House of Commons Debates

SECOND SESSION—ELEVENTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 19, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

NAVAL SERVICE OF CANADA.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 95) respecting the Naval Service of Canada.

On section 2—interpretation; (b) 'department' means the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I desire to move an amendment to paragraph (b) which will read as follows:

Strike out the words 'Marine and Fisheries' and substitute for the same 'naval service.'

This will give me an opportunity of explaining the resolution which I moved yesterday for the organization of the naval service. In order to understand the amendment which I now suggest to substitute for 'Marine and Fisheries' the word 'naval service,' I propose to explain what the naval service shall be and what it shall consist of. At the present time the Department of Marine and Fisheries is loaded with several public services. There is perhaps no department of the government which exercises so wide a jurisdiction over different matters of public interest as the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It has to deal, according to law, with:

Pilots and pilotage and decayed pilots' fund.

The construction and maintenance of lighthouses, lightships, fog alarms, buoys and beacons.

Ports and harbours, harbour commissioners and harbour masters.

Piers, wharfs and breakwaters, the collection of tolls in connection therewith, and the minor repairs on such properties.

Steamships and vessels belonging to the government of Canada engaged in connection with services administered by the minister.

Sick and distressed seamen, and the establishment, regulation and maintenance of marine and seamen's hospitals.

River and harbour police.

Humane establishments.

Life-boat service, and rewards for saving life.

Inquiries into causes of shipwrecks and casualties and the collection of wreck statistics.

Inspection of steamboats, examination of engineers, and inquiry into accidents to steamers and the conduct of engineers.

Examination of masters and mates.

Registration and measurement of shipping, and preparation of return of registered shipping of Canada.

Meteorological and magnetic service.

Tidal observatioins on the coasts of Canada.

Climatology of Canada.

Inspection of vessels carrying live stock from Canada to Europe.

Shipping of Seamen, shipping masters, and shipping offices.

Winter communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland by steamer and ice boats.

Hydrographic surveys.

Administration of deck-load law, and the subject of deck and load lines.

Removal of wrecks and other obstructions in navigable waters.

Sea coast and inland fisheries, the management, regulation and protection thereof, and everything relating thereto and the payment of fishing bounties.

Deepening and maintaining the St. Lawrence ship channel from Montreal to the sea.

Administration of Sorel ship yard.

Wireless telegraph service.

These the Department of Marine and Fisheries has assigned to it. In discussing the organization of the department with my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) who now presides over it and whose continued absence from the House we still deplore, he thought it advisable, or he had in mind, at all events, to divide the department constituting two departments within the same department. What was obviously too much business for one department might perhaps not have been enough for two, but now that it is proposed to have a navy, it is quite evident that it would not be possible to have the whole of this included in the same department. Therefore, the intention of the government is to create a new department to be called the Department of the Naval Service. Later on, when we come to the proper moment, I will move the following addition:

4a. There shall be a department of the government of Canada which shall be called the Department of the Naval Service, over which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the time being shall preside, and he shall be the Minister of the Naval Service.

4b. The Governor in Council may also appoint an officer who shall be called the deputy minister of the naval service, who shall be the deputy head of the department, and may also appoint such other officers and clerks as are requisite for the due administration of the business of the department, each of whom shall hold office during pleasure.

This department shall be charged with the administration of the navy, but it is the intention of the government to transmute from the Department of Marine and Fisheries to the Navy Department the following services as defined in subsection (i) of the present section 2: The naval service, the fisheries protection service, hydrographic survey, tidal observation, and wireless telegraph service. I hope that I have made myself clearly understood. The department of the naval service will have control of the navy and in addition the protection of the fisheries, the hydrographic survey, the tidal observation and wireless telegraphy. These services in themselves now constitute an important branch of the administration. I shall give some information to the House as to the reasons for placing these different branches of the service, that is the protection of the fisheries, the hydrographic survey, the tidal observation survey and the wireless telegraphy under this department. Under the heading of the protection of fisheries we have one of the most important services of the government. We have engaged in the service at present eight ships, the 'Canada,' the 'Constance,' the 'Federal,' the 'Curlew,' the 'Vigilant,' the 'Kestrel,' the 'Falcon' and the 'Restless.' The 'Canada' is a ship of 580 tons, 200 feet in length, 25 feet beam, with a maximum speed of 17½ knots. The 'Constance' is a ship of 105 tons burden, 161 feet in length, 19 feet beam, with a maximum speed of 10 knots. The 'Kestrel' has a tonnage of 122 tons, is 160 feet long, 22 feet beam and has a maximum speed of 10 knots. These ships are at present, and have been for years, patrolling the waters of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and that part of the gulf, protecting the Canadian fishermen and Canadian fisheries generally.

The 'Curlew' is of a somewhat similar character and is charged with the protection of the fisheries on the waters of the Great Lakes. The 'Vigilant' is on the shores of the Bay of Fundy and the coast of New Brunswick. The 'Kestrel' is on the shores of British Columbia, chiefly Hecate strait. The other two are small vessels, the 'Falcon' and the 'Restless,' connected with the same service.

The hydrographic survey fleet is composed of three ships, the 'Bayfield,' 'La Canadienne' and the 'Lillooet.' The 'Bayfield' is preparing the surveys on Lake Ontario, 'La Canadienne' on the lower St. Lawrence and the 'Lillooet' in British Columbia.

The tidal survey is chiefly in the lower St. Lawrence. We have one ship connected with the survey, the 'Gulnare,' which is constantly at work taking surveys at all times of the day.

In the wireless telegraph service the government now owns 21 stations in Canada. These stations are:

Father Point, River St. Lawrence.
Clarke City, River St. Lawrence.
Fame Point, River St. Lawrence.
Heath Point, Anticosti.
Cape Bear, Prince Edward Island.
Pictou, Nova Scotia.
Cape Race, Newfoundland.
Whittle Rocks, Gulf of St. Lawrence.
Point Armour, Gulf of St. Lawrence.
Belle Isle, Gulf of St. Lawrence.
Point Rich, Gulf of St. Lawrence.
Cape Ray, Newfoundland.
Sydney, Nova Scotia.
Cape Sable, Nova Scotia.
Partridge Island, New Brunswick.
Point Grey, British Columbia.
Victoria, British Columbia.
Pachena, British Columbia.
Estevan, British Columbia.
Cape Lazo, British Columbia.
Prince Rupert, British Columbia.

It is proposed that all these different services shall be transferred from the Department of Marine and Fisheries to the Department of the Naval Service.

Mr. SPROULE. If it is proposed to establish a new department, would not the proper course have been to introduce a Bill to establish the department first?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the proper place is in connection with the Naval Bill. When we came to look into the matter closely it was found that it would be too much to place under one department. It was decided to have a separate department which would be presided over by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it intended to appoint another deputy minister for that department?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The proposal is to create a new department with a new deputy minister but to have it under the control of one of the existing ministers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. Under the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

On section 4,

The command in chief of the naval forces is vested in the King, and shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty or by the Governor General as His representative.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Is this section not in direct contravention of the British North America Act, which provides that the authority should continued to be vested in the King? This presumes to direct how that authority should be exercised, and is therefore adding something material to the British North America Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This has been the law of Canada since confederation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Section 15 of the British North America Act is as follows:

The command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval and military forces, of and in Canada, is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

As the hon. member for Hastings has said, there is a certain qualification to that introduced in section 4 of this Bill, which undertakes to say how that command shall be exercised. There is no such qualification in section 15 of the British North America Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the objection is not at all well taken. This Act is exactly the same as the Militia Act in regard to the power vested in the government of Canada. Here is the clause in the Militia Act:

> The command in chief of the militia is declared to continue and be vested in the King, and shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty, or by the Governor General as His representative.

The clause might perhaps have been improved and made clearer than it is; but since it has received the interpretation of parliament from the earliest days of confederation, we did not think it advisable for us to depart in any way from what has been the settled and well-understood principle of the constitution. Moreover, my hon. friend will find in section 9 of the British North America Act the same language repeated almost identically. I think my hon. friend from Hastings some time ago expressed the opinion that the interpretation of section 15 of the British North America Act was that the command of the forces should be exercised by the Queen and could not be delegated by her to the Governor General. At all events, if he did not exactly express that view, the press has done so. I would simply ask my hon. friend to look at section 9 of the British North America Act, which reads as follows:

> The executive government and authority of and over Canada is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

If the correct interpretation of section 15 is that the command of the forces is vested in the Queen and cannot be delegated by her to her representative in this country, it would follow that the executive government of the country, which is also declared by the constitution to be vested in the Queen, could not be delegated to her representative. That interpretation is simply absurd. From the very first day of confederation the executive power over Canada has been conferred by the Queen upon her representative in this country, and we cannot conceive that it would be possible to carry on the government otherwise. We cannot expect that under the constitution of Canada or the constitution of any of the self-governing colonies, the young daughter nations of the empire, the Sovereign himself would exercise authority directly in these countries. He can only do so indirectly by a representative. It has been done, and the action has never been questioned. That is the answer I have to give in regard to the language of this section, which follows identically what has been the custom of the country since confederation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it not, in other words, a guarantee of responsible government that these clauses appear in various places in the constitution?

Mr. NORTHRUP. The right hon. gentleman has evidently misunderstood my contention. I never contended that the King was unable to delegate authority. I quite recognize that he can, but that is a quite different proposition from this section, which undertakes to withdraw his authority from him. The view I advanced to the House was this, that the royal prerogative extended to the navy, whereas under the system in England the royal prerogative had been so whittled down by parliamentary Acts with regard to the army that it was not by virtue of the prerogative that the Crown controlled the army. Parliament in the old country has continually dealt with the army and the Sovereign has been a party to every Act of parliament so dealing with it. He stands in a different position with regard to the navy, and my whole argument was that inasmuch as the authority of the Sovereign over the navy is a matter of prerogative precisely the same power as his power to make treaties, and is not derived from parliament at all, therefore, this House could no more interfere with the Crown's prerogative with regard to the navy than it could interfere with its prerogative touching the treaty-making power.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do I understand my hon. friend to mean that at the present time the navy is still under the prerogative of the Crown in England?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Yes, I contend that the authority over the navy is vested in the Crown by mere prerogative, just the same as the treaty-making power.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member's contention can be substantiated at all by authority. At the present time, the prerogative of the Crown in England whether it concerns the army or whether it concerns the navy, is no longer in existence. The navy and the army of course are under the control of parliament. Up to the early part of the 19th century the Crown made good the right with the Commons and parliament to preserve its prerogative over the army and navy, but I can only recall to my hon. friend that from the last 60 or 80 years, I should say for the last 100 years, the prerogative of the Crown, both with regard to the army and navy, has not existed for the will of the Crown, has been subject to the will of parliament in these matters above all others. George III, I agree with my hon. friend, tried to preserve his authority, but as democratic ideas advanced, he had to give away on this point, and the authorities are that in 1806, under the administration of Lord Grenville, the point was settled for ever. I have only to refer my hon. friend to Todd, who makes the point very clear.

This is what Todd says on page 383 of the first volume, speaking of the prerogative of the Crown:

The term 'prerogative' may be defined as expressing those political yawers which are inherent in the Crown and that have not been conferred by Act of parliament and which accordingly continue within the competency of the Sovereign, except in so far as they have been modified or restrained by positive legislation. For the King's prerogative is a part of the law of the realm and hath bounds set unto it by the laws of England. All that is meant by 'prerogative' nowadays is the practical division which it is necessary to make between the duties of the executive and the duties of the legislative power.

Now upon this very point Todd has given the history of the case. At page 121 my hon. friend will read this:

After the death of Mr. Pitt in 1806, the King was obliged to accept of an administration taken chiefly from the Whig party, in which he had no confidence. The ministry of 'All the Talents,' under the presidency of Lord Grenville and Mr. Fox, was forced by political considerations upon the King. Before the arrangements were completed, a difficulty arose on a point of prerogative. During the negotiations Lord Grenville proposed to His Majesty some changes in the administration of the army by which the question was raised whether the army should be under the immediate control of the Crown through the commander in chief, or be subject to the supervision of the ministers.

The King at once contended that the management of the army rested with the Crown alone; and that he could not permit his ministers to interfere with it, beyond the levying of the troops, their pay and clothing.

Then at page 527, Todd proceeds as follows:

We have already seen that the control of the army and navy was the last of the prerogatives to be surrendered into the custody of responsible ministers. Even of late years there have been those who have contended that the administration of the military and naval forces of the kingdom should remain altogether in the hands of the executive without any interference with the same by either House of Parliament. But sound doctrine forbids a distinction to be drawn between the exercise of the royal authority over the army and navy and over other branches of the public service; upon all alike it is equally competent for either House of Parliament to tender its advice, and there can be nothing done in any department of state for which some minister of the Crown is not accountable to parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Page 527.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the Prime Minister not confusing parliament with the cabinet? The point I have in view is this. At the time the right of purchase of commissions was done away with in the army, Gladstone completely overruled parliament, claiming that it was the prerogative of the Crown acting on the advice of the minister, not the prerogative of the Crown as represented by the cabinet and the sovereign.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend will remember that the action of Mr. Gladstone was very severely criticised at the time. I am an admirer of Mr. Gladstone, but even the best men can make mistakes. Mr. Gladstone had been a Tory in his early days, and perhaps he was expressing his Tory ideas on that occasion. At any rate, I well remember that the action of Mr. Gladstone, which was approved by public opinion in one sense, was severely criticised from the parliamentary point of view. At this date I do not think that anybody can contend that the King of England can have any power, either with regard to the army or with regard to the navy, which he can exercise through anybody else except through his responsible ministers who are responsible to the parliament. This is the position we take in this instance, and we say that the constitution of England was introduced into Canada in 1867. At that time the prerogative of the Crown was limited to the authority of parliament in the matter of the army and navy, and therefore we have jurisdiction over the same.

Mr. HUGHES. Go back to the early part of last century. The contention then was that the control of the army and navy was the personal prerogative of the sovereign independent of the ministers or of parliament. That was contested, and the Prime Minister may remember that I had occasion formerly to bring before him an instance. I think when Duncan was commander in chief of the forces he claimed the right to pass over the minister and go direct to the sovereign and consult him in all matters with reference to the army. Palmerston was Secretary for War at the time, I think, it was in 1810 that the commander in chief took that position, and from that time onward the control of the army and navy was regarded as the prerogative of the Crown acting on the advice of ministers, only indirectly responsible to parliament but not directly responsible to parliament.

Sir WLIFRID LAURIER. I suppose my hon. friend will have no objections to the minister being responsible to parliament. At all events, as minister of the Crown, he becomes responsible to parliament.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does the right hon. gentleman claim that the prerogative as regards the militia forces was not contained in the Crown at the time of the union?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. 1867?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is my contention, yes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Has the Prime Minister read the Acts passed in 1861-62, passed by the British parliament? Todd is no authority on any constitutional question. The Acts speak for themselves and I would suggest that the right hon. gentleman read that Act. When he illuminates this House on constitutional questions of this kind, he should know the constitutional law, and not acquire his knowledge from some hazy authority who is very ill read and not to be judged as a constitutional authority.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I never professed to be an authority on military matters, and I am quite willing to defer to my hon. friend on that point. But on parliamentary matters he will pardon me if I do not accept his views. As a soldier I would be quite willing to defer to him on any military affairs second, of course, to my hon. friend the member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes). I am quite willing to accept the views of my hon. friend on military matters, but in parliamentary matters he will excuse me if I do not accept his authority. The very fact he refers to, this statute of 1661—I am not familiar with the statute—but I must say the very fact that there was a statute passed upon the army and navy and militia in England is conclusive evidence that there is a prerogative subject to the control of parliament. Anything that becomes subject to a parliamentary statute, is not a prerogative of the Crown, and further parliament has exerted its authority. I say positively that in 1867 at the time of the union, the authority of the sovereign and his prerogative over the army and navy had become very anceint history. Wherein did the power to command the army and navy rest previous to that? Before parliament, it rested with the King. It rested with the King when parliament declared that it should rest with the King. But what I say is that everything that is concerned with the navy has ceased in England to be the prerogative of the King, and has become a matter over which parliament has the supreme authority.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The right hon. gentleman seemed to be pretty hazy on the matter, but I agree with what he says as I understand it. As a matter of fact, the control was with the lieutenants of counties until the Act of 1662. The Act of 1852 reinvested authority and control over both the army and navy in the Crown. The right hon. gentleman can easily find that, if he will take the trouble to look it up.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Without entering into the question of the comparative authority of Todd's utterances, I beg to quote a few words from Todd which the right hon. Prime Minister did not go on to read. Speaking of responsibility for the operations of the army and navy, he says, at page 528:

> As the command of the army and navy is the peculiar privilege and strength of the executive power, and cannot be surrendered to parliament without a virtual overthrow of the monarchy, it is essential that the scrutiny of parliament into military affairs should be cautiously and sparingly exercised.

Nothing could be clearer than these words 'cannot be surrendered to parliament without a virtual overthow of the monarchy.' I agree with every word that the Prime Minister has said as to the exercise of the prerogative. We have an illustration quite familiar to us in the prerogative of pardon. Everybody knows that parliament has nothing to do with the pardoning of criminals; that is a matter for His Excellency the Governor General. But in this matter the Governor General acts upon the advice of his ministers. If the prerogative of pardon be improperly exercised, the recourse of parliament is to punish the minister. That we can do—we can turn him out of office. But we have no control over his right to advise His Excellency. The same is true with regard to the navy. No doubt, the sovereign has the power, but some minster must take the responsibility for his act. As in the case of pardon, the sovereign has the right to act without parliament interfering, but if he acts contrary to the wish of the people, parliament can only punish the adviser who has improperly advised the sovereign.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not entirely agree with the view that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has expressed with regard to the prerogative. The prerogative of the Crown to-day is different from what it was five hundred years ago. In those cases in which the prerogative has disappeared, it has been lost in one or two ways; first, by the custom and practice of the constitution developed from time to time and, second, by direct parliamentary enactment. I do not think it is accurate to say that the Crown has no prerogative in respect of a matter, because that matter has been dealt with by parliament. The Crown can consent to an Act of Parliament which infringes upon its prerogatives, and it gives up its prerogative by that very consent. But an entirely different question arises here from that which must be met in Great Britain. Great Britain is not limited as we are limited by a written constitution. Parliament in Great Britain, passing an Act which obtains the consent of the King, can do anything it may see fit to do with respect either to the army or the navy,—no man who has the slightest acquaintance with constitutional principles will deny that. But that is not the case with us. We are limited by a direct specific enactment. One part of that enactment —the British North America Act—section 15, provides as follows:

The command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval and military forces, of and in Canada, is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

What is the object of this section of the Bill which we are now discussing? Does it propose to limit this section 15 of the British North America Act? It does not repeat it in so many words, but repeats it with a qualification. If that qualification is inconsistent with the British North America Act, it can have no effect, because the British North America Act must prevail over every enactment of this parliament if the two be inconsistent. What, then, is the object of this section 4 in introducing a qualification to which I have referred? I do not, at the present moment, quite understand the object of the government in introducing it. So far as some observations of the Prime Minister with respect to the use of the Queen's name in the British North America Act are concerned, you will notice that there are provisions in the British North America Act which contemplate the exercise of certain authority by the Queen, not upon the advice of the cabinet in Canada, but upon the advice of her own cabinet. There can be no doubt about that. For example, section 26 provides:

If at any time, on the recommendation of the Governor General, the Queen thinks fit to direct that three or six members be added to the Senate, the Governor General may, by summons to three or six qualified persons (as the case may be), representing equally the three divisions of Canada, add to the Senate accordingly.

I do not suppose that the Prime Minister will contend that he could add a qualification to that section and declare that the Queen should exercise that authority through the Governor General and by the advice of the cabinet here. That would hardly be a reasonable argument, it seems to me. I do not go into the question of control by parliament, because the parliament in Great Britain has control over the army and navy by virtue of its control over appropriations. No doubt, this parliament could have the same control; parliament could refuse appropriations for a standing army, a militia or a navy, and in that way could exercise most effective control in this country over any of these forces. But there is the distinction to which I have alluded in the fact that we are limited by a written constitution, and an enactment of this parliament inconsistent with the British North America Act can have no force against that Act.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I did not take any part in the debate on this measure at the earlier stages, and I should not do so now, but that the subject under discussion relates to questions which, in the main if not entirely, are of a purely legal character. I should like to premise, in what I wish to say about the matter, that I am merely expressing my opinion about the law as a member of this House, and that I do not for a moment expect that any views I hold with regard to this subject should be received with any greater weight than would be attached to expressions of opinion on the point by any other lawyer who happened to be a member of this House.

I would like to say just one thing further by way of preface. A good deal has been said, in the course of the earlier stages of this debate, upon the subject of personal loyalty or the attachment and devotion which every British subject ought to feel towards the Crown and towards the mother country. Some aspersions—I think I may without impropriety say—have been cast, in that regard, upon, not only the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the leaders of the political party on this side of the House, but upon that political party generally, or, at all events, some sections of it. I do not want to go into anything of that sort. It seems to me that this matter can be discussed, and ought to be discussed, without any question of that character being raised. I think that, personally, I am thoroughly and entirely loyal to the British Crown, to British institutions, and to Great Britain as our mother country. I think the same thing of the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, and of his compatriots in this country; and, with regard to this measure, I only want to say that if I thought there was anything in it which, insidiously, secretly or colourably, was endeavouring to introduce the thin end of the wedge of any division between Canada and Great Britain, or to make for disloyalty towards Great Britain, or to make even for voluntary separation between Canada and Great Britain, I not only would not be supporting this measure, but I would not remain for one single hour in any government that would introduce it into this House. I have said before now on that subject in this place that some of my friends referred to me sometimes as a political jingo, or a Toronto jingo, equal in that regard even to my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes). I am quite content to accept that description. I believe that the hon. the leader of the opposition said not long ago, (I saw it reported in some newspaper), that he came from a race of men who were proud to say, that they had never lived under any other flag than that of Great Britain. I can say the same thing; and coming with such a family history, I think it would be a strange thing if I did not feel, as I have said, not merely the warmest affection, but a personal devotion and loyalty to Great Britain, to British institutions and to the British Royal family.

Now if hon. gentlemen will do me the credit of believing that I am sincere in what I have said, premising that much, I wish to say a few words with reference to the argument which was presented on the question now under discussion by my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) in moving the six months hoist upon the motion for the second reading of this Bill. He took the position that this measure was one which it was not competent for this parliament to pass because it constituted an encroachment upon the Royal prerogative, and was in direct contradiction to the provisions of the Imperial Act governing colonial naval defence. That was a statute passed in 1865, and my hon. friend relied for his argument with regard to its application to the present measure, upon the provisions of the third section of that statute. The statute recites the expediency of enabling the several colonial possessions of Her Majesty to make better provision for naval defence, and then it goes on in the third section to declare :

It shall be lawful for the proper legislative authority, with the approval of Her Majesty in Council, from time to time to make provision for effecting at the expense of the colony all or any of the purposes following:

Among them being the establishment of a navy. Now the argument of my hon. friend, as I gathered from what I saw reported in Hansard, was that we cannot in this country, being governed by the provisions of this Imperial statute of 1865, legislate in the way this measure proposes to legislate, unless we have in that behalf the approval of the imperial government, the approval of His Majesty in Council. The question in that respect seems to turn upon the consideration of the power of the King, upon the advice of his government for Canada, or upon the advice of the imperial government, as apparently is provided for in the Imperial Act of 1865 upon which my hon. friend based his argument. Now that statute was passed two years before the British North America Act. The British North America Act passed by the same imperial parliament modified the provisions of the statute of two years before in a very important degree. The statute of 1865 empowers any colonial legislature, with the approval of Her Majesty in Council, to make provision for the establishment of a navy. Then in 1867 the same imperial parliament passed the British North America Act in which, by section 91, they enacted that :

It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to——

Then coming to sub-paragraph 7 :

——in relation to militia, military and naval service and defence.

So we have the same parliament which, in 1865, had enacted that it should be lawful for any colony, (which may be said to have included Canada, therefore that it should be lawful for Canada), with the approval of Her Majesty in Council, to legislate for the establishment of a navy, saying two years later that it should be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, to do that identical thing. It seems to me that the argument is manifest that the later statute plainly empowers this legislative body, the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, to do the identical thing which, by the statute of two years before, it may be, could only be done with the approval of Her Majesty in Council. That view, it seems to me, is made abundantly clear by a subsequent provision of the Imperial Act of 1865, which possibly did not strike my hon. friend from Hastings as having a bearing upon the matter, but which it seems to me is very important in considering the purely legal aspect of the case. Section 10 of the Imperial Act of 1865 provides :

Nothing in this Act shall take away or abridge any power vested in or exercisable by the legislature or government of any colony.

So we have the very imperial statute which has, in section 3, given authority to establish a navy by a colony, proceeding to declare that where any power was vested in or exercisable by the legislature or government of a colony, nothing in this statute would take away any such power or abridge it. The power then, which is conferred upon the parliament of Canada to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to naval service and defence, is not taken away or abridged by the previous Imperial Act of 1865. That statute, which, of course, like any other public Act, is always speaking—speaking to-day, as my hon. friend read it, speaking a month ago when he addressed this House, does, at the same moment at which it declares the approval of Her Majesty in Council to be necessary, declare equally that no provision of that statute should take away or abridge any Canadian powers. It would seem to me, therefore, with all respect to the argument of my hon. friend, that the very statute upon which he relied as its basis affords a complete answer to it. Just one other reference to that statute as having a bearing upon the provisions of this particular legislation. A good deal of criticism was, at the earlier stages of this discussion, devoted to the provisions of sections 17 and 18 of the Bill before the House. These sections empower the Governor in Council to place the naval force of Canada on active service at any time when it appears advisable, and empower him, in case of emergency, to place the navy at the disposal of His Majesty for general service in the Royal Navy. That step seems plainly contemplated by the imperial statute of 1865, because, by section 6 of that statute, it is 'made lawful for Her Majesty in Council,' that is to say, for the British government 'from time to time, as occasion requires, and on such conditions as seem fit, to authorize the admiralty to accept any offer for the time being made or to be made by the government of a colony, to place at Her Majesty's disposal any vessel of war provided by that government.' That statute of 1865 contemplated the establishment of navies, or of naval forces, by any possession of the British Crown in any part of the world, applying, as I think every one will agree, to Canada, as Canada was then constituted prior to confederation, and it conferred authority upon the proper legislative body in Canada, with the approval of Her Majesty in Council, to make provision for the establishment of a navy, and it empowered further, by this section 6, the imperial government, to authorize the admiralty to accept any offer that a colony, to wit, Canada, might make to place her ships at the disposal of the admiralty upon occasions seeming to require it. But, when, two years later, the British North America Act was passed, and power to legislate on this very subject was conferred upon the Canadian parliament, not as before, with the approval of the British government, but simply upon the approval, advice and assent of the Canadian House of Commons and the Canadian Senate, it seems to me that the argument of my hon. friend, entirely built, as it is, upon the Imperial Act of 1865, falls to the ground.

Now, a larger question, perhaps—I do not know if my hon. friend views it as a larger question—but the question of the royal prerogative is also one in regard to which goes beyond our powers. The language of section 15 of the British North America Act is apt, if I may venture to say so. I think it means exactly what it says, as statutes which are well drawn usually do, but it contains a phrase that English lawyers, at any rate, and I presume, civil lawyers as well, are very familiar with. Something is vested in the Queen. The word 'vested' has its special force and meaning that lawyers are familiar with. We speak of property, of real estate, as being vested in a certain man, as being possessed or owned by him. That word would be a proper word to describe the manner in which the public, ungranted lands of the Crown in Canada are held. The Crown lands of any of the old provinces of Canada, of Ontario or of Nova Scotia, are vested in the Queen, or in the King, as the case may be. We perfectly understand the meaning of the phrase. The grant proceeds from the King. It is a relic of the old feudal system when the lord, or the over-lord, owned all of the ungranted lands in his dominions, but no one would for a moment suppose that that precludes the parliament of the colony in which such lands lie, or the executive government of that colony, from dealing with those lands. The control over them, the management of them, the administration of them are vested in the representatives of the people, although the legal title may be in the Crown personally; so that one would speak of the land as being vested in the King. Well, now, it is exactly in the same way, I venture to think, that the same phrase is used in section 15 of the British North America Act:

> The command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval and military forces, of and in Canada, is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

I would like to compare with that section, section 9 of the same statute, because we find in section 9 the concluding words identical with those of section 15. Section 9:

> The executive government and authority of and over Canada is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

There is no good reason, except for sake of clearness, why these two sections might not have been in one. The disposition of the two subjects dealt with by the respective two sections is identical. Certain things are declared to continue to be vested in the Queen. First we have 'the executive government and authority of and over Canada,' and likewise 'the command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval and military forces of and in Canada.' If they were grouped into one in that way we would understand them perfectly because we have been familiar with it for forty years, and agree what the meaning of the expression with regard to the 'executive government and authority of and over Canada' is. That is vested in the Queen in exactly the same words as the command in chief of the naval force is vested in the Queen. But the executive government and authority of and over Canada is exercised by the Queen's advisers in this country, or by the parliament of Canada, each within its own functions and according to its own powers. What ground is there for attributing to the phrase 'is vested in the Queen,' when used with regard to the naval force, any other meaning than you would attribute to it, and which we universally know it bears when speaking of the executive government and authority of and over Canada? How is that command in chief of the naval forces or that executive government and authority of and over Canada, which is declared by the British North America Act to be vested in the Queen, to be exercised in this country? The first preamble to the statute throws a great deal of light upon it. The provinces of Canada are to be federally united. How? With a constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom, and whatever parliamentary restrictions there are in the United Kingdom, or whatever restrictions the parliament of the United Kingdom itself has power to impose upon the royal prerogative, such restrictions exactly, I maintain, this parliament, as representing the people of Canada, has power similarly to impose within Canada. Just as, according to the constitution of the United Kingdom, the control of the naval forces is subject to parliamentary authority, is something in regard to which the minister of the Crown is responsible, so it is to be in this country, and the circumstance that by section 15 the command in chief continues vested in the Queen, does not, in my submission, prevent at all the administration of that force and the control and regulation of it being exercised by this parliament and by this government of Canada.

It is not a new field of legislation that we are entering upon. I think that is an important circumstance always to be borne in mind. This proposed legislation repeals our existing naval law. By section 53 of the Bill, chap. 41 of the Revised Statutes of 1886 is repealed in so far as it concerns the active and reserve militia marine forces. That statute has never been repealed, it is still in force and it contains legislation on this very subject which has been upon the Canadian statute-book for years, which has never been disallowed or animadverted upon the imperial government It invited disallowance quite as much as this Bill would if there was any encroachment upon the authority of Her Majesty in Council, or of the imperial government or upon the royal prerogative. Section 3 of the Act as it stood in 1886 provided:

> The command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all military and naval forces, of and in Canada, is vested in the Queen

How is it to be exercised?

> And shall be exercised and administered by Her Majesty personally or by the Governor General as her representative.

In 1868, when our Militia and Defence Act was passed, the provision was, by section 1:

> As provided by the 15th section of the British North America Act, 1867, the command in chief of the land and naval militia and of all naval and military forces of and in Canada, is vested in the Queen, and shall be exercised and administered by Her Majesty personally or by the Governor General as her representative.

That enactment, put before the imperial authorities over 40 years ago, has never, to my knowledge, been so much as commented upon; it certainly has never been disallowed, and has never been viewed by the imperial authorities with any alarm or as constituting any encroachment upon the royal prerogative or upon imperial rights.

We are certainly not going any further in the present legislation. The Act of 1868, repeated as it was in the consolidation of 1886, makes substantial provision for something in the way of naval forces in Canada. By section 12 the militia is divided into land forces and marine forces. The marine forces may be active or reserve militia marine, which is to be raised by enlistment or ballot, and which is to be composed of seamen, sailors and persons whose usual occupation is upon any steam or sailing craft navigating the waters of Canada. Our present Militia Act has repealed the land sections of this legislation, but left untouched the sections with regard to the naval forces or the militia marine, and it is those provisions which it is now proposed to repeal by section 53 of the present Bill, because something else is substituted for that which previously appeared. The provisions of section 15 of the British North America Act were, I think, as much encroached upon by this previous legislation as by anything in the present Bill, but I think that there was no encroachment at all because if we remember the position of the royal prerogative, as it has been declared by the highest authority to be at the present time, I think we will see what the meaning of the phrase is and what the full effect of section 15 of the British North America Act may be declared to be. The subject was considered, incidentally, it may be, but a very important pronouncement in regard to it was made by the Judicial Commitee of the Privy Council in England in the case of the liquidators of the Maritime Bank of Canada against the Receiver General of New Brunswick to be found in the appeal cases of 1892. At page 443 Lord Watson discusses incidentally this very subject, and I want to read a sentence or two from what he said. But to explain first how the question came up, let me say that the province was claiming certain moneys as a royal prerogative. It was a creditor of the bank which was in liquidation, and it claimed the right in priority to other creditors upon the ground that it represented the royal prerogative, and was entitled to the same rights in that regard as the Dominion government or as the imperial government undoubtedly would have. Lord Watson upheld the view of the province, and in discussing the argument to the contrary, said it was based mainly if not entirely upon the circumstance that whereas the Governor General of Canada was appointed directly by the Queen, the Lieutenant Governor of each province was appointed, not by Her Majesty, but by the Governor General, who had also the power of dismissal; and he said that if the British North America Act had not committed to the Governor General the power of appointing and removing the Lieutenant Governors, there would not have been any room for this argument. That argument, he said, if pushed to its logical conclusion, would prove that the Governor General, and not the Queen whose viceroy he is, became the sovereign authority of the province whenever the British North America Act came into operation. Then he goes on to say with regard to this argument:

But the argument ignores the fact that by section 58 the appointment of a provincial governor is made by the Governor General in Council by instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, or, in other words, by the executive government of the Dominion, which is by section 9 expressly declared to continue and be vested in the Queen. There is no constitutional anomaly in an executive officer of the Crown receiving his appointment at the hands of a governing body, who have no powers and no functions except as representatives of the Crown. The act of the Governor General and his Council in making the appointment is, within the meaning of the statute, the act of the Crown.

Now, that is the language of the Privy Council of England, speaking through its members. the Judicial Committee of its own body—the action of the Privy Council of England is the action of the King himself. The order of the court in this very cause was the order of the Queen herself in council, advised by her advisers, and issuing her own mandate. We have it therefore, upon the highest possible authority in a matter of this character, that the meaning of section 9 of the British North America Act, the meaning of the expression that the executive government and authority over Canada is vested in the Queen, is that the Act of the Governor General and his council is the Act of the Crown. That is the way in which the executive government and authority over Canada is exercised by the Crown; and my submission is that in absolutely and precisely the same way the control over our naval forces, just as over our militia, while it is vested in the King, is to be exercised by the Governor General and his council. I do not suppose any one, even though we have a King at present upon the throne, would read these words in section 15 as meaning that the King personally was to take command of the navy anymore than of his army. It is 200 years nearly since any King of Great Britain was upon a battlefield in time of actual war. In the old days, we know, the King was the leader, the commander in chief, personally at the head of his forces, issuing his orders and taking charge of the military campaign. I am not prepared to say whether or not at the present day, if we happened to have a ruler who personally had warlike ambitions, or felt that he was competent to take personal command in chief of his forces, he would be entitled to do so. I am only seeking to point out that although the command in chief is by law vested in him, the way in which it is exercised is the constitutional manner in which the executive government of the country is exercised, through his representatives and upon the advice of his council. If it were not so, how could there be the responsibility which we know rests upon the minister and upon the government of which the minister is a member? If the command in chief of the naval forces is something which the government, or the member of the government who is the minister in charge of the naval forces, cannot exercise, how is he to be responsible? If it is something which is a personal prerogative of the King, then surely the minister who is powerless in the matter cannot be held responsible for the consequence of possible mistakes. I think therefore that no difficulties exist in the provisions of the present Bill when read in company with the controlling provisions of the British North America Act. The parliament of Canada has been declared in more than one instance by the authority of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to have, within the scope of its own powers as defined in section 91 of the British North America Act, absolutely the same jurisdiction and to the same extent, which the imperial parliament itself possesses; and just as the imperial parliament has power to legislate with regard to the control of not only the land forces, but equally the naval forces of Great Britain, so the parliament of Canada has power, and in virtue of the provisions of section 91 of the British North America Act, to legislate in regard to the navy that we establish or the ships that we build or buy.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am very glad we have reached that stage of this discussion where we can calmly and dispassionately discuss the question before the House as a purely legal question; and while I differ from the hon. gentleman, I propose for the sake of argument to admit the first part of his argument, and see where it lands him and the government. The hon. gentleman admitted that apart from the British North America Act, the statute to which I referred, 28-29 Victoria, provided that such a colony as Canada could only pass such a Bill as this if it were in accordance with orders made by the King and council; but the hon. gentleman said that apart from that, the wording of the British North America Act gives Canada a power which withdraws it from the control of the Colonial Defence Act. He has referred to the words of the statute. Now let us look at the words of the statute and see the practical working out of it. Section 91 of the British North America Act says:—

It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons to make the laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada, in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces.

Therefore, he said, power having been given by the British North America Act to Canada to legislate on these four subjects, militia, military, naval service and defence, therefore we have power to legislate without regard to the motherland. I admit that for the sake of argument while I dispute it as a matter of law. Reading down the list of subjects, dealt with by section 91, we find that No. 23 is copyrights. Exactly the same argument applies to copyrights; this country has an exclusive right to legislate with regard to copyrights without regard to the motherland, but who does not know that we tried to do so and failed because we have no such power. I go to No. 25 in the list of subjects and I find that just as we have power to legislate, with regard to the militia, military, naval service, and defence, so we have a power to legislate with regard to the naturalization of aliens. This House has a power to legislate with regard to naturalization, but will the Prime Minister pretend for a moment to say that we have any such power under the sun. It is provided by an imperial Act of 1879, but all we have a right to do is to give a limited apologetic form of naturalization to those only within the borders of Canada. Yet the words of this section 91, are so complete that if the argument of the hon. gentleman is sound with regard to naval matters it is equally sound with regard to each of the three, and being certainly and demonstratively wrong, with regard to the latter two, I submit it falls also to the ground in regard to subsection 7. Now, another point. He referred to the judgment of the Privy Council to show that under section 9 of the British North America Act precisely the same powers had been held by the Privy Council to belong to the Governor General as are given to him by this clause. I do not think the right hon. gentleman appreciated the force of his own argument. In section 9 it is declared:

The executive government and authority of and over Canada is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

Without another word being said, and the courts held that that authority might properly be exercised by the Governor General on the advice of his responsible ministers. Take clause 15 of the British North America Act:

The command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval and military forces of and in Canada, is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

The same argument would apply there, and why would it not apply to clause 4 in this Bill before the House. If we read:

The command in chief of the land and naval forces is vested in the King.

—and stop there, what is the object of inserting those other words? I am not going to insult the intelligence of this government by suggesting that they are cumbering the statute-book with words that are utterly meaningless, and yet it is quite clear that the Privy Council has admitted that without these words the clause would allow the Governor in Council to administer the law. Why then put these words in? They are either superfluous, being already provided for, or they are void, having no power.

An hon. MEMBER. Ultra vires.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Why, therefore, cumber the statute-book with words that are either superfluous or void. There is only one reason that I can understand why they are there. It would be impossible to read clause 18 in this Bill if we had not those additional words added in clause 4. If we left the command of the fleet vested in the King it would be rather absurd for the Governor in Council to place it at his own disposal if he liked. But we are to have two distinct bodies, the King on the one hand, and the government to control the navy on the other; and then we begin to see why these words which are either superfluous, or void, are introduced.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. As an ordinary layman it is a little rash perhaps for me to project myself into a legal argument of this kind, but having had some connection with the military side of life, perhaps I can take a cooler view of a question of this kind, than the legal gentlemen who have discussed it. Now the only way to get at the root of a question of this kind is to get right down to the foundation and find out whether in the beginning of things or at any stage of the procedure the command of the army and navy was vested either in the King, or in the parliament of Great Britain and Ireland. In the year 1661 Charles was restored to his throne, and in that year an Act was passed by the parliament of Great Britain which has never yet been repealed. That Act rules the country to-day, and rules this country. It is still on the statute-book. I will read what the preamble of the Act which deals with this very question says. The right hon. gentleman has drawn the inference that at some time or other the command, that is the right to order, or the right to give commands to the army was vested in the parliament of Great Britain. It has never been vested in the parliament of Great Britain. The statute of 1661, which is the law of England to-day, says:

For as much as within all His Majesty's realms and dominions the sole supreme government command and disposition of the militia and of all forces by sea and land and of all ports and places of strength is and by the laws of England ever was, the undoubted right of His Majesty and his royal predecessors, kings and queens of England, and that both or either of the houses of parliament cannot or ought to pretend to the same, nor can nor lawfully may raise or levy any war, offensive or defensive, against His Majesty, his heirs or lawful successors.

Now, that, Mr. Chairman, is the law to-day in England. The parliament of England of that date laid down a rule that as far as the command of the army and navy and the forces were concerned, that command should be always vested in the sovereign, and that command was never claimed by either House of parliament. I think that when we start at the beginning we will begin to realize where we are getting to. Now what does the command consist of? It does not consist in commanding an army or navy as a matter of chattels or as a piece of real estate as my learned friend, the Minister of Justice has quoted authorities to show. The command of the army is a living occupation, a real command. It is a right over life and death, and that command is so great that in case of conquest and in cases of insurrection it has been able to carry on the quasi civil government of countries under what is known as military law. The army acts for the King. Now so true is this that to-day in Great Britain the pay of the navy and the pay of the army is by royal warrant. In 1662, the parliament of England doubting the wisdom of the King, to exercise the sole right of command of the army and navy, fearing that they might have a continuation of the troubles they had with Charles I, took the command of the militia forces or trained bands away from the King. They said the King will issue a commission to the Lord Lieutenants of countries, giving the Lord Lieutenants of countries the right to issue commissions to captains and colonels, and so forth of the trained bands.

M. J. A. CURRIE.

By this means they establish a constitutional check on the Crown or on what is known as the prerogative of the Crown. Now, that right was given up by the parliament of England by the Acts of 1852, 1858 and 1876. And the sole right to command the militia and the whole army to-day rests with the King. We never had the right, nor had the parliament of England, to declare that the King had not the sole command. But what does this command consist of? It consists of issuing commissions and orders and moving the forces. It is quite true—I acknowledge that it is perfectly right—that this parliament has the authority to establish a navy, to arm it, equip it, man it. But when it comes to ordering that navy, or moving it, or saying what it should do, that is within the prerogative of the King. There are various prerogatives of the King. There is, for instance, the prerogative relative to real estate, water-powers, and that sort of thing. But this is an arm of the King—the army and navy is an arm of the King. It is true, and has always been true, as the learned gentleman has quoted, that we could establish a navy. He states that the British government, or naval department of the government, should have the right to accept ships from the colonies. Quite true. But the King has had the right to accept ships from his subjects from time immemorial, and letters of marque have been issued to privateers, as everybody knows. As I said there is nothing to prevent this parliament from establishing a navy, arming, equipping and manning it; but when it comes to the question of appointment, of moving and ordering that navy, that rests with the King as I have shown by the clause I have read from the Act of 1661 which has never been repealed, and certainly could not be repealed by Act of this parliament. But what does this Naval Bill propose? It proposes by order in council to assume to pass a law, to issue commissions and order and move this navy, to compel this navy to act and fight or retreat as it wishes. To my mind knowing a little about military law, as it was necessary for me to know, it seems absurd for this parliament to assume that such a power exists, for there is no ground for such assumption. While it is quite true that the army and the navy may be moved by the Crown without respect to either the English parliament or this parliament, there has never been any question that this would be done on the advice of the minister, and, in this case, the minister whose advice would be sought would be the Minister of the Marine here. But, in case of necessity arising there is no doubt that the absolute command to this navy is in the King, this having been declared by the highest authority of the realm, parliament itself over four hundred years ago. Can we, a small portion of the British empire, propose to remove that authority and that power of command?

Now, Sir, this question assumes a very grave aspect, because I think the enactment here proposed does not show that respect for the dignity of the Crown which we, as a parliament, and as good British subjects ought to show. The question of the right of command should not have been raised in connection with this navy? I asked the Minister of Justice to quote the words of the statute of 1886. And the House has waited for his reply. This is the clause:

> The command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval forces of and in Canada is vested in the Queen and shall be exercised and administered by her personally, or by the Governor General as her representative.

I wish hon. members to note the words 'as her personal representative,' because that expresses exactly the idea that was contained and is well recognized by the English law. In Great Britain, for instance, the pay of the army and navy is by royal warrant, and not by vote of supply as is done here.

The other question brought up by the minister is the right of the Crown in civil matters. This is not a civil matter. It is the armed power, not the civil power we are dealing with. Even in the matter of the civil power the King is supreme. His prerogatives have, however, been limited by statutes and the interpretations of the courts. His prerogative, however, exists. It is the same as his right in real property. We all know that all real property is vested in the Crown, and that we as citizens have only the use of real property. But the command of the army and navy is on an altogether different basis. The old statutes of 1661 never having been repealed by England, whereby the parliament of England declares the control of the marine and naval forces of the empire and all its dominions to be vested in the Crown is to be challenged at this late day. For that reason, in my opinion, it would be better to modify this section and not try to set up a new principle of constitutional right.

Mr. CONGDON. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) is endeavouring to revive a doctrine that cost one King of England his head and another his throne. There is nothing clearer in the British constitutional system than that these prerogatives of the Crown were usurpations, brought about by the arguments of lawyers—such arguments as we have listened to to-day. These lawyers were trained in the unmitigated tyranny of the latter Roman empire. Their doctrines were written on the statute books of many European kingdoms, and, if carried into effect, would have made the British empire worse than any oriental despotism that ever existed. Because you find that, as a result of these refinements, the King is represented as perfect, as immortal, as legally ubiquitous, the fountain of honour, the vicegergent of God, and responsible to Him above, owning all the land in the country, and as even invisible. In conflict with this, you have the corrections introduced into the British constitution by actual practice. The Roman lawyers might indite their doctrines as strongly as they liked, but the barbarous Germans, amongst whom they endeavoured to propagate these ideas, refused to recognize the arguments and corrected the proposals in practice. It is the old confusion of the King as an actual person with the King as a body politic. As a corporation sole, of course, the King has all these powers. In that sense, it is true, as said by Louis XIV, 'L'etat c'est moi.' For the King in that sense is the state. He does not exercise these rights in his own person, but, since the Bill of Rights, since the Act of Settlement, by the advice of his ministers responsible to parliament. The real question here is whether His Majesty shall exercise command and control of the Canadian navy solely and wholly upon the advice of British ministers responsible to the British parliament which in turn is responsible to the British people, or shall exercise these powers on the advice of his Canadian ministers responsible to the parliament of Canada in its turn responsible to the people who pay the expense of the navy both in its original construction and subsequent operations. It seems to me that to contend in this late day that the colonies are to do nothing in the shape of defence without handing over the control to imperial ministers, is to discourage all parts of the empire, except Great Britain and Ireland from doing anything in the way of contribution to Imperial defence.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Congdon) is to be congratulated on his frankness in stating the issue. I agree that the issue is as he has stated. I do not agree that we have the right to practically amend the British North America Act. I have said what I thought about this matter on the second reading of the Bill, and I am confirmed in my opinion and strengthened in it since, and have discussed it with gentlemen more learned than I am, and I have no doubt the latter part of section 4 is ultra vires of this government, and the British government would have a perfect right, and it would be their duty to the empire, to disallow that section. We have a constitution in this country which gives us full power in domestic matters, but we have no constitution that allows us to butt in, so to speak, upon imperial matters. We have been politely told by the imperial government, when we undertook to suggest what they should do in respect to the government of Ireland, that we had better mind our own business, and we were told so correctly. We are now here to-day undertaking to say that the British North America Act should practically have words in it that it does not contain. The British North America Act is similar to clause 4 of this Bill, if you stop at the word 'King,' but we undertake to add that the command in chief of the naval forces shall be invested in and exercised by His Majesty, or by the Governor in Council, as his representative. We have no right to say that as loyal citizens of the empire—and I make no insinuation against the loyalty of any one who thinks we have such a right. But, speaking for myself, I dare not do it; we dare not do it, because we have no authority to put into the hands of the government of this country a right to do something which the British North America Act never said they should have a right to do as loyal citizens of that great empire. I cannot agree with the conclusion of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Congdon) who frankly says what he believes, and says that this is the issue before the country to-day. I agree with him that it is the issue but I take strong grounds that we have no legal right under the British North America Act, outside of any question of loyalty to the United Kingdom, to say that that Act puts a prerogative in the Governor General of this country as distinguished from the imperial government.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not wish to detain the committee very long with any observations of mine. In so far as my position towards this legislation is concerned, I have already endeavoured to make it clear that such objections as I have to it do not rest upon the particular wording of any section; they are very much broader than that. Personally, I would be disposed to leave to the government the entire responsibility of the form in which they express their intention with regard to the establishment of this navy. In connection with this section, however, it seems to me that we are wasting our time in discussing what is the proper meaning of section 15 of the British North America Act, and defining where the command lies, unless it is contended that the general provisions of section 91, which give to this parliament power to legislate with regard to militia and defence, confer power on us to place the command of the forces somewhere else than where section 15 places it. I propose to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) a question. What I would like to ask the Minister of Justice is whether I should understand him to argue that the effect of the provision of section 91 of the British North America Act conferring legislative power with regard to militia and defence was to confer on this parliament any power to place the command of any force, either naval or military, elsewhere than where section 15 places it?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think there is nothing inconsistent in the two sections and that full effect can be given to both.

Mr. DOHERTY. I believe certainly that full effect can be given to both, but what I would like to understand is whether the Minister of Justice takes the position that under section 91 this parliament can, if it so determines, legislate to place the command of the force elsewhere, than in His Majesty, whatever meaning is to be attached to the words 'His Majesty'.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The phrase 'command of the forces' is perhaps confusing. If the hon. gentleman means to ask, whether, in my opinion, parliament can authorize the appointment of a general or admiral who would have command of the forces then I would say certainly, I think so.

Mr. DOHERTY. Of course, but that does not answer my question. I presume it is because I do not make myself understood. What I would like to get quite clear is whether in the opinion of the hon. minister section 15 is not legislation of the imperial parliament determining where, for all time, at all events, as far as the subsequent action of this parliament is concerned, the command of the forces shall be; I do not mean to say the actual command in the sense of naming a general, but the control of the naval force of this country, and possibly the appointment of a general.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think that certainly section 15 is an absolute determination of the matters there dealt with, but the hon. gentleman, I am sure, is not losing sight of the view expressed by the Judicial Committee to which I referred in the case of the Maritime Bank that the command or control was to be exercised by the government of the country.

Mr. DOHERTY. I take it then to be agreed that whatever may be the meaning to be attached to the phrase 'declared to continue and be vested in the Queen' as found in the British North America Act, it is settled that this parliament cannot step in and by any enactment, for instance by this Act, provide that the command shall be vested somewhere else than in His Majesty, or, as it states, in the Queen. I do not want to question the interpretation put upon section 15 by the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or the Minister of Justice, though I must confess that it did not seem to me that one of the arguments made in support of that contention was very conclusive. It was argued that because under section 9 which provides that the executive government of Canada shall be vested in His Majesty it was held, and I have no doubt that it was rightly held, that that meant that the executive government of Canada was vested in His Majesty, represented by the Governor General, in Council that holding settles the meaning of the words 'the Queen' in setcion 15. I do not dispute that holding at all, but in so far as it was argued that because in section 9 the words 'Her Majesty' or 'the Queen' were to be taken as meaning 'Her Majesty' through the Governor in Council it necessarily followed that the same expression in section 15 meant the same thing, that did not seem to be quite conclusive. Because it is to be pointed out that section 15 deals with the command, not merely of the military forces of Canada, but deals with the military forces of and in Canada. Now, at the time of the passage of the British North America Act, and for a long time subsequent, we had in Canada regular forces of Her Majesty. We may not for the moment have these, but there is no reason why we should not at one time or another have within Canada the regular forces of Her Majesty. Section 15 determines, without making any distinction between the two, that the command of all forces of and in Canada shall continue to be vested in Her Majesty. I hardly think it would be argued that the effect of that section was to place the regular forces of Her Majesty in Canada under the control of the Governor in Council and in the same section the Queen, or her Majesty, as constituting the commander of the regular forces, could hardly be held to be a different personage from the Queen as constituting the commander of the militia. I do not propose to argue from that in support of either one or the other proposition as to what is meant by 'Her Majesty'. All I desire to point out is that the argument by analogy from section 9 does not seem to me to be at all conclusive, and I think it may further be pointed out as showing that those who were in the beginning called upon to deal with the interpretation of this section recognized the then existence in Canada of regular forces of Her Majesty, which they did not in any way pretend under this section came under the control of the Governor in Council, that in the original Militia Act—and I am not certain that this is not carried on in the Act to-day—that you have a special provision that Her Majesty might in certain cases place the militia under the command of the commander of her regular forces in this country. Now the commander of Her Majesty's regular forces was not the officer of the Governor in Council, there was a separate commander of the militia forces. But as I said I do not desire to argue for or against the pretention that the control of our own militia may have been intended to be in Her Majesty in Council in Canada; that is to say Her Majesty as represented by the Governor General in Council in Canada. All I wanted to point out is that the argument made in support of the proposition does not seem to me to be as conclusive as it apparently seemed to the gentleman who invoked it.

It seems to me that the discussion by this House of what is meant by the provisions of the British North America Act is quite nugatory. We have not power by legislation here to determine what that meant, and it seems to me that we have not properly speaking, power to determine where the command of the forces of this country rests, that is determined by the British North America Act, and as was pointed out by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Northrup) if the British North America Act means, as it was contended on the part of the government, that the command is vested in His Majesty through the Governor General here and vested in him in council, that is so, whether we make an enactment on the subject or not; and if, on the other hand, it does not mean that our enacting that it does will not alter the state of the law. Apparently this parliament in taking upon itself as a matter of substantial legislation to determine where the command lies is taking on itself to determine something which the parliament of the United Kingdom by the British North America Act has determined for all time to come. In that connection one may safely say that that was the view of it entertained by the authors of the original Militia Act and they might perhaps be correctly enough described as having been at the same time the authors of the British North America Act. At least the minister who was primarily and particularly responsible for the Militia Act, the late Sir George E. Cartier, may fairly be described as having been one of the authors of the British North America Act, and it is a noteworthy thing that when they came to enact the Militia Act, the first one enacted under the British North America Act they did not ask parliament to determine on its own authority where the command rested, they enacted a section which recited that the British North America Act vested the command in the King. In other words the parliament of Canada did not say: the King shall have the command. What they said was: the parliament of Great Britain and Ireland has vested the command in the King. The section reads:

As provided by the 15th section of the British North America Act, 1867, the command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval and military forces, of and in Canada, is vested in the Queen and shall be exercised and administered by Her Majesty personally, or by the Governor General as her representative.

No doubt they took upon themselves to add the words:

And shall be exercised and administered by Her Majesty personally, or by the Governor as her representative.

To that extent they undertook to interpret the meaning of the words of the British North America Act. But they did not undertake of their own authority to place the command of the militia anywhere; they recognized that the British North America Act settled that. Now the interpretation they put on it by the addition of the words added may or may not have been correct. I do not want to dispute its correctness.

It seems to me that this parliament is without power to, of its own authority, determine where the command rests; that is determined one way or the other by the British North America Act, and if it were within my functions to make a suggestion it would seem to me that the wise course for this parliament would be to follow the example set by the framers of the original Militia Act and simply to recognize the fact that the British North America Act vests the power of command in His Majesty, of course leaving it to be interpreted by the proper tribunals what the expression 'His Majesty' in the Act means. After all that is the whole question. We cannot by any addition to the wording of that Act alter the person or persons or authority in whom the command is to be vested. The parliament of the United Kingdom settled that. The parliament of the United Kingdom gave this parliament power to legislate with regard to militia and defence no doubt, but as a preliminary to conferring that power is settled where the command was to rest, so it seems to me that the wise course under the circumstances would be to follow the example of the original framers of the Act and content ourselves with recognizing that the British North America Act places the command where that Act does place it. That of course as I have said does not affect the question of the meaning to be attached to the provision of the British North America Act, and I do not want to be understood as arguing here for the position that under the British North America Act the power vested in His Majesty or Her Majesty is not a power exercisible by Her Majesty or His Majesty through the Governor General in Council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am also disposed to take the view that the government must accept the responsibility of legislation of this kind—of course that goes without saying. The point of my objection was precisely that which has been emphasized by my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty), inasmuch as this parliament has no legislative authority to qualify or limit the language of section 15 of the British North America Act, it ought not to undertake to do it. Indeed I have some support in that from a former Minister of Justice, although apparently none from the present Minister of Justice. I observe what took place when the Militia Act was before this House in 1904, during the discussion on section 4 which read:

The command in chief of the militia is vested in the King and shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty, or the Governor General as his representative.

The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) who has brought the passage to my attention, inquired:

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In what does this differ from the old clause?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The word 'personally' is left out.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would suggest that this whole section would be dropped. It is absolutely unnecessary and in any event would have to be altered. Section 15 of the British North America Act provides:

The command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval and military forces, of and in Canada, is hereby declared to continue to be vested in the Queen.

That does away with the necessity for this section.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Let the section stand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If it is to stand, I would suggest this modification. Instead of reading, 'The command in chief of the militia is vested in the King,' it should read, as in the words of the British North America Act, 'is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the King.' Because we are not conferring upon His Majesty authority over the army. That authority is conferred by the constitution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This seems to be a wordy warfare. I rather agree with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) that there is no necessity for the clause. I think we might allow it to stand in the meantime.

That was the view expressed then.

Then let us remember once more that the authority of the imperial parliament is one thing, and the authority of this parliament is another thing so far as the prerogative of the Crown is concerned. The imperial parliament under modern conditions can deal with the prerogative of the Crown in any way that it sees fit, but this parliament cannot do so where it is limited by the terms of the British North America Act. A gentleman whose opinions on constitutional questions were quoted very freely in this parliament in 1905 in connection with the Autonomy Bill, and who has since been appointed to be a judge of the highest court of one of the provinces of Canada, speaks on the very subject we are now discussing—I am quoting from Clements' work on the Canadian Constitution at page 253. He is dealing with the prerogatives of the Crown and section 9 of the British North America Act quoted by the Prime Minister, and he says:

> The power (1) to disallow colonial legislation; (2) to appoint the Governor General; (3) to appoint a commander over the military and naval forces of Canada; (4) to make international arrangements which will bind Canada; and (5) to hear appeals from Canadian courts in her Privy Council (j); would seem to be about all the common law prerogatives of the Crown in connection with colonial affairs, over which colonial legislatures have no legislative power.

Nothing could be much more explicit or definite than that. He classes interference with the command of the militia and naval forces in the same category as the power to appoint a Governor General of Canada or the power to disallow colonial legislation, or the power for His Majesty to hear appeals from Canadian courts before the Judicial Committee of his Privy Council. These are all placed in the same category. I do not know by what pretense we can undertake to practically amend section 15 of the British North America Act.

The prerogatives of the Crown have been very tersely described by Professor Dicey in a passage quoted in the late work of Mr. Lowell, president of Harvard University on the Government of England.

> The authority of the Crown may be traced to two different sources. One of them is statutory, and comprises the various powers conferred upon the Crown by Acts of parliament. The other source gives rise to what is more properly called the prerogative. This has been described by Professor Dicey as the original discretionary authority left at any moment in the hands of the King; in other words, what remains of the ancient customary or common law powers inherent in the Crown.

He points out that the distinction is not always easy to draw because the prerogative of the Crown has sometimes been amplified by statute, and in some of the statutes which do modify it additional prerogatives have been conferred on the Crown itself. He points out, however, that these are not what are commonly known as the prerogatives of the Crown, but special statutory powers created by parliament, and conferred upon the Crown. The prerogatives in regard to the army and navy are very well understood. I realize that a constitutional writer in a work published only a few years ago declares that in Great Britain the army and navy are the creatures of parliament. So they are the creatures of parliament in one sense that they could not exist at all except for the annual appropriations voted by parliament, and so far as the army is concerned, it could not exist except by virtue of the annual enactment of the Army Act which provides for discipline within the army. That is not the case with regard to the navy. So they are the creatures of parliament in that sense, but the old common law prerogative of the Crown to hold the command of the army and navy has not been taken away. Indeed, the prerogatives of the Crown in Great Britain are somewhat more extensive to-day than many people suppose. There is a well known passage in this work of Lowell, cited from Bagot:

> 'It would very much surprise people,' as Bagehot remarked in his incisive way, 'if they were only told how many things the Queen could do without consulting parliament.' . . . Not to mention other things, she could disband the army (by law she cannot engage more than a certain number of men, but she is not obliged to engage any men); she could dismiss all the officers, from the general commanding in chief downwards; she could dismiss all the sailors, too; she could sell off all our ships of war and all our naval stores; she could make a peace by the sacrifice of Cornwall, and begin a war for the conquest of Brittany. She could make every citizen in the United Kingdom, male or female, a peer; she could make every parish in the United Kingdom a 'university'; she could dismiss most of the civil servants; she could pardon all offenders.

And all of us remember that the beginning of Civil Service reform in Great Britain was through the prerogative of the Crown, and not through any Act of parliament. The measure could not be put through parliament in Great Britain as parliament at that time was opposed to it, and the real beginning of civil service reform in Great Britain was effected by the exercise of the prerogative of the Crown:

> In a word, the Queen could, by prerogative, upset all the action of civil government within the government. We might add that the Crown could appoint bishops, and in many places clergymen, whose doctrines were repulsive to their flocks; could cause every dog to be muzzled, every pauper to eat leeks, every child in the public elementary schools to study Welsh; and could make all local improvements, such as tramways and electric light, well-nigh impossible.

He sums it all up so far as the army and navy are concerned, at page 22 by saying this: On page 22 we read: 'As head of the army and navy it (that is the Crown) raises and controls the armed forces of the nation and makes regulations for their government, subject of course to the statutes, and to the passage of the annual Army Act.' That is the situation in Great Britain. Parliament can modify that situation, and we can modify that situation in this country, but only within limits, and so far as we purport to qualify the limits set upon our power our action would be inoperative.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the Prime Minister going to pass section 4 after hearing read the statement of Sir Charles Fitzpatrick?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I can satisfy my hon. friend very easily upon that question. The British North America Act gave a new entity to this country and provided that the executive power was vested in the Queen, the sovereign of the day, and the legislative power was vested in the Queen, in the Senate and in the House of Commons. That Act was passed, it came into effect, and we have had the advantage of having had parliamentary interpretation of the powers vested in parliament upon this very question, that is to say, in whom should be vested the command of the naval forces and military forces. I shall have to quote once more section 15 of the Act: 'The command in chief of the land and naval militia and of all naval and military forces of and in Canada is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.' I have not apprehended exactly what was the meaning of hy hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup), but I think he stated that the command, as far as the navy was concerned, was vested in the King, and under the conditions of things prevailing in Great Britain, under the constitution, could not be delegated to anybody, not even to the Governor in Council.

Mr. NORTHRUP. No, no.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps not. At any rate, that is the way I interpreted it. Perhaps I may quote the constitution of Australia upon this point. Section 51 is analogous to ours and vests in the Australian parliament the naval and military defence of the Commonwealth and of the several states and the control of the forces. Section 68 is in these words: 'The command in chief of the naval and military forces of the Commonwealth is vested in the Governor General as the Quen's representative.' The Act is clearer in this respect than ours, because it says in so many words that the command is vested in the Governor General. But though clearer on this point, it is not more effective than ours. Now, from the early days of confederation we have had the interpretation of parliament upon this clause, and the first interpretation is to be found in the Act which has been quoted by several of my friends on the other side, and later by my hon. friend from St. Anne's (Mr. Doherty). These words are to be found in the very first Act on this subject, which was drafted by Sir George Cartier:

The command in chief of the militia is declared to continue and be vested in the King, and shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty or by the Governor General as his personal representative.

Now, it is to be noticed here that the word 'personal' was introduced in the section, though it pretended to follow and to keep close within the language of the British North America Act. The word 'personal' was interpolated for reasons as to which I have not been able to satisfy myself in any study I have been called upon to give to that question. But it is not of very great consequence. In later legislation on the same subject, the word 'personal' was eliminated. The Act, the Militia Act of 1867 came to be revised, not in the general codification of 1896, but by this parliament in 1904, and there the section was interpreted again, and interpreted in these words: 'The command in chief of the militia is declared to continue and be vested in the King and shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty or by the Governor in Council.' My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has just quoted a discussion which took place on this question in this House. He quoted the observation made at the time by the Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Fitzpatrick), that the section was unnecessary, because the matter was provided for in the British North America Act, and that they could not depart from the terms of the British North America Act. So far as I know that is the only opinion which he quoted, and as I understood him, the matter was allowed to rest there. But though the Minister of Justice of the day stated, in the opinion which was read by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden), that the clause was not necessary and should be eliminated, the clause was allowed to remain in the Bill.

Mr. HUGHES. It is changed, though.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In what respect?

Mr. HUGHES. The words 'declared to continue and be' were inserted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that that changed the condition at all. In the clause which is adopted in this Bill, and which is in these words: 'The command in chief of the naval forces is vested in the King and shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty,' this parliament does not pretend to go back upon anything which is declared in the British North America Act. The only words which are eliminated are these: 'the command in chief is declared to continue and be vested.'

Mr. HUGHES. Might I point out that when Sir Charles Fitzpatrick asked that the clause stand, it read then (in the Militia Act the same as section 4 in this Act now reads, but when it was represented to the House it read as it now stands in the Militia Act with these extra words.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend think these words make the clause any stronger?

Mr. HUGHES. I am bowing to the opinion of Sir Charles Fitzpatrick.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry I have not been able to read the whole discussion. If the point is simply this, that in the opinion of my hon. friend instead of reading as it does to day 'the command in chief or the naval force is vested in the King,' it should read 'the command in chief is declared to continue,' I do not know that it would make much difference, and for my part I would have no objection at all. If he insists upon these words, I will ask it to stand and will consult the Minister of Justice upon this point. For my part I do not think it makes any difference at all whether the clause reads as it is here, 'the command in chief of the naval force is vested in the King,' or whether it reads 'the command in chief is declared to continue and be vested in the King.' This seems to me to be a distinction without any difference. Of course we cannot change the law of the British North America Act; we are bound by it. And whether we recognize it in so many words or not makes no difference.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Justice of that day expressed so entirely the spirit of the views I entertain that I would like to give another quotation. I refer to page 6406 of the 'Hansard' of 1904. On the occasion mentioned, the section was allowed to stand, and Mr. Fitzpatrick, now Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, expressed himself thus with regard to it:

The constitutional principle which governs the raising and control of the militia is of course the same in this country as it is in England. There can be no departure with respect to His Majesty's forces in this country from the principle that obtains in England. The principle in England I will state briefly from the books, is that the sovereign has not constitutionally any power to raise a military force without the consent of parliament, but when a force is raised with that consent he can, subject to any enactment, regulate it in any manner that appears good. Parliament controls the levying of the force, its equipment, maintenance, distribution, payment and all that; but the control of the force when raised is in the sovereign as head of the executive. The same constitutional rule applies to the colony; but in the case of the colonial forces, the consent is given by the colonial legislature instead of by the imperial parliament; so that our position in that respect is the same as that of the imperial parliament. My view with respect to the old Bill, with all due deference to the draughtsman, is that there was an oversight. Someone drew that Bill who had not a proper regard for the true constitutional doctrine that controls the militia.

And then he goes on to quote, and adds:

It is quite apparent that that section was merely inteded to be declaratory of the law; because we had no power to depart from the constitutional principle laid down in section 15 of the British North America Act.

There are some important words of his at page 6407, which, however, I will not quote now. Then, at page 6408, he adverts to the fact that the Minister of Militia proposes, for the purpose of maintaining continuity of legislation, to add some words to those already to be found in the British North America Act. He does not seem to be very much in favour of adding these words, and the sum of his opinion is that, though, possibly, they may do no harm, they can certainly do no good:

We must read the clause merely as a declaration or reaffirmation of the principle which we have in the British North America Act, but the minister has control of the Bill, and to preserve the continuity of legislation, wants to import into it the words in the section of the old law with respect to the Governor General. There is no harm in that except the harm that every useless word may have, and the use of the words "His Excellency the Governor General" seems to be unnecessary, especially in view of the fact that in the letters patent which are issued to the Governor General, there is contained this clause. This is from the King:

"We do hereby require and command all of our officers and ministers, civil and military, and all other inhabitants of the said Dominion to aid and assist our said Governor General."

It is perfectly clear that the Minister of Justice of that day took the view which every one must take, that it is absolutely impossible for this parliament to limit or interfere with the provisions of section 15 of the British North America Act and that if you do insert any words reaffirming it, such as these, the best that can be said is that it does no harm.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection to make this in conformation with the Militia Act and I move that in the first line of section 4, after the word 'is' be inserted 'declared to continue and be.'

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why not insert the words of the original Militia Act?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This Militia Act was adopted after long discussion, as appears from the quotations that have been made, and as it is the latest utterance of parliament on the subject, I think we should adhere to it.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not wish to persist too much, but I still do not think that this alteration meets the objection as it presents itself to my mind. It seems to me an entirely illogical proceeding for this House to enact something, whether by declaration or by substantial enactment, something which is already law, made the law by a parliament different from this, a parliament whose legislation this parliament has absolutely no power to alter. It seems to me we might as well, in any other Act, enact some section of the British North America Act dealing with the same subject. Now putting upon the statute-book such an enactment, prima facie, is a declaration on our part of the power to deal with the matter. Yet, we all seem to be agreed that we cannot determine that matter in this House, it having been once for all determined by the British North America Act. It is true, as stated by the leader of the opposition, and as apparently held by a former Minister of Justice in regard to a similar matter, that it may possibly do no harm. But it would seem to be more rational for us to proceed under the law that governs us and not to make a pretense of enactment on the subject.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Doherty) remembers the line of Tennyson as applied to the British constitution about broadening 'slowly down from precedent to precedent.' We have several precedents in dealing with this business, and I feel that we cannot do better than adopt the language used by parliament when it last dealt with this question.

Mr. DOHERTY. It has been suggested that the weakness of this idea of broadening down from precedent to precedent is that, sometimes—in fact, the present is an instance—the principle is quoted in support of the idea that when you have once done wrong, you have for ever forfeited your right to do right.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it not good practice to regard the constitution as something progressive? There is nothing wrong in Canadians suggesting in their parliament the right to limit the prerogatives of the Crown. If Canada is similar in constitution to Great Britain, and if the parliament of Britain can limit the prerogatives of the Crown, is it wrong for Canadians to assert the same power? I, for one, am not afraid to take that view. I prefer to see a constant assertion, in all these constitutional provisions, more and more of the right of Canada to equality in legislation with the mother country. If the mother country has greater freedom than we have in regard to this question or any question, I say that, as a daughter state, we ought to assert that right, maintain it and achieve it. And I take it that these changes are in the line of constitutional progress and in the line of asserting the right to control and responsibility in these matters.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Constitutional progress is one of the questions that we should gravely consider when we are dealing with a great national question of this kind. Any one who knows anything about our constitution and the circumstances surrounding its creation, knows that it was a creature of circumstances, and it was sought by it to amalgamate into a whole certain interests of a deep national character, and certain guarantees were given. Now, whenever I see a Bill introduced into this House which attempts to vary the prerogative or rights of the King, or which attempts to decide questions in this House which might pertain for instance to the rights of minorities, it is time for us to take careful heed whither we are going. There is no question but that this Naval Bill, as has been plainly stated, is intended to set up what is practically a purely local force for Canada, and every clause throughout this Bill attempts, and does it successfully, to limit the prerogative of the Crown to any control over this local force. I can foresee a time, perhaps it may be not far in the future, when a majority in this House having control of this iron flail in the shape of a navy, may use it as a whip to force a minority into submission along certain lines which that minority might not consider constitutional. For that reason we should endeavour in every way to safeguard the rights that are guaranteed under the British North America Act, and not set up another empire within an empire with an armed force at its disposal, when that armed force which would be entirely under the control or under the command of a single man, the premier in this country. That is a danger which I see in this Bill, and it is a very serious one. Under this Bill, the proposed navy will be entirely under the command of the premier for the time being.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I wish the premier to understand that I see a grave constitutional danger in permitting any premier of Canada to have the right to use an armed force in this country over and above the right of the King. The King has always been the guardian, the safeguard and the buckler of minorities, not only in this country, but in other countries of the empire. The King has invariably stood between the people and injustice, between the people and their governors, as is shown by the history of the mother country for three or four hundred years. Now, this danger arises under this clause, in this very Act, and under it there is no guarantee but that a a Prime Minister, with a brute majority at his back, may at some future date cast to the winds every principle of the British North America Act, and use this navy as a weapon to drive minorities into doing something against their will and against the guarantees that they have by the constitution. I think minorities would be safe if the Bill followed the words of Sir George E. Cartier. That gentleman had sustained great struggles, and had fought great battles on behalf of certain interests in this country. When the right hon. leader of this House proposes to remove any of those safeguards, I say he is not doing justice to every section of the community. While there may be no danger, whilst he is Prime Minister, still no man can be assured of a long tenure of life, nor can he expect to rule forever, and the danger may come after he has gone.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am glad the hon. gentleman recognizes that so long as I am Prime Minister he will not have reason to deplore the evils which he sees coming on. But I must say that in this matter we do not depart from the language of Sir George E. Cartier; on the contrary, it is a fact that the language in this clause is in accordance with the best traditions of Sir George E. Cartier, and with his language also.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why not then follow the exact words of Sir George E. Cartier?

Mr. HUGHES. I want to ask the First Minister a question; there may be something in it and there may not be. Does he maintain that this parliament has the right to create a navy independent of the imperial navy for war purposes? I am free to admit that this parliament has conferred upon it by the British North America Act power to recognize a Canadian militia, which, of course, would be controlled by parliament. But when it comes to creating a navy which means a force to take part in war against a foreign nation, does the First Minister maintain that this parliament has authority to create a Canadian navy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is my pretention, and I think that has been the pretention from the first day of confederation.

Section 4 agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I now move the amendment of which I gave notice this morning about the organization of the department:

Section 4a. There shall be a department of the government of Canada which shall be called the Department of the Naval Service, over which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the time being shall preside, and shall be the Minister of the Naval Service.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I now move the following as section 4b:

Section 4b. The Governor in Council may also appoint an officer who shall be called the deputy minister of the naval service, who shall be the deputy head of the department, and may also appoint such other officers and clerks as are requisite for the due administration of the business of the department, each of which shall hold office during pleasure.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 6,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to get some information as to the construction and purchase of the vessels that are contemplated. I would like to know where they are to be built, and when; also, what is to be the character of the plant, where the guns and arms are to be manufactured, and generally some information respecting matters that have not been touched upon to any extent so far.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I stated in the debate which took place on the second reading, that it was the intention of the government, if at all practicable, to have these ships built in Canada. I cannot speak definitely upon that because this is a matter which. I think. cannot be definitely determined to-day, but it is our intention to ask for tenders, and we will be guided by the tenders which we receive as to whether or not they shall be built in Canada or whether we shall build them abroad.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no determination yet?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The government has no definite idea as to what place within Canada it will select?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think it will be possible to make any selection to-day. That would depend on whether the tenders we receive are satisfactory.

Mr. DANIEL. Where will the headquarters of these vessels be when they are purchased or built?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The headquarters of these vessels will depend upon their distribution. I stated this morning that at the present time we have several ships which are doing protective service in connection with fisheries. I have no doubt that in the course of time these ships will be superseded by the ships we are going to build. Some of these ships are doing duty on the shores of Nova Scotia, and one is in the Bay of Fundy. It would not be possible to determine their headquarters at the present time.

Mr. DANIEL. Has the government determined where the headquarters of the 'Niobe' will be? I think she is to come out this summer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The 'Niobe' will be located in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and will do duty as a training ship, but I do not know yet where her headquarters will be.

Mr. DANIEL. In view of what I have learned as to her coal consumption, I think it would be a good plan to have her headquarters at Sydney, or where a coal mine is available. I understand that her consumption of coal is from 15 to 17 tons an hour. Of course, that means a very large consumption of coal, and I think Sydney will perhaps be a better place than the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am happy to say to my hon. friend that his information is altogether wrong.

Mr. DANIEL. In reply to the statement of the Prime Minister I may say that I obtained it from the 'Naval Annual,' one of the publications that I can find in the library at any time, and I will take the opportunity of getting the book and reading it to parliament so that the right hon. gentleman will be able to know the authority from which I quote. I can give the authority to the Prime Minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well, and I will give mine at the same time to my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. I hope the government will not lose sight of an important question that the right hon. gentleman's friends spoke about when the Bill was up for discussion on a previous occasion; that is, that the enormous amount of money that will go out of the treasury of Canada shall be expended within the limits of Canada, using our own raw material and paying this money to our own Canadian workmen. The right hon. the Prime Minister, speaking this afternoon, has not been very encouraging upon that line. We could gather from his remarks that it is quite possible indeed that in the construction of the navy this money might be expended in another country. He has stated that tenders will be asked for, and that when the tenders are received consideration will be given to them and a decision will be arrived at by the government. That is all very well, but I may say that the people of Canada will be altogether disappointed if the government do not arrange their policy of construction that the raw material and labour shall be found in this country and the wages paid to our own Canadian people.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. I am glad to hear supporters of the right hon. gentleman call out 'hear, hear' to that, because it is certainly one of the points that the Canadian people are considering at this moment, and for myself I am free to say that if the impression had not gone out to the people of Canada that such a policy would be pursued the people would be denouncing the government in stronger terms than they are for attempting to construct a Canadian navy. I am an ardent supporter of home industry, and I hope the right hon. gentleman and the government will consider carefully before they attempt to give contracts for the construction of these vessels outside of Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am delighted with the progress that the idea of the navy is making. I am delighted to see that my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) is getting better light. I can assure him that we shall do everything possible to meet the very sensible views that he has presented this afternoon.

Mr. HUGHES. Would we not have a larger share of the work of construction if we were to make our navy a part of the imperial navy than we will have if we build a separate navy?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not any conclusion has been come to with regard to the construction of these vessels. Has the government done anything at all except to purchase the 'Niobe' and to negotiate for the 'Rainbow'?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There have been some negotiations that have not been official, and in that way we have received some suggestions and offers upon this subject, but there is nothing official, and nothing has been done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do the government propose to advertise for tenders?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, that is our view.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When will that be done?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Probably after we have prorogued, and when we have had time to breathe a little.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are negotiations under way with any of the dock yard companies?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the 'Rainbow' been purchased'?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It has been understood that the 'Rainbow' will be purchased as soon as the money is voted by this parliament. The negotiations are completed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. $250,000 was mentioned as the purchase price; I do not know whether that is correct or not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. £50,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Where was this vessel constructed, and from whom is it agreed to purchase?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It was purchased from the Admiralty. It is one of the war vessels, and it is to do service in the waters of British Columbia.

Mr. BOYCE. Is it not a discarded vessel?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What kind of a vessel is it? I do not understand that it really is a vessel of any fighting value.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have the information somewhere, and I will come back to it later on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very good. I would like to know who is correct, the Prime Minister, at page 3049 of 'Hansard', or the Minister of Militia and Defence, at page 3413. One puts the cost of the naval fleet and establishment at $4,253,000 and the other at $3,680,000. The difference between these two amounts is $573,000, enough to pay the interest on something over $15,000,000. Surely there must be some way of finding out who is right, and who is wrong. Both cannot be right, but, of course, both may be wrong.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Sir Frederick Borden) is always right. I am likely to be the one that is wrong.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are we to take that for granted?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Until further orders—yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But we want to know.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Sir Frederick Borden) will have the information in a moment.

Mr. DANIEL. I have the information to which I referred, and I find it in a publication called 'Fighting Ships, 1907', by Jane, I have no doubt the book is familiar to those who are acquainted with admiralty and naval affairs, and it refers to the earlier Diadem class, which consists of four ships—the 'Diadem', 'Niobe', 'Europa' and 'Andromeda'. A foot note with regard to the coal consumption of these vessels is as follows:

> Coal consumption. These ships all burn more per indicated horse-power than the older Diadem, and at 16,500 horse-power consume 15 to 17 tons an hour.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have my own information somewhere, but I have so much I cannot lay my hand on it at the moment.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister did not commence very well in reference to having this money expended in Canada or these vessels constructed here. This seems to be one of the smaller type of vessels, and if he intends having the larger vessels later on constructed in Canada, I hope he will not take this as a precedent, because vessels of this class could be constructed in Canada, the wages paid to Canadian workmen, and the material procured in Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good, I will take a note of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I observe that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries at the conference of 1907, as reported at page 141 of the English Blue-book said:

> We have taken over, or are going to take over, the Halifax and Esquimalt dockyards—in fact we are in possession already from the 1st January of the Halifax dockyards. I do not know exactly how much those dockyards were costing the British admiralty—or the one at Halifax, but I may say we have assumed all the obligations in connection with those dockyards, and we have provided specially that the amount which the British admiralty was to pay as an annual subscription to the graving dock at Halifax would be paid by us instead of by the British admiralty.

So far as the dockyards at Halifax are concerned, I have observed in the report that it is used at present altogether for storing supplies. I think my hon. friend from Victoria described it as a glorified junk shop. Is it the fact that the Canadian government are paying the amount that would otherwise be paid by the British admiralty on account of these dockyards?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am informed negotiations have not been completed yet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But there was nothing said about any negotiations. The words are:

> We have assumed all obligations in connection with those dockyards, and we have provided specially that the amount which the British admiralty was to pay as an annual subscription to the graving dock at Halifax would be paid by us instead of by the British admiralty.

That was the reason put forward at the conference of 1907 for doing nothing, a direct statement of fact, and I am endeavouring to ascertain whether that statement of fact is true or not true.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question is one of administration of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I am prepared to discuss the Bill, but I cannot give the information asked by my hon. friend until I obtain it from the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister spoke somewhat disparagingly of the Australian dockyards, and spoke of the generosity of Canada in regard to these two. Apparently he was not accurate. His words at page 3403 'Hansard,' and the Blue-book at page 26 do not agree. He was inclined to be severe on me because I criticised the language of the Bill. I am more astonished to find that his statements do not agree with the Blue-book.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall take note of all the questions and endeavour to satisfy my hon. friend's curiosity.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the status of a rear admiral or commodore of the first class as compared with a similar position in the imperial navy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. None that I know.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN: I have endeavoured to make an estimate based upon the returns brought down as to what the cost of this navy would be in the first ten years. I only put this forward as a tentative estimate in order that it may be corrected by those who have official knowledge, who would know much more about it than I would, and whose statement I am prepared to accept. I have founded the estimate, as far as I could, on what has been brought down, and upon the financial estimates made by the Minister of Militia. According to the statement of the Minister of Militia, at page 3416 of 'Hansard,' the estimated cost of the upkeep for all purposes would be $6,685,000 for the first four years. The cost of the 'Rainbow' is not included, I put that at $250,000. That brings it to $6,935,000. Looking at the next page I find that the cost of eleven ships will be $11,730,000, and assuming, according to the statement of the Prime Minister, that these ships are to be constructed in Canada, we should add, according to the statement of the Prime Minister, 33 per cent of $9,940,000 for the increased cost of construction. That amounts to $3,313,000. The total of these two sums is $15,043,000. The total then of the sums up to date is $21,978,000. The upkeep for six years, according to the Prime Minister's statement, would be $25,500,000. If the estimate of the Minister of Militia is to be accepted you would strike about $3,000,000 off that, but I am disposed to take the higher estimate. The headquarters staff for six additional years—because four years have been provided for in the estimate I first gave—would be $3,000,000. The total of these sums is $49,478,000. Then you add interest and depreciation, say for an average of six years at 3 per cent, a low estimate, $8,906,040, or a total of $58,484,040. I submit that as an estimate fairly deducible from the information already brought down, but I submit it only in a tentative sense, and in order that the Minister of Militia or the member of the government who has these matters in hand may criticise it and correct it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would have supposed that these matters could be better discussed on the items in Supply covering this service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My reason for going in them is that the minister himself went into them in his speech.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My speech will be before parliament just as much then as it is now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Except that upon the estimates it could not be referred to, it would be another debate.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The question will be before the committee. As to my statement of annual cost, every one will understand that was not my estimate but the estimate of the officers of the department of Marine and Fisheries at that time. I simply gave it to the House for what it was worth, and it was the best calculation that could be given at that time. It will be noted that this statement was made in connection with it:

> This estimate is only approximate. It will probably be found that it is rather an over estimate than an under estimate.

The estimated expenditure was given as to the 'Niobe' including cost of recruits, pay, victualling, &c., and the headquarters staff, &c. My hon. friend has read from the unrevised 'Hansard'. There was a serious mistake in the printing of the table which I gave, which was corrected, and will be found corrected in the 'Revised Hansard.' As to these matters of detail I may say again that while I think they were approximately correct it will be more appropriate to discuss them when the question of the vote to be granted by parliament is under consideration.

My remarks upon Australia were made in this connection. Unfavourable contrasts as between what Canada was doing, and what Australia was doing had been made, and I pointed out and read from the Blue-book to prove that Canada for one thing had taken over the Halifax and Esquimalt works. I assumed that we were paying all expenses connected with the docks, and all the naval property at Halifax and Esquimalt, and, I was pointing out that while we were doing this, and while we were not claiming or expecting any assistance from the mother country, Australia was receiving a substantial amount of money every year, and she had only agreed ultimately to take over the naval docks some time in the future. That was the point I made. Canada had agreed to do that, and would do it, and as a matter of fact was doing it while Australia was to do the same thing some time in the future.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As the minister properly went into these items on the second reading of the Bill, it is clear that the same subject may properly be considered in committee, but we could not criticise the minister's speech in the estimates as it would not be the same debate. I do not want to be under any misapprehension as to Halifax and Esquimalt. The minister himself stated in this House in reply to a question from myself on January 17:

> With regard to Esquimalt, the naval yard at that station is still under the imperial authorities. The machinery is lying idle, but well looked after. The same is to be said as regards the buildings. The station has, however, been reduced to two gun vessels and one survey ship.
> With regard to Halifax, the machinery in the workshops is looked after, though the parts are not assembled for working.

It seems almost farcical to say that the government had taken over the dockyards when the dockyards had been in that conditon for nearly three years after the statement was made in the colonial conference in 1907 which I have already quoted to the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman give me a reference to the page?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have quoted from page 141 of the English blue-book of the Colonial Conference of 1907.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) has proved I think conclusively to the Prime Minister the quantity of coal which this steamer would burn per day. He has shown that it would burn 17 tons per hour. The Prime Minister said he had mountains of information but he could not give a reply to my hon. friend from St. John. Now, I want the people of Canada to understand what they are going into. The authority which my hon. friend the member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) quoted that this steamer will burn 17 tons of coal per hour, is undoubted. There are 24 hours in a day, so that would be $2,040 per day, and for one year it would be $744,600. Now that is just an example of what we will have to pay. It is proved from the English blue-book what the steamer burns and what is the cost to the government of their other steamers. If he will add up the figures, he will find that for this steamer the coal bill will be $744,600 a year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is a very high sum. It is enough to deter anybody from going to war. But there is another side. I am glad to be able to give my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) the information which he asked as to the 'Niobe.' The 'Niobe' is a vessel built in 1902. It costs £654,661. Its displacement is 11,000 tons, length 435 feet, draft of water 26 feet, original speed 21 knots; it has water tube boilers, a complement of 600 men, 16 guns, and two submerged torpedo boats. We are paying for her $1,075,000, and the estimated cost of training personnel is $267,000; victualting and medicine, $60,000; clothing, $15,000. The total upkeep is estimated at $140,000. With regard to the consumption of coal it is quite true that it will be very large, as large as my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) states when the steamer is sailing 21 knots at its fullest capacity, but I hope my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) does not expect that we are going to sail that ship 21 knots for 24 hours every day. There would be no reason for that.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. This business government I hope will keep her busy.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is because we are a business government that we will not do anything so foolish as that. When it comes to war time, and God forbid that we should ever come to that, we would have to steam her at full capacity.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In order to escape.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will have to burn as much coal in war time as will keep her at her full capacity, but we are not in that position at the present time. We are living in a time of peace. This vessel will be used as a training ship and my information is that the consumption of coal will be the average consumption.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. Prime Minister has not given the total estimate of what it will cost to maintain and operate this steamer for 12 months.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can get that and I will give the hon. member the information. The upkeep for one year?

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good I will give that.

Mr. J. D. REID. The cost of operating and upkeep including coal and all.

Mr. DANIEL. The right hon. the Prime Minister stated that the 'Niobe' was launched in 1902. If that statement is correct there must be two very similar vessels of the same name in the Royal navy, because the information given by the right hon. the Prime Minister is similar to what is observed in Janes' book. In that book it is stated to have been launched in 1897, and the statement made by the Prime Minister just now was that it was launched in 1902. Either there are two vessels of the same name, and similar in many respects in the Royal navy or the information given by this book is wrong or the information of the right hon. the Prime Minister is wrong. Here are the dimensions of the 'Niobe' as given in this publication which is looked upon as a standard publication: Displacement, 11,000 tons; sheathed and coppered, with a complement of 677 men; water line length, 450 feet; beam 69 feet; maximum draft, 27½ feet; length over all, 460½ feet. And here is her armament: 16 six-inch wire guns of 40 calibre; 12, twelve pounders; of 12 cwt. and two 12 pounders of 8 cwt.; 12 three pounders; 2 maxims and 2 submerged torpedo tubes, and other things of that kind. That is the description, given in this work, of the 'Niobe', the vessel I presume that this government is bringing out here as a training ship. If this is not the vessel, I think we ought to know what vessel the government is bringing out, because this 'Niobe' is one of the 'Diadem' class and I refer the Prime Minister to the statement of the Minister of Militia when introducing this subject, he spoke of the 'Niobe' being of the 'Diadem' class. The first vessels of the 'Niobe' class were the 'Diadem', the 'Niobe', the 'Europa' and the 'Andromeda'. Now, as to what other vessel in that class was built in 1902, I have no information, and I think the matter is worth a little information.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand there is no difference. The ship was commissioned in 1902, it might have been commenced earlier.

Mr. DANIEL. It was launched in 1897. I understood you to say it was built or launched in 1902.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Commissioned, I understand.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand now she was commissioned in 1902.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is what I am told. I am not the Minister of Marine, and I take the information which is given to me.

Mr. H. H. McLEAN. I might call the attention of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) to the naval Blue-book for 1909. There the 'Niobe' appears in the 'Diadem' class, in which there are eight vessels, and in one place it states when she was built, in another place, when she was launched, and then there is a date, 1899, when she was completed, and 1902, when that class was completed.

Mr. DANIEL. When she was commissioned.

Mr. H. H. McLEAN. The confusion may have arisen in this way, that 1902 was put here as the date when she was completed along with the date of 1899 when she was launched. Apparently, the figures differ in the different books. One book gives the date of launching as 1899, but Brassey's 'Naval Annual' makes it 1897, and completion 1899.

Mr. DANIEL. I have no doubt that the figures given are quite correct. She was launched in 1897 and completed in 1899, and, I presume, not commissioned until 1902. No doubt, there were more vessels than these four of the 'Diadem' class. And, apparently, the four built after this first four were not as heavy consumers of coal as these four, of which the 'Niobe' is one. The 'Diadem', the 'Niobe', the 'Europa,' and the 'Andromeda' were all great coal consumers, and when run at full power they consumed from 15 to 17 tons of coal per hour.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Did the Prime Minister make any inquiry, before this ship the 'Niobe' was purchased, to ascertain how many people were injured by defect of her machinery and boilers, and as to the amount of money it has cost the British government to keep her machinery and boilers in proper repair?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware that any such inquiry has been made. It may have been made, but I do not know. All this information that hon. members opposite are asking for I do not myself possess, and I will have to inquire. But I am told that the 'Niobe' was thought so well of that she is flying the flag of the rear admiral.

Mr. BOYCE. Who examined or inspected her for the Canadian government with a view to purchase?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that she was inspected for the Canadian government. We accepted the inspection of the admiralty.

Mr. BOYCE. She was bought without inspection?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Without inspection other than that given by the admiralty, and the statement made by the admiralty which we accepted as correct.

Mr. BOYCE. Has nobody seen her?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. She has been seen by Admiral Kingsmill time and again; he knows her perfectly well.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is it not a fact that the ship had reached the limit of her usefulness in the British navy, that the cost of her upkeep was very great and everything about her antiquated? The Prime Minister has stated that her guns were of 40 calibre. As I understand it, no vessel now is armed with guns of less than 50 calibre. Another thing, I understand that she is fitted with Belleville boilers. Now, these boilers are no longer used in the British navy. As a matter of fact, we have had two ships on the lakes with Belleville boilers. These were vessels of the Great Northern Railway Company—the J. J. Hill road—the Northwest and the North-Land, and, as a matter of fact, these boilers were constantly out of commission, tubes bursting and scalding people. That class of boilers is now antiquated, and no longer used to any extent in the navy. In fact, they constitute a grave danger, so that it is now all the navy can do to get a stoker to go into the stokehole with Belleville boilers because of the danger of being scalded to death. The annual upkeep of this machinery is something that the government should have inquired into. What is the use of getting a vessel the upkeep of whose machinery in a few years will cost as much as would pay for the machinery of a new ship? The right hon. Prime Minister knows that even the new vessels that have been bought cost from $40,000 to $50,000 a year for upkeep. What is the use of buying junk? In a short time, this vessel would have been thrown out. She would have been taken out to sea, her guns thrown overboard, and the vessel herself brought back and sold for junk for $5,000 or $10,000. But this government pays hundreds of thousands, if not millions, for this kind of stuff.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think that the information of the hon. member (Mr. J. A. Currie) is coreect. He is a land warrior, not a sea warrior. And he gets his naval information from the lakes, apparently. The 'Niobe' was bought for a training ship, and I understand she will serve the purpose admirably, and that the price we pay for her, $1,075,000, is a very cheap price. We have got more than value for our money. Of course, I do not pretend to speak with authority in these matters. The ship has steamed many miles within the last three months, and is still in active service. I do not know that a vessel commissioned in 1902 ought to be regarded as fit only for the scrap heap in 1910. However, as I say, I do not speak with authority. The only thing I know is that the purchase of the ship has been advised by the officer in charge of the department at the present time, who is our expert officer, who knows all about the 'Niobe' and certifies that she is an admirable ship for the purpose for which she has been bought.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Who is that officer?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Admiral Kingsmill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was she bought as a training ship or as a fighting ship?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As a training ship.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many men can be trained on board this ship or on the 'Rainbow'?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Four hundred and forty men and forty officers can be trained on the 'Niobe' and 'Rainbow' together.

Mr. H. H. McLEAN. I would direct the attention of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) to the volume I have here which will give him full information respecting the 'Niobe.' If he consults that, I think he will be quite satisfied that the government is not buying a piece of junk. For instance, she is put down here as a protected first-class cruiser—this is the latest naval annual, 1909—and the vessel would not be so entered unless she bore that class. That is her present position in the navy a protected first-class cruiser.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman wants us to take the authority of the Navy Annual. I would advise him to look up the Navy League Annual, where he will find this ship at the bottom of the list. That means that in another year she goes off the map altogether. The hon. gentleman knows that perfectly well.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Annual gives 325 men for the 'Niobe,' and 90 for the 'Rainbow,' making a total of 405 men that can be trained on these two ships.

Mr. J. D. REID. How were these vessels purchased? Did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries negotiate the purchase himself? It is a well known fact that the government have been purchasing vessels on the other side these last few years instead of purchasing them in Canada. Last session, when I suggested that Collingwood or Toronto should get the contract for the vessel that was ordered for the fishery protective service, the Finance Minister told me that the reason the government could not have it built in Canada was because the tender price in Canada was $15,000 more than the contract price for which they were getting the vessel in England. And yet the government were practically receiving about $15,000 in duties. I will give you the reason why I ask this question. I understood at the time, I think from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that his department had negotiated directly with the builders in England for these vessels. You can imagine my surprise when, during the present year, I was speaking with a ship-builder in England, from whom I understood that the negotiations were made through a gentleman residing in the city of Montreal, and that five per cent commission was allowed on the purchase of the vessel in England. Now, that vessel I think cost about $300,000, and $15,000 of a rake-off is going to some one. That amount is exactly equal to the excess of the tender for building the ship in Collingwood. Now, it seems to me that the reason the government purchased that vessel in England was in order to give a rake-off to some one, and there would be no way by which we could find it out. When this comes up another year, I am going to try to find it out. Perhaps, now that I have mentioned the matter, the recipient of the rake-off will pretend to refund the money. I shall bring it up again, because there is no reason why the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or some of his officials, his deputy minister, or some one else, could not go to England and negotiate the purchase without employing this man in Montreal. Probably the Prime Minister will say that this is only hearsay. Now, I got it from a ship-builder, and he said that it was all right, there was no reason why the government should not pay a commission. You would think that the government were capable of going to England and negotiating the sale. Here is a vessel, the 'Niobe,' costing over a million dollars; if five per cent commission is paid on the sale, it will make enough to enable some one to retire for the rest of his life. I would like to know whether that has been done in this case, the same as it has been done in the case of other vessels purchased by the Marine and Fisheries Department, for instance, in the case of the notorious 'Arctic.' When that vessel was purchased, everybody knew, it was public property, that there was $10,000 in it for some one. If there is going to be a rake-off of five per cent on the purchase of all these vessels for the navy, some one will get $150,000 in his pocket.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend will be heart-broken, I am sure, when I tell him that there was no commission whatever paid on the purchase of this vessel.

Mr. J. D. REID. How do you know?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I know it because there was a direct transaction between the Canadian government and the British government, carried out by correspondence, and in no other way, so that the suspicions of my hon. friend are altogether unfounded. There is a saying that to the pure all things are pure. I cannot apply that saying to my hon. friend, because he is always smelling scandals, he is always suspecting some one of getting commissions. I will tell him exactly how the vessel was purchased. I will read the order in council, which has already been placed before the House:

On a memorandum dated 3rd January, 1910, from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, stating that he has had under consideration the question of the purchase from the admiralty of an additional cruiser for training purposes in connection with the naval forces of Canada.

The minister observes that the technical officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries recommend that a ship of the 'Spartiate' class be obtained. They submit that it will be necessary, until the new ships for the Canadian navy are ready for use, to provide a ship in which large numbers of men can be completely trained. The 'Spartiate' class will not only afford the means for such training but will obviate the necessity for having so large a proportion of skilled ratings from the Royal navy on the manning of the new ships.

The minister further observes that in these circumstances he caused inquiries to be made of the admiralty as to the terms on which a ship of the 'Spartiate' class could be obtained, and he is informed that subject to the approval of the treasury department, the admiralty are prepared to sell the 'Niobe' to the Canadian government for a lump sum of £215,000 in efficient seagoing and fighting condition, including guns, torpedoes, ammunition, packages, outfit, and sea stores without coal.

The minister is advised that the 'Niobe' was completed at a cost of £600,000, and that her dimensions and equipment are as follows:

I have given them already.

The minister, concurring in the report of the technical officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries recommends that authority be given to purchase the 'Niobe' from the Lord Commissioners for a lump sum of £215,000, subject to the money being voted by parliament.

When that money is voted by parliament it will go over to England by a cheque, the vessel will come over to Canada, and that is all there will be about it.

Mr. J. D. REID. The right hon. gentleman does not prove his case. He says himself that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries caused inquiries to be made. That is exactly what he did in regard to the other vessels that were purchased last year and the year before, he caused inquiries to be made. This gentleman from Montreal is the man who makes the inquiries, he is sent over to England and inquires from the admiralty, and he tells the admiralty. I will sell this vessel if you will pay me five per cent commission. The Prime Minister knows well enough that at the time the English government were purchasing supplies for South Africa, they paid five per cent commission on those supplies. I would like to know who is the gentleman that made the inquiries.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will tell my hon. friend. Here is the report of Admiral Kingsmill on which the whole order in council was based. My hon. friend has no confidence in this government, but at all events we should hope that he would have confidence in the British government. Does he suggest that they are going to be subjected to a procedure of this kind? Does he expect that they would lend themselves to a proceeding of this kind?

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think there is anything wrong as far as the admiralty are concerned. They wanted to get rid of an old war vessel. I cannot see why the Prime Minister should suggest that I am censuring the admiralty. If they wanted to get rid of an old vessel they certainly have aright to pay a commission if they wish. If Admiral Kingsmill went to negotiate the transaction it is all right, but the Prime Minister has not told the committee whether it was some other person outside of the admiralty, or the minister himself, that went to the admiralty and made that deal. I would like to know whether that is the fact.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am prepared to state that there has been no intermediary of any kind in the transaction.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I may say in justification of my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid), that it is the invariable custom of the admiralty to pay a commission of five per cent as a matter of course. Whether they have done so in this case or not I do not know. If anybody sells some junk for them he gets a commission. The question that my hon. friend asked was pertinent if anybody negotiated the sale of this ship to the Canadian government, is the government aware whether he got a commission from the British navy or not, or if there was any commission taken from the cheque payable by the Canadian government? The hon. gentleman knows that in the case of the South African stores a commission was paid by the war department.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is not correct to say that a commission was paid by the war office. There was no commission paid by the war office. The expenses incurred in doing any work that was done for the war office in connection with the South African war were paid, but nothing more. But, as regards this particular matter, I think my hon. friends ought to give us their authority. It is rather a serious charge to make that there is a commission somewhere, hidden, covered up, in connection with this transaction, of five per cent. I am prepared to say, from what I know of the transaction—I had nothing directly to do with it—that all the negotiations in regard to this vessel have taken place between the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the government of Canada, and the government of Great Britain, or the first lord of the admiralty, and that when the vessel is paid for, if parliament votes the money, the cheque will be sent for the full amount, whatever it may be, direct to the treasury of the British government.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Prime Minister found fault with me because I found fault with the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The record of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, I think, in the past is evidence——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. J. D. REID. The evidence that has been produced with respect to the Department of Marine and Fisheries justifies any person in having a little suspicion of this transaction.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. With reference to the call of 'order,' I will say that the hon. gentleman is at liberty to refer to the Department of Marine and Fisheries by way of illustration, but not for prolonged discussion.

Mr. J. D. REID. You are right, Mr. Chairman, and I shall not attempt to discuss it, but what I want to say is that it has always been a mystery to me why the Prime Minister took this naval service out of the regular Militia Department and put it into the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I cannot understand what the Department of Marine and Fisheries has to do with the naval service. Why should it not be under the Minister of Militia? Does the Prime Minister want to tell the people that the Minister of Militia is not qualified to run that part of his department? Does he not know anything about the naval service? If he is not fit to administer that service he is not fit for the position that he occupies in the Militia Department. Why are you dividing the whole thing up? Why should not the two be put together under one head? What does the Minister of Marine and Fisheries know about the running of a man of war? I should think that the administration of this fleet should be under the Department of Militia. It seems to me that this was done for some purpose, and I would like to know what it is. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has more work now than one minister can attend to. He has to attend to the fisheries protective service. That is all right enough. He has quite a lot of vessels with which to do that. You are going to make the Minister of Marine and Fisheries responsible for a naval service that he cannot look after. It will look nice to see the Minister of Marine, who never served a day in the militia, going down and sailing one of those great big men of war around and telling them what to do, and the Minister of Militia sitting in his office afraid to go on board, because he has nothing to say about it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend for the confidence which he seems to have in me, but I must say to him that I believe the method adopted is approved absolutely by the admiralty. I might say further than that, going back to 1898, when the Defence Committee was appointed to inquire into the defences of Canada, and an expert report describing the condition of the defences of Canada was made and submitted to the Colonial Defence Committee in England, and after it had been fully considered by the war office, and the admiralty, because it was referred to both, certain notes upon this report were sent to this government from the admiralty advising that if, and when a naval department should be established in Canada it should be placed under the Department of Marine and Fisheries, one of the reasons being that there existed already in that department a fisheries protection service which might be looked upon as the nucleus of a navy, and it would be decidedly in the public interest, and the admiralty itself should prefer that this course be taken. Now, I agree with my hon. friend—and it has been stated by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister—that the Department of Marine and Fisheries is a very comprehensive one, and has a great many different branches and a great deal of work to do. That was the reason why a department of the naval service has been created as a separate department for the time being at any rate to be under the control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and in that naval department is included the services which were referred to by the admiralty as being the nucleus of the navy, namely, the fisheries protective service and two or three other services which properly belong to a department of this kind.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am surprised at the minister making, as an excuse, the statement that the naval authorities in England were perfectly satisfied with the government deciding to put this under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Why should they object? They do not care what department it is put under, but now the minister states there will be separate department for this service. If the department is entirely separate from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, does the minister not think that he could have managed it just as well and have had all the militia business together in one department? I was surprised that the Prime Minister nudged the Minister of Militia to rise and reply to this instead of making his own excuse. I would have expected the Prime Minister to do that. I think the whole thing is a question of patronage. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries will have the patronage of all this service and he wanted to cut the Minister of Militia out of a little of this patronage and give it to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. That, I think is why it was put under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It does not seem right to me, and I have heard many people wondering why this was done. The people of Canada would like to know from the Prime Minister why this course has been adopted. It is well known that the Minister of Marine is not a militia man whereas the present Minister of Militia is and all future ministers of militia should be militia men.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend commenced his remarks by charging a rake-off. He has now come down to patronage, and I hope he will end by being thoroughly ashamed of himself. Can he not suppose that sometimes men may be actuated by honest motives?

Mr. J. D. REID. Certainly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well, then why does he not commence now and assume that we are actuated by honest motives in this? My hon. friend could take charge of this department, the minister who has charge could do it just as well and there is no reason why there should be any suspicion in my hon. friend's mind as to why the department should be allotted to one man or the other. But my hon. friend has it in his mind that there are to be rake-offs and charges of corruption. I invite him to the closest possible scrutiny, I invite him to be on the lookout, and to watch and be prepared to criticise every item of expenditure. I have only to say that the suspicions to which he has given expression are altogether wrong. There has been no middleman at all in this transaction, the transaction was simply on a report of Admiral Kingsmill, our adviser. The transaction has been completed, the money has not been voted and when it is, it will go direct from one government to the other, and that will be the last of it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I wish to ask a few questions for the information of the public. Rumours of different kinds are floating around the House and some of them have appeared in the press. For instance, how long was Admiral Kingsmill in the employ of the British admiralty? Why did he leave? How long was he in this country, and what was his occupation? What general fitness has he for purchasing ships for the navy? I would like any general information that the Prime Minister can give, because he is a man who will occupy a very important position in this country, and it is due him and the people that we should know whether he is still in the employ of the admiralty or not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend asks me more information than I ever cared to ask for. I know that Admiral Kingsmill is a Canadian; he has received a nautical education in England, he has been in the imperial service and we obtained him from the imperial authorities. We asked him to come over to Canada to be our chief adviser in this matter. This is all I can say to my hon. friend.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The Prime Minister cannot say why he left or anything about the position he now holds?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I cannot.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What rank does he hold in the imperial admiralty?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware. His whole services are given to Canada. He has the rank of rear admiral.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Has he the rank of read admiral in the British service?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. How many men is it expected will be in training, say in the next four years?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The first year 228, the second year 414, the third year 448, and the fourth year 355.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. What does the minister estimate to be the cost for the board of men on the vessels for a year?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The figures I have given for upkeep of the 'Niobe' are:

For the first year	$140,000
Second year	145,000
Third year	150,000
Fourth year	150,000

For the 'Rainbow' the figures are:

For the first year	$110,000
Second year	110,000
Third year	115,000
Fourth year	115,000

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How long will the period of training be?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand the regular training will be three years. The higher training will continue for a longer period.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the 'Niobe' and the 'Rainbow' afford ample accommodation for all the men who are to be trained from year to year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is what I understand.

Mr. HUGHES. Why is there a departure from the usual custom of placing in the Bill an oath to be taken on enlistment?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is to be one, the same oath as in the Militia Act.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the present Admiral Kingsmill is the man who ran the battleship Dominion ashore at Gaspé at the time the Prince of Wales came out to Canada in 1901.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Admiral Kingsmill was in command of the 'Dominion' at one time. Whether he had an accident or not I do not know.

On section 9,

The Governor in Council may organize and maintain a permanent naval force.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I want to draw the attention of the House to the difference between the Act of 1868 and the Act of 1904 and the present Act. Under the Act of 1868 and from that time to 1904 the whole control of the militia was vested in Her Majesty. She had the power not only of calling out the whole militia for service in this country or in a foreign country, but also of enrolling, clothing, furnishing horses and all other material for the service. Under the Act of 1904 we altered that as much as we could by an Act of parliament, and under the present Act we are doing the same. We are taking the control from His Majesty, except the prerogative, which, as the hon. member for Ste. Anne clearly pointed out, we have no power to legislate upon, and are vesting the control in the Governor in Council. I am not saying whether that is good policy or bad policy; I am not arguing the question at all; I am simply drawing the attention of the House and the country to the fact that the control of the militia in every respect, which under Cartier's Act of 1868 was vested in Her Majesty, is vested now, by the Act of 1904 and the present Act, in the Governor General in Council, with the sanction to some extent of the parliament of Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose the idea in 1904 was to bring the wording of the law into agreement with the practice which my hon. friend and his government had followed for many years before that time. It is true that the words 'Her Majesty' can do so and so were used, but by full agreement of the House, without any dissent, the words 'Governor in Council' were substituted which was in accordance with the practice which existed and in accordance no doubt with the intention of the original Act.

Mr. J. HAGGART. It was neither the practice nor the intention of the original Act. The intention of the original Act was plainly to invest the control in Her Majesty, and with regard to the practice. Her Majesty at a certain time in this country called out the militia, or a certain portion of them, without consulting the executive. It was done as a matter of right, and instructions were given to the commanders of the various districts.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When?

Mr. J. HAGGART. In 1866, at the time of the Trent affair.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That was before confederation. The Trent affair was in 1861.

Mr. J. HAGGART. At any rate, the power was in Her Majesty alone. That was the practice from the time of the conquest of the country down to 1867, and under the British North America Act the control of the militia was vested in Her Majesty. By the Act of 1904 and by this Act it is transferred from His Majesty to the Governor in Council or the Executive of the country,

On section 10,

The Governor in Council may authorize the engagement of officers and seamen in the naval service upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed, and may from time to time fix the maximum number that may be so engaged.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I desire to add the following subsection to cover the point raised by my hon. friend from Victoria:

(a) Every officer and seaman shall take and subscribe the following oath upon engagement to serve in the naval service:
I, A. B., do sincerely promise and swear (or solemnly declare) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to His Majesty the King.
(b) Such oath may be administered by any commissioned officer in the naval service.

Mr. HUGHES. The Minister of Militia has suggested an amendment in section 10 which has not been added after the words 'naval service.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is to be covered by other words.

On section 13, relief from duty and retirement from force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is suggested that all the words in the second line after 'naval service' be erased. It is thought it would be preferable to have this covered by regulation than by the rigid law of a statute.

On section 14, conditions of discharge from service.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is suggested that with the view of improving the language of the section, that the words 'but an increase may be granted whenever' in the 18th line, be struck out and the word 'unless' substituted.

On section 18, naval service men be at disposal of His Majesty in emergency.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know what will happen in case of war or in an emergency if the Governor in Council does not make any such order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then the navy does not take part in the war, but remains in inactive service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Unless this country is independent you can never avoid taking part in a war. These ships are not on land. They are on the sea and the sea is one. It surrounds the world and all the continents. The ships of the enemy are on the sea and our ships are on the sea. I could understand how land forces might be kept in Canada when war was being carried on, although not in Canada. I can understand how they might not take part in such a war, but how our naval force can be kept practically neutral, in time of war, with a naval power, utterly passes my comprehension.

Mr. SPROULE. The Prime Minister said when England is at war, Canada is at war.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Undoubtedly, when England is at war, Canada is at war, but it does not follow that Canada is bound to take part in all the wars in which England is engaged. These wars may be very far from Canada. These wars may be of such a character that Canada might have no interest in them. They might be of serious moment or they might be insignificant. If the government of the day does not perform its duty according to the light of the people or of any citizen, the government can be attached, but in this matter as in all matters the government of the day are disposed to do their duty, and they do it at their peril and subject to their responsibility to parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If our naval force was efficient and adequate, the whole fate of the empire might be decided while the government is making up its mind. The whole thing might be over in 10 days or two or three weeks and the abstension of an adequate Canadian naval force might decide the fate of the empire adversely. But apart from that tremendous consideration, I do not see how this thing is practicable. I understand thoroughly, and every man in this House understands thoroughly, that there may be some little frontier war in India or with some savage foe in Africa of which we know absolutely nothing in this country, and in which we would have absolutely no part. In such a case, we are technically at war with that country wherever it may be, but so far as active participation in a war of that kind is concerned, we might have no active part in it whatever, But I am not talking of that kind of war. I am talking of a war in which the empire might be engaged in a struggle with one of the great naval powers. For my part, I do not see how it is possible, in the first place, to work out this scheme which is proposed by the government. I do not see how it is possible for this reason. When our ships are on the high seas they will I presume, be flying the flag of the empire, the British flag.

An hon. MEMBER. Will they?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not ask any question about that. I take it for granted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If they are flying the British flag, then they will be subject to attack, and if they are subject to attack, what are they going to do. They will defend ourselves, I suppose; or will they signal to the enemy that the Governor in Council has not yet passed any order in respect of taking part in the war, and therefore that they cannot do anything. If they are going to do that, it is for them either to fly a neutral flag or strike the British flag, one or the other. I do not see any escape from that situation. How is it possible to work it out? There are two great considerations. In the first place, either our ships must go behind fortifications, or they must be liable to attack. If they are liable to attack, they must either fight or surrender,—or in the third alternative, they must fly some neutral flag; they must go out of the empire, which means that this country goes out of the empire. That is why I think this is unworkable. Then, I repeat, there is the tremendous consideration that, should there be two weeks' delay in deciding whether our fleet shall fight or not, that delay might decide adversely the fate of the empire. How will it work out on the other hand? Suppose that the British flag on one of our ships should be insulted—suppose provocation were given which would lead to war if we were an independent power—how will the converse of what I have been stating work out? Is the imperial government to say that their fleet shall take no part in the war until Great Britain herself becomes involved? If our fleet is to have a right, under the provisions of this proposed statute, to abstain from any war in which Great Britain may be involved with some great naval power, then if our coasts are attacked by the ships of that power, is it to be part of the arrangement between the mother country and the great dominions of the empire that the fleet of the mother country shall be permitted to be neutral? If the proposition seriously put forward by the government is one which we may expect to see consummated in the future, why should not Great Britain take precisely the same attitude when our coasts are attacked, or our ships are sunk? Why should not they say: We have not yet decided that we will take part in this war? If one proposition is sound, it seems to me the other is sound, and either one proposition or the other is absolutely inconsistent with the continuance of the integrity of this empire.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to add a word to what the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has said. Suppose that one of these ships goes beyond the three-mile limit in time of trouble, who is responsible for her? Is the British government going to assume responsibility; or will it be the Canadian government? And, if so, what is to be the consequence? I maintain now, as I stated when I first addressed the House on this matter, that this Dominion has no authority to create a fleet that will go beyond the three-mile limit of the coasts of Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no quarrel with hon. members on the other side who take exception to the proposition involved in this section. It is an essential part of this legislation. Are we going to be automatically involved in all the wars in which England may be engaged, or are we to be allowed to have some judgment and some say in the matter? That is the proposition. We must have a navy—I take it that all parties agree to that now, I follow the discussion in this House with some care, and, as I analysed the speeches, particularly those made towards the end of the discussion, it seemed to me that every one was based upon the opinion that we must have a national navy of our own. True, there was some question as to whether we should have it now, or later, but I do not think that anybody maintains that Canada, having reached a population of nearly eight millions, can go on indefinitely without a navy. There are men in the city of Ottawa who can recall the time when there was not a uniformed policeman in this city. But Ottawa has grown, and the policeman is a necessary part of our civilization. In the same way, armies and navies are part of the civilization of any country; we cannot dispense with them It is our duty, then, to have a navy, tiny though it may be. I am sorry that I cannot hope that it will remain a tiny navy: it will grow; it will have to grow. At all events, I lay it down as a simple national duty, one that we must discharge, to have a navy. What is to be the character of that navy? Shall it be a national navy or not? Hon. members on the other side tell us, if I understand them aright, that, automatically, this navy must go into war the moment there is a declaration of war against Great Britain. I believe that these hon. gentlemen cannot maintain that proposition. If I understood the leader of the opposition, (Mr. R. L. Borden) aright, he himself did not make the statement unqualifiedly in the expressions with which he has favoured the House. I understood him to say that there might be some insignificant way in which our navy would not be called upon to take part.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said there might be a war in India or with some tribe in Africa which we would not hear about, and in which no navy would participate. But I asked the Prime Minister what would take place in case of a war with a great naval power.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The proposition, as I take it, involves the great mistake of assuming that a young country like Canada, should at once rank side by side with an old nation like England with duties and responsibilities equal to those that England has. Of course, if England were engaged in a life and death struggle —no, I will not say in a life and death struggle, but in a war which would tax her resources and put her in peril, or put her supremacy in peril—or, I would not say, in peril but in the balance, in the scales of destiny—then there could be no doubt that Canada, in a wave of enthusiasm, as I said on a former occasion, would carry every daughter nation to the assistance of Great Britain with all the resources at her command.

Mr. HUGHES. Is not the Prime Minister aware that the King of Prussia, in 1870, and for years before 1870, had absolute authority to call out the troops of Bavaria, Wurtemburg and Baden?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That has no relevancy to what I am saying. There is no doubt there may be cases in which, fortunately, the naval supremacy of Great Britain may be challenged. If, which God forbid, such an occasion should arise, then this navy of ours, small as it is, with all the resources of Canada behind it, will be placed at the command of England. But there are wars in which Great Britain may be engaged which will not tax her resources, which will not put her in peril, and in which, in my humble judgment, it would be folly for Canada to take any part at all. I instanced, in discussing the first reading of this Bill, the Crimean war. I state now, as I stated then, that it would be folly for Canada to take part in such a war as the Crimean war.

Mr. HUGHES. Why?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Because, as we know, everybody knows, the war in the Crimea was a causeless, senseless, useless war. Of course, it added to England's glory, for Britons remember with pride Inkerman, and still more Balaclava. But I say without hesitation that glory that is glory alone, is too dearly bought with war. The war of the Crimea was without cause and it proved to be without result—in my judgment, though others may not agree with me. My hon. friend may say that Canada should take part in such a war. I say, no. That is a matter upon which we can each have our own opinion. But I will go further. In 1881 there was a movement in Egypt under Arabi Pasha to free that country from the Khedive. I do not pass judgment at all whether it was a wise or unwise movement, but I call the attention of the House to the fact. England and France joined in a note to the powers that they would maintain the government of the Khedive. France withdrew from the trouble, but England went to war. She sent a fleet to Alexandria which bombarded Alexandria; she sent her army and reestablished the government of the Khedive. Will any one tell me that Canada would have had any cause to take part in such a war as that? What reason would there have been for Canada to send her fleet, if she had had one, to take part in that war in Europe? There would have been no cause whatever. But England thought that she was bound to take part in such a war, and she did take part in it.

Well, Sir, I will not try to sail under false colours in this matter, I will say that in my judgment, if such a war were to occur again, there would be no reason whatever why Canada should go forth and take part in a war like that. But my hon. friend may say: What will Canada do in case England is engaged in a war which will tax her resources, a war which may be concluded in ten days' time, what should Canada do under such circumstances? The question is: Who is to determine whether the war is of such a character that Canada should take part in it? If you say that Canada is to take part in all the wars in which England may be engaged, then I have nothing more to say. But I maintain my position, and will maintain it, and let the people of Canada judge between us. If you say that there may be occasions in which Canada would have no reason whatever for taking part in a war, the question arises, when, and where, and who is to determine that? I answer that the question is to be determined by the men who, for the time being, are responsible for the welfare of Canada. My hon. friend will say: But what will happen if our ship is on the high seas and it is attacked? Sir, if it is attacked it will defend itself, and I have no doubt will give a good account of itself.

An hon. MEMBER. By running away.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does any one believe that the men who are on that ship will run away?

Mr. HUGHES. I was only quoting from the right hon. gentleman's own organ, which said that the boat was built to escape.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend should not bring up such a petty argument as that in a matter of this kind. We are discussing a grave subject. I say this, that if it should happen that our ships were attacked on the high sea, no matter under what government, no matter under what provocation, or without any provocation, I hold that under such circumstances any ship built in Canada, manned by Canadians, and sailing the British flag, would give a good account of itself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the right hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Suppose a Canadian ship meets a ship of similar armament and power belonging to an enemy, meets her on the high seas, what is she to do? I do not ask now what she will do, if attacked; but will she attack, will she fight?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that she would fight, I do not know that she should fight either. She should not fight until the government by which she is commissioned have determined whether she should go into the war. That is the position we take, my hon. friend takes a different position. He says that without any question, under all circumstances, we are bound to send our ships into the war. We take a different position, and we say: Let the country judge between us.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would our ports and harbours be neutral like our fleet until an order in council had been passed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not understand what my hon. friend means by asking if they should be neutral.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood the Prime Minister to say that our ships would not fight until they were ordered to do so, and, therefore, they would in effect be neutral until the Governor in Council had made an order that they should participate in the war. Have I misstated my hon. friend's position?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, inasmuch as our ships, under the conditions mentioned, will be practically neutral, I would like to know whether our ports and harbours will also be neutral in the same way?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not understand what my hon. friend means by asking if they would be neutral. If he means after an enemy has come into our harbour, then it will be time to resist them with our fleet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But if our ships do not attack the enemy when they meet the enemy on the high seas, on the same principle, may not the enemy's fleet come into our harbour without resistance or attack, without fear of aggression. Surely, that can be done; it is feasible for the country owning those harbours to maintain neutrality on the high seas?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That would be a question to determine any time that a warship entered a Canadian port.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The position of the Prime Minister is that ships flying the British flag should meet an enemy on the high seas and not attack them. That is a new tradition for the British navy.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was alluding before six o'clock to some curious conditions which might be brought about as a result of the provisions of section 18 in view of the interpretation that the Prime Minister has placed upon that section. I would like to allude to one or two more. As I have already pointed out there are, of course, wars in which Canada would not be expected to participate, such as small frontier wars, and wars in which no navy would be engaged. In these it could not be expected that the Canadian naval forces would take any part. The British naval force would not take any part in them. Then there are operations such as those to which the Prime Minister alluded—the operations in Egypt in 1882, when the naval force upon the spot acted under the directions of the home government and acted without any formal declaration of war. Then there is a third-class of wars, those to which allusion was also made before six o'clock, wars in which the naval forces of the empire would require to be exerted to the full, wars in which disaster might occur unless the naval forces of all the great dominions of the empire should take their due and proper part. Now, the Prime Minister, as I understand it, says that the Canadian naval force shall take no part in any such wars until after the government of Canada shall have taken the matter into consideration and determined whether or not it be a war in which it is proper that the Canadian naval force should take part. Until that declaration is made, under section 18, the Canadian naval force shall take no part. That is apparently the fair meaning and that is the interpretation placed upon it by the Prime Minister. I pointed out before six o'clock some curious results of that. One curious result is that the Canadian naval force will be, so to speak, neutral until that order in council has been made. The Prime Minister has distinctly stated that it will not attack a ship of the enemy, even if war shall have been declared unless and until an order in council has been passed. Therefore, it will not co-operate with the other naval forces of the empire. That is his direct and unequivocal declaration. He said if a Canadian ship were attacked it would resist, it would fight, but unless a Canadian ship were attacked it would take no part. I inquired whether that neutrality, because it is nothing less than neutrality in a war in which the empire is engaged, would extend to the ports and harbours of Canada, so that, pending the period during which no order in council was made, ships of the enemy could come for the purpose of obtaining supplies, and, if necessary, refitting, to the ports of Canada exactly as if Canada were not part of the empire at all. My right hon. friend did not give me any answer to that, and I do not see, why, if our ships are to be neutral, our ports and harbours should not be neutral too. If we are to assume the status of a neutral power in such a case in one respect I do not know any reason why it should not be legitimately followed by assuming the status of a neutral power in every other respect. Well, let us look at the conditions to which the declaration of the Prime Minister will bring us. He says that our ships will defend themselves if attacked, but if not, they will not attack a ship of the enemy. Every one who has studied modern conditions knows that nearly every great nation of the world, at all events, certain great naval powers, have merchant ships with guns in their holds. These ships, upon a declaration of war, and such declarations come very suddenly under modern conditions, mount the guns they have in their holds, hoist the naval flag of their country and prey upon the commerce of any other nation against which war may have been declared. Suppose that one of these ships mounts her guns, flies the flag and proceeds to prey upon British commerce under the very guns of a Canadian cruiser; according to the declaration of the Prime Minister that Canadian cruiser would not interfere until an order in council has been passed. Suppose that a Canadian cruiser upon the high seas in sight of British ships should observe those British ships to be attacked by the cruiser of a nation which had suddenly declared war against Great Britain, a Canadian ship is not to attack unless she is attacked herself. Then, I presume, she is to remain idly by while British ships are captured by the cruiser of the hostile power, and all this for the reason that no order in council has been passed at Ottawa. A British merchant man might very well appeal, one would think, to a ship of war flying the British flag for protection, but, under circumstances such as those the only answer that the Canadian ship could give would be that she could take no part whatever until an order in council had been passed at Ottawa, and pending that she must assume the status of a neutral vessel. All this seems to be very unworkable; it seems very absurd. But, further and more important than all that; it would simply have the result I have indicated; it would simply mean a declaration of complete independence from the rest of the empire. That is all it could possibly mean. Therefore, it seems to me, for these reasons, which I have very hastily and cursorily alluded to that section 18 as interpreted by the Prime Minister is, in the first place, unworkable if we are to remain in the empire, and, in the second place, if it is worked out on the lines indicated by the Prime Minister, then it means that Canada on the day and on the occasion when that section is worked out in that way ceases to be a part of the British empire and becomes an independent nation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. All the hypotheses to which my hon. friend has just given expression would apply in the same way to the royal navy as to the Canadian navy. What has the royal navy to do before a declaration of war has taken place in Great Britain? It may be attacked by the enemy, and it would repel an attack, but for all that I do not think it would precipitate an attack. Take the case of the war between Russia and Japan. It is, I believe, an historical fact now that the Japanese fleet at Port Arthur, before there had been a declaration of war, at all events before the declaration of war was known, attacked the Russian fleet and the Russian fleet had nothing to do under such circumstances, but to meet the attack and repel it. And so it is with regard to the Canadian navy. The Canadian navy will repel an attack, but will not attack until there is authority to do so. My hon. friend knows that under such circumstances the modern practice is for ships commissioned in the apprehension of war to carry their sealed written orders with them, they do not wait to go to shore to get orders. In these modern days war is not precipitated without some notice. Even between Japan and Russia at the time of the last war it was well known for some time that the relations between the two countries were strained, and there is historical testimony that all the ships carried with them their sealed orders to be opened in case of necessity. And so it is to-day with the Canadian fleet, so it would be with the imperial fleet also.

My hon. friend referred to the neutrality of our harbours. I did not reply to my hon. friend because I did not think the question put was very serious, but he seems to attach importance to it. I stated on a former occasion that when Great Britain is at war we are at war, we do not admit any other condition. But section 19, which we are now discussing, reads:

In case of emergency the Governor in Council may place at the disposal of His Majesty for general service in the Royal Navy—

In case of emergency. What is an emergency? An emergency is defined in section 2:

Emergency means war, invasion, or insurrection real or apprehended.

In case of emergency the Governor in Council takes action immediately, or it would be his duty to take action immediately. He does not wait until hostilities have been opened, but if war is apprehended he does.

I presume that when the Governor in Council acts under section 18 war or insurrection or some danger of that kind has been apprehended. That means emergency and action has been taken. This is what takes place: We are in a state of war, our fleet is under orders and has to act accordingly. The question is under such circumstances whether the Governor in Council will place the navy at the disposal of the Royal Navy or whether he will not. My hon. friend in his opening remarks has given the whole crux of the difficulty we are now dealing with. My hon. friend has stated that there are wars in which the navy of Canada would not be bound to take any part, he admits that, he says they are insignificant, they are of no consequence, and therefore, we would not be called on to take any part in them. He says there are other wars in which all the forces of the empire would have to be drawn upon in order to meet danger. So be it. There are wars which would tax the energies and all the resources of the empire and there are wars which would not tax the energies of the empire. Where is the line to be drawn? Would my hon. friend tell me? The line has to be drawn somewhere. There are wars which would tax all the resources of the empire, there are wars which would not be of any consequence, in which we should not take any part. Where again is the line to be drawn, and who is to draw the line? My hon. friend says the line has to be drawn somewhere, but we are not to draw the line, we go mechanically into the war. Well we say on the contrary that the line has to be drawn by the government and parliament of Canada. This is the position we take. We assume that in this as in everything else since we have been endowed with responsible government, it is for us to resolve, and for us to act, and we act under the responsibility of parliament. I have no fault to find with my hon. friend for the position he takes, but I maintain that my hon. friend cannot support his position. He admits himself that there are wars in which we must take part, we ought to take part, and others in which we ought not to take part. When he has admitted that much it seems to me he has given his whole case away.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister has not quoted me in a way in which I desire to be understood or in the way in which I spoke. I said there were wars in which neither the Canadian naval forces nor the British naval forces took any part, and, of course, in such wars any question arising under section 18 becomes absolutely immaterial, because neither the Canadian naval forces nor the imperial naval forces are to be called upon nor can be called upon. I will tell my right hon. friend where I draw the line. I say that in any war where naval forces can be engaged, the Canadian naval force ought to be exactly in the same position as the imperial naval force; in a war of the empire, the Canadian naval force ought to be classed exactly in the same category as the other forces of the empire. I say that is the only practical and workable theory on which you can devise a scheme for maintaining a great naval force of the empire if the empire is to hold together.

I shall take up one or two matters to which my right hon. friend alluded. He says, in the first place, that there always will be a declaration of war. I have looked into that question pretty thoroughly, I have looked into the modern textbooks, and the modern doctrine is that no declaration of war is necessary. Japan made no declaration of war, she committed an overt act of war, and the declaration, if there was any, came afterwards.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the modern rule seems to be that no declaration of war is necessary. When the relations between two countries become strained, each one must be prepared for an overt act of war, and Japan was sustained by the opinion of the whole civilized world in the course which she took in attacking the Russian fleet before there was any declaration of war.

My right hon. friend says we will be in exactly the same position as the royal navy. I take issue with my right hon. friend. Let us take the two cases, first the case of an overt act of war before a declaration of war, some wanton act committed by a foreign fleet. Some such thing did bring about very strained relations between Great Britain and another naval power about eight or ten years ago in the North Sea. Every one remembers the occasion when some British fishing vessels were fired upon, and I think some of them sunk by the fleet of another power. Take an occasion of that kind. You have a Canadian cruiser attached for the purpose of manoeuvring or training to a British squadron. You have that British squadron engaged at once in battle with a hostile fleet, and the admiral flies the signal to engage the enemy. What is the Canadian ship to do? She is to turn about and run away, and the ships of the empire are to engage the enemy. This is the result of the right hon. gentleman's proposal. That is the case where there is no actual declaration of war. I take the other case to which the Prime Minister has alluded, where there has been an actual declaration of war, and hostilities between the two fleets immediately follow. Again, I say the Canadian naval force is not in the same position as the royal navy. After the declaration of war has been made and hostilities have been entered into by the opposing fleets, every ship of the royal navy is bound to obey the command of the commanding officer and enter into engagement with the enemy. The Canadian fleet is not bound to do anything of the kind; it is bound not to do it until an order in council has been passed at Ottawa. Therefore, it is of no use to say that under such circumstances the Canadian fleet is in the same position as the royal navy, and no argument can possibly alter that fact. I think I have taken up all the points that seem to be of importance brought out by the Prime Minister, and I still adhere strongly to the view that this is not only an absolutely unworkable proposition, but an absolutely dangerous proposition as well.

Mr. FIELDING. May I ask my hon. friend, would a British ship engage in any hostilities with a ship of another nation without receiving instructions from some competent authority, whether there was a declaration of war or not?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think such cases have arisen and may arise.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think ships of the British navy usually engage in hostilities without receiving instructions from the proper authority. The proper authority would be the commanding officer; the proper authority to him would be the Lords of the Admiralty; and if the British Admiralty can give directions, surely the Canadian authorities can give directions too. The telegraphic facilities are as open to the government of Canada as to any body else, and with the modern facilities which science has given to us for communicating with vessels wherever they may be, I would not think there were any such difficulties as my hon. friend suggests of our not being able to get into communication.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was basing my remarks on something which the Minister of Finance seems absolutely to have overlooked. The Prime Minister has laid it down definitely and explicitly that there may be great naval wars in which the Royal navy will take part and in which the Canadian navy will take no part, because the necessary order in council will not be made.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not hear the first part of my hon. friend's remarks, but I understood that he himself admitted that there might be wars in which it would be desirable that Canada should engage, and there might be other wars in which it would not be so desirable.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, never.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Would the hon. gentleman apply his rule to the case of the British-Chinese war? There a part of the British fleet acted and brought on a war without any instructions from home.

Mr. FIELDING. There may be peculiar circumstances which are exceptional, but as a general rule no ship of the British navy engages in hostilities with a ship of a foreign power until instructions are received from a competent authority. There seems to be little room for difference on this clause. To my mind it is essential to the purpose of the Bill. It has been pointed out that 'emergency' referred to in this clause means not only actual war, but 'invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended'. Suppose there were an insurrection in Saskatchewan. I am using an argument which I heard an hon. friend use this afternoon, so that it is not mine. That would be an emergency in the meaning of this Act. Would it be desirable that automatically we should instantly send our ships away to join the British navy? That would not be reasonable. Suppose the British government gets into difficulty with one of the petty republics of America. We know what happens: it sends down a couple of ships and the whole difficulty is settled. Great Britain in a case like that, would not want the help of the Canadian navy. Would you send the Canadian ships in such a case to join the British navy? To come closer home to Europe, suppose Great Britain should unhappily—it is hardly conceivable—engage in a war with Switzerland, an inland country, with no navy. Great Britain might feel bound to declare war against Switzerland. Would it be necessary in such an event that we should automatically send our ships to join the British navy? These are all, I grant,, extreme cases, but extreme cases are possible in the matter we are now discussing.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the Canadian navy were under the British admiralty, does the hon. gentleman suppose that it would ask that the Canadian navy be sent to England under such circumstances as he has mentioned?

Mr. FIELDING. But why should we place it under the control of the British admiralty? I say that this clause deals with occasions when it is not necessary or expedient for any British purpose that the ships of Canada should be sent to join the Royal navy. But I will carry the argument further. I am going to suppose a war with a great power. Let us suppose that that German scare, which kept so many hon. gentlemen opposite awake at night during the early part of this session, results in a war with Germany. I say that the people of Canada, who have built and paid for these ships, are the persons to determine, through their constituted government and parliament, what part they shall take; and therefore I stand for the principle laid down in the clause, that the right of the people of Canada through their government to determine that question shall be maintained as it is in this Act. But while I maintain that that right is necessary and proper, I have no doubt as to the manner in which that right would be exercised. I say that whenever the British nation shall become involved in a war with a great power, I do not stop to consider whether it is a just or an unjust war—so long as we are part of the British empire, I care not what government is in power in Canada, it will be its duty instantly to join and help the mother country; and I say the government in power in such a crisis, be it Liberal or be it Tory, which will fail to respond to that sentiment, will be swept out of existence, and will deserve to be. All the same it is well that we should recognize, as we do in this Bill, that if we are to engage in these wars, we are going to engage in them, as we have done in the past, by the free voluntary action of the Canadian government and the Canadian people.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And so we would be doing it by a free and voluntary act of the Canadian people if we said that the Canadian naval force should be part of the naval force of the empire in time of war—a free act of the will of the Canadian people. Why does my hon. friend the Minister of Finance desire to becloud the issue in that way? If this parliament does that, it does it as the representative of the Canadian people, and speaking for the Canadian people. That is the free act of the Canadian people in the one case, just the same as it would be in the other case. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance speaks of war with Switzerland or a war with some inland power. The ships of the royal navy would not be engaged in such a war. The ships of the Canadian naval force would not be so engaged. One might remark in passing that the Swiss navy is about the only navy that our own supposed force could safely fight, so far as one can judge.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But when Britain is engaged in a naval war, it might be that not 25 per cent of her own fleet would be engaged in active hostilities; on the other hand it might be the whole of her fleet. I am not asking that the Canadian navy should be sent to South America, or to Egypt, or China on some trivial pretext. I am not asking or suggesting that; but I say that the only workable scheme is to declare that in time of war the Canadian naval force is part of the naval forces of the empire.

Some hon. members. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not see any middle course. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has perhaps not fully appreciated the attitude which the Prime Minister has taken. The Minister of Finance said: I would not stop to consider whether the war was just or unjust. The Prime Minister said: I shall very carefully consider whether the war is just or unjust. If the war, according to my appreciation, is a just war I will send the Canadian naval force to take part in it. If the war, according to my appreciation, is an unjust war, or one that does not specially concern the interests of Canada, then I shall take good care that the Canadian force shall not take a part in that war. Again, I say it is an unworkable theory, and more than that, a dangerous theory and a theory which, if persisted in, can have only one result and that is the severing of the ties which now bind this country to the empire.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend has drawn upon his imagination if he reaches the conclusion from anything I have said on this occasion that we would judge as to the justness of the war in which England might be engaged. I never said anything of the kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not say that I would stop to consider whether a war in which England might be engaged would be just or unjust, but what I stated this afternoon and what I repeat, and what my hon. friend will have to consider himself, is that the condition of Great Britain and the condition of her daughter nations are absolutely different as to the causes of a war in which she might be engaged. England is engaged in all parts of Europe, all the time and almost every day considering whether or not the horizon is clear or is not clear. It has been the case in the past and no doubt in the future she will be engaged upon some kind of petty war or a war perhaps of more or less importance in which we can have no interest at all, but in which we should have a very considerable interest. I cited the war in the Crimea this afternoon, and I cited also the war in Egypt. These were wars in which England was engaged and in which in my humble judgment, we would have absolutely no interest and take no part. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) says that the Canadian navy should be at all times part of the imperial navy. Well, I repeat if my hon. friends on the other side entertain this view, I have no fault to find, but I do not share that view. This is the point of issue with my hon. friend. He admits that there might be a war in which we would have to take no part. The strength of the case is such that he had to make such an admission, and it is an admission that is patent to everybody that England might be engaged in a war in a part of the world in which the Canadian organized force would have no reason to take any part at all. It is possible that a case might arise in which hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House might consider we should take part and in which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House might think we should take no part. I gave the case of the Crimean war and I was taken to task for that. I was told it was disloyal on my part because I stated that Canada would have no reason to take part in any war such as the Crimean war. That is a point on which we might differ. A more glaring case was the case of the Egyptian war. The British government sent a fleet, an act of war, to Alexandria, and it bombarded Alexandria. Will any one tell me in this House that Canada should have taken part in such a war?

