is a purely experimental enterprise. It has succeeded, to the astonishment of the world, in France, Germany, and other countries in Europe; but the conditions there may be different from the conditions here. It is not known whether our climate and soil are suitable, though it is believed they are; it is not known whether the farmers of this country would take kindly to this industry, as it is outside of their accustomed line. If a person starts a cotton factory he knows that he can buy his raw material at the market prices in the markets of the world, and the case is the same with almost every other kind of manufacture. But the capitalist who may be considering the project of manufacturing beet root sugar has no assurance that he will be able, at any price, to get his raw material, and consequently he knows that he runs a tremendous risk, and this has hitherto deterred capitalists from embarking in this enterprise. Now, however, as the hon. Finance Minister has stated, capitalists have decided to try the experiment, and manufactories are to be established at Berthier, Coaticook, and Farnham, in the Province of Quebec; but I can assure this House that the capitalists who are risking their money in these enterprises are doing so with a great deal of trepidation and uncertainty. In some instances the municipalities are giving them aid. Under these circumstances, I think another proposition should be added to that of the Finance Minister. Since the Finance Minister came into office, he has exempted from duty all machinery required for the manufacture of cottons, for which the raw material does not exist in this country, but is imported. What I ask is, that he shall be as liberal towards those gentlemen who are assuming the great risk and hazard of starting this enterprise. I do not ask that there should be a long exemption, but I think it is due to these pioneer companies which, at such great risk to themselves, are solving this experiment, that they should be treated as other manufacturers who have started industries in this country have been treated. If, after the industry has been established, it has proved a success, there will be no need of its further exemption from taxation. Other companies will go into the business from speculative motives; they will understand then the trade basis of the enterprise; they will know whether the conditions are favorable for the production of beets in this country, whether the farmers will be willing to supply beets; and they will not experience the hardships and difficulties to which these three companies are exposed. If it be an enterprise which is likely to be permanent in this country, then these parts of machinery which are not manufactured, may perhaps be manufactured in this country, and protection may fairly be given to their manufacture; but I think these companies which are now taking upon themselves this great experiment, should be exempted for this little period from Customs duty. I am sure this proposition will meet with the cordial approval of the members of this House. I hope, if such be the case, the hon. Finance Minister will consent to it. I will anticipate the reply the hon. Finance Minister will make to this proposition, namely, that he has already enlarged the term of exemption from

Excise. I believe he has extended the period of exemption to eight years, for the purpose of meeting this case—but it has not met it. Suppose this experiment should prove unsuccessful—and no one can say that it will be successful—in what condition will these companies find themselves? Well, as there will be no market here for that machinery which they imported at great cost, it will be either a total loss to them by keeping it here, or they will be obliged to send it back to the country where they purchased it, or to the United States, sustaining in any case a heavy loss. I think that loss in itself will be heavy enough without adding to it the loss of duty paid to the Government. This proposition is quite in consonance with the policy which my hon. friend is here to expound, and administrators so ably. We believe in the free admission of machinery not manufactured here, as much as we believe in the free admission of raw material not produced here; but the hon. Finance Minister has found it difficult to carry out that principle, as it is difficult to know at all times what was and what was not manufactured here. That difficulty does not apply to this case. There is no manufactory of machinery for beet root purposes in this country. This is an exceptional case, and I hope the hon. Finance Minister will treat it as such. I move:

That the said resolution be amended by adding the following words: "And that such parts of machinery which may be imported into Canada, to be used in the manufacture of beet root sugar, and which are not manufactured in this country, be admitted free of duty until the first day of September next."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD suggested that the amendment be withdrawn and submitted in Committee.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. ORTON. The hon. member appears to think this industry is not directly in the interests of the farmers. In France there is no one article that is a greater source of wealth to agriculturists than the sugar beet. From an analysis made of the sugar beet in this country, it contains a greater amount of saccharine matter than that of other countries. I congratulate the hon. Finance Minister and the Government on the encouragement given to this important industry. The Province of Ontario is behind Quebec in this matter. I hope, however, that Province will follow the example set her and give encouragement to this important industry. The cultivation of beet root improves the land instead of exhausting it. Another feature in connection with this industry is the employment it will give to farm laborers during the winter season.

Mr. SKINNER. I have been told that Upper Canada is very much behind Lower Canada in this respect; as regards Government action certainly we are. The Ontario Government have given no bonuses for the encouragement of this industry. But we have two sugar refineries in my own constituency (South Oxford) without having received any Government or municipal aid. I had the pleasure of asking the Finance Minister some two years ago, his intention with reference to an Excise duty on sugar manufactured from the beet. He informed me that the Government had not changed their intentions, and did not contemplate imposing any Excise duty. The result is, there is a manufactory of sugar from beet root in my constituency and also one from sorghum. They are both very much in the interest of the agriculturists, not only in their interest as a class, but in the interest of the land. They also benefit the manufacturers, who can purchase the article and send it to the old country. I trust the Finance Minister will see his way to put sorghum on the same footing as beet root. Sorghum is a cane we raise very largely in our district. We are nowise interested in tobacco, upon which I do not care how much Excise duty is placed. But let us encourage the growth of sorghum, which is a sugar cane something like Indian corn, and we raise it largely, that being found very much in the interest of our farmers. We get back from sorghum, for agricultural purposes, as much if not more refuse than from the beet.

Mr. PLUMB. It was characteristic of the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who does not like any opposition to his pet theories, to say that the proposition of the Finance Minister was not in any possible way in the special interest of the farmers of Canada, that it was chiefly in the interest of the manufacturers and would benefit farmers outside this country as well as here. If the hon. gentleman knew anything about this sugar manufacture, he would be aware that the beet root sugar manufactory has to be established in the very midst of the regions in which the beet root is produced, and that that produce cannot be transported any great distance; that it is one of those home products that essentially protects the farmer and enables him to secure a rotation of crops by encouraging a new product which is of great service to his soil. If the hon. gentleman had looked into the statistics in reference to this industry, he would have found there is no greater argument in favor of the protective system than the growth of the beet root sugar industry in France. In 1829 there were but 30,000 tons of beet root sugar produced in France; in 1876 the quantity reached over 450,000 tons. The sugar production of the world is about 3,000,000 tons, of which quantity over 1,200,000 tons are obtained from the sugar beet, or over 40 per cent. of all the sugar manufactured. That industry took its rise in the system of Protection which the hon. gentleman opposite derides, and probably always will deride; for he is in what may be called a state of invincible ignorance, in which one can learn nothing outside his own line of argument. It is well known that the cultivation of beets can only be carried on, for the purpose of making sugar, in a country where there is a considerable period of frost. In France the period of manufacture is ninety to one hundred days. Further north, where the beet is being cultivated with great success, in Russia, and other similar countries, the time for its manufacture into sugar extends to one hundred and fifteen days. The Province of Quebec, with its long winter and warm summer, is particularly suitable to that product; and I am very glad my hon. friend the Finance Minister has submitted this proposition, because I know it to be in the interest of Quebec. Judging from the noise I hear, I regret that there is a disposition on the Opposition benches to prevent a fair ventilation of this question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. The noise comes from your own friends.

Mr. PLUMB. It would be well if the constituents of those hon. gentlemen could know—the voters interested in this proposition—the spirit in which this discussion is met by them in this House. I have, upon various occasions, advocated exactly the system which is embodied in the resolution of the Finance Minister, asking for encouragement to those willing to embark their capital in this very important industry. In France, where the beet root culture has succeeded, the exportation of cattle to England now reaches 32 head where only one was exported before. It was formerly said by gentlemen who agree with the theories of the member for Bothwell, that the introduction of the beet root sugar industry would ruin the shipping trade connected with the importation of sugar of France; there were 20,000 tons of shipping engaged in the transportation of sugar formerly. So far from ruining the shipping, it has increased it over 350,000 tons. This manufacture has also increased the agricultural products. The culture of the beet renews the soil and acts as a cleanser. The root is small, weighing about two pounds, and its growth enables the farmer to secure rotation of crops. I can see that the noise which greets me comes from hon. gentlemen in Opposition, who do not want to hear my remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS. It is your own friends.

Mr. PLUMB. No; my own friends are not at the points on the left hand side whence the noise proceeds.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. PLUMB. The production of tobacco exhausts the soil by extracting from it an insoluble ash, and yields nothing in the way of food for manure. The soil of Virginia is already exhausted in this way; and there is not the same reason for the legislation which my hon. friend proposes, for the encouragement of the growth of tobacco, that exists as regards the raising of beets, although I have no doubt that the growth of tobacco could be made a good staple industry of this country, under the differential duty imposed by my hon. friend the Finance Minister, that gives an advantage to the Canadian grower. The county in which I live grows tobacco, as do also Kent and Essex, with great success; and it is grown in the southern tier of the Quebec counties. I was very glad to observe that my hon. friend saw his way to establish a differential duty between the tobacco imported from foreign countries and that grown in Canada in favor of the home article. That was a step in the right direction. The amount of capital required for establishing a manufactory of beet sugar is about $300,000 or $400,000, so that in order to embark in that industry encouragement would have to be given by the Government. As to the production of such a manufactory as would cost $300,000, I have a few figures here which I shall read to the House.

Mr. JONES. I rise to ask for order. I think the statistics to be given by the hon. gentleman will instruct many hon. members, and I think those interruptions should cease.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would just say that the hon. gentleman himself is not fair in his remarks towards members on this side. I can assure him that the quarter whence these noises come never contributes a vote to the Opposition side of the division list, and if the hon. gentleman persists in accusing hon. members of the Opposition of interrupting him, he will not be doing so fairly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says that those who are guilty of these unparliamentary and unseemly interruptions never strengthen the Opposition by a vote. The hon. gentleman knows then who they are, and he would serve the cause of order by naming them.

Mr. MACKENZIE. If the hon. gentleman admits that he is incapable of leading the House I shall be happy to take his place.

Mr. PLUMB. These manufactories, which contain eight presses and work 150 days, produce 3,000,000 pounds, or 20,000 pounds per day. The production of the sugar beet, which is a very small beet, weighing about two pounds, with careful cultivation is from 30 to 40 tons to the acre. Mr. Bernard who is one of the officials of the Quebec Government, and who has taken a great interest in this question, has shown by an analysis of beet grown in Quebec, which he has submitted to the chemists of France and Belgium, that our Canadian beets are superior to the beets of either of those two countries in sugar-producing qualities, and he has shown that this is a branch of manufacture which is quite within our reach. From the experience of other countries in regard to this industry, I hope that the resolution which the Finance Minister has brought forward will result in the establishment of a new interest in Canada, one which will afford the farmer the benefit of a new item in the rotation of his crops. It is an industry in which a large amount of capital will be employed, and so far from its benefits being restricted to the manufacturer, they will be enjoyed by the whole agricultural community of both the Provinces of Old Canada, and, perhaps, eventually of the Maritime Provinces as well. I say, therefore, that it does not become any gentleman in this House to cry down any attempt to supply information upon a subject so important as this. I am not aware that this information has been brought into the House in such a form, that hon. members are so familiar with the subject that they wish to learn nothing of it here. I say this is a fitting time to discuss this question in the Parliament of Canada; and I shall not be deterred from giving what I know to be facts taken from official documents, by any unseemly interruptions, no matter from what side of the House they may emanate. I cannot believe that any hon. gentleman who is wedded as we are to this system of endeavoring to develop the interests of Canada, will deride so important a proposition as that brought forward by the hon. the Finance Minister, or those who may endeavor to support his contention by arguments calculated to strengthen that resolution. I hope the resolution will pass, and I trust I have not unduly or improperly trespassed on the time of the House in giving information which I had brought together in 1877, with a view of bringing this very question before the House of Commons.

Mr. BOURBEAU. Mr. Speaker, I think that the motion brought forward to foster the beet root sugar industry in the country, ought to meet with the support of all the members of this House. I do not think that any one should rise to protest against this motion being introduced, as it favors not only the manufacturers but the farmers of this country. I was much surprised to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). When he spoke on the subject, he asked that the culture of Canadian tobacco should be placed on the same footing as it is wished to place the manufacture of beet root sugar. During the whole time that the Administration of which the hon. member for Bothwell was a member, was governing the country, he never rose to make such a proposal. He never spoke in the sense of reducing the duties imposed on Canadian tobacco. Yet I remember that during the Session of 1878, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Bolduc) made a motion that I had the honor of seconding, and that motion asked the Government of the day to reduce the duties imposed on Canadian tobacco; we then saw the hon. members, who supported the Government, and especially the hon. member for Bothwell, vote as a single man to deny the request made by the hon. member for Beauce. And now that these duties, which amounted to ten cents per pound, have been reduced by the present Government to four cents, the hon. member would wish to see these duties still further reduced or done away with altogether. I regret that the hon. member for Bothwell should not have seen fit then to protect growers of tobacco. I too, Mr. Speaker, would like to see the duties imposed on Canadian tobacco done away with altogether. I have ever been in favor of that policy; I have always thought that in this country the farmer was not sufficiently protected; but I have always been consistent in my conduct. I have not, like the hon. member for Bothwell, when he was part and parcel of the Liberal Administration, invoked a policy whose object was to maintain high duties on Canadian tobacco. I will confess, Mr. Speaker, that we can never grant too much protection to the farmer of this country. It is well known that land does not yield large profits, and that agriculture has not reached here a standard as high as that of other countries. The motion made to-day by the hon. Minister of Finance, will be, I think, the means of encouraging the cultivation of beet root in this country. We shall then see the land improved by this cultivation, as it is absolutely necessary to manure for that purpose. In order that the yield be good, the cultivation must be made on a good basis. Public opinion has formed itself on that point in this country, and especially in the Province of Quebec. Last year, a few gentlemen came from France, and made us certain proposals with regard to introducing the culture of beet root in this country; we know how promptly the farmers responded.

In the county which I have the honor of representing, in less than a fortnight we were able to give assurance that 1,500 acres of land would be devoted to the culture of the sugar beet. We were able to make contracts with the farmers, who bound themselves to cultivate beet root for twelve years over 1,500 acres of land. That is a proof that there is a wish that sugar refineries should be built in this country; and when I saw the hon. Minister of Finance make that proposal, I thought he was doing so, not only on behalf of the manufacturer, but also for the good of the farmer. We must not forget those who are about to build the sugar refineries, and who will incur great expense in doing so; too much protection cannot be given them. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the proposal made by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) should also be agreed to. I do not think that a single member of this House should oppose the free entry of machinery necessary to the first refineries built in the country. It is true that the Government will be making a sacrifice, but this sacrifice will be fully compensated by the fact that these industries will open a source of wealth not only to the farmer, but also to the Government. If one is to judge of those industries in this country by what they are in European countries, we may say that we are introducing into the country an industry that will give farmers a competency; and when farmers shall have learnt the benefits accruing from that industry, when they shall have improved their lands so as to grow the sugar beet to advantage, all other agricultural products will increase in quality and the yield of the land will be double what it is to-day. The refuse of the beet root sugar refineries will serve to fatten cattle and other animals required by the butcher and employed in the cultivation of the land. The farmer, whilst applying himself to develop cheese and butter factories, will discover that the establishing of beet root sugar refineries will be most advantageous to him for the feeding of his cattle. I trust that these few remarks will have the desired effect, and as I said at the outset, I hope that there will not be a single member of the House who will refuse to vote with the hon. Minister of Finance on a question of so great an import to the farmers.

(In the Committee.)

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Mr. Chairman, the proposition which is contained in the resolution, and in my hon. friend's amendment, has had the careful consideration of the Government, but they have not felt that they would be justified in accepting the proposition made by the parties who were interested in this industry, and for this reason: From 1871 to 1873 there was a law in force by which machinery not made in Canada was admitted free on certain conditions, one of which was that the parties importing such machinery should submit evidence to satisfy the Treasury Board that the machinery had not been made in the country. I had some experience in respect to the operation of that law, as I was Minister of Customs at the time, and these regulations were adopted by the Government requiring that the certificate of two machinists should be presented as evidence that such machinery was not made in the country. The result was that, in a great many cases, after we had received the testimony of two machinists in the locality that no such machinery was made in the country, we found that such machinery was manufactured in some portion of the Dominion; and machinery manufacturers thereupon declared that, under the operation of the law and the action of the Government, their establishments were being closed up, while we allowed machinery made in the country to be admitted free. In 1873 the late Government adopted the same principle, but in a modified form, providing that machinery not made in the country shall be admitted at ten per cent. duty. The evidence to be produced was, I believe, much of the same character as that submitted between 1871 and 1873, viz.: upon the certificate of machinists that such machinery was not made in the country, and like results were found to follow. In 1879, when it was known throughout the country that a change was to be made in the Tariff, deputations from the different industries submitted their views, in respect to the proposed changes, to the Government, and a very large deputation representing the manufacturing interests were unanimous in their proposition, and argued out by them from their standpoint, that it was unwise to adopt any reduction or abolition of duty upon the terms and conditions adopted from 1871 to 1873, or from 1874 to 1878. The Government, finding that difficulty had arisen during the operation of the law as it stood, resolved to impose a duty on all machinery imported, with the exception of machinery used in the cotton and woollen industries. But it was found, when Parliament met last Session, that parties came from all directions who asked why these particular industries should be specially favored, why the cotton manufacture, above all other industries, should be permitted to enter its machinery free of duty, while other manufacturing industries were required to pay duty. After giving the matter consideration, the Government asked that those two exceptions should be struck out after November, because machinery purchased under the existing regulations was on its way out to this country, and this decision was adopted by Parliament. Several of the promoters of the beet root sugar industry came to the Government and asked for a renewal of the resolution passed in 1873. The Government passed an Order in Council stating that the Government would ask the House, at its next Session, that this period should be extended for six years from July next. The parties interested came to the Government and urged that, in addition to the six years' privilege, they should have machinery admitted free of duty. The Government said: "There is no machinery, at the present moment, admitted free of duty. This is an interest that for eight years, as then agreed upon, will have as large or larger protection than any other industry in the Dominion, namely: from 45 to 50 per cent. If we exempt machinery brought in to be used for that particular industry, there is no reason why we should not go back and declare that all machinery required for the various manufactures, and not made in the country, shall be admitted duty free." After discussing the matter very freely and very anxiously, for we were very desirous of giving every possible facility to manufacturers, we declared that the Government could not see its way clear to make the extension for this particular interest as regards the admission of machinery, because sugar refineries had been established within the last year or two, one half of the machinery required being made in this country and one-half imported, and special machinery being also required for iron and other manufactures. But what we said was this: "As this beet root sugar business is an experiment to a certain extent, we will extend the time for exemption from Excise duties from six to eight years." The promoters of the beet root sugar enterprise have proceeded on that understanding, they have communicated with France, and they understand that they will have to pay duty on their machinery. What the amount of duty will be we cannot ascertain, but as they will find they will have to pay on boilers and other machinery which is made in this country. No doubt some portion will be made here, and the more the better. It is said that the kind of machinery required for the manufacture of beet root sugar is not made here, but the machinery required is largely that used for the refining of cane sugar. I saw a large beet root sugar establishment within forty miles of Paris, and the machinery used was very largely of the kind used for the refining and crystalizing of cane sugar. Under these circumstances, gentlemen having obtained the extension of freedom from Excise duties from six to eight years, having bought machinery on the understanding that they must pay duty on it, if the demand made is conceded in the present case

I do not know why we should not give to other industries which have not so great a protection as that of beet root sugar, the privilege of bringing in machinery free of duty. On that principle the Government have acted, and they have agreed to submit the resolution now before the House.

Mr. COLBY. If I had been a party to this arrangement and understanding that the hon. the Finance Minister has spoken of, I certainly would not have been justified in making the proposition which I submit to-day. One of the factories is to be established in my county. Yet I never heard of the arrangement, and if it be an arrangement, we were not consulted on the subject. The other factory is to be established in the county of Missisquoi; and the hon. member from that constituency assures me that the people were not consulted on the subject. I think the interview the Finance Minister had was with the gentlemen from France and some other gentlemen. I do insist that the Government ought to consider this. We do not complain that the protection is not sufficient; what we say is, that the horse may die before the grass grows. The difficulty is that this industry may not be able to exist at all, and if that be the case—and I think it is by no means certain that it will not be the case—it is going to be an extreme hardship for these men who will be obliged to sell this machinery out of the country at a ruinous loss. It is to treat this as an exceptional case, under the conditions I have stated, that I would urge it upon the attention of the Finance Minister. I ask it only as a protection to those who are the pioneers in this enterprise, limiting it for a short time, and only for those parts of the machinery which are not manufactured in this country. I can assure the Finance Minister that if any assent has been given, such as he speaks of, it was without the knowledge of two of the three companies which are about to go into operation.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The first decision was for six years, it was subsequently changed to eight.

Mr. COLBY. I was not aware of that. Of course, persons embarking in this enterprise had reason to expect that it will be dealt with as others have been dealt with. When persons who were about to embark in this enterprise spoke to me on the subject of exemption from duties, I said to them plainly:—"I cannot tell you anything positive about it. I do not know what the policy of the Government may be, but I think you may rely upon it, that the Government will be as liberal to this as to the cotton manufacturers. They have admitted machinery free of duty for the manufactures of cotton and worsteds, and I think they will be as liberal towards you." It was with the expectation that a similar liberal policy would be extended to this industry that the capital was subscribed by these companies, and it will be a severe disappointment to them if they are obliged to pay a large sum of duty for which they have made no provision. Under these circumstances I hope the Finance Minister will permit himself to be guided by the sense of the House in this matter. But if it be not the sense of the House, after a presentation of the case, that this limited exemption for a short period of time, and restricted to a portion only of the machinery, should be granted, of course the matter will end there. But if it seem to be, as I believe it is, the almost universal sentiment of the House that this request is reasonable and should be granted, I hope my hon. friend the Finance Minister will not refuse to accede to the request.

Mr. PLUMB. I believe the success of the manufacture of beet sugar in France is owing to the very complicated and exceedingly delicate machinery which is used there. I am sure that all the machinery cannot be manufactured in Canada, though the boilers and some of the rougher portions may be. The proposition of my hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Colby) that while this industry is in its infancy we should intermit the duties upon the more delicate portions of that machinery until the first of September next, is one which, while I acknowledge the reasons which have been given by the Finance Minister are weighty, should receive much consideration from him. I believe the success of that industry in this country is dependent upon having the most perfect machinery that has been invented. I know that until within a very short time there has been great objection to the sugar made from beets. It was impossible up to that time to take out a certain peculiarity which that sugar possessed. Now, the vastly improved mechanical appliances, and the vastly improved machinery which have been introduced, enable a sugar to be manufactured from beets which cannot be distinguished, in the slightest degree, from the sugar made from the cane. It is most important that at the outset, if we have one or two manufactories started here, they should be encouraged to have the most expensive and perfect machinery that is made, and in that sense I really think that this is one of those cases in which the Government might make an exception to the general policy they have adopted. I do not wish to press the Ministry to do anything which may contravene the principles they have adopted, but this is clearly a case that is altogether exceptional. It is of the greatest importance for the Province of Quebec that beet sugar manufactories should be established there and thoroughly tested with the very best appliances. The rough machinery—whatever can be manufactured in Canada—should of course be subject to the usual duties; but the machinery which cannot be manufactured here, and the duty upon which, I understand, would be nearly $12,000, might very properly be admitted free under the conditions which have been mentioned by my hon. friend for Stanstead (Mr. Colby). This industry is an experiment. Those who put $200,000 or $300,000 into one of those manufactories of beet sugar, risk their whole capital. I believe every man in this House desires to see the experiment made and thoroughly tested. The beginning of this industry involves getting seeds from France, getting skilled workmen, and getting the farmers to undertake a culture which they have never practised before. The kind of beet necessary for this purpose has never been raised in Canada, except as an experiment. We have, consequently, to develop and foster this industry from beginning to end, and, under all these circumstances, I say that the proposition of my hon. friend is one which the Government may fairly and consistently accede to.

Mr. MASSUE. Mr. Chairman, I am of opinion that by admitting free of duty all portions of the machinery used in the manufacture of beet root sugar we should be largely assisting an important industry which is bound to regenerate agriculture. We must not lose sight of the fact that those who wish to endow the country with such factories, will have, ere they begin operations, to incur considerable risks; therefore, following the example of other nations, which have reaped the immense advantages conferred by sugar refineries, we must take all possible means to encourage them to come and establish themselves amongst us, as they will not only be of material help to agriculture, but will also be a great source of wealth to the state. I believe that it was at the time of the continental blockade, in 1812, that the beet root sugar industry was really established in France. France, which had gloriously struggled against all the nations of Europe, was compelled, owing to the continental blockade, to find within itself the means of meeting its wants. It is from that date that the French nation was born as a manufacturing nation; and among the numerous industries that sprung up at that time, the beet root sugar industry must be reckoned among the first. At the outset Napoleon I, whose piercing eye penetrated into the future, and who understood at once the advantages of sugar refineries, encouraged that industry by all possible means. Schools of chemistry and Imperial refineries were established during his reign, and the Government ordered that 100,000 acres should be planted with sugar beet, in order to encourage the manufacture of beet root sugar. Napoleon placed the sum of 1,000,000 francs at the disposal of his Government, and 500 licenses to manufacture beet root sugar were issued; moreover, the better to foster that industry, all duties on it were abolished for a certain number of years. This is, in a few words, Mr. Chairman, how an intelligent nation, aided by the generous liberality of an enlightened Government, was enabled to secure the monopoly of an industry which has to-day developed into a source of national property and a powerful encouragement to agriculture, that fruitful foster-mother of all nations. To-day a powerful French company wishes to introduce that industry into this country at the cost of considerable sacrifices. It asks us for an exemption from duties for a certain number of years. This has been granted, and now it asks that the first machines to be used in the first factories established in the country be allowed to enter free of duty, and I think that the Government ought to grant this. France did not stop at such trifles when she encouraged that industry with her millions. Could we justify our refusing to abolish the duty, whatever might be the amount? I have too much faith and confidence in the Government, and in its devotion to the interests of the people, to think that it would hesitate to grant the legitimate request of the "Union Sucrière de France." Our agriculture has every advantage to derive from the fostering of that industry, and, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact worthy of mention that no barren or unproductive lands are ever to be found in the neighborhood of sugar refineries. In the north of France, where these factories have been established in greatest number, it has been found that the grain crops had yielded more abundantly. This is easily explained; beet root pulp enables the farmer to keep more cattle, which in turn means a larger quantity of manure. There is therefore no doubt that the manufacture of beet root sugar in Canada would be most advantageous to the agricultural class; it would moreover be the starting point of an improved system of agriculture. Our crops would be larger and the value of property would increase considerably. I hope therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the Government will seriously consider the request made by the "Union Sucrière de France" that no duty should be levied on the machinery of the first factory to be established in this country.

Mr. CURRIER. I have never had the opportunity of seeing the machinery required for the manufacture of beet root sugar; but I take it for granted that a large portion would consist of motive power, whether water wheels or steam engines, which can be manufactured in this country, perhaps, as cheaply as in any other country. I should think the other machinery required for this manufacture could not be very expensive or complicated.

Mr. COLBY. It is both expensive and complicated.

Mr. CURRIER. I intend to support the motion of my hon. friend from Stanstead, still I should regret to do anything to discourage the manufacture of any kind of machinery in this country.

Mr. COLBY. The resolution simply applies to those parts of the machinery which are not manufactured in this country.

Mr. OUMET. The hon. Finance Minister states that the Government were doubtful of the advisability of allowing machinery for the manufacture of cotton to come in free of duty, owing to some difficulties which occurred afterwards. The beet sugar industry has a double advantage over the cotton industry, as it encourages the growing of an article in this country, while in the cotton industry the country only saves the price of the labor employed in it. I think, therefore, that any sacrifice the Government will make for the encouragement of this industry will be well received by all their supporters.

Mr. GUTHRIE. If the hon. Finance Minister admits, free of duty, portions of the machinery used in the manufacture of beet root sugar, other industries will claim, and justly claim, the same exemption. It is proposed to start the manufacture of jute, and goods from jute, in the city of Guelph, where I reside, and at a meeting there last week the very point now under discussion was raised. It was stated that the Government were about to admit free machinery for the manufacture of beet root sugar, and that if they did so they would be sure to allow machinery for the manufacture of jute in free also. As there is no manufactory of that important article in the country now, I hope, if the Government grant the exemption in this case, they will do the same in the other.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am very glad my hon. friend the Finance Minister has brought in this resolution for the encouragement of the beet root sugar industry. It will be a great thing for the country. There are some difficulties in the way, however. In the first instance, the growing of the beet is almost sure to be unsuccessful, because the seed which is imported has generally to be acclimatized before it can produce beets containing the average quantity of saccharine matter. I am induced to believe that the beet of Canada, from the nature of the climate and soil will produce more saccharine matter than any other beet in the world. I believe that the Lower Provinces, with a climate neither too hot nor too cold, and a gravelly subsoil, in which small beets are likely to thrive, are specially adapted to this industry. It is not generally known that 800 acres of beets will produce from 900 to 1,200 tons of sugar, will find manure for a large quantity of land, and will feed 1,000 head of cattle for nine months in the year. The drawbacks to this industry are many. First of all, limestone must be in the vicinity of the beet, because a great amount of it is used for generating gas for refining purposes; fuel must be cheap, and pure water abundant. The process of manufacturing beet sugar is a chemical process, it is a process of fermentation, and the factory has sometimes to be shut down for five or six weeks until the machinery can be scoured, as it becomes affected by the fermentation. If the beets get frozen some chemical process takes place which prevents the extraction of the saccharine matter from them. Every encouragement should be given to this industry. I am not prepared to go so far as to favor taking the duty off the machinery, because I think a company going into this industry ought to be prepared to lose in the beginning, and to pay the duty of $10,000 or $15,000 on their machinery. I am not prepared to say that the exemption asked for should not be granted, but, at the same time, I am in favor of carrying out the protective policy. I am inclined to think most of this machinery can be made in this country. The step taken by the hon. Finance Minister is one that will be considered most favorably by the whole country. In the Lower Provinces it has given them a chance they never had before of getting such an industry established in their midst. It may not be amiss to inform this House that white sugar can be made out of the beet root at from 4 cents to 5 cents per pound. If they can produce it at 6 cents it can be sold at 7 cents, 2 cents less than at present. Added to that the residue of the root after the saccharine matter is extracted makes good food for cattle, and thus cattle raising will be largely promoted by this industry. We are likely to have factories established all over Canada, with just enough capacity to supply the vicinity in which they are situated. In New Brunswick the consumption of sugar is about 3,000 tons per annum. A well equipped factory will turn out 1,200 to 1,500 tons, so that there will be room enough in that Province for two factories; Nova Scotia can supply trade for three factories; and so on with the other Provinces. These factories can be so arranged, also, that during certain periods of the year, when not making beet root sugar, they can refine raw grades of the ordinary sugar. I am very glad to be able to support my hon. friend's resolution.

Mr. TASSÉ. I feel very much inclined to favor the proposition submitted by the hon. member for Stanstead. So far, the beet root sugar industry has been an unknown industry in this country. It requires but effective encouragement to ensure its success on a large scale. It has been established that the soil of this country, especially that of the Province of Quebec, is best adapted to the culture of the beet root. That industry has been one of the greatest causes of the prosperity of France. There cannot be the slightest doubt on that point. I am sure that if proper protection is given to that industry here, it will do for Canada what it has done for France. The fact is indisputable that that industry has been created in France through the genius of Napoleon the Great; but we must not forget that it was established in France, not only by means of protection, but by means of complete prohibition. The proposition of the hon. member for Stanstead does not go to that extent. On that ground I am quite prepared to give it my cordial support.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I regret I cannot endorse the sentiments of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I am as anxious as the hon. member is to encourage all native industries, and I think the one under discussion is one, that, perhaps, should receive a little more encouragement than in any others. I think the measure of the hon. Finance Minister is in that direction. If we allow this amendment to pass, it will open the door to a great deal of trouble. There was a time, since the new Tariff has been in force, when machinery for the manufacture of cotton was admitted free of duty. The result was that the manufacturers of other goods felt that an injustice was being done to them, because they could not get in their machinery on the same terms as cotton machinery. The Government, by an Order in Council, changed that state of affairs, and in doing so I certainly think they acted right, as it placed all on the same footing. In Hamilton a new cotton factory is being established. The company made application a few days ago to be placed on the same footing as the factory which had been started a few months before, and which had got out a large portion of its machinery free of duty. The application was refused because it was made too late, the Order in Council which abrogated the free admission of this machinery having been passed. Now if this amendment were carried, those gentlemen and others throughout the country would claim a like protection. Under the circumstances, however anxious the House may be to encourage this great industry, which, I hope, will go on and prosper, as I have no doubt it will, I feel constrained to dissent from the proposition of the hon. member for Stanstead.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think that my hon. friend from Hamilton has rather misapprehended the ground upon which this motion is based. There can be no doubt whatever that, as a general proposition as he has submitted it, if you admit the machinery for one manufacture free of duty, you cannot very well refuse to admit the machinery for another manufacture free; but the ground on which this proposition is based is that on which—a great many years before there was much talk about protection in Canada, except such talk as arose out of the Tariff of 1859—machinery for manufactures was admitted free. It is that this particular industry is one which is surrounded by so many contingencies, that it is not certain whether it will succeed in this country. Of its value, if it does succeed, there can be no two opinions. Every one admits that it is an industry which, if successful, will not only be successful in the production of a cheap article of sugar, but will be successful in many other respects in advancing the material interests of the country. It therefore ought to be promoted by every means that can be well adopted. As the hon. member for Stanstead has pointed out, the conditions with regard to the manufacture of cotton are well established. A man enters upon its manufacture with the certainty that he can get his raw material. The whole question is a mere question of supply and demand. There is no doubt, therefore, beyond the general doubt that obtains in all commercial transactions, as to the enterprise when any person chooses to enter upon it; but in this case we have first the question whether the farmers will be disposed to enter on a culture of this kind, and the success of the enterprise depends primarily on that. If the farmers find that the cultivation of the beet is a matter of profit—and that remains to be seen—then the success of this enterprise is practically established. But if it is not a matter of profit, and it should be seen that it would be better to raise other roots, hay and grain, the success of the enterprise will be gone. It is an experiment from the very first, depending upon so many circumstances of that kind, that I think it may fairly be taken out of the ordinary category of manufactures, and receive some more substantial protection. There is another element of doubt in the matter. The hon. Finance Minister points out that the protection to the manufacture of sugar from beets is very great. But there is no guarantee that it will be continued. What he proposes is to guarantee that no Excise duty shall be charged on the sugar made from the beets for eight years, not that the protection of forty per cent. or whatever protection is afforded the refiners under the present Tariff shall be continued for that period. In future another ruling party may largely reduce the duty on sugar; indeed, even the present Government might reduce the duty, seeing that they can actually continue to protect sugar refining, while largely reducing the tax on the consumer, by reducing, relatively, the duty on the raw material of the refined sugar. If Government abolished the duty altogether on raw sugar to-morrow, and imposed 15 per cent. on refined, the refiners would have as large a protection, practically, as they have at present. There is no guarantee afforded anyone embarking in this enterprise that he is going to have this protection for the next eight years. Thus this enterprise stands separated from almost any other in the variety of advantages it will confer upon the country if successful, and separated from all others in the fact that, until experience proves its success, its fate is doubtful. Under the circumstances I think the hon. Finance Minister runs no risk of this particular concession now asked for being drawn into a precedent with regard to other industries, all the conditions of which are well established and well known to everyone who enters into them. I sincerely hope the hon. gentleman will be able to see his way to consider favorably the motion of the hon. member for Stanstead.

Mr. DOULL. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment, but I think its adoption would prove a discrimination in favor of one industry as against others. Some time ago I applied to the hon. Finance Minister for the admission of some machinery used for mining purposes, free of duty, but he objected. I think that if the machinery required in this beet sugar industry be admitted free of duty, that required for all others should be, if not manufactured in Canada.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have called the attention to the difficulty, evidence of which is furnished by the remarks of hon. gentlemen, that would arise from the passing of the amendment. I remember the application for assistance made to the Government, in regard to the article of tubes, mentioned by one hon. member. It was pleaded that it was a new industry, and that the machinery needed should be admitted free. The answer of the Government to such application is, that all machinery is subject to duties. I also remember the appeal of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Doull) at a time when there was a large importation of machinery into Nova Scotia for mining purposes—that that Provincial industry should receive consideration in the matter. But it could not be granted, the answer being that, if any should, all machinery should be admitted free. The only industry that now presents the same argument as that sought to be favored, has a protection of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The protection in this case would be 70 per cent.—no industry would be protected like this one under the proposition of the amendment. The member for Cardwell says that a new Government by-and-bye, probably formed by hon. gentlemen opposite, may introduce a new policy with reference to the sugar industry. But the duty they imposed before, of from 42 to $47\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. was almost as great as the present, and would constitute a very large protection. When in France, in 1873, the gentleman who gave me information respecting the sugar industry of that country, pointed out the difference in the duties on cane and beet root sugar, respectively, and though the difference was largely in favor of the beet sugar, the cane sugar business was in a flourishing state. Gentlemen going into the sugar industry in Canada, did not depend upon any Government decision as to whether they would have to pay duty on imported machinery or not. No body of men would invest their capital in this business until certain of getting the beets wanted from the farmers. I heard that Redpath, of Montreal, imported machinery sometime ago for the manufacture of sugar from beets, but they said their difficulty was that they could not get the farmers to raise the beets, and so the machinery had to lie idle. I take it for granted that if the capitalists, interested in this new industry, do not obtain an assurance of a certain amount of beets at a certain price, they will not embark in it. The Government, feeling the importance of giving every encouragement to this industry, have proposed this motion. The exemption from duty of this machinery would occasion similar appeals from twenty other members in this House, who would say: "Here is an industry protected 50 per cent.; the industry for which I plead receives a protection of but 8 or $10\frac{1}{2}$, and yet you give more protection to the industry already so largely thus benefitted, while you deny it to mine." That is the difficulty the Government must meet if it accepted this proposal. After considering the matter in all its bearings, and while always anxious to meet the reasonable views of every one, we thought it would be wisest to extend the period of the exemption of beet sugar from Excise duty from six to eight years. The question is surrounded with difficulty, and not the least of difficulties is to decide between what machinery can be made in the country and what cannot.

Mr. COLBY. The hon. gentleman thinks he finds himself in this difficulty: that if he concedes this point to us, then he must make concessions to all other manufactures. There is no such difficulty before the hon. gentleman, he is in no such dilemma. The hon. gentleman proposes to exempt the beet root sugar industry from Excise duty for eight years, and must he, therefore, exempt every other industry from Excise duty? If, for instance, the tobacco manufacturers were to come to him and say: "You have exempted the beet root sugar industry from Excise taxes for eight years, and we too want that exemption." Would not the hon. gentleman's answer be: "That trade is an exceptional industry, and we believe it will be vastly to the advantage of the farmers of this country, that he experiment should be tried, and we therefore gave them his inducement." Now, all I ask the hon. gentleman is that he should carry this principle one step further. The exemption from Excise is exceptional, and it is justified by the actual condition of the case, and I say that the exemption of this machinery from duty would be justifiable on the same principle. I can assure the Finance Minister that he is in error when he supposes that the directors of the beet root sugar factories have secured, or can secure, a sufficiently large supply of beets. In my own county I know that they have not done so; that, in fact, they have secured only a partial supply for the present year, and they are running the risk of their supplies coming to an end at the close of the year. Owing, I say, either to the unskilfulness of the farmers, or any distaste they might take for the crop, or, in fact, to any other reason which might prevent the farmer from going on with the cultivation of the beet, there is in this business an element of risk which applies to no other industry. You can buy cotton or wool or raw sugar in the market, but as regards this article, no company can be sure of getting a supply of the necessary material for a single year, further than the quantity it may grow upon its own lands. I say that this industry is exceptionally situated, and that, therefore, it should receive exceptional consideration, and for the Government to say, after having exempted this industry from Excise, that they cannot go a step farther and remove this duty, does seem to me like straining at a gnat. I think the hon. gentleman should accept what appears to be the almost unanimous wish of the House, for the hon. gentleman must see from the speeches of hon. members who have spoken that it is the almost unanimous sentiment of the House that the amendment should be adopted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think there is a principle underlying this matter which has not received a full consideration. It is quite true, as the Finance Minister has said, that if you allow machinery in free for this industry, you cannot set up any substantial reason why other industries should not be similarly favored. I give every weight to the argument of my hon. friend who has just spoken, that there is an exceptional risk in this business, and but for the danger I see in doing it, I would readily go with my hon. friend in the exemption which he asks. It is not from any loss to the revenue by the introduction of this machinery, but I say that if we were to do what the hon. gentleman asks we would be abandoning the principle upon which this Parliament was elected—the principle upon which this Government was formed, and you must remember that the battle of the National Policy is not yet fought out. You must remember that those opposed, and conscientiously opposed to us, those who say that that policy is a false one and ought to be reversed, will lose no opportunity—it is their duty to lose no opportunity—of reversing that policy; and I am surprised that the first stab at the National Policy should have been made by our own friends. Sir, there is a great danger before us in connection with this matter. There is the danger that capitalists who are now with some degree of trembling and hesitancy investing their capital in new enterprises—hesitancy because of the threat from the other side, because of the fear that the policy may not be a permanent policy—I say there is the danger that these gentlemen will be turned aside from their purpose if they find us tampering with the integrity of the National Policy. If say the iron manufacturers who hoped that this policy would be a permanent one, backed as it was by a vast majority of the country and maintained by the representatives of the people in Parliament, if they see us granting these special privileges to one industry, they will say that it is one blow at the National Policy. And if another industry comes along and makes out a good case, there is another blow, and so it will go on; and those who are about investing their capital in new industries will have no security which would encourage them to make these investments. They will have no security that whenever a good case was made out for a particular industry, we would not remove a duty we had ourselves imposed, and override perhaps the very industry in which they intended to invest their money. In all the discussions which took place upon the National Policy, if there was one point which was laid down and argued almost ad nauseam by the majority, it was that we must make the policy a permanent policy, and we must adhere to that principle of permanency. We must make it permanent, and without making it prohibitory we should impose sufficient duty to give reasonable protection to our manufactures and every kind of industry which can fairly be established in this country. And when this policy is established and the protection is given, we must hold to it like grim death, and there must be no readjustment in the shape of a reduction. That is the principle upon which the National Policy has been adopted, and if it is not adhered to I would not give much for the permanence of the system. The principles of that policy were, first, moderate and reasonable protection, and, secondly, permanency. If it were not that this motion strikes a blow at the principles of the National Policy I would go with my hon. friend, but I dread extremely entering the wedge by making a reduction of the duties we have imposed, after full consideration, as a part of the National Policy which shall guide the future commercial prosperity of the country. I warn the Committee that though this is a small matter it is a direct blow against the basis of the policy of the present Government.

Mr. COLBY. I am very sorry to have been charged by the hon. leader of the House with having been the first to propose a subversion of the National Policy, and if I really felt myself open to that imputation I should feel very much more regret. But I would remind the hon. leader of the House that when we expounded the National Policy to the electors before the last general election, we told them that while we were aiming at the protection of new industries, we had a double method of doing it—first, by direct Protection, next by exemption; that it was as much a part of a protective policy to relieve raw material, to relieve the manufacturer from the burden of paying heavy duties upon machinery that could not be manufactured in this country—that this was as much a part of the National Policy as a protective duty. I preached that doctrine on the floor of this House, and others joined me in preaching it to the people of this country. Now, according to the National Policy as we expounded it before the elections, the exemption of all machinery which is not manufactured in this country is as much a part of this policy as the exemption of raw material. We proposed to lighten the burdens which rested upon the manufacturer; not to handicap him, but to take off every unnecessary burden, and it is a burden to him to pay the Government a tax upon necessary machinery which he has to use. By this resolution I do not propose to admit a single article that is now manufactured in this country. It is not at all a difficult resolution to give effect to. This is a particular class of machinery which is not made in this country. No Canadian manufacturer makes it, no one expects to make it, and no one will make it. Its free admission does not injure any one, but it is simply lightening the burden which rests on those who are establishing a new industry in this country, and it is carrying out the principle which we promised to support at the last election. The Finance Minister, in effect, admits the principle himself. He does not say the principle of the free admission of all machinery which is not manufactured in this country, is contrary to the National Policy. He says no such thing; he only says it is inconvenient to discriminate. The principle is sound, but it is attended with an inconvenience. That is the ground he has taken. If he takes different ground, if he takes the ground of the leader of the Government, he will be heterodox to the National Policy. The essence of that policy is to lighten the burdens which rest upon those who propose to establish new industries into the country. Those were the views upon which we were elected to this House; and those are the views which the Finance Minister tells us he cannot give effect to, because he finds it inconvenient in practice to do so. I cannot see where any possible difficulty can arise in this case. It is an exceptional case altogether. The exemption from Excise is exceptional; the Finance Minister has no difficulty in making that exception, and I merely ask him to extend a principle he has already adopted, so as to apply it to the machinery which cannot be manufactured in this country, and I believe that he will consult the wishes of this House by doing so.

