damages. the point to which the eyes of Europe are just now directed, says the London Globe, takes its name from the Emperor Constan tine, by whom it was enlarged, rebuilt and enriched with art and treasures, A. D., 328. Taken from the degenerate Greeks in 1204 by "the blind old Dandolo," the Venetians, and the Franks, it was receiptured by the Greeks under Michael Palce logue in 1261, and finally conquered by the Turks in 1453. Probably no position could have been better suited for the of a city destined to be the capital of an empire embracing a portion of the two continents. It occupies a triangular space between the Sea of Marmora and the Golden Horn, the apex being formed by the Seraglio and Citadel, while the base or landward side is protected by a wall about four miles long. This wall is in of England, yesterday, for ahipi very tolerable repair, and, though built New York long before modern artillery was known, it is quite capable of being strengthened by earthworks, so as to be able to resist anything but a regular siege from the sea. So long as Turkey can hold the two entrances to the sea of Marmora—the Bespherus and the Dardenelles—Constantinople need fear no attack. The Bosphorus is a winding channel, nineteen miles in length, and protected by numerous batteries mounting nearly 400 heavy guns. The width of the straits is nowhere greater than two miles and a half; and in its narrowest part there is a formidable accumulation of forts so situated that a concentrated fire of 166 guns can be brought to bear on any ship that may have the temerity to venture to phorus, but are not less strongly fortified. Any attempt, therefore, to force a passage into the Sea of Marmora without having reduced these batteries would be madness; but they are open to an attack on the land side, and it is with a view to render them impregnable that Colonel Valentine Baker has submitted a plan for the fortification of the laud approaches.

The Gazette, to-usy, autributes Laflamme's election, by 28 majosity, to
the fortification of the laud approaches.

The Herald, on the contrary, says the It will be seen, on reference to a map, that the north by a narrow belt of land protected on the south by the Sea of Marmora, and on the north by the Black Sea. This narrow strip is further reduced in width by Lake Derkos, and by the harbour of Buynk Chekmege. At this point the land is only about nineteen miles broad, and Colonel Baker proposes to fortify it by a chain of outlying forts. The experience of the Prussian army before Paris in 1871 has shown that this style of defence is the most effective that can be adopted; and it is a curious coincidence that the ancient detenders of Byzantium seem to have felt that this point was one requiring special care; for only a few miles to the north of the village of Derkos are the ruins of an old Greek fortification formerly known as the Makron Teichos, or Long Wall. In the same way Colonel Baker proposes to defend the Dardanelles by a line of earthworks across the isthmus connecting the Chersonese with Roumelia; this isthmus is not four miles across, and the water on both sides is deep enough to allow ships of war to come close inshore and assist in the defence of the position. By means of these two lines of forts, Constantinople would be completely defended from the north. An attack from the other side of the Sea of Marmora is hardly probable; the nearest part of Russia is the Caucasus, nine hunred miles distant, and the country is utterly destitute of roads for artillery and supplies; and Turkey has fourteen monitors or service on Lake Scutari, which would materially interfere with any attack from the south.

The question of incorporating the town of Chatham is now fairly before the Ratepayers, who, on Monday evening, appointed a Committee to draft an incorporation bill to be submitted for perfect as possible—as such things go— think the Province ought to make good because they will have, for their guides, all the existing acts of town Incorporation in the Province and they will be enabled to avoid faulty, weak or incomplete provisions which may be found in them. By the use of means on which it is not now needful to enlarge, Mr. Marshall's election was secured. Some days after the contest was over, Mr. Willis, upon a calm review of all that had occured, felt it to be his duty to hand his resignation to the Lieutenant Governor. That resignation he based on his objections to the course pursued in the election by the Attorney General. Mr. Willis accorded his colleagues in the Executive Council in a case like that the same liberty of choice and action which has claimed for himself, neither more nor less. But the Attorney General, without authority from his colleagues in Council assembled, assumed the right to proclaim Mr. Marshall the Government candidate. He also assumed the right to proclaim Mr. Marshall the Government candidate. He also assumed the support a faithful, feliable and able Free School candidate, an attitude quite unjutifiable. In view of these facts, Mr. Willis submitted his resignation on the 22nd of November, and last night he was in formed by the Lieutenant Governor that it was accepted.

Thus marshall's assumed the latter has kicked its assistant and bolted and the poor Freeman is limping along, atom. There was, however, a difference of opinion amongst the members of the Committee in reference to the expediency of going into Incorporation just at present, some inclining to the belief that the change should be made now, while others favored deferring action for a year and perhaps indefinitely. It was, therefore, with some difficulty that the Committee could agree upon a recommendation. The Chairman said he inclined to the opinion that the duty of the committee was discharged when they presented the results of their enquiries—that a recommendation from would, therefore, act or not upon the of the members signed it chiefly because they desired to make it ananimous. He was of opinion that the Committee itself felt that it required more information. He thought the Act with the provision requiring a three-fifth vote of the electors to put it in force was a very good thing in its way, but, when the people were in favor of incorporation believed as favor of Incorporation they could procure the necessary legislation directly. Besides, if such an act were in existence such if he did not know that the taxes of Characteristics and the did not know that the taxes of Characteristics are recognized to the control of the contr an accident as the loss of the electoral list of a District or two might happen and the people would have Incorporation whether they really desired it or not. It was time enough to ask for an act when the people of the Town were convinced that it would be a benefit to them. Mr. Wm. Sinclair wanted some of the Committee to throw some light upon the subject, and thought if the facts where properly presented the meeting and the workug men of Chatham would see the benefit of what was proposed and assist in discussing the subject. Mr. Gillespie, who was a member of the Committee, then explained the general meaning of Incorporation, saying that it was proposed as a means by which the public business of the Town would be managed by a number of Councillors elected by the people themselves — the Council so elected being charged with the management of the Police, Streets, Water supply, Fire Protection, etc. He referred to the New Brunswick towns under ry. distinctness, my remarks thus:—

1. For what purpose was the train run? Let Mr. Barry answer, in the first place. In his letter he says, "As Mr. Brydges well explains in his letter, this train was engaged for the purpose of giving those who had generously contributed towards the building of the Catholic Church at Campbellton an opportunity of assisting at the interesting and sacred ceremony of its solemn dedication to the service of God." According to this statement the train was engaged for the benefit of "those who had generously contributed towards the building of the Catholic church at Camp bellten." Are we to understand that nor contributors were prevented from stepping orning of Sunday, the 6th August last? But of this more anon. With such a pur pose was the running of this train a viola tion of the Divine Commandment regarding the observance of the Sabbath day?

Mr. Barry replies in the negative. He says, "I believe, with a large number of others of different religious denominations in the community, that running it on Sunday under the circumstances above mentioned was no violation of any divine or human

Me T I R HAPDING MR. T. J. B. HARDING

Dear Sir:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your Constitutional Catarana Remady, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-nine years old, had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and stried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, when I lad be made years and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, when I lad be made years when the state of the