Mr. LENNOX. Sure.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well I say no, and there we are in conflict. My good friend (Mr. Lennox) says we should take part in such a war. I say on this side of the House that we should not take part in such a war, and who is to judge as to whether we shall, or shall not. If we take the true Tory view maintained by my friend (Mr. Borden) that a Canadian navy should be part of the imperial navy under all circumstances, my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) would be right. But if we take the other view, that we should not act mechanically on this question, but that we have a right to judge for ourselves whether it is or is not in our interests that we should take part in a war, then of course of necessity we must have the control in our own hands. Sir, there is only one question upon this point. The Canadian people have an aversion to war. The Canadian people will not be drawn lightly into war, and the Canadian people will not be drawn into such a war as my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) thinks they should be drawn. But the Canadian people will under all circumstances gladly go into a war when the supremacy of Great Britain is in peril. How is that to be determined? There is only one way of determining those questions, and it is by the will of the government, the will of parliament, and the will of the people.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There is a middle course that suggests itself to me, and it may be the way that will be worked out practically. While we may not specifically put in this Act of parliament that automatically the Canadian navy is a part of the British navy, we can by a temporary Act of the government, or by an order in council declare that the navy may for the time being be considered as a part of the British navy. That would give this government an opportunity to revise the situation. As a matter of fact I believe that is the way it will be worked out, that when England is at war, a temporary order in council will be issued saying that the navy is to be considered a part of the British navy. It appears to me that it will work out in that way, namely, that Canada can keep control of her navy by setting out in the statute that it shall not automatically be part of the British navy, but that it can by temporary order in council be made a portion of the British navy.

Mr. BURRELL. I must confess that after listening to this debate, and particularly to the Prime Minister's remarks it has become exceedingly difficult to know whether this navy is to be one of the empire or one solely for Canada. That is one impression. I must say that the contentions of the Prime Minister seem to be absolutely untenable if the Canadian navy is to fly the Union Jack. I cannot understand, I do not think any man in this side of this House, can understand how a Canadian war vessel can fly the Union Jack. and yet practically rest quiescent on the waves until she gets an order in council to know whether she is to attack the enemy of Great Britain or not. It is a simply impossible position. The Prime Minister has quoted—rather unfortunately for himself, I think—the case of the Japanese flotilla taking the Russian fleet, which would not put itself into action until actually attacked. If we follow the example of Russia in this case we shall be wiped off the seas as she was. He has referred to the war in Egypt, and also to the war in the Crimea. I think the case of Egypt was a rather unhappy illustration, for Canada sent the Canadian voyageurs, did she not?

Mr. TALBOT. Not at that time

Mr. BURRELL. It may have been at another time. But the Prime Minister's contention is that in the case of a war with Great Britain or any other power, there should be authority in the parliament of Canada, and the Governor in Council to decide whether that war is of sufficient importance for Canada to take part in it or not. He does not seem to take into consideration the moral effect upon other nations of our hesitating, and discussing when Great Britain is at war. The British navy, is the great safeguard of the empire, on which the defence of the integrity of the empire—which the Prime Minister sometimes seems to think so anxious should be defended—depends. Does not he think that those most likely to know whether assistance is necessary or not, are the central authorities of the admiralty, and that we could safely leave to those authorities in Great Britain to say whether they want our assistance or not instead of limiting in this cumbrous roundabout way, leaving it to the Governor in Council, and to the Canadian parliament involving serious delay? If we could trust those who are in authority in the councils of the empire at all, surely we could trust them to say whether they want our assistance or not. They would not call upon Canada to send their vessels unless Great Britain's supremacy were threatened. The Prime Minister says that if Britain's supremacy were threatened, the Governor in Council, and this parliament would decide to go to her assistance. But he does not seem to realize that, in naval wars in these times, after such a discussion it might be too late to do any good. For my part then, it is inconceivable that any part of the British empire, Canada, Australia, New Zealand or any other flying the British flag, should, in case of war, stand on one side until the question has been threshed out whether we should take part or not. And, if we are not to fly that flag, the sooner we know it the better.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would like to ask the hon. member (Mr. Burrell) a question. In the event of the Canadian navy being placed at the disposal of Great Britain, would it be Canada that would have to provide the money that would purchase the supplies and ammunition necessary to operate these vessels?

Mr. BURRELL. I dare say it might. But I do not think the question is very much to the point. My hon. friend (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) knows perfectly well what the British attitude was in the Boer war—they gave a pretty generous supply. The hon. member's question would reduce it to the argument that we who pay for the ships should have the final say—reducing it to a matter of dollars, altogether too low a level, in my opinion, when the supremacy of the British empire is challenged. I do not think these questions would arise, and I do not think they are relevant.

Mr. MACDONALD. Of course, the hon. member may propose to wipe away with a wave of his hand what might mean milions to the Canadian people. But he forgets that a parliament exists in England in which a ministry has to be consulted before war is declared. The principle upon which that right is exercised through government is at the very base of governmental administration everywhere for the government must provide the funds to carry on the war. The hon. gentleman says that in Canada it is a matter of indifference who is to pay the money necessary to operate the navy. But we must be practical. We cannot soar into realms of patriotism and forget that war is an intensely practical matter in which blood and money are concerned. If Canada is to supply the men and the ships, she must supply money before the force can be operated. And, if the money is to be supplied by Canada, how is it to be obtained except by executive act of the government of the day supplemented by parliament. And, if the government has to act, this section of the Bill is absolutely necessary in order that the power committed to the executive of the day to determine whether the necessary supply shall be given may be exercised. That is the case with the British government, and the enactment before us is neither more nor less than placing in this law the same principle that has guided the administration of affairs in England.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not know that the government could get money by executive action. I thought it was a matter of parliamentary appropriation. The hon. member (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) seems to be introducing a new constitutional principle.

Mr. MACDONALD. Let us clear that up. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) mean to say that there is any way by which money can be got from this parliament, or from any British parliament, without the executive coming to parliament and asking for a vote?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, they must come to parliament; that is just what I have said. But the hon. member said they got money by executive act.

Mr. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman has reduced the question of participation in a war in which Great Britain is concerned to a question of dollars.

Mr. MACDONALD. And does the hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) forget that altogether?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If a war should be a pretty expensive one, Canada will not join with the rest of the empire, but, if it is to be a cheap war, one that would not cost more than ten or fifteen millions, Canada will hoist the flag and pitch in at once. Of course, that is not a very high standard of action, but it is the one which the hon. member would establish. I would like to know what Canadian merchant vessels on the high seas would do in the meantime. They would require to be protected by some naval force. That is another question I would like to ask the Prime Minister. Canada has some ships on the high seas. If the empire is engaged in war, these ships will be liable to capture. If the war does not commend itself to the judgment of the Prime Minister, he will not have an order in council passed. Of course, our ships will be protected by the British navy, whether the order in council is passed or not, but they will not be defended by the Canadian navy unless there is an order in council. That is another extraordinary situation which would grow out of this section 18. I do not know what the Prime Minister's action would be.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The conundrums of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) do not puzzle anybody but himself. What would be the position of the British navy in such a situation? True, we have ships on the high seas. Great Britain has far more than we have. 'War' under this measure means war or insurrection real or apprehended. It is quite possible that our ships might be attacked before there was a declaration of war. The hon. member has said that a declaration of war is not necessary. In modern practice, it is not necessary, I admit. But, in the case of war between civilized nations, they do not usually give up natural relations of amity and peace until they have sent away the ambassadors and put themselves in a state of war. Well, then, our position is exactly the same as the position of the imperial navy. The hon. member supposes that our ships are attacked—of course that would force us into war.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I mean our merchant ships.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes,—that would force us into war. In our day nations are forced into war most unwillingly. They are anxious not to fight and fight only under great provocation. The hon. gentleman says that I intended to be the judge of the justice of a war. I believe that to-day England would not go into an unjust war, that in the condition of civilization we have reached she would not go to war unless she had been provoked to a degree which would rouse her blood. In such a case as the hon. member has supposed, there would be no reasoning—we should have to act. That is, if our ships are attacked, we should have to go into the war.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A very large part of our merchant shipping is registered not in Canadian registers but in British. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would find himself involved in some very fine distinctions. A ship is captured on the high seas; if she is a ship with a Canadian register, we are forced into war and the order in council goes through; but if she is a ship with a British register, then, according to the Prime Minister, we will not go to war, and there will be no order in council. But suppose a ship built with Canadian capital and registered on the other side as a British ship. I do not know what fine distinction he would make about that—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Nor do I.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would that force us into war or not? The Prime Minister candidly admits that he does not know what he would do.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend makes very nice distinctions and raises many objections in order that he may destroy them. He tries to make the reductio ad absurdum. He put a question and I answered it. We may be drawn into war by the attack of an enemy. I should rule the day, but it would have to be met.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the right hon. gentleman says he will preserve a discretion. In some wars he will permit the naval force to engage, but in others he will not permit them to engage. I am trying to find out what principle will guide him in the matter, and I have not been very successful up to the present time. I say there is only one principle on which we can safely act, and it is this; when the empire is at war we are at war, when the naval forces of the empire are engaged the Canadian naval force must be available for co-operation in that war. That is absolutely the only safe principle on which any scheme of this kind can be worked out. The moment you begin to split hairs and say: We will fight if one of our ships is captured, but will not fight if a British ship is captured; we consider this war just or that one unjust; we consider this war in the interest of Canada and the other as not in the interest of Canada;—the moment you get down to hair-spliting distinctions of that kind, you embark upon a path, which must, under section 18, lead to the complete separation of this country from the rest of the empire.

Mr. FIELDING. I accept the principle the hon. member lays down that when Britain is at war Canada is at war, and therefore it is not for the Governor in Council or for this parliament to say—in that sense—whether we should be at war or not. If Great Britain is at war with any other nation, Canada, as part of the empire, is at war. But it does not follow that in every one of these cases we shall, automatically or otherwise, place our ships to engage in that war.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister distinctly said that after war had been declared, and before this order in council was made, a Canadian ship meeting a ship of the enemy would not attack it, would not fight it, but that she would only fight if she was first atacked. Then I put this question to my right hon. friend, and I put it to the Minister of Finance: Supposing a Canadian ship sees a foreign cruiser capturing ships carrying the British flag and no order in council has been made, what is the Canadian cruiser to do?

Mr. FIELDING. My answer to that is that my hon. friend is entirely mistaken in creating any distinction between a Canadian ship and a British ship. There is, in this relation no such thing as a Canadian ship on the ocean; every ship of Canada is a part of the British fleet flying the British flag, subject to all the laws of Great Britain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not put that in the Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. It is not necessary to put it in the Bill. There are some things so simple and so easily understood that they need not be stated. I say at once that if Great Britain engages in a war with any nation, and if that nation can get at us, they have a right to punish us because we are part of the British empire, unless we are strong enough to fight them off. But let us use an illustration. Suppose the British government proclaimed war against the Republic of Liberia. We are immediately at war, the whole British empire is at war with Liberia, Canada is at war with Liberia. But is there any particular reason why we should order Canadian ships to go off and help the British government to fight Liberia? The thing is preposterous and ridiculous. This clause enables us to distinguish between times when we are needed to assist the British empire, and times when there is no such need, and surely that is right. Now, as to the question of whether a war is just or unjust, I have already said that while I think we should insist upon the right of the people of Canada who pay the money—and I hope my hon. friend from British Columbia will not find fault if I refer to money, a Minister of Finance must think of such things—I say the people of Canada who have to pay the money are the proper persons to decide, through their competent authority, the Governor General in Council, and later through parliament, through the voices of the people, whether their ships should engage in that war. If it be a petty, insignificant war in which Britain is engaged and needs no help, then our ships will not take part in it, not because we are not at war with Liberia, but because Great Britain does not need any help to look after it. But if you come to a really great war, if you some to a war in which the commerce of Great Britain, and that means the commerce of Canada, is being attacked on the ocean, or liable to be attacked on the ocean, I say then that Canada should instantly go to the relief of the mother country. While we, by this Bill, would simply maintain our right of judgment, I have not the shadow of a doubt how that right would be exercised, I do not believe there would be much discussion whether the war was a just war or not—we would have a right to consider that, and it is right that we should maintain that position. But until we have developed some system by imperial federation, that magnificent dream—and we are all the better for dreaming it. Though we may fail to accomplish it—but until we have developed some system in which the various over-seas dominions shall have a voice with regard to the making of war, we must be content to accept the war-making machinery which now exists in the British empire. There will come a time, I have no doubt, when, in the development of the British system, Canada and the various great over-seas dominions will be consulted; nay, I believe they would even be consulted now before any great war would be undertaken by the British empire. There will come a time probably when they can be consulted in a more formal manner, but until that time shall come, until we have a constitutional right to take part in making a declaration of war, it seems to me that as loyal citizens of the empire we must be content to accept the judgment of the government of the day in England, be it Liberal or be it Tory, which is the constituted authority to declare when the empire should engage in war. My belief is, it is only an opinion—and the opinion of every other member of the House is as good as mine—it is my opinion that whenever that time does come, I care not what government may be in power in Canada, when we shall have on the statute-book the right to determine whether or not we may send our ships to the help of the British navy, I have not the shadow of a doubt how the people of Canada will exercise that right. They will not stop to ask whether the war is just or unjust, for it will then be too late. It will be enough for them to know that the great empire of which we form a part is engaged in war, and then, in the words of the resolution of March last, every resource of the Canadian government and the Canadian people will be placed at the disposal of the empire.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I like to listen to the Minister of Finance because he can always sound the trumpet and beat the drum so loudly on questions of this kind. But let us get down to facts. The question put by the leader of the opposition to the right hon. gentleman is a question that should be answered. Let me assume that the British empire is at war with Liberia. Now, everybody knows that the republic of Liberia has no great fleet, or that it has no fleet of any consequence. Let us assume that the Canadian government has considered the question of whether we shall be at war with Liberia, and they shall decide that we are not at war with Liberia, according to the principle laid down to-day by the Prime Minister. Now, this is something that might easily happen, something like the warship 'Alabama,' the history of which we all remember. There is nothing to prevent a fast cruiser being sent by a foreign nation to Liberia and turned over to the Liberian government, commanded by Liberia to start out on a cruise of destruction against British commerce. Now, the case of the 'Alabama,' flying the Confederate flag, is analogous. Now, we will follow the reasoning of the hon. gentleman. Great Britain is at war with Liberia, but Canada is not at war with Liberia. That fast cruiser commissioned by the Liberian government, makes its way where it would naturally go, to the North Atlantic, possibly, probably, to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. When it reaches the Gulf of the St. Lawrence it comes under the observation of a Canadian warship. The captain of the Canadian warship sees this ship flying the flag of Liberia, and says: Well, we are not at war with Liberia, and I have no right to attack this ship until such time as the Canadian parliament is summoned, or an order in council is passed to that effect. Whilst this warship of Liberia is under observation, it sights a British ship, say one of the Canadian Pacific railway steamers, which I understand are registered under British registry. The Liberian warship attacks this British merchant ship, fires at her, captures her, and the Canadian warship look on, and the captain says: I dare not fire a shot or interfere in any way, because Canada is not at war with Liberia. This Liberian cruiser—it is a possibility, bear in mind, a modern possibility—make a prize of this Canadian merchantman which is under British register. Well, it continues its career a little further on, still under the observation of the 'Niobes' and the 'Rainbows,' and it runs across a Canadian vessel that is registered under a Canadian register. It fires on the Canadian merchant ship, calls her to halt, the ship refuses to halt, the cruiser fires upon her, and kills a few men, and take the Canadian ship a prize. Then, of course, the Canadian warship would be justified, possibly, in taking action, under the old idea that there is a difference between hostilities and a declaration of war, in other words, that would be a case of hostilities, and the Canadian warship would proceed to fight the battle out with the Liberian warship, and would take the Liberian warship a prize and haul her into a Canadian port. Then again, under the laws of war, would the Canadian seamen be entitled to prize money? There are all kinds of conditions arising in that event, and these are all actual possibilities. The only clear cut way is to brush aside this argument that the Canadian fleet must be under the control continuously of the Canadian government, and that it could exist without being in the state of war when England is at war. The Liberian government, or the government of Hayti, might commission a vessel of this kind to make war on Great Britain. All these things have historical analogies, and I have instanced the case of the 'Alabama.' Would it be right for a Canadian war vessel to refrain from firing on a Liberian war vessel if attacked? Everybody knows that a declaration of war and hostilities are altogether different things. The Chinese war was begun by a British warship boarding a Chinese junk. One or two of the greatest wars in history were commenced without any declaration of war, even by the British navy. In fact, the war between China and Japan was commenced by a Japanese war vessel firing on a Chinese troop ship without a declaration of war having been made. Would a Canadian warship be entitled to remain idle if a British merchant ship were attacked by a foreign cruiser when there was no declaration of war?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think under such circumstances we would declare war

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Who would declare war?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Canadian government; we would pass the order in council.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Do you think the captain would have to lie-to until he communicated with the government?

Mr. FIELDING. All those ships have wireless.

Mr. EDWARDS. In the event of war between England and some foreign power, and in the event of the Governor in Council deciding that Canada would not take part, would the Prime Minister consider an attack, by that foreign power, on any of Canada's vessels, a violation of international law?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not see any violation of international law in that, because if England were at war we would be at war, and liable to attack.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Prime Minister agreed to give me some information as to the annual cost of maintaining and operating the 'Niobe'.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will give it to my hon. friend before we get out of committee.

On section 19; calling of parliament when naval service on active service,

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That section 19 be amended by inserting the word 'two' after the word 'the' in the 40th line, and adding the letter 's' at the end of the word 'section'

He said: It will then read:

Whenever the Governor in Council places the naval service or any part thereof on active service, as provided in the two preceding sections, &c.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have another amendment to move as section 19a as follows:

When the Governor in Council declares that an emergency has arisen in which it is expedient for the public service that His Majesty should have control of any dock, shipyard, pier, wharf, machine shop, repairing or salvage plant, factory, warehouse, store or other building, the minister may by warrant under his hand empower any person or persons named in such warrant to take possession of the same in the name and on behalf of His Majesty, and to use it for the service of His Majesty in such manner as the minister directs, and all persons, officers, servants and employees employed thereon shall obey the directions of the minister in connection with the management or operation of the same.

2. Such warrant shall remain in force so long as in the opinion of the minister the emergency exists.

3. There shall be paid to any person whose property is taken possession of in pursuance of this section out of moneys to be provided by parliament such full compensation for any loss or injury he so sustained as is agreed upon between the minister and the said person, or in case of difference as is fixed upon reference to the Exchequer Court of Canada.

4. Where any property is taken possession of under the provisions of this section all contracts and agreements between the persons whose property is so taken possession of and the directors, officers and servants of such person, or between such person and any other person in relation to the working or maintenance of such property, which would if such possession had not been taken, have been enforceable by the said person shall during the continuance of such possession be enforceable by His Majesty.

This is taken from the Militia Act.

Mr. J. D. REID. I should think the Prime Minister would have given some notice of that. It is impossible to understand it from just hearing it read.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The amendment is obvious, it is taken from the Militia Act, it is the law of all nations, and it is recognized by everybody.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. As I understand it the clause will impress the men in any of these works to work for the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the clause.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Not only take possession of the property but of the workmen and compel them to work for the government whether they want to or not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So it does, war is not always pleasant.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I should think that in justice to the workmen so impressed, provision should be made in the Act referring to pensions and annuities to grant to any workman so employed, who happens to be injured, the same annuities or pensions as would be granted to an enlisted man.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection to that.

On section 20; constitution of reserve.

Mr. J. D. REID. How are the men selected?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That clause is also taken from the Militia Act.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand the admiralty select their own men; in this country the government, I suppose under a patronage list. Will they be selected by Rear Admiral Kingsmill so that they will be taken irrespective of politics, the best men possible?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend will join the service, we will be glad to take him as a reserve man. He cannot be forced, no one will be forced, and I dare say my hon. friend might join himself.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Prime Minister knows that only a limited number are taken, only about 400 men. There will be many more applicants than can be taken and I have no doubt influence will be used to get men into the service. In any militia force there should be a system by which there would be no possible chance of politics creeping in. I feel that this is a case in which the recommendation of party politicians should not be considered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is a very wise suggestion.

Mr. J. D. REID. I hope the minister will act on it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. As I understand the men volunteer to serve in this navy, but after they have volunteered they are in the same category as men who have enlisted for an indefinite time in the British navy.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, they enlist for a certain period.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. 12 years is the period in the British navy, I understand. Does the Prime Minister not think, in view of the fact that we are establishing this navy and that it is necessary for us possibly to have a larger number of men than the enlisted men, he should seriously consider the methods adopted in other countries to acquire that large number of men? Our navy is small, they are virtually training ships. In the German navy, for instance, they have three categories, the active or standing navy, composed chiefly of petty officers and officers, the naval militia, in which men serve three years in the navy and automatically go on the reserve, and then there are those men who will volunteer to serve in the navy in the same way as the volunteers in the militia. Suppose it is impossible to get men to serve in the navy, for instance to replace deserters in time of war, what steps will the government take to get men? Will any clause be inserted to permit of forcible enlistment or balloting as is provided for in the Militia Act?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That balloting provision of the Militia Act is never exercised except in time of war. I suppose it never would be used.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister knows it has been exercised in the militia of Great Britain, in fact it was exercised here in the war of 1812. It is within the realm of possibility and in making legislation of this kind it is useless to close our eyes and make a sham law, we should make a law that will be of real use in time of trouble. The time to pass such legislation is in time of peace.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend, I am sorry to say, can never be a moderate man. He goes from one extreme to the other. At the outset he was very much opposed to this Bill, and now he wants to go in for compulsion. I have to say to him that we do not propose anything of the kind, we do not propose to put any compulsion in this Bill. We take our chances on that, and I really believe that this Act will be so popular that we will not have to use compulsion to bring people in but to keep them out.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not see why one section of the armed forces should be dealt with differently than with any other, and so I would suggest that the Prime Minister withdraw the compulsory balloting clauses from the Militia Act. Every man who wears the uniform in this country realizes that he is liable to service and every young man realizes that he is bound. Why should there be any exception in the case of the navy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend says we should remove the compulsory clauses from the Militia Act. Considering that for 100 years there has been no compulsory balloting in this country we shall not remove it, we shall let it lie there as a dormant section of the Act not to be called on for another 100 years.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The Prime Minister should be logical. He says he never expects this fleet to fight. Then if he does put that clause in what harm can it do?

On section 23, target practice.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I notice that rifle ranges are to be used for this naval service. Is this navy, amongst its many wonderful conditions, going to be placed on wheels so that it can go ashore and practice?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is my hon. friend serious or simply joking?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am very serious. The right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Militia know that at the various naval stations there are armed forces of infantry, and small arm ranges. Why should these ranges be duplicated when they can be used for nothing?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that in England the navy has its own targets, and ranges everywhere.

On section 24, property vested in His Majesty.

Mr. DOHERTY. What is to be understood by 'moneys subscribed by the naval service?'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This means private property in the mess, silver or anything of that kind.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the commission might also be issued by order in council.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is not satisfied yet. I propose to add a new section after 26, and I hope this section will meet with the approval of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie). I move that between sections 26 and 27, the following be inserted:—

26 (a). When an officer or seaman is killed in active service, or dies from wounds or disease contracted on active service, drill or training, or on duty, provision shall be made for his widow and family out of the public funds at the prescribed rates.

26 (b). Every case of permanent disability arising from injuries received or injuries contracted on active service, drill or training, or on duty, shall be reported on by a medical board and compensation awarded under such regulations as are made from time to time by the Governor in Council.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does that cover cases where men are impressed, who are not enlisted men?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It will cover the cases mentioned by my hon. friend, all persons engaged.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. In the navy there is a difference between able seamen and the artisan. I think the gentleman who is giving you information will tell you that there are different branches.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. 'Seaman' includes petty officers and all other persons engaged.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the provisions contained in 26a and 26b apply to those engaged in the fishery protection service as well as to officers and seamen in the navy proper?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, after they have been four years engaged.

On section 28, application of R.S.C., c. 111.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is moved that in the 17th line of section 28, there be inserted the words 'tidal survey.'

On section 33, training and pay.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I want to make a slight alteration there, I move that the word 'pay' be struck out and the words 'capitation or other remuneration' be substituted.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Should it not be remuneration or allowance?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The words suggested to me are 'capitation or other remuneration.' The section will then read, 'naval volunteers shall receive such training and capitation or other remuneration as may be prescribed.'

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Such training did you say? I think there is some error, is there not?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, the word is capitation.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I still fail to see that that clearly expresses the idea intended to be conveyed. I could understand it, if it meant that the men were to receive capitation grants or pay or allowances.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the idea.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. But the word 'capitation' does not express anything. Capitation might be his share of the grub on board.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Remuneration is understood.

On section 34, active service in emergency,—increase of pay for merit. &c.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In line 45 we wish to make some correction. The words 'but an increase may be granted whenever' should be struck out and the word 'unless' inserted.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is moved that in line 44 the words 'rate of pay' be struck out, and the word 'remuneration' be inserted instead.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 35, relief from duty.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We propose to strike that out.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is to be provided for by regulation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The next sections have to do with pensions. We do not propose to go on with that part of the Bill now. We do not expect to organize the pensions until the rate of pay is established. The question of pay has not been fully considered yet. We cannot adopt the pay of England—we must make it higher. That is a subject for consideration, and we shall not proceed with that part of the Bill until another session.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, it is proposed to strike out the four sections.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are printed in italics and should have been presented by resolution. They are not a part of the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Sections 36, 37, 38 and 39, being in italics, do not form a part of this Bill.

On section 40,

There shall be an institution for the purpose of imparting a complete education in all branches of naval science and tactics.

2. Such institution shall be known as the naval college of Canada, and shall be located at such place as the Governor in Council may determine.

On subsection 1,

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is proposed to add the word 'strategy'—'naval science, tactics and strategy.'

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Would the Prime Minister explain the difference between tactics and strategy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In such a case, I would have to apply to my hon. friend (Mr. J. A. Currie).

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be better, instead of saying 'There shall be an institution,' to say 'there shall be a naval college'?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The name is given in the next section. Besides this is in accordance with the style of drafting of the Bill. Section 7, for instance, provides: 'There shall be appointed an officer,' and so on.

Mr. SPROULE. It does not matter, if the form can be improved. I think it would be much better to enact directly 'There shall be a naval college.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that my hon. friend's drafting would be preferable. The draughtsman who was in charge has put it this way. The meaning is the same, after all.

On subsection 2,

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask if the report abroad is correct that this college is to be established at the city of Halifax?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are excellent reasons why it should be at Halifax. Does not my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) think so? The matter has not been determined yet.

Mr. EDWARDS. I have heard it intimated that the naval college was to be established at Kingston. It is thought that it would be nice to have the naval college and the military college side by side. The cadets could fraternize. There is a strong impression that the naval college is to be located at Kingston.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What would my hon. friend advise as to that?

Mr. EDWARDS. I should be happy to advise if the Prime Minister would take the advice.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I should be quite ready to take the advice, but I do not know that I could follow it. I think the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) would like to give his advice also.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the observation of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) is quite apropos. We have over four thousand seamen on the great lakes. When you compare that number with the very small number we have on the ocean, exclusive of the fishermen, and when you consider the number of ships on the lakes and the need for technical education of these seamen, also when you consider the splendid force that they would provide in case of an emergency if they had a slight training, I think the question is one that ought to receive the serious attention of the Prime Misister.

On section 42, superintendence of naval college; staff

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does this follow the lines of the British service, of having the officers trained in a college instead of on board ship? I understood they caught these youngsters at about ten and trained them aboard the warships and training ships.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Sixteen and upwards.

Mr. EDWARDS. Would not a part of the instruction of the naval cadets be in line with that of the military cadets? Could not part of the instruction for those training for the navy be given by professors in the military college?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I should think not. It is not done in England.

On section 43, requirements for admission.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would ask again, is it not a fact that in the British naval service it is only after an officer has been a midshipman for two years that he decides whether he shall go into navigation scientific or the gunnery department and specialize in that department?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then, why should this section specify that the service up to that age shall be the same for all of them?

Mr. EDWARDS. I asked if part of the training would not be practically the same as for the military cadets, but the Minister of Militia did not answer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think I answered my hon. friend. I understand that it would not be, and in England there is no such training of these military and naval cadets together.

Mr. JAMESON. Will admission to the naval college be by nomination, or will it be open to any person who makes an application?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose we will follow the practice of the military college, an application will have to be made.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Entrance to the military college is by competition, the cadet who makes the highest marks comes in first.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there a medical examination for entrance to the military college, and will the examination to the naval college be uniform with it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Presumably.

On section 44—period and conditions of service.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is a little different from what it is in the military college. The minister undertakes that where a pupil is educated in this naval college and passes his examination, he must serve a certain length of time in the Canadian navy. Now, there is no such condition attached to the Royal Military College service. Will the minister explain why there is a difference?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Royal Military College was established at a time when there was no permanent force at all in Canada. The object was very largely to give an opportunity for military training and a course of teaching which would fit young men to enter civil life, or the engineering professions, and at the same time give them instructions in military matters which would be of use when they became part of the active militia. An arrangement was also made with the imperial authorities by which six or seven commissions were given every year to the best men coming out of the Royal Military College. The position now is entirely different. We are starting with a permanent militia, we have no officers at all, and this course is to be limited to the preparation of cadets for the naval service and that only. The object of this college is purely to fit young men for service as officers in the navy.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Will a certain number of commissions be secured in the Royal Navy for graduates of this college?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. At first we shall require the services of all the cadets here, but later on there may be an exchange made.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it intended, when we have enough graduates of our own naval college to fill all the positions, to bring in others from the Royal Navy of England?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The intention is to educate those young men for the naval service of Canada.

Mr. JAMESON. I understand there is a certain number of cadets on the Dominion ship 'Canada'; will these cadets pass automatically into this college, or will they be required to undergo a certain examination?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They will pass automatically, but they will have to pass an examination for their commission.

On section 45—regulations for naval service generally.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a complement of section 9, which says that the Governor in Council may organize and maintain a permanent naval force, while this section gives the Governor in Council power to make regulations therefor.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It should be 'make such other regulations'.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That section 45 be amended by inserting after the word 'organization' the word 'training,' and after the word 'efficiency' the word 'administration.'

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 48; Acts of United Kingdom, and 'King's Regulations' to apply.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It says the 'King's Regulations and admiralty instructions now in force'. That would mean the 'King's Regulations' in force to-day, but not at any future date.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Why not strike out the words 'now in force'?

Mr. HUGHES. Why limit the 'King's Regulations'?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It is not the intention to apply those subsequently in force. We want those words in.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are constantly changing their regulations.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. You will have to change them by order in council hereafter. I think it is right as it is.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In the militia we are governed by the 'King's Regulations' and when the 'King's Regulations' change, if they are inconsistent with our regulations, they have no effect. Otherwise they are operative and we change our own orders in council if we wish to adopt them. Why not strike out the words 'now in force'?

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that if you made it read 'the parliament of the United Kingdom in force' and the 'King's Regulations and admiralty instructions in force' it would then suffice for all time.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Leave out the word 'now'.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved:

That section 48 be amended by striking out, in line 40, the words 'and now in force,' and in line 41 the words 'now in force.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty about that is that it might be construed to bring into force Acts passed by the United Kingdom which have been repealed. I imagine that the words 'now in force' were inserted for that reason.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There is considerable force in the argument advanced by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. My hon. friend called the attention of the committee to the fact that the words 'now in force' in line 40 were intended to exclude Acts that have been repealed so far. That is quite right. The draughtsman had that, no doubt, in his mind. I suggest that it be made to read in this way:

'The Naval Discipline Act, 1866,' and the Acts in amendment thereof passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom, and which may from time to time be in force, and the King's regulations and admiralty instructions which may from time to time be in force, in so far as the said Acts.

I think that would perhaps make it much clearer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The clause in the Militia Act says 'the Army Act for the time being in force in the United Kingdom.'

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That would be a better wording.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would move that section 48 be amended in that manner.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 53, R.S.C., 1886, c. 41, repealed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. This afternoon I quoted some law for which I was brought to task by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Congdon). I quoted the old Act of Charles 1661. The work from which I quoted was the Manual of Military Law, published by the war office, in which it is stated that the Act of 1661 was still in force and not repealed. If the hon. member for the Yukon thinks that is drastic legislation, I will be pleased to give him the manuel so that he will know what the law is.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I move to add after section 53, the following as section 53a:

The schedule to the Department of Marine and Fisheries Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, chapter 44, is amended as follows:—

Clause 5 by adding thereto the following: Except steamships and vessels belonging to the naval service.

Clauses 15 and 20 are repealed.

Clause 23 by adding thereto the following: Except the fisheries protection service which is under the control and management of the Department of the Naval Service.

Clause 24 by adding: Except such matters as are under the control and management of the Department of the Naval Service.

Motion agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I move to add as section 53b:

The Governor in Council may transfer to the Department of the Naval Service, any officer, clerk or employee of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, whether or not such officer, clerk or employee is at present connected with any one of the branches of the latter department which is by this Act transferred or assigned to the Department of the Naval Service, and the money voted by parliament for the financial year ending 31st March, 1911, applicable to the payment of the salary or the increase of salary of any such officer, clerk or employee shall be available for the payment of his salary or increase of salary in the Department of the Naval Service in the same manner and to the same extent as if such officer, clerk or employee had not been so transferred.

Mr. SPROULE. You transfer them without consulting the Civil Service Commission?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. These officers are already in the service, but they are transferred from the Department of Marine and Fisheries to the new department; their qualification is established, they are simply transferred from one department to the other.

Mr. HUGHES. Why limit it to the Department of Marine and Fisheries? Could there not be in another department an officer who might be very useful in the naval service?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We transfer to the Naval Department several services which are now in the Marine and Fisheries Department. That is the only change.

Mr. SPROULE. But you have formed another department, and the officers of that department must be put under some classification, I assume. Will it not be necessary that that shall be done either under the Civil Service Act or by some provision in this Act?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, because they come under the same classification that they are under to-day. There is no change whatever except that instead of being in the Marine Department they will be in the Naval Department.

Mr. J. D. REID. I cannot see the object of transferring men from the Marine Department, as I take for granted that the staff there now are all required for the Marine Department.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is now the Fisheries Protective Service, which is a complete branch by itself. That branch as a whole is transferred to this new department. There is no change other than that.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then all the vessels called fisheries protective vessels will be in this naval service?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Including those on the upper lakes?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, everywhere.

Mr. J. D. REID. In case officials of the Militia Department knowing something about military work are required in this Naval Department, there is no method of transferring them. The Minister of Militia is not taking power in this Bill to give these officials a chance in this new service; he sits idly by and does not attempt to protect them. I think the militiamen should be looked after a little better. The Prime Minister is looking well after the Marine and Fisheries Department, and all the patronage has to go through that department. I think this is unfair to the militia, and they should understand that they are not getting a chance in this new department. The Prime Minister has not given me an answer to the question I asked this afternoon about the cost of the upkeep of the steamship 'Niobe.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is not half as badly off as I am, because there are about a dozen questions which I asked which have not yet been answered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am glad to be able to answer the question of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, and, perhaps, in so doing, I shall answer the question of my hon friend from Grenville also. With regard to the question about the drydocks, we have paid $10,000 for the Halifax drydock and have been paying for two years. The admiralty simply asked when we would take the Esquimalt drydock, and the reply was that it would be convenient to do so after the Navy Bill was passed and there would be money for its upkeep as a naval yard.

Mr. SPROULE. How many new officials is it anticipated will be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is anticipated—and provision will be made in the supplementary estimates for that purpose—the Navy Department will be composed as follows:

Office of	Deputy Head.	1-B.	2-A.	2-B.	3-A.	3-B.	Messengers.	Total.
Deputy Minister	1	..	..	1	1	1	..	4
Accountant	..	1	1	1	..	2	..	5
Director of Stores	..	1	1	1	..	1	..	4
Records and Correspondence.	..	..	1	2		2	..	5
Director of Gunnery	..	..	..	1	..	1	..	2
Chief of Staff	..	..	..	1	..	1	.	2
Naval Engineer	..	..	..	1	.	1	..	2
Director Naval Service	..	..	..	1	1	..	..	2
Messengers	..	..	..	..	..	..	2	2
	1	2	3	9	2	9	2	28

Mr. SPROULE. Will the Civil Service Act apply to these various classes in this new department without any amendment to the law or any provision in this Bill to bring them under it?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It will apply to these. Of course, several officers of special qualifications will be appointed. All the clerks, etc., will be appointed under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, that is, by competition.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Prime Minister has not answered my question with regard to the estimated cost of the upkeep of the steamship 'Niobe.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The approximate upkeep of the Niobe for one year is as follows: Cost of nucleus crew and training personnel, $267,000; victualling and medicine, $60,000; clothing gratuity, $15,000; upkeep, $140,000; total, $482,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. That includes fuel?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, that includes coal.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said the coal would cost over $700,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That shows how little confidence should be put in Mr. Taylor's estimates.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it means that the vessel is never going to get up steam.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the Bill be reported?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the Prime Minister has answered all the questions he was asked.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Have I not?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think perhaps the Prime Minister had better let the Bill stand in committee and look over 'Hansard.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think not. I will answer the questions of my hon. friend to-morrow morning.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very good that will answer. But the Prime Minister should look over 'Hansard" and answer on Thursday.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Chairman, we had reached the item for a public building at Fort William. The item is $1,500. This work is under way and we are asking for $1,500 towards the completion of the work. It will still leave about $1,000 to complete it.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to ask the hon. minister a question. I learn from the reply the hon. gentleman gave in answer to a question of mine regarding Winnipeg pier, that the contract has been let. Now, I am in receipt of a wire to-day asking me to ascertain whether the work is going to be pushed forward.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the works will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the minister when he intends to start building in Kemptville. The site, I think, was purchased.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no item in the estimates for Kemptville, but the matter is under consideration. Beyond that, I am not able to inform my hon. friend.

Gananoque post office addition—revote of $3,600 lapsed, $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make certain improvements to the public building which seem to be very much needed.

Goderich public building addition—revote of $4,960 lapsed, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for an annex to the public building, also for an alteration of the interior fittings of the post office as requested by the Post Office Department.

Mr. BLAIN. When was this building erected?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry I cannot give that information to my hon. friend just now. Unfortunately, though I have sent for the chief architect, he has not yet arrived.

Mr. BLAIN. It is of very recent construction.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Comparatively recent, Goderich is a growing place, business is increasing and these improvements are absolutely required by the Post Office Department. They were asked for as long ago as 1900.

Guelph armoury, $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to complete payments in connection with the erection of the armoury.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the total cost of that armoury?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I will have to give it in detail. The contract for the building was $80,000, and the total expenditure up to November 30, 1909, was $142,464.94.

Mr. J. D. REID. What was the original contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The original contract was $80,000, and then there was an additional storey erected costing $34,825. Then there was the electric wiring, $1,825; heating apparatus, $4,000; electric light fixtures, $885; and then there was an addition to the heating apparatus, $3,250; an addition to the electric wiring, $511; a contract for interior fittings, $3,300; and a payment for supervision of the architect, who got 2 per cent commission.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did the same contractor get the whole of these contracts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh no, not all. For the electric fixtures, MacPherson & Co. are the contractors.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much did the original contractors get out of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Their contract was for $80,000. The additional storey over the gun shed went to the same contractors and they had also the electric wiring $1,825, and the contract for the apparatus $4,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. What was the extra storey put up for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was put up for exercise and drilling purposes. The Militia Department seemed to think it necessary.

Mr. HUGHES. And for the officers, was it not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For the officers as well.

Mr. J. D. REID. What I cannot understand is this. The Militia Department first submitted a memorandum to the Department of Public Works stating that they wanted an armoury at Guelph, and the department gave them a plan of the building and let a contract for $80,000; and then a month or two afterwards, I suppose, they come along and say: 'We want another storey costing $34,000 or about half as much more money as was to be spent on this building as first estimated. Now, the Minister of Public Works at the time—I do not know whether it was the present minister or not—informed this House of the amount it was intended to spend on this building and the members here, and the public took it for granted that the statements made by the minister as to the amount in the estimates was absolutely correct. But, instead of that, every year the expenditure on the building is from fifty to one hundred per cent more than that stated in the information given.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building of the additional storey over the gun shed was not contemplated when the original contract was entered into. I hesitated for a good while, but I was pressed very strongly to put on this additional storey, and, after getting all the information we could, it seemed as if it was the reasonable thing to do.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who pressed the minister to put on the extra storey?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was pressed most strongly by the member for the constituency. He represented that there was a very strong feeling among the people that we should do this.

Mr. J. D. REID. But, merely because the member for the constituency asked for it, that is hardly a reason for adding almost fifty per cent to the expenditure. Here was a building being erected at the request of the Militia Department. A contract is entered into for $80,000. Then, an additional storey is put on simply because the hon. member representing the constituency asked for it, though the cost was almost half the original contract and though the Militia Department has not requested the change. The Militia Department was to use this building, and the Minister of Public Works would have been justified in refusing the request of the member for the constituency until the Militia Department requested a change. I think the minister is open to censure for failing in this way to recognize the Militia Department.

Mr. BLAIN. At page V-79 of the Auditor General's Report, I find, under the title 'Guelph Armoury' this entry:—

Clerk of works, W. A. Mahony, services, 2 per cent commission on accounts examined.

I do not recollect any case of a clerk of works being paid by a commission on the accounts he passes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Sometimes architects are employed to supervise construction and they are paid a percentage.

Mr. BLAIN But he was clerk of works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is an architect. That is why he was paid a commission. It is the usual way where architects are employed.

Mr. BLAIN. I have been a rather close student of the Auditor General's Report, and it strikes we that this is rather a new departure. I understood that the clerk of works had a daily remuneration for the number of days he was at work. Among the accounts passed by Mr. Mahony, I notice, that of Taylor-Forbes Co., putting in two boilers. This gentleman examined these accounts and is paid a percentage.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not for examining the accounts, but for supervising the construction of the building, which, of course, involves the certifying of the accounts.

Mr. BLAIN. I see it stated also that Mr. Mahony is charged with:

Five per cent commission on accounts for plans and superintendence.

I feel confident that this is a new departure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In some instances architects have been employed to prepare plans and superintend, and I think 5 per cent is the usual fee given to these architects.

Mr. BLAIN. Did this clerk of works prepare the plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not sure of that. But the amount paid him is not large, though he was paid 2 per cent on the accounts—

Mr. SPROULE. Did not he get 5 per cent on any plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hon. members will see that the total paid him is only $1,254.57, while 5 per cent on the total cost would have amounted to something in the vicinity of something like $7,000.

Mr. BLAIN. But he was paid some in a former year. This item says 'less paid in 1905-6.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to give my hon. friend information on the point he has raised. If he will be good enough to let me do it later, I shall be glad to get the exact amount paid to Mr. Mahony and also the basis on which he was paid?

Mr. J. D. REID. Let the item stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would be quite willing unless it were thought desirable to close up the Ontario list of buildings if we could. However, I have no objection one way or the other.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the minister state that Mr. Mahony prepared the plans for this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to state that to-night.

Mr. BLAIN. Is not that a new departure? to pay a percentage to a clerk of works for examining the accounts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The percentage is not paid for examining the accounts.

Mr. BLAIN. It says here, 'commission on accounts examined.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would be on the amount of the accounts. But it would mean that the supervising architect also supervised the work to which these accounts appertain. He would then be allowed his commission of 2 per cent on the expenditure.

Mr. BLAIN. Is not that a new departure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In some cases, a supervising architect is employed. When 5 per cent is paid, he draws the plans and supervises the construction of the building. It may be that in this case—I have not the information with me to-night—Mr. Mahony drew the plans and was supervising architect. That is not often done. Ordinarily the plans are prepared in the department.

Mr. BLAIN. Surely the minister does not say that the clerk of works prepared the plans for this building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Mahony is stated to be the supervising architect, therefore he is not clerk of works in the ordinary sense.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see a difference between a supervising architect and a clerk of works. You pass the plans over to the clerk of works, and he is a supervising architect, he must be enough of an architect to understand the plans and see that the structure is put up according to those plans. To a clerk of works the usual price paid is about $3 a day. But you commence to give him a percentage. Architects charge from two to five per cent, but in the latter case they drew all the plans, and also supervise the erection of the building. I do not remember seeing or hearing of a case of this kind in the Public Works Department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend may perhaps call to mind that during the session of two years ago there were one or two cases where outside architects had been employed to draw plans, there was some discussion over it, and some hon. members, I remember particularly Mr. Fowler, took the ground that outside architects should not be employed. The defence which I made was that at that time, there was a good deal of pressure upon the department in connection with public buildings a large number of which were under way, and I think in two instances outside architects were employed. In those cases they were employed upon these terms, that for preparing the plans and specifications, and supervising the work of construction, they were allowed five per cent. But I am not able to say at this moment, without the chief architect being here, whether these plans were prepared by Mr. Mahony or not.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it would be better to leave this item until you get the information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL. Did this man receive any other money for his services besides the two per cent, or did he receive pay as clerk of works and the two per cent extra?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Any percentage would cover his entire fee.

Harriston—public building—revote of $2,980 lapsed, $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know why these are called revotes. I think he ought to give us the year that this money was voted originally, and also some information as to why the money was not spent. On this one page alone there are no less than fourteen revotes. That is a new way of presenting them to the House. No doubt there is a purpose in it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will look at page 58 of the estimates he will see there is a column for revotes. In that column the only amounts which are contained are those in respect of which there were votes at the last session of parliament. The other items are simply put there in order to inform the committee that there had at some time been a vote for this specific public work which had been allowed to lapse. These amounts were voted in the session of 1908, and they were not used. The object of putting them in is to inform the committee that there had been at a previous session of parliament a vote for this specific public work which had not been used. This public building at Harriston is required for a post office and customs house. We have paid for the site to the town of Harriston $2,556, to Matthew Hastey, $450, and other travelling expenses, $18.45, making $3,018.45. The appropriation which we had during that session was $5,000. Deducting that from the appropriation leaves $1,981.55. There must be a misprint here as to the amount which lapsed, it should be $1,981.55.

Mr. SPROULE. All these revotes were voted in one year, and lapsed. That confirms what I have often said when the estimates were being voted. That year I asked if it was seriously intended to go on with all these public works that year, and I was assured it was. I wanted to know if it was not intended to pad out the estimates preparatory to a general election, and if it was seriously intended that these public works would all be commenced that year. The very fact that we have so many of them on one sheet, all revotes, all for the same year, and now revived, rather seems to me to indicate that the government have possibly another general election in view. I would like to ask again if it is seriously intended that these votes shall be used the present year. It seems to me the system we are confronted with this year in the estimates indicates that we are padding out the list again, we are padding out the estimates again with many revotes that should not appear in them at all. There is no justification whatever for putting a vote in the estimates for any public work that is not intended to be gone on with during the present year, and I can hardly imagine that many of these will be taken up, because they are new works, during the present year. Although the money was voted in 1908 none of it has been spent up to the present time, but now it is intended to vote it again for 1910. I think that is a pernicious principle. If that is going to be the rule in future, why do you not give us the votes that lapsed twenty years ago as well as two, four, or five years, because there are many cases in which we have not spent the amount that has been voted? Why do you take up the votes that lapsed in 1908, and bring them into force while the votes passed in 1905 or 1906 do not appear at all? There is some purpose behind it, and the only purpose I can see is to provide for the possibility of a general election. It is a pernicious practice and should not be allowed, and we ought to have some better explanation of why it has been thought proper to change the established form that we have had heretofore and bring these votes in again. The money voted last year and not spent should appear in the revote column. All the money not spent goes back into the consolidated revenue fund, and should remain there until voted again.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As my hon. friend has such a strong view upon this question I would have supposed that he would have expressed himself as being against the first item that we reached, and which was exactly similar to this. It was the item for Gananoque and when it was called my hon. friend called 'carried' at once.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member did not open his mouth in regard to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a revote of $3,600, exactly the same as in this case. We took this amount in the session of 1908, but it was not expended. We are now asking for $4,000, and for the information of the committee we show that $3,600 is the amount which has lapsed. I will say to my hon. friend, and I am sure it will be very consoling for him, that as far as I am aware there is no danger of a general election in the near future. I have never heard anything of the kind, and my hon. friend need not be alarmed upon this subject at all.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a very innocent consolation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no doubt that it is a consoling thought to my hon. friend because I would expect that he would contemplate a general election with a good deal of fear and trembling.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the very reverse.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In Harriston it is bona fide intended to go on with this work and we have placed this amount in the estimates for the present year. The reason that this building was not gone on with last year was that we used the small vote which we got for the purpose of purchasing a site. It was expected that at the last session we would ask for a larger amount to go on with the building, but in view of the declining revenues we asked the House to bear with us for another year and assist us in economizing. We did succeed in cutting down the estimates of the Public Works Department several millions of dollars, but in order to do it we had to let these public works stand over. Now that the revenues are reviving we have thought it only right that we should implement the assurances which were given to the House in 1908 when we asked for votes for these different public works. We intend to proceed with them during the present year.

Mr. SPROULE. At the time the estimates for the year were made up the revenue was showing a perceptible decline, it could have been as well foreseen when the estimates were made up, and if the desire was to economize these votes could have been kept out as well as put in. Therefore, that is not a good argument. The minister says that I did not object to the vote for Gananoque. It was called so quickly that I did not know what the estimate was, and it was declared carried immediately. Some one said 'carried', but it was not I. I have brought this matter up twice before, and I have got no satisfactory answer. This was never done without being first considered by some of the cabinet ministers. Estimates should never be voted in that way without being considered, and a conclusion arrived at as to whether it is wise to do that. I do not think a reasonable explanation has yet been given why this practice has been adopted. I think the explanation is that these estimates were padded out in anticipation of a general election, and that it was not intended at that time to commence any of these public works. No one can reach any other conclusion that that. If a public work is not needed a vote for it should not be put in the estimates. If it is needed then the money, or a portion of it, should be spent, and the work commenced, and it would save a great deal of trouble and time in the House asking questions if money was not placed in the estimates that it was never intended to expend.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In this case we actually bought the land, which is pretty good evidence of our bona fides.

Mr. SPROULE. That is so much to the good, and shows evidence of a desire to go on. What are these public buildings in Harriston?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building is for post office and customs purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. From whom was the site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The larger portion of the site was purchased from the town of Harriston, and a small piece of land from Mr. Matthew Hastey, to whom we paid $450. We paid the town $2,550.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the total price of the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site, including $18.45 travelling expenses, cost $3,018.45.

Mr. SPROULE. How much land have you bought?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Approximately 80 feet 6 inches on Elora street, and 77 feet on Maitland street.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the size of Harriston?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1901 the population was 1,637; postal revenue, $4,168.86; customs duties, $29.06; money orders $8,738.47; money orders paid, $16,356.51.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you an outport of customs there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It must be one.

Mr. SPROULE. And the collections are only $29 a year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is very small; it is an outport of Guelph.

Mr. SPROULE. In my hon. friend's riding there is a revenue of thousands of dollars, but no outport.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He hopes to get it.

Mr. SPROULE. That hope is not shared by the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think there is a great deal to be said in favour of it.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this building to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We will endeavour to keep the cost down to $15,000 or $16,000 for the building completed and furnished, not including the land.

Kincardine—public building, $4,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This building is nearly completed. The total cost is estimated at $29,600.

Mr. BLAIN. What qualifications has Angus Kerr, clerk of this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We do not appoint any man inspector of public buildings unless he is experienced and thoroughly competent for the work.

Mr. TOLMIE. Mr. Kerr is a first-class carpenter.

Mr. BLAIN. Was it upon my hon. friend's recommendation he was appointed?

Mr. TOLMIE. Certainly.

Mr. GOODEVE. The clerk of works on the Guelph armoury was paid a commission of two per cent, and on this building I see the clerk was paid $3.50 a day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the clerk of works is an architect we allow him the usual two per cent commission.

Mr. SPROULE. Who made application for this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was urged very strongly by the hon. member who represents the constituency, and the interest the town took in it is shown by their giving a site free of cost. It is required for post office and customs and examining warehouse purposes.

Mr. GOODEVE. The clerk of the works who is not an architect receives much more than the architect, he gets about ten per cent. You are paying him five times what you pay an expert architect to supervise the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course the architect gets his commission no matter whether it takes a long or a short time to erect the building, while a clerk of works is paid by the day.

Mr. SPROULE. I could understand the locality and the men applying for a building, and I do not see anything wrong in either, but I do think that where a building is intended for the use of any department there should be a request from that department, because they know better than any one else the need for a building in a particular locality and whether it is possible to secure a suitable building for the purpose.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Militia Department always does apply.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total amount paid to the architect and the clerk of works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing was paid to the architect; the plans were prepared by the chief architect. I have not the amount paid to the clerk of works, but I can get that if my hon. friend desires it.

Kingston post office—addition to building and alterations, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for the construction of two stories addition to the Kingston post office building, and also alterations in the interior fittings, &c. This is asked for by the Post Office Department.

Mr. EDWARDS. Can the minister inform us when he expects to commence that work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans and specifications will be prepared and tenders called for early in the coming season. I think I can assure my hon. friend that the work will be started early in the coming season.

Kingston Royal Military College—improvements, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision towards the erecting on the college grounds of a covered skating rink and drill hall combined, for use in wet weather and in the winter time. The proposed building is to be 235 feet long by 120 feet wide. This is asked for by the Militia Department.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to know the object of tearing down the stone cottages formerly occupied by the servants of the Military College. Is it intended to build on that site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This rests entirely with the Militia Department, and I am not able to give the information; but, if my hon. friend desires it, I will get it from the Minister of Militia.

Mr. EDWARDS. The reason I ask is that it occurred to me and some others that those buildings might, with a very small expenditure, be made use of for ordnance stores, to take the place of the building you are renting in Kingston, and will be for the next five years at, I believe, $1,000 a year, and I doubt if the building itself cost more than $10,000 or as much when first erected. Is it the intention of the government to erect a building in Kingston to take the place of the one they are renting?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware of its being the intention. That is a matter that would rest with the Militia Department.

Leamington—public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for the completion of a public building which is now under construction. The total estimated cost is $32,278.49, including the site, heating, electric wiring, fittings, furniture, lock boxes, &c.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister before him a list of the newspapers in which the advertisement asking for tenders for this building was inserted?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I am sorry to say, I have not, but I shall be glad to get it for my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. I ask for that because I see that the hon. gentleman paid $362 for advertising for tenders for this small building.

Listowel—public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for the erection of a building for post office and customs purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. On whose recommendation was this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has been urged very strongly by Dr. Rankin, the present member, and Mr. Hay. The site has been bought, consisting of lots 1, 2 and 3 on the corner of Main and Dodd streets.

Mr. BLAIN. On whose recommendation was the site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not sure, but our custom is to send an expert from the department to select a site, and I have no reason to suppose that was not done in this instance.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is the minister able to tell me whether the building used for customs purposes in Kingston is a rented building or belongs to the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It belongs to the government.

Mr. EDWARDS. The reason I ask is that in many of these places you are putting the post office and customs house in one building, and I thought that if the building used for customs purposes at Kingston were not owned by the government, it would be well to follow that rule there.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is the building at Listowel expected to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From $20,000 to $25,000 in addition to the site. The population in 1901 was 2,693.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the town supply the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, we bought the site.

Mitchell—public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This building is for post office and customs purposes. The lot fronts on two streets—on one 75 feet and on the other 105 feet.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this building to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This would cost about the same as the one in Listowel.

Mr. SPROULE. About $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. $20,000 to $25,000. In 1901, the population was nearly 2,000. It is a town which does quite a business. I see the postal revenue is upwards of $4,000; money orders issued, $22,549; money orders paid, $14,548. It is quite a prosperous town. There are five mills there and two banks.

Mr. SPROULE. You can find towns by the dozen quite as large.

Mr. RUSSELL. Did I understand the minister to say that the department was going to spend $25,000 on this building. I understood that he had decided to spend from $10,000 to $15,000 on these small towns.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was figuring upon a more expensive building for Mitchell, somewhere about $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Customs and post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there a customs outport there?

Mr PUGSLEY. There is a customs office there at present. It is the outport of Stratford.

Mr. SPROULE. What were the collections last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the customs revenue.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you pay the customs officer there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is paid by the Customs Department. I would not have that information. We rent a building for him at present as well as for the post office.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be some additional information to enable one to understand the importance of the place. Now, you mentioned a place where the total collection in the year was $26, and I take it that the customs officer would be paid $300 or $400 for collecting that $26. It seems to me to be unjustifiable to establish a place like that as an outport of customs, especially when you can find other places all over the country in large numbers where ten, fifteen or twenty times as much is collected, and where they have not the advantage of being outports of customs

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope the hon. member is not applying his remarks to Mitchell.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not talking of Mitchell. I was talking of a place mentioned by the minister where they collected only $26 a year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The fact that we have rented buildings there would be some evidence that in the opinion of the Minister of Customs it is desirable to have a customs officer. I find that the building now proposed was asked for by the town council, also by the board of trade, who impressed upon me very strongly the inadequacy of the accommodation afforded to the public by the building at present used for the post office and customs office. The building occupied was, it was alleged, unsuitable, and the upper room for the customs house was also unsuitable. The London post office inspector visited the place and made a report to the conclusion that a public building was regarded by the people and also by him as very necessary in the public interest.

Mr. FIELDING. A comparison between the amount collected and the salary of the collector is apt to be misleading. There are points where it is necessary in the public interest to keep customs officers, though you would not collect a penny. So the mere fact that a small amount is collected and a considerable sum is spent in collection, would not necessarily convey the impression that the appointment of a customs officer is a mistake. I am not applying that to this particular case, but generally. There are points where it is necessary to keep a customs officer for the protection of revenue and he may collect very little.

Mr. SPROULE. I would think that these points are on the frontier. They would not be ordinary villages in the country that are not on any lines of navigation or on any of the main lines of railways carrying trade from one country to another. Now, I am not objecting to the establishment of a customs house at Mitchell if it is needed—but I do think it is quite indefensible in a small place like that cited here within the last half hour, to establish an outport of customs where only $26 is collected in the whole year.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mitchell is in the riding I represent, and as there appears to be some ignorance as to the position of Mitchell, and as to the necessity for a collector of customs, I may say that the town has been for a long time considered worthy of a collector of customs. The present collector, Mr. Cull, was appointed about 20 years ago, so that for a long time back, Mitchell has been considered worthy of having a customs outport.

Mr. HUGHES. It is a good little town.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes, it is a good town. Its population does not increase very rapidly, but like other towns in Ontario, it is improving steadily. I cannot give you what the customs collection is, but I should think it is considerably more than the salary that is paid to the officer, and that I think would be $700 or $800, for he has been a long time in the service. While other towns may have very strong claims, it certainly has strong claims to better post office and customs accommodation than it has. The post office was in one of the shops in the main street and was very small and cramped and poor in quality. There appeared to be no particular site in the town where a better building could be obtained, but the town council and the Board of Trade urged that the requirements were such that a better building should be supplied, and they offered at a small cost a portion of the main square on which their market hall stood. The arrangement was made in that way, the town moving their town hall to one side and giving for a small price the most important position in the town for the post office. That is the condition of affairs there, and with regard to the recommendation, I may tell my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) that the movement was entirely a local movement in Mitchell, the Board of Trade first initiating it and the town council following it up. At a later period, I was applied to to urge upon the Public Works Department the needs and requirements of Mitchell. I informed the minister pretty much in the terms I have just stated of the requirements, and I still think that the town should get what the Public Works Department is now proposing to give.

Mr. HUGHES. It is a good little town.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be a good little town. I am not objecting to that at all, nor am I objecting to the expenditure. I know something about the town, but take for the purpose of comparison such towns as Georgetown, Bronte, Shelbourne, Dundalk. These are towns of about similar size, doing quite as much business as Mitchell, but there is no information about these being supplied with a customs house, nor are they made ports of customs. The complaint I have is that, while, in many places of considerable inportance where collections are made of thousands of dollars, the place is left without an outport of customs, in other places where, not so much money is collected, there is a customs branch and a public building. I am not complaining that there should be a building at Mitchell, but asking for information as to that place. I had reference more particularly to the case we had under consideration a short time before where the collections were only $26. There is another feature of it to which the member for the constituency drew attention which, to my mind, is a much better justification for putting up this building. I have always contended that, where you could get a suitable building to rent at an amount less than would pay the interest on the money necessary to put up a public building, you were not justified in making the expenditure necessary for a public work. But this, I understand, is not the case in Mitchell; a suitable place is not to be had for rent. That would be a strong reason for the construction of a building.

Mount Forest—public building—revote of $1,330 lapsed, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In this case the site has been purchased. The building is for customs and post office purposes. The amount of postal revenue is $4,873; money orders issued $19,751, paid $26,593. It is urged strongly that the present accommodation is very insufficient.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought they had a post office there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, a very poor building. Accommodation for the public is only 19 by 14 feet.

Mr. BLAIN. In what county is this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In Wellington North. Mount Forest is a thriving manufacturing town.

Mr. BLAIN. What will the building cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About the same as the one at Mitchell—$20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. It is urged by the sitting member, I suppose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and he presented requests from the Board of Trade and the municipal council.

Mr. BLAIN. I was wondering what the hon. minister was doing for ridings represented by the opposition. Could he give us a list of buildings in Ontario erected in such counties?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman will look over the list, he can judge as well as I. I might remind him of Toronto with its public buildings, harbour improvements and so on. Then there is Uxbridge; who represents the county in which Uxbridge is situated?

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister will know. I have not noticed many in the list. I assume that the minister finds us rather indifferent in pressing our claims and would like us to press them more vigorously before giving us these public works. I will not urge it now, but I hope that at some future time the minister will give us a list of the counties represented on this side of the House in which he is constructing post offices.

Mr. HUGHES. In the absence of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) I may call the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) to the fact that a monument to Samuel de Champlain was promised to Fenelon Falls some years ago.

Niagara Falls—armoury—revote of $10,000 lapsed, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The city has offered to provide the site for this building.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this building to cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not yet received the sketch plans from the Militia Department. Niagara Falls is an important place.

Mr. SPROULE. This seems a rather loose way to ask the House to vote money. We do not know whether we are committing ourselves to an expenditure of half a million or twenty thousand. Before estimates are submitted, one would think, data would be furnished to the minister which he would present to council. If this were before us, we would know to what we are committing the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The expectation of our department is that the cost will not exceed the amount we are here asking for, $50,000. But we have not yet received the plans from the Militia Department. It may be that they will ask for something involving a larger expenditure than this, in which case it will be a matter of negotiation between us.

Mr. EDWARDS. Would it not be better to leave these militia items until the Minister of Militia is here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. The third reading of the Naval Bill, the third reading of the Civil Service Bill, and immediately after that a motion will be made for Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 20, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS CANAL AND CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.

Mr. GUTHRIE moved that Bill (No. 119) to incorporate the International Waterways Canal and Construction Company be withdrawn, and that the fees paid thereon be refunded less the cost of printing and translation, in accordance with rule.

Mr. SPROULE. While I do not rise to oppose this motion, I think it would be a proper thing to do to penalize the parties who had the Bill in charge for bringing such a Bill before the House. It is only one of a number that has taken up a lot of valuable time in this and previous sessions, and if these parties are going to exploit these things, bring in Bills of this kind, keep the House from week to week spending a great deal of time in protecting the interests of the country and then make application to have the fees refunded, they should be punished by not receiving a cent.

Motion agreed to, and Bill withdrawn.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 211) to incorporate the Pioneers Loan Company.—Mr. Turriff.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 212) to amend the Government Annuities Act of 1908. He said: This is to correct an error in the recent proceedings of the House in connection with a measure dealing with this subject. We had before us a Bill from the Senate to which this House in Committee of the Whole made an amendment, striking out a certain clause in the old law which had become unnecessary. By some error the Bill stands recorded as having been reported by the Committee of the Whole without amendment. The consequence is that an amendment which the Senate intended to make, but which they overlooked, and which this House intended to make, by some error has not been made, and now requires to be dealt with. The effect of the Bill now introduced is simply to repeal the section of the old law, as was intended and explained to the committee when we had the other Bill before us.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

PROTECTION OF QUEBEC AND ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

Mr. J. P. TURCOTTE:

1. How many war vessels went up the St. Lawrence river to Quebec in the summer of 1908?

2. What was the tonnage and the draught of water of each of these vessels?

3. To what nation did each of these belong?

4. How many war vessels were anchored at the same time in the roadstead of Quebec in 1908?

5. How many of these war vessels went up to Montreal?

6. How many of these war vessels, by reason of their draught of water, were unable to go up to Montreal?

7. What war vessels, by reason of their draught of water, were obstructed in their navigation between the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Quebec?

8. What effective means did the Canadian government provide in 1908 to prevent these war vessels, or one of them, from going up the River St. Lawrence to Quebec under a hostile flag?

9. What effective means did the Canadian government provide in 1908 to prevent these war vessels, or one of them, from making descents upon each of the parishes situated on both sides of the River St. Lawrence, from the Gulf up to Quebec, and taking possession of every part of the country?

10. What effective means did the Canadian government provide in 1908 to prevent these war vessels from seizing upon Quebec?

11. Was the city of Quebec fortified so as to sustain a seige in 1908?

12. Could the city of Quebec at the present time prevent a hostile fleet from seizing its citadel; and what were the effective means it provided then to organize its defence?

13. In case one of the larger war vessels which visited Quebec in 1908 had met with a serious accident, could the Canadian government place at its disposal in the port of Quebec or in any place whatever on the River St. Lawrence, a dry dock or a maritime workshop for the necessary repairs?

14. What rank did the city of Quebec occupy in 1908 as a stronghold?

15. Is the Canadian government more prepared in 1910 than it was in 1908 to defend Quebec from the possible invasion of an army by way of the St. Lawrence, and in what do these defence works consist, made since 1908?

16. What measures does the Canadian government intend to take for the purpose of protecting Quebec against the sudden attack of an army by way of the St. Lawrence, and to provide for the repairs of the largest vessels which frequent the St. Lawrence?

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY:

1. Eleven warships anchored in the harbour during the season of 1908.

2. Tonnage and draught of water: 1. 'Indomitable,' 17,250 tons, 28·8 feet draught. 2. 'Monitaur,' 14,600 tons, 28·7 feet draught. 3. 'Arrogant,' 5,750 tons 22·2 feet draught. 4. 'Exmouth' 14,000 tons, 27·10 feet draught. 5. 'Albemarle,' 14,000 tons, 27·6 feet draught. 6. 'Russell,' 14,000 tons, 26.10 feet draught. 7. 'Duncan,' 14,000 tons, 28·3 feet draught. 8. 'Venus,' 5,600 tons 23·6 feet draught. 9. 'Leon Gambetta,' 15,400 tons, 28 feet draught. 10, 'Admiral Aube,' 14,000 tons, 27·1 feet draught. 11. 'New Hampshire,' 16,000 tons, 25·6 feet draught.

3. The first eight ships were British the two next were French, and the last was American.

4. Eleven warships were anchored in the harbour at the same time, also numerous Canadian and foreign steam and sailing yachts.

5. None of the warships went to Montreal.

6. The depth of water in the channel between Montreal and Quebec was sufficient to allow any of these war vessels to proceed to Montreal.

7. None.

13. No.

It is not in the public interest that questions 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15 and 16 should be answered.

CANADIAN INLAND MARINE.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO:

1. What was the total number of steam and other ships, respectively, of the Canadian inland marine at the end of the fiscal year, 1900?

2. What is the corresponding number and tonnage at the end of the fiscal year 1910, or for which the records are complete?

3. During the same period, what number, tonnage and kind of said inland marine was built in Great Britain, United States and Canada, respectively?

4. What dry docks in Canada have received government aid, or are entitled to or have applied for same, and what is the size and estimated cost of each dry dock and the amount of such aid or proposed aid?

5. Is it the intention of the government to ask for legislation or other authority to provide for an increase in the present statutory amount of such aid to any special dry docks, or to aid any ship-building company, and has any application been made therefor or negotiations in respect thereto? If so, what are the names of such applicants and the nature of the applications?

Mr. MURPHY :

1, 2 and 3. Canadian registered vessels are not entered specially for inland coast or foreign navigation, being free to ply on all these waters, and no special record is kept of vessels employed on inland navigation only.

4. The following dry docks have been built and are maintained by the government : Levis, P.Q.—Dimensions, 600 feet long, 73 feet wide at bottom; depth of water on sill, 26½ feet at high water spring tides. Cost: $987,773.51. Kingston, Ont.—Dimensions, 315 feet long, 70 feet wide at coping level and 20½ feet deep. Cost: $560,661.25. Esquimalt, B.C.—Dimensions, 480 feet long, 90 feet wide at coping level and 33½ feet deep. Cost: $1,172,920.86.

The following dry docks have received subsidies from the government : Halifax, N.S.—An annual subsidy of $10,000 for the twenty years which ended on September 30, 1909. Size of dock, 585 feet long, 89¼ feet wide and 30 feet deep. According to a statement prepared by the manager of the company, the value of the property, in 1902, was $1,912,938. Collingwood, Ont.—An annual subsidy of $15,000 for the twenty years which commenced on November 16, 1903. Size of dock: length over all, 530 feet; width at coping level, 78 feet; depth on sill at ordinary water, 16½ feet. Estimated cost: $500,000.

The following companies are entitled to a subsidy of 3 per cent on the amount determined upon before subsidy agreement entered into: The Vancouver Dry Dock and Ship-building Company: (Floating dock). Size of dock, length over all, 486 feet; width of entrance at keel blocks level, 66 feet. Estimated cost: $1,077,394,01. Under construction. The Western Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company, Port Arthur, Ont. Size of dock, 700 feet long, 85 feet wide at bottom and 15 feet deep over the keel blocks. Estimated cost, $1,258,050. Construction commenced.

The following companies have also asked for government aid, and their applications are being considered : The Sault Ste. Marie Dry Dock and Ship-building Company. Annual subsidy of 3 per cent on total cost. Size of dock, 620 feet long; width of entrance, 62 feet at bottom, 67 feet at top; 18½ feet deep from normal water level to sill. Estimated cost, as represented by the applicants : $772,510.80. The Canadian Shipbuilding Company, Niagara river. Annual subsidy of 3 per cent total cost. Size of dock, length on floor line 645 feet; width 80 feet; depth 14½ feet on keel blocks. Estimated cost, $860,000. New plans to be submitted. The Collingwood Ship-building Company, Dry Dock No. 2. Annual subsidy of 3 per cent on total cost. Size of dock 420 feet long, 105 feet wide at coping level, and 16 feet deep on sill at low water. Estimated cost, as represented by the applicants : $370,094. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, floating dock at Prince Rupert, B.C. Annual subsidy of 4 per cent on total cost. Size of dock, 500 feet long, 100 feet wide. Estimated cost, as represented by the company, $2,000,000. The Thunder Bay Dry Dock and Ship-building Company, and the National Dry Dock and Ship-building Company, (Montreal) have also applied, but have not filed any plans nor estimates.

5. (a) Yes. (b) An application has been received from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, for a subsidy of 4 per cent of the total cost of their proposed floating dock at Prince Rupert, B.C.

NEW WESTMINSTER PENITENTIARY FISH CONTRACT.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR :

1. Has a contract been made for a supply of fish to New Westminster penitentiary for 1910-11? If so, to whom and at what prices?

2. Were tenders asked for? If so, to whom were they addressed, was any date fixed for their receipt and by whom were the tenders opened?

Mr. MURPHY :

1. The contract has been awarded by the acceptance of the lowest tender, but the department has not yet been notified that the contract is actually executed, and in these circumstances it is not in the public interest to announce at present the name of the firm or the prices involved.

2. On February 20, quotations were asked, by the purchasing agent, from : Royal City Fish Company, St. Mungo Canning Company, Bensing & Ayling, Fraser Fish Company, M. Monk & Company, and British Columbia Packers Association, all of New Westminster. No exact date was fixed for their receipt. The quotations were addressed to the purchasing agent, Montreal, and opened by him on March 23, 1910.

PAYMENTS TO L. F. CLARRY.

Mr. LENNOX :

Has L. F. Clarry, lately of Hastings, been paid for his services as agent or solicitor of the Department of Justice in connection with the investigating titles to lands alleged to be flooded or drowned in the townships of Alnwick, Percy and Asphodel, and in the village of Hastings? If so, when and what amount?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM :

Nothing has yet been paid Mr. L. F. Clarry by this department in this connection.

THE PILOTS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. DELISLE:

1. What amount did the Association of Pilots at Montreal have on hand in 1904, when it fell under the control of the government?
2. What has been the annual receipts and expenses since?
3. What amount is on hand to the credit of the association?

OBSCENE LITERATURE.

Mr. BOYCE:

1. Were any books or publications addressed to Messrs. King & Skill, of Toronto, or to the Toronto Antiquarian Book Company, detained by the Post Office Department on the ground of being obscene and an infringement of the Postal Act?
2. If so, when did such detention occur, who were the senders, what were the books, and the names of their authors?
3. What action, if any, was taken by the department with reference to the matter, and was there any ruling of the department with reference to the nature of the literature? If so, what was it?
4. Did the department confiscate the books and did it direct or request any prosecution with reference to the matter? If so, with what result?
5. Will the Postmaster General lay on the table all the papers relating to the investigation?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX:

1, 2, 3 and 4. The records of the Toronto post office indicate that a number of books posted at Paris, France, addressed to the Antiquarian Book Company, 5 Jordan street, Toronto, which had been transferred to the customs for examination, &c., were returned by the customs officer with an intimation that they were considered obscene. They were consequently forwarded to the superintendent of the chief Dead Letter Office, Ottawa, in special dead returns as follows:

June 8, 1907—4 books. 'Fair and Gallant Ladies,' vols, 1 and 2. 'Morbid Manifestations,' vols. 1 and 2.

June 19, 1907—1 copy of 'Aphrodite,' 1 copy of 'Morbid Manifestations,' 1 copy of 'Chastisement of Monsour.'

July 2nd, 1907—2 copies of 'Weird Women, vols. 1 and 2.

July 13th, 1907—'Fair and Gallant Ladies,' vol. 2.

These books were returned to the French post office as non-transmissible through the Canadian mails. The department subsequently received a comunication from the Post Office Department, Washington, transmitting two special reports of Inspector Anthony Comstock, together with a circular mailed by the Toronto Antiquarian Book Company, advertising alleged obscene books. This correspondence was referred to the Post Office Inspector at Toronto, who submitted the case to the Crown Attorney, by whom information was laid against Messrs. S. J. Skill and J. E. King, managers of the Toronto Antiquarian Book Company, which resulted in their conviction before His Honour Judge Winchester, on the 3rd January last.

5. Yes.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAYS.

Mr. FRASER:

1. Was a survey for a branch line of railway made in the autumn of 1908, from Montague, in Kings county, P.E.I., to a point or points on Murray Harbour railway in Queens county?
2. Has the report of the engineers been received by the Railway Department?
3. If so, will it be included in the return asked for by one of the members for Queens, P.E.I., respecting the engineer's report of the survey of the New London branch lines, surveyed also in the autumn of 1908, and previously?
4. If not therein included, would the minister give the result of the survey, favourable or otherwise?
5. How many trial lines were surveyed?
6. Does the government intend to proceed with the construction of these lines or any of them? If so, which of them, and when?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. No, not in that return.
4. Plans and estimates were laid on the table of the House in return of March 7 last.
5. Two, one direct and one by via Kinross.
6. Branch line construction is engaging the attention of the government.

I may say in addition that I think all the information asked for in this question was laid on the table in the shape of a return; but lest it should not have been, I have asked my department to give the hon. gentleman a copy.

THE GOVERNMENT RAILWAY BOARD.

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Does the government intend to increase the number of members on the board of control of the Intercolonial? If so, when will the government do so?

2. Does the government intend to give the province of Quebec a representative on the said commission?

Mr. GRAHAM. I announced on a previous occasion in this House that it was the intention of the government to appoint an additional member to the board of management of the government railways. That additional member will be from the province of Quebc, through which a large portion of the Intercolonial runs.

LORD KITCHENER.

Mr. CURRIE:

1. Is the government aware that Lord Kitchener, a distinguished soldier of the empire, late Commander in Chief in India, on his way from Australia to Great Britain, passed through the United States avoiding Canada and the All-red route, the importance of which from an imperial strategical standpoint, it should have been his duty to examine?

2. Is there any official reason why Lord Kitchener did not visit Canada in his travels?

3. Did the government of Canada, or the Department of Militia and Defence extend an invitation to this distinguished soldier to visit Canada? If not, why not?

4. Did any correspondence, official or unofficial, pass between the imperial authorities and the government or any department or official of this government relative to a proposed visit by Lord Kitchener? If so, when and what was the nature of the correspondence?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. The government has no more information on this subject than what has been detailed in the press and what my hon. friend has himself.

2. There is no official reason why Lord Kitchener did not visit Canada.

3. The government of Canada did not advise Lord Kitchener to visit Canada. It did not occur to the government that it was opportune to do so

4. There is no correspondence on this subject.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING presented a message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates for the year ending March 31, 1911.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, His Excellency's message, together with his Estimates were referred to the Committee of Supply.

WARSHIPS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. BOYCE. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the report is correct that there has been a ruling by the United States government that the construction of any part of the proposed Canadian navy or any warship on the great lakes would be an infringement of the Rush-Bagot treaty, an whether he has been officially informed of that ruling?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Neither officially nor otherwise.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to refer to a notice of motion which is on the order paper with reference to the reclassification of the staff of the House of Commons. When that question comes up for discussion in the House, I would like the Prime Minister to have the opinion of the Department of Justice as to the legality of the proposed schedule, also an official report from the Civil Service Commission, and also from the deputy Minister of Justice, and such other papers bearing on the subject that we will be able to discuss this subject intelligently. I know the right hon. gentleman does not wish to do anybody any injustice.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—ST. PETER'S INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to a question of privilege. A few evenings ago, when I had the honour of addressing the House on the surrender of St. Peter's Reserve, I stated that an account had been rendered by one E. Rayner, who claimed that his work was to have cost something like $500, and when the account was rendered to the Department of Indian Affairs, the department refused to pay it. I pointed out that this money had been paid, and I suggested that the extra land that had been given to the chief and councillors had been used for that purpose. This was the only part of the serious charges which I brought before the House against the department that the hon. Minister of the Interior, in his three hours speech replying to me, attempted to refute. In that attempt he denied the accuracy of my statement in regard to the extra land which the chief and the councillors had received, and in doing so quoted what I understood him to say were the official figures from his department, and he asked the House to accept them rather than the statement made by myself. The facts, Mr. Speaker, which I intend to lay before the House are shown by a sworn return of J. O. Lewis, an Indian agent at Selkirk, which I have here of the payments to the Indians of the $5,000 which the deputy superintendent general of Indian Affairs, Mr. Pedley, had promised them if they voted for the surrender. This return gives the names of each man of the band and the number of his children and the amounts the different Indians received of this $5,000. So that there can be no doubt that each family was fully represented under the head of such family, and the head of such families was there to make the family look as large and numerous as possible, so that his share of the $5,000 would be as great as possible. This I am sure will not be questioned by any hon. member of this House. Then Mr. Speaker, this pay roll which I hold in my hand shows beyond any doubt the number of children each councillor and the chief had. I will now read to the House the headings under which the members of the family are accounted for. I will also read the declaration attached to this pay roll. I have, Mr. Speaker, in my hands the pay roll for the distribution of the $5,000 that Mr. Pedley took to St. Peter's Indian reserve and distributed among the Indians after they agreed to the surrender and it is headed in this way:

Treaty No. 1. St. Peter's Band, paid at St. Peter's Reserve, September 23, 1907. Land Fund.

The different headings follow. It is made out in regular form showing how many men, women and children there were. It starts with men, women, boys, girls, males and females. We will take just one of these men in question. We will take the chief, Wm. Prince. According to this sworn return we find that he had just himself and his wife. He received $18.60 out of that fund. That money was paid by Mr. Pedley himself according to the book. Wm. Henry Prince according to this sworn return had two of a family, and got $14.60 and that was paid by Mr. Pedley. Each of the councillors received their money directly from the hands of Mr. Pedley. Now what I rose in my place this morning to correct was the statement made by the hon. minister denying my statement that the chief and the councillors had received more lands than they were legally entitled to under the surrender. The hon. gentleman denied that fact and he says, and I am quoting from 'Hansard' of the 14th:

My hon. friend explained that Mr. Rayner had got back the extra money that he had paid to the Indians, because the chiefs had got a certain proportion more land than they were entitled to under the terms of the surrender. That is to say that Chief William Prince got 20 acres more, and the several councillors a certain number of acres more, in the neighbourhood of 20 apiece over and above what the terms of surrender called for. Chief Wiliam Prince was entitled to 212 acres by reason of his extra allowance as chief, and by reason of the number of members in his family, and he received actually 215.53, that is 3½ acres more than his allowance. Councillor Harper was entitled to 232 acres, and he got 233·16. Councillor James was entitled to 200 acres, and he got 206·88. Councillor Henry Prince was entitled to 168 acres, and he got 172·50. John Prince was entitled to 136 acres, and he got 136 acres. The explanation is that in the laying out of the lands when the survey was made, the lots ran into one or two acres more than the allowance called for, and the block was allowed to go as it was surveyed. My hon. friend stated last night that these people received in the neighbourhood of 20 acres at least more than they were entitled to, and that this extra allowance of land was in some way, which he did not explain, used to repay Rayner the money that he said it was rumoured had been paid to the Indians.

Mr. BRADBURY. The minister has given the amount of acreage. I would like him to tell the House how many of a family each man had.

Mr. OLIVER. Chief William Prince had two of a family, Councillor Harper seven, James William five, Henry Prince three, and John Prince one. My hon. friend said last night that these men got about an average of 20 acres apiece more than they were entitled to. The figures I have given the House are the figures given to me by the officers of the department, and I am sure my hon. friend will pardon me if I say I am rather willing to accept their figures than the figures he has given, and that I ask the House to do the same.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but a question of personal explanation according to Bourinot, must be confined purely and simply to personal explanation of the language used. I could read the authority, but I suppose it is hardly necessary. The hon. member cannot return to the debate on the St. Peter's Indian Reserve for the minister could not speak at this point so the hon. member will confine himself strictly to his personal explanation.

Mr. BRADBURY. I am nearly finished. It is absolutely necessary that I should state these facts to the House before I can make a proper explanation. What I wanted to point out, Mr. Speaker, on my responsibility as a member of this House, was that this actually gives a correct statement as to the families of the chief and councillors, and this fact is sworn to by J. O. Lewis, Indian agent. Now let us see——

Mr. FIELDING. I really submit to my hon. friend that he should not persist further in the light of the Speaker's ruling. What he means to say is that he has a difference with the Minister of the Interior, and he is trying to make a case out against him. I might have a difference with an hon. member opposite in a matter discussed some days ago, but surely I could not be allowed under a personal explanation to revive the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may read what Bourinot says on the matter :

There are certain cases where the House will permit a member who has already spoken to a question to make some further remarks by the way of explanation before the debate finally closes. For instance, when a member conceives himself to have been misunderstood in some material part of his speech, he is invariably allowed through the indulgence of the House to explain with respect to the part so misunderstood, and this privilege of explanation is permitted without leave being actually asked from the House. But such explanation must be confined to a statement of the words actually used when a member's language is misquoted or misconceived or to a statement of the meaning of his language when it has been misunderstood by the House; for the Speaker will call him to order the moment he goes beyond that explanation and replies to the remarks of members in the debate.

Mr. SPROULE. I respectfully submit this, that the hon. member (Mr. Bradbury) made a statement to this House which was denied and he is endeavouring to explain the grounds upon which he made that statement and if necessary he is prepared to quote from official documents upon which he grounded his statement. That is justification for an explanation. Further I would think it would properly be a matter of privilege and quite within his rights to do what he proposes. He is not dealing with any other one who took part in the debate except the one who contradicted his statement.

Mr. FIELDING. I might have had a discussion with my hon. friend some weeks ago and the hon. gentleman might have contradicted something I said. Would I be at liberty under cover of personal explanation to revive that discussion? I do not think so. I do not wish to press the point, but I am afraid that we shall lose the order of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I recollect one occasion when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) did the very thing which he says now cannot be done.

Mr. FIELDING. What was it ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. During a controversy which the hon. member (Mr. Fielding) had with Sir Charles Tupper in this House. He came into the House afterwards with a letter from Mr. H. M. Whitney, I think it was, intended to corroborate his statement of the case, and introduced it into the debate, doing exactly the thing he says should not be done.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the hon. member's (Mr. R. L. Borden) case is not happily chosen. Speaking from memory. I may not state the facts exactly, but my recollection is that the discussion referred to arose on a tariff or fiscal measure. And, when, at a later stage, on a new motion, the subject was again before the House, I referred to the letter spoken of. But I did not, on a question of privilege, undertake to do anything of that sort. I think that my hon. friend, if he will consult the record, will find that he is mistaken.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The procedure may have been as the hon. minister states; I have not a sufficiently clear recollection of the case to contradict him. By my recollection is that he was not corrected in the course he took. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), I take it, could again bring up the whole matter on motion to go into supply.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not see any reason why he should be driven to that. He has only a short explanation to make, as I understand it, endeavouring to put himself right on a matter in which he conceives himself to have been misrepresented.

Mr. FIELDING. But he is assailing another member.

Mr. BRADBURY. I have no desire to infringe on the rules of the House. But the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) criticised the statement I made the other night in language which calls for some explanation from myself. He characterized my statement thus :

May I add my humble appreciation by saying that I believe never, since this chamber was erected, has there been delivered in its walls such a persistent and sustained tirade of unwarranted assertion, of unwarranted insinuation, a tirade that, in its gratuitous inexactitude, is an offence against the privilege of parliament and an insult to its intelligence.

Now I hold that, as a member of this House, I have some rights here. I have a right to justify what I said in the House.

Mr. FIELDING. With the hon. member's permission, I would respectfully suggest that he is endeavouring to justify himself in a matter arising out of a previous debate. Unless there is some thing in which he has been misrepresented or something of that kind—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FIELDING. No, the hon. member has not a right to proceed in this way on a question of privilege. His statement must be confined to a personal explanation. The hon. member must see that his speech will challenge a reply—

Mr. BRADBURY. No.

Mr. FIELDING. Then the hon. member wants to have it one-sided. Unless that is his wish, I have only to point out that what he says is likely to challenge a reply, and so we lose the order of the House.

Mr. BRADBURY. I am simply making a statement correcting what the minister (Mr. Oliver) said in regard to the statement I made before. He said that when I stated that the chief and councilmen had received more land than they were entitled to, I stated that which was not in accord with the facts. I have laid before this House this return which is sworn to by the Indian agent, which is absolutely correct and proves the correctness of my statement and the incorrectness of the minister's explanation.

Mr. FISHER. If I may be permitted to interrupt, the hon. member (Mr. Bradbury) says he has a right on a question of privilege to justify a statement he made in a former debate. I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker, on the question whether the hon. member can do that on a question of privilege. As I understand it, he has a right to correct a statement of his own or to make a personal explanation, but not to justify his former argument. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has pointed out that the hon. member for Selkirk will have an opportunity, on going into supply, to bring up this question. That is perfectly right. And the only objection to his bringing it up now is that he is violating the rules of the House and indulging in a procedure which has been, I regret to say, somewhat abused.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member has risen—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr Fisher) has the floor.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am speaking on the question of order.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) desires to interrupt me, but I claim to be heard as I have the floor.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member (Mr. Fisher) cannot speak on a question of privilege for the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) has the floor on that question. He (Mr. Fisher) can only speak on a point of order. That is my point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for North Simcoe rose to a point of order. The Minister of Agriculture should have taken his seat at once.

Mr. FISHER. If Mr. Speaker says I am out of order, I will sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. If hon. members will permit me, I would suggest that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) ought to confine himself to a personal explanation. If he is anxious to carry the matter further, he can do so when we go into supply. I think that is the sense of the House.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire to fall in with the suggestion of the Chair, having no wish to violate the rules of the House. But at present I merely wish to clear myself of the charge made by the minister—

Mr. CONMEE. And reopen the debate.

Mr. BRADBURY. Keep quiet. It will be necessary for me to show exactly how much land these Indians get. I can do that in a few minutes. William Prince, chief—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member must confine himself to a personal explanation. If he wants further opportunity he will—

Mr. BRADBURY. It is utterly impossible for me to explain the position without submitting the facts I have here. William Prince, chief—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BRADBURY. —and his wife—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bradbury) had better be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr Speaker, I was saying when I was interrupted that Chief William Prince had a wife and on her account he was entitled to 16 acres of land. Under the terms of the treaty he was entitled to 180 acres for himself, a total, 196 acres. Yet according to the minister's statement, he received 215 acres, or 19 acres more than he was entitled to. William H. Prince, councillor, had a wife, on whose account he was entitled to 16 acres. He himself was entitled to 120 acres, or a total of 136 acres. According to the statement of the minister, he received 172½ acres, or 36½ acres more than he was entitled to under the treaty. John Prince, councillor, had no wife, and was entitled to 120 acres. He received 136 acres, or 16 more than he was entitled to under the treaty. James Williams, councillor, had a wife and three children, on whose account he was entitled to 64 acres, together with 120 of his own account, a total of 184 acres. But he received, according to the minister's statement, 206¾ acres, or 22¾ acres more than he was entitled to. William Harper, councillor, was according to this sworn return, entitled to 16 acres on account of his wife, and 16 for one child. I may say in passing that the man had no wife; his wife was dead, and 120 acres for himself, he was entitled under his claim to only 152 acres. He received, according to the minister's statement, 232¼ acres or 80¼ acres more than he was entitled to. In these extra allotments four men received, not a hundred acres, as I stated to the House before, I was too moderate, for they did receive 174 acres more land than they were entitled to under the terms of the surrender, and I am now satisfied that that land supplied the money to pay the chief and council for betraying their band. The facts entirely justify my statement and proves the hon. minister entirely wrong.

Mr. OLIVER. If it is my privilege——

Mr. SPEAKER. The minister can speak on a question of privilege, or give a personal explanation.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no explanation to make, but my hon. friend has seen fit to revive a discussion which took place the other day, and it seems to me that if he wished to revive it he had much better have done it when the estimates were under discussion and when all these questions could be threshed out. If I am privileged, however, to continue this discussion——

Mr. SPEAKER. Under the circumstances the minister would do better to let the question stand, unless he wishes to avail himself of his right to give a personal explanation.

Mr. OLIVER. I have nothing to explain, and nothing to apologize for. I do not wish to break the rules of the House for the purpose of keeping up a discussion which, it seems to me, occupied as much time of this House the other day as was fairly warranted under the circumstances; and unless my hon. friend can find some new matter to bring to the attention of the House on this occasion, I would suggest to him that he be merciful, even if he is strong.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Before the orders of the day are called—I understand a committee of this House has been appointed to revise the rules of the House, and we have been waiting now for about four months to hear from that committee. There is a certain vague rumour going around the corridors that in a few days, after the work of the House is nearly all done, the rules will be brought in here with a closure in them. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the amended rules might not be placed before the House so as to give us an opportunity of discussing them before the session closes, and deciding whether it is necessary to have the closure.

Mr. BRADBURY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am happy to inform my hon. friend that this committee will have its last sitting on Saturday, and the report will be brought down on Monday. I think my hon. friend will find the rules quite satisfactory to this House.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 205) to amend the Civil Service Act.—Mr. Fisher.

NAVAL SERVICE OF CANADA.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the third reading of Bill (No. 95) respecting the Naval Service of Canada. He said: I promised my hon. friend the leader of the opposition yesterday to give him some information, which I now present to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have expressed my views at considerable length on two occasions with regard to the measure that is now before us for the third reading; for that reason it will not be necessary for me to inflict upon the House any lengthy remarks at the present moment. I do not intend to go over matters that I have already debated; there are, however, one or two considerations which I feel it my duty to present to the House before the third reading is passed. I have not found an absolute wealth of information available with regard to the details of this measure. Yesterday I put a number of questions to the government which, owing to some confusion in the arrangement of their documents, they were not able to answer at the moment. I cannot see that the memorandum which I have received from the Prime Minister this morning is very illuminating, as it consists for the most part of a reference to matters that have already been set forth on the pages of 'Hansard.' In fact, so far as the details of the measure are concerned, I would be inclined to think that the government are wandering in a sort of Serbonian bog in which there is not much light respecting the proposals that are before the House.

Now the problem of co-operation in the defence of the empire is undoubtedly a very grave one. Two considerations present themselves immediately when that question is before us. The first consideration is how we may best give aid in what I consider to be the present emergent condition of the empire; the second is what will be a reasonable basis of permanent co-operation by Canada in the naval defence of the empire. So far as I am concerned, I have endeavoured to keep those questions absolutely distinct, as I think they are distinct in themselves. Ever since we first discussed this question on the floor of the House in the month of March, 1909, it has seemed to me that an immediate and effective aid to the empire in the present emergent conditions can only be accomplished, or at least can best be accomplished, by placing a certain sum of money at the disposal of the imperial authorities of Great Britain as represented by the admiralty, and inviting them to make the best disposal of that money, in their judgment, for the purpose of increasing the united naval strength of the empire I have set out my views on that matter in the resolution which I moved in this House on the second reading, and I need not repeat my observations thereon. I shall come to one or two details of the government measure in a moment. I desire to say at this juncture that I regard the subject of permanent co-operation by Canada in the naval defence of the empire as one that should be properly submitted to the people of this country before any plan of permanent co-operation is entered upon by Canada. Some very strong criticism of our position in that regard has been made by the Prime Minister, by the Minister of Militia and Defence and by other hon. gentlemen opposite. I have not observed anything in those criticisms which alters the opinion I have expressed. If I were inclined, I could quote this morning from speeches made in the past by the Prime Minister himself upon the proposal to build the Canadian Pacific railway, from speeches made by the Minister of Militia and Defence himself upon that proposal and upon other proposals; I could quote the remarks and the votes of those hon. gentlemen in this House, who, in respect of matters that had been canvassed in this country for years, declared that measures should not pass parliament until the actual proposals had passed through the ordeal of a general election, that they should only be passed by a parliament that came back with a mandate from the people in that regard. For example, although the proposal to build the Canadian Pacific railway had been before this country for no less than 8 years, and had been discussed upon every platform in the country, both of these hon. gentlemen voted in this House for a resolution which declared, 'that the contract should not be ratified till after the people had had the opportunity of expressing their opinion through the medium of a general election.' As neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of Militia said a single word in support of that motion they must be regarded as concurring in the arguments used by one of their supporters at that time, who made the motion on their behalf.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Was not that expression of opinion given in face of the fact that a much more favourable offer to build that railway had been made by another company?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman may be correct or not correct in that regard. The point of my contention is that he declared 'that the contract should not be ratified till after the people had had an opportunity of expressing their opinion through the medium of a general election.' That parliament had been elected to a certain extent on that issue, and I will invite my hon. friend to consider the reasons to which he committed himself for his silent vote. Mr. Bechard, who made that motion, speaking for his colleagues, used the following language:

'I contend this whole subject should be laid before the people for their decision at the polls. The ground on which I base my contention is that in a question of such great consequence for the weel or woe of the country, the people should have an opportunity of pronouncing on this new policy and scheme submitted by the government. True this Pacific Railway question has been before the people for years, and that it has been the settled policy of the country to build a road connecting the eastern with the western provinces, and that this road should be continued to the Pacific coast; but it is equally true that the policy now before us to attain that end is completely new to the people. . . .

'We do not know what is the real sentiment of the people at present with reference to this scheme. . . .

'I believe it is difficult for any of us to say what is the real sentiment of the people with regard to the question, and I think that the only way of ascertaining it would be an appeal to the judgment of the people.'

I say that every one of these considerations is an infinitely stronger consideration why the mandate of the people should be sought at a general election on the present occasion than it was when the Prime Minister and the Minister of Militia voted for that particualr motion in 1881. This proposal has not been before the people at all. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister cannot deny that. What was his attitude in 1907 at the imperial conference? His attitude—and upon that attitude he went to the country in 1908—was exactly the reverse of the policy he has presented to the House in this Bill. He declared at the imperial conference of 1907, in language which has been quoted over and over again in this House, in language as explicit and forcible as it would be possible for any man to use, that he would have absolutely none of the policy that he is presenting to the House today. So I say as far as our position is concerned in seeking the mandate of the people at a general election with regard to a basis of permanent co-operation for the defence of the empire, we had nothing to retract. We stand, as we have always stood in that respect, on two considerations—first, that the emergent conditions of the empire do demand immediate and effective aid, and, in the second place, that before a basis of permanent co-operation in the naval defence of the empire is entered upon, the people of this country have a right to be consulted and to give their mandate.

A great deal has been said about the resolution of March, 1909, and at the risk of wearying the House I wish to say one or two words in that connection. It has been charged over and over again by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that the Conservative party in opposing this Bill, is departing in some way from the terms of that resolution. I desire to challenge that statement as directly as it can be challenged in parliamentary language. I say that those who have departed from the resolution of 1909 are the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches. Can there be any doubt upon that? Let me invite once more the attention of the House to the following clause which was contained in that resolution:

The House will cordially approve of any necessary expenditure designed to promote the speedy organization of a Canadian naval service in co-operation with and in close relation to the imperial navy, along the lines suggested by the admiralty at the last imperial conference, and in full sympathy with the view that the naval supremacy of Britain is essential to the security of commerce, the safety of the empire and the peace of the world.

In order to ascertain whether or not the proposals of the government follow the resolution of March, 1909, it is necessary in the first place to ascertain whether those proposals are along the lines suggested by the admiralty at the last imperial conference, that is, the conference of 1907. Those lines were laid down and declared in the clearest possible terms by Lord Tweedmouth, at that time the First Lord of the Admiralty. This is what he said:

The only reservation that the admiralty desire to make is that they claim to have the charge of the stragetical questions which are necessarily involved in naval defence, to hold the command of the naval forces of the country, and to arrange the distribution of ships in the best possible manner, to resist attacks and to defend the empire at large whether it be our own islands or the dominions beyond the seas.

We thoroughly recognize that we are responsible for that defence. We want you to help us in that defence. We want you to give us all the assistance you can, but we do not come to you as beggars; we gladly take all that you can give us, but at the same time, if you are not inclined to give us the help that we hope to have from you, we acknowledge our absolute obligation to defend the King's dominions across the seas to the best of our ability.

No question there, as to whether the emergency in question affects the British isles or not, no question there of going to the help of any of the Dominions beyond the seas provided the war is just or provided the interests of the British empire as a whole are concerned, but a broad, loyal, generous declaration that whatever may be the emergency the mother country will gladly come to the aid of the Dominions beyond the seas.

What is the reservation which Lord Tweedmouth claimed in that statement?

The only reservation that the admiralty desire to make is, that they claim to have charge of these strategical questions which are necessarily involved in naval defence, to hold the command of the naval forces of the country, and to arrange the distribution of ships in the best possible manner to resist attack and to defend the empire at large, whether it be our own islands or the dominions beyond the seas.

How is that carried out by the proposals of the government? Can any man, taking a reasonable view of this Bill say that it is on the lines suggested by Lord Tweedmouth in the quotations I have just read?

I have here section 18 of the Bill. The section provides:

In the case of an emergency the Governor in Council may place at the disposal of His Majesty, for general service in the Royal navy, the naval service or any part thereof, any ships or vessels of the naval service, and the officers and seamen serving in such ships or vessels, or any officers or seamen belonging to the naval service.

What is the meaning of that proposal? The Prime Minister has set forth its meaning in the debate in committee. I shall not attempt to give the committee the whole of his observations, but I shall read one passage which I think ought to be placed before the House in connection with the quotation I have already made. On page 7626 of the unrevised 'Hansard' I find:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the right hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Suppose a Canadian ship meets a ship of similar armament and power belonging to an enemy, meets her on the high seas, what is she to do? I do not ask now what she will do if attacked, but will she attack, will she fight?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that she would fight. I do not know that she should fight either. She should not fight until the government by which she is commissioned have determined whether she should go into the war. That is the position we take, my hon. friend takes a different position. He says that without any question, under all circumstances, we are bound to send our ships into the war. We take a different position, and we say: Let the country judge between us.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would our ports and harbours be neutral like our fleet until an order in council had been passed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not understand what my hon. friend means by asking if they should be neutral.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the Prime Minister to say that our ships would not fight until they were ordered to do so, and, therefore, they would in effect be neutral until the Governor in Council had made an order that they should participate in the war. Have I misstated my hon. friend's position?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

You could not have anything much plainer or more explicit than that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, inasmuch as our ships, under the conditions mentioned, will be practically neutral, I would like to know whether our ports and harbours will also be neutral in the same way?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not understand what my hon. friend means by asking if they would remain neutral. If he means after an enemy has come into our harbour, then it will be time to resist them with our fleet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But if our ships do not attack the enemy when they meet the enemy on the high seas, on the same principle, may not the enemy's fleet come into our harbour without resistance or attack, without any fear of aggression, surely that can be done, it is feasible for the country owning those harbours to maintain neutrality on the high seas?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That would be a question to determine any time that a warship entered a Canadian port.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The position of the Prime Minister is that ships flying the British flag should meet an enemy on the high seas and not attack them. That is a new tradition for the British navy.

I do not think there can be any misapprehension as to the position of the two parties in this connection. The Minister of Finance and other hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavoured to becloud the issue. I am not proposing that the naval forces of Canada shall be sent to every little war. Great Britain may be engaged in naval wars in which not one-tenth of her naval forces would be called upon to act. What I contend for is the principle that in time of war there shall be one united naval force for the whole empire and that naval force shall be available to meet any enemy that may assail the integrity of the empire. Suppose it were declared that the naval forces of Canada should be part of the naval force of the empire in time of war. It is conceivable that there might be a naval war in which Great Britain might not require or demand any assistance whatever from the naval force of this country. But there is something beyond and above all that. If the naval forces of the mother country and all the dominions form part of one great united naval force of the empire in time of war what follows? Any enemy assailing the British empire knows that it must meet those forces in time of war, that they are available for attack or resistance, for upholding the integrity of the empire and the supremacy of its sea control. What is the other alternative? Under the proposals of the government what may an enemy anticipate? It may anticipate that it will have to meet the naval forces of the mother country plus a potential order in council which may not come into force until the integrity of this empire shall have been destroyed. That, Sir, is the difference between the two proposals as it lies in my mind and I, like the Prime Minister, am ready to leave to the country to judge which proposal is truly in the interests of Canada, and in the interests of the whole empire.

The proposals of the government seem to me in one aspect to be absurd and unworkable, but in another aspect they are dangerous and revolutionary. In so far as they are not unworkable they are dangerous; in so far as they are not absurd they are revolutionary because it is absolutely inconceivable that if Great Britain were engaged in a naval war and the Canadian naval force acted as if it belonged not to the empire or to Canada but to some neutral country, such a condition would not lead or at least conduce to the early separation of this country from the British empire. I would recall some of the illustrations adduced in the debate yesterday. A Canadian ship is on the ocean, no order in council has been passed, war has been declared or an overt act committed and hostilities have actually commenced; a Canadian ship is on the high seas, flying the British flag, a cruiser of the enemy approaches, the Canadian ship is not to attack or to fight unless she is attacked. Within sight of her, on high seas, a cruiser of the enemy may be capturing vessels flying the British flag. Under the statement of the Prime Minister, the Canadian cruiser will not interfere because no order in council has been passed. Is such a position tenable is it not absurd, is it not dangerous and revolutionary? Can it have any other outcome than to bring about the separation of this country from that empire whose flag flies over us to-day?

The Prime Minister seems to consider that it is possible that our ports and commerce shall also be neutral as our fleet would be under his own statement until that order in council has been passed. That would only emphasize the position I have already taken. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance says that if Great Britain became involved in any great or serious war no government in this country could live unless it sent the Canadian naval force to the assistance of the empire. Well, there are one or two considerations to be regarded in that connection. I pointed out before, and I repeat it to-day, that a delay such as that which took place at the hands of this government in connection with the South African war might spell disaster to the whole empire; and although condign punishment might be visited upon a government which hesitated in such an emergency, it would be small consolation to us afterwards that certain gentlemen should be driven from the treasury benches or even out of public life, when in the meantime the fate of this empire had been decided by a great naval battle in which no Canadian naval force took part. So I do not think the question can be met in that way.

I desire further to say that if by the free act of this parliament the naval forces of Canada were placed at the disposal of the admiralty of some central authority in time of war, that would not in the least interfere with our autonomy, the danger of which has been so greatly on the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. That course would be taken by the free will of the people of Canada expressed through their representatives in parliament. It would, in fact, be more the act of the people of Canada than the passing of an order in council, as proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite.

I am desirous, Mr. Speaker, that this country shall co-operate upon some permanent basis in the naval defence of the empire. I do not see how it is possible for us to remain within the empire without taking some responsibility in that regard. What will the proposal of the government work out to? If we are to abstain from taking part in some war which may concern Great Britain or other dominions of the empire chiefly, will Great Britain, on the other hand, when our Pacific coast may be assailed, say that she will take no part on our behalf, and that her navy shall remain in the North Sea? I am disposed to think that there is only one way of dealing with the naval forces of the empire, and that is to have them united under some central control, and let the world know that those united forces are available for the maintenance of the sea supremacy of the empire in time of war. They may not be called upon when certain wars occur, even wars involving the employment of the naval forces; but the mere fact that they are available is the important consideration. This is the principle I stand for and the principle I desire to see carried out. It is desirable, in the first place, that we should co-operate upon some permanent basis. It is desirable, in the second place, that if the conditions of the empire at the present time are emergent, we should bear some immediate and effective aid to the empire as a whole. I still maintain, notwithstanding all the arguments that have been advanced to the contrary, that the proposal I submitted to the House involves the true principle in that regard; and that the true solution, the wise solution, of the great problem that is before the people of Canada to-day would be, in the first place, to bring immediate and effective aid in the manner I have already indicated to the House on the second reading of this Bill, and, in the second place, to mature more carefully and wisely the proposals for permanent co-operation by Canada in the naval defence of the empire—to bring these proposals into parliament and discuss them, then to submit them to the people at a general election, and after that to have them carried into force according to the mandate and the direction of the free people of Canada.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. Mr. Speaker, with the exception of the few remarks I made yesterday in Committee of the Whole, I have not yet taken any part in this discussion. Now that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, by his speech has reopened the whole question, I ask the permission of the House to make some observations which, perhaps, I might more fittingly have made at an earlier stage, but which, in the desire to shorten the discussion, I refrained from making. The question before us to-day is one of the greatest importance, perhaps the most important that has ever come before the parliament of this Dominion. Some may think that it involves a new principle; but if we look more closely into the matter, we shall discover that what we are doing to-day does not involve a new principle, but is merely an enlargement of a principle which the people of Canada have long accepted and had in operation. It is the history of all colonies that in their earlier stages they must look to the mother country for support; but as a colony grows in population and strength, it naturally takes upon itself some share of those responsibilities which in the earlier stage have to be assumed by the mother country. Canada has passed through that stage. In her earlier days she had to look to the mother country, as all other colonies have had to do; but as she has grown in wealth and in population she has taken upon herself those responsibilities which a self-respecting country should be ready to bear whenever she has the ability to do so. And so in the progress of time we have taken upon ourselves some share of the obligations in regard to our military defence. We had our military organizations, more or less efficient, in the various provinces before confederation, and at the time of the union there was a sort of understanding that Canada should recognize her imperial responsibilities by expending a very considerable sum for us in those days, roughly estimated at $1,000,000, for the maintenance of her militia organization. From time to time progress was made in that direction until to-day we are spending some $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 a year in the maintenance of our militia system. Now, when we undertake to apply the same principle to the naval organization, the House will see on reflection, that it is not the introduction of a new principle; it is simply an extension of an old principle, an extension which we ought to make by reason of the fact that Canada is growing more rapidly in wealth, in population and in all her resources. Whatever differences there may be amongst us on matters of detail, we all recognize the fact that we belong to a world-wide empire, and that the maintenance of that empire requires a great naval force; and when the time has come that the naval organizations of other countries seem to be coming nearer to those of Great Britain, that the supremacy of Great Britain on the sea may seem to be challenged, or, if it is not challenged, the moment may not be distant when it will be challenged, the overseas dominions will be wise to take upon themselves some share of responsibility in naval affairs, and the only question is one of detail as to what is the best form in which that assistance can be rendered. It is too much to expect that the British islands, with their comparatively small population, shall forever bear the burdens of this great naval organization.

I accept in the fullest degree, that if we are to be citizens of this great empire, and share in all its glory, and in all its prestige and all its power, we must be prepared to share in its responsibilities. It is a burden and we must not be too niggardly as to the amount we may be called upon to spend for such a useful, such a noble and such an imperial purpose. I want to call the attention of the House now to the question of the differences of opinion that exist between us as to the proper methods of dealing with this question. If we are all agreed that Canada must take up her share of responsibility, then we come to the consideration of the best method. Now, it is a pity that there should be differences of opinion amongst us to-day. There were none a few months ago. I really do not think that there are good reasons for such differences of opinion. However that may be, I think we shall do well to again place on record the resolution of the House of the 29th of March, 1909:

> This House fully recognizes the duty of the people of Canada, as they increase in numbers and wealth, to assume in larger measure the responsibilities of national defence.
> The House is of opinion that under the present constitutional relations between the mother country and the self-governing dominions, the payment of regular and periodical contributions to the imperial treasury for naval and military purposes would not, so far as Canada is concerned, be the most satisfactory solution of the question of defence.
> The House will cordially approve of any necessary expenditure designed to promote the speedy organization of a Canadian naval service in co-operation with and in close relation to the imperial navy, along the lines suggested by the admiralty at the last imperial conference, and in full sympathy with the view that the naval supremacy of Britain is essential to the security of commerce, the safety of the empire and the peace of the world.
> The House expresses its firm conviction that whenever the need arises the Canadian people will be found ready and willing to make any sacrifice that is required to give to the imperial authorities the most loyal and hearty co-operation in every movement for the maintenance of the integrity and honour of the empire.

I think that resolution should be quoted again and again, because I believe that on the 29th March, 1909, it correctly expressed the sentiments of the Canadian people; and now at the close or near the close of this long debate on this important measure, I venture to read it once more and to say that the words of that resolution to-day express the deliberate judgment of the people of the Dominion of Canada. The House, in this resolution, recognized the necessity of participating in the naval movement. The House distinctly declared its conviction that the payment of a money contribution was not the most satisfactory way.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. The House declared in favour of a Canadian naval service in co-operation with the imperial navy, the service which this Bill proposes to give to the empire. The House declared the readiness of the Canadian people whenever the need arises to make any sacrifice that may be necessary for the maintenance of the empire. It was the unanimous declaration of the Canadian parliament, a notice to the world of the determination of Canada to stand by the empire when a case of need should arise. We would plead to-day, if it were possible, for the same unanimity which characterized the parliament of Canada at that moment. The need of co-operation with the imperial navy is frankly recognized. We are without experience in such matters, but it is both sensible and patriotic that we should communicate with the admiralty and profit by their larger knowledge and by their greater experience, and that is exactly what we have done. The fact that we do not do all that the British government may have desired us to do, is by no means a proof that the policy we are pursuing is not entirely consistent with their views. On the contrary, so far as we are able to know, we are entirely in harmony with the wishes of the British admiralty. We are proposing a scheme which the imperial authorities themselves laid down for our advice and our guidance.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. By no means.

Mr. FIELDING. Let us see what the British government asked us to do. Their first proposal was for a monetary contribution. That was the first suggested. No one doubts that that would be the most convenient form of assistance from the home point of view of the British admiralty, and it is now claimed that our government should respond to this demand. It was not so claimed in the resolution of a year ago. But, Mr. Speaker, Canada has been on record for years against monetary contributions for naval purposes in that form. At the conference of 1902, Lord Selborne, who was then first Lord of the Admiralty, made a similar suggestion. The proposal for a monetary contribution was emphatically rejected by the Canadian ministers attending that conference. Lord Selborne's memorandum submitted to the conference has references to contributions from the colonies, and then it says:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier informs me that His Majesty's government of the Dominion of Canada are contemplating the establishment of a local naval force in the waters of Canada, but that they were not able to make any offer of assistance analogous to those enumerated above.

That was the declaration the Prime Minister of Canada made on behalf of the government and parliament and people of this Dominion. At a later stage, the Canadian ministers submitted a memorandum which has been read in this House before, and only a part of which I will read now:

In conclusion the ministers repeat that while the Canadian government are obliged to dissent from the measures proposed, they fully appreciate the obligation of the Dominion to make expenditures for the purposes of defence in proportion to the increasing population and wealth of the country. They are willing that these expenditures shall be so directed as to relieve the taxpayer of the mother country from some of the burden which she now bears; and they have the strongest desire to carry out their defence schemes in co-operation with the imperial authorities and under the advice of experienced imperial officers, so far as this is consistent with the principle of local self government which has proved so great a factor in the promotion of imperial unity.

Thus Canada, in the most emphatic way, placed herself on record against the contribution of money from the treasury of Canada for the building of Dreadnoughts or for any other expenditures by the British admiralty for naval purposes. That record has been before the country since 1902. We have had discussions in parliament from time to time on various matters of a more or less imperial character, but down to the time of the present session, down to the opening of the discussion when hon. gentlemen opposite took such a strange course at variance with their action of a year ago, the wisdom of that declaration by the Prime Minister of Canada was never called in question. We have had two general elections since that declaration was made.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Never was heard of.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is right. They never heard of it. We have two general elections in which hon. gentlemen opposite had an opportunity to arraign this government—two appeals to the grand jury of the country. They have had these opportunities to appeal to the people and challenge the wisdom of this declaration. Now, my hon. friend from Manitoba (Mr. Schaffner) comes here to-day and confesses that in these two general elections he never heard of it.

Mr. BURRELL. Will the hon. Minister of Finance inform the House whether he or any of his friends or any of the government supporters ever heard it brought up?

Mr. FIELDING. Never brought up? There never was a reason for bringing it up. It was simply consistent with the whole policy of Canada whereby we are prepared to do whatever is best to the utmost limit of our power to help the empire. But we propose to do it in our own way, consistent with the position of Canada as a daughter nation of the empire.

Mr. BURRELL. I do not like to interrupt——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Then, don't do it.

Mr. FIELDING. It is all right.

Mr. BURRELL. If the hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) would not mind answering another question that I think is quite relevant, I would like to ask what did the government do to inform the country as to their attitude at the conference of 1907?

Mr. FIELDING. When I say it was never brought up, I mean that it was never brought up at a general election. It was brought up in the reports of the conference laid before this parliament and sent to every member. It was brought up in the sense that we bring up any matter by giving the records to parliament, and inviting public discussion and critcism. The declaration of the Prime Minister of Canada was the expression of the will of the Canadian people—just as the resoultion of March 29 of last year was an expression of the will of the Canadian people; the only difference between us and hon. gentlemen opposite on that point being that we have stood to our guns while these hon. members have not stood to their guns. I say, Sir, that, with that record of the conference before the country for all these years, with hon. members opposite looking for every possible ground of attack upon this government in view of the general election, with these hon. members running from one end of the country to the other—as was their right and duty—to arraign this government for its faults, when we find that, during all these years, no man ever raised the question, we have the most complete evidence that the action of the government of Canada was the action of the Canadian people as a whole.

The British government's next suggestion was for a fleet unit on the Pacific. Now it is important to emphasize the words 'on the Pacific'. In many cases—in most cases—when reference is made to a fleet unit, these words 'on the Pacific' are omitted. The suggestion was that a fleet unit should be established on the Pacific. Now, we are all proud of the great importance of our Pacific coast, yet it is the simple truth to say that the greater body of the Canadian people are to be found nearer the Atlantic than to the Pacific. A naval policy which simply provided a fleet unit on the Pacific and ignored the Atlantic coast might be a policy to be talked of by the advocates in Downing street of a particular theory, but it is not a policy that could be presented in a manner acceptable to the Canadian people. If we were to establish a fleet unit on the Pacific, that would be followed, inevitably followed, by a fleet unit on the Atlantic, and the cost of these two fleet units would be enormous. I have not made up the figures, but I think it will be admitted that if we had undertaken to establish two fleet units, one on the Pacific, and one on the Atlantic, the cost would have been a great deal more than hon. gentlemen opposite would be disposed to approve. So, the idea of a fleet unit on the Pacific was not a practical one, it was not one that hon. members on the other side, I believe, would be prepared to adopt.

Thus, these two suggestions were offered —first, a cash contribution, and second, a fleet unit on the Pacific. I have given the reasons which led our government to think that neither of these proposals could be accepted. The admiralty had anticipated the possibility that we would not be able to agree with their views. They felt bound to present these views, but they had an intimation—not from us, but in the light of their own knowledge and experience—that these proposals might not be found satisfactory. A memorandum was prepared by the admiralty before the conference of 1909. It is well to observe that, though this appears in the records of 1909, it was prepared by the admiralty in advance of the occasion.

It has, however, long been recognized that in defining the conditions under which the naval forces of the empire should be developed, other considerations than those of strategy alone must be taken into account. The various circumstances of the oversea dominions have to be borne in mind. Though all have in them the seeds of great advance in population, wealth and power, they have at the present time attained to different stages in their growth. Their geographical position has subjected them to internal and external strains varying in kind and intensity. Their history and physical environment have given rise to individual national sentiment, for the expression of which room must be found. A simple contribution of money or material may be to one Dominion the most acceptable form in which to assist in imperial defence. Another, while ready to provide local naval forces, and to place them at the disposal of the Crown in the event of war, may wish to lay the foundations upon which a future navy of its own could be raised.

One might think that this was a memorandum prepared by the Canadian Minister of Militia, it reads so like an expression of Canadian opinion. I think it worth while, therefore, to call attention to the fact that this is the British admiralty memorandum:

A third may think that the best manner in which it can assist in promoting the interests of the empire is in undertaking certain local services not directly of a naval character, but which may relieve the imperial government from expenses which would otherwise fall on the British exchequer.

Canada did that. Canada undertook certain expenditures at Halifax and Esquimalt, which largely relieved the British taxpayer from expenses which would otherwise have fallen upon them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I may be permitted, I asked about that yesterday, but I have not received any satisfaction yet. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) would allow me to ask now: What were those expenses?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot give the figures at this moment, but, whatever the amount, they were expenses entailed upon the British treasury through the army and navy by their garrisoning of Halifax and Esquimalt. These being assumed by the Canadian government, to that extent, Canada took upon herself burdens which up to then had been, and otherwise would have continued to be, burdens of the British taxpayer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not wish to interrupt, but perhaps I may be allowed at this stage to say that, I would like to have an understanding before the session closes, as to the position at Esquimalt, both as to the amount and as to control. I say this because the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) on the 17th of January, I think it was, stated, in answer to a question of my own, that Esquimalt was still under the control of the imperial authorities.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not the garrison.

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that while it had been agreed that the stations should be taken over, some time elapsed before the documents passed which would give the technical control to Canada. But that it not involved in my present statement, and I do not pretend to give this as information, because it may not be exact. I continue to read from the admiralty memorandum:

The main duty of the forthcoming conference as regards naval defence will be, therefore, to determine the form in which the various Dominion governments can best participate in the burden of imperial defence, with due regard to varying political and geographical conditions. Looking to the difficulties involved, it is not to be expected that the discussions with the several defence ministers will result in a complete and final scheme of naval defence, but it is hoped that it will be found possible to formulate the broad principles upon which the growth of colonial naval forces should be fostered.

While laying the foundations of the new Dominion navies to be maintained in different parts of the empire, these forces would contribute immediately and materially to the requirements of imperial defence.

That is the memorandum of the admiralty as to the various methods in which the over-seas dominions might contribute to imperial defence, and the closing words that I have quoted are worth repeating:

While laying the foundations of the new Dominion navies to be maintained in different parts of the empire, these forces would contribute immediately and materially to the requirements of imperial defence.

That is what the government of Canada are doing.

Mr. COWAN. Will the minister read the next section of that report?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not the report, I have an extract from it which I made, because the extract bears upon the subject I am considering. The admiralty quite understood and appreciated that the different sections of the empire might not be able to act upon a uniform plan, but that each might wish to adopt its own methods, and that one of the methods whereby they could assist in imperial defence was by the creation of local naval forces, and that is what we are doing.

Mr. LANCASTER. To be under the immediate control of the imperial government.

Mr. COWAN. I have the report here, I will send it over.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sure my hon. friend has not any section which is at variance with what I am reading, because it is not the habit of the British admiralty to write one paragraph and then write another one to contradict it.

Mr. COWAN. I understood the minister to say that the reason why he did not read it was because he did not have it before him.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I said it did not bear upon the question I was discussing. What is the section my hon. friend wishes me to read?

Mr. COWAN. Section 5.

Mr. FIELDING (reading):

In the opinion of the admiralty, a Dominion government desirous of creating a navy should aim at forming a distinct fleet unit; and the smallest unit is one which, while manageable in time of peace, is capable of being used in its component parts in time of war.

In the carrying out of that suggestion it was proposed that a fleet unit be placed on the Pacific, and this government took the responsibility of saying that a fleet unit on the Pacific was not a system of a local naval force which would be satisfactory to the people of the Dominion of Canada, and that position we take to-day.

Mr. BRISTOL. I would ask the minister to read just three lines more in paragraph 11 of the same memorandum, beginning at the first line.

Mr. FIELDING (reading):

As the armoured cruiser is the essential part of the fleet unit, it is important that an 'Indomitable' of the 'Dreadnought' type should be the first vessel to be built in commencing the formation of a fleet unit.

Mr. BRISTOL. I thought that, taken in connection with section 5, this might give the minister some light.

Mr. FIELDING. The information it gives is that which I gave the House some time ago, that the admiralty would have preferred a fleet unit on the Pacific; that was their proposal, let us not get away from that.

Mr. BRISTOL. If the minister will pardon me—if I understand the memorandum, what the admiralty is recommending is that if possible fleet units should be placed on the Atlantic and the Pacific, but failing that, if a single fleet unit is to be commenced, they recommend the building of a Dreadnought first.

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that the admiralty did not propose a fleet unit on the Pacific and one on the Atlantic. They knew that the cost of these two fleet units would be enormous, and they did not make the proposal that Canada should assume that burden. They did propose a fleet unit on the Pacific, and the view of the government was that a fleet unit on the Pacific would require another fleet unit on the Atlantic, that the people of Canada would not be satisfied with less. My hon. friend beside me has handed me a memorandum containing Mr. Asquith's statement in parliament:

As regards Canada, it was considered that her double seaboard rendered the provision of a fleet unit of the same kind unsuitable for the present. It was proposed accordingly.

Mr. COWAN. Considered by whom?

Mr. FIELDING. It was considered by the conference, I would take it. Mr. Asquith was stating to parliament the results of the imperial conference; and if my hon. friend has any communication from Mr. Asquith which enables him to say that what Mr. Asquith meant is not expressed in this memorandum, I have no such communication.

Mr. BRISTOL. I do not want to interrupt the hon. minister, but I want to understand him. I understood the minister was arguing something about a fleet unit on the Pacific, and he said in connection with section 5 that it was certainly the opinion of the admiralty that the Dominion government should provide for a distinct fleet unit. They did not say on the Atlantic in that memorandum, but on the Pacific, and they said: 'If you start to build a fleet unit, the first thing is to build a Dreadnought'.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will find in another part of the document that the proposal of the admiralty was a fleet unit on the Pacific. These two fleet units would cost an enormous sum of money, and even the British admiralty did not ask Canada to do it.

Mr. BRISTOL. The minister is making his whole speech on the recommendation that the admiralty said there should be a fleet unit on the Pacific. I would like to know where that is.

Mr. FIELDING. It will be found somewhere in the records.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If I understand the result of that conference, it is that the maximum would be given by each dominion for the assistance of the empire, and the maximum of each colony is that that which was suggested by each colony.

Mr. FIELDING. Then is my hon. friend leading up to the point that we are not giving enough in money value?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That we are not giving what was recommended by the admiralty.

Mr. FIELDING. That does not deal with the question of the maximum amount. My hon. friend a moment ago said it was a question of the maximum amount that would be expended, and does my hon. friend think that this parliament is not expending enough? That has been the trend of many of their speeches.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I said the minister was leading this House to believe that a fleet unit was not being put upon the Pacific because the admiralty suggested that it should not. I understand the reason a fleet unit is not being put upon the Pacific is because the Canadian representatives at that conference did not want it.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think the reason is because the admiralty did not want it, because I have already stated that the admiralty did suggest a fleet unit on the Pacific; but for the reason which I have stated, the government of Canada thought that was not a naval policy which would commend itself to the people of Canada.

At one o'clock House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at one o'clock I was inviting the attention of the House to the several proposals or suggestions that had been made in the Imperial Defence Conference in London in 1909. I had pointed out that the first suggestion of the imperial authorities was a monetary contribution, and I had stated the grounds upon which the Canadian government were unable to agree to that proposal. I then stated that the second proposal or suggestion was for a fleet unit on the Pacific. I was rather surprised to find some hon. gentlemen question the accuracy of my statement that the proposal for a fleet unit had reference to a fleet unit on the Pacific. There is really no room for debate on that question. Every reference that is made to a fleet unit in the proceedings of the conference clearly shows that a fleet unit on the Pacific was contemplated.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. To guard against mistakes, I propose to read from the proceedings as set forth in the Canadian Blue-book at page 26:

The Canadian representatives explained in what respect they desired the advice of the admiralty in regard to the measures of naval defence, which might be considered consistent with the resolution adopted by the Canadian parliament on the 29th March, 1909.

It is to the next paragraph that I wish to call attention because it is the one which bears on the question:

While, on naval strategical considerations it was thought that a fleet unit on the Pacific, as outlined by the admiralty, might in the future form an acceptable system of naval defence, it was recognized that Canada's double seaboard rendered the provision of such a fleet unit unsuitable for the present.

There, in the official record, is the statement that the proposal of the admiralty was a fleet unit on the Pacific. The reasons why the Canadian government did not feel free to accept that proposal, I stated in the earlier part of my remarks. Then came the third suggestion. Since then, Canada was not willing to make a monetary contribution, and since Canada for the reasons stated was not able to agree to a fleet unit, the question was, Canada being disposed to do something, what form should her aid take? It is on this point that I wish to continue the reading of the report.

It was represented on the part of the admiralty that it would be difficult to make any suggestions, or to formulate any plans, without knowing approximately the sum of money which Canada would spend. The Canadian representatives then suggested that two plans might be presented: one incurring an annual expenditure of £400,000, and the other an expenditure of £600,000, omitting in both cases the cost of the present fishery service and hydrographic surveys but including the maintenance of Halifax and Esquimalt dockyards, and the wireless telegraph service, estimated at some £50,000 a year.

Taking, first, the plan for the expenditure of £600,000, after discussion the admiralty suggested that the Canadian government might provide a force of cruisers and destroyers comprising four cruisers of improved 'Bristol' class, one cruiser of the 'Boadicea' class, and six destroyers of improved river class. As regards submarines, it would be advisable to defer their construction because they required a highly trained and specialized complement.

I think the proposal of Lord Tweedmouth at an earlier conference included some submarines, but it will be seen that the later conclusion of the imperial authorities was that submarines should be postponed to a later date.

The 'Boadicea' and destroyers might be placed on the Atlantic side, and the 'Bristol' cruisers divided between the Atlantic and Pacific ocean. The number of officers and men for this force of 11 ships would be 2,194, and the cost of the vessels suggested, including repairs and maintenance, interest and sinking fund on capital expenditure, and pay, &c., of personnel, at Canadian rates, would not, it was anticipated, exceed £600,000 a year.

It was decided to limit the plan to an expenditure of £400,000 a year, the admiralty suggested that one 'Bristol,' the 'Boadicea,' and two destroyers should be omitted, in which case only 1,408 officers and men would be required. Two 'Bristols' would then be placed on the Pacific, and one 'Bristol' and four destroyers on the Atlantic coast.

It will be seen that the admiralty there made to the ministers from Canada two proposals. They said: Since you cannot accept the proposal for a monetary contribution and do not approve of the fleet unit idea, we are ready to advise you as to what is best to be done with whatever may be regarded as a reasonable sum of money. Two sums were mentioned, one of £400,000 and the other of £600,000 annually. What the government of Canada has done is to substantially adopt the larger plan suggested in this way by the admiralty, and the proposal of this Bill, substantially, is to carry out that larger proposal as indicated in the report of the proceedings which I have now read. Either of these proposals would have been agreeable to the admiralty. If there was room for doubt Canada was free to take whichever she preferred. If she wished to be economical and to adopt the proposal involving the lesser amount, the admiralty was prepared to advise how the £400,000 could best be employed; if she was disposed to be more generous and adopt the larger policy, the admiralty was prepared to advise how that money could be best expended. Canada did adopt the larger plan and we are proposing substantially to carry out what was thus advised by the Lords of the Admiralty. I therefore urge again, as in the earlier part of my remarks, that while the government did not adopt all that the admiralty originally proposed, so far as we have gone, to the extent of money we felt able to expend, we are carrying out exactly what the admiralty designed and advised. This plan that we have adopted is entirely in harmony with the views of the admiralty as expressed in the imperial conference. They there discussed the question. I think I am correct in saying that Lord Charles Beresford, who is recognized as one of the highest authorities of the admiralty, although not always agreeing with his colleagues, has himself said that the policy Canada is pursuing, in providing a fleet of this class, is a wise policy. I am speaking now from my memory of what has appeared in the public press. It is entirely in harmony with the view expressed by the leader of the opposition in his speech of a little over a year ago. I do not desire to quote that again merely for the purpose of fixing any inconsistency on his part. I am perfectly prepared to recognize the right of my hon. friend to change his view, but just because the view he then expressed seemed to me to be right, because I agreed with it then and agree with it now, I desire to quote it again. Speaking in the now memorable debate of March 29, 1909, the leader of the opposition said:

In so far as my right hon. friend the Prime Minister to-day outlined the lines of naval defence of this country I am entirely at one with him. I am entirely of opinion, in the first place, that the proper line upon which we should proceed in that regard is the line of having a Canadian naval force of our own. I entirely believe in that. The other experiment—

That is the experiment of the contribution:

The other experiment has been tried as between Australia and the mother country and it has not worked satisfactorily in any respect.

It seems to me that these observations of my hon. friend express what ought to have been the correct view. It, later on, he takes another view the hon. gentleman is quite within his right, and I only quote his observations to show that what the government have been doing is in line with his own view, as well as with the view of the imperial authorities so far as the amount of money available would go. I also have shown, I think, that what we are doing is in harmony with the views expressed by the House of Commons in that unanimous resolution; that it is particularly in harmony with the views expressed by the leader of the opposition in discussing the subject at the time; that it is also in harmony with the resolutions of the conference of 1902, to which I have referred, and which have been before this country for some years and have been practically unchallenged. And, Sir, our policy is especially in harmony with another speech of the leader of the opposition which, though quoted before, I am justified in citing again. Speaking at Halifax on October 14, 1909, the hon. gentleman said:

'How the present administration will work out the policy which was outlined by the resolution to which I have alluded, remains to be seen. One governing principle at least should control, namely, that out of our own materials, by our own labour, and by the instructed skill of our own people any necessary provision for our naval defence should be made so far as may be reasonably possible.'

How my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is going to reconcile that, if he cares to do so, with the proposal to send $20,000,000 to England to be spent as the English authorities may please, is a matter which I confess would be more difficult for me than perhaps it would be for him. The hon. gentleman proceeded:

In this connection may we not hope there shall be given a stimulus and encouragement to the shipbuilding industry of Canada which has long been lacking.

How encouragement is to be given to the shipbuilding industry of Canada by sending $20,000,000 across the water is one of the things that no fellow can understand. The hon. the leader of the opposition continued:

To-day should be Nova Scotia's opportunity in that regard. Providence has endowed this province with the material, with the men and with the maritime situation which are essential not only for developing a scheme of naval defence and protection, but also for the resusitation of that shipbuilding industry which once made Nova Scotia famous throughout the world.'

How the shipbuilding industry is to be revived by sending $20,000,000 across to the imperial treasury is another one of the things which no fellow can understand.

Now, I am not sure that we can build these vessels in Canada. I sympathize very heartily with the desire of the leader of the opposition, declared in that speech, that we shall be able to build the vessels in Canada, and that to that extent the present action of the government may be a means of helping to resuscitate our shipbuilding industry. I would go a long way to have these vessels built in Canada. I hope to have them built in Canada, I believe they will be built in Canada. But at the same time, as a distinguished friend of mine sometimes says: It is a question of cost and come-to. And, while I would go a long way to have the ships built in Canada, I am not prepared to say that I would have them built here regardless of cost. If they can be built in Canada at a reasonably generous advance upon the cost of building in England, I will most strongly support the scheme of building them in this country. I have reason to believe it can be done, I hope it will be done.

Now, some reference has been made by hon. gentlemen opposite to the amount of the expenditure. If it is a question whether or not the sum that we are proposing to spend in this scheme is too large or too small, I suppose there would be some room for difference, but the curious part of it is that on some occasions we find ourselves told that this is a petty scheme, that we are doing little or nothing, that we should spend more, and, somehow it happens that the demand for larger expenditure comes from hon. gentlemen opposite who at other times complain strongly that the bulk of our expenditure is too large. I think it will be found that the sum of money which we will be called upon to expend on account of the policy that the government has adopted will prove to be a pretty generous one, and I do not think anybody will be disposed to say later on that the scheme is a bad one because it does not cost enough.

There is another view of this matter to which I confess I attach some importance, and that is the creation of a personal interest in this naval movement. I think that the mere sending over of a large amount of money to the motherland for the building of ships in that country, as proposed by hon. gentleman opposite, while it might for the moment appeal to the generous sentiment of our people, would not, in my opinion, help to develop that idea of naval advancement which the leader of the opposition referred to and which I am sure we all appreciate. If you want to give the people of Canada a personal interest in this navy you have got to make it their own navy. I remember a story once told by the late lamented Principal Grant on a public occasion. A big man-of-war entered one of the Scottish harbours and a canny Scotchman thought he would visit the ship, and having got on board he was asked by the middy on duty what his business was, and our friend said he wanted to see the admiral. The admiral was absent, and the middy asked the Scotchmen to leave his name, and our friend replied: Eh, mon, just tell him that one of the 'owners' called. Well, what we want is that each one of us and each one of our constituents when he goes on board these Canadian ships—Canadian in time of peace and imperial in time of war—shall feel that he is one of the owners. This idea of a personal interest in the navy must appeal to every patriotic mind. I notice that at one of the earlier imperial conferences, the conference of 1902, Lord Selbourne made some remarks which to my mind were directed primarily to this point. He was speaking of the agreement which had been come to with Australia in regard to the navy, and Lord Selbourne said:

Now, gentlemen, I attach great importance to that agreement, because the statesmen who negotiated it and signed it have led the way in what I may call the imperial consideration of this question of naval policy. But like every document that commences a policy, it has faults, and to my mind there is no fault greater in it than this, that the relation of the Australasian governments to the imperial are simply that of the man who pays to the man who supplies. The Australasian governments pay us a certain contribution; for this contribution we supply them with a certain article. Now, this is good so far as it goes, but it does not, to my mind, go far enough. It does not give our New Zealand and Australian fellow-countrymen the sense of personal interest, of personal possession, in the British navy, which I most of all desiderate for the future, and I want, not only the Colonial government to understand that on the naval protection of the empire, exercised through a wise naval strategy, depends our future existence as a united empire, but I want them to regard the navy as their own, at least, as much as ours, and with that object I wish to see in the navy more colonial officers and a contribution of colonial seamen. I want, in fact, if I may use such a term, to increase the maritime spirit of the empire. After all we are not in this country all sailors, yet we are all imbued with the maritime spirit. Here you have the great colonies covering vast geographical tracts of country. Is there not a danger that in the far interior, unless we take precautions, the maritime spirit may be lost? I want to bring Australasia, Canada, and South Africa to understand, in the sense that the average Englishman understands it, that the sea is the one material source of our greatness and our power; the main bond of union; the real source of our strength—if I may use such a mixed metaphor—that the sea is to the empire as the breath of life, but it cannot be done, I opine, so long as we are only receivers of money. I want to see from all parts of the empire a personal contribution to the navy, so that it may not only be an abstract admiralty to govern the navy but an admiralty that has won the confidence of the colonies, because the colonies understand its policy, and because in each colony there are officers and men belonging to the navy—an integral portion of the navy.

Here we have the idea of personal and individual interest in the navy. Lord Selborne, realizing that there was this agreement with Australasia respecting contributions, held the view that in order to secure that personal interest we should endeavour to get more colonial citizens into the navy, a very commendable idea. But if this idea of personal interest can be advanced by having now and then a young Canadian go and join the British Navy on the other side of the water, how much broader and greater and grander will be the interest when we have a Canadian Navy, manned as it will in a short time be by Canadian officers and Canadian sailors?

But, Sir, I am going to quote another authority on that point, one who has expressed, much more forcibly and much more eloquently than I can attempt to express, that idea of personal interest in the navy. It is not a new extract; hon. members have heard it before; but they will bear with me, I am sure, if I read it again, because it is to my mind the strongest possible argument in support of our position. I refer to the remarks of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) whom we are all sorry to find absent through illness. He evidently had in mind the different forms of aid that might be rendered—for the granting of aid of some kind has long been a subject of discussion—and he went on to say:

The first and greatest objection which I have to a fixed money contribution is that it bears the aspect of hiring somebody else to do what we ourselves ought to do; as though a man, the father of a family, in lusty health and strength, should pay his neighbour something per month for looking after the welfare and safety of his home instead of doing that duty himself. That seems to me, when you work it out, to be a basic objection to this form of aid.

It goes still further than that. Suppose you contribute this year your sum, and next year your equal sum, and thereafter year after year. After ten or twelve, or twenty, or thirty years, you will have paid out an immense amount of money. You will have been protected in the meantime; but in Canada itself there will be no roots struck, there will be no residue left, there will be no preparation of the soil, or beginning of the growth of the product of defence. Yet some time or other, no one can doubt that, with resources and with a population constantly increasing, we must and will have in this country a naval force of our own for our coast and home defence.

The interest that we take in contribution spent by another is not the interest that I desire for Canada. I want to see something grafted on the soil of Canada's nationhood, which takes root and grows and develops until it incites the spirit of defence in this country, leads to a participation in the defence, leads to that quick interest in it, its glories, its duties and its accomplished work, which is after all the one great thing that compensates a people for great expenditure either on land or on sea in the way of defence and of the maintenance of the rights of the country.

Again, it disjoins what has been joined together from the earliest days of the world's existence—commerce and the protection of commerce. After all, the basic idea of a naval force is the protection of the commerce of a country. A commerce side by side with its protector, and its protector side by side with the growing commerce of a country, flourish best together, and are the surest helpers to each other. That is the idea which is in my mind—that when we make our contributions in the way of a fixed sum and it goes from us, and we are not responsible for it, we have none of the inspiration resulting from the growth and development of a system of future defence in our own country. We are deprived of the larger benefit ourselves, and in the future we do no greater service to the empire of which we form a part, in this matter of defence.

Then, again, I think this method ignores the necessities and the aspirations and the prospects of a great people, such as the Canadian people are destined to become. We must have beginnings; these must at first be small; but some time or other, as I have said, our country will have its naval force for the defence of this country, if for nothing else. The point with me is as to whether it is not the greater wisdom to sow the seed at once and cultivate its growth, as best we may, in our circumstances and with our resources until at last we arrive at that stage of expansion which we have reached in other great lines of our country's progress.