Mr. MILLS. There is an obvious difference among the expositors, or the doctrinaires, of the National Policy. They differ not only in regard to the manner in which effect shall be given to it, but they also dispute as to what particular line of policy comes within the operation of this highly useful and highly necessary stimulant of industrial pursuits in this country. I would suggest to the First Minister that one of the most remarkable exceptions to the doctrine he has just laid down is the exemption of steel rails used by a certain railway company in Canada from taxation for all time to come. If the hon. gentleman was such a stickler for upholding the National Policy in all its integrity, it does seem very extraordinary that some millions of dollars worth of steel rails, that we were told were of themselves sufficient to induce a large number of people to engage in this industry, should have been exempted from taxation.

Resolution reported and read the first time.

On motion for second reading.

Mr. COLBY moved in amendment:

That the Resolution be referred back to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions to add a clause to provide for the admission free of duty until the first day of September next, of such parts of machinery to be used in the manufacture of beet root sugar as are not manufactured in this country.

He said: I desire to make only one further observation. This is a matter which very deeply concerns my constituency. One of the municipalities of my constituency has subscribed $25,000 to an enterprise of this kind, which is to be for the general advantage of the community. I feel it to be my duty, not alone upon the grounds which I have stated in my former observations, but particularly as the representative of a constituency possessing a very important interest which will be affected by this resolution, to move this amendment.

AFTER RECESS.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness). I wish to call attention to the following language which the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Ogden) made use of with reference to me during the debate last night:—

"Many hon. members perhaps remember the day when he was making a very important speech in this House. There was then no Hansa d, but there were many ladies and gentlemen in the gallery, and many clever newspaper reporters in the press gallery—perhaps no more so than those there to-day, because I believe there is as good a staff in the gallery to-day as ever sat in the Dominion Parliament—and this hon. gentleman stood up, and fearing that he was not heard, shouted: 'Do you hear what I am saying in the gallery? If you do, write it down.'"

I did not at the time understand the import of the words. If I had, I should have said, as I say now, that I never made such an appeal to the gallery, and I feel sure the hon. gentleman was joking. I take this opportunity of calling the hon. gentleman's attention to it.

Mr. OGDEN. I must confess that I did give utterance to the words credited to me in the Hansard. I was informed by several hon. gentlemen that on one occasion, when addressing the House, he did look up to the gallery and say: "Do you hear what I am saying now?" I think it was in 1873, when, I am informed, he was supporting the party now in power. Before making the statement last night, I enquired of an hon. gentleman who sits near me if the hon. member for Inverness had made such a statement, and he told me he had. If I have made a statement which is incorrect, I did it from having been misled by several hon. members of this House. I apologize to the hon. member if I have been fooled in this matter; really, it is no fault of mine.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness). There are many hon. gentlemen in this House who have been in it since 1873, and if any hon. gentleman was a witness of such conduct on my part, I should like to hear from him.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD laid on the Table of the House the Report of the Civil Service Commission.

NAVIGATION OF CANADIAN WATERS.

The following Bill was read the third time and passed:—
Bill (No. 57) to give power to the Governor in Council to suspend the operation of certain provisions of the Act 43 Victoria, Chap. 29, respecting the Navigation of Canadian Waters—(Mr. Pope, Queen's.)

CANADA MILITARY ASYLUM.

The following Bill was read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed:—
Bill (No. 76) respecting the Canada Military Asylum at Quebec.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

1. Charges of Management..... $215,077 96

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is well known to my predecessor that only a portion of this was formerly voted by Parliament. The commission paid to agents for the redemption of debt, and the commission for a sinking fund, with the charges connected, were treated as if provided for by law, but the attention of the Government was called recently by the Auditor-General to the matter, and doubt was expressed by him whether they should not be voted by Parliament. The hon. Minister of Justice concurred in the opinion of the Auditor-General, and they are all now included in one vote. It will be observed there is a decrease of $2,200 in the expenditure of the department at Winnipeg, as compared with the votes last year. The reduction took place eighteen months ago, but the usual amount was entered in the Estimates last year which makes the saving appear in the Estimates for next year.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. Minister prepared to give any information as to the state of the negotiations with the agents with respect to the commissions?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; no arrangements have yet been made.

6. Department of Militia..... $36,690 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. I wish to inform the Minister of Militia that, when we come to this item in concurrence, I intend to ask the attention of the hon. gentleman and the House to the treatment received by certain officers of the 10th Royals, in being dismissed without any reason from the position they held in that regiment previous to its late reorganization. If the hon. gentleman can give the information now I shall be satisfied.

Mr. CARON. So far as the 10th Royals are concerned, a good deal of correspondence had been exchanged between several of the officers and the department previous to my taking charge of the department. This regiment was disorganized to a very great extent. My predecessor in office entrusted Colonel Grasset with the duty of reforming the regiment as it now stands. The task of reorganizing the regiment was entrusted to Colonel Grasset, to whom we gave the privilege of selecting his own officers. Several of the gentlemen who had previously been officers of the regiment were selected and others had to be left out. Several of the old officers were allowed to retire retaining their rank. The department has shown every consideration to those who were left out, but, of course, we could not interfere with the appointment of the officers after entrusting Colonel Grasset with the reorganization of the regiment.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The explanation of the hon. gentleman is eminently unsatisfactory. The regiment was not disbanded, and these officers were dismissed without the shadow of a charge being made against them, or any pretence of a trial. Some of them were officers of the militia for nearly twenty years; some were for months on the frontier during the Fenian raid, and yet I am told the department refuses to answer the letters in which they ask for the reasons for their dismissal. Colonel Grasset may be a good officer and a great man—I believe he is—but he should not be allowed to override the department and the hon. Minister. Why were these officers got rid of, without a charge against them, to make room for others who are no better, so far as I know. These gentlemen were in the regiment for many years, and, so far as I knew, performed their duties satisfactorily, and yet they are treated in this improper and I may say illegal manner. We must have more satisfactory reasons than the hon. Minister has yet assigned for his treating, in that way, men who have served their country, treating them in a way which has never been equalled in the history of the Canadian militia. Because the regiment deteriorated under the management of a gentleman who was unfit for his position, and was maintained in his position in defiance of public opinion, they now dismiss men against whom no charge is made after the inefficient colonel has voluntarily left the regiment. If such treatment is to be the rule, the Militia Department and its head will soon lose the confidence of the volunteer force and the country at large.

Mr. CARON. Any letters received in the department since I have had charge of it have been answered. Upon the other point I can only repeat that it was impossible for the Government to interfere with Colonel Grasset in the appointment of his officers. There may be a question as to whether or not the regiment should have been disbanded, but at all events we came to the conclusion that a change was absolutely necessary, and the work of reorganization was entrusted to Colonel Grasset.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Why were officers dismissed when no accusations were made against them, and why was a court of enquiry refused?

Mr. CARON. The course was adopted of endeavoring to place the regiment in a position of efficiency, and of course after entrusting Colonel Grasset with the appointment of the officers, we could not interfere with his appointments.

Mr. MACKENZIE. As the hon. Minister of Militia seems unable to make a satisfactory explanation I hope the Prime Minister will do so. The regiment is suddenly deprived of its officers by the tyrannical act of the Government, and the appointment of other officers is entrusted to one individual who is now colonel of the regiment. If there had been an accusation against these men, I would be the last to defend them, but there was no charge, and no enquiry, and no reasons assigned for the course which has been taken. I think that officers, who were at a great deal of expense and trouble in maintaining their regiment, have surely a right to be kept in their places, so long as they perform their duties. As I have stated already, the Government kept the previous colonel in his place for many months after his incapacity was demonstrated. And after this gentleman's voluntary resignation, if I recollect right, and without any communication whatever with the officers, the department entrusted Colonel Grasset with the duty of choosing a complete new set of officers. Why was this done? Why was not justice dealt out to these parties as well as to other members of the service? Surely the Government has no desire to cast obloquy on them who do not deserve it? Surely the Government are aware that the militia system can only be maintained by fair play to all who compose the force—only by giving it stability and credit in the eyes of the country, and ensuring the position of every man in the service so long as his conduct deserves it; only by such a course can the Government expect to obtain the best material in the country for its militia service.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. member for Lambton is a little unreasonable, as he is aware that the hon. Minister has just taken office. This matter arose during the time his predecessor held office; nevertheless, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie) on the ordinary item respecting the salaries of officers at headquarters, enters into a discussion of the whole subject without notice.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I informed the hon. Minister I would call attention to the subject, either on concurrence or to-day; and the hon. gentleman selected the latter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has, however, entered into all the details of the matter. The department has its statement, which it must on its own responsibility bring down in due time, notice being given, and it will no doubt appear that the department acted according to the rules of the service. The hon. member for Lambton has said the colonel was kept in office for months and years by the Government. It must have been by the late Government for the present Government have only been in power two years. According to my general recollection there was a court of enquiry held, and the report was that while there had been considerable irregularities, the court held that the colonel was not unworthy of having command. This court of enquiry was held, but I concur in the view that all the papers should be brought down so that we may have the whole matter investigated. It is, of course, a serious matter to deprive any officer of his commission. Any thing like censure, especially a man holding the position of officer in the militia, ought not to be lightly undertaken by the department or commanding officer. No doubt the Minister will bring down all the papers, so that we may have explanations in concurrence or some other convenient time.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The wrong has been done and cannot be righted, but the officers are entitled to the declaration of the Minister that there was no cause for their removal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I know that if the Minister, the department or the Government, have made a mistake in regard to anything or anybody, those officers, if they have been dealt with unjustly or by misadventure, are entitled to any statement made in the House. No doubt the hon. Minister of Militia will be quite ready to do so, if on looking over the papers he finds the officers have been badly treated, and that either the department or the Minister committed a mistake. I do not now admit that any mistake has been committed, as I have only cursorily looked into the case.

Mr. CARON. A court of enquiry was held, and the papers have been asked for. There has been no delay in the department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There was no court of enquiry as to the officers dismissed by Col. Grasset. The enquiry to which the hon. gentleman refers was held long ago in respect to Col. Stollery and I am not concerned with that matter.

Mr. CARON. The court of enquiry was held prior to Col. Grasset taking command of the regiment. When the papers are brought down the hon. gentleman will see the exact state of the case, and what the position of the regiment was when the commission was entrusted to Col. Grasset.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I heard much discussion in Toronto on this subject, and the universal opinion expressed there was that the only possible course the Government could have adopted in order to save the regiment from being disbanded was that which they did adopt. The regiment had fallen into such a state of demoralization, not among the rank and file, but among the officers, such quarrelling among themselves, in fact for all purposes of military discipline and command they were useless—that the general opinion in Toronto is that the only possible course to follow is that which the Government has adopted, namely, to get a new set of officers into the regiment. Efforts were made during many months to induce different gentlemen to take command of the regiment, but every one who was approached and considered the subject, found so much quarrelling among the officers, that they refused the offer. The officers themselves held several meetings and endeavored to select an officer whom they might recommend for the command of the regiment, but the officers failed to agree, and when there was no other alternative except the total disbandment of the regiment, Col. Grasset accepted the command, with the understanding that all the officers should be removed, and that he should have the right of selecting his own officers, and might take from among the officers such as were efficient and would work in harmony with the course adopted by the Government. Col. Grasset was universally considered in Toronto as being the most competent officer that could be selected for the position. He is a gentleman of large experience in the regular service; born and brought up at Toronto, was adjutant of the 100th Regiment for some years, possesses agreeable manners, has a good knowledge of business, and all the qualifications which go to make a good commanding officer. If that course had not been adopted the regiment must have been disbanded and the people of Toronto would have been very much dissatisfied. The citizens are proud of the regiment; the rank and file are as fine a body as can be found in the volunteer service; and I am confident the unanimous feeling in Toronto was that the action taken was the only action possible under the circumstances to save the existence, character and credit of the regiment.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That may be all true; but it appears that the officers were first dismissed, and after some considerable time they were reinstated and allowed to retire with rank. There must have been some haste or want of consideration in the action of the department.

7. Secretary of State $38,985 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I perceive there is a large increase in the Department of the Secretary of State, amounting to nearly $4,000. I also see some rather curious increases in connection with this which hardly appears to me to be in conformity with the Civil Service Act. I notice that the salary of the Keeper of Records is increased from $1,850 to $2,100; while, in the case of the Queen's Printer, his salary is reduced from $2,250 to $2,200. In the case of eight junior second class clerks they appear each to have received an increase of $100. The total strength is also increased by two additional clerks. I presume the hon. Minister will explain in detail all these alterations.

Mr. MILLS. I observe, on looking at the cost of Civil Government in 1878, when the Mounted Police was under the control of the Department of the Secretary of State, that the number of clerks employed was twenty-nine, and the total cost of that department was $33,990. Now, since the Mounted Police have been transferred to the Department of the Interior, and there is still less to do in the Department of the Secretary of State than before, the number of clerks is increased to thirty-five, being six more than there was at that time, while the total expenditure is to be $38,985. There has also been transferred to that department two clerks who are paid respectively $1,700 and $1,000. I find in the Department of the Interior that the cost of this police branch has been increased from $2,700 to $5,050, so if we were to add this $5,050 to the expenditure of the Department of the Secretary of State, we would have $44,000 as the expenditure of that department against $33,990 in 1878. If there was any foundation for the charges of extravagance which the hon. gentleman made at that time, what word will properly designate the manner in which the hon. gentleman is managing the affairs of this department now?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The matter to which the hon. member calls attention is easily explained. In the first place the Keeper of the Records claims that he is entitled to something for two or three years back, and shows he has a right to it. As to the salary of the Queen's Printer there is evidently a mistake in the figures; the figures have been transposed from one column to the other. As to the increase of $100 a year to the junior second-class clerks, the explanation is this: They were entitled to an increase of $50 last April and did not get it, they are entitled to another increase next April, and the two have been put together. All this is a statutory increase except one item. There is one item of $600 for my private secretary. My predecessor had no private secretary, and therefore the sum is an increase. The rest are all simply statutory increases. As to the matter referred to by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I know nothing about it.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. They cannot be all statutory increases for there are two additional officers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; there is but one additional officer.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. There is two third-class clerks at $650 and $550, and the number is raised from thirty-three to thirty-five.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know of only one. I was not aware of three second-class clerks having been appointed. Only one has been appointed since I came into office, and that was a temporary clerk made permanent. I suppose the other is the private secretary.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. With reference to the Keeper of Records, I may state that that officer received, in addition to his salary down to two years ago, $1.50 a day, which he considered as a compensation for not placing him at a higher rate at the time he was appointed. The Government thought that instead of paying him $1.50 a day additional for a year, it would be better to have the whole sum brought down and voted by the House, and that is the reason of this increase of $250.

Mr. BLAKE. I really think if the hon. Minister in charge of that department finds his staff has increased by two, about one of which he knows nothing, he had better enquire into the matter. I think the statement—for I cannot call it an explanation—of the hon. Minister, with reference to the comparative expense in the department as it was a little while ago and as it is now, is not very satisfactory. It is quite true he has but recently come there; but I suppose it was his duty to make himself acquainted with the financial history of the department for a year or two previous, and if he cannot give us any information on the subject, perhaps some of his colleagues are better instructed on it, and would be able to inform us how it comes to pass that with such a decided diminution in the business of the department there should be such a decided increase in the staff and in the expenses.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is no increase in the staff at all. It is probable that some one was appointed during the recess before I went into the department. In one case, a clerk who has been employed temporarily for three years has been made a permanent clerk. I believe there is not, at this moment, a single clerk more than is necessary for carrying on the business of the department.

Mr. MILLS. This is rather an extraordinary statement. In 1878 there were but 29 clerks in this department, two of whom had the management of the police branch. Now, the hon. gentleman proposes to have 35 to do the work which was done by 27 three years ago. The hon. gentleman has failed to explain, why, without any increase in the work, he wants seven more clerks and one more messenger than were required in 1878. In 1878 the hon. gentleman who now leads the Government complained that there were then too many, and that there ought to be greater economy in the management of the affairs of that department. The hon. gentleman has not had three years of supervision over the affairs of the Government, and he has increased the expense of controlling the police from $2,500 to $5,050, and the Department of the Secretary of State has increased from $32,000 to $38,985. The hon. gentleman has not attempted to give any explanation of this. In 1878 there were three junior second class clerks, now there are eight; there were then nine third class clerks, now there are eight; so that I suppose seven of these junior third class clerks have been made junior second class clerks, and a large number of new men have been introduced into this department, for which I have no hesitation in saying there is not the slightest justification.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think it was stated last year that during the year preceding three or four persons were taken from the temporary staff in the Department of the Secretary of State and added to the permanent list. That occurred very generally in the departments, because the contingencies which in 1877-78 were $158,174, were reduced in the following year to $139,750.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I observe that the contingencies for 1882 are precisely the same amount as those for 1881.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is the previous year I refer to.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I rather expect these temporary clerks will go on increasing forever. The fact is, you have now ten more officials for the service of the Secretary of State than you had in 1878—35 against 25.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The hon. gentleman is rather curious in his calculation. In the 35 he counts the messengers as well as the private secretary.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman looks at the Estimates of 1878, he will see that four messengers were counted among the 27. Now he asks for five messengers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; only four.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The Estimates say five. If he means that he only requires four, we can accommodate him.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the hon. gentleman's statement means that there are only four messengers in the department although there are five in the Estimates. Will he state how many extra clerks there are on the staff now?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know of any.

Mr. BLAKE. Will he say how many there were in the last financial year.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There were three. One of the messengers has been, for a long time past, on the sick list, and he may not be of any use for a while yet, although it is not thought proper to superannuate him.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But it is not usual to put another officer on the permanent list because the incumbent is sick. You should only make temporary arrangements while he is sick. It appears that four messengers are the permanent staff, and yet he asks for five. I move that you strike off one of the messengers.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In the contingencies of 1878 there are included the cost of nine extra clerks, and some of these have been transferred to the permanent list.

Mr. BLAKE. In the last financial year there are included in the contingencies the cost of eight extra clerks, and the hon. gentleman did not know that there were any extra clerks in his office.

8. The Department of Interior.....$54,580 00
9. The Department of Indian Affairs..... 17,500 00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD explained the nature of the increase. It amounted only to $9,260, made up by statutory increases and the rapidly increasing business of the departments. The Surveyor General stated that during the whole of the summer such was the increase of work in the North-West, specially in the draught-room, that they had to employ extra draught-men, and there must be an increase rather than a decrease in the staff. Of course, those men requiring special qualifications were better paid than ordinary copying clerks.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think the statement of the hon. gentleman is altogether correct. In 1878, when the large map was being prepared, the work of the department was greater than it has been at any time since. I observe by the return which the hon. gentleman has brought down, that up to this time, in Manitoba and the North-West, upwards of 12,000,000 acres have been surveyed. Taking an average of five people to every 320 acres, these 12,000,000 acres will provide room for 6,000,000 or 8,000,000 of a population. It is perfectly obvious that the work of surveying has been going on far more rapidly than the demands of settlement occasion, and the consequence will be that the boundaries of many of those lands now being marked out will have disappeared before settlement takes place, and the work will require to be done over again. I observe that out of 12,000,000 acres surveyed, although the larger portion has been purchased by speculators, and a considerable portion went to the half-breeds, only about 5,000,000 acres have been taken up. This of itself is sufficient to show that the work has gone on very much in advance of settlement, and of the actual requirements of the country. Now, the right hon. gentleman, some years ago, when he made a considerable increase in the expenditure of the department, said it was due to the fact that he had transferred from the temporary list those clerks who were receiving daily employment in the department, to the permanent staff, and that the increase was apparent rather than real. But, looking over the contingencies of the department, I observe there is just about the same charge now as before. I believe the contingencies portion of his staff, if I may use the phrase, is now larger than at any former time. I find, also, that the permanent staff has been very largely increased. We remember the hon. gentleman began his management by dismissing his deputy, Mr. Buckingham, the reason he gave being, not that Mr. Buckingham was an improper officer, or that his appointment was an improper one, but that it was necessary to practice economy. The hon. gentleman stated he could introduce into his department greater economy by calling upon the gentleman who had before been Surveyor-General to discharge the duties of Deputy Minister and Assistant Surveyor General and Surveyor General on the footing he stood on when he accepted office, and that the professions of economy with which he accepted office have been quite lost sight of. I find that the expense of the hon. gentleman's department in 1878, was $44,560, and that provision is made for adding largely to the staff. The cost of the department has increased the first year of the present Government from $43,000 to $57,020, not including the cost of the police branch, which, if counted with the larger item, would make the expenditure for that year $60,070. So far as we can gather from the Public Accounts of last year and the provision for this year, the staff of the department has increased, or is about to be increased, from thirty-six to seventy, thirty-four clerks in three years. Now thirty-six he considered, formerly, a large staff, so large that he divided the House in regard to one new appointment that I contemplated making. Now it is proposed to increase the staff to seventy, and the expense, not counting the management of the police, from $46,000 to $ 8,830. I do not think there has been any increase in the work of the department to justify so large an expenditure. In those $46,000 was included the salary of the Inspector of Indian Agencies in the North-West Territories, $1,800, which is not now included in the cost of the department, it being transferred to the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Was that the Inspector of Timber Licenses?

Mr. MILLS. I refer to the salary of Mr. McCaul, Indian Inspector. The hon. gentleman charged the late Government with centralizing the management of North-West affairs too much in Ottawa, and asserted that they could be better managed by an officer in the North-West. He has organized a separate department, which, so far as I can learn, is not responsible to the Indian branch in Ottawa. He has appointed a Deputy Minister because of the importance of his position, and has minimized that importance by creating a separate branch, over which that officer cannot exercise jurisdiction. It is pretty clear that the expense of the department, leaving out of view the police branch, has been increased from $34,000 to $68,000 within three years, and there is nothing disclosed down to the date of the hon. gentleman's last report to warrant that extraordinary increase. The present Minister, as these Estimates show, has also increased the cost of the Ordnance branch without any increase of the work occurring. Then again, while the police branch was under the Department of the Secretary of State, it cost $2,700 a year; now it costs $5,050. One clerk gets $2,100, another $1,250, a third $1,150, and a messenger $450. The hon. gentleman cannot show, however, that there has been any more cost incurred in the management of the department than before—that a larger number of communications are received or more work is done than before. The cost of management is just double what it was before the transfer took place. I think the hon. gentleman's professions of economy and his censure of his opponents have not been justified by his own success with regard either to economy or efficiency in the management of his department. In fact my impression is that the hon. gentleman has largely left the department to take care of itself. The system of evolution will hardly apply to the management of a Governmental department. The survival of the fittest is not always the result of that policy, and if it were, I am inclined to think the right hon. gentleman would not be here this evening.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it only shows the correctness of the principle of evolution to which the hon. gentleman has referred, that from the protoplasm of my hon. friend there has grown so much of life and vitality within two short years. The hon. gentleman says we have surveyed too much land, but there is where he and I differ. The hon. gentleman in his time was going on in the old fossil Conservative Tory system of surveying about a township and a half a year, thereby saving perhaps the salary of two or three draughtsmen and three or four surveyors, but thereby also keeping the country back. Our policy has been quite the reverse. Of course we might say to settlers: "There are so many lots, you must fill them up and then go on to the next," but you must remember that there are all kinds of soil and situation in that country, and that even the fancy of immigrants must be considered. Some may wish to go to the Rocky Mountains, others to the South Saskatchewan, others to the North Saskatchewan, others to the Turtle Mountain District, and the Government are endeavoring to meet the evident course of these streams of immigration. We cannot limit settlers to a choice of six townships or twenty. Our desire has been to survey some 300 townships in different parts of the country every year, so that the emigrant shall have the same choice as those who go to the Western States, and the hon. gentleman will see that the proceeds of the sale of lands has justified their expense and the policy we have adopted, of not waiting for another generation, but going on with these surveys largely. With regard to the Mounted Police, though there has been considerable expense in the management of that body, it will be found that owing to the reforms we have introduced, and the strict supervision which has been exercised there has been a very large saving, and next year there will be a still greater saving. In order to produce these reforms it is necessary to have efficient supervision, and I am afraid that until lately such supervision has not been the rule. There are other causes to which I do not wish now to allude, having relation to officers who have not been equal to the responsibility imposed upon them, whereby great expense have been added to the maintenance of the force. I shall give the hon. gentleman to-morrow a statement in detail of the cost of draughting, etc., in the department. I had hoped to have had the statement to-night, but owing to some accident it has not reached my hands.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman will see, by looking at a return which he brought down the other day, that in 1875, for instance, a large amount was expended on surveys chargeable to the ordinary expenses of the year. The amount expended for surveys last year was about $147,000, and I find the hon. gentleman has expended on the management of these surveys $66,777, and there is a note in the return to which I have alluded, saying that part of this expense was for extra clerks. I should like to know, as a matter of information, how much of this appropriation is paid to the class of officers who are referred to in that return, for it is perfectly obvious from the return, that these expenses have not been paid out of the appropriation to the department. The additional expenses seem to have been paid out of the appropriation made for surveying purposes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I shall bring down the information for which the hon. gentleman asks. With regard to the Mounted Police, I may say that there was an officer named Fortescue, who was not only a very good officer, but an accountant, and he was employed really in the capacity of quartermaster, and it was found convenient to bring him down here. He retained his salary in the transfer, and his duties are to see to the cost of supplies for the North-West Mounted Police.

Mr. BUNSTER. I desire to ask the leader of the Government what he intends to do with respect to the twenty-mile belt of railway lands in Vancouver Island, through which no surveys have yet been made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not quite sure we have got the land yet. There is a provision in the treaty with British Columbia for twenty miles to be reserved on each side of the railway; but there is a difference of opinion between the Premier of British Columbia and myself as to what that means. I take it that we are not to measure land up hill and down dale, but twenty miles of land fit for settlement. We have not arrived at that point at which we feel ourselves justified in spending money in surveys there; but I hope we will come to some arrangement. In the Fraser Valley a good deal of land was taken up long ago. I am happy to believe that a good deal of the land is very rich in minerals, and perhaps we may be able to make it valuable for its mineral wealth. I am afraid of arable land we will not get much in the Fraser Valley. Pretty much all the good land has been taken possession of either by white men or Indians.

Mr. BUNSTER. I differ most emphatically from the Premier, who, I think, has been accepting advice from the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). I assure the hon. gentleman there is a good deal of good land in British Columbia, and that among the land reserved by the Dominion Government for railway purposes. I know from personal observation there is a great deal of good land there fit for settlement. There is no one, however, to whom settlers can apply for information. There is no land office all over British Columbia. In the railway reserves, and within 100 miles of Victoria, there is good land. The reason why there is no emigration to British Columbia is simply because the railway lands are locked up in the hands of the Dominion Government, and there is no one to dispose of them to settlers. I ask the hon. the Premier to give the matter his serious consideration, and see that no injustice is done to the Province.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not mean to say there is not good land on Vancouver Island. I believe the Cowichan Valley is very good land indeed. I do not know its dimensions, but it is a fine valley, I am told, and that it is beautiful and romantic as well as being fit for settlement. At the upper end of the Island there are very desirable coal mines which were reserved by the British Columbia Government.

Mr. BUNSTER. At your request.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt. It has been reserved by the Act, and the Government of Canada has not yet surveyed or laid out the land or disposed of it. I hope the matter will be settled, during the present year, with the British Columbia Government. That land having been conveyed to the Dominion by an Act of the British Columbia Legislature, it must be ratified by the Parliament of Canada. As to the mainland, I am very glad indeed to believe the hon. gentleman that there remains still valuable land in the valley of the Fraser. I was under the impression that the settlers who have gone in there had taken possession of the most valuable portions of the valley. Of course, we will try to take all the good land we can. We have a right to twenty miles on each side of the line of railway, and I earnestly hope that the hon. gentleman is correct in his statement that this forty miles tract contains very valuable land. Until the line of railway was settled, we did not know where our lands were at one time. Hon. gentlemen have said that it was at Bute Inlet. My mind ran strongly in that direction. Twenty miles on each side of the line up there would run through quite a different country, and hand over quite a different section of land. If the Fraser is selected, we must try to get our lands there somewhere. I dare say that British Columbia will agree that we are to get our reasonable quantity of land in consideration of the building of the road.

Mr. BUNSTER. British Columbia did not agree that you are always to keep the lands locked up without utilizing them. I would also like to know if the Government intends to keep the lands on Vancouver Island locked up for ever. I consider the Syndicate agreement has done a great injustice to Vancouver Island.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If I am able to go to British Columbia this summer and enjoy the hospitality of my hon. friend, I hope to have his assistance with the Local Legislature to settle all these disputes.

Mr. BUNSTER. You ought to have been there before.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose if the land on Vancouver Island has been appropriated by the British Columbia Legislature, it is competent for that Legislature to undo what they have done, and to repeal the Act they have passed. I think my hon. friend is rather anxious that the Government would retain the twenty miles on each side of the line. As far as I can see, there appears to be a disposition on the part of Vancouver Island to have some sort of understanding that the land shall be kept by the Dominion, because I think there is a slight condition attached to the retainer of that twenty miles of land, there is a trifle of railway to be built as the condition. As allusion has been made for the second time to the dispute between the Government of British Columbia and the Canadian Government on the subject of the land which we have a claim to, I would like to know the nature of that dispute. The hon. gentleman, as far as I can understand him to-night, and on a former occasion, seems to say that the question was not whether, in the measurement of the land, we should measure down the hill or up the dale, &c., in order to find where the twenty miles would reach, or whether it should be measured so as to obtain twenty miles on a level. I do not know how far he would have to go to get twenty miles on the level, or what amount of country he would have to go over. But I had supposed, from statements in the news-papers on the subject, that the dispute had assumed even more formidable proportions than that. I suppose there is a disposition on the part of the Dominion Government to have land reasonably fit for settlement, or is it the intention that all the land shall be taken within this twenty mile belt, whether it be rocky or unfit for settlement?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the treaty unfortunately the quality of the land is not specified. It is merely stated that it should be twenty miles of good land. My contention is—and I fancy the hon. gentleman is not altogether unreasonable—that as we agree to pay a certain sum annually for that grant of land, it must be land fit for something. I do not suppose we could insist upon its being first quality, but that it should be fit either for settlement, arable land, or pasture land, or mineral land—that it should be land worth something. We should get something for the annual sum of money we have to pay for the land. That point has not yet been acceded to by the Government of British Columbia; we are still at variance upon it, but I think that that Government will be reasonable. Of course they can repeal the Act, but very probably they consider that it is a statutory title in reserve, otherwise they could properly deprive us of it without our consent.

Mr. BLAKE. As to the land in British Columbia, you say to them: "We ask for bread and you give us a stone."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I am afraid we are going to get a stone.

Mr. BUNSTER. The hon. gentleman for West Durham is mistaken in thinking that the land is rocky, as he has always represented it to be.

Mr. BLAKE. The Minister was saying it was rocky, not I.

Mr. BUNSTER. He got his information from you. For 160 miles along Vancouver Island there is not one rock. There was, some time ago, a very incorrect map drawn up of the country by the Premier's confidential agent—a part of the country where he has never been. It was represented as rocky, and the hon. member for West Durham, on the floor of this House, held that map up, saying that there was more rocks there than anything else.

Mr. MILLS. I should be sorry myself to see that map receive the public sanction, because I do not think it is reliable. I think that, however proper it may be for a private individual who has no special responsibility to issue such a map, it is hardly well that the Government should in any way make itself responsible for the circulation of a map of that kind. If the right hon. gentleman were to look at some of the maps in that atlas he would see that the representation of a corner of this country is not accurate. In looking over that map I saw that the whole North-West is represented as a fruit growing region, that there is no prairie at all. There is not moisture in the atmosphere sufficient to support fruit trees. Then again the whole country, as far as the Hudson's Bay, is represented as a rich country. I do not think it in any way promotes the interest of this country to publish an atlas of that sort, with the Government sanction, because any scientific man who visits the country, and becomes acquainted with its features will see that it is inaccurate, and the publication of such erroneous information will only have the effect of inducing the public to distrust all the information the Government professes to give regarding the country. The hon. gentleman says we did not expend a sufficient amount on surveys. We never knew that people wanted to settle in a district that was not surveyed, and there always are ample areas surveyed for settlement. Our experience was that some of the surveys having been carried on more extensively than the exigencies of the public service demanded at an early period, it was difficult to trace the boundaries, and I have no doubt that is the case at present. The area which the hon. gentleman has had surveyed during the year ending 30th June last, is sufficient to furnish 75,000 farms of 160 acres each, and taking five to a family, sufficient to settle 376,000 people. It is the business of the department to watch how far settlement is likely to go, fixing the latitude and longitude of places, so that the surveys will not overlap each other, and then survey particular localities which are fit for settlement, and not muskogs and swamps, which are not likely to be settled for a quarter of a century. It is obvious that if the hon. gentleman goes on making the ordinary appropriations from the public revenues each year for surveying that country, in addition to $300,000 a year from capital, the country will all have to be surveyed over again, except the small sections which are settled, and a large amount of this money will be used to no purpose.

13. The Department of Inland Revenue. $32,880 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I notice an increase here of $2,500. Will the hon. gentleman state what additional work is required in this department. The total expenditure in this department has increased from $27,000 in 1878 to nearly $33,000 now. That seems to be a very much larger increase than is apparently warranted by the increased business in the department.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. The increase this year is owing to the appointment of two new clerks required by the new law to attend to the stamps on Canadian and foreign tobacco, to the appointment of a laborator, and to statutory increases. That explains the whole increase except $100, which was an increase of the salary of one of the clerks who happened to change his class.

14. The Department of Customs $33,010 00

Mr. BOWELL explained that the increase of $1,305 was due chiefly to statutory increases. He desired to point out that although there was an increase in the estimate over that of last year, it would be found upon comparison with the estimate of 1877-8, the last year for which his predecessor was responsible, that there was a considerable decrease. In 1877-8, there was expended for the inside service $44,610.21, while the estimates for all purposes, for the year 1881-82, was $42,010, which included the statutory increases for four years, amounting to $4,080, which if deducted would show an estimate of $37,930 as against an expenditure in 1877-8 of $46,450. This saving was largely in the item of contingencies, for while in 1877-8 his predecessor spent for contingencies $16,372.71, he had spent in 1879-80 but $6,733.73. It was in this item where the extravagance in the past had taken place. He proposed to give an advance to the chief accountant, and he would scarcely be accused of political favoritism in so doing because the appointment was made by his predecessor. There was not a more valuable officer in the country than the accountant, and the proposed increase would, he believed, meet the approval of his predecessor.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John) bore testimony to the merits of the chief accountant. He was a most efficient officer, and it was the intention of the late Government, had they remained in power, to increase his salary.

15. The Department of Postmaster-General..... $110,400 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I desire specially to congratulate the Government on the remarkable instance of steadfast adherence to their professions, as shown in the expenditure of this department. There was not a single department in the public service which, while it was under the charge of the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Huntington), was the cause of more unmeasured vituperation than this department, particularly with regard to the number of clerks employed in it. The Government have only raised the expenditure from $86,000 in 1878, to $110,400 in 1882, and have only increased the number of clerks from 93 to 111, showing only an increase of $25,000 in the expenditure and 19 clerks in the staff. This is a most indubitable proof of the justice of the accusations which were constantly brought against the hon. member for Shefford for lack of economy in managing his department.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I will show the various increases and changes that have taken place. In the Secretary's office, there were two chief clerks who received $4,800. That vote was divided into two, the secretary $2,800, and the assistant secretary $2,000. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Huntington) must remember that the secretary of the department was not here for a time, and another officer in the department had to be appointed, who was already doing the work of the chief clerk; he was appointed also assistant secretary. Four first-class clerks got an increase of $400, four of the second-class clerks also received an increase of $200 more. Several of the lower class clerks were promoted, and one first-class clerk received an increase of $400. The statutory increase of $50 was given to a number of the clerks of different ranks in the different branches of the department. In one branch six clerks were taken from the temporary and placed on the permanent staff.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. Were their places filled by other temporary clerks?

Mr. LANGEVIN. I do not think their places have been filled by temporary clerks. Very often the work of the office becomes so great that you have to take temporary clerks for a month or two. The work of this department has been increasing so constantly and largely, that additional clerks have had to be employed. The opening up of the North-West and of the vacant lands in Quebec and Ontario, as well as of British Columbia, must increase the expenses of this department. The hon. gentleman opposite has made a comparison between the expenses of 1877-78 and those estimated for the coming year. No doubt it was the best card he could play. He showed the expenses in 1877-78 were $86,930, while those now proposed reach $110,400, or $23,470 more. Now $4,550 are to pay the seven additional clerks who are not now temporary. It was thought better, as they are required, and have been long in the service, to place them on the regular list, because it was considered better the House should know the fact and vote their payment directly, and that they should be raised from the disheartening condition of temporary clerks, after perhaps, from six to ten years service, from a position in which they had no future before them and could not claim superannuation, if they became unfit for work, or claim any increase from year to year. The increase of salaries to the extent of $10,000 for the four years represents the ordinary increase. In a large department of fifty to a hundred men, a slight increase to each makes soon a very large sum. Then you have $8,920, which is the balance of the $23,000—that is for additional clerks and promotions during the four years, including salaries of two clerks transferred from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. When I was at the head of this department, after investigation, I thought that those officers were required here. After these Provinces became part of the Confederation I thought it would be proper to suppress these officers, but after consulting with the head officers of the department I found that two of them should be brought up, and we brought them up without increasing their salaries. I may say, however, that their salaries were not put in the list of salaries in 1877-78, so that in order to make a proper comparison the amount of their salaries should be added in 1877-78. These sums make altogether $23,400. I propose to show the necessity for those increases in another way. In 1877-78 the number of post offices was 5,378, whilst the number estimated for 1881-82 is 6,000. The number of miles of mail travelled in 1878 was 15,427,323; the estimate for 1881-82 is 17,000,000. The number of letters and post cards carried in 1878 was 50,455,000; the estimate for 1881-82 is 58,000,000. The increase in savings bank business will also be considerable, but of course we cannot estimate it. The number of money orders in 1877-78 is increased by 35 per cent. in the estimate for 1881-82. The increased postal facilities which are now required for Manitoba, the North-West Territories and British Columbia, necessarily add to the expenses of the department, and though the department is a most useful one we must expect that for many years the revenue will fall short of the expenditure.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. The charge which was specially made against the Post Office Department when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power was, that its administration was marked by—I think they called it—shameful extravagance, and it was only when hon. gentlemen themselves took office that they found there were such facts in the geography of this country as the existence of Manitoba, the North-West Territories and British Columbia. When the hon. gentleman made that discovery I think he should have apologized for the charges he used to make with regard to increased expenditure; and which increased expenditure he has just attributed to the increased postal facilities required in those Provinces. One of the songs which hon. gentlemen used to sing was that we had to increase the size of the building because we added so many employes, but we find that he uses the same space, and that he has not discharged any of the employes. The removal of officers from the Provinces of which he spoke was begun in my time, but what he should have explained was why he did not cut down the expenditure. A distinguished member of the Government in the other House published a pamphlet in which he fulminated very strong charges of extravagance and mal-administration, but we hear no word of another pamphlet on the subject, though not an abuse of which they complained has been corrected, and though they still enjoy the places which they acquired by false representations. The hon. gentleman has not taken this line, but I can assure him that is the line which the country will take when they find that, in spite of all the charges these gentlemen made, they have added to the number of the employes and the expenses of the department. If he is responsible let him assume it. I do not even undertake to say that many of the increases are unfair or improper. I know well—what the hon. gentleman did not know when he sat on this side of the House—that the country is growing, that the department requires increased facilities, and it may be that there is a fair justification of what the hon. gentleman said with respect to these expenses, though I do not believe there is with respect to the employes. The fact is that the misrepresentations to which I allude, are sins which hon. gentlemen cannot shake off, and they have not yet made any apology for them; the hon. gentleman has not made it, though I hope some one of his colleagues will rise, and at least justify the spirit of the discussion which they indulged in when they sat on this side of the House, and express his regret, or make an apology in words for those sins, instead of leaving it to the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman speaks about the extra clerks. It is, I think, a great sin of our system, that while the public requires us to show, while this Civil Government list is supposed to show to us the staff employed in the different departments, that there may be a great number of men charged in the contingencies about which the public is not supposed to know anything. When I was in the department I tried to put a stop to sinecures. Whenever there was a vacancy outside which it was possible for me to fill, I managed to send a man into it that was not needed in the department—not in order to make places for others, but in order to cut down the list so as by adding on the extra clerks to the permanent list, I might keep within the appropriation, and when I left office I had almost succeeded in bringing it to that pass. But according to the Public Accounts for this very year, I think there is some fourteen or fifteen extra clerks still in that office. What the hon. gentleman has been doing is to put provisional clerks on the list and allow others to step in their places. He permits no vacuum. There is nothing like creating a vacancy. Not all of nature's horror of a vacuum exceeds the horror of an office-seeker as soon as he hears of a vacancy. The tendency of our time was to get rid of this evil, but the tendency of the hon. gentleman is to extend it and make it worse. It is simply a means of cheating the public as to the number of the employes of the country instead of placing them fairly on the list where they can be seen. It ought to be stopped. It has not been stopped; it is growing, as far as I can see by the examination of the Public Accounts. I do not want to crow over the hon. gentlemen, I can understand that with their large majority they must at this moment feel a good deal humiliated. I do not want to add to the discomfiture which I presume this state of things has necessarily inflicted upon them; but I hope that some hon. gentleman opposite would explain how these things have come about, perhaps the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) who, in olden times, was wont to delight the House with his speeches on this subject. I should like somebody to explain how it is that this department, so much abused under the late Administration, now occupies a worse position than it did then; why they did not remedy it, how they justify those charges which formerly they hurled against us, and which now may be fairly addressed to themselves. I want the hon. gentleman to tell the people of this country why the department was unfairly denounced by a set of men who were hungry for the places they occupy, and who enjoy those places to-day, because by the policy they adopted towards this department, and towards the general administration of the affairs of this country, deceived the people of this country, and drew from them their confidence by misrepresentations which, elsewhere than in politics, would be termed fraudulent, that they obtained their places under false pretences.

Mr. GAULT. I think that if any person can testify as to the economy that prevails in the Post Office and the Customs at Montreal, I can do so. Since I became member for Montreal West, I have had but one appointment made in the Montreal Post Office, and but two appointments in the Customs, the two latter being caused by death. I have had many applications from friends wanting appointments, but I have never been able to procure them any in those two departments.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. I notice that Mr. Wicksteed's salary is increased; from what time does that increase date?

Mr. LANGEVIN. From a year ago, by Order in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. Why was it not put in the Estimates last Session?

Mr. LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will find it on page fourteen of the Estimates.

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. POPE. There are no increases, in the Department of Agriculture, except the statutory increases. But there is one or two mistakes. The amount for the senior clerks should be $3,800, and the item of $700 in last year Estimates should be $750.

17. The Department of Marine and Fisheries.....$30,190 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the cause of this increase?

