THE STOLEN PORTRAIT.

There was once a poor peasant, named Pierre Arnot, who dwelt near Arles, in the south of France, together with his wife and little granddaughter called Pauline. This little girl at ten years of age, was not only exceedingly lovely in person, but was gifted with a voice the light of all who heard it—so sweet, so clear, and so powerful were its tones. And when the good priest took her into the village choir, people from the neighboring hamlets, and even from Arles, would come purposely to hear her sing. Yet no persuasion or representation could induce Pierre to part with his little granddaughter for the purpose of having her educated for the opera—Pierre, though practically knowing nothing of the world beyond his own neighborhood, had heard something of the trials and temptations that beset stage singers and actresses, and not for all the riches of fame that might thereby be brought, would he have subjected his little Pauline—his pretty treasure, his home's sunshine—to such an ordeal.

One day there came two strangers—very fine and polite gentlemen, they seemed to Pierre and his wife—to negotiate for the little girl. They would educate her and treat her like a lady; would guard her as though she was a prince's; they would pour into Pierre's hands an amount of gold if he would only consent to let them take Pauline and educate her for a public singer. But Pierre was deaf to all entreaties, and the little girl herself frightened at the idea of leaving her grandparents and the humble life-ventured but in which she had dwelt since her birth. So the negotiators for the Theatre Royal went away disappointed and angry.

But some weeks thereafter, as little Pauline was leaning upon the open window, watching the sunset and the twinkling clouds, which the incense below came the sound of music, and the sweetest, most fairy-like music she had ever heard. At first she fancied it must have come from the clouds, so scrappily soft and dreamy was it; and then she advanced a few steps and it ceased, and advanced again and finally her little bare feet were tripping through the grass and daisies in quest of the mysterious sounds. And this night—the sight of the little fairy figure in its white peasant's dress, lit up by the rays of the moon—was the last glimpse that the good old grandmother had of her little Pauline.

Some people who had also heard that heavenly music, said the little girl had been noticed away by the fairies. And this belief grew into a popular tradition as year after year passed, and nothing more was seen or heard of Pauline Arnot.

These years brought sad changes to good Pierre. His wife was dead. He was alone in the world, infirm, and unable to work, or indeed to do anything but play on his violin, which he did with marvellous skill, for a talent for music was inherent in the family. He had to sell his little cottage; and then, without a house to shelter him, and too proud to accept unrequited charity, he took his violin in hand, and set forth, in his old age, to earn a precarious livelihood by playing his way from town to town. And at length he came to England, and after vainly trying his fortune in the streets of London, proceeded to the country, among who green fields and shadowy lanes the country-bred old man felt more at home.

One day he stopped at a small village called Upham. Observing a shop where bread and cheese and beer were sold, he entered and humbly, in his broken English, requested to be "favored" with some of them. The keeper of the shop, a good-looking, kind hearted dame, set before him the desired refreshment, and as he ate, half-famished, she marked his old clothing and haggard appearance, and the curious look of his face, and gradually drew from him his whole history. It was with bitter sorrow that he dwelt on the disappearance of his little Pauline. He had but one memorial of her, he said—a portrait of her mother, taken when the latter was a girl of eighteen by a traveling artist, whom the poor cottagers had nursed through a dangerous illness. The young man painted it and left with them as a token of his gratitude; and this poor Pierre had brought from home, and wore constantly in the breast of his coat. He now drew it forth and showed it to the sympathizing hostess. "It was," he said, "a good likeness of Pauline's mother, but far more resembled the little girl at the time she was stolen away by the fairies."

The kind heart of the woman was touched. I can get you a good job, friend, she said, if you will remain here until to-morrow night. Sir John Bolton's second son Arthur, Captain Bolton of the Dragoons was married last week and to-morrow they and their guests go to a grand entertainment given them at Kidmore Park; and the servants of Sir John's (dressed in place, Moorlands, that you see over yonder) are to have a ball of their own to-morrow night, in celebration of their marriage, and it was only to day that Pierre, the Captain's own man, was down to the village, inquiring for old Luke Dexter the fiddler. Now Luke got a fit of rheumatism, and they will be glad to have you in his place, if you're a good hand at your instrument; and they will pay you well for the job. What say you? I'll go over at once, and speak to neighbor Brown who'll let them know.