The words are those of my hon. friend from North Toronto who is not present today. The Naval Service, then is to be a service primarly for the defence of Canada, but not only for the defence of Canada. Under the measure we are proposing we shall have a naval service which is Canadian in time of peace, but which by the very machinery we have provided will unmistakably become imperial whenever the help of Canada is needed for the defence of the empire. I accept the view that when the empire is at war Canada is at war; Canada will never need defence except when the empire needs defence; and so I say the Canadian navy, while supplied primarily for the defence of our shores, is after all but a branch to the Royal navy in time of peace, and will become an integral part of the Royal navy whenever the war alarm is sounded.

Our hon. friends have devoted much attention from time to time to the matter particularly discussed yesterday, with regard to the claim of this government that it should have a right to control these vessels, that we should have the power to determine in what manner they should be employed. I came across a sentiment expressed by a very distinguished English statesman at the time of the Imperial Press Conference a few months ago which is worthy of quoting as bearing directly on this point, that is, Mr. Arthur Balfour, the former prime minister of Great Britain, who said:

> It must be clear that under the constitutional theories which we all share in common the ministry of the parliaments which raise, which equip, which pay and which are responsible for the troops—is the ministry which must control the movements of the troops, and not some other ministry.

The ministry and the parliament which raise, equip and maintain this Canadian navy is the ministry of the Canadian people, and that ministry and no other should control the direction of that navy. I think it is a great misfortune that we should have such differences of opinion now. About one year ago this parliament was the scene of a very striking event. We know the temptation to party strife which exists under our form of government. While in the main it is the best form of government that human intelligence has been able to devise, yet we all know that like all other good things, it has its weakness, and the weakness is that each one of us is sometimes tempted too much to see matters from a party point of view. I think the best work of parliament is generally done when you find a consensus of opinion, when you find that the leading men on both sides are able to see eye to eye. We had that happy position a year ago. The great question of imperial defence was considered. It cannot be said there was not ample time to consider it. It was carefully considered and in the end members on both sides of this House were able to agree upon a declaration of policy which is entirely of value. Sometimes men say that mere words mean nothing. I do not agree with that. There are times in human affairs when words count for much in alleviating the sorrow and suffering and distress that surround us, and there are such times in the affairs of nations. When there were rumours, I hope not well-founded, of the intention of a great nation to attack the motherland, I believe the words then spoken, unanimously spoken, by this parliament of Canada, I believe those words amounted to a message of immense value to the empire and a great object lesson to the nations which were disposed to challenge the empire's supremacy. In those words we declared the determination of the parliament of Canada, as representing the people of this dominion, to go to the aid of the motherland whenever the need should arise. Why is it that we have to differ to-day? I think those who have obliged us to differ to-day have taken a serious responsibility. I do not for one moment question their sincerity or their motives. But I think it is a great misfortune that the happy condition of affairs we had a little more than a year ago did not continue, so that we could make this great question of imperial defence, not a matter of partisanship, but that this might be one of the occasions when none are for the party, and all are for the state. Unhappily it is not so. When we came to consider the different points from which the government has been attacked in this matter, one cannot help noticing the strange nature of the position. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has to-day repeated the argument that a matter of so much importance should not be dealt with in this way and without an appeal to the people. Yet strange to say and it does not appear to have occurred to my hon. friend —strange to say while he demands that the moderate expenditure—some people thought it too little—that we propose to make for a Canadian navy is an immense departure from principle, which should therefore cause an appeal to the people, he was perfectly prepared to spend $20,000,000 and send it to England without any appeal to the people. Now, my hon. friend must not be surprised if the people of Canada have thought that a very very strange ground to take. Surely, if the creation of an active Canadian naval service, which is only an expansion of the method of defence we have had for many years, which is no new departure in principle at all, any more than was the increase of our militia expenditure from $1,000,000 to $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 a year, surely if that should demand an appeal to the people what can we think of a proposal that we should send $20,000,000 over to English shipyards and never ask a question as to what the people of Canada should think of it? I do not think my hon. friend can be very serious in advancing that view. Well, the various grounds on which the government have been attacked on this matter, as I have already said, strike me as rather strange. We have found for example, that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, speaking in general terms, has frequently referred to this measure, this policy of the government, as something which is weakening the imperial tie, while his colleague, and we regret that he is not here to-day through illness, the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). claimed that we are playing the game of the British imperialists, the advocates of imperial federation. Now these views cannot both be correct. We cannot at one moment be playing the game of the British imperialist, and at the same moment be weakening the imperial tie. Most of the hon. members opposing our policy have taken the view that it was anti-British, but the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), claimed that we had in a somewhat secret way changed our Militia Act in order that we might provide the machinery whereby Canadian troops could be sent into the wars of the empire. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, has claimed that we are not considering the views of the imperial authorities. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has stated that our scheme was that of Mr. McKenna, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and he was more correct than my hon. friends opposite. These contradictory grounds of attack certainly present a humorous side of the question. But there is a more serious side, and that is when my hon. friends opposite have endeavoured to take to themselves the monopoly of the loyalty of this country and to suggest that this policy is designed to weaken the ties between this country and the empire. Now, I do not think my hon. friends should do that. I do not think there is any disloyal party in this Dominion. I think the people of Canada, irrespective of class, or race, or creed, or party, are a loyal people who want to do their duty to the empire, and I think any attempt of one party or of the other to take to itself a monopoly of the loyalty of the country, is not patriotism, and is not the best duty of citizenship. But since the hon. gentlemen opposite insist upon comparisons of this character, let us see what right they have to claim all the loyalty to themselves. I would like to know if anybody will look over the record of the Conservative party in this Dominion, from the first day of confederation down to this moment, what act they can point to which may be marked as one for imperial unity and imperial advancement? The statutes and records of Canada have such things within them, but in every instance, they are the work of the Liberal party of this country. Repeated references have been made, by the way, to quotations of hon. gentlemen on this side, either in recent years or in by-gone years in which the view has been expressed that at some time in the distant future, Canada may become an independent country. Now, I have no sympathy with that view myself. I do not believe that in the lifetime of any man now living or in the lifetime of his sons or grandsons, Canada will be other than a portion of the British empire. That is my view, but I do not propose to quarrel with any man who in the exercise of his judgment thinks differently from me.

Mr. COWAN. What about your leader?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend says what about my leader. He had better say, what about the leaders of the Tory party. I say that the right of any man in this country to declare his opinion in favour of independence is absolutely beyond question, and while I have no sympathy however with it, I would say without the slightest hesitation, that were we not allowed to express our opinions in this matter, we would be unworthy of our position as Canadian citizens. Why, Sir, is it forgotten that a distinguished Canadian, a predecessor of my own in the office of the Minister of Finance, was so well known as an advocate of independence, that when, some years ago, the imperial authorities offered him imperial honours, he declined to accept those honours until he could make it clear that, in doing so, he would not cease to exercise his right to advocate, if he wished, the independence of Canada? I will go further. I say that when a man wants to advocate in a constitutional way, that which I would hate, the annexation of this country to the United States, he has a perfect right to do it. And, in doing it he would not cease to exercise his freedom as a British subject.

Mr. HUGHES. Might I suggest that the difference is in legislating for independence rather than speaking for it.

Mr. FIELDING. There has been no proposal anywhere to legislate for independence nor do I expect that my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) will ever see such legislation proposed in the parliament of Canada. But I was speaking of an extreme case, the extreme case of the advocate of annexation.

A great Englishman came over to Canada some years ago and settled in the city of Toronto. He is the one man whom I know in the Dominion of Canada who thinks that the manifest destiny of this Dominion is to become a portion of the American republic. I do not think I do him injustice when I state that he has long entertained that opinion. And those who know Goldwin Smith know that the thing he thinks is the thing he will speak. But, though he entertains this opinion, he is recognized as one of the noblest citizens of Canada, and when, a few days ago, he was stricken with illness, a telegram came from King Edward to inquire about the health of his old friend, Goldwin Smith. This is the freest country in the world: let us see to it that we make no attempt to muzzle any one, who, in a constitutional way desires to speak the thought that is in him.

Though I mention these things, I have no sympathy with independence, and I would not think of sympathizing with a man who advocates annexation. The point I want to make is that nothing is to be gained by attempting to muzzle the people of Canada and prevent them from advocating anything that, in their judgment, will make for the good of Canada.

We occasionally hear reference to South Africa and the dreadful things that happened in connection with the sending of the troops to that country. One would think that the South African war was the first one that had occurred to which the attention of the Canadian people had been drawn. It is not so. There was another war of considerable importance not many years ago. There came a moment when the heroic Gordon laid down his life and Khartoum fell. The heart of the empire was stirred; the heart of the whole British world was stirred. Australia felt the inspiration and thought that something might be done. And what of Canada? Did Canada move? It was not a Liberal government that was in power at that time, it was the Conservative government of Sir John Macdonald. And yet not a hand was lifted for the benefit of the empire, not a move was made. But individuals took action. General Laurie, a gallant Canadian, who represented my own constituency, and though one who differed from me in politics, always a good Canadian and a warm personal friend, went to Sir John Macdonald and said he would like to be instrumental in raising a force to go to the Sudan. Colonel Williams, a gallant Canadian who afterwards lost his life, tendered his services. What did the government do? Let them answer in their own words. On March 16, 1885, Mr. Blake asked the following question in this House:—

> Whether any offer has been made by the government of Canada, or whether any offer has been made by any individual through the government of Canada, to equip and send a military contingent to the Soudan at the cost of Canada or of individual Canadians? Whether any offer of military assistance at the cost of the British government has been made by the government, or by individuals? Whether any reply has been received to any such offers? and whether the correspondence will be laid on the table?

To these questions, Sir John Macdonald replied:

No offer has been made by the government of Canada to equip and send a military contingent to the Soudan at the cost of Canada or of individual Canadians. It is understood that some offers have been made by individuals. Some were sent direct to England, I believe; some were sent to the Governor General as an imperial officer; and some came to the Department of Militia—these were sent to the Governor General for his information. I am not aware that any offer of military assistance at the cost of the British government has been made by the government or by individuals.

That was the attitude of the government of the day. They had done nothing, absolutely nothing, though the heart of the empire was stirred in larger measure than it was later in the dark days of the South African war. The British government noticed the silence of this government, and Lord Derby, colonial secretary, cabled to Lord Lansdowne, Governor General, on February 10, 1885, as follows:

General Laurie and Colonel Williams' proposals to enroll and command regiments Canadian volunteers. Before further considering these offers, Her Majesty's government wish to know whether they are sanctioned and recommended by Dominion government; and if it should be possible to accept one only and not both, which should have preference.

Lord Lansdowne, Governor General, telegraphed to Lord Derby, colonial secretary, on February 12, 1885:

Government ready to sanction recruiting by Canada for service in Egypt or elsewhere. Forces should be specially enrolled from different corps of local battalions under Imperial Army Discipline Act. Laurie preferable to Williams. I would suggest brigade of three battalions (five hundred), each from marine provinces, Old Canada and the Northwest. Laurie might command brigade and Williams one battalion Melgund (now Lord Minto) would like to serve as brigade-major.

Now, I would like to call attention to the last sentence of this despatch:

Entire cost would fall on imperial exchequer.

Is my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) within sound of my voice? I would like to have heard him denouncing that despatch. I would like to hear him, now that I have read it, do justice to it in view of his words concerning the policy of the present government—' miserable, narrow, picayune provincialism '. Yes, said the Conservative government, you can organize some men who want to go; Laurie can get busy; put Williams on as his assistant; give Melgund a chance as brigade-major; but, for Heaven's sake, make no mistake—not a penny shall come out of the treasury of the Dominion.

I think the Liberal party can afford to compare its action in the South African war with the action of the loyal Tories in connection with the fall of Khartoum, and the death of grand Gordon. Well, though Canada was not moved, other parts of the empire were moved. We are told to compare the action of Canada in our time with the action of Australia. Well, let us make a comparison of action as between Canada and Australia over the fall of Khartoum. On February 12, 1885, the government of New South Wales forwarded a telegram to the agent-general of New South Wales in London, as follows:

Samuel, London.

This government offers to Her Majesty's government two battalions of our permanent field artillery, with ten sixteen-pounder guns properly horsed; also an effective and disciplined battalion of infantry five hundred strong. The artillery will be under command of Col. Roberts, R.A., the whole force under command of Col. Richardson. Commandant can undertake to land forces at Suakim within thirty days from embarkation. Reply at once.

WILLIAM B. D. DALLEY,
Secretary.

On February 13 following, Sir Saul Samuel, agent of New South Wales in London, wrote to the Secretary of State at the Colonial Office:

I have the honour to transmit for Lord Derby's information a further message in relation to the proposal of my government, in which it is stated that they will defray all expenses in connection with their offer.

Observe the difference. The New South Wales government tendered a force, and then, for fear there was any misunderstanding, they sent a message in which they said they would defray all expenses in connection with their offer. But when a telegram went from the Canadian government, they took good care to make the matter so clear that there would be no mistake: Laurie, Williams and Melgund can all have a shy at it, but not a penny out of the Canadian treasury. Let us see how this occasion was treated in Australia. A despatch from Sydney, New South Wales, on the 3rd of March, 1885, had the following:

To-day was observed as a public holiday in celebration of the departure of the New South Wales contingent for the Soudan. The event is regarded as not only one of the greatest in the annals of the colony, but as possessing a deep historic interest as the first occasion in which Australian troops have shared in the defence of the empire. From the date on which the colony's offer was accepted to the hour of the departure of the contingent public enthusiasm has been maintained at its utmost tension. The number of volunteers has reached six times the required strength of the force; and there has been a continuous flow of contributions, in money and in kind, from all quarters, and the Patriotic fund now amounts to £45,000. The troops were reviewed on Saturday by Lord

Augustus Loftus, Governor of New South Wales, in the presence of 50,000 spectators. On Sunday special services were held for the volunteers in the Anglican and Roman Catholic cathedrals, sermons being preached by the Primate and the Roman Catholic Archbishop.

To-day the streets forming the line of route from the barracks to the Circular quay, a distance of two miles, were lined by immense numbers of spectators, assembled from all parts, and forming a dense mass. The troops were escorted by 600 sailors and marines from the men-of-war stationed here, and by all the available local forces, and were accompanied by the Governor, the ministers, and the principal officials of the colony. The procession formed an imposing spectacle, and the popular enthusiasm was unbounded, the progress of the contingent being greeted with loud cheers and the frequent expression of good wishes from the assembled multitude.

That is what Australia did. Canada sent a message: 'Not a man, not a penny.' But there are other ways besides naval and military in which help may be given to the empire. Great Britain is in a much larger degree a nation of peace than she is a nation of war. She is a trading nation, and he who helps the trade of Great Britain is doing much to help the empire; that is what the Britisher thinks of it. Well, some years ago a good Conservative introduced a high tariff policy into this parliament, and among the criticisms of that measure in some quarters appeared the statement that a policy of that character designed to shut out British goods might tend to weaken British connection. Then the recognized organ of the Conservative party in the city of Toronto published in article in which it said that 'if this policy tended to weaken British connection, so much the worse for British connection.' That was the utterance of the recognized organ of the Conservative party at that time. Now, let us compare that with the Liberal record. This government had not been very long in office before it set itself to improve our commercial relations with Great Britain, and it brought down before this parliament what is known as the British preference. The Conservative government had put up the tariff in order to shut out British goods; this government endeavoured, so far as they could without damage to home industries, to give the British merchants a chance in Canada. And what then? Hon. gentlemen opposed the British preference from the beginning down to this moment.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. FIELDING. Who says: 'No'?

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not say: 'No,' I said: 'Oh.'

Mr. FIELDING. I am glad my hon. friend has explained, because when he says 'Oh,' I think that would be a confirmation of my statement; whereas if he had said 'No,' that would have been a denial of my statement. Yet, I repeat that the Conservative party has opposed the British preference from the year 1897 down to the present time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FIELDING. Are these 'Ohs,' or are they 'No's.'? I am afraid now some of these 'Oh's' may find their way into the 'Hansard' as 'No's.' Well, the hon. gentleman did not always oppose it in an open way, they kept up a sort of guerrilla warfare against the British preference. If they had a policy on the matter at all, it was that of demanding what they called a mutual preference. They were going to bargain, and huckster, and haggle with John Bull. They wanted to say to John Bull: 'You cannot get a preference in this country unless you first give us one.' Where was their loyalty? The hon. gentleman knows that if that policy had prevailed, there would have been no British preference in Canada to-day; and he knows also that the British preference granted by this Liberal government was regarded as an epoch-making event in the history of the British empire. He knows that in taking that step Canada led the way in which she has since been followed by New Zealand, in which she has been followed to a limited extent, and will be to a larger extent, by South Africa; he knows that the British preference brought down in this legislature many years ago has been regarded by every imperial statesman as a big contribution to imperial unity.

Mr. HUGHES. Would the Finance Minister be good enough to tell us why the preference was granted to Britain?

Mr. FIELDING. It was granted to Great Britain because it suited us and suited Great Britain as well. It was a relief to the Canadian taxpayer, whose taxes were reduced; it was an advantage to the British producer, because it gave him a better chance to send his goods into the Canadian market.

Mr. HUGHES. When this government sent an expedition to Washington, after preaching annexation to the United States for a great many years, and when their delegates were kicked out of the city, had their reception in Washington anything to do with the British preference?

Mr. FIELDING. When my hon. friend brings in the foolish story about preaching annexation, he shows what a weak position they occupy on that question.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Finance Minister deny that the fact that the delegation to Washington was turned out of the city empty-handed, had anything to do with the British preference?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not take the trouble to deny it. I have said that the Conservative party had kept up a guerrilla warfare against the British preference. But there came a time when they were not permitted to keep up their opposition in the shape of a guerrilla warfare, but when they were obliged to come out into the open and face the music. There came a time when, in consequence of this harping about mutual preference, we thought it well that the hon. gentlemen should declare where they stood on the British preference, and a private member of this House moved a resolution on motion to go into Supply. Let me read the words:

> This House regards the principle of 'British preference in the Canadian customs tariff as one which in its application has already resulted, and will, in an increasing measure, continue to result in material benefit to the mother country and to Canada, and which has already aided in welding, and must still more firmly weld together the ties which now bind them, and desires to express its emphatic approval of such British preference having been granted by the parliament of Canada.'

Is it possible that any man in this parliament was found to vote against that? Yes, the hon. gentlemen on the Speaker's left voted against it, and among them was my hon. friend the leader of the opposition today, (Mr. R. L. Borden). So we are prepared to compare our commercial policy——

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I wish to know whether the Finance Minister is to be permitted to deliver a budget speech on the motion for the third reading of the Naval Bill?

Mr. TURRIFF. It hurts, eh?

Mr. FIELDING. If I may be permitted to answer, I would say no.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Unless the Finance Minister is speaking to the point of order, I ask your ruling.

Mr. FIELDING. I wish to debate the point of order. I state that the hon. gentleman has put an improper proposition. He has asked if on the Naval Bill the Finance Minister is to be permitted to deliver a budget speech. I submit that there is no such question before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course the question of relevancy always applies, but this is a Bill concerning the relations of Canada to the empire, and in the eighty-four speeches to which I have had the honour of listening the range has been so wide that I would not like to interrupt the minister. Of course the rule of relevancy always applies.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I submit that when a members raises a point of order his individual rights are not interfered with by the fact that other members have broken the rule. I think we are entitled to have a decision as to whether or not this is relevant, because some of us are becoming very impatient at the length of time we are being kept here this session.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule of relevancy would of course apply, but I find in Bourinot that an illustration is always permitted. How far that illustration may go is for judgment at the time. I suppose the hon. minister will confine himself to the question before the House.

Mr. FIELDING. The quotation from the speech of the Prime Minister many years ago in regard to independence has no particular bearing on this question, but it has been repeated again and again, and we took no exception to it. It was legitimate. The sending of troops to South Africa has no particular bearing, but it was repeated fifty times, and we took no exception to it. It is perfectly legitimate We did not find fault and my hon. friends should not find fault now when a little wholesome history is being presented to them. We find that the other day——

Mr. COWAN. If history is the theme, might I ask the minister to deal with the subject of the repeal of the union which he advocated in 1886?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it would be perfectly in order, but if a man should talk of it as my hon. friend would like to he would do a very silly and foolish thing, and he would have his own answer. We settled that question in Nova Scotia where the people know a great deal more about it than my hon. friend. It is no disparagement to my hon. friend to say that I have fought that question out, I won't say with better men, but with stronger men than he is.

I have said, Sir, that Great Britain, as a trading nation, is more interested in the arts of peace than in the arts of war, and that the party or the government or the people who help to strengthen the trade relations with Great Britain are doing more for the empire than some others who are constantly shouting about loyalty. I noticed the other day in a Conservative paper a telegram from Montreal which mentions the name of an hon. gentleman who is not in the House at the present moment. The despatch reads:

> Montreal, March 8, (Special).—Do away with the British preference and contribute $3,000,000 to the imperial navy is the policy advocated by Rudolphe Forget, M.P. for Charlevoix, who left town this evening to give his vote on the navy Bill.

My hon. friend was rather more consistent on the question than some others have been. He certainly has not done much shouting about the British preference, and he would be in a better position to do away with it than some other gentlemen would be.

I noticed in connection with our German relations—and this is only an illustration for a minute—that a very estimable citizen of Toronto, whom we once had the honour of claiming as a fellow member of this House, my good friend, Mr. W. R. Brock, on the day it was announced that we had come to better trade relations with Germany, good strong Conservative that he was, announced that that arrangement was better than sending ten Dreadnoughts to Great Britain. If the re-establishing of friendly relations with Germany was better than sending ten Dreadnoughts to Britain, how many Dreadnoughts would measure the value that has been granted the empire by the British preference?

It was not a Liberal government which lagged behind in 1885; it was a Liberal government which did not lag behind, but which sent the troops to South Africa a few years ago, and we who know the whole history of that better than hon. gentlemen opposite, know how much the empire owes Sir Wilfrid Laurier in connection with that. It was a Liberal government that established the military college at Kingston; it is a Liberal government that will establish a naval college in Canada under this Bill. I have said, and I repeat that if you want to find the record of what has been done for the empire in Canada you have to find it in the records of the Liberal party.

We are submitting this naval scheme to parliament with the firm conviction that it is a scheme which will deserve and receive the support of the Canadian people. It maintains the right of the Canadian government to control Canadian affairs in naval and military matters in time of peace. It provides the machinery whereby we may, in the event of war, instantly turn over that navy to more active service as a part of the imperial navy. We say we retain the right to deal with our own ships, and who else should have that right? We say that the scheme is in harmony with the wishes of the imperial authorities, although it does not go as far as they would desire, because the cost of what they would desire is beyond what we think is within the reasonable means of the Canadian people. It is in harmony with the best judgment of the House of Commons as expressed at a moment when it had withdrawn itself from partisanship, and was prepared to recognize its great responsibilities to the nation. Not only is it in harmony with the view of the Liberal party —I have no right, perhaps, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition may say it is presumption on my part to say what the Conservative party thought of it, but I will read from a Conservative authority, a high authority, a man who says that this policy is in harmony with all that is good for the Canadian people, and all that is desired by the British people. The quotation is not new, but there are some things that are good enough to bear repetition. I shall read from the remarks of Mr. A. W. Atwater, K.C., of Montreal, an ex-Conservative minister of the province of Quebec, who has recently returned from England. I am quoting from that good Conservative newspaper, the Montreal 'Gazette' and so there is no danger that the thing was turned the wrong way:

What the Englishman admires is a fellow who can stand up for himself, and what I found they admire in Canada is the effort she is making to build up a fleet of her own. They admire and respect the capacity of Canada and any nation or dependency to look after itself. Hitherto there has been a patronizing air about the English with regard to Canada, because they knew that if we got into trouble they would have to look after us, but if Canada gets her own navy and can look after herself that will all change. The sooner we get our own navy the better—it is a necessity that must come, and there is no use delaying it. We must look after ourselves in a naval way just as we do in military matters. There is no doubt that is the feeling amongst the English people, and they regard it is a matter quite outside the domain of party politics, as it should be.'

So, said Mr. A. W. Atwater, K.C., ex-provincial treasurer, who returned on Monday evening from a two months' stay in England, during which he witnessed the general elections, and had ample opportunity to gauge public feeling on this and other important matters.

The general opinion I got during my stay in England,' said Mr. Atwater, 'was that we should earn the respect of the people of the mother country more by showing our ability to defend ourselves than we could by any mere money contribution, unless it was to a very large amount and a permanent contribution. And that would not commend itself to many Canadians, nor could it be advocated by any party here. The opinion of all observers of imperial affairs was that they would have more respect for any portion of the empire which prepared to defend itself than for one which proposed to give a more or less—probably less—adequate sum toward the upkeep of the imperial navy.

'And with this I quite agree,' said Mr. Atwater. 'As a matter of keeping our own self-respect, as well as the respect of the mother country, we should secure our own navy, and the sooner we get it in good working order the better. It will take a long time to do this, even with the assistance of England's enormous experience in naval affairs. And it seems to me that Canadians should join in this work irrespective of all party affiliations.

This naval project, said Mr. Atwater, was attracting much attention in England, and the people there were struck with the idea of the overseas dominions building ships and manning them with their own crews for imperial defence. In just the same way the mother country was deeply impressed with the manner in which Canada and the other Dominions sent their soldiers to fight in South Africa, where a mere money contribution would either have gone unnoticed, or been regarded as a pusillanimous manner of accepting the duty of defending the empire. Great Britain was very wealthy, and a contribution of even ten million pounds would be a mere matter of empire bookkeeping, and would not tend to reduce their taxation. But actual physical participation in the empire burden fired the British imagination, and excited their admiration.

Mr. Atwater properly called attention to the manner in which Canada responded to the need of the empire in South Africa. Then, as now, no doubt, there could have been found men, who would have said: 'Send over a few million dollars and put it in the hands of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.' Speaking from memory, we spent some two or three millions on that occasion. Now, suppose we had sent these two or three million dollars over, as the leader of the opposition proposes in the case of the navy, and dumped it into the imperial treasury, we might have got a vote of thanks for it in some way, but would it have made any lasting impression? It might have compromised with the British government for the moment, it might have satisfied these people who think that everything can be done by the payment of money, but the glorious story of Paardeburg would never have been written.

For generations we have had the practical control of our military affairs, and who shall say that it has weakened our ties with the empire? On the contrary, it is an instrument drawing us closer to the empire. Every step we take in military affairs is taken in co-operation with and under the advice of the highest imperial officers. As it has been with the army, so it will be with the navy. This Canadian navy, beginning in its modest way, will be established in harmony with all the traditions of the Canadian people; it will prove to be an instrument binding us more closely to the empire, and assisting us to do that duty which every loyal Canadian should desire to see performed.

Mr. EDMUND BRISTOL (Centre Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I would hardly have thought that at this late period of the session, and at this particular stage of the Naval Bill, the Minister of Finance would have felt it his duty to deliver to the House that bottled-up campaign speech which he so enthusiastically declaimed. And, I am more than surprised that an hon. gentleman of his learning and his position in this House should have been guilty of what was described by the Minister of the Interior the other day, of putting into that speech more inexactitudes than has characterized any other speech that has been delivered on this subject on the other side of the House. I shall first deal with one point of view which the Minister of Finance emphasized with almost clamorous force. He started out with the statement that in 1902 the Liberal party had laid down a naval policy which they had stuck to to this day, and the hon. gentleman was persistent in his declaration that the Liberals had always a consistent naval policy since 1902, and that this Bill was the outcome of it. I feel somewhat diffident in calling the attention of the House to facts which are as well known to the Minister of Finance as they are to me, but in view of the campaign speech he has delivered, it is only fair to put on record the facts which prove conclusively how erroneous is the statement of the hon. gentleman in this respect. On page 18 of the proceedings of the imperial conference of 1902, I find a memorandum from the First Lord of the Admiralty, which says:

> Sir Wilfrid Laurier informs me that His Majesty's government of the Dominion of Canada are contemplating the establishment of a local naval force in the waters of Canada, but they were not able to make any offer of assistance analogous to those enumerated above.

It is well known to every British subject who takes an interest in the British empire, that in 1902, Australia and New Zealand were giving liberal contributions to imperial defence, and particularly to the naval policy of Great Britain, and that Canada was doing nothing. Here we have the declaration that at this particular juncture the Canadian government was unable to do anything at all for the naval defence of the empire, because they were going to establish a local naval force. Well, we certainly did not hear anything about that on the floor of this House. There was no resolution moved by the Liberal party in regard to it; the matter was never in any sense brought before parliament, and yet the Minister of Finance seems to think us guilty of negligence because we did not ourselves introduce the controversy into Canadian politics. Speaking for myself, I can say that if in 1902, the right hon. gentleman had introduced a policy of local naval defence, I would have considered it a perfectly proper policy at that time, and I would still think so were it not that I believe that at this moment the emergencies of the British empire are such that a different policy is necessary in the interests of the whole empire. And, it is because this question of emergency has been lightly brushed aside that to-day we have been listening to this extraordinary speech of the Minister of Finance and considering this extraordinary Naval Bill. Now, in 1902 there was a memorandum by the Canadian ministers concerning defence, and I shall read from page 73 a sentence from that memorandum, as follows:

But while for these reasons the Canadian ministers are obliged to withhold their assent to the propositions of the admiralty and the War Office, they fully appreciate the duty of the Dominion, as it advances in population and wealth, to make more liberal outlay for those necessary preparations of self-defence which every country has to assume and bear.

That statement that they were prepared: 'to make more liberal outlay for those necessary preparations of self-defence which every country has to assume and bear', is the keynote of the Liberal policy. Their view is confined to the coasts of Canada, and they cannot take in the broad imperial view of Canada as a part of the empire. They are not able to see that if the British empire goes down Canada goes down, and if the British empire stands Canada stands. And this policy has so blinded the eyes of the Liberal party that they have not, with all due deference to the statements of the Minister of Finance as to their loyalty, been able to grasp the present trend of events which is destined to end in some kind of union between the empire, and the other British dominions beyond the seas.

Now, let us see how consistent hon. gentlemen opposite have been in regard to the naval policy. Not merely did they repudiate in 1907 the policy of making any contribution to the British navy, but they absolutely repudiated their alleged policy of building a local fleet, or having anything to do with naval matters. That is the essential point; and yet the Minister of Finance complains that we do not attack him because he has taken two absolutely inconsistent positions in reference to this matter. I am going to read what was said in 1907, because my hon. friend appears to have forgotten it. Mr. Smartt's resolution is to be found at page 541 of the proceedings of the colonial conference of 1907. This is what he said before moving it:

Would I be in order in moving this naval resolution after the discussion yesterday? I do not think it will take any time because it is a resolution which requires no remarks to make it acceptable to the conference.

This hon. gentleman, being a loyal British subject, had the curious idea that everybody would unite in support of his resolution, and that, therefore, there need be no discussion of it, and now we will see what this loyal imperialist thought should be accepted by all. Here is the resolution:

That this conference, recognizing the vast importance of the service rendered by the navy to the defence of the empire and the protection of its trade, and the paramount importance of continuing to maintain the navy in the highest possible state of efficency, considers it to be the duty of the Dominions beyond the seas to make such contribution towards the upkeep of the navy as may be determined by their local legislatures—the contribution to take the form of a grant of money, the establishment of local naval defence, or such other services, in such manner as may be decided upon after consultation with the admiralty and as would best accord with their varying circumstances.

Now, I am not going to read all the discussion that took place on this resolution, but I am going to read what the right hon. the First Minister said in reference to it, at page 542:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say, so far as Canada is concerned, we cannot agree to the resolution, We took the ground many years ago that we had enough to do in our respect in that country before committing ourselves to a general claim. The government of Canada has done a great deal in that respect. Our action was not understood, but I was glad to see that the First Lord of the admiralty admitted we had done much more than he was aware of. It is impossible, in my humble opinion, to have a uniform policy on this matter; the disproportion is too great between the mother country and the colonies. We have too much to do otherwise; in the mother country, you must remember, they have no expenses to incur with regard to public works; whereas, in most of the colonies, certainly in Canada, we have to tax ourselves to the utmost of our resources in the development of our country, and we could not contribute, or undertake to do more than we are doing in that way. For my part, if the motion were pressed to a conclusion, I should have to vote against it.

Further down he said:

It can be passed if there is a majority. For my part, I must vote against it.

So we find the right hon. the First Minister expressing himself as absolutely opposed to the establishment of a local naval defence, or anything else that might help the British empire as such. And in the face of this documentary evidence we have the Finance Minister making a campaign speech intended for distribution among the English-speaking Liberals of this country, and stating that for the last 8 years the Liberal party have had one policy on naval matters. Of course, we have already had in the speech of the First Minister the necessary material for the province of Quebec. The points that are essential to secure the good-will of the people of Quebec have been particularly emphasized in two regards. In the French press it has been pointed out that this naval force is a maritime police; one of the hon, members of this House has declared himself in favour of Canadian independence; and the hon. the Postmaster General has cited some eighteen cases of so-called colonies which have had petty navies. Not one of them, so far as I could see, was a colony at all, and no doubt some of his compatriots desired that the condition of these petty independent states should be the fate of Canada. It was a very unhappy illustration. The position of hon. gentlemen opposite is that as this navy is under the control of the parliament of Canada, and, as the Liberal party controls the Canadian parliament, therefore it is our navy. In certain speeches made, in my judgment, for French Canadian consumption, these particular points of view have been emphasized, just as the other points of view have been emphasized by the Finance Minister for the consumption of English-speaking electors. Just as the Liberal party had two policies on the school question, one for the west, and another for Quebec, and just as they had two policies on the trade question, free trade for the west, and protection for the commercial centres of Canada, so they have two policies on this naval question.

I think the whole of this matter can be compressed into a very few words. If the navy of Great Britain is supreme on the seas, then this order in council navy is absolutely useless and unnecessary. I do not believe there is an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who can controvert that proposition. On the other hand, if Great Britain loses the supremacy of the seas, the money spent on this navy is wasted, and worse than wasted. You can talk for hours, but it boils down in its final result to that proposition. It was in view of the absolute uselessness of the expenditure of this money that we made a proposition, or a suggestion that there being an emergency, there being a case where the supremacy of the British navy was imperilled, it was the duty of Canada not merely to look after her shore defence, something that has been unnecessary except for a few vagrant poacher-fishermen, but to take her part in a reasonable measure in what is the duty of every citizen of the British empire. Now, I am satisfied that the people of Canada want what is fair in this matter; they only want to know what is fair in order to do it; but I do complain that this government have absolutely thrown on one side of as of no importance speeches made by the leaders of public opinion in England, on both sides of politics, on the conditions which have induced the British people to hold the Colonial Imperial Conference, and which have induced Australia and New Zealand at once to build Dreadnoughts in Great Britain.

Now if I might be permitted, I would like to call the attention of the House not in detail but with some reasonable fulness to the reasons why we, as a party, believe that we should have followed and should follow the position taken by New Zealand and Australia in at once going to the aid of the British empire, and why we are opposed to an absolutely useless expenditure of public money as suggested by my hon. friend opposite. Now, Mr. Speaker, there may be certain things that anybody can controvert, because he can say those are mere statements? But I want to call the attention of this House to the German Naval Bill, the terms of which have been fully stated here and the facts of which are fully known? I want to call the attention of this House to the German navy league, with over a million members with its enormous expenditure, with the brother of the German Emperor at its head, with the German aristocracy as sponsors, with its efforts to inspire the people of Germany as a mass, with a love for their navy—the navy league which has been chiefly instrumental in Germany in passing naval Bills and a programme for the building the largest navy in the world, a navy of such magnitude as no country prior to the passing of that Bill had even contemplated. These are facts which are incontrovertible. I want to call attention to the enormous increase from year to year in the German naval estimates. I want to call your attention to the fact that Germany has been, during the last two years, borrowing money in order to accelerate the building of her fleet and to increase her naval programme. I want to call to your attention the statements of Sir Edward Grey, Mr. Asquith and Mr. McKenna and on the other side of British politics, those of Mr. Balfour and those who support him, and Lord Roseberry who took practically an independent position. I want to recall the fact that it was left to the members on the Government side of this House to say that those gentlemen were April fools and March hares and that men like Lloyd George and Mr. Churchill should be followed in reference to this matter, rather than the statesmen who for years have commanded the respect of the people on both sides of English politics. I want to call your attention to what was said by the Liberal organ in the province of Ontario which from time to time endeavours, notwithstanding what the government may do, to advocate what it believes to be the views of the English speaking Liberals, of the province of Ontario.

For instance, on March 24, 1909, the Toronto 'Globe' stated:—

> But as a matter of fact war is in progress. The contest in ship building is war. If the mother country were engaged in a deadly conflict, Canadians could not get across the ocean fast enough to the aid of the motherland. But we must remember that our aid is as much needed now as if a physical war in stead of a shipbuilding war were on. It is Canada's duty from every point of view, from our affection for the land of our fathers, and for our own self interest to take prompt and practical action.

At that time the 'Globe' was advocating the policy which has been advocated by those on this side of the House, and I want just to read another quotation from the 'Globe' of March 26, in reference to the same matter:—

The sort of vessel that should be built is fixed by the circumstances. The competition now raging between Great Britain and Germany is in the direction of first-class battleships. If Canada were to build a little fleet of wasps and hornets it would have no moral effect on the situation at all. What we would like Canada to do would be to manifast by a veritable act that in this competition of the fleets she ranges herself proudly and gladly by the side of the mother country.

I could read many more similar quotations from the 'Globe' newspaper and in the line of the policy which the opposition have advocated in regard to this measure. I am not emphasizing that, but my hon. friend the Finance Minister has been reading a portion of the speech of the hon. leader of the opposition. And I say that had he read the whole of the speech and all the speeches which the leader of the opposition has made on this matter, I am sure he would find that they consistently support the views which he has advocated all along. They would show conclusively that the Conservative party have not departed in any possible way from the resolution of March 29, 1909. It would be idle for me to deal at length with that matter when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) dealt with it in a celebrated speech in this House. I regret to say that members on the other side of the House assert that we have departed from the resolution of March 29, 1909. I say that the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) showed most conclusively that the Conservative party had been consistent throughout, and that it was the Liberal party who had departed from the terms of the resolution. Now to come back to this question of emergency, I have read the Toronto 'Globe' and I have shown the circumstances to a certain extent which surrounded parliament on March 29, 1909, and also that at that time speeches were made in and out of the parliament of Great Britain by the distinguished gentlemen I have mentioned as leaders of thought on both sides of English politics. The last word spoken by Sir Edward Grey, in January, 1910, was that there was not one word to take away from what he had said in March, 1909. Now British statesmen do not go around the world complaining and begging and saying to their fellow British subjects throughout the world, please come and help us. That is not the British style. The British style is exactly as it was expressed by several of those who took part in the imperial press conference, Lord Roseberry among others, that as Britons, they recognized their obligation to defend Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa with their last drop of blood and with the last pound they possessed. But they said we are not sure that that is going to be enough. We do not come to you as beggars, but we place the facts before you as loyal British subjects, and it is for you to do voluntarily and as you may please as subjects of the British empire. I want to say one thing more on this question of emergency, and in my humble judgment, it is a most important fact as showing exactly what is going on, and that is that the British naval estimates for the present year are £41,000,000, £6,000,000 more than last year, and the largest ever known in the history of any country in the world. Now does anybody believe that England should want to spend such an enormous amount of money when it wants money for the relief of the aged and for other purposes. Does any one believe that a Liberal administration would have spent one pound more for the naval defence of the British empire, unless they were absolutely compelled to do so by the necessities of the case. They were compelled to chose whether they would carry out certain matters of social reform to which Mr. Lloyd George and other members of the party were pledged, or whether they would defend the British empire with their last pound and their last drop of blood. They have shown by the naval estimates of this year that the emergency is not passed, that it is going on with increasing force, and the question for Canada to-day is not whether they want a local naval policy but whether they want to take their fair share of the burdens of the empire.

And so, I say, the hon. gentleman has been putting up one straw man after another, and has been demolishing them to his own absolute satisfaction, and that of his less well-informed followers. I think it necessary therefore, to take up another point which he criticised at great length for the benefit of his English speaking Liberals who would not read anything else but what he says, and that is the point that the government did what the admiralty told them to. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is what you would call a half truth. They came to the admiralty with their finger in their mouth and said: How much can we get for ten cents? How much can we get for five cents? And how little can we get off with, anyhow—like a child in a candy shop, ready to offer, but a very small sum, and desperately anxious to get as much as possible for it. That was exactly the attitude of the Canadian government. But that is not the attitude, I say of the Canadian people. When the Canadian people realize—as it is the duty of every public man in this country to inform himself on the facts, and to instruct the people—that there is a war of construction going on to-day with Germany which, if it be lost, will be as fatal in its results as a battle on the sea—they will take their part in that warfare, and they will not build some useless boats for coast defence which would never be called upon, and, if called upon, could not be used. Now, I want to get back to the statement of the Finance Minister as to the admiralty memorandum. I refer to page 23 of this report of the imperial conference as published in Canada. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) read certain sections of the memorandum. But these sentences show only that the British statesmen were thoroughly conversant with the point of view of these particular Liberal statesmen and the party they represented, and thoroughly aware that the only thing they could see was the coast of Canada. The admiralty set out these reasons before they gave advice, just to let these hon. gentlemen know that they thoroughly understood their picayune, provincial policy. And, having stated that, the first thing in the memorandum which the admiralty gave by way of advice and suggestion—you must remember they are not commanding; had no thought of commanding—is in clause 5:

> In the opinion of the admiralty, the Dominion government desirous of creating a navy should aim at forming a distinct fleet unit; and the smallest unit is one which, while manageable in time of peace, is capable of being used in its component parts in time of war.

It goes on then to say that a fleet unit, in the opinion of the admiralty, should consist of at least one armoured cruiser, and so on. Then, in paragraph 11 it says:

> As the armoured cruiser is the essential part of the fleet unit, it is important that an 'Indomitable' of the 'Dreadnought' type should be the first vessel to be built in commencing the formation of a fleet unit.

Now, I leave it to any man in this country who does not sit on the other side of the House if the Conservative policy in building, or giving money to build, a Dreadnought or two Dreadnoughts as parts of fleet units is not the policy which the admiralty, in fact, suggest in their memorandum but exactly the contrary policy to what the British admiralty suggest. There can be no controversy on that point. The memorandum fortunately was not mutilated; we get it in its entirety. In the following pages we get the discussion—part of it, such portion of the edited discussion as it is thought advisable to give to the people of Canada, and not the whole as in the case of the memorandum. So I unhesitatingly declare that when these hon. members on the other side say that they are carrying out the views of the admiralty, the memorandum which they themselves have submitted shows that what they state is absolutely contrary to the fact; it shows that what they were advised to do was to construct either a fleet unit—and I do not care whether for the Atlantic or for the Pacific; the memorandum does not say, and it is not material to the argument—or two fleet units. And the admiralty advise them, in aiming to build a fleet unit, first to build a ship that would be of some use, a Dreadnought. I am not quarrelling with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding), because he wants to build a Dreadnought in Canada. The Conservative party has always been a Canadian party, and out for Canadian interests. I will not go into the record of the Liberal party in this matter. But we have been treated to an extraordinary tirade on the virtues of Liberalism in this country by the hon. Finance Minister. He seems to forget that, but for the Conservative party we should practically have had no Canada. The leader of their party was not one of the fathers of confederation, but one who wrote pamphlets against confederation. He forgets that when we on this side were putting through the Canadian Pacific railway, enlarging the canals, improving and expanding the transportation system of Canada, every move for the upbuilding of Canada was opposed by the party of which he is a member. He forgets the blue ruin speeches that were made by Sir Richard Cartwright, and the letters that were published by him in the British newspapars to injure the credit of Canada. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) seems to forget, or to wish to be allowed to forget, what he himself was doing in 1885. He has complained that the Conservative party of that day were lax in their efforts for the empire, but I want to know if any one on the Liberal side did what Sir Charles Tupper did later, as leader of the opposition in 1899—offered to back the government in sending troops to the war for the aid of the British empire in the Soudan. Not only did no member of the Liberal party make such an offer, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) himself, being premier of Nova Scotia during the time of the Khartoum affair, and the Soudan war was such an imperialist that he would not observe the first of July, would not permit the schools of his province to be closed on the first of July to mark the day as a public holiday, would not permit the British flag to be flown on the first of July. And I have here a resolution that was passed at his suggestion and upon his motion in 1886 in the House of assembly of Nova Scotia, the time when he complains that we were not ready to send troops to the Soudan. Let me read a part of that resolution. I do not read it because I would deny the hon. gentleman the right to change his views. But I do not like him to assume the cocksure manner he does, as if he and his people were the only ones who had correct ideas as to the duties of Canada. His views of the best policy for Nova Scotia towards Canada in 1886 were as narrow as his views are to-day concerning the duty that Canada owes the empire. I have here the debates and proceedings of the assembly and council of Nova Scotia for 1886. I will not read the whole resolution, but this is part of it:

That it now appears, as it did then, that the interests of the people of the several maritime provinces now incorporated with Canada are in most respects identical.

That the members of the branches of the legislature of Nova Scotia are of opinion and do hereby declare their belief, that the financial and commercial interests of the people of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island would be advanced by these provinces withdrawing from the Canadian federation and uniting under one government.

Mr. BEATTIE. Whose is that?

Mr. BRISTOL. The hon. Finance Minister of this Dominion, then premier of Nova Scotia.

That if it be found impossible after negotiations for that purpose, to secure the co-operation of the respective governments of the sister provinces in withdrawing from the confederation and entering into a maritime union, then this legislature deems it absolutely necessary that Nova Scotia, in order that its railways and other public works and services may be extended and maintained as the requirements of the people need them, its industry properly fostered, its commerce invigorated and expanded, and its financial interests placed upon a sound basis such as was the case previous to confederation, should ask permission from the imperial parliament to withdraw from the union with Canada and return to the state of a province of Great Britain, with full control over all fiscal laws and tariff regulations within the province, such as prevailed previous to confederation.

Now, I wish to read two paragraphs of the very lengthy speech of the hon. gentleman which showed his view of Canada. And he was a pretty well-grown man then—able to be premier of Nova Scotia, and old enough to have had a good deal of common sense and breadth of views:

We had better bear our full portion of the existing debt than to go on bearing the increasing debt of the Dominion. Immense expeditures of public money have been incurred for the construction of roads in the far west, while the roads of the lower provinces remain practically undeveloped. One would think we were an old and finished country in which nothing remains to be done in the way of public works, and that our money could well afford to be spent in the far west. We know that this is not true, that the development of railroads is more needful to us than to the great provinces of the west, because the great provinces in the west are not needful to the confederation. . . . I believe that the people of Nova Scotia are in favour of a repeal of the union, and I am not afraid to submit that issue to them. I have found men who say, we are in accord with you; we are in favour of repeal; but we do not see how you are to accomplish it. I admit the difficulty, but I think it is a difficulty not an impossibility. . . . For myself, it is my honest conviction that this union has not been satisfactory, that it will not make our people happy and prosperous, and that it is our duty to place ourselves on record, and then to let the people decide, and to stand or fall on that issue.

Mr. Speaker, how times do change. Here is an hon. gentleman reading a lecture to the Conservative party on their lack of loyalty, and generally on their lack of breadth of view, and how badly they have dealt with the British empire, and he says to the people of Canada, as Premier of Nova Scotia: The west is of no use to us, we should not spend money building railroads up there when we have Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to look after. At that time Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had the Intercolonial railway, they had all the railway communication necessary for their development. However, that is for illustration, and it is not worthy of enlargement except as dealing with the general issue which the hon. gentleman has raised. I am not impugning the personal loyalty of the hon. gentleman, or of any one on that side of the House. But I say that if they bring down a policy, if their programme is one that is going to tend, in its ultimate result, either to make Canada an independent country or to separate Canada from the British empire, it is perfectly legitimate for us to bring such separation policy to the attention of the people of this country, especially when some hon. gentlemen opposite are in sympathy with that point of view. We know that one gentleman opposite has had the courage to express that view, and there may be others who in their hearts feel the same way. The Finance Minister has told us that that is not his point of view, and I am willing to accept his statement. I believe the Finance Minister is now loyal to the British flag. But we cannot forget that the First Minister of this country has held entirely different views and expressed them in 1891. we have had the First Minister abusing British diplomacy, and arguing in favour of Canadian independence as the one goal of his ambition. Now, when the First Minister made that argument he was not a young man in the exuberance of his youth, expressing half-baked opinions; he was 48 or 50 years of age, an age when a man should have settled opinions if he is ever going to have any. I want to say that if the right hon. the First Minister does not now feel and does not now believe as he did in 1891 he could well have said so; in justice to himself, in justice to the great people whom he represents, and whom he adorns, he could at least have said to the people of Canada that he had changed his views. But so long as that statement stands on the public records of this country, on the pages of 'Hansard,' and so long as it has never been disclaimed, so long is it open to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to express their well grounded fear that the policy of the Prime Minister is one which will tend and ultimately lead to the separation of Canada from the British empire and to the independence of this country which the right hon. gentleman has stated to be the goal of his ambition. It is their duty to call the attention of their fellow subjects to the views the First Minister entertained at the time he was about 50 years of age, and which he has not so far denied, and which, if they were carried out, would lead to the dismemberment of the British empire.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there was another matter on which the Finance Minister waxed eloquent, and on which my good friend the Minister of Militia and Defence, when he was making his speech—why, I almost thought something was going to happen to him because he emphasized it with a vigour to which he is altogether unaccustomed; he stretched out his hands and he asked in a tone of consternation: Are you going to send $25,000,000 of Canadian money over to England? Why you would have thought he was going to drop dead at the very idea. Since when has it become a crime for Canada to buy in England what she at present cannot build for herself. England is our best customer. England, a country against which we had a balance of trade last year of $61,000,000, a country which buys more goods from us than any other country in the world; England, which for over a century and a half has been helping us to build up this nation; England, that has spent so many millions of pounds in fortifications for the protection of this country; England, that allows us to make our commercial treaties; England, who has afforded us military and naval protection for so many years, relieving us of an immense cost on that account, when even the peace loving people of the United States are spending on an average for pensions and a navy, $30,000,000 a year for every eight millions of people or $300,000,000 for their whole population.

And here is Canada in the opinion of the Finance Minister and Minister of Militia groaning over the prospect of spending $3,000,000 a year for national defence; and hon. gentlemen opposite nearly die of apoplexy when it is suggested that, in a case of emergency, when there is a war of naval construction going on upon which the unassailable supremacy of the British navy and the life of the empire depends. Canada should stand with New Zealand and Australia in contributing Dreadnoughts and show to Germany that we are one with the rest of the empire, that we believe in one fleet, and that we will fight under one flag and for one union. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is not all, that is not even the amusing part of it to my mind. Supposing you wanted a gun to shoot a man with, would you go and buy a row boat? Now, what is needed to-day and now is Dreadnoughts, and how are we going to get them? We cannot at this moment build them in Canada. But we won't spend the money of Canada for a Dreadnought, which is needed, but we are going to buy some other kind of a boat which is not needed. Here are British statesmen on both sides of politics saying that Dreadnoughts alone will count; here is the First Lord of the Admiralty saying that it is vitally essential that we should aim at a fleet unit and that a Dreadnought is the first thing to build—and that the colonial fleets should be under one general command in time of war, and here are the people of Canada still discussing this matter at the very moment that a crisis is existing as to the naval supremacy of the world, and we will not buy in England a weapon, viz.: a Dreadnought which is needed, but we are going to buy something different which is not needed. Did any one ever hear anything more absolutely illogical and absurd? Of course, if hon. gentlemen opposite have any guarantee that Germany is going to sit down peaceably and wait for thirty years until our navy matures, why then we need not be in such haste. But if we are to believe the statements of English statesmen, and the incontrovertible facts I have just indicated, of what earthly use will be our little fleet of wasps and hornets? Now, let us see for a moment what Canada has at stake? Let us see what the unassailable supremacy of the British fleet means to us. We have got 15,000 miles of coast line to defend; we have got an export trade of about $260,000,000 and an import trade of $300,000,000 to defend; we have got, according to our shipping returns, 93,372 tons of shipping to defend: we have our constitutional rights and liberties as granted under the British North America Act to defend; we have a trade with the mother country now which shows a balance in our favour of $61,000,000 to defend; we have to defend our commercial and transportation interests, for the development of which we have borrowed a billion dollars from England, and for which we are borrowing $200,000,000 annually; we have the financial credit of Canada to defend; we have the prestige of British connection to defend; we have to maintain uninterrupted the peace of this country in order to enable us to carry out our national development without war and bloodshed; we have our national honour and self respect to defend; we have our national existence as a free British people to defend; and we have our homes, our people and our country to defend.

Will any gentleman in this House tell me that this so-called fleet of wasps and hornets will protect any of these things in the slighest degree? If you want to get at the meat of this matter you must keep before you, and the people of Canada must keep before them, what fate confronts Canada if the British navy fails? That is the point. What have we got at stake if the British navy loses? We have everything. I have indicated in outline everything that appeals to the manhood, the self-respect and decency of every man in this country. I charge the Liberal party of this country and its leaders with misleading the people of Canada by brushing to one side all the statements which have been made throughout this debate, quotations from British statesmen and others, on the emergency that exists in the relations between England and Germany. I charge them with not informing themselves, as statesmen, they could do of the real facts and of not disclosing the true facts to the people of this country and the facts to-day are even worse than in March, 1909. It is esential for the argument of the other side that they should make light of the real facts and of the real emergency because what they propose is of no use for the emergency that confronts the empire. But the English people are not squealing, they are alive to what their duty is and are going to defend this empire of which they are proud.

But does that make it any less the duty of Canada to do her fair share? And the people of Canada are ready to do their share?

It was amusing to hear the hon. minister speak about their sending men to South Africa. There is no man in this country who is informed on public affairs who does not know that the Conservative party, and, thank God, the people of Canada as a whole forced the hands of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his government. It was a spontaneous outburst on the part of the Canadian people which swept the government of the day off their feet, and I am glad they had the good sense to obey that spontaneous outburst. But, does my hon. friend and those with him value money more highly than they do life? It would appear so. They were willing to send three regiments to take part in a war in South Africa, but they are not willing to spend a dollar in England for a Dreadnought, which is the only weapon that will help the British people to-day. When it comes to money they are very canny and very close, but human life—oh, that is an incident. I cannot emphasize, I wish I had the power to put more fully and plainly than I have done what in my humble opinion I believe to be the duty of the Canadian people at this juncture. I am not advocating this as a matter of party politics, I am trying to place the exact record before the people as to what the admiralty, the very best admiralty the world possesses, wanted the people of Canada to do. They wanted a fleet unit, and if they could not get that they wanted a Dreadnought and said it in unmistakeable terms. My hon. friend did not take this point, but the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) laboured for hours over the question of Canadian autonomy. You would have thought that the gift of a dollar to buy a Dreadnought, which, when we were able to man it with Canadian sailors would have been given to us to man as surely as will the Australian Dreadnought be given to Australia, would destroy our autonomy. When Australia offered to build a Dreadnought in England, England said: We will be glad to accept your offer, but as soon as you are ready to man it we will give it to you. Does any one believe they would treat Canada differently, that we would not man the Dreadnoughts with Canadian admirals and sailors as fast as we were able? Thank heaven we have Canadians in the British navy to-day well capable of handling a Dreadnought and we have many men in Canada who would soon be able to do so. There is no Conservative who does not wish that state of affairs to exist, that there should be Dreadnoughts manned by Canadians and built in Canada. But they wish first, last and all the time to do their share as citizens of the British empire, to protect the great empire to which we are all so proud to belong.

With reference to autonomy, the First Minister seemed to forget that we are not a nation, although he delights to say we are, in any other sense than that we are developing a national spirit and as men want to do our share in the world. We have our rights to-day under the British North America Act. Does anybody in this country suggest or believe that if we choose to devote money to the aid of the sufferers in Paris or in the California earthquake, or to build Dreadnoughts in England we are not exercising the power of responsible government under the British North America Act, or that we could derogate from that Act no matter what we did? That Act was passed by the imperial parliament at our instance and if we are becoming a nation to-day it is simply because we are developing a national spirit on broad lines and not because we have the power to extend what the British North America Act gave to us. We had a long disertation on this matter and on the rights of responsible government in this country and to hear the First Minister, one would think that the British North America Act had been wrested with violence from the British empire, that we had almost had to go to England and rebel. Instead of that we actually drew up that Act, it was a voluntary Act on the part of the empire and remains to-day in its full force and validity as the charter of liberties of the Canadian people. I would not deal with this question of autonomy seriously for a moment had it not been that the First Minister spoke for over three hours on it. Let us look at the matter from another point of view. Australia and New Zealand, since 1902, have been giving money to help keep up the British fleet, and does any one suggest that Australia and New Zealand have lost their autonomy in any respect? Has any one suggested that here to-day? The thing is ridiculous except for the dignity of the right hon. gentleman who advocates it. In 1909, the British empire came to the aid of Australia and said that the support of a fleet unit by Australia was too much at present and that they would give Australia £250,000 sterling to help them with their fleet. Does any one suggest that the British empire has lost its autonomy because it helped Australia run its fleet? That money is spent by the people of Australia. It is not the hard working British tax-payer who is spending a dollar of that money, he is handing it loyally over to Australia and saying: Boys learn how to run a fleet. And that is the attitude that would have been taken towards us if we had followed the advice of the admiral and built a Dreadnought first and we would have done something of use to the empire and to Canada.

This is a matter as to which the Canadian people, above all things, desire to be informed. The Postmaster General brushed aside all the statements of English statesmen with a wave of his hand and said they were the efforts of feverish imaginations, all the solid facts which have been brought forward throughout this debate as showing the true position between Germany and England, such as the open declaration for German sea supremacy contained in the German Naval Bill. The fact that the German warships are being built with coal bunkers only sufficient to enable them to be operated in the north sea—and if on the north sea against whom can they be operated but England? Germany does not need a navy against France.

If there is one section of our people in this country who should joyously hold up both hands for the Conservative party it is our French compatriots. German aggression to-day is not different from what it was in 1870 when, by aid of a forged telegram, they compelled France to go to war. It is not different from what it was two years before when they started an unwarranted war against Austria, or when two years before that they started an unwarranted war against Denmark. They are the same German people. I want to call attention further to the statement of the German Emperor that he will never rest until he has made the German empire as supreme on sea as on land.

Let us not forget the signal of the Emperor of Germany to the Emperor of Russia in the harbour of Revel: 'The admiral of the Atlantic greets the admiral of the Pacific.' Now, let me call attention to some short quotations of interest in the work: 'The admiralty of the Atlantic.' Mr. Haslam writes:

> Germany has entered avowedly upon a maritime competition with Great Britain, and looks forward eagerly to the moment when she will be able to strike. She is putting far more energy into the struggle than we are. In the last year for which the complete returns are available (1906) she was insuring her merchant shipping at the rate of £4·77 per ton to our £2·5, and her coast line at £2,908 per mile to our £741 * * * *
> For this is a truism; if, when war does come upon us, we stand in need of sixty battleships and can muster but fifty-nine, this empire of ours will fall as surely as if we had but half a dozen; and for every battleship we possess over and above the minimum we require, not only will the conflict be less protracted and costly, but war itself will be less likely.

That is one of the reasons why we on this side have advocated the policy that England cannot have too many Dreadnoughts. There is nothing so essential to Canadian interests as peace, and to ensure peace we must prepare for war, and every Dreadnought Canada pays for is so much insurance for peace purchased by the people of Canada. I quote again:

> We are living now in peace on sufferance, knowing that Germany will fight us as soon as she thinks fit. As year succeeds year, her chances become better and ours worse.

Now, let me call the attention of our French Canadian fellow subjects to a quotation from an article in 'Blackwood's Magazine' of January, 1910:

> No sooner had Russia been defeated and seriously weakened in Asia than Germany endeavoured to pick a quarrel with France over the Moroccan question. By the usual threats of war and preliminary steps for mobilization, it was attempted to induce France to break her entente with England. To save war Delcasse was sacrificed. He resigned office, and the Algeciras conference was held at Germany's bidding. But England stood by France, and the German threat was rendered abortive.

I direct the attention of my French Canadian compatriots to the fact that twice in the last five years England has by her all-powerful fleet not merely preserved the peace of Canada and the British empire, but she has prevented their motherland, France, from being attacked by Germany. And it is just as essential to old France as it is to the province of Quebec that Britain should be supreme on the seas, unless they want to see their beloved province some day or other in the position of Alsace and Loraine.

We were told by the right hon. the Prime Minister that he for one would not have participated in such a war as the Crimean war, and in making that statement he threw in one breath an insult at the country of which he is a subject, and of the land from which he sprung, for the soldiers of both nations fought side by side in the Crimean war. He could not have thought of a more inapt illustration of a case in which Canada would not have gone to war. And, that reminds me of another point, and if it were not for its seriousness it would be one of the amusing things in connection with that so-called navy. I refer to the clause in the Bill which says that the navy shall not go to war without an order in council. The Minister of Finance told us that this was going to be a Canadian navy in time of peace, but an imperial navy in time of war, when the fact is that while it may be a Canadian navy in time of peace, in time of war it will be an order in council navy. I want the Finance Minister to remember that war is not like going out to a dinner party; you don't get an invitation a few days in advance and a request to state whether you are going to come or not. In fact, Japan was rude enough to blow up a few Russian battleships and then to say there was war on. Let my right hon. friend imagine the Crimean war starting to-day, and the Russian people in full knowledge of the views of the Prime Minister and the importance of his order in council in such a crisis. I wonder if the captain of the Russian ship would lower a boat and send an officer to the commander of the Canadian warship, to say: 'Well, have you got your order in council yet?' I wonder if the reply of the captain of the Canadian ship would be: 'No, not yet, I have not heard from Ottawa; I don't think they are going to war, but I don't know.' And I wonder if the captain of the Russian ship would say: 'All right, I will wait and see whether you get your order in council or not.' Of course, what really would happen would be that if the Canadian ship flew the British flag, the Russian commander would launch a torpedo and blow her up without waiting for the order in council. Surely it would be very rude for the captain of the Russian ship to do anything like that. It would be an awful thing when there was no order in council to justify it. I have no doubt if the captain of the Russian ship did any such thing in the absence of an order in council, the people of Canada would be highly indignant.

Now, we will say for instance that one of our ships has been off for a little cruise, and war having been declared in the meantime, that ship flying the British flag wanted to get back to Canada. We will suppose that the government of Canada had resolved that they would decline to pass an order in council and published that in the Toronto 'Globe' so that Russia and everybody else could take notice of it. Then, what a dirty trick it would be if, when this ship of ours got back to Canada the same gentlemen changed their mind and resolved that they would go to war, and repealed their former order in council. You can, of course, imagine the Russian warships floating around waiting for these orders in council to be passed, and actually doing nothing while the Canadian government was deliberating whether they would pass an order in council or not. But, suppose the warship belonged to a rude people like the Japanese who have been looking with longing eyes on the shores of British Columbia, and suppose the Minister of Marine was on a Canadian man of war flying the British flag. Now, if one of these Japanese warships came into the harbour of Victoria, does any one suppose they would be rude enough to attack that Canadian ship flying the British flag in the absence of an order in council from Ottawa. Well, Mr. Speaker, the more you think about this order in council business the more you can see what a valuable safeguard it is to the Canadian fleet. Why, it is one of the funniest things that was ever thought of. I suppose that in all our commercial treaties of the future we will put in a clause that there shall be no war declared on Canada, no matter what happens with Great Britain, until the Canadian government has passed an order in council. Well, we know that one of the leading statesmen of England has declared in the parliament of Great Britain as long ago as March, 1905, that they were concentrating the British ships from all the world over in the North sea, because they were afraid of a raid from a foreign nation. A 'raid' mind you. Why didn't he think of the order in council business and then he need not fear a raid, because Britain would not be at war until the order in council was passed by the British government, and surely Germany never would think of being so rude as to attack a British warship before they received notice of the order in council. This Canadian government does not know what war is. War is something too serious to wait for an order in council; war does not even wait for parliament to be convened. Do we not know that eminent British statesmen consider that to-day England is in a state of siege because she does not know what hour Germany may attack her. They may not say it in so many words, but day and night in every shipyard in Great Britain they are building their ships and they are spending every farthing they can spare in that country to build these ships. Look at the attitude of Australia. In December, 1912, Australia will have a whole unit manned by Australians ready to move into the fighting line whenever the empire calls. What a shame it will be to the Canadian people when the day of battle comes, as come it will, and when there will be no Canadian Dreadnoughts in the fighting line when the Nelson of that day hoists the signal: Britain expects every son of the empire to do his duty. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Canadians are a brave, an unselfish and a virile people; I believe they are British to the core; I believe they understand that the British navy has been the means in the past of permitting Canada's great national development to continue unimpeded. If we had not the strong arm of Britain behind us, what would prevent this country being overrun with Japanese or Chinese immigration? But, Mr. Speaker, there are some people who think that a Monroe doctrine is going to protect them. I have pointed out to these people that if Canada were a part of the United States to-day, it would cost us $30,000,000 annually to pay for naval defence and military pensions. Are we a poor country? Are we so poor, in money and in national spirit, that we would draw back from the request of the British empire to contribute two fleet units? Why, it is a mere bagatelle when you consider the natural resources of this country on which the Finance Minister can so eloquently descant. The country is willing to do its fair share. All that Canada wants is a statement from her public men of what its fair share is, and there is not a man in the country, whether he is of French, English, Irish or any other descent, who is not willing to do his fair share for the defence of the British empire.

Now, I have spoken at greater length than I intended, because I feel that this is the most important question which the people of this country have had to consider. I believe it goes to the root of our national existence and national destiny. I believe that no true Canadian wants to see, at some period within the next ten years, Canada out in the cold, while the other colonies are fighting for the empire. We have to do our share just as New Zealand, Australia, and Great Britain herself are doing. There is no use in meeting an emergency with a shotgun when it requires a cannon; or to build a torpedo boat when a Dreadnought is needed; let us have the right weapon for the right thing at the right time. That is what the people of Canada want to-day, and that is what the Conservative party are advocating. We have not objected to going before the people with our policy; we are ready to go now, and we challenge the right hon. gentleman, and those who sit behind him to go to the country and ask the people whether they want a tin pot navy, a wasp-and-hornet navy, an order in council navy, or to do something that is going to be of real assistance and real benefit to the British empire at this crisis. I have no doubt what the answer of the people of this country will be. I believe, whether they are of French, English or Irish extraction, they are Canadians first, and British subjects above all; and they wish to see Canada go on and prosper, not as an independent country, but as a part of the great British empire to which we are proud to belong. I believe they are able to look forward a half century; they are able to see that Canada occupies a central position in the British empire, that it will be a country of from fifty to one hundred million people, that the centre of population of the British empire will eventually be in this country, and that the day will come when Great Britain will be contributing to the Canadian navy and not Canada to the British navy. That is an aspiration which everybody in this country has a right to look forward to. There are some who are willing to risk this destiny, who believe that in case of war Canada can remain neutral on land and sea. Anything more absurd was never heard or suggested in a civilized assembly. When Britain is at war Canada has to be at war. Hundreds of orders in councils could not protect her navy or make it neutral or prevent it being attacked by an enemy of Britain at war with that country so long as our fleet flies the Union Jack. But what is she doing to-day? In advance of war she is not merely building something of no use to the British navy, but is actually tying her own hands and giving notice to the world: You can come and blow us up if you can do it before there is an order in council passed by the Governor in Council of Canada, and what power contemplating now with Britain could afford to take the chance of such an order in council being passed or not passed? How much safer to blow up our navy in advance of an order in council?

I want our hon. friends to contemplate what it would mean to us if British supremacy did not exist on the seas. I have indicated some of the things that Canada has at stake; but I want to say that we have everything to lose. If there is one thing more than another that Germany desires it is colonies; if there is one country more than another that Germany wants it is Canada. I am going to read from 'Blackwood's Magazine' of January, 1910, the concluding portion of an article partially quoted earlier, one of the most informing articles on the subject under discussion, as it gives a complete statement of German intentions and German resources and needs. With reference to the possibilitiy of war, it says:

> There is an irresistible force driving Germany on. It is not merely sentiment, it is not merely the Emperor's personal ambition and pride. The greatest motive power is the rapid growth of the population, which makes room for expansion an absolute necessity for the nation.

Then it says with regard to Germans going to other countries:

> They are found in large numbers now in every foreign country and colony. But those Germans who thus emigrate to lands peopled mainly by other nationalities have a great tendency to become absorbed into the population among whom they dwell, to lose their language and characteristics, and to become denationalized. This does not suit the views of German patriots. Societies have been formed for the preservation of Germanism abroad, but anything they can effect will not permanently alter this radical tendency; and the aim of German statesmen is not to Germanize men who have emigrated to countries under rule and belonging to other races, but to obtain countries of her own as a field for the overflow of her teeming and ever-growing population.
> The Germans looked to South Africa falling into German hands; but that hope has been disappointed. Brazil, with a large German population, was a tempting bait, but the Monroe doctrine has barred that route, and the time for a quarrel with the United States is yet far distant. If Germany is to obtain colonies, there is only one nation from whom they can be taken. Great Britain holds Canada, Australia, South Africa, and the best parts of Africa in the east and west. To paraphrase Mr. Ellis Barker, Great Britain has all the territory she wants, and she strives only to preserve in peace what she has won by war. But Englishmen must be simple if they believe that Germany will rest satisfied with the fact that Great Britain has practically all the colonies in the world while Germany has none.
> Whenever Germany is ready, the British colonies must and will be her aim. And in that day we must rely upon our own right arm alone, and if our navy is not equal to the herculean task that shall be imposed upon it, we shall lose colonies and empire.

This article is in one of the best and most conservative British magazines; and in my humble judgment it accurately, and in a very moderate way sets forth the true facts as to what is before the people of Canada, and the British empire. It will not do for people in this country to sit comfortably in their chairs and say: Shut their eyes and England can pay the bill, because she has more money than we, and any way she has to. That policy will not do and cannot go on. If this country is ever to become a great nation, it must bear the burden of nationhood its people must look beyond the coast lines of Canada; they must as Canadians and British subjects take a broad view of their mangificent destiny and of their duty to the great empire to which we are all so proud to belong. If we adopt and carry out such an imperial policy, we will be serving the best interests of Canada, we will develop a true national spirit, we will advance the interests of peace and civilization throughout the world, and we will assure for future generations of Canadians and British subjects British liberty and British institutions now and for all time.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—THE RICHIBUCTO WHARF.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N. B.). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I desire to submit to the House a matter which has been before the Public Accounts Committee, and which, I think, demands the very serious consideration of this House, inasmuch as it involves, if I may be permitted to use the language of a Sabbath editorial of the Toronto 'Globe' in this connection, 'not only the methods but the honour' of the chief spending department of this government. I refer to the purchase of the property at Richibucto, N. B., which is known as 'the saw-dust wharf' and so described in the Auditor General's Report. Briefly, the department bought this property from one Thomas O. Murray on the eve of the last general election, and paid $5,000 for it; Mr. Murray bought the property for the purpose of selling it to the department and paid $700 for it; so the department paid Mr. Murray over seven times the price which Mr. Murray paid for the property; in other words, the department provided Mr. Murray with a rake-off or a profit of $4,300 upon a seven hundred dollar investment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if nothing more were to be said in connection with this case than the simple statement of this indisputable fact, it is enough to condemn the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). But the matter assumes a far more serious aspect when we consider the character of the property, the conditions which exist at Richibucto, the history of the transaction from the beginning down to the registration of the deed by which the title of the property is vested in the Crown, the conduct of the Minister of Public Works after the matter became a public scandal and the unprecedented defence which he assayed to make of the transaction before the Public Accounts Committee. These considerations present a train of circumstances which establish beyond doubt that the transaction was a positive fraud, deliberately planned from the beginning for a corrupt purpose, and make it impossible to acquit the responsible minister of the department of complicity in it. Indeed, there is evidence which indicates that the Minister of Public Works was the originator of the transaction.

Mr. CARVELL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) kindly permit me a moment? Will he be good enough to point to that part of the evidence?

Mr. CROCKET. I propose to spread upon the record the evidence in support of every statement that I make. And I think before I——

Mr. CARVELL. If the hon. member will pardon me——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. CARVELL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) will not permit me to ask a question, I do not wish to do so, but I do submit that when he states——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CARVELL——When he states that there was evidence that the minister was implicated——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CROCKET. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) wishes to ask me a question I am content that he should do so.

Mr. CARVELL. I would like the hon. gentleman to point to the evidence which shows that the Minister of Public Works was implicated in a sale such as my hon. friend has mentioned.

Mr. CROCKET. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) has not asked me a question, but has expressed a desire that I should point to the evidence. Mr. Speaker, that is just precisely what I propose to do. But, before proceeding to do that I think it would be well for the House to have some knowledge of who this Mr. Murray was and who he is, inasmuch as he is one of the principal actors in the drama. Mr. Murray, I may say—and the evidence shows—was, and still is, manager of the Kent Northern railway, a railway which runs from Richibucto to Kent Junction on the Intercolonial railway, a distance of about 28 miles. He was also one of the campaign managers of the Liberal party in Kent county and, indeed, the party boss in that constituency. He has figured in practically every government expenditure that has been made in the constituency for some years past. He was, and the evidence which was taken shows that during the season of 1908, he was, employed and paid by the Public Works Department at the rate of $3 a day as foreman or conductor of some wharf repairs which the government had undertaken at Richibucto—paid for 71 days, and while still continuing to perform his duties as manager of the railway. If the shingle roof of the public building wanted repairs, it was Mr. Murray who got paid for doing it. If the brick-work in the walls wanted pointing, it was Mr. Murray who sent his bill in to the department and got paid for it. If there was a sewer to be excavated or a coal bin built, it was Mr. Murray who was paid for it. And every work that the department undertook in Richibucto seems to have been placed in Mr. Murray's hands. In fact, in the summer of 1908, the Department of Public Works, presided over by my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Pugsley), made a blanket contract with Mr. Murray to perform all sorts of work in connection with the public building and round about it. They gave him a contract to do masonry work, to do carpentry work, to paint a wire fence, to provide locks for water-closet doors, and to varnish the front doors of the building. Mr. Murray was not a painter, nor a mason, nor a carpenter, nor had he even a store, nor owned a single article for sale, yet this is the gentleman the Department of Public Works did all its business with in the village of Richibucto, and this is the gentleman who was the vendor of the famous saw-dust wharf which the Minister of Public Works was so pleased to buy at a price of $5,000.

Now, in order that there may be no doubt, about the question of Mr. Murray's connection with the party organization in that county, I am going to quote from the evidence, for I do not intend, in this matter—inasmuch as I contend that it involves the Minister of Public Works personally—to submit a statement or an interpretation of the evidence without putting upon the record the evidence in connection with every contention that I make. In the first place, as to Mr. Murray being one of the campaign managers I desire to quote from the evidence of Mr. Wm. D. Carter, who was the agent of the Justice Department—nominated as such by the Minister of Public Works—in connection with this transaction, and a witness friendly to the minister. At page 99 of the evidence, Mr. Carter says this:

Q. You are one of the party managers for the county of Kent, are you not?—A. I do not know about that, I take an interest in it.

Q. And a very active interest?—A. Yes.

Q. And you are associated with Thomas O. Murray and Geo. W. Robertson?—A. And several others.

Q. But more particularly with them and J. D. Irving in the management of the last campaign?—A. Oh, no, with others.

Q. Will you say they did not take as prominent a part as any? Geo. W. Robertson, Thomas O. Murray and J. D. Irving?—A. I would say the two latter took a prominent part, I do not know that Mr. Robertson did.

Q. Who do you say took a prominent part?—A. Thos. O. Murray and J. D. Irving.

Q. And do you say Geo. Robertson did not?—A. No, he was quiet, I thought.

Q. Did he not canvass actively and consult with Mr. Murray and the rest of you?—A. He was on the committee and in the committee rooms, but he was very quiet.

Q. Sometimes the most effective men are the most quiet men?—A. That may be, I am not criticising him at all.

That is the evidence of Mr. Carter. Now, there is also the evidence of J. D. Irving who was produced as a witness on behalf of the Minister of Public Works, or in defence of this transaction, and who was a contractor under the Public Works Department. Mr. Irving was asked, at page 131:

Q. You are the same J. D. Irving Mr. Carter alluded to yesterday in his evidence?—A. Yes.

Q. As one of the campaign managers in the county of Kent?—A. Yes.

Q. Associated with Thos. O. Murray and Geo. W. Robertson?—A. Yes.

Q. You do not deny that at all?—A. No, I do not.

So it must be taken as an established fact that Geo. W. Robertson, and Thos. O. Murray, the vendor of this property, were active supporters of the Liberal party, and were in charge of the management of the last campaign. Now, with reference to the character of the wharf, because I think that throws a flood of light upon this transaction, and upon the bona fides of the Public Works Department in deciding to acquire it. The evidence is, and there can be no dispute as to this, that this property for which the department paid $5,000 was nothing less than a dilapidated ruin of a wharf built upwards of forty years ago upon an old mill site, and was composed of sawdust and mill refuse. The outer edge of the wharf was washed away to low water level. That was the evidence given by the resident engineer of the department. It was practically nothing else than a part of the beach sloping down from a bank of decayed sawdust and mill refuse, and it was absolutely unfit for wharfage purposes or for service of any kind. Now, I will give the evidence upon that point of Mr. Murray himself, the vendor of the property, which will be found at page 16, and who sold the property to the government:

Q. Is it of any service in its present condition for the purposes of a wharf?—A. No, I do not think it is.

Mr. O'Leary, from whom Mr. Murray bought the property at $700, was asked:

Q. Is it of any service for public purposes?—A. Absolutely of no service as a wharf or for any public purpose. There is nothing more than a point of land there.

Mr. CROCKET.

Then there is the evidence of Mr. Andrew Loggie, of the firm of A. & R. Loggie, a firm which has received from the Public Works Department since the present minister took charge of that department, the sum of $144,000 on dredging contracts, some of which were illegally awarded to that firm by the Minister of Public Works. Mr. Loggie was produced as a witness on behalf of the Department of Public Works, and this is the gentleman, I may say, that offered to buy this property for $5,500. At page 185, Mr. Loggie testifies:

Q. Is that wharf, in its present condition, fit for shipping purposes or any other purposes?—A. It is fit for some other purposes.

Q. Is it fit first for shipping purposes?—A. No, I would say the front would have to be improved and built up and made so that shipping could be taken from there. I would say it was not as it is now.

So that fact must also be taken as established, and established by two witnesses friendly to the minister, that this wharf which the department bought was absolutely unfit in its existing condition for the purpose for which it was acquired. Furthermore, that wharf had been lying useless and idle for ten or fifteen years previously. It was nothing more than a barren waste, which had been put to no use and was capable of no use. Mr. Loggie admitted that fact also on the same page:

That it was useless and idle and had remained useless and idle for ten or fifteen years perhaps.

Now, that was the condition of the wharf, a property built up of sawdust and mill refuse, of no service, absolutely unfit for the purpose for which it was acquired, and that property remains in the same condition to-day as it was when the department bought it nearly three years ago, upon the pretense that its acquisition was necessary at that time in the public interest. The property had been owned for ten years by Mr. Richard O'Leary, of Richibucto, and I may say of Mr. O'Leary that he is one of the most successful and best known, and shrewdest busines men in the province of New Brunswick. He was the largest property owner in Richibucto, and one of the largest property owners in the county of Kent. There is no business man in the province of New Brunswick who is better or more favourably known than Mr. Richard O'Leary. He had held this property for ten years idle and useless. He had acquired that property from a half brother. Wm. O'Leary, who has been living in Montreal for some ten years past. The property devolved upon Wm. O'Leary and his three brothers upon the death of his mother. Mr. O'Leary testified that he, in settling up his mother's estate, sought to dispose of this property, that he spoke to his half brother, Richard O'Leary, to see if he would buy the property. Mr.

Richard O'Leary said that he did not want it, and he told him to apply to Andrew Loggie, the same gentleman to whom I have referred. Mr. William O'Leary went to Mr. Loggie and asked him if he would buy this property, he offered it to him for $1,000. Mr. Loggie absolutely refused it, stating that he had all the old property around Richibucto that he wanted. Then Mr. William O'Leary sold the property to Mr. Richard O'Leary for $400. That was in the year 1902.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is the hon. gentleman now professing to give uncontradicted testimony?

Mr. CROCKET. I am giving the evidence of William O'Leary.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which is entirely contradicted.

Mr. CROCKET. And I am going to refer to the contradiction which the minister apparently has in his mind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought the hon. gentleman was giving uncontradicted testimony.

Mr. CROCKET. I did not say uncontradicted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman started out that way.

Mr. CROCKET. I will deal with the contradiction on which the hon. minister relies. In the first place, O'Leary's statement will be found at pages 94 and 95:

Q. You say that on the death of your mother this property devolved upon yourself and your three brothers?—A. The three other brothers.
Q. Did you make any effort to make a sale of the property?—A. Yes.
Q. In closing up the business of your mother's estate?—A. Yes.
Q. You might just state, Mr. O'Leary, what you did in reference to that?—A. Well, as we had property in Richibucto, this sawdust wharf, I offered the sawdust wharf to my brother, Richard, but he said he did not want it, and he told me that we might be able to get $1,000 for it including the Hartnett store——

And I might say the Hartnett store had been sold before the Public Works Department acquired the property.

—my father had paid that some time before, but he said it was not worth that now, and I said to him: 'If you do not want it for your business, I will sell it to Loggie.'
Q. What Loggie was that?—A. Andrew, A. and R. Loggie. And he said: 'Try it,' and if he gives you $1,000 for it, take it. So I met Mr. Loggie.
Q. Is that Mr. Andrew Loggie?—A. That is Mr. Andrew Loggie.
By Mr. Carvell:
Q. How long ago is that, do you say?—A. It was in 1902. I asked Mr. Loggie if I could sell him the sawdust wharf, and he said: 'No,' that he did not want it at all. I asked him if it would tempt him if I offered it for $1,000, and he said: 'No.' I said: 'Will you make me an offer for it?' And he said: 'No, I have enough of this old property around here now, I would not want it under any consideration.'

That is the evidence of William O'Leary of Montreal. The contradiction to which I assume the minister refers is the evidence of his friend, Andrew Loggie. That is at page 221.

By Mr. Carvell:
Q. Now, did you read the evidence of Mr. William O'Leary, given before this committee, in which he states that he wanted to sell this sawdust wharf property to you for some $800?

Mr. O'Leary's evidence was that it was for $1,000.

A. Yes.
Q. What do you say to that?—A. I say that it is not true, absolutely not true that William O'Leary offered me that property.
By Mr. Reid:
Q. Did he never have any conversation with you about it?—A. No, Sir, I don't remember any conversation whatever.
Q. Do you swear he never had any conversation?—A. That is my impression.
Q. But will you swear he never had any conversation with you about this wharf?—. I will swear as far as I remember that Mr. William O'Leary had no conversation with me about this wharf.
Q. Will you swear you did not have any conversation?—A. He might have. I don't think he had.
Q. He might have had?—A. He might have had, but I don't think so.

This is the contradiction referred to by the Minister of Public Works. It is the only contradiction offered in the whole case, and the House will observe that his evidence was based on a question not in accordance with the evidence of William O'Leary, whose evidence had reference to an offer of $1,000. It must be clear to any one who has heard the statement of Mr. O'Leary and the statement of Mr. Loggie in contradiction, that the contradiction is very weak coming from a man like Andrew Loggie who is under such tremendous obligations to the Minister of Public Works. So I think that in the mind of any unbiased person at least, the positive affirmative testimony of William O'Leary will be preferred to the negative and very weakly negative evidence of the witness on whose testimony the Minister of Public Works is wholly relying. Furthermore, Richard O'Leary actually made a contract for the sale of this property in 1905 for $500 to Mr. Frank Ingersoll. Ingersoll made a deposit of $50, which he forfeited and the purchase was not completed. The evidence on this point is at page 40:

Q. Prior to your giving to Mr. Murray the option on this property, had you ever offered it for sale?—A. The property has been for sale since 1897.
Q. Had you offered it publicly for sale?—A. I never had a public auction for selling it to anybody.

Q. Did you ever advertise it for sale?—A. I sold it once to Frank Ingersoll, of Grand Manan, to put up a smoke house, a smoke house for herring.

Q. How long ago was that?—A. In 1905. I sold him the property for $500. Mr. Ingersoll paid me $50 on account and rued the bargain; he would not take the property at $500.

I think that is conclusive evidence as to the value of this wharf, bearing in mind what I have said that Richard O'Leary is one of the shrewdest business men in New Brunswick, the largest property owner in Richibucto, and more interested, therefore, in the appreciation of property in that town than any other person. He had bought it for $400 in 1902, he had made a bargain for the sale at $500 in 1905, and actually sold it to Thomas O'Murray in 1908 for $700.

It must be borne in mind that Richibucto is a small village. The evidence was that the population of Richibucto was less than 700. That is the statement of Richard O'Leary at page 28 of the evidence. That statement was not contradicted by any of the witnesses put on the stand to defend the transaction. Murray was asked about it, but he would not deny it; he admitted it was less than 1,000. Mr. Stead, resident engineer of the Department of Public Works, would make no statement as to population, and Andrew Loggie, to whom I have referred, who was brought here at the instance of the Minister of Public Works to support the case, stated that he did not think the population was 1,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I deire to correct the hon. gentleman. Mr. Andrew Loggie did not come up here to support the transaction, so far from it, he was subpoenaed by the hon. gentleman himself and came here in answer to the subpoena.

Mr. CROCKET. Well we will dispose of that right away. I quote from page 68 of the evidence:

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY. I am willing to postpone the further examination of this witness until to-morrow, but I would like that a subpoena be issued for the attendance of Mr. Andrew Loggie.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. One moment—hon. gentlemen opposite are applauding just a little too soon.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. One moment—I want to correct the hon. gentleman. He has only referred to a part of the proceedings. It is true that Andrew Loggie was subpoenaed at my instance, but he sent a telegram——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CROCKET.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is that a member cannot be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I desire to correct a statement the hon. gentleman has made.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. minister can only do so with the consent of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to do that; it is for the hon. gentleman to grant permission or not.

Mr. CROCKET. The Minister of Public Works will have ample opportunity to present his case later on.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then, I understand the hon. gentleman refuses to consent.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CROCKET. That is the evidence with reference to the population of Richibucto. Thirty or forty years ago Richibucto was a very important shipping point and a large lumber business was carried on there, but about twenty years ago the business began to decline so that there is not nearly as much business carried on there to-day as formerly. This was the evidence of Mr. O'Leary at page 45:

Mr. DANIEL. When you were a small boy were there any vessels of large size using it? A. Yes, it was a large shipping port and I have heard my father say that as many as 100 vessels at a time were at Richibucto and now you will not see any. The lumber has been cut out and there is very little shipping of lumber done at Richibucto now; I do it all myself.

In those days the government owned no wharf there, and the private wharfs built by private citizens were sufficient to accommodate the business which was much larger than it is at present. There is a report of the resident engineer of the Department of Public Works which throws further light upon the question as to whether the purchase of this wharf was necessary in any respect in the public interest. That report will be found at page 57 of the evidence. I may say in reference to this that in 1908 the Department of Public Works was requested by the member for the county to take up the question of acquiring the wharf at Richibucto which had been the property of the municipality. Some twenty-five years ago the municipality built a wharf for public purposes which is still known as the municipal wharf. The municipality leased that wharf to the Kent Northern railway for $50 a year, but the municipality claimed it was not in a position to keep this wharf in a proper state of repair, and the Department of Public Works was requested to take this property over and maintain it for public purposes. In the spring of 1908, Mr. Geoffrey Stead, resident engineer, was directed to examine this wharf and report, and I shall cite the important part of this report which is dated the 10th of March, 1908:

The municipality of Kent county built over 25 years ago a public wharf at Richibucto consisting of an approach 443½ feet long and 24 feet wide, a pier head about 115 feet long and 75 feet wide, and an extension to the pier head 121½ feet long by 40 feet wide. The wharf is composed of cribwork with a floor of cedar poles covered with about 1 foot of ballast and surfaced with gravel, etc. There is about 13 feet of water at low water O.S.T. along the outer face deepening to 8 fathoms in the channel about 40 feet out from the wharf. The range of spring tides is 4 feet.

For some years the wharf has been leased to the Kent Northern railway and used for the import of coal and shipping lumber, tanbark, fish, etc., by rail.

The lumber shipments at Richibucto have varied in late years from about 2,150,000 f.b.m. to 11,200,000, which formerly went direct to England. A large part of this is now carried by rail to Ontario and also to St. John and Halifax for shipment from there by steamer. The lumber and tanbark—about 400 to 500 cords of the latter yearly—are brought to the wharf by scows and piled there until cars are available. The wharf has been repaired at various times, but it is beyond the means of the county council to keep it in proper repair and it is therefor becoming unsafe for traffic and especially for the engine or the Kent Northern railway. It is the only public wharf at Richibucto and is much used. It seems reasonable therefor for the department to take it over. In view of the very probable acquirement of the Kent Northern railway by the Intercolonial, which would then be obliged to own or lease the wharf, it would be a good investment for the government to secure it now on the present reasonable terms.

That wharf was offered to the department at $1,500; it was a completed wharf, and had been in use right down to that time, with the tracks of the Kent Northern railway upon it. The House will observe however, from Mr. Stead's report that he had difficulty in finding reasons for recommending the purchase of it as necessary for shipping purposes, and he puts his recommendation upon the ground of the probable acquisition of the Kent Northern railway by the government, and that he had in his mind that that wharf, for the sale of which the purchase of which the department had a proposal, was sufficient not only for existing needs, but for all needs which would arise in the future if the government should acquire the Kent Northern railway which they have not up to the present time. I may say that Mr. Stead estimated that it would take $11,500 to put this wharf in repair, and the wharf was taken over during the summer, and the department entered upon the work of repairing it, and extending it. Mr. Stead was asked this question:

Q. When you wrote that to the department on the 10th of March did you not have in your mind the fact that that wharf would meet all requirements, not only for the time, but for many years to come and did you not have in view the acquisition by the government of the Kent Northern railway and gave that as a reason why it might be advisable to buy the municipal wharf?

A. It is true, I have stated it there.

That is the evidence of Mr. Stead, showing conclusively that when he was requested to examine and report on this wharf, he recommended this purchase, not because there were existent requirements for it, but because it was understood that the Kent Northern railway might be taken over by the government and it would be advisable for the government to acquire the wharf so that they might meet the requirements that might arise in the future. Then, at page 58 Mr. Stead was asked:

Q. Did you have in your mind on the 10th of March when you made your report on the municipal wharf the acquirement of the sawdust wharf?—A. No.

I think these facts establish that there was certainly no need of the purchase of this wharf at Richibucto in view of the fact that the government was acquiring and taking over the municipal wharf which the report of its own engineer shows would answer not only all existent requirements, but all contemplated future requirements. That brings me to the history of this transaction, and in that connection I am going to refer to the evidence of Richard O'Leary, the gentleman from whom Mr. Murray purchased this wharf. His evidence in brief is that Mr. Murray first approached him on the subject in the month of April, 1908, but not with a proposition to buy the wharf. Such a thing was never suggested. Mr. Murray had been employed by the government to construct a sewer from a public building which was opposite property through this property to the Richibucto river, and Mr. O'Leary had sold to Mr. Murray a sewer right through the property for $100. Mr. Murray went to Mr. O'Leary in April, 1908, and reported to him that the sewer had not been built satisfactorily and that it was necessary that a new sewer should be constructed, and asked him if he would be willing to sell another sewer right to him or the government on the same terms. Mr. O'Leary said he was quite willing to do so. On the 4th of May, Mr. Murray called Mr. O'Leary up by telephone and asked him if the other offer in connection with the sewer right still held good, and told him that he was going to Ottawa and would see the minister about it. That is the evidence of Mr. O'Leary in reference to the conversations with Mr. Murray. Mr. Murray came to Ottawa and was in Ottawa in the month of May, and saw the Minister with Mr. George W. Robertson. Upon their return to Richibucto, Mr. Murray went to Mr. O'Leary and for the first time proposed to buy the property outright. Bear in mind that when he left Richibucto he had nothing more in his mind than the purchase of a sewer right through this property. He stated that he was going to speak to the minister. He came to Ottawa and saw the minister. Immediately on his return he approached Mr. O'Leary and said, 'what will you take for the whole property?' In order that there may be no mistake about this, I am going to read the evidence, because I submit that if Mr. O'Leary's statement in that connection is true, the conclusion is inevitable that the proposal for the purchase of this property came from the Minister of Public Works. This is Mr. O'Leary's evidence at page 25:

Q. You might just state, Mr. O'Leary, what took place between you and Mr. Murray previous to the execution of this deed on the 19th of May?—A. Mr. Murray was in my office one day during the month of April and told me that the sewer they had run from the public building was not giving satisfaction, and I said it was strange that the chief architect should make such a bad job of this sewer, but that I would be glad to sell them another sewer right at the same price as I got for the last.

Q. What was that?—A. $100. Mr. Murray said that in all probability he could get another sewer put through, and asked me if he could have anything he could get for it over $100. I told him that he could.

Q. Is that about all of the conversation?—A. No, that is not all of that conversation. At the same time I said, 'Tom, what is the matter with your father up there at the public building, he won't burn any light?' He said, 'I do not know anything about it at all.' And I said, 'It hardly pays us to light the building; we will have to be taking it out altogether if they do not burn a little more than they are.' So that on that matter you see there would not be enough made in the proposition to give him a rake-off at his own house or in any other way.

Q. Then that statement was not true?—A. That statement is absolutely false.

Q. Did you ever mention $400 or any other price?—A. Never any other amount than $100. On the morning of the 4th of May, Monday morning, Mr. Murray called me up by phone, just when I was at breakfast, 8.30 a.m., and asked me if I remembered our conversation in reference to the sewer, and I replied that I did remember very well, he said, 'Does that still hold good?' And I rplied, 'It does, Tom.' He said, 'The reason I am asking you is that I am going to Ottawa this morning, and I will ask the minister while I am up there about it.' I said, 'All right, all I want out of it is $100.'

Q. That is all that took place before he went to Ottawa?—A. Yes. Immediately after coming from Ottawa—he had told me that he was going to Ottawa, and I saw by the papers that he had gone—after he returned from Ottawa he came to my office, and the first question I asked him when he came in was, 'How did you get along about the sewer?' And he said, 'What will you take for the whole bloody property?' I said, 'I do not know, Tom, do you mean the whole sawdust wharf?' And he said, 'Yes, the whole thing.' I said, 'I am willing to divide with you anything you can get over $1,000 for it.' He said, 'No, I want to make some money for myself; I want to make an outright purchase.' I said, 'All right, on an outright purchase you can have it for $700 or $800.' He said, 'Can I get the deed made out at that?' I said, 'Yes, and you can have the property for $700 or $800.' When going out of the office he asked me if I would object to have the consideration in the deed $1,000, and I said, 'Not the slightest.' He said, 'Carter is in St. John, and I will go and get James to make out the deed.' I knew that W. D. Carter was the solicitor for Murray. Mr. James brought the deed down to me at my office and I signed it, and he took it up to my house and my wife signed it there. While Mr. James was in the office, I said, 'Now, see about the money consideration before you hand the deed over to Muarry.

Q. You said that to whom?—A. To Mr. James. He got me to sign the deed and took it from my office to my house and my wife signed it. Mr. Murray then came down to my office in the evening, towards teatime, and said, 'Can I get that deed?' I said, 'Of course you can as you pay the money.' He said, 'I cannot pay the money until I go to St. John, but you will be sure of the money, you need not worry about that, I want that deed to take to St. John with me to get the money. I had an idea that Mr. Murray had not the money at the time, because his obligations to me were fairly heavy along other lines. I said, 'I think I can see a way out of it; we will have a mortgage drawn out and we will deposit the mortgage in the record office to go on record if the deed is registered before I get my money.' Mr. Murray agreed to that and Mr. James drew up the mortgage. Mr. Murray was going to St. John the following morning and wanted to take that deed and mortgage along with him, and Mr. James, a few minutes before the train left, got Mr. Murray and his wife to sign the mortgage, and on his way down left the mortgage in the record office with Mr. Sayer, with instructions regarding its registration. Mr. Sayer called up by phone and told me what Mr. James had told him, and I told him that was correct and that he was to put the mortgage on record if the deed was filed before I got my money. Mr. Murray went to St. John, he took one day to go down, he was one day there, and took one day to come back. He brought me in $600 and laid it down on the desk, and I asked him, 'What this $600 was for,' and he said it was for the wharf. I said, 'You are mistaken.' He said, 'You said $600.' I said, 'No, that is a mistake, I said $700 or $800, but I will make it the minimum of the figures. I stated $700.' He said, 'Take $600 now, and I will give you the other hundred as soon as I turn it over.' I agreed and I got my bookkeeper to make an entry in the cash book which reads—

Then he gave the entry in the cash book. That is the evidence of Mr. O'Leary, and if that statement is true, it becomes absolutely impossible to avoid the conclusion that the Minister of Public Works was personally responsible for the proposal of this scheme. Because the evidence as I have pointed out shows that before Murray came to Ottawa, in May, 1908, he had nothing in his mind but the purchase of a sewer right through his property for $100, and it was not until he had been in Ottawa, until he had seen the Minister of Public Works and had returned to Richibucto that he proposed to Mr. O'Leary the outright purchase of the property. Now it becomes therefore very important to determine whether this evidence of Mr. O'Leary is true or not. If it is true, I say, it raises the conclusion that I have mentioned. Now in the first place, Mr. Speaker, we know that every statement in Mr. O'Leary's evidence with reference to the construction of the sewer, to his having sold the sewer right to the government for $100; we know that was true. It is a matter of record and cannot be denied. We know furthermore that it was true that there was a proposal from Murray for the acquisition of a new sewer right for the government. That is also true. We know it is true that every statement he made with reference to the consideration of these properties, with reference to the payment of money and with reference to the execution of deeds was true. All these things have been confirmed absolutely by documentary evidence. So that the one point and the only point in reference to which Mr. O'Leary's statement was contradicted by Mr. Murray refers to matters which were entirely between Mr. Murray and himself and on which no other testimony could be given. Mr. Murray, however, had to confess and did confess on the stand that the substance of Mr. O'Leary's evidence was true. The one point was that he contradicted the statement that Mr. O'Leary had spoken to him about the purchase of a sewer right until after he returned from Ottawa. Now, I am going to place against O'Leary's evidence the evidence of Mr. Murray so that the House can judge which of these witnesses is speaking the truth. Mr. O'Leary's evidence is to be found on pages 7 and 8.

Q. Now, Mr. Murray, just state what took place between you and Mr. O'Leary on your return from Ottawa in regard to the sale of this property by him to you?—A. Well, the way it originated was, I went into Mr. O'Leary's office one afternoon and we got talking about one thing and another in general, and finally the conversation led up to the lighting of the public buildings.

Q. At Richibucto, that is the post office building?—A. Yes, and the way it started was, my father is the caretaker of that building and Mr. O'Leary thought he was not getting revenue enough from it, he furnishes the lighting and he has spoken to my father about it at different times.

Q. Mr. O'Leary is the owner of the electric light plant?—A. Yes, and he had spoke to my father about burning more light, and my father told him he would not burn more than was necessary, he would not burn it outside of office hours, and that he was acting in accordance with the orders of the chief architect. Mr. O'Leary asked me to use my influence with my father to burn more light.

Mr. CROCKET.—The witness has a clear recollection with regard to something that has no reference to this inquiry at all.

Witness.—You ask me the question.

The Chairman.—Go on Mr. Murray.

A. (Continued). And he said that he would give me a show on my own electric light account for my own private building. I told him: 'No, I would not do a thing like that on my father, who was an old man now.' So, with that he led me on to the public building sewer, and he asked me to go in with him on this and he would halve up on that.

Q. What is that?—A. He asked me to go in with him on this public sewer right of way, and I said: 'What would you charge for it?' And as near as I can recollect he said either $400 or $600. I said: 'That is an enormous charge, and I do not believe they would pay it. If you ask $400 or $500 for a right of way, how much would you take for the whole property?' He replied: '$700.' And I said: 'You would?' He said: 'Yes.' And then I said: 'It is sold.' With that we went out and got the land surveyed off and had an attorney draw the deeds.

Q. And that is all that took place between you with regard to the sale of that property?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you not know that the price Mr. O'Leary asked for the sewer right was $100?—A. No, Sir.

Q. Will you say that is not a fact?—A. I will, as far as I am concerned.

Q. You know, do you not, that he had sold a sewer right to the government for $100; that is a right to lay a sewer from the public building through this property to the river two or three years before? You knew that, did you not?—A. I knew that, yes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would ask any member of this House if he believes that statement of Thos. Murray on its face. I declare that that testimony is false on its face for the reason that Mr. Murray knew that O'Leary had sold the sewer right for $100. He asked him if he would sell another and a similar sewer right to the government for the same purpose, and he expected the members of the committee to believe that Mr. O'Leary, who had sold a sewer right previously for $100, would ask $400 for the same thing sold to the government two years before for the same purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And he was willing to sell the whole property for $700.

Mr. CROCKET. Yes. He asked $400 for the sewer right, the right to lay a sewer requiring only the width of a few feet of this property from Water street to the river, and when told that that was an enormous price, and asked what he wanted for the whole property of 726 feet he said $700. Now, if any juryman in this country would believe that evidence, I would not be disposed to regard him as sane, and I do not believe there was a single member of the Public Accounts Committee on either side of the House who, in his own conscience, believed the evidence of Thos. O. Murray in that respect. I say that the evidence is false upon its face.

Mr. J. D. REID. Perjury.

Mr. CROCKET. Apart from that inconsistent and absurd statement, I say this as a member of this House, that this same Thos. O. Murray committed a criminal offence against the Public Works Department as foreman or conductor of the wharf repairs at Richibucto. He obtained money from the Public Works Department on false pretenses upon an absolutely fictitious account, and the Minister of Public Works knows it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. Do you mean to say that the minister knew of it before?

Mr. CROCKET. No, I say he knows it now, and he has known it for weeks.

Mr. SPEAKER. I see there is a regular procedure for a personal charge against a member. I called the attention of the House to that last year. There is a regular procedure laid down, if the hon. member wishes to lay a charge against the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. CROCKET. I am referring to Thos. Murray and discussing his evidence. I say Mr. Murray committed a criminal offence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member takes care to insinuate, not to make a charge.

Mr. CROCKET. The evidence is now before this House. It has been before this House for some weeks, for the examination of the Minister of Public Works, and if he has not examined and reflected upon it, he has not done his duty as Minister of Public Works. I say with reference to this gentleman that he has committed a crime and is liable to imprisonment for the offence he has committed upon a department of this government. And yet it is the evidence of this gentleman which will be relied upon to contradict the evidence of Mr. Richard O'Leary, the gentleman from whom Murray bought this property. So I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it must be taken for an established fact that Mr. Murray went to O'Leary in the month of April, that he spoke to him about this sewer right, that he came to Ottawa in the month of May, 1908, that immediately before he took the train at Richibucto he called upon Mr. O'Leary and told him he was going to see the Minister of Public Works. Now, then we have furthermore the evidence of Mr. Murray himself that he did not come to Ottawa. He came with a gentleman named George W. Robertson, who, as I have already shown from the evidence I have quoted, was also a Liberal party campaign manager in that county. These two gentlemen saw the Minister of Public Works, and as that is important, I am not going to rely upon my memory of the evidence, but will read it as it appears on the record:

By Mr. Crocket:

Q. Are you unable to state that you were in Ottawa in the month of May? A. I am not, I was here in the spring some time, but I do not know just whether it was in April or May, it was somewhere around then but I do not know when it was; I have no record and I do not remember the date, but I was here all right.

Q. It was before you bought the property from Mr. Murray?—A. Mr. O'Leary.

Q. From Mr. O'Leary, I mean. Was George W. Robertson of Richibucto with you?—A. He was in Ottawa at that time.

Q. Did you see the Minister of Public Works?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you say that you did not see the Minister of Public Works?

The hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. D. D. McKenzie) was delighted that he had said he had not seen the minister, so he said:

He has said so.

By Mr. Crocket:

Q. I wish to be careful about that?—A. Did I see the Minister of Public Works in Ottawa?

Q. Yes?—A. Certainly I saw him while in Ottawa.

Q. While you were in Ottawa with G. W. Robertson?—A. Yes.

So, there is the evidence of Mr. Murray himself, He first denied that he had seen the Minister of Public Works. And then when he thought by my question that I could disprove his statement, he suddenly admitted that he had seen him. But, while Mr. Murray admitted that he had seen the Minister of Public Works with G. W. Robertson, he denied that he had discussed the matter with the minister, and for proof of that I am going to refer to page 114:

Q. You have already stated that you and Geo. W. Robertson came up to Ottawa?—A. Yes.

Q. And that you saw the Minister of Public Works here, and you subsequently stated that when you saw the Minister of Public Works with Geo. W. Robertson you did not discuss or allude in any way to the matter of the Richibucto wharf?—A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. That is right, is it?—A. That is correct.

Q. Will you tell me what you and Robertson came to Ottawa to see the minister about?

—A. I cannot remember now what we interviewed the minister on. I cannot just remember what it was unless I think it might perhaps have been something in connection with the harbour.

By Hon. Mr. Pugsley:

Q. You do not say that you came here to see me?—A. No.

Mr. Crocket. He certainly did say that.

Hon. Mr. Pugsley. No, he did not.

By Mr. Crocket:

Q. Well, I will ask him that now. Did you not come to Ottawa with Mr. Robertson to see the minister?—A. I stated I had an interview with the minister while in Ottawa.

Q. And did you not come to Ottawa for that purpose?—A. I do not know whether I did or not; I might have had other business here besides that.

Q. What did you say?—A. We might have other business here without that.

Q. You say you might have had?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you have?—A. I cannot remember.

Q. You cannot state any other business?—A. Not unless our interview was in connection with the harbour.

Q. Did you discuss that Jardine contract with Mr. Pugsley at that time in order to get an extra appropriation through the supplementaries?—A. I could not say positively whether I did or not.

Q. You cannot remember that?—A. No, I cannot. I do not know just exactly whether it was that year or not.

Q. As I understand it, then, Mr. Murray you came here to Ottawa with George W. Robertson?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw the minister?—A. I did, yes.

Q. You say you may have come on some other business, but you cannot tell us any other business that you had? You saw the minister and you cannot say, or cannot tell me one single thing that you discussed with him?—A. Well, I say it may have been—I cannot remember exactly; very likely it was in connection with the harbour.

Q. Do you remember that it was in connection with the harbour?—A. I don't say positively, no.

And at page 115:

Q. You cannot say positively what you discussed with the minister that is about the size of it?—A. I cannot say positively whether I discussed that with him or not.

So, there is the evidence of Mr. Murray, that admits that he came to Ottawa to see the minister—that is very evident from the evidence—that he did see the minister, and, while he denies that he discussed this question of the sewer or sawdust wharf with him, he is not able, this man who came from Richibucto to Ottawa, to indicate the subject which he did discuss. I ask if that is evidence which would be believed by any juryman? I take it for granted, therefore, that he came to Ottawa, that he saw the minister and discussed this question with the minister, as he had previously told Mr. O'Leary that he was going to discuss it, and that it was not until after he had done so that the thought came to his mind that he would buy 'the whole bloody property,' as it was called.

Now, what did Mr. Murray buy this property for except to sell it again. And to sell it to whom? To whom but the government? Does any one in this House, in his own conscience believe that this man Murray, who was in debt to Mr. O'Leary, who had not one cent to pay on this transaction, as Murray's own evidence shows, would return to Richibucto and buy an old property that had lain idle for ten or fifteen years, unless he had received an intimation from somebody that he could sell it? Was it the sight of the Minister of Public Works—the mere view of the minister—that suggested this? I say it must be taken as a fact that Mr. Murray did discuss this, and that the suggestion came in Ottawa—or, certainly after he had left Richibucto, because the day he left, as the evidence shows, he had nothing in his mind but the purchase of a sewer right, and it was not until he had seen the minister that this idea came to him. But that is not all. On their return, on the very day when Mr. Murray got the deed of this property from Mr. O'Leary, on the 19th day of May, Mr. Geoffrey Stead, the resident engineer of the Department of Public Works was at Richibucto, and he came out on the train from Richibucto to Kent Junction on the morning of the 20th, as these two gentlemen, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Murray were leaving for St. John with the deed in order to raise the money to pay the purchase price. He was on the train with them, which is certainly a very remarkable coincidence. And in order that there may be no question about that, I will refer to page 48, the evidence of Mr. Geoffrey Stead:

Q. That is a bill for travelling expenses of your own, is it not for the month of May. Just look at it. (Handing document to witness).—A. Yes, that is my handwriting.

Q. Look at it and tell me if you were not in Richibucto on the 19th May?—A. Yes, there is a charge for hotel at Richibucto on the 19th May—19th May, hotel at Richibucto, and 20th May.

Q. You left Richibucto on 20th May?—A. Yes.

Q. And you left on the same train as Thomas Murray and George Robertson, did you not? Did you not go out to Kent Junction with them?—A. It is not at all unlikely.

Then, at page 49, in reference to his conversation with them:

Q. Will you swear, sir, that you did not have in your hands the deed that Murray got from O'Leary on the 19th of May and go to H. H. James' office to have a description altered?—A. I will swear that.

Q. You will swear what?—A. I will swear that I did not go to H. H. James' office on that date to have the description altered.

Q. To have the description altered?—A. Yes.

Q. You will not swear you did not have the deed in your hands?—A. I won't swear that, although I don't think I did.

He swore positively that he did not go to Mr. James' office, but when asked if he had had the deed in his hand he said he would not swear to that, though he did not think he had.

Q. You don't think you did?—A. I would probably remember if I had.

Q. Would you make a positive declaration to not going to James' office?—A. On that date?

Q. You swear absolutely that you did not go?—A. Yes, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. You won't swear absolutely that you did not have the deed in your hands?—A. No.

That is the evidence of the resident engineer of the Department of Public Works, the officer of the minister at Richibucto, on the very day that Thomas O. Murray got this deed from Richard O'Leary who had paid for it, and the resident engineer declared that he would not swear that he did not have it in his hands at that time, showing the consideration at $1,000. Now, Sir, there is another very significant feature in this case, perhaps one of the most significant features in the whole case, that on the very day that Mr. Murray got his deed from O'Leary, and executed the mortgage, and started for St. John, there was a letter addressed to the Minister of Public Works. That letter will be found on pages 31 and 32, it is signed by the Kent Northern Railway Company.

Richibucto, New Brunswick, May 20, 1908.
Hon. Wm. Pugsley,
Minister of Public Works, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—On account of the large increase in business, consisting chiefly of lumber, fish, &c., it is necessary that the government find wharf accommodation and accommodate the wants of the people. At present the government owns no wharf accommodation in this town. The Kent Northern railway runs to deep water terminus, but cannot accommodate the public. The shippers of the lumber and fish are merchants who are scattered all over the country and have got to bring their goods to Richibucto for shipment. At present there is no wharf accommodation whatever to receive goods. We would, therefore, strongly urge the Department of Public Works to secure sufficient wharf accommodation to take care of the public needs, and would ask you to send your engineer to Richibucto to look over an available site suitable for wharf accommodation.

Yours truly,
KENT NORTHERN RAILWAY,
(Sgd.) Per G. W. R.

In that connection the witness, Mr. O'Leary, was asked:

Q. Do you say the writing at the foot of the letter 'G. W. R.' is Geo. W. Robertson's?—A. Geo. W. Robertson's, yes.

Q. Is that the same Geo. W. Robertson who was mentioned yesterday?—A. The same gentleman who was mentioned yesterday.

Q. As having come to Ottawa with Mr. Murray and seen the Minister of Public Works?—A. And the same gentleman who went to St. John.

Is not that rather singular, that this letter should be addressed in the name of the Kent Northern Railway Company by George W. Robertson, who had been to Ottawa, and seen the Minister of Public Works on the very day that O'Leary makes his bargain with Murray? Now I want to call the attention of the House to the terms of that letter, and I want the House to bear in mind that at the time the minister received that letter, he had before him and under consideration the report of Geoffrey Stead, his resident engineer, of the 10th of March, upon the acquisition of the municipal wharf; he had that then under consideration. This letter states:

At present the government owns no wharf accommodation in this town. The Kent Northern railway runs to deep water terminus, but cannot accommodate the public.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Public Works had not been cognizant of the intentions of Robertson and Murray could he have failed to mention in his reply that he already had before him a report upon the subject of wharf accommodation at Richibucto? It seems to me that was a natural thing for the minister to do, and what the minister or any person in his situation would almost necessarily have done, were he not a party to the transaction. Furthermore the letter says:

And would ask you to send your engineer to Richibucto to look over an available site suitable for wharf accommodation.

Observe that the letter does not indicate any particular property, it does not designate the sawdust wharf or any other wharf. The Minister of Public Works had this report before him, and I ask if it was not a reasonable and natural thing for the minister to ask what property was meant, or intended, or suggested. But what is his reply, on the 23rd of May:

Dear Sirs,—I am in receipt of your favour of the 21st instant, and in reply, I beg to say that the matter of increased wharf accommodation at Richibucto will have my careful consideration, and I will give directions that a report be secured upon same.

(Sgd.) WM. PUGSLEY.

No mention there of the report of the 10th of March, which it seems to me would necessarily have been made had the minister not been cognizant of the plans of George W. Robertson and Thomas O. Murray. On that very day he issues an instruction to the chief engineer to have a report procured upon the matter of this letter without delay. On the 23rd of May, the third day after Murray got his deed from O'Leary at Richibucto, the Minister of Public Works directs that an engineer be sent down to look over a suitable site, which had never been indicated to him by correspondence, but which apparently was the sawdust wharf, and which I think the letter itself and the reply show the minister knew was the sawdust wharf. Now, another feature is this, that the member for the county was never consulted. In the case of the municipal wharf it was the member for the county whose recommendation was asked, the matter was referred to him. In this case the Minister of Public Works accepts this letter written by Mr. Robertson, and without communicating with the member for the county, the minister issues an instruction to the resident engineer to proceed to Richibucto. I ask if that is not another very significant piece of testimony which goes to connect the Minister of Public Works with complicity in this transaction from the beginning? Now then there was a testimony by Mr. Stead, the resident engineer, showing that before he went to Richibucto in pursuance of the instruction from Ottawa, he knew what property was intended. That evidence is on page 53:

Q. You knew that referred to the sawdust wharf, did you not?—A. I knew when I went there.

Q. You knew when you went there that you were to make an examination and a report upon the sawdust wharf, did you not?—A. When I went to Richibucto I did. That is when I was there I did.

Q. And you knew when you went there that it was the sawdust wharf, the purchase of which was contemplated?—A. I found it out when I got there.

Q. You did not know before you got there?—A. I do not know. It may be that I had asked about other property it was proposed to purchase in Richibucto.

Q. It may be that you asked before you went to Richibucto?—A. On receipt of the chief engineer's letter.

Q. You asked whom?—A. I would probably have telephoned—I would very likely have telephoned Mr. Robertson.

Q. You say that very likely you would have telephoned to Mr. Robertson?—A. Yes, on receipt of the letter.

Q. That is to Geo. W. Robertson, who was referred to yesterday?—A. Yes.

Q. And before you went to Richibucto, you think you had a telephone conversation with Geo. W. Robertson?—A. I don't say that I did, it is a probability.

Q. You suggested that?—A. Yes.

Q. You have no doubt, Mr. Stead, that you did?—A. I might just arrange to have him meet me, but I cannot say.

Q. Did you not charge for a telephone message to Richibucto in connection with this matter before you went there?—A. It will be seen if I did.

Q. Well, you suggested that you telephoned to Robertson?—A. Yes, it is probably a correct suggestion.

So the resident engineer of the department, having received a letter from the chief engineer without indicating what wharf was to be examined, knew just who to consult before he went to Richibucto. He telephoned the man who had seen the Minister of Public Works, and who had written the letter to him. Then Mr. Stead went to Richibucto, he was there on June 3 and 4 and made an examination of this wharf. On the 4th he received an offer from Mr. Murray. That offer is to be found on page 12 of the case.

This is the offer you made.

Richibucto, June 4, 1908.

Mr. J. Stead,
Resident Engineer, Chatham.

Dear Sir,—I hereby agree to sell to the Department of Public Works the land at Richibucto lying on Water street between the municipal wharf and the Savoie lot, including what is known as the sawdust wharf, with the water right and frontage of the said lot and wharf for the sum of $5,000.

Your truly
THOMAS MURRAY.

Within 16 days after Mr. Murray had acquired the title to the property for $700, the Department of Public Works was offered it for $5,000, accepted that offer, and paid Mr. Murray that amount for the wharf. Then the evidence of Mr. Murray as to what took place between himself and Mr. Stead is very interesting. Mr. Murray's version of it is at page 12.

Q. Did you ever ask any more than $5,000?—A. No more than $5,000, no, Sir.

Q. You never asked any more than $5,000. Did you receive a reply from Mr. Stead in reference to that?—A. I cannot say whether I did or did not.

So Mr. Murray stated that he never asked more than $5,000 in his negotiations with Mr. Stead.

What does Mr. Stead the resident engineer say? At page 51, we find:

Q. Now, was $5,000 the amount that he mentioned to you in the first place as the sum he wanted to get from the government or did he mention any other sum?—A. There was mention of ten thousand.

Q. There was mention of ten thousand?—A. Yes.

Q. By Mr. Murray?—A. Yes, I think so.

Q. He mentioned ten thousand first?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Murray give evidence yesterday?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Murray state that he never asked any more than five thousand?—A. Yes.

Q. Notwithstanding that you heard Mr. Murray swear to that yesterday, you swear to the contrary to-day?—A. Yes, I have recollection of having heard ten thousand mentioned.

Q. Then you say that Mr. Murray was wrong in his statement?—A. Yes, I think so.

Q. You say that he asked ten thousand; was that his first figure?—A. Yes, his first figure as far as I know.

Q. You declare that do you; was there any talk of fifteen thousand?—A No.

Q. Why did he write the minister that there was?

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY. He did not write to the minister that there was. Why do you say that he wrote to me to that effect?

By Mr. Crocket:

Q. Do you remember writing to the minister a letter in connection with this matter?—A. Yes.

Q. I call your attention, Mr. Stead, to a letter which you wrote to the minister on the 21st January, 1909, in which you state (reads): $15,000 was mentioned as the price, but I think not seriously; $5,500 was asked, and $5,000 was the lowest figure I could get.

Although the minister stated he had never made that statement in any letter to him—and there was the letter produced.

Q. Do you now say that the letter is right and that the evidence you gave a moment ago was wrong?—A. There was no intention to deceive.

Further on:

Q. And having seen this letter to the minister, you say that he said $15,000, is that what you say?—A. Yes.

Q. Then how did he get down to the five thousand five hundred; that was quite a jump down, was it not?—A. Yes. I would say that the first figure was not mentioned seriously.

Q. But you say that he mentioned it though?—A. Yes, he mentioned it, but rather

---

Q. What did you say when he mentioned $15,000?—A. I said: I want your lowest price, or words to that effect.

Q. When he said fifteen thousand, you said: 'I want your lowest price,' and then what did he say?—A. Well, he said he could make it five thousand five hundred or something like that.

Q. There was a jump down from fifteen thousand to five thousand five hundred?—A. Yes.

Q. And then you agreed, did you, at five thousand?—A. I had no authority to agree at any price.

Q. Well, was there not an understonding between you and Murray that he was to give you an offer at five thousand before you got that letter?—A. I asked him for his offer for it, yes.

Q. And before you got the letter, you knew he was to send you a written offer of five thousand dollars?

That is remarkable testimony coming from a resident engineer of the Department of Public Works who is responsible for the expenditure of thousands and thousands of dollars in six counties in New Brunswick in which tremendous expenditures have been made during the last five years. This same gentleman certified all the dredging accounts of A. & R. Loggie and the Irving accounts and every account that comes here to Ottawa from those counties for payment in connection with the Public Works Department. That is the testimony he gave in the committee as to what took place between himself and Murray in the negotiation of this bargain on behalf of the government. He made a report to the department on June 9, which is found at page 56:

9th June, 1908.

Sir,—As requested in your letter of the 27th May, I have looked into the matter of the wharf accommodation which has been asked for at Richibucto, Kent county, N.B.

On the 10th March, 1908, I reported on the proposed acquirement by the department of the Municipal wharf at Richibucto.

It is now asked that the wharf known as the 'Sawdust wharf' formerly used as a site for a saw-mill, which is situated immediately below the Municipal wharf, be also acquired. Included with this wharf is the area in the rear which has a frontage on the Main street of about 443 feet and lies just opposite the lot already acquired by the government for the site of the new public building. The total length of the area measured parallel to the main street is 730 feet. The shallow pond lying between the municipal wharf and the sawdust wharf, formerly used as a timber pond is connection with the mill property is also included.

The area which the government is asked to acquire is 9 acres of land and land on the water, reaching to the channel, i.e. to about the face of the wharfs. Four acres of this is land and wharf above high-water line.

Including the 200 feet pier head of the Municipal wharf, this would give a frontage on the river of about 775 feet.

It is looked upon as certain that the Kent and Northern railway will shortly be taken over by the government, and this land and wharf will furnish a very desirable and central site for the station, railway yards, and especially for an ample deep water terminus.

An offer to sell the wharf, water rights, and land area for $5,000 is inclosed herewith.

While the outer faces of the wharf are gone to about low water level and new cribwork will be required there, the wharf forms a wide approach to deep water and could not be built now for several times the amount asked. Taking into account also the value of the frontage on the street and its central position, the price asked is reasonable.

A right of way through this land must shortly be bought by the government for a sewer for the public buildings.

The correspondence received with your letter and also a plan of the property are inclosed herewith.

Yours obediently,

(Sgd.) GEOFFREY STEAD,
Resident Engineer.

E. D. LAFLEUR, Esq.,
Chief Engineer, D.P.W., Ottawa.

He there states that the price asked is reasonable, $5,000. At page 54 of the evidence it appears that Stead when he made and before he made that report knew that the property had been sold to Murray by O'Leary and that he had seen the deed in which the consideration was stated at $1,000, but notwithstanding that he omitted to mention that very important fact in his report. At page 54 he was asked:

Q. You knew as a matter of fact, when you went to Richibucto, that Mr. Murray had bought this property from Mr. O'Leary?—A. Yes.

Q. And you knew that the purchase price stated in the deed, did you not, was $1,000?—A. I saw the consideration, yes.

At page 55:

Q. Did you communicate that to the government?—A. No, I did not mention that.

Q. Did it strike you as an element that would have any influence at all in determining the value of the property?—A. I did not think it necessary.

I think that this evidence casts the gravest suspicion upon the resident engineer who admits that he had had in his hands the deed in which the consideration for this property was stated, on the sale from O'Leary to Murray, at $1,000. He withheld that knowledge in his report to the department and stated he did not consider it necessary to tell it, and notwithstanding reported that in his judgment $5,000 was a fair and reasonable price.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How long before had it been bought for $1,000?

Mr. CROCKET. His report was dated 9th of June, and the deed was executed on the 19th of May, and the instruction from the minister to Mr. Stead to go to Richibucto was on the third day after the deed was got by Murray. Then, Mr. Stead was asked whom he consulted at Richibucto in connection with the valuation of this property, and what names do you think he mentioned but the names of Robertson and Murray, the two gentlemen who had had an interview with the minister, and one other Mr. Forbes. He also said that upon his return to Chatham he consulted Mr. George Watt who is the collector of customs appointed by this government, and who had been a very violent political partisan in his day, and who probably did not know as much about this land as I myself do. That was the kind of testimony which the resident engineer secured to support his own opinion as to the value of the property. Now, the evidence shows that the resident engineer had been friendly with Mr. O'Leary. That it was his custom when in Richibucto to call on Mr. O'Leary, but the evidence in this case clearly shows that on this occasion he apparently purposely avoided Mr. O'Leary. I quote from pages 54 and 55 of the evidence:

Q. Did you consult with Mr. O'Leary?—A. Yes.

Q. You knew that Mr. O'Leary was one of the largest property owners and had the largest business interests of perhaps any man in the county of Kent did you not?—A. I did not know that he was in Richibucto at the time.

Q. I am not asking you that. You knew that, did you not?—A. Yes, I knew that.

Q. A man that would be more interested in the appreciation of property in Richibucto probably than any other man?—A. He does not appear to be.

Q. Do you think that he is not? Do you think that Mr. O'Leary is interested in depreciating the value of property in Richibucto?—A. He should not be, no.

Q. You did not go to Mr. O'Leary, did you? A. No.

Q. Or speak to him about this property?—A. No.

Q. You met him on the street did you not?—A. I cannot say whether I did or not.

Q. You do not remember meeting him on the street?—A. I have met him a good many times.

Q. You used to call on Mr. O'Leary when in Richibucto?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not call on him that time?—A. No.

He suggests that Mr. O'Leary may not have been in town, but Mr. James who was the lawyer who prepared the deed mentioned an interview he had with Mr. Stead, and he says:

However I told him that I could not do it without Mr. O'Leary's consent.

There had been some suggestion from Mr. Stead that the description was not right, and that there should be a fresh deed executed, and I quote from the evidence at page 111:

However, I told him that I could not do it without Mr. O'Leary's consent as the deed had been executed and gone out of my hands, but I would see Mr. O'Leary. And I asked him if he would mind crossing the street to Mr. O'Leary's office, he was in his office then, I asked him to go over and see him about it, but that he did not wish to do.

The resident engineer suggested that Mr. O'Leary was not in town, but Mr. James shows that he asked the resident engineer to go across the street to see Mr. O'Leary, and that the resident engineer purposely avoided Mr. O'Leary which to say the least is another suspicious circumstance. It will be observed, as a matter of fact, that as in the case of the report of the 10th of March this purchase was recomended upon the ground of the acquisition of the Kent Northern railway by the government and the fact that it would afford a central and valuable site for the station and terminals of that road. It appeared from the report therefore that that property was worth more to the Kent Northern railway than to anybody else and that is the only reason attempted to be given why the government should buy it. But, notwithstanding that the property was worth more to the Kent Northern railway than to anybody else here we have Mr. Robertson and Mr. Murray who were two of five owners of the Kent Northern railway seeking to dispose of the property the very day they acquired it for $700. It developed, however, that the Kent Northern railway has a station situated a block and a half away from this wharf with an open field between it and the wharf and it further developed that that station is situated in a 100 acre open field which had been sold for $120 within a few months of this investigation. We have that fact with reference to this 100 acre field right on the spot and which would be much more valuable for the purposes of a railway station than this wharf of decayed and rotten sawdust. Any how, what has George Stead, engineer of the Department of Public Works to do with buying a wharf for railway purposes? What has the Minister of Public Works, himself, to do with buying a wharf for railway purposes? Why, even if the government had taken over the Kent Northern railway, which it has not to this day, it is the Department of Railways, which would buy that wharf and not the Minister of Public Works. But, would it have been good business for the Department of Railways to have bought this wharf in 1908 for the purpose of providing a station for a railway which they did not own and which they do not own at the present day. And, what is to be said of the resident engineer of the Department of Public Works living in Chatham, N.B., advising the Minister of Public Works as to the intended policy of the government and stating that it is looked upon as certain that the government is going to take over the Kent Northern railway. Can any one conceive of anything more absurd than the resident engineer furnishing information to a minister of the Crown that the government was going to acquire that railway and yet that is the reason why this property purchase was recommended, a recommendation which the Minister of Public Works very readily accepted. The fact is that no other ground could be put forward as a pretext for putting this thing through—for putting this steal through, I have no hesitation in calling it that.

Let me refer very briefly to the way in which Murray and Robertson raised the money with which to pay O'Leary for this property. I have already pointed out that Murray had no money to pay for it, that he got his deed without paying a cent, on the representation that he required to take it to St. John in order to raise the money upon it. The evidence is that he went to St. John on the very day the deed was got with Robertson, and Murray's evidence is that they raised the money on a note of which Murray was the maker and Robertson the endorser. It is very strange that both of these gentlemen, residents of Richibucto, where there was a bank, and where they might be expected to negotiate this business, should go the the city of St. John, where they were both strangers, to raise this money. I am not going to give all the evidence on that, but there is just a piece, or, as the Toronto 'Globe' would call it, a "snippet" or two of evidence in that regard that I would like to quote; and this introduces a name very familiar to the Minister of Public Works. This is Mr. Murray's evidence on pages 8 and 9:

Q. After the execution of the deed you went to St. John, did you not?—A. I went the next morning.

Q. You went to St. John the next morning?—A. Yes.

Q. You got the money in St. John, did you not?—A. I did, yes.

Q. From whom did you get it?—A. From the bank.

Q. On your own check?—A. No, sir.

Q. On whose check was it?—A. On nobody s check.

Q. On whose order did you get it?—A. It was on nobody's order at all.

Q. Was it your own money?—A. No, it was on a note endorsed by my friend.

Q. Who was your friend?—A. George W. Robertson.

Q. That is the man who saw the Minister of Public Works here with you in Ottawa?—A. He was in company with me, yes, sir.

Q. Did you see George W. McAvity in St. John?—A. In reference to what?

Q. In reference to the purchase of this wharf?—A. I had no conversation with George McAvity.

Q. You had no conversation at all with George McAvity in St. John at that time?—A. No, sir.

That is the first statement in reference to Mr. McAvity. Then at page 10:

Q. And you tell me that neither you nor Robertson saw anybody at St. John in connection with it?—A. I did not say that, I said I did not; I did not keep tab on Robertson all day to see where he was and who he was talking to.

Page 15:

Q. Now, Mr. Murray. I am going to ask you this question. Did you not get the money with which you bought this property through George McAvity in St. John?—A. Not to my knowledge, I did not.

Q. Not to your knowledge?—A. No.

Q. Do you know whether Robertson got it from him?—A. I could not say whether he did or not. I have often got $1,000 at a time in the same manner.

Q. Will you swear that neither you nor Robertson saw Mr. McAvity and arranged this deal in St. John after you had been in Ottawa?—A. I didn't say anything about arranging a deal.

Q. Will you swear that, Mr. Murray?—A. I do not know what Mr. Robertson did. I cannot account for Mr. Robertson.

Page 22; under Mr. Carvell's examination, referring to the note:

Q. Did Mr. Robertson draw it?—A. I do not just remember whether it was he or whether the clerk did it.

Q. Did he not do it while he was away during that time when you say you do not know what he was doing? Did he not come back with the note prepared?—A. No, I do not think he did. I cannot say what he was doing while he was away.

Q. Did you see him with anybody after you had arrived at St. John together?—A. Oh, I saw him with different persons.

Q. With whom?—A. I cannot remember anyone in particular.

Q. Did you see him with Mr. McAvity?—A. I saw different men standing around the hotel, standing around the hotel.

Q. Did you see him personally with Mr. McAvity?—A. I do not remember seeing him, he may have been with him but I do not remember.

Page 24:

Q. You have already said you had no conversation with Mr. McAvity in St. John on the day you borrowed the money. May I ask did you see Mr. McAvity at all?—A. I think I did on the street.

Q. Did you see him at the bank?—A. Not to my knowledge, I do not recollect seeing him there, he may have been there.

Bear in mind that that evidence was given by Mr. Murray, who has a very unsavoury connection with this case. I think the evidence in reference to Mr. McAvity is very significant. The evidence is that these two men could not raise the money at their own bank at Richibucto, and went to the city of St. John, where neither of them had any bank credit, to raise the money. The inference is that they must have had assistance there to raise the money with which to buy the property. Another very remarkable circumstance is that Murray, although the maker of this note, could not state whether he provided the funds to retire it on maturity or not. That evidence appears on page 20:

Q. I intended to ask you about the payment of this note, the $1,000. Do you remember for how many months it was drawn?—A. No, I do not, I do not remember whether it was 60 or 90 days.

Q. Who paid it?—A. I do not remember whether the money was remitted or how it was done.

Q. Did you send the money for it?—A. I don't remember whether it was put in the bank or whether I sent a cheque or how.

Q. Did you provide the funds for the payment of it?—A. Did I?

Q. Yes?—A. Well, I can't just remember how it was done; I know I paid the note, but I cannot say how it was done.

Q. Cannot you answer my question whether you provided the money, the money for retiring that note when it fell due?—A. No, I cannot, because we have so many dealings that I do not know just how it was done, that is I have so many dealings with Mr. Robertson.

Q. You have so many dealings with him that you cannot tell how it was done?—A. Yes, we have so many different transactions.

Q. You tell me now that although that was your note, endorsed by Mr. Robertson, you cannot tell me how it was retired?—A. I cannot.

Q. You did not provide the money yourself?—A. I cannot say positively.

Q. Cannot you tell me whether you provided the money yourself?—A. Not now, I cannot, no.

When the election campaign approached, we find Mr. Murray and Mr. Robertson again start to see the minister, and in that connection I am going to quote a very brief and interesting part of Murray's evidence on page 115:

Q. You saw the minister in St. John, did you not, in September, 1908?—A. Yes, I did, in the fall.

Q. You went to St. John for the purpose of seeing him did you not?—A. I don't know whether I did or not. I went in company with George W. Robertson, he was with me when we went into the building.

Q. George W. Robertson was with you and you had an interview with the minister in St. John, 1908.

Hon. Mr. Pugsley.—He said in the fall; you said September.

Q. Well, in the fall of 1908, that is correct, is it not?

Mr. Murray.—If I remember rightly I think we met the minister coming out of his office door going to the train.

Q. When was that?—A. In the fall of 1908.

Q. And you and Robertson went down to St. John to see the minister?

Hon. Mr. Pugsley.—He did not say that, you are making those assertions.

Mr. Crocket.—Well I am asking him.

Hon. Mr. Pugsley.—It is a curious way of asking questions, making assertions.

Q. Is that a fact or is it not, Mr. Murray?—A. I don't say positively that I went direct for that purpose, I may have had other things in St. John besides that.

Just as he said he might have had other things in Ottawa.

Q. Can you name any of the other things?—A. No, not now, I cannot.

Q. And you saw the minister?—A. When he was coming out of his office door, yes, on his way to the train.

Q. And you discussed election matters in Kent county?—A. We did not discuss anything.

Q. You did not discuss anything?—A. For the simple reason that he did not have the time.

Q. Well tell us what took place?—A. He simply said he had not time to see us, he had to catch the train.

Q. Did you tell him what you wanted to see him about?—A. No, he just simply told us he could not see us.

Q. That he could not see you?—A. He walked out and we left him.

Q. You discussed nothing with him at all?—A. No, I had no interview at all.

Q. Of any kind. Was that the only occasion on which you saw the minister during the election campaign at St. John?—A. To my knowledge it is. I don't recollect being down at any other time.

That is Murray's evidence, and in that connection I want to quote the evidence of the Minister of Public Works himself on pages 143 and 144.

Q. Do you remember meeting Mr. Thomas O. Murray and Mr. Geo. W. Robertson at St. John?—A. Meeting Mr. Murray and Mr. Geo. W. Robertson at what time?

Q. In the fall; you heard Mr. Murray's statement here?—A. I have no recollection of having an interview, not that I remember.

Q. During the campaign of 1908?—A. I remember one meeting there with one or both of them just as I was leaving my office.

Q. You remember that?—A. Yes.

Q. They came to see you together?—A. I do not know that they came together, but I saw the two of them together at the door.

Q. Did they speak to you and express a desire for an interview?—A. I do not remember, I was in a great hurry at the time. I had my valise in my hand and there was a cab at the door; I was in a great hurry to catch a train as I often am. I said to them, do you want to see me? And they said, yes. And I replied, I cannot see you now, I am just catching a train; that is what took place. It was very much the same way as when Mr. Stead was there; there were a great many people there waiting to see me.

Q. What time was your train leaving there. Was that the evening train?—A. The evening train.

Q. And that is all that took place?—A. That is all that I recollect.

Now, I do not know, Mr. Speaker, how that evidence may impress the majority of the members of this House, but I am quite satisfied that it is testimony so far as Mr. Murray is concerned, that would not be believed by a jury in this country. That Mr. Robertson and Mr. Murray, two of the campaign managers, as I have shown, in the county of Kent, should go down from Richibucto to St. John, a distance of nearly 200 miles, for the purpose of seeing the minister during election time, that meeting the Minister of Public Works at his office door, and telling him they wanted to see him, and that the Minister of Public Works, above all other men, said, go home, I cannot see you—that is evidence, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that no jury in this country would credit. So we have the fact, whether that evidence be true or not, that these same two gentlemen who were mixed up in the purchase of this properrty, who had seen the Minister of Public Works before they bought the property from O'Leary, went to St. John during an election campaign for the purpose of seeing the minister and did see him. What they told him is a matter that must be left to the conjecture of the House. Now, that was in the month of September. Then we have the remarkable telegram of date, 18th September, which will be found on page 13 of the evidence. This is it:

Kent Junction, New Brunswick,
September 18.

A. Valiquet,
Chief Engineer, Public Works, Ottawa.

Mr. CROCKET.

Please let me know if wharf matter passed council, this matter important to Mr. LeBlanc. Please rush it.

(Sgd.) THOMAS MURRAY.

Now, Mr. Leblanc was the Liberal candidate then running for election in the county of Kent. He is the present sitting member for that county. I want to say in this House that I do not believe Mr. Leblanc knew one thing about what was going on in connection with the purchase of the property until after the election and the purchase was completed. Mr. Murray was asked what that telegram meant and on page 14 he was asked:

Q. You sent that (referring to the telegram)? Now, who is the Mr. Leblanc referred to in that telegram? Is that the member for Kent?—A. Very likely it is.

Q. You have no doubt that it is. He was a candidate in the general election that was then in progress, was he not?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell me what this means 'Important to Leblanc. Please rush it'?—A. No, I cannot answer that just now.

Now, there is the author of the telegram, the sender of the telegram asked in the committee what he meant when he sent that telegram to the department, 'important to Leblanc'. And he says he does not know what he meant. Well, Mr, Speaker, I think I know what he meant, and I think every member of this House knows what he meant. It meant to provide a campaign fund for corrupt purposes for the election in the county of Kent. And it could only mean that, because the purchase of the wharf, it is clear, would not have aided Mr. Leblanc, for we have the evidence of Mr. Carter, another campaign manager, who acted as the agent of the Justice Department, and who stated in his evidence that he deliberately withheld the registration of that deed for a period of six weeks until the election was over, because he did not want the people to know about it. So there is only one conclusion to be drawn from that 'important to Leblanc', and that is that it was not purity purposes at any rate that the writer of that telegram had in his mind. Then the order in council as a matter of fact was passed on the 11th September, and of course there is a report from the minister recommending this as very reasonable, that $5,000 appears to be a very fair and reasonable price, and the order in council goes through. Then, Mr. Speaker, another significant thing is that there is a letter here on file from the Public Works Department to the Justice Department asking that the purchase of this property be placed in the hands of Wm. D. Carter, one of the campaign managers as I have shown. This letter from the Secretary of the Public Works Department to the Deputy Minister of Justice is in these words:

I am directed to say that the Hon. Mr. Pugsley asks that this purchase be placed in the hands of Mr. W. D. Carter, of Richibucto, who has already acted for your department in the purchase of another wharf known as the municipal wharf.

In pursuance of this request, Mr. Carter was authorized to act, and as a result became joint payee with J. Murray upon the cheque for $5,000. It would look as if it were a precautionary measure, this cheque being made payable to W. D. Carter, and Thos. O. Murray.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the universal course.

Mr. CROCKET. Certainly the universal course. But I say we have a specific request from the Minister of Public Works that in this case W. D. Carter, one of the campaign managers should act as agent of the department and that had the effect of having the cheque issued in the name of Mr. Carter and in the name of Mr. Murray, so that Mr. Murray could not get the money without Mr. Carter knowing it. Now, I am going to refer to the evidence of Mr. Carter with reference to the registration of the deed, lest it should be said that, by not quoting the evidence, I was not placing the case fairly before the House. I refer to page 100. Mr. Carter received this letter from the Justice Department:

Sept. 29, 1908.