Mr. POPE (Queen's). The only increase is statutory. Captain Grayburn, who is appointed an additional second-class clerk, had been in the office for several years; having been a sea captain, he had, for several years, been performing the duties of inspector of lights in the Province of Ontario, the regular inspector being sick, and his salary was charged to the maintenance of lights. Last year the inspector of lights died, and another inspector having been appointed, it was thought right and proper to put Captain Grayburn, who has been on the temporary list in the department for years, on the permanent list.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the present inspector of lights is able to discharge his duties.

Mr. POPE. I hope so.

Mr. BLAKE. Therefore, Captain Grayburn is relieved from those duties, and there is practically an excess of officers in the inside service.

Mr. POPE. Captain Grayburn was occupied during about one-third of his time in the inspection of lights, and the rest of his time he was engaged in the office. There is no increase in the number of officials in the department. A number of clerks had been taken on temporarily, some of whom were appointed permanently, and some are not now there. I think there is only one extra clerk there now.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I observe that whereas in 1878 $25,000 was demanded for this service, $30,190 is demanded now, being an increase of about 20 per cent. The hon. gentleman says there is only one extra clerk. I find that there are eleven marked as extra clerks in the Public Accounts of 1880.

Mr. McCUAIG. I am very familiar with the lighthouse service of this country. I knew the late inspector, and I also know Capt. Grayburn. He performs his duties in a most careful manner.

18. The Department of Public Works $30,500 00

19. The Department of Railways and Canals... 40,594 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. There is considerable difficulty in making a comparison, because formerly the two departments were combined in one. The vote for the two services combined amounts to over $71,000 against $48,884 in 1878, an increase of $23,000. Thirty-two officers were required for public works when that department comprised railways and canals; now 47 clerks are required.

Mr. LANGEVIN. The explanations of the increase were given last year when the department was divided into the two departments. Each department was so large that no Minister could perform the duties of both. Therefore, Parliament made the division, and that division necessitated an increase of expenditure. The Pacific Railway matter besides required a larger number of clerks and engineers in the department. So far as the Department of Public Works is concerned, the increase of $300 that is due entirely to the statutory increases.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. There may be force in the hon. Minister's statement that the work undertaken by the hon. member for Lambton was more than perhaps any ordinary man could do, but I do not see, bearing in mind the expense of public works, especially in connection with the canals, and the amount of railway work done in the hon. member for Lambton's time, that there is any more work to be done now than was then done—more especially under the Syndicate arrangement. There cannot be anything like the amount of work in connection with the supervision of canals that there was in the time of the hon. member for Lambton. He certainly had as much work in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway as the Department of Railways can have at present.

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. LANGEVIN. The increase is only the natural increase by the division of the department. A French staff besides an English staff is necessary for the work with the public as well as for the office itself. In other departments the French staff need not be so large; with those two staffs and two departments the increase must necessarily be larger than elsewhere. You require two deputy heads and additional inferior officers. The late Minister (Mr. Mackenzie) as well as the present (Sir Charles Tupper) had suffered severely from the hard work of this department.

Mr. MILLS. No department in this country can compare with some of the larger departments in Great Britain for the amount of work. The work of some of the English Ministers is equal to the entire work of the whole Government of Canada. Yet the hon. gentleman says it is impossible for any Minister to perform the work of this Department of Public Works as it formerly existed. The present Ministers professed they were not to be flies on the wheel; they were men who could accomplish anything, make our soil productive, improve the climate and make the country prosperous. They also undertook to manage the department more economically than before. How have they succeeded? The First Minister by doubling the expenses of his department, and we have seen the Minister of Public Works propose a division of that department into two, and its expenses increased from less than $50,000 to over $71,000. There is no economy about that arrangement. No proper defence of this increase of staff and expense has been given, nor any justification of the great increase of the expenses of Government. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Langevin) says the present Minister has been almost killed with the work. Are we to understand by that statement that this department is to be sub-divided again, in order to protect the health of the Minister? My impression was that Ministers did not suffer in their departments, but suffered in this House, where they tried to kill us also by late and irregular hours.

21. Departmental contingencies$139,750 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I will be glad if the Finance Minister can keep down the contingencies to the figure named. I do not think there is any use in setting them down at $25,000 to $30,000 less than will really be required. That figure was largely exceeded in 1880. It is very undesirable we should find the votes for these contingencies constantly largely exceeded.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. From calculations made we hope to keep the contingencies this year $20,000 below the amount of last year; and it is hoped that for next year the sum asked will cover the outlay. The only doubt felt is as to the expenditure for the departments generally, which it seems difficult to control. A suggestion has been made to give the deputy heads special control in this matter, with a view to keeping down the charges for the different departments.

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We hope to keep the expenditure within $140,000, but it may reach that amount—possibly may exceed it by $4,000 or $5,000.

Mr. BLAKE. How is the saving effected; why not save still more this year?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Because we are transferring more of the persons paid $2 a day from the temporary to the permanent staff.

Mr. BLAKE. That is the way the money is being saved?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. McCUAIG. As to the charge for legal duties, I observed the other day, that exceptions were taken to the Deputy Minister of Justice, in conducting the Crown business. It was alleged then as a reason why it was justified that these sums paid for legal advice and duties would have to be paid to some one, and that money was saved by employing him. I approve of the policy of the Minister of Justice in this matter, because the Deputy Minister being a sworn officer of the Government, will be more likely to discharge the duties satisfactorily than any one else.

Mr. BLAKE. I presume that the item in the Auditor General's report to which the hon. gentleman has referred has been put in that report for the purpose of preventing what the hon. gentleman hopes will be accomplished. It is well known that in England the Auditor General is allowed to employ independent legal advice, and the suggestion which is made in the Auditor General's report is generally made for the purpose of endeavoring to assimilate his position to that of the Auditor General in England, who occupies an exceptional position, whose business it is to stand under the law with regard to appropriations, and who of necessity may sometimes stand against the Government with regard to these appropriations. I suppose it may happen that there are contingencies with regard to which it may be desired to have independent legal opinion as to the construction of Acts of Parliament, and therefore, that it is not desirable that he should be advised by the deputy of a member of the Government who are the other party to the matter.

Mr. McCUAIG. I quite understand what the hon. gentleman has said, but I find here that whereas it was stated that the highest salary paid to a Deputy Minister was $3,200, the Deputy of the Minister of Railways and Canals is $4,100.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; that was a mistake.

24. Amount required to provide for contingent expenses of the High Commissioner of Canada in London	$4,000 00
---	------------

Mr. BLAKE. It was very natural that a bulk sum should have been asked last year, as the arrangement was a new one and it was necessary to make proper provision, but it was said, I think, that the amount was properly an allowance. I would like to know if it is now voted simply as an allowance or an amount to be accounted for.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is practically an allowance.

Mr. BLAKE. That being the case I think it would be better to call it an allowance, not accountable, rather than a contingency.

Mr. ANGLIN. I hope the hon. Minister will inform the House what our High Commissioner has been doing during the past year for the large amount of money which was voted to him. The only account of his operations which I have seen, was a small report which he made to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, showing that Mr. Annand had gone out of the Immigration office, at London, that the Commissioner had to some extent taken charge, and that the Department had been reconstructed. He also gave us some extracts from tables, prepared by the Imperial Government, and which we might, perhaps, have obtained without our troubling the High Commissioner to supply them. I remember that Sir Alexander Galt delivered a lecture as a sort of preliminary, apparently, to this Session, in which he certainly made some extraordinary statements. He said to his auditors, and through the newspapers, to all who might read, that in the North-West we had some 200,000,000 of square miles of land south of the latitude of St. Petersburg, and 100,000,000 square miles capable of producing all the cereals grown in Great Britain—in other words, 640,000,000 of acres of fertile lands in the North-West. He said besides that there was an immense extent of agricultural lands in British Columbia, while, on the other hand, we had the statement of the leader of the Government the other day that they found it difficult now to discover any lands in the mountain regions, and they are now asking the Government of British Columbia to find somewhere in that Province lands which will make up the area of the twenty miles belt. We were informed that the Commissioner would look after our commercial interests in France and elsewhere, but the hon. Ministers were unable to inform the House what had been done by the French Government and Legislature with regard to the shipping market. I did not expect that much good would result from the appointment of a High Commissioner, and I believe that so far as we can quote of what that gentleman has done his appointment has been a mistake, which the sooner we retrace the better. He is liberally paid, for, besides his salary and $4,000 of an allowance, I think there will be found somewhere in the Estimates a further sum of $14,000 for other expenses said to have been incurred by him. We paid the expenses of himself and family to England. The Minister of Agriculture gave us to understand, some evenings ago, that the scheme for the emigration of Irish people to the North-West was outlined by the High Commissioner. There was not great labor in that. Such a scheme would be a good one if there were any means of carrying it out. In regard to negotiations I am not aware that the Commissioner has rendered any important service. We may find from the Government by-and-by that he did communicate with the Colonial Office on certain subjects, that he had some interviews, or wrote some letters; but I am satisfied that the creation of the office was a mistake, that the appointment was a mistake, and we are spending a very large amount of public money in this way without obtaining a return to the public.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have the misfortune to differ altogether from the hon. gentleman. I think no appointment has been made of greater importance and advantage to this country than the appointment of the High Commissioner. Every year there has been a cry through the country that Canada was visiting England, and had no means of being represented in any way or obtaining their interests advanced in case they had any reason to have intercourse with the Imperial Government or any of its departments, because the Dominion had no Minister or representative there. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) has alluded to what he calls a lecture delivered by Sir Alexander Galt, the other day in England, and a most valuable lecture or address it was. The hon. gentleman sneers at the statistics given there; I think Sir Alexander Galt can afford such a sneer. Everyone who knows the long career of Sir Alexander Galt is aware that, if there was one quality for which he is remarkable more than another, it was his aptitude and correctness in statistics. He found on taking office that the emigration department in England was actually valueless. Mr. Annand, an able man in some ways, I believe, sat there and drew his salary, and nobody entered the office or applied to him for information with respect to immigration to Canada. The moment that Sir

A. T. Galt was placed in the position, the office was crowded. He has a faculty of attracting people, he has a thorough knowledge of this country and its resources, and he has been of the very greatest assistance in that respect. He is the head of the Emigration Department for England, Ireland and Scotland, and we hope to have an emigration from Germany, the direction of which will be in his hands. As representing the Canadian Government in a quasi-diplomatic capacity, Sir A. T. Galt, according to the hon. member for Gloucester, has not been a success as a diplomat. Why, Sir Alex. Galt has visited France and Spain. The hon. member sneers and says he has not heard the High Commissioner had accomplished anything in France. When Sir Alex. Galt went there first the Canadian Government were within an ace of obtaining an important result. If it had not been for a delay in the London Foreign Office of forty-eight hours, we would have succeeded in obtaining a reduction of duty on Canadian vessels of from forty francs to two francs a ton, but unfortunately the Government of Austria gave notice in the meantime to all European nations that they withdrew from all their commercial treaties and at once prevented France, in consequence of the favored nation clause in several treaties, going on with the negotiations for a time. And so by an accident over which Sir Alexander Galt had no control the arrangement which was all but completed was thrown over. Since that time England and France—as the hon. gentleman ought to know if he does not know—have been in constant negotiation for the renewal of the old commercial treaty and the re-arrangement of the terms on a more satisfactory basis, especially to France. Those negotiations are now proceeding, and Sir Alexander Galt has just ascertained from Her Majesty's Government that when representatives should meet for the purpose of settling the final terms of the treaty he would be present representing Canada, and as a portion of the English representation. So in the same way with respect to Spain. Sir Alexander Galt visited that country only with the idea, under instructions from the Canadian Government, of endeavoring to open up trade between Canada and Cuba and Porto Rico, and to make a sort of reciprocity treaty between the Dominion and the Spanish West India Islands. He was ably assisted by Mr. West, who was the British Ambassador at Madrid, and the Spanish Minister at that day was so impressed with the importance of the subject, and the representations made by Sir Alexander Galt, that they asked if Canada would not widen the scope of the negotiations, and enter into negotiations as well for trade between Canada and Spain, as between Canada and the Spanish West Indies. They entered into negotiations, but a change of Government occurred, which, as the hon. member for Gloucester ought to know, and I suppose does know, looks like a pronunciamento—a breaking up of everything like business for a considerable time. The other day Signor Canovas, the Prime Minister, who was strongly in favor of entering into a commercial arrangement between Canada and Spain, was removed very suddenly, and we have since received information that until public affairs had re-shaped themselves under Sagasta and Campo, the leaders of the present Government, it would be useless to attempt to proceed further. But Sir Alexander Galt is in London, under instructions, and ready, with the assistance of Her Majesty's Government, to proceed with completing negotiations for a treaty with either France or Spain. He is there, and it is right he should be there. I can assure the House, from personal knowledge, that Her Majesty's Government, at all events, attach the greatest importance to the appointment of a representative of Canada in the capacity Sir Alexander Galt now occupies. I think that some hon. gentlemen opposite will agree with me, that if there is to be an officer at all of that kind, there could not be a more efficient or able man than Sir A. T. Galt. Besides that, it is the intention of the Government—and my hon. friend, the Finance Minister will speak more specifically upon that point—that as fast as the old standing arrangement between the financial agency of Canada in London and this Government can be re-adjusted, that the enormous expenses we have paid hitherto in the shape of commissions shall be saved, for Canada is strong enough and her credit is good enough to negotiate her own money matters without paying the enormous commissions that ex necessitate every Government has been obliged to pay for so many years, from £10,000 to £40,000. I believe the credit of Canada is good enough to enter into the financial market and to make her own loans without being mulcted in those tremendous charges. If there has ever been an appointment that the Government ought to get credit for, it is the appointment of a High Commissioner. Instead of throwing away £1,000 sterling upon an Agent General of Emigration, as was done by a previous Government, we have, by only doubling that sum, a representative in England, an Ambassador, a Minister able and authorized to negotiate commercial treaties for Canada whenever there is need, and to look after vast and increasing questions of emigration, and all this for the moderate salary that Parliament has chosen to vote.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says that he demands credit for the Government for this appointment. But the hon. gentleman is unreasonable; he wants a great deal of credit, but he wants a great deal of cash too.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very little cash.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman told us last year, having already made this appointment and sent his High Commissioner home, that he was going to save a great deal of money by this, that he was going to save all these commissions and re-organize the whole affair. But the year has passed, the Public Accounts and the Estimates for the next year are before us, and I do not find any alteration in the scale of remuneration for the financial agent. We do not find that the hon. gentleman expects in the next year to make, as far as I can judge from these Estimates, a large saving. They are pretty much on the same scale, unless, indeed, these commissions are to be paid to Sir A. T. Galt instead of to the financial agent. So that the saving is still in the future, while we find the expenditure in the Estimates. The hon. gentleman is correct in saying that but for a series of unhappy accidents, but for the unfortunate inaction of the Foreign Office and the unfortunate inactivity of the Austrian Minister, we would have had a treaty with Austria; but for the change of government in Spain and the non-arrival of the happy moment since his Spanish treaty, we should have derived great advantage from that quarter. Here are some of the affairs with which his appointment has been connected. We have evidence certainly of his appointment, and we find him in the Public Accounts, in the large sums which have been paid for this special mission last year and the year before, and from which, as far as I can see, there has not been one shillings worth of profit to this country as yet. That is all in the future, but the expenditure is here to be paid off. The hon. gentleman has paid a high compliment to the lecture which Sir A. T. Galt lately delivered, and particularly to the accuracy of his statements of facts with reference to this country. I am sure the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) will be delighted to know that this lecture is so accurate. I am sure the hon. members for the city of Montreal, that every body interested in canal system between Montreal and Lake Erie, will be delighted to know that Sir A. T. Galt said on that occasion:

“At Montreal the canal system commences to overcome the several rapids, and consists of, in all, 41 miles, with locks 200 feet long by 45 feet wide, and passing vessels drawing 10 feet of water. Lake Ontario is then reached; and, to surmount the Falls of Niagara, the Welland Canal has been built 28 miles, having at present locks 150 feet by 26 feet wide, with 10 feet of water. These canals being insufficient, new works were commenced five years ago and will be probably completed within two years, thereby a uniform enlargement of the whole system will be established to locks 270 feet, by 45 feet, with a depth of 14 feet, allowing the passage from Lake Erie to the Ocean, via Montreal, of vessels of 1,500 tons."

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It has been intimated that the arrangements which were about to be completed by the 1st of January, by which all the business transacted by our agent at London was to be transferred to our High Commissioner, have not yet been affected. Difficulties have arisen between the agent and the Government, as to the terms of the contract that was entered into. That matter is at present under negotiation, and I hope before the Session closes, to be able to state exactly how the matter stands. The hon. member for West Durham says we have the expenditure but we have not a shilling to show on the other side of the account. Let me say that I can show something on the other side of the account, though I have not been able to transfer to him yet all the business upon which we hoped to save a considerable sum of money. During the last year we have had struck at the mint in England $650,000 in silver. The negotiations and arrangements were carried on entirely through our High Commissioner, but had they been placed in the hands of any other person one per cent would have been a low figure indeed to have paid for the transaction of the business, the shipment, and everything connected with it. On this item alone there would be a saving of $6,500. Then the expenditure in the Emigration Department shows a very large reduction during the year, but it does not include the salary of the High Commissioner, who acts as the Agent for the Agricultural Department. If we allow $4,000 for that we have a saving on both items of $10,500. Then the expenses in connection with the purchase and shipment of the cable for the St. Lawrence were something like £30,000 sterling. All that was transacted by the High Commissioner; no commissions were paid to any one for the transaction of that business. If you allow two per cent. for that operation you have another saving of $1,000, which, with the other two items, would more than cover the $14,000 expended during the year, to say nothing of the other services he has rendered. So that although we have not yet been able to transfer to our High Commissioner certain duties that are performed by our agent at the present time, during the current year there will have been saved in these operations alone a sum equivalent to his salary and the contingent expenses that have been referred to. I am sure that the hon. member for West Durham will be glad to know that there is a shilling, that there is a pound, that there is a certain sum of money saved as compensation for the $14,000 expended.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Finance does not mean the House to understand that this charge of $6,500 was paid formerly for the silver obtained from the mint.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think it will amount to that. One per cent. would be a low commission for transacting the whole business.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. A business of that kind is not a formidable business. If the hon. Minister speaks from knowledge, of course I stand corrected. I do not think that on former occasions we paid $500 for the business connected with the coining of $500,000 of silver.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think it amounts to more.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That is not my recollection. Of course there are charges which Sir A. T. Galt could not avoid incurring for the transmission from that side to this, but I do not think one per cent. was charged for the work on the former occasion. I should think that two per cent. would be an extremely high charge to have paid for conveying the £30,000 that were paid for the cable. I do not think a charge like that could have been made by any gentleman that the Department would have required to employ.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We pay two and a half per cent. to our commission agents.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Not for work of that kind.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman say what was the mode in which silver was ordered from the mint before?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was ordered by correspondence—through Sir John Rose.

Mr. BLAKE. And does he say that Sir John Rose charged that?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think it cost one per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. If it did, it must have been because he employed someone. He was acting as our confidential agent, and I apprehend that he received an annual honorarium; and I should be sorry to learn that Sir John Rose received one per cent. for the silver he obtained for the Government.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; he did not receive one per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The hon. leader of the Government has mentioned how the appointment of Sir Alexander Galt was appreciated by the colonial authorities at home. I chanced last year to be present at a banquet at which Lord Kimberley, Secretary of Colonial Affairs, was present; and I may read an extract from the speech he delivered on that occasion, as reported in the Times of July 23rd:

"The Earl of Kimberley said their meeting on that occasion, though a casual one, might be regarded as indicative of the strong bond of union which subsisted, and he hoped long would subsist, between Canada and England. The Canadians had, in sending Sir Alexander Galt to this country, taken a step which he looked upon as very valuable, and one which was likely to promote harmonious relations between Canada and England, and for this reason: what was required was that the interests of Canada should be thoroughly represented at headquarters, and that the Home Government should have every opportunity of understanding what it was they required. Such a step was one which marked an epoch in the relations of the Dominion and this country, and what they had to look forward to was a close and intimate alliance between the two."

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad we have had an after-dinner speech quoted as a testimony to the efficiency of an officer. May I ask the hon. Finance Minister, in reference to the item of the cable expense, whether Mr. Gisborne was not across for the Government in connection with the purchase of the silver.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. He was, and Sir Alexander Galt co-operated with him.

Mr. BLAKE. Oh, I see; Mr. Gisborne was sent across in the employment of this Government, and Sir Alexander Galt helped him.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think the amount earned by Sir Alex. Galt in this transaction was not a very large sum. It is incredible that any respectable agent should charge one per cent. for taking the trouble of ordering silver; the one per cent. must have been paid by Sir Alex. Galt to some one else. The hon. Premier spoke of Sir Alex. Galt's services in France and Spain, as though they were rendered since he became Commissioner. They were rendered on a previous occasion, and we paid a large sum for the services he was supposed to render. The hon. Premier states that if Sir Alex. Galt had not been unfortunately delayed in some way or other, he might have arrived in Paris, and obtained some diminution in the duties on our ships.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that. He was in Paris and had made an arrangement, and was waiting for official authority from London. Before that arrived, notice arrived from Austria, and the negotiations dropped.

Mr. ANGLIN. If so, it was unfortunate. The hon. Premier also stated that Sir Alexander Galt created so favorable an impression in Spain that he might have obtained very important modifications in our trade relations with the Spanish West Indies but for the unfortunate fact that there was a change of Government, which was equivalent, as is usual in Spain, to a pronunciamento. The change of Government has only taken place within a few weeks. Nearly a year elapsed between Sir Alex. Galt's visit and the resignation of the Canovas Government, and during that time a Session of the Cortes was held, and there was an opportunity for us to obtain a change in our trade relations with Spain. There is this ground of hope, that the Government in power in Spain being now a Liberal, free-trade Government, will be disposed to deal fairly with their West Indian possessions, and perhaps be willing to trade with us on more favorable terms. The after-dinner speech of Earl Kimberley was such a speech as that gentleman would feel it his duty on an occasion like that to deliver. Feeling bound to be complimentary, he could hardly have said less than he did.

25. Administration of Justice $37,860 00

Mr. BLAKE. Has the third Stipendiary Magistrate for the North-West been appointed?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The three Stipendiary Magistrates are Col. Macleod, who was formerly in the Mounted Police, who is stationed at Fort Macleod; Mr. Robertson, who is stationed at Battleford; and Mr. Ryan, who is stationed at Prince Albert.

Mr. McCUAIG. I believe the charges for contingencies, &c., of the Supreme Court could be reduced, and the general business advanced, by having one efficient officer instead of the two clerks now engaged there. Great delays have been experienced in getting decisions of the Supreme Court, even in cases involving large sums, which I think is one reason why that Court is so unpopular. I am informed that if the Judges were allowed competent officers, to put the work before them properly, they would get through with their duties more quickly. Therefore, I hope the hon. Minister of Justice will replace the two clerks by one good officer.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The charge of travelling expenses is, by Judge Fournier, $30. With regard to the charge of delays as regards Supreme Court judgments, I am able to give the strongest possible testimony to the efficiency of the Court, at any rate so far as the particular instance referred to is concerned. I am told that at this moment there is not a single judgment of the Court pending in any case, except in some argued during the present term, and that judgment in many cases argued this term have been delivered. I doubt if the same can be said of any other Court in the Dominion.

Mr. BLAKE. With regard to the item of $600 for the salary of the Judge of the Maritime Court, I believe it would be well to reduce it to, say, $100. The item has not been required, and its submission again is really a temptation to incur unnecessary expenditure to this amount.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I will accept the hon. gentlemen's suggestion.

Mr. McCUAIG. This Court was established to deal with the very important maritime interests of this country, including valuable steamboat and sailing vessel property; and I think a Judge of that Court is as much entitled to compensation for his services as the County Court Judges, as he deals with much greater interests. The Maritime Court Judge should receive fair compensation by a fixed annual salary charged to the country.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I am glad my friend from Prince Edward County has been converted to this view of the case, as provision has not been made for the application of the fees of the Maritime Court to the payment of the salaries of the Surrogate Judges in that Court. The Maritime Court Surrogate Judge, who has more important duties to perform than any County Court Judge, should be adequately paid. The Judge in my district has had a great many cases before him, and does not get any salary. The Government ought to attend to his just claims. Although there is statutory provision, as an hon. member remarks, for his payment, the Government have not taken action to get the Maritime Court Surrogate Judge his salary. There are 60 cases entered in the Essex Maritime Court, and the Judge's time is very much taken up in trying such cases, some of which involve large amounts, as well as points of law of very great importance.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). There is a fee fund, provided by Statute, which the Governor in Council may pay to the Surrogate Judges. No payment has yet been made. I believe some $700 or $800 is available for that fund, and I quite understand that the case mentioned by the member for Essex may be worthy of consideration. There is also a great deal in what the member for Prince Edward County says, and I think the time will come when the question of the duties of those Surrogate Judges and their proper compensation will be considered. I trust that before next Session I shall have such information on the subject as to enable me to suggest to the House some feasible and, I hope, acceptable mode of compensating those Judges for their services.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very glad to hear the statements of the Minister of Justice. When I introduced the measure establishing the Maritime Court, I stated my own very great objection to even a modified system of payment by fees which I had felt obliged to ask the House to incorporate with the Bill. It was then certainly stated to the House that the arrangement was intended to be temporary only, and that at the earliest moment that it was possible to lay before the House some evidence as to what the proper rate of remuneration would be, they would be asked to compensate those Judges by an appropriate salary. There may be points at which it is necessary to have a Surrogate Judge even where only one or two cases may come before him in a year; and there may be places in which, as stated by the hon. member for Essex, his duties may be heavy. I think the hon. gentleman might find a way of removing this anomaly and of distributing the fees fairly until the time arrives when he may distribute the money by another mode.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The hon. gentleman will understand the reason why I have not done so, when I say that the matter has only recently been brought to my attention.

Mr. McCUAIG. I have no hesitation in saying from my place in Parliament that the gentleman who is at the head of this Court in Toronto is objectionable to the members of the Ontario Bar, as one who is not fit to discharge the duties of his position. As very important interests are represented before that Court, and as the Judge is paid a good salary, it is important that the gentleman at the head of the Court should command the respect of the profession and the public.

Mr. McCALLUM. I know my hon. friend from Prince Edward County is opposed to this Court, but it is one which gives general satisfaction in the Province of Ontario. There is one change, however, which I should like to see in the rules of this Court. I think that, considering the important interests and the large amounts which are often involved in suits before that Court, and considering also that the only appeal is to the Supreme Court, the evidence should be taken by shorthand reporters, instead of in the shape of the Judge's notes.

Mr. WELDON. With regard to the Registrar and Marshal of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Quebec, I should like to know how these officers are paid, for I think that in none of the other Provinces do they get fees and allowances. I should like also to direct attention to the very unsatisfactory manner in which rooms are provided for the sitting of the Court in the Province.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The allowances and fees referred to by the hon. gentleman have been inherited by these gentlemen by some arrangement or compact made with the old Province of Quebec prior to Confederation, and which arrangement, whatever it is, has been continued. But for the existence of such a compact I should certainly decline to continue the appropriation in the Estimates.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think there is any compact. When I occupied the hon. gentleman's position, I tried to find out the origin of the system, and my conclusion was that these payments should not be continued. Not wishing, however, to discontinue them summarily, I gave notice to them that the item would be discontinued in the Estimates. Unfortunately, however, the Government disappeared and the item reappeared.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I shall endeavor to find out the basis of the payment.

127. Maintenance and repairs of steamers
Napoleon III, Newfield, Iruid, Glendon,
Sir James Douglas and Northern Light.... $120,000 00

In answer to Mr. ANGLIN,

Mr. POPE (Queen's). I still hold the same opinions with respect to the usefulness of the Northern Light for winter service in Northumberland Straits. With a north-east wind the straits become filled with heavy ice, and at such times it is not possible for a vessel to cross. The Northern Light works her way very well through drift ice; but when the ice is fixed she cannot break her way through it. The vessel has, however, done better work this winter and part of last winter than previously. She has been a great convenience in carrying freight to the Island. I consider that the light draught steamers from Quebec to Lewis are of a better model.

128. Amount required for the purchase and maintenance of a steamer to replace the Lady Head $55,000 00

Mr. POPE (Queen's). The sum of $55,000 was voted last year for the purchase and maintenance of a steamer to take the place of the Lady Head, which was lost. A vessel has been secured for that service, and I hope it will prove a good and useful one. It is of 380 gross tonnage and 220 tons nett; will steam 9 knots; carry 400 tons of cargo, besides what is in the bunkers, and will consume five tons of coal per day, while the Napoleon consumes twenty-five tons, and carries no more cargo. The vessel cost £7,500, and is of the highest character, being classed A1 for ten years.

Mr. YEO. Would the Minister state what instructions the captains received, and what conveniences were supplied to the vessel, so that passengers might be safely landed. On one occasion, during the winter, the passengers had to leave the vessel when she was twenty miles from land, and had been twenty-six hours out, and before they reached a place of shelter the passengers suffered severe privations, some of them being badly frozen. It seems to me that something has been badly managed, that the captain had not full instructions, or that something else was wrong. It is very important that the safety of passengers travelling in such a way should be secured. They are liable to get stuck in the ice for a month. It is a great blunder on the part of the Government that the thing was not managed better, and I hope it will not happen again. Several complaints have come to me from the Island, which I now bring under the notice of the Government.

Mr. McCALLUM.

Mr. ANGLIN. I desire to call the attention of the Government to the importance of modifying the contract with the steamer plying between Campbellton and Gaspé, so that she should call at least once a week at some port in the lower part of Gloucester. There is a large population in that county, from fifty to seventy miles removed from the nearest railway station, and they feel much indeed the want of steam communication. I made efforts some years ago to obtain steam communication for them, but the boat put upon the route was unable to perform the service. The people of Gloucester require accommodation quite as much as the people on the north side. An arrangement could be made, I believe, at no great additional cost, which would afford accommodation to 10,000 or 12,000 people, who are nearly all engaged in the fisheries, and would consequently afford a good deal of traffic:

134. Subsidy to line of steamers between Canada and West Indies and Brazil.....$50,000 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Brazilian Government have formally granted $50,000 for this subsidy. The line will commence to run in the month of May from the St. Lawrence to Rio Janeiro, touching at St. Thomas and Bahia. Trips will be made once a month. There are three ships in the line, each of 1,800 tons.

137. Subsidy to line of steamers to run fortnightly between France and Quebec, provided the French Government appropriate $100,000 for the same service..... $50,000 00

In answer to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The French Government have not yet formally consented to give the subsidy, but an intimation has been given, officious rather than official, that they will vote this sum of money if we make this vote. We only ask for this vote on condition that the French Government give twice the amount. The line will continue all the year round. The main Canadian port will be Quebec.

Mr. MILLS. We ought to have had a statement showing the character of the trade and its extent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I rather fancy it is for the purpose of initiating a trade than carrying out the present trade.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. For what length of time are these subsidies to be granted?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. For three years. This vote is also in nubibus yet. The only information we have got is that the Government of France would vote twice the sum we did.

Mr. BLAKE. I apprehend that a contract extending over a term of years should be sanctioned by the House by resolutions and a Bill.

138. Subsidy to line of steamers to run alternately between Liverpool and St. John, N.B., and Liverpool and Halifax, N.S. $25,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Are these steamers weekly or fortnightly?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Fortnightly—once a month from St. John, and once a month from Halifax.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). Have any offers been made yet?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; notice has been given, asking for tenders. The steamers cannot commence before July.

140. For purchase of life-boats, life-preservers, and rewards for saving life..... $3,000 00

Mr. ANGLIN. Will the hon. Minister state how this money is spent,

Mr. POPE (Queen's). The report will show that. Of course the Government always recognize, either by a testimonial or by a money consideration, the services of those who save life or property. But this vote is more particularly for supplying life-boats where they may be most needed, both on the lakes and on the sea-coast, on condition that the people in the different neighborhoods man them.

Mr. McCUAIG. The county I represent is surrounded on one side by Lake Ontario and the Bay of Quinté on the other, and I myself have witnessed most appalling spectacles there arising from ship-wrecks on the coast. Last season I saw several men belonging to two wrecks, perish in the presence of several hundreds of people standing powerless on shore to render effectual assistance. The disastrous loss of life and property last fall, in the vicinity of Concecon and the Port of Wellington, on Lake Ontario, was brought under the consideration of the hon. the Minister of Marine and the Commissioner of Fisheries by Mr. Redmond, the efficient Fishery Inspector for the County of Prince Edward; and I am pleased to learn, as a result of that timely and prompt report of this popular officer, a lifeboat is to be placed, on the opening of navigation, at South Bay Point, in care of the light-house keeper, for the light-house, now in course of construction in that vicinity, and I have every hope a lifeboat station will be moved, at the opening, into Miller's Bay and at the Port of Wellington. In connection with this commendable policy of the Government, I hope it may be supplemented by an appropriation of money from which a yearly sum to each of the crew of this lifeboat shall be awarded, which cannot fail to secure a proper organization of men living in the vicinity, volunteers from the ranks of our hardy fishermen engaged in the fisheries surrounding South Bay Point, and officered by men of their own profession, and of their selection, annually. Such a policy will be a just recognition by the Government of the brave and meritorious marine acts of the fishermen of my native county, in saving valuable lives and property at the peril of their own, and encourage them in the continued performance of a noble and praiseworthy duty.

Mr. McCALLUM. I should be glad if the finances of this country were in a condition to enable us to have an efficient life-service in this country. My experience is that lifeboats with voluntary crews are of no use whatever. Such crews only drown themselves when they attempt to save others. In the United States there is a very efficient service of life-saving stations, which costs a large amount of money, and is at the service of vessels of every nationality. I notice that there is a Bill before Congress this year, to establish thirty-five additional life-saving stations on the lake and Atlantic coasts. I trust that the hon. Minister of Marine and the Government will take this into consideration.

Mr. DAWSON. I have often, within the last few years drawn the attention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to the advantage that would accrue from having a steam tug of some kind stationed at Sault Ste. Marie or some convenient place. There is an immense extent of inland navigation between Collingwood and Sarnia on the one side and at the head of Lake Superior, no less than 700 or 800 miles, where we have not a vessel stationed which we could send out in case of a wreck or any accident occurring. I simply draw the attention of the Government to the matter. For life-saving purposes a tug would be of great assistance, placed at some convenient station on these inland lakes, and the Sault Ste. Marie would be a very convenient point.

143. Montreal Water Police and River Police, Quebec $35,500 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It is objectionable to have the two items combined. How much is spent on each? The amount of both is about equal to that of former years, and the division then was $14,000, Montreal, and $21,000, Quebec.

Mr. POPE (Queen's, P.E.I.) It is the same to-day. The two items were combined because it saved a great deal of difficulty in the allotment of expenditure on this service.

Mr. ANGLIN. I protest against our paying for the police in Montreal and Quebec, when Halifax and St. John and other ports are not similarly provided with a police force.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House adjourned at 1:20 o'clock, a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 9th March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

EXPLORATION OF HUDSON'S BAY.

Mr. SCHULTZ enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to continue this year their exploration of Hudson's Bay?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid the Government will require the services of Professor Bell here this year; but, if possible, we will endeavor to continue the geological survey.

LAKE ST. PETER DEBT.

Mr. COURSOL enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to assume the payment of the Lake St. Peter debt, as recommended by the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal?

Mr. LANGEVIN. Notice was given yesterday by the hon. Minister of Finance for to-morrow on this subject; and when that motion is discussed by the hon. Minister, I do not doubt he will give such explanations as will prove satisfactory to the hon. member.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

72. Flour shed, St. John, deep water terminus$8,000 00

In answer to Mr. WELDON,

Mr. POPE (Compton). This is for the purpose of building a shed on the Intercolonial wharf at St. John, for the reception of flour. The vote of $15,000, on construction account, I am informed, is to cover Mr. Shanly's salary and the expenses of his office.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman tell the Committee what Mr. Shanly's functions are? Is he a temporary officer, employed to undertake the settlement of certain accounts; and if so, what are his functions? We do not know his position, the Order in Council appointing him is not before the Committee, and yet we are asked to vote the money to pay him and his friends.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman knows that the law provides that there shall be a chief engineer, upon whose certificate the balances of the settlement may be made. Mr. Shanly was appointed Chief Engineer, and is now engaged in reporting on the several matters brought before him respecting the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Has he now charge of the road in its revenue capacity? Is he not Engineer-in-Chief for the entire work of the road?

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then who has charge of the road as engineer?

Mr. POPE. Mr. Schreiber.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Mr. Schreiber is not down there, and it is impossible for him to do the work of the road up here.

Mr. POPE. Mr. Archibald is down there.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then Mr. Archibald is Chief Engineer.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then what is Mr. Archibald's title?

Mr. POPE. He is resident engineer, and the hon. gentleman had both.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It seems that Mr. Shanly is appointed to do a specific work, and we want to know what that specific work is. If it is a portion of his duties to do what was done by Mr. Keefer when the Dominion was defrauded—robbed—of over $100,000 in consequence of the bungling of the Railway Department, we want to know it. We find cases that were before the Courts referred to a single arbitrator for decision, and for anything this House or the country knows, Mr. Frank Shanly is entrusted with similar powers. Before the hon. gentleman can ask us for money to pay his salary, he ought to tell us what he is instructed to do. The Minister is under the impression that no account could be settled without the certificate of Mr. Shanly or Mr. Fleming as Chief Engineer. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. Mr. Fleming ceased to be Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway in 1874. Mr. Schreiber was Chief Engineer from that time, and Mr. Fleming devoted himself to the work of the Pacific Railway. We have had no officer similar to Mr. Shanly, and before I agree to this vote I want to know what his instructions are.