Pierre had no objection, and, having made an exhibition of his skill in presence of neighbor Brown, to the entire satisfaction of that lady, the report was made and the bargain completed. The old violinist found the evening at the Moorlands a very pleasant one. His performance was greatly applauded; the butler, the steward, and other great distinguished personages, were condescending, and the rest gracious and attentive to his wants. Captain Bolton's own man, took him up stairs with one or two other favored persons, that he might have a view of the splendidly furnished suite of rooms that had been prepared for the newly-married pair, and he was able to tell in France how such things were done in King Land.

It's fit for a bride, even if she was the Princess Royal herself, observed one of the favored admirers.

And in a sure that Miss Princess couldn't be more deservin' of him than my lady," replied the Captain's man, lofty. She's the beautifullest lady I ever set eyes on, hand she's beautiful. She ought to be a born princess instead of a foreign lady of a good family, half of which his deservin'.

And with the utterance of his opinion, the group descended, and in due time the group broke up.

On the day following, Pierre was again about setting forth on his wanderings, when he was surprised by a visit from Sir John Bolton's butler, in company with very official looking clubs. Their business was soon told. They had come to arrest the French violinist on suspicion of having the Miniature of Mrs. Bolton, the bride of Captain Arthur, which the latter had caused to be taken and richly set in diamonds. It had been left by the Captain on his dressing-table, and being missed upon their return from Kidmore Park, and the Captain's man being questioned thereupon, the latter had been forced to confess as to the introduction of the visitors into his master's apartments. Whereupon each of these had been arrested; the violinist amongst them and were now taken to Moorlands for examination before Sir John and a Magistrate.

Pierre was the last called upon, and as he betrayed some unwillingness to having his pockets and wallet searched, the constable himself proceeded to do it, and drew forth a small picture, in a dingy and worn leather case, which he first glanced at, and then held up triumphantly before Sir John.

It's the picture of Mrs. Captain Bolton, as you see your honor, he said; only the diamonds are been picked out by this 'ere old rogue, who no doubt hid 'em somewhere, and the painting been put in this hold frame.

Sir John examined it attentively. It is doubtless the portrait of Mrs. Captain Bolton, my daughter-in-law," he said, in his formal way; yet cannot be the same that was last, judging from the style of painting.

And he handed the painting to his son. The latter examined it, at first with surprise and then with an expression of curiosity and bewilderment.

It is doubtless the portrait of my wife, he remarked; yet as you say, sir, it is not the one that has been lost. The painting is much inferior, the dress different, and the expression not the same. Where did you get this picture, my good man? he continued, turning to Pierre, and speaking in French.

It is the portrait of my daughter, Monsieur, replied the violinist, and was taken more than twenty years ago.

Then it cannot be Pauline, said Captain Bolton to his father, yet how wonderfully like.

Pauline? repeated Pierre turning suddenly to the speaker; and then adding dramatically, as if to himself—Ah, it was like Pauline—my little Pauline.

Hurried and eager questioning followed on both sides. There is no doubt of it, said Captain Bolton, at length, grasping the old musician's hand. You are Pierre Arnot, my wife's grandfather, of whom she has so often spoken. She told me all she could remember of her early life before she was stolen away from her home, and was extremely anxious to find you, but had unfortunately forgotten the name of the place whence she came. How glad she will be, and for myself, old friend, I am glad also thus to have found you.

Thereupon the young wife was informed of the news, and soon entered the room, flushed and eager. One glance between the two was sufficient. In eight years Pierre had but little changed, and though the graceful beautiful creature, before him stood in woman's stature, and arrayed in silks and jewelry, yet the eyes of the old man easily recognized the sweet face the golden hair, and large luminous eyes of his darling. And the joy and tenderness of that a thing who may describe?

