THE LAST PAGE.

A little girl was playing once Upon the smooth damp sand, And by her side, in youtoful pride, A boy was seen to stand.

He stoop'd and whisper'd in her ear-V. hate'er his words might be None knew -out kneeling on the sand, She wrote, "I love but thee."

Time pass'd-yet scarcely came a day Whereon they did not meet And talk of love and write of love In visions long and swest :

And every day another page Was added to the past, Fill'd up with words of constancy, Each foncer than the last.

.But circumstances came at length, And they were doom'd to part. She was all hope and considence-He, brokenness of heart.

But, to revive his drooping soul, Upon the sand once more She wrote another page, like those Which she had traced before.

Alas! alas! she did not know That every word she traced Was stamp'd in fire upon his heart, And ne'er could be effaced.

She went; and with the gay and bright, The flatterers of a day, Forgot the friend who loved her well, For he was far away.

And when she saw that friend again, Sne coully turn'd away; For new-made friends had changed her And taught her to betray.

And as she stood upon the sand, Where she had stood before, She stoop'd and wrote with careless hand, " I love you now no more."

These words were stamp'd upon his heart, And ever must remain; For though he wishes to forget, He tries, airs! in vain.

But time will come, when she will learn Her faiseness to deplore, And weep that she could write the page "I love you now no more."

AN EVENING THOUGHT. WRITTEN AT SEA.

BY OLIVER W. HOLMES. If sometimes in the dark blue eye, Or in the deep red wine, Or soothed by gen'lest melody, Still warms this heart of mine, Yet something colder ir. the blood, And calmer in the brain, Have whisper'd that my youth's bright flood Ebbs not to flow again.

If by Helvetia's azure lake, Or Arno's yellow stream, Each star of memory could awake, As in my first young dream, I know that when mine eye shall greet The hill-sides bleak and bare, That gird my home, it will not meet As chidhood's sunset there.

O when young love's first, sweet, stolen kiss Burned on my boyish brow, Was that young forehead worn as this? Was that flush'd cheek as now? Where that wild pulse and throbing heart Like these which vainly strive, In thankless strains of soulless art,

To dream themselves alive?

Alas! the morning dew is gone, Gone ere the full of day; Life's iron fetter still is on, Its wreaths all torn away; Happy if still some casual hour Can warm the fading shrine, Too soon to chill beyond the power Of love, or song, or wine!

DELHI.

The modern town, distance 900 miles from Calcutta, is called by the English New Delhi. and by the natives Shahjehauabad, in memory of its founder Shah Jelan, one the greatest ed and left for dead. Mogul Emperors. It is favourably situated for Jumna, tributary of the Ganges, and contains a perfectly sonscious of what they were doing, but and particularly Mohammedan rulers, preferred heels. inaugurating works of their own, to maintaining those of their predecessors. Delhi had been the capital of Northen I dia for many centuries before the Monga's had descended with fire and sword, to spread the faith of Mahemmed over the plains of Hindostan, but it was not till it became the chief focus of Mohammedan power in the East that it attained that magnifi cence and importance which rendered it at ouce the boast and glory of Asia. It was here resided the great Mogul, the fame of whose riches had spread in a cloud of mystery and fable to the west, and acted like a talisman to incite Vasco de Gama and Columbus to their discoveries. It was here at the court of Gehaughir, "Conqueror of the world," that the first English ampassador was presented; and it was from the same monarch in 1616, that Sir Thomas Rowe obtained a reception more splendid, as he was told than had ever been accorded to the representatives of either Turkey or Persia.

Among the architectural works by which Delhi is so profusely adorned, those of the Empe. or Akbar form a large proportion. The mausoleum which he erected to the memory of his father, is a splenbid edifice, composed entirely of white marble, and surmounted by a lofty dome of the same material; while interiorly it is elaborately inlaid with a mosaic work of precious stones. This, however, is far eclipsed in magnitude and splendour, by the tomb under which his own remains repose, and which, in 1803 (just w) hundred years after Akbar's death,) afforded lodgings to a whole regiment of British dragoons, who made it their quarters for some time after the capture of that territory. This emperor was accustomed to celebrate his birth-day by a fete, which, in point of extravagance, has no parallel even in the aunals of eastern courts. It was the custom on such occasions to cause himself to be weighed three portunity in peace or war to indulge his passion for display. His hunting establishment alone

And round him 'mid the burning sands he saw Fruits of the north in icy freshness thaw. And cooled his thirsty lips beneath the glow Of India's sun, with ures of Persian snow. Harper's Gaz-tteer of the World says :-

The principal European structures are an arsenal, a church, a college, a printing office, and the dwellings of the British functionaries, who! exercise the real authority of Delhi, the Mogul Emperor receiving a yearly stipend of £150,000 from the Indo-British government. The vicitity is tertilized by the canal of Ali-Merdan, reopened by the British in 1820. Delhi has manutictories of scarfs, embroidery, harness, and ornamented goods in great variety; and its bazaars are turnished with most of the produce of the east .-COURIER.

SCALPING A WOMAN ON THE PLAINS-HER EXTRORDINARY FORTITUDE.—Some weeks ago news from Carson valley was published in our columns, which told of the almost total destruction of an immigrant train by the Indians. A woman who was one of the train, was scalped and left for dead. It turns out, however, that she was not dead; and she has since recovered to tell the extrrordinary story of her suffering and her resolute endurance, which deceived the savages. The Red Bluffs Beacon of the 17th Spt., thus tells the tale :-

"An instance of the most remarkable fortitude and heart-reeding cruelty we ever heard Missouri, by the way of the plains. He informs that a short time before he arrived at Stony on the Humboldt River, the Indians attacked a The men were all killed but one who made his escape. MISTAKES OF PRINTERS. - Some people are continually wondering at the "carelessness" of elt. in allowing so many error; and blunde a to appear in their columns and mar the print. Such people know very little of the dificulties of keeping them out. The most careful attention to these matters will not prevent errors from creeping in, even when the professional proofreaders are engaged expressly for the purpose. And when it is borne in mind that in most papers sucr an expence is necessarily dispensed with. and the proofs on that account are hurriedly examined the fact will no longer appear strange. In connection with this subject, are following anecdote is not inappropriate: -

A Glasgow publishing house attempted to publish a work that should be a perfect specimen of typographical accuracy. After having been reward of fifty dollars offered to any one who should detent an error. Each paper remained two weeks in this place, and yet when the work was issued, several errors were discovered, one of which was in the first line of the first page!