Mr. POPE. I thought I explained to the hon. gentleman what the duties of Mr. Shanly were. There is one thing certain, the hon. gentleman is mistaken as to the duties of the Chief Engineer; nothing could be paid except on his certificate, and it was necessary that somebody should be appointed for that purpose. With reference to Mr. Shanly's qualifications, I do not believe anybody in this House or the country, except my hon. friend opposite, will say that Mr. Shanly is not competent to examine and report in the way the law requires. I am not ashamed to say that we appointed Mr. Shanly because we had confidence in his ability to do that work.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did not say one word against Mr. Frank Shanly as an engineer or agent. The hon. gentleman says nothing could be paid in settlement of claims without the certificate of the Chief Engineer. I would like him to produce the certificate of the Chief Engineer in the Oakes-Murray settlement. Here was a payment of $100,000 made without a certificate of the Chief Engineer, but simply on the order, apparently, of Mr. Keefer who was sole arbitrator in the matter. I want to know whether Mr. Shanly is in the same position as Mr. Keefer occupied then in relation to claims not settled. I have pointed out one case in which there was no such thing as a certificate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That case stands in quite a different position from the general run of cases which came before Mr. Shanly. The hon. gentleman must remember that in the case he mentioned, the party brought an action in the Court of Exchequer and that in due course it was to be referred to the registrar of that Court. It was obvious that that officer knew nothing about railway matters, and in the exercise of a wise discretion, Mr. Keefer, an experienced engineer, was appointed instead of the registrar, to go down and report upon the case just as the latter would have had to do. The hon. gentleman knows that all the railway contracts provide that money must be paid on the certificate of the Chief Engineer.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Or the ordinary estimates.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All the money to be paid under a contract, must be paid on the certificate of the Chief Engineer.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Fleming ceased to be Chief Engineer and could not certify. Mr. Schreiber was appointed Chief Engineer, but as he knew nothing of what was done beforehand, he could not well certify to Mr. Fleming's work. It was of great importance to have all these matters settled, and Mr. Shanly was specially appointed as a person in no way connected with the road or the contractors, and who had never been on the spot before in any special capacity, to go down and act in the capacity of Chief Engineer. My hon. friend asks how could Mr. Schreiber be the Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial and at the same time be occupied on the Pacific Railway. Mr. Schreiber is Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway. That is his permanent appointment. In consequence of his proved skill in expediting work, it was deemed by the Government of the greatest importance that the unfinished portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway under contract should be superintended by him, and he was sent there pro tem specially for the purpose of pressing on all the work under way at Red River. While absent, Mr. Archibald filled his place on the Intercolonial.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is an explanation never before given to the public. It was certainly understood by me, and I believe by the public generally, that Mr. Schreiber was Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway since Mr. Fleming was dismissed or left. I am not able to ascertain whether he was dismissed or left of his own accord. The hon. gentleman has not correctly stated the position of the Oakes-Murray matter that was before the Supreme Court. An interlocutory judgment was given by Chief Justice Fournier, and he committed to the registrar the duty of taking certain evidence. It was the duty of the registrar to have associates with him to ascertain what evidence was required, but at this stage of the proceeding the Government took the case out of the hands of the registrar and the Court, and gave it to Mr. Keefer to decide upon, without taking evidence at all from our own engineers. It is remarkable that in my time as Minister, this very claim was up before the Government. We had Mr. Fleming's and Mr. Brydges's report on it, and the very strongest possible reasons were given against the claims of these contractors. I forget precisely what amount was coming to them, but it was but a small trifle at any rate. My present impression is that they were overpaid. Mr. Keefer never called Mr. Schreiber or Mr. Fleming, who knew all about the contract, or Mr. Brydges, who was acting both as Commissioner and General Superintendent of the road; and, without the evidence of any of those parties, Mr. Keefer awarded a sum of over $100,000, and the Government paid it. I look upon the transaction as one of the most scandalous that has ever taken place within my knowledge. I charge no corruption against anyone, but simply state it is an exhibition of incapacity that has no parallel. What I fear in connection with the new appointment of Mr. Shanly is, that if entrusted with similar powers, he would exercise similar authority to that exercised by Mr. Keefer in the case mentioned. Other cases may have been taken out of the Court; and other cases may have been revived that were completely settled. Some, I know, that were completely settled have been revived, if the newspapers are correct—I do not know whether they are or not. I have asked for the information but have not got it. Surely it is most important to know whether the claims for millions that are made by certain contractors, are to be decided by Mr. Shanly, or whether cases that were closed by judicial or other proceedings are to be re-opened. I am sure the hon. Minister will see I am asking what is reasonable when I ask for this information.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman went out of the range of his discretion, and I think of his duty, when asking for this information, to use such strong language. How could it be a most scandalous thing for us to appoint an engineer of high standing, of certain honor, and perfectly disinterested, to examine into and report on a claim which the hon. gentleman says the registrar would have had to get an assessor to examine into? The registrar would have to get such a man as Mr. Shanly to act as assessor, because the registrar himself knows nothing about such matters. If there was an error it was simply in not having gone through the form of appointing Mr. Keefer as assessor. Mr. Keefer would then have handed his report to the registrar, who would have handed it to Judge Fournier, who would have ordered payment to be made. As to Mr. Shanly's duty, it is easily understood. Mr. Fleming has ceased to be Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial; Mr. Schreiber never was Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial, but Chief Engineer of the works of construction and manager of the road afterwards. That took up all his time, because there must be an officer holding the rank and position of Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway. It was thought that Mr. Shanly, being a disinterested party, and a competent engineer, in whom the public had confidence, should be gazetted and appointed Chief Engineer, in order to enquire into the contracts and wind them up, just as Mr. Fleming would have been obliged to do—in fact, to step into Mr. Fleming's shoes, and give the necessary certificates under which Government would be authorized to pay the money due. That is simply the way the matter stands. I am not at all aware there are any suits in Court, any petitions of right filed, which have been referred to Mr. Shanly; but I should not be surprised if that were the case. I do not, however, believe it is the case. I believe that whenever a party files a petition of right, he is left to his legal remedy. We considered in the other case that that arrangement was carried out, that the assessors found the Dominion owed so much, and the money was paid. I believe that Mr. Shanly is simply performing the duty that Mr. Fleming declined to perform since 1874, inasmuch as he considered he had ceased to be the Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I believe the right hon. gentleman has not stated the facts exactly. As I understand them, Mr. Fleming, who was really the Chief Engineer, had adjudicated upon all those cases, and acted as he thought right. But here is a gentleman who knew nothing of the work, authorized to give certificates that Mr. Fleming, who knew all about it, had refused to give.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On the ground that he was such Chief Engineer.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. But Mr. Fleming had decided the parties were entitled to nothing, that all those cases should be adjudicated upon. With regard to Murray and Oakes, the First Minister has not stated the facts correctly. That case had been brought before the Court, and Judge Fournier had taken the testimony in the ordinary course and then committed the case to the registrar to take certain evidence. At that stage of the proceedings, as I understand, the Government took the case out of the hands of the Court, and referred it to Mr. Keefer, and in this they say the decision of Mr. Keefer is absolutely conclusive and final. The First Minister, who knows the testimony taken before the Court, says the registrar is not a railway man. But the Judge is not a railway man; he can call in the aid of an assessor, however. He had a duty as an officer of the Court in the matter. But in this case the Court was seized of the case which the Judge had a right to determine. Mr. Keefer was appointed to deal with the case—a gentleman who had no responsibility to the Court, being an independent arbitrator. He adjudicated upon it without calling in the aid of the three men who knew all about it. No satisfactory explanation was ever given of the removal of this case from the Court, and its reference to a party whose award was to be final. So $100,000 was awarded, when Mr. Brydges, Mr. Fleming, and all the other competent authorities believed the parties were not entitled to a cent.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). It is manifestly inconvenient to have to discuss a matter of this kind over and over again. It was discussed last Session, when the claim of Oakes and Murray was brought up by the hon. member for Lambton.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No; there was a sort of intermittent talk upon it. I had intended to bring it up, but did not.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). There was a great deal of talk on it, and the facts were pretty fully ventilated. The suit was commenced by a petition of right, and evidence was taken, including that of Mr. Schreiber, if I recollect right, and that of Mr. Shanly and other witnesses the Government thought proper to produce before the Court, previous to the reference of the case to Mr. Keefer at all. After all the evidence was taken, and the question of law, the right to recover, had been determined by an interlocutory judgment of a Judge of the Supreme Court, the case was referred to Mr. Keefer to determine the amount due. One of the points taken in the discussion of this case in this House last winter was that the Court had held that the acts of the late Government and of its leader as Commissioner of Public Works at the time, had the effect of waiving the requirements of the Statute which required the production of the certificate of the Chief Engineer before a party could recover, the Court held it was waived by the action of the hon. member for Lambton, in directing a new survey. A new survey was ordered. But I agree that my hon. friend did only what was an act of duty and common justice to those litigants, irrespective entirely of their right to recover. The Judge characterized on that occasion the mode and manner in which employes of the Engineering Department—I do not refer to the Engineers, Mr. Schreiber or Mr. Fleming, who had to rely on their subordinates—perform their work, and as to the character, nature and quantity of the work done, and stated the reason why he had to refer the evidence to an expert or to the Registrar of the Court was, that these surveys were so totally unreliable it was impossible for him or any officer to determine the quantity of work done or the amount due. It will be remembered that the mode in which the monthly estimates were determined on more than one occasion was, by the superintending engineer rushing up the side of a hill, or jumping up a tree and estimating the quantity of work done by the number of men on the road. That was the character of the testimony on which the Judge held that my hon. friend was perfectly right on deciding upon a re-survey of the work. I believe it is undeniable that the best course was adopted in this case.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the Minister of Justice has hardly put the case as it should have been presented. The party in this case had gone to the Court, which had decided against him, I believe, on many points, but required evidence to be taken on some particular point. Under the Exchequer Court Act, it is competent to the Court to appoint any person as referee; and if the case had been one which, in the view of the Government and of the contractor, was fit to be referred to some person having special and technical knowledge, an application to the judicial tribunal before which that case was heard for the appointment of that person as the referee, instead of the registrar, would, no doubt, have been heard and acceded to. And the case would still have been in the Court and would have been dealt with according to legal principles; and the Crown would have had the security which was intended to be conferred upon it by the creation of the Exchequer Court and the giving of the right to try these cases. But instead of that, the hon. gentlemen, at the request of the other party—a suspicious thing—arranged an altogether different plan. They determined to take the matter out of a Court of Justice and put it into the hands of an arbitrator to dispose of, and the result was a verdict of $100,000 against the country. And hon. gentlemen having begun so well, went on. Mr. Marshall Wood, who had a verdict against him, so far as the case had gone in the Court, was not satisfied; he applied to the Government to take his case out of the Court; the Government compliantly agrees; they refer it to the arbitrators, who award $13,500 against the country—a verdict which, from my slight study of the facts, I believe is a wholly preposterous one—and the Government has to appeal to have the case brought back to the Court of Exchequer, and now they are trying to break down the award of the official arbitrators. This system of taking the trial of such cases out of a Court of Justice, constituted for the very purpose of trying them is most suspicious. It is calculated to lead to the gravest suspicion of those who take these cases out of Court, and bring them before the arbitrators; and what we had as a beginning last Session, is now going on in wholesale fashion. Look at page 95 of the report of the Minister of Railways, and see the class of cases which Mr. Shanly is called on to settle. Mr. Fleming was Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial up to 1874, during the whole period of its construction, and practically for some years afterwards; at any rate, so far as these contracts were concerned a number of them were completed within that period. Then Mr. Schreiber is appointed to the position—

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). No, no.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand so.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Mr. Schreiber is Chief Engineer of Railways in operation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Schreiber was never appointed Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial. He has never been appointed by Order in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not speaking of what he is now.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). He was never appointed Chief Engineer.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) says he appointed him. He, at any rate, was acting as Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial from 1874 out, and he knew what was done after Mr. Fleming ceased to be engineer, and knew when the claims of these arose. If we look at Appendix A we will find that the claims which Mr. Shanly is called upon to settle, are claims upon original contracts. Three of them were upon contracts executed in 1871; and ten or twelve in 1872, the remainder being in 1869 or 1870. These claims then arose more than ten years ago; certificates were refused to these parties obviously because if the Chief Engineer had certified that anything was due to them the Government would have paid the amount. The great bulk of the cases went into the Exchequer Court. Since the discussion began I have hurriedly marked some of those which by Mr. Shanly's own report appear to have gone into the Court; I have marked two, and there were probably many more. I find that the claims mentioned in this appendix represent an aggregate amount of three and a half million dollars, and almost all of them have been in the hands of the Court for decision. I notice among them the two Quebec cases which were under adjudication largely in my own time—I mean the case of Bertrand & Co., and that of Berlinguet & Co. One of these cases was tried at great length, and the decision arrived at was wholly adverse to the contractors; and the parties to the other cases seeing that it would be wholly useless to bring it, because, so far as I could judge, the same principle of decision would be applied in both cases, withdrew the case after it had been entered in Court. The amount involved in these cases was somewhere between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000, and yet, Sir, one of these very cases has been referred to the decision of Mr. Shanly for his report—the one which, though not formally decided, was virtually decided by the judgment in the other case. It is handed over to a man who confessedly had no personal knowledge of the matter as it was going on; he is brought fresh into the investigation of a transaction at a period more than ten years after the completion of the great bulk of the contract—an investigation free from the difficulty of being obliged to get the certificate of the engineer who did know, and who alone could know, the basis of the claim which is brought forward at this time of day. How is it possible to ascertain the expenses in connection with cuts or fills or embankments, when the work has been completed more than ten years? They are entering upon the region of conjecture and speculation with regard to the estimation of this work, in order to establish against this country a claim which was practically settled by the withdrawal of the other case on account of the decision which was given. And this is not a machinery to supply a defect which the contractors were entitled to have supplied, but to immerse this country in millions of dollars of expense which the country should not be called upon to pay.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). There are two points with regard to which the hon. gentleman has entirely misapprehended the facts. He says that the Oakes-Murray case was withdrawn from Court and left to arbitration. That is not the case. The matter was left to Mr. Keefer who was practically acquainted with the work, and fully competent to determine the only point left by the Court to be determined. It was a question as to an amount due under a certain state of facts found by the Court upon competent evidence, and it was thought unnecessary, after Mr. Keefer had fulfilled the duties assigned to him by the order of the Court, to incur the expense of putting the matter back into Court for further confirmation, after it had really decided the whole case. It was, therefore, decided that the finding of Mr. Keefer should be the finding of the Court. With regard to other cases, the hon. gentleman is equally under a misapprehension.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Who is that?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Those who are now seeking to establish claims for work done on the Intercolonial, which have been referred to by the hon. member for West Durham. If he will give me the names I will tell him those who have, so far as I understand it, endeavored to vindicate their right to recover in a court of justice. I do not say they had any right, or that they will now be entitled to recover. My hon. friend was wrong when he said that Mr. Shanly's certificate had any more effect than the certificate of any other engineer. Mr. Shanly has simply to enquire whether there is anything due to those people, and if he finds there is, he will say so, and it will be for the department to determine what shall be done. There will then be time enough for the hon. gentlemen opposite to impress upon the country that there was something wrong, some desire on the part of the Government to throw away public money. The time to do this will be when they find that the money is thrown away, and when they find a single instance where the Government have improperly, in consequence of any reports of Mr. Shanly, paid out any public money that should not have been paid. It will be for the department, as it was under the administration of the hon. gentlemen, to determine, on the report of the Chief Engineer, whether they will recognize any claim or not. If the Chief Engineer says there is no claim, then the parties can take their own course. If he says there is a claim, then it will be for the Government and the department to determine in what form, if any, that claim shall be disputed or further investigated. The difficulty is, as I understand it—and I do not think that my hon. friend will contradict me—that since Mr. Fleming ceased to be Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway in 1874, down to the time of Mr. Shanly's appointment, there was no officer qualified by law to give the certificate required by law, and therefore it was that the people who claimed, rightly or wrongly—I care not which—that they had an equitable claim against the Government for work done, were unable to get beyond the threshold of the Court. They were unable to go into an investigation of the justice of their claim, because the Courts held that they should first get a certificate of the Chief Engineer, and there was no Chief Engineer to give them a certificate. Mr. Schreiber was not appointed Chief Engineer he had no authority to give a certificate; and, if I am correctly informed, he always declined to give such certificate on the ground that he had no authority to do so. Mr. Fleming declined to do it, because he considered that he ceased to be Chief Engineer in 1874. Under the circumstances the Government properly, as I still think, in order to meet the just complaints of those who said they had claims, determined that a Chief Engineer should be appointed: a gentleman of high character and qualifications who should perform the functions of engineer that ought to have been performed many years ago. Now, I think on both sides the action of the Government was entirely right. I am ready, after reasonable notice, to meet an investigation into this matter. It is time enough that the department should be assailed for doing wrong when it is found that they have done wrong.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman seems to think it will be quite time for us to speak after the money is gone. I think it is better to speak before it goes, because I do not think we shall get it back again once it is gone. The hon. gentleman says there is a difficulty on account of Mr. Fleming's appointment to another office, and his ceasing to hold the office of Chief Engineer. I cannot speak from personal knowledge, but the hon. member for Lambton says that Mr. Schreiber became Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway after Mr. Fleming ceased to be such. But Mr. Fleming ceased to be such in 1874 only, and these claims, according to Mr. Shanley's report, arose from contracts completed, some in 1870, some in 1871, and some in 1872. They were completed more than two years before Mr. Fleming ceased to be Chief Engineer. Now, no reasonable man can suppose that the contractors would wait more than two years to ask Mr. Fleming for a certificate in order to get their money. Of course they asked for it beforehand, the difficulty always is that they are always asking for it beforehand, and the moment they found that Mr. Fleming refused to certify for more than he thought was due—

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). That is an assumption.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no doubt Mr. Fleming discharged his duty, and that during the two or three years after the completion of this work and when he was confessedly Chief Engineer, he did not decline to certify except for work which had not been done.

Mr. MACKENZIE. At any rate Mr. Fleming never did give an official certificate in some of these cases. I do not know what the hon. gentleman has been told, but if he is going to make an imputation against Mr. Fleming that for two or three years while he was engineer of the Intercolonial, he declined to deal with those cases of the contractors which came before him, then let us know it, and let us deal with that public servant as he deserves to be dealt with, severely, if indeed that was his course. But I do not believe that was his course. I was Minister during the time that most of these petitions of right were brought forward, and I never heard until to-day that there was a difficulty about getting certificates because there was no person competent to give them. I know that those contractors complain that Mr. Fleming or somebody else refused to give them certificates when they thought they ought to get them. But their complaint was of that nature, not of the nature which is now described. Of course, it would have been the duty of those contractors to represent that they were prevented from getting certificates which they ought to have got because there was no person competent to give them. Under that state of things it would have been the bounden duty of the Government to create an officer in order that the certificates might be given whenever they were due. But until to-day I never heard in this House, or out of it, as a Minister or as a member of Parliament, that this was a difficulty in the case. The difficulty always presented was, that there was a difference of opinion between the engineer acting for the country and the contractors acting for themselves, and the engineer thought that it was his duty not to give certificates which the contractors thought he ought to give. That difficulty we tried to solve, but we were unable to solve it in many cases. In some cases I believe it was held that certain proceedings which had been taken by the Government ought to enable the contractors to prosecute their claim in the absence of certificates, but in these cases in which the certificate was a preliminary essential to getting a claim there was no complaint that there had been the fault on the part of the Government in providing an officer. More than ten years have passed since some of those claims arose, and now we are asked to set aside the decisions of the Court on the plea that the contractors could not get certificates because there was no officer who was competent to give them, and this after a fresh man was brought in on purpose to give them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Since we have gone astray from the item under consideration we may as well have out this discussion. In the first place, the hon. gentleman says that he never heard before that there was a technical difficulty on account of their being no Engineer-in-Chief to sign certificates. In that case the hon. gentleman must have been absent from this House, because last Session the Minister of Railways stated in his place again and again that that was one of the technical difficulties.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I never heard him say so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has got a short memory, and if he will bring me the Hansard, I will undertake to find where the Minister of Railways stated that in his place. I think the hon. gentleman should admit that Mr. Fleming, as Chief Engineer, ought to know everything that was done, as long as he held that position, and therefore that his certificate was binding, so long as it was given while he held that position. Yet the moment he ceased to be Chief Engineer he was post officio, and his certificate was of no more value than would be the certificate of the hon. gentleman himself. I say that Mr. Schreiber never was appointed Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial under the Statute. The hon. member for Lambton, who was at the head of the department, asked him to act, and he did act, I suppose, as Chief Engineer, but he had no appointment under the Statute. Unless he was appointed according to law his certificate was of no more value than the certificate of Mr. Fleming after he resigned, and could not be received in evidence. Mr. Fleming had resigned, and therefore his certificate was of no value. Mr. Schreiber was not appointed, and therefore his certificate was of no value. And the contractor was asking for a certificate, and had a right to get a final certificate, either to say that there was a balance due him or the reverse. He never had a certificate; and the Government held, in the absence of the certificate of the Chief Engineer, that that technical objection, no matter what might be the justice and righteousness of the claim, was fatal to the claim. This whole proceeding was simply to get rid of the technical objection, and the appointment of Mr. Shanly, by Order in Council, to be Chief Engineer, that he might do that which had not been done before. The hon. gentleman's argument, if it amounts to anything, is to exact the pound of flesh, to declare that this country cannot afford to be honest, that it must take advantage of all technical objections, and no matter whether the contractor might be ruined by not having money for money's worth on his contract, yet the Government should simply say to the Court, that there is no certificate of the Chief Engineer, that they will not appoint one, and therefore the contractor cannot receive what is justly due. That is a dishonest and petty-fogging way of acting, one unworthy of a nation and of Canada; and I am quite sure the people of Canada will not thank hon. gentlemen opposite, or a Government, if they took advantage of every miserable technical objection in order to cheat contractors. That is the simple argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake). It is always said that a man has a very bad case if he dare not leave it to arbitration for settlement. I contend that the principle involved in the General Board of Works Act and the Railway Act, is that of arbitration, and an official court of arbitrators was established. And why? Because the Legislature thought, and thought justly, that the fairest way of deciding between the two departments and the contractors would be to leave it to a board of arbitrators, not bound by technical points. Sir, the hon. gentleman does not venture to say that the arbitrators appointed—either Mr. Frank Shanly or Mr. Keefer—were not men that any Government might justly select as arbitrators to decide between contractors and themselves. They are competent and honest men; engineers who know the value of work, the cost of construction, and who have been in the habit of dealing with contracts. What can a Government do more fair or honest than to take honest and competent men to decide between contractors and the Crown, and not insert technical objections to destroy the real, honest or asserted claim of men who, having a full confidence in the honesty of the Government, had involved themselves and their friends in contracts for large amounts, believing that they would be treated as one honest man would treat another honest man, and that technical objections would not be thrown in their faces in order to ruin them and save, out of the starving Treasury of the people of Canada, sums of money by filching them out of the pockets of contractors.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman should first have grossly misrepresented, as he has grossly misrepresented, what was stated on this side of the House, and afterwards applied grossly unparliamentary epithets to the proposal of a member of Parliament. The hon. gentleman is wholly wrong when he alleges that it was suggested from this side of the House that advantage should be taken of what he calls a technicality. Who framed those contracts for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway? Who caused to be inserted in the contracts a provision that no payment should be made unless the party obtained the Chief Engineer's certificate? Hon. gentlemen opposite. I say that clause which is inserted in these contracts is a wise and wholesome clause.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). It is the law; it is the Statute.

Mr. BLAKE. What is?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). That no money shall be paid except under the engineer's certificate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a clause in these contracts to that effect.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The signed contracts were framed on the Statute, but if there was no such clause, the law says so.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not talking of what would have happened if there had been no such contracts. The hon. gentlemen did not confine themselves to Executive action but invited legislative action in the same direction; and both in the Act of Parliament, and in the contracts, they provided that contractors should have no claim except they could produce the engineer's certificate. It only strengthens the case. Then the hon. gentlemen say we should not have demanded the certificate of the Chief Engineer. I say we should have done so. I say it was essential. It is a clause in all contracts I know of into which railway companies have entered, and it is one which is now inserted in all Government contracts. It is essential to the security of those who make the contract that they should have this power in their hands; so that, instead of a stranger who knows nothing about the work, who does not know what has been going on, and who has not seen the reports of engineers from day to day, and occasionally visited the work, being called in at the end of ten years to decide as to payments, an engineer will report, from his own knowledge, at the end of the time, or from time to time, what he deems under the contract is due to the contractors. If it had been the case that those unhappy contractors had come into Court and produced the certificate of Mr. Fleming dated after 1874, and the Crown had answered that Mr. Fleming resigned in 1874, and therefore his certificate was of no use; or if it had been the case that those unhappy contractors had come into Court in 1876-77, and produced the certificate of Mr. Shanly, the acting engineer of the Intercolonial, and the Crown had said that the certificate was of no use, because Mr. Shanly was not appointed under an Order in Council, and therefore was not technically Chief Engineer—then the First Minister's language, strong though the language was, would be applicable to the course of the Government, because they would have been taking advantage of a mere technical question as to the standing of the party when he was really and substantially Chief Engineer.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Government did that.

Mr. BLAKE. No. They did not take advantage of that in order to defeat some certificate made by either Mr. Fleming or Mr. Schreiber. It was because neither Mr. Fleming nor Mr. Schreiber could be brought to give a certificate to the party that there was no certificate.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). They ought to have been made to give it.

Mr. BLAKE. In the discharge of their duty they thought there was nothing due to these men.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The law does not require them to say so. All they have to decide is whether the work is properly done, and the Court decides the amount to be paid.

Mr. BLAKE. I am speaking of the railway contracts, which provide that the engineer's certificate is essential to success. The Government do not plead that the engineer's certificate was defective because of some technicality in his appointment, but they say: "You have not produced that substantial preliminary of success, the certificate of the engineer," and the contractors do not answer: "We cannot get the certificate, because there is no engineer." I have never heard such a plea set up until now. Their difficulty was they could not persuade the engineer to certify the sum which they said was due. The Courts decided against some of these claims, and it is now proposed in effect to override their decisions, and at this distance of time, when it is impossible rightly to estimate the value of the claims, when the recollection of the circumstances has largely faded from the minds of those who might give evidence, probably saddle this country with the payment of a large sum of money.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The hon. member for Lambton, in alluding to the Murray case, stated that the arbitrator to whom the case was referred decided without the evidence of the Government Engineer. The facts are simply these: The engineers were all examined before the Judge in the Court of Exchequer. The resident engineer was under examination and cross-examination for three or four days; the rod-men under him were examined; Mr. Schreiber, Mr. Fleming, and Mr. Brydges, were all examined and cross-examined at great length. The evidence of all these witnesses was taken down by a short-hand writer, and reported to the Court. It turned out in the evidence that Mr. Schreiber knew nothing at all about the work of construction, but based his report entirely upon the reports sent from time to time by the resident engineer. Mr. Brydges acknowledged that his report to the Minister was based upon the report of Mr. Schreiber, and that he knew nothing about the work of construction. So that everything depended on the knowledge of the resident engineer. When the arbitrator took the matter in hand, he had all that written evidence before him. But the evidence of Mr. Grant, as taken down, not being quite satisfactory, he examined Mr. Grant again—I presume he did not think it necessary to examine the others—and upon all the evidence he made his award.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Schreiber and Mr. Fleming were examined in the Court. Their evidence was unfavorable to the applicant.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They did not know anything about it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The fact is, the hon. gentleman was counsel for these parties, and he appears to be counsel still. He ought to remember that he is now a Minister of the Crown and a member of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The hon. gentleman has no right to lecture me in that style.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Well, some person must undertake the duty, and I will do it as pleasantly as possible. According to the hon. gentleman's statement, Mr. Grant, the only witness whose evidence appears to have told in favor of the contractor, was examined before Mr. Keefer. If the thing had been planned from first to last in order to get a verdict for the contractors, it could not have been done better. Now, why was the arbitrator not asked by the Government to invite both Chief Engineers to give evidence before him, as both Mr. Fleming and Mr. Schreiber were intimately acquainted with the work? I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say that Mr. Schreiber knew nothing about it. I am sure Mr. Schreiber will not say that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If you read Mr. Schreiber's evidence you will see that he did say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I will look at the evidence, but I know it is not the case. The hon. First Minister says we have got up a discussion not germane to the question before the Committee. I deny that entirely. I find by one of the returns brought down yesterday that one, Mr. Girouard, made a claim of $2,640 for sleepers which were not delivered at the place where he was required by his contract to deliver them. The claim was submitted to arbitrators, who decided by a vote of two to one against it, and the Government refused to pay the claim. This claim is now sent to Mr. Shanly, and he reports in favor of paying it. The head of the Government undertakes—I do not know why—to make a report on the subject, and he says, that because one of the arbitrators says the claim should be considered, and because Mr. Shanly is of the same opinion, therefore this man should be paid. The Government never got a dollar of value for that money; not a sleeper was delivered according to the contract. An hon. gentleman asks me who this Mr. Girouard is. It is stated that in the meantime he became a member of this House, and that after that the claim was considered and the money paid. The hon. gentleman says no money could be paid under the contract except by the certificate of the Chief Engineer. Can the hon. gentleman point out a single case where any person was not paid because there was no certificate? Every contractor was paid punctually upon the certificate of the engineer, and the engineer punctually gave a certificate if anything was due. But in this case not only was there nothing due, but there was something overpaid, and therefore, it was impossible to give a certificate. There was nothing to certify to. In the Starr case my impression is it was settled but reopened again by Mr. Shanly. If that is the case, it is another Girouard case, and equally indefensible in this House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The statement that I was counsel in the case is true, but immediately on entering the Government I gave the parties notice that I could not attend to their case any further. I have had nothing to do with it since.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did not say the hon. gentleman was counsel after he became a member of the Government. I said that by his warmth he seemed to be now acting on their behalf.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. Secretary of State has stated in his place these reports made by the engineer, Mr. Schreiber and by Mr. Brydges, were made on the statements of the resident engineer, and that the only knowledge they had was that communicated to them by the resident engineer. I understand the late Minister of Public Works to say that is not, and cannot be so. If the hon. gentleman will look at the judgment of Judge Fournier, before whom this case was tried in the Exchequer Court, he will find that the statement of the hon. Secretary of State is strictly accurate. He will find in that judgement a statement of the kind of survey, estimate or examination, that was made by Mr. Grant, resident engineer; he will find it was upon that very inefficient survey and on that alone that Mr. Schreiber made his report, and upon his report Mr. Brydges reported to the hon. Minister of Public Works. It is apparent, therefore, that the whole foundation of the judgment depended on this original examination made on the ground—and Mr. Grant excuses himself for having made it so imperfectly—of want of time, and the lack of ability of another gentleman who assisted him. It is, therefore, clear the statement of the hon. Secretary of State is correct, and that to have refused these gentlemen a new survey would have been to deprive them of what was justly due them. The hon. member for Lambton has, at great length, dwelt on the impropriety of the appointment of Mr. Frank Shanly. What are the facts with regard to that? Mr. Fleming ceased to be Engineer-in-Chief in 1874; from the moment he ceased to be Engineer-in-Chief he had no power to give the certificate, and without it the contractors could not recover their claims. If Mr. Schreiber was never appointed engineer by the late Government, it is for them to explain why there was no officer in a position to give the contractors a statement, not as to the amount due, but as to whether the work was completed or not. Mr. Fleming said he could not give that statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He never said anything of the kind.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am informed that he did, and he gave the reason I have given for saying so. At all events if he did not, the result was the same, for he had no power to give such a statement. Mr. Schreiber was never properly appointed to the position, so that these contractors having claims against the department were prevented from prosecuting their claims by this plea, which was placed on record in the Murray case: "You cannot go into Court because you have not the certificate of the engineer, and there is no engineer to give the certificate."

Mr. MACKENZIE. My hon. friend is mistaken. They were not deterred from going to Court. They were in Court, but the Government would not let them stay there.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Murray case was in the Court, but the others were not. It was in the Murray case that the plea was set up that, as no certificate was given, it was useless for the contractors to sue. The people do not want on such ground to turn a man out of Court. They are willing to do what is right and honest, and even at this late day are willing a person should be appointed—who ought to have been appointed when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office—to discharge the duty, under the Intercolonial Act, of giving the necessary certificate to enable those claims to be settled.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Every certificate was paid promptly by the Government during the five years of our Administration; no man went a day without payment for want of a certificate, and no case was kept out of Court on that ground. Such a contention is a mere quibble to cover the retreat of hon. gentlemen opposite when they found themselves in a false position. Let them point to a single case in which any man was refused money due.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Murray case.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The money was not due.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I will point to a case of a most grave character, that of a Mr. Jones and his partner, whose name I forget. The engineer gave a certificate that Mr. Jones was entitled to receive a certain sum. He thought the amount was not sufficient. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Mackenzie) would not pay him unless he accepted it in full of account. Mr. Jones commenced, by petition of right, an action in the Court of Exchequer. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court attended in Halifax to try the case. Mr. Bell, counsel for the Grand Trunk Railway Company, represented the Government as senior counsel. Instead of going into the whole case, such evidence was only taken as brought out the fact that no final certificate of the Engineer-in-Chief had been given. The plaintiff was consequently non-suited, and the non-suit was confirmed. He never got a dollar of money except by favor of the Government which agreed subsequently to give him what they had before, through their Commissioners, admitted he was entitled to receive; but he never had an opportunity to this day of determining, as he ought to have had, whether or not he was entitled to receive more than the Government offered him. This is a case in which I know, from personal investigation, a very serious and gross injustice was done to a very estimable and able contractor. He could not get beyond the threshold of a Court of Justice, even to enquire whether there was an amount due to him or not, because he was debarred by this clause which I will read to my hon. friend who should not persist in asserting facts, which I am quite sure he would not assert if he believed them to be incorrect, but which manifestly are incorrect. The clause is this: "No money shall be paid to any contractor"—and that is in the Statute with reference to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway—"until the Chief Engineer shall have certified that the work for and on account of which sum shall be claimed has been duly executed, and until the said certificate has been approved by the Commissioner." Under this Act it was necessary that the certificate of the engineer should be given and be approved by the Commissioners—a certificate not of the amount due but simply of the fact that the work was done. Then every subject of the realm could enter the Supreme Court, and by the aid of the law, ascertain whether the engineer who had calculated his work and the Commissioner who had affirmed it, made a proper calculation or not. I ask my hon. friend whether that is not common justice and common sense, and whether it would not be a violation of every principle of law as well as justice if it were otherwise. Of course, if a man makes a contract, as is often done, such as the member for West Durham referred to, that he shall be bound by the certificate of an engineer or of another party, he has a perfect right to do so, and has no reason to complain if he be prejudiced by that contract. But when the law says that the engineer shall give a certificate whether his work be done or not, and the engineer refuses to give it, and thus prevents the contractor going into Court, I wonder whether my hon. friend, if the case were left to him, as an arbitrator, would not say that such a condition of things was totally indefensible, and worked gross injury and injustice to the party who had a right to an investigation of the claim. The First Minister is entirely right—that when Mr. Fleming declined, as I know he did, to give absolutely any certificate as Chief Engineer after 1874, considering he had retired from that office—I need not tell the members for West Durham and Lambton that, no matter who appointed Mr. Schreiber, his appointment was not in the manner prescribed by the Statute, his certificate in a court of justice could not be received as evidence, but would have been utterly useless.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness). I wish to ask if the Government could not have waived the necessity of acting upon the certificate of the engineer, and gone on with the case?

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). Had we done so, we should have had the hon. gentlemen opposite howling at us for corruption. I thank the hon. gentleman for his suggestion, and hope he will induce his political friends in Opposition to favor our waiving the certificate of the Chief Engineer when it is thought injustice has been done the applicant.

Mr. MACDONNELL. I mean—could the Government not waive the matter of the irregularity of the appointment of the Chief Engineer, and if they would not give up such a power against the Government on that simple waiver, in order to bring the case to the regular Court, what would they now give up as against the Government for going further.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). The hon. member for Inverness is turning a very sharp corner. He says, in effect, it would not do to waive the certificate, but we could go round the corner and waive the fact that there was no engineer to give the certificate. This is quite as logical and consistent a view as those we have heard from the Opposition side all the afternoon. Every lawyer knows that no Judge would admit evidence unless we adopted the suggestion of the hon. member for Inverness, and authorize the Court to waive the certificate. I do not propose to run that risk. The remedy we are seeking to apply, by the appointment of Mr. Shanly, is not to give power to the arbitrator to pay any money, but to say whether the work has been done, and, if done, whether anything is due or not.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Minister of Justice has chosen a very unfortunate instance in order to prove his point. He says those parties were refused a certificate. But why? Because they refused to give a receipt.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I said so.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Commissioners, before I acceded to office at all, had acted upon that principle of having a complete settlement, and they required, in giving a final certificate, a receipt.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). On that point of policy I do not say a word. The hon. gentleman had a right to demand of a party to whom he paid, say $1,000, due by the Government, a receipt in full. That is not the point. My point is that Jones was non-suited, and could not go into Court, because he could not get a certificate at all. It is admitted he did his work, finished his contract. The Commissioner admits there was something due him, but because he could not produce a certificate to that effect he was non-suited.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman says in one breath that the claimant could not enter the Court, and in the next, that he was non-suited. That is a very remarkable statement. The parties could have produced the certificate of all the payments they obtained, had they chosen to call for them. On the question of the last certificate the evidence could have been given in Court, if called for, that the Government offered to pay them a certain amount. The non-suiting was not in connection with the certificate at all, but was based upon other grounds.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I assure the hon. gentleman it was—I know it.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think we have to enquire here not merely whether the Government have any right to cheat or defraud any gentleman who held a contract on the Intercolonial, but whether they have any right to cheat or defraud the people, in order to award such friends of theirs as have contracts on that road, the most unjust, unfounded and unwarrantable claims arising out of such contracts. The effort of hon. gentlemen on the Ministerial side, is to create the impression that the payment of this extraordinary claim was refused only because there was no Chief Engineer to certify it. Let them name a single instance in which Mr. Fleming refused to any of those contractors, in the proper time, a certificate of his case because he had ceased to be Chief Engineer. The majority of the claims arose before he ceased to be Chief Engineer, one, two or three years before. Is it to be supposed the Government should have retained a gentleman perpetually in office as Chief Engineer until all such claims were settled? How long should they have retained him for this purpose? Periodical reports were made to the Government in all those cases, the kind and quantity of work done was reported from time to time—though not with strict accuracy, perhaps—and final surveys were made. The report of the Chief Engineer upon those returns has, to a certain extent, and almost within the meaning of the Act, been a certificate as to the amount of work to be done. In nearly all those cases the claims are not for work done within the specifications of the contract, but for extras, for work done in addition to what was supposed to be the original amount of the contract. In these cases the engineer cannot have certified to the amount which the parties were entitled to receive, else no doubt every cent of that amount would have been paid. The Chief Engineer, after those men began to press their claims, refused to give them such a certificate as they would accept; they would not accept as payment in full the amount he allowed, and now, after the lapse of eight or ten years, we have another gentleman appointed to go over the work and settle the claims, after the embankments have shrunk, after the whole face and character of the work has changed. We have seen, from the case mentioned by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), how ready that gentleman is to certify that the claims are well founded, which on their face have no foundation in the contract. What object is this investigation intended to serve? Nothing has been said to justify in any way the conduct of the Government in taking the Murray-Oakes case out of Court. The Judge of the Court had in his hands the power of determining the value of evidence submitted to him; his judgment was to be affected entirely by the value of that evidence, and the country will not believe that there are even the features of probability in the statement that the case should be taken out of Court and placed in the hands of an arbitrator. The country will not condemn the action of the Government on the technical ground that these gentlemen applied for a certificate which was refused, and that the matter should be reopened on that ground ten years after the work was done. The matter stands fairly and fully before the public that Oakes and Murray got $100,000 which Mr. Fleming refused to give them, and which they were not entitled to receive. If the Government had brought down the return bearing upon this subject, for which I moved some weeks ago, we should be in a better position to discuss the matter; and I fear that when it is brought down, it will show that there are a great many cases just as bad as those which have been referred to.

Mr. PLUMB. With regard to the Oakes-Murray case I have a short letter, which, as it is important in its relation to the matter under discussion, the House will, perhaps, permit me to read. The hon. member for Lambton began his violent attack upon the Government by referring to the Oakes-Murray case; the hon. member who has just sat down referred to it, and it has been stated that it was shameful and infamous to refer the matter to Mr. Keefer. In fact, it has been treated as if it was a scandalous proceeding and a disgrace to any Government. Mr. A. F. McIntyre, a political friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, was the counsel for the Crown in that case, and I will read a letter which was sent to him by Mr. Lash, the Deputy Minister of Justice, and Mr. McIntyre's reply:

"Murray vs. the Queen.

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,

"OTTAWA, 15th April, 1879.

"SIR,—I find it laid down in Morse, on Arbitration and Award, that an agreement simply that the award shall be final and conclusive, is powerless to take away the right to assail its validity in the ordinary way and upon the ordinary ground. The awards are commonly used to express the intention of the parties to be bound by the award, but they are not of greater force. The submission in this case contains the usual clause that the award is to be final and nothing more; therefore, the case comes within the rule above defined. As you acted as counsel for the Crown in the case, and are familiar with the proceedings before the Arbitrator and the evidence, I have the honor to request your opinion upon the award, and whether it could be successfully moved against.

"I am, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

(Signed) "Z. A. LASH,

Deputy Minister of Justice."

"A. F. McINTYRE, Esq, Ottawa."

Mr. McIntyre, who was legal solicitor to the Government of the hon. member for Lambton, replies as follows:—

Murray vs. Regina.

"OTTAWA, 26th April, 1879.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your letter requesting my opinion upon the award of Mr. Samuel Keefer in this matter, and whether it could be successfully moved against, I beg to say that, without considering any technical difficulties in consequence of the matter referred being a claim against Her Majesty, but considering the award as if it had been in the case of a claim between a subject and a subject, I am of opinion that any application to set aside the award would be unsuccessful. The proceedings before the arbitrator were regularly conducted, the award regularly made, and the evidence before him, in my opinion, fully warranted his finding.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Yours very truly,

"A. F. McINTYRE.

"Z. A. LASH, Deputy Minister of Justice, Ottawa."

Mr. ANGLIN. That was all the evidence produced, but the most important evidence was not put before the arbitrator at all.

Mr. PLUMB. Why did not Mr. McIntyre produce it?

Mr. ANGLIN. I do not know whether he was permitted to do so. A solicitor conducting a case has to be guided by the wishes of his clients for the time being, and the Government were his clients at the time. Then he chose to put in Mr. Fleming's evidence, but the evidence Mr. Fleming gave before the Court was not such evidence as the arbitrator ought to have been satisfied with regarding matters of detail, concerning quantity, measurement, &c. The evidence of Mr. Schreiber before the Court ought not to have been sufficient—even for decency's sake, even for appearance, even ostensibly to protect the hon. gentlemen on the other side from the imputation of having used this machinery for the purpose of putting a large sum of money into the pockets of their political friends, and of gentlemen who have been the clients of some of them. Then, Sir, that was not all the evidence. It may be, according to Mr. McIntyre's statement, that the matter was investigated fairly, that the arbitrator heard all the evidence fairly, and that the decision was correct. But we complain with regard to the arbitration, in the first place that it never should have been referred to arbitration at all, that it should not have been taken out of the hands of the Court established specially for the purpose of determining just such cases, and that after having been taken out of the hands of the Court and submitted to an arbitrator appointed by the Government, we contend that all the evidence bearing upon the case, and all the witnesses who could give any evidence that would guide the arbitrator in coming to a fair and equitable decision, should have been called, and their evidence submitted to him, and that was not done in this case.

Mr. McDONALD (Picton). I have only one observation to make upon the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. Some persons, as you may have observed, are very often nothing if they are not insolent or impertinent, and there is no man to whom that observation applies with more truth than to the hon. gentleman from Gloucester (Mr. Anglin). He has taken the liberty to insinuate that because I, a member of the Government, happened to be the counsel of one of those parties, antecedent to my entering the Government, that would operate upon my mind in discussing this question. All I have got to say is, that the insinuation, the conception of such an idea, is entirely worthy of the hon. gentleman's mind, entirely worthy of his character as it is understood and known in this country. If I thought that any such insinuation could be believed of me anywhere, I do not know of any man in this country from whom I should receive it with more contempt than from the hon. gentleman himself. An hon. gentleman who endeavors to impeach the honor of another in this House ought to come with a better record than the hon. member for Gloucester. When I stand in this House convicted by the representatives of the people of this country as a foul slanderer and liar, then I can understand being impeached. I can understand an insinuation coming from anybody, but certainly not from the man thus characterized by the assembled representatives of the people. Not only does he stand to-day before the people of the Dominion of Canada thus branded, but he never dared, with a majority at his back, who were willing to sustain him in more ways than one, to ask even that majority of his friends to wipe out the foul stain which is so recorded as the opinion of the people of Canada of that hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman said that these people were political friends of ours. All I can say is that if any member of that firm is a political friend of any member of this party, I am not aware of the fact. On the contrary, I know that they were the strongest political opponents of our friends in Nova Scotia at that date, and I suppose they retain the same opinion still. I do not intend to follow up this discussion, but I will not sit in my seat, here or elsewhere, and allow that hon.

Mr. PLUMB.

gentleman, or any other man living, to make such an insinuation; particularly when my hon. friend from Lambton will recollect that in the discussion two years ago I stated before this House that being counsel for one of these people before I came into the Government I declined to take part in the investigation. All the advice given to the department was given by my able friend Mr. Lash, Deputy Minister of Justice. All the legal control was exercised by him; the counsel, Mr. McIntyre, whose letter was just read, was appointed by my hon. friend for Lambton, and had charge of this case when I came into the department. Instead of removing him I told him to go on and finish the work he had undertaken; and I presume a man in whom my hon. friend had confidence enough to entrust him with this case, would be equally as honest while doing it for this Government as for the former Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not think the hon. gentleman was warranted in speaking with so much warmth. As I understood my hon. friend for Gloucester, he said that it would have been better for the Government themselves, considering that some of them were counsel for these parties, that such a course should have been adopted as would have shown that the Government exercised no pressure in the matter.

Mr. BOWELL. He said they took the action in order that they might put money into their own pockets.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did not hear that. At all events, I am giving my recollection of what he said as well as I can. The hon. gentleman refers to the vote—which I opposed, and, therefore, did not consider a vote—which affixed, as he says, a foul stain upon the hon. member for Gloucester. I would be sorry, indeed, to consider that any vote a majority in this House might pass upon one of their opponents, could be considered in that light. The hon. gentleman also said that he was surprised the hon. member for Gloucester and his friends did not wipe out that stain when they had the power. If it was a stain at all, which I deny, I think it was sufficiently wiped out when my hon. friend was elected Speaker of the last Parliament by acclamation. I could not imagine anything more conclusive than that election in favor of the character and reputation of my hon. friend. I desire to say one word to the hon. the First Minister. In a letter of his which I find in this return, he says: "That, as one of the arbitrators decided in favor of Mr. Girouard being paid for the sleepers, Mr. Shanly agreed that he should be paid." It happens that no such transaction took place. I have the papers here. There is a decision of the Chairman of the Board of Arbitrators, Mr. Cowan, against Mr. Girouard's claim, but there is no decision in favor of his claim from anybody. The hon. gentleman was entirely wrong in his version of the facts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is an instance of the inconvenience of having this matter sprung upon us in this way. The hon. member knows perfectly well, and I remember it was my view of the case, that an injustice had been done by an officer of the railway in order to cover his own error in this case. That is my opinion. However, I will look over the papers, and I will be glad to discuss the question with the hon. gentlemen when we come to the railway estimates.

Mr. ANGLIN. Since the first Session of the present Parliament I believe that we have listened to nothing so violent, so unparliamentary, so coarse, or so unprovoked, as the language used by the Minister of Justice. I did not call the hon. gentleman to order, because I do not at all care what he says of me. His position and mine in the country are both pretty well understood, and let me say that what he regards as a malicious, foul and false libel, is one of the things which I am most proud of. I may say that I was the author of that article, and

I only regret that the whole article did not appear in the journals. In that article I anticipated the verdict of this whole country by a few weeks; and instead of my being relegated to obscurity and banished from the House as a foul and false slanderer, I think the hon. gentleman himself disappeared a few weeks afterwards; and the people of Nova Scotia said of him very much like what he said of the writer of that article, only in another way. Still, I think it is as well to let bygones be bygones. I am not ashamed of anything I have said inside or outside of this House. At present we are speaking of another matter altogether, and I did not insinuate that the members of the Government attempted or desired to put any portion of this money into their pockets. What I did say was that even out of regard to their own reputation, some of them having been engaged as counsel in this case, they should, if they decided to take the case out of the competence of the Court, have taken particular care that every tittle of evidence bearing on the case was submitted to the arbitrator. I do not think there was anything in that to provoke such a display of wrath and indignation and wild fury as that which we have witnessed. The fact that it roused the hon. gentleman to such a pitch of fury will, perhaps, be regarded as evidence sufficient to warrant strong suspicions. Allow me to say that, although he has washed his hands of the case, rumor says that his law partner continued to be the agent or counsel for some of the parties. The fact that he so far forgot his position as Minister of Justice and as a member of this House, is evidence that he must have been touched very severely.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What course do the Government propose to take in regard to the cases referred to Mr. Shanly? If he reports in favor of any of them, do they propose to pay?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government reserve to themselves full right to dissent from Mr. Shanly's decision.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there any appropriation in these items which is applicable to any sum of money awarded by Mr. Shanly?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it is not intended to pay any awards before next Session?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are no means voted to pay, and after this conversation I take it there can be no warrant.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have witnessed cases in which money has been paid on Mr. Shanly's recommendation already. Mr. Girouard's claim was paid by special warrant.

Mr. BLAKE. But my hon. friend will see that that is exceptional. Mr. Girouard is a member of Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that very fact might induce the hon. gentleman to wait for a full discussion of the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is the intention of the Government with regard to the capital account on the Intercolonial Railway? I think the cost of these flour sheds, elevators and similar works, after the completion of the railway, should be charged not to capital, but to revenue.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Government have not so regarded them. We have thought it fair to charge the cost of wharves and important stations, buildings, for instance, to capital.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am very sorry that is the decision of the Government, because we shall never know what the railway earns or costs. I think the ground the late Government took was the correct ground, that after the road was fairly finished for business, everything should be charged to revenue. I think it is a great mistake to be accumulating the debt of the country in this indirect manner, and in opposition, in my opinion, to all sound principle.