Little Pauline had been enticed away out of sight of home, not by the fairies, but by Lecker's infamous flute playing, whom the clever negotiators before mentioned, had taken the trouble to bring all the way from Paris for this special purpose. And then they had lifted her into a close carriage in waiting and so gained possession of the prize which they failed to purchase with gold. They had, however, kept their promise to the grandfather, and Pauline had been well educated, and treated and brought up "like a lady," as they had said she should be. And her beauty her accomplishments, and refinement had won the heart of young Captain Bolton, when introduced to her at a private entertainment just before her proposed debut, and, as we have seen, she became his wife. And this story I had from a descendant, one high amid the social circles of the British capital.

Of course this ended the wanderings of the grandfather. He was at once transferred to landowner's quarters with his darling Pauline, where the remainder of his life was spent in the sweetest tranquility. His violin was an inseparable companion, and he lived to give its softest as well as wildest notes to two young strangers in the household.

For the Standard.

The Trichina Spiralis.

The frequent recurrence of paragraphs both in the Canadian and United States newspapers announcing the appalling fact, that persons, and even whole families have fallen victims to a comparatively new malady, resulting from the consumption of pork in a diseased or Trichinosis state, will of necessity lead the public to the serious consideration, whether or not it will be necessary to exclude pork from our list of articles of diet; as ordinary observers are unable to detect anything in the appearance of which we are liable at any moment to suffer from the serious effects resulting from its consumption. But as it does exist, we must look the fact in the face and endeavor to find some means for its prevention, and if possible save ourselves, and at the same time "our bacon."

The Trichina Spiralis belongs to that very remarkable group of organized bodies, known as Parasites, which are distinguished by the fact, that they live either upon the surface or in the interior of the animal, or vegetable, they inhabit. The brain, the ball of the eye, in fact all most all portions of the body are subject to the invasion of these pests, but the Trichina in particular shows a preference to the voluntary muscles. They are usually found in immense numbers, and destroy life, either by abstracting the nourishment intended for the parts they inhabit, or by the constant irritation they occasion. The microscopic has unfolded to us the peculiar and wonderful characteristics of this animal; and we find that it is a worm inclosed in a middle spindle shaped cyst, swollen in the middle and tapering at each extremity, with a rounded cavity in its central portion, in which it lies coiled up in a spiral form. To this the worm is not attached, so we might say this outside covering forms its fortification. Its formations are such that it is incapable of reproduction; its gender being neuter.

It will be said, that since they can have no progeny, they must have been produced without a parentage, and if such is the case how have they obtained access into the human body? These seeming inconsistencies however are easily explained. As the maggots so often seen in meat are embryonic flies, so is the Trichina spiralis the larva of some, as yet unknown parasite, which exists in the muscular tissue, preparatory to its development into a perfected organism. There is little difficulty in accounting for the introduction of these parasitic germs into the interior of the body. The air and the food offer a ready means of entrance into the respiratory and digestive passages, and once taken into the stomach, these germs find access to the blood vessels and are carried to different portions, of the system, where they are at last arrested by the minute capillary vessels. Circumstances being favorable to their development they here increase in size, and produce a train of symptoms which eventually result in death. It is erroneous to suppose that the hog is the only animal liable to be attacked by this parasite, as they have been found in large quantities both in beef and mutton; but to the latter being subjected to a more thorough cooking than pork, (which is often eaten in the form of ham and sausage in an underdone state) the germs of this animal are destroyed.