W. D. Carter, Esq.,
Barrister, Richibucto, N.B.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 25th instant, I have the honour to state that the deed appears to be satisfactory in point of form, and I return it with the object of having it registered. I am applying to the proper department for a cheque in payment of the purchase price.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Deputy Minister.

So, he was requested to register this deed by letter of 29th September. On page 100 his evidence appears as follows:

Q. And you held that deed over for a month, until the election was over, before recording it?—A. I held it for about a month, yes.

Q. When was the deed recorded? On the 2nd November I think.

The election took place on October 26.

A. That is what is stated there and I presume that it is correct.

Q. Will you explain why you did that?—A. Well, there were two reasons. The first reason was that I was very busy at the time, and the second reason was that I did not put it on the records because I did not want to at the time.

Q. And why did you not want to?—A. I did not want to because there were some people making inquiries about it and I did not want them to get the satisfaction of getting the information.

There is the statement of the agent of the Department of Justice that he deliberately withheld the registration of this public document so that the public would not be informed until the election was over.

Now, we come to the disposition of the money. The cheque issued on October 6. It was cashed at the Royal Bank at Rexton, and was back here in the Royal Bank at Ottawa with the certifying stamp, on the 12th of October. Mr. Murray's evidence in that connection is very interesting—pages 14 and 15:

Q. Now you have told us, Mr. Murray, that you got this cheque dated on the 6th of October, and it was back here and received at the bank in Ottawa on the 12th of October. You got that money at the Royal Bank of Canada at Rexton, N.B.—A. Yes.

Q. Did you retain that money for your own use?—A. Certainly.

Q. $5,000?—A. Yes.

Q. You say that you obtained that for your own use?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you positive as to that, Mr. Murray?—A. Am I positive? Yes.

Q. Where did you deposit it?—A. I did not deposit it at all.

Q. You did not deposit it at all?—A. No.

Q. What did you do with it?—A. I took it home and gave it to my wife.

Q. Do you know of her depositing it?—A. —No.

Q. Did she deposit it?—A. No.

Q. She has not deposited it? Did George W. Robertson get any of that money?—A. Did who?

Q. George W. Robertson?—A. Did he get any of it?

Q. Yes?—A. I paid him a bill I owed him out of it.

Q. How much was the bill?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Was it $2,000 you paid him?—A. I do not remember now; we have so many dealings one way and the other that I cannot recollect.

Q. I thought you said your wife retained that money?—A. So she did, that was what I said.

Q. But you tell me now that you paid a bill to George W. Robertson and you cannot say whether the bill was $2,000 or not?—A. No, I cannot say; I have so many dealings with him that I cannot remember.

Q. What was the bill for?—A. I do not remember what it was for now. I have been dealing with him for 10 or 15 years now, and it is pretty hard to recollect individual transactions.

Q. Was it $3,000 you paid him?—A. No, I never owed him that much.

Q. But you are not able to say whether it was $2,000?—A. No.

Q. And you cannot say what that was for?—A. I cannot say offhand.

Q. Did W. D. Carter get any slice of this?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that? Did you pay him any bill?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. George Jardine get a piece of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you owe him any bills?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was George W. Robertson the only man than shared in this with you?—A. That shared in it?

Q. Yes, shared in this money with you?—A. Well, no, he is not the only man.

Q. Who else?—A. Why, the public at large, any man that I owed. If I owed a man anything I paid him, I did not give it to him as a gift.

Q. Did you pay any other $2,000 bills?—A. No.

Q. George W. Robertson was the treasurer of the election fund down there, was he not?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Was not he one of the party managers?—A. He might have been, but I do not know.

Although Mr. Carter proved that he was a member of the committee.

Q. When did you pay the $2,000 to him?—A. Sometime after I got it.

Q. Before the election, did you not?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Will you swear you did not pay him before the election?—A. No, I will not.

Q. You know that you did, do you not?—A. Know what?

Q. You know that you paid Robertson that money before the election?—A. No, I do not.

Q. You do not?—A. No, I do not, because if I did not know about the time I paid him I cannot say. I have no recollection.

Q. How did you pay him?—A. How did I pay it? I paid him money, counted it out to him.

Q. You counted the money out to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You got this money you say from the Royal Bank at Rexton?—A. I did.

Q. In what denomination were the bills, small or large?—A. I do not know. I expect they were $5 or $10 bills.

That is a very suggestive fact, Mr. Speaker—that in the month of October, 1908, payment was made of this $5,000 cheque in $5 and $10 bills.

Q. And you paid Mr. Robertson that large sum of $2,000 in bills?—A. I did not say what amount, and I do not remember, I cannot say.

Q. You will not say that it was not $2,000?—A. I cannot say what amount it was.

Q. Did you pay him the same money that you got out of the bank at Rexton?—A. I did.

Q. The same money?—A. Yes.

Q. That was the same money that you paid to your wife?—A. Yes.

Q. And you got it back from her?—A. Yes, I got it back from her.

There is one other quotation on page 17:

By Mr. Crocket:

Q. You have told us in reference to the distribution of the money and all that you have been able to say is that you gave George W. Robertson an amount, you are not able to say whether it was $2,000 or not; what did you do with the balance of it?—A. I paid my debts.

Q. You paid your debts to whom? That was whose debt you paid to Robertson?—A. I paid whatever debts I might have, I cannot remember the others.

Q. You cannot remember?—A. No, I cannot.

Q. But all the money is disposed of?—A. Yes.

Q. Mr. O'Leary himself was a creditor?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you discharge your debt to him?—A. I do not remember whether I paid him now on account or whether I paid him in full.

So, that is the evidence with regard to the cashing of the cheque, and the disposition of the money. I do not think it requires very much comment in order that members of this House may see the effect of it. Think of a man going to the bank and getting a five thousand dollar cheque cashed in five and ten dollar bills, not depositing it in the bank, carrying it to his home, keeping it there for two or three weeks, and within a week or a fortnight, he could not say exactly, but during the election campaign, paying an account of $2,000 to a member of the Liberal committee in five and ten dollar bills. I say that this, in connection with the telegram from Mr. Murray to the department, 'Important to Leblanc,' establishes beyond question that the money was for corrupt purposes in that election. I believe there is not a member of this House who has heard that evidence or who will take the trouble to read it, but will be convinced in his own mind that that is the fact. I am satisfied that if this were left to any unbiassed jury, they would find that the money was paid in that way for the purpose of corrupting the electorate in the county of Kent.

That ends the transaction so far as the purchase and registration of the deed is concerned. But it does not, by any means, end the evidence which this case discloses to connect the Minister of Public Works with this transaction from the beginning. No sooner did this matter become a public scandal than the Minister of Public Works began to write letters. I am going to submit to the House one letter that he wrote, and ask what the House thinks seriously is the object of that letter. The minister in his evidence, at page 143, stated that the first intimation he had of any dissatisfaction with this transaction was from the member of the county himself. The Liberal member, his own supporter, was the first man that complained; the matter was such a scandal that the member for the county of Kent—as the Minister of Public Works admitted in his testimony—told him that it was a subject of criticism in the county. Mr. Stead, the resident engineer, stated in his evidence, as will be found at pages 74 and 75, that he had heard criticisms in the county of Kent and at St. John, the agent of the Marine Department, Mr. Legère, who was a Kent county man, had criticised the transaction and told him there was much criticism concerning it. Then it became necessary for the Minister of Public Works to cover up his tracks.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw that expression. I am rather disposed to allow great latitude, but if the hon. gentleman continues to make use of such observations—certainly he is not setting a very good example.

Mr. CROCKET. I withdraw it, I did not intend to make use of the expression. But I am putting in the letter and the evidence, and I will let the House pass judgment. The letter to which I refer was written on the 13th of January, and is to be found on page 61:

Dear Sir,—It has recently been brought to my notice that the wharf property at Richibucto purchased by my department for the sum of $5,000 had been acquired by the then owner for a very much less amount. As the price which he paid for the property would under ordinary circumstances be regarded as a fair criterion of its value, I should like you to furnish me with all information which you have regarding the property and its value, when you reported that the price of $5,000 was fair and reasonable.

I would also remind you that in your report to the department you made no reference to any previous transfers. This is information which should be in the possession of the department, because it might, as you can readily understand, influence the judgment of the officials as well as that of the minister in determining upon the purchase. In the future you will please keep this in mind, and report all previous transfers together with the considerations made within two or three years previous to your report, and also all other facts which might in any way afford information to the department as to the reasonableness of the price asked.

Now, first, with reference to that letter, there is a statement which looks like a reprimand to the resident engineer of the department for failing to communicate to the department a matter which the minister says in the letter it was of the utmost importance that the department should have, in order to enable the department to judge of the reasonableness of the price. If that were true, and so evident as to call for a reprimand from the minister to the resident engineer in the month of January, 1909, it was just as evident in the month of June, when he had the report before him. The minister must have observed that the engineer had failed to report the price of the last transfer, yet not a word of it until months after this transaction is completed, and then in this very smooth language he is informed:

It has recently been brought to my notice that the wharf property at Richibucto purchased by my department for the sum of $5,000 had been acquired by the then owner for a much less amount.

I say the insincerity of that letter is evident upon its face.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is going beyond the bounds of parliamentary usage when he states that a letter written by the Minister of Public Works shows insincerity. Insincerity cannot be attributed to any member of parliament.

Mr. CROCKET. It must be borne in mind that I am discussing a report of the Public Accounts Committee, the evidence of which is for the consideration of every member of this House. The issue in this case is whether this was a bona fide transaction. I have already said that there is evidence which indicates that the minister was cognizant of this transaction from the very beginning, and that the transaction was put through for corrupt purposes. I am discussing the question with reference to that issue, and surely it is competent for me and for this House to discuss the evidence which is reported for the consideration of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is competent to bring that evidence before the House, and it is competent for the hon. gentleman to discuss that evidence, but when it is brought up in this way, I do not think the hon. gentleman is at liberty to attribute wrong-doing to a minister or to any member of parliament. If he desires to lay charges, the method of laying those charges is known to him. But I do not think he is at liberty in this debate to attribute wrong-doing to any member of the House.

Mr. CROCKET. I certainly bow to your ruling. But this is a case which does not arise in the usual way, because it is a case that has already been fully investigated, and we are discussing the evidence. It is not a question of making a charge, it is a question of dealing with a transaction which has been investigated by a committee of this House, and which has been sent to this House for its judgment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I will read these words from May:

For the same reason no charge of a personal character can be raised save upon a direct and substantive motion to that effect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is this to be said about it. Suppose a witness gave evidence before the Committee on Public Accounts of a corrupt transaction, would a member discussing that evidence in this House, be bound to say that he did not believe that witness? Could he not argue that the evidence of that witness was supported? Suppose there were two witnesses, suppose there were half a dozen witnesses, suppose their testimony was corroborated by a written document, would any member, in discussing that, be obliged to speak as if there was no written document and no corroborative evidence? I do not think, with all deference, the rule could possibly apply to a case where the evidence has been taken and where that evidence is being discussed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is doubtless complicated. But at the same time I think that the hon. gentleman partly brings the trouble upon himself by the moment and the manner he has chosen to discuss it. The rule does seem clear, that if a charge of wrong-doing is to be made against a minister or any member of the House, it should be done by a substantive motion. The hon. gentleman has not taken that method. I think he is at liberty to discuss the evidence and to lay that evidence before the House; I am not clear that he is at liberty to make a charge of wrong-doing against a minister of the Crown or against a member of the House without a substantive motion. The rules of order governing all debates are not suspended for this debate.

Mr. CROCKET. I am not making a charge, I am considering a matter which has already been fully investigated. If I made a charge in this matter I would simply be required to say that I, as a member of this House, am informed and believe that such and such a thing is true, then that would be referred to a committee of the House. I think this House has now upon its records a report from one of its committees which indicates that this is a corrupt transaction, and that the Minister of Public Works was involved in it from the beginning.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have quoted the hon. gentleman the authority under which I am acting. If the hon. gentleman has any contrary authorities I would be willing to hear them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would you allow me to say one word? The hon. member charges that the Minister of Public Works is involved in this corrupt transaction from the beginning. The charge which the hon. member has presented to the House by way of an amendment is a motion of want of confidence, he makes no stated charge against me. The hon. gentleman has not the courage to make a charge against me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) is raising a point of order, he is at liberty to discuss that point of order. But he is not at liberty to address the House on any other matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then I rise to correct a misstatement of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think at the present stage that could not be allowed. There is a point of order before the House which the hon. member may discuss.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will address myself a moment to the point of order. The hon. gentleman says that he is charging that the evidence shows that this is a corrupt transaction, and that the Minister of Public Works has been cognizant of it, and a party to it, involved in it, from the beginning. I say that the amendment which the hon. gentleman has moved does not contain that charge against the minister. In order to enable the hon. gentleman to do what he is seeking to do he should accept your honour's suggestion, and he should have the courage to make a direct charge against me, which I would be in a position to answer. If an hon. member of this House does that he takes upon himself——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. —the responsibility——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is departing from the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has not done that. In this amendment he makes no charge against the minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is why the hon. gentleman is not in order——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am not aware that there is any amendment before the House. It is not in my hands. Has the hon. gentleman an amendment?

Mr. CROCKET. I propose to move an amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The nature of that amendment might make some difference in the situation.

Mr. SPROULE. Referring to the point of order, the hon. member was discussing the question and dealing with the evidence before the House, simply stating that the evidence indicates so and so. That is all, and to my mind he is quite within his rights in saying so. That is all he said, and I respectfully submit that that is not outside the common amenities of debate in this House in dealing with a question of that nature when the evidence is before the House for consideration.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think in a matter of this kind I should not interpret the rule very broadly. I am inclined to interpret the rule broadly as far as liberty of debate goes on questions of debate generally, but where a question of personal character or wrong-doing or a charge of that nature comes up in regard to a member, I think I should interpret the rule rather more stringently, and ask the hon. gentleman to comply closely with it. In that case, while I am perfectly willing that the hon. gentleman should lay the evidence before the House, I still think that if he wishes to proceed as far as laying a charge against the minister of insincerity or wrong-doing, he should proceed in the way indicated, by a specific motion.

Mr. CROCKET. I bow to your ruling. My statement was that the evidence that has been submitted to this House from the Public Accounts Committee proves, and to my mind, proves beyond a doubt that this transaction was a corrupt and fraudulent transaction, and I said furthermore that there was evidence and much evidence to indicate that the Minister of Public Works was cognizant of it from the beginning. That was the question I was discussing.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman——

Mr. CROCKET. I will withdraw the expression if you rule that 'insincerity' is not within the rules. I have read the letter, and I ask the members of the House to consider if upon its face it is a reasonable letter to expect from the minister in those circumstances, addressed to the resident engineer. I was proceeding to say that if the letter itself did not establish it, there was evidence obtained from the resident engineer of the Department of Public Works to show that that was not a letter which would be considered one of the greatest sincerity. The evidence to which I refer is this: That letter is dated January 13, and it calls the resident engineer to task for omitting to mention this and not advising the department of the price at which Murray had obtained the property. The day before, on January 12, we have in this case a letter addressed to the resident engineer of the department from the firm of A. & R. Loggie at Richibucto, a letter written for the purpose of bolstering up this purchase. Is it not rather remarkable that the resident engineer of the Department of Public Works to whom this would look like the first intimation of complaint had, before the date of that letter, started to meet the complaint by getting a letter from the firm of A. & R. Loggie, these extensive dredging contractors with the Department of Public Works. The letter of Messrs. Loggie is at page 182, as follows:

Richibucto, N.B., January 12, 1909.

Mr. Geoffrey Stead,
Chatham, N.B.

Yours of January 6 to hand and contents noted. In reference to the price paid by the government for the sawdust wharf at Richibucto, which we understand was $5,000, we think that the government got this wharf at a bargain. We think a wharf of the size it is, and in a location so suitable, at the terminus of the railway, to be used as a site for a railway station, and for yard room, and for railway tracks and a shipping point for vessels to land and take cargo from the railway, that it is a good bargain, and that the government got real good value for the price paid for this wharf.

We think it was a very important thing for the government to secure this wharf at the price paid, as we know of no other wharf located so suitably for the uses of the railroad.

We would say if we had owned the wharf we certainly would not have sold it for $5,000 as we would consider it good value at a much higher price than the government paid for it.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) A. & R. LOGGIE.

That letter was written on January 12, and the letter of the minister to the resident engineer complaining of the matter apparently for the first time was written the day after Loggie had written his letter, and Loggie's letter referred to Stead's letter of the 6th of January so that Mr. Stead had apparently got some intimation that there was a necessity of bolstering this thing up before he received the letter of the 15th of January. What did the evidence show? It was got from Mr. Stead after the greatest twisting and hedging, and I have no hesitation in saying prevarication that I have seen in my examination of witnesses in court or before any committee. Mr. Stead having denied at first, was compelled to admit that he had an interview at St. John on December 26, 1908, in reference to this matter with the Minister of Public Works. I say he denied that in the first instance when examined before the Christmas recess, and when he returned a diary was produced in which under date the 26th of December he had entered, 'interviewed Dr. Pugsley.' I wish to read from pages 61 and 62 in reference to that:

Q. Is this the only communication that passed between you and the minister in reference to this matter?—A. That is the only communication.

Q. Do you say that, Mr. Stead?

The Chairman.—What is the question?

Mr. Crocket.—If this is the only communication that passed between him and the minister in reference to this wharf matter?

A. Well, I really think it was.

Q. Will you say that it was? That that is the only communication you had with the minister with reference to this wharf matter?—A. Well, that is the only time I wrote to him.

Q. It is the only time you wrote to him, you talked to him, did you not?—A. I possibly did before that date, but I would not be quite sure.

Q. And you had several conversations with him, too, didn't you, before that date?—A. Yes, I certainly think I must have had.

Q. About this matter?—A. No.

Q. But did say you had talked to him about this matter before then——

Hon. Mr. Pugsley.—He did not say he talked to him about this matter. You asked him if he had seen the minister.

A. I have an answer to that which is much better. I had a talk with the minister about this matter about the end of January. That was the first talk I had with the minister on that matter.

Q. At the end of January?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you talk with him at the end of January?—A. In Ottawa.

Q. Didnt you talk with the minister between the date of your report and the date of his letter about this wharf purchase?—A. It is pretty hard to say; I rather expected to—

Q. What is that?—A. I rather expected to have a chance to speak with the minister in St. John, I do not know whether it was in the winter or in the autumn, but the minister could not see me.

Q. Mr. Stead, you know my question?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you swear you did not talk to the minister about this matter between the 10th of June, 1908, and the month of January?—A. Yes, I swear I did not discuss the matter with him.

Q. You swear you did not discuss the matter with him?—A. Yes.

Q. That you did not have any talk with him about the matter at all?—A. Yes, I did not discuss the matter with him at all, I hadn't a chance to.

Q. And you never talked with him on the subject at all?—A. I did not have a chance to.

Q. You never got a chance, but answer the question, did you or did you not?

Hon. Mr. Pugsley. You mean before the end of January.

Mr. Crocket. Before the 13th of January.

A. Well, really I do not know, but I have my diary here and I will see what time it was I was in St. John. I expected to have a talk with the minister in St. John. (Producing diary).

Q. Is that the note-book you were referring to at the beginning of your examination?—A. No, this is my diary, it is not a note-book. (Refers to diary). No, I do not see it, it was not this year I was in St. John.

Q. It was not this year you were in St. John?—A. No.

Q. It was last year you were in St. John?—A. Last year.

Q. So that the conference, if you had one, was before the 18th of January last?

Hon. Mr. Pugsley. He did not say that at all.

By Mr. Crocket:

Q. Is not that right?—A. There was no conversation, of course, not before the 13th of January.

Q. Say something, Mr. Stead, one way or the other. Are you going to say that you did or that you did not?—A. There is one thing, I expected to see the minister in St. John, and I did see the minister at St. John in his office, but there were a number of people waiting to see him and he could not see me, and he asked me to see him in January; I was not in his office a second, and he asked me to see him at his office in Ottawa.

Q. And you went to see him in reference to that wharf matter?—A. That was one of the matters I was to have spoken to him about if I had a chance.

Q. What date was that?—A. I do not know what date it was.

Q. You do not know that date?—A. No.

Q. You have your diary there?—A. It is this year's diary.

Q. If you had brought last year's diary, you could have told us?—A. I think it was at Christmas.

Q. Was that in the note-book you left at home too?—A. No.

Q. You neither brought your note-book nor your diary?—A. No.

Then at page 66, I quote as follows:—

Q. You say this property is one which in your judgment it would be desirable for the Messrs. Loggie to have?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Stead, let me ask you this: Did you ever, prior to your coming to Ottawa in January, 1909, have any conversation with me in regard to this sawdust property that you recollect?—A. No, I had no conversation with you.

Q. So my letter to you of the 13th January, 1909, is the first communication, either verbal or written, you had from me on the subject?—A. The first communication.

These were the words that were put into the mouth of the resident engineer by the minister himself, and yet when Mr. Stead returned to Ottawa after the vacation he was obliged to make a statement which was at variance with the statement which the minister had put into his mouth when he was examined before. I quote from page 75:

Q. Did you have any intimation from the Minister of Public Works or anybody else in the department up to that time that there was criticism?—A. Up till the 6th of January?

Q. Yes?—A. Well, yes, I had, in a way I had.

Q. Just state what intimation you had?—A. mentioned being in St. John, I went to see the minister in St. John, and the minister said it would be well to get any information I could about it.

Q. He told you that in St. John, did he?—A. Yes.

Q. That was on the 24th of December, wasn't it?—A. No, the 26th of December.

Q. In his office at St. John?—A. Yes.

Q. You went to St. John to see him in connection with it, did you not?—A. I went to St. John, it is my home, for Christmas.

Q. You went home for Christmas?—A. Yes.

Q. Where is your home?—A. Well, my home was in St. John since 1876 up till last year, except a year we spent elsewhere.

Q. You went to St. John to spend Christmas?—A. Yes, I took my family down.

Q. Did you not state in your evidence before Christmas that you went to St. John to see the minister about this sawdust wharf purchase, that was one of the matters you expected to see him about?—A. Yes, I wanted to see him about that when in St. John.

Q. And did you not state in your evidence you have previously given that you went to St. John to see the minister about this matter?—A. I do not know whether it is there or not, but I can look it up and see.

Then at page 76:—

Q. And you went to see the minister didn't you to discuss this matter with him in St. John when you saw him on the 26th of December, 1908.—A. Well, I did not see him to discuss it; I had no instructions from him to see him.

Q. Never mind about that just now you went to St. John to talk with the minister on that subject?—A. Yes, and on other matters generally in connection with the department.

Q. And you went to see the minister in his office in St. John?—A. I waited about an hour and saw him for about a second as I told you before and he said he could not see me then but to send him any information I had about it. That is practically what happened in this office.

Q. You gained admittance to his office?—A Yes, I did.

Q. And you referred to this matter as you have told us this morning, and he told you to get all the information you could?—A. Just as I have said now.

Q. Now the minister's letter is dated the 13th of January?—A. He said he would write to me about it that he could not talk about it then.

Q. Do you say that you went there and waited an hour to see the minister, you gained admittance to his office and then you had no discussion beyond what you have told us before, that the minister told you he would see you in Ottawa later on about it?—A. That is it.

Q. That is the statement you made before? —A. What I am telling you now is what I told you before.

Q. That is the statement you made before? —A. Yes.

Q. That you did not discuss the subject at all with the minister, he simply said to you he would see you in Ottawa?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that true that you waited there for an hour, and you gained admittance to his office to discuss this subject with him and that the minister then told you he would see you away up here in Ottawa upon that matter?—A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. But this morning you add this, that the minister told you to get all the information you could about it?—A. He told me it would be well to get any information about it, yes.

At page 84 we have this:—

Q. I want to see the entry that you produced this morning, on the 26th of December? —A. The entry in my dairy?

Q. Yes?—A. (Witness hands diary to Mr. Crocket).

Q. Is this the entry you referred to this morning?—A. There it is (indicating), I keep only just the statement to show what I have done.

Q. I offer this in evidence, the memorandum in Mr. Stead's diary of Saturday, 26th December, 1908, 'interviewed Dr. Pugsley this morning.'—A. Yes, I put it that way because of the long time I spent waiting.

So that there is the evidence from Mr. Stead, who stated in answer to the Minister of Public Works that he had had no communication written or verbal after his report and before the receipt of the letter of the 13th of January, was compelled to come back and confess that the statement he had made in reply to a question put by the Minister of Public Works was untrue, and that instead of his not having seen him he had actually had an interview with the minister, and entered it in his diary. And the evidence shows that this was one of the subjects discussed and that he went there expecting to discuss it with him. In view of that fact Mr. Speaker, this letter of the 13th of January will not have the effect that I for my part think it was written to have; I believe it will have just the contrary effect and that it will prove to be another link in the chain of circumstances which brings this transaction pretty close home, to say the least, to the Minister of Public Works. On page 93, in reference to the interview with the Minister, Mr. Stead further testified:

Q. Did you not tell us yesterday that the minister told you to get all the information possible on this matter on the 25th of December?—A. You can see what I said. I said that the minister—yes, something to that effect, but in very few words.

Q. Well is that not a conversation?—A. Possibly.

Q. And you entered it in your diary did you not as having had an interview with the minister?—A. I said that I had an interview with the minister.

Q. There is an entry in your diary of an interview with the minister?—A. Yes.

Q. And the only matter that you discussed was the Richibucto wharf?—A. I said I was there about a second did I not?

Q. You said you were there about a second but the only matter you discussed was the Richibucto wharf?—A. I did not discuss any matter.

Q. Well, that you talked of?—A. The only matter that the minister spoke to me about was that. Yes that we talked of rather——

Q. And you entered it in your diary that you interviewed the minister?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you tell me that is all that was said? —A. It wasn't the exact words, but something like that.

Q. And that is all you have to say about that?—A. That is all.

Q. So that the letter you got from the minister of the 13th of January did not surprise you very much, did it? You were rather expecting it, were you not?—A. Yes.

Q. You were expecting that letter and knew you were to get it, that is correct, is it not, Mr. Stead?—A. Yes, I think so.

Here is the resident engineer of the department, to whom this letter was written in terms of surprise and annoyance, for the purpose of giving it the appearance of calling him down, and declaring upon his oath that he knew that he was to get that letter. The letter, addressed by the minister to this officer with whom he had the interview, and to whom he had given directions to get all the information he could, says, 'I have recently learned.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. Had you not better read the question further down?

Q. Until you received the letter from me had you any idea what its contents would be? —A. No, I was surprised when I did get it.

Mr. CROCKET. Furthermore, Mr. Stead, in reference to the letter to the Loggies at page 79, said this:

Q. Did you write them in the autumn, as you said a moment ago, or did you not?—A. I have just said I think I did.

Q. You have not answered the question as to whether you did not write the letter of the 6th of January to A. & R. Loggie, because of what took place between you and the minister at St. John?—A. I suppose that had a good deal to do with it, but still I wanted that letter just the same whether I had seen him or not.

There is the statement that it was because of this interview at St. John that Mr. Stead on the 6th of January applied to the Loggies for a letter to bolster up this transaction; and yet on the 13th of January, the minister writes a letter to Stead in terms intimating that this was the first information he had of the transaction. All I want to say in reference to that is that nothing could be more transparent. This correspondence was put upon the records and upon the files of the department for public effect in view of the evidence that has been quoted. But that is not all. The letter of the Loggies, these dredging contractors, who have received nearly $150,000 out of the public treasury on contracts awarded to them by the Minister of Public Works since the present minister was appointed to that office, is put forward as a defence to this transaction—to show that they thought this was a good bargain. The House will observe that that letter was written in the very terms of Mr. Stead's own report. The evidence shows that although that letter was dated at Dalhousie on the 6th of January, 1909. Mr. Stead was at Dalhousie on the same day to see Mr. Loggie and talk the matter over with him. I am not going to quote further from the evidence, but the minister cannot deny that Mr. Stead stated that he was there, saw Mr. Loggie, arranged for this letter, and knew the lines on which it was to be written. This letter and the statement of the Loggies about the $5,000 was completely killed by the evidence before the committee. Wm. O'Leary was brought up from Montreal and testified that the same Andrew Loggie, who said that that was a good bargain for $5,000 had refused to take the property when he was offered it at $1,000, saying that he had all the old property he wanted at Richibucto. There was the further evidence that the Loggie firm had been doing business at Richibucto for 20 or 25 years, and had bought 8 or 10 different lots running from Water street to the river at prices varying from $114 to $1,000, and most of them inculding buildings. The $1,000 purchase, of which evidence was given, was completed within a few months before, and included the Queen Hotel. So that it became necessary for something more to be done. Mr. Loggie must be brought to Ottawa, or rather it must be made to appear that the Minister of Public Works was anxious to have him brought to Ottawa, and on the 16th of December the minister asks that he be summoned as a witness, although he tried to make it appear to-night that Mr. Loggie was my witness, and that I was bringing him to support our end of the case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Speaker, would I be permitted to say to the hon. gentleman that he is entirely misstating what took place?

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule of the House, when strictly applied—of course, it has never been strictly applied—is that a member cannot be interrupted except for order or privilege or with his consent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me appeal to my hon. friend, might we not have this matter put right?

Mr. CROCKET. No, not in that way.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, you want it wrong— alright.

Mr. CROCKET. This is the statement made by the Minister of Public Works on the 16th of December:

I am willing to postpone the further examination of this witness until to-morrow, but I would like that a subpoena be issued for the attendance of Mr. Andrew Loggie, whose name has been mentioned here. I think the members of the committee would feel as I do, that Mr. Loggie should be called as a witness. I think perhaps he had better be summoned after the holidays, so long as it is understood now that he will be called.

Does the minister say that he did not make that statement?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman know that Mr. Loggie was ill and unable to attend, and the evidence was closed without him, and later on at the instance of the hon. gentleman himself a subpoena was issued for Mr. Loggie.

Mr. CROCKET. The statement I have read was by the Minister of Public Works.

An hon. MEMBER. Is that the first suggestion?

Mr. CROCKET. That is the first suggestion to bring Mr. Loggie. Then the investigation was adjourned until after the holidays, and when it was resumed Mr. Geoffrey Stead was recalled and examined by Mr. Pugsley.

Q. Have you seen Mr. Andrew Loggie lately, Mr. Stead?—A. I saw him a week ago, Mr. Pugsley.
Q. I have received this telegram from him.

This is Mr. Pugsley's statement.

Dalhousie, New Brunswick,
January 18, 1910.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Regret I am unable to be present at Ottawa 19th, being confined to house for sometime with bronchitis and asthma; returning summons with doctor's certificate; will wire you fully to-day.

ANDREW LOGGIE.

That is the answer Mr. Speaker to a summons from the Public Accounts Committee, a telegram to the Minister of Public Works in which he states that he is ill and that he will wire him fully to-day. Now the next day the minister returns to the committee and produces another letter from the Loggie firm, dated January 18th. He takes the stand himself and is questioned by Mr. Carvell.

Q. You are minister of Public Works?—A. Yes.
Q. As Minister of Public Works, have you had an offer from any person or any firm for the Sawdust Wharf property at Richibucto which was purchased by your department from Mr. T. O. Murray?—A. It having been stated by Mr. Stead in a letter which is already in evidence, and also stated to me verbally that Messrs. A. & R. Loggie had stated that they would gladly give $5,000 for this property, I ask that a subpœna should issue to Mr. Andrew Loggie in order that he might appear before the committee.

Is that what the minister was referring to?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, you will find it later, when the evidence closed.

Mr. CROCKET. This is the letter:

Loggieville, New Brunswick,
January 18, 1910.

E. D. Lafleur, Esq.,
Chief Engineer,
Department of Public Works,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—With the hope that the Public Works Department will be willing to sell and dispose of the wharf property in Richibucto, New Brunswick, sometimes called the sawdust wharf, and being desirous of purchasing the same for use in the prosecution of our business, we hereby offer to purchase the said wharf property as described in deed from R. O'Leary and wife to T. O. Murray, dated on or about May, 1908, and to pay for the same the sum of $5,500 cash, for which amount we herewith inclose our certified cheque on the Bank of Montreal payable to the order of the honourable the Minister of Public Works. This offer to remain open for 30 days, and that a notice of acceptance or refusal be forwarded within that time. In case of acceptance, that a deed be executed and delivered to Andrew Loggie, Robert Loggie and Francis Loggie, all of Loggieville, in the county of Northumberland, and province of New Brunswick, merchants, immediately on the expiration of that period. In the case of refusal of this offer that a notice of same be given immediately on the expiration of that period, and the certified cheque inclosed herewith be returned to the undersigned.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) A. & R. LOGGIE.

And then Mr. Loggie has a certified cheque for $5,500. Did you ever hear of anything like that in your career, Mr. Speaker? Then Mr. Loggie continued ill, and it was very convenient in the interests of the Department of Public Works that he should continue ill. It was at my request ultimately, that Mr. Loggie was brought before the committee, because when we had this statement I was determined that we were going to find out what it was that brought about that letter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. About two hours ago the hon. member stated he came up to bolster up the case.

Mr. CROCKET. I have stated the facts just as they have occurred, and as they are on the record.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Just as they have not occurred.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Look at page 90.

Mr. CROCKET. On page 90 the leader of the opposition calls my attention to a statement of the Minister of Public Works:

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY. Later on I will possibly ask for an adjournment so as to get Mr. Loggie here, that is after Mr. Crocket is through with the other witnesses.

The minister was very glad to drop it without seeking Mr. Loggie after what had developed, and we made many inquiries at several meetings, as many as half a dozen, of the Public Accounts Committee before we could get Mr. Loggie here, and it was ultimately at my request that a telegram was sent urging his attendance. It was not until the 24th February, that he was brought as a witness before that committee, and then we learned from Mr. Loggie when he did come that this letter of the 18th January, had been written by him after communicating with his brother Francis Loggie who, was living at Loggieville, communicating by telephone, and by letter. When he was asked for the letter he had not the letter. He thought it was none of our business, that it was a private matter, and when asked what had become of it he said he had burned it, the letter which showed just what had put into his mind the thought of buying this property for $5,500 after, as the evidence of William O'Leary shows, he had refused it for $1,000. He said he had no communication with the Department of Public Works, no intimation from anybody that the Department of Public Works was willing to sell the property, and yet he signs a certified cheque for $5,500 to buy it. The Minister of Public Works said that there was no intimation of any kind. Now, Mr. Speaker, just think of that, a business man such as Mr. Loggie is, sitting down in his office and attempting to buy from the government a property that had been bought by the government ostensibly in the public interests, and enclosing a cheque to close up the matter without any intimation, without any negotiations of any kind. Why the thing is perfectly absurd, Mr. Speaker, and its only effect in my judgment, is to add another badge of fraud to this whole transaction, and another link in the chain of evidence to connect the Minister of Public Works with it. We found out also that this gentleman had been carrying on business at Richibucto for twenty-five years when this wharf property had been lying idle there for ten or fifteen years, that it was unfit absolutely for wharfage purposes in its present condition, that he had never examined the property, that he knew that O'Leary had sold it for $700 at the time he sent this cheque.

He had never estimated the cost of repairs; had not the slightest conception of what it would cost him to put the wharf into condition to be used, and had made no inquiries with reference to any other wharf in Richibucto. And all this although, within twelve months, another completed wharf, in full use, built away out to the channel and in good condition had been sold for $750. We found furthermore, that Mr. Loggie had purchased seven or eight properties extending from Water street to the river the same as this wharf property, and of varying widths, at prices ranging from $114 to $1,000 as I have stated. His own wharf, built on two of these properties, cost him, with two buildings on it, $650. Yet this gentleman was eager to buy this heap of sawdust for $5,500. We learned from him also that he had bought what was known as the Frecker lot, for $114—a lot with a water front. He bought the Harnett lot—as appears on page 206—for $200. He bought the Fraser lot with a store upon it for $380—as will be seen by his own evidence at page 207. He bought the Leishman property for $350, including a store and dwelling house and barn—page 208. The lot on which was the building containing the office of the late respected George McInerney and including the office building, was bought for $275, with a frontage, Mr. O'Leary stated of over 100 feet and more centrally situated—nearer the store. There was the Hutchison property containing the Queen hotel with attached buildings including a new stable and with the hotel as a running concern, Mr. Loggie bought for $1,000. Mr. O'Leary had bought the George McLeod property with 700 or 800 feet on the water, with a warehouse and store and wharf back of it, for $250. This was immediately adjoining his own property and in the centre of the business part of the town. This is referred to at page 122. Mr. O'Leary sold another lot with a small dwelling house upon it, a lot with a frontage of 100 feet on the water for $400, also referred to at page 122. If anything were wanting to stamp this letter of Messrs. A. & R. Loggie as an absolute fraud is furnished by the evidence he gave himself. Think of business men living in Richibucto, men who have carried on business there for from twenty to twenty five years, after having made purchases at prices such as I have quoted, sending a certified cheque for $5,500 to buy a sawdust wharf absolutely unfit for wharfage purposes and requiring if the engineer's estimate is worth anything, thousands and thousands of dollars to put it into shape for shipping purposes. But that is not all. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) took a very active interest in this investigation. He went after Mr. Richard O'Leary, and I suppose we shall have the Minister of Public Works after Mr. O'Leary——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only to send his own letters after him.

Mr. CROCKET. But this can be said about Mr. Richard O'Leary that there is no businessman in the province of New Brunswick stands higher in public estimation than he does. The hon. member for Carleton wished to put up a job on Mr. O'Leary. I do not mean that in an offensive sense—just as lawyers sometimes do in dealing with witnesses—as to the value of his own wharf. Mr. O'Leary had said in reference to his own private wharf he would not sell——

Mr. CARVELL. He would sell.

Mr. CROCKET——Would sell for $2,000. It cost him $1,500. He would not sell——

Mr. CARVELL. Would sell.

Mr. CROCKET. Yes, would sell, I meant to say. I asked him what it was worth and he said not more than $2,000. Then when Mr. O'Leary came back, the hon. member for Carleton rose in the committee, and his cross-examination of Mr. O'Leary begins with the production of a document. He proposes to buy this property from Mr. O'Leary.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CROCKET. Yes, and he said he had a cheque, but his was not certified.

Mr. O'Leary answered that if he wished to talk business he would see him outside. But think of the absurdity of a member of this House seeking to make the Public Accounts Committee a medium of negotiating a business transaction. Mr. O'Leary had said that the property was not worth $2,000, that he would sell it for $2,000, meaning of course that if he were selling he would not expect to get more and therefore would not ask more. It was known of course he would not sell his wharf unless he were willing to sell out his business at Richibucto.

Mr. CARVELL. That was his estimate of the value.

Mr. CROCKET. Well, Mr. Speaker, it turned out that this offer was not made by the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) on his own behalf. When Mr. Loggie appears upon the stand he gives it away that this offer so dramatically made by the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) was on telegraphic instruction from this same Mr. Andrew Loggie. On the same date, 18th January, after he wrote the letter, and sent the cheque for $5,500 to buy this sawdust wharf, he sent a telegram to the hon. member for Carleto offer to Mr. O'Leary on his behalf $2,000 for his wharf.

Mr. CARVELL. No, $2,500.

Mr. CROCKET. And I just wish to refer to that evidence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. O'Leary was not then so anxious to sell.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was the Public Accounts Committee selected as the place for negotiating this transaction?

Mr. CROCKET. Yes. That is the instruction the hon. member for Carleton received, and Mr. Loggie stated that he was acting as his attorney, and expected to pay him.

Mr. CARVELL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) be fair enough to put that exactly as it occurred in the committee? He ought to be fair enough.

Mr. CROCKET. I am not done with this yet.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not like the insinuation.

Mr. CROCKET. There is no insinuation against the hon. member for Carleton in this connection.

Mr. CARVELL. I am very sorry that it is thought necessary to make the insinuation.

Mr. CROCKET. It is not an insinuation, but a statement. I am not in the habit of making insinuations. This is like other evidence that Mr. Loggie gave. His sworn statement had to be contradicted by the member for Carleton. He was asked and said that he expected to pay Mr. Carvell. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) remembers that distinctly. Then it was that the hon. member for Carleton, apparently thinking that Mr. Loggie had put him in a position of violating the law of parliament rushed out for the telegram. I told the hon. member for Carleton when he became excited over Mr. Loggie's statement that he was putting himself upon trial, that nobody else attached any importance to it. If Mr. Loggie intended that this should be a bona fide transaction outside of the Public Accounts Committee there was nothing that he need be afraid of, but if the hon. member for Carleton interpreted Mr. Loggie's instructions that he should do this as a member of the House, he was violating the law. I merely refer to it to show the lack of good faith with which this whole thing is fraught from the beginning to the end. Mr. Loggie's offer was not a bona fide offer. The hon. member for Carleton stated that he never even made a report to him. This is the telegram from A. & R. Loggie:

Chatham, New Brunswick, January 18.

G. B. Carvell, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario.

Having noted in report of evidence of R. O'Leary his willingness to sell his own private wharf property at Richibucto for $2,000, we hereby authorize and empower you to purchase said property from Mr. O'Leary for us at what he asks or any sum not exceeding $2,500 cash on delivery of deed in fee simple.

A. & R. LOGGIE.

Now, Mr. Loggie, before this telegram was produced, had stated that Mr. O'Leary had made a statement in the committee that he did not believe. I asked him what that statement was, and he said it was that Mr. O'Leary would sell his own wharf for $2,000. He said that O'Leary would not sell the wharf for less than $8,000, that it was worth $8,000, and he knew he would not sell it for $2,000. Yet the instruction to the member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) is not under any circumstances to offer more than $2,500, $5,500 less than Loggie said that O'Leary himself knew the wharf was worth. The thing was simply a big bluff. And that telegram was sent the very same day, as I have pointed out, that he was after the sawdust wharf. This business man who had a wharf of his own which had been meeting all his requirements, who never made an inquiry for a wharf of any kind, suddenly blossoms into a wholesale wharf buyer as soon as this matter comes before the Public Accounts Committee, and tries to buy two wharfs on one day for which he had no use, and one of which, this government wharf, he admitted was not fit to use. Now, Sir, that pretty well disposes of that offer. Then it was necessary for the Minister of Public Works to go one step further, that offer must be accepted in some way. So they produced before the committee some counter propositions, and informed us that they were selling two-thirds of this wharf at $3,500, and retaining one-third of it for the use of the public. Now that does strike me to be the most absurd and ridiculous proposition that was ever submitted to anybody for consideration. Here is a wharf which the Minister of Public Works will say it was necessary should be bought in 1908. If it was not, what did the Minister of Public Works buy it for? And yet they sell two-thirds of that wharf, thereby providing evidence upon which they at least may say it was unnecessary, and was not in the public interest. But what does Mr. Loggie say to that? He admitted that if the government sold that property to his firm it would defeat the very scheme which the resident engineer had in view when he recommended the purchase, namely, that it would provide a site for a railway station and terminals. Mr. Loggie was questioned upon that point and he admitted that the sale of the property to him would defeat that purpose, and would therefore be subversive of the public interest. Yet we are asked to take that as a genuine proposition.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman must know that is not in the evidence. You will find that Mr. Loggie swears that 200 feet of wharf would give good accommodation.

Mr. CROCKET. Let the Minister of Public Works turn to page 195 where Mr. Loggie said:

Q. Do you say the scheme which Mr. Stead had in view, and upon which he bases his valuation, and on which he bases this letter, that it would provide a site for a railway station and tracks and terminals, does not fall completely through?—A. Certainly it would. We are buying that property and making that offer for A. & R. Loggie.

Q. Then this is subversive of the public interest, which you said the purchase of this property was necessary to promote?—A. We are buying that property for A. & R. Loggie, regardless of the public interest or anybody else but A. & R. Loggie.

So there is the admission from Mr. Loggie himself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman read just a little further:

Q. Is not the original object defeated by selling this portion of the property to you?—A. I do not think so, because they have reserved 200 feet of it.

Mr. CROCKET. There is a straight question and answer, it would defeat the object they had in view, that was his first answer to me. As soon as he saw the point, and the position he had put himself in, he began to hedge, as other witnesses did that were produced on behalf of the Public Works Department.

Now I regret that I have occupied so much time of the House. But this has impressed me as a matter of serious importance, not because of the amount of money involved, which is comparatively small, but because it involves as I have said, and as the Toronto 'Globe' has said, not only the methods, but the honour of the chief spending department of this government. For that reason I have thought it my duty to put upon record, not my statement or interpretation of the evidence, but the evidence just as it was given, so that members of the House may see for themselves, and draw their own conclusions. There is one other matter I want to refer to. In addition to Mr. Loggie there was another witness produced, Mr. J. D. Irvine. He was not called by myself, he was called by my hon. friend from Carleton who was defending this transaction before the Public Accounts Committee, as he has been called upon to defend so many transactions of the Public Works Department in that committee, and he is deserving of the sympathy of the House in that connection. Now, Mr. Irving was asked as to the valuation, and I will quote from his evidence a line or two, page 129:

Q. Suppose that you were in business in Richibucto as Messrs. Loggie are, and you owned that property, what would you sell it for?—A. Well, I do not know if I had it that I would sell it at all, unless I could get another one to replace it.

Q. It has been stated by Mr. Stead in that letter which he wrote to me in answer to that request for information in regard to the knowledge which he had before reporting on the value of this proprty, that there was a party in Buctouche who said that he would not take $10,000 for it if he owned it, and he said, you are the gentleman to whom he referred. Did you tell Mr. Stead that?—A. Well, I did, I said that if I had it in the town of Buctouche, situated as it was there, I would not take it.

Further on:

Q. If you owned that property in Richibucto, would you take $5,000 for it?—A. No, Sir, I would not, not by any means.

That was the evidence given to the Minister of Public Works. But in cross examination it turned out that J. D. Irving was, like Mr. Loggie, a gentleman who had been drawing large sums of money from the Public Works Department upon the certificate of Geoffrey Stead. He had a scow down there, of which he dared not place the valuation at over $150, for which he had received about $600 rent from the Public Works Department. Here is more of Mr. Irving's evidence in his cross-examination, page 130:

Q. You spoke about having some wharf property yourself at Buctouche?—A. Yes.
Q. I think you said you had about half a mile?—A. In the vicinity of the water front.
Q. How much did you pay for your wharf property in Buctouche?—A. One wharf I bought for $220, somewhere about ten or fifteen years ago, I could not tell exactly.
Q. And you have a half a mile of it on the shore?—A. I have close on to half a mile, I think.

This gentleman who said that if he had this property in Buctouche he would not sell it for $10,000, had actually bought his own wharf at Buctouche with half a mile of shore for $220.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which, at page 134, he says is yielding $500 a year income.

Mr. CROCKET. That is the evidence that we have adduced before the Public Accounts Committee in support of this valuation, the evidence of A. & R. Loggie and J. D. Irving. I think if that evidence has any effect it is only to confirm the abundance of evidence which this record contains that this transaction is, as I said at the outset, a positive fraud, deliberately planned from the beginning, and I say to the Minister of Public Works that if this evidence does not convict him of complicity in this transaction it certainly involves him in the gravest suspicion that has ever surrounded a minister of the cabinet with reference to a transaction of this kind. I think the evidence I have quoted establishes what I have said. I, therefore, beg to move:

That all the words after the word 'that' to the end of the motion be left out and the following substituted therefor:—
The evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee and submitted to this House touching a payment of $5,000 to T. O. Murray in connection with the purchase by the Public Works Department of the sawdust wharf at Richibucto, New Brunswick, as set out at page V—188 of the Auditor General's Report for the year ending March 31, 1909, discloses that said purchase was a corrupt and fraudulent transaction which deserves the severest condemnation of the House.

On motion of Mr. Carvell, debate was adjourned.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Shall we go on with this debate to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 21, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 213) respecting the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Sifton.

Bill (No. 214) respecting the Alberta and British Columbia Railway Company.—Mr. Herron.

Bill (No. 215) to incorporate the Buctouche Railway and Transportation Company.—Mr. Carvell.

DISALLOWANCE OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I inquired of the Prime Minister a few days ago whether or not the government would lay upon the table of the House the papers in connection with the petition for disallowance of certain legislation of the province of Ontario. May I again bring the matter to the attention of the government?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There is no objection, and the papers will be laid on the table as soon as they can be copied.

SUPPLY—THE RICHIBUCTO WHARF.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Fielding 'That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply,' and the proposed amendment of Mr. Crocket thereto.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, I desire as briefly as possible to review some of the facts in this case, which my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) discussed for three hours and a half yesterday afternoon; and it seemed to me that just before he closed he was attempting to take away from the hon. member from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) the distinction which he holds of having made the longest speech on record during the present session. If the hon. member for York could have held out for another 40 minutes, I think he would have carried off the palm; and as he spent three-quarters of his time in reading disjointed portions of the evidence, if he had read a little more, he could have occupied four hours and ten minutes and could have gone back to New Brunswick with a record equal to that which he established last year. It is remarkable that his record of last year was made in an attempt to besmirch the character of the Minister of Public Works, and he attempted to make his record this year with the same object in view. If he does not succeed any better on the present occasion than he did last year, he will have spent a lot of energy and wasted a great deal of the time of this House in a very useless way. My hon. friend spent four hours last year on a subject to him of so much importance that he divided the House upon it—a subject which had been investigated by an arbitration in the province of New Brunswick under the direction of the provincial government at a cost of from $12,000 to $15,000, and which his own friends in the provincial legislature had not the courage to refer to when the report was laid on the table of the House, and the matter has not been referred to in the province of New Brunswick from that day to this. Now, he has used three hours and a half of the time of this House in the closing days of this session to discuss a matter which is so paltry that it seems to me even the hon. member for York might have been ashamed to have discussed it in the manner he has done. I am sorry that the labour of my hon. friend for the past year has come to naught to the extent that it has in this case. In a political sense we know of nothing that the hon. member has looked after during the last year except this sawdust wharf proposition. This matter came up in the House of Commons last year on the Estimates, and my hon. friend got some information; but that only whetted his appetite for more, and as soon as he got back to New Brunswick he started off on the search. It is well known that in the month of October he spent about a week in Richibucto and the vicinity in company with Mr. Richard O'Leary for the purpose of obtaining whatever information he could on this subject, and it is very strange that he went to no one else for information. It is within the memory of many hon. members of this House who are members of the Public Accounts Committee that on the very day the committee was organized my hon. friend was so anxious to give the public the benefit of his year's research that he demanded that the committee be called together for the very purpose of giving him a chance to have subpœnas issued to certain people in New Brunswick to give evidence on this subject. I do not want to impute unfair motives to my hon. friend, but I want to state the facts, because to my mind they are an indication of the spirit with which my hon. friend has approached this matter from the very beginning down to 12 o'clock last evening. He knew that in the following week the Minister of Public Works would be in the city of Washington and I would be in New Brunswick attending court. He had this knowledge, because I sent a note to his desk mate, the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel), asking for a pair, and when he called for the investigation of this matter the next week I asked him if he could not as a matter of courtesy delay it until after Christmas. He said that it was impossible, because certain of the witnesses could not come after Christmas; and it was only after pleading with him that it was put off for another week. The Minister of Public Works went to Washington and I went to New Brunswick to attend court, and came back for two or three days for the purpose of being at the meeting of the committee. The only witnesses he brought from beginning to end were Messrs. Murray and O'Leary, and they came before Christmas and gave their evidence, and could have come after Christmas notwithstanding the statement of my hon. friend that he had to bring this matter on before Christmas, otherwise he could not get these witnesses.

Now that is the spirit in which my hon. friend approached this matter. That is the spirit in which he conducted the examination of the witnesses. That is the spirit in which he approached the matter last evening, and that is the spirit in which he has discussed the matter from the very beginning. As I understood him last evening the case resolved itself into two branches. The first is whether there was any collusion between the Minister of Public Works or any official of his department, and Mr. Murray, in the purchase of this wharf, and the second is, though my hon. friend tried to slide over it, the value of the property. It may be interesting to some members of the House who have not been members of the committee and who have not followed the discussion, to give a short history of the transaction from the beginning. The village or town of Richibucto is a town of about 1,000 people. It is the shire town of the county of Kent. It is the centre of a large lumbering industry and the centre of the most important fishing industry in the province New Brunswick. There is one railway which enters the town, the Kent Northern railway. It is an independent railway which should be and will be, I hope in the near future, a branch of the Intercolonial railway. The railway enters the town in the rear, and at a point probably a quarter of a mile from the water front. For a number of years there has been a spur running down to what is called the municipal wharf to the water front, but the municipal wharf was only 129 feet in width and when a car was sent down to the wharf, it was impossible to turn it around and lay it alongside the wharf, and any freight to be transhipped from a vessel had to be placed on the wharf and carried around to the car. There is no doubt, however, that the people of Richibucto, the owners of the railway, everybody concerned, were anxious to have these wharf facilities extended for the transhipment of freight between the water and the railway, and with that object in view, in the month of March, 1908, the Department of Public Works purchased from the municipality of Kent this wharf that is called the municipal wharf, for which they paid $1,500 and on which they have already expended $5,000 to place it in proper condition. My hon. friend did not hesitate to say yesterday that this wharf was a wharf in a splendid condition, all equipped with a railway track upon it for use, and thought it had only cost $1,500. He used the argument in order to show that the other wharf property with which I will deal later, was not worth nearly so much as the municipal wharf. Now, if the wharf was fully equipped, if it required nothing more to make it a workable wharf, is it reasonable that the Department of Public Works would have spent $5,000 already in order to bring it up to the condition in which it ought to be. More than that my hon. friend made this statetment with the fact staring him in the face that the resident engineer submitted a report that it would require $11,000 to rebuild this wharf and place it in the condition in which it ought to be. Then there is no doubt that the owners of the Kent Northern railway, with which Mr. T. O. Murray is connected, wanted further accommodation. I am not going to discuss Mr. Murray. He is only a human being and he is doing exactly what hundreds of other people all over the country are doing. He realized that in order to make this railway profitable he must be able to transhipment freight from the water to the railway in order to benefit the town of Richibucto. It was necessary to have more wharfage facilities in the town of Richibucto and there is no doubt that he did what he could to secure the additional accommodation. He bought this wharf, this property we are discussing, from Mr. O'Leray, for the sum of $700. Now my hon. friend says because he got this property for that amount of money, and sold it for $5,000 that that is evidence of collusion between him and the department, and evidence of bad faith on the part of every person connected with this transaction, from the minister to Mr. Murray. I do not propose to discuss the question of good or bad faith. So far as the Minister of Public Works is concerned, he is perfectly capable of looking after himself. I do, however, propose to discuss this matter to some extent along the lines of what the evidence adduce in that connection, and then I want to discuss it to some extent along the line of value. My hon. friend contends in the first place that Mr. Murray first went to O'Leary and wanted to buy the wharf, and then hied himself off to Ottawa and made a trade with the Minister of Public Works. Well, Sir, I am not going to read the evidence as my hon. friend did; I am only going to show—we have on page 6 of this evidence—the positive statement of Mr. Murray that he never spoke to Mr. O'Leary in his life before he went to Ottawa and that what Mr. O'Leary stated about that is untrue, or rather it is a case of bad recollection, if you want to put it in that way. I know my hon. friends will say Murray is a perjurer and therefore that we should not endeavour to give his evidence any credence. Well, before I am through I will try to show without any spirit of animosity to Mr. O'Leary, that Mr. O'Leary's evidence is not worthy of any more credence than is the evidence of Mr. Murray, or half a dozen other gentlemen who have given evidence in the matter. I am sorry Mr. O'Leary finds himself in an unpleasant position at the present time; I am very sorry that Mr. O'Leary has been dragged into the net of my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) and his friends over this transaction. I can only say that if Mr. O'Leary wishes to hunt with the member for York he must take his share of the game, no matter what it may be. In the province of New Brunswick Mr. O'Leary and my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) are not getting any sympathy. In fact this matter has become so much of a laughing stock that one witness referred to it as the Richibucto novel.

Mr. CROCKET. What witness?

Mr. CARVELL. Andrew Loggie. It is called the Richibucto novel because in the opinion of this witness it had a great deal more fiction than fact in it, and I think it is well named. Mr. Murray did go to Ottawa to see the Minister of Public Works on other matters, and he says this question of the wharf was never referred to at all. Later on he bought this property from Mr. O'Leary for the sum of $700 and he at once entered into negotiations with the department to sell it to them. Now, I am not trying to slide that over in any particular whatever. I want to make that just as plain as I can make it, that as soon as he got this wharf he started out to sell it to the department. I have no doubt that when he bought this wharf he bought it in the hope that he might sell it to the department and get better wharfage facilities for the transhipment of freight from the water to the cars. I am not holding up Mr. Murray as immaculate in this transaction. No man can read the evidence without admitting that Mr. Murray was working for himself, but I do deny that there was anything corrupt in the transaction so far as the department is concerned. Now I come next to the value of the property. My hon. friend read the evidence last night, as I have already said, for nearly three and a half hours, but it is a remarkable thing and it must have taken a great deal of research on his part to have been able to read so much evidence and studiously avoid referring to the value of this property, except in the evidence of Mr. O'Leary. It is another remarkable fact—my hon. friend had the whole resources of the government at his back in order to bring witnesses from any portion of the Dominion to prove the value of this property if he wanted to, and yet he never brought a solitary individual here except Richard O'Leary, and I think his brother, to give a word of evidence. There were seven or eight gentlemen from the county of Kent brought here, most of them by my hon. friend. Among them was Mr. James, who was Mr. O'Leary's personal attorney. And my hon. friend examined, and cross-examined and re-examined every one of these gentlemen, and not one of them gave any evidence to support his theory except Mr. O'Leary. And, in the case of Mr. James, who was his own witness and who, no doubt, to a very large extent is under the control and influence of Mr. O'Leary, he never dared ask him one question as to the value of the property. And Mr. James gave evidence and left the witness box without having been asked a question as to the value.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Why did not you ask him ?

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) I think has had enough experience in law never to fool with a bumble bee. If you have a witness who, you are pretty sure, is against you, it is good enough tactics to leave him alone. I am not giving away any secrets of the profession, I think, in making that statement. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) will understand pretty well why I did not ask him. But I might retort, why did not my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) ask him ?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I was not there.

Mr. CARVELL. That was his neglect—he should have been there. Now, we have the evidence of five or six gentlemen some of whom my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) will say, are prejudiced, but some of whom he cannot say are prejudiced. And I propose to refer briefly to the evidence of these gentlemen as to the value of this property. The first is Mr. Wm. D. Carter. Now, Mr. Wm. D. Carter is a friend of Mr. Murray. He is a prominent Liberal in the county of Kent, and is not ashamed of it. He is a member of the executive committee of the Liberal party in the county of Kent. But Mr. Wm. D. Carter is as independent an attorney as is at the bar of New Brunswick to-day and a gentleman whom even my hon. friend from York (Mr. (Crocket) would not dare to besmirch in his native province of New Brunswick, and whom, I am glad to say, he did not say very much against in his tirade against almost everybody connected with this transaction. I refer especially to page 104, and I will read very briefly from this evidence. Mr. Carter was asked about the value of this wharf :

Q. If you wanted it for business purposes, you would consider it worth $5,000 ?—A. I would, it is a wharf that could not be built for that if a man wanted it.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is no evidence of its present value.

Mr. CARVELL. I think that if the hon. member (Mr. J. D. Reid) will read this evidence carefully, he will get enough to satisfy him as to his present value. I refer also to pages 106 and 107, where Mr. Carter gives a description of the wharf :

With the facing I should say that it is a good wharf.

Q. With the facing you would say that it was a good wharf ?—A. Yes, with the repairs that would naturally have to be made and the facing.

Q. Do you tell me that, Mr. Carter ?—A. I do.

Q. That that wharf is a good wharf to-day with the facing?—A. I said with repairs and facing it would be a good wharf.

Q. Have you been on that wharf this last year?—A. Oh, yes, I have.

Q. Is not that wharf full of holes? Is it not composed of decayed sawdust, so that if you step on any part of it you are not certain that you may not go through?—A. No, I do not say that. Inside where the old saw-mill was filled in between the cribwork with decayed sawdust. On the outside, as far as I can remember—I have not examined this particularly in order to tell you—but my recollection is that outside it is ballast.

Q. Outside?—A. Yes, and what is more, it was stated here, as I understand it, that the outside——

Q. That is under water?—A. No. It is the highest wharf in town, the outside of it.

Q. The highest wharf in town?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Stead yesterday state that he had reported to the department in his official statement that this wharf was washed away?—A. That would be down——

My hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) as usual, interrupted.

Q. Down to low water level?—A. That is not so. Along the edge may be, but there is a place inside where they keep boats and that sort of thing. In high tide—and we had the highest tide there probably a couple of months ago that we have had for some time—the other wharfs were submerged, and that inside was submerged, but the part outside was above the level.

There is the evidence of Mr. Carter, a gentleman who will not prejure himself and has no interest in doing so, who states facts which any man can prove by going there—that this is the highest wharf in town, that the outside is a solid gravel bank which is washed away down to low water, and, as I will read in a moment, below the water there must be crib work, because there is ballast which has been discharged for years from vessels coming with lumber, so that all you have to do is to dredge away the ballast in front of the wharf and you have a wharf with thirteen or fourteen feet of water, filled with ballast, and extending some hundreds of feet. Here is the evidence at page 109, the answer being to a question by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie):

Q. And you could bring vessels drawing a considerable depth of water and load them there when within reach of the wharf with 15 or 18 feet of cribwork—originally there must have been 15 or 18 feet of water there?—A. I could not say as to that, but originally it must have been built up with cribwork or the ballast would not have been there.

Q. The ballast has fallen out over the other portion of the cribwork, and it would appear as the shore?—A. Yes, that is it.

Q. But if you look below the water, why you have 13 or 14 feet of cribwork along 600 or 700 feet of water front?—A. I could not tell you anything about it, all that I know is that the cribwork must have been there, because the ballast is there, and the cribwork could not get away while the ballast is there.

Q. And if it were washed away by easterly storms in a block it would show up along the shore farther up?—A. I would think so.

Q. Did you ever see any portion of it along the shore after a storm?—A. No, I do not remember doing so.

Q. There is no evidence, except that it is not in sight at low water, but that it is there still?—A. I think so.

There is the evidence of a gentleman, whether interested or not, as to the condition of the wharf at that time.

Mr. BLAIN. Was not the wharf in the same condition when it was sold for $700 ? And why did not the government buy if for $700 ?

Mr. CARVELL. It was practically in the same condition, except that Mr. O'Leary, after the sale, had carted away some hundreds of loads of ballast and put it on his own wharf. Why did not the government buy it for that ? Surely, the hon. member is not sincere; he knows they could not buy it for that.

Mr. BLAIN. It was bought for that.

Mr. CARVELL. But the government could not buy it for that after Mr. Murray got it. I dare say that if the government had gone before Mr. Murray bought it, possibly they might have bought it cheaper than they did; but they could not have got it for $700—never. Now, I want to take up Mr. O'Leary's side of this question for a moment. It is admitted by everybody that Mr. O'Leary is a very large property owner in Richibucto. And there is no doubt that Mr. O'Leary has a splendid wharf which lies next north alongside this wharf, a wharf suitable to accommodate his business in the past and for many years to come. As far as Mr. O'Leary's private business is concerned, there is no reason to suppose that within the next quarter of a century he or his successors will require further wharf accommodation than they have at the present time. Mr. O'Leary bought this wharf, not because he wanted it—and I hope the House will take note of that fact. He bought it, or he practically—I will not say stole—he received it from his half-brothers for practically nothing because they had left the place, sold out their interests, and were determined to get rid of it at any price. Nobody would buy it, so they sold it to their brother for a small amount of money. Mr. O'Leary kept it for twelve or fifteen years. He had to pay taxes on it; he never used it or expected to use it; so far as he was concerned it was a white elephant, and he was willing to sell it for whatever he could get for it. And when Mr. Murray came to him and made the proposition to buy the wharf, depend upon it, this view was floating through Mr. O'Leary's mind : Let it be understood that Mr. O'Leary has no railway accommodation at this wharf, and it is in evidence that it cost him $4 or $5 to haul a loaded car to the railway station, which is a quarter of a mile away. Mr. O'Leary was doing this for the purpose of selling to the department, and he knew that it was the purpose of the department to build a railway track upon it in order that railway cars might lay alongside the wharf, and he knew that if the department placed a railway track upon it, eventually the tracks would extend to his own wharf and in that way he would get railway accommodation to his own wharf.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the government would extend the railway to the sawdust wharf?

Mr. CARVELL. There is no evidence that they would do it, but we know there was a track placed upon the municipal wharf, and either the government or the owners, or somebody else, would be interested enough to have a railway track laid along the face of this wharf. Now Mr. O'Leary is no child, and when he sold that wharf, believing it would go to the Public Works Department, he knew there would be railway tracks upon it in a short time, and he knew that those tracks could be easily extended to his own wharf, and he knew that in that way he would get the benefit of railway accommodation which he could get in no other way, because there is no other place in Richibucto where the railway can get to the water front excepting over this very wharf.

Now, there is another thing to which I must refer, and that is the value of this wharf from Mr. O'Leary's standpoint. Mr. O'Leary says in his evidence, it is true, that $700 is all it was worth. But when the government wanted to buy a right of way for the sewer three or four years ago, he did not know what to ask for it, but finally he sold, not a piece of land 50 feet wide, as he thought it was, but merely the right to lay a sewer under this wharf extending out 200 feet, and he asked and received from the government $100. Why, Sir, that would not be one-hundredth part of the value of that wharf, because you could utilize it for the purpose of a sewer, and it would not affect its value in any way for wharf purposes, or even for building purposes, and yet he asked and received for this right $100 from the government. There is no doubt that the sewer was not successful, they had to get more right of way, and he wanted more money, at least, according to his own evidence he wanted another $100, and according to the evidence of Mr. Murray, he wanted $300 or $400 for extending this on a few feet further towards the water front. Yet he comes here and swears that the wharf was only worth $700 at that time. You have got to take these things into consideration if you want to judge of the honesty and sincerity of Mr. O'Leary in the statements he has made before that committee. Then again Mr. O'Leary says that a few days ago he offered the department the whole wharf for $1,000. He not only swore that, but he produced what he says was a copy of a letter sent to the Minister of Public Works, which was not a copy at all. However, there was a letter written to the Minister of Public Works, I think in the autumn of 1908 or early in 1909, in which he says that he offered this whole wharf property to the department a few years previously for the sum of $1,000. You will find that on page 46 of the evidence. I am reading now a copy of the real letter, not the one which he produced before the committee:

Richibucto, December 7, 1908.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Pugsley,—Your letter received and carefully noted. With regard to the sawdust wharf property referred to in same, I would say that this property was sold to me by Mr. Murray—May 23—with the understanding that Mr. Murray was acting as agent for the Department of Public Works, at $700. When the price was arranged between Mr. Murray and me, I felt that it was for the full market value. I had a short time before offered the property to the department through their Mr. Waterbury at $1,000, since when I have sold three different lots at $100 each, leaving the property then standing as if the sale were made at $700.

I do not propose reading the remainder of the letter at present, because nothing turns upon it. Now that was the statement made by Mr. O'Leary to the minister, and that is the statement which he swore to when he appeared before the committee on the first occasion. Now, Mr. Speaker, after Mr. O'Leary made this statement, an official of the department in St. John to whom this offer had been made commenced to look around to see if Mr. O'Leary's recollection was correct, and here is what we find. We find that Mr. O'Leary made this offer on the 22nd of April, 1904, to D. H. Waterbury, who was the architect of the Public Works Department in St. John. The letter was brought before the committee, it was in Mr. O'Leary's handwriting, admitted by him to be so, and it was not an offer to sell the whole wharf for $1,000, but it was an offer to sell less than one-third of it for $1,000, he would only sell one-third of it for $1,000, though it left the other two-thirds to him which were worth more to him than they would be to anybody else. I will read that letter, which is found on page 72:

Richibucto, N.B., April 22, 1904.

D. W. Waterbury, Esq.,
Richibucto, N.B.

Dear Sir,—With further reference to your conversation in re land opposite to public building in Richibucto, I will sell the whole lot on the eastern side of Water street, the full width of the present lot owned by the government, that is 227 feet in width and running back to the channel 625 feet for $1,000. Or I will sell the 227 feet on the street running back to a depth of 100 feet for $500.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) R. O'LEARY.

P.S.—Or I will sell a piece 50 feet by 100 feet opposite the public building where the sewer is for $250.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I forgot to state that this sawdust wharf practically contains about 10 acres of land, and part of it has water over it at high tide.

Mr. CROCKET. Does not the deed simply describe the property as containing 7·88 acres of land?

Mr. CARVELL. That may be true, and I will refer to the evidence, on page 73, of Mr. Stead, who made the survey, and prepared the plans from the survey, and brought the plans before the committee. In that he states that the land contains something near ten acres, as you will find in the evidence on page 73. Now, Sir, this wharf lies 725 feet or 730 feet along the river front, extending from the main street down to the river front on the one side, and on the opposite side of the main street is the post office and Dominion building. The Dominion building has a frontage on the western side of 223 feet, the sawdust wharf property has a frontage on the main street on the opposite side of 730 feet. Mr. O'Leary offered to sell to the department, by this letter, 227 feet opposite the post office building for $1,000. If you figure that out for the whole area, you will find that, in a writing which he cannot deny, he wanted over $3,000 for the whole lot. If you take his second offer and figure it out, that is the offer of a piece of 227 feet by 100 feet at $500, he wanted at the rate of $10,000, and if you take the other proposition, that is 50 feet by 100, he wanted at the rate of $20,000 for his wharf. This is in the letter produced in evidence, Mr. O'Leary cannot change his evidence, and this is the man who says the whole thing is not worth more than $700.

Mr. LALOR. Is it not a fact that he sold the property for $700?

Mr. CARVELL. Why, of course it is, and I have explained that half a dozen times. I trust my hon. friend when he interrupts me again will put a question that there is some common sense in.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) seriously contend that the figure an owner asks from the government for a property is any fair criterion of its value?

Mr. CARVELL. I have not said so. I say that Mr. O'Leary, a good Conservative, wanted this government to pay him that for one-third of his wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And contrary to what he swore to.

Mr. CARVELL. And when Mr. O'Leary came here, forgetting that the offer was in writing, he said he told Mr. Waterbury that he could have the whole wharf for $1,000, but when the letter was produced it was shown that Mr. O'Leary's recollection was at fault and his failure of memory combined with other things showed that very little credence can be attached to anything that Mr. O'Leary said before the committee.

Mr. BRADBURY. Is your argument that if a man does not ask the government five times what a property is worth he is insane?

Mr. CARVELL. Surely the hon. gentleman does not want an answer to such an absurd question. I don't wonder that hon. gentlemen opposite squirm when this case is put before them in the proper light. But, we have not alone Mr. O'Leary's evidence as to the value of the property; we have amongst others the evidence of Mr. J. D. Irving, a gentleman who I admit is a member of the Liberal party of the county of Kent, and is not ashamed of it. Mr. Irving is a gentleman who has been so successful in business that he is probably the largest property holder and is doing the largest business of any man in the county. But, the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) to show his venom cannot discuss even a business man like Mr. Irving without attempting to throw mud upon him, and to infer that he was not a man worthy of credence. Mr. Irving had nothing to do with buying this property and he received no benefit from it. I did hope that my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) for once in his lifetime—at least once since he became a member of this House—would try to be perfectly fair and read the whole evidence on that point, and not emasculate it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) said Mr. Irvine was not worthy of credence, because he was doing business with the government and rented scows to the government at $2 a day, but the hon. gentleman did not tell the House that Mr. Irving only rented the scows to the government for 20 days and that last year he refused to let the government have these scows because a private contractor was willing to pay him more for them and to give them permanent employment as well. And so the scows were taken from the government and given to the private contractor, and Mr. Irving has been getting $2 a day for them during the whole season.

Mr. CROCKET. I stated that Mr. Irving had received upwards of $600 at the rate of $2 a day for a scow which he admitted was not worth $150, and that statement is true as shown by the records.

Mr. CARVELL. My recollection is that there is no such evidence as that.

Mr. CROCKET. I made it up from the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CARVELL. Then it is not in the evidence, and furthermore it is not true. The truth about it is that Mr. Irving rented an engine for which he got $8 a day, and with that engine he furnished the engineer the fuel, the oil and did the repairs. He did all the work to the engine for some three or four years, and with the scows and all put together he has received from this government $600. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) cannot show that Mr. Irving got more than $40 in any one year for the scow which he referred to. That is another evidence that my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) did not deal fairly with the members of this House who were not present in the committee when he was discussing the evidence taken there. He should have quoted all the evidnce on that point as it was incumbent upon him to do as an honourable man, and not to cite emasculated portions of it. The hon. gentleman also spoke of Mr. Irving as being a contractor for furnishing stones to the government for some breakwater, and he alleged that Mr. Irving was getting a great big profit on it, but he did not read to the House Mr. Irving's evidence which went to show that in one year he figured out his accounts and he found he had made the enormous profit of $46, and for the last few years Mr. Irving has not and will not furnish stones to the government at the price they offered him. Then the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) told the House that Mr. Irving had property in Buctouche extending half a mile along the water front and for which he only paid $200. That is not true. The evidence shows that he has half a mile of property along the water front and that 15 years ago he bought one and one only of these wharfs for $220, but the hon. gentleman did not state that.

Mr. CROCKET. I did; I read the evidence.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman did not read from the evidence the statement of Mr. Irving that that wharf was to-day worth to him $500 per annum, and that he would not sell it at any price. I am not going to take three and a half hours to make a speech as the hon. gentleman did, but I cannot discuss the question without showing the glaring inaccuracies of my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket). You could not prick his whole speech with a neddle that you will not find some inaccuracy or some omission which if stated would have shown the true state of affairs.

Mr. CROCKET. You can point it out.

Mr. CARVELL. I think I am making a good attempt to do it. The next man who gave evidence on the value of this property of one J. D. Forster—my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Crosby) smiles, and I should think he would.

Mr. LALOR. Everybody smiles.

Mr. CROSBY. You make us all smile.

Mr. CARVELL. Now, Mr. J. D. Forster is not a member of the Liberal executive in the county of Kent

Mr. CROSBY. He hopes to be.

Mr. CARVELL. Mr. Forster has been one of the most ardent Conservatives in New Brunswick for the past 50 years. He resided in the town of Richibucto in his early days, he is a property owner there, he knows the value of property there. He was warden of Dorchester penitentiary during the Conservative regime, and he was dismissed from that position when the present government came into power on account of offensive partisanship. Mr. Forster happened to be in Ottawa when the Commons was sitting, and without consultation with the Minister of Public Works or myself or any one else, except the member for Halifax, Mr. Forster was called to the witness box and swore that he knew this property intimately, and I shall read verbatim his evidence from page 135. Remember, this is a man who was dismissed from office by the Liberal government on account of offensive partisanship; a man who swore that the only member of parliament he had ever spoken to before going into the witness box was the member for Halifax; and on page 35 he swore as follows:

Q. Would you say that $5,000 would be a fair and reasonable price in your judgment? —A. If I were doing business there I would not take $10,000 for it.

And in the face of evidence like that the hon. member for York wants this House to believe that a corrupt transaction took place when the Department of Public Works paid $5,000 for that property. Then, we have another witness in regard to whom no doubt my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) will say he is not worthy of belief because he is one of the culprits, but this gentleman holds a high position in the Department of Public Works as resident engineer for northern New Brunswick. I hold no brief to defend Mr. Stead; he does not require defence. He has been in the department for a great many years; he has discharged his duties honestly and faithfully and if the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) thinks Mr. Stead has been derelict in his duty he can have an investigation in the proper way. But, instead of taking the course which it is his duty as a member of this House to take, he attempts by insinuation to make out that Mr. Stead is practically a thief and not worthy of credence. I will not bother the House by reading all the evidence of Mr. Stead; I will just say that Mr. Stead stated on oath and he also reported before the property was bought in the summer of 1908, that this property contained 1,000,000 cubic feet of material and that at the lowest estimate of 1½ cents per cubic foot he would figure the actual value of the wharf at $15,000. It was on that report and a subsequent report made in August that the minister purchased the property. We have here the sworn statement of Mr. Stead that the property was well worth $15,000, that it could not be replaced for that sum, and I leave it to the House to judge whether his evidence is worthy of credence or not. Then, in addition to this amount of material upon which you could build a wharf you have nearly ten acres of land on the water front of a town of 1,000 population. Does any man tell me that land like that is of no value? Why, you have only to state the facts and no argument is needed before intelligent Canadians. Then, we had Mr. Andrew Loggie as a witness, and if there is one witness my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) did not want to see before that committee, it was Mr. Andrew Loggie. It is true that at the commencement of the investigation the Minister of Public Works asked for a subpœna for this gentleman and it is also true that Mr. Loggie sent a medical certificate stating that he was not able to attend. We do not have to come to Ottawa to get a certificate of character for Mr. Loggie. If there is a firm in the maritime provinces that is doing a most honourable business and the members of which are of the highest standing, it is the firm of A. & R. Loggie, and because of the standing of the firm and because of the high repute of Mr. Andrew Loggie, and because of the innate suspicions of my hon. friend from York, because it was stated that Mr. Andrew Loggie was sick—and believing as the member for York does that every man in the Liberal party is a thief and a perjurer, he at once declared that this man must be brought to Ottawa. Every time that committee met for a month we were asked: Where is Andrew Loggie? Telegram after telegram was sent as to Mr. Loggie's illness but nothing would satisfy the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) but the body of Andrew Loggie, dead or alive.

Mr. CROCKET. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that I believed that every man in the Liberal party was a thief or a perjurer?

Mr. CARVELL. That is the conclusion I would draw from the statements made by my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) last evening. If he wishes to withdraw the imputation I have no objection to giving him the privilege of doing so.

Mr. CONMEE. He won't withdraw.

Mr. CARVELL. I thought he would'nt.

Mr. CROCKET. It is not necessary for me to deny such an absurd statement.

Mr. CARVELL. You can depend upon it that the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) is convinced that there is no virtue in the Liberal party; I think I should go further and say that he believes that there is nothing in the Liberal party but vice. I have never heard the member for York say one decent thing about any member of the Liberal party or any transaction of the government that was under discussion. The man is born that way and I am sorry to say he is cultivating his birth proclivities to the fullest extent.

Mr. LALOR. What about the member for Carleton?

Mr. CARVELL. He usually tries to take care of himself. I certainly do not believe that every man on the opposition side of the House is a thief and a robber. We have our political differences, but I would be very sorry to feel that I could not go to the other side of the House and be just as friendly as with my own friends on this side. I am happy to say that I have been treated as well by members on the other side of the House as by members on this side, and I wonder if the hon member (Mr. Crocket) can say that. Finally Mr. Andrew Loggie came here and was examined, and when his evidence was finished no one was more surprised than my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket). Andrew Loggie had sent a telegram to me during the progress of the investigation authorizing me to purchase Mr. O'Leary's wharf for $2,500. It was the policy of the member for York and of Mr. O'Leary to try to minimize the value of the property in the town of Richibucto to the greatest extent possible. They produced every argument they possibly could from the registry office showing where insignificant pieces of property were sold for insignificant prices, and endeavouring to bolster up their contention that the town of Richibucto is the most god-forsaken place in the Dominion. Mr. O'Leary stated that he had a wharf, that it was well constructed and equipped with warehouses and a freezer, that he bought it for $1,500, that he expended $500 on it, and that he would sell it for $2,000. I quote his evidence on page 36:

'Q. What do you value it at now?—A. With the improvements we have added during the year we would sell it at $2,000.

That is the wharf over which Mr. O'Leary is doing business, and which he said he would sell for $2,000. The firm of A. & R. Loggie are doing business in the same town and are rival merchants except that they are now doing about two-thirds of the business. There was a time when Mr. O'Leary was doing practically all the business in Richibucto, and when by some financial arrangement with a New York firm he was able to pay higher prices for supplies than any one else in the town of Richibucto.

I do not know how far Mr. O'Leary contributed to it, but unfortunately two and a half or three years ago this firm went to the wall with liabilities of $2,000,000, and since then the Loggies have been doing the business. They have a wharf half a mile from the sawdust wharf, about a mile from railway facilities, and extending to only about three feet of water, so that it is practically useless for business purposes. They wanted better accommodation. They would have to extend to their present wharf at an enormous cost or buy another. Seeing in the papers the statement that Mr. O'Leary would sell his wharf for $2,000, they promptly wired me to offer $2,000 and stating that they would go to $2,500 if he would sell. I do not think it is necessary to go very far into this matter, but owing to what the hon. member for York said last evening, I think it is necessary to explain my position. I thought he might have been fair enough to have told the whole story regarding my connection with the transaction. It is in evidence; I made the statement before the committee that I had never before had a letter, a telegram, or a communication of any kind, verbal or written, with this firm in my life; that I had never done business with them or seen them until Andrew Loggie appeared in Ottawa for the purpose of giving evidence in the Public Accounts Committee. They simply sent that telegram to me, knowing that I was a member of the House of Commons from the province of New Brunswick. I asked Mr. O'Leary in the Public Accounts Committee if he would sell that wharf. I offered him $2,500 for it, offering my own personal cheque for $500 to bind the bargain. I did not know that Mr. O'Leary would not sell his wharf. I have known Mr. O'Leary for many years. I have been on important corporation boards with him; I have had some business relations with him; I believed that he was an honourable man, and when he pledged his oath, as he did on page 36, that he would sell this wharf for $2,000, I believed that he would do so; and I was never more surprised in my life than I was when he refused to sell it to the Loggies for $2,500. But I learned then that Mr. O'Leary was bluffing; I learned that the hon. member for York was bluffing; I learned that the property was not of the small value they were trying to make out. Having learned a little later that this property was worth $7,000 or $8,000, I did not wonder that Mr. O'Leary would not accept my offer of $2,500. Then Messrs. A. & R. Loggie offered to buy the whole sawdust wharf for $5,500. I do not propose to read these letters. They are all in the evidence; they will be found on pages 190, 193 and 194. In the first letter the firm of A. & R. Loggie offered to purchase the sawdust wharf for $5,500, or $500 more than the department had paid for it. On page 193 is the answer of the deputy minister, asking if they would be willing to purchase about two-thirds of the wharf, leaving the government 200 feet from the street to channel, along the municipal wharf property. On page 194 is the answer of A. & R. Loggie to the department, accepting the department's suggestion and offering $3,500 for the balance of the property described in the deed, with certain conditions attached, one of which was that they should have a free right of way to lay railway tracks across the municipal wharf property and also across the 200 feet strip retained by the department, and that the department make a survey of the property before the transfer was made. I am in a position to state to the House that that arrangement has been concluded; so that the result is that the wharf will cost the department only $1,500.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much frontage does that leave the government on Water street?

Mr. CARVELL. 200 feet plus the municipal wharf, which is about 120 feet wide, making 320 feet in all. But that strip of 200 feet runs directly along the municipal wharf which the government now owns, and that makes it much more valuable for their purpose than it would be if it stood alone. But the hon. member for York, with his suspicious character, not to use a harsher term, says that these Loggies are interested parties, that they are contractors with the government, and that they had received $144,000 from the government for dredging. The evidence is that they received $44,000, but of course, $100,000 is nothing to the hon. member for York when he is discussing the Department of Public Works.

Mr. CROCKET. The hon. gentleman has misquoted my statement. My statement was that the Loggies had received $44,000 in the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1908, and the answers given by the Minister of Public Works to questions on the order paper show that in the following year they had claims against the department amounting to $90,000, and that they had large contracts still continuing.

Mr. CARVELL. I can only say that my hon. friend did not say so last night. That is what I object to in my hon. friend, that last night there was not anything stated by him correctly in regard to this whole transaction. It is true, he read certain portions of the evidence, but there was not a solitary instance in which he completed it. He always stopped at the critical point, where it might lead to something which would militate against the argument he was making. I do not care how much Messrs. A. & R. Loggie have received or are going to receive from the government. They are contractors with the government, and honest contractors. The contracts they have received only after due advertisement by public tender; but my hon. friend, in trying to besmirch the characters of these honourable men last night, said not only that they were contractors with the government, but dishonest contractors.

Mr. CROCKET. I must rise to a point of order. I did not make any such statement. I said that they received some contracts from the Minister of Public Works, and that the Minister of Public Works had illegally awarded the contracts.

Mr. CARVELL. I am willing to accept my hon. friend's version; I think he is putting it better than I did, that is, he has made a more vicious statement than I attributed to him. He is now charging the Minister of Public Works with crookedness, while my statement was that his charge was only against the Loggies. As he has corrected his statement, he has given the reason. He tried to make this House believe that the Loggies were unworthy of belief, because they were interested witnesses. I want to tell my hon. friend, and he knows it, that these men have never done a dollar's worth of work for the Department of Public Works except by fair contract after public tender advertised in the newspapers. They have had three or four contracts simply because they were in every case the lowest tenderers, and they got the contracts in the ordinary course of business. The only exception is a contract for a little dredging done at the town of Bathurst in the fall of 1908. In October or November of that year, authority was given by the department to have a little dredging work done at Bathurst. I do not know the exact amount, but it was under $5,000. The Messrs. Loggie had a contract for dredging at Caraquet at 41 cents per cubic yard, and another contract for dredging at Dalhousie at 50 cents per cubic yard. Bathurst is somewhere between these two points, and they were asked by the department to tow their plant from Caraquet to Bathurst, but instead of giving them the higher price, which they were getting for the Dalhousie work, they only gave them 41 cents per yard, the same as they received at Caraquet. If my hon. friend wants the people of this country to believe that this is an illegal transaction, then I am willing he should do so, and he can take all the glory he can get out of it, but I want to tell him and the members of this House that among the people in the province of New Brunswick he will not get much credit for holding up a transaction like that and calling it an illegal transaction. Now, these are the men forming the company of whom Andrew Loggie is not only one, but the senior member, and Andrew Loggie stated that they considered this wharf was still worth $5,000 and were willing to pay $5,500. They have already paid $3,500, over two-thirds of the price. But I want to call the attention of my hon. friend and of members of this House to a very significant fact away back in 1908 before Andrew Loggie had any idea that he would buy the wharf, in fact before the government had bought the wharf, which shows his idea of the value of the property at that time. I refer to his evidence on page 176. This evidence was partly given by Mr. Murray, but as my hon. friend will say that Murray is a perjurer, I will not take his evidence, but will give Andrew Loggie's version of it. He speaks about a conversation he had with Mr. Murray at the station, I think it was Kent Junction station, when they were waiting for a train. They were sitting down and talking, and finally, Mr. Loggie asked him about the property, and Mr. Murray told him he had sold it, and then this conversation took place:

Q. What did he tell you?—A. That is what I am going to, if he will allow me. He said, 'Andrew, I have sold the sawdust wharf to the government.' I said, 'Yes.' I said, 'What did you get for it?' He said, I got $5,000 for it.' I said, 'Tom, I think you sold this too cheap.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friends say, hear, hear. I also say, hear, hear, and I repeat that this statement was made away back in August before he had any connection with the property or expected to have any connection with it.

I said, 'Tom, I think you sold it too cheap.' He said, 'I got a fair profit on it, and I was satisfied to sell it for that.' I said, 'What did you pay for it?' He said, 'I paid $1,000 for it.'

The evidence goes on.

Mr. LALOR. He did not tell the truth.

Mr. CARVELL. I am glad my hon. friends can extract some comfort out of this case for they cannot extract much comfort when they come to read the evidence as a whole. Then he goes on to say:

I said, 'You say you have sold it.' 'Well,' he said, 'I have made them an offer on it.' 'Will you withdraw that offer?' 'No,' he said, 'I could not withdraw that offer, it has gone too far.' That is as far as I can remember of the conversation at that time.

Now I repeat that statement was made as early as August, and at that time Mr. Loggie wanted him to withdraw his offer, but Mr. Murray said, no I have offered it to the department, and I cannot take your offer now. I want to ask any fair minded member of this House or any fair minded man in this country whether that is the conduct of a dishonest man. Before this transaction took place, and knowing that Murray had paid only $1,000, Mr. Loggie was willing to pay $5,000, and wanted Murray to withdraw his offer of the property to the government. Of course, if my hon. friend says that this man is perjuring himself, I have nothing more to say. But I do say that he dared not say in New Brunswick that Andrew Loggie is perjuring himself. If he did say it he would get nobody to believe him. But my hon. friend will say, suppose he did say that, still he is an interested party, still he is under the control of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, still he is not the kind of man whose evidence should be believed in an investigation of this kind. My hon. friend the member from York (Mr. Crocket) attempted to insinuate that to Mr. Loggie and I wish every member of this House could have been present in the committee room that afternoon and seen the manner in which Mr. Loggie gave his answer. He would not have had much doubt that the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) was barking up the wrong tree when he tried to insinuate that Andrew Loggie was perjuring himself. I refer now to page 222 of the evidence.

By Mr. Blain:

Q. When did you talk it over with Mr. Pugsley?—A. I never talked it over with Mr. Pugsley. That is not true.

Q. Did you?—A. I never did.

Q. No communication or correspondence whatever?—A. No, sir, none whatever.

Q. Do you know Mr. Pugsley?—A. Not very well acquainted with him at all.

Q. A friend of yours?—A. Well, I don't know what you would call a friend. I will say right here, outside of gentlemanly courtesy, we are under no obligation to Mr. Pugsley any more than anybody else.

Q. You have a contract in his department?—A. Yes.

By Mr. Carvell:

Q. Does that put you under obligations to him?—A. We are under no obligations to him; I state that positively. We got the contract by public tenders open to the world; we were the lowest tenderer and I don't think under all this, that I am under any compliment to Mr. Pugsley for any of the tenders. Our tenders were public and that is how we got the dredging if that is what you mean

Then on page 223 we find this:

Q. Are you making these offers in order to help Mr. Pugsley out of trouble or as a business proposition, because A. & R. Loggie want the property as a business proposition?—A. We are willing to buy the property to help Mr. Pugsley out of what?

Q. That is the insinuation—that you are helping Mr. Pugsley.—A. I don't see how we think or have the idea in our heads to help Mr. Pugsley. I have given every bit of private information about our business here, but I positively refuse to give that information. From information we have got we are perfectly willing to take the whole of the wharf at $5,500. We are perfectly willing to take that portion of it for $5,500, from information we have got outside of the Public Works Department, or anybody connected with it, as a business proposition, for particular reasons.

Mr. CARVELL.

Now there is the evidence of Andrew Loggie as to why he buys this property, and as his connection with the Minister of Public Works. But my hon. friends even went further. They started to insinuate that probably he had contributed to the election fund, and to their surprise, and horror I at once asked them to go on and press the question. When they saw what they could get they were more surprised than at any time I have seen them in the committee. When they realized they had the fullest liberty to question him as to the election fund or any other fund. Then they were as dumb as oysters, and would not go into that question. That is the man they are holding up here as a perjurer, the man they are advertising throughout Canada as a man not worthy of belief, that is the man they say who is buying this property from the government to help the department out of a hole. Well, I am willing to leave it to the judgment of the people of New Brunswick, and there will not be much doubt as to the verdict in a question between my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) and Mr. R. A. Loggie. Then they say that he was once offered this property for $1,000 or $800. It is true that that statement was made by one of the witnesses, O'Leary; it is equally true that A. R. Loggie denied that statement positively and you will find his denial on page 222:

Q. What do you say to that?—A. I say that it is not true, absolutely not true that Wm. O'Leary offered me that property.

Mr. J. D. REID. He does not swear that he did not.

Mr. CARVELL. He says that on that page. It is true my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) read something from the next two or three pages. But he says he has no recollection of it, and he is satisfied he did not receive an offer from O'Leary to buy the property.

Mr. LALOR. Read the evidence.

Mr. CARVELL. I am not going to spend another half hour reading evidence. I admit exactly what was said later on in that cross examination. He said he had no recollection of it. And if hon. members opposite take any comfort out of that, let them have it. But it is mere quibbling; they cannot get away from the fact that Andrew Loggie says he never was offered and never refused to buy that property for $800 or $1,000.

Now, I have some more evidence as to the value. I am sorry to trespass on the time of my hon. friend; but I will make it as short as possible. I stated some time ago that my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) had all the resources of the Dominion of Canada at his command for the purpose of getting witnesses, and yet he was not able to bring a solitary individual, outside of Mr. O'Leary and his brother, who would say that this property was not worth what the government paid for it. Witness after witness brought here by the hon. member and myself swore that this property was worth what was paid for it. I find, also, in the St. John 'Telegram' of March 2, a despatch containing a statement, an important part of which I will read. I read it to show what Mr. Loggie's friends think this property is worth; to show what Mr. O'Leary's neighbours and friends and relatives think it is worth:

We the undersigned residents of Richibucto, in the county of Kent and province of New Brunswick, do hereby certify that we have a knowledge of wharf property in the town of Richibucto and that we know the O'Leary wharf property in the town, and that in our opinion the said property, as it now stands, is worth in the vicinity of $10,000.

This, it will be observed, is Mr. O'Leary's own wharf. Now, the next is a certificate as to the sawdust wharf:

We the undersigned residents of Richibucto, in the county of Kent and province of New Brunswick, do hereby certify that we are well acquainted with the DesBrisay wharf in the town of Richibucto, commonly known as the sawdust wharf, and also with the industry and business conditions in and around Richibucto.

That the said wharf needs only a new facing along the channel front to make it one of the best and most valuable wharfs in the town, and that if the Kent Northern railway acquired and extended along such wharf as a deep water terminus the said wharf is in our opinion well worth to the government a much larger sum than the $5,000 paid therefor.

That to the firm of A. & R. Loggie, requiring as they do in their business a wharf extending to the channel, the said wharf is in our opinion well worth the $5,500 offered by them therefor; that in our opinion it would cost nearly if not quite that amount to extend the wharf they now occupy to the channel, and for said shipping purposes the sawdust wharf is much better suited to them in their business, as it is much nearer to the railway track.

Dated the 21st February, A.D., 1910.

Now, I want to know if the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) will go to Richibucto and tell any one of these men that he stated a falsehood when he signed his name to that document? And I am bound to go further and say that this document was offered in evidence of the Public Accounts Committee, but my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) threw it out because it was not—

Mr. CROCKET. Did the hon. member—

Some hon. members. Order.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the hon. member ask me a question to which he desired an answer?

Mr. CARVELL. Not just now. Later on the hon. gentleman can make a speech if he wants to.

Now, I have discussed this question at greater length than I had intended, and have practically nothing further to say. I have tried to show by the evidence—and I have not wandered outside of the evidence—what is the value of this property. I have contended, and still contend, that the government got good value in this property. The only fault I have to find with them is that they have sold two-thirds of the property for the sum of $3,500. It would have paid the department better to keep the whole property, for then they would have a property which, for all time, would assure the success of the shipping interests of Richibucto and vicinity. However, they have decided to sell, and I am not going to find fault with their decision. One thing is assured, however—the property will be rebuilt. I am pleased to note that there is an amount of $5,000 in the supplementary estimates to be applied toward the rebuilding and repairing of the wharf. I am glad that there is this assurance that the people of Richibucto will have the transportation facilities to which they are entitled. I hope that, in a very short time, the Kent Northern railway may become a branch of the Intercolonial. When that comes about, this wharf will not only be a benefit but an actual necessity. I sympathize with my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) in the predicament in which he finds himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh

Mr. CARVELL. I sympathize with him because he was compelled to talk for three hours and a half last evening in an effort to make what is recognized in the province of New Brunswick as a dismal failure appear something like a success. I know that he will be able to have all this transcribed in full, and under glaring headings in his newspaper, and that he will attempt, so far as he can, to recover some of the ground he has lost. But I make the prediction now, that as long as he is a member of this House, he will never again go on a junketing tour around the north shore of New Brunswick to hunt up scandals, for this one has proven such a boomerang that it will be long ere he recovers from its effects.

Mr. J. D. REID. I desire to say a word on this subject, because I happened to be present in the Public Accounts Committee when the matter was under investigation. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) began his remarks with the statement that the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) had tried to besmirch the character of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), in fact he said that was what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) had been trying to do for the last two years. Let me point out the difference between such actions as this of the hon. member for York, and the position of such members of this House as the hon. member for Carleton. When an hon. member of this House tries to learn the facts of any public expenditure under the Minister of Public Works, or any other minister, is that to be considered an attempt to besmirch the minister in whose department the expenditure is made? I have always held that every member of this House, Conservative or Liberal, had laid upon him the clear duty of protecting the public treasury. If any member has a suspicion that anything is wrong in relation to public expenditures, it is his duty to have the matter investigated, and the proper place for that investigation is the Committee on Public Accounts. Well, Mr. Speaker, since 1896 when the present government came into power, I have not seen one case of a Liberal member who had the pluck to go before the Public Accounts Committee and investigate any expenditure made by this government, and this notwithstanding the fact that, time and time again, cases have been brought to attention in which there was at least the suspicion of wrong doing. I remember when the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) first entered this House. Several other hon. gentlemen made their first appearance in parliament at the same time. There were the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald), the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney) and the late hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) who has left this House. The Prime Minister, and I suppose the Minister of Finance with him, selected these four gentlemen to watch the Public Accounts Committee and defend the expenditures there. What is the position to-day? The hon. member for Saskatoon was so ashamed of the whole matter that he never attends the Public Accounts Committee at all; the hon. member for Pictou is in the same position, so ashamed of what is being brought forth in the Public Accounts Committee that he has abandoned it also. Mr. Maclean has left the House in disgust to accept a position in the provincial parliament, and the whole thing is left to the hon. member for Carleton. Now, let me tell the hon. member for Carleton some of the things that he stood up for in the Public Accounts Committee and defended, because he is in the Public Accounts Committe representing the government, representing the scoundrels that have been brought before that committee, and the investigations prove that they were scoundrels. He has a retainer, he has practically a retainer from this government in the way, I have no doubt, of a judgeship, or something of that kind.

Mr. CARVELL. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member's language is not parliamentary.

Mr. CARVELL. I want the hon. member to withdraw that statement in toto. I want to tell him that I have no promise of a judgeship, I have refused a judgeship, I do not want a judgeship, and I want him to withdraw that statement. I have no retainer, and no promise of a retainer.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it in toto. The reason I said so was because I have known cases that happened before where members sitting in this House have held the promise of a position in their pockets, and they carried on just such work as is being done by the hon. member for Carleton. I want also to state that, judging from the actions of the hon. member for Carleton, he has been acting as the solicitor for some of the witnesses—without a fee, I admit, without promise of a fee. But there is the fact of Mr. Loggie swearing that he telegraphed to the hon. member to act for him, and said he considered that the hon. member was his attorney or solicitor, the hon. gentleman was willing to come into the Public Accounts Committee and there offered $2,500 on behalf of Mr. Loggie.

Mr. CARVELL. Again I must rise to a point of order. I must ask my hon. friend to confine himself to facts. Mr. Loggie did not state that he said that to me because I was the attorney.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has raised a point of order, let him make his point.

Mr. CARVELL. I want my hon. friend to withdraw that statement that Mr. Loggie stated that I was there as his attorney. Mr. Loggie stated that he sent the telegram to me because I was a member from New Brunswick, and he had faith in me and he wanted me to act for him.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member for Carleton is a member of that committee.

Mr. CARVELL. I am. I think the hon. gentleman is not acting the part of a man when he discusses this matter in such a way, and without giving the whole transaction.

Mr. J. R. REID. The hon. member for Carleton acted for Mr. Loggie as respects the offer of this $2,500 for this wharf to Mr. O'Leary.

Mr. CARVELL. That is correct.

Mr. J. D. REID. And having done so—and mind you I say without any expectation of a fee, although Mr. Loggie swore that he expected to pay the hon. member. But notwithstanding that fact, the fact of the hon. member receiving the telegram and walking right up and giving his own cheque for $500, he thereby assumed the responsibility of being the solicitor for Mr. Loggie in that matter. Now let me state some of the actions which the hon. member has been defending in the Public Accounts Committee. During the time that I was present I remember the hon. member was willing to stand up in that committee as one of these four blockers, if you wish to call them so, he was willing to stand up and defend Phillip Wagner, the crook who stole money from immigrants and afterwards got a better position; he was willing to defend and did defend the grazing land deal, the lands that were robbed from the settlers; he was willing to stand up and defend Phillip Wagner, the crook to friends of the government; he was willing to stand up and defend the grant of the fishery licenses for $10 a year, all the fishery licenses in the Northwest; he was willing to defend the Saskatchewan land deal; he was willing to defend the North Atlantic Trading Company. Is there any hon. member who stood up and defended more vigorously the North Atlantic Trading Company, insisting on the names of the gentlemen who composed that company not being divulged for fear some of them would commit suicide? He was willing to stand up and defend the subtarget business, where there was a large amount of money being spent; he was willing to defend the Ross rifle

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And the whole country defends that.

Mr. J. D. REID. Only that part of it sitting on the other side. He was willing to defend the Canadian Fog Signal Company. When it came down to the Minister of Public Work's Department, he was willing to defend the notorious Geo. McAvity, who was getting hundreds of thousands of dollars out of this government, and who was the chief Liberal organizer in New Brunswick. He was prepared to defend B. F. Pearson, the man from Halifax, who was purchasing ties for this government. He was willing to defend these dredging contracts. The other day he was willing to stand up and defend this Gaspereau dredging contract which was given illegally and wrongfully; I do not hesitate to say that the statutes of this country were violated, because the contract was given before tenders had been received in accordance with the advertisement. He went further than this, he was willing to defend Joseph Nixon, the man who robbed the mails, and afterwards he was willing to defend this government for giving him another position. He was willing also to defend the government and tried to save the government from the effect of the scandals in regard to the steamer 'Arctic.' He fought for a month or six weeks trying to bring in a report which would clear the government. And worse than that, when I made the statement in this House that the government were paying 50 to 100 per cent more for goods than I could purchase them privately for, that was the Merwin transaction, there was not a man in the Public Accounts Committee who defended Merwin more energetically than the hon. member for Carleton, and who tried harder to prevent us from going on with the Merwin business. He knows to-day that this country was robbed, publicly robbed, and he was not man enough, or at least he did not—I will withdraw that expression, I do not want to say anything for which the hon. gentleman can call me to order; but he would not get up and prosecute Merwin for robbing this country. Why, Sir, when we wanted an investigation into the Merwin business the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) tried to prevent it, and it was only when it became so conspicuous that the government were forced to it that an inquiry was granted. And the result was that three appointees of the government as well as his honour Judge Cassils decided we were right, and yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) has never up to this day expressed regret for his conduct in that transaction. The hon. member (Mr. Carvell) sympathizes with the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket), but the hon. member for York does not need his sympathy—it is the hon. member for Carleton who needs the sympathy, not only of this House, but of every man in this country, for the position he takes here in trying to defend men who have robbed the country and who are continuing to rob it, and he is the only member on the Liberal side who will stand up in that committee and fight the battles of these rascals who are brought there for robbing the country. The hon. gentleman complains that the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) only brought Mr. O'Leary here as a witness to prove the value of the property. Why should it be necessary to bring anybody else? Mr. O'Leary was the man who sold it and he is the man who could tell what he got for it. This morning the hon. member read the names of a number of gentlemen who had signed a certificate since the inquiry to say that the wharf was worth what was paid for it, but there is a wide difference between signing a certificate and swearing before the Public Accounts Committee. The men brought here by the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) to prove the value of the wharf were afraid to say what they thought. They brought here three men who are under pay and receiving money from the Department of Public Works. I defy the hon. member to name any one who was examined as a witness, except some man who was practically under the control of the Minister of Public Works owing to money being paid him. Let us see who these men were. The hon. member stated that one of them, Mr. Forster, had been dismissed from office because he was a Conservative.

Mr. CARVELL. On account of violent partisanship.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have been told that that man was dismissed because of irregularities, and I wish to add that, that is, if what the hon. gentleman states be true.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is rather a mixed statement.

Mr. J. D. REID. If that is a mixed statement, the hon. gentleman was mixed the other day himself. Do I understand the hon. member for Carleton to say that no one had any conversation with Mr. Forster before he gave his evidence?

Mr. CARVELL. Except the member for Halifax.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why didn't the hon. gentleman state that Mr. Forster swore that he had had a conversation with some gentleman from Richibucto?

Mr. CARVELL. They were not members of the House; I referred to members of the House.

Mr. J. D. REID. Here was Mr. Forster in the city of Ottawa, and what was he doing? He was seeking the assistance, or he intended to seek the assistance of the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) and the Minister of Public Works and other members from New Brunswick, for the purpose of getting the superannuation he would have been entitled to if he had not been dismissed. The hon. member for Carleton won't deny that. He was a nice man to bring as a witness. In addition to that, he was I should think about 70 or 75 years of age, and he swore he left Richibucto when he was 28 years old, and he had been 45 years a non-resident of that municipality, and then he swears to the value of property there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did he not swear he had been there over and over again in the interval?

Mr. J. D. REID. Oh, yes, and what he swore was that the wharf was worth so much money if he was in business there and wanted the property. Why, any man could swear it would probably be worth $100,000 if he wanted it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. People don't usually buy property unless they want it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Oh, yes they do, and did not the minister himself buy this property when he did not want it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister wanted it for public purposes.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, he did not, but I will tell him why he did want it. They had been trying to sell the municipal wharf to the government since 1906, and within a few months after the minister came into office he purchased the wharf for the government, and on the 10th day of March, two months before purchasing the sawdust wharf, it was recommended by Mr. Stead that it should be purchased.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The wharf was not purchased for six months afterwards.

Mr. J. D. REID. On the 10th of March the municipal wharf was purchased and on the 7th of May, Mr. George W. Robertson and Mr. Murray came to Ottawa and then they went back and immediately purchased the wharf on the 10th of May, that is about two months afterwards. I take it for granted that at that time the government had indirectly purchased the wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman takes a great deal for granted.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, I think what I say is correct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is not a particle of evidence as to that.

Mr. J. D. REID. The municipal wharf was purchased because this Kent Northern railway is owned by five men: Mr. Murray, Mr. Robertson, Mr. Jardine, Mr. Carter and Mr. Finnie, and these five men had the wharf rented for $50 per annum, and it was in need of repair, and Mr. Murray, who was an official of the Minister of Public Works and Mr. Robertson, who was also an official of the Minister of Public Works——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all, there is no evidence of that; he was not an official of the Public Works.

Mr. J. D. REID. He was an official because he is getting $3 a day as an inspector of work which was being done by the Public Works Department; he was receiving pay from that department. And Mr. Jardine was practically an official because he had a large contract from the Department of Public Works; and Mr. Carter was the solicitor for the Public Works Department in all these transactions. Let me show you how these men were all connected. Mr. Murray wanted this wharf repaired and he gets the Minister of Public Works to buy the municipal wharf. Then he immediately gets the minister to let him go and repair it by day work, and puts himself on as inspector and spends $2,500 of the money of the people to repair a wharf that was practically for the benefit of these men themselves. Mr. Jardine has work at the Richibucto pier and Mr. G. W. Robertson is the man who inspects the work and certifies to it. There is the connection between these men. There is no check on them, and in my opinion, from the very fact of their being all Liberal heelers down in that section, and one inspecting the work of the other, there is no doubt about it in my mind, but that they are robbing the people of this country.

At one o'clock, the House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. J. D. REID. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose for lunch, I was explaining the connection of these gentlemen with the selling of this wharf. Mr. Murray was the general manager of the Kent Northern railway, which is about twenty-eight miles long. According to the evidence given in the Public Accounts Committee, and admitted by Mr. Murray himself, the traffic on this railway consists of one train each way per day, the train being composed of one passenger car and one freight car. Mr. Murray is one of the owners of the railway, Mr. Robertson another, Mr. Jardine another Mr. Carter another, and Mr. Finnie another. Mr. Murray admits that he had a rake-off, or that he was the middleman between Mr. O'Leary and the government, to the extent of $4,300.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He does not admit anything of the kind. He was the vendor.

Mr. J. D. REID. Perhaps he was, because the deed was given to him. But let me explain to the Minister of Public Works how he was the middleman. Mr. Murray came to Ottawa on May 7, with Mr. Robertson. They came, as they stated, without any intention of buying this wharf. They left here a few days afterwards. They went to Richibucto and purchased the wharf on May 20. On the same day Mr. Robertson and Mr. Murray went to St. John and negotiated for the amount of money required. On the same day, May 20, that they purchased the wharf Mr. Robertson wrote a letter to the Minister of Public Works stating that more wharf accommodation was required at Richibucto. The minister on the 23rd of May, writes to his chief engineer instructing him to have a report made, and the chief engineer writes to Mr. Stead instructing him to make a report. Mr. Stead makes his report, and the transaction goes through.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But when?

Mr. J. D. REID. It went through practically then.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It did not. It did not go through till the fall.

Mr. J. D. REID. It did not go through for this reason. In September Mr. Murray telegraphed, asking if the order in council had been passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Telegraphed to whom?

Mr. J. D. REID. To the chief engineer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He did not. He telegraphed to Mr. Valiquette. He was not the chief engineer. The evidence shows that that telegram did not come to the knowledge of the chief engineer, and certainly not to the knowledge of the minister, until long afterwards.

Mr. J. D. REID. However, he sent that telegram, and within a day or two the order in council was passed. Therefore, it must have come to the hon. gentleman's attention.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That telegram had nothing to do with it.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is the story all through; but it must have come to the knowledge of some one, because an order in council was passed a couple of days afterwards. Here is the telegram and the reply taken from the public records in the minister's own office:

Ottawa, September 24, 1908.

To Thos. Murray, Richibucto. Matter of wharf purchase has passed council. Waiting for Department Justice to furnish title. Signed for the Chief Engineer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Signed by whom?

Mr. J. D. REID. This is the official copy of the telegram furnished by the hon. gentleman's department. The signature is not on it; it just says, 'for chief engineer,' the money was sent down to Richibucto about October 10, and the deed was then got, but it was not registered till away on after the general elections. If that is not sufficient evidence to show that Mr. Murray was the middleman, I do not know how you can make out a better case. That is the kind of man Mr. Murray is. Besides that, I stated in the Public Accounts Committee, and I state now, that Mr. Murray deliberately and willfully perjured himself. In order to prove that, all you have to do is to turn up his evidence. He was asked:

Q. Did you ever ask more than $5,000?—A. No more than $5,000, sir.

Here is what Mr. Stead said:

Q. Now, was $5,000 the amount that he mentioned to you in the first place as the sum he wanted to get from the government, or did he mention any other sum?—A. There was a mention of $10,000.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Murray give evidence yesterday?—A. Yes.
Q. Did you hear Mr. Murray state that he never asked more than $5,000?—A. Yes.
Q. Notwithstanding that you heard Mr. Murray swear to that yesterday, you swear to the contrary to-day?—A. Yes, I have recollection of having heard $10,000 mentioned.
Q. Then you say that Mr. Murray was wrong in his statement?—A. Yes, I think so.
Q. You say that he asked $10,000; was that his first figure?—A. Yes, his first figure, so far as I know.
Q. You declare that do you? Was there any talk of $15,000?—A. No.
Q. Why did he write the minister that there was?
Hon. Wm. Pugsley.—He did not write to the minister that there was. Why do you say that he wrote me to that effect?
By Mr. Crocket:
Q. Do you remember writing the minister a letter in connection with this matter?—A. Yes.
Q. I call your attention, Mr. Stead, to a letter which you wrote to the minister on the 21st January, 1909, in which you state (reads):
'$15,000 was mentioned as the price, but I think not seriously. $5,500 was asked, and $5,000 was the lowest figure I could get.

Now, there is Mr. Stead's evidence. He certainly was not a party interested as Mr. Murray was, and he swears directly opposite to Mr. Murray. That is the kind of man Mr. Murray is. Now, Mr. Robertson, as I have stated, was an official of the department. He was an inspector of works in that district and was getting a certain pay per day. Therefore, he was absolutely interested with Mr. Murray, not only as an official of the department, but as one of the owners of the railway. Mr. Jardine had been taking money for years from the department as a large contractor with the department, and there is no doubt that he was one of the owners of this railway. And Mr. Carter, as I have stated, was not one of the owners of the railway, but he is the general solicitor in that district for the government. Now, these men were all interested in this matter. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) to a statement which he made. If the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) will give me his attention for one moment I will call his attention to the statement he made that what the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) said was not a fact, insofar as Mr. Irving received $2 a day or something like $600 for the use of a scow that cost $150. I think he stated there were only 20 days on which he had received $2 per day.

Mr. CARVELL. I said 20 days in a year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then the hon. gentleman admits that probably he received $600 for the use of a scow that cost $150.

Mr. CARVELL. I did not say so.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) tells me that he went over the Auditor General's Report to see if this were a fact. He collected his information from the official record. I had a few minutes to spare and only a few minutes, and, of course, I could not go over the whole department to find out how much had been received. But to satisfy the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) that he received a great deal more for the use of his scow than the value of it, I will give him a few items in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman must remember that this man had more than one scow. All these scows are now employed by another contractor.

Mr. J. D. REID. This is the same scow, because the evidence here shows it was the only scow. In 1905, he used this scow 15 days; in 1906, 10 days; in 1907, 30 days; in 1908, 40½ days and in 1909, 28 days. The total amount paid to him for that work was $247, and I have just taken it out in about ten minutes. I think that should satisfy the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) that this man received a great deal more than the scow was worth.

Mr. CARVELL. That covers a period of five years.

Mr. J. D. REID. That does not make any difference. Now, so far as the use of this wharf to the railway was concerned, let me say this. It is quite evident that these gentlemen, all owners of this railway, conspired to sell the railway to the government and they solicited the influence of the Minister of Public Works so that he might throw his net around the Minister of Railways and Canals and get this deal shoved through. The evidence shows that every time they recommended the purchase of a wharf, the municipal wharf or this sawdust wharf, it was on account this railway being extended. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) forgot to mention one point. He said it was necessary to have this sawdust wharf to extend the railway, but why did not he read the evidence sworn to by Mr.

O'Leary, and not contradicted by Mr. Murray or any other witness, that Mr. O'Leary had offered this wharf to the railway company, or at least had offered the right to put tracks on there and give them a lease for all time to come for $1 per annum. They were willing to give the right to run their tracks over the sawdust wharf and use the wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If they would carry it down to O'Leary's warehouse.

Mr. J. D. REID. The sawdust wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And carry it down to O'Leary's warehouse.

Mr. J. D. REID. But the railway company would not accept it. There was no business for it down there. But they recommended it to the government and what struck me when they recommended the government to purchase this wharf was, that if they could get the government to purchase it, they would be in the same position, these men I have mentioned, as they were in the case of the municipal wharf. Now, when they wanted to put on the government the municipal wharf they saw that they could get an opportunity of spending the money themselves, one as a contractor and the other getting the contract expenditure. Then if they could sell the sawdust wharf they could make a lot of money out of it. It had to be all fitted up; according to Mr. Stead's evidence it would require many thousands of dollars to repair it and of course Mr. Murray was a government official at Richibucto who would have the superintending of the building of this wharf. It strikes me if I remember rightly that in the Public Accounts Committee it came out—I heard it some where—that Mr. Murray made a profit on the lumber that went into the municipal wharf.

Mr. CARVELL. No evidence of that.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well I heard it, and if he is the kind of man he was shown up to be in the Public Accounts Committee I have no doubt at all he would do it. Now these are the kind of men that are running affairs down in Richibucto and what surprises me is that the member for Richibucto (Mr. LeBlanc) does not know anything that is going on. They simply elect him and this is the way they get the money, because the telegram shows that the money was needed for the election of LeBlanc.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not say that.

Mr. J. D. REID. It says it would be a great help to LeBlanc, that it would be important to LeBlanc.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Might not the inauguration of a public work there be an advantage?

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes, the inauguration of a couple of thousand dollars for a corrupt fund would be worth more.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would take more than that to face Richard O'Leary.

Mr. J. D. REID. Of course the hon. gentleman had the experience last time and knows, and is in a better position to judge than I am, but I am glad to hear that he admits putting money in there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know the length of O'Leary's purse in election time.

Mr. J. D. REID. Now, let us see who are the witnesses that were brought here to prove the value of this property. Mr. Loggie comes here as a witness and of course Mr. Loggie, as we all know is a large contractor for the Public Works Department, and only since the present Minister of Public Works came in.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh no, before that.

Mr. J. D. REID. He gets Mr. Loggie a contract in his department.

Now, certainly, Mr. Loggie is not going to do anything to injure the Minister of Public Works. Especially so, in view of the fact, admitted by the minister the other night, that there was some $48,000 in his hands waiting to be paid to Mr. Loggie. When Mr. Loggie was giving evidence he knew that there was this $48,000 that the minister might squeeze him or hold him out of. He might, therefore, stretch his conscience to the extent of saying that if he wanted this property for some business purpose he would pay so much for it. But when he sent a telegram to authorize the purchase on his behalf of this property which he said was worth $8,000, all he offered was $2,500. Another witness is Mr. J. D. Irvine, another contractor, another servant of the Minister of Public Works, a man who has been making his bread and butter out of the minister's department for some years and has got his contracts regularly every year. He knows well enough that he may meet the same fate that Mr. Mayes did in St. John if he does not toe the mark. But I want to give my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) credit for one thing—the only time I ever knew him to do right in these matters. Last year, when one of the most outrageous cases ever heard before this House was under discussion, the Minister of Public Works said that the hon. member for Carleton would take the matter up for him. And the hon. member for Carleton sat tight and said nothing. Not a single man would defend the case, and the member for Carleton walked out in disgust for fear he would be compelled to take part in the defence. Now that I recall the case, I really must apologize to the hon. member for Carleton. But I am sure the opinion I expressed of the hon. member can hardly be wondered at considering the zeal he has shown in defending these rascals in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. SPROULE. It must have been an awfully bad case.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was. Another witness was Mr. Foster, who, as I have already said, left Richibucto when he was twenty-eight years of age, and has been living elsewhere for forty years, though he has been back to Richibucto a few times. And he was here trying to get the assistance of hon. members from New Brunswick to get superannuation which he thought he was entitled to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Therefore, you think he lied.

Mr. J. D. REID. Even he did not swear that the property was worth it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, he did.

Mr. J. D. REID. He swore that if he was in business and wanted a property of that kind, it would be worth $5,000 or $10,000 to him. But there was an 'if' in it—every one of these witnesses put in an 'if' When it comes to selling the property the hon. member for Carleton tried to prove that this 200 feet was cheap at $1,500. I think that is the impression he wanted to leave with the House. He should have told the House that 227 feet, practically the same property was offered to Mr. Waterbury by Mr. O'Leary for $500.

Mr. CARVELL. A thousand dollars.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A thousand dollars, and leaving the strip between it and the railway, which was the valuable part of the property.

Mr. J. D. REID. I will read it, so that I may be sure. Here, on page 72, is the offer:

R. O'LEARY,

Manufacturer of Lumber, Exporter of Canned Lobsters and Fresh Fish.

Richibucto, N.B., 22nd April, 1904.

D. H. Waterbury, Esq.,
Richibucto, N.B.

Dear Sir,—With further reference to your conversation in re land opposite the public building in Richibucto, I will sell the whole lot on the eastern side of Water st., the full width of the present lot owned by the government, i.e., 227 feet in width and running back to the channel 625 feet for one thousand dollars ($1,000). Or I will sell the 227 feet on the street running back to a depth of 100 feet for five hundred dollars ($500).

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) R. O'LEARY.

Mr. CARVELL. Just to put the hon. member (Mr. J. D. Reid) right, I may explain that the government have now sold all but 200 feet, and that strip runs from Water street, the six hundred odd feet to the river front. So, they are now getting practically the same amount of land which Mr. O'Leary wanted to sell to the government five years ago at $1,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And much better situated.

Mr. J. D. REID. But $1,000 is what he offered it for—227 feet. And now the government are paying $1,500 for 200 feet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but infinitely the best part of the property.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a part next to the railway wharf, and must be the best.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to know how it was that on March 10, when he was so anxious to assist these gentlemen by buying that wharf—

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not anxious to assist them.

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes, on March 10 he bought this municipal wharf for these four gentlemen.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not for them—for the public benefit.

Mr. J. D. REID. For the use of the Kent Northern railway, and they are practically the only ones who get any use of it. I ask how it was that he did not realize then that it was necessary to have the other wharf too? Within a few months, the minister comes to the conclusion that it is necessary to have so much more wharf property at Richibucto. And there is another peculiar thing. The minister wrote to Mr. Stead censuring him for not taking a little more care in finding out the value of the property. We know that Mr. Stead was there on the 20th of May, and there is every reason to believe that he saw the deed and knew the consideration. But, he never went to Mr. O'Leary to find out anything about what he had sold the wharf for. The minister censured him for that. But, is it not a fact that the minister has increased Mr. Stead's salary since then? That goes to confirm the statement I made in this House many times, that the minute an official in any one of these departments commits a wrong act his salary is immediately increased. But, what I cannot understand is how the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) allows them to pull the wool over his eyes. Of course, I do not attribute any personal wrong to him—no one would do that—but we can hardly acquit him of great carelessness when he allows the money in his charge to be frittered away in this manner.

Now, the hon. member for Carleton spoke of these men in Richibucto as being Liberals and said he was proud of them.

Mr. CARVELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. J. D. REID. He is proud of this kind of work. He is proud to see these people rob the public as they did in this case, and proud to defend their actions in the Public Accounts Committee. But I for one do not believe—I cannot believe—that this is the feeling of Liberals generally in this House or outside of this House. But we see that these gentlemen are offered no choice but either to swallow a transaction of this kind or be excommunicated from the party.

Mr. TALBOT. Will the hon. member permit me a remark or a question? Does he challenge members on this side of the House on this point and tell them that they act under compulsion in these matters? Has he any doubt as to the honesty of the transaction or of our sincerity in endorsing it?

Mr. J. D. REID. I have no doubt whatever of the dishonesty of the transaction. And as to the members of the Liberal side being obliged to swallow them, I only speak from what I have seen in the past

Mr. TALBOT. Will the hon. member permit me to say——

Mr. J. D. REID. If the hon. member (Mr. Talbot) has a speech to make——

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the hon. member has a question to ask——

Mr. TALBOT. Does the hon. gentleman refuse——

Mr. J. D. REID. Certainly, I am finishing——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. TALBOT. Does the hon. member refuse me opportunity to say——

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not know what the hon. member wants. But he can speak when I have finished.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) has the floor.

Mr. J. D. REID. There are some hon. members on the other side of the House at least who have had positions promised them and who have letters in their pockets to show it. I mentioned that the hon. member for Carleton practically has a retainer or the promise of a judgeship. I do not wish to say that he has an actual promise, but I will take the hon. gentleman's own words for it. That admission came from the hon. gentleman himself in a speech at Woodstock. He made the statement that he intended staying in public life even though they were throwing judgeships at him. When that hon. gentleman will stand up here, as he did, and state that he has no promise and that he is doing all this good work for the Liberal party simply in the interest of the party or the country, he certainly must expect that we will take the meaning out of his words which we think was intended. Therefore, I feel that while he may not have the promise of a judgeship at the present time, yet it must have been thrown at him and that he may pick it up at some future time; he has to carry on the good work he has been doing in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. CARVELL. And he refused it, too.

Mr. J. D. REID. If he does not continue the good work there the judgeship will be withdrawn, and he would lose all the good effect of the work that he has done in the past. Now, the very fact of the existence of a case of this kind convinces me that there are many members on the other side of the House practically in the same position that he is. The hon. member for Bellechasse told us that his name was never mentioned in connection with a matter of this kind.

Mr. TALBOT. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was stated in the public press that the hon. member for Bellechasse was doing his best to be appointed Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries when that position was vacant.

Mr. TALBOT. I deny the statement as being made out of whole cloth and absolutely untrue.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am not saying it is true; I am saying what was in the press——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. J. D. REID. —and the best evidence we have that it is true is that if the statement published in the press was untrue——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. J. D. REID. An hon. member, when an untrue statement is published, generally gets up and denies it, but that statement was never denied by the hon. member for Bellechasse, either in or out of this House.

Mr. TALBOT. I deny it now.

Mr. J. D. REID. He denies it now, because the position has been filled and he knows he could not get it. Now, if there are any other gentlemen on the other side of the House like the hon. member for Bellechasse, and if they kindly get up, probably I will be able to give them a little history that they do not think is known by hon. members on this side of the House. I have taken up longer time than I intended.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear; go on.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, I have taken up so much time. I promised the hon. member for Carleton that if he would let me have half or a quarter of an hour before one o'clock, I would finish the few remarks that I intended to make. However, he trespassed a little on my time, and I was compelled to continue after three o'clock. I apologize for taking more time than I intended. The only thing further that I wish to say is that I regret that there is not a member on the Liberal side of the House who had the pluck to stand up as the hon. member for Bellechasse has done and make the same statement that he has made. But, hon. members are looking for senatorships, deputy ministerships or something of that kind, and they swallow this thing——

Mr. J. P. TURCOTTE (Quebec). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member, I think, has no right to cast aspersions on a whole section of the House, I mean on those hon. members who support the government, by charging them with holding promises of rewards, in such a way as to prevent their giving an independent vote. It is contrary to the dignity and the rule of this House to discuss political issues on such lines. I shall await your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am very sorry that I do not understand my hon. friend because I certainly would have been very pleased to reply to the hon. gentleman if he had addressed me in English, which, of course, I know he could do. However, I simply wish to say before taking my seat that I condemn this transaction as one of the most outrageous that has ever been before this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Turcotte) raised a point of order to the effect that the hon. member for Grenville had no right to say that members of this House had voted for certain measures because of promises that have been made or might be made of rewards in the shape of senatorships or judgeships. I think that as a rule these assertions should not be made, and that these are things that had better be left unsaid. I do not know whether or not it is a violation of the rule directly, it being such a general charge, and not directed against any one in particular, but that is the substance of the point and I am sure the hon. member for Grenville has no intention of insisting upon it.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not wish to say that members on the other side of the House all voted for that reason, but I say that there have been members on the other side of the House who have had promises in their pockets, and who have voted knowing that they were going to be appointed to judgeships and senatorships.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. TALBOT. Who are they?

Mr. J. D. REID. There are records to show who they are. If the hon. member for Bellechasse desires it I could name some of them.

Mr. TALBOT. Name them.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the House had better come back to the question before the chair.

Mr. J. D. REID. I simply wish to conclude by stating that although this is a small transaction it is a sample of many that have been going on in the past in the Public Works Department, and it is time that something was done in order that this should not be allowed to continue any longer.

Mr. TALBOT. A change of power.

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes, if we had my hon. friend the leader of the opposition as premier he would not have a man supporting him who would do such a thing. It is a surprise to me that the Prime Minister of this country should allow such rascality to go on as is going on in these several departments.

Hon. WM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). As the amendment moved by the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) not only seeks to attack the judgment of the engineering branch of my department in connection with the purchase of this wharf at Richibucto, but also goes further, and asks this House to declare that that was a corrupt and fraudulent transaction, I think it becomes advisable that I should address some observations to the House before hon. gentlemen are called upon to vote upon this motion of want of confidence in the government. Now I desire to say, first of all, that if any hon. gentleman will take the trouble to read carefully the evidence which was given before the Committee on Public Accounts he cannot help being struck with the evident desire and determination upon the part of the hon. member for York to give to this House only a part of the case, and to withhold evidence which was, and which is of a most material character. I desire just for a moment to call attention to one striking fact in the remarks of the hon. gentleman, which afford a key to his whole conduct in the discussion of this question. The hon. gentleman stated that when an application was presented to my department by the Kent Northern Railway Company in the month of May, 1908, for additional wharf accommodation at Richibucto, immediately on receipt of that request I sent an order to the chief engineer of the department that an examination and report should be made without delay. Those are the words of the hon. gentleman, that 'an examination and report should be made without delay', thus seeking to convey the impression to this House that I lost not a moment in having this report made, that I was particular to give the unusual direction to the chief engineer to have report made without delay. Now, in order that there may be no mistake in that regard, I will call the attention of the House to the language of the hon. gentleman. It will be found on page 7780 of the 'Hansard':

> No mention then of the report of the 10th of March, what it seems to me would necessarily have been made had the minister not been cognizant of the plans of Geo. W. Robertson and Thos. O. Murray. On that very day he issues an instruction to the chief engineer to have a report procured upon the matter of this letter without delay.

And the hon. gentleman emphasized that. Now, when I call your attention to the fact that the order which I gave to the chief engineer, was the order which is usually given, the order which is almost universally given for making a report, simply instructing the engineer to have an examination and report made upon the property, not using at all the words 'without delay', giving no directions to the chief engineer as to when he should have the report made, giving no directions that an unusual hurry should be exercised, when you find that the hon. gentleman has used these words, supposing, I presume, they would escape the notice of the House, when they are not contained in the order, I think you will be able to form some idea of the desire which the hon. gentleman has had with reference to the information which he should give to this House to enable the House to determine how they should vote upon this question. In addition to making that erronous statement, the hon. gentleman all through his remarks is careful only to give a portion of the evidence which was submitted to the committee. For instance, I happen to have in my mind one striking fact. The hon. gentleman, in referring to the negotiations which had taken place during the present year with the Messrs. Loggie for the purchase of this property, and to the proposition submitted by my department offering to them a portion of the property, they declined, he says that Mr. Loggie stated that if we sold to him all the property except 200 feet, it would entirely defeat the plan which the department had in view for establishing terminal facilities at the port of Richibucto. The hon. gentleman was careful not to refer to a further part of Mr. Loggie's evidence in which, although he said that he was acting on business principles, not having regard to the interest of the department, but rather to the interest of his firm, a little later on, and the hon. gentleman must have been aware of this, when the question was put to Mr. Loggie he stated that he could not say that it would at all interfere with the plans of the department because, reserving as they did 200 feet, it would give them a large frontage on the Richibucto river in connection with the railway terminals of the Kent Northern railway. I might go on and call attention to other portions of the evidence in which the hon. gentleman has, I will not say wilfully, Mr. Speaker, I would rather be charitable, and I would say with an ignorance of the duty which the hon. gentleman owes to the members of this House to give them full information, the hon. gentleman has failed to discharge that duty which, as a representative, he owes to the members of this House and to the people of this country.

Now what further? The hon. gentleman said that if so and so is the case, if it is true that Mr. Murray and Mr. Robertson came to Ottawa and consulted with me with regard to the purchase of this property, then the Minister of Public Works will be implicated as the originator of this transaction. But, Sir, unfortunately for the hon. gentleman, there is no such evidence as that; unfortunately for the position taken and the charges made by the hon. gentleman, there is no evidence that either Mr. Murray or Mr. Robertson spoke to me one single word with respect to this Richibucto wharf when they visited Ottawa. On the contrary, there is the sworn testimony of Mr. Murray, and the hon. gentleman did not choose to ask the committee to send for Mr. Robertson. He may say that Mr. Robertson is in a distant part of the country, but if he had applied to the committee the committee would no doubt have ordered his production here as a witness, the same as the committee ordered the production of every witness whose name was given to the chairman by my hon. friend. But Mr. Thomas Murray swore that when he and Mr. Robertson visited Ottawa, the subject of the purchase of this wharf was never mooted between himself and myself, or between Mr. Robertson and myself in his presence; and yet, although I affirmed it to the committee, and although he knew that a charge of that kind would necessarily involve my honour as a member of this House, as a member of this government and as Minister of Public Works, the hon. gentleman had not the manliness to ask me whether I spoke of this wharf transaction when these gentlemen were in Ottawa. But, Mr. Speaker, in face of his omitting to do that, in face of his omitting to do what every honourable man would feel it to be his duty to do in the discharge of the fair obligation which one man owes to his fellowman, in face of his neglecting to do that, in face of the positive evidence of Mr. Murray that we said not one word with reference to this wharf transaction when he was in Ottawa, the hon. gentleman asked this House to believe that Mr. Murray and Mr. Robertson came to Ottawa and advised with me, or were advised by me, to go back and buy this wharf property for $700 in the expectation that they would sell it to the government for the sum of $5,000.

Sir, could a more heinous charge be made against a public man than is insinuated by the hon. gentleman—did I say 'made'?—no; the hon. gentleman has not the courage to make a charge like that upon the floor of the House. He has been here long enough to know that if he made a charge of that kind and failed to prove it he would be placing in jeopardy his seat in the House, and there would be meted out to him the punishment which should be meted out to every man who without good reasons makes a reckless and villainous charge against a fellow member of this parliament.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I repeat, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MEIGHEN. I wish to ask a question.

Some. hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member addressing the House can only be interrupted with his consent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If an hon. member of this House were to make a charge in the form the minister prefers, by whom would that charge be investigated; would it be by a committee of this House?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a regular and well established procedure for the investigation of such charges and the hon. gentleman should know that.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will you answer the question?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is enough for me to say now that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) although he has had the courage to insinuate, has not had the courage to make a direct charge which would involve—

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the minister—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. PUGSLEY—which, Sir, would involve serious consequences to him.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the hon. minister—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have already said several times that the hon. member addressing the House cannot be interrupted.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have asked a question and he refuses to answer it.

Some hon. MEMBERS Sit down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) has not had the courage to make a charge which would involve upon him the serious consequences which a member of this House should suffer if he makes a charge which he cannot substantiate. Now, Sir, I declare to this House that the evidence of Mr. Murray is absolutely true: that when he and Mr. Robertson visited Ottawa the subject of this Richibucto wharf was not mentioned between us, was never referred to in any conversation which we had while they were at Ottawa. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) has not ventured to say that he would question any statement I would make, but he says that he would not believe the statement of Mr. Murray, and that he would rather take the evidence of Mr. O'Leary than the evidence of Mr. Murray. Well, Mr. O'Leary cannot tell what took place at Ottawa and Mr. Murray would know whether he had a conversation with me or not, and whether he received any advice or instruction or not, and Mr. Murray swore positively that he had no conversation with me on the subject of the purchase of this wharf property. And, if it were to become a question as to who was telling the truth as to what took place in Richibucto— in regard to which I am in no way concerned, with regard to which the chief engineer of my department is in no way concerned— with regard to which the deputy minister of my departmnt is in no way concerned— but if I were called upon to determine from what has taken place in this case as to which of these two men is entitled to the greatest credence, I would say that I would infinitely prefer—and the members of this House who have read the evidence carefully would infinitely prefer—to give credence to the evidence of Thomas O. Murray rather than to the evidence of Richard O'Leary. And, I will tell you why. Mr. Richard O'Leary came here determined if he could to make out a case against my department and against me—I say that advisedly—and he showed a willingness to swear to anything which would tend to the accomplishment of that end. Let me show the House the grounds upon which I make that statement. To begin with, Richard O'Leary swore that I wrote him a letter in the fall of 1908, which I did, and which I shall invite the attention of the House to, as the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) has not chosen to do so. Mr. O'Leary swore that he wrote me a reply and he produced what purported to be a copy of the reply he had sent me. Hon. gentlemen will find that at page 45 of the evidence and in that pretended letter to me Mr. O'Leary writes that Mr. Murray came to him, apparenty acting as agent of the Public Works Department and gave him to understand that he was buying the property for the government. Well, if that had been true, if Mr. Murray had represented that he was the agent of the department as is stated in that pretended letter of Mr. O'Leary's which he says he sent me, then Mr. Murray would be obliged to account to the department for the difference between the $700 and the $5,000 which he received from the government. I cannot but think that Mr. O'Leary deliberately intended to make the committee believe that he had sent a copy of that letter to me. It was a confidential letter. He supposed I had not kept a copy of it, and he came here before that committee intending to make the committee believe that Mr. Murray represented himself as being an agent of the department. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, I had the letter which I had received from Mr. O'Leary, and I produced it, and you will find it on page 46 of the evidence, but you will find no statement in it that Mr. Murray represented that he was acting as agent of the department. That letter which I received is a letter entirely different in character from the letter Mr. O'Leary said he sent to me so far as that most important fact is concerned. I say Sir, that that incident stamps Mr. O'Leary as being a man upon whose evidence but little reliance can be placed. But, what further is the position which Mr. O'Leary occupied as a witness? When seeking to depreciate the value not only of this property but of all property in the town of Richibucto he went so far as to declare that the wharf property occupied by himself and which had cost him $1,500, was only worth $2,000, and he said he was willing to sell it for $2,000. Before the committee he pledged his solemn oath that he was willing to take $2,000 for that property. And, the hon. member from York said: Oh, could any one for a moment think he was willing to sell it for $2,000? Well, I would say probably not in the light of the other testimony we had from Mr. O'Leary. But assuming that Mr. O'Leary was a truthful man upon whose evidence reliance could be placed one had a right to believe he would sell that property for $2,000. Well, Messrs. Loggie saw in the newspapers that he had made that sworn statement before the committee and they being willing, nay, they being anxious to secure a good property at a low price, they at once telegraphed to Mr. Carvell asking him to offer Mr. O'Leary, if necessary, $2,500 for the property which he swore he would sell for $2,000.

But when Mr. O'Leary found that there were people who were willing to buy, he at once went back on his oath and said he was not willing to sell the property for either $2,000 or $2,500. Mr. O'Leary, in order to influence the committee in respect to the value of the property which the department had bought, deliberately swears that a property which the evidence showed to be well worth $8,000, is worth only some $2,000; and yet although he had sworn he would do so, when a purchaser presents himself he would not consent to sell it for that amount or even for $2,500. What further have we as tending to discredit the evidence of Mr. O'Leary? He went further and said: 'This property is absolutely without value; I held it for years, it was of no value to me, and I offered the whole property to Mr. Waterbury, the agent of the department, a few years ago for the sum of $1,000.' If we had not the documents to disprove Mr. O'Leary's statement, we would have been placed in this position, that the department had bought at a larger price a property which a few years ago had been offered to it for the sum of $1,000. In the face of what I am going to tell this House, we cannot believe that Mr. O'Leary had forgotten what had taken place. We cannot believe that he, having offered only a small part of this property for $1,000, was telling what he believed to be true when he said that he had offered the whole property for $1,000. But that was the statement he deliberately made in the committee, evidently believing that the offer had not been put in writing, and that we would not be able to produce any documentary evidence to show that he made a statement to the committee which he knew to be untrue. After that statement was made, I sent for Mr. Waterbury, who is the superintendent of buildings in New Brunswick for the Department of Public Works, a man who is very careful in the way he looks after the business of the government, and asked him if he had not some document to show what had taken place between him and Mr. O'Leary at that time. Although it was four or five years ago, he was fortunately able to produce a letter written by Mr. O'Leary at that time. His evidence was that Mr. O'Leary having told him what he would sell a portion of this property for, he had asked Mr. O'Leary to put the proposition in writing, and he produced a letter containing Mr. O'Leary's proposition, which he said was the only proposition Mr. O'Leary had made to him. If hon. gentlemen desire to see what Mr. Waterbury said on that point, they will find his evidence at pages 168, 169, 170 and 171. They will find the letter of Mr. O'Leary set forth on page 72. It is a little out of its order, not having been given in the evidence of Mr. Waterbury, but in the evidence of Mr. O'Leary. You can see, Mr. Speaker, how important that letter was. You can understand what a strong point would have been made against the government if, having had an offer from Mr. O'Leary some five years ago to sell this whole property for $1,000, the department, without making any further inquiries, without going to see Mr. O'Leary, without referring the matter to the Exchequer Court, without having an arbitration or anything of the kind, had actually paid $5,000 for the same property. But upon an examination of that letter, we find that what Mr. O'Leary at that time was careful to do was to reserve a space of about 150 feet between the railway wharf and the piece of property he proposed to sell to the government. He was careful also to reserve another strip of about 200 feet, or perhaps even more, between the property he proposed to sell to the government and his own wharf property farther along the river; offering the department a strip out of the centre, and reserving a space on each side. That is what he proposed to sell for the sum of $1,000, based on a valuation of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $3,000 for the whole property. He made the department a second offer of another small piece for $500, which was based on a valuation of $10,000 for the entire property; and he made a third offer of a smaller piece still, which was based on a valuation of $20,000 for the entire property. When we had on the stand, a glib witness like Mr. O'Leary, who is one of the strongest partisans in the province of New Brunswick, and when we found him deliberately swearing that he had offered the whole of that property to the government for the paltry sum of $1,000, was it not a fortunate thing that we were able to face him with his own letter, in which he made the proposition to sell a small piece at the rate of $20,000 for the whole, a larger piece at the rate of $10,000 for the whole, and a still larger and less valuable piece at the rate of $3,000 for the whole? Having been able to confront Mr. O'Leary with this documentary evidence, I repeat with all confidence the statement I made a short time ago, that I for one would infinitely prefer to take the evidence of Mr. Thomas O. Murray to the evidence of Mr. Richard O'Leary. I think it is important that Mr. Murray has made the statement—and his evidence was in no way contradicted or discredited—that no communication, either verbal or written, ever took place between him and myself before the report was made upon this property, and which was made in consequence of an application submitted to my department in the regular way.