73. Construction of wharf and elevator, Halifax terminus.....$130,000 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the amount required for wharfage, and what for the elevator, and what is the purpose sought to be attained by this vote?

Mr. POPE (Compton). The object of this vote is to induce, if possible, the shipping of grain from Halifax. The amount for the elevator, which will have 250,000 bushels capacity, is estimated at 20 cents a bushel or $50,000; the foundation for the elevator is estimated to cost $10,000, and the wharf $70,000, or a total of $130,000. My hon. friend will admit that, so far as this item is concerned, it ought to be charged to capital account. The elevator is really necessary to develop the grain shipment trade of Halifax. The experiment as made this year in shipping grain from that port was not on a scale sufficient to establish what the result will be. Owing to the improvement in distance and the decrease in expenditure of running the road, we are confident that next year it will pay expenses. The development of this trade is of the utmost importance.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What are the results of the experiment of last year?

Mr. POPE (Compton). As far as it went it was a success. It was not carried on extensively because the season was not propitious on account of the heavy snows.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us the amount of expenditure and other items? What did each train cost?

Mr. POPE (Compton). In itself the freight would not amount to very much, but it is of the utmost importance we should get all the traffic we can. We are obliged to have the engines and extra freight can be drawn at a low rate. We must reach out in every direction for trade, and this is one among others.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the freight per bushel?

Mr. POPE (Compton). Thirty cents per quarter.

Mr. ANGLIN. There is no doubt we should do everything in our power to procure freight for the Intercolonial, and we ought to use the Intercolonial in such a way as to promote the trade of our frontier ports, and encourage trade through Halifax. People may find it difficult in the infancy of trade to make all the necessary provisions to start an enterprise, but the Government in such cases, may take up the project if they can satisfy the people there is a fair prospect of success. I trust that next year the hon. Minister will be able to congratulate the House on the success of the speculation, and should it prove successful, the people of St. John will expect like treatment.

Resolution 72, ordered to be reported.

AFTER RECESS.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 18) to amend the Act incorporating the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company.—(Mr. Boulton.)

Bill (No. 41) to incorporate the Hull Mines Railway Company.—(Mr. Cameron, Huron.)

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill was introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 87) respecting Naturalization and Aliens (from the Senate).—(Mr. Langevin.)

THE CREDIT FONCIER OF THE DOMINION.

Mr. IVES moved the third reading of Bill (No. 32) to incorporate the Credit Foncier of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. McCUAIG moved in amendment:—

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to strike out from clause 60 the words: "Except in the provinces and territories west of the Province of Ontario, where interest at the rate of 7 per cent. may be charged;" and from sub-section 3 of the 61st clause, the words "Except in the provinces and territories west of the Province of Ontario, where it shall not exceed 7 per cent. per annum in all."

He said: I cannot see why the rate of 6 per cent. should be limited to the older Provinces, including Quebec and Ontario, and 7 per cent. charged in the North-West Territory. I think the people of those Territories are not as able as the people of Quebec and Ontario, to pay even 6 per cent., and I do not see why an exception should be made to their injury. I am afraid if 7 per cent. be allowed, and the probabilities are, that large sums will be taken from the older Provinces and invested in wild lands in the North-West, which the Bill permits. Thus large blocks of land would be taken up and held for years, as were the lands of the Canada Company in Ontario, in a manner injurious to the country.

Mr. IVES. The Bill fixes the rate of interest at 6 per cent. in the older Provinces of the Dominion. The Committee amended the original Bill by making a distinction as regards the region west of Ontario, for this reason: Several members had said, and more particularly the representatives of those western Provinces, that there was a very great fear that if any less rate than 7 per cent. were fixed, those Provinces would not be able to receive the advantage of the measure, because it is well known that loans in this new country must be attended with much larger risks than loans in the older Provinces, and the expenses of management and valuation must also be much larger than those in the older Provinces; that, in fact, if the Bill passed amended, as proposed by the member for Prince Edward County, the result would be that the newer Provinces would not receive the benefits of the measure at all. I have been informed by the member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) that the lowest rate charged in Manitoba upon the very best of real estate is 9 per cent., whereas the rate fixed by the Bill is but 7 per cent. I fear there will be very little money invested by this company in Manitoba or the North-West Territories, unless the clause, as amended by the Committee, be passed. I had supposed, from the remarks of the mover of this amendment, last Session, in the discussion of Mr. Orton's Bill, that he was very much in favor of cheap money and cheap interest; but I was surprised to find him strenuously opposing this Bill all through its stages. It looks very much as if the present amendment were directed with the object of preventing the investment of capital in the North-West Territory. As to the fear of the company acquiring large amounts of land in the North-West, it is impracticable. They cannot hold lands except for the purpose of their offices—they can hold only a limited amount in any place. The House will do well not to accept this amendment.

Mr. BUNSTER. Will this extra one per cent. for the North-West cover the exchange between the eastern and western Provinces? I presume that is its intention.

Mr. IVES. The total cost under the Bill to the person borrowing in British Columbia would be 7 per cent., Mr. ANGLIN.

and the company would be obliged to pay their own exchange.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. COURSOL moved in amendment:—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months.

He said: When this Bill was discussed in Committee I urged that it was an unconstitutional measure, inasmuch as it encroached upon the powers of the Local Legislature, and I quoted from the speech of Lord Carnarvon in the House of Lords, and cited the opinion of Chief Justice Dorion in support of that view. I am convinced that although this Bill may pass, the day will come when the protection which I have endeavored to invoke in behalf of the Provincial Legislature will be recognised. I wish to read the words of the British North America Act, which bears upon this question. Speaking of the powers to be exercised by the Local Legislatures, it says:

"In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say:

- "11. The incorporation of companies with provincial objects.
- "12. The solemnization of marriage in the Province.
- "13. Property and civil rights in the Province."

It will not, I think, be contended for a moment that there is nothing in this Bill affecting property and civil rights, and it is equally clear that matters of that kind come within the powers of the Local Legislatures. The very name of the Bill indicates that it is based on mortgages, and those mortgages will, of course, be upon lands in the different Provinces. To me it is perfectly clear that the Bill interferes with the rights of the Provinces; indeed, I have not heard anything advanced in the debate in the direction of proving that this is not the case. I may say en passant that I am moved by no feeling of hostility to the measure; on the contrary, I have stated that I regard with pleasure the multiplication of these landed companies, as they will prove of benefit to the people. But as a member of this House I am bound, to the best of my ability, to act as a guardian of those powers which the Confederation Act conferred upon the respective legislative bodies of this Dominion. I know that no longer ago than yesterday it was stated in a Court of Justice by a gentleman whose reputation as a barrister, statesman and orator is known all over this land, that the powers of the Local Legislatures were very small. That may be, but whatever those powers may be—whether they are small or great—it is our duty to respect them. The granting of these powers was one of the purposes of the Confederation Act; and what would be the use of conferring those powers if they are not to be exercised, if they are to be interfered with on every occasion; any legislation which is passed contrary to the provisions of the Imperial Act, either by this Parliament or by any of the Local Legislatures can have no form or effect, and is liable to be annulled. As there are some hon. gentlemen present who were not in the House when the Bill was discussed in Committee, I shall read again an extract from the judgment of Sir A. A. Dorion upon a case relating to the liquidation of a building company:

"The judgment has been rendered and the appeal taken since the passing of these two Statutes, and since the proceedings of the society to wind up their affairs have been ratified by the Quebec Legislature. We cannot agree with the Court below that the Dominion Parliament had the right to pass the Act 24 Vict., Chap. 48. This Act is not in the nature of an insolvency law, for it is intended to apply to all building societies, whether solvent or not. It is, therefore, essentially an Act affecting civil rights, which, under the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, comes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Local or Provincial Legislatures."

Now, the object of this Bill is to empower a company to borrow and loan money to buy bonds and do a general financial business of that kind. It is to have the right to loan money on real estate. The laws relating to mortgages are subject to the laws relating to the lands of a Province, and it would be idle to say that this Parliament had the power to authorize a joint stock company to borrow money and to mortgage the property in one of the Provinces without the consent of that Province. A private individual may do so; he may place his funds in any Province, buy real estate and accept mortgages as a private individual. That is his right as a citizen of the Dominion. But this Parliament has no right to incorporate a number of individuals, with power to mortgage and accept mortgages on real estates in the several Provinces. It may be said that this question does not affect the country at large. It may be said that it is in the interests of the people that societies should be incorporated, composed of capitalists in Europe or in this country, with power to borrow and lend on real estates, and to do all kinds of business except the banking business. I admit the conveniences that such a society would bring us, but can we legally incorporate it? I am surprised to see the Credit Foncier Franco-Canadien come before this House at all. It is all very well for the promoter of this Bill to claim the same privilege here that he can have in the Local Legislatures. But let him go to the Legislatures of the several Provinces, and he will get the same powers that he asks here and will not be violating the Constitution. I have made these few remarks with the full conviction that I am right. If this House is going to put on the Statute-book an Act that will violate the terms of the Confederation Act, and encroach upon the powers of the Local Legislatures, then it will no longer be necessary for any one to go to the Local Legislatures to obtain a charter. By coming to this House they can obtain all the privileges which any Local Legislature can give them. I say if we are to adopt this principle let it be known, and let the Confederation Act be torn to pieces, for in that case it will not be worth the paper on which it is written. I say we have no right to pass this Bill; we have no right to erase a word of the Federal Constitution without the sanction of the Local Legislatures. I shall leave the matter in the hands of the House and abide by its decision.

Mr. OUIMET. This is a very complicated question, and I think it deserves some attention from this House. Especially does it deserve some treatment from the authorities in this House. For my own part, I have strong doubts upon the matter. Although I think this Parliament has authority to incorporate a company like this, with power to raise money in foreign markets, to issue debentures, to lend money throughout the Dominion, I think it is not so clear that we may empower this company to lend money on mortgages and then to sell these mortgages, and thus make them permanent in other countries. It is worth while to discuss the question whether the creation of societies of this kind should not be left entirely to the Local Legislatures. Of course, it is decided that we have a right to incorporate this company with larger powers that can only be conferred by this House. We might say at the same time that we can confer minor powers upon it, giving it authority to lend money on mortgages, and thus legislate within the jurisdiction of the Provinces. As for myself, not being ready to discuss such a complicated question, and not being responsible for the decisions of this House on such important matters, I would be happy to hear the opinions of the authorities of the House upon this matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So far as I understand the competency of this Parliament to pass this Act, I have no doubt about it myself in the world. I think it is a great advantage that we should have as many companies lending money as possible. The more money that comes in the greater will be the reduction of interest. We all know that in consequence of the number of loan and trust companies that have been established, the rate of interest has fallen gradually from ten per cent., till now the companies are very glad to lend at six per cent. The more we have the better. I am especially glad to see that Canada stands so well in the world, and that French capitalists are induced to invest their money in this country. I think it would be a great mistake if by any Act of this Legislature we should check the current of French capital coming this way. When we have investments from France and Germany we have thereby increased intercourse and increased commerce with them. It also increases our chances of emigration from those countries. I really do hope that all these institutions will be encouraged as much as possible. The names I know in this company are first-class, and I have no doubt some of the corporators are themselves connected with the Pacific Syndicate, and I know that they will assist greatly in distributing money in the North-West, and thus assist in the development of that country. I hope that this measure will get the support of this House.

Mr. BLAKE. The considerations to which the hon. gentleman has latterly alluded, however important they are as to the expediency of this measure, do not at all touch the question to which the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Coursol) and the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) have directed their attention. I intend to vote against the motion of the hon. member for Montreal, and I wish to say in a word why I entertain very considerable doubt as to many of the provisions of this Bill being within the competence of this Parliament. But that question was raised and decided, as far as this Legislature could decide it, adversely to that view many years ago, when it legislated in regard to building societies. Since that time we have proceeded in an unvarying course by assuming this power. We have on the Statute-book a general Act containing a series of clauses for the formation of loan companies for the purpose of lending money on real estate. We have acted invariably for many years on the assumption that we had this power, and I believe it is the proper course for us until there shall be a decision of the Supreme Court, at all events, to continue to assume that we have that power upon which we have been acting, and on the faith of which we have granted many charters.

Mr. McCUAIG. Will not the expression of doubt affect the ability of the company to raise money in France and England?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They apply for the Bill, and if they cannot raise money, that is the end of it.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I do not intend to support the motion of the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Coursol). I did not hear the opening portion of his remarks, but I understand the question he has raised. While I agree, as regards one or two of the clauses of the Bill, with the doubt expressed by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), yet it seems to me that inasmuch as this Parliament has exclusive jurisdiction and power over the subject of interest, and this is a company for the purpose of lending money for the interest which is to be earned by the loan, the House has authority to deal with the whole subject. Of course, if the Bill is not constitutional, the question may be determined by the courts of law, and I have no doubt it will be raised if legal gentlemen advise that such a doubt deserves consideration. But the powers of the two legislative bodies will be found to be thus distributed: With respect to the incidents and conditions of the mortgage they will be found to be regulated by local laws. As to the manner in which the mortgage has to be drawn up for registration, and the effect of its various provisions, the company must submit in each Province to local laws: But without respect to the power of the corporation to carry on business over the whole Dominion, and as to its being a corporate body having a corporate existence, it will stand in the same position as individuals who should make contracts in the United States or France; the company would enforce their agreements according to the laws of the country or Province in which they were made—the lex loci contractus—wherever that might happen to be. I feel no apprehension or doubt as to the competency of the Dominion Parliament to pass an Act of incorporation of the kind, except in respect to two or three clauses that might be omitted. The hon. member made a reference with respect to my desiring to diminish the powers of Local Legislatures. No man will stand up more firmly for the true constitutional and legal powers and functions of Local Legislatures than I will do; but while that is my feeling I am not disposed to grant them more than the Constitution gives them.

Mr. PLUMB. I have endeavored, during the short time I have been in Parliament, to advocate a uniform system for Bills of this character. This Bill is at variance with such a proposal, and I have on that ground some objection to it; but I have no objection to it on the ground stated by the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Coursol), inasmuch as the Committee decided it was desirable to open an avenue for the introduction of foreign capital from a different quarter to any from which we have yet received supplies. I am very willing to allow the experiment to be tried. It was objectionable to have the time of the Committee taken up with passing a set of laws and special clauses which has not been contained in any Bill which has passed through the Committee since I have been a member of the House. I have no doubt whatever that the Dominion Parliament is perfectly competent to pass laws for the establishment of institutions of this kind for general purposes. I am aware, from my personal knowledge, that these loan companies have largely reduced the rate of interest in Canada, and that from the introduction of foreign capital through the intervention of those companies, interest has fallen from eight, nine or ten per cent. to six per cent., and we can do nothing that will further the interest of borrowers more than, within reasonable limits, granting charters of this kind. I do not think this particular kind of legislation, in respect to this Bill, should establish a general precedent, and while I will vote for the adoption of the measure, I wish to be distinctly understood, that in my opinion we should not encumber our Statute-book with this kind of legislation which, for some reason best known to promoters, they desire to obtain. It is objected to in many ways, not as a matter of principle, but as a matter of detail.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I merely rise to say that, as a member of this Parliament, I doubt whether any of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to the amendment of the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Coursol) have placed the claims and rights of this Parliament sufficiently high. If we are seized of the subject-matter over which we are legislating, it has always seemed to me that we are seized of the power to legislate on all matters necessarily incident to that subject-matter. I am not prepared to concede that we have to render our legislation here subject or subservient to limitations which may be imposed by the several Provinces in respect to that subject. If we are seized of the power of incorporating companies for the purpose of lending money all over the Dominion, it has always appeared to me that we are seized of the power of giving companies so incorporated all incidents necessary to the exercise of the power given them. The granting of the greater power carries with it, I think, all the lesser powers necessary to the exercise of it. I do not think we are doing right by minimizing the power of Parliament as to debates any more than if we minimized its power as to its general jurisdiction. For these reasons I feel it my duty to vote against the amendment of the hon. member for Montreal, while I would be most reluctant to trench on the powers of

Mr. MACDOUGALL.

Local Legislatures or take from them any power properly given to them under the Confederation Act.

CREDIT FONCIER FRANCO-CANADIEN.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier), moved the third reading of Bill (No. 31) to enlarge and extend the powers of the Crédit Foncier Franco-Canadien.

Mr. IVES. With reference to the question as to the powers of Parliament to pass this Act, it strikes me that the very strongest position has not yet been taken. My hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Coursol) based his argument on the statement that this is a matter of property and civil rights in the Provinces; but I claim that this Bill in no way deals with property or civil rights in the Provinces. It is simply an Act to incorporate an association of gentlemen and to give them a limited liability, to act as a corporation for lending money within the Provinces, subject to provincial laws. It is, in a word, to enable these gentlemen as a company to do what they might do as partners or as individuals; to give them power to do business throughout the whole Dominion, to incorporate a company having Dominion and not Provincial objects. That being the case, I ask what provision in this Bill affects property or civil rights. Does it change the law as to the form of mortgages, as to registration, as to the rights of married women, as to minors or children, as to foreclosure, or proceeding to obtain payment? Not at all. It makes no change in any of the laws relating to property or civil rights. The decision as to building societies, rendered by the Court of Appeal in Montreal, has no reference to this Bill; it was a decision that the Act of this Parliament which provided that the property of citizens of the Province of Quebec could not be wound up according to the provisions of that Act, was an interference with civil rights. I most cordially support the motion for the third reading of this Bill.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPREME COURT APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 51) to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada. He said: Mr. Speaker, of all our institutions I believe there is none which excites a deeper interest than those relating to the administration of justice. All classes of men admit that these subjects should be treated upon sound and reasonable principles, free from passion, sympathy and prejudice, and I hope that the broad and liberal spirit which characterized the debate some two or three weeks ago on the judiciary system of the Province of Quebec will also be exhibited on the present occasion. There is no doubt there exists a great deal of dissatisfaction over the Supreme Court, which, in consequence of its high functions, should be above reproach, not only as to its personnel but as to its constitution or jurisdiction. This dissatisfaction has manifested itself at almost every Session of Parliament, not only during the present Parliament, but also I may say since the existence of that Court. At every Session we have seen Bills, not of the limited character of the one I have the honor to present this evening, but to abolish the Court entirely. This dissatisfaction does not seem to be limited to one Province or one section of the Dominion. It seems to come from all quarters, except perhaps the Maritime Provinces where that Court supplies the place of a Provincial Court of Appeal. In my Province this dissatisfaction amounts almost to a public sentiment of distrust. We feel that a Court composed of only two Judges out of six who are familiar with our system of jurisprudence, and who have the knowledge of French, necessary to become familiar with those laws—we feel, I say, that a Court so composed cannot give satisfaction to our population. We feel that decisions of our Provincial Courts by men regularly trained in the study and practice of our laws, cannot be fairly revised. Members of the Bar of Montreal, at a recent meeting, stated it was almost a slander on our laws, to say that members of the legal profession belonging to other Provinces were not in a position to understand those laws and expound their principles. I cannot accede to this opinion. To adhere to this opinion would be to reverse the policy of the statutory qualifications of Judges. A lawyer cannot be a Judge in our Province, unless he has been ten years standing at the Bar, and to be a member of that Bar it is not only necessary that he should pass through a certain course of classics, but it is also necessary to study those laws for three or four years. I have such a strong feeling, Mr. Speaker, on the subject, that I believe I would be unworthy of being a representative of the Province of Quebec if I did not call the special attention of this House to this important subject. I may say more, my conviction is so strong on the point that I feel almost determined to bring this Bill up every Session until redress is given to the Province of Quebec. The purpose of my Bill is not entirely to abolish the Court, as it has been the intention of other hon. members who have introduced Bills on the subject. I believe the Supreme Court is a necessary Court. It is an indispensable element to the working of our Federal system. I believe that it is necessary to establish a uniform jurisprudence in Constitutional questions. It is necessary there should be only one Court, and of course that must be established by the Federal or General Government. I believe also the Exchequer Court of Canada has rendered great service to the country in permitting citizens to bring suits against the Crown. I am not in a position to say as much, as far as the jurisdiction of the Court in election cases is concerned, although I must say election cases can hardly be referred to Provincial Courts. I have a very strong feeling in regard to entrusting our Judges with the power of determining election cases. I do not mean to say that we ought to go back to Parliamentary Committees. Far from it; but I believe we ought to have election Judges and that we should not entrust to ordinary Judges the decision of election cases, because nothing is more calculated to destroy the confidence of the public in the judiciary, Federal as well as provincial, as the decision of election cases by them. But beyond these Federal purposes and beyond these Federal objects, I believe that the Supreme Court is not only an injustice to my Province but also to other Provinces. To my Province, in consequence of the peculiar system of laws which prevails there, and to all Provinces, because in effect it places all provincial rights at the mercy of creatures of the central Government. We, the inhabitants of the Province of Quebec, cherish our laws; we have been brought up under them. We feel that our personal property and rights are perfectly safe under their operation. We are not willing to take the advice given the other evening by the hon. member for Halton, to change those laws for English laws or any other system of laws, although I may say we may borrow with great advantage from the other Provinces in matters of procedure. These laws our forefathers took with them from old France, not from the Provinces from which they migrated, but from the more polished centre of Paris, the vicomté and prevosté of Paris. They brought with them the Coutume de Paris, and all the laws of this great city suitable to a young colony. This Coutume survived the great revolution of 1793, and have been incorporated into the Code Napoleon, and in fact, into all the Codes of Europe, as being more apt to promote the progress and welfare of modern nations. These customs and laws our ancestors not only cherished, but also fought for on all occasions ever since this country fell to Great Britain by force of arms, on February 17th, 1763, a day which they looked upon as fatal to their institutions, their language, their religion and their civil laws, but a day, owing to the liberal generosity of the conquerors, we have to regard as not so unfortunate after all, so much so that a century after that conquest, one of their great sons, Sir E. P. Taché, then at the head of the Government of this country, said that the last shot for British supremacy on the continent of America would be fired by a French-Canadian. Ten or fifteen years after the cession, too much zeal induced the British representatives to introduce the laws of England as well in civil as in criminal cases, and that was done without the sanction or authority of the Imperial Parliament, and was consequently illegal. The little colony of New France, which numbered then only about 60,000 inhabitants—small in numbers and in influence—as nearly all the educated men of the colony had returned to France—but strong in its just cause, protested against this innovation. They invoked the principle of the law of nations, which says that in the case of a ceded country the laws of the conqueror do not pass to that country. Finally they sent a petition to the King of England in which they said :

“La conservation de nos anciennes lois, coutumes et privilèges, dans leur entier, et qui ne peuvent être changées, ni altérées sans détruire et renverser entièrement nos titres et nos fortunes, est une grâce et un acte de justice que nous espérons de la bonté de sa majesté.”

We all know that the prayer of those French-Canadians was then granted, and the Quebec Act was passed, securing to the inhabitants of the Province of Quebec the enjoyment, not only of their religion, but also of their laws in civil matters; and Lord North, who introduced this Bill, then said :

“It has been thought better calculated to secure the happiness of the Canadians, and more beneficial for all who live in the country, that they should have the civil law of Canada, and not that of England.”

Another danger was in store for the civil laws of the Province of Quebec. The public mind was agitated at the time. A new Constitution became necessary. The two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada were created, and another effort was made to substitute English law for the French civil law. But Lord Grenville then said, in the name of the Empire :

“It had been stated that the French inhabitants of Canada were so much attached to the prejudices of the Canadians, to their customs, laws and manners as to prefer them to the laws of England. He thought such an attachment, founded on reason, or something better than reason, in the best feelings of human heart.”

This noble language had its effect. The laws of the Province of Quebec were again saved. In 1828 a Bill was secretly introduced in the Imperial Parliament for the Union of the two Canadas. Messrs. Nelson and Papineau, at the request of the French inhabitants of Quebec, proceeded to England and presented an able memorial on the subject. Those patriots said :

“C'est un fait constant que non-seulement les lois qui régissent propriété et les droits civils dans les deux provinces, mais les coutumes, les habitudes, la religion et même les préjugés diffèrent essentiellement. Les habitants tiennent fortement à toutes ses choses, dont la jouissance leur a été solennellement garantie par la Grande Bretagne.”

We all know what followed. We are all familiar with the inflammatory debates which those French laws gave occasion to both at home and in this country, and which, with other dangerous elements, produced the unfortunate rebellion of 1837. In 1828 Mr. Huskisson said before the Imperial Parliament :

“Here in the midst of a wilderness flourishes the French feudal system and the custom of Paris of centuries ago.”

Fortunately there were in that Parliament gentlemen who were acquainted with our system of laws, and who were able to answer the hasty remarks of the hon. member. Mr. Labouchère said :

“He was a little alarmed, he would confess, at the manner in which the right hon. gentleman had spoken of the French system of laws; he had spoken of them as something barbarous, handed down from the middle ages, and as entitled to little respect in present times. But, whatever the right hon. gentleman might think of the system, or whatever the system in itself might be, the French were warmly attached to it, and that was a reason why it should be regarded with due consideration for their opinions or prejudices. He was no lawyer, but he was told that the Custom of Paris was the mildest of all the systems of feudal law, and he knew that every class of the French population preferred it to any other whatever."

Sir James McIntosh said:

"Did the right hon. gentleman never hear of any other system of law in any other country than Canada, in which a jumble of obsolete usages was mixed up and confounded with modern subtleties, until the mind of the most acute men of the age, or of the nation—men who had passed, in a service of forty years, through every stage of its gradations—were driven to declare, that they felt totally unable to find their way through its labyrinths, and were compelled, by their doubts of what was law and what was not, to add, in a most ruinous degree, to the expenses of the suitor? This system has been called the Common Law, the 'wisdom of our ancestors,' and various other venerable names."

The next attack upon the French laws was at the time of Union in 1840. The report of Lord Durham, who declared them to be old "Carlarous laws" was not of a nature to quiet the aim of the Canadians, but again they relied on justness of their cause and the fair liberal spirit of the English people. A minority representation was first proposed for Lower Canada. Mr. Hume, at the time, said:

"It appears to me that a great injustice is about to be perpetrated against the French population of Lower Canada. The Bill violates the principle of equal justice promised by the noble lord to the two Colonies. It is intended to swamp the French population, by not giving them a fair share in the representation; for Upper Canada with 300,000 people, is to return as many representatives as Lower Canada with 600,000."

Then the principle of equality of representation for both Provinces was conceded, and in that way the civil laws of the French-Canadian people were saved. The Union was thus established, and it was under the regime of that Union that the laws of the Province of Quebec were condensed and codified, and the Bill providing for that codification was introduced by Sir George Etienne Cartier, in 1857. The work of codifying the law was entrusted to the ablest jurists in our Province—Mr. Justice Morin, Mr. Justice Day and Mr. Caron, the father of our worthy Minister of Militia. Many able lawyers, and, among them, Mr. Justice Ramsay contributed to this great work. In 1864 or 1865 the labor of the Commission was completed and the civil code was produced; and I think it is the greatest monument that could be erected to the memory of Sir George Etienne Cartier. This code was based on the Justinian Code and the Code Napoleon, the two great sources of the laws of the whole continent of Europe—Great Britain and Ireland excepted—the continent of South America and also a portion of this continent. I refer, so far as this continent is concerned, to the West Indies, Mexico, the State of Louisiana and the Province of Quebec. In 1866 Sir George Cartier presented the civil code to the Canadian Parliament, and in introducing the Bill, made, perhaps, one of the ablest speeches he ever delivered on the floor of Parliament. He said:

"The adoption of a complete and efficient civil code was the most pregnant source of national greatness. Look for instance, at the Roman Empire. None of the ancient nations had produced a more complete system of legislation. The conquering empire had passed away, but the code still lived. Not only did it still live, but it had been adopted by nations which in the days of barbarism had conquered the Empire. The wisdom of the ancient Romans had, so to speak, civilized their conqueror. Napoleon I. was the first man who, of all others, had realized in modern day the idea of an heroic conqueror of olden times, and he had bestowed upon his country a great and useful code, and his successors were compelled to adopt it, and almost the only change which had since been made in it was to change the name, by calling it the civil code of France, instead of the Code Napoleon. Napoleon had passed away, but the code still lived, and it governed the persons, the properties, and the every day actions of the people of France."

This speaker, this great statesman has also passed away, but his work has survived, and it will survive many Constitutions which this country may possess in the future. The civil code will live in the Province of Quebec as long as that Province exists. At the very time the Canadian Parliament was debating the civil code of Lower Canada, the system of government then prevailing was found to be no longer practicable. Upper

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier).

Canada, with its growing population, was insisting upon representation by population. A conference was held in Quebec and a basis of Confederation was laid down. One point which attracted a great deal of attention on the part of the members of the conference was the judicial system of the different Provinces. According to the report of Mr. Gray on Confederation, this point was settled as follows:—

"The question of the judiciary was not so easily settled, and led to long and animated discussions. While it was admitted that the public interests would be best promoted by having the highest tribunals of the country deriving their authority from the highest source of power in the country, and that a uniform Bar extending throughout the whole would tend to its elevation, by the greater conflict of talent and the wider sphere of action, it was urged that until the laws were in some measure assimilated, the benefit with reference to the Bar would be more seeming than real. And with reference to the Bench, a vague dread of the overawing power of Canada led some of the delegates from the Maritime Provinces to fear that the courts of their Provinces might be filled with judges who were strangers to their laws, and whose traditions were with other lands. The representatives from Lower Canada at once put their Province beyond the pale of consideration. Their jurisprudence was governed by the civil law and admitted no uniformity with the codes of the other Provinces."

In the speech pronounced by the hon. member for Three Rivers, to-day Minister of Public Works, we find these words:

"We have, at the present time, as many systems of judicature as we have Provinces; with Confederation, on the contrary, this defect will be removed and there will be but two systems—one for Lower Canada, because our laws are different from those of the other Provinces, because we are a separate people, and because we do not choose to have the laws of the other populations and the other for the remainder of the Confederation."

The Confederation Act was agreed upon in that conference. It was sent to the British Parliament for adoption, and there we find a similar remark made by Lord Carnarvon in introducing the Bill to the House of Lords. He said:

"Lower Canada, too, is jealous, as she is deservedly proud of her ancestral customs and traditions; she is wedded to her peculiar institutions and will enter this union only upon the distinct understanding that she retains them. 42nd article of the Treaty of Capitulation in 1760, when Canada was ceded by the Marquis de Vaudreuil to General Amherst, runs thus:

"Les Français et Canadiens continueront d'être gouvernés suivant la Coutume de Paris et les lois et usages établis pour ce pays."

"The Coutume de Paris is still the accepted basis of their civil code, and their national institutions have been alike respected by their fellow subjects and cherished by themselves. And it is with these feelings and on these terms that Lower Canada now consents to enter the Confederation."

Now, let us see what the British North America Act says. In section forty-nine we find a provision for the uniformity of the laws of the different Provinces of the Dominion; but there is an exception made in favor of Quebec. This Parliament may enact laws for the uniformity of the Provincial laws, but in order to have provision of this kind made for Quebec we must address ourselves to the Imperial Parliament. Section ninety-four says:

"Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the Parliament of Canada may make provision for the uniformity of all or any of the laws relative to property and civil rights in Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and of the procedure of all or any of the Courts in those three Provinces, and from and after the passing of any Act in that behalf the power of the Parliament of Canada to make laws in relation to any matter comprised in any such Act, shall, notwithstanding anything in this Act, be unrestricted; but any Act of the Parliament of Canada making provision for such uniformity shall not have effect in any Province unless and until it is adopted and enacted as law, by the Legislature thereof."

So we see there is a provision for the uniformity of the laws of all the Provinces where the principles of the same common law prevail. Sections 97 and 98, providing for the appointment of Judges, says:

"Until the laws relative to property and civil rights in Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the procedure of the Courts in those Provinces, are made uniform, the Judges of the Courts of those Provinces appointed by the Governor General shall be selected from the respective Bars of these Provinces."

"The Judges of the Courts of Quebec shall be selected from the Bar of that Province."

This section says that the Judges of the Courts in Quebec shall be selected from the Bar of that Province, but the Judges in the other Provinces may be selected anywhere immediately after the uniformity in the laws is established. In section 92, paragraph 14, we find a provision respecting Provincial Courts, stating that the Provincial Legislature shall exclusively have jurisdiction over the administration of justice in the Province, including the constitution, maintenance, and organization of Provincial Courts, both civil and criminal. I mention all these enactments of our Constitution, because they will have great importance when we come to consider the existing power of the Supreme Court, which is not only a Federal Court but a Provincial Court. Finally we find at section 101 a permission to this Parliament of establishing a General Court in Canada :

"The Parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time, provide for the constitution, maintenance, and organization of a General Court for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional Courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada."

It seems to me that it is more than doubtful that this Parliament had a right to establish a Provincial Court of Appeal. The provision is to the effect that we shall have a right to establish a General Court of Appeal for Canada. We have made it general for the Dominion, and we have also made it a General Court of Appeal for the Provinces. We have made it a Court of Appeal for the Province of Quebec, contrary to the provision which I read a few moments ago, which says that Provincial Courts shall be established by Provincial Legislatures. This is to me apparent, when we read the last words of the same clause, providing for the establishment of any additional Court, which would seem to be in the same spirit and sense, that is to say, for the better administration of the laws of Canada, not for the administration of the laws of the Provinces; not for the administration or interpretation of property and civil right, or provincial rights. As I said in opening, I contend the Supreme Court is a necessity in constitutional cases, and that was also noticed at the time of the discussion of the Confederation Act before the Imperial Parliament. The following is from the English Hansard :

"Mr. E. W. T. HAMILTON said, he wished to know how a conflict of jurisdiction between the Parliament of Canada and the Provincial Legislatures was to be settled?"

"Mr. ADDERLEY said, he did not think that any serious conflict of the kind anticipated by the hon. member could take place so long as a supreme power vested in the Governor General to veto Acts.

Mr. ROEBUCK said that the framers of the American Constitution foresaw this difficulty, and provided a Supreme Court, whose province it was to decide whether even the laws passed by Congress were illegal. This Bill, however, seemed a lopsided one, and contained no provision to prevent the passing hereafter of laws which might be unconstitutional. In other words, the Canadian Parliament would be supreme. Supposing the Governor General and the Parliament of Canada were to pass a law that the Municipal Constitution of Nova Scotia was in contravention of this very Act, who was to decide whether they were right or wrong?"

So at the very time of the debate on the Confederation Act before the Imperial Parliament, the necessity of a Supreme Court was anticipated, to decide constitutional questions; to decide whether the Federal Parliament is encroaching on the rights of the Provinces, or whether the Provinces are exceeding their powers. Notwithstanding the power granted to this Parliament to establish a general Court for Canada, or other additional Courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada, we were from 1867 to 1875 without such Court. Constitutional questions were however raised before Provincial Courts, and of course they were decided by those Courts, and the danger connected with those decisions was a want of uniformity, as the Judges of one Province might decide one way and the Judges of another Province might decide another way. However, I might say that an appeal to the Privy Council might establish a uniform decision on any constitutional question. At various times efforts were made in this Parliament, under the leadership of the present First Minister, to establish a Supreme Court; but those efforts were in vain. A Bill was prepared which was attributed, wrongly or rightly I do not know, to Mr. Justice Strong for the establishment of that Court; and there is one important feature to notice in that Bill, and it is this: It did not propose to create and provide a general Court of Appeal for all the Provinces, but only a Federal or constitutional Court. That Bill intended to establish and create a Court upon the principle of the Supreme Court of the United States, for the sole purpose of determining Federal rights, and for the purpose of carrying into effect Federal laws. However, nothing was done until 1875. At that time hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. Mr. Justice Fournier was Minister of Justice, and a Bill was presented which was the one finally adopted and which is the law to-day. There was a long debate as to the constitution of that Court. The question of the jurisdiction of Parliament to create such a Court of Appeal was raised and ably argued by Mr. E. Taschereau, now one of the learned Judges of the Supreme Court. The question of submitting Provincial rights to the decision of a Federal Court was also raised and ably defended, among others, by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). I will quote only two speeches of hon. members who spoke on that occasion to show what was the feeling on that occasion. Mr. Mills said :

"It seemed to him that this expression 'a general Court of Appeal for Canada' meant a Court of Appeal having cognizance of questions arising under the legislation of this Parliament and not on any question that might arise under the jurisdiction of any one of the Provinces."

Mr. Taschereau said :

"In a word, they have their good old French laws which had been secured to us by solemn treaties, laws of which they were so proud, and under which their forefathers had lived so happy, and he might add, so loyal, under the protection of the British Crown. All these laws had a few years ago been codified by the most eminent jurists of their Province, and at the present time their two Codes of Civil Law and of Civil Procedure could well bear the comparison with the French modern Napoleon Codes. The English speaking citizens of Lower Canada had long been accustomed to see the civil rights governed by these laws, they had learned to admire and cherish them, and they were now perhaps as firmly attached to them as the French Canadian population was. In fact he hoped to see the day when all their sister Provinces, seeing the perfectness of their codes, would adopt them as their laws of the land. But the more they were attached to their dear old laws, to their own legal machinery, so different, so widely different from the system of the other Provinces, the more they were inclined to see a danger in all innovations proposed, in all new jurisdictions which were intended to be established, and he thought he was not going too far when he said that when a Supreme Tribunal of Appeal was proposed to be created outside their Province, composed of Judges, the great majority of whom would be unfamiliar with the civil laws of Quebec, which tribunal would be called upon to revise and would have the power to reverse the decisions of all their Quebec Courts, there was, for them at least, cause for alarm, if not a danger, a great danger to be apprehended."

All Judges in the Superior Court and in the Court of Appeals in the Province of Quebec must be taken from the Quebec Bar. But the Judges who construe our civil laws finally, are taken not from our Bar, but the Bars of other Provinces. Not only are three or four of those Judges not familiar with our laws, but two or three at least are not acquainted with our language, a knowledge of which is necessary to become familiar with those laws. It is said that there is no proof of this. It needs no proof, for it is a matter of public notoriety. But we have even proof of the fact. In the Charlevoix and Jacques Cartier election cases, the learned Judges ordered the evidence—from the first page to the last of an immense volume of 400 pages of printed matter—to be translated. This state of things is more dangerous and alarming than were any former attacks on our civil law. Our system of laws will soon resemble neither that of England nor that of France; it will be a monstrosity. We love our laws because we have been in the habit of living under their protection. This love may be only a sentiment, but the world is governed by sentiment. Sentiment is to be found everywhere, on the throne, in society, in families, and I have no doubt in this Parliament. What would become of life if it was not sometimes sentimental. This sentiment of love on the part of French-Canadians for their laws, is of good order and of high morality. It is, as Lord Granville has stated, one of the noblest sentiments, and if the cause I am advocating had no other foundation, it would command the respect and admiration of this House and of this country. The inhabitants of the Province of Quebec expect that the sons of Great Britain will not be less generous, not less fair and just, than their forefathers were in 1774, 1792, 1828, 1840, or 1867, and that they will respect this sentiment. But our opposition to the Supreme Court is not only a matter of sentiment, it is also a matter of business, founded on reason and common sense. We feel that our property and civil rights are not safe in the hands of men who not only do not understand them, but who are not even in a position to learn them. Strangers seeking for investments in our Province have expressed a fear that rights, which we have secured under the ablest advice in our Province, are in danger when they are placed in the hands of men more or less ignorant of our laws. It has been said that the Privy Council presents the same objections as the Supreme Court, and yet that we in the Province of Quebec have more admiration for the Privy Council than the Supreme Court. I for one would be satisfied with our Provincial Courts, and would be pleased to see appeal to the Privy Council as a statutory right abolished. Of course I am not speaking of the prerogative belonging to Her Majesty of hearing any appeal she pleases. But there is a great difference between the constitution of the Privy Council and that of the Supreme Court. I have not the latest statistics of the Privy Council; but I find by a return to the House of Commons on the 8th August, 1840, that there were pending on the 15th February, 1837, 165 appeals from the different colonial possessions of Great Britain, and of those 165, no less than 115 were appeals from Colonial Courts, in which English jurisprudence did not prevail, and consequently those 115 appeals had to be decided according to the coutume of Paris, the Code Civil, the Roman Dutch Law, or the Law of Trinidad; and in the appeals lodged since that period, more than one-half involved the application of one or the other of those systems of foreign jurisprudence. I have before me a statement of the appeals from the Province of Quebec both to the Supreme Court and to the Privy Council, and what do we find? The number of appeals effectually prosecuted and adjudged upon from 1876 inclusive to 1881, was, in the Privy Council twenty three, in the Supreme Court eighteen; the number of appeals effectually prosecuted and still pending, or the decision of which has not been communicated to this office, was, in the Privy Council four, in the Supreme Court twenty; the number of appeals abandoned before the transmission of the case or printed record was, in the Privy Council seventeen, in the Supreme Court fourteen; the number of appeals lately granted and not yet fortified was, in the Privy Council one, in Supreme Court none. The total number was, in the Privy Council forty-five, in the Supreme Court fifty-two. This statement is not one which I have prepared myself. It is the official statement which bears the signature, "Certified, L. W. Marchand, Clerk of Appeals."

Mr. McDONALD (Picton). Has my hon. friend got the annual returns?

Mr. GIROUARD. These are the official returns for the four years. Canada is the only country ruled by a federal system where such a Court as the Supreme Court has any existence. Take old France before the Revolution. It was then divided into several Provinces governed by different systems of law: in the south by the written law of Rome, and in the north by the custom. Do we find a general court of appeals for all those Provinces? No; we find that for centuries there, there was only one appeal, but it was an appeal to the Parliament of each Province. Take the case of Great Britain which has been referred to, very unfortunately, in my humble opinion, by some lawyers of the Montreal Bar. The three countries composing Great Britain are governed by different systems of law, Scotland especially being ruled by almost the same principles of law as those which prevail in the Province of Quebec. In 1707 when Scotland entered the Union she stipulated, like Quebec, that her local laws should remain intact. In 1867 or 1868 a Judiciary Commission was appointed by the Imperial Government with the view of providing for a better administration of justice. This Commission reported in favor of a Supreme Court, which was to have original as well as appellate jurisdiction. Legislation was attempted in 1870 in the sense of that report, but the attempt was in vain. In 1873 another attempt was made. A Bill was introduced by Lord Selborne, but it was not to include Scotland and Ireland, because, said Lord Selborne, these countries have separate judications of their own. However, this Bill was not to take effect until after a certain period. In the meantime it was thought necessary to amend the Bill, so as to include Scotland and Ireland in it. In 1875 a Bill to that effect was introduced. In the House of Lords, Lord O'Hagan, Lord Moncreiff, the Duke of Buccleuch, Lord Redesdale and Lord Penzance raised strong opposition, and made appeals even to the feeling of the people of Scotland and Ireland, who, they stated, were opposed to that court. The London Times of the 4th March, 1875, stated that the opposition of the Scotch noblemen was an expression of opinion not only of the Scotch peerage, but of the legal profession in Scotland, and of what was alleged to be the national sentiment of the country. The opposition was so strong that the Bill had to be withdrawn, and it is very remarkable to notice the terms in which the London Times announced its withdrawal:

"The statement made by the Lord Chancellor yesterday evening, must have been a surprise even to those privileged few who had been made aware that something was coming. The Judicature Bill is withdrawn. We can hardly expect that this news will be immediately believed, yet it is true. A Government in the plenitude of its power has succumbed to side attacks, the strength of which had been in no way ascertained, and it has thus yielded, though backed by almost the whole Opposition."

