Congress and the Message.

The present session of the United States Congress has been looked forward to with apprehensions of dulness.

There seems to be nothing of interest to the political mind that is likely to be struggled over. The late elections all House. The Representatives elect, who will take their seats on the 4th of March, minority to fillibuster in order to gain time. The choosing of Horace Greelev as the candidate of the party formerly dentified with the South, and the manner in which he was supported by former rebels, shows that the fear of trusting the former slave-owners with unchecked political power is puerile. The offices at the disposal of the President are not many vacant. In accordance with the Civil Service Regulations he will decline to remove any officials for political reasons, and he has shown a disposition to refuse to fill actual vacancies except by the manner prescribed in the Civil Service Reform measure.

Should be adhere to this rule, and possibly in any case, there will be an attempt to undo what has been done for the reform of the Civil Service. The