Having made these preliminary observations, let me just state briefly what took place, so far as my department was concerned, and so far as I as Minister of Public Works was concerned. Early in the spring of 1908 I was urged to purchase what was known as the municipal wharf in Richibucto. That matter had been pending before my department for some two or three years. After I became minister, I freely confess, I became impressed with the desirability of doing what would be reasonably necessary in order to give improvements to the harbour of Richibucto, as I had been doing in respect to a great many harbours all over Canada. It is part of my business as Minister of Public Works to encourage the transportation interests of this country so far as they concern our rivers, lakes and harbours. Therefore, I felt it my duty to give respectful attention to the representations made to me on behalf of the very important town of Richibucto. I say important advisedly, because that town has a glorious history. It is a town which in the early days of the province of New Brunswick did an enormous business, a business which to a certain extent has passed away; but it is a town splendidly situated for business. Situated as it is, it can become an important point for the distribution of coal from the rich coal mines of Nova Scotia; it is a most important fishing centre; and although Mr. O'Leary may think that the business of the town is declining, that simply means that his business is declining and is being done by Messrs. Loggie, Mr. Forbes and the other people who are coming in there and helping to provide facilities for carrying on a large and profitable trade. Well, although Mr. O'Leary thinks that, or appears to think that, yet Richibucto is improving. That is the evidence we had before us. I say again it is splendidly situated several miles from the mouth of the Richibucto river, and very large ocean steamers can pass and repass right in front of this wharf and the other wharfs in the town of Richibucto. Well, Sir, of recent years this government has undertaken a system of improvement of the port of Richibucto. We are building breakwaters, we are giving protection to the harbour. We have been endeavouring for some years to afford to vessels better facilities, and we believe we are accomplishing a good work. Therefore, in view of what we are doing now, in view of what I thought were the possibilities of traffic in the future, I was willing to lend a favourable ear to the representations made to me as to the necessity of making harbour improvements in the port of Richibucto. Now, hon. gentlemen will say that these improvements are largely for the benefit of the Kent Northern railway. Mr. Speaker, can you imagine a case where you make improvements for the transhipment from the water to the railway in which you do not generally benefit the railway. Take the city of St. John. Take the great national work which we are doing there upon the western side of the harbour, giving to the people of western Canada the means of getting the products of their fertile prairie lands to the markets of the world through Canadian ports. Are we not benefiting the Canadian Pacific railway? Every ton of freight which comes over the Canadian Pacific railway and every ton of freight which is transferred from the steamship to the railway or which is transferred from the railway to the steamship, to a large extent benefits the railway company, but it benefits the public at the same time. You cannot improve the transportation facilities of this country without conferring a benefit upon all. So with regard to Richibucto. By giving facilities to the steamers that come to the wharf immediately adjoining the railway, giving greater facilities for the transfer of goods from the vessels to the railway and from the railway to the vessels, we will necessarily improve the trade of the port and advance the interests of the public, while at the same time we must necessarily render some advantage to the railway company, because by doing that we will increase the facilities for carrying on their business. Therefore, Sir, I decided to do there what I am doing in all other parts of this country, that is, seeking to improve the transportation facilities for the people. Later on in the spring, in the month of May, when it was urged upon me that this municipal wharf which we were buying had only a frontage of about 150 feet, certainly not exceeding 200 feet, and that the railway track which was going down the wharf was such that it would be necessary to back a train down in order to get a car near the edge of the wharf, and that the end car would necessarily be at right angles to the face of the wharf, and knowing from my experience in the city of St. John and other places what a great inconvenience a track so located would be, so far as transferring freight from the railway to the vessels, and from the vessels to the railway, was concerned, I made up my mind that it would be desirable to have that wharf extended so that the railway track could be carried along the face of the wharf and made parallel to the vessels as they lay off the wharf.

Every man who knows anything about terminal facilities will recognize the force of what I am saying, that to afford a convenience to the merchants and the manufacturers and the railway company to which they are reasonably entitled, it is necessary to have a greater frontage, so far as a wharf is concerned, than 150 feet which is I believe the frontage of the municipal wharf. Therefore, although I did not decide what I would do, and although I gave no indication as to what I intended to do, yet when that request was made to me on May 20, 1908, I thought it was my duty to have the matter looked into and to have a report made. And, Sir, that is what I did, and so far as this record shows and so far as any facts which have come to the knowledge of my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) will show that is the first step which my department took in connection with the purchase of this wharf property. The request came to me dated May 20, 1908, made in a regular way, made on behalf of the Kent Northern Railway Company, urging that additional terminal facilities were required at the port of Richibucto, and asking if I would take the necessary steps to secure these facilities. All I did was in the usual and ordinary way, to make an order to the chief engineer to have an examination and report made. I have not given the exact words, but hon. gentlemen will find them there in the evidence. It was the usual order, an order made in hundreds of cases. It is always my practice when an application comes which I think is worth being inquired into, it is always my practice to hand that application at once to my secretary, and to ask that an order for the chief engineer be made out. In this case the language used is identical with that used in hundreds of other orders which hon. gentlemen will find upon the files in the department. Well, Sir, it went to the chief engineer. The chief engineer some four days afterwards sent it forward to the resident engineer with directions that he should as early as possible have a report made with regard to the additional wharfage required at Richibucto and generally upon the subject. Well then, what next took place? It appears from the evidence that Mr. Stead goes to Richibucto for the purpose of making an examination and report, and while at Richibucto he meets Mr. Murray, also Mr. Robertson and others. He makes the examination as to the wharf and he asks Mr. Murray so that he might report to the department, what he is asking for this property. Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that at that time, this property had been bought by Mr. Murray. Mr. Murray was the owner and when my hon. friend (Mr. Reid) says that Mr. Murray was a middleman, I say he was not. Mr. Murray had become the owner of that property and he had become the owner as this record shows, and as I declare to this House without any intimation from me or from anybody acting with my authority that the department would purchase that property. Mr. Stead says that after talking the matter over with Mr. Murray he asked him to name his lowest price so that he might make a statement to the department and give it information as to the amount it would take to purchase the property if the government should decide to buy, and Mr. Murray fixed the price at $5,000. Now, what next comes to my department? We find a report from the resident engineer which hon. gentlemen will find on pages 56 and 63 of the evidence. The first report is on page 56 and is dated June 9, 1908:

Sir,—As requested in your letter of the 27th May, I have looked into the matter of the wharf accommodation which has been asked for at Richibucto, Kent county, New Brunswick.

On the 10th of March, 1908, I reported on the proposed acquirement by the department of the municipal wharf at Richibucto.

It is now asked that the wharf known as the 'sawdust wharf,' formerly used as a site for a saw-mill, which is situated immediately below the municipal wharf, be also acquired. Included with this wharf is the area in the rear which has a frontage on the main street of about 443 feet and lies just opposite the lot already acquired by the government for the site of the new public building. The total length of the area measured parallel to the main street is 730 feet.

And I would like hon. members who know anything of the value of water frontage, and particularly those hon. gentlemen who so vociferously applauded the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) when he was presenting his half-measured case for their consideration, to bear in mind what that means. This property is right in the heart of a town of 1,000 people, and fronts upon a river up and down which ocean steamers drawing from 18 to 20 feet of water can pass without difficulty. Measure in your own minds what that means—to have a wharf property in the centre of a town of that size, with the prospects of Richibucto, a property 730 feet on the water, and 400 feet frontage on the main street of the town.

Mr. BLAIN. May I be permitted to say that the postal revenue of the town is small.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not care. I know what Richibucto is; I know the business that is being done there. Besides, we have the evidence of men from that town—of Mr. Carter, of Mr. Irving, also of Mr. Forster, and others. And we have the statement of Mr. Forbes and twenty or thirty others of the prominent men of the town.

The report of the engineer further states:

The shallow point lying between the municipal wharf and the sawdust wharf, formerly used as a timber pond in connection with the mill property is also included. The area which the government is asked to acquire is 9 acres of land, and land on the water reaching to the channel, that is, to about the face of the wharf. Four acres of this is land and wharf above high-water line.

Including the 200 feet pier head of the municipal wharf, this would give a frontage on the river of about 775 feet

It is looked upon as certain that the Kent and Northern railway will shortly be taken over by the government and this land and wharf will furnish a very desirable and central site for the station, railway yards, and especially for an ample deep-water terminus.

An offer to sell the wharf, water rights and land area for $5,000 is inclosed herewith.

While the outer faces of the wharf are gone to about low-water level and new cribwork will be required there, the wharf forms a wide approach to deep water, and could not be built now for several times the amount asked. Taking into account also the value of the frontage on the street, and its central position, the price asked is reasonable.

A right-of-way through this land must shortly be bought by the government for a sewer for the public buildings.

The correspondence received with your letter and also a plan of the property are inclosed herewith.

Yours obediently,
GEOFFREY STEAD,
Resident Engineer.

E. D. LAFLEUR, Esq.,
Chief Engineer, Department of Public Works, Ottawa.

Then, on page 60 is a supplementary report from Mr. Stead:

10th June, 1908.

Sir,—In my report of yesterday's date, on Richibucto sawdust wharf, instead of saying that the wharf 'could not be built now for several times the amount asked' I might have stated more definitely that it contains about 1,000,000 cubic feet of cribwork, slabs and mill refuse, ballast and gravel. Classing this all as filling—new cribwork faces being required—it would cost about one and a half cent per cubic foot or $15,000—three times the price asked for the property.

Yours obediently,
GEOFFREY STEAD,
Resident Engineer.

Now, it is important, I think that, when a charge of corruption, misfeasance and fraud is being made against, I do not know whom—it may be either against Mr. Stead, the resident engineer, the chief engineer, the assistant engineer, the deputy minister, or myself; the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) has not specified against whom he makes the charge—it is important, I say, to bear in mind that, down to the time when the resident engineer makes that report, there is not a tittle of evidence that either I or any officer of my department made any suggestion to Mr. Stead with reference to the report he should make. I was on the witness stand; Mr. Stead was on the witness stand. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) suspected that any influence had been brought to bear upon Mr. Stead by any suggestion made to him, surely it was his duty to make inquiry upon that point. He did not do it; and, as I have said, there is not a particle of evidence that any suggestion was made by me or by any officer of my department to the resident engineer as to the report he should make upon this property. And we find that the report and supplementary report show the nature and position of the property—show that there were 1,000,000 cubic feet of filling which could not be put there for less than $15,000 and contained a plain declaration that the price of $5,000 for the property was fair and reasonable.

Now, what next took place? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) would have you believe that I was anxious to purchase this property, that I had arranged to purchase it and was only awaiting the report of the engineer—whose report, he says, I told the chief engineer in writing to get without delay, a statement which as I have stated, is absolutely without foundation. I did nothing further in the matter, so far as the records show, between the time when this report comes in on June 10, to about the 9th of August, a space of two months. During that time, my attention was given to other matters. I presume that I read the report—I do not recollect at the moment; my attention was given to other matters of great importance in all sections of this country. I am pressed again to acquire this property. I have not then made up my mind what I shall do; and, in August, I make an order for another report. Hon. members will find that report at page 60 of the evidence. This report came in. It was dated at Chatham, the 8th of August, and was as follows:

> Sir,—In reply to your letter No. 4255 of the 4th August, in which you ask for a report on the value of an additional wharf property required at Richibucto, New Brunswick, I give the following extract from my report on the property, dated 9th June, 1908, and a copy of my note in further reference to the subject, dated 10th June, 1908.

Then follows this quotation:

> 'An offer to sell the wharf, water rights and land area for $5,000 is inclosed herewith.'
>
> While the outer faces of the wharf are gone, to about low water level and new cribwork will be required there, the wharf forms a wide approach to deep water, and could not be built now for several times the amount asked. Taking into account also the value of the frontage on the street, and its central position, the price asked is reasonable.
> A right of way through this land must shortly be bought by the government for a sewer for the public buildings.

So, you will see, Mr. Stead reiterates the report he made on 9th and 10th June. I mention this to show that I was displaying no eagerness in reference to the purchase of the property. After the report of June 9, I took no action until I ordered the next report in August. I do not remember at the moment whether I wanted further information or what the point was. I considered the matter very carefully, and am free to say that I thought the price of $5,000 stated by resident engineer Stead, and approved by the chief engineer was a reasonable price. I had nothing within my knowledge to indicate that it was anything but a reasonable price. I have some knowledge of wharf property, and its value, both upon the north shore and in the city of St. John, and I have the report of the engineer that this was a property having a frontage of 730 feet on the Richibucto river, a property where there was a million cubic feet of mill refuse, gravel and ballast—there must have been a large quantity of ballast, because it showed above the water, and there must have been a vast amount of cribwork underneath or that would have been washed away years ago. It was a property with a frontage of 400 feet on the main street, and with a depth of over 600 feet, which meant nearly ten acres of land. I confess I thought that $5,000 was a ridiculously low price for this property. I was prepared to act upon the report of the resident engineer, approved of as it was by the chief engineer of my department. But the hon. gentleman says that later on—and I am going to call attention to that—later on I wrote to the resident engineer that he should have called my attention to the fact that there had been a recent transfer of this property and he should have stated the price. The hon. gentleman says, why, when that report came in, and when you acted upon it, you knew just as well then as you knew afterwards that he had failed to make reference to transfers. The hon. gentleman has omitted one important fact, and that is that I had no knowledge, and the evidence does not show that I had any knowledge, and I affirm before this House that I had no knowledge, that Mr. Murray had bought this property from Richard O'Leary. I had no knowledge whatever upon the subject, there was nothing in the report, there was nothing in anything that had taken place, to indicate, but what Mr. Murray had been for a considerable time the owner of this property. Therefore when I saw this report making no mention of any recent transfers, I took it for granted that Mr. Murray had been the owner of the property for a number of years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it the practice to report recent transfers in giving valuations?

Mr. PUGSLEY. With regard to buildings it is. The department makes very few purchases of wharfs, and it had never been the practice to issue instructions to engineers to make reports with regard to transfers. But with regard to buildings there are specific instructions that go out to the valuators to report recent transfers by the valuators, and there are forms provided for that purpose with regard to purchases. But with regard to wharf purchases there has been no regular practice in the department. So far as I had any information, Mr. Murray was then, and had been, and I had no reason to suppose, but that he had been for years, the owner of this property, and I was of the opinion that his price was a fair and reasonable price. Now I wish to emphasize this fact, that although Mr. Murray was upon the stand, and Mr. Stead was upon the stand, although Mr. Lafleur was available, and I am not sure that he was not on the stand, and the deputy minister of my department and myself were on the stand, there was no attempt made to show that I had any knowledge until after this property was acquired as to Mr. Murray having purchased it from Mr. O'Leary, and I repeat my declaration to this House that I had no knowledge as to Mr. Murray having purchased it from Mr. O'Leary, and there is no evidence which would tend to show that I had any knowledge whatever on that subject.

Now, upon these reports being submitted to me, the recommendation was made to council that this property should be purchased, the chief engineer stating that in his opinion the price was a fair and reasonable price. It appears that some time in September, Mr. Murray sent a telegram to Mr. Valiquet. Mr. Valiquet was not the chief engineer. It may be that Mr. Lafleur was away at that time, I think possibly he was ill during the summer of 1908. However, Mr. Murray sent a telegram to Mr. Valiquet, asking as to closing up the wharf property, and saying it was important for Leblanc, meaning the gentleman who was running in the county of Kent in the interest of the government. Now the hon. gentleman seems to think that telegram is material, because he says that telegram forges the last link in the chain of evidence which connects the Minister of Public Works with this transaction; with all the dramatic effect which my hon. friend can show he declares that this is forging the last link in that chain. Well, Mr. Speaker, in considering whether that is so or not, is it not important to ascertain whether I ever saw that telegram? Is it not important to know whether it was ever brought to my notice? The evidence does not show that it was, and I declare that it was not. I never knew that Mr. Murray had sent that telegram to Mr. Valiquet, Mr. Valiquet does not appear to have thought it his duty to bring it to my notice. Business was going on in the usual way, it was not brought to my notice, and I never knew, and I do not suppose the Deputy Minister of my department knew, of that telegram until in the usual way we returned it to the Committee of Public Accounts with a record of this whole transaction, because we had nothing whatever to conceal with regard to it, and we wished the committee to have all the facts as quickly as possible. But the hon. gentleman says that shows that Mr. Murray wanted this money for campaign purposes in order to assist Mr. Leblanc; and I suppose he would go further and intimate that Mr. Murray wanted Mr. Valiquet to know that he needed the money for campaign purposes. Is not that the inference to be drawn from the language of the hon. gentleman? Now, does he think that if Mr. Murray wanted that money for campaign purposes, and I, as minister of the department, was willing to assist him in getting that money for campaign purposes, does he not think that Mr. Murray would have wired me or seen me instead of wiring an official of my department? What does the hon. gentleman think of that?

Mr. CROCKET. No, I do not think so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No? The hon. gentleman thinks that Mr. Murray, wanting this matter put through, wanting to get the money for campaign purposes, wanting to help Mr. Leblanc, would send a telegram to an official of my department and convey to him that meaning, that he wanted this money for campaign purposes, and that he would not communicate at all with the minister and try and get him to hurry the matter along! Well, I thank the hon. gentleman for his suggestion that Mr. Murray would not dare to send such a telegram to me, but that he would send it to one of the prominent officials of my department. Now is that not open to this other interpretation, that in view of the election coming on, it would be of interest to the people of Richibucto to know that they would be likely to get in the near future the improved terminal facilities which the purchase of this wharf would affords. Hon. gentlemen know that when votes are taken for public buildings they are anxious that as soon as reasonably the sites of those buildings may be acquired, and why? In order that people may know that their expectations with regard to public improvements are likely to be fulfilled in the not distant future. And so it may well be that in that telegram which Mr. Murray sent to Mr. Valiquet, he wants him to understand that the people of Richibucto were anxious to know as to whether the government was bona fide going on with the purchase of this property for which provision had been made in the estimates in the year 1907-8. That, I think, is a fair and reasonable inference to be drawn from the telegram which Mr. Murray sent to Mr. Valiquet, and not the very extraordinary inference which the hon. gentleman sought to draw from that telegram. At all events, it is important to bear in mind that there is no evidence whatever given before the committee which would tend to show that I ever had any knowledge of the sending of that telegram from Mr. Murray to Mr. Valiquet.

Now, then, the purchase is completed. The hon. gentleman says there is another strong link, and it is that the Minister of Public Works recommended that W. D. Carter should be appointed agent to the Justice Department, and what is the suggestion of the hon. gentleman with regard to that? So that he would know when the cheque came forward, and I suppose he would be able to get his hands on the money and use it for campaign purposes. Well, in determining as to the weight which should be given to that insinuation of the hon. gentleman, it is important to bear one thing in mind. They had Mr. Carter on the witness stand, and they had an opportunity of examining him, brought here by themselves as their witness, but he does not appear to have handled a single dollar of the proceeds of the cheque which was sent in payment of this property.

There is another thing that I think you might very well bear in mind, and that is that Mr. Carter is one of the most prominent lawyers in Richibucto. He is and has been for years the friend of the government, and he is the one man to be found in that place who would naturally be selected for the purpose of completing the transfer of this property. He acts as the agent of the Justice Department, and was not he, of all men, the one person who would properly be selected for the purpose of seeing that the title was all right and that the government was getting what it was paying for? Yet, Sir, the hon gentleman, with his distorted imagination, with—if I were outside of this House I would say—his inexcusable desire to do wrong and injustice to a political opponent, seeks to put away all that circumstance and seeks to show that if Mr. Carter was selected as agent of the Minister of Justice to perform the legal business in connection with this case, it was done from some sinister motive in order that Mr. Carter might get a part of the proceeds of this cheque, and use these proceeds for the purpose of assisting his friend, Mr. Leblanc, in the election. The hon. gentleman makes that insinuation without a shadow of evidence to sustain him in so doing. I am no more surprised at that act on the part of the hon. gentleman than I am at the greater portion of his conduct all through this inquiry and all through his participation in this case now before the House. As I say, the transaction was completed by the Justice Department. The evidence shows that. I had nothing to do with it, that after I had sent my recommendation to council I had nothing further to do with it, that I did not know how the transaction was completed or how this money was paid. But later on, I think in the month of December, I wrote a letter to Mr. O'Leary, the letter which my hon. friend has referred to. I wrote to Mr. O'Leary because my hon. friend the member for Kent, New Brunswick, came to me and told me that he had heard some criticism of the payment which had been made for this property, and I felt it to be my duty, in consequence of the representations made to me, to look into the matter. Who was the first man to whom I ought to apply? It was Mr. Richard O'Leary, the man, who I had been informed, had owned this property. I wrote to Mr. O'Leary a letter. It had been marked 'confidential,' but when, before the Public Accounts Committee, he said he had received a confidential letter from me to which he had sent, not the reply which he produced before the committee containing this false statement to which I have already invited your attention, but the reply which you will find upon the page to which I have alluded. I wrote Mr. O'Leary a confidential letter, and I said at once that I had no objection to the letter going in evidence. Although it was confidential, I felt it was right that the committee should have the benefit of it, and it was read at my request. It is as follows, and it appears at page 44 of the evidence:

Office of
The Minister of Public Works of Canada.
Ottawa, 2nd Dec., 1908.

Confidential.

Dear Mr. O'Leary,—My department has recently purchased from Mr. Thomas Murray a wharf property at Richibucto known as the 'sawdust wharf.' It contains a frontage of 570 feet, and joins the municipal wharf. I purchased this with a view of making necessary improvements for the accommodation of vessels at Richibucto, and did it upon the report of Mr. Stead, the resident engineer, who stated that the price asked, namely $5,000, was fair and reasonable, and that the wharf could not be built now for several times the amount asked; also that it contains about a million cubic feet of cribwork, slabs and mill refuse, ballast and gravel. He says 'classing this all as filling', new cribwork faces being required—it would cost about 1½ cents per cubic foot or $15,000—three times the price asked for the property.

I have learned within a few days that this property was formerly owned by you, and have also been informed, whether reliable or not I do not know, that the value placed upon it by Mr. Stead is excessive. Before proceeding to improve the property, I should like to get as full information as possible with regard to its value, and would be obliged if you, as the former owner, would give me your opinion as to Mr. Stead's valuation.

(Sgd.) WM. PUGSLEY.

Richard O'Leary, Esq.,
Richibucto, N.B.

Now, is not that important from two standpoints? Is it not important, first, from the standpoint that I, up to that moment, or a few days before, I wrote that letter to Mr. O'Leary had no knowledge that Mr. Murray had bought this property from him. If I had other people would have known it. I had just learned a few days before that he was the former owner of this property and what position would it have placed me in if Mr. O'Leary, a very strong political opponent and the strong political opponent of my hon. friend who so worthily represents the county, had been able to produce evidence that the minister knew that he was the owner of this property and that he had sold it to Mr. Murray? Taking into consideration the fact that he was a political opponent and that only a few days before I wrote that letter to Mr. O'Leary I had no idea whatever that he had been the owner of this property and had sold it to Mr. Murray, I ask you whether you think I would have written that letter to Mr. O'Leary. But, it is important for another reason; it shows that I wanted to get the fullest information upon the subject and I went to the one man who above all others I thought would be able to give me accurate information in regard to it. Well, Mr. O'Leary proposed to furnish a copy of a letter which he did not write to me at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mr. Leblanc ,the member for Kent. Mr. Leblanc thought whom he had learned that O'Leary owned the property, from whom he had learned that the price was excessive?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mr. LeBlanc, the member for Kent. Mr. LeBlanc thought it was excessive and told me that he had understood that Mr. O'Leary had bought it for a considerable smaller sum and that his profit was larger than it ought to be. That was the criticism of Kent county as my hon. friend told me. Later on my hon. friend from Kent told me that when he made the statement to me he was under the impression that we had only bought a very small piece of this property, and that he had spoken of the price being excessive because he believed that that was the case. When he learned afterwards that we had bought the whole property he thought that we had given a fair and reasonable price for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Now, I may say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I and the chief engineer of my department had relied upon the report of Mr. Stead. I had made up my mind that if Mr. Stead had not acted in good faith, if he had not exercised good judgment, but had acted from any improper motive and by collusion with the vendor, it would be not only my duty to dismiss him from the department, but it would be my duty to take steps on behalf of the Crown to recover back the money which had been paid for this property and to have the transfer of it cancelled and set aside. That is what I had made up my mind to do in the discharge of my public duty and upon the 13th January I wrote Mr. Stead. My hon. friend says that the letter of the 13th January is conclusive evidence that the whole thing is a fraud, and that I was a party to it from the beginning. I would appeal to all fair-minded men on both sides of this House and I would ask if the hon. gentleman is warranted in making that statement? Bear in mind that it was my duty to act fairly towards my employee, that it was my duty to hear all that he had to say. Surely I would not be acting in the fair discharge of my duty, if I did not give him an opportunity to vindicate himself if he could. Surely it would not, in order to save myself from criticism, in order to prevent—shall I say a narrow-minded, bigoted and prejudiced man—a man actuated by partisanship, from criticising my action in this matter to do an injustice to a public official. Would I have been acting the part of a man if I had discharged this official, who for years had so far as I know worthily and honourably, and faithfully discharged his duties as an employee of the Public Works Department under my predecessors and under myself? No, I do not think that would be a manly part for me to take and I determined I would give him an opportunity to justify himself if he could, and to show that he had exercised his best judgment in regard to this property. Accordingly, when he saw me in St. John during the Xmas season, having come there to see his family and expecting to speak to me about different matters connected with the department, seeing me for a second when I could not give him the opportunity of an interview, I told him I would write him—not telling him what the contents of the letter would be—and this is another matter which the hon. gentleman concealed from the House: that Mr. Stead says that although he was expecting a letter from me he was surprised at the contents because it was not what he was expecting to receive. In pursuance of what I had said I wrote him on the 13th of January, 1909, as follows:

January 13, 1909.

Dear Sir,—It has recently been brought to my notice that the wharf property at Richibucto purchased by my department for the sum of $5,000 had been acquired by the then owner for a very much less amount

At that time I had a letter from Mr. O'Leary in my possession informing me he had sold the property and the price at which he had sold it and I proceeded to say:

As the price which he paid for the property would under ordinary circumstances be regarded as a fair criterion of its value I should like you to furnish me with all information which you had regarding the property and its value when you reported that the price of $5,000 was fair and reasonable.

I would also remind you that in your report to the department you made no reference to any previous transfers. This is information which should be in the possession of the department, because it might, as you can readily understand, influence the judgment of the officials as well as that of the minister in determining upon the purchase. In the future, you will please keep in mind, and report all previous transfers, together with the consideration, made within two or three years previous to your report, and also all other facts which might in any way afford information to the department as to the reasonableness of the price asked.

I am, yours very truly,
(Sgd.) WM. PUGSLEY

Now Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you and I appeal to the members of this House as to whether, never having known, as I did not know until I had heard it from Mr. Leblanc in the month of December, and had it confirmed by the letter which Mr. O'Leary wrote, learning that Mr. Murray had bought this property from Mr. O'Leary for a very small sum and that the resident engineer—the man in whose judgment we had to trust because a minister must give trust to his officials throughout this country—knowing that the resident engineer had made a report that this property had a fair value of $5,000, I ask you, Sir, whether or not it was a reasonable and a proper thing that I should write to Mr. Stead that letter of the 13th of January? Is there any man in this House who will say I did anything but what was right and fair and proper and just to an employee of my department in writing that letter? Now then, Mr. Stead replied:

Resident Engineer's Office,
Chatham, N.B., 21st January, 1909.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, and to say that I very much regret not having mentioned in my report of the 9th June, 1908, the previous transfer of the wharf property at Richibucto lately acquired by the department, and I will carefully observe your instructions in this respect in future.

In the case of this property the previous transfer appeared to be a matter of common knowledge. I saw a notice of it in a newspaper and presumed that it was published in the legal records and supposed you would have heard of it, otherwise I would have mentioned it.

The consideration mentioned was $1,000, but I do not know what the actual amount paid was. In the case of my small property at Chatham, if I had known at the time that it was a usual thing to do, I would have saved myself $10 or $20 yearly in taxes by making the consideration in the deed a nominal figure.

Will you pardon me in saying that in many cases I do not consider that the price paid can be taken as a fair criterion of the value of the property.

In Richibucto properties have been bought which immediately after and continuously since their purchase have yielded thirty-three per cent of the price annually in rent, showing that they must have been worth at least three times the price paid.

The fact is that the former owner had sufficient wharfs for his own use in this neighbourhood of his store, warehouse, &c., and the wharf property in question was there practically useless to him.

Even so, I heard many expressions of surprise that he had sold it, and especially at the above, supposed, price, and a Buctouche merchant said he would gladly have bought it if he had known it could be had.

No such property could be bought in Chatham, Loggieville, or Buctouche for $10,000, or even more.

He speaks here of the different lots which had been sold and on page 67 of the evidence his letter continues:

A wharf must reach deep water to be of general use. Where deep water is close to the shore the expense of the approach will be slight. At Richibucto the channel is about 500 to 550 feet from the shore, an approach twenty feet wide of this length, which would ordinarily be built of cribwork at seven cents per cubic foot, would cost about $7,000.

The wharf property in question, however furnishes an approach to deep water about 250 feet wide at the outer end and 450 feet wide at the shore. At the very low value of one and a half cents per cubic foot, which would be the cost of the cheapest filling material, the approach would cost $15,000. If valued at the usual price of stone ballast it would cost about four cents per cubic foot, or $40,000.

This large area, together with the shallow pond included in the property, will furnish not only convenient and ample accommodation for a railway wharf with a possible river frontage of about 560 feet, but also for a station, railway yard, engine house and general terminal facilities, and lies in a central part of the town. The present terminus of the Kent Northern railway is in the rear of the town and rather out of the way. The area is very limited and will accommodate two engines and about nineteen freight cars, but with no room for expansion; and should the Kent Northern railway be acquired by the government great benefit will, I believe, result to the railway and to the town by removing the terminals to the wharf property. This property also offers the only way to extend the railway along the remainder of the wharfs and river front.

And that surely is important when you are considering the value of a wharf property:

A short time ago two of the principal firms had a survey made at their own expense for a frack from the Kent Northern railway to reach their wharfs, freezers and stores and a sawmill belonging to one of the firms. For this track a right of way would be required across the property.

From these considerations I have stated that the price asked was reasonable and this view is upheld by several disinterested parties from Buctouche, Chatham, &c., who know the property and the value of wharf property generally.

$15,000 was mentioned as the price but I think not seriously. $5,000 was asked and $5,000 was the lowest figure I could get. I was of course not empowered to make any cash offer.——

And these gentlemen in the face of that statement and in the face of the sworn testimony would have the members of this House believe that I and my department had determined to buy this property, and so informed these men away back in the month of May before that property was purchased. But, Mr. Stead says, and says truly:

—I was of course not empowered to make any cash offer as is often done to get a better bargain, and I had in my mind when making my report the great expense of arbitration proceedings and also the case of the Shives' wharf property in Campbellton.

The Richibucto property is considerably more extensive than the Shives' wharf, though in a worse state of repair, but both wharfs required new faces. Allowance must, however, be made for the greater population—roughly about double—and much more extensive shipping of Campbellton. The Shives' wharf was bought in 1890 for $1,700 and was offered to the department in 1895 for $8,000. Mr. Shewen then valued the wharf at $5,335, the value being placed on the cubic contents similarly to the method in my report, Mr. Shewen's figures were, however, 2½ cents per cubic foot, or 67 per cent higher than my valuation, though prices of wharf material have increased very largely since 1895. Between 1890 and 1895 the owner had added about 20 per cent to the contents of the wharf which being deducted leaves Mr. Shewen's valuation $4,268 against $1,700, the cost price.

Mr. Day in 1903 estimated that the Shives' wharf could be built now for about $14,000 and in 1902-3 the wharf and smaller water front are connected with it were acquired by the department at a cost of $35,000, to which expropriation proceedings added an additional cost of $2,180.71.

I am, dear sir,
Yours faithfully,
GEOFFREY STEAD,
Resident Engineer.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

If my hon. friend from York had been animated by a desire to give to this House all the facts of this case, would he not have felt it to be his duty to have read that answer which Mr. Stead made by way of vindication to my letter of the 13th of January? It seems to me so. What does Mr. Stead say there? He gives full information in regard to the area of this property; shows its advantageous situation; speaks particularly of the fact that it immediately adjoins the railway wharf and affords the only opportunity which exists in Richibucto for the extension of the railway along the water front. He also refers to arbitration proceedings, and mentions the case of the Shives property at Campbellton, which had been bought for $1,700, and afterwards expropriated by the government and an award of $35,000. I happened in that case to be counsel for Mr. Shives; and this Mr. Day, whose name was mentioned by Mr. O'Leary, who was an appointee of the Conservative government, and who told him, as O'Leary swears, that he could not sell his property to the Liberal government, had valued that property at $5,000, and afterwards in the arbitration proceedings swore that the full value of the property was $5,000, while the department, on the advice of Mr. Shewen, offered Mr. Shives $8,000 for the property. I advised Mr. Shives not to take it. I said that the fact that he had bought it for $1,700 was no criterion of its value, that the judge of the Exchequer Court would look to the future prospects of business from the wharf, and would fix the valuation accordingly. The matter was referred to the Exchequer Court, and the late Mr. Justice Burbidge appointed as arbitrators: Mr. Wm. H. Thorn, who was for many years president of the Conservative Association of the province of New Brunswick; Mr. George McLeod, another gentleman who stood high in the ranks of the party; and Mr. George McKeen, one of the most prminent business men of New Brunswick. These three gentlemen were appointed arbitrators and heard evidence in the case, and the result was that instead of the government getting that property for $8,000, which was the amount they had offered on the advice of the engineer, the arbitrators allowed Mr. Shives the sum of $35,000 for it, and that amount the government had to pay. I suppose that if the government had bought that property for $10,000, gentlemen like the hon. member for York would have been found to criticise that payment and to declare that it was an outrage that Mr. Shives, who had bought the property only a short time before for $1,700, should receive the magnificent sum of $10,000 for it. And yet, Sir, these arbitrators, men of judgment and integrity, who stood high in the province of New Brunswick, awarded to him the sum of $35,000. And, Sir, with the report of Mr. Stead, with the evidence which he furnished as to the contents of this property, I was of the opinion that if we simply expropriated it and put the matter into the Exchequer Court, with men like the Messrs. Loggie ready to testify that they were willing to give a larger sum for this property, with other men like Mr. Irving and Mr. Forster ready to testify that it was worth anywhere from $5,000 to $10,000, I felt that the government would in all probability have to pay considerably more than $5,000 by virtue of proceedings in the Exchequer Court, besides a large amount in the way of costs, before they could get rid of the liability in respect of the purchase of this property. Knowing all that, I was prepared to believe, and did believe, that the resident engineer, Mr. Stead, had acted in perfect good faith, had made a report according to his best judgment, and that it would be very much better for the government to act on his report and complete the purchase of the property than to throw the case into the Exchequer Court. And, Mr. Speaker, I had other experience in respect to wharf property. It is a class of property, the value of which cannot be determined at all by the methods applied to other properties. Wharf property may fall into decay, but if you begin to build wharfs or breakwaters and give facilities for traffic, there are many people who will then be willing to make an investment in wharf property and trust to the future. My hon. friend who represents Queens and Sunbury (Mr. McLean), but who lives at St. John, knows a property near where the Long Wharf now is, that was purchased at public auction for an insignificant sum, but which in a short time realized to the owner many times—I think I am almost safe in saying scores of times—what they paid for it. I have in mind Mr. Joseph Likely, who bought a property from the Fisher estate at Chubb's Corners for $1,700, and in a short time received for it at the hands of arbitrators $50,000 or $60,000. I happen to know property in that same vicinity which many years ago was bought by the late Dr. Stockton, who so worthily filled a considerable place in this House as the representative of the constituency which I have the honour to represent, the present Judge McLeod and myself. That property had become comparatively derelict. We bought it for the sum of $25,000, made improvements on it, built it up, put on some additional cribwork, put a cover on it, built a warehouse on it, built a highway bridge at a cost of $2,000 or $3,000 to connect it with one of the streets of the city, and on arbitration we obtained an award of $118,000 for that property; and one of the witnesses, the manager of the Bank of Montreal, swore that the property was worth $280,000. I know another most remarkable instance. One day I happened to see in the newspapers that five pieces of land facing on Sand Point slip on the western side of the harbour of St. John were for sale. I happened to be at Chubb's Corners, and I thought I would see what took place. I found one of the aldermen of the city of St. John there to watch the sale in the interests of the city, the lots being held under lease from the city. There were five lots of 250 feet frontage. He bid them up to $23.50, and I bid $25, and the whole five lots were knocked down to me. The wharfs were in a dilapidated condition, the logs floating out and drifting about the harbour.

I sold them out a short time afterwards for $120. It was not very much, but the man to whom I sold them, before many months, sold them for $6,500, and the man who brought them for $6,500, within a short period sold them with, I think some small additional property to the city of St. John for the sum of $20,000, and to-day you could not buy that property for several times that amount even without the miprovements. These are instances showing that when you begin to make improvements in a port, wharf property begins to take a different value from what it has when everything has been allowed to go back. I am happy to say to you that all over this country, in Richibucto as well as in hundreds of other harbours, which extend along the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast and the great lakes, this government is engaged in the great work of improving ports and giving facilities to aid and encourage the transportation interests of this country. Well now I should not sit down without referring to the offer which Messrs. Loggie made for this property. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) has said it was an extraordinary thing that Messrs. Loggie should send a cheque for $5,500 for this property without knowing that the Minister of Public Works was prepared to sell, that the whole thing must be stamped with fraud and that for that reason the House ought to condemn the minister and declare the whole transaction fraudulent and corrupt. Now, Sir, let me explain why I think the action of Messrs. Loggie was a reasonable one. Remember that they had written a letter to Mr. Stead stating that in their opinion $5,000 was a low price for this property and that if they had had it, they would not have sold it for that price. Remember that when Mr. Murray and Mr. Andrew Loggie had a talk about the property, and he informed Mr. Loggie that he had offered the property to the government for $5,000, Mr. Loggie asked him, if he would not withdraw that offer and stated that his firm would gladly give more for the property. Now, Sir, when this investigation came on, I stated to the committee, and this appears in the proceedings, that as Mr. Stead had inclosed to the department that letter from Mr. Loggie, and as Mr. Murray had stated that that was Mr. Loggie's opinion of the property, I wanted Mr. Loggie here as a witness. Mr. Loggie would know that that was the object of calling him as a witness. He would know there was no other purpose in calling him as a witness because he had had no other connection with this transaction in any shape or form. At my instance Mr. Loggie was subpœnaed, but unfortunately he was taken ill—he was suffering from a very severe attack of asthma, as the certificate of his attendant physician showed. He was unable to come to Ottawa, but knowing as he did that the object of calling him as a witness was to have him testify as to the value of this property and as his firm had been willing to buy it, Mr. Loggie did what he thought was even better than giving his evidence; being unable to come to Ottawa by reason of his illness, he sent a certified cheque from the firm for $5,500 being of opinion that that was the best evidence he could give that he was desirous of purchasing this property for the benefit of his firm. Does it strike you, Mr. Speaker, that that was an unreasonable thing for Mr. Loggie to do? It does not so strike me. It seems to me that Mr. Loggie, knowing that all what he was wanted for as a witness, was to give his testimony as to the value of this property and to corroborate the statement he made to Mr. Murray that he would pay upwards of $5,000 for it, he sent his cheque for that amount. Was it not a reasonable thing that when through illness he was unable to respond to the subpœna and come to Ottawa, he should send forward his certified cheque with an offer to buy the property for the sum which he had previously said he was willing to give for it? He did so and sent forward the checque for $5,500. He came here afterwards and under oath swore that the property was well worth the sum of $5,500 and that the government had got a good bargain when they got it for the sum of $5,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, some reference has been made to the fact that the department under my direction decided not to accept Mr. Loggie's offer, but that we agreed to sell a portion of the property for the sum of $3,500. Well, I am free to admit, Sir, that in three or four years if any criticism is passed upon my conduct, when this wharf is extended, when the railway track is built along the wharf, and when as the result of that the people of Richibucto get much needed railway terminal facilities, and when so great an advantage as that has accrued to the place by reason of the improvements we shall have made—if any criticism be then passed upon my conduct in connection with this property, it will be, not that we purchased this property for $5,000, but that we have sold two-thirds of it for less than it was worth and that we should have held on to it in the public interests or else insisted upon getting a larger price. That will be the criticism passed on my conduct before three or four years have passed away. But, Sir, I have felt that at present or in the near future, all we intend to do is to extend this wharf a distance of about 200 feet along the front which will give us a frontage of from 350 to 400 feet. That will enable the railway to be carried along parallel with the face of the wharf so that the cars will lie face to face with the steamers, and other vessels that come there. That will be given reasonable accommodation to the people and I thought that as I had the opportunity of disposing of the remainder of the property for the sum of $3,500, it was not an unreasonable or an improper thing that we should accept the offer made to us, or rather that we should carry out the counter offer made by us to Messrs. Loggie. One condition is attached to it, it is true, but it is not in any way contrary to the public interest. It does not militate in any way against the public interests. They will put a face on the wharf and they are desirous of having the railway extended to their own wharf and in order to do this, it will be necessary to have tracks made across the portion which the government has reserved for public properties. They have stipulated for that and we have agreed that two tracks of railway shall be laid by them, but in such a place as the chief engineer shall determine, and under the supervision of the engineer of the Department of Public Works. In that way, I think the public interest will be reasonably safe-guarded. I think it is not an unreasonable thing to sell this property to Messrs. Loggie for $3,500 being the portion of the property to which I have referred, leaving to us, to the Crown, 200 feet immediately adjoining the wharf upon which the railway track, which is the vital part of the property, so far as extending the terminal facilities in connection with the Kent Northern railway is concerned will be laid. Therefore we get for the sum of $1,500 the most valuable part of this property, the part which so far as the government is concerned, so far as extending these terminal facilities is concerned, is worth as much as all the rest of the property and when we have extended the wharf, we shall have very excellent terminal facilities, sufficient to meet the requirements of the town for many years to come. At the same time we are happy to know that we are selling the remainder of the property to the firm of A. and R. Loggie, one of the most enterprising firms in the maritime provinces, men who develop any property which they acquire, men who are going to improve and build up that wharf and extend the railway along it, thus giving facilities for the transhipment of fish and other products of the province of New Brunswick. It seems to me that in doing that we have made an arrangement which is not contrary to the public interest, but which the public will say is very greatly and very clearly in their interest.

Now, just a word in regard to the evidence as to the value of the property. I think that too much stress cannot be laid —and I appeal to hon. members opposite who were not before the committee if I am not correct in this—upon the fact that the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket)—who has taken practically the whole time of the Committee on Public Accounts in connection with matters relating to my department, and particularly matters in the province of New Brunswick, and who has been able, by simply making his request to the chairman, to bring any witnesses he pleases, whether they live in Vancouver or in Richibucto—has not been able to produce a single witness, outside of Richard O'Leary, the strong, prejudiced partisan who sold this property, not a single resident of Richibucto, not a single inhabitant of the county of Kent, who was prepared to say that we paid a single dollar for this property more than its fair value. To the contrary. We had the evidence of Mr. Forster, a man who knew Richibucto as any hon. member of this House knows the village in which he was born and spent his boyhood and early manhood. Mr. Forster lived at Dorchester, not far from Richibucto, had been in Richibucto frequently, and knew the property thoroughly. He swore that if a man wanted it for a business property he thought it was worth $10,000. Mr. James D. Irving, who knows that part of the country well, placed the value at $5,000 to $10,000. Mr. Carter, a gentleman called by the other side, placed the value at not less than $5,000. And we have Mr. Loggie, who not only swore that it was good value for $5,500, but backed up his opinion with a certified cheque which he was prepared to give on receiving the conveyance of this property. This is in addition to the fact which I have already mentioned, that this hon. gentleman (Mr. Crocket) did not call—because he could not—any respectable resident of the town of Richibucto, except Mr. O'Leary, who would say that we paid too much for this property. They had one man, Mr. James, who has lived all his life in Richibucto, their own solicitor, a man employed by Mr. O'Leary, to draw the papers, yet they did not venture to ask him whether or not we had paid too much for that property. So the case stands to-day with the absolutely conclusive evidence that this property is worth more than, or, at all events, as much as the government paid for it. It is absolutely proved that the resident engineer of the department acted in good faith and in perfect honesty when he certified that the value of this property was $65,000. And, in the absence of any evidence that I ever knew, but that Mr. Murray had been for years the owner of this property, in the absence of any evidence that I acted otherwise than in good faith upon the report sent me by the resident engineer, approved by the chief engineer, and in face of the fact that all the witnesses, with the exception of Mr. O'Leary himself—the unreliability of whose testimony I have already pressed upon your consideration—declared their opinion that the price paid was fair and reasonable, I think this House will hesitate before adopting the want of confidence resolution proposed by the hon. member for York, that this is a corrupt and fraudulent transaction deserving of the censure of this House.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie). Mr. Speaker, I regret that I cannot congratulate the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley)—nor do I think he will find much encouragement in the reflection—on the contrast which was forced upon our notice between the violent enthusiasm at the commencement of his address by his followers—four-fifths of whom never heard the accusation, and I venture to say ninety per cent of whom had never read the evidence—with the slight attention paid him by a waning attendance, and the dribbling hosannas which marked the close of his remarks. Nor do I think he would be much comforted by noting that the hon. gentleman beside him received his address in alternate fits of sleeping and wakefulness, and that the hon. member (Mr. Leblanc) for the county concerned in this matter received every remark made by the minister respecting himself with a very significant smile.

The Minister of Public Works when he commenced his address this afternoon, clearly signified the character of the reply he would make. He called in question the motives of the hon. member for York, and tried to detract from that hon. gentleman's reputation in this House, and in the country. And with forceful declamation, which I shall not be able to imitate, and with an artificial irritation and a form of righteous indignation of which he should be proud—and which also I shall never be able to imitate—he told the hon. member for York that the key to the character of that hon. gentleman's address was contained in its first remark concerning a certain letter written by the Minister of Public Works on 23rd May, 1908. I accept the challenge of the minister and am prepared to admit that the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Crocket's) remarks on that point are a fair sample of the correctness of his statements. Did the hon. member for York make any mistake in his reference to that point? He stated that a letter was written on the 20th of May, the very date when the transaction was closed by Mr. Murray with Mr. O'Leary. This was written by George W. Robertson who accompanied Mr. Murray to Ottawa to see the minister. It was written from Richibucto to the minister in Ottawa, requesting on behalf of the Kent Northern railway, that further wharf accommodation be provided by the government at Richibucto. And the hon. member (Mr. Crocket) remarked that the minister wrote and instructed the chief engineer of the department to have an investigation made without delay.

Now, the hon. member chose to put the words 'without delay' as applying to the minister's letter. That is a logical and, in fact, truthful statement of the relation. For, if ever the minister acted without delay, he acted without delay on that occasion. The letter of the Kent Northern railway was dated May 20, 1908. It could not have been posted before that date. It had to travel from Richibucto to the city of Ottawa, and by no possibility could that letter have been received and answered earlier than it was received and answered by the Minister of Public Works. He had not, as he admits himself, any other communication on the subject; he had the communication only of Mr. George W. Robertson, who had seen him a few days before in the city of Ottawa on behalf of a two-by-four railway that runs into the village of Richibucto; he had no other. Does the minister always act on a single representation like that with that wonderful degree of promptness? I have not found that to be the case, and I do not think that any member of this House has ever found the minister acting with that degree of promptness, 'without delay'. Did the minister act without delay or did he not? My hon. friend from York was correct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to call his attention to page 7779, where the member for York stated:

> On that very day he issues an instruction to the chief engineer to have a report procured upon the matter of this letter without delay.

You see he says that is contained in my instructions to the chief engineer; I say that is not the case.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Those are the words of my hon. friend from York just as I quoted them, and I say again that the words 'without delay' in that report were attributable to the minister on the part of my hon. friend, and the minister acted with a promptness unprecedented in any department of this government. Now the minister asked me permission to ask a question, and I will let him know that all through my remarks I will never take up the attitude he assumed, that no member shall ask me a question. He proceeded after that point to read a lecture to my hon. friend from York on the subject of duty, and of course we bow to the Minister of Public Works on that subject. He complained that my hon. friend from York had not fulfilled his duty because he quoted sparingly from the evidence, but the minister followed the hon. member for Carleton, the whole burden of whose complaint was that my hon. friend from York had quoted so liberally from the evidence that he took up three hours and a half. The minister in the course of his criticism did not add, so far as I can recollect, one single quotation from the evidence that was not already put on record by my hon. friend. Now, Sir, he struggled, just as he has struggled before in this House, and the contest in which he is now engaged is by no means new to the minister. He has had experience before of being imprisoned by evidence just as conclusive as the evidence is now, and he has adopted the same means he adopts to-day. Just as in a previous session he clung to a typographical error in an affidavit, so to-day he clings to straws of a like character. Wherever he can find a little technical, meaningless error he clings to that, and he uses all his power of declamation to ridicule a person who may have fallen into that error.

The minister proceeds to call in question the testimony of Mr. O'Leary. That was certainly to be expected. The minister cannot possibly square his own conduct with the testimony of Mr. O'Leary; consequently if he is to continue to enjoy the confidence of the government—I do not say the confidence of the people of this country because that he has not—if he is to continue to enjoy that, he must necessarily bring down the character of Mr. O'Leary. Now, Mr. O'Leary is contradicted on one point alone, of importance, in the whole course of this controversy; he is contradicted by Mr. Murray, and by the Minister of Public Works, of course, on the question as to whether there were negotiations previous to the 19th of May as to the procuring by the Department of Public Works of this sawdust wharf at a price. Mr. O'Leary says on that point that he offered to give the department permission to put through that sewer for $100, the same as they had paid before, and that nothing else whatever was mentioned in the month of April, 1908, between himself and Mr. Murray with reference to any purchase except the right of way for that sewer. He says that on the 4th of May, Mr. Murray telephoned him that he was going to Ottawa to see the minister about it, and would like to know if the offer to sell that right of way for $100 was good, and if he could keep all there was in it over $100. The fact is he came to Ottawa, the fact is he and Mr. Robertson saw the minister. My hon. friend from York stated why. Mr. Murray denied having mentioned anything about this matter to the minister, and the minister affirms that again to-day. But this country, and this House cannot lose sight of the fact that Mr. Murray, in evidence before the Public Accounts Committee, or since, or in any other way whatsoever, has never explained to this House or to the country what he did come to see the minister about. The minister has made the statement and has closed, and the minister has never told nor indicated to this House the subject of the conversation he had with Mr. Murray. Mr. Murray stated on his oath in the Public Accounts Committee that he had no knowledge of what he came to see the minister about, that he could not state what the subject of that conversation was.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend turn to the page of the evidence which says that he came to Ottawa to see me at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I did not say that the hon. member stated that he came to Ottawa to see the minister, I said that Mr. O'Leary's evidence was that he said he came to Ottawa to see the minister. Not only did he come to Ottawa to see the minister, but to this hour he has not told us any other reason that he came to Ottawa for, or any other reason that he saw the minister for. Now, the very best witnesses that ever stood in a witness box in any court or before any committee will make errors attributable to inaccuracy. Sometimes it is argued, and argued successfully, that this is rather an evidence than otherwise of their truthfulness. But no witness will come to a court and, in sixty per cent of the answers he gives relative to transactions less than two years ago, will state that he does not know anything about them, and cannot remember anything about them. If there is one argument that weighs with judges and juries against the credibility of a witness it is the fact he repeatedly answers that he cannot remember, particularly whenever the question is one that is vital to his own honour and to the success of his case. Mr. Murray stands in that position in the transaction, and he is the support which the minister has. He stands in a similar position in every other case wherever his word is opposed to that of another. He cannot remember what he did with the $5,000. He swears that he paid out that $5,000 in five and ten dollar bills to various people, and he can only tell the name of one man that he paid a dollar to although this only occurred a year and a half. He stated that he is so much of a business-man that he had put $5,000 in his wife's hands instead of putting it in the bank and that he paid out $2,000 of it as nearly as he could tell to Mr. Robertson, the campaign manager for the Liberal party. He could not tell us to whom he had paid out a dollar of the other $3,000 of that money. Nor could he tell us what he owed Mr. Robertson. If ever a man gave evidence that stamped him as a perjurer, Mr. Murray stands in that position before the public to-day, and the minister seems satisfied to have only Mr. Murray's support behind him in this transaction.

Now, the minister resorts to his old plan. He calls upon the members of this House to make charges against him in a certain form. I asked the minister, if I were to take the responsibility as he calls it, of such a charge, by whom would I be tried? He refused to answer that question: The fact is, and the minister knows it, that if any member of this House made such a charge and staked his position in this House on the verdict he would be tried by a partisan committee on which there would be a majority of the hon. gentleman's supporters. There was a time in this country (and there is a time still in other countries) when a man can afford to trust his honour to the judicial temperament of even members of parliament. But Sir, in this country under the influence of this government that time has gone by. I venture to say that there is not a a single member of this House who would trust the fortunes of his family cat to the tender mercies of a committee of a majority of the partisans of the party in power. So that, when the hon. gentleman calls for such a charge, he might as well make his position plain and say: I want to unseat the man who has the temerity to make a charge against me, and in order to unseat him he must throw himself politically into the keeping of a committee which I shall name.

The minister proceeded to complain of Mr. O'Leary on the ground that he had stated that he wrote a certain letter to the minister on the 5th December, 1908, which letter he had not written, and he stated that in the actual letter Mr. O'Leary did write the minister he said that Murray had repeated to him when he purchased this property that he had acted as the agent of the government and that in a subsequent letter which he actually sent he did not make that statement. I want to tell the minister that neither in the first nor in the second letter did Mr. O'Leary state to the minister that Murray had represented that he had acted as the agent of the Public Works Department, and that Mr. O'Leary said in both letters that he was given to understand and did understand that Murray was purchasing this property for the Department of Public Works. I do not think that Mr. O'Leary was very far out in that regard. I believe that Mr. O'Leary believed, and believed correctly, that Murray was purchasing this property for the Public Works Department directly or indirectly. You can read the letter that the minister received and the copy that O'Leary presented, and there is no hon. member in this House who can point to one particular in which they are materially different. Still, the minister stands up in his place and condemns Mr. O'Leary as a perjurer because he did not present the exact copy. He had not the manliness to tell the House the very clear explanation that Mr. O'Leary gave of that transaction. Mr. O'Leary stated that after dictating the letter to his stenographer he decided to change the phraseology of it, that he dictated another, that he intended the second one to go, and that evidently the stenographer so intended it——

Mr. CARVELL. Would the hon. gentleman show me the page of the evidence at which any such statement appears?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I cannot quote all the pages of the evidence at a moment's notice, but the hon. gentleman will find it immediately after the page that the minister pointed out.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman cannot find it in the evidence.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I am sorry for the hon. member.

Mr. CARVELL. I make that statement, and I would like you to prove what he said. He stated that that may have been the case, but he did not state that it was the case.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Evidently hanging this case on a very slim technicality again. I affirm that the minister endeavoured to lead this House to believe that in the letter of the 20th May, which Mr. Robertson, on behalf of the Kent Valley railway, wrote to the Department of Public Works, he indicated that the municipal wharf, which the government were negotiating for, would not suffice for the purposes of the village of Richibucto. If the minister did not say that, let him say so, and we will refer to 'Hansard' to-morrow. I understood the minister to lead this House to believe that Mr. Robertson, in his letter, had given the dimensions of the municipal wharf and had indicated that the wharf was not sufficient to answer the wharfage purposes of the village of Richibucto. Now, Sir, you may be surprised to know that the letter of Mr. Robertson——

Mr. MEIGHEN

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did the hon. gentleman say that I said that the letter stated that the wharf did not give sufficient accommodation?? I made no such statement.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If the minister had listened he would have understood better what I said. What I stated was that the minister led this House to believe in clear language that in a letter of the 20th May, written by Mr. Robertson, on behalf of the Kent Valley railway, he had stated to the minister that the municipal wharf was not of sufficient dimensions and did not answer the wharfage purposes of the village of Richibucto, and that consequently more wharfage was needed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is entirely in error. I did not say that the letter referred to the municipal wharf at all. That is my recollection.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I listened very carefully to the hon. gentleman and I took down what he stated, because I was surprised. The minister knows just as well as I know that that letter made no reference whatever to the municipal wharf, as the minister will see, because he is not intellectually dull, that it would have been entirely out of the course of Mr. Robertson's purpose to have made any reference whatever to the municipal wharf. But I will tell the hon. minister now what was most remarkable; it was not that Mr. Robertson left out of his letter all reference to the municipal wharf, but what is startling and incredible is the fact that the minister in his reply to the letter written by Mr. Robertson did not tell Mr. Robertson that they had already under negotiation the purchase of that municipal wharf. Mr. Robertson wrote the minister on the 1st of May, just a few days after he got back from Ottawa, and the very day they closed the transaction for the purchase from Mr. O'Leary of the $700 sawdust wharf; he wrote to the minister and pointed out that the government had no wharfage accommodation whatever in the village of Richibucto, stating that they required wharfage there, and he asked the government to examine and see at once whether or not that was correct. And notwithstanding the fact that for two months the minister had had under consideration the purchase of a wharf in the village of Richibucto, he saw fit to make no reference to that in his reply to Mr. Robertson, and that omission has not been explained by the minister. One would think that would be in the mind of the minister when he received a letter from a friend complaining that there was no government wharfage at Richibucto. Is it not to be supposed that he would say in his reply: It is true, we have no wharfage in the village of Richibucto, but for two months past we have been negotiating for the municipal wharf in that village. And, Sir, the fact that the minister did not state so is consistent entirely with his knowledge of this transaction from its very inception, and it is consistent absolutely with his determined purpose that he pursued right through to the end for which it was intended. Now, Sir, I must compliment the minister at least on the physical energies which he summoned to the unhappy task which was before him. The hon. minister, it is true, is not wanting either in physical energy or in intellectual gifts. We must do him that credit. He has performed certain feats in both lines that must deserve the admiration of the House. But, Sir, the regrettable fact to most, and I think to all hon. members, is not that he lacks in either of these particulars, but that to these qualities are not united these other qualities which would command the confidence of the people of this country and which would warrant some trust in the department over which he presides. What the hon. minister lacks is not the ability of a lawyer to meet a desperate case; what he lacks is that moral courage which would estimate at its true value what a party advantage is, and which would also estimate at its true value what real political progress is, and which would resolutely determine him that he would not pay too big a price for either.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could more aptly resume my remarks than by satisfying the curiosity of the hon. member for Carleton, who just before six o'clock challenged a statement I made to the effect that Mr. O'Leary had given a very sensible, and no doubt correct explanation of the fact that the wording of the copy of the letter to the hon. minister which he produced did not agree with the letter which the hon. minister received and produced. I told him that I would undertake to produce the words of Mr. O'Leary from the evidence. If the House will look at page 124, of the evidence they will find that Mr. O'Leary states as follows:

I would like, Mr. Chairman, to make an explanation. I have brought my letter-book with me, when I was here there was a difference in the letter read here as having been written by me to Dr. Pugsley and the copy which I produced from my letter-book. Not that I imagine it makes any difference, but the St. John 'Telegraph,' had a very interesting telegraph despatch on it, headed 'O'Leary reads a typewritten document entirely different to the letter he sent to the minister.' When I went home I hunted up my letter-book and I found that my letter-book had copied in it the very letter I read here, and the letter which I actually sent Dr. Pugsley is not in the letter-book. The stenographer I had at the time is no longer with me, and the only explanation I can give is that when I dictated the letter the girl brought one letter to me which did not suit me and that I dictated another and she copied the wrong letter in the copy book, sending one to Dr. Pugsley and copying the other in the letter-book. What I read to the committee here is a copy of the one in the letter-book.

This is exactly what I stated to the House, and, as I said before, there is no material difference between the copy produced by Mr. O'Leary and the letter the minister actually received. The fact is of importance in considering whether Mr. O'Leary meant, as the hon. minister so loudly asserted, to deceive the committee. Even if they had been different, Mr. O'Leary could not possibly have dreamed of deceiving the committee, for he would know that the letter he wrote was in the possession of the minister. I observed that when the hon. minister was reciting this circumstance, instead of saying that he had the actual letter, he kept repeating that he had a copy, as if it were a letter he had written that was under discussion instead of one he had received, and which every sensible business man knows would be in his possession. This among other straws of a like nature shows the desperate straits to which the minister is driven when he seeks out of that circumstance to make a case against Mr. O'Leary. While the hon. minister himself, and the hon. member for Carleton were apparently in danger of breaking their backs struggling to pick up little pieces of chaff and straw like that, they did not meet squarely the charge levelled against the minister and supported by this evidence. They did not attempt to shoulder the burden of that charge that is crushing the last remnant of respect out of the department, and its head in the eyes of the people of this country. How does the hon. minister explain such an array of circumstances as these? The hon. member for Carleton wisely did not try to explain them; he said he would leave that to the minister. Let us see how the minister explains them—the sworn and unretracted evidence of Mr. O'Leary that Mr. Murray told him, at the very hour of his departure for Ottawa, that he was coming here to see the minister about this wharf; the further fact that as soon as he gets back from Ottawa, his partner and joint owner of the railway and joint manager of the Liberal party in the county of Kent writes a letter to the minister suggesting that they should make a start to procure for the people from the government wharf accommodation in the village of Richibucto; and that in reply to that letter the hon. minister does not do the only natural, the only conceivable thing that he would do if his attitude in this regard was what he asserts, namely, state clearly to Mr. Murray that they had already made a start to procure for the people wharf accommodation at Richibucto, and ask him if he really meant that more than that should be provided. How does the hon. minister explain the remarkable circumstance, that while the question of the advisability of purchasing the municiby the department before there had been under consideration for two or three years by the department before there had been an order for an inspection and valuation, the proposition to purchase an additional wharf, this sawdust wharf, was before the minister, not for two or three years, but two or three hours, probably two or three minutes, before he ordered an inspection, and the further fact that it was not before him on the authority of a requisition from any board of trade or any village or city council, or on any petition of the residents or taxpayers of Richibucto, but that it was before him on the authority, and at the instance of one man alone, Mr. George W. Robertson, the associate of Mr. Murray, and the companion of Mr. Murray in the mission to Ottawa? How does he explain the further fact that a short time afterwards, within a very few days, Mr. Geoffrey Stead, the engineer of the department, goes down to Richibucto, and in company with Mr. Murray, actually sees, as he does not deny, the deed under which Mr. Murray holds that property, and forthwith values the property at $5,000, sends his report to the minister, and omits to state the most significant fact that would be in his mind or in any other man's mind, that only a few days before that property had been purchased by Mr. Murray for $700?

The minister attempted to make use of the fact that he did nothing in the department for two months, or until the month of August: Why, Sir, who would expect him to take action, if this transaction bore the complexion that the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) attributes to it, and attributes rightly, I think. Who would expect him to have taken action in the month of July. There was no election pending then. There was no election close at hand at that time, and it would not have been advisable to put this money in the hands of Mr. Murray away back in May, or June, or July. But no sooner had the writs issued for the election of 1908, no sooner had the writs for that election issued I say, than the message goes from the department to Mr. Murray that this wharf is purchased. The hon. Minister states that he never saw that telegram. But is the House going to forget that the telegram was only received a few days when the very action which could only be taken at the minister's instance, and on his authority was taken and Mr. Murray notified thereof. Now, Sir, the significance of that letter cannot be too firmly impressed on this House. If there was one subject which the minister slid over with that grace of which he is master, it was the subject of that telegram. What is the telegram? On the 18th September, Mr. Murray sends this telegram to Mr. Valiquette, an officer of the department of the Minister of Public Works. It appears on page 13 of the evidence:

Kent Junction, N.B., Sept. 18.

A. Valiquette,
Chief Engineer, Public Works,
Ottawa.

Please let me know if wharf matter passed council. This matter important to Mr. Leblanc. Please rush it.

Now, Sir, let me make this remark first in reference to that telegram. Mr. Loggie, whose praises both of these gentlemen have sung so loudly, swore before the Public Accounts Committee that as soon as he heard that Mr. Murray had purchased this wharf and had offered to sell it to the government for $5,000, he remonstrated with him for his foolishness, and urged him to cancel the offer and instead to sell it to him. Now, Mr. Loggie took the position that he had asked Mr. Murray to cancel the offer to sell to the government, and instead to turn it over to Mr. Loggie. The offer to sell to the government had not been accepted, so far as the records show at all events. Whether it had been accepted before being offered or not, of course we can't tell. But, Sir, the records show that it had not been accepted. Mr. Murray magnanimously took the position that having offered it to the government, he could not withdraw his offer from them, no matter how anxious he might be to do so. But here is the telegram coming on the 18th September in which he urges the government to accept it, notwithstanding the fact that it did not make any difference to him because as he states he could get more money from Mr. Loggie. Now how do these two circumstances sleep together. Why would Mr. Murray be urging the government to accept in his telegram of the 18th September, if all the while he had a standing offer from Mr. Loggie to purchase it at the same price. Here is this telegram, and I invite any member of this House to state to me one sensible reason why that telegram should have been written, if it had not been that Mr. Murray wanted this transaction put through in order to procure funds for himself and for the Liberal committee of Kent. 'Important to Leblanc.' The minister says it is very important in this connection before we ascribe anything to him to see whether he received this telegram. And he invited me, and the members of this House to be bold enough to say that if it was intended to get money for the purposes of an election campaign, the telegram would have been sent to him instead of to an officer of his department. I told the minister then, and I tell him now that if the purpose of that telegram was to get funds for the Liberal campaign in New Brunswick, it would have been sent just as it was sent. Sir, the path of treachery is not the path of daylight. The thief does not walk in open day and steal from his victim. He gets out in the darkness of night. He adopts a subterfuge. He goes underground, if necessary, and tries to avoid of all things publicity. And that is what Mr. Murray was anxious to avoid. He had in his mind, that if he addressed the telegram not to the minister, but to a mere subordinate official of his department, it would never perhaps reach the files of the minister, and would never perhaps reach the light of day, and the committees of this House. He had the idea in his mind that he could reach the ear of the minister without going through the public telegraph, and addressing the telegram to his name. That is exactly the course, and every sensible man in this House knows it to be exactly the course, that Mr. Murray would have adopted, if he had been desirous of screening this transaction. 'Important to Leblanc.' Yes, important to Mr. Leblanc, the Liberal candidate for the county of Kent. The minister says it had nothing to do with him unless it is shown that he was a party to that telegram. Sir, if I am a co-conspirator with another man, and I am charged with being a conspirator and there is found in my possession a letter from my fellow conspirator outlining the whole plan of attack—I can only explain the receipt of that letter and the possession of that letter on two grounds. The first is that I am a conspirator, and the second is that if I am not, the other fellow is putting up a job on me. There is no other explanation but these two. Now, which one does the minister take. The most daring actor would not take the position that Mr. Murraay was putting up a job on the minister. The minister would not dare to take that position himself. Secondly, it must be that the Department of Public Works to whom that telegram was address was a party to the intention which was embodied in that telegram. Now, Sir, what is the intention with which that telegram clearly sets out. The hon. minister tells this House that the telegram did not mean that Mr. Murray wanted funds for his Liberal committee in Kent, but that it meant that he wanted the government to purchase the wharf in order that the mere advertisement of that fact, would assisst Mr. Leblanc in his constituency. Now, how does that square with the other facts. The hon. Minister of Public Works took good care not to mention some of the other circumstances when he was bold enough to set out that the advertisement of the purchase of the wharf by the government would assist Mr. Leblanc in the county of Kent. The answer, the final answer to that, is that it was never advertised, that from the very day on which that telegram was sent, the purchase was kept concealed from the public and purposely concealed. Why, Sir, according to the evidence of Mr. Carter, whose praises the minister so loudly sang, turning to his evidence of page 100 what do we find was the attitude of the Liberal committee in respect to this wharf? Does it indicate that Mr. Carter, or Mr. Murray was anxious that the purchase of that wharf should be heralded far and wide for the purpose of assisting Mr. Leblanc. It shows the very opposite. Mr. Carter was afraid to register the deed of purchase for fear the public would know about their action, and in disgust vote against Mr. Leblanc. Mr. Carter was compelled to admit it and did admit it before the Public Accounts Committee. Here is what he said:

Q. And you held that deed over for a month, until the election was over, before recording it?—A. I held it for about a month, yes.

Q. When was the deed recorded? On the 2nd November, I think.—A. That is what is stated there and I presume it is correct.

And that only six days after the election.

Q. Will you explain why you did that?—A. There were two reasons.

Listen to the two reasons. The first one is worthy of the Minister of Public Works himself:

A. The first reason was that I was very busy at the time

He was so busy that he actually had not the time to dictate a letter to the registry office to register that document. That is the first reason, and I hope the House will be so generous to Mr. Carter as to give due weight to that very important reason. What was the second reason?

The second reason was because I did not want to at the time.

Q. And why did not you want to?—A. I did not want to because there were some people making inquiries about it, and I did not want them to get the satisfaction of getting the information.

So, the favourite witness of the Minister of Public Works is on record as swearing that he deliberately, for the purpose of concealment, declined to register that deed until the election was over. And still the Minister of Public Works suggests to this House—for on no other suggestion can he square himself or his honour in this transaction—that the transaction was put through for advertising the merits of the government in the county of Kent. Now, let me add to that one or two other facts, which, I am sure, are at this moment present to the mind of the Minister of Public Works. This purchase of a wharf was not asked for by any public meeting in Richibucto, by any board of trade, by a municipal council, by any public body, or by general petition. It was not asked for even in a newspaper. It was all done quietly, secretly, secretively—indicative of the character of which it partook. And not only was it not asked for publicly, but the fact that it was procured was never made public, either by the registration of the deed or in any other way. Can the hon. minister point to a newspaper in Kent county that announced the fact that the government had purchased the sawdust wharf for $5,000? Not a newspaper in Kent county was made acquainted with the fact —not even one citizen was informed, beyond those interested in its procurement. Outside the perpetrators of the fraud, nobody was permitted to know the facts. Is there one hon. member who will stand in his place and say that Murray meant to suggest in that telegram that the very advertisement of the fact that the government had procured the wharf from him was a matter 'important to Leblanc'? Surely there is not one. If further testimony was needed, we have it from Mr. Murray himself. And that testimony is absolutely inconsistent with the theory of the minister, and it is on Mr. Murray that he depended again. When Mr. Murray was asked about the telegram, what was his first answer? The first was an absolute denial that he had sent a telegram to the Minister of Public Works or any officer of the department. How does the minister square the much-vaunted credibility of Mr. Murray with the fact that, in answer to question after question covering a third of a page of evidence, he persistently and emphatically denied that he had sent the telegram, and stuck to it until the telegram was produced before his face? He denies and again denies; the telegram is produced. The next question is: What do you mean by saying in the telegram that the purchase of that wharf was 'important to Leblanc'? What was his answer? I submit to the members of this House that if Mr. Murray had meant to say in that telegram that it was 'important to Leblanc' for legitimate purpose, in the first place, he would not have denied sending the telegram, and, in the second place, he would have had in his mind at once the purpose for which the telegram was sent, and would at once have answered that it was 'important to Leblanc' from the public point of view that it should be known that the purchase was made. But what was his answer? I think it is at page 66 of the evidence, but, at any rate, his answer was: I cannot tell you what those words mean. Here he was faced with his telegram stating that the procurement of this wharf by the government, and of $5,000 by himself, was 'important' to the Liberal candidate, yet he tells the hon. member (Mr. Crocket), in answer to his question, that he has no reason to give for and no meaning to attach to the words 'important to Leblanc.' How does the minister square this with his theory? It is absolutely impossible. And it is just as impossible for him to square the reputation and honour of his own department, and of the head of that department, with the sending of that telegram by Mr. Murray. I make the assertion that, if that telegram stood alone surrounded by the explanation given of it by Mr. Murray, it would be conclusive proof of every assertion made by the hon. member for York. And the Minister of Public Works, in his laboured defence of his position, deigned to take some three or four minutes to refer to that telegram. Sir, if that telegram had not been sent, I venture to say he would have had more courage in addressing the House this afternoon. That telegram cannot be concealed, the signature to it can never be denied, and the existence of that telegram marks the exact position in which the minister stands in relation to this whole transaction.

Now, what is the next thing that occurs? Mr. Murray procures the $5,000. He got that money, I think, between the 12th and 15th of October, 1908—at any rate, in the first half of that month. He gets the cheque cashed, and he is careful to cash it in $5 and $10 notes. Now, why did he cash it in $5 and $10 notes? Is that the usual way in which $5,000 cheques are cashed? But, in the first place: would a gentleman of the extensive business, that of Mr. Murray—so extensive that he professed he could not remember the transaction—be likely to cash a $5,000 cheque at all? The minister knows that that is absolute nonsense; that it is not the habit of business men in this country or any other country. A gentleman of extensive business, part owner of a railway, would not cash in $5 and $10 notes, or any other notes, a cheque for $5,000. He would deposit that cheque with his banker, and, if he had debts to pay, he would cheque the money out like a business man. Why did not Mr. Murray do that? Because the cheques would tell the whole tale of the transaction. But the Minister of Public Works asks, why did not he deny that he got the cash in $5 and $10 bills?—nobody was there to make known the facts. But Mr. Murray knew it would be marked on the back of the cheque, and there would be no possibility of denying it. But, to go on: What did he do with this $5,000? Took it home and gave it to his wife. Is it usual for a business man of the province of New Brunswick, receiving a cheque for $5,000, to draw the cash in $5 and $10 notes and take the money home and give it to his wife? Especially, is that usual just about fifteen days before a general election? The man who does it is one of the campaign managers of the Liberal party in Kent county, New Brunswick. But the mystery does not end there, and to call it a mystery would be a euphenism. He pays out $5,000, and he cannot tell any of the persons to whom he paid it except to another campaign manager of the Liberal party, and he does not know what on earth he paid him. Now, Mr. Speaker, have you, in the course of your business or public career, ever seen a transaction like that? Is there a precedent for anything of that sort in the history of honest dealing in this country? $2,000, he wont deny it was that, which he paid to Geo. W. Robertson, who saw the minister in the matter, and who later on accompanied Mr. Murray to Ottawa to see the minister in St. John, and who was a partner with him in managing the Liberal party in the county of Kent, paid him $2,000 in cash in payment of a debt, but he cannot tell what the debt was for or how much the debt was. But it does not end there. He knows nothing about all the rest of the debts which he paid with the other $3,000. But strange to say the only debt that up to that time had come to light as touching Mr. Murray, is the debt that he did not pay at all. He owed Mr. O'Leary a large sum of money, but he did not see fit to turn in any of this money to Mr. O'Leary. Perhaps the explanation is that Mr. O'Leary was not a joint manager of the Liberal party campaign fund in Kent.

Now, what is the next thing? The next thing that occurs after this deed is registered, is the public scandal, it becomes a matter of notoriety, it passes from mouth to mouth, that the old heap of sawdust has been purchased by the Dominion government shortly before the election for the colossal sum of $5,000. That comes to light just after the general election. A scandal ensues, as the minister practically admits, and that scandal proves that Mr. Carters judgment was sound when he decided that this deed should not be registered until after the general election was safely passed. The scandal ensues, the Minister of Public Works hears of it from the member for Kent, New Brunswick (Mr. Leblanc), a gentleman of parts, and so far as we know, a gentleman of honour. The member for Kent, who, strange to say, knew nothing about this transaction, who had never represented to the Minister of Public Works that there was any earthly use for this heap of sawdust, goes to the Minister of Public Works and complains that it is a scandal to the honest community that the government should pay $5,000 for a wharf like that. Then the Minister of Public Works gets busy and he begins to write letters. He writes a letter to Mr. Stead and a letter to Mr. O'Leary, and in those letters he betrays those same symptoms of injured innocence that he manifested to the House this afternoon. And he proclaimed it as a great credit to himself that he wrote to Mr. O'Leary after the election was over and after the facts about this transaction had been disclosed. A great credit to him when the notoriety of the scandal was rampant throughout Canada, and when nothing but this was possible for him to do in order to cover up the evidence of the job that has been committed. Now, Sir, the minister writes to Mr. O'Leary; Mr. O'Leary replies, just as one would expect him to reply. The minister writes to Mr. Stead, and here is something that is certainly worthy of attention; the ingenuity with which the Minister of Public Works met this was something that should go down as of scientific importance, if for no other cause. Now, Mr. Stead was in the witness box in December, and he swore that he did not see the Minister of Public Works about this transaction from the time of his report on the 10th June, 1908, until the minister wrote him a letter on the 13th January, 1909. Now, the minister's letter was meant to convey the impression to those who read it that he had very recently been informed that Mr. Murray had purchased this wharf for a small sum of money, and had within a few days turned it over to the government for $5,000; he meant to convey the impression to Mr. Stead that he had only just been informed of this, and was innocently waiting for information. No other meaning could be taken out of that letter of the 13th of January; the letter is in the 'Hansard,' and I need not quote it again. Do you believe, Mr. Speaker, that these were the facts, that the minister had just been informed of it, and that he was for the first time apprising Mr. Stead of the position? The minister tried to convey the impression to the Public Accounts Committee that those were the facts. But those were not the facts. Worse than that, the minister actually endeavoured before the Public Accounts Committee to put into the mouth of Mr. Stead a statement which was not a fact, and which it is impossible to believe the minister did not know was not a fact. The minister himself was the gentleman with whom Mr. Stead consulted on the 26th December about this very transaction, 20 days before he wrote the letter. He meant to put into Mr. Stead's mouth that he had never seen the minister about the transaction at all between the 10th June and the 13th January, and Mr. Stead, after the words were put into his mouth, positively swore that he had never seen him about it. But when Mr. Stead was brought before the committee, and when he was compelled to produce his diary, he was compelled to admit that he had seen the minister about it, and had actually discussed this transaction with him on the 26th December. That is something the minister did not bring to the attention of the House. Not only that, but the minister told him he had better get out and produce some evidence, discover some facts, in order if possible to support the transaction. That is what took place on the 26th December, so far as the evidence shows. The evidence does not show that anything more was said; but it does show that the matter was discussed between these two gentlemen, and Mr. Stead also stated that the minister told him he would write him a letter about it, and that Mr. Stead expected the very letter that he received on the 13th January, 1909. And how does the minister square that with the contents of the letter itself; and why did the minister not frankly state that he had discussed this matter with him on the 26th December, if the minister was as innocent of the whole transaction as he would have this House believe?

Now, Mr. Speaker, put all these circumstances together, and what is the only conclusion? That is for the members of this House to decide. It is what the minister has not answered, it is what no hon. member on the other side of the House has attempted to answer. What is the significance of the chain of circumstances—a chain of circumstances on half the extent of which more than one man in this country has been hanged? The hon. member for Carleton and the minister himself tried to wipe out the shame of this transaction by bolstering up the value of this wharf. Whether this wharf is worth $1 or $5,000,000 is of very little consequence in so far as the guilt of the minister and the shame of his department are concerned. If this wharf is worth $10,000,000 to-day, what does it signify and how does that affect the direct and plain responsibility of the minister for the whole fraud connected with this transaction? How does that impair the chain of circumstances that all along show the cognizance of the department of the deliberate attempt that has been made to filch out of the treasury of this country money for the carrying on of elections in the province of New Brunswick? If that wharf was sold at $700 and then, a few days after, sold for $5,000 I venture to say that to the unprejudiced electors of this country there will be no explanation for it except the explanation that I hope this House will accept.

On the matter of valuation I do not propose to say very much. On the question of valuation, in order, if possible, to divert public attention from the enormity of the crime, they dwelt long. Valuation! In every trial or legal procedure in this country at which questions come up that involve expert testimony, expert testimony and information can be procured. If it were a matter of valuation you could procure valuations for any purpose whatsoever and every lawyer in this House knows it. But, Sir, the fact that stares the people of this country in the face is that a wharf that had laid idle for fifteen or twenty years, worthless and unused, in a village of 700 people, constantly declining, in numbers, is sold for $500 in 1905 to one Frank Ingersoll, who pays $50 down, then rues his bargain and forfeits his $50 because he believes that the wharf is not worth the other $450. The minister had it in his power, if he disbelieves Mr. O'Leary in that regard, to call Frank Ingersoll, but he did not do it. The wharf remains from that time on until May, 1908, when Mr. Thomas Murray suddenly buys it after visiting the Minister of Public Works, for $700, and in the course of eight days has virtually completed a transaction by which he sells it to the government for $5,000. The sale of that wharf for $700 on the 4th of May, if it were worth what the minister and his friends claim, is only accounted for by one hypothesis, and that is the absolute insanity of Mr. O'Leary. Nobody says for a moment that Mr. O'Leary is a dupe. He was not away down in the southern states, or in South America, or in India, he was living right there on the ground, the largest property owner in the town, admitted by every person to be shrewd, capable business man. He sells that wharf for $700 on the 4th of May and the government are actually forced to make this country believe, if possible, in support of their position, that when he sold it is was actually worth from $5,000 to $15,000. That is what the government are faced with. But, that is not all. Who else has given evidence as to the value of this property? I submit to the minister and to you, Mr. Speaker, that the assessor of Richibucto is a man who ought to know what this property is worth. It is on record that the assessor of Richibucto, after Mr. O'Leary had sold the wharf, refused Mr. O'Leary's request to reduce the assessment by reason of the wharf being sold and gave as his reason that the wharf was of no value whatever, and that consequently its alienation did not detract from the value of the whole property. If the minister disbelieves Mr. O'Leary in that regard, why did he not call the assessor? The minister did not call the assessor, and he did not call Ingersoll; he is obliged to call those who have intimate connection with his own department and in whom the obligation to be on good terms with the department heavily rests. The assessor is therefore on record. But what more is on record? What is the criterion of the value of property anywhere? It is, first, what shrewd business men will buy it for; it is, secondly, what other property sells for in the neighbourhood, and I submit to this House and the minister that every record of sales in Richibucto absolutely gives the lie to the position of the Minister of Public Works. Case after case was put on record by the hon. member for York. I do not need to go over them again, but we have it on record that this wharf for which the government paid $5,000 was sold for from seven to twenty times what it was actually worth. Against this the minister can call till Doomsday those who have contracts from the government, those who are making money out of his department to give evidence, but the people of the country have too much common sense to listen to any evidence of that sort after the evidence of actual facts.

When is the time coming in this country, when is the time coming in this House, when hon. gentlemen opposite will venture to throw off the garments of party and vote what they actually believe to be correct and true with respect to a resolution before the House. When is the time coming when we can rely on hon. members of this House to vote against transactions that are exposed as this one has been in the light of day and whose true character must be admitted by every member of this House? If the minister says: Make a charge—for what purpose make a charge? In order that there may be an investigation? I tell him that this has already been investigated and that the minister has been there to defend himself. He was there throughout the whole inquiry. What more does he want in the way of investigation? The evidence is there. Now, I aver that while this class of transaction does not stand alone, this is one of the worst that has ever been brought to light against this government. It is true that this is only a breath from that atmosphere of political depravity that envelopes this government and supplies the only nourishment upon which it can subsist but this debate is surely not without a purpose, and I hope it will have this result that the minister will never again proclaim in this House or on the hustings that he carried the province of New Brunswick and thereby vindicated his own character and the administration of the department over which he presides.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been so fully debated that I do not intend to occupy the time of the House for more than a few moments. The amount involved is not a large one, but the question at issue is not without importance, because I think we may learn from the methods disclosed in this transaction some of those which perhaps are applied to transactions of greater amount. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works did not seem to be so much at ease as usual when he was undertaking to defend this transaction this afternoon, and I do not wonder at that. He made some rather curious suggestions in the course of his speech. For example, he argued strenuously—and I am inclined to think that we ought to accept his word—that if any telegram with regard to campaign funds had been sent by Mr. Murray, it would have been sent to him and not to Mr. Valiquette. My hon. friend was ready to give his assurance to the House in that regard, and I am inclined to think that, according to the well understood usages of parliament, my hon. friend from York and my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie should have accepted this statement.

I do not propose to quote any evidence, but to consider certain facts seriously disputed. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has based his defence, if you can call it a defence, upon certain theories as to the value of this property derived from the evidence of certain witnesses given before the Committee on Public Accounts. I prefer to take events and transactions when there was no controversy at all about the value of this property, and when men acted upon what they believed to be its value. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie has put in a very few words what I desire to say in that regard. Here was a property purchased for $400 in 1902, sold for $500 in 1905, just three years before this transaction, sold to a man who put up $50 and preferred to lose that sum rather than carry out his bargain. The owner of the property, Mr. O'Leary, according to the judgment of the Minister of Public Works, and according to the judgment of the hon. member for Carleton, is as shrewd and capable a business man as is to be found in the province of New Brunswick. That man, after having had this property on his hands for years, after having paid $400 for it and having vainly tried to sell it for $500, sold it in the month of May, 1908, for $700, and thought that in doing so he made a very good bargain. In addition to that, when he went to the assessor of the town afterwards, and endeavoured to get the taxes on his property reduced by reason of the fact that he had parted with this property, he was not able to get one cent taken off his taxation, for the reason that the assessors considered the property of so trifling a value that they could not conscientiously reduce the value of his remaining property on the municipal records. Is there any dispute about these statements?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? In the province of New Brunswick real estate and personal property are assessed at exactly the same ratio, and the personal property that Mr. O'Leary got in the shape of money would take the place of his real estate, so that he would not be entitled to any reduction

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will any hon. gentleman in this House be good enough to tell me what answer I ought to give to the hon. gentleman's 'question'? Let us go on a little further. There had been some negotiations between Mr. Murray, the purchaser of this property, and Mr. O'Leary, the owner of the property, previous to the occasion on which this property was actually purchased. There may be some dispute between these two gentlemen as to whether or not in the first instance there was a negotation as to a purchase of the whole property. I have listened very attentively to this debate. I have endeavoured by examining the evidence itself as the various speakers went along, to follow up this matter, so that I could come to a correct conclusion about it; and so far as the various controversies are concerned that have arisen between Mr. Murray and Mr. O'Leary with respect to matters of fact, I venture to think that any hon. gentleman in this House who gives an intelligent consideration to that evidence, cannot fail to accept the statements of Mr. O'Leary and reject those of Mr. Murray. If my hon. friend from Carleton should have evidence of that kind presented to him when he comes to accept one of those judgeships which have been alluded to this afternoon, I have sufficient confidence in his judicial fairness to believe that without one single moment of hesitation he would accept the statement of Mr. O'Leary and reject that of Mr. Murray. I say further than that, that if my hon. friend from Carleton, sitting as a judge upon the bench, had evidence of this kind presented to him upon the motion of my hon. friend from York, he would not stop to reserve judgment, but would give judgment on the spot in favour of my hon. friend from York upon the evidence adduced. I am glad to see that my hon. friend from Carleton smiles assent to that.

Mr. CARVELL. Almost any man would smile at a statement like that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not see why my hon. friend should smile at the idea of his possessing judicial fairness. Let us look a little further into this matter. According to the testimony of Mr. Murray, the only purchase spoken of in the first instance was the purchase of a right to place a sewer through this property. It is established that Mr. Murray went to Ottawa afterwards. It is established again, although the evidence was extracted with great difficulty, that he saw the Minister of Public Works. Is Mr. Murray so much in the habit of coming to Ottawa and visiting the Minister of Public Works that he cannot remember what took place or what induced him to come on any particular occasion? Will any hon. gentleman have the hardihood to rise in his place and say that he can credit the testimony of a man who came to Ottawa on an occasion of that kind, saw the Minister of Public Works, and when interrogated on the witness stand, was absolutely unable to give any explanation of his visit except the one that has been suggested by my hon. friend from York? Well, he went back to New Brunswick, and what occurred then? He wanted to purchase this property outright. There is no dispute about that; he admits it, and O'Leary stated it. He had suddenly, for some reason, acquired the idea that it would be greatly to his advantage to become possessed of this property as its owner.

He did become possessed of this property for the sum of $700. Mr. O'Leary was not only willing but absolutely delighted to get rid of the property at that price. Now, Mr. O'Leary had held this property for a number of years, he had carried on business in that town for a number of years, and according to all the evidence given he is a shrewd business man. But in parting with this property for $700, Mr. O'Leary must have been absolutely bereft of his reason if the property were worth anything like $5,000. Then, some further things happened which are not without significance. There had been a proposal in the previous March, that a certain municipal wharf should be acquired by the government and a report had been made favouring the acquisition of that wharf. The resident engineer of the Department of Public Works was sent to make and he did make a new report, and changing his view of the situation for some reason which he did not very satisfactorily explain, he arrived at the conclusion that it would be desirable to purchase this property and he advised the purchase of it for $5,000. If his report is to be trusted he regarded that as a very reasonable price indeed. Now, in the course of his examination, not at first but during his subsequent examination he was compelled to admit that at the time he signed that report he knew that that property had been conveyed by Mr. O'Leary, by means of a deed of conveyance which expressed upon its face that the purchase price of this property was not more than the sum of $1,000; and this purchase had taken place barely one month before the time he reported that $5,000 would be a fair and reasonable price for that property.

An hon. MEMBER. Only sixteen days before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Sixteen days. I did not know it was so close as that; I was certainly not exaggerating the peculiar feature of the situation in that regard. Now, I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works whether he would have put through that purchase if he had known that that property had sold for $700 in the previous May. The Minister of Public Works did not give us any explanation in that regard. He did write a letter on the 13th of January, 1909, and I am bound to say that that letter has fully served the purpose for which it seems to have been written—it has been quoted in this House. That letter expresses the disapprobation of the Minister of Public Works of the course this engineer pursued in not reporting that that property had been sold for not more than $1,000 just sixteen days before he made his report. To show how deep was the disapprobation of the Minister of Public Works of this action of his engineer, I am informed that he not only gave him the statutory increase of $100 in his salary, but he gave him a special bonus increase to the extent of $200 besides. I venture to say that having been taught a lesson, such as that, this engineer will never sin in the same way again. I do not know of more condign punishment that can be visited upon a man for negligence of that kind than to give him the usual statutory increase and give him a special increase of $200 besides. Still, matters did not proceed rapidly enough, and later, on the 18th of September, Mr. Murray sent a telegram to Mr. Valliquette, whom he designated as chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, and Mr. Valliquette was entreated by the terms of that telegram to hasten this transaction for the reason that it would be very important to my hon. friend (Mr. Leblanc) who is the sitting member for the county of Kent. I do not know whether my hon. friend from Kent agrees that this transaction was important to him; I have rather understood that he dissents from the view of Mr. Murray. At all events the telegram was so effective that the Minister of Public Works, on the 24th of September, made a report to council, an order in council was passed, the transaction went through and the money was paid to Mr. Murray about the 10th of October. Mr. Murray describes himself as a man of large business transactions. He is part owner of a railway and his transactions with Mr. Robertson and other gentlemen are so extensive, and they have become so confused in his mind that he is unable to recollect the details of a single transaction. And in order that there may be absolutely no question in regard to this he received the whole $5,000 in $5 and $10 bills. I want hon. gentlemen to realize what this amount of bills would mean. Assuming that the sum of money was equally divided between $5 bills and $10 bills, Mr. Murray went home with no less than 750 bank notes in his pocket, and he handed them over to his wife. Then, he proceeded to deal with that money according to his usual business methods, and in the first place he paid to Mr. Robertson, the gentleman who had accompanied him on his visit to Ottawa, the sum of $2,000 in partial payment, or in entire payment, or in over-payment, or in some kind of payment, of a debt, the nature of which or the amount of which he is absolutely unable to describe. He had taken the precaution in the first instance to carry home the 750 bank bills and after that he paid the $2,000 out. Is there any hon. gentlemen in this House so simple minded as to place credence in a story of that kind. Is it not taxing our credulity a little too much to ask us to believe that this was an ordinary plain business transaction as the Minister of Public Works would have us believe. Why, the story is absolutely incredible upon its face. Sir, this is an absolutely undefended case. I will not take up the time of the House further than to say that every credit is to be given to my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) for exposing this transaction. ,I for my part congradulate him upon his action in this case. I may say that when he brought this resolution and submitted it to me before presenting it to the House, I said to him: its terms are pretty strong; can you make them good; do not go any further than that which you are able to maintain by reference to the evidence upon the floor of parliament. And my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) said to me: I can make it good. And Sir, at this moment I have only one criticism of his resolution and that is that I do not think he made it strong enough.

House divided on the amendment (Mr. Crocket).

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

For the development of the live stock industry, $52,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Give us some explanation about that.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). By way of explanation, I have to say that we have been continuing the same work as was done in years past in regard to this branch. It has been under the guidance of Dr. Rutherford, who is not only director veterinary general, but also live stock commissioner. He has as assistant, Mr. Spencer, who is in more immediate charge of this work. The work consists in aiding the development of the live stock interests of the country by the encouragement of local live stock associations, and the distribution of information among those and among men interested in the live stock work. In this connection we have been supplying judges to fairs or exhibitions, and assisting those exhibitions by supplying speakers to address them, and give illustrations and information. We have also a staff of men who have been attending institutes where live stock interests are being discussed. We have also sent out a great number of bulletins. It was under this branch that what is known as the sheep bulletin was sent out last year, and just recently a bulletin, or report of the Swine Commission was sent out. We have also undertaken work in connection with the breeders of pure bred cattle. The breeders of pure bred cattle, dairy cattle especially, have asked that steps should be taken to make what is called an advance registry of dairy cows, and for this purpose they wish to have authoritative tests. We have appointed inspectors to go about and supervise these tests, and we give the necessary service.

Mr. BLAIN. Who are the commissioners?

Mr. FISHER. The first inspectors are Mr. Drummond, Mr. Clements, Mr. Mason, and Mr. McNish. There are four of them now. When the work first commenced a few years ago, it was thought that one man would be able to attend to it, but there has been such a demand that as time went on we have had to add to the number, until now there are four engaged, and occasionally we have to employ temporary men for outlying parts which these four inspectors could not conveniently, or economically reach. This work has been demanded by the breeders of pure bred cattle, especially, and it is one which I think of importance for the improvement of these breeds. It has met with great favour among the people interested, and also among those who wish to buy sires for breeding stock and improving their own herds. We have also made some money grants to certain fairs in the west and in the east. The grant to the Maritime Stock Breeders' exhibition at Amherst, and to some fairs in the western provinces, has come out of this grant. We have been doing a little work in the direction of the developing of the sheep industry. We have tried to give instruction and information in regard to that. In that connection, we have been arranging and managing the sales of sheep by auction in different parts of the country. This is a general resumé of the position, but I shall be glad to answer any question.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. To what fairs in the west is assistance given through this vote?

Mr. FISHER. The Brandon winter fair, the Regina fair and the Calgary fair.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Will the minister explain further with regard to the dairy herds?

Mr. FISHER. We have inspectors who supervise owners' tests of individual cows which are entitled, if successful to entry in what is called the advanced register. A thoroughbred cow, for instance, a Holstein, is registered with other pedigreed stock entered in the registry which the Holstein breeders manage. But, besides this, an animal may be tested for a year. This test is supervised by the officials of the department so as to give authority and credence to the work, which, if done by the owner without supervision or correction, might be looked upon as suspicious. The milk is weighed and tested by the Babcock test, and if the record shows that the animal produces up to a certain quantity, she is entered in the advanced registry with the amount of this her production in a year opposite her name.

Mr. SEXSMITH. It is not necessary that she should be a thoroughbred?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we make these tests only of thoroughbred animals.

Mr. SEXSMITH. When does the minister expect to put in a Holstein herd in the experimental farm?

Mr. FISHER. I hope, this coming year.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I am glad to know that the minister is taking that up. Last year, I asked why he did not have Holsteins there, and I think his answer was that they had all they had room to house or something of that kind. It seems to me a very mild excuse, if I may say so. I have no particular fancy for one breed, but I think that, in the interests of the dairy industry, all leading dairy types should be found at the experimental farm. I agree with the hon. minister in what he said the other day that it would not be wise for the department to make a distinction between one breed and another. There are different types of dairy cattle, and every man thinks that the one he fancies is the best. The Holstein is considered one of the best dairy types in America today, and when those who favour that type find they cannot get any information from the experimental farm based on actual experiment wtih that type, they are apt to think it a great mistake. I am glad to hear that the minister is going to put in a Holstein herd.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. At what points are these inspectors to which the minister has referred stationed, and what are their salaries? I suppose this item covers their salaries?

Mr. FISHER. Two of these gentlemen are stationed at Ottawa, and their salaries are paid out of civil government, I think they receive one $1,350 and the other $1,300. The other two have their headquarters outside of Ottawa, and one receives $1,050, and the other $1,000.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. The minister spoke of sheep in connection with this item. Will he be good enough to explain further.

Mr. FISHER. We instituted some sales of sheep, bringing the sheep, most of them, from the province of Ontario, which is the great sheep breeding province of the Dominion. The result is to distribute sheep in different parts of the country, including portions of Ontario where comparatively few sheep were raised. I think none have been sent to the west, except that there was one sale in British Columbia. Some were sent to the maritime provinces, and some to Quebec. I may say to the hon. member (Mr. W. H. Sharpe) who comes from Manitoba, that we have just arranged to put a small flock of sheep on the Brandon farm. A portion of that farm, we think, is suitable for sheep husbandry, and we hope this summer to get in a flock of sheep and show what can be done on the portion of a farm set apart for that purpose. Of course, that will not come under this item, but under experimental farms. The sheep bulletin issued a year ago, and which has found such wide favour in the country, was issued by this department.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Do I understand that the department collects sheep, takes them to different parts of the Dominion and makes sales?

Mr. FISHER. We make arrangements, advertise and manage the sales, and pay expenses. We do not provide the animals, we ask the breeders of sheep to do that.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Do you conduct these sales in western Canada?

Mr. FISHER. Where there is a demand. We go in and try to create a demand, for, of course, the breeders will not send the sheep unless there is a chance to sell them. We prepare the ground in the neighbourhood beforehand, and arrange for the sale, and then invite the breeders to send their sheep.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not aware that there was a bulletin with special reference to sheep.

Mr. FISHER. It was sent to every member of the House last year.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was absent from home, or there was some other reason which prevented me from seeing it. Is it published annually?

Mr. FISHER. No, it was of the same general character as the one the hon. member saw this session the report of the swine commission. It was a very fine book and much the same in style as a book as the one on swine husbandry.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it distributed only to members?

Mr. FISHER. No, it is sent all over the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. How does the minister ascertain who the sheep breeders are in any county?

Mr. FISHER. Our officers know them pretty well, they know the men who are exhibiting sheep. We have constant questions from sheep breeders all over the country, and there are sheep breeders' associations in most of the provinces, with which we are in constant touch, and we have lists of practically all the sheep breeders. The members of the House were asked, many of them, to give us the names of the sheep breeders in their respective counties. We still have many of those bulletins on hand, and can supply those who have not been supplied. But we do not send them to all the farmers, because a good many farmers do not breed sheep.

Mr. HENDERSON. In a county such as mine, I daresay there are 40 or 50 men who are actively engaged in sheep breeding. I suppose the minister prefers to send them out from the department than through the members.

Mr. FISHER. We would be willing to send them to the members. But if there are 40 or 50 men in the hon. gentleman's county who are interested in sheep, I am satisfied they have all got the bulletin already. If there are any sheep breeders in his county who have not received it, and if he will send us their names, we will supply them at once.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. How many hundreds of them does each member get?

Mr. FISHER. I think about 30,000 were printed, and we have sent out something over 20,000; so if anybody will send us a list of men to whom these bulletins would be useful, we can meet the demands. I do not want hon. members to send us any names except those who are breeding sheep, and these will be sure to get them.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. We all like to get a little credit for what we do for our constituents, but when these books are sent out through the department under the frank of the Minister of Agriculture, he gets all the credit and we get none.

Mr. FISHER. We are just doing our duty.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. But we don't get anything out of it at all. In connection with this matter, I might mention those who are engaged in the hog industry to whom the department also sends books. Both these are splendid books. There are many men in my constituency who would like to get them, and I would like to be able to send them the books, and send them through my own name.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly. The difficulty is that we are already sending them out by hundreds to all the men whose names we know throughout the country, and if hon. members were also to undertake to send out large numbers, without doubt a great many men would get two copies, and thus the books would be wasted. They are rather expensive books, they cost about 30 cents a piece, and we cannot afford to waste them. It has been the custom in the Agriculture Committee to supply every member in the House with a certain number of the evidence taken before that committee, and I have been told over and over again that there were stacks of these books in this building which have never been distributed. I am afraid that if I were to send to every member a quantity of these publications, the result would be the same.

Mr. HENDERSON. I share a good deal the feeling of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe). For a number of years I have taken a good deal of interest in sheep raising. I am not boasting about it, but I make it a practice to give a prize for a certain kind of sheep at each township fair in my county. I visit these fairs as I give the prize, and I go amongst the sheep men and find out who have the best sheep. In that way I come in contact with the sheep breeders and know pretty well who they are in that county, not only men who raise Leicesters, but those who raise Shropshires and Dorsets. But whilst I am doing that, I am not doing it to give the Hon. Mr. Fisher all the credit for furnishing this information. I think the minister should help the men who do that sort of thing, and allow us to share a little in the glory. I do not know what names the minister has on his list. I might go to the trouble of writing out a list of 40 or 50 names, and, perhaps, he has those names already. But if the minister will send me a list of the names of the sheep men he has on his list, I will go over it, and I think I can tell him pretty accurately whether he is supplying all those who take an interest in sheep breeding in the county of Halton.

Mr. FISHER. I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then will he follow that up by supplying those who are short? Now, I know these men would read the books with a great deal more interest if they saw my name on it.

Mr. MILLER. Then they would feel sheepish if they didn't vote for you.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not say that all the sheep men vote for me, I know they do not. But that makes no difference so far as the distribution of that book is concerned. Some of the men who got my $5, or whatever it may be, are my friends, and some are not my political friends; it is the man who has the best sheep that gets the prize. I remember one instance where serious fault was found because I gave a prize in the county year after year for the best Cotswold yearling ram, and it was said that I ought to vary the prize and give it to something else. I do not know whether the minister would agree with me, but I think that is the proper way of giving a prize to help an industry. Men know at the beginning of the year that there is going to be a certain prize for a certain class of sheep, and it is for them to go to work and bring their sheep up to the point that they can secure the prize. I think it creates a far healthier competition by continuing the same thing year after year. When I go on the show grounds, say at Oakville, in the township of Trafalgar, I am told that this is Billy Paterson's prize—not the Hon. William, but another of the same name. He has taken the prize year after year. I say: If you bring a better sheep than Billy Paterson you will get the prize, and last year somebody else did. The man who won it did not live in the county of Halton. Some person from the constituency of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) carried away the prize. They, unfortunately, did not limit it to the county of Halton, and it went into the county of Peel, contrary to my wish, because when I gave the prize I desired to limit it to my own county, because I thought it would create a good healthy competition in the county. If the minister would supply me with the names he has of the sheep breeders, I would be glad to revise it and tell him whether he has these men on his list or not.

Mr. FISHER. I would be very glad to do that.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I think there is a great deal in what the minister says about the supplies given to each member. I know that in our own room there are a great many supplies that are not sent out. But, when we supply the minister with lists of names of people in our own counties we should at least get the credit for sending these out, and I think the minister should make some arrangements along that line.

Mr. FISHER. I will be very glad to try and make some such arrangement. If anybody is particularly interested in the sheep bulletin and wishes to send it to a certain number of people I think we should let them have it, but I do not want to have them wasted.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Suppose I send you in twenty-five or thirty names from my constituency; you have your list and you might mark off the names of those to whom it has been sent, and then send the bulletin to the balance with my compliments.

Mr. FISHER. I will be glad to do that. If my hon. friend sends in a list I will compare it with ours and send the bulletin to those who have not received it.

Mr. MILLER. I have followed this plan. I have sent in a list, retaining a copy of it, and then written a short letter to each of the parties whose names are on the list stating that I have asked the department to send to their address a copy of the bulletin and that I hope they will receive it. In that way they think a great deal more of it than if you simply send the book without a letter.

Mr. SEXSMITH. You are conducting some experiments on the farm with sheep at the present time, are you not?

Mr. FISHER. We have a small flock of sheep on the farm.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Do you issue pamphlets showing the expense?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, it is all in the farm report.

Health of animals—$250,000.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. This is a large amount.

Mr. FISHER. Yes; the size of it is due to dealing with glanders and hog cholera.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. How much was spent last year?

Mr. FISHER. $85,000 was paid in compensation last year for horses affected with glanders and for hogs slaughtered because of hog cholera.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. How much of the total vote of $250,000 was spent in connection with the health of animals?

Mr. FISHER. It was all spent. That covers the veterinary staff and quarantine work on the sea coasts and the American frontier as well as internal work.

Mr. RUSSELL. Did that cover the whole of Canada, or does the Ontario government pay any compensation for animals slaughtered?

Mr. FISHER. I think I am safe in saying that no provincial government pays any compensation.

Mr. SEXSMITH. How many veterinary surgeons have you?

Mr. FISHER. 108.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Are they under salary or are they just paid for their services?

Mr. FISHER. Practically all under salary. We found years ago that it did not work at all to have men in private practice and at the same time working for the government. They were so mixed up with their clients in their private practice that they could not do justice to government work, and we had to put them on permanent salaries. There are some men allowed to take fees to give certain certificates that are required for export to the United States, but the amount which they get in that way is very small.

Mr. SEXSMITH. What is the amount of salary?

Mr. FISHER. $1,000 to $1,200. I think the highest salary in the office here is $2,000.

Mr. S. SHARPE. What territory do they cover?

Mr. FISHER. They go wherever we order them. We keep certain men in one district because otherwise their travelling expense would be too great. We sometimes change them about.

Mr. S. SHARPE. How many have you in Ontario?

Mr. FISHER. About ten. Some of these are engaged on the frontier and some in the interior. A great deal of the work in Ontario is done by the headquarters staff.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. How many in Manitoba?

Mr. FISHER. Six.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Are they all employed in the city of Winnipeg?

Mr. FISHER. Three in the city and three on the boundary. Some of the boundary work is done in the city.

Mr. RUSSELL. How many of these officers are employed on the headquarters staff here in Ottawa.

Mr. FISHER. Not counting office staff, about six.

Mr. RUSSELL. I mean in the laboratory?

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Rutherford and three others in the office who do consulting work here and go out as they are required through the country. Then there are two in the bacteriological laboratory at the farm, making six altogether. Doctor Rutherford and three others are doing consulting work and going out as they are required, and there are two in the laboratory, making six.

Mr. RUSSELL. Have they much work to do?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. You could not take up that other branch I spoke of the other night?

Mr. FISHER. That is worth considering.

Mr. RUSSELL. A duly qualified veterinary surgeon would be the best for that work?

Mr. FISHER. I think so; I am informed there are specimens of diseased chickens constantly sent into the laboratory, and they are always examined and information given.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What are the names of the three men employed on the boundary in Manitoba?

Mr. FISHER. Messrs. McKenzie, Stephenson and Thompson, and there is also a Mr. Bonnet, who is also employed by us, but paid by fees.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. $250,000 to be spent on the health of animals is a large amount. Dr. Rutherford is here to-night, and he will be able to give us better information on this subject than we had last year. In 1905, the last year the Roblin government had charge of the health of animals in Manitoba, it only cost $3,600 for that service, but last year the same service cost the Dominion government $16,000 in Manitoba. Why this heavy expenditure?

Mr. FISHER. In the first place the Roblin government had no duty to perform on the frontier. That is our work in Manitoba as elsewhere. I do not know what work the Manitoba government was doing, and I cannot compare the details of the cost, but I do know that to-day we are working our own men in Manitoba very severely indeed. There was about $3,500 expended in Manitoba on the boundary, and $7,000 in addition to that.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. $16,000 was expended the year before last; you will remember it was the year of the election.

Mr. FISHER. Does my hon. friend include claims for compensation?

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. No, that cost $15,000 in addition.

Mr. EDWARDS. If a diseased animal is slaughtered by order of the department on a report from one of the departmental veterinary inspectors the owner is reimbursed for the loss of the animal. But, the government department will not take the diagnosis of a duly qualified veterinary surgeon who is not in the service of the department. If such a practitioner is engaged by the farmer, the government will not take his certificate that a horse is suffering from glanders, for instance, but the farmer runs the risk of having his whole stock infected while he waits for the departmental inspector, or else if he slaughters his horse he will not get any compensation. It does seem to me that that is unjust and unreasonable. I do not see why the certificate of a duly qualified veterinary surgeon should not be taken as well as that of a government official, who has just the same qualifications. Several farmers have complained to me in regard to this matter, and I think the law ought to be changed.

Mr. FISHER. On account of the spread of glanders in the country, some years ago, I asked parliament for a handsome appropriation to try and eradicate the disease, and in order to meet with any success I found it necessary to pay compensation. The hon. gentleman from North Toronto and others pointed out the danger of raids on the public treasury in such cases, and I assured the House that we would pay compensation only upon the certificate and responsibility of officers of the department. The ordinary veterinary surgeons are the employees of the owners who are asking for compensation, and other countries as well as our own have suffered in the payment of compensation for slaughtered animals by reason of that fact. It is a very simple thing for the owner of a horse to isolate the animal if he is affected with glanders, and if he telegraphs he will get a veterinary surgeon within a day or two at the outside, generally the next day. If other horses have been in close contact with the diseased animal, then, probably the whole stable of horses will have to be slaughtered, and it would be very dangerous to undertake that responsibilty on the certificate of any but an officer of the department. We do that for the safety of the community at large, and it is on that plea and that plea only, that we are entitled to pay compensation. I do not know any country in the world that pays compensation upon the certificate of a private practitioner. I think it would be unwise and unsafe and contrary to the pledge I gave to parliament when this money was placed at my disposal. I am glad to say that while in the first year we spent over $150,000, the year before last we spent only about $40,000, and in the year just past about $70,000, and I hope that in a short time we shall get the disease so thoroughly under control that it will not be a menace to the horses of the country.

Mr. EDWARDS. I presume that the reason that the hon. minister, and the hon. member for North Toronto objected to paying compensation on the certificate of regular practitioners was the danger of collusion between the veterinary surgeon and the farmer. I cannot see what is to prevent collusion between a farmer, and a veterinary surgeon who is made by the government one of their inspectors. If a farmer has a horse he wants to get rid of and the veterinary surgeon is disposed to be dishonest, I suppose he could make as good an arrangement with a man appointed by the government, as with any other veterinary surgeon. It seems to me that difficulty could be got over. If veterinary surgeons were in danger of losing their diplomas, as medical doctors are when they engage in reprehensible practices, the likelihood of any collusion between the veterinary surgeon and the farmer would be done away. I know that farmers are put to considerable inconvenience, and sometimes loss in this connection—perhaps not so much now as some years ago, because now according to the hon. minister's statement the disease is not now so prevalent as it was. While I daresay the minister is thoroughly convinced that his course is the right one, I do not think that it is.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is Dr. Little, of Boissevain, one of your officers?

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Little is not doing any work for us now, although he is entitled one of our inspectors, and I think can issue certain certificates.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. How long is it since he has been working for the government?

Mr. FISHER. About two years.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I presume Dr. Thompson was appointed in place of Dr. Little?

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Thompson was appointed at Brandon to attend the Great Northern railway at the time it entered Manitoba. Boissevain ceased to be an inspection port in consequence of the change of railway, and therefore Dr. Little ceased to work for us.

Mr. BRADBURY. Is Dr. Biscoby, of Stonewall, on the staff?

Mr. FISHER. He is on another staff, the Meat Inspection Staff, but has been on leave for some time, and is not working for us just now.

Mr. STAPLES. Who has taken the place of Dr. Molloy since he became a member of this House?

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Still, of Winnipeg, I think, is doing that work at present.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I would like to ask the minister if he has ever heard of any cases of collusion between a farmer and a veterinary surgeon on his staff?

Mr. FISHER. I have never had any case against any of the staff in that respect. In the first place, the members of the staff are not in private practice, and they are, therefore, not engaged by the owner of the animal, and have no relations with him except that of a government official. In the second place, they most generally do not belong to the immediate neighbourhood, and consequently are removed from that influence which a man living in the immediate neighbourhood, and employed by the owner would necessarily have. If it were not dishonest collusion, it would be sympathy and a desire to please the neighbour and employer. Moreover, the private practitioner would have no official responsibility, whereas the responsible official knows that he is open to attack, and that he is doing a greater wrong to be careless, or easy, than the private practitioner who is employed by the person concerned.

Mr. EDWARDS. Who is the government inspector at Kingston?

Mr. FISHER. We employ Dr. Bell on fees. He is not one of our permanent staff on salary.

Mr. EDWARDS. Have you also an inspector at Napanee?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. RUSSELL. Where do the specimens that are examined by the staff come from?

Mr. FISHER. They come from all over the country.

Mr. RUSSELL. Have you had any from the other provinces?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, from all over the country.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does some one man undertake this investigation?

Mr. FISHER. We have two bacteriological workers, Dr. Higgins and Dr. Wickware.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think that if one man were assigned to that work, he would come to know a great deal more about it than different men. How far do they go—do they just analyse the parts and make a report?

Mr. FISHER. There is a microscopic examination of the specimen, and a report is made out and sent to the Surgeon General, and it is sent from his office to the person who sends the specimen.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether that goes far enough. When they make out these reports, they do not investigate to see what caused the disease. That is what we are trying to get at. the different diseases of the chickens.

Mr. FISHER. I will send my hon. friend a statement, which he might look over, of the kind of examination that is made. It is rather technical and I would not like to undertake to describe it. The microscopical examination shows the practitioner the nature of the disease. I suppose in most cases, the practitioner would be able to tell what the disease resulted from. I am not sure that the practitioner could always tell the cause. The causes might be different, though the results were the same, but I am not technical enough to say much on that point. If my hon. friend will send me some statements with regard to the diseases, we will do our best to tell him what the causes are.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand there is no work on the diseases of poultry. There is very little information. It is rather a new departure, and from what I have been able to learn from men who are extensively engaged in the poultry industry, they need some one to go into this subject and work out the causes of the diseases. I would take it that the experts in the department might be able to examine affected parts of the poultry, but they would not be able to say what caused the disease. It would need some further experimental work or investigation to determine all these different diseases. I believe that if a man were appointed for this work, the different provincial institutions and the different breeders could furnish enough specimens to keep him employed.

Mr. FISHER. I guess so. However, it is an interesting question that has been raised and it might be worth while to set a man to this particular kind of work. I confess I was not aware of what my hon. friend says that the diseases of poultry were so obscure and that so little was known about them. I believe some other governments have been doing some work along that line and I should have supposed that the diseases of poultry were fairly well known. But I will make inquiry into that, and if we can see our way clear to make an investigation with respect to the poultry, we might do so. It is a matter of great importance to the country and might be worth while.

Mr. RUSSELL. The reason I have mentioned the matter was that the discussion seemed to be going in that direction. In the United States they have a man, Dr. Morse, who has done some good work. I believe that the Veterinary General sitting beside you will bear me out when I say that little is known of the diseases of poultry. My authority for that is Professor Graham, who has made quite a study of the matter.

Mr. SEXSMITH. I think the question raised by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Russell) is an important question, and the Minister of Agriculture would be doing a good thing if he would appoint an expert to work constantly along these lines. There is no doubt in the world that thousands of dollars worth of poultry is lost through disease, the causes of which are not known. Take for instance the raising of turkeys. I know that in many parts of the country, farmers will not try to raise them because of the diseases that occur. Perhaps when they are a couple of months old, they show signs of disease, and in many cases die. And the farmers have no means of knowing what causes their death. I think if would be a very wise thing to have a competent man to work for a year or two or for a greater length of time if necessary.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to call the minister's attention to a suggestion I will be bold enough to make. We have in Kingston as in Montreal, and in other centres, universities. Those universities have on their staffs some very able men. Take McGill University, for instance, and Queen's University, than which there is no greater or better on the continent of America. We have in those universities, pathological experts. Now, would it not be well to make use of the laboratories of those universities and the expert knowledge we have there. These men, so far as I have been able to observe, throw their whole heart into their work and would devote 25 hours of the day, if there were 25 hours in a day, to their work. I think it would be a good idea not only to make use of the universities in this regard, in the way of making tests and researches, but also for the veterinary inspectors and veterinary surgeons in the immediate vicinity of those universities to come in contact with those men, and have conversations with them on this matter. In that way you will be more likely to get results than by all the efforts of the department, no matter how sincere and how well directed they may be. It seems to me that that could be done with great advantage to the country in general.

Mr. FISHER. I may say we have done that to a certain extent. We have asked professors of universities to undertake microscopical investigations. Very often we have found that they were so busy with their own work that they could not undertake it in a reasonable time and we have had to do it ourselves. But sometimes they have assisted us. I remember Dr. Gordon Bell of Winnipeg, doing some work and we have had Dr. Adami of McGill, while Professor Todd is now doing work for us. I also remember some years ago a professor of Queens university doing work for us, I forget his name at the moment.

Mr. EDWARDS. Dr. Connell, I presume.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. You could not have had a better man.

Mr. FISHER. Of course all these gentlemen have their own work in connection with investigations and teaching in the university, and not infrequently they would be very glad to take up work of the kind mentioned if they had the time. We have two other pathologists besides the two in Ottawa, one in British Columbia, and the other in Lethbridge, Alta., investigating special diseases. So we are fairly well equipped. Still there is more to be done.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister has referred to the new regulations under which veterinary surgeons must give their whole time to the service. Can he give the date of that regulation?

Mr. FISHER. It has always been in existence applying to cases where we pay an annual salary, as is done in the case of the majority of these veterinaries. It has come more into practice since the change of the head of the branch. Dr. McEachern when head of the branch only gave a portion of his time and a good many of the men under him did the same. When Dr. Rutherford was appointed he gave his whole time to the work, and we are working that idea in.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the regulation in force now?

Mr. FISHER. Not absolutely. Some of the old appointees are still on. In Montreal we have the same officers who were managing the inspection of cattle and horses for export. They practise in Montreal privately, and receive so much a year from us. There are Dr. Baker, the second Dr. McEachern and Dr. Sugden.

Mr. STAPLES. If they engaged in practice, would they be disqualified? Would the minister dismiss them?

Mr. FISHER. I should consider it very objectionable. I would prefer to deal with each case according to circumstances. If I found a salaried man not giving his whole time to the department, I should be disposed to warn him. Where we give a salary we expect the man's whole time.

Mr. BRADBURY. And do I understand that the salaries are $1,000 and $1,200 for veterinaries in the west?

Mr. FISHER. Some do work as low as that. The highest, I think, receive $2,000.

Mr. BRADBURY. If a veterinary in the west were given only $100 a month he would have to be allowed to practice and earn extra money. Because $1,000 or $2,000 is no salary for a veterinary surgeon in the west.

Mr. FISHER. We give them enough to keep them busy.

Arts, agriculture and statistics—census and statistics, $50,000.

Mr. FISHER. Some hon. members asked me to hold this over for some information. A question was asked as to the regulations in regard to census taking I have that information.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. FISHER.

Experimental farms, $110,000

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I see that the Minister of Agriculture has an item of the same nature in the supplementary estimates. The one discussion would do on both. We do not want to sit too late to-night.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we might as well pass this.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. That is what I was going to suggest. Then we could have the discussion on the supplementaries.

Mr. FISHER. I have three items in the supplementaries. Perhaps we could take them up.

Department of Agriculture—
To provide for two clerkships in second division, subdivision A..	$ 3,200
To provide for seven clerkships in second division, subdivision B, 4 at $1,200; 1 at $1,125; 2 at $800..	7,525
Contingencies—Further amount required..	2,500
	$13,225

Mr. FISHER. There are two things in which extra assistance is required. One is the archives and the other the experimental farms. In the archives we have a mass of documents which are not catalogued and, therefore, not properly available to the public. Many are interested in these documents. For instance, lawyers are constantly coming to get information concerning cases which turn upon old documents. I have asked for further assistance in order to proceed more vigorously and rapidly with the cataloguing, so as to make these documents more available to the public.

Mr. BLAIN. Will these officers pass the examination and come under the Civil Service rules?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. In the experimental farms, I have to make some slight reorganization. Dr. Saunders has asked to be relieved of certain detail and routine work with which he has concerned himself personally, but which ought not to be imposed upon the head of such an important system. I have to throw that work on other officers, and so I ask for two assistants on that part of the work at the farms

Arts, agriculture and statistics—experimental farms—further amount required, $20,000.

Mr. FISHER. I have already explained the increase in the number of experimental farms and the need of a larger sum for their administration. I now hope to be able to establish more of them than I thought would be possible when the main estimates were prepared, and, therefore, I am asking for this supplementary vote.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the minister explain what methods he intends to pursue in the selection of these experimental stations?

Mr. FISHER. I wish to place them where they will serve a large area—to place each in a piece of country that seems to be as near a large area of adjoining country as possible. Then I wish to place each of them in a conspicuous place. And I wish to place each of them at a point easily accessible. These are the main objects.

Mr. STAPLES. How is the minister going to acquire that information? By his own observation?

Mr. FISHER. Of course, so far as the area of the country is concerned, we have a fair record of that in the various departments, and the people themselves know pretty well the places that are characteristic of a large area. This last summer I had an experienced officer going about and examining the best sites. I am constantly deluged with offers of farms, and when I receive such an offer, if it seems to me to be in a suitable locality, I send a person to examine it.

Mr. STAPLES. Has the minister had any inquiry from the Carman district in Manitoba? It is one of the best railway centres in that western country, and very suitable for an experimental farm station. There are three lines of railway, the Great Northern, the Canadian Pacific railway, the Canadian Northern, and another line is projected.

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember that we have had an application from Carman. I would like the farms to be spread over the province, not to have them in too close proximity.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I presume the new farms will be under the direction of the managers of the experimental farm we have now; if so, it would be convenient to have them situated not too far apart. Now, if you place a farm down near Boissevain, your manager could come down there and inspect it and go back the same night.

Mr. BURRELL. Has the minister arrived at a decision with regard to a farm in the interior of British Columbia?

Mr. FISHER. We still have that matter under consideration.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would suggest to the minister that east of the city of Winnipeg we have a large area of very fine land, but there has been so far no effort made by the government to direct settlers into that part of the country. It strikes me it would be a splendid thing to put one of these stations in some place east of Winnipeg, and I would urge the minister to do that.

Mr. FISHER. I have had some representations to that effect, and they will receive consideration.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. How many stations does he propose starting this year?

Mr. FISHER. I have in mind at least half a dozen new ones. I have instructed an officer to examine suitable sites in Manitoba.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Are you going to establish any more in Ontario this year?

Mr. FISHER. I hardly think so, this year. I have had representations from New Ontario, and possibly there will be one there.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is not present to-night, and I would suggest that we allow item 421 to stand, so that when it is taken up again any hon. member may discuss anything in relation to experimental farms.

Mr. FISHER. I will consent to that on condition that we take it up again not later than to-morrow, as I have to be away early next week.

Grant to Charlottetown exhibition for 1910, $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is a new vote. We have been giving $50,000 for exhibitions in each of the provinces, but we have never done that in Prince Edward Island. Some years ago when the Dominion exhibition was at Halifax they asked us to give them $10,000. This year the Dominion exhibition is in St. John, and Prince Edward Island has asked for the same consideration, and we do not think it unfair that they should have $10,000 in one year and $10,000 another year.

Quarantine—steamers to replace 'Argus' and 'Challenger'—revote, $39,000.

Mr. CROSBY. I suppose this is in regard to the boat being built for Halifax harbour? Would the minister say what position that boat is in?

Mr. FISHER. She will be completed and delivered in the course of the coming summer.

Mr. CROSBY. It seems to me strange that this boat should have to be built in Dartmouth, England, in view of the fact that we are about to build a navy in Canada. It does seem strange that we cannot construct a boat 80 feet long by 19 feet wide and 8 feet hold. Has no effort been made by the government to construct this boat in Canada? We hear a great deal about the construction of Dreadnoughts and torpedo boats and all other kinds of boats, but we have not been able to construct a small steamer for the quarantine service.

Mr. FISHER. The explanation is simple. We asked for public tenders and we received tenders from a large number of firms in Great Britain and Canada. The tender for the boat which we accepted was $22,000 odd, and the next lowest in Canada was $32,000, or over $10,000 difference, and we did not see our way to paying that extra amount of money.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. This is $39,000.

Mr. FISHER. There are two boats.

Mr. CROSBY. Where is the other vessel being built?

Mr. FISHER. We are just advertising for tenders.

Mr. FIELDING. There are a number of small votes in civil government in the Supplementary Estimates for the year 1911 which are of a purely routine character, and I would suggest that we call them and if there is any objection they may be allowed to stand.

Civil government — Department of Militia and Defence—to provide for one clerkship in second division, subdivision B, $1,200.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is all Greek to me.

Mr. FIELDING. These all come under the operation of the Civil Service Act, except the case of one lady whose name is mentioned.

Mr. CROSBY. Are they additions?

Mr. FIELDING. In some cases they are.

Department of Secretary of State—to provide for one statutory increase omitted from the main estimates, $50.

Mr. HENDERSON. How did the omission take place?

Mr. FIELDING. The various departments, in making up their statements, sometimes omit something. They are very correct in the main, but being only human, they are not absolutely perfect.

Mr. HENDERSON. This seems to be increasing the number of clerks.

Mr. FIELDING. In several instances there are increases.

Mr. HENDERSON. No decreases?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think there are any; it is a growing time.

Department of the Interior—salaries and contingencies, $12,000.

Mr. ROCHE. I would like to ask the Finance Minister if it is not the custom of the government to provide for gratuities for the benefit of the families of Civil Servants who die in the service.

Mr. FIELDING. There is an established practice, that at one time was confined within a small circle, but it is now broader, providing that an allowance equivalent to two months' salary of the deceased official is paid to the widow or family.

Mr. ROCHE. The reason I ask it is that the death occurred recently of Mr. John Flesher, who was formerly land agent in my town, but, who, during the last five or six years, had been residing in Winnipeg. He died a month ago and I do not see any provision in the estimates for a gratuity to his family.

Mr. FIELDING. It would not be necessary. There are some gratuities in connection with the Northwest Mounted Police, and the Department of Militia and Defence which are voted in accordance with the Act, but the provision for a gratuity of a two months' salary is a general provision and is to be found in the Civil Service Act. If my hon. friend will drop me a note giving the name of the official and his position, I will see that whatever is customary is extended to his family.

Office of the Auditor General—to provide for four clerkships in the third division, subdivision B, $2,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Only $2,000 for four new clerkships?

Mr. FIELDING. The new appointees will come in at small salaries. The object of this is that I have been asking the Auditor General to undertake a service which he has not hitherto performed.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all right; I was surprised at the low amount.

Mr. FIELDING. They begin at small salaries. The object is to take some of the higher men and assign them to the duty of inspecting the Minister of Finance —to see that the gold is all to be found in the place where it is supposed to be.

Mr. CROSBY. I do not believe very strongly in commencing men in any kind of responsible clerkships at a very low salary. If we require a clerk at all we should give him a salary that would be in keeping with the position he undertakes.

Mr. FIELDING. These are young men who begin at the foot of the ladder. Their duties are not very responsible.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the statutory increase?

Mr. FIELDING. $50 in each case.

Mr. CROSBY. What will their salaries be?

Mr. FIELDING. $500 and $50 per year increase.

Mr. CROSBY. What will their responsibility be?

Mr. FIELDING. They will be junior clerks.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. The Civil Service Act provides for this?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly.

Mr. CROSBY. They will not have the responsibility of handling money?

Mr. FIELDING. No; the Auditor General handles no money whatever. He simply keeps watch upon the other fellows.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say that all these clerks come under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, unless a name is specially mentioned here.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. And they are appointed by the commission?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. CROSBY. A commissioner has nothing to do with whether a clerk is required or not.

Mr. FIELDING. The department would call upon the commission to furnish the number required, and then an examination is held, and the high men get the place.

Assay Office, Vancouver, $18,000.

Mr. ARTHURS. Has the government any assay office?

Mr. FIELDING. There is one at Vancouver.

Mr. ARTHURS. Oh, yes, I know, but you should establish one in eastern Canada.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We have, as a matter of fact, two assay officers in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. ARTHURS. Yes, but they are not established to do business for the public, and they charge high fees.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. One part of this vote is to employ an extra assayer.

Mr. ARTHURS. I am not objecting to the vote, but I draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the government has no assay office in eastern Canada, and it seems to me that in the interest of mining development, and discovery, they should establish one here. The thousands of prospectors who are out every year require to have their samples assayed so that they may get a return in a few days because the only way of telling what is in the sample is to have it assayed. But the ordinary prospector cannot pay $2 for each assay, as is charged in the government office at Ottawa. One party sent me three or four samples and asked me to have them assayed here, but I was told I could not get returns for two weeks perhaps, and that the charge was $2 for each test for a mineral in the one sample. I wrote back to the gentleman who sent me the samples telling him the facts that there was no use going to such expense as that. We hear a great deal about minerals in northern Ontario and Quebec, and I do not believe there is any part of Canada in which there are so many minerals. It would be but a trifling expense to the country to establish an assay office in eastern Canada, where the assay could be done at actual cost, and be reliable. In the case of some of these private assayers the test is not reliable, and I would urge strongly upon the government to take action in the direction in which I have indicated.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The assay office in connection with the Mines Branch here does assaying for the general public, and a month or two ago I authorized the director to employ another assayer. I do not think the fees charged are very high. It must be remembered that there are a great many private assayers established throughout the country, and if the government is going to do free assaying it would simply drive these men out of business. I doubt very much if that would be fair play. We are carrying on the work of assaying primarily in the interest of the department, and every specimen collected in that connection has to undergo a very exact test. That is the work of the Department, to carry on that technical work so that our mining engineers and geologists can get up the reports properly. But aside from that we do assaying for the general public, and for that we charge fees. I do not think it would be right for us to charge less than a private assayer. If we did, we would put many of them out of business at once.

Mr. SEXSMITH. That seems to be a strange position for the minister to take, that he should charge the same fees as private assayers, no matter whether they are extravagant or not. That means that he is in a combine. The provincial assay office at Belleville takes no account of the charges of private assayers, but has a regular scale of charges, which are supposed merely to cover the cost. I think the charge for a gold assay is 50 cents. The government assay office here gives no encouragement to the prospector who goes out to discover minerals. If he sends a lot of samples to Ottawa to be assayed, he is told that he will have to wait until the office gets through with the samples of the Geological Survey; then they will attend to his; and perhaps it is a month before he can get any report as to whether his samples are good or not. If the government have an assay office, they should not pay any attention to what assayers charge elsewhere. They should charge the public or the prospector simply the actual cost.

Senate—to provide for making good the full sessional indemnity of members of the Senate—days lost through absence caused by illness during the present session—and $2,500 to pay the sessional indemnity of the Honourable James Domville for the session of 1906, absent through illness—notwithstanding anything in chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes, an Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, $11,180.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this the first time this question has been raised?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is the first time. The hon. gentleman referred to was on his way to Ottawa when he met with an accident. He was not able to reach Ottawa, and technically was not entitled to the indemnity.

House of Commons—to provide for making good the full sessional indemnity of members of the House of Commons—days lost through absence caused by illness or public business during the present session—notwithstanding anything in chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes, an Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, $11,820.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to know what that means? There are a great many of us who stay here and diligently do our work; but I understand that that means that if we do not stay here we are to be paid as if we do. I must protest against that. Many of us make great sacrifices of money to stay here and attend to our public duties. As I understand this item, it is to provide that gentlemen who are not here, but who leave the burden of the affairs of the country to those of us who do stay, are to be paid the same as if they were here. If it means that, I protest against it, though I am not going to divide the House upon it. I am not speaking of one side of the House more than the other; I am speaking generally of the principle involved. Those gentlemen who do not stay here, go away because it pays them to go, because they make money by going away. They ought not to be paid by the people when they are being remunerated in some other respect by staying away. That is the protest I make. It is not that I want to deprive any hon. member of his full indemnity if he earns it, but I do say that if it pays him better to leave his place in this House of Commons and go away to attend to other affairs, and I think we must take it for granted that it does pay him better or he would not go, he ought not to ask this country to pay him for being in this House when he is not here. I think that the Act passed in 1903 or 1905 ought to apply.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not disagree to any extent with my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster), but I think he has misconceived the intention of this vote. He is certainly not correct when he says that the man who goes away and devotes himself to his private affairs is to receive more consideration than the man who attends to his duties in this House. This clause would only affect members who conscientiously sign a declaration that they have been absent through illness. The law provides that if a man is ill in Ottawa, it shall not count against him, but if he happens to be sick a few miles away, it would count against him. One must draw the line somewhere. The Act says that those who are ill in Ottawa are entitled to receive the full indemnity. The change which this vote makes for the present session is that a member who is ill at some other place in Canada shall be entitled to receive the indemnity.

Mr. LANCASTER. A man might be ill and yet be able to earn money. I think the test should be whether he is attending to the affairs of the country or whether he is attending to his own private affairs. A man might be ill, and yet be able to attend to his business. If he swears that he was too ill to work at all it would be alright and he would have our full sympathy, but if he is not too ill to attend to his own private affairs, I think the Act should apply. The work we do in the House of Commons is not by any means the most healthy work. I myself am pretty hard, and pretty tough, but I have made myself ill by working here late at nights, and am suffering from the strain, and from not having enough sleep. If the declaration is to be that he is so ill that he cannot attend to any business, I would be inclined to agree, but the argument of the Minister of Finance that a man has only to be away from home because he does not feel first-rate holds good, he might be attending to his medical practice or to his store or to his farm, he might not be so ill that he could not attend to his own private affairs. I do not think that by merely saying that he is in bad health he should draw his indemnity.

Mr. FIELDING. I should think that an hon. member who is able to attend to his private affairs would not make a declaration that he is absent through illness. When it comes to a matter affecting the personal honour and affairs of a member, I think each one of us must be content to leave the other to make the declaration and to make it in all good faith. Let me give an illustration. An hon. gentleman who usually sits on the opposition side has been ill, and has been obliged to leave his parliamentary duties, and go south. I refer to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). He is ill and away from Ottawa, but it cannot be said that he is attending to his business. He has left his business in Montreal, and has been obliged to go south. I do not mention him particularly, because there are others. This would entitle that hon. gentleman to the full indemnity, as full as he would have received if he had been ill in the city of Ottawa. If one is ill in the city of Ottawa, and is able to remain here, he suffers no reduction, but if his physician says he had better go south, it does seem a hardship that he should lose his indemnity while another member in Ottawa gets it. It is difficult to draw any absolute line in these things. In preparing the estimates we try to take a generous view of all cases.

Mr. HUGHES. A member might be ill and might not be able to get properly treated in Ottawa, and he might have to go to some other locality where he could get the proper treatment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not like this manner of doing it. We are repealing by an estimate, or practically repealing, an Act of parliament. I think it would have been better to have brought in an Act amending the Act of parliament. An Act of parliament is a different thing from an estimate. Supposing the public did not agree with this change, supposing the people of the country did not think it was the right way to do it, then I suppose there would be no suggestion of bringing it up next year. Then some member might be ill next year, and suffer very unjustly. I think the proper way to do would be to take the responsibility of bringing in an Act to amend the Act. I do not think this is the proper way to do it at all.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I see this item is for an odd amount. I would like to know how the minister arrived at the amount stated here, because it was not generally known on this side of the House that anything of this kind was in contemplation.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it was known on that side of the House. When this matter was proposed, I do not mind telling my hon. friend, that I had conferences with members on that side of the House, not unusual conferences, and I gave instructions to the accountant to ascertain what amount would be drawn by the various members in question, if they did not suffer this disability.

Mr. HUGHES. Suppose some members fall ill between now and prorogation.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid they will have to wait until next year then. That was the way it was done. The accountant ascertained what amount hon. gentlemen in each case had drawn, and what was the balance they would be entitled to, and the sum placed here is sufficient to cover all cases of that kind.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I may say that I had a conference with the Minister of Finance with respect to certain members who have been sick during the session. And the minister has made up the estimates on this basis.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. We members on this side of the House have no knowledge whatever of anything of this kind. And I, as a member of this House, object to any private or semi-private arrangement of this kind being made for individual members of the House from which the members generally are excluded.

Mr. FISHER. Included?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Excluded.

Mr. FISHER. Nobody is excluded.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. There are many members of this House who suffer disabilities from their attendance here much more serious than the penalties of some of those who have been away during this session. I can see no reason why there should be a special vote of this kind passed at the end of each session for persons who have the ear of the government or who have been alert enough to lay a special case before the government whereby they shall obtain from the treasury of the country payment for no service rendered. If it is desirable to follow this plan, then the Act should be changed so as to make it applicable to all members equally. I for one, if I had been prevented by illness from putting in attendance here, would feel it derogatory to my independence as a member of this House to make a claim on the government for the time I had lost. I do not think that I should be penalized for time I might lose by illness while at home, yet another hon. member who has not attended at all during the session should be paid his full indemnity. Such a member has not incurred any expense or sacrificed any time in coming here. I was greatly surprised at the end of last session at the indemnities voted by this House. While I am on my feet, I would call the attention of the government to a feature of the indemnity which bears with especial hardship on those who come, as I do, from the remote parts of the west. The point I refer to is the calling of this House together in November. This means an adjournment in December, for about four weeks, which compels us to travel 3,000 miles each way across the continent to go home and back travelling entirely at our own expense and with the loss of a week on the road each way. There is also the adjournment at Easter for a week when we must either go back and return to Ottawa again at our own expense or stay here in idleness and lose the time. For all this we get no compensation. Yet we are asked, after being at all that expense and all that sacrifice of time, to vote indemnity for members who have not served the public at all. I do not think that is right. I quite understand why it passes year after year without protest, for it is a very delicate thing, when the names of persons who are to have the benefit of this suggested vote are mentioned in the House, for any of their colleagues to rise in their places and object. But I think it is time that some person did object, and I object strongly to the singling out of certain persons for special favours making them the beneficiaries of an Act which does not apply automatically to all members of this House.

Mr. FIELDING. This appropriation does apply automatically to every member of the House under the conditions.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Then, why did we not know about it?