And why did a strong Government, backed as it was by the Opposition of the day, so yield? It was in consequence of the strong sentiment of the Scotch and Irish people. What was finally the result of this strong opposition? In 1876, instead of abolishing the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords, where the Scotch and Irish appeals are brought and decided by Scotch and Irish Peers, as the case may be, a Bill was introduced by the Government re-affirming and re-constituting that jurisdiction. When we see such an expression of feeling on the part of a population so loyal as the people of Scotland, are we to be surprised at the indignation which exists in the Province of Quebec with regard to the establishment of our Supreme Court? Let us take the example of another country—a country where popular liberties are considered as being of some value, the United State of America. Is the Supreme Court of the United States, a Federal or a State Court, or both? Is it a Court which is equally open to decide State rights and to administer State laws? No, Sir. They considered that the establishment of such a Court would be sapping Confederation in its very basis. It would be to deny State rights. The consequence was that by Art. 3 of the Constitution of the United States, the Supreme Court is only a Court to administer Federal laws or to decide cases between citizens of different States. I am approaching another feature of the subject—that is, provincial rights, the autonomy of the Provinces. It cannot be denied that Confederation was resorted to as a scheme to secure the Provinces the control of their local rights, laws and institutions. If you give the Supreme Court jurisdiction over those rights, you cannot say that the purpose of Confederation is obtained. The tendency of power is to usurp power—of great countries, to absorb smaller, and especially if the smaller Principalities or Governments are to be considered in the light of municipalities, as some jurists are pleased to call our Local Parliaments or Governments. This Parliament itself is not an exemption to the rule. How often has it encroached upon the rights of Provincial Legislatures, although acting in the most perfect good faith. Men are the same everywhere; even when sitting on the Bench of the Supreme Court, they may be influenced by the Government which surrounds them. This is a great danger to Confederation—a danger which was evaded by the framers of the American Constitution; and I only wish to-day that the Constitution of the Supreme Court, as proposed by Justice Strong, had been adopted by this Parliament. If the principle of Provincial rights be not safe, I am very much afraid our Provinces will become dissatisfied with our general Government; I fear, indeed, for the future of this Confederation—for we do not know what the future has in store for us—and, perhaps, for the permanency of British institutions on this continent. Let us keep good faith with the Provinces; let us maintain them in the full enjoyment of their Provincial rights, and harmony and satisfaction will prevail everywhere. With regard to the Montreal Bar, its meeting was called at very short notice, forty-eight hours. Its members are found scattered over a large district at distances of thirty, forty or fifty miles. At that meeting the advisability of limiting the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, in the sense of this Bill, was discussed, when the division stood—against the Bill, 41; for it, 24. Now, there are 200 practising members in the city and district of Montreal; and we know there are in this House fourteen or fifteen members of that Bar who were not present at that meeting. The vote they will give will show whether they are on the side of the minority or the majority. It is evident, therefore, that this majority of fourteen or fifteen votes at Montreal, cannot fairly be considered as representing the opinion of its Bar. But even if it was a fair expression of the opinion of that Bar, what would be the consequence? Are we not in as good a position, laymen of this House as well as members of the legal profession, to decide this question as to the lawyers of Montreal? Is it a question of jurisprudence or law? No; it is a question of policy. It may indeed be said that lawyers are interested in keeping as many jurisdictions as possible. The question is to be determined by the people of the country; and I say, not as a member of the House, but as a member of the profession, that my interest would be to preserve the Supreme Court, and keep the fees connected with it within the profession. But as a member of the House, and a representative of my Province and the people, I say that public opinion in that Province is against the existence of that Court, and that this sentiment almost amounts to indignation. But to return to the subject of the Montreal Bar, I cannot ignore the importance of its meeting. I was greatly surprised at its resolution. It did not express the opinions I heard from some of the majority some time ago. What, in their case, caused this change? Why did the Montreal Bar not follow the example of the Scotch or Irish Bar, and say like them, on a similar occasion, in 1875—we do not want that Supreme Court? Are they less patriotic, less intelligent? I cannot admit that. I believe the first cause of this resolution was, and I am sorry to say it, party spirit, which too often influences the deliberations of the Bar of our Province. In the second place, another cause is the dissatisfaction which exists among some members of that Bar, with our local Judges. We all know that too often the nomination of Judges in the Province of Quebec, especially, is controlled by political exigencies. But, notwithstanding, are we to find the remedy in the Supreme Court? Do we not find in that Court the results of the same political exigencies? And shall we be told that even an inferior Judge of our Province is not better acquainted with its laws than able lawyers of other Provinces, not brought up under, or familiar with our laws, and not in a position to learn them? My Bill will, in my humble opinion, meet all complaints in regard to the Supreme Court. It will give redress to the Province of Quebec, by taking away from Judges ignorant of our laws, the duty of deciding upon them. Wherever, as in the Maritime Provinces, there exists no Provincial Court of Appeal, there is a feeling in favor of the continuance of the Supreme Court. Speaking for myself I would have no objection to limiting this Bill to Quebec, and exempting from its operation Ontario and the Maritime Provinces. Let those Provinces retain the Supreme Court. If the people of Ontario were in the position of the people of Quebec, with their love of justice, they would not stand that Court, but would demolish, if necessary, stone by stone, any building in which it was held. I ask you, will you not give us justice in this matter? Keep, if you wish it, that Court for yourselves, but leave our local rights, our local laws and our local institutions, which are so different from your own, in the hands of our own local Judges. The Bill reads as follows:—

"1. The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada is abolished in all cases where the matter in dispute relates to property and civil rights in any of the Provinces, and generally as to matters of a merely local or private nature and coming within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Legislature of any of the said Provinces, according to the meaning of the British North America Act of 1867, and Acts amending the same.

"2. This Act shall not apply to cases decided by the Exchequer Court of Canada, nor to cases where the matter in dispute affects the constitutionality or validity of any Act or Statute of any of the said Provincial Legislatures, which cases shall continue to be subject to appeal to the said Supreme Court, as now is or hereafter shall be provided for.

"3. This Act shall not apply to appeals already instituted or pending before the said Supreme Court."

Perhaps it would be well to say also that the Act shall not apply to cases where the Crown or citizens of different Provinces are interested, and any amendments of that kind which may be made in Committee will be accepted with pleasure.

Mr. BROOKS. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure and instruction to the address which has been delivered by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. He has spoken to-night as he always speaks—ably and earnestly, and as one whose heart is in the subject to which he addressed himself. But while I agree with him in a great deal he has said, and particularly in the eulogy which he has paid to our Lower Canadian law; while I have been extremely interested and instructed by the historical retrospect which he has given us with regard to that law, I must say that I do not agree with the principle of the Bill of which the hon. gentleman has moved the second reading; I believe the introduction of measures of this kind tend very much to impair, if not to destroy altogether, the usefulness of the highest Court of appellate jurisdiction in Canada. I believe that the frequent introduction of such measures, to which the hon. gentleman has referred, has been a source of danger to the Court to which they refer; and I believe that once and for all we should determine whether we shall not, if it is possible to do so, prevent these constant interferences with the Court, which tend so much to impair its usefulness. Though I have listened very attentively to the remarks of the hon. gentleman, it appears to me that from beginning to end he has not addressed himself to the point which should have been raised in introducing a measure of this kind to the House. In 1875, when the Act constituting the Supreme and Exchequer Court was passed, the points which the hon. gentleman has raised to-night were brought up and discussed at full length, and a determination was then arrived at by a large majority of the House of Commons—a determination which, to my mind, cannot at all be changed by anything which has been said by the hon. gentleman to-night. We then adopted the principle of establishing a Supreme Court at a great expense to the Dominion. I think that some new matter should be brought forward to influence the House before asking it at this early day—for it is an early day looking at the life of Courts—to reverse the decision which it came to at that period. Not one argument or one principle of argument has been adduced to-night that was not adduced at that time. The same objections which were then made and which were passed upon by this House, have been raised to-night; and I listened to the hon. gentleman with a great deal of attention in order to learn when he would come to the practical question of saying what reasons, if any, there are to-day which did not then exist which should influence us in reversing the decision which we then arrived at. At that time motions precisely similar to that of the hon. gentleman were proposed by the late Minister of Inland Revenue, now a Judge on the Bench, by the then member for Laval, Mr., now Judge, Taschereau, and by one or two other members; I should have thought that if anything has intervened since that time to justify us in altering our decision with regard to this Court, it should have been adduced by the hon. gentleman. There was the same objection raised of our having only two French Judges conversant with the civil law of our Province, and it does appear to me somewhat humiliating that it should be stated that in this new Dominion of ours—a statement which will go the length and breadth of the country—we have no trained lawyers—no men whom we could entrust with the decision of cases that may come before that Court from the different Provinces of the Dominion. It has been stated that the results of appeals to the Privy Council have been satisfactory, but I would ask if there is anything about the Inns of Court of London, anything in the education which is received there which, considering the different conditions of the two countries, cannot be obtained here. Have they greater intellects? Taking into consideration the difference in population and educational advantages, are there to be found more trained intellects—men more capable of grasping questions to be brought before the Courts than we have here. In considering this subject we should, at any rate, not be satisfied with discrediting the legal talent of our own country; we should say, if we have no such men, that, as time goes on, men will be raised who will be capable of grasping the laws of our Provinces. But, without referring to men who are now upon our Bench, I would ask the hon. gentleman if such as Lafontaine and the Aylwins and Stuarts were not men to whom he would be willing to leave the decision of all cases that might come before them. I am satisfied that whatever may be the dissatisfaction or the indignation which, as the hon. gentleman said, exists among the people of the Province of Quebec with regard to this Court, it is merely temporary, and that it is a something which time will cure. With regard to the question of appeals to this Court from the Province of Quebec, I have been desired to read the resolutions of the Montreal Bar, which were referred to by the hon. gentleman, and the comments which have been made upon them by a distinguished member of the Montreal Bar. Before doing so, however, I wish to point out that there has been no general expression of opinion upon this matter by public meetings of members of the Bar or otherwise. There has been no such expression from the Bar of Quebec, or Three Rivers or St. Francis; the only agitation of the kind has been that to which the hon. gentleman has referred, from the Bar of Montreal:

"Moved by W. H. Kerr, Q.C., seconded by Joseph Doutre, Q.C., that in the interest of the administration of justice it is inexpedient to deprive the Supreme Court of Canada of any portion of its existing appellate jurisdiction over judgments rendered in the Provinces."

This was signed by W. H. Kerr, Q.C., Joseph Doutre, Q.C., G. Macrac, Q.C., R. Lafamme, Q.C., H. Mercer, Q.C., S. Bothune, Q.C., W. W. Robertson, Q.C., and many others to the number of forty-one. My hon. friend is much more cognizant of the strength of the Montreal Bar than I am, but I am informed that there were upwards of 100 members in attendance, that the sitting of that meeting was prolonged until a late hour in the day, so that many left before its close and the vote was forty-one that it was inexpedient to pass this Bill, and twenty-one in favor of it. The letter I have received is from Mr. Kerr, one of the most distinguished lawyers in the Province, and with your permission I will read it:

"MONTREAL, 23rd February, 1881.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I believe that it has been said in the House of Commons that the people of the Province of Quebec are in favor of Mr. Girouard's Bill to limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada.

"I think I can say, without fear of contradiction, that the English-speaking portion of the Province of Quebec is in favor of the maintenance of the appellate jurisdiction of that Court as it at present exists, and, in fact, would hail with gladness its extension. In proof of this assertion I enclose you a copy of a motion made by me, seconded by Mr. Doutre, at a meeting of the Bar of Montreal, held on the 18th inst. Annexed to the motion is a copy of the names of those members voting for it, from which you will perceive that nearly all the leading English-speaking members of the Bar voted in favor of the motion.

"It would seem to be the object of some members of the Bar, judging by their utterances at the meeting of the 18th inst., to abolish not only the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in matters relative to property and civil rights but also to do away with the existing facilities of appealing to Her Majesty in her Privy Council in all cases. They seem, in such matters, to wish to prohibit any appeal from the Court of Queen's Bench. If they succeed, their success will be a great calamity to the Province of Quebec.

"Judges, I regret to say, have very frequently been selected from the Bar of Quebec, not from their eminence as lawyers, but from motives of political expediency, and our Courts, consequently, have not the confidence of the public. The knowledge that an appeal lies from the Court of Queen's Bench to the Privy Council or Supreme Court now acts as a salutary check upon the first-named Court, but do away with the right of appeal, and that Court will then be free to settle finally the most important cases. Its decisions do not now give satisfaction, for, as at present constituted, it is not what might be called a strong Court, and the dissatisfaction prevailing at the Bar, and amongst the public, at the present moment would thereby be increased. In the Supreme Court, at the present moment, are two French Canadian Judges, the right of the English portion of the Bar of the Province of Quebec to representation on the Bench of that Court is ignored, the French Canadians claim that they are entitled to the two seats reserved for the Quebec Bar. Consequently, the English-speaking members of that Bar find that they are placed in an inferior position, so far as the Court is concerned, to their French confrères, merely because they are of British blood.

"I, for one, do not consider there is such a difference existing between the laws of Quebec Province and those of the other Provinces, as that men taken from the Bars of the other Provinces, eminent in their profession, should not be able, in conjunction with the Lower Canadian Judges, to render good judgments in cases relating to property and civil rights brought from this Province, but I look upon it as essential that great care should be taken in the selection of the Judges. If, owing to political exigencies, inferior men are put upon the Bench of that Court, I am of opinion that it must be a failure. I admit that it is not as strong a Court that it should be, that the selections have not been made with that discretion which should characterize the action of the Government, in naming Judges to the highest Court in the Dominion. Yet I would consider it a calamity if the right of appeal thereto, as it now exists, were taken from the English-speaking portion of the inhabitants of the Province of Quebec.

"Yours very faithfully,

"WILLIAM H. KERR."

That letter is submitted as it was forwarded to me. Now, I am informed—and I give the figures subject to correction—that the number of appeals from the Province of Quebec, prior to the last Session of this Parliament, was forty-six. Of these, forty-two were decided upon the merits. Twenty-seven judgments appealed from were confirmed, and fifteen were reversed. Only four were decided upon side issues and not upon the merits. I am told that of all these cases only three turned upon questions outside the civil law. If that be correct there certainly cannot be any great cause for dissatisfaction with the working of that Court. I happen to know that many of the cases which have been sent up from the district of Montreal came up upon questions relating to criminal law and criminal matters. Now, with regard to the principle of the Bill which is before the House, I would refer the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to a discussion which took place at the time of Confederation, and to a declaration which was made by an authority which I presume no one in this House will attempt to deny—Sir George E. Cartier. In that discussion he said:

“The hon. member has very justly remarked that it may become necessary at a future period to constitute such a tribunal. At present the several Provinces which are to form part of the Confederation, have the same court of final appeal. As long as we keep up our connection with the Mother Country, we shall always have our Court of final appeal in Her Majesty's Privy Council. But when the British Provinces on this continent are united by the bond of Confederation, we shall have a uniform system, common to all, in regard to imports, bills of exchange and promissory notes, as well as universal jurisprudence. Accordingly, when we have lived some years under the Federal regime, the urgent need of such a Court of Appeal with jurisdiction in such matters will be felt, and if it is created, it will be fit that its jurisdiction should extend to civil causes which might arise in the several Confederate Provinces, because it will necessarily be composed of the most eminent Judges in the different Provinces of the jurists whose reputation stands highest of men, in short, profoundly skilled in the jurisprudence of each of the Provinces which they will respectively represent. Well, if this Court is called upon, for instance, to give final judgment on a judgment rendered by a Lower Canada Court, there will be among the Judges on the Bench men perfectly versed in the knowledge of the laws of that section of the Confederation, who will be able to give the benefit of their lights to the other Judges sitting with them. I must observe to my hon. friend the member for Montmorency, that he disparages the civil law of Lower Canada in the estimate he makes of it; but he need be under no uneasiness on that head. He should not forget that if, at this day, the laws of Lower Canada are so remarkably well understood in Her Majesty's Privy Council, it is because the cause of equity, which is a subject of deep study and familiar knowledge among the members of the Council, is based on Roman law, as our own code is. All the eminent Judges, whether in England, in the Maritime Provinces or in Upper Canada are profoundly versed in those principles of equity which are identical with those of our civil code.”

This declaration was made prior to Confederation and long before the establishment of this Court. I would also refer the hon. member to a declaration made by the present leader of the Government with regard to the establishment of this Court and with regard to the interpretation of the 101st section of the British North America Act, according to which the hon. member claims that this Court should be an Appellate Court, not from decisions under Provincial laws, but simply under the laws of Canada. In 1875, when the Bill relating to this Court was under discussion, the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald said:

“He quite agreed with the views of the hon. gentleman that this Court of Appeal, when established, would be a Court of Appeal to Canada—a Court that could entertain appeals from the decisions of all the Provincial Courts, whether such decisions were based on Provincial laws or laws of the Dominion. He knew that there was one authority in this House who had a contrary opinion, and that authority was one that he greatly respected, and he was always sorry to differ from; but he (Sir John) was fortified in his opinion by the views entertained by the Minister of Justice and the Government. He believed the logical and grammatical construction of the term “Court of Appeal” made in a Court of Appeal from all tribunals in this Dominion.”

That seems to have been the settled determination of Parliament at that time; and now, after the Court has continued for five years, I see no reason, notwithstanding the arguments of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, to differ from that decision. Then another question arises with regard to this matter. The hon. member has only spoken for the Province of Quebec; but he undertakes to legislate for the whole Dominion. Now, let us see what would be the consequences of the legislation he proposes. He declares in the first section of his Bill:

“The Appellate Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada is abolished in all cases where the matter in dispute relates to property and civil rights in any of the Provinces.”

As a matter of economy, what would be the result of that? I understand that in the five Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and British Columbia, there is no Court of Appeal, and the effect of this Act would be to deprive all these Provinces of the right of appeal from the decisions of their Courts of original jurisdiction; so that this Parliament would ultimately, in common justice, have to establish a Court of Appeal in each of these Provinces, the expense of which would be larger than that of the Court of which the hon. gentleman complains. I do not pretend to say that there is not a feeling of dissatisfaction with this Court among the people of the Province of Quebec. I am sorry it does exist, though we have not yet had any official declaration of that feeling. I believe that it would be unwise on the part of this Parliament, after having tried the experiment of this Court for only five years, to materially alter its constitution, and that we should try the working of that Court for a considerable time longer. If there are in the composition of that Court reasons for dissatisfaction, some alterations might be made. I do not believe it would be wise or right on our part to adopt the principle of this Bill by passing the second reading.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). To limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in the manner proposed by this Bill would be equivalent to abolishing that Court altogether. I am not prepared to see that Court abolished. As I said on a former occasion, I think the existence of the Supreme Court is necessary to the completion of our system of Confederation; and while, perhaps, in some respects the complaints in reference to it are well founded, I do not think there are any defects which are not capable of an easy remedy. In my own experience of the Court, especially recently, I have found no very great cause for complaint, if any. It cannot be complained that they allow their judgments to fall in arrear, because there are none in arrear at the present time. I am not aware that any of the cases argued at the present sitting have stood over, and some of those argued have been disposed of already. They are doing their work promptly, and I do not think it has been charged that they are not doing it efficiently. These continued attacks on the Court are calculated to destroy its usefulness, and so diminish the respect with which its judgments should be received, and with which I think but for these attacks they would be received, throughout the country generally. It has been suggested that this Bill should be amended in such a way as to confine its operation to the Province of Quebec alone. I think such a course would be most objectionable; we should not lay down one rule for the Province of Quebec and another for the rest of the Dominion. If the Court is to have any jurisdiction at all, it should be co-extensive with the Dominion. If, however, I was convinced that the objection to this Court in the Province of Quebec was of such universal character as to deserve our serious consideration, I should hesitate before saying to our friends from that Province that we were against the wish of the great majority of its people. But what do we find happened at a meeting in the constituency of the hon. gentleman who has moved this Bill? The hon. gentleman says: “It was not a majority of the Bar of that Province.” It cannot be pretended, at any rate, there was not a fair section of the Bar present. At that meeting, the present jurisdiction of the Court was maintained by a vote of forty-one to twenty-one. How, in the face of that resolution, can it be said that this Court meets with the condemnation of the majority, or of any considerable number even, of the legal profession or of the inhabitants of that Province? Have we had any petitions here against it? Is there anything else—I say it with all respect to my hon. friend and those who support him—but a limited sphere of objection to this Court, unsustainable by the majority of the profession, and certainly, as far as any authentic indication of public opinion is concerned, unsustainable by the people themselves. I do think we would be adopting a most dangerous and improper policy, if now, at the tail end of the Session, with a limited opportunity for discussion, we were to support this Bill to the extent of even allowing it to be read a second time. There are interests of a far more extensive nature at stake than those limited ones to which my hon. friend has given expression on the present occasion. If the Court is not efficient it ought to be made so, but we ought not to adopt a revolutionary measure of this nature, which, to my mind, is tantamount to the total abolition of this Court.

Mr. LANDRY. I will call the attention of the Government to the nature of the Bill and the nature of the promises the Government made last Session and during this Session. On the 26th February, 1880, the hon. Prime Minister said:

"I think we ought not to repeal this Court. We ought not to wipe it out of existence. We ought to face the question, however, and enquire into the cause of the dissatisfaction which is so prevalent. It seems to me there must be a remedy. There must be some means of meeting the objections which experience has verified. The Government desires to press this seriously to that extent, and, individually, I may say that I am disappointed that a more enlarged discussion has not been entered upon on this occasion by members of the Bar, in order that the House and the country may, from their lips, know what the strong objections are to this Court. I have no doubt that there are very many gentlemen in this House who, if they would, would not only be able to state the objections that have arisen, but state their own opinions as to the best means to remove these objections. I had hoped this discussion would have brought out a great many of the points to which I have alluded. However, the Government desire to address themselves earnestly to this matter, and to make a full and exhaustive enquiry into the best means of removing the objections, and into the best means of making the Court, in every sense, efficient and satisfactory."

After recess the hon. Minister of Public Works said, addressing himself to the members of the Province of Quebec:

"Mr. LANGEVIN. I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I desire that the position of the Government in relation to this question should be well understood. I fear that, when my hon. friend the Prime Minister explained the views of the Administration, his voice was not strong enough to be heard throughout the House. I would say, therefore, that it is the intention of the Government, during the recess, to examine this question with special reference to the Province of Quebec, so as to ascertain what steps must be taken in order to meet the objections which have been raised, and the inconveniences resulting from the working of this Court. The House must understand that I, myself, have never had reason to entertain great love for the Supreme Court, and that, consequently, the position I take this evening, in relation to that Court, is taken, not in the interest of the Court as personally composed, but with a view to the general interests of the Dominion of Canada. I am quite aware that, when there is an appeal from the Courts of the Province of Quebec to the Supreme Court, we find ourselves in this position: that often a judgment rendered by a large majority of the Court of Queen's Bench may be reversed by the Supreme Court; that is to say, that a judgment may be rendered by four or five Judges of the Court of Appeal of the Province of Quebec, and yet that judgment may be appealed to the Supreme Court and there reversed by two Judges called from the Province of Quebec. Two-thirds of the Judges of the Supreme Court do not understand the laws of the Province of Quebec, and they are, therefore, liable to err in cases coming before the Court from that Province. Now, Mr. Speaker, it was to those inconveniences the hon. the Prime Minister referred when he stated that the Government would make it their business, during the recess, to endeavor to find a remedy. The House must understand that when the Government take that position, and make so solemn a promise, it is their intention to meet the objections which have been raised, and to come down next Session with a measure calculated to meet the just complaints of hon. members from the Province of Quebec, and to remove the grievances enumerated by them this evening."

I think, after these promises, it is our duty to ask the Government what they intend to do during this Session. Will they support the Bill proposed by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, or, if not, will they have any other remedy to bring forward? This Session, the hon. member for Hochelaga asked the Government whether it was their intention, during the present Session, to bring down a measure for the repeal of the Act establishing the Supreme Court; and if not, whether it is their intention so to amend that Act as to remove the inconvenience resulting, as respects the Province of Quebec, from its present constitution and jurisdiction? To that question the answer was given, that it was not the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to bring in a measure to repeal the Act establishing the Supreme Court; and that, with reference to the second part of the question, that question was now receiving the anxious consideration of the Government. It is not only the Government that are anxious to have a remedy, but also the Province of Quebec, and I hope the Government will tell us, this afternoon, what is their intention with regard to this Bill. As to the remark that these continual attacks destroy the usefulness of the

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria).

Supreme Court, I would answer that it applies as well to the Government as to the private members who have presented Bills to abolish the Court, or to limit its jurisdiction, because the Government promised, last year, to give a remedy, and renewed its promise this Session.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I think we are entitled, at this stage of the Bill, to the answer asked for by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry). I am surprised at the position taken by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Brooks) on that question, when he asks us new reasons to justify our complaints. It is not because some members of the Bar of Montreal protested against the introduction of a Bill such as the one proposed by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, that we ought not to raise our voices against the present institution. The people of our Province are indignant about the jurisdiction given to this Court, and ask in earnest for relief in that matter. When we complain that the majority of the members of this tribunal do not know our laws, we offer a reason that can be sustained from the experience of more than a year, and we have not very much to add to this one. When we complain, besides, that the majority of this tribunal does not understand our language, the complaint ought to be listened to by those who have control of it. So, I think we are plainly justified in the position we take; and as the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) said truly, if such an injustice were committed against any other Province than Quebec, we should hear louder complaints than the present.

Mr. McDONALD (Pictou). I listened with very great attention and respect, as I always do, to the address of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard). I fully anticipated from him a very exhaustive discussion of this subject, which he has so much at heart. I regret, however, that I am obliged to differ with him as to his arguments and conclusions on various grounds. But there was one part of his speech, one element of the discussion on his part, in which we entirely agree, and with the hon. member from Sherbrooke (Mr. Brooks). I was under the impression that that was the real gravamen of the charge made against the Court by my hon. friend. I agree with him entirely as to the great value and importance of the admirable code which governs the Province of Quebec, and in the very critical, able and patriotic account which he gave of its ancient character and great utility, not only to the Province of Quebec, but to other countries where the principles of that law have prevailed; and I agree with him as to the respect in which it ought to be received in all courts of justice where the rights of the people, as based on that law, are adjudicated. I entirely sympathise with him also in his remarks as to the historical associations connected with this code of the ancient Province of Quebec, and in his observations on the judicial system he discussed. But at the same time I failed to catch—and perhaps it was my fault—the grounds upon which he suggested that that judicial system, so properly appreciated by him, was not duly administered in the Supreme Court of the Dominion. He failed to give any instances whatever in any cases argued before the Supreme Court wherein the opinions of his own Bar—the intelligent, able, learned lawyers of the Province of Quebec, who watch with so much jealousy the decisions of this Court—showed that they entertained the suspicion so often expressed in this House with reference to the ability of the Court—I say it struck me strongly that my hon. friend failed entirely to point out any single instance in which, either from ignorance or intention, the Supreme Court of the Dominion failed properly to administer the principles of the Civil Code of Quebec, and that law which the members from Quebec in this House, and the members of its Bar, have at all times guarded with so much and such proper jealousy. I think it becomes my hon. friend, when asking us to revolutionize our legislation on this subject, to show—if it be not necessary to show his confrères from the Province of Quebec—to the intelligent public of the rest of the Dominion—why we should be called upon to assent to so entire a revolution in our judicial system and in the constitutional guards and checks which we have embodied in that system, as he demands. Surely if it be a patent fact—that we must accept as proved something simply because it is alleged—that the Judges of the Supreme Court are unable to apprehend, and being unable to apprehend are unable to administer the law of so important a Province as Quebec—at least that portion of the law personal to its people and affecting their civil rights—such rights as come home, undoubtedly, in all the Provinces, more closely and particularly to every inhabitant than any others—because they affect the daily life and occupations of every man, woman and child—if those evils really exist—surely there is one case in which the fact can be demonstrated; surely there is one case out of the number given by my hon. friend (Mr. Girouard) where the incompetence of the Court was acknowledged or complained of. But so far as my experience goes, listening, as I have listened, for the last three or four years, to complaints of the same character, I have yet to learn of one case, and see the man who, on his own responsibility as a lawyer and statesman, will venture to impugn the ability or integrity of the Supreme Court. The very list which my hon. friend has given; the very statistics which he has quoted as an evidence that the Court has not been appreciated in Quebec, it appears to me have conclusively proved that, although dissatisfaction with it does exist, arising from various causes, at any rate admitting that, since the establishment of the Court, there is dissatisfaction with the nominees from that Province, or dissatisfaction as to some part of the constitutional functions devolving upon the Court—whatever it may be, it is undoubted that dissatisfaction and uneasiness in the public opinion of that Province have shown itself with regard to this Court—have proved, I repeat, that that uneasiness is rapidly passing away, because we find that year by year the total number of appeals from the courts of inferior jurisdiction in the Province of Quebec to the Privy Council is decreasing, while the appeals directly to the Supreme Court are increasing. Taking that as a test, becoming familiar with the practice in the Supreme Court, the prejudices which originally existed in the minds of members of the Quebec Bar have been broken down gradually by greater familiarity with the practice and intelligent discipline of that Court, the enlightened and able Bar of that Province has manifested of late its growing confidence in the Court by gradually abandoning the expensive system which heretofore prevailed in Quebec, of appealing directly to the Privy Council, preferring what, in my humble opinion, is in some respects the highest Court of Appeal, the Supreme Court of the Dominion. And I trust most sincerely that when my hon. friend the leader of the Government has time to devote his attention and his great experience to the redemption of the pledge which he made last year, whatever difficulties may exist now to prevent the perfect reconciliation of our friends from the Province of Quebec to the practice and constitution of this Court may be removed. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) has very properly called attention to the observations of the leader of the Government last Session and also to the observations which the right hon. gentleman made this year. No doubt these pledges are properly brought to the attention of the House, but my hon. friend should recollect that the leader of the Government, during this Session and during the recess intervening between last Session and this, has been constantly occupied with a great public question which overshadowed all other questions of legislation; so that my hon. friends from Quebec should not press too strictly the fact that, under all the circumstances, the right hon. gentleman failed to meet fully the intimation he made a year ago, that during the recess he would consider the difficulties which were mentioned by our friends from Quebec, and endeavor to find a solution. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier, I was glad to see, did not, as I understood him, attack the constitutionality of the Court; he did not intimate that it was not entirely within the competence of this Parliament to establish a Court with all the functions which have been given to that Court by Act of Parliament, and which have since been exercised by that tribunal.

Mr. GIROUARD. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. I said exactly the reverse.

Mr. McDONALD. I am sorry to hear it, but the reply is clear and distinct. It is that almost the common consensus of the eminent lawyers and jurists of the Dominion has pointed in one direction with regard to the constitutionality of this Court. The men who conceived and carried out the system of Confederation, considered this question and expressed their opinion in the language of the Statute—language so clear and explicit as not to have excited the shadow of doubt or hesitation in eminent legal minds since that time—that there should be established, not a general Court for Canada, but a general Court of Appeal for Canada. The language of the Act is: "And the organization of a general Court of Appeal for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional Courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada." So that we had a Court of Appeal standing alone—not a Court of original jurisdiction—independent entirely of any additional courts, which was a matter to be dealt with by subsequent experience and the requirements of the country. Either we must assume that the gentlemen who framed the Confederation Act, and obtained its passage through Parliament, used language which was without meaning, or we must arrive at the conclusion upon which this Parliament has proceeded, that it was to be a general Court of Appeal from the Courts of the several Provinces then and since composing the Dominion of Canada. I can only say, with my hon. friends who have spoken, that I think it would be a great calamity—it certainly would be so considered in my own Province and those adjoining it—if the right of appeal to the Supreme Court should be taken away. It would be a calamity not only to individual Provinces, but to the whole Dominion of Canada, for I consider that that Court is the crown of the edifice of our Constitution. I think there is no part of our Constitution which we ought to guard more sacredly, no part of our Constitution of which we ought to feel prouder than that Court—a Court which is independent of the Crown, which is composed of the men most learned, most wise, and most competent to deal with great questions which come before them; a court which not only controls the general laws of the country, but by the powers which are given to it by the Constitution, guards the rights of the people even as against the legislation of this House. Our experience for the last few years has shown us in what condition we would be if we had not this Court or some similar tribunal to appeal to. How many cases of the utmost importance, involving the integration of this Dominion of ours, have been disposed of by this Court to the entire satisfaction of the Dominion and of the several Provinces of the Dominion. It is a Court of the greatest possible importance, a Court before which are involved the highest possible interests of the several Provinces of the Dominion; a Court in which cases have been argued by able men and disposed of by the Judges in a manner which, so far as I have been able to learn, in a manner that has met with almost universal approval. But there is another argument in favor of the retention of that Court intact which, I think, cannot be successfully assailed, and that is that over and above the Supreme Court stands the original right of appeal to the foot of the Throne, over and above this Court is the plan—whether wise or not it is not now for us to discuss—that the subject shall have the right to appeal even against the ultimate decision of that Court to the foot of the Throne, a tribunal which, according to my hon. friend, stands unimpeached and unimpeachable. I should like to ask my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, in how many cases, though the Supreme Court has now been in existence some six or seven years, have dissatisfied suitors attempted to appeal from the decision of that Court? It has determined a very great number of cases of the highest importance, and, so far as I have been informed, only two suitors have taken exception to the decisions. These suitors have been men able to appeal, men with Provincial revenues at their command, and yet only two of them have made application to have the decisions of the Court removed. In one of these cases leave to appeal was granted; and in the other leave was refused, because even in an et parte argument there appeared not the slightest reason for a reversion of the judgment. Now, apart from the local feelings—apart from, at any rate, those local reasons affecting the mind of the Province of Quebec—I think there is no ground, no just ground to assail the ability and the desire of this Court to do its duty and to do it well. I do not intend to say that all the Judges are the ablest men in the Dominion. It may be true, as has been stated, that if a wiser discretion had been exercised in the selection of that Court, perhaps abler men could have been found. At the same time the House must recollect that we cannot always get the ablest men in the several Provinces to put on the Bench, even of the highest court in the nation. On the whole, I repeat, that I think my hon. friend failed to make out a case which justifies the attacks upon the Court and tends to destroy its influence. In my opinion, if the Court had not been strong in itself, if it did not possess the confidence and approbation of the people of this country, if the people had not made up their minds that the institution and maintenance of that Court as a supreme judicial tribunal were essential to the interests of the country, it could not have withstood the attacks made upon it for several years past. If it were otherwise, the reiterated declarations of men holding prominent positions as members of Parliament, and the attacks made in the press in consequence, would have shaken the foundations of any institution not strongly fortified in the confidence of the people. This seems to indicate that the people, having studied our judicial institutions, and realizing the importance of this tribunal to the constitution of the country, have made up their minds that if this Court was not perfect it ought to be improved and made as nearly perfect as possible. It will be the duty, as I have no doubt it will be the pleasure of the hon. the First Minister, who was himself the original creator of the idea of a Supreme Court as part of our Constitution, and whose opinion, I believe, coincided with that of his coadjutor as to the character which the Court ought to bear—I say it will not only be a duty which he owes to the country as the head of the Government, but a pleasure which will be personal to himself, so to amend, or so to restrict, if necessary, that Court as to make what he intended it should be, a Supreme Court for the Dominion of Canada, commanding and deserving the confidence of the people.

Mr. BRECKEN. I have listened with great pleasure to the philosophical and learned speech of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), and I have also listened to the more practical and able speech of the Minister of Justice. I must say that I think it is a matter of regret that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier should have so drawn up his Bill as to minimize the jurisdiction of the highest Court in this country. We boast of being a great Dominion, we have all the elements of a nation, and surely we ought to have an ultimate tribunal to which all parties, regardless of language, nationality, or system of jurisprudence, could appeal. The leader of the Government gave a good deal of serious attention to this matter, though I believe that the duty of constituting that tribunal was relegated to the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), who then led the Government. But the right hon. gentleman whom I am now proud of supporting, gave his generous support and vast experience as a constitutional lawyer, to the same purpose, and I believe the hon. member for Lambton has acknowledged that aid. At that time the earnest desire of all the members was to create a tribunal such as we have. I think if the Bill of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier were passed to-day it would be a great misfortune. There are certain questions that only a Supreme Court can decide. We ought to have a Court that we can all trust and all confide in. I have listened attentively to the able speech of the hon. Minister of Justice, and I heartily endorse what he has said. I think it will be a matter of great regret if we withdraw from that Court questions affecting civil rights. If it is allowed to decide great constitutional questions, surely it may be trusted to decide upon questions affecting civil rights. If the Court is not properly constituted it should be improved. I believe the decisions it has given have met with the respect of jurists. If that Court does not give satisfaction to the people of Quebec, who have a separate system of jurisprudence, let it be so constituted that they shall be satisfied with it, so that every Province may feel that justice will be done to all. To attempt to hamper this Court and to say that there are certain questions it is not competent to decide, is to cast a slur upon the title of those hon. Judges. If the Court is not constituted to the satisfaction of the Province of Quebec, the sooner it is so constituted the better it will be for this country. We must have such a Court of final appeal. Why should we continue to go to the Privy Council of Great Britain? I trust I am a loyal man. I do not want to see the ties weaken which binds us to Great Britain, but have we not legal lore enough in this Dominion to decide all the questions that may arise here? We have been expending millions of money during the present Session to build up this country. Ought we not to have a Court to decide every possible question that may come up in this country, whether it relates to the French laws of Quebec or to the English laws of Ontario and the eastern Provinces? As far as I am concerned I shall be obliged to vote against the Bill of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier.

Mr. McCONVILLE. As a member of the Bar of the District of Montreal I think it my duty to protest against the so-called resolution of the Bar of the District of Montreal which has been read by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Brooks). I think it has been shown by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) that the members for the Province of Quebec cannot but vote for the Bill now before the House. The question is not, as I understand it has been put by the Minister of Justice, that we have not adduced cases in which justice has not been rendered by that tribunal, because I contend it is difficult to enter into such details before this House; but I suppose the Government attach some importance to the strong expression of opinion given by the members from the Province of Quebec on every occasion when the question has been brought before the House. It is evident that in Quebec it is the unanimous opinion of the people that the Bill before the House should be passed. I consider this case is a very clear one. Let us consider this: The tribunal is composed of six judges. Let us suppose they are the most able men who can be obtained in the Dominion. It must be admitted that four of them are not as well versed in the laws of Quebec as the Judges of that Province who had had the opportunity of studying that law and practising it. A judgment rendered by a Judge of the Superior Court of Quebec, confirmed by the Court of Review, composed of three Judges, still further confirmed by the Court of Appeal composed of five Judges, or nine Judges, and all versed in the law of the Province, may be reversed by the Supreme Court, composed of six Judges, only two of whom belong to Quebec. Under these circumstances, it is perfectly useless to ask members from Quebec to admit that they have justice before this tribunal. There is no one who can deny that this is an anomaly; and the members from the Province of Quebec ask that it shall be corrected. The member for Queen's, P.E.I., (Mr. Brecken) considered that in his Province they want this tribunal. He may be perfectly correct, but, as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) has said, they may ask for an amendment, so that the Bill shall apply only to the Province of Quebec. We do not want to take other Provinces out of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, but we place our case before the House and say that this is a case in which the Government cannot delay to remedy that which requires to be corrected. Many times, and no hon. member will venture to deny it, the Government has led hon. members to understand that their intention was to bring in a measure which will give satisfaction to the people of Quebec on this very subject. How can the Government bring in such a measure? Certainly we cannot suppose they will appoint such a number of Judges as to give a majority of Judges from Quebec to that Court. If they cannot do that, what can they do except that which is proposed by the hon. member from Jacques Cartier, to render the justice we claim? Nothing else will suffice, and if the Government do not admit the principle of the Bill now before this House, they do not intend to give the people of Quebec that justice which we want.

Mr. GAULT. As a commercial man, moving among the mercantile people of Montreal, I have not heard a word of complaint against the Supreme Court. On the contrary, I have heard very favorable opinions expressed at some decisions very recently given; and I hope and trust that when a vote is taken to-night this will be the last we shall hear of it. Every time this subject is debated it must tend to reduce the high standing of the Supreme Court.

Mr. TASSE. Although a supporter of the principle of a Supreme Court, I cannot admit the statement that that tribunal is operating in a manner satisfactory to the people of the country at large. If it be true, as has been stated, that the Court is giving universal satisfaction, how is it that the hon. gentlemen have under their consideration a measure to remedy the grievances referred to during the present debate? If the constitution of that tribunal operates in a manner satisfactory to the people, how is it that it has been found necessary by the Government to modify this very measure? I cannot but say that the Supreme Court as constituted cannot give satisfaction to a large portion of the people—I refer to the population of the Province of Quebec. It is well established that there are only two Judges who can speak the French language; and if I am well informed, French lawyers from Quebec cannot be heard properly in their own language before the Supreme Court. They must speak a language which is not their own, and which perhaps many of them speak very imperfectly. The constitution of the Supreme Court is contrary to the spirit of our Constitution which places the two languages on the same footing; and from the circumstance that French lawyers cannot be heard in their own language before the Supreme Court we may conclude that a Court so constituted cannot command the confidence of a large portion of the people. It has been said that the lawyers of the Province of Quebec, or many of them, were satisfied with the operation of the Court as constituted. Well, with all due respect to the lawyers, I cannot consider them, especially in a case where perhaps they cannot have a disinterested opinion, the best exponents of the public opinion of the Province of Quebec. Besides the lawyers, there is a large portion of the people interested in that tribunal. These are the suitors, and all persons who have dealings with the Court; and if we judge by the complaints appearing in the newspapers—and I consider the newspapers as good and even better exponents of public opinion than the lawyers, especially in a case like this—the reverse will appear to be the case, for those who read the French newspapers may see, almost every day, communications and articles complaining of the manner in which this Court operates. I do not wish to deprive other Provinces, which may be satisfied with the operation of this Court, of the right to appeal to it; but so long as changes are not made in a manner that will give satisfaction to a large portion of the people of this country for whom I feel a very deep interest, and it is a feeling that is quite natural, I will vote for a Bill which, while not depriving the other portions of the Dominion from the benefit that they might derive from this tribunal, will exempt the Province of Quebec from the operation of that Court in civil cases.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). A great deal has been said about the satisfaction the Supreme Court has given to the whole country; and the hon. member for Montreal West (Mr. Gault) says it has given general satisfaction to the commercial community he represents. I do not propose to attack the jurisdiction of that Court over commercial matters. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) says that if we remove civil cases from the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, nothing will be left. If the Bill passed, the Court would still have jurisdiction over all cases connected with the regulation of trade and commerce; the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation; navigation and shipping; sea coast and inland fisheries; forries between a Province and any British or foreign country, or between two Provinces; currency and coinage; banking, incorporation of banks, and the issue of paper money; savings banks; weights and measures; bills of exchange and promissory notes; interest; legal tender; bankruptcy and insolvency; patents of invention and discovery; copyrights; marriage and divorce; all matters relating to the criminal law; federal railways; and all classes of subjects as are not assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Brooks) stated that only three civil cases from the Province of Quebec had been decided by the Supreme Court. I find, however, that during 1877, 1878, 1879 and a portion of 1880, eight civil cases from the Province of Quebec were decided by that Court. But even these figures show that the removal of civil causes will not materially affect the business or usefulness of the Court. The hon. Minister of Justice asks me to cite a single instance in which injustice has been done. I will call attention to one case—that of Johnson vs. the Minister and Trustees of St. Andrew's Church, Montreal—in regard to which great dissatisfaction existed with the decision of the Court. The judgment of the Superior Court was confirmed by the Court of Appeal in Montreal, and it was reversed by three Judges of the Supreme Court, the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Strong dissenting. That is one instance, and there is no doubt there will be other instances of the same kind. The hon. member for Sherbrooke also says this Court was established by a large majority in 1875. What an argument. Did not the hon. gentleman vote for a protective tariff which had been condemned by a majority of the last Parliament? I am surprised that a member of the Bar of his standing should use such an argument seriously before this House. The hon. member for Victoria also states that it is impossible that we should have one rule for the Province of Quebec, and another for the rest of the Dominion. It would be better to have a special rule for the Province of Quebec than to do an act of injustice to that Province. We are not making that rule; we are only fulfilling the provisions of the British North America Act, which secured us our civil rights and our civil law. I trust that this Bill will receive its second reading, if not this evening, at least at a later period of the Session. I have such a strong feeling on the subject that if I fail now I will bring forward this Bill as long as I represent a county of the Province of Quebec in this Parliament. I will bring it up again next Session unless the Government fulfil the promise made last Session by the leader of the Government, to remodel that Court so as to make it satisfactory to the Province of Quebec. Even at the expense of diminishing the confidence of the people in that Court, the Province of Quebec cannot be silent on this matter. I hope, however, that by next Session justice will be given to us, and that the Government will be prepared to bring in such a measure as will restore the confidence of the people of Quebec in the Court of final resort.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is impossible that this debate can close to-night. The subject is too important, embraces too many considerations, and has not received that full and exhaustive discussion which it calls for. I am, therefore, going to move the adjournment of the debate. I would say to my hon. friends that it is quite true that the Government are liable to the charge of not carrying out what they promised to do, that is, to investigate this subject and to endeavor to remove the difficulties or the objections that are raised, chiefly, if not altogether, in the Province of Quebec. I am not one who would at all minimize the difficulties of the question. I showed that when I was Minister of Justice in a former Government. On two occasions I brought in a Supreme Court Bill, but after the measures were laid on the Table for discussion, the objections raised against it from the Province of Quebec, the extreme difficulty of constituting a tribunal that would meet the case of Quebec, which has a separate system of law and organization, and added to that the difficulty arising from difference of language, these difficulties were so great that they deterred me, and the Government of which I was a member, from legislative action on the matter. The succeeding Government introduced the present measure and carried it into effect. Almost immediately after, there came from Quebec a murmur of dissatisfaction. I do not attribute so much importance to the language question as my hon. friend from the city of Ottawa (Mr. Tassé). He says that he understands that Lower Canadian lawyers who come here and speak English as imperfectly as he did, found great difficulty in making themselves understood. If they spoke English as well as my hon. friend, I think his argument is knocked on the head. On the other hand, all the counsel of Lower Canada who have really attained any position in the profession can speak English just as well as my hon. friend. The chief objection is, that Lower Canada has got a Court of Appeal, Queen's Bench, and a Superior Court Bench composed of Lower Canadian lawyers skilled in the law of Lower Canada, and there is naturally a greater feeling of confidence in the Court of Appeal than in the Supreme Court. That is a difficulty to be overcome some way or other, by which the Bench of the Supreme Court can be strengthened in such a way as to give confidence to the Bar of Lower Canada. In the hope of being able to solve that difficulty, the Government agreed to look into the subject during the last recess. Various causes, including the absence of myself, prevented our carrying out that intention, and so far we have not been able to come to any solution that would be satisfactory to the Bar of Lower Canada. We must, however, address ourselves to that subject, and I will again state to my hon. friend that during the recess the Government will take the question into its serious consideration, and if they do not, after giving it their best consideration, individually and collectively, work out a satisfactory solution,

Mr. GIBOUARD (Jacques Cartier).