The tenacity with which these Trichinae, (as well as other animals of a like low degree of organization) cling to life is remarkable, for we find that they flourish in hams that have been subjected to both pickling and smoking. Once introduced into the system, no remedy for them has as yet been discovered, nor do I think will be, for three reasons. First, from their ability to resist the action of salt, of itself a powerful caustic, which clearly shows no ordinary means would be of avail. Second, from the impossibility of prescribing any remedy, which would be taken up by the circulation sufficiently strong to prove effective. Third, the fact, in which they are enclosed almost precludes the possibility of any substance either applied externally, or given internally, from affecting the enclosed worm. The way of escaping any of these, to say the least, most unpleasant circumstances which result from the consumption of Trichinosis pork, is as simple as it is effective. Subject the meat to a thorough and complete cooking at or above the temperature of boiling water, as no living organism is capable of existing at this degree of heat. Pork subjected to this test may contain millions of the germs of this parasite, and yet be eaten with impunity. Seek not to unravel the mystery that is concealed in an underdone sausage, look with horror upon raw ham, see a skeleton in a half cooked roasting piece, or you may find otherwise to your cost, "that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."

Yours,

Fruit and Flower Beds—Don't uncover them too soon.

"One swallow does not make a summer," is an old and excellent adage. Many do not heed it to their sorrow; for, cheated by a warm and balmy day, now then, and thinking that all that chilling weather is past, they remove the boughs or other covering from the strawberry, flower beds, &c.; when chilly days and freezing nights return to give the plants a touch from which they never recover. For quite hardly times the last of April, and for tender one a week or two later is early enough in this climate. And not only is there a proper time, but a proper way to dispose of this litter, which is to spread it upon some cultivated spot of garden or field and let it lie—both because it is a very best dressing you can use—as well as gives an air of neatness around. For few things are more painful to persons of taste than to see these old brush heaps around household premises, and long lines of apple tree prunings encumbering the road sides for many a mile. All these unsightly things may be changed into money in three ways—the ashes they will make; giving you a change to destroy the trichina and similar pests which now lurk among the rubbish; and the profit which accrues from "cultivating the bump of order."

Recently a livery stable keeper in Lowell was applied to by a fine appearing man for a horse and buggy, to go out of town for the day. He was furnished, and, when about to leave, was informed that it was customary to have a deposit left by strangers. He inquired what the owner would take for his team, and was told $500, which was immediately handed over to the proprietor. On returning the stable keeper was asked to examine the team and see if he thought it was worth as much as when taken in the morning, to which he answered in the affirmative, and handed the stranger the identical $500, who immediately left for the hotel. The stable keeper, not having realized any profit in the transaction, followed, and informed him that he had forgotten to pay for the use of the team. "What team?" was the reply. "I bought a horse and buggy of you this morning and sold it back to you just now for the same price. I drove my own team." The livery man found himself at the amount of his charge.

A girl of Lombardy, running after her donkey, which was in haste to get to her foal, passed a gentleman on the road, who seeing her look very funny, and having a mind to be very witty, called out—"Whence do you come as a catheart?" "From Villejuif," said she. "Do you know the daughter of Nicholas Giffi, who lives there?" "Very well," replied the girl. "Be so kind, then, replied he, as to carry her a kiss from me," and throwing his arms around her neck, was about to salute her. "Hold, sir," cried the girl disengaging herself from his rude embrace; "since you are in such a hurry it will be better to kiss my donkey as she will be there some time before me!"

At a party, while a young lady was playing with peculiar brilliancy of touch, a bystander exclaimed—"I'd give the world for those fingers." "Perhaps you might get the whole had for asking," said the young lady, observing and maneuvering mankind. The bachelor disappeared—through the door.

The Quincy Whig is responsible for the following: An Irish girl in the employ of one of the first families was sent by the lady of the house, one day last week, to a dry goods store, with instructions to bring home a bed comforter. She returned after a short absence with one of the clerks.

A rustic describing Louisville, said the first re-livence there belonged to Mr. A. E. Church, whose name was cut in big letters over the door, and there was a sharp-pointed chimney on the house two hundred feet high.

which they claim the undiminished advantages over those of ordinary use, the proof of which may be seen in their country (inasmuch as business during a residence in Hartford of 8 years.
1st. That from the perfect construction of the lenses, they assist and preserve the sight, rendering frequent changes unnecessary.
2d. That they confer a brilliancy and distinct-ness of vision, with an amount of ease and comfort not hitherto enjoyed by spectacle wearers.
3d. That the material from which the Lenses
are ground is manufactured specially for optic purposes, and is pure hard and brilliant and not liable to become scratched.
4th. That the frames in which they are set