Mr. FIELDING. It can only be because the hon. member (Mr. J. D. Taylor) has not read it; it tells its own story. When he speaks of this item extending to one member and not to another he is mistaken. The words of this Act would apply to any hon. member who has been ill away from the city of Ottawa during the session. If any hon. member has been absent from Ottawa and that absence has been due to illness, he has a right to claim the benefit of this item. If there is not enough money in it, more must be provided by a later vote. There is no distinction between one member and another. It is hardly correct to speak of any member in this case 'filing a claim.' No one has filed a claim. The whip of the other side had a consultation with me and named the persons whom he thought should be dealt with in this way.

Mr. LANCASTER. And that is not filing a claim.

Mr FIELDING I should hardly call it so. Some of the names mentioned were mentioned without the knowledge of the parties concerned. But we tried to remember the names on both sides of gentlemen who might be affected. I would like to have it clearly understood that there is no possible discrimination in the matter. Whether we are wise in making this appropriation as, for the time being, an amendment of the Act is a fair question of debate. I think there is much to be said in favour of adhering rigidly to the Act. But that is a beautiful theory, and so often we are not able to live up to these theories. Every session some peculiar case arises, circumstances in reference to a member or a member's family need to be taken into account. We cannot deal with these things on lines of cold-blooded logic, but must take into the account some of the claims of human sympathy. We are weak in these respects and we fall. It has been so in the past, and I expect that it will be so again.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. minister is going to fall again—I do not disparage his statement, I think I have as much charity as he has—I want him to fall generally.

Mr. FIELDING. He does.

Mr. LANCASTER. And I want him to pass an Act of parliament to justify his fall.

Mr. FIELDING. This is an Act of parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, but it is an Act of parliament brought in at the end of the session. And it is needless to disguise the fact that, as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) says, there is a discrimination. We do not know, at the beginning of a session, that this Act is going to be put through. The matter is at the mercy of the government. An order in council has to be passed to put in that estimate; it must go through the cabinet like a public work or a post office. The thing is in the gift of the government, and is not the right of a member of parliament when parliament opens. The member concerned is at the mercy of the government as to whether they will do him this favour or not. That is what I protest against. If the hon. minister believes what he says—and no doubt he does—and if he believes in the wisdom of what he says, then why can he not amend the law and leave the matter to the operation of the law? That would be the manly, the proper, the businesslike way to do. Make it so that everybody will know at the beginning of the session what is to be done, and so that the matter will not depend upon communication between the whips on either side and the government as to the members who should be served in these matters. It ought to be the right of a member of this House and the right of all equally.

Mr. FIELDING. That is exactly the case. It is his right.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, because the matter does not come before parliament at all until the government first takes action. I do not believe in this being done by order in council. I think I make that plain. I agree with my hon. friend from New Westminster that this more or less strikes at the independence of parliament. Some of us do not like to go and ask the government to make a special estimate and over-ride the Act of parliament for our benefit. We must not be so touchy about criticising these things. The general law should be amended so that it will apply automatically to all within the description of the law. The thing should be made a matter of right for the member or for his heirs if he should happen to die. I protest against this thing being done by order in council, as it is when it comes in the supplementary estimates. I think the Minister of Finance should carry out what he defends, and do it as a business man by amending an Act of parliament.

Mr. FIELDING. The only reason why this has come from the government is that it is a money matter. I do not think that any hon. member on either side of the House availing himself of this amendment to the law, comes under an obligation to the government. If he draws a sessional indemnity under the general Act he has to get that by the government of Canada coming here and proposing that that Act be adopted. This is an amendment to the statute. When this estimate is passed into law it becomes for the time being, as respects these people, an amendment to the statute; and if any hon. member who avails himself of the benefit of that comes under an obligation to the government, then he is equally under an obligation to the government when he draws his salary, or allowance under a general Act. In both cases he gets it upon the initiation of the government, but that does not involve any obligation to the government.

Mr. LANCASTER. Surely the hon. gentleman sees the difference. In the one case, every session, at the dying hours of the session, we should have to have an estimate brought in by the government saying that for this session we shall be paid so much indemnity. On the other hand the statute is there and fixes the indemnity. The hon. gentleman surely does not mean that that statute can be repealed and that we should come in at the end of every session and have supplementary estimates brought down saying that we shall have so much indemnity.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think after all there is much difference between this proposition, and what we have been in the habit of doing for many years. I have often thought that the statute itself was wrong in insisting that a man, in order to be relieved, had to live in Ottawa, or within ten miles of Ottawa. If he lived beyond that then he had to lose a part of his indemnity. During the present session I have been ill in Ottawa, and been prevented from attending the House. I do not lose the eight or ten days I have been ill, but had I been ill at home I certainly would have. I do not understand why there should be a distinction between a man living in Ottawa, and a man living a hundred miles from Ottawa as regards illness. I think this proposition is more in accordance with justice than the Act we have upon the statute-book. I know one hon. member, whose name I will not mention, who was absent nearly two months on public business, and I do not think it is fair that he should be called upon to lose his indemnity when he is obliged to be absent. I have no hesitation in supporting the proposition. It has been an old custom ever since I have been in parliament, over twenty years, that if a member dies during the session the full amount of the indemnity which has not been paid to him shall be paid to his legal representatives. If the head of the family is taken away by death, I think it is a proper thing to see that the widow gets the indemnity. We have done that all the time, both in regard to senators, and to members of the House of Commons.

Mr. HUGHES. I agree with the remarks of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). I wish to bring up one case that occurred a number of years ago where I always felt that the member was treated unfairly, I refer to Mr. Livingstone, who was then member for North Waterloo. He broke his leg when not in Ottawa, and the House refused to give him his indemnity. I brought the matter up at the time, although he was a member on the opposition side of the House.

Mr. CROSBY. I have no objection to the passing of this item. But I agree with my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) that as this is a question that comes up every year, why not have a statute that will cover it, and have the thing settled? Suppose a man who lives in the far east, or in the far west, on account of illness in his family, has to remain at home two or three weeks, is that not just as serious as if he was sick at home? I believe that the fifteen days grace that is allowed by statute to members who have to come here for four or five months in the year, is not enough, I believe we should have a longer grace. I think it would be fair to say that we should have at least four or five days in the month, because it is impossible for one living as far east as I do to leave here on Friday night and get back before the following Tuesday night. I believe that a committee of this House should take the matter up and see if it cannot be regulated and a statute formulated that would cover it so that every man would know what he has to expect.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would like to know whether this item provides for the full sessional indemnity to new members who have not been here and who have been elected since the session opened?

Mr. FIELDING. A member elected during the session and obliged to be away by illness would be entitled to draw as much indemnity as he could have drawn if he had remained in Ottawa.

Mr J D. TAYLOR. Before he was sworn in a member of the House?

Mr FIELDING. Yes, from the date of his return, I think, would be the proper way to treat it, and if he were prevented by illness from being sworn in he would be still entitled to his indemnity. That is the way I would interpret this item, but he would not be entitled to a full indemnity, because he was not a member for the full session.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I say this is a most improper proceeding and a most invidious case. I do not think that there is any gentleman who was so ill that he could not come up and take the oath or take his seat in the House. It only adds force to what I said before as to the impropriety of these proceedings. If an hon. member gets elected as a member of this House, pays no attention to his election, goes away for months, comes back here and draws his full indemnity it is a most improper proceeding and one we should not countenance. Votes of this kind should be closely scrutinized every time and not allowed to go through without discussion. What proportion of this vote is to go for days lost by absence on public business during the present session? There is no public business appertaining to the duties of a member as such which calls for his absence from the House, and I do not think that any member should be paid his indemnity as a member of this House for public business otherwise performed. We have suffered in the House of Commons this year, we have been delayed far beyond the time when we might have been expected to return to our homes because of the absence of members of the government. It seems to be rubbing it into us to ask us, after keeping us here, to vote the full sessional indemnity to ministers who have been away on business which did not necessarily call for their absence from the House, and on business which might have been performed by other persons quite as well as by these ministers. I do not think it is a proper principle. This indemnity is paid to members of parliament for their services in parliament. If they do not perform these services, but accept other employment, whether under the Crown or otherwise, I think it is an improper principle to pay them their full indemnity. How much of this sum is to pay for days of absence caused by public business?

Mr. MILLER. If any member of the government has been away attending to other public business, it is the hon. member's contention that he might have remained in the House attending to his duties here and that some person else might have performed the duties that the member of the government performed during his absence. In that case, is it not true that whoever else might have been employed in place of the member of the government would have been paid for his services. In that case what difference would it make?

Mr. LANCASTER. It might have been performed by a civil servant drawing his salary.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. gentleman did not say that a civil servant could have performed the duties and probably he could not have. The hon. gentleman spoke of the case of a man who had not taken the oath or taken his seat. I cannot see that that makes any difference to a man's equitable right at all. There is only one case this session that I remember of to which the remarks of the hon. gentleman would apply. I understand that when that hon. gentleman went away from the city he had to be carried to the train upon a stretcher. Surely the hon. gentleman would not desire that a man should be carried on a stretcher to the House of Commons to take the oath in order to be entitled to his indemnity?

Mr. HENDERSON. Did he take the oath?

Mr. MILLER. I understand he did not.

Mr. HENDERSON. My opinion is that a man is not a member of this House until he signs the roll and takes the oath.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) has argued that a man outside of this House should be paid as if he were in the House. I quite agree with my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Taylor). A man is employed here just as he is employed by anybody else. The people employ that man to come here, and do the public business. If he is not here doing that business he should not be paid as if he were. The hon. member for South Grey would not employ some one in his absence if he were ill, and pay both of them. He would not employ two men to do the work of one, and pay both. There may be reasons, as was stated by the hon. Minister of Finance, which would cause us to take a charitable view of some of these cases, but I would say to the hon. member for South Grey that surely he is not going to argue that there should be a statute saying one thing, and the sweet will of a cabinet saying another at the end of every session in regard to whether a man is to be paid who is not here. As a matter of principle the statute should speak for itself. If it is not fair, amend it, but let the people of the country know what the rights of a member are, and do not let us have this at the end of every session.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. It is now a quarter past twelve, and perhaps it would be better to let this item stand.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. FIELDING. I want to say to the hon. member that I cannot tell him how much money would be paid under these words. The words were taken from a previous vote. I am inclined to think that perhaps no money would be paid under the terms of these words, but I will not say that definitely. I only know of one case to which they might refer. I may say to my hon. friend that the hon. gentleman referred to has made no application whatever. I am surprised at the opposition that is manifested to this vote, and I desire that it shall stand.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. What business is to be taken to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. The House will be moved into Committee of Supply, and I believe there will be discussion on that motion. In Supply the estimates of the Minister of Interior will be taken.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.18 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 22, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

SUPPLY—LETHBRIDGE POST OFFICE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. C. A. MAGRATH (Medicine Hat). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I have a matter to which I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General. I went to his office this morning and could not find him. It is connection with the Lethbridge post office situation. I am in receipt of a telegram to the following effect:

Lethbridge, Alta.,
21st April, 1910.

To C. A. Magrath, M.P.,
Ottawa.

Material for street delivery been here for some time. No move to put it in operation. Post office more conjested than ever and citizens getting desperate over situation. Use every effort to have put in operation at once, as business is suffering every day. Am sending duplicate to DeVeber.

(Signed) The Lethbridge Board of Trade.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am only going to address the House for two or three moments in connection with this matter. For over one year I have been triyng to impress upon the Post Office Department of this country the necessity of attending to the requirements of the people of Lethbridge. I have appealed to the Postmaster General's Department and to the Minister of Public Works. I have put on record in this House the situation there. I have stated openly that I am not looking for a public building in order to get the taxes in that section of the country distributed. I do not endorse the log rolling system of getting rid of our taxes at all, but the people have certain requirements and certain rights in this country, and I have laid before the Postmaster General a statement as to the situation in Lethbridge. I repeat I do not ask for a public building in Lethbridge in order to have a share of the taxes distributed there. I have asked the Postmaster General for some returns that were ordered by this House, and I want to draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the fact that the House gave authority to bring down certain papers. The Postmaster General has practically refused to bring down the papers from his department. I have had papers brought down from the Public Works Department, but there was absolutely nothing from the Post Office Department, and it is an astonishing state of affairs if the Postmaster General has to admit to this House that there is no correspondence in his department in connection with this matter. I know there has been correspondence and I have told him of it. I have asked him to bring down these papers, and they have not been brought down so far as I am aware. If they have been brought down, then I am sorry for making this statement. I want to see what correspondence has been placed before the department of Public Works by his department. I want to know what steps he has taken to impress upon the Public Works Department the necessity of providing proper facilities for the people of Lethbridge. If he has not taken any steps, then it will be a subject for discussion at a later date.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, I know that steps have been taken to establish a free letter carrier delivery at Lethbridge. I know that the Post Office Department has done its utmost to impress upon the Public Works Department the necessity of providing a temporary office next to the post office, now established at Lethbridge. I know that representations have been made verbally to me and to the officers of the department, both by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Magrath) and Senator DeVeber as to the necessity of having a building. The reason there is no public building yet at Lethbridge is that we do not know what population Lethbridge may have twelve months hence.

Mr. MAGRATH. May I ask a question? Will the hon. gentleman tell me what the population of this country is going to be two years hence. Are our public buildings to be stopped on account of not knowing what our population is going to be.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is quite obvious there is a difference between the growth of a country and the growth of a city like Lethbridge. We all know that cities and towns are growing very fast in the west, and you may provide for a public building in a town which next year will have doubled its population. At all events, there is no ill will whatsoever towards Lethbridge or towards the establishing of postal facilities in the constituency of my hon. friend. On the contrary, I can show my hon. friend here three foolscap pages filled with the names of post offices opened in his own constituency between January 1, 1908, and March 1, 1910. My hon. friend, I am sorry to-day, seems to advertise for a grievance. But there is no room for a grievance. We have opened nearly sixty offices since he was elected representative of the constituency.

Mr. MAGRATH. What has that to do with Lethbridge ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. gentleman sems to think that there is some ill-will to Lethbridge or to the constituency.

Mr. MAGRATH. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He said that we refused to lay on the table certain correspondence which might have been exchanged between the post office authorities and some anonymous correspondent. The papers laid on the table contain all the correspondence in this matter. If there is no correspondence on the file laid on the table dealing with the subject he refers to, it is because there is no such correspondence. There is nothing to conceal in this matter; it is a business proposition. And I do not know what my hon. friend can have in mind in thinking that we would not produce the papers. I simply gave the officers of the department the order of the House—to which order I had raised no objection—to bring down the correspondence. It happens every day, that correspondence on these matters is carried on with the Public Works Department, and, in that case, the Post Office Department would not have the correspondence on file. In the present instance I can only take the word of the hon. member in the meantime that there must be some correspondence and I will see if I can discover anything to bring before the House. But let not my hon. friend be under any impression that there is any ill-will whatever concerning his constituency. The best proof of that is the list of new post offices to which I have referred.

Mr. SPROULE. It did not seem to me that the hon. member (Mr. Magrath) was complaining so much of the absence of correspondence in the file brought down or of ill-will against Lethbridge, but rather of the indifference of the Postmaster General to the needs of the people in an urgent situation. Carelessness or indifference concerning the wants of the people is just as bad as though insufficient postal facilities were due to ill-feeling against the place or to an effort to punish it directed by whatever motive.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not sure that I understood the complaint of my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Magrath). Did I understand him to say that the postal facilities at Lethbridge were insufficient and that he wanted a new building?

Mr. MAGRATH. That is the beginning of the difficulty—they have no public building. And, apparently they have no building available in which they can render proper service to the people.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Magrath) will look at the supplementary estimates he will find that we knew all that and have provided for it. There is an appropriation for a public building at Lethbridge.

Mr. MAGRATH. If the House will permit me: the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) does not know the situation. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) told me himself that it would take $25,000 to buy a site for a post office in Lethbridge. The appropriation is $20,000. What is the use of $20,000 ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not enough ?

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the usual complaint—we do not spend enough money. We shall provide for that.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I wish to call attention anew to a subject which has already been before this House and has been discussed at considerable length, though not this session. I refer to what is euphoniously called 'abuse of the franking privilege.' When this subject was before the House last session I instanced the case of the weekly political letter of the Liberal party which then for some time had been, and I think still is, sent out under the frank of the Justice Department. On that occasion the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) whose individual frank was used, adopted a defiant attitude. He refused to acknowledge that he was violating the law, or in any event if he was violating the law, alleged that he was pursuing the practice which had been followed by his predecessors, a practice which he considered had been hallowed through its sanction by the Post Office Department. On that occasion the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) rose superior to his colleague. He did not defend, except at the very outset, the violation of the law. On the contrary he made the statement to the House that the revelations made in the discussion were such as to show to him the necessity for regulations which would prevent for the future the recurrence of such abuses. It is because there has been no performance in fulfilment of that promise, so definitely made by the Postmaster General, that I venture to take up some of the time of the House this morning. I could, if it were necessary, produce to the House the proofs of this violation of the law such as were produced last year. But as the discussion of last year made this plain, and as the action complained of was admitted, it is unnecessary to go into that matter at any length. The House knows, and the Postmaster General particularly knows, that this circular is being sent out in considerable quantities every week under the frank of the Justice Department. In answer to a question which I placed on the order paper last year information was given as to the extent to which this practice was carried on, the number of weeks of its continuance and the number of documents sent out each week. Now we have a law governing the actions of the Post Office Department, a law which, so far as the public are concerned, is carried out with a severity unexampled as to any other law of the Dominion. In setcion 75 of the Post Office Act we find it provided:

FRANKING AND FREE MAIL MATTER.

All letters and other mailable matter addressed to or sent by the Governor General or sent to or by any department of the government at the seat of government, shall be free of Canada postage, under such regulations as are from time to time made in that respect by the Governor in Council.

Now when we refer to the Postal Guide we find what these regulations are. We find that the Governor in Council in making the regulations framed under the Act has not attempted in any way to widen the scope of the Act or to give to the officials in the department greater authority than the Act contemplates. On the contrary we find that the order in council on the subject—for I presume the regulations follow the order in council—expressly limits the right of the departments to send out matter under frank. The regulation referred to is section 114 and it limits this franking privilege in this way .

All letters and other mail matter sent to the public departments at Ottawa and franked as being of a departmental character.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to follow that up, and to remind the Postmaster General, because he knows it much better than I do, what his duty is under the Act in case of continued violation even by one of his colleagues. I read in section 119 of the Act, subsection (e) these words:

Every one who forges, counterfeits or unlawfully imitates, uses or affixes, to or upon any letter or packet, any stamp, signature, initials, or other mark or sign purporting that such letter or packet ought to pass free of postage, or at a lower rate of postage, or that the postage thereon or any part thereof has been pre-paid or ought to be paid or charged to any person or department is guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to imprisonment for life, or for a term not less than five years.

Now, Sir, I do not think that this is a frivolous situation, although I see that the Solicitor General, whose frank is used for this purpose, and also his colleague the Minister of Justice, are much amused at the reading of this section. I can imagine a cause for the gaiety which they exhibit, a cause which has been brought to the notice of the Canadian public on more than one occasion and is now occupying the public mind, that is, that while the Justice Department is the prosecuting department, and the guardian of the administration of the laws of this country, it is also the department which has the power of releasing offenders. Of course, while this Postal Act does say that if any official of that department should be found to have committed this indictable offence and to have rendered himself liable to the punishment prescribed by the Act, yet as an official of the Justice Department he will be very near to the centre of influence over the pardoning power, and therefore it is a matter of pardonable gaiety on the part of the Solicitor General that any member of this House should seriously suggest that he need be in any terror of the law in this regard. But, Mr. Speaker, although I am not an optimist in the matter of impressing this parliament with the seriousness of any offence against law or propriety, and I say that with a fresh recollection of recent events in this House, although I am not a hopeless optimist in that respect, I do not think that the hide of parliament is altogether impervious. I do think that parliament has a right to be shocked when we find the Justice Department being used as an agency to beat another department out of the revenue to which it is entitled. That, Mr. Speaker, is my view of the case, and I think it is not a laughing matter on the part of the Minister of Justice or of the Solicitor General.

Now, I would like to emphasize the fact that this matter does not arise casually; it is not the case of some literary genius connected with the Justice Department writing a pamphlet, writing a circular letter, and for convenience, and in the ordinary course of business, as one might send out his own private correspondence from a department without any violation of the spirit of the law; I wish to point out that this is not a case of that kind at all, that the circular to which I have reference has no proper connection with the Justice Department, that it does not originate in and is not written by any attaché of the department, by any employee of the department, it is not printed in the government printing office, it has no place in the machinery of this goverment, in the routine of this government at all, except when it has come in from the outside to the Justice Department with the idea of having the stamp affixed which will enable it to beat its way through the Canadian mail. Now, I think it is a particularly aggravated case that a public department such as the Justice Department, which of all others should not lend itself to any infraction of the revenue laws of this country, which should be the most zealous to protect the revenue, should be engaged in a scheme to defraud the revenue. It seems a monstrous thing that this department should lend itself to an object of this kind; and the conviction is forced upon us that it is not an accident that the Justice Department is so used, but that the persons who choose this agency do it because of their belief that they are better protected from prosecution than they would be if they were dealing by any other department. When this matter was before the House last year what seemed to be a bold challenge was thrown out by the Solicitor General. 'I have done no wrong,' he said; 'but if I have done wrong, why does the hon. gentleman not prosecute me?' An easy challenge made with the acclaim of his colleagues in this House that I very well remember.

Mr. BUREAU. The challenge was not issued to my colleagues, but to the members who were making the charge on the other side of the House.

Mr. J D. TAYLOR. Precisely, I think that is what I said. But I am glad that the Solicitor General has repeated now what I think I may desecribe as a raw bluff. The reason I use that term is this, that the Solicitor General is an officer high in the legal service of this country, and he at least is presumed to know the law. The Postal Act prescribes certain procedure in connection with the prosecution of offences under the Act. Section 137 has this provision:

> Every pecuniary penalty imposed by this Act, or by any regulation of the Postmaster General made under it, shall be recoverable with costs by the Postmaster General, by civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction, and shall belong to His Majesty for the public uses of Canada, saving always the power of the Governor in Council to allow any part or the whole of such penalty to the officer or person by whose information or intervention the same was recovered.

I have read this Act carefully and I cannot see that any person other than the Postmaster General has any authority to institute prosecutions under it. Therefore, I say it is nothing but a raw bluff when the Solicitor General, who must be presumed to know the law, stands up here and distinctly exempts the Postmaster General from the terms of his challenge, when he says, I challenge any person else in this House, except the one authorized to prosecute me, to institute a prosecution. Now it is because the Postmaster General is the one person authorized to act under this section that I propose to call upon him to take such action. I would like, before I offer the resolution so calling upon the Postmaster General, to illumine the House as to the nature of this literature which is being distributed by the Justice Department, to call the attention of the House to one circular sent out which I have here, and which I will offer as a sample of the mendacious character of this literature. This circular announces in flaring head and bold type that:

LIBERALS ATTEMPT TO STOP RACE-TRACK GAMBLING.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Fancy that from the Justice Department.

LIBERALS ATTEMPT TO STOP RACE-TRACK GAMBLING.

Obstructed by Tory Race-Track Owners.

Then follows in black type an introductory paragraph intended to give a clue to the reptile press of the country to the contents of the circular. I hope no one will take offence at the term 'reptile press' because the term was invented by the Toronto 'Globe.'

An hon. MEMBER. By Sir Richard Cartwright.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Sir Richard Cartwright or the Toronto 'Globe'; they are so close together that one may be pardoned for quoting one for the other. In this introductory paragraph, intended to guide the editors of the reptile press who may not have time to read through to the contents and to let them know just what it means, we read this :

PONDER THESE THINGS.

The Tory press, headed by Toronto 'Mail and Empire,' has been crying loudly for an amendment to the Criminal Code to stop race-track gambling. The government introduces an amendment——

The government, mark you.

——introduces an amendment and it is strenuously opposed by leading Tories.

This is the literature being distributed by the Solicitor General of this country under the frank of the Justice Department as of an official character, or, in the alternative, if the Justice Department asserts that it is not franked as of an official character, that it is not literature of the Justice Department and not endorsed by the Justice Department, then there is no remedy for my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) but that he must place himself at the tender mercies of the Postmaster General and suffer the penalties prescribed by law for affixing the stamp to denote an official character when there is no official character attached to this literature. I will read another paragraph of this precious document which was sent out by the Justice Department and designed to excite the admiration of the people of Canada for the high moral tone pervading this government and the Justice Department particularly. To show how resolute is this determination to put a stop to race-track gambling let me read this paragraph:

The object of the Bill may be defined as to 'utterly, entirely and completely suppress and prevent the business of betting or gambling in connection with or upon race-tracks in any place in Canada.'

Then we read further :

What would be the attitude of the 'Mail' should Liberal members arise in their places and uphold the integrity of race-track gambling? What would the people of Canada, the clean-minded, non-gambling portion of the community think of Liberal members who stated from their seats that gambling on race-tracks was an evil.

A question asked by the Department of Justice. I would like to call the attention of the clean-minded non-gambling portion of the community to the contrasting fact that the record of this House will show that the Minister of Justice himself stated from his seat that gambling on race-tracks is not an evil. It seems to me that the advice of the Minister of Justice was more potent than any other agency in this House in securing the defeat of the Bill which that circular from the Department of Justice represents to the people of Canada as being opposed particularly by the Tory race-track owners, when it was opposed particularly with more authority, with more influence, because of their position in this House by the Minister of Justice, whose department sends out this mendacious statement, and by his colleague, the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham). I ask what the head of the government thinks of this performance. I ask the Postmaster General what he thinks of this performance, and whether, having regard to the character of the matter which is being distributed under his sanction, because it must be under his sanction as he has known about it for a long time, or having regard to the mendacious character of it he is still prepared to say that he recognizes it as of an official character. I read again :

The people of Canada will understand that the Liberals are in favour of abolishing race-track gambling.

If the people of Canada understand that they must wake up to a realization of the fact that the Liberals have lost control of the House of Commons, because if such were the attitude of the Liberal party it is within our recollection that they very signally failed in carrying it out. However, we have the authority of the Minister of Justice, in a circular franked as 'official' by the Justice Department, and therefore a circular for which the minister has responsibility, the statement that :

The people of Canada will understand that the Liberals are in favour of abolishing race-track gambling and that two leading Conservatives in the House, Messrs. Osler and Barker, both interested in race-tracks, are opposed to the reforms suggested, notwithstanding the attitude of public opinion on the subject.

When I observed that that circular and others like it were being sent out from that department it occurred to me that surely no person in high responsibility there could be cognizant of it. I pictured the righteous indignation of the Minister of Justice when his attention should be called to the subject. I had in my mind the top lofty way in which we would get the reply from him that here was an hon. member of this House tilting perhaps against a messenger or a chief messenger in the department who had affixed this offending stamp. Realizing the way in which the franking privilege was conducted in the department, I took the precaution of putting a question on the order paper to ask what official of the department was responsible for the administration of the franking privilege, and who is charged with the duty of seeing that no abuse is permitted under it. The answer I got precludes the responsibility being shifted by the Minister of Justice upon any messenger or menial of the department. The answer was that the franks of the Justice Department are those of the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General and the deputy minister, and that the deputy minister is the person responsible for the administration, to see that no abuses take place under it. I have too much respect for the Deputy Minister of Justice to entertain the idea for a moment that this thing is done under his responsibility. While the responsibility is technically his, yet in the Department of Justice the Minister and the Solicitor General outrank the deputy minister, and I think the responsibility must be placed higher up. It is not for me to say whether or not it should be placed with the gentleman whose name appears as the frank upon these documents. It is for the Postmaster General, as I take it, upon the information given to him and which has been for long in his possession; it is for him to find out who it is who illegally puts that stamp on matter purporting to indicate it is entitled to pass free of postage, when it is not so entitled. The questions asked and answered last year show that this practice had been going on from the 20th April, 1907, to the 27th November of the same year, a period of 30 weeks, and from July 21, 1908, to January 19, 1909, a period of 26 weeks, making 56 weeks thus far, and then there has been a recess during which this practice has continued for 24 weeks, making a total of 80 weeks in all. Another answer said that the circulars sent out averaged from 75 to 100 weekly. We must take it that the department put the best face upon it, and we are entitled to assume that 100 per week is the average number sent out, so that during that period of 80 weeks there have been 8,000 offences committed against the Postal Act by somebody in the Justice Department. I want to call attention to a clause in the Postal Act which shows that the burden of proof in such a case is not upon any private member of the House or upon any citizen of the country to show beyond a shadow of a doubt that some one in the Justice Department has incurred a very serious penalty. The burden on the contrary is placed, by section 138 of the Postal Act, upon the person accused:

> In any action or proceeding for the recovery of postage or of any penalty under this Act, the burden of proof that the thing alleged to have been done by the defendant was done in conformity to or without violation of this Act, shall lie upon the defendant.

Therefore, under this Act which is made to grind the public, which is made to make it beyond peradventure that if any citizen of this country is accused of writing a line inside a newspaper and sending that out at newspaper postage and that line is found, he shall be held prima facie guilty of having written that line and to have committed an offence against the Postal Act. And, under that section of the Act, the citizens of Canada are constantly being haled before Post Office inspectors all over this Dominion and are being fined because there is a prima facie case against them. The department is not bound to establish that they are guilty, but it is up to the accused to establish they are not guilty. Therefore, I say it is up to whoever in the Justice Department affixes this stamp to matter of the nature I have indicated, to prove beyond peradventure that he has the right under the law to do it, or else to be placed in the same position as other private citizens and to suffer the penalty described in this Act. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House last time we permitted it to be disposed of on the promise by the Postmaster General that regulations would be adopted to make it impossible for the offences to be continued. It is because we have had that promise and have had no performance that I think it is my duty to ask the House to make a direction on this occasion. Therefore I move:

> That all the words after that be left out and the following inserted instead:—
> In the opinion of this House the Postmaster General should take action to prevent the continuing violation of the postal law by the forwarding through the mails of a political printed circular letter free of postage under the frank of the Justice Department; that steps should be taken to recover the loss to the revenue so far as same is ascertainable from the record, and to impose the penalty prescribed by the Postal Act for this series of violations.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I would like to say at the outset that while I have the pleasure of some acquaintance with the piece of political news print which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has exhibited in the House and has read to the great delight of his friends who sit about him, I have not seen any copies of that news print for a great many months and I have not at any time sent to anybody any such document or any copy of it. I do not know anything about its history, its origin, or the source from which it may have been supplied to the hon. gentleman who has utilized it this morning. But I want in that connection to say further: It seems to please hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House at times when it suits their purpose, to erect the Minister of Justice or the Department of Justice upon some sort of pedestal or throne, setting up that department as though it were a sort of guardian or keeper over the consciences of the other departments, and of the other members of this government. I wish to say, so far as I am concerned, that I think there is no warrant whatever for attempting any such position on the part of hon. gentlemen either in this House or out of this House. I think myself it was a misfortune that in the framing of our constitution 40 years ago the good old title 'Attorney General' was dropped and the continental appellation 'Minister of Justice' substituted for it. The Department of Justice, if I understand its end, is simply the legal department of His Majesty's government in Canada. It is literally the department of the Attornev General; the Minister of Justice to my understanding of that term is simply the general attorney of the people of Canada. And so far as the present incumbent of that office is concerned I want to say further, that he makes no pretense of being put upon any higher plane than his colleagues in this government or his colleagues who are members of this House. For myself, I think myself a politician. I am not seeking to put myself upon any higher footing; I am a political partisan.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. If any gentlemen on the other side of the House wish to call each other by some more high sounding appellation; if they wish to consider each other statesmen and not politicians they are welcome to do so. I have to say that so far as I am concerned I think it no discredit to be called a politician, to be called a political partisan, and to be prepared to take any share I am able to take in the political warfare of my colleagues and of my party.

Now, with regard to the subject which the hon. gentleman has brought to the attention of the House, so far as I am personally concerned I should be very glad to see the franking privilege in this country abolished. I do not know what merit there is in it. I think it is a system which has been in the past abused, and which it would be better in the public interest should be abolished. But, I found it in force when I took charge of the Post Office Department five years ago. I did not remain in charge of that department long enough to work any startling revolutions in its administration, and I do not know if I had proposed that the franking privilege should be abolished that I would have received much support from any hon. gentleman in this House. But taking the provisions of the law on the subject as they stand, I want to point out what I understand them to be, and to ask each member of the House who is accustomed to exercise his privileges in that respect, conscientiously to inquire of himself whether or not he is in a position to throw any stones in this matter. I had not been long in this House or in the position of Postmaster General of Canada when a member of this House came to me one day—a member whom I had never seen before and who is not a political friend—and asked me to give him my frank as Postmaster General. I told him I had not any except my hand-writing. He answered that would do, and he asked me to come with him to the parliamentary post office and put my initials as Postmaster General on some mailable matter that the post office authorities would not carry for him upon his own initials. I went with him, hardly understanding what the difficulty could be, but I understood when I found what I was wanted to do. I was wanted to frank through His Majesty mails a bag full of grain.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I did it, and I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Taylor) would like to have me and his friends who sit in this House on the same side of it as himself, prosecuted as criminals for that act.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, if I may presume to instruct the Minister of Justice on the law, I would say to him that there is no limitation on the right of a member of parliament to frank any matter that is at all mailable; he is different from an employee or an official of the department.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am afraid the hon. gentleman's idea would not avail if he went into a court prosecuting in the case I have described. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the law is such that any member of the House is entitled to frank through the mails of this country, free of charge, bags of grain, or his wardrobe, I think he will find himself mistaken.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; sit down.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. If gentlemen opposite will keep order; I rise, as I have the privilege to rise, and say that the hon. gentleman who has the floor is misstating, perhaps not intentionally, what I have said. I did not say anything of the kind which he attributes to me. I said that any member of this House has the right to frank any matter which is mailable.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I purpose, Mr. Speaker, calling attention to the provisions of the law on the subject in a minute or two, but in reference to the incident to which I have been adverting, I want simply to remind the hon. gentleman who has been interrupting me, that if there had been no infraction of the law in what I was being asked as Postmaster General to do, there was no occasion to come to me in the matter, because the hon. gentleman who wanted to use the mails for the carriage of his bag of grain could have franked it himself. And it was simply because he was transgressing the regulations, and knew he was transgressing the regulations, that he came to me, asking me as Postmaster General to direct my officials to do for me that which they would not do for him. Now, one hears a good deal in the way of rumour around the halls and the lobbies as to what is going on from day to day during the session on the part of hon. members of this House in the way of sending things through the mails. I do not intend to talk about that; I think in these matters there is not very much involved, and it is just as well that there should be some idea on both sides of the House of applying the ancient principle of noblesse oblige. And there are things in regard to which if there be transgressions of the strict letter of the law, it is very doubtful if it is in the public interest that there should be attention called to them and discussion had of them. I do not understand that the franking privilege of a member of this House during the session is any wider or any different from the like privileges to the departments of the government during the recess. The statute is that which governs. I am not particularly concerned with the Post Office regulations. So far as they are based upon the statute, so far as they are not contradictory to the statute, so far as they are authorized by the statute they are of course the rules upon which the Post Office Department, and the officials of that department, must carry on their business. But, no department of this government, by any regulations it may promulgate, not the whole government or His Excellency in Council, have any right to take from a member of this House that which is given him by the statute which preserves the right of a member and the right of a minister in the matter of exercising the franking privilege.

Section 75 of the Post Office Act, limiting it to this particular matter, directs that all mailable matter sent by any department of the government, at the seat of government, shall be free of postage. The corresponding section with regard to members limits their franking privilege to the duration of the session, otherwise it is practically in the same words. As to members, 'all mailable matter addressed by,' is the expression, 'addressed by any member of either House at the seat of government during the session of parliament is entitled to be carried free.' I think there is a good deal of misconception on this subject. I have heard or seen that hon. members have spoken with the idea that ten days after or before the session they are in the same position as during the session. I see no warrant for that idea whatever. Mailable matter may be sent to any member free of charge during ten days before a session, but so far as anything sent out by a member is concerned, his right of franking is limited to the duration of the session and his right of franking is conferred by the law, in almost identical words with the departmental rights of franking mentioned in the other section. It is all mailable matter, in one case sent by any department, in the other, addressed by any member. And you have simply the situation that whatever a member during a session may address, a department at all time of the year may send. Now, with regard to the Department of Justice and its administration, I am, by law, made the official who presides over that department. The Solicitor General is by statute assigned the duty of assisting in the litigation of that department. He is my colleague. I do not consider that he is my subordinate. I certainly would think I was guilty of a piece of impudence if I asked him to submit to me his correspondence or undertook to revise his use of his frank. I have no more right to do it in his case than in the case of any other one of my colleagues, and no more right to do it in the case of the Solicitor General, than he has to do it with regard to my correspondence. So far as the department is concerned, using that word as distinguished from the minister and the Solicitor General at the head of the department, so far as clerks in the department are concerned, and the ordinary departmental work, the frank which is used and used so far as I am aware exclusively, is that of the deputy minister. I think he has a stamp. I have never seen it, but I have no doubt he has; I have seen impressions of one, and I understand that the clerks of the department or the messengers of the department in taking to the post office the mailable matter of the day, affix the stamp of the deputy minister. So far as I am concerned, I have no stamp. I frank by writing with my pen, or my secretary writes with his pen my initials in the corner of the envelope. That system is pursued in regard to whatever letters I dictate during the day, whether it is session or not session. Some of these letters, I am afraid, are upon political subjects. Some of these letters, it may be, do not concern the business of the Department of Justice. Once in a while I write a letter to my son; possibly I may write to my good old father. It is not upon departmental business, and I do not put postage stamps on such letters. If I am wrong, I am in the judgment of this House, and I hope my friend to whom I sent a bagful of oats a few years ago won't be the first man to condemn me.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I think from the pointed manner in which the hon. gentleman threw that bagful of oats I should state that I did not ask him to frank them.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am sorry the hon. gentleman thought it necessary to make that observation. I took good care to tell the House that it was during the few months I was Postmaster General that it occurred, and unless my recollection is very erroneous my hon. friend did not represent New Westminster at that time. It was not the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Taylor). Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the political literature that has been discussed here, I do not suppose it goes out under my initials. It certainly does not go out under my initials to my knowledge. If my secretary, or his assistant has any part in mailing the kind of document that has been referred to I do not know anything about it. I do not think that is the fact, nor do I think that it is the fact that any official of the department using the departmental stamp of the deputy minister is engaged in sending out literature of the character described, or anything of a political nature. As to what the Solicitor General may do under his own signature, or under his own frank, I do not conceive that I am entitled to inquire, any more than I am entitled to inquire into the mailable correspondence of any member of this House during the session. On the principle on which it is argued that the correspondence of the Solicitor General, or of the Minister of Justice ought to be inspected, it is, I suppose, contended that envelopes are to be opened, and that one ought to see whether or not in the envelope which is sealed up, and is franked with the minister's name, or the name of the Solicitor General, there is something contraband. If that is the principle the hon. gentleman is contending for, if that is what he wants the House to accept by the motion he has made, I hope he will have the frankness to let us know, so that we will not be asked to express ourselves upon this question without understanding whether or not every member of this House is to submit his personal correspondence to some official, or to some minister, or to some authority to see whether or not it contains something which he ought not to send out. Well, Sir, in regard to this whole matter I do not care to express any opinion as to the magnitude which it may assume in the minds of hon. gentlemen. Each member of the House will form his own opinion about that. I simply want to put it as I have tried to do upon the language of the law. My position is that during the recess every minister in connection with his department, every department, has identically the same franking right that every member has during the session. There is nothing in the statute about departmental business. It is mailable matter, and any mailable matter any minister has the right under the law to frank on any day of the year. Change the law as soon as you please. I am perfectly prepared to support any proposal to strike out every one of those clauses from the statute. They do not have the franking privilege in England. Members of parliament there pay their own postage, and I think members here could do it also. But, as long as the law remains as it is, and as long as members of this House are entitled to put their frank during the session upon any letter they like, whether it concerns private, political, or other business—whether it is their letter, or the letter of some member of their family; whether it is the letter of their own family, or the letter of some friend; whether it is even the member's initials upon the corner of an envelope in blank and handed to a man who asks for it of him on the street exactly as he would ask for a postage stamp—as long as the law remains in that position it is not—I had almost said not consistent with the dignity of this House—to occupy hours of the time of the House in discussing such a matter as this.

Mr. W. S. MIDDLEBRO (North Grey). I think that the Minister of Justice should be the guardian of the dignity of this House. He is the minister to whom we have a right to look for the embodiment of the highest moral tone in our public life. But when a man in such a position will rise in his place in this House and acknowledge himself to be a political partisan, as he has just done, the dignity of the House needs some other protection. I can only say that we on this side of the House have for many years been of exactly the opinion now expressed by the Minister of Justice. But though we have always regarded that hon. gentleman as a political partisan, I never thought that the time would come when one occupying that position would openly acknowledge in his place in this House that this was his character. But the indictment presented by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) was so strong, so conclusive, that there was absolutely no use in longer attempting concealment of the fact that the present Minister of Justice is a political partisan.

Now, it seems to me that the question before the House is a very important matter. It came up in the House last session, and I took some small part in the discussion. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) at that time gave us a very fair promise—and I was delighted on that occasion with the speech he made. For, had he carried out the promises he gave, we should find him to-day voting for the resolution presented by my hon. friend from New Westminster. Let me read briefly from the debate on that occasion. In the course of my address I used these words:

If the Post Office Act does not provide some penalty for a man who unjustly uses the franking privilege, it is high time that an amendment was brought in to make it a criminal offence for any person to use the franking privilege who has not authority to do so.

The Postmaster General said:

I may say at once that the supposed franks which have been exhibited this afternoon reveal a state of things which I will not tolerate.

And he went on:

At all events I say that this state of things cannot be tolerated because the Post Office Department must have the respect of all parties in this country, and I intend for the future to see that the spirit and the letter of the law shall be carried out. . . . We will frame such regulations as in the future only purely official business bearing the frank of ministers and members of parliament will go through the mails. I may say that since the beginning of the session I have received complaints from certain firms in reference to the abuse of the franking privilege. I attribute the reason for these complaints to the fact that it was done by new members of the House.

Now, I hold in my hand an envelope addressed to the 'Advocate,' a paper published at Balgonie, Sask., in which was contained a copy of the literature part of which was read by my hon. friend from New Westminster. This bears the postmark of Ottawa and upon the envelope the signature 'Jacques Bureau.' It is postmarked March 14, 1910. So when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) contends that he does not know that this is done by any official of his department, we must assume that that is true; but now that we have brought the matter to his attention his plea of ignorance cannot hold. It is shown that this kind of literature—I cannot call it anything but Ananias literature—is being circulated at the public expense. I say that it is a disgrace to this country, and it is a disgrace to the Department of Justice to play the part of a political partisan in sending this literature throughout the country. The statements contained in that literature are so contrary to the facts that I cannot characterize it in words strong enough. We all know that the speech of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) was the very cause of the defeat of the Anti-Race Track Gambling Bill. The idea that notwithstanding this fact, which is known to us all, this literature should contain statements that the government were doing their best to pass the Bill and to further the measures against race-track gambling. Why, before such literature the reputation of Ananias melts like snow before the spring-tide sun. I ask the Postmaster General to tell us whether he has taken any steps to implement the promise he made a year ago to the members of this House upon the faith of which the discussion was ended. We took the hon. gentleman at his word; we supposed that he would make regulations which would prevent—even if the present regulations cannot prevent, which we say they can—the continuation of this abuse. Has he taken steps to prevent a repetition of that which was shown to exist last year, and will he take steps to prevent what has been shown to exist here to-day?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Last year, when this question was brought up, I made the remark that was quoted by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro). He will remember that I was shown some letters which were supposed to have been franked by some members of the government. Experts on both sides of the House looked at the initials, and not one could say whose initials they were. I then stated that this was certainly an abuse—that, evidently, some signatures had been used illegally, forged in effect, and that I would see to it that such a thing could not occur again. My hon. friend will remember that I handed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) an envelope which was supposed to contain a political pamphlet distributed during the period of the general election in one of the constituencies—Dufferin, I think—and the minister (Mr. Fisher) peremptorily observed that the signature was not his. It was upon that occasion that I declared that if such a thing occurred again I would take prompt measures to stop it. Now, let us be frank.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, and let us not frank as some hon. members on the other side frank at the general election. Now, will it be seriously contended for one moment that a member of this House has not the right, during the session of parliament, to send letters to his constituents and others, using for that purpose the franking privilege which he gets under the law—for, under the statute all mailable matter can be franked during the session by a member of the House.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. That would include a bag of oats?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am sure the hon. gentleman understands the definition of 'mailable matter.' If an hon. gentleman gave his frank on that occasion, I suppose he thought that the bag of oats could pass in His Majesty's mails. Can it be contended for a moment that whilst the members of the House during session are given by law the privilege of sending abroad tons of literature, a member of the government shall not have the privilege of sending letters under his own frank during recess? Now, as was well said by the Minister of Justice, and as every lawyer knows, no regulation can destroy the effect of a statute passed by this House. Section 75 enacts that:

All letters and other mailable matter addressed to or sent by the Governor General, or sent to or by any department of the government at the seat of government, shall be free of Canadian postage under such regulations as are from time to time made in that respect by the Governor in Council.

I am prompted by my hon. friend from New Westminster to quote again section 114 of the regulations, which reads as follows:

All letters and other mailable matter sent by the public departments at Ottawa and franked as being of a departmental character, all correspondence addressed to the ministers in charge of the said departments or to their private secretaries, or to the deputy heads or secretaries of the same, or to any recognized branch or division of a department.

All these enjoy the franking privilege. Now, I will ask, is there a distinction between letters sent personally by a minister and a letter of a departmental character? Before I do it, I must explain the raison d'etre of these regulations, and I believe every business man in the House will understand it. In order to prevent civil servants from abusing the franking privilege given by law to the departments, we had to frame a regulation that the letters sent from those departments through the mail must be of a departmental character. But as the Minister of Justice well says, we cannot, in the Post Office Department, set aside what has been enacted by this parliament in the Revised Statutes, section 75, which I have read.

Mr. COWAN. Shall be free under the regulations.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, under the regulations. Will my hon. friend, who I know is a lawyer of distinction in his province, contend that under the statute and the regulations I have read, a minister of the Crown is debarred from the privilege of franking his letters during recess? Why, my hon. friend could not plead such a contention in any court of the land. My hon. friend thinks perhaps that the Solicitor General does not enjoy the franking privilege. Now, although his name is not mentioned in the statute, he is however, as the Minister of Justice stated, considered a member of the government, although he is not a member of the cabinet. But let me tell my hon. friend this, that three years ago, by an order in council passed by this government, the Solicitor General was given the franking privilege. Now, I appeal to my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, I appeal to his sense of justice and to his sense of fair play: will he tell me—I have just seen the envelope which was handed to me by my hon. friend the member for Frontenac, bearing the signature of the Solicitor General—will the leader of the opposition, who is a lawyer of great distinction, and for whom I have the greatest respect, tell me, as was said a moment ago by the member for New Westminster, that the Solicitor General has been violating the law in the spirit and in the letter, and that he is amenable to the courts under section 119 of the Post Office Act? Can it be for a moment contended that he has, in the words of that section:

Forged, counterfeited, or unlawfully imitated, used or affixed, to or upon any letter or packet, any stamp, signature, initials, or other mark or sign purporting that such letter or package ought to pass free of postage, or at a lower rate of postage, or that the postage thereon or any part thereof has been prepaid or ought to be paid by or charged to any person or department.

It seems to me it is not even necessary to discuss that question. The statute is very clear. During the session of parliament, every member is given by law the franking privilege, he can send letters and parcels of the prescribed size mentioned in the regulations, he can send all mailable matter. Now, during recess, during the whole year round, the members of the government are given the same privilege.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. No. Will the Postmaster General quote the section of the Act giving that privilege?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is given in section 75:

All letters and other mailable matter addressed to or sent by the Governor General, or sent to or by any department of the government at the seat of government, shall be free of Canadian postage.

Is not the minister the head of the department, are not his letters letters of the department?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Will the minister read the remainder of the section?

Mr. LEMIEUX (reading):

—shall be free of Canadian postage under such regulations as are from time to time made in that respect by the Governor in Council.

Regulations made in order to stop any abuse which might be committed in the size of the mailable matter, or sending such articles as a bag of oats, for instance, or a wardrobe, and many other things that civil servants had been sending for years, in abuse of their privilege, perverting the sense of the Act, and we had to put a stop to it. Now, nobody will contend that any bar has been put to the free exercise of that privilege by members of the House. I remember that, during the session preceding the last general election and during every session preceding a general election since I have had a seat in this House, my hon. friend the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who had charge of the literature of his political party, jammed for weeks and months, the corridors and lobbies of this House with literature destined to be sent to the independent electors of this country. We did not object and we do not object to-day. We are given the same privilege on this side of the House. Will any one say, with the law as it stands, with the regulations as they exist, the object of which I gave a moment ago, because the Solicitor General sends, under his franking privilege at certain intervals during the year and during the recess, the envelopes which were shown a moment ago, the Postmaster General should interpose and order those letters to be opened?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That I should do that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would not stay in the government ten minutes if I were to do that.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The hon. member would stay in any other government if he did that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is no chance of my hon. friend ever coming at the head of any government with the ideas that he has propounded to-day.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I would like to ask the Postmaster General, if, in view of the law and knowing that literature of the character which has been referred to in this House has been franked with the frank of the Solicitor General, he approves of the transaction?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend has put a question to me. I am not here to speak for the Solicitor General. He is here and I suppose he will be heard from during this debate.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Will the minister take any steps to prevent that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I certainly say that to my mind there has been no trespass of the law under the circumstances.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask the Postmaster General if, having heard the literature read, he thinks it is proper literature to send out?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. STAPLES. I do not rise to make any argument upon this resolution; I simply rise to make an explanation. I do not wish to have it generally understood that all members of this House are guilty of sending a bag of oats to their constituents, but I simply want to explain the whole circumstances and I will leave to the judgment of the House whether or not I transgressed the law. The Minister of Justice and the Postmaster General can verify the facts which I am about to state if they wish to go to the trouble. A good Liberal in my constituency, by the name of John Perry, and residing at Treherne, wrote to me and asked if I thought it would be possible to get a couple of bushels of oats in order that he might sow a plot of land and thereby be of some benefit to his fellow farmers by distributing the seed. I took his letter, read it over the 'phone to Dr. Saunders of the Experimental Farm and asked him if he would supply that quantity of oats. He replied that he would be pleased to comply with the request as contained in the letter. I heard nothing more of it until I came up to the building one morning and found a bag of oats in room 6. The other members began laughing, and I said: What shall I do with it? They did not know. I went to the postmaster, Mr. Mills, and I told him that I had this bag of oats. I said that I could comply with the law by breaking it up into small parcels and sending them out, as the Experimental Farm sends out small samples of grain of a certain weight. He said there was another way in which I might succeed in getting it through, that if I got the Postmaster General's frank it would go. I met the Postmaster General in the lobby and he was kind enough, in the interest of agriculture in this country, to walk into the post office with me and attach his frank to the bag, and that is the last I heard of it until it landed in Treherne. I would just like to say that that innocent bag of oats sent out to produce good innocent material for this country is quite different from the letters which have been read. I have no doubt the government expect these letters that they sent out to bear fruit, as I expected this bag of oats that I sent out to bear fruit, but I do not believe that all the hon. members of both sides of this House desire to obtain votes with any such literature as that which has been read here this morning. Misrepresentation of facts, fabrication—nothing could be further from the facts as regards the Gambling Bill than the statements contained in that circular. The Minister of Justice and every other member of this House knows the way that Bill was dealt with. The Minister of Justice and the right hon. First Minister know how that Bill was killed, and they know it was killed by the Minister of Justice, who has been so driven for an argument to defend that literature as to refer to this bag of oats that went through the mails. If he can find any justification for the sending out of that literature under the frank of his department by referring to this bag of oats then I hope he will enjoy whatever advantage he may get out of it.

Mr. MILLER. We have had rather a good natured discussion. Some men appear to have felt their oats, some have made wry faces, others have talked about small potatoes and others have been accused of being dead beats.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Good, good.

Mr. MILLER. Very good. A particular letter has been referred to and the statements contained in it, it has been said, would have done credit to Annanias. I suppose that that could have been said of a great deal of the literature sent out by our friends on the other side of the House during the last campaign. I remember some of that literature. I did not intend to commit it to memory, but I remember that it bore a very good picture of the very good looking leader of the opposition and one statement contained in it was that the Conservatives had endeavoured to abolish or reduce to 10 per cent the duty on agricultural implements, but that they had been prevented by members sitting on the Liberal side of the House from doing so. If anything more Ananias-like than that has ever been sent out by any party in the Dominion of Canada within the last century I would like to know about it.

Mr. STAPLES. Was there not a vote on the motion to reduce the duty on agricultural implements?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, I remember the vote very well. I remember that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) his then first lieutenant, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and a number of other leading Conservatives voting against him, and I remember that my hon. friend who has just sat down and a few others, representing rural constituencies on the other side of the House, voted for it.

Mr. STAPLES. How did you vote?

Mr. MILLER. I voted against it because I thought it was a hypocritical resolution——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MILLER. —that would not do any credit to any man or to any party, and it did less credit to the party who used it in their campaign literature.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac). I have in my possession one of these effusions sent out as Liberal campaign literature, and among other things there is a reference in it to myself. It says that the member for Frontenac stated that the French Canadians were disloyal, and I want to say that to attribute to me such a statement is an absolute falsehood. It ill becomes the position held by the Solicitor General to allow his frank to be used in sending throughout the country an absolute lie such as that is. We have been treated to some surprises this morning, but before referring to them, allow me to make a brief reference to this lying statement in that pamphlet. I can only conceive two reasons why a statement like that should be sent broadcast through the country. One of these reasons is that it is easier for the Liberal party or those who got up the pamphlet—I am not now accusing the Solicitor General of having prepared it—but it was easier for the Liberal party to attempt to draw a herring across the scent and try to make the people of Quebec believe that I was attacking the masses of the people of that province than it was to defend the Prime Minister and the leaders of the party whom I indicted. Another reason which occurs to me is that possibly by the circulation of such lies as this they think to provoke me into saying something against the people of the province of Quebec, but in that attempt they will be just as unsuccessful as in their other attempt.

Mr. TALBOT. You have said enough already.

Mr. EDWARDS. Not the least surprise we have had this morning was that afforded by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller). I would expect if there was one member on the other side who would have kept his silence on this question it would have been the hon. gentleman. I would like to ask him, he who talks about hypocrisy and hypocritical literature, what trait of his character he is exhibiting in regard to the attitude of the Minister of Justice on his anti-gambling Bill. I would like to ask him if he approves of that statement in that pamphlet in reference to the gambling Bill? Did he prepare these statements himself and send them out? The fact is that it is very apparent to every member of this House that the Minister of Justice got up in his place and was the means of defeating the Miller anti-gambling Bill, and, notwithstanding that, the member for Grey rises now to add his little quotation in the way of excuse for the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice waxed highly indignant at the very thought that his department should be regarded for one moment as the guardian of the other departments of the government. Well, Sir, we who have had the privilege of one or two short sessions in this House, and have had an opportunity of looking into the doings of this government, would sympathize with the Minister of Justice if such a burden were cast upon him, but I venture to think that after the display of the Minister of Justice this morning there are yet some departments of this government which would pray to be relieved of his guardianship. We have had ample evidence of the partisan disposition of the Minister of Justice, but it remained for himself to rise in his place in the House and to tell us that he, the head of that department which is supposed to be as far removed from political bias as it is possible to get a department, that he is a political partisan, and that he glories in the fact. The Minister of Justice made considerable out of the statement that one of the members of this House asked him to frank a bag of oats through the mail. I would have supposed that the Minister of Justice had refused to break the regulations and the law, but he went on to tell us that he did break the regulations and that he did the very thing, which as head of the Department of Justice, he should not have done. Imagine the head of the Department of Justice taking pride in the fact that he himself broke the law. What a nice Minister of Justice. Now, Sir, it is true, as the Postmaster General has said, that members of parliament and members of the government have the right to use the franking privilege, but the Postmaster General has not dealt fairly with the question, because after saying that members of the government send their mail matter out under regulations, he did not tell us that the regulations say: 'and frank as being of an official character.' The Postmaster General slid over that point. What the regulations do say is that this mail matter must be of an official character, and if it is not of an official character and the members of the government send it out under a frank then they stand convicted of violation of the laws they are supposed to maintain.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie). I do not rise to complain of the statement of the Minister of Justice that the Department of Justice of this country at the present time is on no higher plane than any department of the government, nor do I complain of the accuracy of his statement that it is administered under its present head by as violent a political partisan as there is in the government. But, Sir, I had understood until now that one of the functions of the Justice Department was to make clear to this House the real meaning of the law. To-day it has discharged that function by obscuring wherever it could the plainest possible law, and with the assistance of the Postmaster General endeavouring to befuddle the members of this House as to what the departmental regulations mean. Nothing could be clearer than what the law means; it does not need a lawyer to interpret it. Section 75 says that mail matter of any kind may be sent to or from members of parliament at any time during the session, and it does not matter what that mail matter is. The Minister of Justice tried to obscure the issue by implying that it was a violation of the law for a member of the House to frank a letter to one's father, but, of course, that is not so. There is no violation either of the spirit or the letter of the law in franking such a letter as that. It is also contained in section 75 that during recess matter may be sent at any time to or from departments of this government under such regulations as the Postmaster General provides. These words mean something or they mean nothing. They are a notification that the Post Office Department has authortiy to make regulations covering the sending of literature to and from the departments of this government, and the Post Office Department has made such regulations. Those regulations either mean something or they mean nothing. The Postmaster General, who I regret to say, departed from his usual custom and did not have the courage in this House to express his own convictions; the Postmaster General endeavoured meekly to reconcile himself with the attitude of the Minister of Justice in arguing that this regulation was beyond the power of the department. What a position for the Postmaster General to take.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I did not say it was beyond the power of the Post Office Department to enact regulations. I read the regulation, and I said there was no contradiction between the regulations and the statute. I might explain that the employees are warned not to mix their personal letters with departmental letters. I may add that in every department the letters are collected every afternoon and they are deposited in the ante-room of the deputy minister and only the frank of the deputy minister and the frank of the minister are used on the letters. No other franks are used in the department.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I perhaps did the Postmaster General too much justice in stating that he argued practically that this regulation was beyond the powers of his department to enact. But he did not conflict with the statement of the Minister of Justice that no regulation could obviate or get around the provisions of an Act of parliament, and he, therefore, conveyed the impression to this House that in his mind this regulation was ultra vires of his department. I say that the regulation is not ultra vires of his department, and that it is absolutely within the power of his department to make. The regulation says that during recess, mail matter may be sent out by the department if it is of an official character. Now, then, does it make or does it not make it clear that the matter sent out must be of an official character? If it does not mean that the matter sent out must be of an official character, the regulation means nothing whatever, and the Postmaster General knows it. If anything at all can be sent out by that department and franked by the department as 'official,' then the regulation might be just as well omitted altogether.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Mr. Speaker, by reading section 114 of the regulations in conjunction with clause 75 of the Act, it is made abundantly clear to every one, the regulation being within the power of the department, that to frank mail matter that is not departmental from the department at any time, whether during the recess, or during the session, is a violation of the law. It is abundantly clear, also, that to frank mail matter of any kind, departmental or otherwise, to a member during the session is not a violation of the law. That is just the difference. Now it is either right or it is wrong to send the literature quoted in this House as official matter. If it is departmental matter, it has a right to be franked as such, and it is not a violation of the law. If it is not departmental matter, it is a violation of the law to frank it as such, and send it out. Now from that position the Postmaster General cannot dissent, nor can any other person dissent. It is as clear as any section of law ever written that to frank out matter of that sort as departmental matter either during the session, or during the recess by a department is a violation of the law. It can be franked out during the session by a member of parliament, but it cannot be franked out even during a session by a department without violating the law, and it is violating the law with double clearness when it is so franked out during recess at which time it cannot be legally franked either by a member of parliament, or by a department. Consequently the Postmaster General is face to face with this position, that not a private man, not a mere private citizen, but the Liberal party of this House, and of this country is openly, under his eyes, violating the section that he is sworn to enforce. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the position the Postmaster General is in. But the situation is worse. What is the class of literature that is being so franked, and from whom does it emanate? In the first place the literature sent out in that way is an official leaflet of the Liberal party of Canada. It is the official organ of the Liberal members of parliament of this House. It is literature of which the government itself takes advantage, and seeks to take advantage. It is literature which it is hoped will help to re-elect hon. members opposite at the next election. That is its purpose; it has no other. Now, Mr. Speaker, to call that literature lies, is to award it undue euphony. The Minister of Justice is in his seat. The Postmaster General is in his seat. There are scores of Liberal members of this House in their seats, and there is not one of them who will stand in his place now and say that the references in that leaflet are not lies, deliberate lies. It is not only a lie, but a pernicious despicable lie of the worst character. It is not only deceit, Mr. Speaker, but cowardly deceit, and still the Minister of Justice rises in his place in the House, he knows it has been sent out, and sent out illegally, he knows he is as much the author of it as any other member of the Liberal party in this House, and still in the face of that he declines to repudiate it or to say one word against it in his speech on this matter. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice, I stated in the first place, endeavoured only to befuddle the House as to the law. The law could not be clearer. What did he say in endeavouring to obscure it? He said it was only a lax enforcement of the law that enabled him to write to his father, or to his son. The minister franking a letter to his father or to his son knows he is acting as much within the law as if he franked out an official letter from his department. The Minister of Justice knows it, and yet he added to the demerits of his defence by calling on the member from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) to explain the franking out of some oats some years ago. I can only gather two facts from that incident. The first one is that the hon. member for Macdonald not being a lawyer committed an illegal Act, and did not know he was doing it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN. And the second is that the Minister of Justice committed the same illegal act, and knew it was not only wrong, but illegal.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have it on the information of that hon. member himself (Mr. Staples) that before that bag was so franked, he told the hon. Minister of Justice that he did not want him to frank it if it was in violation of the regulations, and that he did not know until to-day that the franking of that bag of oats was a violation of the regulations. Now, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be truly said that the government of this country are changing their methods in any way. Like others whose principles are against society instead of with society, like the pirate and buccaneer who after long practice of their arts with impunity become reckless in the intoxication of their own success, this government is becoming bolder every hour. Only a short time ago we had the hon. Minister of Finance telling the House that the practice of the patronage system which has done more than anything else to demoralize the political life of this country, was one of the closest things to his own heart, and that the exercise of it was a lasting maxim of his political faith; and to-day when the Minister of Justice is brought face to face with a violation of the law, when he is face to face with a charge that in his own department, under his very eyes, and with his sanction, the law he is sworn to enforce is being violated, when he is further faced with the fact that his department is being prostituted for the basest of party ends, what is the answer he gives to the House? He tells us: I want you to understand that I am at the head of the Justice Department, and I am no statesman, I am a political partisan. Mr. Speaker, if there is one hon. member of this House whose position is less enviable in this matter than any other, it is the hon. member from Grey (Mr. Miller) who introduced the anti-gambling Bill. I supported the anti-gambling Bill. I believed at that time in the hon. gentleman's sincerity. His Bill received, I think, a majority of support from hon. members on this side of the House. The hon. member for Grey knows and has stated that his Bill was defeated by the speech of the hon. Minister of Justice, and yet that hon. member sits here and listens to a lying pamphlet, of which he is as much the author as any other member of this House, and which is intended for his advantage, and he declines to repudiate that pamphlet. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but he actually stands in his place in the House and notwithstanding the fact that the majority on this side of the House supported him he condemns them for their attitude in respect of this pamphlet. It will be of interest and importance to friends of what is called moral reform to watch the course of the hon. member from Grey this afternoon, and see if he does not affirmatively defend this pamphlet by his vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN.

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Solicitor General). Mr. Speaker, allow me to state at the outset that all reproaches or accusations made against the Postmaster General or the Minister of Justice are in my mind not well founded. This letter has been franked, as has been stated, with the frank 'Jacques Bureau.' I have never submitted my correspondence to the Minister of Justice any more than I have submitted it to the Postmaster General. I, and I alone, am responsible for this franking, and, in justice to both these hon. gentlemen, I assume the responsibility of the whole thing. Now, the charge is that a certain letter written to the newspapers has been franked from the Department of Justice. This letter has been franked, if I am to believe the envelope that stands as convicting evidence against me and which was produced by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) and read as evidence by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro), with the name 'Jacques Bureau' in the lower left hand corner. The hon. member for North Grey says that this letter bears the postmark Ottawa, 10th March, 1910. I think that on that date, Jacques Bureau, as a member of this House, had as much right to frank a letter as his Conservative friends have to frank the weekly letter that they send out. The letter inclosed in the envelope—I did not have time to read it carefully—appears to answer some charges made by the 'Mail and Empire.' This letter was mailed December 1, 1909, and on December 1, 1909, this House was in session, and I believe that, as a member of this House, I have as much right to frank the letter—as I have already said—as my hon. friends opposite have to frank their political letters.

Now, I admit that I did use my frank outside of the session. My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) may call it a 'raw bluff' or whatever he pleases. I used my frank outside the session, and, I claim, used it legally. Hon. members are trying to draw some very fine distinctions about the interpretation of section 75 of the Post Office Act. Now, this section is very plain. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) who is a lawyer, will admit that parliament is supreme and that no Postmaster General can curtail by order in council, any privileges that parliament has given. Now, under what statute do they complain? Under section 75 of the Post Office Act. This is a very old section. Turning to the origin of it, I find that, in 1867, at the time of Confederation, the Post Office Act covered a section having exactly this language the same language as section 75 of the present Act. In 1875, there was a consolidation of the Post Office Act. The same language is again used as is used to-day in the consolidated statutes. But, in 1875, the franking privilege of members was enlarged. Up to that time, books sent from the library to members of parliament during the recess, and by members back to the library, had to pay postage, but, in 1875, it was enacted that books transmitted under these conditions should be exempt from postage. I take it that this privilege has been granted to members of parliament because their position necessarily takes them from home and imposes upon them a multiplicity of duties which would not arise in their ordinary calling, thus creating a great deal of correspondence, and, as it is in the interests of the country that this correspondence should be carried on, it was thought wise to exempt members of parliament from the duty of paying postage. I take it also that if a minister of the Crown continues to use his privilege as a member of parliament during the recess under the same conditions as those during session, he ought not to be debarred from that privilege. It has been argued by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) that the regulations restrict the franking power of members of the departments. I say that, as I read the statute—I may be mistaken; it is a question of interpretation of law, and as I have said, I am not here to advise the House of Commons as to the meaning of the words of the statutes; I may have my own ideas about it, but there are only the courts to decide the case, and no man is bound to agree with me in my opinion; it would be useless to argue a question of law before a tribunal that could not decide upon it—I say that the words granting the privileges to the departments are the same as in the case of members of this House, except that in the latter case it is 'addressed to or by' and, in the former 'sent to or by.' Surely, hon. members opposite will not argue that the effect of the statute is to declare that the words mean that a member may send a thousand or a million letters free if he addresses them during the session or parliament with his own hand. The words must be interpreted fairly. And I claim that the Postmaster General, by regulation, cannot curtail any of those powers that are given by the statute, and he cannot curtail them any more in the case of members than he can in the case of the department.

Now, let me read the section again, that I may deal with one or two words in it specially.

All letters and other mailable matter addressed to or sent by the Governor General, or sent to or by any department of the government at the seat of government, shall be free of Canadian postage under such regulations as are from time to time made in that respect by the Governor in Council.

Now, we may have to come down, and discuss here what constitutes a department. As the Minister of Justice has said, in my position as Solicitor General, I do not consider that I am a deputy minister or a civil servant. I consider myself, as I might say, the joint head of the Department of Justice, so far as counsel work is concerned, with the Minister of Justice. It is frankly a partnership in which I join in the counsel work with the attorney general who has more extensive powers granted him by the statute. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) says that I have certain specified franking privileges by the order in council. Sir, I do not attach so much importance to that after all. I claim that I have the right to frank my letters, and that the order in council is only notice to the postmaster at Ottawa that he is to accept that frank. Would any hon. member on the other side say that he must have in his possession and ready to show to the conductor of a train the certificate of the clerk of the House of Commons in order that he may exercise his right to travel free on a railway train in Canada?

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. BUREAU. Of course not. The certificate is to facilitate matters; it is evidence to the conductor that the person presenting it is a member of parliament. So, this order in council can only be notice to the postmaster that the name 'Jacques Bureau,' is to be accepted as being the frank of the Solicitor General. This franking privilege, I claim, I get from the words of the statute itself. It is unfair to charge the Minister of Justice with breach of duty or anything wrong in this matter. The Minister of Justice stated plainly this morning that he did not know anything about this literature. If there is anything in the letter which I am accused of sending that is not matter proper for the mail, that is another accusation, and should be the subject of another debate, instead of a debate on the question whether, in my official capacity, I have gone beyond the privileges granted by law. I claim that those privileges cannot be curtailed. When you appeal to the regulations which may be made from time to time by the Postmaster General or the Governor in Council, I understand those regulations to mean that the Postmaster General or Governor in Council may limit the use of the privileges, may make a regulation for instance, that you cannot post a parcel that is beyond a certain size or beyond a certain weight. But I claim that the regulations of the Postmaster General do not limit the franking privilege of a member as long as he keeps within the words 'letters and mailable matter.' Supposing I had written a letter like that every week, and put my frank on it as Solicitor General, would hon. gentlemen say that I would be acting illegally? If they grant me the privilege of writing to my son or my mother, where are they going to draw the line?

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. gentleman argue that regulation 114 in all its parts is not within the powers of the Postmaster General?

Mr. BUREAU. I argue that the regulations made by the Governor in Council cannot curtail the privileges that are granted to me by section 75, chap. 66, of the statutes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. We all know that, but let the hon. gentleman answer my question. Does he argue that section 114 is beyond the power of the Postmaster General?

Mr. BUREAU. I am not discussing the power of the Postmaster General to make regulations, I am arguing from my point of view, and giving my interpretation of section 75, and why I have the right to frank that letter.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. gentleman refuse to answer whether, in his opinion, section 114 is ultra vires?

Mr. BUREAU. I said before, and I repeat, that I am not here to offer a legal opinion on any regulation or any provision of the statutes. First of all, it would be useless to argue the question with the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BUREAU. I see the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) applauding; I think it would be useless to give him especially my legal opinion. But let me go on. Whether I said it was beyond the power or the capacity of the Postmaster General, or within his power, would make no difference. The Postmaster General may make whatever regulation he chooses to make, and if he makes any regulation which I believe does not apply to me, I am not obliged to follow it. The Postmaster General may change a section of the statute, then it is all right. If he says all letters of an official character pertaining to the department, well and good, I have nothing more to say, I cannot object under the statute. But as long as the statute says, 'all letters and mailable matter', I contend that I am within that section of the statute. Consider the question on any ordinary reasonable ground. I have explained the reasons which I thought brought about the granting of this franking privilege to members. If, during the session, I can go to the post office here and, by writing 'Jacques Bureau' on the corner of a letter, I can send it through the mail, why can I not equally send it through the mail if I stop a hundred feet beyond the eastern block and put my name on the letter and deposit it in the post office? This letter that is complained of was franked during the session. Now some hon. gentlemen admit that there is no limitation to the franking privilege of a member of parliament.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The motion I offered is not based on matter franked during this session, it is based on a continued series of violations of the law.

Mr. BUREAU. I noticed that what was read this morning was franked on the 1st December, 1909; the envelope that was brought forward by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) was dated the 10th March, 1910. Now, this is only quibbling on words. There is no regulation that says you must frank your letters as member of parliament, or by a special frank. It is not enough to put M. P. without your name. Nothing in the statutes or in the regulations allow that. I ask where is the crime in writing my name in full on these two letters I have franked, and on that envelope the hon. member for North Grey has in his possession? Whether it was mailed from the eastern block or mailed from the House of Commons, makes absolutely no difference.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I did not produce that envelope as mailed during the session, but as proof that it bore the frank of the Solicitor General; that is why I produced it. And the same thing has been going on during the recess.

Mr. BUREAU. I never denied it. There was a question put on the Order Paper, and I stated the facts as they were, because I claim I am doing no wrong, I am doing what I have a right to do under the statute. Now, if this statute must be interpreted as the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) interprets it, then the Minister of Justice has no right to frank a letter to his father or to his son, because it is not of a departmental character.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The regulation does not say that it must be of a departmental character, but it says that if it is franked from a department during recess it must be of a departmental character. But here are letters franked during the recess with the initials of Jacques Bureau on them, and I say they are illegally franked if franked by Jacques Bureau as a member of parliament. They are illegally franked if franked by Jacques Bureau from his department unless they are of an official character.

Mr. BUREAU. That is where I take issue with the hon. gentleman. Where is he going to draw the line?

Mr. MEIGHEN. Where the regulations draw it?

Mr. BUREAU. Under the regulations, the Minister of Justice has no right to frank a letter to his father or to his son. The hon. member talks about the recess, but I make no distinction. As the Minister of Justice said this morning, according to the hon. gentleman's interpretation of the regulations, he would have no right to frank a letter to his father or to his son.

Mr. MEIGHEN. During recess.

Mr. BUREAU. Nobody disputes that. He has no right under the regulation to frank it during recess as a minister. Now, my hon. friend knows as a lawyer, and especially as a lawyer from the English provinces, where this is practised more than it is in the province of Quebec, that precedents go a long way in fixing the interpretation of a law. This law was passed, not by a Grit government with all its sins, but by a Tory government, in 1867. It has been in force ever since, and has never been changed. What was the interpretation given to the law at that time and ever since? Why, Sir, they did not only use their frank to send seventy-five or eighty letters a week, but there were regular clerks installed in the Eastern Block where, from the 1st of January to the 31st of December, political literature was franked and went out by the ton. If we cannot send a letter through the mail because it deals with political questions, what about the political literature sent from the other side? I say that a member of parliament has no greater privilege during the session in respect to franking, and it has never been intended by parliament to give him a greater privilege during the session at Ottawa, than it gives to the head of a department when he is at the seat of government, occupied the year round in the administration of public business. This question of franking is not new. If quantity and political character of the material sent out constitute an abuse of the franking privilege, I would refer hon. members to a question put to Mr. Mulock in 1896 in this House with regard to the franking privilege. It will be found at page 572 of 'Hansard' of 1896, second session. The question was as follows:

Mr. Pouliot asked:—Are the government aware that the election literature of the Conservative party, during the late election, was distributed throughout the country gratuitously?

Are the government aware that a certain leaflet intituled 'A Political Review' (of which 350,000 copies were struck off), singing the praises of the Conservative party, and the virtues of the Kootenay Cure, was distributed all over Canada through the channel of the post office of the House of Commons, franked with the initials: S.R., M.P.?

I do not know who 'S. R.' is.

Mr. HUGHES. Sam Ryckman.

Mr. BUREAU. He was not a Grit anyway.

Is it the intention of the government to inquire into the said charges and punish the guilty parties if they be true?

The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock). The government has been informed that election literature of the Conservative party was distributed free of postage through the mails during the recent election. Also that a certain leaflet intituled: 'A Political Review,' advocating the Conservative cause and the merits of the Kootenay Cure was distributed through the mails through the channel of the post office of the House of Commons, franked with the initials, 'S.R., M.P.,' and with initials of other members of the late House of Commons. Nothing has been determined as to what action, if any, may be taken.

That is an indication of the interpretation that has been given to that section of the statute ever since it was enacted in 1867. There was no action taken because it was assumed as a matter of course that it was within the privilege of a member of parliament to do it. My hon. friend the Postmaster General this morning made reference to the fact that at one time complaints were made by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Geo. Taylor) that the mails were not going out fast enough. There were bags and bags and bags of literature piled up in the halls. We could hardly get through. The corridors were full. It was not Liberal literature; it was Conservative literature. It was admitted then as it is admitted to-day that it is the privilege of a member of parliament to do that. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) laid special stress on the character of this literature. I hope he was acting from motives of public morality, and public interest, that he had no personal animosity against me, and that he would not like to see the Postmaster General haul up the Solicitor General under section 138, and have him pay a couple of millions fine, which everybody knows he could not do, and have, as the crowning of his political career as Solicitor General, to send him to the penitentiary for life.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Five years only.

Mr. BUREAU. No, that is the minimum. I suppose I would have to take my chances of the political proclivities of the jury which would try me, and as my opponents are very numerous in my riding I would be afraid of getting the maximum.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Justice would commute the sentence in a short time.

Mr. BUREAU. I hope he would because he is a man of sense. Well, Mr. Speaker, coming back to the question, I, as I said before, assume the whole responsibility for the franking of the letter, and it is a matter of evidence that a member of parliament has franked that letter. Nevertheless, I will not deny that I have done it, and it has not all been done during the recess. This is not the first that we have heard of this matter. The hon. member for New Westminster put some questions on the order paper, and they were answered, and answered honestly; only, I am sorry that this debate has given the chance to some members on the other side of the House to jump on the Minister of Justice, and accuse him of being guilty of all the crimes that the Criminal Code contains in its present provisions, and may contain in the future. I desire to declare here again that the Minister of Justice never was consulted by me, and I do not think I have to consult him or any other member of the government whenever I want to send a letter. Until the courts have shown that I am wrong in my interpretation of the statute I shall continue to maintain that view of it which I at present hold, and which I think is the fair and honest interpretation of the law. I did frank that letter, and as I said last year in the House I have absolutely no apology to make for it.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Solicitor General assume the responsibility for the substance or composition of the letter that he franked? In other words, was the article prepared in the Justice Department or was it prepared by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller)?

Mr. BUREAU. The hon. gentleman is too cute altogether. I assume the responsibility of affixing the frank 'Jacques Bureau,' in the corner of the envelope that carried that literature. I am going to be candid. I will confess that I did not see all of that literature.

Mr. HUGHES. I knew the Solicitor General would be candid.

Mr. BUREAU. Some of that literature that I did read I consider highly in the public interest and of a high moral character. There is another word I want to add with reference to something that was said this morning. The Minister of Justice said that he was a politician and a political partisan. Some hon. members on the other side seemed to be highly scandalized at that. They were horrified; they thought that was the most vicious statement they had ever heard. I ask, Mr. Speaker, in all candour, if there is an hon. member in this House, except, perhaps, my hon. friend from York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), who can stand up and say that he is not a political partisan. What are we here for? Why are there two sides to this House? Why do my hon. friends sit on the left of the Speaker and we on the right if there are no political partisans in this House?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will tell my hon. friend somebody who is not a political partisan. If he will look at the parliamentary guide he will find that the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard) is stamped there as Independent Conservative and surely no one could classify him as a political partisan.

Mr. BUREAU. I accept the brilliant interruption of my hon. friend. It just confirms what I say. Somebody got up and said that the member for Chicoutimi was not a partisan. I do not see where the harm is. What have we to be ashamed of? This country is run on political lines and there is no man who will step from his place and say: I am no longer a political partisan. I think that trying to impute a crime to the Minister of Justice for stating frankly, candidly and boldly the moral and political state of every man in this House is absolutely ridiculous. Not one of us can stand up here, except perhaps my hon. friend from Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard) and my hon. friend from York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) and truthfully say that we are not either Grit or Tory political partisans. What blame is there to the Minister of Justice for stating what he is, and which every other hon. member in this House would state if he wished to be candid? Now, if there is any blame to anybody in this transaction, I am in honour bound not to see it laid any longer on the shoulders of the Postmaster General or the Minister of Justice. If there is any crime to be hanged for I am the man who has got to hang. It would not be manly of me to shield myself behind my colleagues the Minister of Justice or the Postmaster General. I am not hypocritical about it. I say candidly that I franked these letters and I have given the House my reasons for it. No doubt, there may be exaggerations in these letters, but I would like to know the political writer who never sinned in that way. These exaggerations, however, are not such as to render this literature immoral; why, the Tory papers are full of lies from the 1st of January to the 31st of December. We know that the people of Canada are a reasonable people; we know that the masses of the people have good sense; we know that they can apply their judgment to literature of this kind and select that which is good from that which is bad, according to their own taste. Both parties have to rely upon the judgment of the people, and we of the Liberal party feel that we are pretty safe in relying upon that judgment.

I submit Sir, that this amendment ought not to carry because it starts with the idea that there is 'continuing violation of the postal laws by forwarding through the mails a political printed circular letter free of postage under the frank of the Justice Department,' and that statement is not founded on fact. It is not the frank of the Department of Justice that is used. I was very particular about that. The frank of the Department of Justice is the frank of Mr. Newcombe, the deputy minister, and I do not think any one can produce a political letter of any kind that was sent through the mails with Mr. Newcombe's frank which is used exclusively for departmental matters. I say, Sir, that this frank is my personal frank as a member of parliament during the session, which privilege I claim continues under this Act to a man who presides over a department, who resides at Ottawa, and who has to transact extra correspondence on account of his official duties. For my part I will not submit to the Postmaster General or to the Minister of Justice what letters I may send through the mail. I have too much respect for myself to send through the mails anything of an immoral character or anything that would be prohibited, and, when I have any mail matter to frank, my conscience is the only judge as to whether I am within or without the limits of the law. I acted in good faith in the interpretation which I gave to clause 75 of the statute. I am free to admit that I do not always read the letters that I frank, but I would remind hon. gentlemen opposite that these letters are not printed at the cost of the department, and the paper is not bought at the cost of the department, and they don't cost the deputy a penny; all of which is contrary to the practice which prevailed in the good old days of the Conservative government. My hon. friend from New Westminster was very careful when he put his question to ascertain if the old system was still in force, and whether the letter was paid for by the department, and the answer was: No, and never was. The only loss to the country in this case has been the use of the frank 'Jacques Bureau' on 75 or 80 letters weekly.

Mr. GLEN CAMPBELL (Dauphin). I would not have addressed the House on this occasion were it not that I am afraid that the bag of oats of which the Minister of Justice has spoken would grow into a carload, if we are to judge by the tissue of lies which is contained in this pamphlet circulated under the frank of the Department of Justice. Then again, the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller) saw fit to accuse gentlemen on this side of the House of hypocrisy in connection with their vote on the resolution of the hon. member for Souris. Well, if there is any man in this House who should not mention the word hypocrisy it is the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Miller) after the manner in which he bamboozled this House with respect to what he is pleased to call the Miller Bill. That is the gentleman who rises to defend the Justice Department for franking this lying sheet through the country. I think I can truthfully say that there are more lies in this sheet to the square inch than ever could have emanated from Ananias, who in his day was the champion liar of the world. Hypocrisy forsooth. Look at his Bill and look at his management of it in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member cannot depart from the discussion of a question before the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I bow to your judgment, of course, Mr. Speaker, and I take it as a compliment that when the hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) referred to any old subject he liked, he was permitted to do so.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is a custom of the House that passing allusion may be made to another subject, but no question can be discussed except that which is before the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I suppose this campaign letter is pertinent, and I want to bring some of its contents to the notice of some of my hon. friends on the other side who stood with me in fighting for decent government on race-tracks.

Liberals' attempt to stop race-track gambling obstructed by Tory race-track owners.

That is the heading, absolutely misleading, absolutely a lie, as hon. gentlemen opposite know. I think it would be only fair of the hon. gentlemen who stood with me and voted against the Miller monstrosity, voted for good legislation, legislation that was for the benefit of honest racing, of horse breeding, of the general morality of the public——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. gentlemen seem to object to my speaking of the general morality of the public. I think it is only fair that hon. gentlemen opposite should voice their opinion with regard to such stuff as this which has been sent out, franked by the department of the Minister of Justice. Stones have been thrown at the Minister of Justice with regard to the manly stand he took upon what I have referred to as a monstrosity. For once in my life I approve of what he voiced on that occasion. He was then taking a stand which he does not often take, an absolutely non-partisan stand and a manly stand, because he was not afraid to voice his opinion. When he did that I have no hesitation in saying that he had my admiration, as he does not have it when he takes the party stand he has taken to-day. Unfortunately in this sheet I see in smaller type another lie, an absolute lie:

The government introduced an amendment and it is strenuously opposed by leading Tories.

That is with regard to this Miller Bill so-called. I think, Sir, it is only right for hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, who think as I do, to condemn the Department of Justice for franking such absolutely lying literature as this. All we on this side ask, all that I ever ask is what I am always ready to give, fair play and a square deal. We are ready to support what we think is good legislation, and when a matter of this kind comes up it is only fair that we should ask hon. gentlemen to support us and give us a square deal, as we are willing to give them at all times. I had intended to go into this matter of hypocrisy at some length, but as it is not pertinent to the question, I shall have to postpone it to some other occasion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I have been especially appealed to by the Postmaster General with regard to the interpretation of the section in question, I deem it my duty to say a few words. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice seemed inclined to pass some reflection on the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) suggesting at least if he did not distinctly assert, that it was a very small matter to bring a subject of this kind before the House. I do not think that in respect of a question such as this, involving a principle, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) is liable to such an imputation, and I would be inclined to suggest that even if that imputation could be cast on the hon. member for New Westminster, perhaps his action may be favourably compared with that of the Minister of Justice in bringing forward that wonderful story of his about the bag of grain. If the imputation of small talk is to be cast on any hon. member, the Minister of Justice might seriously consider which of these hon. gentlemen is the more subject to that imputation.

The Postmaster General and all members of the government who have spoken on this question have taken a somewhat different ground from what I heard them take before. On previous occasions they were rather apologetic in regard to this matter. The Solicitor General, I remember, once was rather inclined to defend this on the ground that it was an old practice. I am not prepared to dispute that; it may have been an old practice, but the fact that it is an old practice does not necessarily make it a good practice, at least in the judgment of the Solicitor General. I do not suppose that the conduct and the methods of the Conservative administration before 1896 are the highest ideals to which the Solicitor General aspires, at least I have never so understood up to the present time. However, he has on previous occasions sought to take refuge behind this. The Postmaster General has attempted to do the same thing, but after all it does not seem to me that that suggestion assists us very much in coming to a conclusion upon the resolution proposed by the hon. member for New Westminister (Mr. J. D. Taylor).

All the ministers who have spoken upon this question have referred to section 75, which reads:

All letters and other mailable matter addressed to or sent by the Governor General, or sent to or by any department of the government at the seat of government, shall be free of Canadian postage under such regulations as are, from time to time made in that respect by the Governor in Council.

Taking that in connection with section 114 of the regulations, I have no hesitation in expressing my opinion that it was perfectly competent to make regulation 114, and that that regulation is wholly intra vires of the authority that made it. The Solicitor General introduced a very unhappy illustration from his standpoint. I am perfectly well aware, and every hon. gentleman who is a member of the bar is well aware, that the power to regulate does not involve the power to destroy. That has been settled by courts of last resort, both in this country and in Great Britain. The power to regulate does not involve the power to destroy, but it means something. Take the very illustration suggested by the Solicitor General. He says that a member of parliament has the right, by statute, to be carried without charge on the railways of this country, and even if he had not in his possession the identification card which is presented to him every year by the clerk of the House he would still have the right so to be carried. I agree with that. But suppose that the statute had provided that every railway in this country is bound to convey members of parliament subject to such regulations as the Governor in Council shall prescribe, and suppose the Governor in Council had prescribed as one of the conditions that every member should have in his possession an identification card signed by the clerk of the House, that would be regulating and would not be destroying. I take the illustration suggested by the Solicitor General, and I say it is the strongest argument that can be urged against the contention he has made. So far as that matter is concerned, section 114 is absolutely intra vires of the authority which made it, and until to-day I have never heard any contention to the contrary.

Now let us look for a moment at the language of section 75, leaving out the immaterial words. 'All mailable matter,' I take that because it includes everything else, 'all mailable matter sent by any department of the government at the seat of government shall be free of Canada postage under such regulations as are from time to time made in that respect by the Governor in Council.' Well, in the first place what is the regulation? The regulation as I have it in this book issued by the authority of the Post Office Department is this:

All letters and other mailable matter sent by the public departments at Ottawa and franked as being of a departmental character, all correspondence addressed to the ministers in charge of the said departments or to their private secretaries, or to the deputy heads or secretaries of the same, or to any recognized branch or division of a department are to be carried free of Canadian postage.

I invite the attention of the House in the first place to the fact that the hon. gentlemen upon the treasury benches with the exception of my hon. friend the Solicitor General who alluded to this point, entirely overlooked the exact terms of section 75. Section 75 provides that mailable matter may be sent by the department, and the regulation says it must be franked as departmental matter. Is there any doubt about that? Well, then the question for the consideration of the House is simply this. Were these letters sent by the department and were they franked as departmental matter? That is all. Is there any question——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is not the minister part of the department?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister is part of the department. He is the head of the department, but he is not the department. But in this case the minister did not do it, the Solicitor General did not do it. They absolved the department absolutely from any responsibilities whatever in connection with it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me. I do not want to interrupt him unduly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He can interrupt me as much as he likes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The frank of the Minister of Justice in the case of the Solicitor General, I mean the personal frank of the Minister of Justice, is not needed by the order in council passed two or three years ago. The Solicitor General was given a personal frank as part of the Department of Justice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not care what frank was given to the Solicitor General or to any other person associated with the Department of Justice. The statute provides simply two things, one that the matter to be franked must be departmental matter, and in the next place it must be sent out by the department. It is impossible to gainsay that position. There are the clear words of the statute and of the regulation for the consideration of my hon. friend the Postmaster General. Is this departmental matter? The Postmaster General, the Minister of Justice, and the Solicitor General have declared upon their responsibility as ministers of the Crown that the department has absolutely nothing to do with this letter, that they do not know what it is, that they have no conception of its contents. They desire to disassociate themselves from it absolutely, and I congratulate them upon their good taste. They say this has nothing to do with the department. I would like to ask the Postmaster General this. Suppose the Solicitor General or any other official connected with the department sent out a pill advertisement, a patent medicine advertisement, by hundreds of thousands under the frank of the Solicitor General or the Postmaster General, does he say that they would be justified under the terms of this statute and regulation?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He would not. I would like to know on what higher plane he would put this political letter.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend can surely draw a distinction between political matter and pill advertisements.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my hon. friend the Postmaster General point out to me the words of the statute which distinguish between a party political letter and a patent medicine advertisement? I would like to see the language of the statute which makes any such distinction.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend will allow me, I stated this morning, and I call to my assistance, if I need any in the present debate, the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. J. Haggart). I stated this morning that the statute was very clear, giving members of the House of Commons, during the session, and ministers of His Majesty at all times, during recess, as well, the privilege of franking their letters. My hon. friend relies upon the regulations of the department. Regulation 114 states that letters and other mailable matter sent out by public departments at Ottawa and franked as being departmental matter, enjoy the franking privilege. I explained, I think, and I call to my assistance the hon. gentleman who was long in the government before my time, the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), what was the object of that regulation? It was enacted by the Post Office authorities at the time to prevent the civil servants, the officials of various departments, from abusing the franking privilege, which appertains to the heads of the department and to the department itself. I do not want to take up time, but I stated this morning that it was found that officials were abusing the franking privilege, that they were franking letters for outside parties, and that is why the old government, with which my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) was formerly connected, enacted that regulation 114. I may say I had that confirmed by the deputy minister a moment ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the plain words of this statute and of this regulation are to be interpreted upon any conjectural remarks of my hon. friend the Postmaster General.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I beg pardon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I say I am not aware that the words of the statute are to be interpreted upon any such conjecture as that offered by my hon. friend the Postmaster General. I take the words of the statute, and I shall repeat them again. The statute says that mailable matter may be sent out by the departments, and that matter so sent out by a department if it is to be carried free of postage must be departmental matter. I say so far as this letter is concerned, the department has absolutely denied that it did send it out as a department, and I say that every minister who has spoken on this matter has absolutely denied that this letter is of a departmental character. Then, I say the question falls. There is no more argument about it. There has been a persistent and plain violation of the statute and of the regulation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let me put a question to my hon. friend. I ask him as a very eminent lawyer, would he say, putting his reputation at stake, that I as Postmaster General writing a letter to my son during recess could not frank that letter?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will come to that. I was about to come to that when the Postmaster General asked the question. I say that under the strict terms of the statute and regulation, he has not that power. but in respect to trivial and casual matters of that kind no one in this House would think of raising any question. But it is not of that we are complaining. We are complaining of a system carried on deliberately from day to day and from week to week throughout the year by which the campaign literature of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House has been carried free of postage through the mails in absolute violation of the law of this country. My hon. friend the Postmaster General, and my hon. friend the Solicitor General, ask if letters are to be opened. What a paltry argument that is. Of course, letters are not to be opened, not letters of a department or of members of parliament. But, when we have the clear and explicit declaration of my hon. friend the Solicitor General that this practice is carried on systematically, day after day, week after week, and year after year, it does not come to a question of whether we shall open letters, but to a question whether this House shall or shall not pronounce its condemnation of a systematic violation of the law of this country, concurred in, I am sorry to say, by the Postmaster General.

There is really nothing further to say on the question, it seems to me. Where is my hon. friend to draw the line? He says that patent medicine advertisements cannot be sent out. If the Solicitor General were to persist in using his frank for such a purpose, and made a declaration on the floor of this House that he had done so in the past and intended to do so in the future, I presume my hon. friend the Postmaster General would feel compelled to take some steps in the matter. Again, I say, as between that and the literature that has been sent out, I can see absolutely no difference, so far as the interpretation of this statute and of this regulation is concerned. It is impossible to conceive that one can be within the statute and the other without the statute; they are exactly on the same plane. The statute, I again repeat demands that this franking privilege shall only be exercised by the department as such, and in respect of mailable matter of a departmental character, and as to both these characteristics my hon. friend the Postmaster General has admitted that the statute and regulation have not been complied with. I suggest, therefore, to the Postmaster General, with a view to correcting this evil and discharging that duty to the public which he undertook when he assumed the seals of office, that he should accept the resolution of my hon. friend from New Westminster, and put a stop to this practice which has been carried on during the past eight or ten years.

Mr. PATERSON. I desire to ask the hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) a question, not with a view to controversy, but for explanation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. PATERSON. The discussion is as to what is proper during the recess. The departments receive many letters—and this exemption includes letters sent to, as well as sent by, the department. Letters come addressed to the minister or to the department which may not be on departmental business at all—they may be political letters. How are you going to deal with that? Is that ruled out under the section?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If they are not really on public business of a departmental character, they cannot properly come under the provisions of the statute. I know that awkward cases may be cited, possibly cases that are inconsistent with the usage established in the past. I am not concerned with that; I am taking the plain words of the statute, and the regulation. The minister (Mr. Paterson) has asked me a fair question and I desire to answer it fairly. Under the words of the statute, it seems to me, unless matter can be described as of a departmental character, and unless it is sent out by the department as such, it cannot go free in the mails. You cannot go further than that. But, as respects trifling and trivial instances, no one would think for a moment of raising any question. It is only when there is a regular, organized system of what I hold to be a violation of the Post Office law carried on by a department of the government, that the question is raised in this House. I think that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) if he were satisfied that there was a violation of the law, would be as anxious as I am to see it brought to an end.

Mr. PATERSON. I am not asking questions in a controversial spirit. But letters of all kinds come to the departments. They might be letters on things which could not be called departmental. Would that be considered a violation of the law?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I have said, I think that the terms of the statute do not cover mail matter of that kind. But I say that such trifling instances are not worth talking about in this House. I am talking of the terms of the statute, and the regulations as I find them, and am giving what I sincerely believe to be the true interpretation.

Mr. CONGDON. Clearly, under the terms of the resolution itself, there is nothing before the House to justify the acceptance of the resolution, for it speaks merely of passing through the mail political matter under the frank of the Department of Justice, and there is no evidence of any such political matter having gone through the mail under the frank of the minister or of the department—there is only the frank of the Solicitor General, as admitted by himself. I think it is admitted on all sides that there is no limit to the right of a member to transmit and receive, free of postage, mailable matter during the session of the House, and any regulation made either by the Governor in Council or by the Postmaster General under authority of the Postal Act limiting in any way the right of members to send mailable matter—regardless of whether that matter relates to politics or to anything else—is beyond the power of the Governor or the Post Office Department.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) thinks that any member of the government who cites the practice of a government preceding the accession to office of the present government is endeavouring to take refuge behind something of which, apparently, he does not very much approve. But I think it is very material to this inquiry, and to all other inquiries of this kind to ascertain what has been the practice. I venture to say that it is unquestionably the fact that every minister of the government, from confederation down, has acted as though he, as a member of the government and head of a department, had in this matter, exactly the same right outside the session as a member of parliament has during the session. I say that the words of section 114 of the regulations do not limit that at all, but merely express what shall be accepted by the postal authorities as that which is to be accepted free of postage from the departments. From time immemorial what has come from a department under the frank of the head of the department is a matter in respect of which the Postal Department makes no inquiry, and I say that under this section there is no endeavour to limit that right—and if there were it would be ultra vires of the power of the government. There is nothing clearer than that the power to make regulations must be construed strictly, and that such powers cannot authorize prohibition. There is no power, under any regulation made under the Postal Act either by the Governor in Council or by the Postmaster General, to limit in any way the matter which may be transmitted and received either by a member of this House or by a department of the government. The practice has been —and it seems to me a sound and sensible practice—to recognize in the heads of departments the exact rights during recess which are claimed during session by the members of this House. The regulation, I think, can be very well read in that way. One can easily interpret section 114 not as limiting the class of mail matter which can be sent by any of the departments. It comes from the department, and goes through the post office, as a matter of course. I say there is nothing unreasonable in the practice, from confederation down to the present time, of a minister having the right to frank any matter which he chooses the same as a member of this House during the session. It seems to me there is great danger, in the case of certain members of this House, of their goodnes growing to plurisy. I do not think any thing can be more inconsistent than an endeavour to draw fine lines in regard to these matters. The Solicitor General referred to an instance of 1896. It may not be amiss to refer also to something that occurred previous to the election of 1904. In consequence of the mailable matter which had accumulated—matter of a purely campaign character; the corridors of this building, as has been mentioned, having been filled with it—the threat was made that this House should be held up long enough to send that matter out, if the minister would not agree to send it out afterwards. And it was sent out after the House rose, and it took two special trains with mail clerks and a cost of thousands of dollars to send that political matter through the length and breadth of this country. It seems to me that when the mail matter is of one political complexion it meets with no objection from our friends of the opposition, but if it is of another political complexion then they deem it very objectionable to frank. It seems to me reasonable that ministers out of session should have the same right which members have in session, and I do not think that any other practice is possible. If you proceed to limit the character of the mail matter which a member may send out, you would have to hold an investigation into the character of the matter, an investigation which would certainly be most objectionable and undesirable. I think the same objection would apply to limiting ministers, and that is the reason why that interpretation of the Act has been followed since confederation.

Mr. HUGHES. Had the character of this communication that has been brought before the House, been at all in the line of decency, I presume there would have been very little said about it. But it is of such a character that every member of the government who has spoken about it has repudiated all knowledge of it, and the Solicitor General has repudiated having anything to do with it.

Mr. BUREAU. I never repudiated it.

Mr. HUGHES. The Solicitor General said that he knew nothing about the subject matter.

Mr. BUREAU. I said I did not read it all.

Mr. HUGHES. Did the Solicitor General read this article that he sent out?

Mr. BUREAU. No.

Mr. HUGHES. Then I am correct in saying that he has repudiated having anything to do with the composition of this article.

Mr. BUREAU. Does my hon. friend mean to say that he repudiates everything he does not read?

Mr. CONGDON.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not sent out anything of this kind. But this is the point that I want to put before the House. A few years ago there was a great deal of campaign literature sent out by the Conservative party, and I sent out my share of it, but not one tithe of that literature ever reached its destination, owing to the refusal of the then Postmaster General to send it forward. That is what I rise to protest against. Not only did these gentlemen hold it up, but they actually robbed the mails, and I maintain that they left themselves open to criminal prosecution. They destroyed it by tons, I was going to say; at any rate, it was not sent forward, perhaps they sold it to raise funds for their own campaign literature. It was deliberately side-tracked, I purposely use the word 'deliberately,' it was side-tracked and destroyed. That was before the time of the present Postmaster General. I was informed that there were tons of that literature stored up in places here in Ottawa for some years after the elections were held. Now, when a person goes to the trouble of sending out respectable campaign literature, I think he has a right to require that it is conveyed to its destination. So far as the literature under discussion is concerned, I will not say anything except that the contents of the letter have been frankly repudiated by every respectable gentleman who has spoken on the matter to-day.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Reference has been made by the Postmaster General, and by the Solicitor General, and the member for Yukon (Mr. Congdon), to the state of affairs previous to the election of 1904; they stated that the corridors of the House were blocked by Conservative literature, and that two special trains had to be made up in order to take it forward. Let me inform you, Mr. Speaker, that the members of the Conservative party did prepare campaign literature previous to that election, they got it printed at Montreal, the envelopes were purchased there and addressed there, and each member paid his share of the expense. The literature came up here by express, and the members had the privilege of franking it just as members of the government had. But how was it done by members of the government and their supporters? Every day during the session, in the Department of Agriculture, in the Department of the Interior and in the Department of Justice, there was a staff of civil servants employed in addressing this Liberal campaign literature, and it was going out by the cartload, blocking the mails every day so that we could not get ours off. But there was this difference. Their literature was paid for by the country, the civil servants of this country were engaged in addressing it, and I saw it going out to the post office to be mailed, and the country paid for all that. But on our side we had to pay out of our own pockets all the expense, and when we tried to mail it we could not do so because the mails were blocked by the literature from the departments, the post office was blocked and was not able to receive our mail from the House of Commons. Those are the facts of the case. I was blamed for franking this literature. I franked a portion of it and sent it into some good Liberal constituencies. It was all moral literature, good religious literature.

Mr. BUREAU. I never blamed you.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. But reference has been made to it here by other members. The fact is that the blocking of the mails was done by hon. gentlemen opposite in sending out their literature at the expense of the country, when they employed the civil servants to address it, while on our side we paid all the expense ourselves.

Mr. J. HAGGART. A few words with reference to the clause of the Act which is under consideration by the House, because I think I was Postmaster General when that Act was passed. The Act was passed for the purpose of limiting as far as possible the abuses that were practised by the too free use of the franking privilege. Every civil servant under the government had the franking privilege, and it was decided to limit that privilege, and the limitation is clearly set forth in the law. No minister has a right to frank any document except departmental documents during recess. Why should that not be so? What right has a minister of the Crown to a greater franking privilege than I have? We are alike members of parliament elected by our constituencies, and what right has a minister at any time of the year to send out to the electors campaign literature which I or any other member should not also have? Because I am in opposition am I to be debarred from doing it? That is the gravamen of the offence of which we complain. If we had the right, we would allow these gentlemen to do the same thing. But we have not the right, and we ought to be on a par with them as to our rights in this House. Therefore we insist upon the law being carried out. It is all very well for hon. members to make remarks upon the intention of parliament, but we are dealing with the statute as we find it, and we have no right to judge of the intentions of those who passed the Act. Here is the law, it is applied to us, and we cannot send out literature a day or two after the session is closed; we are debarred from sending it to our constituents. What we complain of is not that they send it out, but that they are taking a privilege which the law does not give them, and which we are deprived of. Give us the same privilege as you have and we will make no complaints about it. All that we expect as representatives of the people is that we shall have the same right as you have. At present we have no rights during the recess. We insist upon our rights and that you shall not exercise a right which we are deprived of.

House divided on amendment.—Mr. J. D. Taylor.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Suppy.

Medical attendance, Indians, Ontario, $4,893.75.

Mr. U. WILSON. How many Indians in Ontario?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The total number of Indians in Ontario is 23,898. The numbers in each band are given in detail in the report of the Indian Department.

Mr. WRIGHT. What is the total Indian population of Quebec?

Mr. J. G. HAGGART.

Mr. OLIVER. 11,523.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then why is the vote for Quebec as large as that of Ontario with only half as many Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. The Ontario Indians are situated on cultivated and cultivatable land, and so do not come under the necessities which cause this vote, whereas in Quebec they are in much larger proportion not settled on such lands and therefore, are subject to the need of relief. The difference in the numbers of the Indians has really no bearing on the case.

Mr. WRIGHT. What is the method of procuring supplies, blankets, &c., for the Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. The supplies provided for under this relief vote are in all cases purchased by tender after public advertisement.

Mr. WRIGHT. I find many supplies purchased in Ottawa for Indians in British Columbia, and other western provinces. That must involve heavy transportation charges.

Mr. OLIVER. The tender prices for goods purchased under this vote are prices delivered at the railway station nearest the point where they will be used.

Mr. WRIGHT. In purchasing flour and such heavy goods, does one tender cover the whole Dominion or is there a separate tender for each separate place?

Mr. OLIVER. One advertisement is issued calling for the delivery of certain supplies at certain places. The tenders that come in are examined, and the man who tenders lowest for delivery at a certain place gets the contract for delivery at that place. It is not required that a man shall tender for the whole quantity in order to get any of it.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say that the same system is pursued as was followed by his predecessors.

Mr. OLIVER. In this case?

Mr. G. TAYLOR. There used to be a thick catalogue setting forth the articles required for the Indians, and copies of the catalogue were sent to the wholesale houses all over the country; is that the system that is pursued now?

Mr. OLIVER. That is the same system.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are all these Indians, treaty Indians? Have they all a claim on the government for supplies?

Mr. OLIVER. The condition varies in different parts of the country. This amount is to provide for the relief of distress, and there is no distinction under that vote between the Indian who receives annuity money and the Indian who does not.

Mr. WRIGHT. What is the reason for giving special grants to those chiefs?

Mr. OLIVER. These bands have not sufficient funds of their own. In administering the affairs of the Indians where there is a property to be disposed of, a fund is created for the benefit of the band, and out of the interest of that fund certain expenses of the band are paid. In the case of those particular bands, their funds are not sufficient to pay the usual allowance, and this vote is supplementary.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec—Surveys, $10,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. The same amount of surveys?

Mr. OLIVER. We have a survey staff whose time is employed in making surveys of reserves and working generally for the department. The surveys we propose to make with this money are at Fort Hope, Martins Falls, Fort Albany and Moose Factory. These are reserves in New Ontario where we took adhesion of the Indians about three years ago.

Mr. U. WILSON. How much of the vote did we spend last year?

Mr. OLIVER. We only spent $3,000 last year.

Mr. WRIGHT. This does not seem to be a revote then.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a new vote.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many acres were sold last year of Indian lands?

Mr. OLIVER. There were no lands sold in Ontario, and if my hon. friend would wait until we come to the western provinces, it would keep the discussion more in order.

Indian Land Management fund and province of Quebec fund, $10,000.

Mr. WRIGHT. What is the purpose of that?

Mr. OLIVER. Many years ago when the government of Canada took over the administration of Indian affairs it was thought possible that the exclusive management should be carried on out of Indian funds, and for a number of years an attempt was made to carry on the business in that way. The result was that the cost of management exceeded the yearly accruing revenue from the funds. The capital was being depleted by the cost of management, and if matters had gone on in that way the capital fund would have been exhausted. It was thought that that was not the proper way to carry on the business and at some period it was decided that the bulk of the cost of management should be voted out of the general treasury and that the money taken from the capital funds of the Indians should be returned to that fund. So every year we have voted a certain amount as the amount to be returned to that capital fund. I may say that at the rate we have been going the capital fund will soon be up to its original figure, and this charge will disappear.

Mr. U. WILSON. Are we using the interest that accumulates to pay other expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. The accruing interest is being used for the purposes of the Indians. We are not deducting from this capital, and not only so, but we are supplementing the interest——

Mr. U. WILSON. I did not make myself clear. I understood that this was not only to replace what had been taken, but also to defray the expenses of management.

Mr. OLIVER. This vote is simply to replace, year by year, a certain portion of the money that was taken. The interest has been spent from year to year, as it was originally intended it should be spent, but, instead of taking the shortage out of the capital, we ask parliament now to vote it, and not only so, but to make up the shortage that was created.

Mr. WRIGHT. There are two votes here: Indians land management and Quebec fund. What is the distinction?

Mr. OLIVER. The two are of the same nature. There was a special fund provided by the province of Quebec, and there was a fund provided for the management outside of Quebec. Both funds were dealt with in the same way and both suffered similar depletion, and we are making up to these funds in the same way year by year.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. There has been no change in this for many years?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The increase in the Indian population is very slight. But there are three hundred more officials than there were about fourteen years ago and the expense is greatly increased. A year or two ago the expenditure was $60,000 more than it had been a few years before that. Why should the expenditure increase in this way and the money be so extravagantly used?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend suggests that the expenditure is larger in proportion to the number of Indians than it was ten or twelve years ago. I have no doubt his statement is correct. The only answer we can make is that we are giving a better service to the Indians than in times gone by. With the development of the country we have been able to take new areas under treaty, and to assume responsibilities in regard to them. We are carrying out those responsibilities, mainly in relation to education—school education, and education in farming and industry—to a greater extent than in former years. In doing that we think we have not only the sanction, but the cordial approval of the public.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not wish to enter upon a controversy now, but I am afraid the minister (Mr. Oliver) is not fully acquainted with the facts. For instance, up to two years ago there had been an increase, only one in the number of school teachers in twelve years. If I had time I would like to show the condition of the Indian Department. I believe it is the duty of the Minister of the Interior to turn over the Department of Indian Affairs to some other minister who would have time to attend to it. I do not find so much fault with the minister. He has not only this Indian department to look after, but he has charge of immigration, public lands, homestead inspection, fire ranging and many other branches. It is impossible for one man to do all this. Yet he retains the Indian Department, in the face of the fact that other ministers of the Crown are going around practically looking for something to do. It is no wonder that he has such cases as that of the St. Peter's reserve brought before this House. It is no wonder that charges are brought before this House such as I made two years ago, when I showed that out of 620,000 acres of Indian lands, 500,000 acres had been sold at an upset price fixed by the department. That means nothing else than that the price was fixed by the deputy minister. And after the sample of work done by the deputy minister, I think it would be wise for the minister to take into consideration whether he is capable of handling the department, or if it is not time he should look about and get another man in his place. The minister speaks for the good work done for the Indians on educational lines. Does he want me to show the condition of the Indians in the United States and the splendid, uplifting work that is going on among the Indians of that country as compared with what is being done in Canada? The minister tells us that the Indians own $32,000,000 of property. Yet we find that there are 3,167 cases of tuberculous diseases. What is being done for them? And the physicians in charge of 41,000 Indians did not report at all—about half the physicians employed under the present deputy. I could take up hours of the time of this House with instances of this kind.

Mr. TOLMIE. Go on.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tolmie) would like to hear reasons for condemning the work of the Indian Department, I could give him facts to show that the department is carried on in a most careless, indifferent, and I might say, corrupt manner. The minister has had these matters called to his attention time and again. But, instead of taking hold of the department or allowing some other minister to do so, which I claim is his duty, he still continues to attempt the task, which is evidently beyond him, of managing all the affairs placed in his charge. I call the minister's attention to these matters as showing that the money is being recklessly spent.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think the hon. member (Mr. Armstrong) is warranted in making general assertions that money has been recklessly spent, and that the department is improperly and corruptly managed. These are easy things to say without attempting to bring evidence in support of them. I think I have some knowledge of the management of the Indian Department, at least in my riding. I happen to represent a district comprising nearly one-half the area of the province of Ontario, in which the greater portion of the Indian population of that province reside. And I am prepared to say that, in my judgment, the business of the Indians is well and honestly managed. I am prepared to say that there is a great improvement in the educational facilities afforded the Indians now over what there was even a few years ago. There are new buildings and new equipment, sanitary conditions are improved, and the position of the Indians generally improved. It is a very difficult thing to carry out the work efficiently, as it is there is an improvement upon the conditions of some years ago. Affairs are better managed than they were formerly. I am not finding fault with the past, but I think I have some knowledge of the matter, and my opinion is that there is a vast improvement on these lines.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am satisfied the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) is not acquainted with the matter at all. I went into the facts two years ago, and placed before the House statistics which went to show that out of 620,000 acres of land, tens of thousands of acres had been sold at ten cents and fifteen cents an acre, that dozens of islands had been sold at $1 apiece. Does the hon. minister call that taking care of the Indian lands of the country? I have a return covering every acre of land sold, showing where it was located and to whom it was sold. I could bring that return again and show page after page of records of lands sold which even the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) would say were not sold at a right price. Why, in 1908, as I showed, there were some 3,000 Indians around James Bay who had not among them a single doctor or government official. There was a territory in Moosonee or Keewatin in which there were 10,000 Indians and not a government official amongst them. These are charges that have never been refuted, and that have been made time and again in this parliament.

Mr. CONMEE. These were not treaty Indians. They were not taken over by the department, and the government could hardly be held responsible for them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But if the hon. gentleman will investigate Indian affairs, he will find that the department has spent tens of thousands of dollars on non-treaty Indians.

Mr. CONMEE. They were not treaty Indians at that time in the sense in which they are to-day. As to the sale of lands, the lands were sold for the market price at the time. All the Indian lands are sold, so far as I know, by public competition after advertisement. The hon. member shakes his head. I am well aware that Indian lands have been sold otherwise, but not of recent years. The hon. gentleman thinks he made very important charges against the Indian Department a couple of years ago. I venture to say that he has not convinced anybody, in this House or out of it, that the charge was worth the paper it was written on, for the reason that the lands were sold at the market prices. I know of Indian lands settled by a previous administration on similar terms to those applying to free grant lands in Ontario. I speak of the Manitoulin island. This was an Indian reserve. It was in the public interest that the land should be settled. The Indians to-day are better taken care of than they would have been if they had held it, because they have been furnished with industrial schools and industrial works, have been given an education and taught trades. The result is that they have advanced in intelligence and civilization to a very great extent as compared with ten or fifteen years ago. It is a very easy thing to find fault. I do not pretend to say that this department, or any other department, has not made mistakes, but I do say that it is unfair for the hon. member (Mr. Armstrong) to make such strong and sweeping charges as he has made without any evidence to back them up. Those charges are not true so far as Ontario is concerned.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. According to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Conmee's) own argument, he knows only very little of a small portion of this question of the Indians. He has not investigated the Indian report, I venture to say he has not looked through it, yet he says that everything is going along smoothly. The hon. gentleman is the very man that will stand by this government in every bit of trickery and corruption that is carried on in the parliament of Canada. He stood up no doubt for the St. Peter's reserve. Does he really think that was a straight forward business-like transaction? Does he think that when the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) brought up that charge last year in regard to Indian lands, does he think that also was a straight forward business-like transaction, and carried through for the benefit of the Indians? Then the sale of 620,000 acres I referred to. The hon. gentleman knows full well that those lands were not put up and disposed of by auction in a proper way, a large portion of those lands was disposed of either by private sale under the Indian agent, or at an upset price fixed by the department, that is to say, fixed by the deputy head.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman is not justified in saying that I have not looked into the Indian reports. I do not profess to have examined all the Indian reports, but I have more or less knowledge of their contents. Now, the hon. gentleman said that the Indian lands referred to by the member for Algoma were sold at an upset price and without advertisement. What lands, and where?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have a list of them, a stack of them several inches high.

Mr. CONMEE. Then the hon. gentleman refers to the St. Peter's reserve in the vicinity of Selkirk, and wants to know if I think I was justified in voting on that question as I did. I want to tell him that I do. In my opinion that was a business-like transaction, carried out in the interest of the public and in the interest of the Indians themselves. I know the local conditions of Selkirk better than my hon. friend does, and I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion that transaction was in the pubilc interest, and will be and is already proving to be in the interest of the Indian themselves. It is better for them to be away from the surroundings in which they were placed.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why not then send them away in Ontario?

Mr. CONMEE. Well, I think they should be. I think that what the minister has done at Selkirk he should have done on the Rainy river. The condition of the Indians there is even worse, and the party to which my hon. friend belongs is responsible for it, and I will tell him why. In the days when the ownership of the territory was in dispute, when it became known that they were not to have control of the land, the Conservative government at Ottawa surveyed out a large number of reserves in that section of the country—

Mr. G. TAYLOR. What has this to do with the item?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think it is sufficiently relevant to the Indian land management to be allowed.

Mr. CONMEE. —which the Indians did not require, and upon which no Indian has yet settled. There is a large block of wild land reserves at the mouth of the Rainy river, and there has never been a family of Indians on it to this day, and the whole country for nearly a hundred miles is cut up by several other reserves. Does the hon. gentleman say that that is in the public interest or in the interest of the Indians? I listened to the debate on the St. Peter's reserve, and I heard the arguments put up by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I was not convinced that that was not an honestly carried out transaction. It was absolutely necessary for the officials of the department to go there and act as they did act, if there was to be a surrender made. I heard nothing to convince me that there was any undue pressure brought upon the Indians to surrender their reserve. I believe they were left perfectly free to vote as they chose. There is no political object to be served by hon. gentlemen opposite in making these strong assertions. I was going to say ridiculous assertions, of dishonesty, corruption, deceit, wrong-doing, maladministration. It is easy for any one to make these charges, but my hon. friend is not building himself up, he is not advancing the reputation of his party in the country, but he is rather pulling it down when he makes charges for which there is no foundation. The facilities afforded by this parliament for affording investigation are open to every member, and when he makes a charge of that character he has the means at his disposal of proving it. I think if I were sitting on the opposition side of the House, I would not be content with making assertions and reading a few affidavits extracted from Indians, drunk or sober; I would endeavour to furnish something better than that, I would avail myself of the machinery afforded by parliament to prove my charges or seek investigation otherwise.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec, general legal expenses, $13,500.

Mr. WRIGHT. That seems to be a large sum of money to pay in legal expenses.

Mr. OLIVER. The amount is large, but it is the same amount as was voted last year. It is much larger than was formerly voted. The ordinary legal expenses which are incurred in the enforcement of law in regard to reserves run to $3,000 or $4,000 a year. The reason this vote is so large is because we had to secure the settlement of the long outstanding and very celebrated Oka Indian case, in regard to a reserve on the Ottawa river. It perhaps would not be of advantage at this stage of the session to go into the details of the case, but it is a very celebrated question, and, some years ago, when matters had come to rather an acute stage it seemed to me that the best thing to be done was to get the case before the Privy Council, and get a final decision upon it, because no decision short of that would be final or acceptable to either parties to the dispute. We have, therefore, instituted proceedings and will carry the case to the Privy Council, and $10,000 of this amount is in regard to the Oka Indians case. There has been one decision. The first decision has been handed down by the court at Montreal and proceedings are now being taken to have the case carried to the court of appeal from which it will be carried to the Privy Council, and we hope to get a final settlement of the question.

Mr. WRIGHT. The small band of Indians in the riding I represent are interested in some degree with regard to the Oka Indians. I do not know whether their phase of the dispute comes under the case that will be submitted to the Privy Council, or whether a final settlement has been made as to what their rights are. I think their claim had something to do with timber. I would like to know what is the position of this band in regard to the Oka dispute. Requests have been made to me from time to time to look into the matter, but I have found it difficult to ascertain the exact position. I shall not take up the time of the committee now, but I will make private inquiries in the department.

Mr. OLIVER. The settlement in my hon. friend's constituency of some of the Oka Indians is the result of an effort which was made to settle this difficulty, and some years ago an arrangement was entered into whereby it was hoped that the Indians, who were contesting for the ownership of the reserve at Oka, would take land in the township of Gibson. Some of them agreed to do so, but others refused to move, and it is in regard to the settlement of the land rights of those who remained that the case has been entered. Those who removed to the township of Gibson did so with the understanding that they exchanged their land rights in Oka for the land rights which they secured in Gibson, but their right to a share of the band fund still remains. They are entitled to a share in the fund of the Oka band, and as a matter of fact do now receive their share. They are dealt with otherwise the same as other Indians. There may be some other matter in dispute that they are not satisfied with, but that is the principle one upon which we are dealing with them.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand that they are not receiving any money in a general way like the other tribes. I do not know what the minister means when he says that they do receive their money.

Mr. OLIVER. They are not receiving any cash. The fund of the band is very small, and there are certain expenses which are taken out of that fund for the benefit of the two separated sections of the band—those at Oka, and those at Gibson. They are dealt with, in so far as the funds are concerned, on just the same footing as those of Oka. The Auditor General's Report for 1908-9, at page 116—I, shows that they have a balance at their credit of $4,-835.32. That is their capital, and of course the interest on that is spent from time to time for the necessities that arise. It is a very small amount.

Indians—Nova Scotia—repairs to roads and dyking, $450.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There is an increase.

Mr. OLIVER. This is for improving roads that pass through the Indian reserves, and the work is done on the reserves.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Is that work done by the Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would like to ask the minister whether in some cases this is taken out of the Indian fund or is always a grant from the government. I suppose that some of these Indian bands are quite wealthy, and that they have plenty of money to make their own roads. Last year a sale was made of the timber upon the reserve on the French river, and the proceeds ran up to somewhere over a million dollars. The average Indian will be much wealthier there than the average white man, and some discrimination should be made under these circumstances with regard to road making. The wealthy Indians should make their own roads while the poor ones should be taken care of to some extent.

Mr. OLIVER. Where a band has a fund which can be used for this purpose the fund is used, but in this case this band had no fund, or whatever fund it has is so very limited that it would be simply using it up. We, therefore, have to give these Indians money for improvements or the improvements cannot be undertaken. It is not considered to be in the public interest that a road, where it passes through an Indian reserve, should be in an impassable condition.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. You allow them to earn the money by doing the work?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. On one side of the Kettlepoint Indian reserve is the village, and on the other side is a farming district, and for the last two or three years the road around the lake in the reserve has been impassible and a long detour has to be made to get to the other side. There is a summer resort at the reserve also, and I hope the minister will repair that road.

Mr. OLIVER. A note will be taken of what the hon. gentleman said, and we will look after it.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 190) to incorporate the Gatineau and Ungava Railway Company.—Mr. Devlin.

Bill (No. 201) for the relief of John Green.—Mr. Edwards.

Bill (No. 202) for the relief of James Thornton Brownridge.—Mr. Blain.

SECOND READING.

Second reading of Bill (No. 215) to incorporate the Buctouche Railway and Transportation Company.—Mr. Carvell.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Indians—salaries—New Brunswick, $1,958.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $500.

Mr. OLIVER. That provides for an increase in the salaries of the three superintendents in New Brunswick as follows: R. A. Irving, from $500 to $800; James White, from $350 to $450; and G. E. Baxter, from $250 to $350. The explanation is that we do not think that the salaries have been reasonable for the time taken in connection with the work.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. How many Indians are there in New Brunswick?

Mr. OLIVER. 1,861.

Indians—salaries, relief and seed grain, medical attendance, &c.—Prince Edward Island, $4,650.

Mr. HENDERSON. How many Indians are there in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. OLIVER. 276.

Mr. HENDERSON. Were there Indians down there originally?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, their reserve is on an island off the mainland; Lennox island.

Wharf — Lennox island, Prince Edward Island, $2,500.

Mr. OLIVER. The Indians there have to communicate with the mainland to sell their produce. The old wharf has gone out of value, and this is part payment of the cost of a new wharf, the other part being put up by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Does this complete it?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Are these Indians farming on their lands?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, they farm, but in a small way.

Mr. WRIGHT. Are any efforts being put forth to make good citizens of them, to induce them to take up their lands separately?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think so. The effort of the department has been to improve their condition as Indians, that is to say, to induce them to cultivate their land and to become self-supporting.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Are they nearly self-sustaining?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, these people are.

Mr. WRIGHT. It seems to me that the efforts of the Indian Department ought to be directed along that channel. If we are ever going to assimilate the Indian population, it will have to be done in that way. I do not think the case is hopeless. I might cite the case of a band of Oka Indians that went to the riding I represent. These Indians have their lands and they farm almost as successfully as the average white man. They are no burden on the community, and many of them are examples of what might be done with the Indians. I think a great many of the Indians would become good citizens of Canada with a little time and attention.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that it would be profitable to argue out that question just now. It is a very, very broad question. I merely stated what has been the policy of the department. These Indians cultivate in severalty and they own their land in community. As Indians, they have certain privileges. My hon. friend has placed before the House the suggestion that the Indians have less advantages than the white men. The Indian believes that by the terms of the treaty with him he has advantages over the condition of the white citizen, and it would not be merely a matter of getting the Indian to support himself, in which we have been successful, in a large number of cases, but of getting him to give up the special privileges, advantages and exemptions which he has as an Indian and which he would lose if he became a citizen.

Mr. WRIGHT. It seems to me that the experiment might well be tried in Prince Edward Island.

Indians — Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories—annuities and commutations, $172,000.

Mr. ROCHE. There is a decrease here of $1,200. Is that due to a decrease in the number of Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. It does not necessarily indicate a decrease in the number. There are commutations, and there are also failures to apply for annuities. We make the calculation that each year on these figures as well as on the number of Indians.

Indians—Manitoba, etc.—Live stock, $6,960.

Mr. ROCHE. How are these animals purchased?

Mr. OLIVER. The principal purchasers here are of bulls, which we buy at the thoroughbred sales if enough are offered, and, if not, we have to buy otherwise. The oxen and the other stock we buy locally.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Do you supply them with this much each year?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; the amount is the same as last year.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Why is it necessary to continue this annually?

Mr. OLIVER. It is necessary, of course, constantly to bring in new blood. We are not restocking every reserve every year, but, because of the large number of reserves which must be supplied, we have to continually make purchases of stock.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Was the full amount spent last year?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. What did the Indians do with these males? Did they kill them and eat them?

Mr. OLIVER. They employed them as other stock raisers do.

Mr. HENDERSON. They are bought by the government. Do the Indians appropriate them as their own?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, subject to government supervision. Of course, the effect is ultimately to make the Indians, as my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. Wright) suggested, self-supporting. So we furnish them from time to time with stock, and supervise them in the rearing and disposition of these animals.

Indians, Manitoba, &c.—Supplies for destitute Indians, $121,105.

Mr. ROCHE. I understood the minister to say before six o'clock that all the supplies for these reserves in western Canada are purchased by tender. I notice the names of a great many firms from eastern Canada sending out supplies to the west, and I was wondering how, if bought by tender, these people in eastern cities could supply the material cheaper than those in the west, considering the high freight rates.

Mr. OLIVER. The freight has to be paid whether the dealer lives in the west or in the east. Of course, in asking for bids we ask every one, and take the lowest bidder wherever he may live. The price is the price of the goods delivered, so it makes no difference to us whether the dealer is in the west, or in the east.

Indians, Manitoba, &c.—Hospitals, medical attendance, medicines, &c., $2,057.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister may now be able to answer the question I put to him a few moments ago: Who is the medical attendant at Swan Lake?

Mr. OLIVER. J. J. Cooper.

Mr. STAPLES. How long has he been acting in that capacity, and what remuneration does he get?

Mr. OLIVER. He has been medical attendant for some time, I cannot say when he was appointed. He gets a retainer of $60 a year, and then he is paid for each trip he makes to the reserve.

Mr. STAPLES. How much did he draw last year?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not that information for last year. Of course, the Auditor's report contains the amount for the year before last.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister's department has no doubt been advised of the poisoning case that took place on that reserve. There was a great deal of correspondence in the press regarding it last summer, and there was a difference of opinion as to how it should have been dealt with. Possibly the minister or his deputy could tell us about the lines of action the government took with regard to it. I remember there were certain citizens there who thought the government did not do its duty, and I would like to know what effort they made to discover the cause of the poisoning, or whether they attempted to prosecute those who had been giving, I think, some kind of medicine with an extract of peppermint in it. I know the people in that locality thought the government were very inactive, and should have followed it up a little closer.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it would be better for my hon. friend to allow the matter to rest, and I will look into it. It is rather a serious question, and I will give him the information at a later date.

Mr. STAPLES. In what form will he give it to me?

Mr. OLIVER. Probably we will not be through with our estimates to-night, and there are moreover some supplementaries coming, and there will be another occasion when I can give the hon. gentleman the information across the floor, or by laying the papers on the table.

Mr. ROCHE. There was formerly an Indian hospital on the reserve near Rossburn, and I understand that hospital has been closed, or removed to the town of Birtle. I would like the minister to explain on whose recommendation that was removed, or why it was removed from Rosthern reserve. Is there any local difficulty there?

Mr. OLIVER. It was thought the hospital at Rossburn was not as conveniently located for administration as it would be at Birtle. Birtle is an important railroad point, with good railway facilities that did not exist at Rossburn. The hospital was removed on the report of the inspector, Mr. Swinford.

Mr. ROCHE. I notice an item in the Auditor General's Report for preventing the spread of tuberculosis among the Indians. What steps do the government take to prevent the spread of that disease amongst the Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend understands that it is only in recent years that the subject of tuberculosis has been taken up seriously. But the department has taken it up seriously within the last few years, and this vote is for the purpose of affording assistance. Treatment is given to special cases, that is to say, provision is made for the removal of certain cases to places where the patients may get better treatment. We have established tent hospitals at several points, and generally speaking, we are taking cognizance of tuberculosis amongst the Indians with a view of keeping abreast with the advance of medical knowledge.

Mr. ROCHE. I see you give a grant to the Toronto tuberculosis hospital; has that anything to do with the Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. There is a grant made to the Toronto hospital by the Indian Department, there are several Indian children in that hospital now, and it is in connection with these and similar cases that this vote is asked for.

Indians—Man., &c.—Triennial clothing, treaties 4 and 7 and adhesion to treaty 5, $2,700.

Mr. STAPLES. Where are these goods purchased, and how?

Mr. OLIVER. The clothing is made at the Kingston penitentiary and purchased from the penitentiary authorities.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Why did the government have to give each one of the Indians so much land on the St. Peter's reserve, when they got them to surrender that reserve?

Mr. OLIVER. In severalty?

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. The reason was that these Indians, at the time of the transfer from the Hudson Bay Company, were occupants in severalty of their land and were, in law, original settlers of the province of Manitoba. They afterwards decided to become treaty Indians and were given the reserve as treaty Indians. We were anxious to secure the surrender of their reserve and their removal to another reserve, and it was desired, too, at the same time that we were wiping out their rights as Indians in that reserve, to also wipe out such rights as they might have as original settlers of Manitoba at the time of the transfer. For that purpose that provision was embodied in the deed of surrender. When each Indian got his patent the receipt that he signed was a receipt, not only for the land, but it was a receipt which stated that it was in full of his rights as an original settler of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Is that the only case we have in the west?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no other case.

Mr. STAPLES. Is the minister having any success in inducing the Indians to surrender the balance of the Swan lake reserve, and what effort is being made by the government in that direction?

Mr. OLIVER. We were successful in getting the surrender of a portion of the Swan lake reserve a year or two ago. We have settled with them and disposed of the land, but we did not think it was wise or likely to be successful to go right back immediately for a further surrender. We thought it was better to clean up the arrangement that had been made, and then after that had been done we could go back and see if the Indians would be willing to surrender a further amount, which we are quite prepared to do.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister stated that he thought it was better to make a clean up of that which had already been undertaken. It has been cleaned up, I understand, very successfully, not only to the Indians themselves, but to the people of that particular district. I would suggest that the minister now try and get, at least, a large portion of the reserve surrendered and brought under cultivation. While the minister has stated that he had succeeded in getting a portion of it, there is another portion that it would be a great deal more desirable to get the surrender of. I can assure him that the citizens of that section will appreciate it very much if the minister will begin negotiations along careful lines and try to get the balance of that reserve surrendered. It is not necessary that I should go into the reasons why it should be surrendered more than to say that it lies between the town of Swan Lake on the east and the town of Marieopolis on the west. It is the best agricultural land, and it is simply lying idle there. It is a great injury to the development of these towns and the district in general. I hope the minister will begin negotiations right along the same lines as those which proved so successful before. I can assure him that if he succeeds as he did before the people will appreciate it very much.

Mr. OLIVER. I will be very glad to take up the matter at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. How many Indians are there still on the Swan lake reserve?

Mr. OLIVER. While we were successful in securing the first surrender it does not necessarily follow that we will be successful in making the second attempt. My hon. friend may have heard of the man who was successful in getting away with the mill, but was caught when he came back for the dam.

Mr. STAPLES. I might draw the minister's attention also to the Long Plain reserve, which lies between Portage la Prairie and the Assiniboine. A great many people have asked me to bring it to the attention of the minister in order that he might try to get a surrender of a portion of it, at least, if not all. There was a time when this was not considered valuable land from the fact that it was well wooded, but fires have been doing their work, settlers have been cleaning up the land, and it is now practically clean land. It could be very easily brought under cultivation, and it is adjacent to good settlements—Indian Ford settlement across the river and Portage la Prairie plains to the north—and if the minister would enter upon negotiations, I think this would be a favourable time to secure the surrender.

Mr. OLIVER. I will be very glad to take a note of it. There are 113 Indians on the Swan lake reserve.

Indians—Man., &c.—Sioux, $4,498.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There is a decrease of half.

Mr. OLIVER. That is on account of some mill machinery which we furnished last year and which we are not furnishing this year.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. How many Indians are there on the Turtle mountain reserve, and how much land have they?

Mr. OLIVER. There are 15 at the Turtle mountain reserve, and it is one square mile in area. There has been a surrender taken of part of the reserve.

Indians—Man., &c.—grist and saw-mills, $4,637.

Mr. OLIVER. We got the Indians to surrender the reserve west of Battleford and take a reserve north of the river and one of the terms was that we should provide them with milling machinery.

Indians—Man., &c.— general expenses, $230,015.

Mr. MAGRATH. Dr. Lafferty is the medical officer attending Blackfoot reserve and he is certainly a very excellent physician, but he lives at Calgary which is quite a distance from the reserve. Dr. Lafferty draws $600 a year for this service, and I would like to know from the minister in what way he is able to attend to his duties on the reserve and earn this money?

Mr. OLIVER. He makes regular visits once a month and is subject to call in emergency.

Mr. MAGRATH. Is there any other doctor attached to that reserve?

Mr. OLIVER. There is Dr. Rose, who is in attendance on the hospital on the reserve.

Mr. MAGRATH. Dr. Rose lives at Gleichen. If Dr. Lafferty were living near this reserve I would have nothing to say, because he is an excellent doctor. But, Dr. Lafferty lives 55 miles away. The minister says he makes one trip a month to the reserve and I find he has received $45.60 for railway fares which I presume is between Gleichen and Calgary. That would represent about 20 trips. His salary of $600 a year would therefore be at the rate of about $30 a trip. I do not mind that so much as the fact that it is against my principle to have a doctor residing at such a distance from the scene of his labours. For instance, none of us would have our family physician in the city of Toronto when we could find medical men to attend us in Ottawa. Dr. Rose, and at least one other doctor lives in Gleichen, and in the interest of effective medical service to the Indians we should, I think have their medical attendant living near them. That is the point I bring to the attention of the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. Rose attends the church hospital on the Blackfoot reserve towards the support of which we pay $1,272, so that we think we are doing something towards medical attendance for the Indians. It is true Dr. Lafferty lives at Calgary, and that he is only called upon to make 12 visits a year in addition to emergency calls, and it is true that there could be very much more convenient medical attendance given by Dr. Rose or by one of the medical men living at Gleichen. But there is always a variety of opinion as to the value of the services of medical men, and the old saying is that doctors differ. In administering the affairs of a reserve having about 800 Indians it is not out of place, and not a waste of public money, and not to the disadvantage of the Indians that we should have making monthly visits to that reserve and ready for emergent calls a gentleman of the admittedly high qualifications of Dr. Lafferty. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Magrath) will admit that he has probably considerably higher qualifications than have the gentlemen who are resident in Gleichen. It is a matter of opinion as to which is the best way to serve the Indians, and up to the present time we have taken the view that the interests of the Indians and of the public are best served by securing the somewhat eminent services of Dr. Lafferty in conjunction with the hospital attendance of Dr. Rose.

Mr. MAGRATH. I agree with the minister that doctors differ. Dr. Lafferty is a very capable physician, and the same may be said of the gentlemen who are practising in Gleichen. Dr. Lafferty also attends the Stony reserve. I would like to know at what point on the railway west of Calgary he has to go to get to the reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. The station that people generally go to when they are visiting the Stony reserve is Morley, and I think it is in the neighbourhood of some 50 miles from Calgary.

Mr. MAGRATH. I do not entertain the same views as the minister with regard to this matter, and I suppose there is no use my pressing the subject further. I don't mind Dr. Lafferty going to the Blackfoot reserve or to the other reserve either so long as the Indians get proper medical attention, but my view is that the medical men at Gleichen should attend to the Indians who are located on the reserve near by. May I ask the minister what results if any have been obtained in dealing with the blood Indians in respect to releasing a portion of their reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. There have been a number of attempts made, but without success, to secure the surrender of a portion of the Blood Reserve. Last fall I visited the reserve to discuss matters with the Indians, and while I did not think it advisable to discuss the question of surrender with the Indians, I found them very strongly against the idea. I would think that the prospect of securing a surrender there is rather remote. Last year we secured a surrender of a portion of the Piegan reserve, and we have some hopes that as a result of that surrender when its terms have been carried out and the Indians realize the benefits that will accrue to them from it, the Bloods will be influenced to follow the example of the Piegans. The Bloods, Piegans, Sarcees and Blackfeet were allied tribes and whatever interests one tribe interests the other. We thought that having broken the circle and secured the surrender of a part of one reserve, it was better policy to wait until the results of that surrender had made themselves apparent before we approached the other bands definitely with a proposal for a surrender. My hon. friend is aware that strong efforts were made to prevent the Piegan surrender going through; misrepresentations were made in regard to it and the efforts of the department were hampered in a great degree. This being the case we thought it was better that the action taken by the department should speak for itself, and we have hopes that when that has taken place we will have results in the cases of some of the other reserves.

Mr. MAGRATH. My opinion is that it would be better in the interest of the Indian if we were to take a perpetual lease from him instead of giving a fee simple title, that is that the Indians lands should be sold carrying a perpetual mortgage. For instance, the Canadian Pacific railway irrigated lands carry a perpetual mortgage of 50 cents an acre. If you go to the Indians and say: We do not want to take the title from you, and offer him a rental based on 6 per cent interest on say, for the purposes of this argument, a sale price of $16.66 an acre, it would be equivalent to $1 an acre a year. I think if a proposal of that kind were put before the Indian wherein the land was retained as security for the interest or rent, and that as long as the purchaser or his assignee paid the $1 per acre per year, the occupant would have the use of the land, such a proposal it appears to me would appeal to the Indian. It is possible to sell lands in that way because the Canadian Pacific railway have been very successful in selling their irrigated lands on those terms. As I understand you can sell the land and the Indian can claim 50 per cent of the purchase money. The other 50 per cent the government holds and pay the Indian three per cent on it, whether the rate at which the government can borrow money abroad goes up or down. That rental method is successful to-day in the disposal of western lands and it could be applied to these Indian lands.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a very broad question, and I would not like to bring on a lengthy discussion, but the 50 cents an acre on the Canadian Pacific railway irrigated lands is an insurance guaranteeing a water supply for the crops when water is needed. There is no such insurance in the case of the Indian lands, and while many men would be willing to pay a rental of 50 cents an acre to secure a water supply in a country that may be subject to lack of rainfull they would hesitate to pay a dollar or fifty cents an acre interest when there was no such insurance connected with it. The idea of a tenant proprietorship in the Northwest does not appeal to me. The policy of the government is to have a population on the land who shall be the owners in fee simple of that land, and any proposal, no matter how attractive, that would involve tenancy rather than proprietorship, viewed from the standpoint of the best interests of Canada and the west, would not appeal to my mind.

Mr. MAGRATH. It is an absolute ownership as long as the rent is paid. I have discussed this with prominent real estate men who are largely engaged in settling the west, and they have said they could sell the whole Blood reserve if they had an opportunity to do so on that basis.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend speaks of real estate men who are settling the west. The business of the real estate man is not the settlement of the west, but the holding up of the settler of the west.