Government will be prepared to form a commission in which the Bar of Lower Canada will be strongly represented to see if a satisfactory solution cannot be arrived at. I have heard the statements made by the hon. member for Joliette, and I must compliment my hon. friend on his able speech. His first speech being so successful, I hope that he will not remain silent hereafter. My hon. friend from Joliette stated that he had no desire to prevent the other Provinces from enjoying this Court if they choose, so long as Quebec was exempt from it. I am sure we are unable to do that. We must either repeal the Court altogether, or it must apply to all the Provinces. The British North America Act provides: "Parliament may, from time to time, provide for the constitution, maintenance and organization of a General Court of Appeal of Canada." That is the sole power that is given us to form a General Court of Appeal for Canada. I do not think we would be carrying out either the letter or spirit of the Act if we made the Court for a certain portion of Canada only. We must make up our minds to abolish the Court altogether, or to maintain it, making such alterations, according to the spirit of this Act, as will make it satisfactory to the Province of Quebec. Whether it may be by appointing a certain number of Judges ad hoc from the Bench or Bar of Lower Canada, to strengthen the Court in cases coming from Lower Canada, or by some other scheme, I am not able to say, but if the Court is to be maintained, a solution must be found to remove the dissatisfaction which exists, at all events, among the Franco-Canadians of Lower Canada. I am not at all prepared to vote for the abolition of the Court. It would be unjust to the other Provinces who desire to have a Court of Appeals. And the Court having been once established, it is practically impossible to remove that appellate jurisdiction and send all the litigants, be their claims large or small, important or unimportant, across the water 3,000 miles, to submit their cases to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The case, however, has not been fully discussed. There is one hon. gentleman in this House, whom I know this House is anxious to hear, and from whose remarks they will receive equal pleasure and instruction—I allude especially to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. Other hon. gentlemen who have taken great interest in this subject, will also be enabled to throw additional light on it. I am, of course, quite well aware that it involves the possibility of the measure getting through this Session. Of course everybody understands that; but whether or not, I am quite sure that even if the majority of the House will adopt the principle of the Bill so far as to give it a second reading, that such is the state of the business and the impatience of members on both sides to get home, that it would be impossible to give it the third reading this Session. Therefore I am not throwing any impediment in the way of my hon. friend by moving the adjournment of the debate. I will not say he will get another day, but if an opportunity should arise for the continuance of the discussion I should be very glad, because the more it is continued the more will it enable the Government to understand more fully the general impression of the House on the subject. As my hon. friend from Lambton, from indisposition, is unable to be in his place to-night, and we were discussing the item for railways and canals, in which he takes special interest, if it be the will of the House to sit late to-morrow night and the night after, in order to dispose of the Estimates as fast as possible, I move that the debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock, midnight,) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

THURSDAY, 10th March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

EMIGRATION AGENTS IN CANADA.

Mr. ORTON, in introducing Bill (No. 88) to prevent agents of foreign railways and others from holding out inducements to persons to emigrate from Canada, said: It is well known that in every city, town and village in this country at the present day there are agents of American railway and land companies, who are engaged in persuading the people of Canada to leave. Emigrants coming from the old country, as a great many did last year, especially of the tenant farmer class, are, in consequence of the inducements offered, led to leave this country. Very deceptive inducements are held out. I have myself heard of a tenant farmer who, coming into my county from England, was induced to go to the United States by the operations of American agents at Toronto, and obtaining a free pass to look at the country; but he found when he got there that he was grossly deceived and returned to Canada. The fact is that immigrants from Europe are very much inclined to go in the direction where a free pass is given them, and as our agents in this country cannot offer free passes to those coming from the old country, immigrants are led to go from Canada to the United States. Many men occupying very high positions, and possessing wealth and influence, are engaged in this nefarious practice. I know such men in my own county who are now engaged as agents of American land companies, simply because they can make a little money out of it. I think such men should be denounced as traitors to our country. I believe men who have succeeded in Canada, and obtained wealth here by the aid of their fellow countrymen, are certainly acting very unfairly and unjustly toward their country and fellow countrymen when they use their influence against the welfare of the Dominion. The object of the Bill is to punish, by imprisonment and fine, all persons engaged in such practices, except by permission of the Governor in Council, so that the Government will have a controlling power over those engaged in this business; and if it is thought advisable to allow them to continue, they might be compelled to do so on equitable grounds. In all probability our large railway corporations, especially the new Syndicate, will desire to employ agents in the United States, and thus, to some extent, counteract the evils from which we are now suffering from agents being employed in Canada by American railway and land companies. I think this Bill will control the business in a proper and legitimate way.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Of course, until we have the Bill it is difficult to say what to make of it, but as it includes others besides railway agents I am inclined to support it, because the parties who have offered the chief inducements to people to leave Canada are hon. gentlemen on the Ministerial benches, and any motion of this kind that can be made to apply to them ought to have the support of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I dare say we have been encouraging and holding out inducements to the people to leave old Canada and go to the North-West, but we have not been encouraging an exodus from Canada.

EXTORTIONATE RATES OF INTEREST.

Mr. McCUAIG, in introducing Bill (No. 89) to relieve borrowers from the payment of extortionate rates of interest, said: Last Session we passed an Act that the rate of interest payable on the amount of the mortgage should appear on the face of the mortgage. This Act was passed because it was discovered loan companies took advantage of the ignorance of borrowers, to make them pay a larger rate of interest than they supposed they were to be charged, by adding the interest calculated on the principal for a number of years, and then rendering the whole repayable by instalments as principal. This Bill I now introduce aims to protect the borrower against this extortion, by giving him power to recover the excess of interest already paid, and to secure him against a repetition of this extortion in the future, by declaring the rate of 8 per cent. shall be the highest rate he will require to pay.

165

Bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

The following Bills were introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 90) to remove doubts as to the power to imprison with hard labor under the Act 32 and 33 Victoria, Chap. 28 and the Act 37 Victoria, Chap. 43, respecting Vagrants.—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou.)

Bill (No. 91) to prescribe an oath to be taken by employes on Telegraph lines under control of the Government.—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou.)

Bill (No. 92) to wind up Insolvent banks and other incorporated companies.—(Mr. McDonald, Pictou.)

Bill (No. 93) to amend the Inland Revenue Act, 1880—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Mousseau.)

Bill (No. 94) to explain and amend the Canada Temperance Act of 1878—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Ouimet.)

CUSTOMS ACTS.

Mr. BOWELL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 78) to amend the Act 40 Victoria, Chap. 10, entitled: "An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the Customs."

Bill read the second time.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). On looking over the Bill, I find there is one section of the Act of 1877 which does not seem to be noticed in it. By the 50th section of the Statute of 1877, there seems to be some difference of opinion as to what really the meaning of the Act is. I submit this would be a very proper time to declare what the law on that subject is. The 50th section of the Act provides as follows:—

"The collector shall cause at least one package in every invoice, and at least one package in ten if there be more than ten in any invoice, and so many more as he or any appraiser deems it expedient to examine for protection of the revenue, to be sent to the warehouse, and there to be opened, examined and appraised.—the packages to be so opened being designated by the collector: and if any packages found to contain any goods not mentioned in the invoice, such goods shall be absolutely forfeited, and if any goods are found which do not correspond with the description thereof in the invoice, and such omission or non-correspondence appears to have been made for the purpose of avoiding payment of the duty or of any part of the duty on such goods, or if in any invoice or entry any goods have been undervalued with such intent as aforesaid, or if the oath made with regard to any such invoice or entry is wilfully false in any particular—then, in any of the clauses aforesaid, all the packages and goods included or pretended to be included, or which ought to have been included in such invoice or entry, shall be forfeited."

I understand this section is being construed to mean that in no case has the Minister of Customs any discretion whatever, and to illustrate more forcibly what I mean, I propose to put a case, one that has actually occurred and has been brought to the notice of the Minister of Customs. A merchant in Hamilton purchased a quantity of goods in the city of New York, for the purpose of sorting up his stock. He was not able to get all he required in the establishment, and was obliged to go to another, to make a few purchases amounting to some $35 or $40. He instructed the merchant from whom he purchased the first lot of goods, to send the invoice on to his warehouse in Hamilton; and after purchasing the second lot, he instructed that merchant to do the same thing, but to send the goods, as there was only one parcel, and that, I believe, a small one, to the warehouse of the merchant from whom he made the first purchase, and have them all enclosed in the same case and sent on to Hamilton. The goods were packed up at the second establishment and sent to the first merchant, for the purpose of being enclosed in the case; but through a mistake or carelessness, the second merchant did not forward his invoice to Hamilton. The invoice of the first merchant arrived in that city; but the purchaser himself had not reached home, and his book-keeper or invoice clerk went to the Custom house and presented his invoice, and made the entry, being perfectly unaware that the second purchase, the smaller one, was included in any of the packages that had arrived at the Custom house. On examination, the Customs authorities found that some of the goods in the case were not contained in the invoice. Properly enough, under the law, they seized the goods. A representation was made to the authorities of the real facts of the case, and, to my mind, evidence beyond question was afforded to show it was entirely an error, and that that error was occasioned by the second merchant not having forwarded his invoice to Hamilton as directed by the purchaser. That matter was laid before the Commissioner of Customs here, and before the hon. Minister of Customs; but he held that he had no discretion in the matter; that, although there may have been no fault in the purchaser, and a mistake, which was patent, yet the hon. Minister held he had no discretion, and this man's goods were forfeited. I hold that the law does not bear the construction put upon it by the hon. Minister. At all events, it is very doubtful if it does. But, if it be the case that he has no discretion in cases of this kind, this may be a proper time to declare what the meaning of the law is, and to make it clear, that men should not be deprived of their goods, except in cases where fraud is intended, or an attempt has been made to defraud the revenue. In the case I submit, the evidence was most conclusive to satisfy the mind of every impartial man, that a mistake had occurred, and in the way I describe. Yet, according to the hon. Minister's decision, he had no discretion in the matter, and the man lost his goods. I submit that since it is proposed to amend the Customs Act, that section fifty should have its intended meaning declared by this Act, if it is not already clear enough. Because I confess it is an outrageous business that, if a mistake has occurred in the way I have mentioned, there is no redress for the importer. It has been said, and I have no doubt of it, that a great many frauds have been and are perpetrated, and that attempts are continually being made to defraud the revenue. But because one, two or half-a-dozen or more frauds have been committed, that should not be the rule that should govern, if there really has been a mistake. And if it is held the Minister has no discretion in him—that, according to the words of the Statute, the goods should be absolutely forfeited merely because they happened to be in that case—I submit, in the interest of fair dealing, and in the interest of importers and all honest men, the law should be amended so as to make quite clear what it really is. I hope the hon. Minister will consider the matter, and say whether this is not the proper time to amend the law in the direction in which I suggest.

Mr. BOWELL. The point raised by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) has nothing whatever to do with the clause under discussion. Nor do I propose to amend the Mr. Robertson (Hamilton).

clause in the Customs Act to which he has referred. It may be a question for the House, if the hon. gentleman thinks proper that it should be changed, to take the sense of the House upon it. But it is a grave question whether the law, as it exists, should not be continued upon the Statute-book. It is quite true that a mistake may occur in regard to an honest importer who has no intention whatever of defrauding the revenue; but if those enclosures are to be given up at the will of any Minister, or on the representations of any member of Parliament, who may beseech him to do so, it is a very grave question, whether the law would have the effect its framers intended. There is only one package in every ten, under the law, that it is necessary to examine. It is true you can examine every package; but to do so would require an additional staff at every port. Those who have been connected with the Customs Department and the administration of that law, need not be told what an opportunity would be offered importers desirous of defrauding the revenue, by the placing of packages inside other goods. It constantly arises, and the only way to put a stop to it is to require purchasers of goods to make those from whom they buy understand that unless the invoice accompanies the goods in the packages, or instructions be sent also to the parties interested, that the goods are enclosed in such package, that the goods will be subject to seizure. In no case since I have undertaken the administration of the affairs of the department, have I allowed the confiscation of the goods so enclosed, if the merchant has informed the collector that he expected certain goods to arrive—that he had instructed the parties from whom he had purchased to enclose them with another purchase from another house, and was not aware whether they were so enclosed or not, but that if they were, he expected his invoice to that effect. But I tell the House that this system of enclosure is so common that, in order to protect the revenue from being defrauded of large sums every day, the present system has to be maintained. It is only the other day, that in a certain port in Ontario a large consignment of moss, I think for the filling or stuffing of chairs, was imported. The article itself was free, but the collector thought he would examine the package, and in the centre of which he found a large amount of dutiable articles. The importer in that case says at once that the goods are not his, and he abandons them. In other cases they tell us that it is a mistake; that Mr. So-and-So has sent the parcel to another gentleman, who purchased goods; he enclosed it in the package and has failed to send the invoice. The Customs officers cannot ascertain the facts until the bale is examined by the appraisers of the department. In my experience of two years, I have only found a few, some two importers in the whole country, who came forward and explained to the collector that certain goods were enclosed in packages which were not examined. I have no hesitation in saying that in cases where no intimation is made of these enclosures in packages, I think the law should be strictly carried out; but, in cases in which the collector is informed by importers that parcels have been imported in that way, my instructions have been to allow the entry to be amended, and no forfeiture of the goods. In the case to which my hon. friend (Mr. Robertson) has referred, though I do not, for a moment, doubt the honesty of the hon. gentleman in question, yet, if I recollect aright, none of the explanations given were anything more than the simple representations of the parties, unaccompanied by affidavits setting forth the facts.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). My hon. friend is mistaken. There were affidavits sworn to not only by the importer but by the exporter.

Mr. BOWELL. I spoke simply from recollection, and no doubt the hon. gentleman is correct. But there is one marvellous thing about these mistakes, if mistakes they are, and that is, that they are seldom or ever discovered unless by the appraiser of the department. This hon. gentleman having raised the question, I have informed the House of the manner in which I administer the law, and I do not think any lawyer in the House will venture to say that my interpretation is incorrect.

Mr. BURPEE. I agree with the Minister of Customs that it would be an unwise thing to strike out this section of the Act, or alter it in the way suggested by the hon. member for Hamilton. This provision of the law is one which has been in force long before Confederation; and there is no doubt that the practice of enclosing parcels in packages is a very common evasion of the law. If the law should be modified so as to admit evidence that these enclosures were mistakes, great difficulty would be experienced in carrying out the regulations of the department. The way of obviating the difficulty would be for importers to inform the exporters with whom they deal, of the nature of the law. No doubt there are many provisions in the Customs Law which appear somewhat harsh, but such provisions are necessary to prevent smuggling, and secure the efficient administration of the department.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I have no doubt that the statements of the last speaker are correct, and I agree with him that every care should be taken that the revenue may not be defrauded. But I cannot understand why we should have a law under which a man may be mulcted in heavy damages because a mistake has been made by persons over whom perhaps he has no control. The facts in this case have all been verified by the affidavits of the parties who knew the facts, and these affidavits were furnished to the Minister of Customs. Instructions were given, when this enclosure, as we may term it, was sent to Hamilton that a duplicated invoice of the goods should be forwarded so that entry could be made. The gentleman purchasing the goods was away from home—at Boston, I think,—when the goods and the invoice arrived before the purchaser returned. The firm in Hamilton having no intimation that they were purchased from different firms in New York, since only one set of invoices arrived, concluded that these invoices covered all the goods in the case, and the entry clerk went to the Custom house, made the entry, and paid the duty. The case was opened, and this parcel was found with the goods. When the merchant arrived home, which was I think the next day, he was astonished at the circumstances, and asked for the invoice of the enclosed package, which had not arrived, and nobody knew anything about it. No one in the establishment knew that this second purchase had come from another house at all. This explanation was made to the Customs, and affidavits were then furnished by that person in New York, who forwarded the enclosure to be packed in the case, and who swore in that affidavit that he had been instructed to forward duplicate invoices to Hamilton, but from some inadvertence or neglect they had been laid aside and had not been sent forward until he afterwards forwarded them after the seizure had taken place. Now, in this case, it was a very great misfortune to the importer who, not by any trick, not by any carelessness of his, not by any attempted fraud to deprive the revenue of a single farthing, loses these goods because, by reason of this law, they became absolutely forfeited as soon as they were discovered in the Custom house. I submit that if it is reasonable that the Minister of Customs should have discretionary power with reference to other goods contained in a case, and which were not in the enclosure, I cannot understand why he should not have the same discretion with reference to the enclosure itself; because before he could order that the goods which were properly entered should be released, he would have to make up his mind that there was no fraud intended when the enclosure was sent off and the entry was not made, otherwise the whole of the goods under this Statute would be liable to forfeiture. He exercises his discretion with reference to the goods entered and contained in the case, but he has no discretion with reference to a smaller parcel which is contained in the case, and which may be called an enclosure. I think, therefore, it is right and just that the law should be amended in that respect. It may be that it will give the Minister of Customs a little more trouble. Yet I am not certain that it would even do that, because he is in duty bound to investigate cases, to the extent, at all events, to know whether any fraud was intended before he can release any of the goods, and if the investigation is satisfactory he can release all the goods except the enclosure. Then if he is satisfied the goods entered should be released, he must be satisfied that no fraud was intended in sending the enclosure in the way in which it was, ergo I submit that the whole goods should be released so that there would be no more trouble.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman must not suppose that the trouble originates in the department. I can assure him that the easiest possible mode of getting out of all these troubles, is just to give up the goods, by which the Minister would be relieved of constant complications to reverse his decision by importers and members of Parliament.

Bill reported as amended, amendment concurred in, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. BOWELL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 83) further to amend the Act respecting certain Savings Banks in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and to continue for a limited time the charters of certain banks to which the said Act applies.

Bill read the second time.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I presume that the attention of the Finance Minister has been called to the fact that this Bill, as amended, permits these banks to lend money on the security of the stocks of ordinary banks. That, as the hon. gentleman is aware, is a power which has been grossly abused and which may and probably will be grossly abused in the future, and if his object is to have regard to the security of depositors it would seem proper that some restrictions should be put on such a power, if it is to be continued.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They have that authority under the Act at present, and there is no provision to prevent them from exercising it. The Government have given the matter their consideration as there is no doubt depositors in these banks run some risk; but savings banks are debarred from investing in the same kind of securities as other banks. As they are subject to calls, perhaps for large sums at short notice, they cannot invest in securities that are not immediately redeemable. Under these circumstances, the Government allowed these banks to retain the power they have.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Would it not be well to limit it?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is limited, because a certain portion of their funds must be invested in other ways.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. No doubt many bank stocks are admirable securities, but they fluctuate very considerably. For instance, the Bank of Montreal today is ruling at about 180, whereas, about eighteen months ago it ruled at 125. It is quite conceivable that the intention of the Legislature to give extra securities to depositors may be entirely defeated. Men may pledge these securities with an extremely small margin, and there are banks whose standing is not by any means equal to that of the Bank of Montreal. It is for the hon. gentleman to consider whether these banks should not be restricted in some way, whether they should be allowed to lend as much as they see fit on the present market value.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If the gentlemen who manage these institutions act indiscreetly, there is no provision to prevent them from suffering loss. It is true bank stocks are higher now than they have been, and it is a question whether circumstances might not arise to render desirable a reduction in their value. That is a matter for the directors, and one which I fear we cannot control by legislation.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.—THE TARIFF.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to make a few observations upon a subject on which, even at this late period of the Session, it is necessary, in my opinion, that we should record our votes. I shall not enter into the question at that length at which, under more propitious circumstances, it would be my desire to speak. But I shall, in the briefest possible way, bring before you the considerations which lead me to the conclusions embodied in the motion I mean to place in your hands. That motion has reference to the burden of taxation under which this country is at present laboring. I desire to point out to you that before the late general election the members of the present Government, then in Opposition, declared to the people, whose suffrages they were soliciting, that the scale of expenditure which had been adopted by the dissolved Parliament, under the advice of the late Government, was needlessly extravagant; that the Government were censurable for having proposed such a scale of expenditure; that a scale of expenditure very considerably under the mark which was reached by that Government was all that this country would have required; that while the expenditure in 1877-78 was $23,500,000, it ought not to have exceeded $22,500,000; that a revenue of $13,000,000 from Customs and $5,000,000 from Excise was all this country required to carry on the public service of the country. I desire to point out that they declared they would not increase, but would only readjust the Tariff, and that it was in consequence of those allegations as to what the scale of expenditure of the late Government was, as to what the needs of the country in the way of revenue were, as to what would be a sufficient Customs and Excise revenue, and as to what their intentions with respect to the Tariff were, that they obtained the confidence of the people of Canada. I want to read one or two proofs of these allegations. I refer, first of all, to the statement of the First Minister, so often quoted, who, in replying to a telegram from the present Senator Boyd, to this effect:

"The Government press here state that you propose to raise the Tariff generally to 35 per cent. Can I contradict this?"
Sent this answer, under date July 19th:

"It is an absurd falsehood. Neither at London, or elsewhere, have I gone beyond my motion in Parliament, and have never proposed an increase, but only a readjustment of the Tariff."

I desire to point out that the Minister of Finance, then seeking the suffrages of the people of St. John, contrasting very much to his own advantage his financial feats with those of my hon. friend beside me (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), used, in a speech which he delivered there, and the report of which I take from his organ, the Sun newspaper, these expressions:

"I am now going to touch upon a delicate question, and I am well aware that I will be held responsible in Parliament for any expression of opinion that I may now give. If I had been in Parliament I would not have voted for increasing the duty on the non-enumerated articles from fifteen per cent. to seventeen and a-half. The Government supporters have been spreading the report all through the Dominion that the policy of Sir John A. Macdonald and his followers is to increase the taxes of the country. It has been stated that Sir John even named the rate to which he proposed to increase the Tariff at thirty-five per cent. No such idea ever entered into his head or any of his followers. The Tariff is always governed by the necessities of the country. It requires about $13,000,000 yearly from customs duties, and $5,000,000 from excise, to carry on the ordinary public services of the country. How best and most judiciously to levy this is the question for the Government of the day to consider. I do not think this amount is equitably levied at present, and, therefore, I am in favor of a re-adjustment of the tariff, which will render the tax equitable to all classes of the people throughout the Dominion. But this word re-adjustment does not suit our opponents. If you support the Opposition, they say, you will vote for increased taxation. This cry that is now raised about increased taxation reminds me of an incident which occurred during the Confederation campaign. A gentleman, who was opposed to Confederation, went into a house during his canvass, and patting a fine boy on the head, said, 'You do not wish this boy to go to fight the battles of Canada.' That settled the matter. We want no increased taxation, but we do want the taxes properly imposed."

I read again from the report of the hon. gentleman's nomination speech in St. John:

"He would now come to the question of taxation, which was an important one in the present election. If a supporter of his was met by a Government man, he was told that the Opposition proposed putting a duty on flour, coal, etc., and increasing taxation greatly. When Mr. Burpee made the assertion that he (the speaker) was in favor of a reciprocal tariff with the United States, Mr. Burpee stated what he had no right to say, as he (the speaker) had never made any statement of the kind. Had the Government of which he was a member, been in power during the last five years, he was satisfied the average expenditure would not have exceeded $22,500,000, whereas it had reached $24,000,000. It would have been the duty of the Government before levying additional taxation, to have ascertained what reductions could be made in the expenditure, and had the present Government acted on this principle they would have only been carrying out their declared policy while in Opposition; but they took no such course, and abandoned another plank in their platform. In fact, instead of decreasing they largely increased the expenditure, for which course they are justly censurable."

Now, Sir, I have proved, I think, the propositions which I stated, namely, that hon. gentlemen opposite declared the scale of expenditure in 1878 was too high and ought to be reduced; that they declared that $13,000,000 of Customs and $5,000,000 of Excise, or $18,000,000 in all, from those sources would suffice; that the only question was how those $18,000,000 could be obtained from Customs and Excise most equitably; and that they declared they would not increase, but only readjust the Tariff. I need not say those pledges have all been broken. The Government have very largely increased the rate of taxation, and it is unnecessary to do more for my purpose than to refer to the Trade and Navigation Returns of the year, which, although the contrast there given is not a fair one to my view, although it operates unfavorably to my view, I will, for the purpose of this argument, to simplify and briefly state the case, assume to be correct, and they will show that the taxation for the year 1878 was $14.3 on the imports of articles imported for consumption, while it is for the last year $19.70 on the same class, being an increase of over 40 per cent., or two-fifths on the burdens on importations. Well, an excuse was necessary for this deviation from the election pledges, and that excuse has been given in this sense: that it is true those pledges were broken, but that fault was not the fault of the Government, but that of my hon. friend beside me (Sir Richard J. Cartwright). I will not endeavor to paraphrase that excuse; I prefer to read it in the language of the Minister of Finance himself, in the speech he delivered in November last in Stratford. Referring to the speech of the ex-Finance Minister, he said:

"In the Session previous to the election, when he brought down his Estimates, he stated that the receipts from Customs this year would be $13,750,000, and the receipts from Excise $5,200,000, making altogether $19,000,000 in the way of Customs and Excise revenue. Accepting Sir

Richard's statement, we believe that all was necessary for the country was simply a readjustment of the Tariff so as to give protection to the industries of Canada; and we said so. But what turned out to be the fact? The revenue from Customs was so far below the estimate for the first six months of the year, that had it not been that after March we increased the Tariff so as to get a large revenue, we would only have collected $12,000,000 for the year, the receipts of which from Customs he estimated would be $13,750,000. Then again, with regard to the Excise duties, the receipts were below the estimate, and had it not been for the changes he made in the Tariff there would have been a deficiency of $1,750,000 from Customs revenue and of 500,000 from Excise as compared with Sir Richard J. Cartwright's estimates, or a difference between the actual receipts and the Estimates, of $2,025,000. Had the Tariff of the late Government produced what Sir Richard estimated it would have produced from Customs and Excise, my duty as Finance Minister would have been light, and all the Government would have had to do would have been to readjust the Tariff, so as to save a very much greater revenue, but so as to give encouragement to our then struggling industries, and to assist in the introduction of new ones. But in the face of the fact that Sir Richard J. Cartwright's Tariff produced $2,025,000 less than he had estimated, in the face of the successive deficits bordering on $2,000,000 a year, it became the imperative duty of the Government to prevent further deficits by adding $2,500,000 to our revenue—a proceeding which the people would prefer to the sacrificing of the honor and credit of our country. On this question of increased taxation let me draw your attention to one point. It is this: I have never seen or heard that any leading members of the Opposition have ever ventured to say in addressing their audiences, that the additional taxation which they denounced was not necessary in order to make the receipts cover the expenditure. I say this, my friends, in defence of the leader of the Government, who sent the telegram to New Brunswick, and I say in my own defence, because in addressing my constituents on our Tariff question I told them that it was a readjustment of the Tariff that we proposed, in saying which there was no gross deception in the matter. The only mistake we made was that we placed reliance on Sir Richard J. Cartwright's estimates, and we should not have done that after our five years' experience of him.

I do not intend to enter into a discussion as to the accuracy of the hon. Finance Minister's estimates and of those of my hon. friend beside me (Sir Richard J. Cartwright), respectively. I think that, at the proper time, a very instructive comparison could be made on the subject, but this is not the time at which it is necessary to make it. This excuse which I have read in full does not answer the facts as they stand to-day. A very much lower Tariff, it is quite obvious, would in a reasonably prosperous state of affairs in the country, have produced a revenue adequate to a reasonable scale of expenditure. What are the facts? As I have said, the hon. Finance Minister stated in July and September, 1878, that $13,000,000 from Customs and $5,000,000 from Excise, or a total of $18,000,000 from these two sources, would be adequate to meet the ordinary public service of the country. What is the hon. gentleman, according to his financial statement, levying for the current and the next financial year?—for in dealing with this matter we are bound to consider the state of the Public Accounts for these two years. We are, in fact, dealing with the subject for two years. He is levying in each year, $17,000,000, instead of $13,000,000, from Customs and $600,000, instead of $5,000,000, from Excise—$22,600,000 from Customs and Excise, instead of $18,000,000, or $4,600,000 more than he said in 1878 was necessary for the public service of this country. He has levied for the two years, $9,200,000 more than he said was necessary for the public service so short a time ago as 1878. Why is he doing so? Well, his reason is that the expenditure has increased; because, instead of $22,500,000 which he declared to be the proper scale, the scale at which his Government, had it been in power during the five years in which it was not in power, would have kept the expenditure, he is to spend $25,575,000 for the current year, or over $3,000,000 in excess of his estimate in 1878; because, instead of the $22,500,000 he is to spend $26,389,000 for the approaching financial year, or $3,889,000 over his estimate in 1878. I do not mean to say that there would not have been some increase in the expenditure; on the contrary I say the hon. gentleman was not fair, or just, or candid in his representation with reference to the expenditure. I do not endorse his estimate, but he is bound by it. As he said in his speech, he touched a delicate subject, because he knew he would be held responsible in Parliament. I admit the hon. gentleman ought to have stated that there would be a certain increase, though very much less than that which has occurred. But even making all allowance for a reasonable share of increase, these resolutions go beyond the hon. gentleman's estimate by nearly $7,000,000 in two years. They go beyond the actual scale of expenditure of 1877-78—that scale which the hon. gentleman said was needless and extravagant, and in respect to which the Government of that day was censurable—by nearly $5,000,000 for the two years. But that is not enough. Even the hon. gentleman fails to exhaust the burden of taxation which he has imposed on the country; even the hon. gentleman fails to make revenue and expenditure square in the way in which he appears desirous of making them balance, namely, by increasing the expenditure until it equals the revenue. Even these efforts, which a while ago he said were to be efforts to bring the rate of taxation to such a point, that the revenue would balance the expenditure, but which now seem to be efforts to raise the expenditure to such a point that it will balance the taxation, have failed; and he is left, according to the statement which he brings before the people and for which he asks their applause, face to face with the fact that this increased taxation which he was reluctantly driven to impose in order to make revenue and expenditure balance, is so excessive that it gives him a surplus of $2,000,000 this year, and will give him $1,400,000 surplus next year, or a total surplus of $3,400,000 for the two financial years. The hon. gentleman wants the people to believe that it is not their money that makes the surplus, that it is not out of their pockets the surplus comes. He wants to persuade the country that he coined it, that he dug it out of a hole in the ground, or found it in the napkin in which his predecessors had unfortunately hidden it, and has deposited it in the public Treasury. That is what he wants the country to believe, but the country will realize that it is out of their pockets the surplus comes, and that it is not a wonderful feat that when you levy a tax upon people you should get some money from them. But extravagant as is this increase of expenditure, the taxation is more than adequate to meet the increase. Even if you agree that all this increased expenditure ought to be incurred, you are still in a position in which the taxation ought to be reduced, because the people ought not to be burdened with more taxation than is adequate to meet their obligations. There is another reason why the taxation should be reduced. Such a surplus is apt to lead the Government, Parliament, and the people to extravagance, and because this is specially the case when we find an Administration attempting to persuade the people that the creation of a surplus, not by the reduction of expenditure, but by the increase of revenue made by increasing the burden of taxation, is an operation which does not hurt them, but confers a benefit on them not drawn from their own pockets. Foolish people, I admit, are apt to be persuaded sometimes that this is a windfall, that this large sum does not come out of their own pockets; and thus, in accordance with the policy of this Administration in former days, an era of further extravagance is to set in. It has already set in, for already the scale of expenditure has largely increased, and the existence of a surplus is the basis on which the Government proposes that the scale of expenditure should still further be increased. We shall find ourselves when the tide turns, as we previously found ourselves, in this situation, that permanent charges will have been made on our revenue which we will have to meet when our revenue will be at a low ebb. Permanent engagements will have been made on the faith of this extraordinary taxation which it will be extremely difficult to meet when this extraordinary taxation fails to produce such large results as during periods of prosperity. History will in this particular repeat itself. And thus it seems to me that the pledges of the Government, which were that an expenditure very much less than what they proposed would be adequate—which were that they would not increase the Tariff—which, later, were that they would only so adjust the Tariff as to make revenue and expenditure balance—should be kept, and that the fulfilment of these pledges as well as sound policy requires a reduction of taxation. I have not said a word about that portion of the taxation collected which does not fall into the public Treasury. I have confined myself to that, perhaps, small portion of the subject involved in the consideration of the public taxation—the burden upon the people from which they receive some benefit inasmuch as it falls into the public Treasury. I do not now desire to deal with details. I prefer to state the general principles which, I consider, should animate the Government and Parliament in dealing with this question. Those general principles are, that our increased taxation, increased, as it is, contrary to the pledges of those hon. gentlemen, and to a point to which it ought not to be increased, should be reduced at the moment it is possible to reduce it, and that in such reduction we should deal with those taxes that are most unequal, which bear hardest on the people of Canada, and which are least productive of revenue to the public exchequer. I beg to move :

That all the words after “that” be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—

The leaders of the present Government during the General Election of 1878, declared, that if restored to power, they would re-adjust, but not increase the Tariff.

That in 1879 they so increased the Tariff, that the average rate of taxation has been raised, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns from 14·03 per cent. in 1877-78, to 19·70 per cent. in 1879-80, or by over 40 per cent.

That the reason given for this departure from their Election pledges, was that the increase was required, in order to balance the public revenue and expenditure.

That the Government estimates the expenditure for the current fiscal year at $25,573,000, being $2,070,000 in excess of that for 1877-78, and the revenue for the current year at $27,586,000, being $2,013,000 in excess of the expenditure for the year, and $4,297,000 in excess of the expenditure for 1877-78.

That the Government estimates the expenditure for 1881-82 at $26,389,000, being $816,000 in excess of that for the current year, and $2,886,000 in excess of that for 1877-78; and the revenue at $27,800,000, being $1,411,000 in excess of the expenditure for the year, and $4,297,000 in excess of the expenditure for 1877-78.

That it is thus proposed to raise for the current and the next fiscal years a revenue of $55,386,000, being $3,424,000 in excess of the expenditure for those years, and $11,800,000 in excess of the expenditure, according to the scale of 1877-78.

That the rate of taxation is excessive and should be reduced; and in effecting such reduction regard should be had to those taxes, which press most severely on large masses of the population, which bear most unequally on different parts of the Dominion, and which, while most oppressive to the consumer, are least productive of revenue.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. From what took place before we separated last evening, I had supposed it was the desire of the hon. gentleman opposite, as it was part of an arrangement then interred into, that we should take up the Estimates this afternoon, in order to enable my hon. friend the leader of the late Government, to be present to discuss them. Therefore, I am somewhat thrown off my guard at present. Had I anticipated this motion at this stage, I would have been prepared with some statistics I had some days ago, supposing the motion would then be brought forward. But let me say that I thank the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) for having read my speech at Stratford. It will not now be necessary for me to repeat it. That speech was a justification of the course the Government had pursued, and that I as Finance Minister had found it necessary to pursue in the introduction of legislation in 1879, in consideration of my statements made in 1878. It is a well known fact that in 1878, the then Finance Minister estimated his revenue from Customs at $13,750,000. It is also known that for the first six months of the fiscal year—and there is a larger revenue from Customs receipts for the first six months than for the next six months—we received $6,070,000 as against the $13,750,000 which was estimated by my predecessor. Carrying out the estimate for the year, our Customs revenue would have been $12,000,000, which shows that there would have been a deficiency in that year, had the hon. gentlemen opposite remained in power and no change been made, of $1,750,000 in the receipts from Customs. The revenue from Excise would have been $500,000 less than the amount which the hon. gentleman estimated, and besides this the expenditure of that year, for which the present Administration are only responsible to the extent of $100,000, would have been $1,000,000 more than the amount estimated by the late Finance Minister, showing a difference between his estimates and his income for that year of $3,250,000. It has been asserted that many of us misled our constituents, with reference to our policy in regard to this matter, if we came into power. But Sir, we stated what we believed basing our belief upon the estimates made by the late Finance Minister; if his estimates of revenue and expenditure had been right there would have been no deficiency, and no necessity for increasing the Tariff in order to make up for what would have been a deficiency of $3,250,000 under the old Tariff. We had not only to readjust the Tariff but to make up for a deficiency, or what would have been a deficiency if hon. gentlemen opposite had remained in power, so that we had not only to readjust the Tariff but to increase the taxation. With reference to readjustment, nothing could be more fallacious than the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman that we increased the taxation because the trade returns show that the average duty collected in 1877-78 was something like 14 per cent., while the average at the present time is about 19 per cent. Does not the hon. gentleman know that the very fact of an imposition of a duty on breadstuffs diminished the imports of these articles from the United States by millions of dollars?

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman says “hear, hear;” but if he looks at the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick he will find that, under the old Tariff, we had a very large importation of American breadstuffs free of duty—some of them passing through the country, though entered for consumption, because there was no duty—and all these amounts went to swell the volume of the importation from the United States during those years, and of course to diminish the percentage of the revenue. At present, of course, these goods pass through the country in bond, and do not appear as if entered for consumption as they did before, and as the hon. gentleman knows very well by adding the amount of these imports and applying the Tariff which was in force in past years, the percentage of the amount collected will be very materially changed. It is well enough for the hon. gentleman, who has moved the resolution, to say, that you would think, from the credit which the Government are taking for the surplus, that it did not come out of the pockets of the people but out of their own; but we know that the excuse given by hon. gentlemen opposite for the deficits of the late Government was that the people had the money in their pockets and had not paid it to the Government, so it is not surprising that these hon. gentlemen should not attach much importance to the fact of having a surplus. I was glad, however, to find that the hon. gentleman did admit that the increased taxation was met to a certain extent by the fact that the people of the Dominion will have to their credit in the Treasury a surplus of $3,500,000 this year and next to apply upon the redemption of their debt or for other public purposes, and that that amount must therefore be deducted from the increased taxation. The hon. gentleman goes on to compare the expenditure of 1873-74-75-76 with that of the present time, leaving out of sight the fact that these hon. gentlemen had increased the debt $40,000,000, for which interest and-sinking fund had to be provided. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that that fact ought not to be taken into account in making a comparison such as he has instituted? Does he pretend that the $18,000,000 expended on works for which hon. gentlemen opposite made contracts in connection with the Pacific Railway should have been expended by the present Administration, or that these works should not be proceeded with? The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the fact of having over 120 miles of the Grand Trunk Railway, and running it, adds to the expenses of the country, because the cost of running that road is added to the gross expenditure. So with regard to the Pembina Branch, though it is paying a surplus over expenses yet the amount of the expenses goes to swell the whole volume of the expenditure. Surely the hon. gentleman must know that the comparison he has made is not a fair and legitimate one. Has he forgotten that we are opening up the vast North-West Territories, and that we must necessarily be increasing our expenditure. The hon. gentleman ignores the fact that we are now working 120 miles of the Grand Trunk Railway, and between sixty and seventy miles of the Pembina Branch, besides our expenditure upon other public works, and he makes a comparison which he must know is not a correct representation of the facts. But we have another test by which we may judge how far the present Government are censurable for the increased taxation of the people of this country. When we are looking at the taxation of the people for the present year we must deduct $2,000,000 surplus, because that is the people's money and should be placed to their credit. As I stated in my Budget Speech, and no one has controverted or attempted to contradict it, I took the population for the year 1873-74 down to the present time, and I showed under this calculation, what the taxation per head of the population had been from the year 1873-74 down to the present time, and so pertinent to this consideration were the remarks I then made, that I will read them again to the House. They are as follows:—

"I take the increase of population under the census of 1871. It was about 12½ per cent. between 1861 and 1871, and I estimated about 12½ per cent. between 1871 and 1881. I divide that by ten, and adding one tenth to each year from 1871 down, showing the increase in the Provinces. Taking money necessarily collected from Customs and Excise for the purpose of paying the necessary expenditure of the country, we find it to be as follows, per head for the population:—1873-4 $5.01; 1874-5, $5.07; 1875-6, $5.22; 1876-7, $4.82; 1877-8, $4.71; 1878-9, $5.02; 1879-80, $4.87. * * * And under the estimated expenditure of the present year (1881), $4.98 as against $5.22 in 1875-76, and $5.07 in 1874-75. It must be borne in mind that between 1873-74 and the time when the present Government came into power, our debt was increased $40,000,000, and last year $18,000,000 were added, for which we are providing this year. Notwithstanding that it was $4.87 per head of the population last year, it is estimated this year it will be $4.98."