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Governor General
in Council.
WHEREAS under the Tariff of Canal tolls adopted and established by order in Council of the 15th day of April, A. D. 1863, Peat is subject to the high rates of toll imposed thereby on unmanufactured goods and merchandise, which are placed in the 6th class of that Tariff;
And whereas it is expedient that Peat which is now an article of traffic in Canada should be placed, as regards Canal tolls, on the same footing
as Coal, and rated in the third class of that Tariff.
His Excellency in Council, on the recommendation of the Honorable the Minister of Customs,
and under the authority given by the 58th section of the Act 31 Vic. Cap. 13, intituled: "An Act respecting the Public Works of Canada," has been pleased to order, and is hereby ordered, that from and after this date, Peat shall be, and is hereby placed in the 3rd class of the Tariff referred to, and subject to the payment of the rates of Canal toll prescribed for articles enumerated
in that class.

CONSUMPTION,

and acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most reliable Preparation ever introduced
for the RELIEF and CURE of all LUNG COMPLAINTS.

This well known remedy is offered to the public, as being the most reliable Preparation ever introduced
for the RELIEF and CURE of all LUNG COMPLAINTS.

Coughs, Colds, Croup, Bronchitis, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Haemorrhages, Pains of Soreness in the Chest and Side,
Bleeding at the Lungs,
Liver Complaint, &c.

The unqualified success that has attended the application of this medicine in all cases of PULMONARY COMPLAINTS
has induced many physicians of high standing to employ it in their practice, some of whom advise its use in the most serious cases of Lung Complaint, and who have been cured by its use.

From the names of all the physicians who have used it, we select the following:-
From L. J. RACINE, Esq., of La Motte, Montreal. "Having experienced the benefits of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry in a case of Consumption, I am induced to express the most cordial opinion in its favor. For some months I was most cruelly afflicted with a severe and obstinate cough, accompanied with spitting of blood, which did not leave me, summer or winter. The symptoms were accompanied with great pain in the side, which I could not but have new hope without resorting to remedy from the fact and failure of other remedies. I tried Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, and in a few days I was entirely cured, and in a few weeks I was enabled to resume my usual avocations. At this juncture I commenced writing the enclosed, and in a few days I was enabled to leave my bed, and after having used four bottles I was completely cured. I have since recommended the Balsam to many of my neighbors, who have used it, and in no case have I known it fail of effecting a speedy cure. I am an ardent admirer of this Balsam, and I am sure that it can but speak in its favor. It is a preparation which has only to be tried to be acknowledged as the most reliable remedy."

A CURE FOR WHOOPING COUGH.
St. Hyacinthe, C.E. Aug. 11, 1868.
Messrs. B. W. FOWLE & SON.
Gentlemen.-Several months since a little daughter of mine, five years of age, was taken with Whooping Cough in a very aggravated form, and nothing was done
for her second in any way to relieve her suffering.
We at length decided to try a bottle of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. "It is three hours after she had commenced using it, she was greatly relieved, and in less than three days was entirely cured, and is now well. I have since recommended the Balsam to many of my neighbors, who have used it, and in no case have I
known it fail of effecting a speedy cure. I am an ardent admirer of this Balsam, and I am sure that it can but speak in its favor. It is a preparation
which has only to be tried to be acknowledged as the
most reliable remedy."

Proprietor of the Courier de St. Hyacinthe.
Clergymen, Lawyers, Singers,
and all those whose occupation requires an unusual exercise of the vocal organs, will find that this Balsam of Wild Cherry, which will effectively and instantaneously relieve their afflictions. This Balsam, unlike most others, is extremely
PLEASANT TO TASTE.
A small quantity allowed to pass over the irritated
part at once removes the difficulty.
BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS AND IMITATIONS.
Remember, they imitate in some call, without possessing the virtues. Buy none unless signed "B. W. FOWLE" on the wrapper.