Mr. MAGRATH. It is another case in which the hon. gentleman and myself differ, and we are too near the end of the session to take up any time discussing it.

Mr. HERRON. How are things progressing at the Piegan agency with reference to the winding up of that sale? I understand the sale is completed, and I am prepared to admit that the selling of the land is popular with the people of that country, and that there is no complaint in connection with the sale. There was complaint with regard to the consent of the Indians; it was claimed that there was dissatisfaction when the land was sold.

Mr. OLIVER. The total area of the reserve was 116,096 acres. There was surrendered for sale 22,338 acres. There were actually sold 12,000 acres and the sum realized was $205,692. The amount immediately available for expenditure on behalf of the Indians was $54,564. There were 471 souls in the band. We propose to invest this $54,000, that was immediately available, in machinery and implements for the benefit of the band to enable them to go on with the work of breaking up their reserve, cultivating it, and making it productive. Among the implements we propose to buy are a 36 horse-power traction steam engine, to cost $4,046; a Cockshutt gang plough, 30 sets double harness, 6 seed drillers; 4 binders, and a number of other implements. There will be five and a half miles of fencing, and an engineer will be employed at a salary of $125 a month to have charge of the land breaking work.

Mr. STAPLES. How many months in the year will he be engaged?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say at the moment. I may explain the purpose of the traction engine. Most of my hon. friends are aware that a great deal of the land in southern Alberta is being broken up by the aid of engines instead of by horses, and we have found by our experience on the Blood reserve that it is economical, and advantageous to invest in such an engine for the purpose of breaking up the land.

Mr. HERRON. I understand that the franchise was extended to the Indians in this district under certain conditions embodied in the order in council passed last June, by which if they take out patents for a certain portion of land, and put it under cultivation, &c., they will be eligible to vote. I want to know if they are taking advantage of the law.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a provision in the Indian Act whereby on proclamation being issued in regard to any band, the members of that band are entitled on the fulfilment of certain conditions set forth in the Act to be enfranchised. But the conditions surrounding the enfranchisement are such that they are very seldom taken advantage of in any part of Canada, and so far as we are aware they are not taken advantage of to any degree up to the present time in the west. However, the privilege is there if the Indian wishes to become enfranchised; he may become, to all intents and purposes, a white man if he wants to, but he does not want to.

Mr. STAPLES. This is a new undertaking in regard to these Indian reserves. After listening to the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Herron), and to what the minister has said, it seems to me we have a fairly good way of bringing those other reserves under cultivation. For instance take Swan lake. There it would be easy to bring the land under cultivation, and if it were made to produce, the citizens of the towns mentioned a while ago, would get the benefit. I would make a strong plea to have that land brought under cultivation. The gasoline or steam engine has worked for the good of the Indian on the reserve mentioned, and also on that section of land down in the Indian ford district. If the government is going to undertake a policy of that kind. I would put in a claim to have the lands in the county I represent cultivated as much as the Blood Indian reserve or any other reserve in Alberta. I am not finding any fault with what has been done up there, I simply want to impress upon the minister the great benefit to these communities I have mentioned, if the land were brought under cultivation.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid my hon. friend has rather a wrong idea in this connection. What was done in regard to the Piegan reserve was done to meet the views of the Indians, and we are prepared to meet those views in that way when those views are expressed. But we cannot compel them to adopt these views.

Mr. STAPLES. It would be a good thing to suggest to them.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but unless the people have the idea themselves, it is very possible that the suggestion would not work out. In the case of the Piegans, they had seen that the Bloods had succeeded in getting a large area of land broken up, and that they were becoming very prosperous and independent by reason of that cultivation. Then they did not have sufficient machinery to break up the land, but they believed that if they could get the land broken up they could work it to advantage. So it was the possibility of securing this machinery to enable them to bring their land under cultivation, that induced them to part with a portion of their reserve. It was not the money they were going to get; it was the fact that they would be enabled to employ their energy to advantage, and profit by bringing under cultivation the soil of the remaining part of the reserve.

Indians—British Columbia—salaries, $28,520.

Mr. COWAN. Has Mr. Vowell resigned?

Mr. OLIVER. He has resigned, but his resignation takes effect only at the end of the present fiscal year.

Mr. COWAN. Has the department taken steps towards the appointment of his successor?

Mr. OLIVER. No steps have been taken yet.

Mr. COWAN. Have no applications been made for the office?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say that there have or have not been. We have not been considering applications up to this time, as the resignation does not take effect until March 31 next.

Mr. COWAN. Although it does not directly bear on this item, I would like to ask whether or not there has been a sale either effected or in contemplation of the Kapilano reserve, situated within the corporation limits of the city of Vancouver?

Mr. OLIVER. No sale has been made, nor is any at present in contemplation.

Mr. COWAN. I am very glad to hear it. Is the department likely to consider an offer to purchase that reserve?

Mr. OLIVER. As my hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) is aware, the condition of title in regard to reserves in the province of British Columbia is such, at the present time, that it does not seem to us to be wise or good public policy for us to enter upon any negotiations for the alienation of title. We do not think that the interest of the Indians would be served by an attempt to pass title at the present time when we are not in a position to give a clear title. The subject has been matter for discussion between an officer of the British Columbia government and the Justice Department during the past few days. I am afraid that we may not be able to reach a conclusion in regard to it without a reference to the Privy Council. But, for the present, we do not feel that we would be justified in undertaking to deal with this question of Indian lands when the question of title is in its present condition.

Mr. COWAN. In any event, I suppose, the minister would take the view that this Kapilano reserve, situated as it is within the corporation limits of the city of Vancouver, might better be sold to the public than to a private person. The minister knows the situation of that reserve. I am glad to know that he is not contemplating any sale of it to a private purchaser. I rather think there is a very strong feeling there that, if that reserve is alienated at all, it should be alienated to the city of Vancouver, in the heart of which it lies.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite appreciate the disadvantage of having that and other reserves in the vicinity of Vancouver remain where they are, and I will be very glad to take any steps possible to secure the change of title, that is, to have the Indians removed and make this land available for the expansion of the city's development. And, as soon as the question of title can be settled, if the responsibility remains with us, I can assure my hon. friend, no time will be lost in trying to bring the matter to a point that will enable this land to be used—to bring it under taxation and in process of development. As to the disposing of it specially to the city, I would not like to give any definite pledge on that point. My hon. friend will understand that, as administering Indian affairs, our business is to secure the best value possible for the Indians. All I can say is that, if it should fall to us to have the administration of that reserve, and to have the right to give a clear title, I would be as glad to sell it to the city as to anybody else, provided the city would pay for it. But, our interest, as administering Indian affairs, would be to get as much as possible for the land.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. You could cut it up and sell it by auction.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) can rest assured of this—that there will be no private disposition of it.

Mr. COWAN. I am very glad to have that assurance. I think the minister expressed in the fall of 1908, by way of telegram, his feeling as Minister of the Interior, that this government would release to the city of Vancouver its title to the Indian reserve provided the provincial government would do the same, and the Indians were settled with. I think the minister will remember that in October, 1908, a telegram was sent from him to Mr. MacInnes, who was then a candidate for Dominion honours. And I would like to be assured that that still is his policy. Let me give the reason why we should still have that assurance. The city of Vancouver has rested with a good deal of faith on the assurance contained in that telegram, in the faith that the reserve will finally become the property of the city, provided, as the minister says, that they deal as generously as anybody else with the Indians, and provided they get whatever reversionary interest the province may have. They have rested upon that. We have rested upon that, and have been pursuing a course with the object of procuring that property, relying upon that telegram the minister sent in October, 1908. I wish to know if the minister still holds the view expressed in that telegram, and whether the city is still justified in holding the hope of procuring the title in the city to that reserve, provided, as the minister says, that the city will settle in a generous way with the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not like to bind myself to the wording of the telegram unless I saw it, and I do not just remember now what was in it. But if the position which I stated to the House to-night accords with that of the telegram; I know what I said to-night, and I am willing to stand by that. Our policy is, as I stated at some length the other night, that where the value of the land is worth more to the Indian than the land itself, we exchange the land for the money. In order to do that to the advantage of the Indian, of course there must be a possibility of giving a clear title, and that being done, then the land goes to the man that will pay the most for it.

Mr. COWAN. In this case I can remind the minister what was in that telegram, and I think he will recall it to his memory. It was a telegram to Mr. McInnis saying that the Dominion would convey to the city the Kapilano reserve, provided the city made a settlement with the Indian and procured a release of the reversionary interest of the province

Mr. OLIVER. I think I would have to supplement that by saying that the terms to the Indians would have to be satisfactory to the department as well as to the Indians.

Mr. COWAN. That is what that telegram meant. The minister will note that really he gives the city of Vancouver a refusal of that Indian reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. No, it gives them an opportunity to bid upon it, but they would have to bid higher than anybody else in order to get it.

Indian education, $480,000.

Mr. OLIVER. We are building a new school house on the Oneida reserve, $3,000; another on the Caughnawaga reserve, $6,500; and we are building a boarding school in the Yukon for which we are asking $20,000. These are items of increase over last year.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. What about the industrial schools at Elkhorn and Regina, have these been abolished?

Mr. OLIVER. We have had a great deal of discussion with the religious bodies who are conducting boarding and industrial schools, with a view to a readjustment of the burden which some of them are finding rather heavy. There was an understanding, as we thought, by which the Elkhorn school would be closed, but the understanding was not carried out, and that school remains in the position it was in before. The school at Regina, however, has been closed, in accordance with an understanding we arrived at with the Presbyterians who were managing the school at Regina. On an understanding with them, we closed the Regina school because it was not well situated for carrying on the work. We put up a boarding school on the File Hills reserve, and increased the amount per head at all the Presbyterian boarding schools in Saskatchewan from $72 to $100. That is the arrangement made with the Presbyterian church, with which they are satisfied.

Indian education—to provide a further amount for buildings and per capita grant for residential schools, $122,040.

Mr. OLIVER. This is in regard to boarding school. I will give the list.

To increase the per capita grant and the number of pupils at the Fort William orphanage, Fort William, Ontario, $2,000.

This is for the purpose of recognizing the character of the building that has been erected there. It is an absolutely modern building in every particular, and we think it is right and proper that where any church, out of its own resources, provides the capital for a first-class building such as this we should give the maximum grant. This mission was not receiving the maximum grant under the conditions of the old building, but when they got into their new building we considered that they were entitled to the maximum.

To provide an amount for the erection of an addition to File Hills boarding school, $15,000.

This is the proposition that I mentioned a few minutes ago in connection with the Presbyterian church.

To provide for an increase of ten pupils each for the Wabiscow and Whitefish Lake Church of England boarding schools, $1,440.

To provide a per capita grant for ten additional pupils at the Sturgeon Lake Roman Catholic boarding school, $720.

To provide for the erection of a Church of England boarding school on the Blackfoot reserve, $20,000.

The church of England had a boarding school on the Blackfoot reserve. The building had been erected by themselves, but it became unsanitary and it was decided to close it up. They were not able to replace it, and we thought that in this case the government would be warranted, in order to provide for the education of the Indians, in providing this sum.

To provide a grant for forty pupils at $72, $2,880.

We are erecting the building, and therefore, we do not give the maximum grant with respect to the pupils.

To provide for the erection of buildings for the Kootenay Indian Industrial school, $60,000.

This is a very large boarding school at St. Eugene in the Kootenay country near Fort Steele. It is an old established school, it has done a great deal of work, but the buildings have become absolutely unsanitary. We think it is right that a good building should be put up.

To erect new building for the Alert Bay Girls' Home and provide equipment, $20,000.

Making a total of $122,040. This is an increase in the pupilage and per capita grant in some cases, and it makes provision for new, substantial and sanitary buildings.

Post office, outside service—salaries and allowances, $3,169,028.50.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) be good enough to tell us why he removed the post office at Dickson, Ontario, from the place where it formerly was, and what reason he has to give in view of the fact that he has received a number of communications, petitions and affidavits urging upon him the necessity of allowing the post office to remain where it is, and would he at the same time tell the committee why it is not possible for him to return that post office to the locality in which it was formerly situated?

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I inquired as to the facts of this case at the request of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong), and I found that some time ago the postmaster at Dickson in the united counties of Stormont and Cornwall left the province of Ontario to settle in Saskatchewan. After he left there were two applications to locate the post office at two different sites, and the inspector selected a site at a distance of about one mile and a quarter from the former location. He would have selected the place formerly occupied by the ex-postmaster were it not that a station had been opened on the Ottawa and New York railway near which we were obliged to open a new post office, and to equalize the distance we had to locate this one a little further west. Since my attention has been called to the matter I have asked the deputy minister to inform me whether there was enough population at the site of the former post office to justify the erection of a new one there, so as to satisfy the community I expect to have the report shortly, and if there is room for another post office there I will open one with pleasure.

Mr. G. GORDON. Has a post office inspector been appointed at North Bay?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, Mr. Limoges who is well known to my hon. friend (Mr. Gordon) was appointed two or three months ago, but before entering on his duties we put him under the direction of the post office inspector at Ottawa. I understand that Mr. Limoges, whom I have met, is a very able man and has resided in the district for a great many years. I believe he will prove satisfactory to the department and to the public. I may tell my hon. friend that a few days ago we selected a young man of great ability, who has been in the service for many years, as assistant inspector to Mr. Limoges. I refer to Mr. Ross, son of the general superintendent of post offices in the Dominion, and who, I believe, will give as much satisfaction to the public in that district as his father has given throughout the Dominion.

Mr. G. GORDON. I thought an inspector had to be in the service of the Post Office Department for a certain period before being appointed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We can appoint an inspector who has not been in the service, but the assistant inspector must have been at least 5 years in the service.

Mr. G. GORDON. That is a curious way of doing business. It would seem to be common sense that the inspector is the man who should have more knowledge than the assistant inspector.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is the law as I found it.

Mr. G. GORDON. Is that a proper business way of conducting affairs?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the larger cities we appoint as postmasters, men who have been in business and are well known to the general public, and then we give them as assistants the best men we have in the service.

Mr. G. GORDON. You don't depend much on your inspectors.

Mr. LEMIEUX. On the contrary. The inspector before assuming his duties, has to undergo a period of training. Of course, we select men of tact and ability and men who know the district, and in a short time they can become efficient officers.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am glad that the Postmaster General has promised to further investigate the complaints of the people of Dickson, and I feel satisfied that the facts will justify him in establishing a post office there.

Mr. WALLACE. I wish to remind the Postmaster General that the town of North Toronto has applied for a free postal delivery. North Toronto has a population of nearly 5,000 at present. Its southern boundary adjoins the northern boundary of the city of Toronto and its streets are in fact a continuation of the streets of the city. North Toronto has 16 miles of good sidewalk, and if the Postmaster General desires to accommodate the greatest number he should start with a town like North Toronto.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The streets of North Toronto are a continuation of the streets of Toronto?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I may tell my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) that I have taken note of the verbal representations he made to me the other day. The hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Maclean) has also made representations to me on the subject, and I am having inquiry made. Probably during the summer we will be able to provide for free letter delivery in that section of the city.

Post Office—Miscellaneous, $50,000.

Mr. STAPLES. Where is the post office now in the town of Holland? The office was burned there about two months ago. It was a rented building.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We would, of course, rent another post office. If the postmaster was the proprietor, he would probably rebuild.

Mr. LENNOX. I have been asked if a free rural mail delivery route could be established in a portion of the township of Innisfail. There is a thickly settled farming locality and a summer resort which would be served by a loop. There is no post office and no mail route there now, although in the summer a temporary office has been opened at the summer resort, Peninsular park.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend will spend a quarter of an hour with me on Tuesday, we might see what can be done. I remember a request from that township for the establishment of a rural mail delivery. We might overcome the difficulty by establishing a post office at the summer resort.

Mr. G. GORDON. Has the department received a request for a post office at Gowganda Junction?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, we have also an application from a company wishing to undertake the mail service.

Mr. G. GORDON. A post office will be put there?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Miscellaneous—expenses under the Naturalization Act, $5,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $1,000 there.

Mr. FIELDING There is no special reason except the general enlargement of business.

Miscellaneous—To assist in the publication of the proceedings of the Royal Society, $5,000.

Mr. FIELDING. There has been a change of the words in that item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment is to strike out, 'to assist in the publication of the proceedings of, so that the item will read, 'to the Royal Society.'

Mr. FIELDING. It is intended to give them a little more elasticity in the application of the vote.

Miscellaneous—Grant to the Canadian Handicrafts Guild, $1,000.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. What institution is that?

Mr. FISHER. It is an association which is working amongst the people in the country parts to teach them home industries and give them samples to help them in their work.

Miscellaneous—To provide for expenses of Conservation Commission—further amount required, $35,000.

Mr. CROSBY. Is this the only amount granted for that?

Mr. FIELDING. There was $15,000 in the main estimates.

Mr. CROSBY. That makes $50,000 altogether?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Miscellaneous—Ottawa Branch of Royal Mint—further amount for Mint maintenance, $25,000.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he has considered the advisability of coining nickel?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend was not present when we had a good discussion the other day on the subject. There are some reasons in favour of the nickel and quite a number against it. The objection to nickel is that it is a white metal and, many people think, too easily confused with silver. However, the matter has not been determined. For the present we continue our old forms of currency in silver.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Might I suggest, we have done a very good day's work, and as we were up late last night, I think we should adjourn.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the suggestion is reasonable.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. What business for Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. First, the Combines Bill, and, if that is disposed of, the Insurance Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 25, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 216) respecting the British North-western Fire Insurance Company.

THE LOBSTER FISHERIES.

Mr. SINCLAIR presented the report of the special committee to investigate the lobster industry on the coast of the maritime provinces and Quebec. He said : I desire to give notice that I will move the adoption of this report on Wednesday next.

REVISION OF THE RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER laid on the table the report of the special committee to revise the rules of the House and moved that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole House for consideration to-morrow.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be well, even necessary, to have copies of the proposed revision in the hands of members before the matter is taken up? There seems a very short time for consideration, if a report only now presented is to be taken up to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This report will be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of to-morrow. If not convenient for hon. members to consider it then, some other day will be chosen.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be better later on.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Next Friday.

Mr. SPEAKER. Taken into consideration next Friday. Carried.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 217) to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act. He said : The Manitoba legislature, at its recent session, passed an Act establishing an industrial home in the province. Such an institution would not be within the language of our present Prisons and Reformatories Act. This Bill is introduced to amend our statute in order to enable the courts in Manitoba to sentence prisoners to the institution just established.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. FIELDING.

RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 210) to incorporate the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada—Mr. Gervais.

Mr. LENNOX. I was not in my place at the moment when the resolution to go into committee on this Bill was presented and carried. I have been requested to ask that this Bill be allowed to stand over, as there are some gentlemen who wish to deal with it, and who could not be here to-day. Also, I see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is not in his place, and I am told that there is need for an amendment of the Bill, to which his attention should be called, to prevent this corporation being given the right to act as bankers. For myself, I have not gone into the matter at all carefully, and I do not wish to be pressed into having to deal with it. One hon. member, who was obliged to leave Ottawa on Saturday and has not yet returned, particularly desires to deal with this Bill. I would ask that the government consent to have the Bill laid over until to-morrow.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think that my hon. friend from Montreal, St. James (Mr. Gervais), in whose name this Bill stands, is not in his place at the moment. I suppose he will arrive by the noon train. I think there could be no objection to postponing the consideration of this Bill until to-morrow night. Will that do ?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 211) to incorporate the Pioneers Loan Company.—Mr. Turriff.

Bill (No. 214) respecting the Alberta and British Columbia Railway Company.—Mr. Herron.

BRANDON, SASKATCHEWAN AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PARDEE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 213) respecting the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

Mr. McGIVERIN. I notice that the name of the Bill on the order paper is not the same as in the Bill itself. The name of the Bill is the Brandon, Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay Railway Company, and on the order paper it is the Brandon, Saskatchewan and British Columbia Railway Company.

Mr. SPEAKER. The name is correct in the French copy. It is merely a typographical error.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

QUESTIONS.

THE ST. LAWRENCE POWER COMPANY.

Mr. S. SHARPE:

1. Has the St. Lawrence Power Company complied with section 13 of the Act of Incorporation, 1901?
2. Has the government investigated the facts in regard to this question?
3. If so, in what way and what conclusion has the government reached?
4. If not, does the government purpose instituting any investigation with the view of ascertaining whether the powers of the company under the Act of 1901 have become null and void?
5. Does the government entertain the view of the Solicitor General, that the amendments inserted in the St. Lawrence Power Company's Bill dealing with the St. Lawrence Power Company, created by the Act of 1901, cannot possibly control or affect the company under the Act of 1901?
6. Do any of the amendments inserted in the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Bill, in the opinion of the government, have the effect of reviving any of the powers of the St. Lawrence Power Company under the Act of 1901, which may have become null and void by reason of the said company not complying with the provisions of said Act?
7. Was it the intention of the government or the hon. member who had charge of the Bill, by any of the amendments, to revive said rights?
8. If the said company have forfeited any of the rights, is it the intention of the government to claim the benefit of such forfeiture?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY. I call attention to the fact that the 5th paragraph states that the Solicitor General entertains certain views with regard to the Bill. I think the question is irregular in that respect. But if my hon. friend will be good enough to point where and when the Solicitor General made that statement, I will get the answer. In the meantime, the question might stand.

MAIL MATTER CARRIED BY FREE DELIVERY.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR:

1. Is mail matter, other than letters, delivered to street addresses in places having a system of free delivery to carriers?
2. If so, to what class of matter, other than letters, does such free delivery extend?
3. Has the Post Office Department established any regulations respecting free delivery of matter, other than letters? If so, have such regulations been made public and where?

Hon. R. LEMIEUX:

1. Yes.
2. All classes of mailable matter, except such packages as may be too heavy to be taken out by the letter carriers.
3. The only class of people affected are the business men, senators and members of parliament, living in cities, who are perfectly aware of the rule.

CHINAMEN PAYING CAPITATION TAX.

Mr. BURRELL:

1. How many Chinamen entering Canada paid the capitation tax during the fiscal year ending March, 1910?
2. How many entered under exemption from the tax?
3. What was the chief reason advanced for exemption?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. 1,614.
2. 688.
3. They were exempt under the Act as merchants and the wives and children of merchants.

TELEGRAPH LINES—ST. ALEXIS AND L'ANSE ST. JEAN.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. What amount has the Minister of Public Works paid to Elzéar Boivin for the construction of a telegraph line between St. Alexis and l'Anse St. Jean, and in what year?
2. What amount did the same minister pay for reconstructing and repairing this telegraph line, and in what year?
3. What is the total length of this line?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. Total payment to Mr. Elzéar Boivin was $2,003.13, in October, 1897, for the work of distributing poles for and construction of 40 1-16 miles of telegraph line, under contract No. 3,013, dated 2nd February, 1897, at $50 per mile.
2. There was no reconstruction or special repairs called for; whatever general repairs were made in subsequent years were performed by the regular linemen employed to keep the lines in order.
3. The length of line between St. Alexis and l'Anse St. Jean is reckoned as 40 miles

BUOYS ON LAKE ST. JOHN.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. What amounts has the Minister of Public Works paid, year by year, for the placing and maintenance of buoys on Lake St. John and the rivers emptying into it, between 1897 and 1904?
2. To what companies or persons has he paid each year?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1.

1896-97	$ 500 00
1897-98	500 00
1898-99	250 00
1899-00	250 00
1900-01	250 00
1901-02	250 00
1902-03	250 00
1903-04	Nil.
Total	$2,250 00

2. Mr. B. A. Scott in each case.

OYAMEL COMPANY, ROBERVAL.

Mr. GIRARD:

Did the Oyamel Company of Roberval, or its manager, B. A. Scott, present for payment in 1901 or 1902, to the Minister of Public Works, an account for tamarack wood sold for the sum of $105 or for any other amount? If so, what has the minister done about this claim?

Mr. PUGSLEY:
(a) Yes.
(b) It was paid.

TOLLS ON LOGS ON RIVER SAGUENAY.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. What amount was due by the Pulp Company of Chicoutimi, year by year since 1903, for tolls on logs passing into the booms on the River Saguenay, and for contribution to the maintenance of the said booms up to the 1st of January, 1910?
2. What amount has it paid on its dues and on what date?
3. If it has not paid its whole debt, does the government intend to oblige it to do so?

Mr. PUGSLEY:
1 (a). Tolls.

1903	Nothing.
1904	"
1905	"
1906	$1,116 92
1907	1,801 00
1908	1,533 30
1909	3,088 34 (Paid.)
	$7,539 56

(b) Contribution to maintenance.
Amounts to be paid under consideration for adjustment.
2. They have paid $3,088.34 on 12th March, 1910, being dues on tolls of 1909 in full at tariff rates.
3. Under consideration.

MAIL CARRIAGE—BLAIRMORE STATION.

Mr. ARMSTRONG:

1. Has the contract been let for carrying the mail from Blairmore station to the post office? If so, what is the amount paid for said services and who received the contract?
2. What was the amount paid for the former contract and who carried the mail?
3. Does the postmaster at Blairmore receive all moneys paid for box rents and commission on money orders, and what is the total amount received by the postmaster from all sources?

Mr. LEMIEUX:
1. No.
2. $100 per annum. H. E. Lyon.
3. The postmaster receives all moneys paid for box rents and commissions on money orders. The total amount received from all sources for the year ending 31st March, 1910, including carrying the mails, was $858.29.

DREDGING AT MOUTH OF RED RIVER.

Mr. BRADBURY:

How many yards of sand or earth were moved last season by the government dredges at the mouth of the Red river, and what was the cost per yard for such work?

Mr. GIRARD.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It being necessary to obtain this information from the resident engineer at Winnipeg, I would ask my hon. friend to allow the question to stand.

IMMIGRANTS ON THE BAY OF QUINTE RAILWAY.

Mr. URIAH WILSON:

1. How many immigrants were located during the past two fiscal years along the line of the Bay of Quinte railway between Deseronto and Bannockburn, and at what place was each immigrant located?
2. How many were deported during the same two years from the above district?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER:

1. The government has no record, the destination of immigrants being recorded by provinces only.
2. 68.

WHARFAGE DUES AT BURK'S FALLS.

Mr. ARTHURS:

1. What amount of wharfage or other dues was collected at Burk's Falls during each of the years 1907, 1908 and 1909?
2. What is the rate of wharfage and other dues?
3. Who is the wharfinger, and what is his salary?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN:
1.

	Gross.	Net Revenue.
1907	$18 46	$13 75
1908	Nil	Nil
1909	77 47	58 13

2. The general tariff rates for wharfage which applies to all wharfs administered by the Department of Marine and Fisheries.
3. A. J. Collins, 25 per cent of collections.

IMMIGRANTS FROM EUROPEAN COUNTRIES.

Mr. LEWIS:

1. How many immigrants from Southern Italy, Russia, Liberia, Russia in Asia, Turkey and Turkey in Asia, have entered Canada since January, 1, 1908?
2. Has the government any advice or information of immigration of peasants into Canada from Southern Italy, Russia, Liberia, Russia in Asia, Turkey and Turkey in Asia during 1910?

Mr. OLIVER:

1. From Italy as a whole (no separate record being kept for southern Italy) 12,246; Russia, 16,751; Liberia, none; Russia in Asia, none; Turkey, 778; Turkey in Asia, 600; total, 30,375.
2. No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the following order be discharged:

Resolved, That the recommendation of the Honourable The Speaker of the House of Commons respecting the organization of the staff of the House of Commons, laid on the table of the House on Wednesday, the 6th day of April, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to and order discharged.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In the absence of the Minister of Railways and Canals, I move that to-morrow the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution, and I may add that they have been submitted to His Excellency and he has approved of the same

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide as follows:—

1. The Governor in Council may grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated) which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile, for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway, not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of fifty per cent on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as is in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile:—

1. For a line of railway from Tusket Wedge to a point on the Halifax and Southwestern railway at or near Riverdale station, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 27; not exceeding 8 miles.

2. To the Halifax and Southwestern railway Company, for a line of railway from Lunenburg to Bridgewater via Upper LaHave, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 28; not exceeding 12 miles.

3. To the Inverness railway and Coal Company, for a line of railway from Cheticamp to a point on the line already built between Broad Cove and Point Tupper, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 17; not exceeding 37 miles.

4. To the Margaree Coal and Railway Company, for a line of railway from a point at or near Orangedale, on the Intercolonial railway, thence by the east side of Lake Ainslie and Ste. Rosa, to Chimney Corner Cove, not exceeding 46 miles; and for a line of railway from a point on the Intercolonial railway between Orangedale and Point Tupper to Caribou Cove on Inhabitant's bay and river, not exceeding 4 miles; in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 18; not exceeding in all 50 miles.

5. For a line of railway from a point on the Dominion Atlantic railway to the Government pier or wharf at Canning, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 40 of 1907; section 1, item 7; not exceeding 1 mile.

6. For a line of railway from Brazil lake on the Dominion Atlantic railway to Kemptville, Nova Scotia, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 16; not exceeding 11 miles.

7. To the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, for a line of railway from Centreville on the Dominion Atlantic railway, westerly to Weston, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 30; not exceeding 15 miles.

8. For a line of railway from a point on the Intercolonial railway at or near Dartmouth, in the county of Halifax, to a point at or near Deans Settlement, in the county of Halifax, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 21; not exceeding 80 miles.

9. For a line of railway from a point at or near Deans Settlement, in the county of Halifax, to a point at or near Melrose, in the county of Guysborough, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 22; not exceeding 52 miles.

10. For a line of railway from a point at or near New Glasgow, in the county of Pictou, to a point at or near Melrose, in the county of Guysborough, and from the said point at or near Melrose to Guysborough, in the county of Guysborough, with branch line to Country Harbour, in the county of Guysborough, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 23; not exceeding in all 116 miles.

11. To the International Railway Company of New Brunswick, for 3½ miles of its railway, being the distance which the subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 15, is short of covering.

12. For a line of railway from Grand Falls to St. John, in New Brunswick, in lieu of subsidies granted by chapter 40 of 1907, section 1, items 2, 3 and 10, respectively, and in lieu of subsidies granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 69; not exceeding 228 miles.

13. For a line of railway from Connors, at the terminus of the Temiscouata railway, to a point on the boundary line between New Brunswick and Quebec, at the foot of Beau lake, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 40 of 1907, section 1, item 25; not exceeding 18 miles.

(c) from a point on the Canadian Pacific railway, northerly towards the National Transcontinental railway, not exceeding 50 miles;

the said subsidies being granted in lieu of the subsidies granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 2, and chapter 63, of 1908, section 1, item 61; not exceeding in all 275 miles.

31. To the Bracebridge and Trading Lake Railway Company, for a line of railway from Bracebridge, in Muskoka, to a point at or near Baysville, Ontario, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 8; not exceeding 16 miles.

32. To the Lac Seul, Rat Portage and Keewatin Railway Company, for a line of railway from a point at or near Kenora to the National Transcontinental railway, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 63, for 18 miles; not exceeding 22 miles.

33. To the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company, for a line of railway from Montreal to Hawkesbury, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 48; not exceeding 65 miles.

34. To the Nipigon Railway Company for the following lines of railway:

(a) from a point at or near Nipigon station on the line of the Canadian Pacific railway to Nipigon lake, not exceeding 30 miles;
(b) from a point on Nipigon bay of Lake Superior to a point on the west of Lake Helen on the line of the Nipigon railway, not exceeding 3½ miles;

(c) from a point on the line of the Nipigon railway at or near the Crossing of the French River to a point on Lake Jesse, by way of Cameron's Falls, not exceeding 1½ miles;

(d) from a point on the north shore of Lake Nipigon, northerly; not exceeding 45 miles.

the said subsidies being granted in lieu of the subsidies granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 4; not exceeding in all 80 miles.

35. To the Ontario, Northern and Timagami Railway Company, for a line of railway from a point at or near Sturgeon Falls, in a northwesterly direction, to a point on the westerly shore of Lake Timagami, in the district of Nipissing, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 6; not exceeding 50 miles.

36. For a line of railway from Sharbot lake or Bathurst station, in the province of Ontario, or between these points, via Lanark village, to Carleton Place, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 3; not exceeding 41 miles.

37. To the Erie, London and Tilsonburg Railway Company, for a line of railway from Port Burwell to London, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 29; not exceeding 35 miles.

38. To the Toronto, Lindsay and Pembroke Railway Company, for a line of railway from Golden lake to Bancroft, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 41; not exceeding 51 miles.

39. To the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway Company, for a line of railway from Kingston to Ottawa, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 19; not exceeding 101 miles.

40. To the Pacific, Northern and Omineca Railway Company, for a line of railway from Edmonton, northwesterly, to or towards the Peace river, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 51; not exceeding 110 miles.

41. To the Southern Central Pacific Railway Company, for the following lines of railway:—

(a) from a point two miles of Pincher Station on the Crowsnest Pass branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, northeasterly, not exceeding 10 miles;

(b) from a point two miles west of Pincher station on the Crowsnest Pass branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, southwesterly, not exceeding 40 miles.

the said subsidies being granted in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 37; not exceeding in all 50 miles.

42. To the Kettle River Valley Railway Company, for the following lines of railway:—

(a) from Midway to a junction near Merritt with the Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen railway, not exceeding 250 miles;

(b) from a point on the company's line of railway near Coldwater river to a point on the Fraser river, not exceeding 50 miles.

the said subsidies being granted in lieu of the subsidies granted by chapter 40 of 1907, section 1, item 18, and chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, items 59 and 59, respectively; not exceeding in all 300 miles.

43. To the Kootenay Central Railway Company, for a line of railway from Golden towards the International boundary line via Windermere and Fort Steele, thence crossing the Crowsnest Pass railway, at or near Elko, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 31; not exceeding 186 miles.

44. To the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, for a line of railway from a point on its main line of railway, at or near Duncans to Cowichan lake, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 67; not exceeding 24 miles.

2. Unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'cost' means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost, and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge, up to and not exceeding $25,000, forming part of the line of railway subsidized not otherwise receiving any bonus, but shall not include the cost of equipping the railway nor the cost of terminals nor the cost of the right of way of the railway in any city or incorporated town; and such actual necessary and reasonable cost shall be determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the report of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, certifying that he has made or caused to be made an inspection of the line of railway for which payment of subsidy is asked, and careful inquiry into the cost thereof, and that in his opinion the amount upon which the subsidy is claimed is reasonable, and does not exceed the true, actual and proper cost of the construction of such railway.

3. The subsidies hereby authorized towards the construction of any railway shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and may, unless otherwise expressly provided in this Act, at the option of the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, be paid as follows:

(a) upon the completion of the work subsidized; or

(b) by instalments, on the completion of each ten-mile section of the railway, in the proportion which the cost of such completed section bears to that of the whole work undertaken; or

(c) upon the progress estimates on the certificate of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals that in his opinion, having regard to the whole work undertaken and the aid granted, the progress made justifies the payment of a sum not less than thirty thousand dollars; or

(d) with respect to (b) and (c), part one way, part the other.

4. The subsidies hereinbefore authorized to be granted to companies named shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as establish to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council their ability to construct and complete the said railways, respectively; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August, 1910, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years from the said first day of August, to be fixed by the Governor in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in each case in a contract between the company and the said minister, which contract the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, is hereby empowered to make. The location also of such subsidized lines shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

5. The granting of such subsidies and the receipt thereof by the respective companies shall be subject to the condition that the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada may at all times provide and secure to other companies such running powers, traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford to all railways connected with the railway so subsidized reasonable and proper facilities in exercising such running power, fair and reasonable traffic arrangements with connecting companies, and equal mileage rates between all such connecting railways; and the said board shall have absolute control, at all times, over the rates and tolls to be levied and taken by any of the companies, or upon any of the railways and bridges hereby subsidized: Provided always that any decision of the said board made under this section may be at any time varied, changed or rescinded by the Governor in Council, as he deems just and proper.

6. Every company so receiving a subsidy, its successors and assigns, and any person or company controlling or operating the railway or portion of railway subsidized under this Act, shall each year furnish to the government of Canada transportation for men, supplies, materials and mails over the portion of the lines in respect of which it has received such subsidy, and, whenever required, shall furnish mail cars properly equipped for such mail service; and such transportation and service shall be performed at such rates as are agreed upon between the minister of the department of the government for which such service is being performed, and the company performing it, and, in case of disagreement, then at such rates as are approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada; and in or towards payment for such charges the government of Canada shall be credited by the Company with a sum equal to three per cent per annum on the amount of the subsidy received by the company under this Act.

7. As respects all railways for which subsidies are granted by this Act, the company at any time owning or operating any of the railways shall, when required, produce and exhibit to the Minister of Railways and Canals, or any person appointed by him, all books, accounts and vouchers showing the cost of constructing the railway, the cost of operating it, and the earnings thereof.

8. The Governor in Council may make it a condition of the grant of the subsidies herein provided that the company shall lay the railway with new steel rails and fastenings made in Canada and shall purchase all materials and supplies required for the construction of the railway and bridges, and the rolling stock for the first equipment of the railway, from Canadian producers, if such rails, fastenings, materials, supplies and equipment are procurable in Canada of suitable quality and upon terms as favourable as elsewhere, of which the Minister of Railways and Canals shall be the judge.

9. Whenever a contract has been duly entered into with a company for the construction of any line of railway hereby subsidized, the Minister of Railways and Canals, at the request of the company and upon the report of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, and his certificate that he has made careful examination of the surveys, plans and profile of the whole line so contracted for, and has duly considered the physical characteristics of the country to be traversed and the means of transport available for construction, naming the reasonable and probable cost of such construction, may, with the authorization of the Governor in Council, enter into a supplementary agreement, fixing definitely the maximum amount of the subsidy to be paid, based upon the said certificate of the chief engineer, and providing that the company shall be entitled to be paid, as the minimum, the ordinary subsidy of $3,200 per mile, together with sixty per cent of the difference between the amount so fixed and the said $3,200 per mile, if any; and the balance, forty per cent, shall be paid only on completion of the whole of the work subsidized, and in so far as the actual cost, as finally determined by the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the report and certificate of the said chief engineer, entitles the company thereto: Provided always—

(a) that the estimated cost, as certified, is not less on the average than $18,000 per mile for the whole mileage subsidized;

(b) that no payment shall be made except upon a certificate of the chief engineer that the work done is up to the standard specified in the company's contract;

(c) that in no case shall the subsidy exceed the sum of $6,400 per mile.

Motion agreed to.

OMISSIONS FROM 'HANSARD.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), also of the Speaker, to the fact that on Friday last several questions were asked by me of the Postmaster General and answered by him, which are not recorded in the 'Hansard.' I personally asked a question in regard to the establishment of a post office box at Watford, and the minister was good enough to give me an assurance that it would be allowed to be placed there. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) also put several questions that seem to be omitted from 'Hansard.' I do not say this in any harsh spirit, because I know the reporters are most efficient and this is the first time that I have ever noticed an omission.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Whatever I stated to my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) or to the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) will be carried out. As to 'Hansard' I am not responsible.

Mr. STAPLES. While in committee on Friday night, now that the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) has brought the matter to your attention, I asked the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) across the floor of the House if he would establish postal boxes at Holland and Treherne. He assured me that he would. While he was on his feet he also stated to the House that he would make my heart glad when he advised me that he was going to give a post office to the constituency of the hon. member himself. I looked in 'Hansard' on the following morning and I must say that my gratification was somewhat blighted when I failed to find that statement. I have no doubt that it was an oversight of the reporters, but I still have hope, in fact, I feel confident that the minister still intends to give that post office.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am just looking at 'Hansard.' I am sure that I stated what my hon. friend has just said, so much so, that orders were given in the department Saturday morning. I am surprised if it is not in 'Hansard.'

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 101) to provide for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers which may enhance prices or restrict competition to the detriment of consumers.

On section 5; order for investigation.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). Mr. Chairman, I have some amendments to this section. It was pointed out that the wording 'six or more persons' without further definition might make investigation in some particulars too accessible, and I suggest to add after the words 'six or more persons' the words 'British subjects resident in Canada and of full age.' In subsection 4 it is provided that the application shall be accompanied by a statutory declaration from each applicant declaring that the combine alleged, exists. I propose to add the words 'and which operates to the detriment of the declarant as a consumer.' Therefore, the six persons who make the application must be British subjects resident in Canada, and each person must take his declaration that the facts set out in the statement which accompanies his application and which allege a combine operating to the detriment of the public generally are correct and must also make the declaration that the alleged combine is operating as a detriment to the declarant as a consumer.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Put the word 'producer' in as well as consumer.

Mr. KING. The main purpose of this measure is the protection of the consumer. Doubtless features of this measure may be applicable to a wider range of conditions, but as it is experimental legislation it might be as well to begin with one class, and in the event of our finding it the success that it is expected it will be, in another year we may include the word which is suggested.

Mr. MACDONALD. Has section 2 been considered as passed?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. MACDONALD. It seems to me that if we dealt with section 2 first, an amendment such as that suggested by the minister would be very much more intelligible and we could discuss it more satisfactorily.

Mr. KING. We might go back to section 2.

On section 2; interpretation.

Mr. MACDONALD. Section 2 is, to some extent, the keynote of the whole Bill in that the definition of the word 'combine' is there set forth and the basis of the subsequent provisions is laid down. I pointed out in the remarks I made on this Bill at a previous stage that the wording of subsection (c) of section 2 was so wide that it would cover every arrangement or understanding of a friendly character between men who were engaged in business whether it operated to the detriment of the public or not. I felt that parliament should not in any way provide the definition of the word 'combine' so as to include combinations or understandings which were eminently proper and in the public interest. I would like to suggest to the minister the wisdom of amending the section by inserting after the word 'thereof,' in the 17th line the words 'to the detriment of the consumers of such article of trade or commerce.' If these words were inserted there the definition 'combine' would be amended so as to cover only such organization agreements or arrangements as resulted from the increasing or fixing of prices to the detriment of consumers. I think it is only combinations of that kind that parliament ought to do with, and the definition should not be made any wider than is necessary to cover it. I would ask the minister to consider the advisability of such an amendment.

Mr. KING. I think the point raised by the hon. member is a good one. The purpose of this measure as he has rightly stated is to legislate in regard to such combines only as may be to the detriment of the consumers. I have no objection whatever to adding the words he has suggested to subsection (c). I would move an amendment that after the word 'thereof' in line 18 the words 'to the detriment of consumers, of such articles of trade or commerce' be inserted.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Am I to understand from the minister that the insertion of these words will make it impossible to apply this Act to any class of persons who may be affected by combines except consumers?

Mr. KING. I have already pointed out that the measure is intended primarily for the protection of consumers against the possible advantage which may be taken of them by combines. It is not intended to go further than that at the present time.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. May I ask the minister if he has given any attention to the case of the natural producers? It seems to me that the producers, whose livelihood is menaced by those combines are even more entitled to protection than are the persons who get their livelihood from that source and who will simply be called upon to pay a little more for the necessaries of life. As between the two, certain producing classes are in my opinion much more entitled to protection, and it is much more vital that they should receive protection than that we should confine ourselves to making an experiment to protect consumers.

Mr. KING. Producers may be affected as consumers, and to the extent to which a producer may be a consumer he is receiving protection under this Act. As I pointed out a moment ago to the member for Simcoe (Mr. Currie) this measure is experimental in its nature, and I think it desirable that we should confine it at the outset primarily to the protection of consumers. It practically covers every person in the country from one point of view, and if it is found after the statute has been on the books for a year or so that the producers are in the same need of protection, and that such protection is not given by the measure, then I think it would be a simple matter for parliament to amend the measure and add words which would have that effect. It might be pointed out that producers at the present time, a very large number of them, all those engaged in industries protected by the tariff, do receive from the state special protection. In consequence of that protection, some of the consumers have thought that they are in need of special protection to protect them against the possible advantages which producers who are now protected by the tariff may take to the disadvantage of the consumers. For that reason, for the present, I think it is well to confine the measure to the protection of consumers as consumers, and to leave for further consideration at a later date the inclusion of other classes.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I think the hon. minister who has this Bill in charge has not given consideration to it in all its bearings. It seems to me he has altogether failed to consider the cases of certain producers on the Pacific coast who are being oppressed now by a combine created by the hon. gentleman himself, and that we are having a repetition of what we saw in the House the other day, namely, the government being exempted from the operation of a very benign law. I do not see why we should pass a Bill here interfering with private citizens in the conduct of their business and expressly exempting a combine fostered and maintained by the government of Canada.

Mr. KING. Where is the combine?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The combine is the fishery combine.

Mr. KING. How does it operate?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I have very much pleasure in explaining to the minister how it operates, and I am sure the story will excite his compassion, and cause him to make an amendment such as I have suggested. We have, as the minister knows, on the Pacific coast the sole source of supply for the sockeye salmon, that is the salmon that is canned. We have a regulation of the Fisheries Department whereby no persons who are not already in the business of canning salmon are able to obtain salmon canning licenses, the theory upon which that prohibition is based being that there are already a sufficient number of persons engaged in that industry, and that to increase the number would affect the supply. We have the natural result that all persons in that industry have formed themselves into an absolutely tight combine, a combine ranging not only through Canada, but extending to the adjoining portions of the United States, where they catch the salmon in very considerable quantities. This government protects that combine so far as Canada is concerned by further enacting that no Canadian fisherman catching fish in Canada shall be allowed to export those fish. His market is restricted to the market offered by the canners in the combine on the Canadian side. He must sell to them. If he does not sell to them, he must destroy his fish. The operation of that last year, for instance, brought about this condition of affairs, that whilst the canners on the Canadian side and on the American side are buying the identical fish, canning by the same process, at even cost, selling in the same market, under their combination which fixes the selling price both in Canada and the United States, our Canadian canners combined to make the price of fish in Canada 10 cents per fish, while a few miles away on the American side, fish were selling at 20 cents a fish. Therefore, this combine operated to deprive the Canadian fishermen of half the earnings last summer to which they were entitled.

Mr. KING. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to want a law put through which would compel the fishermen to sell the fish at double the price they are selling at the present time, a law to make fish dearer to every one who wants to purchase fish in British Columbia?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The minister asks a question worthy of a tyro in public affairs. I do not think I am called upon to answer any question of that kind.

Mr. KING. Do not misunderstand my question. I understood the hon. gentleman to state that the effect of this combine in British Columbia was to keep down the price at which fish were sold.

Mr. HUGHES. The price at which the poor fishermen are obliged to sell them.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I may explain to the minister that this combine which he as a member of the government has assisted to create and is assisting to maintain, and which he could wipe out in five minutes by altering one or two orders in council, has the effect of cutting down the price at which the fish caught in the Fraser river would otherwise be saleable.

Mr. KING. Is not that an advantage to the consumer?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. No, it is not, because the consumer in eastern Canada pays the price fixed in conjunction with the American canners, who on their side of the line pay 20 cents per fish as against 10 cents on our side; so that the consumer is paying on the 20 cent basis.

Mr. KING. If a certain combine is fixing the price on this side of the line detrimental to the consumer, that combine can be proceeded against under this Bill.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I think the hon. gentleman does not understand the working of his own combine. If he did, I think he would cause it to cease to exist. My complaint in this case is not on behalf of the consumer, although I think the consumer has a just cause of complaint. I am speaking as the member for New Westminster, where the producers of the fish work who are deprived of half the revenue to which they are entitled from the sale of those fish because of the operation of the canning combine, and I am asking the minister to include in this Bill a provision whereby we can set the machinery of the department in operation and prove beyond the possibility of cavil that the effect of the combine of the salmon canners is to reduce the price to the producers of fish to one-half of what they would otherwise get, while it does not benefit the consumers in any way. On the contrary, the consumers are charged as much for these fish as they are for the American fish for which double the price is paid. The minister can afford us relief in any one of three ways: he can give us a chance to come under the operation of this Act and allow any fishermen detrimentally affected to make application for investigation just as consumers can; or he can persuade his colleagues to remove the prohibition of the export of fish; or he can persuade them to remove the prohibition of persons not now engaged in the canning industry to go into it, so that we may at least have competition on the part of capital. Not only are these fishermen deprived of half their livelihood on the fish they sell, but they are deprived of the right to sell a large portion of the fish they catch when the run is large; because when they go to the Canadian canneries after a night when they have caught say 400 fish to the boat, they find a notice put up by the canners that on account of the large run the canners will take only say 200 fish per boat. The result is that a man who has 400 fish to sell can sell only 200 of them, because this government prohibits him exporting them across the line, where the American canners would be glad to take them at a higher price; so that he is obliged either to dump them into the river, which also is against the law, or to go ashore and dig a great hole and bury them, which of course no one would do. If the minister is sincere in his effort to deal with combines in a way to bring undoubted benefit to the people of Canada, he will not tell these poor fishermen that they must wait for another year or perhaps two years before he will give them relief.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If my hon. friend had stated the whole case, my hon. colleague and the House would appreciate the situation better. To some extent it is true that the fishery regulations on the Pacific coast, as on the Atlantic coast, have created more or less of a combine; that is, the number of canners is limited and the number of fishing licenses is limited. The provincial government at the present moment is limiting the number of boats which may be licensed to fish, a certain number to each cannery. All this is done for the purpose of conserving the fish in the waters of British Columbia. The particular point to which my hon. friend refers is that the fishing on the bays or rivers of British Columbia is carried on by individual fishermen. Probably as many as 4,000 boats have licenses to fish in the Fraser river and estuary. Immediately south of the boundary line, not more than about 30 miles away are hundreds of American traps for the supply of the American canners. There is very little gill netting as compared with trap fishing. Some years ago the cannery men on the Fraser river, when short of fish completed their packing operations for the day or the week by bringing fish taken in traps south of the boundary line, and I can remember very well that the Canadian fishermen licensed to catch fish on the Fraser river objected to the free importation of fish from Washington State 30 or 40 miles away from the supply of the British Columbia canners. I do not know whether a duty was then put on fish or not. I am not sure about that, but the department some years ago prohibited the bringing in of fish to be canned in the canneries. What for? In the interests of the cannery men? Not at all, but in the interests of the fishermen of the Fraser river. Necessarily that regulation had to be reciprocal, and fish for the purpose of being canned were prohibited.

Now, if it were possible for the Canadian fishermen to sell their fish, not to the cannery men for whom they are catching, but to the United States cannery men, when the prices south of the line may be a little more than those north of the line, it would be the proper thing for the canners on the Fraser river to go down and buy fish taken in the American traps. But this has been prohibited, and I think it is in the interests of the fishermen of the Fraser river. The arrangement, I think, has worked fairly satisfactorily. I do not think the prices that my hon. friend speaks about are fairly stated. Ten cents a fish on the Fraser river, my hon. friend knows perfectly well, has been exceeded time and again; it goes up as high as 20 cents and 25 cents a fish, particularly when there is a scarcity. When there is a big run, which sometimes happens, when a fisherman may come in with 400 or 500 fish, and it is impossible for the canneries to take care of all the fish for the next twenty-four hours, half of them have to be thrown away. That seldom happens now, but it has happened, and as a result the price drops, and it might come down to even 10 cents. But to state to this House that the price paid by the Fraser river canneries is 10 cents a fish, and on the other side of the line 20 cents a fish, is not stating the case fairly or accurately. It is a reciprocal arrangement, initiated because the fishermen protested against the cannery men buying fish south of the line. It must be remembered also, as I stated a moment ago, that all the fish caught in the Fraser river, are caught by individual fishermen. There are no traps in the Fraser river. We have four or five times the number of fishermen engaged in catching fish that they have in the state of Washington, although the state of Washington puts up more fish than we do. I believe this is not a matter for the Bill regulating combines. It is matter for the fishery regulations of the Marine and Fisheries Department. Any regulation made for the limitation of the number of canneries that may be erected must necessarily create more or less of a combine, a combine in the sense that the number is limited, that is all. The cannery men on the Fraser river, when fixing the price to be paid for fish during the season get together and agree as to how much they are going to pay, but as soon as the fish gets scarce, they have to increase their price. There is that arrangement I have referred to in regard to the importation or exportation of fish, and it seems to me impossible to do anything in connection with that under this Bill.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I think the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, like the Minister of Labour, is speaking without knowledge of the subject. I would like to ask him in what form is the prohibition of the importation of fish, whether it is under the Customs Act or is part of the Fisheries regulations?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My recollection is that it is part of the Fisheries regulations, but I am not certain. It has been in force for some years, the issuing of licenses, for instance, to cannery men, has, I think, the stipulation that the fish caught under the license must be canned in Canada.

Mr. J. D TAYLOR. I had a copy of the regulations here with which I think I could very easily confound the minister, but unfortunately I have mislaid it, and in the absence of the copy, I will not say anything as to a point on which I have at the moment no positive information. But I wish to say to the minister that he totally misunderstands the situation created by this combine. It is not a matter of chance, whether the fish shall be dear to-day or cheap to-morrow. As he ought to know, the cannery men at the beginning of the season, some weeks in advance of the opening, get together and lay down a definite price as they did last year. I do not like the minister to stand up in this chirpy manner and tell the House that I have made a statement which is not correct. If there is one subject on which I am informed, having reference to the interests of my constituency, it is that of the salmon fishery, and when I made the statement as to that fishery, I made a statement that is absolutely and entirely correct, which conceals nothing, and upon the correctness of which I am prepared to stake my reputation. Now, I say that last year our Canadian canners met and fixed the prices at 10 cents per fish up to a certain time, and a price of 12½ cents per fish up to a certain time later.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I don't dispute that fact at all.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. That arrangement was not made casually, but was the result of long discussion, creating a great deal of heart-burning among the Canadian fishermen. As to the price on the American side, I have equally precise information, that while our men had to sell at 10 cents, the price to the same combine buying on the American side was 20 cents, and that while the Canadian fishermen had to sell at 12½ cents, the combine on the other side was paying 25 cents. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I have a statement from an American source showing those prices, paid for the enormous catch made on the American side. I am sure that the fishermen on the Fraser river will be greatly surprised and disappointed when they find that the minister, whom they regard as their special custodian, is opposed to the suggestion I have made here, or has advised his colleague not to do something in this Act to enable the fishermen on the Fraser river to get the prices they are entitled to.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is absolutely unnecessary to suggest an amendment to this Act. If it is an improper thing to have this prohibition of Canadian fish from being canned on the other side, and the prohibition of the importation of American trap-caught salmon, to be canned on the Fraser river, it can be amended by repealing the regulation. I am not speaking by the book when I say that it is part of the fisheries regulations. I tried to explain the matter as I understood it from the knowledge I gained some six years ago. It has not been under discussion for some time, and I cannot even say I ever read the regulation. But I heard it explained at the time, and I think the prohibition referred to is part of the regulation. However, there is a prohibition of that kind, and there is no disputing the fact as to the price. I quite agree that the cannery men do get together and they do fix the price they are going to pay, it may be from 10 cents upwards, and they do negotiate with the fishermen, the fishermen, of course, wanting a higher price. A fair price so much depends on the run of fish, which nobody knows anything about until the fish actually come. Prices have sometimes started high and dropped, and they have started low and risen.

Mr. BURRELL. Will the hon. minister permit me a question?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There can be no controversy as to this matter——

Mr. BURRELL. If the hon. minister will permit me, I would like to ask him how the price can depend on the run of fish, if the canners fix it ahead of the coming of the fish?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is one of the problematical things they must take into account in fixing the price—it is one of the uncertainties of the trade. The hon. member (Mr. Burrell) knows that we have about an average run of fish. When we used to have every fourth year a big year, the price was low.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood my hon. friend from New Westminster to say that the price was not regulated by an antecedent act of a combine, but regulated from time to time actually by the run of the fish.

Mr. SEALEY. In connection with the suggestion of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. MacDonald) to allow this Act to apply only to combines against consumers, and not against producers, I think the hon. member omits a very large class of the community—in fact, I think a larger class is affected by combines than the other, especially in agricultural produce. There is scarcely an agricultural product that must not be sold to a combine—in practice only a combine buys it. A combine of wheat buyers buys the wheat; a combine of fruit buyers, buys the fruit; the dairy products are bought by a combine; and the same is true of beef, pork, mutton, and other meats. I have looked forward to this Bill as being a very useful one for our community at all events. I think, therefore, that, in the general interest, the hon. member for Pictou should withdraw his suggestion and allow the Bill to apply to combines against the producers as well as to combines against consumers.

Mr. KING. I think that, possibly, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sealey) does not follow the effect of a combine quite far enough. If I understood him rightly, his contention is that certain products are bought by combines who buy at a low figure, that they may control the market. Surely, the resultant effect would be shown upon those who purchase from the combine. It certainly would affect the consumer of the article, and if it did, the Bill would apply. I think, that if the hon. member looks carefully at the law, he will see that, in the last analysis, the purchaser of the article in question must be affected, and if it affects the purchaser then this measure will apply.

Mr. SEALEY. In connection with that, it does not seem that it will quite apply, or that it has applied in the past.

Mr. KING. We had not the law in the past.

Mr. SEALEY. But we have had the evil, although the law to remedy it has not been in existence. Take the matter of pork, for instance. On March 16, 1908, pork was sold at $4.90 per hundred weight, or practically five cents per pound, on foot, and the retail price of bacon here in the Ottawa stores was 22 cents. To-day, pork is $9.50 to $10 per hundred weight, on foot, and bacon is offered right here at 22 cents per pound. At present, the consumer is, perhaps, getting it at about a proper proportion to the price that the producer receives. But, two years ago, the producer was getting only half the money and the consumer did not get the product any cheaper. The producers in our country did make an effort to get the provincial government to act in order to prevent the combine paying an unfair price to the producer. But the matter was not even effectually started, because the provincial law seemed so difficult and complicated, and the officers in charge did not appear to be very persistent in pushing the matter. Therefore, as I have said, I have looked forward to this law as being of great assistance to the agricultural producers. If the consumer had then appealed against the unfair price he was being charged, he could have succeeded to some extent, but he could not have completely succeeded as against the combines that were forcing prices down. At that time, they were working on this basis: Everybody knows that our neighbours to the south have a very large production of food products, and they have, on the exchange in Chicago, what they call a bull day and a bear day. The market is bulled up for twenty-five days in the month, and the other day the bears are on top. In that way, the packers' combine were able to buy at an average of about three cents less than the average market value. They could pay the two cents duty charged by the Canadian customs, sell in Canada and still be one cent ahead of the game. And everybody knows that, looking at it from the point of view of the producer when the hog is brought to about 200 pounds, he must be sold irrespective of price. So, they were able to keep the farmers down to hard pan, or even below, and still make a high charge to the consumer. As against the contention of the minister, the fact that the price of bacon to the consumer is the same as it was when the packers were allowing the producer only half the price seems to me to be conclusive. Many other instances might be given of agricultural products that are handled in the same way as pork. I think that it will be a great gain to Canada as a whole to pursue the combines from the producer's as well as from the consumer's standpoint. However, it will be a great benefit and advantage to have them prevented from wrongfully taking advantage of either class.

Mr. NESBITT. Under this section, 'Combine' means any contract, &c., which has or is designed to have the effect of increasing or fixing the price or rental of any article of trade, cost of storage, &c., 'to the detriment of consumers'. Of course, any increase, reasonable or unreasonable, may be said to be to the detriment of consumers. I would suggest that the minister put in words to make it read 'which has or is designed to have the effect of unreasonably increasing or fixing the price', and, in the fifth line, 'or of unduly restricting competition'—insert the words 'unreasonably' and 'unduly'.

Mr. KING. I would point out to the hon. member (Mr. Nesbitt) that this is simply a definition. The law itself applies rather to the effects of combines than to combines as such. I think it very desirable that the definition should be as broad as possible, so that all classes of combinations may be brought under the operation of the law. I quite agree that it would not be proper to have any one rendered liable simply for taking part in the formation of a combine as such. But, if when the combine formed unduly or unreasonably enhances prices, it is quite proper that the parties interested should be proceeded against under this measure. If the hon. member (Mr. Nesbitt) will look at section 7, he will find that, before an examination can be ordered, the judge must be satisfied that it is in the public interest that that investigation should take place, and that the combination that exists is injurious to trade or has operated to the detriment of consumers generally. I think it would be hardly wise to include debatable words in the definition. For that reason I would not care to add the words suggested to the definition. I have no objection to having the Act safeguard any applications to the judge so as to prevent parties being harassed in an unfair manner; but I do not think it would be wise to put debatable words into the definition.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister tell us why he does not include the farmers as well as the consumers, in accordance with the suggestions made by my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Sealey), so that it may apply to combines which stand between the farmers and the consumers?

Mr. KING. I have carefully considered that point. I think I have mentioned that any combination, if it is going to be a vital factor in the process at all, will in the last analysis reveal its effect in the prices of the article as sold in the market, and in that way consumers would be affected by a combine. Further, I may point out that, as I have already said, this legislation is in some particulars a departure, and I think it is desirable that we should proceed perhaps not too rapidly at the outset. If, after the law has been on the statutes for a year, it is found that it works well to the extent to which it does apply, and that producers have a grievance which cannot be remedied under it as it stands at present, it would be easy to make the necessary amendments and to enlarge the scope of the Act. But I think it would be wise to see whether, in the first instance, the law as it is now framed is not broad enough to meet the case which has been suggested.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What kind of a position would the farmer be in? He is a producer, and he would not be able to make any complaints, he would have to wait until the consumer made the complaints.

Mr. KING. The representations that have come to the government so far from different sources, have been almost wholly in regard to combines against consumers. The question of the effect of combines on producers is being raised now for the first time, that is to say, to any extent. I think all the communications that have been received and the representations that have been made to the government, have been in respect to consumers, not as respects producers. But, as my hon. friend will see while every farmer is a producer of one article, he is a consumer of a thousand or more. Looking at the matter from the point of view of his being a consumer of articles of food and clothing, and everything needed for his household and his farm generally, to all of which classes of articles this law applies particularly, it will be apparent that the farmer would be the man of all men who will reap great advantage from this legislation. I might further point out that in the letter from the Master of the Grange, which I read on the second reading of the Bill, the writer stated the the Grange had carefully considered this Bill and that members of the Grange were enthusiastically in favour of the measure, and wished it to pass at the present session. But nothing was said in that communication in regard to enlarging the scope of the Bill in the manner which has been suggested.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister understands the position of the farmer. The farmer may sell his products to a combine in that line, and yet he has no recourse under this Act.

Mr. CROSBY. After reading this Act and listening to the discussions upon it, I do not think it will have the desired effect, either upon the consumer or the producer. The Minister of Labour said a few moments ago that there was some protection given to the producer by way of a special tariff, but if the tariff is only a revenue tariff, I do not see how it can protect any one. I do not see how the tariff is going to protect the man who raises pigs on a farm or the man who raises beef, and I do not understand how it will protect the man who catches fish on the Atlantic coast. The Minister of Inland Revenue said a moment ago that the lessening of the number of licenses issued to canners would be a protection to the fishery. Did anybody ever hear that lessening the number of canning licenses was going to protect the fish in the sea, when you let the same number of people go out to catch them?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Surely the hon. gentleman understands that if you lessen the number of licensees who are authorized to catch fish, you are thereby lessening the number of fishermen?

Mr. CROSBY. If I didn't know any more about fishing then the Minister of Inland Revenue, I wouldn't attempt to say anything about it. From what he has said, I have come to the conclusion that he knows very little about the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast, and probably on the Pacific coast either. In the east the only licenses we have are licenses to can lobsters, and those licenses have been limited. But the methods of catching lobsters have not been limited, nor has the number of men going into lobster fishing been limited either. The number of boats has not been limited, but the number of canning licenses has been unduly limited. But the Fisheries Committee have taken that matter up, and have shown that they do not desire any such combination as that. But in all these matters we are speaking only of the consumers of the articles and not of the producers. Take my own province of Nova Scotia. We have there a large fresh fish industry, but by virtue of the cold storage system which has been established by the government, the fishermen are not getting fair play. The fisherman goes out and catches fresh fish, and in consequence of the cold storage system the price of fish has been greatly reduced. People engaged in the cold storage business make an arrangement by which they buy so much fish, and I am sorry to say, at a very small price, running from half a cent a pound to two cents a pound. You cannot buy fresh fish anywhere in the eastern part of Canada of the same class of fish for less than about 10 cents a pound. Now, who gets the difference, where does it go to? There should be some method by which these fishermen may call for an investigation to see whether they are getting a fair and reasonable price for their fish that they have to sell from half a cent up to two cents a pound. Half a cent to two cents a pound is not a fair price for fresh fish retailing in the vicinity of ten cents a pound and upwards. I can understand the Minister of Labour saying that we will try this Act for one year, and if it works well, we will enlarge it next year. This is something which has been going on for a long time, and if it is possible we should make some effort to deal with it. The minister says that everybody is a consumer and that consequently this Bill will help everybody. If a man cannot produce, he cannot consume, because he cannot find the money to buy. He has to produce first in order to get the wherewithal to buy. I would be very glad to have a law placed upon the statute-book that would provide a fair means of regulation as between the producer and the consumer. I am speaking more particularly on behalf of the men who produce the raw material. The man in the coal mines is not protected. He has no opportunity of saying how much per ton he shall get for the coal he mines, while the coal company is getting so much per ton at the pit head. I notice that under the Bill as it is proposed to be amended, the six persons who make application——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think I will have to ask the hon. gentleman to confine himself to what is before the committee. It is the definition of the word 'combine.' The section that the hon. gentleman wishes to enter upon is section 5.

Mr. CROSBY. If you rule that I cannot discuss that part of the clause I will defer what I have to say.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not wish to be arbitrary, but for the sake of regularity I think the hon. gentleman might wait until we go back to section 5.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to make the statement that he had received no representations from producers that certain combines were injuring them. In answer to that I might draw his attention to the fact that the small tanners, who are producers, applied to the government to intercede or do something which would enable them to sell their product without restraint. It was not from the consumers that the application came, but from the producers, the small tanners all over the country who were either compelled to enter into an agreement, that they would buy their supplies from certain firms or otherwise they could not sell any leather to these firms. The product which they had was thereby reduced in value, and the sale circumscribed very much on account of that arrangement.

Mr. KING. In answer to the hon. gentleman I would point out that the complaint was that the combination of certain tanners was in restraint of trade, and that it was operating to the detriment of the consumers. If it was really a combine maintained for the purpose of preventing people from buying their goods outside it would be covered by this Bill. Similarly, my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Crosby) has been speaking of a combination in regard to fish. A 'combine,' as defined in this Bill, means a combination for restricting competition in or controlling the production of certain articles. The definition is pretty broad. If a combine controls the production of or restricts competition in any article by any kind of an agreement it will come within the definition of the word 'combine' as herein set forth.

Mr. CROSBY. Will the minister tell me how fishermen, who have been selling their fish to those who have cold storage facilities can bring about an investigation into the question of the price that they sell their fish at, as well as the price at which the purchasers resell the fish?

Mr. KING. If the persons interested in cold storage were restricting the supply of fish in any way that would be a combine, and the effect of the restriction would be to the detriment of the consumer. If it were shown that there was a combination amongst cold storage men, or any other group who were operating in a manner to restrict trade, an investigation could be had under this Act. If it were shown that there was no such combination I do not see that the question of fixing the price on the part of the men who were selling the fish would actually come in because there would be absolute freedom of competition, and they could sell to whomsoever they wished as a result of that competition and freedom.

Mr. CROSBY. There are a number of cold storage men who handle fresh fish. These men get together and say they will pay so much for fish to-day, and so much during the season. They do not restrict the production of fish at all; they take all the fish that the fishermen give them. When the fishermen get sufficient fish, and bring it into Canso, where there are two or three concerns who buy fish, they give them a certain price—from half a cent to two cents a pound—very seldom going to two cents a pound—and they resell that fish in Nova Scotia at not less than ten cents a pound. There should be some method by which the fishermen could show that they were not being treated fairly or reasonably, that these people pay a certain price and then resell to the consumer at a much higher price.

Mr. KING. I do not think we have any need to go any farther than the hon. gentleman's own statement. He alleges that this combination of cold storage dealers arrange prices, and that after paying a certain price they sell at another price in virtue of the combine which the hon. gentleman says exists.

Mr. CROSBY. I am not worrying particularly about the price at which they sell to the public, but what I am particularly worried about is the price that the fishermen get from the purchasers who have the cold storage facilities. These men have been assisted in providing these facilities by grants from the public treasury, and they have been put in a position to enable them to handle this fresh fish business. I have no doubt that the government intended also when assisting to provide these facilities that the fisherman should be helped. But help is not given to the fisherman because he simply has to sell his fish at the price offered him. The buyers take all the fish they can get; they do not curtail production at all. I do not know whether I have made myself clear to the minister.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I quite understand the contention of the hon. member (Mr. Crosby) although I have not heard very much complaint in that direction. His complaint appears to be that this is a combine to keep down prices.

Mr. CROSBY. I am speaking of keeping down the price as far as purchasing from the fisherman is concerned, but when the fish goes into the hands of the merchant immediately the price goes up. I desire the fisherman to get a much better price or a chance to regulate it.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It is a combine to prevent the fishermen from getting a better price for his goods. If there is a combine of that kind and it can be prevented it would be a very proper thing to do. The fishermen in the district that I am best acquainted with have not made very many complaints of that kind to me. There are always a large number of buyers on the coast and if one will not buy another will. As the hon. gentleman has said that the cold storage places may have been to some extent oppressive, I think that would be a very proper subject of investigation when we are giving them a subsidy. There is no reason why a cold storage concern which obtains a subsidy from this government should be allowed to oppress the fishermen with whom they deal. I do not say they have done so. There ought to be some way for the government to investigate a matter of that kind so as to see that the seller to these cold storage concerns subsidized by the government should get fair play. I understand that the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Crosby) has complained about the recommendations made by the commission which inquired into the lobster industry.

Mr. CROSBY. My only reference was to the limitation of canneries.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It has been stated that there was a certain combination among the canners along the coast of the maritime provinces in this way: That the number of licenses were limited, and the licenses were in the hands of a few companies, and in that way they could control the industry to a certain extent. It has been a grievance on the coast of the maritime provinces for some time past that the government have refused to grant any more licenses to new canneries, and that in that way they threw the industry into the hands of the people who had previously held licenses. That matter has been investigated by the Fisheries Committee, which has arrived at the conclusion that this policy was not a good policy, and that any person who can qualify himself to carry on a fish cannery in a proper way with the proper equipment should be given a license, and that the so called monopoly should be done away with.

Mr. CROSBY. That is exactly what I said, only I did not say it as well as the hon. member for Guysboro has said it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I realize that the minister has bestowed a great deal of time and attention on this subject, but he has not made perfectly clear and plain to me what his position is in respect to certain matters brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Blain) and others. From my limited investigation into such matters, I understand that the injurious effects of a combine may be roughly speaking divided into two classes; in the first place, an undue increase in the price to the consumer; and in the second place, an undue decrease of the price to the persons who produce the raw material, and which the combine works up into the finished article and places on sale. I understand the minister to say that this Bill has relation purely to the operations of the first-class, and that under the Bill as at present framed he did not purpose affording any remedy as respects the operations of the second-class. I also understood the minister to state, in a somewhat indefinite way, that possibly the operations of the second-class may be by some means brought within the scope of this Bill. I ask for information as to that. It seems to me perfectly clear that the operations of those who decrease the price to the purchaser may have no effect whatever on the price to the consumer. It has been suggested that decreasing by means of a combination, the price to the purchaser, is really an advantage to the whole community as it will inevitably result in decreasing the price to the consumer. I do not understand it in that way. It is perfectly possible for a combine to decrease unduly the price to the purchaser and at the same time maintain a reasonable price to consumers, and I have no doubt that has been done.

Mr. NESBITT. If it did unduly increase the price to the consumer, would not the Act apply?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You could investigate the matter so far as there was an undue increase of price to the consumer, but apparently the producers who are obliged under certain conditions to sell their product for too low a price to that same combine have no opportunity for relief under this Bill.

Mr. NESBITT. I wanted to know if this Bill would not cover that?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I want to know also. I understand from the minister that that was not at present within the scope of the Bill, but that after the Bill had been in operation for a year and tested by experience, he might propose to amend it in that direction. Afterwards I understand the minister to intimate, though perhaps not very definitely, that there might be some remedy under the Bill, and I would like to know from him now under what terms of the Bill can operations of the second class to which I have referred be brought within the purview of the Act.

Mr. KING. The price is either the result of free competition or the result of some monopolistic factor. If there is absolutely free competition in an article, neither purchaser nor consumer will be affected so far as this measure is concerned—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister is not answering my point and perhaps I have not made myself clear. Take a case where the price charged to the consumer is a perfectly fair and reasonable price and where the consumer has absolutely nothing to complain of. But, although the price charged to the consumer is perfectly fair, there exists a combine by which the price paid to the purchaser of the raw material is unreasonably restricted, so that while the combine itself makes an enormous profit—out of fresh fish for example—the producer of the raw material in the first instance merely obtains the bare cost or perhaps less than the cost of production. Take that case, where the price to the consumer does not come in question at all, is that case covered by this Bill or is it not?

Mr. KING. The price is either the result of the play of the law of supply and demand under free competition, or the result of the supply being restricted by some element of a monopolistic nature.

Mr. HUGHES. Or the demand being restricted, as in this case.

Mr. KING. Any kind of restriction that interferes with the free play of the law of supply and demand in the market may affect the price. Any combination which would be sufficiently strong to control the price that could be offered to all producers of a particular article would be a complete monopoly. We cannot imagine such a combination the effect of which would not be reflected in the price the consumers would have to pay for the article. If you have a combination which controls the purchase of all the raw material, you have a combination which stands between the producer and the consumer, not for the benefit of either but, primarily for the benefit of its own. If you have a combination strong enough to keep down the price at which a commodity can be purchased in the open market, it seems to me that you have a prima facie case of a combination standing between the producer and the consumer, and operating to the detriment of the consumer, and therefore coming under the operation of this Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would rather have from the hon. minister a direct answer to my question than a lecture on political economy. I could imagine a case where the price paid to the producer is cut down, while the price charged to the consumer is not increased.

Mr. KING. Can the hon. gentleman give such a case?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not called upon to give one, but I could point to an instance of that in the most gigantic trust known in modern times, the Standard Oil Company. My view is that if such a case should arise, the producer whose price is cut down will have no remedy under this Bill. It may be that the hon. minister's great experience of the complexity of human affairs tells him that no such case could arise; but, with all deference to him, I would hardly be inclined to accept his view on that point. We know that in the complexity of modern conditions a great many things do arise which are not foreseen, and it is not beyond the scope of my limited imagination to realize that there might be a case where the price is kept down to the consumer for the very good reason that the price of the raw material to the producer is also kept down to an unreasonable limit, so that the combination makes a very great profit, while the man who produces the raw material makes little or no profit, and works very hard for the barest livelihood.

Mr. KING. I may say frankly to my hon. friend that in introducing this legislation the government had not in view the meeting of every possible evil that might grow out of combinations. The objection which we rather expected to be raised against this measure was that it was going too far. I am very glad to find hon. gentlemen opposite apparently sharing the view that it is a step in the right direction, and that if it has any limitations at all they are that it does not go quite far enough. I think it meets all the apparent cases which have come to the attention of the government up to the present time. If there are other cases which it does not cover, time will reveal them, and when it does, I think we can deal with them more to the advantage of the country than we could by making this measure too wide at the outset.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I refrained from making any remarks on this Bill at the beginning of the discussion, though I take considerable interest in it. Perhaps I am not deeply enough versed in political economy to size up the situation fully, but I have some idea of how such matters work out in practice. There are three categories into which trade naturally divides itself: there is first the producer; second, the manufacturer or dealer; and, third, the consumer. Combinations may exist in any of the three categories, and if I wished to delay the House, I could give well-known examples of each class of combination. The hon. member for Westworth (Mr. Sealey), the hon. member for Westminster (Mr. Taylor), spoke truly when they said that this Bill might not cover combinations that would restrict the prices paid to producers. If the minister inserted the word 'producer,' I think he would perhaps make the Bill cover the case exactly. There are combinations of farmers as well as combinations of dealers. For instance, the milk producers and the fruit producers have their little associations by which they endeavour to fix prices. It seems that the first operation of a combination or trust of this kind is to seek to control the sources of production, because unless a trust can do so it is impossible for it to control the price to the consumer. There might be a combination of dealers or drovers that would reduce the price of hogs to the farmer, and the farmer under this Bill would have no redress. Three or four drovers might form such a combination among themselves and agree to pay only a certain price for hogs in a certain district. There is nothing in the Bill dealing with a case of that kind.

Mr. KING. I admit that there is nothing in the Bill to prevent one or two drovers in a particular locality from fixing the prices they would pay. But if there were half a dozen or more who combined to control a particular area, and the farmers of that area were put in such a position that they could not sell their hogs, except at the price the combination fixed, I think you would have a combination that would be obviously detrimental to the consumer, because it would limit the supply.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It might not limit the supply. The sale of bacon and pork in this country is controlled broadly by two firms of retail dealers. They might not care a fig so far as that is concerned, and that is one point in which the Bill is lacking. For example, there is nothing to prevent a combination of grain buyers in the west fixing the price of grain in the west irrespective of the foreign market value of it. Everybody knows that the tendency is to form combinations so as to make prices stable, in order that a man in any line of business will know what profit he is likely to make. If prices fluctuate such as they did in the old oil days—one day a barrel of oil would only be worth 10 cents, and the next day it would be worth $10—these fluctuations would give rise to gambling, and cause great injury to the consumer, and the producer, and everybody else. There is no doubt that combinations have tended to maintain prices at a set level. Suppose the grain dealers form a combination, and fix the price of wheat in the Northwest, what means would the Northwest farmer have to bring about an investigation? I am quite in sympathy with the Bill, but I think the insertion of the word 'producer' would help out the situation, and make it better for all concerned.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister stated that he had made provision under this Bill to deal with all classes of monopoly that have been brought to the attention of the government. I quite understand that the minister is young in the cabinet, but surely he knows that for many years the farming community of the west have come down here delegation after delegation, asking for the passage of legislation which would burst the grain combine. The agricultural organizations in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba have been sending their representatives to Ottawa for years asking the government to deal with that question. They are producers, and if there is no provision under this Bill whereby they can break up that monopoly which they have strong evidence does exist, then the Bill falls very far short of what it should be. Can a combine of that kind be investigated?

Mr. KING. Unquestionably, any combination of the kind mentioned by the hon. gentleman could be investigated. If you look at the definition of the word combine, the last sentence says:

And shall include what is known as a trust, monopoly or merger.

All the cases that have been cited affecting producers have been in the nature of monopolies. I think that is admitted. That being so they would come under that definition, and all such cases would be covered by the measure as it stands.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Yes, but the minister has excluded himself from contending that when he accepted the amendment of the hon. member for Pictou which says:

To the detriment of the consumers in such articles of trade and commerce.

The applicant has to show that he is injured as the consumer of the article.

Mr. KING. The first part of the definition is limited by the words the hon. gentleman has suggested, but in addition to that there are added the words:

And also includes 'a trust, monopoly and merger.'

The word 'also' is sufficient to show that if these last words are not in the definition itself there can be no doubt the definition was intended to bring them within the measure.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Would it not read:

And also includes what is known as a trust, monopoly or merger, which operates to the detriment of the consumers of such articles of trade and commerce.

Mr. KING. Not at all, I would object to adding these words to the last part of the definition.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. The Minister of Labour. (Mr. King) did not make it very clear to me what effect this interpretation would have. We have combinations in the west in connection with wheat, in connection with beef, in connection with pork. What I would like to know is whether the producer in any of these lines in western Canada could have an investigation under this Bill?

Mr. KING. That certainly was the intention, where the combination would have an effect upon prices. To make it perfectly clear, in view of the discussion that has taken place, I propose to make the definition include producers as well as consumers. Then there can be no mistake. I would point out to the committee that the discussion really arose on the suggested amendment of 'combine' made by the hon. member from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) whose object, as I understood it, was not to restrict the definition, but to make it clear that the combines affected by this law, must be detrimental to some one. Under the amendment already made, the words added are 'to the detriment of consumers,' there is a desire that it should be made with equal clearness to apply to producers. My own feeling is that the kind of combinations affected by the law is sufficiently indicated by the final words of this section, 'trust, monopoly or merger,' whether such affect producers or consumers. But I would move that the section be amended so as to read, 'to the detriment of consumers or producers of such article of trade or commerce.'

Mr. J. HAGGART. Is not the point sufficiently covered by the definition contained in the clause as printed?

Mr. KING. Some hon. members thought that, possibly, combinations that were not detrimental to any class might be brought under the law by the definition as it is in the printed Bill. If we add 'to the detriment of consumers or producers' that makes it clear that what we want to reach are only such combinations as are detrimental to some one.

Mr. J. HAGGART. But it says 'fixing the price or rental of any article of trade or commerce, or the cost of the storage or transportation thereof,' and so on. That is the offence, and you limit considerably by the provision concerning its being detrimental to parties.

Mr. KING. I would not say that is the offence. The offence lies in a combination of the kind enhancing the price to consumers or lowering them to producers. A combine that does not operate to the detriment of either consumers or producers, what would be the necessity of including it?

Mr. J. HAGGART. But is not what the minister proposes to add—that it is detrimental to some one—implied in the very words of the section?

Mr. KING. I think that what the hon. member (Mr. J. Haggart) says as to the definition as printed is quite right. The definition, as printed to my mind, is sufficient. But some hon. members are inclined to be sensitive as to the words, and wish to make it clear that it is only a combine that is operating detrimentally to others that is to be dealt with by this legislation. The words do not take away anything or add anything, it seems to me. But they do no harm, and they meet the objection raised.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. It seems to me the addition of these words does not make a single bit of difference in the working of the Bill. The whole object is to prevent the operation of injurious combines. I do not see any great objection to the words, but I do not see that they add anything to the effect of the Bill.

Mr. KING. They are desired by some hon. members of the House.

Mr. J. HAGGART. That is no reason. The minister must be able to give some reasonable explanation.

Mr. KING. The reason seems to be quite clear. Some hon. members have desired these words to be inserted because they fear that otherwise the definition may be misread. A man might be afraid to enter into some agreement with his neighbour, fearing that, under this definition, the law would apply to him. By adding the words 'to the detriment of consumers or producers' you make clear, in the opinion of the hon. members who have spoken, the purpose which it is intended to serve by the definition of 'combine.' If it helps to remove doubts, that is a good reason.

Mr. J. HAGGART. But we are guided by fixed principles. What is meant by 'detrimental to the consumer?' If the judgment is left to the parties appointed under the Act, and no fixed principle is laid down for their guidance, it gives to these parties the power of constituting a crime. There is the objection to legislation of this sort; you make it a crime—

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Yes, you do. For, if within a certain time after publication in the 'Canada Gazette,' those whose conduct is investigated, do not cease to do what these parties have held is wrong for them to do, they may be fined $1,000 a day.

Mr. KING. That is after it has been shown that an offence has been committed, namely, that prices have been unduly enhanced; and that, at common law, is crime to-day.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister say that there are combines in existence that do not reduce the price of the raw material to the producer, or unduly advance the price of the article to the consumer?

Mr. KING. There may be such. I would not like to say that any combine does enhance the prices unduly or restrict competition unduly, until I had had a chance of looking into it.

Mr. J. HAGGART I object to any such legislation as this. If we are to have crimes on the statute-book we want to define what the crime is. Under this section, a party is accused of being guilty of a crime because he detrimentally enhances prices. What does enhancing prices mean? Surely we are entitled to a description or designation of 'enhancing prices,' to know whether we are guilty of a crime or not. But the minister takes the extraordinary position of leaving to a court of arbitration to decide what is meant by enhancing prices. After they come to a decision and publish it in the 'Canada Gazette,' then, after a certain time, it becomes a crime, and you are punished for it. Such a way of designating a crime I never heard of before.

Mr. KING. With all due deference, I would like to point out that so far as this legislation puts any class of actions in the category of crimes, my hon. friend will find that in the Criminal Code already, precisely the same thing. If the hon. gentleman will look at section 498 of the Criminal Code, he will find that.

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding $4,000 and not less than $200, or to two years' imprisonment, or, if a corporation, is liable to a penalty not exceeding ten thousand dollars, and not less than one thousand dollars, who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person, or with any railway, steamship, steamboat or transportation company,—
> (a) To unduly limit the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce; or,
>
> (b) To restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any such article or commodity; or,
> (c) To unduly prevent, limit, or lessen the manufacture or production of any such article or commodity, or to unreasonably enhance the price thereof.

If I am not mistaken, the hon. member himself voted for that legislation.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Are you sure of it?

Mr. KING. I think so. I think the hon. member supported this legislation when it was introduced by the late Clarke Wallace.

Mr. J. HAGGART. An amendment was introduced to the Criminal Code founded on the Bill that was introduced by Clarke Wallace.

Mr. KING. This is the Bill that was introduced by Clarke Wallace.

Mr. J. HAGGART. If I remember rightly, the provisions of that Bill were embodied in the criminal law, and I remember Sir John Thompson saying that it did not alter the law, it made no changes in it.

Mr. KING. But did not the hon. gentleman support it?

Mr. J. HAGGART. It made no change in the law, it was a harmless amendment. Is this amendment going to leave the law in the same position it was before?

Mr. KING. That is not the point we are discussing. The hon. gentleman is taking exception to my putting on the statutes legislation making a certain set of conditions a crime, when he himself has voted for legislation which does that very thing.

Mr. J. HAGGART. You state that I voted for it, you must have authority for saying so. The possibilities are, as I was a member of the government when it was embodied in the Criminal Code, that I supported it. But I do not suppose there was a vote on the question at all, I suppose it was unanimously adopted by the House. The hon. gentleman has found out that the Act has just the effect that Sir John Thompson said it had, that it did not alter the law in any respect, that it was perfectly harmless, like a chip in the porridge. The hon. gentleman intends to make the Act something different from what it was before, and that is what I am criticising. The hon. gentleman says it is the same. If it is the same, there is no use in introducing it; if it is different, I have a right to give my opinion on the difference.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not the same Bill. The first time the Act passed this House it did not contain the words 'unduly' or 'unreasonably.' Those words were put in by the Senate, and when the Bill came back here, because of the lateness of the session, and because we knew that the Bill must drop entirely if this House did not accept the amendment made by the Senate, we accepted it. But afterwards, in 1899, I moved an amendment to strike those words out and did get them struck out in this House. The Bill then went to the Senate, and they introduced them again. The following year I introduced the Bill again, and got it through this House, and through the Senate, without those words 'unduly' or 'unreasonably'. But the following year it was amended by the present government, those words were put back again, and I believe now, and always did believe that it was amended for that specific purpose, because when the original Bill was on the statutes, and it was submitted to Sir Oliver Mowat, who, as Attorney General of Ontario, would be obliged to enforce the law, he said it was utterly useless, that no person could go before a court, and get a court to say what was 'unduly' or 'unreasonably' enhancing prices; but if these words were left out, then the Bill would be useful. The very next year the government amended the Criminal Code, and put these words back again, and I always believed that they put them back so as to make the Bill practically worthless.

Mr. KING.

Mr. HERRON. I want to say now that I am in favour of this legislation, if it will have the effect aimed at. There is a suspicion in our country that there is a restraint of trade to the extent that the farmers generally do not get full value for what they produce, and also that they pay more than they should pay, in many cases for what they consume. I hope the Bill is right, but as I am not a lawyer, I am not able to judge of the effect of certain sections.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I want to say a word upon this amendment. I understood that the minister's object was to benefit the consumer. But my opinion is that when the minister has amended the interpretation clause by including the word 'producer,' he entirely neutralizes the benefit of the Act to the consumer. If you have a combine, or a monopoly that increases the cost to the consumer by an investigation under this Act, you are not likely to benefit the producer. The one is adverse to the other. The producer of a certain article that is sold under a monopoly, shares in the benefit of that monopoly. In my opinion this section is decidedly better as it is. The object of the Bill is to benefit the consumer, and to the extent that you are benefiting the consumer by destroying monopoly you cannot at the same time benefit a particular producer who produces the article in question. You are very likely to reduce the return he gets from the production of that article. I certainly think that the interpretation section would be better without the word 'producer'. You do not help the consumer by trying to benefit the producer at the same time.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 5, order for investigation.

Mr. SPROULE. Would you not amend this to conform to the amendments made before?

Mr. KING. Yes, the words 'or producer,' should be added after the words 'consumers,' where they appear in lines 24, 34 and 44. I therefore, beg to move:

That the words 'or producers' be inserted after the word 'consumers' in lines 24, 35 and 45.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. KING. I propose that the section be amended by adding, after the word 'persons,' in the first line the words 'British subjects resident in Canada, and of full age.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. KING. I also propose that after the word 'that' in line 42 paragraph 4, there be inserted the words 'the alleged combine operates to the detriment of the declarant as a consumer or producer.'

Mr. SPROULE. What would be the effect if an application were received under that section, and an investigation took place, and if three of the six were trying to prove that the producer was affected, and the other three were trying to prove that the consumer was affected?

Mr. KING. I think if they succeeded in proving that, there would be a double reason for going ahead.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the meaning of the phrase 'injurious to trade?' There have been a great many decisions defining the meaning of the phrase 'in restraint of trade.' A great many things are decided to be in restraint of trade, and there are a great many decisions as to what the expression means. But perhaps the meaning that the minister wishes to convey is a little different.

Mr. KING. I think the meaning is clear.

Mr. SPROULE. Would you not under this Bill attack labour unions as well as combinations?

Mr. KING. When I moved the second reading of the measure I stated that it was my intention to move in committee to add a clause to make it quite clear that this measure would not take away from trades organizations the rights secured to them under the existing law. I intend to move an amendment to this effect before the committee rises.

Mr. MACDONALD. It seems to me that the point taken by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) is worthy of consideration. The phrase 'injurious to trade,' is a novel one in legislation of this character. I do not think it has been defined at all. I do not recollect any definition of any such phrase in decisions regarding legislation of this kind. I think that if the words 'in restraint of trade,' were used you would be going along a path where you had well recognized conditions, and where the bodies having to do with the operation of this statute would understand clearly where they were working, and with quite as good results. I think that the suggestion of the hon. member for North Simcoe as to what the word 'injurious' means is very pertinent to the discussion. What it does mean, from a legal standpoint, in working out this Bill, is something that I do not think anybody could venture a very strong opinion on with a view of arriving at exactitude with reference to it; whereas, the words 'in restraint of trade,' have had a usage, and definition for centuries. Their significance is well understood. I think that the language is more apt apart from the legal standpoint.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The idea of the minister is to express the same thing, and that is why I thought that using the old word would make it more clear instead of having the courts give a definition of what 'injurious' is. The courts have decided hundreds of times what 'restraint of trade' is.

Mr. KING. In my opinion the words are quite plain, and I think they had better be left as they are.

On section 11—members of board.

Mr. MACDONALD. You have here the words: 'Being one of the parties to the investigation.' Would that be taken to mean that the party to be appointed should be one of the persons who had applied?

Mr. KING. There can only be two parties to the investigation, the party complaining and the party complained against.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. These words were evidently inserted parenthetically to make it clear what the effect is. They would seem to infer that one of the parties who should be on the board would be one of the applicants, while it was evidently the intention of the minister that the parties who asked for the investigation and the parties who were named in the complaint should each select a representative.

Mr. KING. What would the hon. gentleman suggest?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. This drafting in the Bill is according to the usual phraseology, but I should prefer that the statement should be more direct, so that nobody could mistake it. Why not say: The parties who have applied for this investigation shall name one of the members of the board; the parties complained against shall name another member, and these two members of the board shall appoint a third?

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. I do not know much about the legal effect of this language, but I think I know what words mean, and I do not see how any words could make it more clear than those used in the Bill. It states that one member of the board shall be appointed on the recommendation of the persons on whose application the order is granted.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Read on.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. Then it says: Being one of the parties to the investigation. Well, I do not see why these words should be there at all.

Mr. KING. If these words obscure the meaning we can strike them out. I am quite agreeable to have that done.

(The words 'being one of the parties to the investigation' were stricken from the Bill.)

On section 13,

No person shall act as a member of the board who has any direct pecuniary interest in the alleged combine that is the subject of investigation by such board, or who is not a British subject.

Mr. MACDONALD. It seems to me that no person should be a member of the board who is one of the applicants for the investigation. If there is to be a public advantage derived from the Bill, it will be only had if the board is absolutely impartial and unprejudiced, as far as that is possible. I would like to suggest to the minister the advisability of inserting after the word 'who' in the first line the words 'is one of the applicants for the board.'

Mr. KING. I will be very glad to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Pictou.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would also suggest after the word 'direct' the addition of the words 'or indirect.' I may say that I am very much disappointed that the hon. Minister of Labour has not the Minister of Justice sitting beside him while this Bill is being considered. It is a very important measure, liable to affect the interests of a great many people, we are all trying to make it as perfect as possible, and I think it is a matter worthy of comment that the Minister of Justice is not in his place in the House to assist the Minister of Labour in the phraseology of the Bill, because he will be concerned to a large extent in carrying it out.

Mr. KING. I may say that the Minister of Justice has already gone over the Bill, as it was drafted by the Department of Justice.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. It seems to me that we are all indirectly interested in these investigations, and consequently the insertion of the words 'or indirectly' would defeat the whole object of the Bill.

Amendment suggested by Mr. E. M. Macdonald agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 15—oath of office—

Mr. MACDONALD. It seems to me that this section should be amended to provide that the members of the board shall make an affidavit negativing any interest in the application or the result of the investigation. Otherwise you might have the parties who have applied for an investigation choosing as their representative on the board, somebody who is as much interested in the application or in the result of the investigation as they are. The result of the working out of this Act can only be ascertained by having it worked out by a board that is absolutely impartial and that has no interest in the result of the investigation.

Mr. KING.

Mr. PARDEE. That is hardly possible, because the one thing provided for is the interest of the whole public in the result of the investigation.

Mr. KING. I think the point raised is covered by the first clause of the oath: 'I will truly, faithfully and impartially perform my duties as a member of the board.'

Mr. MACDONALD. I am afraid the minister's logic is hardly good enough in regard to that, because if so we should omit the third clause as to whether they are interested pecuniarily. Language like this might be used, and I think it is only fair that it should be used, that the investigating member should be prepared to make an affidavit that 'I am not injuriously or otherwise affected by the alleged combine.'

Mr. KING. If it is a combine adversely affecting the public, he could not take such an affidavit.

Mr. MACDONALD. I think I could show you readily how he could. In the first place, combines that form the subject of investigation are not merely combines that have ramifications all over the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. KING. They might have.

Mr. MACDONALD. They might have, but at the same time if they might have, there is just as much room for saying that there are numbers of people who are not directly pecuniarily affected. Cases in which you have combinations with wide ramifications are very few. The majority of instances in which this Act will have to be applied will be cases affecting particular localities. Thus in western Ontario you might have combinations there that injuriously affect certain consumers in that locality. Well, there is no reason why you should be compelled to accept as one of the investigators some one who lives in that locality and who would be undoubtedly chosen by the parties making the application, because they would think he was in sympathy with them. But go to the central portion of Ontario, and you would get a man absolutely independent and who would not be affected by the results in any way whatever. It seems to me that this business of having investigating boards composed of men who are interested in the result is only going to have consequences that will have no value to us. That a party who is going to act as judge should not be in a position to say that he is entirely disinterested would be an anomalous position of affairs, and I do think that any man who sits on a board of this kind ought to be so disinterested that he should be able to say he is or is not injuriously or otherwise affected by the alleged combine.

Mr. PARDEE. With all deference to my hon. friend, I do not agree with him. He is endeavouring to make fish of one and flesh of another. There may be combines that only affect certain individuals. On the other hand, there may be combines that affect the country generally. Now, you cannot possibly have a man take an affidavit in one case and not in another. We must make the whole Act apply in a general way, otherwise the Act will be absolutely nullified. Even supposing you were to endeavour to do something in that way in the case of smaller combines which do not affect every person, I do not see how a man in that case could take it, because there can be no question about it that any great production in respect to which an inquiry is asked by reason of an alleged combine, must in some way or other directly or indirectly affect the applicants. I cannot possibly see how you could do that. In passing legislation of this kind, you must have simply a general oath such as this and let it work out the best way. I cannot see any other way possible.

Mr. SPROULE. We provide as well that the parties who sign the application should make a declaration. That affects themselves, and if it affects themselves to any extent, they must have some pecuniary interest in it.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. Suppose it is a sugar combine, every man in the country would be interested in that, every person who uses sugar would be. Or suppose we had a grocers' combine, as we were supposed to have a short time ago, everybody in the country is interested pecuniary in that. Consequently the contention of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) is hardly sound.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the common, ordinary criminal procedure is that a juryman has to take a pretty stiff oath. In several countries the man who enters the jury box to decide between a criminal and the law has virtually to swear that he knows nothing about the case that he has heard nothing about the case that he is not interested in it, and that he has not made up his mind on it one way or the other. There is no doubt that this Act partakes of a similar character. I think the sentence proposed is: 'I am not injuriously affected', but a man could be affected without being injuriously affected. For instance a man might be affected by a sugar combine, but he might be a rich man, and it would not matter to him perhaps five cents a year.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. It would affect him all the same.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There is no doubt that this law as it stands is going to make criminal prosecutions, and these arbitrators will stand in the same position as jurymen at an ordinary inquest. I do not see why they should not be compelled to take the same oath, so as to prevent any miscarriage of justice one way or the other. I think it is the only fair way, and I think the minister should consider the redrafting of this declaration so as to cover all the points raised. It would be very unfair for a man to take an oath that he is not interested in the combine, when he might be a purchaser from that combine and therefore very strongly interested in soaking the combine. There are two sides to it, and I think we should meet the case thoroughly.

Mr. BLAIN. This Bill, I understand, from the hon. minister has been submitted to the Justice Department, and has been the subject of consideration on the part of the present government for a great many months, if not years. The government, as the minister has pointed out, has been aware and is still aware of combines existing in this country, that at least affect the consumer, and I have no doubt, particularly in the west the beef combine affects the producer as well. I do not know that it is important that all those details should be looked into. I believe the minister and the department should take the full responsibility. After a year goes by, we will expect that the minister will be able to come forward and state to this House and to the country that these great evils have been driven out by this legislation. I hope we will not be disappointed. If we are, the minister will have to answer to parliament and to the country for the disappointment. It seems to me the government after giving this careful consideration has presented this perfected Bill. Whether it is perfect or not I cannot say. I do not know whether the minister himself would say that it is a perfect Bill. It was rather suggested that after a year had passed by it would be found that some people in Canada had not been reached by this Bill and that there might be an opportunity to amend it. I have my own opinion as to whether it will be effective legislation or not, but it is not my business to say whether it is or is not. I think the minister having taken the full responsibility, having by the introduction of this Bill told the people of Canada that there are evils in the shape of combines affecting the country generally, the producer and the consumer in some cases, I think the minister should take the full responsibility. For myself, I am willing to leave it on the shoulders of the minister and on the shoulders of the government. They have been thirteen or fourteen years looking this matter up, and the delays have greatly disappointed the people of Canada. These gentlemen, before they came into power, talked of combinations, particularly my good friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). He saw combines everywhere when he was in opposition, but he has sat quietly by while in government and has contented himself with spending enormous amounts of money. Now, after all these years have passed, he comes forward, with his new friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. King), and proposes legislation to check the evils that have been going on all this time. I think we ought to give these hon. gentlemen an opportunity to deal with these questions, and, for my part, I propose to give them that opportunity. After a year goes by, we may have something to say as to their legislation, and the way it has been carried out.

Mr. NESBITT. My suggestion is that no person should act on the board who is prejudiced. Those who are prejudiced should be barred as much as those who are interested. I have not thought out the wording, but some words should be added to cover that idea.

Mr. KING. Every man of the board must swear that he will perform his duties 'truly, faithfully and impartially.' If he cannot be bound by an oath of that kind. I do not know that any form of words will help particularly.

Mr. MACDONALD. I feel very strongly with regard to this matter. No tribunal should be constituted by this or any other legislature, the effect of whose decision is to fix criminal liability upon individuals unless the impartiality of the tribunal by whom the facts are to be investigated is ensured. To that proposition, I think, no one will raise objection. Under the Act, as it stands, you prevent any person who initiates the proceedings from being a member of the board. At the same time there is no reason why you should not have the partner of one of these applicants sitting as a member of the board and deciding the result. The business competitors of a man might initiate these procedings and then have a friendly business associate interested in the same matter, sitting on the board and using all the powers given by the Act to secure information, not for the benefit of the public, but to gratify some feeling or benefit a competitor in the business.

Mr. BLAIN. Does not my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald), who is making valuable suggestions, believe that the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Justice have considered all these matters?

Mr. MACDONALD. I am one of those who do not yield my judgment and conscience to the Minister of Labour, or the Minister of Justice, or anybody else. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) may be prepared to do that in the case of the leaders of his party, but I am not. I hold myself free to discuss freely any matter that comes before this House. And I have an opinion of my own in legal matters which I do not yield to anybody, while I respect the opinion of others. My contention is that there should be a clause providing that those who sit on this board shall not be interested in the application, connected with the trade or business directly affected by the application. Under the Conciliation Act, we have had cases where it has brought about a very satisfactory result, and where its intent and theory have been worked out. But we have had other cases where members of the board have had their opinion absolutely fixed and settled before the investigation was begun, should be constituted by this or any result. Why should we give a black eye to this Bill at its very inception by permitting parties who are directly interested in the business directly affected, to sit in judgment on these matters? There should be as complete a guarantee as possible of impartiality in these important matters.

Mr. PARDEE. Suppose an application were made by six farmers relating to a matter of which the Grange and farmers associations had made a particular study, and one that affects their industry, would my hon friend (Mr. Macdonald) provide that no farmer should be a member of the boards to investigate the matter? Every farmer would be interested to some slight degree in the business directly affected. To make such a provision would be to nullify the whole Act.

Mr. MACDONALD. I can suppose a great many cases in which you would have a board which would include persons directly interested in learning the business of the parties charged with forming a combine. The prosecution might be a mere effort to wreak vengeance or spite or to obtain business secrets, and not an effort for the good of the country. If the case my hon. friend (Mr. Pardee) speaks of arose in Lambton, the farmers of that county, who have been accustomed to look to my hon. friend to guard their interests in legal matters, could well ask to have him as their representative on the board, and he would do the work as well as one of themselves.

Mr. PARDEE. I would be getting votes, and so would be directly interested.

Mr. MACDONALD. No, I am sure my hon. friend would not do that. All I contend is that the Bill should be so amended as to cover the principle that interested parties shall not be members of the board so that the impartiality of the board should be assured.

Mr. KING. Those against whom the charge is made under this Bill might well prefer that some person having knowledge of the business should be a member of the board. Suppose that a certain line of manufacture is alleged to be under a combine. The people concerned would feel it decidedly in their interest to have a manufacturer on the board who would understand the conditions of their business. It seems to me that the provision of the Bill that no person shall act as a member of the board who has a direct pecuniary interest in the alleged combine is as far as we ought to go.

Mr. NESBITT. It is quite correct to say that there is nobody so capable of judging these matters as one who has some knowledge of the business affected, but, as I understand the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) he seeks to prevent the rivals of a business concern from using this law to pry into the affairs of that concern. It would be very easy to get six men to swear out affidavits and start an investigation for the very purpose of prying into a rival's business.

Mr. KING. A man of that sort would have a pecuniary interest in the combine —he would be interested in getting hold of the business of the combine—and, as such, he could not swear that he was not interested.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I do not see how it would be possible to carry out the suggestion of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). I think the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) put the case correctly. For instance, suppose that six farmers in the west believe that there is a combine among the grain buyers to keep down the price of wheat, and they apply for an investigation. When those six have made application it seems to me the suggestion of the member for Pictou would prevent any farmer in the west from being on the board of arbitration. I do not see how it would be possible to carry out the suggestion of my learned friend, who certainly understands the law better than I do. But looking at it in that practical way, there would have to be some farmer on that arbitration board in order that there may not be any increase in the price of wheat.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the minister be good enough to let that clause stand till we can consider it more fully?

On section 20, publication of reports.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not wish to oppose this Bill in any way, but since three members are provided for on this commission, why should there be a minority report? What effect will a minority report have? If a certain trade or interest is represented, then this confirms the idea of the member for Pictou, that there is some one person on the board to represent a certain specific interest, and when the other two have decided what is to be done, the third shall have the privilege of filing in any kind of report he wishes. I hold there should be only one report. You put a prejudiced man on this board, and he will send in a minority report that may be untruthful, and very damaging to the party investigated, and that minority report is given just as much currency as the majority report. I would ask the minister to consider whether it would not be better to take that clause out.

Mr. KING. The reason for permitting a minority report is precisely the same as the reason for permitting a dissenting judgment where you have several judges sitting on a case. When one judge dissents from the other, it is customary to give the same publicity to his dissenting judgment as to the judgment of the majority of the court.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There are some members in this House who do not hold that there should be any minority judgment. I think there should be only one judgment, and we would have far fewer appeals if only one judgment were published.

On section 21, reduction of customs duties to secure reasonable competition.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there not legislation of this kind already?

Mr. KING. This section is already on the statutes, with the difference that the present section includes the finding of the board. This section should be read along with section 47 which repeals section 12 of the Customs Act.

On section 22, revocation of patent in certain cases.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is in the Patent Act also, is it not?

Mr. KING. No. The Patent Act relates to the selling of the patented article at a reasonable price, but it does not cover the cases of persons holding a patented article, and, before selling it, requiring the purchaser to enter into an agreement to purchase other things as well from the patent owner, and from him to the exclusion of all others. This section is intended to prevent cases of that kind.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The use of a patented article is unduly to enhance or lessen competition. Supposing a patented article is used in another article that is being manufactured, the effect of it is to lessen competition, or increase the price to a larger extent than the value of the patent itself.

Mr. KING. The law specially refers to that particular form of monopoly and does so for reasons of public policy, and to that extent patents are perhaps more favoured by the general law with reference to enhancing prices than they otherwise would be.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The general law affects them, but I think the effect of this clause is to alter the general law to the extent that it gives jurisdiction to the Exchequer Court, on the recommendation of this board, to cancel a patent.

Mr. KING. As I think I pointed out, the present law in regard to patents sets forth the conditions on which a patented article can be sold as to the matter of price. Section 22 does not affect the existing law in that particular in one way or the other. What it relates to is the seller of a patented article making use of the patent to enforce upon persons desiring to use the patented article some contract which limits his power to purchase articles elsewhere than from the patentee himself. That is a different thing altogether.

Mr. BLAIN. May I be permitted to ask a question with respect to that clause of the Customs law that allows the government to reduce or strike off the duty if it finds that a combine exists in Canada which is unduly enhancing the price to the consumer? Has that clause been applied against any combine other than the news print paper combine?

Mr. KING. As I understand that is the only case that has been investigated.

Mr. BLAIN. How long has it been on the statute-book?

Mr. KING. I think the Act was passed in 1897, but apparently there have not been many representations to the government as to the necessity for conducting investigations under that section.

Mr. BLAIN. This has been on the statute-book since 1897, and there has only been one case. If the government were aware that combines existed in Canada to unduly enhance the price of articles, and if they were empowered to strike off or reduce the duty, one would think that, if there were a necessity for legislation of this kind, the government would have put into operation the legislation that they have on the statute-book at the present time.

Mr. KING. The government would hardly be justified in removing duties or commencing investigations unless very full representations were made in the first instance, as to the need of such investigation, and I understand that such representations have not been made under the law as it stands at the present time. One of the reasons given, I believe, in certain quarters, is that the fear of expense in the matter of an inquiry under the existing law has deterred many persons who believe that combines were existing, from putting in any representations under that section. This measure is doing away with the cost on the part of consumers who ask for an inquiry.

Mr. BLAIN. I would have thought that a department, such as that upon which my hon. friend has been spending a large amount of money, which has been gathering information of this kind, and which has taken the opportunity from time to time of impressing upon the Canadian people that there are combines in Canada that are unduly enhancing prices to the consumer, would have suggested that it would be a good thing to put into force some of the legislation the government have rather than introduce further legislation.

Mr. KING. I may say that this legislation is in part the result of investigations which have been made by the Department of Labour. I mentioned these investigations on the second reading of the Bill, investigations which go to show that the cost of living has very materially increased the last few years and which have pointed directly to the need of such legislation as this.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. This clause, I understand, covers the case of shoe machinery largely. It is intended, I take it, to meet the United Shoe Machinery Company's case. They are manufacturers of a complete line of machinery, but they will not sell; they will simply lease. There are other manufacturers of shoe machinery, but they do not make a full line, and if you want to make shoes, you have to get the United Shoe Machinery Company's full line or otherwise you cannot get a complete line at all. This clause will meet such a case, will it not?

Mr. KING. Yes, it is hoped that this section will meet possible combinations of that sort.

On section 23, combines restricting manufacture, trade or competition.

Mr. SPROULE. If you cannot go before a court and establish the meaning of the words 'unduly and unreasonably,' how are you going to do it before this board?

Mr. KING. The board will have opportunities of getting very full information from a variety of sources and of making comparisons. I would think that the board will not have much difficulty in making up its mind as to the meaning of the word 'unreasonably.'

Mr. SPROULE. So have the courts such opportunities. Each side will take good care that all information that will sustain one side or the other will be brought before the court. If the court cannot decide what the word 'unduly' means—and this board becomes in reality a court for the time being—I do not understand how this board is going to do it.

Mr. KING. The courts have in some cases decided that the enhancement has been unreasonable and undue.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not remember any case.

Mr. KING. There was the Brantford coal combine case, and there was also the case of the lumber combine at Edmonton.

Mr. SPROULE. There was a prosecution?

Mr. KING. Yes, a prosecution in which the parties were convicted of an undue enhancement of the price.

Mr. SPROULE. Was not that very trouble the cause of the failure in a grocer's case? There was one case entered at Brantford; it is a good while since, but my memory of it is that it was dropped because of the impossibility of successfully proving that prices were unduly enhanced.

Mr. KING. As I remember the judgment in the grocer's case, it did not relate to the question of undue or unreasonable enhancement. It found rather that the Grocers' Guild was not a combination in restraint of trade at all. The question of the undue enhancement or unreasonableness of the price was not mentioned in the judgment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are you going to do in this trial? What will be necessary in order to convict a person upon such a trial?

Mr. KING. If a person is found guilty ' of unduly limiting the facilities for transportation, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing, or——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know what the words of the Bill are; I can read them, but I was asking whether the whole investigation will have to be gone through with again, or whether you will put in the proceedings of the board and convict the person in question upon the report of the board.

Mr. KING. As to criminal proceedings, I should think it would be necessary to prove the parties guilty under the criminal law and to give them all the rights in the matter of protection which criminal procedure would secure to them. The procedure before the board is not necessarily the procedure to be adopted in a criminal court, and much evidence may be admitted in the general investigation before the board which would not be admitted in a criminal court. For that reason, I think the parties before they are convicted criminally should receive such protection as the criminal procedure and rules of evidence afford.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, according to what the minister says, when a party is interested in the criminal court it will be necessary to make out a case against him exactly as if there had been no investigation before the board.

Mr. KING. With this difference between that situation and the law as it stands at the present time, that the evidence already before the board would be available. It could not be submitted of course as prima facie evidence, but the facts gathered in that way could be used before the criminal court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister mean that the evidence taken before the board could be put in as evidence under the indictment?

Mr. KING. No, but the examination before the board would reveal certain facts which any one would be at liberty to use.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister means that the evidence would be a sort of brief in the hands of the prosecuting counsel.

Mr. KING. It might serve as that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the extent to which it would be useful?

Mr. KING. At present it is plain that the Criminal Code is really of little value in these cases, because of the difficulty of obtaining data upon which to proceed. These examining boards would disclose the fact whether there was a combination or not that should be proceeded against under the Criminal Code.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I thought at first that the Bill was a sort of guillotine, and that when the party accused had passed through the investigating board he would have his toilet made and his boots cleaned ready for the criminal court to award the punishment. It seems now that all this investigation before the board amounts to nothing and that if you are to punish the party found guilty you must have a retrial in the criminal court.

Mr. KING. The hon. gentleman allows nothing for the effect of publicity and the influence which public opinion is likely to have. If the result of the investigation was a report that a combination existed injurious to trade and harmful to the consumer there would be very strong reason to suspect that that combination if it were to continue a course of conduct reported as detrimental to the public would be proceeded against criminally.

Mr. SPROULE. If public opinion has anything to do with this Bill it will have a very poor opinion of it. I fancy that a prosecution launched in this way would run on for generations like the celebrated case of Jarndyce and Jarndyce.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister evidently does not know his own Bill. It says: 'any person reported by this board to have been guilty,' etc.—then on line 40: 'is guilty of an indictable offence and shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $1,000,' etc. I take it that after the board has found a man guilty of an indictable offence all you have to do is to take him before a judge to have him sentenced. If the evidence says he is found guilty of an indictable offence, why, the jury would not leave the box; they would say: Yes, he has been tried and found guilty of an indictable offence. Can a man be indicted twice for the same offence?

Mr. R. SMITH. It says that he must continue to offend.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It does not, I understand the English language as well as the hon. member.

Mr. R. SMITH. I don't profess to know very much about the English language, but I think that is the meaning of the clause.

Mr. KING. He may be found guilty of the offence by the board, but he does not become liable to any penalty unless he continues to so offend.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I cannot see it that way. I think you had better amend the Bill so as to make this one Act do the whole business instead of holding a double-barrelled shot gun over everybody.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the meaning of it perhaps is that you have to prove that he was guilty at some time in the past and that he is also guilty at the present time. You have to prove that he is guilty twice.

Mr. KING. You certainly would have to prove that he continued to offend. If after the board reported the conditions changed, as probably in nine case out of ten they would, through the force of public opinion, there would be no necessity for seeking to recover a penalty. If the party continued to offend he would be liable to a penalty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If public opinion does not get in its work then it is necessary to show that he has been guilty at some particular period in the past and that he has continued and is guilty at the present time.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If the board finds he has been guilty, how are you going to determine that he has continued to offend?

Mr. KING. At that point the criminal law comes into play and he becomes criminally liable and would be proceeded against in the criminal courts in the regular manner.

Mr. SPROULE. The question is: what is the real effect of the finding of the board so far as the crime is concerned? Apparently the first element of the proof, once the criminal proceeding was initiated, would be to prove that there was a report of the board that the person had been guilty of these different offences, or some one of them, and with that report counsel trying the case would take the first step. Is that report prima facie evidence of the fact that the party has been guilty or has it any value whatever except as being just an elementary proposition in the course of the case. The fact that the report has been made may be evidence of the guilt of the party accused so far as the past transaction is concerned, or it may not. It may be that the absence of the words: 'such report shall be prima facie evidence of the fact that a combination had existed at a certain time,' renders it necessary for the prosecutor to go all through the thing again and to show the facts which the board deemed sufficient to found the report upon. If the report is to have the effect and it is to be of itself evidence of a combination having existed at a certain time, then there ought to be some procedure by which that report can be set aside if it was erroneous, so that the party found guilty could get to an appellate tribunal. It may be that certiorari would apply. If it does not, there ought to be an appeal from the decision of the board. It seems to me it ought to be made fairly clear what the value of that report is. The finding of a tribunal constituted as this tribunal is, ought not to be taken as absolute or conclusive proof of the guilt of anybody without the party having the right to appeal from it. I am aware that this clause is open to the construction that a party prosecuting would need to show three things: first, the fact that a report had been made; secondly, that over and above the report, the accused was guilty of combining to the detriment of consumers or producers as the case may be, within the meaning of the Act; thirdly, that after the report of the board finding him guilty of combining to the detriment of consumers, he still continues to offend. If a certificate of the report is to be taken as ample evidence to warrant the conviction of the accused, it ought to be open to the parties to have an appeal, or to have the report reviewed even before it forms prima facie evidence against them in a criminal proceding.

Mr. KING. The view of the Minister of Justice on this section is that if the parties were indicted criminally it would be necessary to prove their guilt in the regular manner. The evidence taken before one of these boards would undoubtedly be of service to the prosecuting counsel in the case, but the report itself would not be prima facie evidence. The guilt of the parties would have to be proven in the regular way, allowing them the benefits of such procedure as the criminal law provides.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The hon. member for Pictou must observe that the hon. minister intends to make the procedure as simple as possible, and not to play into the hands of legal gentlemen in Nova Scotia or elsewhere, and thus burden the affair with costs.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from Lanark will agree with me in one thing, that the gentlemen accused of combinations will have to come to the legal profession to get the affair properly worked out. I take it that the opinion of the Minister of Justice, as given us by the hon. Minister of Labour, is practically this, that the production of the certificate of the report of the board before the court dealing with the criminal charge is only evidence of the fact that the report was made, and that it is necessary for the prosecutor to show, entirely apart from the report, that the accused is guilty of a criminal combination against the Act, and that he continues to offend.

Mr. KING. Yes, that is the opinion of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would like the minister to consider the advisability of inserting in this section an amendment which would give the parties charged the same right that is now given under section 498 of the Criminal Code to parties charged with unduly limiting competition or unreasonably increasing the price. They have a right after the preliminary investigation to have their case determined by a judge of a Superior Court or a judge of the Supreme Court, as the case may be, without a jury. It seems to me that this principle applied in the Criminal Code to a case of a much greater offence ought to be applied to this case.

Mr. KING. That point has been raised in one or two communications that I have received, and it has been considered. The hon. member will notice that in the proceedings under the Criminal Code there had not been any prior investigation, any finding against the parties, and they have not had an opportunity of changing their course of conduct before any further action is taken. In view of the fact that the parties are specially protected in that way, and that they are given ten days in which to change their course of conduct which is deemed detrimental to the public interest, the necessity of taking the precaution which the hon. gentleman has suggested is removed.

Mr. MACDONALD. Let us see how that will work out. It is presumed that public opinion is against everything in the nature of combines. Proceedings have been initiated, and a case has got to the final trial before a judge and jury. The prosecutor may show that evidence taken before the investigation established the fact that at some time there was a combination which is an offence against this Act. Suppose he goes along so far, and he has very little evidence. In fact the weight of evidence may be the other way; he may have very little evidence that the accused has continued to offend. Now there might be some evidence with which to go to a jury, and the result would be that recognizing the existence of this public opinion, though the parties had if not absolutely, the weight of evidence in their favour to show that they had ceased to offend, that conviction would be had against them, whereas I do not think that it would be had so readily if you had a judge to weigh the evidence. I do not think that men engaged in business, and committing those novel crimes that my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart), thinks are so peculiar, should be treated so arbitrarily. It seems to me that the question of determining whether or not there has been a continuation of the offence, should be determined by a judge, because it is a matter of weighing evidence which a judge can do far better than a jury. In that way I think it is extending this legislation to an unwarrantable extent to take away from the parties in business who happen to have an arrangement, but who have ceased operating under it, those rights now accorded to them under the Criminal Code.

Mr. J. HAGGART. If those proceedings are to be worth anything at all they must be as simple as possible. What does my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) intend to do? There is an investigation in the first place by a judge as to whether there is a prima facie case or not; then there is a referendum to this board of arbitration to find out whether the prices have been unduly enhanced or not, and still before this finding can take any effect it is suggested that the party have a right to an investigation or a retrial befor a judge. A case of this kind would put the celebrated Jarndyce into oblivion in the number of courts and appeals and trials for the purpose of finding out whether a party is guilty of unduly enhancing prices or not. Now, in the interests I represent, the farming interests, what is wanted is simplicity in our legislation. One beauty of this court is that it is not going to cost the litigants anything; the country is to pay the costs. That may be something of an argument in favour of the proposition of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) but on the general principle I think we ought to limit the appeals from the different courts. We are legislating in the interests of the country, and as we are paying the expenses of all this inquiry it should be as short as possible. I am in favour of the minister's principle, that instead of lengthening those inquiries they should be shortened as much as possible.

Mr. PARDEE. There is one thing I would like to suggest. It might be that ten days would be rather a short time to enable some of those concerns to so rearrange matters as to come within the order of the board. I would make the suggestion to the committee that perhaps after the word 'day' you might add these words, or words with the same meaning: 'Or such further extension of time as in the opinion of the board may be necessary'. I think it should be in the option of the board to make a longer period if they think fit.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What line would that be in?

Mr. PARDEE. In the forty-third line after the word 'day'.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What penalty is now imposed under the Criminal Code for a combine?

Mr. KING. Not exceeding $4,000 and not less than $200, or two years imprisonment. In the case of a corporation it is not exceeding $10,000, and not less than $1,000.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Is it intended that these penalties should be cumulative, that you shall also impose that $10,000 in addition to the penalty in the Act?

Mr. KING. For each day that they continue.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. If they are found guilty of continuing then the penalty under the Code would not only be exacted, but the penalty under this Act as well; otherwise this clause is meaningless.

Mr. KING. The parties would state, I presume, under which section they were bringing their action, and if they brought their action under this section, the penalties provided here would be applicable.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. But the minister said there is no provision exacting any penalty unless there is a continuation of the offence, and in order to insure that you will have to have recourse to the Criminal Code. In that case would the party be liable to the penalties under the Criminal Code only, or also to the penalties in this Act?

Mr. KING. This clause would constitute an addition to the Criminal law. You are making a new offence here which becomes part of the Criminal law.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I believe with the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) that in legislation of this kind we should have simplicity. As I understand it, after a man has gone through this investigation, and has been found guilty, it does not end with his ceasing to be a party to a combine. Any person, those who originally entered the prosecution against him, could turn round and indict him for a previous offence, and indict him under the Code. Or does this legislation block any indictment under the Code?

Mr. KING. Certainly not.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then this is a double barrelled gun?

Mr. KING. Why should it not be?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the minister should simply add some clause that when parties are found guilty of combining under this section, the board should inflict a fine not exceeding a certain amount of money, and let it go at that. Then if the party continued for a certain length of time, he could be indicted under the Code. I think that would be the sensible way. As it is it subjects the parties to three distinct separate and parallel prosecutions for the same Act.

Mr. KING. The general opinion to-day in regard to combines that violate the law is that the present penalties are not severe or numerous enough. I am glad that my hon. friends think that this legislation is making the penalties more severe and adding to the number, because some other hon. members on the same side rather indicated that this law did not go far enough.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does this section cover the case of a combine which has resulted in unduly increasing the price to the producer?

Mr. KING. The hon. member was not in the House, I think, when I added to the definition of the word 'combine' the words 'or producer' in order to meet what I think was the wish of the hon. member, and other members of the House, that it should be made quite clear the law would be applicable to that kind of a case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think I was in the House then, but the particular offences within the scope of this section seemed to be set out here in distinct terms, and not by a reference to the interpretation clause. Therefore, the interpretation clause, even although it has been amended by the hon. minister, does not seem to be of very much assistance in that regard.

Mr. KING. Possibly I can explain how the difficulty arose. The clause as originally drafted did not contain——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that. I am not talking about that, but about this section. Is there any reference here to the interpretation clause? Perhaps I have overlooked that.

Mr. KING. This section, as it stands, is broad enough to cover any kind of an agreement in restraint of trade. It would include restraint against producers as well as against consumers.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It struck me that it did not cover the case of fixing prices which were not enhanced. For example, the millers might say: We will give the farmers 70 cents a bushel for their wheat this season. That would be fixing the price, and, according to the interpretation clause as I understand it, it would be against the law. But it would not be enhancing the price, and this section provides, as to prices, only against unreasonably enhancing them.

Mr. KING. It provides against 'unduly restraining or injuring trade or commerce in relation to any such article.' That covers the fixing of prices if fixing has that effect.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think the minister has not understood my question. I understand him to say that under this section there is no liability to a fine unless the party has been found guilty by the board and subsequently convicted under the Criminal Code.

Mr. KING. I do not know what I could have said to convey that impression. Parties are liable, if found guilty under this section, and if they continue to offend, to a penalty not exceeding $1,000 a day and costs. The Criminal Code stands as at present. As soon as there has been an investigation into an alleged combine and a board has reported that a combine exists, parties may, if they wish, proceed under this section to recover the penalty of so much a day for the length of time the combine continues to operate in a way detrimental to the public, or they may take proceedings for conspiracy in restraint of trade under the Criminal Code.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Is there anything to prevent them taking both proceedings?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. SPROULE. In the event of the board finding the parties guilty and the parties continuing in business, if they are indicted under the Criminal Code and convicted, would there be an appeal from that conviction?

Mr. KING. I am not familiar with the matter of appeals under the Criminal Code. But whatever the provisions of the criminal law may be as to appeals, they would continue to apply.

Mr. SPROULE. One would have thought that the Minister of Justice or some one else would have been at hand to instruct us on such a point as that, for it is very important. If a case has to run all the ordinary appeals of the courts up to the Supreme Court, how long would it take to get a conviction and reach a finality? It would be a long process.

On section 25,

The proceedings of the board shall be conducted in public, but the board may order that any portion of the proceedings shall be conducted in private.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think that clause should be eliminated. If you are going to have a public body examining evidence in the public interest, that examination should be held in public.

Mr. KING. The board does sit in public.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. But it may order that any portion of the proceedings shall be conducted in private. I think that ought to be amended.

Mr. KING. It is apparent that it will require two members of the board to give that decision. There may be cases where it is desirable to examine certain books, the contents of which it is not advisable to make public. I think that the board should be allowed some discretion in that matter. It is complained that possibly this legislation may open the door to people prying into the business of others. I think that the chairman and one member of the board should have the power to order part of the inquiry to be made in private if they think necessary.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The answer may seem very apropos. But I do not think this country is Russia yet. We cannot advance the public interest by having secret trials. If there is to be a sweat-box, if manufacturers are to be given the third degree, let it be done in public. It shows very bad faith on the part of the department to wish to hold an investigation of this kind, at any stage, in private. Public trials, from the time of Magna Charta, I understand, have been held in public. And I think that is a good rule to hold by.

Mr. NESBITT. I would point out that this is a board of inquiry. After a party is found guilty, it might be right to give the evidence to the public, but, suppose that there is no guilt, why should a man who has done no wrong have the facts of his business made public? I do not think the hon. member (Mr. J. A. Currie) should apply any fine theories to this question. It seems to me that the minister is quite fair in this matter. Until the parties are found guilty, there are many things that should be kept quiet.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member (Mr. Nesbitt) may think so, but I do not think so, and I believe the public will agree with me rather than with him. I believe that the public will say that if a trial of a public character is to be held, it should be held openly. I think the day has gone by when we can adopt Russian methods, hold courts in camera, hold a gun to the head of people to gain information from them unfairly—in other words, third degree, the thumbscrew and the boot; the use of methods that dare not be used in public. The interest of parties on trial are far more secure in a public court than in a private inquiry.

Mr. KING. I think the hon. member (Mr. J. A. Currie) is giving an interpretation to the section that it hardly deserves. Precisely the same section exists in the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. And it is wrong.

Mr. KING Boards of investigation are appointed similar to those under this Act, and it is found advantageous in many cases to allow the board to make private inquiry. I do not think it is to be presumed, particularly when the chairman of the board is a judge of the court, one who is accustomed to administer the law, that he will, by his own volition, go out of his way to see that a part of the proceedings are conducted in private unless it is very much in the public interest that they should be so conducted.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I did not know that the chairman of the board should be a judge.

Mr. KING. Then the hon. gentleman has not read the Act. That is in section 12, that we have already enacted.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I still hold that the provision is unjust and unfair, and gives the minister and his department a weapon, and a screw, and a means of squeezing everybody in this country that is in any kind of business. The thing is unjust, unfair and unBritish. If you are going to hold an inquest of any kind, hold it in public; don't be afraid, don't go into a hole and corner with it. The farming community will want to know what is at the bottom of these things; so don't let us adopt any of these Russian methods. For my part I don't approve of them.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN. It seems to me the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Currie) are entirely uncalled for. I do not think there is anything Russian in the proposed investigation. On the whole, I think the methods proposed will be in the interest of the combinations of which the hon. gentleman seems to be the chief guardian here to-day. If there is any combination whose affairs are being inquired into, it might be necessary to look into their books in order to find whether a combination existed, and it would not be just, or fair, or right to have their private affairs spread broadcast throughout the country. But if the investigation were allowed to take place in private, then the officials of the company or interest, with the books of the firm could be brought before the judge. There is no court in this land but permits a private investigation of that kind, and the results are not published. Why should it not be so in this case?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman knows that under the Industrial Disputes Act there has never been any inquiry of this kind held.

Mr. KING. Yes, out of the eighty inquiries several of them have been held in private.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I object to this clause as distinctly unBritish. It just shows the intent of this whole thing, which is to pry into private affairs, in the dark, to get down into the cellar, to dig things up, and make inquiries that the men on this board would not have courage to make in an open court. If you want justice you can always get it in open court, there is the place to get it. A court in camera as here proposed, an investigation in secret of this kind, to my mind, savors of Russian methods, I have no hesitation in stating that to the minister. If this is a just provision, if any man can stand up and defend this Act, he should be able to defend it openly, as a machine that will work in the open, as an Act that can be defended at any stage, that this court is to be an open and just court, instead of a court held in the darkness, where the screws can be applied to people, and questions asked by the judges that they would not dare to ask in open court, and as I said before, apply detective methods to the accused, in other words, what is known as the third degree. That is what this Act intends, and unless the minister withdraws that provision I do not think he will receive very much credit from the public.

Mr. KING. The remarks of the hon. gentleman are primarily a reflection upon the judiciary of this country——

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I fail to see it.

Mr. KING——because in each case two members of the board must request that part of the proceedings should be held in private. Now the judge has to be a consenting party. As long as the judge is not a consenting party, the only alternative is that both the representative of the combine and the representative of the people who are preferring the complaint, must agree that part of the proceedings shall be in private. If they mutually agree that the public interest can be best served by carrying on part of the proceedings in private, then those proceedings would be held in private; if otherwise, the party desiring privacy would have to get the consent of the judge before that privacy could be observed; consequently the onus falls upon the judge, and hence the remarks of the hon. gentleman with regard to Russian methods constitute a reflection on the judiciary of this country which he is not entitled to make.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I object to the hon. minister trying to argue that my criticism constitutes a reflection on the judiciary. The clause says in effect that two members can order the court to be held in private. Now the two members, of whom the judge is not one, can order that court to be held in private. Is that not so?

Mr. KING. I mentioned that.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then why argue that I am insulting the judiciary when I am not? Two members who are not the judge can compel the court to be held in private against the will of the judge. So the argument of the minister falls completely to the ground. I have not cast any reflection on the judiciary, because the minister has acknowledged that any two members can order this court to be held in private without the consent of the judge. I claim there is no necessity for that whatever, and I will never sit silent and allow legislation to be passed here where any trial of any kind can be held in private. I think the more light there is thrown on any investigation of this kind, the better for the public, and the better for the people under control.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister, in explaining this Bill said that one of its important features was publicity. But the very first sentence of this clause says:

The proceedings of the board should be conducted in public.

Mr. KING. That clearly is the intention of the measure. But authority is given to the board to conduct a portion of the proceedings in private; that does not mean the whole proceedings, it simply gives discretion to the board to hold a certain part of the proceedings in private. There can be only the alternatives for such privacy, either both the parties complaining and the party complained against must agree that it is best to conduct part of the investigation in private, and surely in that case it would be proper to have that part of the inquiry private. The other alternative is when one or both the representatives agree with the judge that part ought to be in private. It seems to me that in view of the nature of the questions that are being investigated, this provision in the Act is not open to criticism.

Mr. SPROULE. When the minister was explaining his Bill to the House, he said that one of the important features was publicity. Now he does not pretend to secure publicity when the case is being tried.

Mr. KING. I might point out that, supposing you had the whole proceedings absolutely private, the finding of the board is always made public, and that is what will affect public opinion. The thing the public are interested in is to know whether certain men are combining, and whether they have done anytihng which affects the public interest detrimentally. The particular parts of the evidence upon which they base their judgment would certainly be given; the details of a man's business are a secondary consideration with the public.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. McLean) said it was necessary to hold the inquiry in private in order that the books of the firm might be examined. I see that section 37 provides that the board may employ competent experts to examine books or official reports, but the information obtained therefrom should not be made public. Therefore there could be no object in holding this investigation in private when the board have already the right to use the information which they get from these experts.

Mr. KING. Section 37 relates to an investigation made through experts, not to the investigation made by the board.

Mr. SPROULE. I am referring to the argument of the hon. member for Huron (Mr. M. Y. McLean), that it would be necessary that that should be done in private, because it would involve the examination of books and records.

Mr. KING. But the members of a board themselves might wish to examine those records. The section that he quotes refers to the examination by experts. That is a different thing. The board themselves may wish to examine some of the books, and they might wish to do that in private. If they wish to do it in private I think they should have the right to do so.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It is within the recollection of people who are not very old, that there was a charge made of a combination amongst school-book manufacturers in Ontario, and a royal commission was appointed to investigate. It was permitted to hold its meetings in private. It held its meetings in private and reported that there was no combine amongst the manufacturers of school-books. There was a change of government, another commission was appointed to investigate, it made its investigation in public and reported that there was a combination. I am strongly of the opinion that these investigations should be made in public. The minister cannot show any reason why there should be a dark lantern tribunal to carry on investigations of this kind.

On section 34, party may be compelled to give evidence.

Mr. NESBITT. Is not the word 'compelled,' a little strong?

Mr. KING. If you take it out it may be impossible to get evidence from parties. That section is already a part of the Industrial Disputes Act, and it has not been found to work any injustice. A man might say: I will refuse to answer any questions, and you could not proceed with the investigation.

On section 44, allowances determined by minister.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The clerk and others employed by the board will not be permanent? They will only be for the investigation?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BEST. Will this provision with respect to allowances include the six persons making the complaint? They would certainly be at a loss of time and expense, and I think they should be remunerated in some way.

Mr. KING. There is a section which allows the judge power to make disbursements, and under that section he would have the power to reimburse the six persons if he thought they were put to expense.

On section 48,

Mr. KING. I wish to move as section 48 the following:

This Act shall not be construed to repeal or amend or in any way affect the Trades Union Act, chapter 125, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

To make plain the purpose of this section, I shall read the following letter which I have received from the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress:

Office of Secretary Treasurer,
Trades and Labour Congress of Canada.
Ottawa, Ont., March 14, 1910.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, C.M.G.,
Minister of Labour,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Regarding Bill (No. 101) of this session, the Combines Investigation Act, introduced by you on January 18, we, the Executive Council of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, representing various trade and labour organizations throughout Canada in re legislative enactments, have had the said Bill under careful consideration.

From the title of the Bill we gather that it is intended to apply only to such combines, monopolies and mergers as may enhance prices or restrict competition to the detriment of consumers. As the working classes compose the largest body of consumers we believe that they more than any other class in the community are likely to suffer the most through the enhancement of prices or anything that may prove of general detriment to consumers, and consequently they may be expected to view with favour any legislation which may result in the betterment of their conditions.

We realize that trusts and monopolies may become not merely a serious menace to consumers through the methods which they have sometimes employed to enhance prices, but that these powerful aggregations of capital may also become a serious menace to labour by their power where they have control of industrial establishments, to force unfavourable conditions upon workingmen, as well as producers and consumers, through the closing up of establishments or by other arbitrary methods of procedure, and we therefore feel that any measure which will secure publicity where such unfair methods are resorted to, cannot be other than of service to all classes in the community.

We are most anxious, therefore, that any legislation calculated to improve the condition of the working classes of this country should receive the support of parliament. At the same time we feel it most important that care should be taken to see that any rights and privileges secured to the working classes by past legislation should in no way be impaired. The Trades Union Act of 1872 which forms chapter 125 of the Revised Statutes of Canada was passed to secure to workingmen certain rights as members of trade unions. We do not think it is the intention of your Bill to, in any way, take away any rights already secured to labour by legislation. As, however, some doubt has been expressed on the possible effect of the measure in this respect, we think the intention of parliament in this particular should be made plain, and would, therefore, suggest the insertion of the following clause:—

This Act shall not be construed to repeal, amend, or in any way affect chapter 125 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, intituled: 'An Act respecting Trade Unions.'

You will see that the insertion of such a clause gives to trade unions no new rights or privileges, but merely guarantees to them the enjoyment of rights which they have had by statute for some thirty-eight years.

Similarly, we will say that we do not think your Bill contemplates depriving organizations of capital of any rights which they may enjoy by statute, at the present time, nor do we think it should. Labour does not ask more than it is prepared to give.

Should, therefore, parliament see well to insert the safeguard herein suggested, we do not hesitate to say that the Bill would have the hearty endorsation of the organizations which we represent, and which are some 628 in number, and have a total membership of 40,738.

Yours very respectfully,
(Sgd.) WM. GLOCKLING,
" GUS. FRANCQ,
" P. M. DRAPER,
Executive Council,
Trades and Labour Congress of Canada.

The request seems to be a perfectly reasonable one, and I, therefore, beg to have the section I have moved added as one of the sections of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Referring for a moment to a clause which has been passed already, I see you are proposing to amend the Tariff Act by this Bill. Can we properly amend the Tariff Act without the House being in Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. KING. All we are doing here is transferring one section of the Tariff Act from an existing Act to this legislation. We are not adding to it one way or the other.

Mr. SPROULE. You say in this Bill that one section of the Tariff Act is repealed, and in doing so you amend the Tariff Act. Can that be done without the House being in Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. KING. You cannot impose taxes without the House being in Committee of Ways and Means, but I suppose the House is at liberty to repeal taxes without that procedure. Is not the significance of the House going into Committee of Ways and Means that you are imposing taxes.

Mr. SPROULE. If that contention is right, then you could put a clause in this Bill repealing the whole of the Tariff Act, and no one would seriously pretend you could do that.

Mr. KING. The point of the hon. gentleman might be of some importance in the matter of procedure providing we were attempting by this legislation to change materially the existing tariff in any part. We are not doing that at all. We are repealing one section of the tariff and inserting it in another part of this measure with the net result that the tariff stands in precisely the same position that it does to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. The question I ask is whether we can repeal a portion of the Tariff Act without going into Committee of Ways and Means.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This section 12 which we are now repealing, though it is in the Tariff Act, might have been placed in any other Act. It is no part of the tariff; it is simply an adjunct of it. It does not levy any taxes or decrease any taxes.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose it is found that there is a combination in restraint of trade with respect to an article on which there is a duty, and for that reason the duty is taken off, does not that affect the revenue?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It does not put any taxation on the people.

Mr. SPROULE. It takes taxation off.

Mr. BLAIN. The point is whether in a Bill introduced for the purpose of providing for the investigation of combines and monopolies, any clauses can be placed repealing a clause in another Act, the Tariff Act. I think it is a good point, and one that ought to be considered.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 15—oath of office,

Mr. MACDONALD. I have drawn an amendment which I think is eminently fair, and I hope it will meet with the approval of the minister. It is to add to the oath the following words:

That I am not associated in business with any of the parties applying for this investigation, and that I am not acting in collusion with any person herein.

The effect of that is to prevent any business associates of the parties applying for a hearing from acting as one of the judges, and to prevent collusion between the party selected as the representative of any class and those he may represent, in the interest of a fair and unprejudiced hearing, to which all men are entitled in an investigation.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does that mean men engaged in the same business?

Mr. MACDONALD. It means any person who is a business partner of the applicants, or who is interested in the same company in such a way as to prevent a fair judgment. All I want to obtain by this proposition is to have some reasonable guarantee that the board is not going to have on it some one who goes there prejudiced against a fair hearing.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I quite understand what the hon. gentleman means; but if this Bill goes the length that we believe it does, and if a number of men in the west combine and say that they will pay only 90 cents a bushel for wheat, and six farmers request that an investigation be held, it seems to me that that amendment would prevent any farmer in the west being appointed on that board, because he would be engaged in the same business. If it would prevent any member of the Grain Growers' Association from being a member of that board, I do not see how the Act would be applicable to the west.