Notwithstanding the interest on the increased debt has been provided for, yet hon. gentlemen will ignore the fact that we increased our population, extended our country, built our railways and opened our canals, and when you deduct the surplus in the last year, you find you have less taxation per head of the population. The hon. gentleman comes down and asks for a reduction of the taxation, but he does not specify any particular items on which to make that reduction. What does he say? He deals in general terms in reference to it. What did I say to the House was the reason the Government felt they were not required at the present moment to diminish the taxation? We had seen indications that there was a possibility, and we hope there is a probability with reference to the matter before long, that we might return to that wise and judicious policy by which, in 1854, under the reciprocity treaty, coal, and lumber, and fish, and cattle, and everything of that kind should be exchanged, as it was then between the two countries. If that system were again introduced it would strike $1,500,000 off the revenue and remove the whole of the surplus of next year. Under the circumstances it was not thought desirable to reduce the taxation, as long as there was a prospect of anything of the kind occurring. Then, more than that, I said it was not possible for us at the present moment, though we had had the experience of the Tariff for twenty-one months, it was not possible yet to know the exact effect this was going to have in the diminution of the increased Tariff—whether the number of persons employed in the Dominion, in the various industries developed by this policy, would consume sufficient to replace the duty that would have been collected on the articles manufactured or not, and whether, under the circumstances, in the development of our coal trade, we might not, with reference to our soft coal, consume more largely than in the past, and reduce the revenue collected in that respect—perhaps it was under these circumstances, though we knew it would be acceptable to the House and the country, that we considered it desirable to delay for a year at all events before coming down, in view of the liabilities before us, and in view of the fact that for the construction of the Pacific Railway and for the canal contracts entered into years ago, requiring to be completed and which will be completed within the next year, that we must incur a debt of from $12,000,000 to $14,000,000 upon which we will have to pay interest. We thought, in view of these engagements, until we found the country prosperous and the revenue continuing to increase, that it would be best to delay for another year before we decided to reduce the taxation, and in the language I used in making my financial statement, that course would not damage the country in the meantime, and if at the close of two years we could show that we had from $3,500,000 to $4,000,000 surplus, that would be calculated to increase our credit and standing at home and abroad. Under these circumstances we did not feel justified in making a reduction, but we stand upon the broad principle to-day, that under the proposed expenditure for next year it is even less per head of the population, with $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 of debt added, for which we have to provide interest of a sinking fund, than the expenditure of hon. gentlemen opposite in 1874-75 and 1875-76. Under these circumstances I think we may rest perfectly satisfied, notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's protest and resolution, that the people will be content to bide their time for twelve months, to see whether the circumstances of the country will warrant us next Session in asking for a reduction.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not propose to detain the House for more than a few minutes to reply to some of the remarks which were made, more especially directed to myself, by the hon. Minister of Finance. I may say that I think, had that hon. gentleman been in the House during the five years which succeeded the—what shall I call it—lamentable events which led to the resignation of himself and his colleagues, he would hardly have ventured on the line of argument which we have heard to-day. We are told now by that hon. gentleman that within two or three years, such is the position of this country that very large increases are necessary to the annual expenditure which he so vigorously denounced, and which his friends so vigorously denounced while they were on the Opposition benches. What did he say then of the need in a country like this of progressive increases? What allowance was made to my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie), when, inheriting a legacy involving an expenditure, as the Minister states truly enough, perhaps, of $40,000,000, an expenditure inflicted upon my hon. friend's Government by the direct action of that hon. gentleman and his colleagues—what allowance was made to the late Government for the two or three million dollars additional expenditure, which was imposed upon us by the direct action of our predecessors, and in opposition to our repeated and most emphatic protests? I call on all those hon. gentlemen who had seats in the House during this time to point out, if they can, in these voluminous Hansards, one single speech made by hon. gentlemen—opposite, in which the smallest allowance was made to the late Government for all the increases caused by their own acts. The hon. gentleman has asserted that our expenditure per head of the population is less now than it was under my hon. friend's Administration. Why, Sir, I think there has been but very little increase indeed in the population since the year 1878. If you chose to describe the ascertained expenditure for 1877-78, which amounted to $23,500,000, by whatever figure the hon. gentleman pleases to represent the difference between the population in that year and the population this year, he will find, Mr. Speaker, that the annual expenditure, to-day, per head of the population of Canada, according to that hon. gentleman's estimate, will be one dollar per head more than it was on the ascertained expenditure of 1877-78. There is a plain and simple calculation. However, I am not admitting the ingenious plea of the hon. Minister, that the $2,000,000 surplus which he hopes to receive are to be deducted from the taxation of the people of Canada. That, Sir, is a remarkable conclusion. Let me point out to the hon. gentleman that our motion simply asks that $2,000,000 should be deducted from the taxation. Let it go back to the people to whom it belongs. The hon. gentleman made a mistake in his Estimates; he has asked for more than he says himself he required. My hon. friend (Mr. Blake) says: "If that be the case, let the people have the benefit of it. Let it go back to them. Let them enjoy the results of the increased prosperity with which Providence has blessed us; the increased exports which the hon. gentleman had done nothing at all to produce." The hon. gentleman finds fault with my hon. friend beside me, because, as he says, the trade returns were fallacious. It would be very easy for the hon. gentleman, whose Government brought down these trade returns, to have explained wherein they were fallacious. If the hon. gentleman will go back to the year 1874-75, he will see that my hon. friend took the worst year which he probably could have selected, from 1869 to 1878. In 1874 the total percentage was only 11.32, and in 1875, 12.83, so that my hon. friend, if he has erred at all, has erred in this, that he has taken a standard of comparison which was unfair to himself, unfair to his argument, and unfair to the late Administration, and he far more than compensated for any alteration in the trade returns caused by the fact to which the hon. gentleman referred, that a portion of the goods may have been entered for consumption in one year which were not, under the present system, entered in the other. The hon. gentleman spoke of my having been deceived in my estimates of revenue. As an old financier, he must know that estimates made eighteen months before they can be realized cannot be strictly accurate; they depend on a great variety of circumstances which neither he nor I, nor any man, can control. But I think he is incorrect in assuming that at present there is a large importation in the first half of the year, over that of the last year. That did occur, no doubt, to a great extent in former years; but of late years the tendency has been more and more to equalize, year by year, and half year by half year, the receipts from revenue, provided always that there be no unexpected disturbing occurrences to interfere with them. I entirely repudiate the hon. gentleman's assertion, that had my hon. friend continued to administer the affairs of this country, he would have found it necessary to expend $1,000,000 more than his estimates for the service of the year 1878-79. That was the doing of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, not ours. If I held the hon. gentleman responsible for the expenditure of 1873-74, it was because I was able to show, according to his own Estimates, according to the Statutes he himself had placed on the Statute-book, according to Orders in Council signed by himself, that he had provided for an expenditure larger by $90,000 than the sum we actually expended; whereas, in the other case, he never was able, and is not able now, to show that we had authorized any portion of this additional $1,000,000 to which he refers. According to the hon. gentleman's own statement at St. John, he required some $18,000,000 from Customs and Excise; he now has, he says, $22,500,000 or $23,000,000 at his disposal; and yet he refuses to make any reduction whatever. I should like him to show, if he can, how he can justify his action. When a sudden and extraordinary increase in our exports has induced a considerable return of prosperity, and has yielded larger imports than he could have calculated on, I say he is not justified in assuming that either he or his policy had anything to do with it, or in assuming that when a surplus had come he had a right to retain it. I admit that, if this had been gained by a policy which had increased, and largely increased, the burdens of the people, he might possibly have had some right to use the argument he lately used to the House. But when it is notorious to every man that this increased revenue has been obtained by enormous taxes, levied on those portions of our population who can the least afford to pay them, when every man knows that the taxes on those particular classes of goods which enter most largely into the consumption of the poorer classes of the population have been increased, not 40 per cent., as my hon. friend said, but 100 per cent. What does my hon. friend ask? He asks simply that the burdens of these classes of people should now be lessened. He does not attempt to dictate to the Government how they should do that; he leaves it to their own wisdom and humanity to relieve those starving people out of whom they have made a profit, as soon as that profit has been realized. Now, when they have $2,000,000 more revenue than they can possibly use, we ask that it be given back to the people to whom it properly belongs. We say that the experience of the whole 13 years which have elapsed since Confederation, go to show that if this be not returned, if the Government persist in expending this money which has come into their hands as a windfall they did not calculate upon, our expenditure will be going on increasing, until at the first reverse of trade that comes we shall find ourselves confronted with those problems with which my hon. friend and myself had to struggle during five years of unexampled depression. And I may remind the hon. gentleman that when he talks of the deficits of the late Government, be they what they may, they were enormously less than the deficits incurred during the Administration of his right hon. leader. I have proved again and again that his right hon. leader incurred deficits ten or twelve times greater than we incurred, and under circumstances far more favorable. It is well for the House to remember that while hon. gentlemen started with an annual expenditure of $13,500,000, the very first year they had an increase in the revenue, they used it to bring up their expenditure to $15,000,000; the year after to $17,500,000, the year after to $19,250,000, and finally to $23,500,000, besides leaving behind for us, legacies involving an additional expenditure of at least three or four millions a year more. Now, I say that this surplus of which the hon. gentleman boasts, should be returned to the people if only for the reason that, as everybody who has examined the subject knows, this taxation involves taking out of the pockets of the people a vastly larger sum than goes into the Treasury. The public, therefore, will benefit to a much larger extent by the remission of taxation than by the same amount which may be deducted from the surplus in the Treasury. I do not propose to go into any minute investigation, at present, at any rate, of the burden which our taxation imposes. But let me call the attention of the House to this simple fact, that if you choose to capitalize our present taxation of $27,000,000 at 4 per cent., the rate money now bears, that taxation would represent a total capital of $675,000,000, no light burden in a country like this, even were it twice as rich as it is to-day. I call upon the House to recollect that every needless million dollars which we exact from the people imposes, at the very least, the loss of a day's wages on every industrious man, from one end of the country to the other; and knowing, as we do, that the majority of these people are, at the best, always hard pressed to make a decent living, we must admit that my hon. friend is perfectly right—although I have but little hope that he will be listened to—in asking the Government to take the very earliest opportunity that presents itself to reduce the burdens of the people, and particularly to endeavor to get rid of those odious, unjust, and sectional taxes which are as much in defiance of all common sense as they are undoubtedly of any recognized principle of economy.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I am quite sure that the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury Benches will not regret one feature of the hon. gentleman's speech, and that is that they have no chance of ever gaining his support. The hon. gentlemen referred to the fact that in the old times, under the leadership of the right hon. gentleman who now leads the Government, there were frequent deficits greater than those which prevailed during the administration of the last Government. Hon. gentlemen will remember that during the period of those deficits, the hon. gentleman was an ardent supporter of the Government.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. I entered Parliament in 1863, and the deficits occurred before that.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have a distinct recollection that when the hon. gentleman first entered Parliament he entered it as a Conservative, and continued to be a Conservative for a considerable number of years afterwards. During the time this Government was in office, before 1873, there was a series of surpluses year after year. The hon. gentleman, true to his views of what is the true policy of this country, was in opposition to it. He was afterwards Finance Minister himself for a number of years, and had a series of deficits during those years. Now, when my hon. friends are back on the Treasury benches and we have entered again on an era of surpluses, the hon. gentleman is again in Opposition, naturally, and I trust he will remain there. This resolution, I am quite sure, will be regarded, by the Conservative party at any rate, in this country with satisfaction. It must be to them a matter of sincere congratulation that the only charge that can be made against the Government, the only resolution that can be formulated against them, is a general resolution in amendment to the motion to go into Supply, that the Government have so well managed the affairs of the country that they have a large surplus, and, therefore, ought to give back something to the people. There is no charge in this resolution, as I read it, that the expenditure is excessive. We are almost entirely through the Estimates. Every item has been criticized by hon. gentlemen opposite and no vote has been taken on any item; no indication of serious opposition to any proposals made by the Government has come from hon. gentlemen opposite. It is quite true the expenditure has increased. I venture to say the people will rejoice that we have entered on a period in which the revenues of the country, under a wise fiscal system, are such as to enable the Government to enter upon the prosecution of those public works which the years of deficits compelled us to postpone. That is the position in which we stand to-day. Works which have been earnestly desired by the people in various parts of the country for a number of years past, but which they were compelled to do without, because the revenue would not permit the expenditure on them, are now entered upon. As a consequence of that we undoubtedly have incurred increased expenditure, but it is an increase that goes back to the people themselves. We can remember, two years ago, when the Ontario Government appealed to the people, and the charge was made against them they had largely increased the expenditure. What was the answer made? Their supporters in any township would point to the expenditure in that township, and tell the people that so much of the surplus had been expended in their midst. The feeling of the people was, that, after all, that expenditure made among the people was of great advantage in the development of the country, and the promotion of its prosperity by means of that development. To-day we have, in the Estimates brought down, undoubtedly large expenditures in connection with public works, which, for some time past, have been compelled to be postponed, but which now, owing to our improved position, we are enabled to go on with. The first feature of the resolution, its preamble in fact, if a resolution can be said to have a preamble, is the assertion that during the election of 1878 the statement was made that there would be no increase of taxation. What are the facts? Did the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, when he made his last Budget Speech, pretend that the affairs of the country could be carried on without increased taxation? His statement was to this effect: that there was a great public question agitating the people which would have to be decided at the polls, and on which would depend how that increase was to be made, how the Tariff was to be readjusted, and he did not choose to impose a burden of taxation at that moment, because the people might decide that it should be imposed in a different way to that in which he desired to impose it. But there was no question on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, that increased taxation was not required to meet the ordinary expenditure of the country. We know what was the common parlance in this country in relation to our Tariffs. We know we had a 15 per cent. Tariff and a 17½ per cent. Tariff, and many people talked about a 20 per cent. Tariff. When it was stated in a western paper, that the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government to-day, had asserted that we were to have a 35 per cent. Tariff, everyone understood it to mean a 35 per cent. as distinguished from a 17½ per cent. Tariff which was in existence at the time. They understood it to mean a double taxation. What was the answer given to that? It was that it was an absurd mistake, that it was not the object of the Government to increase taxation in that sense, not to increase it for protective purposes. An increase, in the nature of things, had to be made, according to the admission of both parties in the preceding Parliament, for the purpose of meeting the necessary expenditure of the country, but it was intended to readjust the Tariff with the view to promote the interest of the country. But the hon. gentleman tells us that the expenditure which the late Government had to make was due to the burdens which they had inherited from their predecessors. What burdens did they inherit? Will they pretend to say a Canadian Pacific Railway to construct was one of those burdens? What is the doctrine they have preached during the last three Sessions of the last Parliament? That there was no obligation to go on with that road at all. If that was the burden resting on hon. gentlemen opposite—if there was a pledge so solemn in the matter that they were compelled to fulfil it to the extent of imposing upon the people fresh, exhaustive taxation, as they say, to the amount of $3,500,000, what becomes of all their statements, heard lately, that there was no obligation on the part of the country to go on with this work at all?

An hon. MEMBER. Who said that?

Mr. WHITE. There was hardly a dollar practically expended on this work at the time those hon. gentlemen entered office. They undertook it as a Government work themselves, and assumed the responsibility of carrying it on as a Government work; and if the recent statements they have made, if the arguments they have used, have any force whatever, it was open to them at that time to have said: "The burdens of this country will not permit us to go on with this work, and we will abandon it altogether." They had as good a right to abandon the section between Thunder Bay and Winnipeg as the line through British Columbia. The whole work was pledged to the people of the Dominion, and when they have undertaken, recently, to say that the pledge was not one the Government was called upon to fulfil, it does not now lie in their mouths to assert that a burden rested upon them when in office, and that in consequence of the action of their predecessors they had to increase the expenditure. I do not complain of that increase. They undertook it, but on their own responsibility; and not because they inherited it as an obligation from their predecessors. And so, also, the large expenditure on the canals they might have stopped. Hon. gentlemen opposite were not bound to enlarge them, unless, as a matter of public policy, they believed that they should be enlarged. That was the only other serious burden they can pretend they inherited; but they seemed to undertake the work and let the contracts for it, as a matter of public policy of which they approved—nay, more as a work for which their friends in the press claimed special merit; and now they have the effrontery to come here and say that the large expenditure they incurred in this connection, was in consequence of obligations inherited from their predecessors. But I do not think it worth while to discuss this question at any length at this time. We have, however, reason to congratulate ourselves on this fact: that after all the efforts made, and all the caucuses and sub-Committees resorted to, for the preparation of documents for circulation in the country, and everything else done, the whole thing comes down to this declaration that we ought to reduce the taxation of the country, after the Finance Minister's statement that he proposed to reduce the taxation in a very short time—as soon as it became evident it could be done without injury to the interests of the country. No one will pretend to say that a young country like this is not better with a surplus than with a deficit. We have heard hon. gentlemen opposite, in debates recently, dilating upon the able action of the United States Government in reducing their debt by large annual payments. They have done it by ordinary annual taxation; but they might have remitted a portion of the taxation and retained the original debt. The amount of surplus which the hon. gentlemen now on the Treasury benches, the gentlemen who occupied them from 1867 to 1873, accumulated in that period was $10,000,000, which constituted, practically, a reduction by $10,000,000 of the public debt. The $3,500,000 of surplus expected for this and next year will be also a reduction of the public debt to that extent. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) with his bovine shake of the head, pretends to sneer at this view. What he pretends to say is this: that if we raise a surplus of revenue over expenditure, and spend it upon services for which we should otherwise have to borrow an equal amount, there is no practical reduction of the public debt. It may be that, without that surplus, we should not have undertaken such works; but if we do thus expend millions, having been able to get them out of revenue alone, we do practically effect to this extent a reduction of that debt. I congratulate the Government that, after all the efforts of hon. gentlemen in Opposition, it comes down simply to this: we have one of the familiar bits of ancient history in relation to the pre-election speeches of hon. gentlemen, a misapplication of the fair, reasonable, legitimate meaning of those speeches, followed simply by the statement that we have a large surplus in the public Treasury which hon. gentlemen opposite want us to get rid of, because they are unwilling, having revelled five years in deficits themselves; that any other Government should have a surplus in the public Treasury.

Mr. ORTON. I wish to make only a few remarks in reply to observations of the late Finance Minister, so notorious for deficits, who has labored, with his colleagues, to convince the House and country that the National Policy has resulted in increasing the burdens of the people. I propose, in the first place, to lay a few facts before the House in reference to the effect of that policy, which is seen in the greater prosperity of the people. If hon. gentlemen opposite will stop their noise, and hear me with patience, I shall not occupy much time. The facts I wish to submit concern the agricultural interests of Canada. My figures will show that the duty on grain has proved highly beneficial to our farmers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really must rise to a question of order. The House is in such a disorderly state, that an hon. member is not able to perform his duty towards his constituents. My hon. friend, who does not often trespass upon the House, and never at unreasonable length, is entering into most important statistics, showing the value of the National Policy as regards our farmers. I am not surprised at hon. gentlemen opposite making this noise, for they do not want the fact to go before the country; but I believe the House, as a whole, wants to know the effects of this policy with respect to the agriculturists of Canada.

Mr. ORTON. I will read some statistics which I hope will prove interesting to the House:

	Imported and entered for Consumption after deducting amount re-exported.	Imported for Consumption.	Decreased Import, or additional Market to Canadian Farmer.
	1877.	1880.
Oats, bushels	672,095	78,867	600,000
Barley, do	128,319	13,155	115,000
Indian Corn, do	4,180,000	1,677,445	2,502,555
Rye, do	65,414	5,880	60,000
Wheat, do	2,911,111	10,176	2,900,000
Total bushels...	7,956,939	1,785,523	6,177,555

An increase in the home market, by the exclusion of American grain for Canadian cereals, of the large amount of 6,177,555 bushels, about one-half of our total export of cereals. Besides which $135,512 of a revenue was collected to lighten the burden of taxation of Canadian farmers. I wish also to call attention to the additional market for grain given to the Canadian farmer and the Canadian miller in regard to the article of flour. Of wheat flour there were 440,000 barrels less imported from the United States in 1880 than in 1877 under the old policy, or an additional home market—the best of all markets—of no less than $2,300,000, there being besides an increased revenue from the flour which was imported of $50,128. In other flour and Indian meal there is an increased market at home of 131,665 barrels, and a revenue collected off United States meal and rye flour of $86,360. The total revenue collected from United States cereals, flour and meal, by the operation of the National Policy, in 1880, was $272,000. Then, with regard to horned cattle and other animals raised and sold by the farmer, the following figures will show the bene-fiel effects of the National Policy upon the farming community:—

Animals.	1877.	1880.	Decreased Im- port, or addi- tional Market to Farmer.
Horned Cattle.....	6,585	3,170	3,415
Horses.....	1,441	1,008	433
Sheep.....	11,617	8,557	3,060
Swine.....	13,611	11,331	2,280
Totals.....	33,254	24,066	9,188

Notwithstanding the reduction of the imports in consequence of the higher duty, the revenue from this source was greater by about $3,000 than it was in 1877.

AFTER RECESS.

House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

73. Construction of Wharf and Elevator, Halifax terminus..... $130,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. I asked my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture to give the House some information with regard to the experiment of sending a train loaded with grain over the Intercolonial to Halifax. Perhaps he would tell us now the number of cars in the train, the expenses of moving, including terminal charges, and whether the rate of 30 cents covered all these expenses.

Mr. POPE (Compton). There were 16 or 17 cars in the train, and they carried about 12 tons each. As to whether they paid, the Chief Engineer reports that if the road did no other business it would not pay, but regarding this as additional to the business already done, it would make the road pay better.

Mr. BLAKE. The answer is vague. I desire to know whether the result of this experiment covers all the running expenses, and whether it could be continued in future. I have heard that it was the opinion of an officer of the hon. gentleman that this rate would pay the expense of moving, provided he received return freight, and that this calculation was based upon that.

Mr. POPE. My hon. friend knows very well that this was only a trial. There were no arrangements made for receiving the train, and no elevators to receive the grain, consequently there was very little carried. The Chief Engineer says that if they depended entirely upon carrying this freight it would not yield much profit—perhaps it would not yield any profit. He says that this increased traffic mixed with the other, makes it advantageous for the road to carry it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Would the hon. gentleman get the Chief Engineer to state what the cost of running the train was?

Mr. POPE. He says that the price fixed was 30 cents per quarter, as the minimum rate, and this rate pays the cost of moving.

Mr. BLAKE. What was the cost of moving that train from Quebec to Halifax?

Mr. POPE. The cost of that particular train is not made up. The price of 30 cents is supposed to include all the charges.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There being seventeen cars to the train, and each car holding 400 bushels, that would make 6,800 bushels altogether. At 3½ cents per bushel, this amounts to $255 as the earnings of the train from Point Lévis to Halifax. Against that is to be the cost of running the train per mile, and the terminal charges of loading and unloading. It would be very satisfactory to the Committee if these terminal charges could be ascertained, and I am surprised that, knowing this vote was to come on, we are not furnished with an exact statement. It was an experimental cargo and Parliament is expected to express some opinion on the matter, but are not in a position to do it. We have merely a general statement that it is supposed to be a minimum rate.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. According to the data furnished us by the hon. Minister the cost of this cargo was one-fifth of a cent per ton per mile. It would be interesting to know if goods can be moved along the Intercolonial for one-fifth of a cent per mile.

Mr. POPE. My hon. friend is mistaken; it would not be one-fifth of a cent, it would be a little under one-third of a cent per mile, and it was upon that basis the train was made up. That is not a right way to put the thing before the House. If the hon. gentlemen themselves were conducting this business that is not the way they would do, because they know that we are short of freight, and if you can make up a train of freight in addition to the business already done on the road, you could afford to run it cheaper than if there were no other business. The returns of the road show in fact that during the last year there has been much less loss in running that road than there ever was before. Every increase of freight goes a little way towards diminishing the loss of running the road.

Mr. BLAKE. It is certain that if the hon. gentleman increases his business by carrying a larger quantity of stuff at a loss, the aggregate losses will not make a profit.

Mr. POPE. The undertaking is an experiment, and the more loaded cars are taken, the more money we can make, even if we take them at a less rate per ton.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman tells us that the rate fixed is one-third of a cent. per ton, per mile. He also says he took 200 tons for some 647 miles, which, at that rate, would be very near $400 for the whole distance, where I understand he is only charging about $240 or $250. I think his calculation requires to be revised.

Mr. POPE. I did not say we were charging one-third of a cent. I said a little under one-third.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It is so much under one-third that it amounts, I think, to exactly one-fifth of a cent.

Mr. ANGLIN. If this experiment related only to the carrying of grain, the hon. gentleman could, no doubt, afford to carry it at a very cheap rate. It would be interesting to understand exactly what expense is incurred at Halifax—whether the grain is merely emptied from the cars to the vessels, or whether it is stored there. Another important question connected with the working of this railway, to which I think the officers in charge should turn their attention, is the possibility of bringing coal in considerable quantities as a return freight from Nova Scotia to the upper Provinces. At present the current of trade is nearly all the one way, and as the cars have now to come back empty, surely they could bring back coal at moderate rates. It is very important that we should develop that trade as much as possible. At present the people of the Maritime Provinces believe that this road is used almost exclusively for the advantage of the merchants and manufacturers of the upper Provinces. If it could be shown that coal could be carried at such rates why not bring it as far west as Montreal. I believe some coal has been sent that far, but that was owing to a sort of coal famine that prevailed there and made the price of coal very high in that city.

Mr. GAULT. I do not think the cars came back altogether empty from Halifax. I saw that yesterday several car loads of sugar came from Halifax to Montreal, and every day three or four car loads come to Montreal.

Mr. LANDRY. I wish to congratulate the Government upon the special interest it evinces towards Nova Scotia by causing a special amount to be voted for the construction of an elevator at Halifax. I do not doubt that the Government has done this merely with the view of doing justice to that Province; it makes me hope that it will not overlook the just claims of the Province of Quebec, and that if one of the termini of the Intercolonial may depend on Government favors, the other may reasonably expect the same favors, or, in other words, that the St. Charles Branch will be granted to us as was the elevator to Halifax. I will take advantage of this occasion to call the attention of the Government to an article which lately appeared in the press, and which refers to the management of the Intercolonial. A most serious charge has been brought against one of the principal officials of the Intercolonial. An investigation has been asked for, and it appears that the Government has appointed, as a commissioner to enquire, Mr. Schreiber or Mr. Pottinger. The press assert that it is Mr. Schreiber. Now, it appears that that gentleman does not understand a word of French, whilst, on the other hand, the complainant and the witnesses in support of the charge do not understand a word of English. Under such circumstances the Government should render justice to the French population residing on the line of the Intercolonial, and appoint, in the interests of the case and in the interests of the accused party himself, a commissioner speaking both languages. I do not ask that the Commissioner should know French only, but I think that he should at least understand it, in order to be able to take all the evidence and render justice to the interested parties. It is also my duty to call the attention of the Government to the undeniable and unjustifiable fact that on the Intercolonial, viz., on that part which extends from Point Lévis to the boundary line of the Provinces of New Brunswick and Quebec, there are several officials who do not understand a word of French. I do not think that, for our own part, we would suffer such a state of things to exist either in New Brunswick or in Nova Scotia; I do not think that even in the Province of Quebec we would tolerate an employé who did not know English. Under these circumstances, the Government should at least insist that the officials employed in our own Province, and who come into daily contact with the population of our country districts, should speak, or at least understand French. Last year, a deputation waited on the hon. Minister of Railways, and was at that time given to understand that the present assistant-superintendent, Mr. McDonald, should be promoted sooner or later, whenever he should have acquired the necessary experience that should render him useful to both the Government and the public. For over a year has this gentleman served his apprenticeship, and I think that the record of his services is such that the Government can employ him without hesitation; and that, according to the promise made by the hon. Minister of Railways, the time has come when Mr. McDonald should be appointed superintendent of that part of the road which is in the Province of Quebec, thus leaving to other superintendents the part which is in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. This would not in any way interfere with the Government's routine with regard to this administration; it would keep its general superintendent to watch over the whole line, and for every division representing a separate Province, we might have, at least in our Province, officials understanding the French language, and I claim this as an act of justice towards my Province, in the strongest fashion.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the first question put by the hon. member, to wit, whether the Government has appointed a Commissioner to hold an investigation concerning an official connected with the Intercolonial Railway, and stating that this official does not understand the French language, I must, in the first place, tell the hon. member that I appreciate a good deal—and I am sure that the gentleman in question will appreciate it also—the sympathy that he shows him, because he does not understand the French language; it is a qualification he lacks, but I hope that it is not too late for him to get acquainted with it within a short time. With regard to the investigation referred to, the hon. member need not be anxious, for it is not going to be held by the official he has named. The Commissioner who is to be sent will understand

French and English equally well, and he will consequently be able to hear the evidence in the language most familiar to the witnesses. The objection raised by the hon. member with regard to the superintendent of the road, falls therefore to the ground of itself. With regard to the officials on the road, the hon. member must remember under what circumstances the Government appointed the employés on the line between Rivière du Loup and Lévis. When the Grand Trunk sold its road to the Government, the latter found itself in the following position: it is true it was not compelled to maintain all the officials employed up to that time, but nevertheless, it was compelled, during a few days, to avail itself of the services of those officials to work the road; then it chose among the officials in the service of the Grand Trunk the number required to complete its staff, and of course the Government chose the most efficient. The hon. member must, moreover, remember that when the question came before the House last year, and it was asked how many English-speaking and how many French-speaking officials were employed, I answered that at least three-fourths, if not four-fifths, of the officials spoke French, and about one-fifth spoke English; consequently, the proportion was the same as that of the two races which constitute the population of the Province of Quebec. Now, it is true that it often happens that railway employés who do not know French come on to the Rivière du Loup line, but that is unavoidable. You cannot help it if train officials starting from Moncton, Templeton, or any other station outside of the Province of Quebec, and who come with passengers or freight into the Province of Quebec do not speak French; you must take them such as they are, as is done in the case of our employes who start from the Province of Quebec and go into the Maritime Provinces. But, will say the hon. member, our employés know both languages. He is perfectly right, and it is an advantage that they have over the others, but it will always remain so that the employees of the other Provinces, who bring their trains into the Province of Quebec, and who travel with what is called a through train, will not know French; but, as a rule, the department is anxious that the officials employed on the line between Lévis and New Brunswick should know both languages. Now, with regard to the superintendent, the hon. member must remember that, at first, there was not any knowing both languages, or, at any rate, sufficiently acquainted with French to enable one to say that he was an employé having a good knowledge of French; the matter having been represented, the Railway Department appointed an assistant, Mr. McDonald, who, whilst bearing an English name, is, like many others, as French as we are. This gentleman, knowing both French and English, was considered better qualified than anyone else to fill the position. I can quite appreciate the hon. member's wish to see Mr. McDonald become the superintendent of the road, and there is no one in this House who would be happier than I would be to see him attain that position. He is an able officer, who fulfils his duties satisfactorily, and who deserves promotion. I am convinced that the time will come when he will receive such promotion, which he will certainly have earned; but I would recommend the hon. member, after the explanation I have given him, not to press the question with regard to Mr. McDonald. I think it is better for Mr. McDonald that he should obtain his promotion through his services, and I feel sure that the Minister of Railways will not forget the recommendations made in favor of Mr. McDonald.

Mr. LANDRY. I have but one remark to make with regard to what has fallen from the hon. Minister of Public Works, when he asks me not to press for the appointment of Mr. McDonald. I will merely answer him in his own words, and speaking of Mr. McDonald, I will say with him: He has long since deserved his promotion.

Mr. LANGEVIN. There are many officials who have earned promotion, but to whom it cannot be given, as there are no vacancies; therefore let the hon. member be patient, and I feel sure he will not lose anything by it.

Mr. GRANDBOIS. I wish to ask the hon. Minister whether it is the intention of the Department to enable the restaurant at Trois-Pistoles to procure, by some means or other, better water than what it gets at present. This restaurant is much frequented, and the spring from which the water is obtained at present gives very bad water. For some time past it was asked that this should be remedied; it is a small matter, and should at once be attended to.

Mr. LANGEVIN. I am familiar with the water in connection with the Trois-Pistoles restaurant, because when I ruled the Department during the absence of my colleague, the Minister of Railways, who was in England, it came up before me. I caused an enquiry to be made, as I had been informed that water could be supplied at a very moderate rate, but the report established that the expense would be considerable, far more considerable, in fact, than the Department could afford. Under the circumstances, the Department granted a small sum to the restaurant keeper to enable him to procure water at a small distance from the village. I can quite well understand that at Trois-Pistoles one would like to have an aqueduct, which, whilst giving water to the restaurant, would supply the village with it. This is easily understood, and I fully appreciate the interest my hon. friend shows in the matter, but I am afraid that the Railway Department cannot grant the aqueduct to Trois Pistoles, unless the municipality offers to divide the expenses of building it with the Government. If the spring which furnishes water to the restaurant does not give good water, then a complaint should be made to the keeper of the restaurant; moreover, a complaint made to the Department would receive attention, for it would insist upon the keeper of the restaurant obtaining good water for the purposes of the restaurant. Besides, the hon. member knows full well that there is water at Trois Pistoles; the village and the parish get water, and if everyone in the village can get water for their use, the keeper of the restaurant can assuredly get what he requires for his restaurant. I think that the hon. member will understand that if an aqueduct is required, the municipality should offer to share the expense with the Government.

74. Canada Central extension (subsidized) $280,000 00

Mr. BLAKE said the company had deposited with the Government a considerable sum of money, which was to be paid out as the road progressed, but he did not understand that that was the course which was now being taken.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The proposition is made under the terms and provisions of the Act.

Mr. BLAKE. We have endorsed their bonds.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The proceeds of the bonds were deposited with the Government to be paid out as the construction of the road proceeded. I suppose these are the proceeds of the bonds that were deposited with the Government, and as the work of construction progressed the company was entitled to get the money from the proceeds of the bonds. The work is progressing very favorably. About seventy miles of the line north-west of Pembroke have been operated since December last. A large portion of the work between that point and Haliburton station is in a very forward state of progress, and before the end of the next financial year the whole of the road to Callander station will be completed, and the company will be entitled to the amount deposited with the Government as the proceeds of their bonds, the Government all the time receiving a sufficient sum for the payment of interest,

Mr. BLAKE. This company had a choice of receiving a subsidy in bulk or guaranteed interest on bonds. The first alternative was adopted, but a change was made to the other. It was necessary for the Government to take security, and $1,500,000 was taken for the completion by the company of their obligation. What we pay out now is simply deposit money; but the Finance Minister says we are going to pay interest on the money.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We are paying the money out as it is earned.

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. member for West Durham is in the same entanglement as he was during the Pacific Railway debate.

75. Railway between Prince Arthur's Landing and Red River, including Pembina Branch..... $3,385,030 00

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. POPE (Compton). The amount is made up of the following items: Fort William to English River, $45,000; English River to Eagle River, $940,000; Eagle River to Keewatin, $2,000,000; Keewatin to Selkirk, $350,000; Pembina Branch, $50,000.

Mr. ANGLIN. Why should we expend $50,000 more on the Pembina Branch, when it became the property of the Pacific Railway Company, according to the terms of the contract.

Mr. POPE. $50,000 is required to complete the ballasting and bridging, and also the fencing, for which contracts have been let.

Mr. ANGLIN. I do not remember any stipulation in the contract with respect to placing the Pembina Branch in a better condition than it was at the time the Pacific Railway agreement was ratified.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Minister of Railways, when the Pacific Railway items were taken up, invariably gave a very exact statement of the position of the various contracts; but the House is now asked to vote the money asked for without having any information of that kind submitted. I want to know for what purpose money is required for the Pembina Branch, for we were told last year by the Minister of Railways that that branch was completed with the exception of an amount required for station houses. We want to know the conditions of the other contracts. The report of the Minister I have not seen. I do not know whether it has been issued or not. I know nothing about the state of the line for which votes are asked here. We ought to have some general information about the entire line. I would like to know also in connection with this, for it is quite germane to the purpose, something about the grades and curves upon the British Columbia contracts now under construction. What is the maximum and minimum grade? What is the radius of the various curves? Have they been increased or decreased? Is there an actual survey on the rest of the road from Yale to Port Moody?

Mr. POPE (Compton). So far as the curvature is concerned, the opinion of the engineer is that they will get through without, perhaps, increasing the curves at all. With respect to the items, the item of $45,000 is required to get another ballast lifter on account of the settling of an embankment. The $940,000 is required to make payment for work executed during the year on contract 41; the $2,000,000 is required to meet payments for work executed during the year on contract 42; the $350,000 is required to complete the ballasting of contracts Nos. 14 and 15, and the earthwork, &c., on contract 15; the $50,000 is required to complete the ballasting, bridging and fencing of the Pembina Branch.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not find anything whatever in the Canadian Pacific Railway contract or the proposed charter, Mr. WHITE (Renfrew).

or any ministerial statement made on the subject, to show that we were to spend a shilling on the Pembina Branch.

Mr. POPE. It was understood.

Mr. BLAKE. By the Syndicate perhaps.

Mr. POPE. By the House, that the whole of the road handed over was to be handed over complete.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Were the first 100 miles west of Red River also to be handed over completed?

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The same language that applies to one applies to the other.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Besides, the Pembina Branch was completed. It was ballasted last year.

Mr. POPE. It is not ballasted now. A portion of the ballasting has yet to be completed.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What thickness of ballast has been put over the Pembina Branch?

Mr. POPE. My hon. friend, I think, put about 2,000 yards to the mile.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I want the number of inches, the depth in inches.

Mr. POPE. 2,009½ yards and 7¾ inches.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It does not become an hon. Minister when asked a question by a member of the Opposition, to give an answer such as he has given.

Mr. POPE. I would not if the hon. gentleman asked a proper question.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I asked a proper question. I want to know how many inches in depth of ballast has been put on this road.

Mr. POPE. My hon. friend knows well he never let a contract for ballast in his life, except for so many yards to the mile.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am not speaking of the contract at all, but of the number of inches in depth of the ballast. Sometimes a road is run without any ballast, as this one was, and sometimes it is run with three inches of ballast, but a good road requires nine or ten inches.

Mr. POPE. Not at all. Six inches may make a good road.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I will not quarrel about the number of inches. What I want to know is the number on the Pembina Branch.

Mr. POPE. We never at any time, nor did the hon. gentleman, make a contract to ballast a road by the inch.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not say it was ballasted by the inch, but you must know how much was put on the road.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I can only say that the department is in a state of most deplorable ignorance.

Mr. POPE. I can say somebody else displays a good deal of ignorance.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman can say as many offensive things as he likes. We want proper information and it is refused. We ask nothing but what any engineer on the road can give in a moment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman seems to think he has a monopoly of saying disagreeable things. He says the department is in a state of deplorable ignorance. I do not think it has deteriorated since he was at its head. It stands as high, its knowledge is as great, and the readiness to answer questions is much greater now than it was when the hon. gentleman was in office. The question has been asked whether we were in any way obliged to finish the Pembina Branch. The whole Pacific contract runs in this way, that the unfinished portions of the road shall be handed over under contract, and those contracts will be completed by the Government. We were not going to hand over any portion of the road without finishing the contract already entered into, and if those contracts were finished those sections would be handed over to the Syndicate. The 100 miles west of Red River are to be considered as if built by the Syndicate's money, and are to be paid for by the Syndicate, as are also the second 100 miles built by the Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman state who had the contract for ballasting at the time the contract was made with the Syndicate?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot tell.

Mr. POPE (Compton). Messrs. Murphy & Upper.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Have they an unfinished contract?

Mr. POPE. They have.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The First Minister says that when I was Minister of Public Works it was my custom to refuse answers to such questions. I defy the hon. gentleman to take the Hansard and recall a single instance where I refused to answer a question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We can find in Hansard what was stated, but not what was not stated. The hon. gentleman used to enter into lengthy details in his speeches, and very ably, too, when bringing forward any measure; but when questions were asked, he very frequently declined to make any answer, and his supporters would call "question."

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Mr. ANGLIN. I remember that when the member for Lambton dealt with those questions as a Minister, he gave full and exhaustive explanations of the state of the works, and of what he proposed doing during the next fiscal year. After that, he was subjected to very severe examination, and never refused to answer any question put to him. But when the same question was repeated over and over again, after he had given full explanations five or six times, for the purpose of worrying and annoying him, and of endeavoring to create the impression that he was refusing information which he had laid before the Committee half-a-dozen times, he several times said—the question has been answered several times already. But he never refused any information asked for that I can remember. We all regret the cause of the absence of the Minister of Railways, and understand that the Minister who temporarily supplies his place cannot be expected to afford as full information as he himself could, if present. But we ought to have had statements prepared by the officials, of all those matters. The course taken by the Minister of Public Works might very well have been followed in this case. It seems strange that we are asked to vote $50,000 ostensibly for work to be done after 1st July, 1881, and are then told that it is to pay for work done some time ago. That is not the usual course followed. With regard to the understanding as to the Pembina Branch, nobody ever imagined that that branch, which has been working for a long time past, was to be regarded as one of those sections under contract, or that we should be called on to spend $50,000 on what has really become the property of the Syndicate.

Mr. BLAKE. The position the right hon. gentleman takes is wholly indefensible. It is not a question of understanding, but a question of contract, and the contract is to be found in the 6th section of the Charter, as follows:—

"Unless prevented by the act of God, the Queen's enemies, intestine disturbances, epidemics, floods or other causes beyond the control of the Government, the Government shall cause to be completed the said Lake Superior section, by the dates fixed by the existing contracts for the construction thereof; and shall also cause to be completed the portion of the said western section now under contract, namely, from Kamloops to Yale, within the period fixed by the contracts therefor, namely, by the 30th day of June, 1885; and shall also cause to be completed, on or before the 1st day of May, 1891, the remaining portion of the said western section, lying between Yale and Port Moody, which shall be constructed of equally good quality in every respect with the standard hereby created for the portion hereby contracted for. And the said Lake Superior section, and the portions of the said western section now under contract, shall be completed as nearly as practicable according to the specifications and conditions of the contracts therefor except in so far as the same have been modified by the Government prior to this contract."

The stipulation and obligation of the Government on behalf of the company was to complete Lake Superior section, which is specifically defined, and which does not include the Thunder Bay Branch, or those portions of the western sections within British Columbia. I maintain the Government assumed no obligation to enter into any engagement to spend new money or make new work on this Pembina Branch. The hon. gentleman says he proposes a vote to pay for some fencing on that branch, the work to begin on 1st July next. I hold there is nothing in the contract to justify that, and that the money is only another present to the Syndicate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will suppose for a moment that the matter is exactly as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) says—that the Syndicate had no right to have this branch completely finished. One thing is clear, if the Government have made any contract with parties, it must be performed. The Government are obliged to see the contracts performed, and can charge the cost to the Syndicate.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says a portion of the vote is for fencing, work which is not under contract.

Mr. POPE (Compton). It is.

Mr. BLAKE. When was it put under contract?

Mr. POPE. A long time ago.

Mr. BLAKE. How long will it take to complete the fencing contract?

Mr. POPE. Till about July or August next.

Mr. MACKENZIE. When in office it was my custom, and I have no doubt it is the custom of the present Minister of Public Works, to have a book kept in the office, where particulars of every contract given out were entered. I would ask the hon. gentleman, therefore, to give particulars of the existing contracts upon the Pembina Branch, namely: their dates, what for, how much money has been paid on them, and how much of the work remains uncompleted? That information we are entitled to, and it is such as I always gave when I was Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) has drawn upon a very vivid imagination in speaking of the courteous manner in which the late Minister of Public Works used to treat members of the Opposition when they used to ask him for information as to his department. The hon. gentleman's statement, supported as it is by the hon. member for Lambton, is one which will be contradicted by every one who sat on that side of the House between the years 1874 and 1878, and contradicted with perfect accuracy and truth.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I can only say to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, that I do not attach a great deal of importance to his censure, for the simple reason that he is always ready to back up any statement made by the Prime Minister, or any opinion supposed to be the opinion of the Prime Minister; and if his leader should happen to come in the next moment and order him to vote the other way, he would readily do it.

Mr. POPE (Compton). I do not admit, in the first place, that I refused to answer any question asked by the hon. gentleman which was a proper question, and I say again that no one ever took a contract of this kind except at so many yards per mile.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I said nothing at all about that.

Mr. POPE. That is the answer I gave, the only answer which the hon. gentleman could have had, and he had no right to ask for information when he knew perfectly well that this was the only answer which could be given. Now, with respect to the Upper & Murphy contract, the hon. gentleman let the contract, he knows what it is; and if he reads the report of the Minister of Railways, which was brought down to the House, he will see exactly what it means. This $50,000 I may say is to pay the amount due to Upper, and to complete the work.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman not give us the particulars of the contract?

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman will find them in the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then I must say there is a different practice in the department from that which used to prevail.

Mr. POPE. I admit that we have improved on the practice which prevailed during the hon. gentleman's time.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is surely no improvement to have a lack of information. If that is considered an improvement, it is certainly one of a Tory character.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A satisfac-Tory character.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We got all this information last year; why not this?

Mr. POPE. I may say that, with the exception of two small contracts, one for bridging and one for fencing, the hon. gentleman got all the information last year, as he says, and why then ask for it now?

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman say whether any portion of this money we are asked to vote is to be paid for work to be done before the 1st of July, 1881.