Mr. MACDONALD. I do not think the amendment is open to any such interpretation. I think it means that a man must have some business connection with the applicants, and not that they are merely members of the same organization. I am willing to substitute the word 'connected' for the word 'associated'.

Mr. KING. The word 'associated' is a pretty broad term. 'Associated in business' might mean a good many things. I would suggest the words 'business partner'.

Mr. MACDONALD. The relations of men in businesss are not confined to partnerships. I would like the language to be broad enough to cover the disqualification of cases in which the men are interested, not merely as partners, but in some other relation recognized by law.

Mr. HUGHES. A man may be associated and not be a partner.

Mr. MACDONALD. Six men outside of the relation of partners could put their counsel on the board. There is no reason why six men could not be grouped together and put their lawyer on the board, and that is why I want the language to be broad enough to prevent that. If we are going to have any public opinion as the result of this Act, you must have a fair and impartial body, and I submit that the amendment is reasonable, that 'I am not connected in business with any of the parties applying for this investigation, and I am not acting in collusion with any person herein.'

Mr. CONMEE. I fear the amendment would go too far. The last sentence of clause 15 reads 'that I have not received, nor will I accept either directly or indirectly, any perquisite, gift, fee or gratuity, from any person in any way interested in any matter or thing to be investigated by the board.' That is pretty stringent as it stands. If the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) is put in the Bill, and we could always have him to interpret it, no doubt it would be all right, but the courts and the judges, the regular tribunals would interpret the statute as a whole. It looks to me as if the amendment would exclude the grain growers association, and I do not think it ought to do so, because I think they are parties who would be if not directly, indirectly interested, and yet nevertheless they are engaged in an industry that requires to be protected which I assume is one of the objects of this very enactment. I do not think they should be precluded from acting on the board.

Mr. CROSBY. I am afraid that the amendment would interfere with the case I referred to this morning. We have in the province of Nova Scotia, fishermen's union. These men are all associated and we might find it very difficult to obtain men who are not connected with the fishermen's unions. They might be associated as partners and come under this amendment. I see no reason why section 15 should be altered at all. I have no legal training, but if we changed it and made it read as the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) suggests, it strikes me it would cut away from under our feet the very thing we put in the Act this morning. Therefore, I do not agree to have it put in that way. If the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) could show that it will not apply to men in the unions or associations, that would be a different thing.

Mr. KING. With the consent of the committee, I would suggest the introduction of the word 'immediately.' The amendment would then read 'that I am not immediately connected in business with any of the parties applying for this investigation and I am not acting in collusion with any person herein.'

Mr. HUGHES. Refer to the time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. KING. I think the meaning of that is perfectly clear, and I am quite agreeable to introducing that clause. We all know what is meant by being immediately connected in business. That would certainly not refer to membership in an association or a union or anything of that kind.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. KING. I have a schedule here based on the features of the Bill which I would like to have added. It is simply to make the procedure uniform under the Act.

Bill as amended, reported.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

THE INSURANCE ACT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 166) respecting insurance. He said: The House will remember that, at the last session of parliament, we had before us, and gave very much attention to, a Bill to revise and amend the Insurance Act. After the usual preliminary considerations, the Bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, where public hearings were held and an opportunity afforded to all parties interested to present their views. Then, a sub-committee of the Banking and Commerce Committee was appointed, and the matter was taken up in detail and with great care by that sub-committee. The Bill in due course was reported to the committee and came before the House, where it was fully considered and then sent to the Senate. At that time, the session was very far advanced, and the hon. gentlemen of the Senate, not unreasonably, thought that they ought to have further time for consideration of the measure, and so it was left over. In the present session the Bill was re-introduced in the Senate in substantially the form in which it had left the House of Commons last year. The Senate has given it very great consideration—I think it not too much to say more than ordinary consideration, the hon. members for the Banking and Commerce Committee of the Senate having taken great interest in it. The Bill was passed with some amendments and is now before this House. Inasmuch as the House gave the measure such full consideration last session, I think I shall be right in saying that there will be no desire to go through the matter in detail again. But, if there is any need, attention may be called to important amendments made by the Senate. Some of the amendments, though useful, are not very important, but several of them are important. There was a clause in the Bill last year as it left this House, providing for what is called a gain and loss exhibit to be included in the annual statements of the companies. The Senate has made an amendment the effect of which is that that gain and loss exhibit shall not be required in the annual statement, but the Superintendent of Insurance shall have power to call for such statement whenever he thinks the affairs of the company render it necessary. Another amendment was on the question of bonuses to agents. The effect of the Bill as it left this House was to prevent the granting of bonuses. The Senate has amended the Bill so as to provide that bonuses shall not be forbidden, but they must be a matter of agreement. If bonuses are not agreed on in advance as part of the remuneration of the agent they may not be allowed. Another amendment is with respect to the policyholders' directors. Certain companies already provided for their policy-holders, as well as their stock-holders, having votes. It was proposed in the Bill that policyholders generally should be permitted to vote, and by proxy. The Senate has made an amendment in which they have recognized the right of policy-holders to vote, but they have denied the proxy vote to policy-holders.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does that apply to fire insurance as well as life?

Mr. FIELDING. To life insurance. The changes are chiefly in the matter of life insurance. There was a provision respecting the annual election of directors, and it is proposed that a company may elect directors for one, two or three years, according to the by-laws of the company.

Perhaps the most important question that was considered by the Senate was with respect to fire insurance—the insurance of property in unlicensed companies. The general purpose of the Act, of course, was to require that the insurance business of the country should be done in companies licensed under the Insurance Act. But it was claimed that a too rigid adherence to that principle would operate harshly upon some of the great property owners of the country. It was alleged that the existing companies in Canada were not able to handle all the insurance offered to them, and that sometimes the volume of insurance desired could not be obtained, apart altogether from the question of rates. It was further alleged that our Canadian companies had not adapted themselves to some special forms of insurance which had been established in the United States. We compromised that matter in our Bill of a year ago by providing that insurance might be taken in unlicensed companies, provided that a record of such insurance was reported and a small tax paid on the business. There was a good deal of contention over that point, but I think that the Bill as it left the House was regarded, in that respect, as something of a compromise. However, that question was fully considered in the Senate. That House has made an amendment the substance of which is that business may be done with these unlicensed companies at the risk of the party who takes the insurance, but that the foreign companies which engage in that business, though they have the right to make these contracts abroad, shall not establish agencies in Canada, and shall not solicit the business. If a party in Canada desires to get insurance of that kind, he may send his order for it to the United States, may make his contract in the United States, at whatever risk is involved, but there shall be no penalty. But the company shall not be permitted to seek the insurance. If they send agents, or open agencies, or do anything to bring them into competition with the companies licensed in Canada, they will come under the provisions of the law which will forbid that business.

These are the chief amendments made by the Senate. So far as I am concerned, I am disposed to accept the position that the conclusions of the Senate in the matter have been reached after wise consideration. While I am willing to consider any amendment proposed by any hon. member, I am prepared to accept the Bill as it has come from the Senate.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. DANIEL. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) just now stated that these unlicensed companies with head offices in the United States were not permitted to seek business in Canada by the use of agents. Is there anything to prevent them sending circulars for business all over this country?

Mr. FIELDING. I think there is no special reference to that. It is represented to us that these companies, as a rule, do not seek business. They are mutual companies that accept the business that comes to them, and I think their general practice is not to solicit business. It is not a business that is done for profit. It is a mutual affair in which the insurance is carried at what proves to be the ultimate cost. I think I am correct in saying that it is not their practice to seek business and that the business comes to them, but the question of circulars is not particularly mentioned in the Bill.

On section 1; short title.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the minister state the amount of insurance that is now in force in Canada of the kind he refers to?

Mr. FIELDING. I am advised by one of my officers that the fire insurance in Canada amounts to two thousand million dollars.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it increasing year by year?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the business is increasing and our companies are gradually adapting themselves to that special class of busines to which I refer, and I have no doubt that they will in the future do a larger share of it.

On section 2, interpretation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the meaning of the italics throughout the Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. The Bill as it was passed by the Senate had some italics in it just as the Bill had last session to call attention to the proposed changes, but the Bill as finally passed and sent down to the House, I am advised, did not have the italics, because it had been before the House a year ago. But the explanation is that the italics were those portions which were new, and which this House considered at the last session.

Mr. BLAIN. Some hon. gentlemen are suggesting that there was some mistake in the answer that the Minister if Finance gave to my question. May I repeat it? My question was: What amount of insurance is in force in Canada now held by the American companies?

Mr. FIELDING. I did not understand my hon. friend's question. I thought it had reference to the volume of fire insurance in Canada. We have no records of the amount held by unlicensed companies, as there have hitherto been no records of insurance of that character.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there no estimate given?

Mr. FIELDING. In the course of the discussion it was stated that the amount was about a hundred million dollars, but we have no official records on that subject.

On section 2, paragraph (w); guarantee insurance.

Mr. FIELDING moved to amend the section by striking out the letter 'r' in the word 'officer' in the fourth line of paragraph (w).

Amendment agreed to.

On section 2, paragraph (bb); sickness insurance.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would like to ask the minister whether there is any provision in this Bill permitting companies to charge a war rate against members of the active militia in the event of their being called out on active service, and if so, whether there is a fixed rate in excess of the premium charged?

Mr. FIELDING. That is a matter left to the company. We do not attempt to regulate it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I asked the question because during the South African war I knew the case of a man who held a $3,000 insurance policy in the North American Insurance Company for 13 years, and he was charged $75 per thousand war rate in excess of the premium, which was far more than new insurance with the war rate included could have been had for. There should be some restriction in this Act so as to prevent excessive charges of that kind.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be a matter of contract between the companies and the policy-holders.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Some companies charge a war rate of $75 per thousand, some charge $50 per thousand, and some charge no war rate at all. There should be some uniformity.

Mr. FIELDING. One would think that the insurance agents, who are very zealous, could easily explain that feature of a policy and that competition would regulate it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes, but if a man is insured for many years in a company, that company should be prevented from charging him an excessive war rate.

Mr. FIELDING. It is a matter of contract.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. They seem to be able to put on whatever war rate they like.

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose the policy contains a provision that they may do so

Mr. G. TAYLOR. In the case referred to the man was insured and on the eve of going to South Africa he was charged $75 per thousand war rate, whereas if he went to a new company he could get the war insurance practically for nothing.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid it would have to be left to the terms of the contract between the policy-holder and the company; I do not think it could be regulated by this Act.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. You could regulate it by preventing undue discrimination. The contract with the company is so worded that in cases of emergency the rates can be increased by the company without the consent of the party insured. If a man has held an insurance policy for twenty years and is called on active service when that policy has been in force for eighteen years, and the policy has two years to run before it is paid up, he is, as it were, forced to pay an excessive war rate if it is demanded from him. These companies are under a certain amount of obligation to this country which gives them charters and protects them and they should make some return in the shape of a fair war rate to the men who go to serve their country in the field. I think these companies would raise no objection if the minister should say that all companies doing business in this country shall not increase the premium on civilians in the active militia who are called to serve their country.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think it would be fair to say that a contract made with a man engaged in the arts of peace should be on the same terms as in the case of a man who goes to war. The risks of active service are of course greater. It is unfortunate that the man who is patriotic enough to serve his country in the field has to pay a larger premium, but it is a business transaction, and I do not think we can say to the companies that they should not charge anything for the extra risk.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister knows that he could make this amendment in the Act if he so desired.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but then——

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If that is the case the Minister of Finance will find that the country will not support hi min his contention.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I recognize that the life of a soldier is a more hazardous risk, but at the same time I think the company should be prevented from charging an excessive war rate. I will cite an instance. I know a man who had an insurance policy for $3,000 in the North American Life Insurance Company for thirteen years, and on the eve of going to South Africa he was charged a war rate of $75 a thousand, or $225 in all. This was far more than treble his premium, and it was practically prohibitive. He had to throw aside his policy, and thirteen years older than when he entered the other company he got a policy for $5,000 from the Sun Life, war risk included, for less than the $225 war rate alone that the North American Life wanted to charge him. Such a thing as that should not be allowed.

Mr. NESBITT. That man could have taken a paid-up policy in the North American Life, and he could have gone to any other company he liked which wanted to give him a cheaper rate. Competition will regulate the rate. The North American Life would lose far more business by such a case as the hon. gentleman cites than it would gain by the extra premium, because that fact would be advertised abroad. There is no doubt that competition will regulate this, and I do not see how the minister could set a fixed rate in the Bill.

Mr. GOODEVE. It appears to me that the objection raised by the hon. member could be met somewhat in this way. Under our new Act against usury, it is provided that the interest stipulated in a mortgage should be set forth in a certain sized type across the face of the mortgage, and could you not add a subclause here stipulating that every policy should set forth in large type across the face of the policies the premium rate of the war contract, so that immediately on a man making application for insurance and receiving his policy his attention would be called to the matter and he would know the rate. I agree with the Minister of Finance that it is impossible to interfere with private contracts of this kind. I believe that competition will regulate the rate. If every company was compelled to set forth in large type on the face of each policy the rate that would be charged in case of war, then the competition would do the rest, and the companies would be careful not to charge an exorbitant rate, because no company would want to get the name of charging more than the others. It seems to me you could get over the difficulty in that way.

Mr. FIELDING. That suggestion seems meritorious, but I would point out that although this Bill has been before both Houses of parliament for two years, no complaint has ever been made about an excessive rate being charged for war risks, so far as my memory goes. We will consider the matter before the Bill finally leaves committee, and meanwhile I will discuss the matter with the superintendent of insurance.

Mr. THOBURN. In the case of plate glass insurance, if you have plate glass broken by fire the plate glass insurance companies refuse to pay the insurance. I had a case of that kind myself last fall. If you put plate glass instead of ordinary glass in front of a store, the insurance company does not want to increase your insurance on account of the plate glass, and they tell you to go to the plate glass insurance company. Then, if you insure with the plate glass insurance company, and if your plate glass is lost on account of fire, neither company will pay.

Mr. FIELDING. If you lose it by fire, I suppose it is a fire risk.

Mr. THOBURN. It is not included in the fire risk. If it is broken by fire, why should not the plate glass company pay for it?

Mr. FIELDING. It is all a question of what is in the contract. I should think that a fire insurance company would insure damage to plate glass by fire. However, a man can only get what he contracts to have.

Mr. NESBITT. The fire insurance people will insure against damage caused by fire.

Mr. THOBURN. No.

Mr. NESBITT. They certainly do.

Mr. GOODEVE. All the contracts of the plate glass companies have a special clause clearly and distinctly setting forth that they will not insure your glass when broken by fire, but any insurance company doing a fire insurance business would insure the plate glass for you in the cost of your building. It is merely neglect that you do not have it inserted in your policy, and if you do not do so you fall between two stools, because you have made a faulty contract. It is not the fault of the company contracting.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the minister if what are called New England mutual companies are really insurance companies? As I understand it they are a number of men mutuallly agreeing with each other that in the event of loss they will make good the loss. Are they incorporated?

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed they are incorporated.

On section 3, application of Act.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. As I understand, there are two kinds of marine insurance—ocean marine, and inland marine. Why is ocean marine insurance struck out of this Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. This Act has not applied to ocean marine insurance, and it is now proposed that it shall not apply to inland marine insurance. It is found that there is not much business done by Canadian companies in this class of insurance.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The government, by the regulations it imposes on Canadian companies, is sending all the inland marine insurance business to companies of very indifferent character in the United States. These companies will take a risk of say $5,000 or $10,000 on a vessel on the lakes, and place the balance of the contract with Lloyds. Our government demands a very high guarantee from our companies that take marine risks, and this prevents them doing the same thing that the American companies are doing.

Mr. FIELDING. I am advised that we have had no complaints of that nature. The business has not been a profitable one, and our companies have not engaged in it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I know that very small companies in Cleveland and New York do this business. They take a risk of say $5,000 on a vessel, and place the balance with Lloyds, and they get all the profit of the commission which Lloyds pay on these risks. Our companies say they do not wish to go into this business, because they will have to put up a large guarantee with the department in order to do a marine business.

Mr. FIELDING. In connection with ocean marine business, there has been no deposit. In connection with inland marine business there has been a deposit. I am advised that companies have not complained of the stringency of our regulations. That has not been the cause of the difficulty so far as we are informed.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The companies are not complaining, but the marine risks are complaining, because their business is now in the hands of a monopoly in the United States. American vessels on the inland lakes have an easier inspection than Canadian vessels. Our Marine Department exercises a very rigid inspection, and therefore a Canadian risk is very much better than an American; but our shipowners are compelled, through the working of the Act, to place their insurance with agencies in Cleveland and New York. These agencies control the marine insurance on the Great Lakes. They carry hardly any of it; it is nearly all carried in London, England, but they control the placing of it. The result is that our shipowners have to pay the same rates on the inland lakes as the Americans have to pay on poorer ships, and on a lower class of inspection.

Mr. FIELDING. Of course, if our companies are not doing the business, and do not wish to do it, I do not see how we are to help the matter. Surely if it is a profitable business, there will be companies found to do it.

On section 7, form of license.

Mr. DANIEL. This Act does not apply to any fraternal societies?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. DANIEL. Are they under any inspection at all?

Mr. FIELDING. Several of them are registered in the Insurance Department as assessment companies, and come under the observation of the department.

On section 8, license not granted for life and other insurance to same company.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I had an idea that the licensing power for any business done in the country was vested entirely in the provincial governments. There is a suit being carried on at the present time upon this very question. Has that suit come to trial or has it been decided?

Mr. FIELDING. No. There has been always more or less contention as to the relative powers of the federal and the provincial authorities in relation to this subject. We have merely acted on the best legal advice we could obtain. There is no present litigation in which the government is concerned, but my impression is that a reference will shortly be made to the Supreme Court in which that question will be included.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand that the Privy Council in the Scott Act or the McCarthy Act case, decided that the provinces alone had the power of licensing anybody or corporation to do business in the country.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think the decision was as broad as that. I do not think there is any decision that the parliament of Canada cannot legislate with respect to licenses. We do issue licenses for various purposes, such as the export of electricity, to insurance companies, to ferries, to fishermen.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Would it not be better to call that registration? Then you might avoid a controversy.

Mr. FIELDING. There has never been any controversy on that point.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that there is a suit now pending in Toronto in connection with the Canada Life, involving the question whether or not the federal government is the proper authority to incorporate these companies, and I am told that it will be carried to the Privy Council. I thought that probably for that reason the government would leave this Bill over for the present session, and in the meantime that question would be decided in the courts.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the action challenges the validity of a particular Act that was passed within a recent session of parliament. I do not think there is anything in this Bill that will affect it one way or another, and I think it would be a pity to delay the Bill on that account.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I have a communication from a man carrying on the suit that it does challenge the validity of this Act, and I understand he has written to other members of this House to the same effect.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it would be a pity after all the time that has been given to the Bill if we were not to press it to a conclusion. Whatever might be the results of that suit, we must abide by them, but I do not think there is anything in this Act that has particular reference to the suit. The question raised may be of the class of question which can be raised generally, but the House has given a great deal of attention to this matter, and I do not think it would be wise on such a flimsy ground not to press it to a conclusion—for no matter how the decision may go, we will still need an Insurance Act.

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking from memory, but I think we provide for the division of profits.

Mr. FIELDING. The suit arises over a special Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I know. The suit arises over the Canada Life, and I think in this Bill we deal with the same question, if I understand it rightly, and my understanding is that it gives authority to companies to do as the Canada Life has done. The contention is that the Canada Life has not the authority to do it because the right of contract is something that belongs to the provincial legislature, and not to the federal authorities. If the same question is dealt with in this Act, and the authority is given to companies generally to divide profits, in the way that the Canada Life divided them, the same question would arise.

Mr. FIELDING. That is correct. It is the same principle.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, the same principle is in this Bill.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The courts have held that no matter what this Act says the provincial Act says that if a contract is in a certain way, the contract will be considered in that way.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the only decision which has been given along the line suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Currie) was given by an estimable judge in Montreal who, however, has not a very high jurisdiction.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It was an Act of the provincial legislature which decided that a certain thing had to be read a certain way, and then there was a lawsuit which went to the Supreme Court I think.

On section 9, license not granted where charter authorizes excess of classes.

Mr. BARKER. I think we all desire to know what sections have been altered in the Bill which we had before us last year.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I have called attention to several sections already. Subsection 2 of section 9 contains a provision to which I shall call attention. Its effect is that subsidiary companies of companies licensed in Canada and the contracts of which are guaranteed by a licensed company may receive a license. They are treated as virtually one company, that is to say, where one company guarantees the contracts of another, they are treated as one company.

Mr. SPROULE. If a company in Canada should reinsure, for instance, with some American company, what position would that American company be in? Would it be entitled to have an office in Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. Companies have always been free to reinsure in the manner described.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not aware of any insurance being done in that way, but I suppose it must be done, or this provision would not be made.

Mr. FIELDING. There are several companies which have carried on their business in that way, one company guaranteeing the other, and this clause is intended to cover a case of that kind. It is not very general, but there are several companies doing business in that way.

On section 10—deposit of assets to be in excess as fixed by treasury board; amount of excess.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand that a good many foreign companies deposit with the government here securities of foreign corporations, some of them of doubtful value. I think it would be wise to insert a clause here that any securities deposited with this government should be the securities of some Canadian corporation. You cannot go into the United States and deposit with them Canadian securities—they demand their own. A provision such as I speak of would make a better market for Canadian securities and would be only carrying out the principle adopted by other countries. I noticed, in looking over the list of the assets of the companies several years ago, that securities of San Francisco companies and others of that kind were deposited here as security for insurance.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that my hon. friend (Mr. J. A. Currie) is confusing the investments of the companies with the deposits. Companies may have such securities as investments, but it does not follow that these are deposited in Canada. The purpose of the deposit is to have reliable securities irrespective of their source, as they are to afford security for the policy-holders. The hon. gentleman may be right in saying that some of the companies deposit foreign securities, but he is hardly correct in saying that some of these securities are of doubtful value, for the department is exceedingly careful to see to it that they are of substantial and satisfactory value. I am inclined to think also that he is mistaken when he says that our securities would not be accepted in the United States. I am told that, in some cases, they do accept our securities. If we laid it down as a principle that we would not accept any but Canadian securities, we should not be giving additional guarantees to the policy-holders, in whose interests these deposits are made, and we might embarrass the insurance companies.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The insurance companies are the great market for bonds and the better class of securities. It is to the interest of the country that the securities demanded by this government should be of Canadian corporations. Municipal corporations, for instance, have bonds, the chief market, for which is the insurance companies. Why should we allow foreign companies to come in here, and by depositing foreign securities, help to make a market for these securities when, by the restriction that I propose, we should make a larger market for our own securities? In doing so we should only be carrying out the principle adopted by many states of the union as well as by other countries. For instance, my recollection is that Germany compelled the American companies to get rid of their American securities held for the safety of German policy-holders and buy German securities.

Mr. BARKER. I would suggest that when we come to section 15 which deals with the question of deposits, we should be better able to discuss the question.

On section 11, license to provincial companies.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is it the intention of the government to grant a license for two or more provinces, but not for the whole Dominion, and, for that purpose to accept a smaller deposit than for a license for the whole Dominion?

Mr. FIELDING. A clause of the Bill soon to be taken up touches on that point.

On section 14, deposits of securities with minister; in case of foreign company; in case of limited license.

Mr. MILLER. My attention has just been called, by one of the Toronto fire insurance companies, to this section, and, if the minister will allow it, I would like to have the section stand until I have an opportunity of speaking to him about it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Consideration of section 14, postponed.

On section 15, securities permissible; valuation.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no change in that, but it touches the point referred to by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie).

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. This section provides that the deposits shall be

(a) in securities of or guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada, or in securities of or guaranteed by any province of Canada; or in securities of or guaranteed by the United Kingdom or any British colony.

I do not know that the other colonies offer us any privileges in this respect.

(b) If such company is incorporated in any foreign country in securities of or guaranteed by the government of such country.

I think that ought to be cut out. There is no reason why foreign government securities should be received as deposits. There are plenty of Canadian securities.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member may be mistaken in thinking that we have plenty of Canadian securities. There are times when the insurance companies have difficulty in obtaining satisfactory securities. To-day the whole tendency is to purchase government and municipal securities. They are very largely used. The percentage of foreign securities used is not great, but to provide that we shall not receive such securities would not be a wise step.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice that ordinary municipal debentures are not considered to be sufficiently safeguarded to be accepted as deposits.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) will read the next section he will see that there is provision for accepting other securities if the treasury board is satisfied of their value.

Mr. SPROULE. Subsection 2 of section 16 refers to a fall in the value of these securities. What means is there for determining their value from time to time?

Mr. FIELDING. The officials of the department keep track of the quotations of these securities and wherever there is depreciation they see that the amount is made good by calling for further deposits.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. minister said that only these securities are to be used. But section 16 leaves the door wide open. The government may take the securities of the United States Steel Corporation as deposits if the treasury board say so. I am a good Canadian, and I believe that we should let charity begin at home in this matter. We have plenty of corporations growing up in the west with not too great a market for their securities. It is better for us to lend money to ourselves than to lend it to foreigners who come in here and hang up deposits of their security, and crowd us into the foreign market to sell ours. I think the point I have taken is a good Canadian point, and that we ought to stick to it.

Mr. FIELDING. The only foreign securities we accept are those of the highest value either government or national. The securities that are taken under that clause are all of the very highest character.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Have you a list of them here?

Mr. FIELDING. I can get them.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Better let that clause stand until we get the list.

Mr. SPROULE. While foreign securities might be accepted there are many other securities than those mentioned in this Act that would be regarded as valuable securities, and which might be accepted by the treasury board.

Mr. FIELDING. The bulk of the securities will be Canadian government or municipal securities, and provincial securities, when they are available. But there are not many of these. It is largely a question of British government securities, and Canadian municipal securities. I might bring down a list to my hon. friend, and he may be assured that this class of securities are of the very best.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It has been suggested to me that many of these companies refrain from purchasing Ontario government securities just because there happened to be a little excitement over the Hydro-Electric Commission. If these companies were compelled to buy only Canadian securities, and place only Canadian securities on deposit, there will always be a good market at home, and the interest will be paid into our own country. If our own securities are displaced by foreign securities the interest is paid into a foreign country to build up a foreign country at the expense of ours. I think that clause ought to stand until we have a little further explanation.

Mr. FIELDING. I will be glad at the next stage of the Bill to bring down a list of the class of securities we have accepted under this clause, and my hon. friend will find they are the best class of securities. With regard to Ontario government securities there is no question in our department; we have several deposits of Ontario government securities, and are very happy to receive them.

Mr. SPROULE. Would you receive municipal securities as well? Take a large and rich county where the securities are guaranteed by the council.

Mr. FIELDING. We do receive that class of securities, and have great quantities of them.

Mr. SPROULE. Subsection 2 would give you that power, but it does not include municipal securities.

Mr. FIELDING. Section 16 gives that power.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I may say for the information of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), that municipal securities are deposited. They are bought from municipalities by commission agents at 94 and 95, and they are hung up on deposit in this department at cost.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend, I am advised, is mistaken. These securities are accepted by us at their fair market value, and as a rule with a safe margin. There is no such thing, as my hon. friend thinks, of our accepting securities at a higher value. The great trouble is that the companies think we are rather too severe in our valuation and do not give them a high enough quotation.

On section 25, duplicates to be filed in office of a superior court.

Mr. THOBURN. What do these agencies mean? I understood that foreign companies were not to have agencies for Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. Foreign companies on being duly licensed may have agencies in Canada. What I said has reference to these unlicensed companies which are permitted to do business under exceptional circumstances as previously mentioned; but ordinary foreigners taking out a license may do business like Canadian companies.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Supposing a company has its chief agency in Montreal, and a suit is brought in the province of Ontario: has the service to be made in Montreal, and would the suit have to be tried in Montreal or in the province of Ontario?

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed the suit might still be brought in Ontario and be subject to Ontario laws.

On section 28, notice of ceasing of business.

Mr. SPROULE. The giving of notice shall be a condition precedent to the release of a company's deposit, but you release the deposit before they have fulfilled their contracts.

Mr. FIELDING. No, provision is made further on. The company's deposit will not be released until its liabilities in Canada have been met.

On section 31, paragraph (9), form of statements during 1910.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a slight change. The Bill as passed before provided that certain changes made by the superintendent in the annual statement might be subject to alteration by the minister. That has been changed. The statements as prepared by the superintendent shall be final and the minister shall not alter them. I think it is the better form.

Mr. SPROULE. It says in subclause 8 of section 31 'the minister or superintendent' may make changes. Either may do it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the minister should be responsible for those changes. He is the responsible party, and the superintendent acts under the minister. I do not see any necessity for the superintendent being empowered to make changes without consultation with the minister.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not important. These are really technical matters, and it means that the minister would only initial what is recommended by the superintendent. So that if you have the superintendent's signature in the matter you have all that is of real value. If you had the minister's initials added, it would not add much to the value.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If the minister does something wrong, he is responsible to the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I will have to promise that I will not.

Mr. BARKER. I understood from the minister that it was changed so as to place the responsibility entirely on the superintendent. That is not the alteration as it is printed here.

Mr. FIELDING. In the Bill as it passed the House it was provided that 'any such change made by the superintendent shall be subject to alteration or cancellation by the minister.' These last words have been stricken out; so that as it stands now it is the superintendent's view and not the minister's which prevails.

Mr. BARKER. Either can do it.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but in the event of the superintendent doing it and the minister being dissatisfied he had the right to change it. The Senate have stricken that out. I do not think it makes much difference. It is a technical matter, and the superintendent is the qualified officer to deal with it.

On section 36, time up to which annual statements are made.

Mr. FIELDING. It was from section 36 that the provision with respect to gain and loss exhibit was stricken out, to which I have already called attention.

On section 37, superintendent and his duties.

Mr. FIELDING. We are not making any change here; we are simply filling in the salary of the superintendent as it exists under the law to-day. That could not be done in the Senate. We propose to fill the blank with the words 'five thousand dollars per annum,' so that it shall read 'not exceeding five thousand dollars per annum.'

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That would come under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, deputy ministers, in a sense, do come under that in a special way. The superintendent of insurance has the rank of a deputy and is appointed under the same conditions.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I mean his retiring allowance and all that sort of thing; they would be considered under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the Civil Service Act provide what the salary of a deputy is? You appear to have authority here to change that by order in council.

Mr. FIELDING. No, it says, 'not exceeding.'

Mr. SPROULE. But this gives you power to change that.

Mr. FIELDING. It has always been fixed in the Insurance Act, and the salary is that of a deputy. At the time this was fixed the deputies were paid a less sum. It is, in effect, the same thing; the superintendent is receiving the salary of a deputy.

Mr. SPROULE. Under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. FIELDING. It has always been fixed under the Insurance Act. Does my hon. friend mean that we can make it less than $5,000?

Mr. SPROULE. No, but either one or the other authority should prevail. If he comes under the Civil Service Act, and if the Civil Service Act provides that a deputy shall get a certain amount, why should you take authority to change that amount? I am not objecting to the amount.

Mr. FIELDING. It does not affect the present officer. If we were appointing a new officer and desired to do so we could give a less salary than $5,000, but he has by the Act the rank and position of a deputy.

Mr. SPROULE. How much does the Civil Service Act provide as the minimum amount that a deputy may receive?

Mr. FIELDING. $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, the Civil Service Act provides $5,000 as the minimum?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a fixed sum, not a minimum. The two Acts differ to this extent that we could appoint a superintendent of insurance at less than $5,000, and he could have a gradual rise to $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the Civil Service Act cover all deputy heads under the government?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then if it does, and if it says that a deputy head shall get so much, I do not see how you can take authority by order in council to change the words of the statute, because it is a statute.

Mr. BARKER. This section gives them the authority.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the minister should allow the law with relation to the Civil Service to stand as it is and not take power to fix the salary at less than that provided for by the Civil Service Act. I do not think it is well for us to start, so soon after passing the Civil Service Act, to make changes. These things should work automatically.

Mr. FIELDING. We are not making changes. This is following the Insurance Act as it has always been.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. But we have initiated a new system under the Civil Service Act, and this is not a special service. Why should there be any change? We establish a bad precedent, because whenever a Bill comes up there will be changes made in some way or somebody will be demanding changes.

Mr. FIELDING. There is an apparent clash between the two Acts. This permits us to appoint a superintendent of insurance at a less sum than $5,000 and then to raise it to $5,000. On the other hand, the superintendent of insurance is a technical officer, and if the present officer were to retire, I do not think it would hurt very much to have the right to appoint another officer at a lower rate and let him go up in a year or two. At all events, it is on the side of economy.

On section 41, report when assets become insufficient; Governor in Council may suspend license of company; effect of suspension.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a change here providing that in the case of a company's license being cancelled a modified or additional license may be issued for the purpose of protecting the policy-holders of the company.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Should there not be a special arrangement whereby a special officer of the government should be put in charge to liquidate these assets; instead of sending it to the courts of big expense?

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, I don't think we want to take that upon ourselves.

Mr. PERLEY. Do I understand that the superintendent can grant this modified or additional license and not the minister?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. PERLEY. There must be a mistake there; I do not think the superintendent should have that power. It seems to me it is the minister who should grant the license.

Mr. FIELDING. That amendment was put in by the Senate, but I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perley) is right in saying that the minister should grant the license. We had better change that.

On section 42, basis of valuation—deduction from value of policies.

Mr. PERLEY. This is a highly technical matter, and I would like to know if the clause as it has passed the Senate is practically the same as that passed by the House last session?

Mr. FIELDING. Substantially it is. There has been some change in the wording, but it is not material.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would like the minister to explain subsection 2 as to the basis of valuation.

Mr. FIELDING. I will have to let my hon. friend (Mr. Currie) take that on trust. That is a technical matter, and the only explanation I could give would be to read the clause and my hon. friend would not be any better off then.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The government through its officials fix the amount of the bonus or addition. under the British tables. Will these tables govern the companies apart altogether from the contract?

Mr. NESBITT. This simply deals with the guarantee each company has to put up and it is fixed in the British life tables.

Mr. HARTY. You mean the reserve.

Mr. NESBITT. Yes, the reserve or guarantee, that is absolute in the policy. The profits are estimated by the company and in this Act we do not deal with profits at all.

Mr. BARKER. Was this provision the outcome of a proposition by the insurance companies or is it the idea of the deputy minister for the protection of the public?

Mr. FIELDING. There has been a change in the tables accepted as the standard, but otherwise this is a continuation of what has been in the Insurance Act for years. The change in the tables has been suggested by the department because it is a more modern table and deemed to be a better basis of computation.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you provide that all policies after 1900 shall be on this basis and that policies before 1900 would be on whatever basis the company had followed previously?

Mr. FIELDING. The basis is the same, the variation is only in the rate of interest.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister and the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) have failed to catch the point. The superintendent of insurance goes into the office of the insurance company and says: You are charging too low a premium; you must charge a certain premium; and that becomes law—the company has to charge that. He goes to value the policies of the company, and he finds that it has been paying too much in the way of bonus or addition out of profits, and he says: That is contrary to this table; this is the amount you must fix as the amount of your bonus to policy-holders. By this clause it appears to me that the government is taking upon itself, through its superintendent, to fix the amount of bonus that the companies shall pay. I grant that it is a matter of contract, but the superintendent having such wide powers enabling him virtually to vary contracts so far as premiums are concerned, will this clause be construed as enabling him to vary the profits or bonuses payable to policy-holders?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the bonus is not determined by the superintendent. He has to take what the company establishes as the bonus, but that becomes an element in the valuation. The superintendent has nothing to do with establishing what the bonus or the amount of the profits shall be.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the minister is right in saying that the rate of interest shall be the basis of the valuation. There are the two elements—the rate of interest at 3½ per cent and these tables; that is, in regard to all policies issued after 1900. Policies issued before that may have been on a different basis.

Mr. NESBITT. They were on a different interest basis. The British life table is simply an experience table, and the companies put up so much yearly of an absolute guarantee and add 3½ per cent of interest to that. Previous to 1900 it was 4 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. Upon what basis was the valuation?

Mr. NESBITT. It may have been on the healthy male table. The guarantee is absolute.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a party were dropping out of the company. He must be settled with on some basis, and the company is earning profits. On what basis will these profits be declared? On the British offices life tables of 1893, or on what basis? I take it that this clause would disturb contracts which have been entered into with the Canada Life Company, and to that extent probably interfere with the litigation that is going on at the present time. Would or would not this clause interfere with the rights of policy-holders which might be determined under that litigation?

Mr. NESBITT. This would not interfere, because the higher the guarantee the less the profit. The Canada Life, like all other companies, was forced after 1900 to guarantee on a higher basis.

Mr. SPROULE. The profits the companies earned before that time were higher than they have been since, and they have robbed the policy-holders of those profits.

Mr. NESBITT. They did not rob them of anything; they gave them a higher guarantee.

On section 45, issue of unauthorized policy a violation.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the Act provides a standard policy.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a clause that every policy shall contain certain conditions but that comes later in the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that this subsection would mean that where there is any departure from the standard in issuing a policy it will be a violation.

On section 47, contributions of certain companies towards office expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a company refuses to do what is provided for here, what can you do, except cancel its license?

Mr. FIELDING. That is all we can do, suspend its license to do business in Canada. There is no other penalty.

On section 52, change of head office and date of annual meeting.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a somewhat lengthy clause. It provides machinery for amalgamation and transfer. Some changes have been made. I will read the memorandum.

This section was originally drafted along the lines of the corresponding section in the English Companies Act. In the Act passed at the last session of the imperial parliament, however, a few changes were made, and these changes have also been made in this section.

The changes are to correspond with those made in the English Act.

Mr. NESBITT. What are the changes?

Mr. FIELDING. A few words here and there. Paragraph 3, subsection, as amended, requires that in a case of reinsurance or amalgamation, notice of the transfer shall be served on the shareholders and policy-holders of both companies, instead of on the shareholders and policy-holders of the re-insured company alone as originally provided.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose that the treasury board do not agree to it, can the government compel that company to go into liquidation and use the money forwarded to them for distribution among the policy-holders.

Mr. FIELDING. The government would have to refuse the license and that would force the company into liquidation.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That would be a very grave step.

Mr. FIELDING. It would not be done unless there is a strong need for it.

On section 54, advances to agents.

Mr. NESBITT. Might I ask the minister whether they did not change that somewhat?

Mr. FIELDING. This section has been amended by removing the restriction of advances on first year's premiums and providing that advances may be made without restriction, but that such advances shall not be allowed as assets in the superintendent's report. In subsection 2, exempting industrial companies from the provision of the section, has also been struck out, as the amendment in subsection 1, rendered this exemption unnecessary.

On section 55, salaries of officers and agents.

Mr. PERLEY. Will the minister explain what change there is in this?

Mr. FIELDING. In substance I am told there is no change, though there has been redrafting. As the section, as amended, stands, it affects only contracts to be entered into hereafter.

On section 56, salary agreement, for not more than five years.

Mr. FIELDING. This has been changed to provide that the time for which an agreement between a company and its officers or trustees may be made shall not exceed five years instead of ten years, as in the old section.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does that affect the contracts made with agents? I understand that a great many agents have contracts with the companies made years ago under which they were to receive a certain portion of the annual premium. These men worked hard for years and got a large business for their companies, and have retired expecting that these renewal commissions will be paid them. Does this affect them?

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill will not interfere with that.

On section 57—commissions to agents only: pension fund may be created.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Who gets that pension? It is spoken of as a 'staff pension fund.' Who are the 'staff'? Do they include the directors or the agents, or does this mean the office staff?

Mr. FIELDING. I would take it to mean the head office staff.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am not raising objection, but I think that should be defined in such a way that there may be no misconstruction.

Mr. BARKER. It might include the president.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, he would be the head of the office staff.

Mr. BARKER. Is that intended?

Mr. FIELDING. The scheme must be submitted to the general meeting of the members. If they approve it, I do not see why we should prevent it.

On section 59, investment of company's funds.

Mr. FIELDING. Several amendments have been made in the investments section. Under subsection (a) of section 1 is added 'or guarantee by any municipal corporation in Canada.' Paragraph 3 of subsection (b) has been amended so as to provide that the stocks of a company guaranteed by a company which has paid regular dividends upon its preferred or common stock for not less than five years will be accepted for investment. This puts the stock of the company that is guaranteed on the same footing as that of the guaranteeing company. It accepts the guarantee as equivalent to the original stock.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. This opens a very wide door. A company with a capital stock of $10,000 on which it has paid dividends might guarantee the stock of a half million dollar company, and thus make that stock eligible.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be an abuse of the Act. I would ask that that section be allowed to stand for further consideration of paragraph 3—not the whole. We will think of the point raised by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie).

Mr. PERLEY. It is right to let it stand, but the minister ought to promise us that the matter shall be set right, for it might come up when we are not here and pass without being amended. A ten-thousand dollar company should not be allowed to guarantee a million dollars of another company's stock.

Mr. FIELDING. We will consider that. The hon. member (Mr. Perley) knows the spirit in which the Bill has been dealt with, and may feel sure that the matter will receive full consideration.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. And the minister will improve it?

Mr. FIELDING. Either that or attention will be called to it in the House. Whatever decision we reach will be conveyed to the House. In paragraph 4 of subsection (b) the provision was that not more than twenty per cent of the common stocks and not more than twenty per cent of the total issue of the stock of any company shall be purchased by any life insurance company. That has been changed to thirty per cent. It was pointed out that, as the field of stock investment is very limited in Canada, the companies should not be so much restricted. It was pointed out that there is no danger of the control passing to the investing company when only thirty per cent of the stock is permitted to be purchased.

Subsection 3 is replaced with a new subsection, to enable a company to obtain the securities of a company for reorganization if the securities of that company were previously owned by the insurance company.

Mr. BARKER. In connection with the matter of guarantee to which we have been alluding, the Minister of Finance might consider whether such investments might not be subject to the approval of the Treasury Board instead of being as large as they are.

Mr. FIELDING. I promise to look into that.

Mr. PERLEY. This subsection 3 allows the Treasury Board to authorize the acceptance by a company of securities not fulfilling the foregoing requirements of the section in payment or part payment for securities sold by the company. If the securities they receive are not such as are authorized by the Act, I suppose they would have to sell them within five years under the previous section.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, if unauthorized, they would have to be sold within five years.

Mr. PERLEY. Even those that the Treasury Board allowed them to take under this subsection?

Mr. FIELDING. If we accept them they would become good.

Mr. PERLEY. That is exactly the point I am making. Under subsection 3, the Treasury Board may authorize the acceptance of these securities in payment or part payment for securities held by the company. That is, securities they are not allowed to take under this Act might be authorized by the Treasury Board. They ought to be obliged to sell them within a reasonable time. If the Treasury Board allowed them to take these securities which they could not get in any other way, that should not allow them to keep them for ever.

Mr. FIELDING. They would still be subject to the clause that they must be sold within a reasonable time.

On section 60, deposits outside of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. In subsection 1 the words 'and securities' have been inserted after the word 'funds,' in order to make it clear that a company might deposit securities outside of Canada. It was considered that it would be unreasonable to refuse permission for the temporary removal of securities from Canada.

Mr. PERLEY. That is a proper change; but I object to the word 'person,' being used in the last line. It seems to me in these days when we have trust companies and banks, that a person should not be authorized to receive these securities for purposes of exchange.

Mr. FIELDING. A person would include a corporation.

Mr. PERLEY. I do not think any individual should be allowed to do it.

Mr. FIELDING. That is one of the Senate's new clauses, and that may also stand. Of course it would not prevent us using a bank or trust company for the purpose, but it would allow an individual. We will look into that.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the trust company not charge a commission, and an individual might do it without commission?

Mr. PERLEY. An insurance company would have to pay any charges of that kind. If the word 'person' were changed to a responsible bank or trust company, it would answer my objection.

Mr. NESBITT. Is it at all likely that the department would put them in with a person that is not responsible? It says 'a responsible person.' I think the clause is good as it stands.

On section 67, holding of real estate.

Mr. FIELDING. An amendment has been made to this section providing that a company may acquire and hold such real estate in the United Kingdom as is necessary for the maintenance of its branches there, provided that the consent of the treasury board to the acquisition has been obtained. This amendment was supported by the argument that it would increase the companies' standing in the eyes of the British insurance public.

On section 76, voting by proxy, companies other than life.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the Independent Order of Foresters counted an assessment company?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. There is a change in section 76, as it passed this House, when subsection 4 provided that a proxy shall not be valid unless it is executed within three months prior to the meeting in which the same is to be used. I have a memorandum stating that subsection 4, requiring that a proxy of the mutual companies must be executed within three months, is struck out, since policy-holders' proxies have been abolished in section 98, and there seems no reason for imposing this limitation on mutual companies.

Mr. PERLEY. Then the proxy is good for ever?

Mr. FIELDING. It is good until revoked. The policy-holders have no proxy.

On section 77, investments, annual report.

Mr. FIELDING. This section has been amended. It empowers the superintendent to disallow such investments as he considers unauthorized by the Act, and provides for an appeal to the Exchequer Court against his decision. The companies claimed that pending the result of such appeal, the superintendent's ruling should be suspended, and an amendment has been made to subsection 4, providing that if the company gives notice of its intention to appeal within fifteen days of being notified of the superintendent's ruling, and within fifteen days thereafter files its appeal with the registrar of the Exchequer Court, the superintendent's ruling shall be suspended until the judgment of the Exchequer Court has been rendered. This will give the company thirty days within which to file its appeal. The section has also been amended to provide for its coming into force on January 1, 1911.

On section 79, reduction and subsequent increase of capital.

Mr. NESBITT. Is the provision with respect to the reduction of capital the same as in the old Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The question raised by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) is a pertinent one. Could a company whose capital is not all paid up, when trouble is apprehended, write off its stock and release its shareholders from liability?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the liability remains.

Mr. BARKER. It is paid up capital that it has power to reduce under section 79.

Mr. FIELDING. Read subsection 4.

On section 80, increase of capital.

Mr. FIELDING. The first line of section 80 has been amended by providing that only that portion of the profits of the company which belongs to the shareholders shall be used for increasing the capital stock.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is there a clause which provides that the list of securities held by a company shall be at the Department of Finance?

Mr. FIELDING. That comes in the annual statement submitted by the company to the department.

On section 87, rebates, discrimination, etc., forbidden.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a change in 87, but it is not material.

Mr. PERLEY. 87 has been altered?

Mr. FIELDING. The alterations are only verbal.

Mr. NESBITT. I would like to ask the minister that subsection 2 of section 87, should stand.

Mr. FIELDING. All right.

Subsection 2 of section 87 allowed to stand.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the provision in section 85, that the agent of the company is not to be the agent of the insured apply to fraternal companies as well?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

On section 90, surplus under deferred dividend policies.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I notice that the figures are to be taken every fifth year with regard to a deferred policy. Would it not be better for each company to have a set time for reckoning the profits on such policies, having the company's year instead of the policy's year?

Mr. FIELDING. This is the clause as we passed it before, and I think no question was raised as to its suitability.

Mr. BARKER. On this question of the quinquennial payments, would it not be possible to have company periods. Could not it be worked out on a five years' computation. I think every company should have its quinquennial period to suit itself, with adjustments made for five years, and not to have each policy made up every five years.

Mr. FIELDING. All the policies would be valued at the same time?

Mr. BARKER. Yes, and to meet the intermediate policies there could be an adjustment.

Mr. NESBITT. That is done now.

Mr. SPROULE. My impression is that that is now done by the companies.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It is the net profit that is divided, and to my mind the only way to work that out from an actuarial standpoint would be to have a five year company period. The company has its great clearing house every five years and makes an adjustment on the policies accordingly.

Mr. NESBITT. That is what they do now.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that what my hon. friend from Hamilton suggests is the rule of practice now.

Mr. BARKER. That is probably what the Act seems to contemplate.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. But it is not so expressed.

Mr. NESBITT. Each company has its quinquennial period, and if any policy falls in between the periods they give them their proportion.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. This section does not contemplate that.

Mr. NESBITT. I think it does.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it means what the hon. gentleman desires.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Yes, but it does not set forth what it means.

On section 95, form of policy to be approved—days of grace for payment of premiums—incontestability after two years—policy and endorsement to be entire contract—age understated—lapsed policies—loan on policy—table of surrender and loan values—table of instalments—renewal of policy—exceptions.

Mr. PERLEY. Is there a change in this section?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. In paragraph (g) the Bill as introduced provided that all loan agreements on policies must be made on a fixed form. Several of the companies pointed out this would cause great inconvenience to the companies, and it was decided that the company's own form should be allowed to be used, subject to the approval of the superintendent. An amendment has been made in accordance with this suggestion.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you make it compulsory under clause 94 for the party to get the acquiescence of the superintendent to institute a suit?

Mr. FIELDING. His individual right to bring suit against the company would remain, but in the case of the Attorney General being applied to to bring a suit for some public interest, the superintendent should be applied to.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I cannot see that the companies can give any reasonable excuse why they should not use the government forms.

Mr. FIELDING. If an approved form is used, the public interest is protected.

Mr. NESBITT. I am glad to know these forms have to be submitted to the superintendent, because the companies have had a grievance with reference to these company forms.

Mr. BARKER. Colonel Worthington made a reference to the war risks on militiamen. What is to be done about that?

Mr. FIELDING. Deserving as the object is, I do not see how we can legislate in such a matter.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think an amendment could be inserted in subclause (b) stating that the amount of that extra war payment should be printed on the contract.

Mr. FIELDING. There are big wars and little wars, and I think the company would desire to have an opportunity of varying the rates in accordance with the risks that may arise. We have not had any representation that there has been any difficulty under the existing law in that respect.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) suggested an amendment to subsection (b) of section 95, which I would like the minister to take under advisement, holding this subsection over.

Mr. FIELDING. Very good.

Mr. NESBITT. The companies all have in their policies now the amount additional they charge for war risks.

Mr. PERLEY. If they have, it might as well be put in the Act.

Mr. FIELDING. I have the impression that war risks may vary in their quality and character.

On section 96, separate accounts of participating and non-participating business.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the idea of having separate accounts for participating and non-participating policies? The companies limit the profits for participating policy-holders to the participating business, while the profits on the non-participating business I suppose go to the shareholders. This is one of the grievances that were up before. A man who takes out a participating policy understands that he participates in all the profits of the company in a certain proportion along with the share-holders. Most of the companies as a matter of fact only allow to the participating policy-holder the profits that accrue from participating policies. The keeping of these two accounts separate makes it all the more easy for the companies to do this.

Mr. NESBITT. The companies issue non-participating policies at a very much lower premium than participating policies; and this clause has been inserted for the purpose of enabling the companies to withdraw from the participating policy-holders a sufficient amount to make up for the lack of premiums paid by the non-participating policy-holders.

On section 98, shareholders' and policy-holders' directors.

Mr. FIELDING. There have been some changes made in this section. It is one to which the committee of the Senate gave very much time. The decision of the committee with respect to the representation of policy-holders on the board of directors may be summarized as follows:

1. Policy-holder are to be allowed to have representation on the board.
2. The total number of directors is to be not less than nine nor more than fifteen (the original section had nine and sixteen).
3. The policy-holders' directors must be at least one-third of the board (last year's section had two-fifths).
4. The directors of both classes may be elected for one, two, or three years.
5. If elected for two or three years they may according as determined by the company's by-laws—
(a) hold office continuously for the full term, or
(b) a certain proportion retire annually.
6. Policy-holders are not allowed to vote by proxy.
7. The qualifications for policy-holders voting and acting as directors have been left the same as in last year's Bill.

An amendment has been made to subsection 7, providing that a policy-holder as a member of a company shall not in case of liquidation be liable to be placed on the list of contributories, or to share in the distribution of assets. Subsection 11 has been changed to provide that the date of the holding of the annual meeting shall be printed on every renewal receipt issued by the company, instead of the company being obliged to serve every policy-holder with a special notice of the annual meeting. Subsections 13 and 14 have been consolidated into a new subsection 13. These in general terms are the different proposals from the Senate.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the minister whether a point which was much discussed last year has been dealt with, that is, whether a shareholder can sit as a policy-holder's director?

Mr. FIELDING. No, as proposed now, he cannot.

Mr. BARKER. The policy-holder's director must be interested simply as a policy-holder?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. Why should not a policy-holder vote by proxy as well as a shareholder?

Mr. FIELDING. I was one of those who thought he should; but in this matter I am willing to accept the judgment of the Senate rather than delay the Bill.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I agree with the minister that the policy-holders should elect their own directors. I do not see why they should not have the same privilege in that respect as the shareholders. Apparently there is a clear line of cleavage between the director who represents the shareholders and the director who is to represent the policy-holders. The policy-holders should have the same freedom of electing their director as the shareholders.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the judgment of this House would sustain the minister on that point.

Mr. FIELDING. I believe that one of the arguments that influenced the Senate was the expense that would be involved. Of course, there are an immense number of policy-holders, and the cost of issuing proxies to those would be very large. However, rather than delay the Bill, I am willing to accept the Senate's compromise.

Mr. PERLEY. I do not see why the date of the annual meeting should not be put on the policy, unless it is left in this way because they might want to change the date.

Mr. FIELDING. They might want to change it.

On section 102, companies ceasing to do business.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There are some companies which formerly did business in this country and whose business is not yet wound up. Is there any change in this clause that would affect them?

Mr. FIELDING. This is the same clause as was in the Bill of last year. There is no change. It is the same as the existing law I am advised.

On section 102, companies ceasing to do business—winding up old business.

Mr. PERLEY. I would like to ask whether the public has the right to see the list of securities held by the government on deposit for these insurance companies?

Mr. FIELDING. You mean the deposits held by the department?

Mr. PERLEY. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no objection at any time to anybody obtaining that information who desires it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. A friend of mine is interested in this winding up, and he has been harshly dealt with, by the New York Mutual Company.

Mr. FIELDING. Mutual reserve, you mean?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Yes, the Mutual Reserve. The procedure in those cases is this: The government holds a certain amount of security and deposits. As I understand the securities held by the government in the case of insurance companies are for the benefit of the parties who hold the insurance and for the purpose of renewing their insurance, that is their unearned premiums. Now in the case of this company, the moment their trouble arose, a Canadian gentleman, who is very active in assignee work applied to the courts to be appointed the assignee. About the same time an American assignee applied to be assignee of the company in New York, and there was a conflict between them. The Canadian issued notices asking the policy-holders to send their policies and payments to him and the American did likewise. Some of the Canadians paid their premiums to the Canadian official before he was finally appointed by the courts, and it appears that some of those who paid to this Canadian official before his final appointment, have been deprived of the benefits to which they are entitled under this Act. In the case of those who paid to the American liquidator, their payments held good and their policies were not cancelled, while one or two who paid to the Canadian liquidator were cast out and have no redress. I think the minister should take that matter under advisement. I would like to know from the minister before this Bill passes, what amount of money on deposit in the department has been used for the payment of legal expenses and assignees' expenses in this matter, because if I know anything about these assignees, and especially about the gentleman in question, about one-third of the money held by the government will be swallowed up in expenses before the matter is settled.

Mr. FIELDING. I have some reason for feeling interested in that company, but I am afraid the trouble was that my hon. friend's friend had a worthless policy, and was sad because he could not get something out of it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. You are absolutely wrong. It was nothing of the kind.

Mr. FIELDING. There were so many like that that I naturally thought my friend's case was in that position. However, we have no record of the amount that was expended for legal expenses, but no doubt that will come to us later. The department did not undertake to distribute this money at all. It is purely a matter for the courts, and whatever money was in the hands of the government has been paid over to the liquidator by order of the court.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. How long ago?

Mr. FIELDING. In August, 1908.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. And this liquidator has deliberately dragged the settlement of that company's affairs along all this time and the minister allows it. The liquidator will not report for three or four years until he has eaten up all the money. I think there should be a limit to these matters and I intend to bring up the question again.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a matter for the court, not for the department.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There ought to be something in this Act that would prevent anything of that kind. It should provide that when a company has to go into liquidation an inspector from the department should supervise it, the same as is done in connection with the banks in the United States, and the insurance companies there.

Mr. FIELDING. The department has enough to do without taking that on its shoulders. The hon. member's faith in the department is very acceptable to me, but I would rather trust the courts.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The liquidator would be an official of the court, but an outside man who has nothing to do with the company can now apply to a high court judge who is possibly also his friend and get the high court judge to say that he is to be the liquidator. He is appointed liquidator and he demands the money deposited with the government and applies it to his own private business as a trust fund or applies it as he likes. There should be some method whereby an official of the government could act as liquidator, of course, under the jurisdiction of the court; but an assignee who can get somebody to go on his bond has a right under this law to apply for a winding up order, to get all this money which the stockholders had deposited in the hands of the minister, have it paid to his own credit, and then his account is not settled for three or four years. I think it is time in the interests of the public and the policy-holders that something should be done in the way of appointing a supervisor.

Mr. FIELDING. This assignee cannot get this money out of the hands of the government; the only people who can get it is the court, and if an order of the court requires us to give the money to the assignee, then the court is responsible.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Well, the minister will ascertain what the figures are and let me know what the cost of this liquidation has been.

Mr. FIELDING. If there is any record of it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister has the money.

Mr. FIELDING. The court has the money; we have not.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I thought the minister said that the court came to the minister and got it dollar by dollar as it was needed. As a matter of fact if the court gave an order this man could draw half a million dollars.

Mr. FIELDING. The court directed that whatever moneys were in the hands of the government should be paid over to the assignee. The official was so paid and so far as we are concerned that was the end of it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. A moment ago the minister suggested that this money was paid out on the application of the assignee.

Mr. FIELDING. Nothing of the sort.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I say that an irresponsible assignee can come and get all the moneys here on deposit at the department, and hang up the settlement for four or five years.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member is mistaken. An irresponsible assignee cannot get a penny of the money. An order of the court only can get the money.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the use of begging the question? All the court does is to instruct the assignee to go and get the money.

Mr. FIELDING. If the court instructs the Minister of Finance to pay over the money, as we are good citizens and try to obey the orders of the court, we deliver the goods.

On section 109, reserves.

Mr. FIELDING. I would like to have that section stand, please.

On section 110, profits from participating policies to be kept distinct from other profits—rights of participating policy-holders to profits.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would ask the minister to allow that section to stand.

Mr. FIELDING. Very good.

Mr. SPROULE. We have spent a long day, and I think it would be well that we should rise.

Mr. FIELDING. Very well.

Mr. PERLEY. Can the minister tell us when it is likely that this Insurance Bill will come up again?

Mr. FIELDING. Not to-morrow. I can hardly say more than that. I want the superintendent of insurance and his officers to look over the various suggestions that have been made before we take the Bill up again.

Progress reported.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 218) respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company.—Mr. A. H. Clarke.

Bill (No. 219) to incorporate the Edmonton, Peace River and Eastern Railway Company.—W. M. Martin.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. First, the Bills on the order paper, those standing in the names of the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of Railways and Canals, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—in fact, almost any of these Bills we would like to take up as they may be reached.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the tariff be taken up?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it has not assumed the form of a Bill yet; it is in the form of a resolution. If we finish the Bill I have referred to, Supply will be taken up, when the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of the Interior will resume their estimates.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 26, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

TREATMENT OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. LENNOX. Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to a communication that I have received from a prominent gentleman in my riding, and which I beg leave to read. It is dated 23rd of this month.

Dear Mr. Lennox,—My object in writing you is to lay before you certain facts in connection with the immigration department at St. John, N.B.

I came out from England on the Allan Line steamer 'Corsican' recently, landing at St. John, N.B., on Saturday evening, April 2nd. The vessel docked at 6 or a few minutes before 6 o'clock that evening, with about 600 passengers on board. The Allan Company had two special trains ready to take us to Montreal, had all the passengers' baggage on deck ready to land, had arranged to have the customs officials on hand to pass the baggage, when we were told that the immigration agent would not permit any passengers to land that night, and so far as I could learn from the captain of the 'Corsican,' without any special reason. We all had to remain on board that night, as not a passenger was permitted to land, and we did not get away from St. John until 3.30 on Sunday afternoon, causing much annoyance and inconvenience to all the passengers.

You would oblige me very much if you would lay this matter before the proper officials at Ottawa.

I lay this before the minister with the hope that he will make inquiries into the subject of the complaint as soon as convenient.

Mr. OLIVER. I will be glad to take up the matter of the letter my hon. friend has read. Of course, we desire to avoid delay and inconvenience as much as possible, but it may be that in the present rush when there are so many ships coming in and so many people to handle, the difficulty was not avoidable. I will be glad to go into the matter fully. Certainly I can assure my hon. friend that there is every desire on the part of the department to redress any grievances that may occur.

Mr. LENNOX. I will hand the letter over to the minister.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the following communication to make to the House:

The Clerk of the House having requested, for the reasons set forth in his communication to me dated the 25th instant, copy of which is hereto appended, the withdrawal of my recommendation respecting a proposed reorganization of the staff of the House of Commons, laid upon the table of the House on the 6th instant. I hereby withdraw the same in order that the subject may be further considered.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT.

Mr. KING moved the third reading of Bill (No. 101) to provide for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers which may enhance prices or restrict competition to the detriment of consumers.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say with regard to this Bill, that having looked over it somewhat carefully, I have reached the conclusion that it will prove to be a gold brick in so far as it will give any relief from combines under the law. This Bill contemplates, first, affidavits to be examined by a judge of six parties that they are affected by some combine injuriously. Then, provided the judge is satisfied that there is prima facie evidence, he grants permission to have a board of inquiry named. That board holds an inquiry, and provided the board reaches the conclusion that there are evidences to satisfy them that a combine exists, then, I take it, the case is allowed to stand for the time being. They decide that a combine exists, but if the parties interested continue to carry on their work, then the penalties under this Act may be imposed, but they are not imposed, I understand, until an inquiry is made before a judge, and an indictment is framed which has to be inquired into by some court. But it does not appear to me very evident what court it is, whether it is the Exchequer or any other court. But this indictment must take place before any other inquiry or trial can be proceeded with. Then that court may impose a fine, and I imagine that if the court imposes a fine the penalties of the Act can be enforced as well as penalties under the criminal law. But after that is done, I imagine that the individual or combine has a right to appeal. Now the natural course will be that they will make their appeal to the court of appeal, and a combine is not likely to give up its rights so easily where such large interests are involved. The case will continue before that court of appeal until the court disposes of it. Suppose that the conviction is sustained, then the combine may go to the Supreme Court and fight it out there; and suppose that the conviction is sustained by the Supreme Court, the combine may take it to the Privy Council. Now, after this is all done, justice may be meted out. But what will be the result? The case has got to traverse at least six courts before there is any infliction of a penalty that is collectable. Now, are there six men to be found in Canada who will be innocent enough to undertake a prosecution under these circumstances?

Another feature which attracted my attention is that when you come before the first court, the prosecution has got to take place under the same law that has been on the statute-books for years, and under which it has been declared that no prosecution can be successfully carried on with the object of getting a verdict. That statement has been made in this House, and also by the late Attorney General of the province of Ontario, Sir Oliver Mowat, a prosecution under this case has got to be made under exactly the same law. Then what is the remedy? The remedy is one or two things, or both. One is that if the article dealt with is an article upon which there is a customs duty, the Governor in Council may reduce the duty to whatever extent they see fit. Or, on the other hand, a penalty may be imposed that is provided under the criminal law. Now I say one or both things may be done. But we have had the same law on the statute-books since 1899, providing that the same thing might be done, and we have had no prosecution. Why? Because it has been said by eminent lawyers who have looked into it, and by that very high authority, Sir Oliver Mowat, that no prosecution can successfully be carried on under that law; and yet this is just exactly the same law that has been declared to be unworkable, and under which a prosecution could not successfully be sustained. If you look over the whole ground you can come to but one conclusion and that is that this Act is only a gold brick to the people, making them believe that some new device has been introduced whereby they may get justice and whereby that which is a combine to the detriment of the consumer or the producer may be punished. I am sure that the law will remain on the statute-book for years to come and no prosecution practically will take place under it. I need not say anything with regard to the trouble, annoyance, delay and everything else that are going to result, or as to who will pay the expense, because it is so unworkable that it seems to me that it is little less than a straw. It reminds me very much of the story of the German who traded horses. When he was asked if he had any fault, to which he replied, no except some trifling ones of no account. After the deal was completed, the new owner said what are those trifling faults, to which he replied—one that the horse was hard to catch and the other that was no good when he was not caught. The people have got this Bill and it is no good when they have got it.

Mr. BRADBURY. Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House for a moment or two to a paragraph that I find in the Winnipeg 'Tribune' on the cement merger.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of this Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. Has my hon. friend reference to this Bill?

Mr. BRADBURY. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood that the hon. gentleman wanted to put a question.

Mr. BRADBURY. No, it is in reference to combines that I want to speak. In the early part of the session I drew the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to the effect that the cement merger was likely to have in increasing the cost of cement in the province of Manitoba and throughout the Dominion. I hold in my hand the Winnipeg 'Tribune' of the 23rd instant, a paper that hon. gentlemen on the opposite side used to swear by. It is as follows :

HIGH TARIFF AND COMBINES.

The advocates of high protective tariff would do well to consider the effect of high duty in the case of cement.

In the course of last year about 400,000 barrels of cement passed through Winnipeg, and roughly speaking, about half of this quantity was used in Winnipeg, or for Winnipeg works. In view of the inordinate amount of building in the city and such works as the new bridges and the power plant at Pointe du Bois, which will alone require at least sixty or seventy thousand barrels, it is more than fair to assume that at least the same quantity will be required by Winnipeg ratepayers this year, namely, 200,000 barrels.

How much more will this amount cost this year than last? At the present time contractors in the city are paying $2.40 a barrel for the same grade of cement as they were purchasing as low as $1.80 last year before the merger was formed, which was brought into existence by the high protective tariff—an advance of 60 cents. This means that if this rate is maintained—and there is no reason for supposing anything else—Winnipeg alone will pay $120,000 more for its cement than last year. At the present time the merger is selling cement at from 10 to 15 cents a barrel less than the price at which it can be brought in from the United States. They have protection of from 51 to 52 cents per barrel, which is prohibitive. A barrel of cement can be sold at the factory anywhere in Ontario, in round figures, at $1 a barrel. The duty is, therefore, over 50 per cent.

If the duty were reduced to 30 per cent, which is the average charge on manufactured goods, then it would be possible for the consumer of Manitoba to import their cement from the United States, if the Canadian merger did not make a fair price.

I would like to emphasize what I said in an earlier part of the session when I had the assurance of the Minister of Finance at that time that a Bill was under way which would deal with this matter. It is very important to the western country. I may say that in all our great structures today due perhaps to the increased cost of lumber, we are using cement very largely and while the 'Tribune' estimates that 400,000 barrels of cement will pass through Winnipeg this year over different lines, I think it would be safe to say that a far larger quantity of cement will have to pass through Winnipeg to supply the needs of that growing country. I would like to ask the minister in charge of this Bill if he intends to make an investigation and take such proceedings as to cause the merger to do what is fair with the people in the west. The suggestion of the 'Tribune' that the protection should be reduced on this article, I think, is a very fair and wise one. I think that when we find that mergers are causing an increase in the cost of commodities which they are producing which is unfair to the consumer, the government should reduce or take off the duty altogether if it is necessary to force the combines to give the people the product, whatever it may be, at reasonable price. There is no doubt about this cement merger being a serious drawback to the west. You could get cement at $1.80 last year; now it is $2.40 a barrel. That is brought about, I am satisfied, by the merger, and the government ought to take immediate action to protect the consumer in this matter.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Mr. Speaker, before the Bill is read a third time I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King) a question in connection with clause 5. It says :

Where six or more persons are of opinion that a combine exists, and that prices have been enhanced or competition restricted by reason of such combine, to the detriment of consumers, such persons may make an application to a judge for an order directing an investigation into such alleged combine.

In connection with that application, made by such six persons, there will be considerable expense. There will have to be legal advice and quite a lot of expense in connection with it and the question I would like to ask the Minister of Labour is whether the government intend to assume that expense. I may say that if they do not the utility of the bill is entirely destroyed. I would like an answer to that question before the bill is read a third time.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Minister of Labour). Mr. Speaker, the hon member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), in all his speaking on this Bill, has, I think, kept too largely in mind the enactments passed with which he has had to do. He seems to forget that in this measure particular stress is not laid on the prosecution side, but that it is rather to the investigation feature that the government look for the chief advantage to be derived. The hon. member for East Grey has pointed out that there may be half a dozen different stages through which persons adversely affected by a combine may have to go before they get the result which they would like to get in the way of a remedy. Let me say in the first place that there are certain classes of industrial evils in regard to which publicity is more effective than penalty and therefore it is not in the penalty side of this measure that the remedy will lie so much as in the fear and consequence of the publicity which will be given to the wrongful doings of particular combines.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is so how are you going to benefit from examinations in private ?

Mr. KING. The hon. gentleman mentions that owing to the fact that some preliminary examinations have to take place this feature in part is offset. If the government had brought in a measure which would permit of the examination of any business of this country at the request of any individual without some form of preliminary examination to ascertain whether or not there were prima facie grounds for saying that a combine did exist and was operating adversely to the public the government would have been open to censure for so doing. The extent of the preliminary examination is not considerable. It is simply to enable the judge who is accustomed to dealing with evidence and to sizing up situations to say whether or not sufficient evidence has been obtained to warrant a further examination taking place. Now, as to the opportunity which the measure affords for full investigation and as to the machinery of the measure, I doubt if it would be possible to devise a board better calculated to get at the facts with regard to industrial conditions than a board which is composed of a person appointed by those who feel that they have a grievance, a person appointed by those who are complained against and a judge who is accustomed to dealing with matters of inquiry and who will hold the balance evenly between those two.

That is the effective machinery for getting at the facts that this measure provides The hon. member would have us believe that after this investigation the only remedy would be through a criminal prosecution. But the hon. gentleman has failed to recognize the power which at present exists in the Governor in Council to remove customs duties when it appears that a combine has taken advantage of the protection which the tariff affords, to raise prices, and that whereas up to the present that power could only be exercised as the result of a judicial inquiry, carried on at the expense of private parties, under the present legislation that step can be taken as the result of the investigation by one of the boards. All expenses will now be met by the government instead of by the private parties as formerly, and it is because the expense has heretofore been on the private parties that the existing legislation has not achieved the results expected from it. Many a group of consumers have hesitated to set the existing law in motion, in the first place, because they were unwilling to charge another group of citizens with being criminals, and because, in the second place, they were unwilling to incur the large cost which such an investigation in the public interest would entail. This legislation will remove these objections. The purpose of the preliminary examination under this Bill is simply to put aside that class of actions which might be taken if it were left to any one on any ground whatever to start an inquiry against a particular concern, and to secure the limiting of examinations under this Bill to cases that really appear to be in the public interest.

Mr. SPROULE. How can you inflict the penalty?

Mr. KING. I will mention two or three different ways in which a penalty may be imposed.

Mr. SPROULE. I mean the penalty provided in the Bill.

Mr. KING. Assuming an inquiry has taken place into some alleged combine, and during the course of the examination it is made plain to the general public that a group of men have taken advantage of the protection afforded by the tariff to unduly enhance prices, the government as a result of a finding by the board to that effect may remove the customs duty and thereby lower the price of that article to the whole body of consumers, and that brings about what is primarily desired, namely, relief to the consumers. The question as to whether the parties concerned in the combine shall be punished criminally is secondary in importance to the relief which the public needs.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose it was an article on which there was no tariff?

Mr. KING. Let us assume that it is a patented article.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose there is a combine by which the farmer, the producer, does not get a fair price for his produce?

Mr. KING. Perhaps the hon. member will allow me to take in their order the different forms of redress which the measure affords. A kind of combine under which the public to-day is suffering, judging by the representations made, is in the case of a patented article which is needed in manufacturing, and the concern owning it refuses to sell the patented article except on conditions which are in restraint of trade, such as binding the purchaser to purchase all other articles from the same concern that holds the patent. Here is a case of a person receiving a monopoly from the state, and having received that monopoly in the public interest taking advantage of the monopoly which the state has given him to use it against the general interest of consumers. If the board finds that such a thing exists, power is given under the Act to see that that patent is revoked. I might mention a case that came under my notice in my own riding. We have in the town of Berlin a first-class manufacturing concern which produces cabinets for phonographs at a price of something like $125 each. The producer of the cabinet has no records, and I am informed that the dealers all over the country are refusing to sell his cabinet because they are unable to get the records of other phonograph companies if they sell any other than the cabinets which these phonograph companies make, and I am told that their cabinets are sold at double the price which the Canadian cabinet is sold for. This firm's cabinets are manufactured in Canada and the others are manufactured in the United States. A case of that kind, if proven, would afford the strongest reason why the state would be justified in taking the patent on records away from the people who hold it if they undertake to use it as against the Canadian manufacturer who is producing another article.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it proposed to regulate the record people by the Patent Act or by this legislation.

Mr. KING. This legislation will point the way to the form of redress which is necessary.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does the minister not think that the use of the Patent Act itself as in Germany and other European countries would be more effective than anything else in regulating these combines?

Mr. KING. In the present Bill some features of the Patent Act have been extended in the direction in which my hon. friend indicates. We are legislating by this measure to bring the patent law into accord with some of the features of the German Patent Act. Again, you may have cases such as you had a few years ago when it was shown that two of the tobacco companies operating in the United States were requiring the dealers in Canada to sell only the article they were putting on the market to the exclusion of all others. I think the American Tobacco company was one of these and there was another. The investigation showed that the producers and manufacturers of tobacco in this country were at a disadvantage in consequence of the monopolistic control which those two American concerns had over the business in this country. The present measure affords an opportunity of getting at the facts and letting in the light on whether a concern of that kind is acting in a monopolistic way here. If that were proven, then the government might cancel the license issued to such a firm by the Department of Inland Revenue for the sale of that commodity in Canada. Again, there might be a combine in the shipping business. If it were shown that a number of steamship companies receiving subsidies from this government were combining together to put up the ocean freight rates, and an investigation established this, it would be plain that the government would be justified in taking some action to see that the concerns which were receiving the subsidies did not take advantage of these subsidies to the detriment of the public as a whole, and that the public should receive its rightful share of benefit from the steamship companies in virtue of the subsidies they were obtaining from the government.

While there is no immediate provision in the measure for the removal of subsidies granted, if an investigation went to show that some subsidized company were operating in that manner, there would be a strong reason why parliament, when it met, having the facts before it, should take some action in the public interest.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to get an answer to the question I put to the hon. minister. Where proceedings would be taken against the parties and you could impose the penalties of the law, upon what would those proceedings take place?

Mr. KING. I have not come to that point yet. I am dealing with the hon. gentleman's assertion that this Act was a gold brick, and that it would only have any effect where the parties were proceeded against under the Criminal Code. I am endeavouring to point out that that is only one and a very remote feature of the legislation, and that the remedies to which the government attach special importance in this measure are primarily those which are going to afford relief to the people suffering in virtue of these combines, and that secondarily attention will be paid to the penalizing of persons who persist in keeping up a combine against the public interest.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Will the Bill afford relief to the public against the insurance underwriters?

Mr. KING. Perhaps I had better take up the questions in the order in which they are given.

Mr. SPROULE. What I want to know is will these punishments take place without the preliminary inquiry before the board. Will the government institute an inquiry before they will take action say with regard to patents, with regard to duties, with regard to subsidies or anything else? Will action be taken on the information brought out by the board, or will the government continue the inquiry further before they will inflict the punishment?

Mr. KING. I am glad the hon. gentleman has asked that question because I think it will clear up the misunderstanding in his mind. It is on the finding of the board that the kind of action I have been mentioning will be taken. This could take place were there no penal clause at all. The portion of the measure to which my hon. friend is alluding is that which relates to combines which has been reported against as doing something contrary to the public interest, and which persist in doing that despite the findings of the board. In a case of that sort criminal proceedings may be taken. The findings of the board being before the public, there will be the strongest reason why the law should be set in motion against parties who are persisting in doing something against the public interest, and the facts which have been brought out in evidence in an investigation of this kind may be used against them in a criminal action. That is where the investigating feature gives some strength to the Criminal Code in respect to the penalties now provided. Up to the present time the hon. gentleman says the criminal legislation has been in part useless in so far as that is true it is for the simple reason that there has been no way of ascertaining the full facts in advance; there has been no way of establishing that the parties proceeded against are really criminal; but if the board has reported that they are doing wrong, and if the combine persists in the teeth of a report of that sort in continuing a condition of affairs against the public interest, then the Criminal Code comes to have a significance much greater than it has at present, and there is the strongest reason for the prosecuting authorities to proceed against a combine of that sort under the Criminal Code.

Mr. SPROULE. If you commence a prosecution under the Criminal Code, are you not obliged to secure a conviction under the wording of the old law, under which it has been declared that you cannot secure a criminal conviction at present? That is the advice of every eminent counsel.

Mr. KING. As against the advice of the very eminent counsel I will cite cases in which convictions have been obtained under the criminal law:

Wampole & Co. v. F. E. Karn Co., Limited —Contract—Sale of goods—agreement as to prices on re-sale—illegal combination or conspiracy unduly to enhance prices for medicinal preparations and lessen competition—refusal to enforce contract—Criminal Code, secs. 516, 520.

Plaintiff brought action before Clute, J., for damages and injunction to restrain the breach of two contracts entered into between themselves and defendants, fixing price at which goods to be sold to retailers. Judgment held that agreements were breach of combines section of the Criminal Code.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was not a criminal prosecution.

Mr. KING. It was brought under sections 516 and 520 of the Criminal Code.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman misunderstands. It was a case between two parties. The contract was held to be illegal because it was in breach of the criminal law of the country, but it was not a criminal prosecution.

Mr. KING. The law to which the hon. member for East Grey was alluding was embodied in the sections of the Criminal Code which were introduced into this House by Mr. Clarke Wallace. It was under those sections that the case was brought. The point of the hon. member for East Grey was that the legislation was of no service.

Mr. SPROULE. It might be different if it were a question of sending the parties to jail.

Mr. KING. Let me cite another case:

The King v. Central Supply Association, Limited—Trade combine conspiracy—indictment of two corporations as joint conspirators—no personal defendant—motive—evidence to explain corporate acts—corporation taking over illegal business of prior unincorporated association—illegal combine the object of incorporation—Criminal Code, 1892, sec. 520, Revised Criminal Code, 1906, sec. 498.

This was an appeal before Moss, C.J.O., and Osler, Garrow, Maclaren and Meredith, JJ.A., by the defendant from the judgment of Clute, J., delivered at the close of the case, finding it and the Master Plumbers and Steamfitters Co-operative Association, Limited, guilty upon an indictment for conspiracy of unlawful trade combination, under sec. 520 of the Criminal Code, 55-56 Vict., ch. 29 (D.), and imposing a penalty of $5,000 upon each of the defendants. Fine paid by Plumbers Association; the Central Supply Association appealed. Appeal dismissed and conviction confirmed on March 14, 1907, in Court of Appeal for Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the only case I ever heard anything about.

Mr. KING. I am glad the honourable member admits this one, the hon. gentleman stated that there were none. But there were other cases. There was the case of the King vs. Elliott.

Mr. SPROULE. That was dropped. That was the Brantford case.

Mr. KING. That case was not dropped. There was a conviction. Then there was a case in the west against a lumber combine.

The King v. Clarke.—The defendant was charged with several offences under section 498 of the Criminal Code. The indictment (or charge) contained 12 counts relating to alleged agreements between the accused, Clarke, and certain lumber dealers to unduly limit facilities for supplying or dealing in lumber. The trial, which occupied 10 days, took place before Chief Justice Sifton without a jury, at Edmonton, in the sittings of the court in November, 1907, the accused being found guilty and sentenced to pay a fine of $500.

The accused appealed under Criminal Code section 1012, and the appeal was heard before Scott, Harvey, Stuart and Beck, JJ., at Calgary, on July 8 to 15, 1908. The appeal was dismissed and conviction affirmed.

That is another case and I think I might possibly mention one or two others, but I do not wish to take up too much of the time of the House. However, I think from the citation of the cases I have mentioned, the hon. member will see that even where the public do not have the facts before them, even where the parties who went into this prosecution had to risk the expense of the prosecution and had to make out their case, they were successful under the criminal code in bringing to time certain combines which was operating detrimentally to the public. Now, if he will consider how much easier it will be for a prosecution to take place after an investigation has brought out all the facts, the hon. member will see wherein the penalty clause, if it is punishment he is looking for, where punishment is more likely to be secured in virtue of the penalties under this Act and under the machinery which this Act provides. One of the difficulties has been to get the Attorneys Generals of the provinces to take action against combines and the reason of that has been that the public has not been aware of the facts. But does the hon. member suppose for a moment that if a board of inquiry had been inquiring into the facts of a particular combine and had brought in a report which in the strongest terms condemned that combine, the Attorney General in any province would refrain from proceeding under the criminal code, if it appeared that the combine continued in spite of the finding of the board to carry on its operations to the detriment to the public? In that regard and in that way this legislation makes of some real service the past legislation which has been enacted by this parliament on the subject of combines. I have only mentioned certain of the remedies which may be introduced, but I think the hon. member cannot attach too much importance in cases of this kind to the effect which publicity will have. In that connection I am inclined to think that much good will come of this legislation. Parties will know when they are entering into a combine in restraint of trade that their operations may be investigated and they will be careful, and in that way the public having the means of getting at the facts of the case will be insured against harmful action on the part of these particular combinations. We have the experience of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act as a case in point. There we have had something like 80 applications, and I think in 74 cases of the 80, as the result of inquiry, as the result of bringing to light different facts in regard to industrial disputes, the parties have thought it unwise to carry on the fight. They have thought it much better to make a settlement and an adjustment of their difficulties, public opinion having made its influence felt, than to defy public opinion by going against the decision of a board. The same thing will happen under these investigations. The combines will be investigated, if investigation reveals an undesirable situation, the members of the combines will very soon see in what position they are going to be placed before the public unless they change their tactics, and the chances are that in many cases during the course of the investigation itself, a combine will see its way clear to mend its ways, and the board will be able to tell the public that while such and such a thing was going on before the investigation, during the investigation the parties had mended their ways. That was exactly the case when the select committee appointed by this House in 1888, of which the late Mr. Clarke Wallace was chairman, was conducting an inquiry. A number of the combines were brought before the committee and during the course of the inquiry itself some of them changed their tactics. Now if that was the case under that machinery, there is every reason why it should be the case under the machinery provided by this Act.

I went pretty fully into these features on the second reading, but I may emphasize this further point seeing that the hon. member from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) raised the question as to who should pay the expenses in the event of long prosecutions. Under this measure the government will assume the expenses of the investigation and therefore the position of parties seeking redress is very materially changed. The member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) asked a question in regard to the cement merger, and said the Minister of Finance had promised to see during the session that a Bill was brought in to meet the case of the cement merger. It is not my wish to say whether or not the cement merger has enhanced prices unduly. I do not think any one would be justified in making a statement of that kind without having the facts before him. What is the position to-day under the legislation we have? If any one wishes to proceed against the cement merger or a group of consumers wish to proceed against the cement merger, they have to bring a criminal action or they have to make representations to the government sufficiently strong to induce he government to start a judicial inquiry, and they have to be prepared to pay the cost of that inquiry themselves. There are many consumers in this country who will hesitate to ask for an investigation on those conditions. They would hesitate to put the men who are associated with the cement merger in the position of defendants in a criminal action and they would hesitate to render themselves liable to the costs which might be involved in a long judicial inquiry. Under this measure which has been brought down to the House any six persons may go before a judge of a high court, any six of my hon. friend's constituents who feel that they are being unfairly dealt with by this cement merger, may lay before the judge the evidence which they have, the kind of evidence which he has read to the House this morning, and submit to the judge that there is a prima facie case. All they are obliged to do is to swear to the effect that they believe these statements to be true, that as consumers the cement merger has operated to their detriment, and that they believe it is in the public interest that an investigation should be made into this merger. If they persuade the judge that a case exists for investigation, the judge issues an order for an investigation. Thereupon the six consumers who have made the complaint are asked to name a member of the board to inquire into the business of the cement merger, and the cement merger in turn are asked to name their member of the board, the two to agree upon the chairman. These three gentlemen appointed in this way have all the powers of a court. They have power to send for the books of the company, they have power to compel the production of documents, and to examine under oath and to take evidence and having gone fully into the whole question they prepare a report which they give to the public on the results of their investigation.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is charged with the responsibility of hunting up evidence and presenting it to that board, these six men?

Mr. KING. After the judge states that in his opinion a prima facie case has been made out, that it is in the public interest that an investigation should take place, then the six men are relieved of further responsibility. The onus is not upon them, it has become a case of investigating in the public interest by the public itself. The measure provides that the government may appoint counsel to gather evidence and present it to the board and the fees of that counsel are to be met by the government The different members of the board are free to ask any question and to send for any document. They are an investigating board assisted by counsel, their expenses and his are paid by the government. In that way a thorough examination will be carried out.

Mr. BRADBURY. Does the government bear all the expenses in connection with these investigations on both sides?

Mr. KING. The government, of course, has to put some limit to the expense. If the parties wish to bring in an array of attorneys and are not satisfied with the counsel which the government has appointed, if they desire to have half a dozen counsel of their own, that is their lookout, and they may have to meet that part of the expense. But the expense which is necessary in the public interest will be borne by the government. The government is prepared to meet all that in its opinion is necessary to get at the facts of the case thoroughly and accurately. Now to conclude the reference to this merger, many of the gentlemen who are associated with the cement merger claim that they are being put in a false light before the public, and that, as a matter of fact the cement business has been carried on in Canada in the past in such a way that the business has been almost ruined, and that all the merger has done has been to place the different concerns that are in it in a position where through their co-operation they are enabled to get a reasonable and fair profit. If such is the case, it will be brought out on examination, and a finding of that sort made by the board would satisfy the public mind that it had been mistaken as to the cement merger, and that, as a matter of fact, the merger, instead of holding up the public, was doing what it was in the interests of a large industry in this country to do.

Mr. BRADBURY. Would the board have power to take into consideration the over-capitalization of a merger such as this, because no doubt two-thirds of it is water.

Mr. KING. Certainly, that is just what the investigation is for. You have a board appointed with all the powers of a court, and the members of that board can put any question they wish to the company that is being investigated, and undoubtedly the question of over-capitalization would be one of the first to be investigated. If the board after carefully going into the evidence found that the cement merger was only making a reasonable profit——

Mr. HUGHES. Profit on what?

Mr. KING. On capital invested. A reasonable profit, I assume, is the profit on the money put into the business. If the board found that, as respects the cement merger there was only a reasonable profit on capital invested, and if the evidence substantiated it, then the cement merger would be in a stronger position before the public than they could ever hope to be otherwise, in view of the suspicion and distrust that for some reason or other has arisen. On the other hand, if the board should report that the investigation showed that the cement merger had taken advantage of the situation, the government has power under this legislation, without going any further, to lower the duties on cement. If the board reported that in their opinion the cement company ought to reduce the price, and the cement company persisted in not doing so, then a criminal proceeding might be taken and the parties instituting the proceedings would have before them the benefit of the evidence brought out at the investigation. I think it will be admitted there is no concern in this country that can afford to defy public opinion. If you get public opinion intelligently shaped and have it properly focused on an industrial evil, then it is not likely that those responsible will continue that evil in the teeth of public opinion. It is in this belief that it is hoped this measure may accomplish its object.

Mr. BRADBURY. Do I understand that the aggrieved persons will have to lodge information themselves before anything is done, and that the minister will not take the initiative? The minister stated that those connected with the cement business urged that they were only receiving a fair price for cement now. Well, last year we bought cement at $1.80 per barrel, and the large cement company situated within sight of these buildings was able to pay 10 per cent on the basis of that price. Surely when the cement costs 60 cents a barrel more this year there is reason for legitimate complaint on the part of consumers.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The minister has talked so much that I do not know whether he has answered my question or not. What I want to know simply is: who is going to pay these six men at the outset.

Mr. KING. If the six men prove to the judge that they have made out their case, the judge may award such disbursements as he thinks necessary, and the government has power to pay these disbursements, it appearing that these men have acted in the public interest. On the other hand, if six persons come along with a complaint which is frivolous or which is made for some mischievous reason, and are unable to make out a case before the judge, then they must look to paying the costs themselves. I think that is reasonable.

Mr. FIELDING. Touching the cement duties, I ought to say that at an early stage of the session, when some reference had been made to the question in parliament, I received a large deputation, accompanied by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, comprising the manufacturers of cement who were not in the merger, and they represented to us—I am not endorsing or denying their statement, but merely placing the House in possession of their contention—they represented to us that there was no increased price of cement that could be a just cause of complaint, and they said that if we should reduce the duty as was proposed the effect would be not to punish the merger, for, perhaps, the merger could stand it, but that all the smaller cement men in the country would have to go out of business. I think it is only fair to mention that this view was presented by the deputation to which I refer. They told us there was no combine so far as they were concerned, that a large percentage of the cement business was not in the merger, that there was actual bona fide competition between the merger and the outside companies, and that they felt sure the public would get the cement at a reasonable and fair price. I am not endorsing these contentions, but in view of what the hon. member for Selkirk has said, I think it only fair that I should present to the House the contentions of that deputation.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then, judging by what the Minister of Finance has said, I would assume that the Bill of the Minister of Labour would be entirely meffectual, because he will not dare to put it in force against the merger, fearing he may injure those who are not in the merger. That is an interpretation of what the Minister of Finance said.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not interpreting it as applied to this Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, I am.

Mr. KING The representations made to the Minister of Finance may or may not be correct, but the investigation will show whether they are correct or not, and if it be found they are not correct then this measure would be very effectual.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would only be the operations of the combine that would be investigated?

Mr. KING. Any feature bearing on the combine and its operations. If the combine were being investigated, the argument placed before the Minister of Finance by the deputation would undoubtedly be urged and that is a question that would be inquired into.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Montcalm). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few remarks on this question, the county which I have the honour to represent being highly interested in all that pertains to the subject under discussion. I find that about ten years ago a powerful company called the American Tobacco Company began its operations in the province of Quebec. Later on they assigned all their rights to another very powerful company, the Imperial Tobacco Company. They bought all the tobacco factories established in the counties of Joliette, Montcalm and L'Assomption, to the great prejudice of the farmers interested in the growing of tobacco. These companies stipulated that the vendors would be precluded, during the space of twenty years, from engaging in the manufacture of tobacco and from having any interest whatsoever in that industry, thus inserting a clause which was utterly prohibitory.

The law which permits the prohibitory clause, as between sellers and buyers, requires three conditions; 1st, that the object should be fully determined; 2nd, that the place should be accurately specified, and 3rd, that the duration of the contract should be determined. In the case of the companies who bought the factories of the counties in question, they stipulated, in order to evade the law, that the vendor would have the right to engage in that industry in Alaska or on the banks of the Yukon river. Such a clause clearly indicates that the object in view was simply to evade the law. Indeed, had not this exception been made, the contract would have been radically null and void. But in order to escape the law, it was specified that the vendor would have the right to engage in the manufacture of tobacco in what is known as the Yukon district.

The people who thus sold their manufactures obtained rather high prices from that company who own millions. These sales have caused great damages to the farmers by drawing away from these counties quite a number of factories. Moreover, the Imperial Tobacco Company, being the only buyers of the tobacco crop, controlled the prices and gave the farmers just what they pleased to give them. As a matter of fact, the company regulates the prices and the conditions which they see fit to impose on the producers.

I desire to know from the hon. Minister of Labour whether this Bill can reach such contracts as these. I see by sections 22 and 23 of the present Bill that whoever shall buy out, or prevent competition, or even shall unduly restrict the manufacture or production of any commercial commodity, shall be liable to rather a heavy fine or even to imprisonment.

This is all very well, but there is one point on which I desire to be informed by the minister. I desire to know whether this law shall be retroactive in its effects, or in other words, whether it shall apply to those who have in the past bought these factories with the restrictions which I have pointed out. Because my constituency is very much interested in being able to obtain the power to reopen the factories which have been closed after having been bought by the powerful corporation, 'The Imperial Tobacco Company.'

In my opinion this law is very important from the standpoint of those who are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and especially in the growing of tobacco like the people of the county of Montcalm.

If it is possible to annul or at least to modify the existing contracts; if it is possible to bring before the Board of Control mentioned in this Bill such cases as these, so that the people who sold out their establishment could reopen their old manufactures, the hon. minister shall deserve the heartfelt gratitude of that part of the country where people are engaged in the tobacco industry, and in particular of that part of the country which I have the honour to represent in this House.

It is my desire that the minister should tell me whether this law will effect that kind of existing contracts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Bill takes its third reading. I desire to say a few words. The Minister of Labour, on the second reading of the Bill, and on various occasions since, has pointed out that in his opinion and in the opinion of the government, a great evil exists at the present time in this country that requires a remedy. The conditions which are alleged to have arisen by reason of combines in this country have been discussed in the public press during several years past, and the government proposes this measure as an effective remedy. They naturally take responsibility for it, and I am not disposed in any way to place any obstacle in the way of the passage of the Bill. One or two observations, however, with regard to its probable effect may be in order at the present moment. It is my opinion, based perhaps on some considerable study of this question, that the present law upon the statute-book of Canada would be effective if properly administered. It is perfectly idle to put this law or any other law upon the statute-book in respect to a public evil of this kind unless proper provision is made for the administration of that law. At the present time there are adequate provisions upon our statute-book, but no person has been named by the government under the provisions of the law to take the initiative in respect to it. No provision is made in the present law except such as may arise from the unorganized energies of the public at large; and it seems to me that the difficulty which will probably arise under this statute is, in the first place, that what is everybody's business may prove to be nobody's business, and that skilful and powerful combines may entirely escape the remedy which, according to the Minister of Labour, is to be enforced against them for the purpose of curing the evil referred to. Not only that, but there seems to be a danger that the provisions of this measure may be used oppressively and maliciously; and I do not know what would follow under this measure if certain persons, having made a complaint against a particular combine, should find it convenient for some reason afterwards to withdraw their application. I suppose in the absence of statutory provision against such a course they are at liberty to do so, and if so then the whole thing falls to the ground until six other gentlemen see fit, in their discretion and in their wisdom, to take the matter up again. I believe that the measure is capable of becoming useless on the one hand, and of being abused on the other hand, under conditions such as those to which I have adverted. It is my own belief that in respect of measures of this kind designed to apply a remedy to a great public evil, officers should be appointed whose duty it is, representing the public, to enquire into these conditions and to bring such matters before the proper tribunal. If that course were adopted, I do not see that there is any great need of amendment in the present law, although as I have said, I shall be glad to find out in future that my expectations in that regard are not well founded, and that this measure will produce better conditions than those which have prevailed in the past.

One matter which has been referred to by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) deserves consideration, I think, by the government, and especially by the Minister of Labour. I do not at all concur in the answer which the Minister of Labour gave to my hon. friend from Halton. The measure does not in my opinion support the contention of the Minister of Labour in that regard. Suppose an inquiry is begun into a particular combine, suppose it is true that the combine is making excessive profits, and suppose that the firms outside of that combine charging only the same prices as those which have been charged by the combine, are not making an excessive profit at all; the Minister of Labour thinks an inquiry into the whole situation could be made into all these conditions upon an application against the combine. Well, you may inquire into it, perhaps in an academic way, but you cannot inquire effectively into that situation except in so far as it relates to the operations of the combine, if I appreciate correctly the provisions of the Bill. However, as I have said, the measure is before the House, and the government believes that it constitutes a remedy, and I only hope that it will effect a remedy.

My hon. friend has spoken of the provisions of the Bill as making it unnecessary to put any group of men in the position of answering to a criminal indictment. Well, it does that in one way, yet in another way its provisions are rather curious, because it leaves the criminal liability of any particular group of men to be determined by arbitration. It seems to me there is some grave criticism to be made upon the invocation of the criminal law along lines of that kind. Grand juries in this country have for years past fulfilled many of the functions which the Minister of Labour decleares should be fulfilled by this measure. It is all right to say that publicity is the general principle of the measure. I appreciate fully what the Minister of Labour has said in that regard. His idea is that he will apply to all these conditions the touch stone of publicity, and he thinks that thereby an effective remedy will be found. It may be so, I trust it will be so, but I for one have some doubt as to whether it will prove quite as effective as the minister expects.

Coming now to the particular language of the statute, I would like to say that it does not seem to me to afford a very excellent example of good draughtmanship. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour to this feature of his Bill, and to this curious illustration of what in my opinion is bad draughtsmanship. There is a definition of the word 'combine,' in section 2. It is very proper according to modern custom to have a definition. The definition obviates the necessity of repeating a great number of words in different paragraphs of the Bill to convey a particular meaning, and in the preparation of modern statutes, and legal instruments that method is used for the purpose of securing brevity. The minister has a very elaborate definition of a combine. The first criticism I have to make is that we find an elaborate definition, and then we find that definition repeated in a partial form, in clause after clause of the Bill, further on. So in the first place, you have an elaborate definition, and then you find that definition neither used or followed in subsequent provisions of the Bill. Another criticism is that the interpretation of the word 'combine,' is not consistent with some other provisions. For example, you find the definition of the word 'combine,' divided into four branches. The first branch is:

Any contract, agreement, arrangement or combination which has, or is designed to have, the effect of increasing or fixing the price or rental of any article of trade or commerce or the cost of the storage or transportation thereof.

Branch 2:

Restricting competition in or of controlling the production, manufacture, transportation, storage, sale or supply thereof.

Branch 3:

The acquisition, leasing or otherwise taking over, or obtaining by any person to the end aforesaid, of any control over or interest in the business or any portion of the business of any other person.

Branch 4:

What is known as a trust, monopoly or merger.

The minister has inserted at the end of the first branch of the definition the words 'to the detriment of consumers or producers.'

That qualification or limitation has not been affixed to any other branch of the definition; nevertheless, the Bill in section 5 and in other sections proceeds as if the definition or limitation had been applied to every branch of the interpretation of the word 'combine' in section 2. It seems to me exceedingly probable that this will result in a great deal of confusion, because these various sections of the Act are inconsistent with the definition of the word 'combine' as the minister left it in committee. I am also of the opinion that a great deal of difficulty will be found in the interpretation of section 23, which has been alluded to. There was a great deal of discussion as to the effect of that in committee. At the present time I am bound to say that I have considerable doubt as to how it will be interpreted, and that, with the other provisions in the Bill, and sections 5 and 23 in particular, will be found to be very much to the advantage of that profession of which I have the honour to be a member, because there will be a great deal of wordy discussion in the courts, and perhaps in the Courts of Appeal, as to what this measure really does mean. However, perhaps in the Senate, or at another session of parliament, some of these anomalies will be corrected. While I do not entertain the very highest expectation as to the success of this measure, I agree that it should be passed without objection because it is the result of the efforts of the government to apply a remedy to that which is generally regarded as an evil. If the publicity which the minister seeks to apply will have the result hoped for, I shall be very glad.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I am quite prepared to give this new measure a trial, and especially to give it consideration in view of the introduction of the principle of publicity in these matters. But I also wish to say that the Bill commends itself to me because this government has accepted a principle that I fought for for many years in this House, namely, that the government, when it introduces a Bill to remedy a grievance, ought to provide machinery under the Bill for the enforcement of the law. Hitherto that has been neglected. I was laughed out of the House almost at that time by the Minister of Justice, who said that he was the Attorney General for the Dominion, as he called himself, that he was responsible for the enforcement of Dominion Acts, and that the Attorney Generals of the provinces were also responsible for the enforcement of them. But now I see there is provision in this Act for its enforcement, that the Minister of Justice can institute actions, can retain counsel, that the Governor in Council will also act, and that the patent law can be enforced in this respect. This is great progress compared with what we had in the past. It is a change and it is just an other of the things which I have pressed upon this House and which received little consideration at the start, but which are now recognized and are being adopted as general principles.

Mr. HENDERSON. They are all the time doing it.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. My hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) says they are all the time doing it. But this is not an omnibus Act to cure the grievances in connection with other general Acts. For instance, if there is something wrong in connection with patents and patent laws, the effective remedy is in the Patent Act, and I believe the Patent Act ought to be greatly enlarged and extended on the lines of the German and British Patent Acts in order to afford protection to the people. We ought to have a system in this country that would automatically bring about the cancellation of a patent if the patent was being used to the detriment of the public or for the unfair enhancement of prices. If mergers are possible, as they now are, and if they are grievances, automatically, the law that controls the capitalization of the merger ought to in some way intervene and compel a reduction in the capitalization. We have no control of capitalization to-day, and a great many of the economic evils of the country are due to unfair capitalization. Also, in the matter of the tariff, if there is a grievance, in consequence of unfair treatment and the enhancement of prices, the tariff itself ought to automatically operate so as to bring the grievance to a finish. I think this principle should be more and more adopted of the federal government making appropriations, employing counsel, paying witnesses and doing all those things in order to enforce its own laws. It does not do to leave the administration of the large federal Acts to the provinces, or to leave to them the expense of enforcing these laws. It is true that the provinces do enforce the Criminal Code, but there are grave breaches of the Criminal Code in this country that you cannot have enforced by provincial action, and more and more the principle recognized in this Bill should be extended to all the great federal Acts. We have another instance of the extension of this principle in the Railway Act, but, certainly under the Railway Act, you ought to have a general prosecuting attorney in the public interest representing the Crown and the public, and whose duty it would be to see that the Act was enforced. The merit of this and all those remedial Bills that are being passed in this country to deal with public grievances and correct abuses, depends upon the federal government spending its money freely and employing Crown officers to enforce the law. That will be the future of it and of all those Acts of a remedial character that we have passed in the last few years. Certainly it is a matter of satisfaction to me to know that while the proposition that I made in this House some years ago that this government should be responsible for the enforcement of its own Acts was ridiculed, it has at last been recognized, and there is a fair hope that the principle being accepted with respect to this particular Act will be embodied in a great many others.

Mr. GEO. PARENT (Montmorency). Mr. Speaker, since this Bill has been under discussion, I think we have found that the general sense of the House is that legislation of this kind is highly desirable. Among all the clauses of this Bill there is one in particular to which I wish to draw the attention of the House, and it is one upon which I beg to congratulate, especially my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. King). I refer to clause 22 dealing with the Patent Act. In the city of Quebec we have had, for the last six or seven years, a company which has been trying to do business in the shoe machinery trade. But they found that the United Shoe Machinery Company, a big American corporation, was entirely in control of the shoe machinery trade in this country. The Canadian Shoe Machinery Company, the company to which I refer, has for years tried to put its machinery on the market, but unsuccessfully, because the United Shoe Machinery Company had secured entire control of that market. The United Shoe Machinery Company was the owner of certain patents, and it took advantage of these patents so as to make it impossible for any other company to compete against it. It was a genuine monopoly. I would like to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to some of the clauses that the United Shoe Machinery Company includes in its contracts with the various manufacturers, and then you will see how far they go in their dealings.

Clauses in the United Shoe Machinery Company's Lease and License. Form 1210—$\frac{8}{8}$.

2. The lessee shall at all times and at his own expense keep the said machinery in good and efficient working order, and shall obtain from the lessor exclusively and shall pay therefor at the regular prices from time to time established by the lessor, all the duplicate parts, extras, etc., to be used on said machines.

3. The lessee shall at his own expense insure the leased machinery against loss by fire to the amount of $....., and in case the same is lost or destroyed before the termination of this lease then the lessee shall pay to the lessor on demand an equal sum as partial compensation for such loss or destruction. The lessee shall pay all taxes and assessments which shall be levied in respect to the leased machinery or in respect to this lease and license or the right to payments hereunder upon whomsoever assessed.

4. The said machinery shall not be used in the manufacture of any boots and shoes which are lasted on machines other than those leased from the lessor or any welted boots or shoes which are not welted or stitched on welt sewing and sole stitching machine leased from the lessor, or in the manufacture of any boots partly made by the aid of any machinery not leased from the lessor.

4. Form No. unknown—The lessee agrees, as rent or royalty for the said machinery to purchase from the lessor at the prices established by the lessor all the fastening materials used by him or in connection with the said machinery.

8. This lease and license shall continue, unless sooner terminated by the lessor, because of breach thereof on the part of the lessee or otherwise as herein provided, for twenty years from the date thereof.

10. The lessee admits the validity of each and every of the letters patent of the Dominion of Canada owned by the lessor or under which it is licensed, and agrees that it will not directly or indirectly infringe or contest the validity of, or the title of the lessor to any of said patents. The termination or cesser of this lease and license from any cause whatever shall not in any way affect the provisions of this clause or release or discharge the lessee from the admission and estoppel herein set forth.

I read this to point out how far these gentlemen can go. And, Sir, every one of these contracts is binding on the shoe manufacturers of this country for twenty years to come, and when that term is about to expire, then they come with some other improvements to their machinery, and they bind the manufacturers for another twenty years. This is one of the worst monopolies that is in Canada to-day, and I am glad that by section 22 of this Bill we will be able to get at the bottom of their organization and find means of getting relief. We have heard from hon. gentlemen in this House about the cement merger, and we have heard from other hon. gentlemen about the rubber merger. It would almost seem that every member of the House has a special merger that he knows something about. We have had in the city of Quebec lately what is known as the Quebec merger. The Canadian Electric Company, the Canadian Gas Company, the Frontenac Gas Company, and the Quebec Railway, Light and Power Company have all combined, and from the very minute they did combine the people of Quebec found the price of gas went up from $1 per 1,000 cubic feet to $1.50 per 1,000 cubic feet. It is a curious coincidence that the moment these companies combine the citizens should find that the price of gas goes up. The Minister of Labour also mentioned that this Bill will give us a chance to regulate to some extent the freight rates of shipping companies. The port of Quebec has a grievance in regard to the freight rates that are charged to that port, and I have here a letter from one of our leading merchants in Quebec in which he says that the North Atlantic West Bound Freight Conference lines is practically a combine, which includes the Allan Line, the Dominion Line, the Canadian Pacific Railway Line, the Manchester Liners, and Donaldson Brothers. This West Bound Freight Conference line has put in rates to Quebec which are apparently not the same that they levy to other ports in Canada. The letter says:

I have already spoken to you on the rates made on goods imported to Quebec from Liverpool, Glasgow, London, and mostly all European points, which are two and sixpence to five shillings per ton of 2,240 pounds higher to this port than to the port of Montreal.

And when we consider that the port of Quebec is 180 miles nearer to European ports than is the port of Montreal, one can hardly find a reason why they make such discriminatory rates to the detriment of the city of Quebec. If, as I hope, we can make these companies afford better treatment to the city of Quebec, the Bill will have done a lot of good, and the Quebec people will be grateful to the government for it. I understand there is no particular provision in the Bill which affords a remedy for this, but as the Minister of Labour says, as these companies are subsidized by the government, perhaps we can bring them to common sense by reducing the subsidies or by attaching certain conditions to the granting of the subsidies, which will meet the views of the people of the city of Quebec.

Mr. SPROULE. I raised the point in the committee stage that as this Bill repealed one section of the customs law entirely and then re-enacted in another Bill, that our procedure was irregular as the House did not go into Committee of Ways and Means. I understood the Prime Minister was to consider the point and to make a statement in reference to it.

Mr. KING. The Prime Minister did have the matter looked into, and it was thought that the procedure was quite proper, because in this measure there is no intent to impose any taxes in connection with customs. It is simply transferring a clause of one Bill to another Bill. If there had been any endeavour to introduce legislation imposing additional taxes, then it would be necessary for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. I was not present when the point was raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), but I understand that the Chairman of the committee ruled against his contention. It would strike me that as what we are doing here does not impose any burden on the people, it is not necessary to go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. By way of explanation, I should say that the point was not raised in the committee as a point of order. The hon. member (Mr. Sproule) spoke across the House questioning the procedure, and did not specifically raise it as a point of order. Accordingly there was no ruling from the Chairman. But had I felt that as a point of order it would have been well taken, it would have been my duty to have ruled. It was only because I did not think it would have been well taken as a point of order that I made no ruling.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be so, I raise the point of order now and ask for a ruling on it, because I understood distinctly that the Prime Minister said that he would have it looked into, and that an answer would be given before the Bill was read the third time.

Mr. FIELDING. So far as the Prime Minister is concerned, I can inform my hon. friend that he does not agree with him, because I had a conversation with him on the subject.

Mr. SPEAKER. Bourinot says:

Changes in the tariff are proposed in the form of resolutions, each of which must be formally adopted by the Committee of Ways and Means and reported to the House.

I understand that this clause makes no change in the tariff. It only refers to one of the penalty clauses in the tariff which can be dispensed with in this Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time.

Mr. KING moved that the title be as follows: An Act to provide for the Investigation of Combines, Monopolies, Trusts and Mergers which may enhance prices, or restrict competition.

Mr. HUGHES. That does not properly describe the Act, according to the minister's own amendment. A combine might also depreciate prices.

Mr. KING. That is covered, I think, by the words, 'restrict competition'.

Mr. HUGHES. No, it is not, as was pointed out yesterday.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to shortening the title further. I move that it be as follows: An Act to provide for the investigation of Combines, Monopolies, Trusts and Mergers.

Motion agreed to, and Bill passed.

SUBSIDIES TO DRY-DOCKS.

Mr. FIELDING. I wish to move that item 21 on the order paper, being a resolution respecting subsidies to dry-docks be dropped, the object being to bring it forward in another form to-morrow. Some changes have been made, and I thought it desirable to bring it up in the form of a new resolution rather than to amend this resolution.

Motion agreed to, and order discharged.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

WATER CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 25) respecting the Water Carriage of Goods.—Mr. Brodeur.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the minister would give us an explanation of the Bill, particularly informing us whether it differs, and if so in what respect, from the Bill which was before the House two sessions ago.

Mr. BUREAU. If I am rightly informed, this Bill was before the Senate two years ago. There were some objections to it, and it was considered to be of such importance that there was an investigation held and evidence taken before a special committee for the purpose of ascertaining what remedy needed to be applied. Last year the Bill was again before the Senate and was passed by that House, and sent over to the House of Commons; but it was in the dying hours of the session, and did not go through. This year the Bill came again before the Senate. As it is now before the House, it contains certain amendments which were made by the special Committee on Marine and Fisheries, after an investigation in which evidence was taken. The object of the Bill is to restrict the contracting power of a ship-owner, whenever in his bill of lading or other document he inserts any clause to relieve himself from responsibility for loss or damage, whether as a result of his own negligence or want of care or not. I understand that complaints were made by shippers that in bills of lading there were provisions of this kind so that when goods were damaged or lost, the loss was sustained by them instead of by the ship-owner, and the object is to prevent him relieving himself of responsibility in this way.

On section 4, certain clauses prohibited in bill of lading.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not catch what the Solicitor General said as to the similarity of this Bill to the one passed by the Senate.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It is practically the same Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the minister would let us know when there is any change in any section of the Bill.

Mr. BUREAU. I understand that clause 10 has been added as a new section. It was not in the old Bill as presented to the Senate, and it has been added as the result of the investigation held before the Marine and Fisheries Committee. Complaints were made that certain numbers of pieces of wood were shipped and that when they got across the ocean, measurements were taken, and if the measurements and standards did not tally with the measurements and tallies of the shippers, the loss was on the ship-owners. That has been changed so that when the ship-owner delivers the exact number of pieces he has received, he will be relieved from liability whether the measurements or standards agree or not. That is the only change I understand that has been made in the Act.

On section 6,

Mr. SINCLAIR. These words 'or from latent defect' were added by the committee on Marine and Fisheries at the instance of William Thompson and Company, of St. John, who said it would be a hardship sometimes if there was some latent defect in a ship such as a defective boiler which could not possibly be found out, and the ship went to sea with a very valuable cargo and was lost by reason of that latent defect, that the ship-owners should be held liable. That has always been the law, and these words do not change it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it not going a long way to say that a ship-owner should not be held responsible for a latent defect. No one could inspect the ship but himself.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It only applies to cases where it is impossible to discover a latent defect. There are many cases in which it is not possible for a ship-owner to know.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is hardly the amendment. If there is a latent defect, I do not like the idea of the responsibility being put upon anybody but the person who has control of the inspection and who has the power to order all such defects to be corrected. I do not like it to be put upon any one but the owner of the ship who should be able to discover the defect.

Mr. SINCLAIR. If the hon. minister will look at the section he will see that it reads 'If the owner of any ship transporting merchandise or property from any port in Canada exercises due diligence to make the ship in all respects sea-worthy and properly manned,' The ship owner is bound by this to exercise due diligence, and he is also bound under the shipping Act to have his ship inspected every year, and to have a certificate carried by the captain that his ship has undergone proper inspection. If he has exercised due diligence, and there is a latent defect he has the right to be relieved from liability.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not disagree with what the hon. member says, but I am afraid the Act itself would not have quite the effect that his argument implies. 'If the owner of any ship exercises due diligence to make the ship in all respects sea-worthy and properly manned'—

Mr. BUREAU. And equipped.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is all right as the section is printed, so far as it goes, but if there was a latent defect in a ship then the owner could say, I used due diligence to make the ship seaworthy and properly manned and equipped, and I am not liable for the latent defects. He could discover these latent defects by proper inspection.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. CLARKE. Section 6, it seems to me goes very far. It seems to exempt altogether the owners of the boat from liability for damage caused by negligence or want of proper skill on the part of the servants or agents of the ship-owner. That certainly is contrary to most rules of legal liability. The master is entrusted with the employment of the servants, he has entirely to do with the employment of servants, and when we say that the servant of the master may do as he pleases, and if his action results in damage to the owner of the cargo the master is not responsible, we are going very far. It is not so in the case of railway accidents. If the engineer or brakeman is guilty of negligence the company is liable, and it seems to me dangerous to say that the owner of a vessel shall escape scott free if his employees are guilty of negligence in the management or navigation of the ship. They may run into another boat or a dock or a rock, but no matter how negligent those in charge may be no person is responsible for the loss of the cargo in the ship. I am not very familiar with these marine matters, but it seems to me a dangerous thing to place the owner of the cargo entirely at the mercy of any employee of the ship if the owner of the ship is not to be responsible.

Mr. SINCLAIR. As I understand the common law has always been that the owner employs the best master he can get, a man in whom he has confidence, and if this man, by improper navigation or by not doing what he should do, destroys the ship, the owner is not liable for the damage to the cargo. It would be unreasonable to make him liable. The running of a ship is very hazardous, it is not at all on the same basis as the operation of a railway. A railway company gets certain franchises from the country, it has certain rights which it gets from the public. A ship gets nothing whatever from the public. The owner of the ship embarks his capital in a hazardous business, and it would be unreasonable to hold him liable for loss on the cargo under such circumstances. He is just as anxious to save his ship, and get it safely to port as is the owner of the cargo that his goods shall get to port, unless he is a scoundrel anxious to lose his ship for the sake of the insurance.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not the owner of a ship a common carrier?

Mr. SINCLAIR. No and yes. It has never been held in the courts that he has the same liability as the owner of a railway or a common carrier on land. The owner of the ship does not earn his freight unless he lands his goods on the other side, and consequently you can depend on him to get the goods there. Suppose he does not know what the goods are worth. It often turns out that goods are worth a great deal of money, and the freights are very low. A man may be carrying freight at a few dollars a ton that is worth millions, and it would be unreasonable to hold him responsible on account of the small freight he gets if anything should happen the cargo through carelessness, &c.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought they had to put the value on the bill of lading.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Not at all. There is often no value stated in the bill of lading. It discloses the number of tons, and of course the freight, but not the value of the goods. This Bill goes a long distance towards taking away the rights the ship-owner now has. Under the present common law he has the right to make a contract, but you are depriving him of that right which nearly every person enjoys under the law. We deprive him of the right to contract with the owner of the goods in regard to the care of the goods. There are some cases where it is quite proper that the owner of a ship should be allowed to make a contract to relieve himself of liability, and where the owner of the goods would be quite willing to accept the liability in order to get the owner of the ship to carry his goods. This, then, is a compromise to which the shipowners of Montreal, and other parts of Canada have agreed. The whole question was threshed out before the Senate Committee, and later on before a committee of this House. At that committee the following shipping lines were represented: The Allan line, the Quebec Steamship line, the Elder-Dempster line, the McLean-Kennedy line, the Hamburg American line, the Dominion Coal Company, the Donaldson line, and the Thompson line. The Dominion Millers were also represented by men who well understood the business they were dealing with, and gave it a good deal of attention. The Manufacturers' Association was represented, and a number of other interests. The Bill was carefully threshed out, and if we undertake to change it without very careful thought we may be creating a condition of affairs that will cause great disturbance in the commerce of Canada. The Bill goes a great distance in protecting the owners of the goods. That, of course, is its intention. It arose through the conditions that were being inserted in the bills of lading granted by the steamship people in Montreal. In that form of bill of lading they inserted clauses relieving the steamship of the liability which should really have been assumed by the steamship, such liability as putting the goods in contact with other goods that would damage them. The right was also put in the bill of lading to deliver the goods to the consignee notwithstanding the fact that the bill of lading had ben endorsed to a bank. There were in fact certain clauses in the bills of lading in common use among the shipping people on the St. Lawrence that should not have been there, and that is what gave rise to the Bill in the first place. Many concession were made by the shipping people, these concessions were accepted by the representatives of the Manufacturers Association, and the Millers, and I trust the members will understand that the words of this Bill have not been placed here without a great deal of thought and care. The House ought to accept the Bill unless they can point out something very improper in the language.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. The shipper of goods can protect himself by insuring his cargo. That is the whole point at issue. When you ship a cargo you insure it for its full value, sometimes for a little more than its value on account of fluctuations in price.

Mr. A. M. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, the shipper can insure for the full value of his goods, but to cover the case of the old bill of lading we would require to insure under the all-risks clause, which covers every kind of damage. It costs a great deal more to insure under that clause than under the ordinary clause. However, this section, in my mind, would reduce the cost of insurance to the shipper as it would enable him to insure under the ordinary clause. The trouble in the past has been that the through bill of lading received by the shippers in Canada did not hold the vessel owners liable in any way whatever. It did not even oblige them to deliver the same goods that you shipped; it held them liable to deliver the same kind of goods, but not the same goods. Then it permitted them to deliver the goods to the party to whom they were shipped before the original bill of lading was delivered up. This was the principle object in asking for the new through bill of lading now. Formerly we who shipped from inland points did not really know what our Shipping Bill contained. We took a bill of lading from the railway company, which held the railway company liable for any damage, and that simply stated that we came under the Ship's bill when they handed over the goods to the steamship company. Now, what is needed is a Bill that will hold the steamship company liable for the goods. However, as my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has stated, this Bill is in the nature of a compromise between the shippers and the ship owners, and it would be in the interest of the shippers to let the Bill pass as it is, because if any amendments were made to it they would block the Bill for this year and the shippers would have no protection during the coming year. This Bill will afford a degree of protection to them, and therefore it would be better to let it go through as it is.

Mr. DOHERTY. The provisions of the Bill which restrict the liberty of a ship-owner by means of stipulations in the bill of lading relieving himself from responsibility, are a great advantage to the shipper, and to that extent the Bill is an advantage to the shipper. But I think we require to proceed with care when it is proposed, because those particular sections give certain advantages to the shipper to impose upon him a disadvantage by other sections of the Bill. There may be a sufficient reason for enacting this section, but it certainly is a section which relieves the ship-owner, that is, the ship-owner who is engaged in transporting goods, from responsibilities which undoubtedly were incumbent upon him at common law. I was surprised to hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair) say that a ship-owner was not a carrier and did not come under the common law regarding carriers. I think he is a carrier in precisely the same sense as a railway company, if he carries on the business of a carrier, that is, if he transports goods in a ship. The mere fact that a man owns a vessel does not make him a carrier, but if he uses it to carry goods, he becomes a carrier the same as a railway company is a carrier. A railway company, because it owns a railway, is not thereby a common carrier, but when it engages in the business of carrying, then it comes under the common law regulating carriers. Railway companies have special legislation affecting them, and this is special legislation made for the ship-owners. But when the hon. gentleman said that there never was any liability, that it never was the law that the ship-owner engaged in the business of carrying goods was responsible for the loss that occurred by error in the management of the vessel, I must say he enunciated a proposition quite new to me. It is in fact because the ship-owner is a common carrier at common law, and as such would be responsible to deliver the goods that he undertook to carry, and could excuse himself for their loss only on the ground that the loss was attributable either to the act of God or to the King's enemies, that there is any object in making a section of this kind. It is clearly a section to modify the responsibility which at common law lies upon the ship-owner as a common carrier. It seems to me to go exceedingly far, it is going to put the ship-owner in a different position, not only from that of common carrier, but it is going to put him in a different position as regards responsibility, from that occupied by every other person who employs others to act as his servants. The general rule of law is, that I am responsible for damage that is caused by the fault or negligence of my servant in the performance of the duty for which I employ him. Now, this is a provision that the ship-owner shall not be responsible for damage caused by the fault of the servant in the performance of the duties for which he employs him, and its practical effect is that the ship-owner, even though he employed an incompetent captain, will not be responsible for the damage resulting from the incompetence of that captain in the management of the ship. It is true, it is required, as a condtion of this exemption, that he should exercise due diligence to make the ship in all respects seaworthy and properly to man it, so it will be on him to show the due diligence. But I think the effect of the section is to create an exceptional position for the ship-owner, it places him in a category by himself.

Mr. SINCLAIR. What does the hon. gentleman find in this proposed statute that enables the ship-owner to employ an incompetent captain and send him out with the ship?

Mr. DOHERTY. I pointed out that of course he would have to establish that he had used diligence, but even though he may have used diligence, the captain that he has employed may prove to be incompetent, and still he is being relieved from damage resulting from mismanagement. Now we find here the words: 'error in navigation or mismanagement of the ship'. Those are errors attributable to the captain or officers of the vessel, and the fact that they make such errors would at all events, in relation to that particular error, show them to be incompetent, and yet we relieve the ship-owner from responsibility. I will not discuss whether the general rule of the law is a good rule, but I certainly think that it cannot be disputed that the general rule of law is that I am responsible for damage that is done by my employee if that damage is caused by him while he is in the performance of the duties for which I employ him; and if you pass this section you place the ship-owner in a different position from any other employer, and you relieve him from responsibility for the incompetency of the people whom he employs. That is clearly a most material diminution of the responsibility of the ship-owner at common law as a carrier, and as an employer of persons. Whether the advantages to the shipper from the other sections of the Act are sufficiently great to compensate for the disadvantages, would perhaps be a matter of question. I think myself that this House ought not to adopt this legislation on the supposition that it never was the law that the ship-owner was responsible for mismanagement of the vessel by his employees.

Mr. MACDONALD. There can be no doubt that at common law the principle laid down by the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) is correct. My hon. friend will agree that when parties have contracted, however, in regard to the carriage of goods, this clause always appears in a bill of lading for the protection of the shipper. And what are we doing here in this Bill? It might be said in a way that we are making a bill of lading to govern the shipment of goods from Canada and into Canada. We are following in that respect the example which was set by the United States when they adopted some years ago what is known as the Harter Act, and the clauses which are incorporated here are a reproduction of that legislation which was settled at the suggestion of the commercial world in the United States. In declaring what shall be in the bill of lading it might be said that we are declaring what shall be the bill of lading for the future. We are not doing anything that is unfair to either party. The various interests that appeared before the committee on this subject were representative of the shippers and the carriers, the latter of whom were anxious to have a definite and clear bill of lading made a matter of law. While under the common law these liabilities did exist on the ship-owner, as a matter of fact they did not exist on account of being contracted against, and I do not think there is anything anomalous in reproducing in the law what is practically in every bill of lading in the country. The fact that the different interests watched with the greatest keenness in order to see that no undue advantage was given to either side is the best evidence that the measure is a well considered one.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am afraid my hon. friend from St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) misunderstood what I intended to convey. Under the law, as at present, the ship-owner is allowed to make a contract, and in every charter party and bill of lading he is very careful to contract himself out of as much liability as he can. For hundreds of years, in every one of these shipping contracts it has always been the custom of ship-owners to contract themselves out of the specific things that are mentioned in section 7, such as: loss arising from fire, dangers of the sea, the acts of God and the King's enemies, and inherent vice of the thing carried. These are among the things that have appeared in every bill of lading and charter party that has been in existence in British countries for very many years. We are now by this Act taking away from the ship-owner the right to make a contract that will contract himself out of liability, but we think this clause is a reasonable one.

Mr. SPROULE. The shipper is obliged now to sign the bill of lading presented to him or otherwise he cannot ship his goods. If a loss should be sustained through the negligence of the common carrier and in common law he were sued for damages, would not the court determine which of these provisions in the contract were reasonable and which unreasonable, and only allow to prevail those which were reasonable?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think the courts have always held a man liable for the consequence of his own negligence. He can contract himself out of his negligence, and if the owner of the goods agrees to that contract you have a contract between the two, but that is the thing we are trying to avoid. The committee arrived at the conclusion that the provisions in clause 7 were reasonable. That is the meaning of it and nothing more.

On section 7,

Mr. DOHERTY. There is something in this section to which I would call the special attention of the committee, because it involves so serious an error that I doubt very much if it could have been intended that the section should be couched in these precise words. At all events I do not think it could have been intended to produce the effect which the enactment of the clause would produce. I quite agree that it would be a proper thing to exempt the ship-owner from loss arising from the different causes which are mentioned in this section, provided such loss arises without his fault or privity or the fault or privity of his servants, for whom he is responsible. But, as I read the section as drawn, it exempts the ship-owner from responsibility if the damage is the result of any one of the causes enumerated there, without considering at all whether that cause is attributable to his fault or the fault of those for whom he is responsible. For instance, under the section as drafted, the ship-owner would have nothing to do but say your goods were destroyed by fire, and then he would be exempt under the section. I submit he should be called upon to show that the goods were destroyed by fire which was not attributable to his fault or to the fault of those for whom he was responsible.

Mr. BARKER. Under section 4, he cannot contract himself out of liability for negligence.

Mr. DOHERTY. Yes, but in this section it is not a question of contracting himself out of anything; the law itself here says, that the ship-owner shall have no responsibility, regardless of what contract he may make, for the loss of goods destroyed by fire. It may be that the shipper is insured against that loss, but I have difficulty in convincing myself that it was intended to say, as this section says, that the ship-owner in order to be relieved, need only prove that the cause was fire. Fire is not a thing that necessarily excludes the idea of fault on the part of persons in charge of the place where the fire occurred, on the contrary, probably in the majority of cases, fire is due to somebody's fault. When you merely prove that the goods were burnt, the question remains absolutely undetermined in any way whether that is a loss attributable to the fault of the ship-owner or his employees. In dealing with a section of this kind, which has nothing to do with what a man may contract himself out of, but which is fixing the legal liability, you want to remember in making statutory provisions what the position of the party was in the absence of these provisions. His position in the absence of any provision to relieve him, was that his obligation was to produce the goods or explain why he did not, and to so explain it as to exclude the idea that it was his fault that he did not produce them. The only excuses the common law recognizes were the act of God and the King's enemies. I am not arguing that a man should not be exempt from responsibility for the causes enumerated in this section; what I contend for is that he should be so relieved from that liability, only provided that the happening of any one of these things mentioned is not attributable to his fault. I know it may be answered that as regards some of the things enumerated in this section they could not be his fault, such as the act of God or the King's enemies or inherent vice in the things carried.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is not his fault.

Mr. DOHERTY. Certainly not, but the answer to that is that the common law relieves him from that liability. That clearly could not be a cause of liability because that could not be his fault. The act of God, or the King's enemies or a defect in the goods that were furnished to him would not be his fault, and the common law would relieve him of all liability, but when you come to fire it might be his fault.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Fire is the only one that might be his fault.

Mr. DOHERTY. I beg your pardon. When you come to the perils of the sea it is quite true that the peril is not his fault, but an accident resulting from it might be his fault if he has not taken proper precautions to avoid it. Under the the very same sort of legislation you will find judgments of the court to the effect that, though the immediate cause is the peril of the sea, the ship-owner is responsible for the accident by which his vessel succumbed to the peril of the sea in that, for instance, the vessel was not seaworthy or, until we had the immediately preceding section, that she was not properly managed. With those exceptions, the act of God, the King's enemies and defects in the goods themselves, all of which would exempt him at common law, I submit that the law should be made to read that the ship-owner shall not be held liable for loss arising without his fault or the fault or privity of any person from whom he is responsible from the causes mentioned in that section. I think that the explanation of how the section comes to be worded in this way is to be found in the fact that the people who drew it followed the example of the revisers of the statutes in 1906 and who, with all respect, I think, have made a very serious error. In 1906 they purported to revise chapter 82 of the Revised Statutes of 1886 and, more particularly they revised section 2 of that statute. In what purported to be a reproduction of section 2 they entirely altered the sense of section 2 apparently because they thought there would be an advantage in dividing the paragraphs of the section and giving each one a number. Section 2 of chapter 82, Revised Statutes, 1886, dealt with this subject precisely in the way that I contend it should be dealt with now and its provision reads as follows. After declaring the liability for the loss of or damage to goods entrusted to them for conveyance they went on to say, in subsection 4, section 2:

> Provided, that they shall not be liable to any extent whatsoever to make good any loss or damage happening without their actual fault or privity, or the fault or neglect of their agents, servants or employees,—
> (a) To any goods on board any such vessel, or delivered to them for conveyance therein, by reason of fire or the dangers of navigation.

Exempting there substantially the very two causes mentioned here, but making it an additional requirement that the accident should happen without the fault of the ship-owner or carrier or the persons for whom he is responsible. Then they went on:

> (b) Arising from any defect in or from the nature of the goods themselves, or from armed robbery or other irresistible force.

Then they went on with other provisions—I am not quite clear whether they are the same here or not. When the revision took place in 1906, and when the re-visers came to reproduce that section, they made it read:

Carriers by water shall be liable for the loss of or damage to goods entrusted to them for conveyance, except that they shall not be liable when such loss or damage happens,—
(a) without their actual fault or privity, or without the fault or neglect of their agents, servants or employees; or,
(b) by reason of fire or the dangers of navigation.

So that they did what this Bill is now doing; they made the absence of fault one distinct cause of exemption from liability, and then they made fire and the perils of navigation and these other things that are enumerated other causes of exemption from liability, producing practically the result that even though the fire should be attributable to the fault of the ship-owner, nevertheless, it was to be a cause of exemption from liability. As I said in the beginning, I cannot convince myself that that was intended, for they enact that without regard to the question whether you are in fault or not, you shall not be responsible provided the damage be due to fire, and yet what the section says is clear from the fact that they make the absence of fault one distinct and substantial ground of relief from liability standing by itself. Then they go on to make fire and all the other things separate and distinct grounds of relief from liability. I do not know how this Bill was drafted, but it seems to me that it is the result of following the bad example of the gentlemen who drafted the Revised Statutes in 1906, and who, in the Act as put in the revision of 1906, drifted away from what was the perfectly sound and correct statement of what ought to be causes of exemption from liability, namely, fire and the perils of navigation, etc., provided the loss was not attributable to the fault or occurred without the fault of the ship-owner or the persons whom he employed. What I would suggest and what it seems to me would make it a perfectly reasonable law and not entail any injury upon the ship owner, is that in the second line of the section, after the word 'arising' there be inserted the words 'without their actual fault or privity, or without the fault or neglect of their agents, servants or employees'. That would bring the wording back to the wording of the provision of section 2 of chapter 82, which was the provision intended to be merely reproduced from that section in the revision of the statutes of 1906, section 964, and which would set the law forth on what I submit would be a reasonable basis. Then it would go on 'or from,' etc.

Mr. BUREAU. Since recess I have had a talk with my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) and I have also taken occasion to consult some English-speaking gentlemen about the phraseology of the section. Here is a question of English grammar and phraseology which I frankly admit I am not competent to decide, but I am told that this last phrase of section 7 'or for loss arising without their actual fault or privity or without the fault or neglect of their agents, servants or employees' is not a separate and distinct reason why they should be relieved from liability, but is a qualifying phrase which ought to be read with the rest of the section and applied to the whole section. Then, if it is the act of God, or if the ship is burned, the ship-owner shall not be liable provided there is no fault on the part of the master, servants or employees. I do not claim to be competent to judge when it comes to a question of English grammar. My hon. friend compares the statute of 1886 with the revised statute of 1906. The language of the Bill is exactly the language of the revised statute of 1906. I am not prepared to admit that the change in the language was made in the revision of the statute. There have been intervening amendments made to the statute of 1886. There may have been a discussion in the House on those amendments justifying the amendment as it now stands in the revised statutes. That I am not prepared to say, because I had not time during the recess to look over the statutes from 1886 to 1906 to see whether there had been any amendments between the consolidation and the revision. There may have been, as the hon. member for St. Anne says, a slip on the part of those who revised the statutes. Before accepting the amendment suggested, I think we ought to find out whether the language of the statute of 1906 is not a repetition of the language used in statutes enacted subsequent to 1886, and prior to 1906.

Mr. BARKER. If the Solicitor General has been properly informed as to the last two lines governing the whole section, there can be no objection to the insertion of the words which the hon. member for St. Anne proposes, because in that case they will not add anything to the meaning of the section.

Mr. BUREAU. That is a question for you to decide.

Mr. BARKER. I think it is rather a question for the law clerk to consider, and therefore, the hon. gentleman should allow that clause to stand.

Mr. SINCLAIR. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that it was intended that the ship-owners should not be liable and we are enacting that which is the law now. If you look at section 964 of the Shipping Act, you will find that it says:

Carriers by water shall be liable for the loss of or damage to goods entrusted to them for conveyance, except that they shall not be liable when such loss or damage happens,—

(a) without their actual fault or privity, or without the fault or neglect of their agents, servants or employees; or

(b) by reason of fire or the dangers of navigation; or

(c) from any defect in or from the nature of the goods themselves; or

(d) from armed robbery or other irresistible force.

Clause (b) was inserted because ship-owners would not undertake otherwise to carry goods at the rates that now prevail. For instance, a ship-owner might be liable for the loss by fire of a cargo of cotton worth $1,000,000 which he was carrying for $10,000. The cotton does not belong to him, and he cannot insure it, but the shipper can. Therefore, the statute now allows him to contract himself out of that liability. If the company wish to make him liable, they have to change the meaning of the section altogether.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not question that, it is precisely in section 964 where the error was made. I think the Solicitor General will find that there was no intervening legislation, and that section 964 of the revised statutes of 1906, merely purported to revise and reproduce the dispositions of subsection 4 and the following subsections of section 2 of chapter 82 of the Revised Statutes of 1886; but in the reproduction they made the proviso governing all the exemptions read, as the hon. gentleman has just read it, as a separate clause of exemption from liability. The hon. gentleman talks of the danger of a load of cotton being burned, and says that the ship-owner ought to be allowed to contract himself out of liability for it. I am not arguing against his being allowed to contract himself out of liability. The question is not with regard to contracting himself out of liability; it is with regard to determining what his legal liability is in the absence of a contract. The cargo of cotton may be an exceptional case. On the other hand, look at all the classes of goods which in themselves are not specially liable to fire. If a vessel burned and my goods burned in it, and the ship-owner had not contracted on the subject at all, under this section all he would have to do would be to say that the goods were burned, and even though I proved that the fire was the result of the grossest fault on his part, he would go scot free, because fire per se, without regard to what caused it, is made a ground of exemption. The hon. gentleman says that nobody would carry goods otherwise.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Not at the present rates of freight.

Mr. DOHERTY. Up to 1906 people carried goods under the law which I am arguing for. I am not arguing that a party shall not be free to contract himself out of liability, and he will naturally do that when he is dealing with goods that are particularly liable to fire. But in cases where there is no question of goods particularly liable to fire, where people are shipping different kinds of goods in quantities, and the ship-owner does not deem it wise or desirable to stipulate that he shall not be liable for damage resulting from fire, if we are going to step in to his aid and relieve him of liability because it is a fire, even though it be proved that the fire is his direct fault, I must say that it is most dangerous legislation.

Mr. BUREAU. That might be possible, but not probable.

Mr. DOHERTY. The law of the province of Quebec considers it so probable that a fire, when it occurs, is attributable to the fault of the person at the place where it occurred or to the fault of his employees, that in the case of landlord and tenant there is a presumption of the tenant's fault when a building is destroyed by fire.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There was a case in which they held the contrary.

Mr. DOHERTY. In that case it was held that the tenant might prove that it was not his fault. When the ship-owner to whom I give my goods, comes and says: I do not deliver, there is my contract to deliver your goods, that is my contractual obligation, I do not deliver them. I say: Why don't you deliver, and he replies: Oh, they were burnt on my vessel, my vessel was burnt; I was in charge of it, and I have no further account to render to you. That is a hard enough situation for the shipper, but supposing I am in a position to go on and prove that that fire was the ship-owner's fault, nevertheless, under this legislation, I would have no recourse. Now, I submit that in the revision of the statute it was not intended to so alter the law. The hon. gentleman speaks of men in business refusing to be bound under the law in the sense which I contend for, yet I affirm without a moment's hesitation, that that certainly was the law up to 1906 when this revision of the statute took place, and still there was a good deal of shipping, and a good deal of business done. The hon. gentleman will find in the reports cases where precisely what I contend for was held, but under the exemptions as they stood prior to 1906, neither fire nor the perils of the sea were causes of relief from liability, unless it was shown that the fire was not attributable to the fault of the ship-owner or that as regards the perils of the sea the ship-owner had properly guarded against those perils. Now, I submit that while it is quite true that this section is carrying on the law as it is expressed in the revision of 1906, it is materially altering the law as it stood up to that time, and altering it to create an exemption from liability in a case that I submit does not deserve sympathy at the hands of this parliament. After all, what is it that I am asking for in asking for the insertion of those words?

Mr. BUREAU. Is the liability as in the Revised Statutes of 1906 new, or has there been any intervening amendment to the statute of 1886?

Mr. DOHERTY. My memory is that though the Revised Statute of 1906 purports to be a revision of chapter 82 of the revision of 1886, and refers to no other Act, I am under the impression, the very strong impression, that there was intervening legislation between 1886 and 1906, but in that intervening legislation the wording of 1886 was retained. It is noteworthy that in the revised statutes each section refers back to the particular legislation which it purports to revise. I am fairly confident that I am making no mistake in what I have said, because it was not for the purpose of dealing with this Act that I had occasion to look into it. I had occasion to look into the legislation as it existed before the revision of 1906, and I distinctly remember my surprise to have it pointed out to me that the revision of 1906 altered the provision of the law. I am confident that whether there was intervening legislation between 1886 and 1906 or not, it is the revision of 1906 that first made this alteration. In that connection, I think it is noteworthy that the alteration, while a substantial alteration of the law, is effected merely by a rearrangement of the words. Where the law comes to be altered, it is done by taking a proviso covering all the subsections and making it a separate subsection. Now, I would be very much surprised if that is not merely the work of some gentleman occupying a more or less clerical position who thought he was making the thing look better by having each proviso with a number to it, with the result that he made that proviso a substantial disposition standing by itself. I am confirmed in that opinion, because I am convinced that the result is to produce a most unwarrantable condition of the law.

Mr. DANIEL. At the Marine and Fisheries Committee at which this matter was brought up there were representatives of the Dominion Millers' Association, and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and I think every member of the committee who was present will give these gentlemen credit for doing everything they possibly could to put every liability on the shipowner, and take it off the shipper. But there was not one of these gentlemen who objected to the inclusion of fire in that section. They were quite content to include it after going over this whole business, and they were also the gentlemen who represented those associations before the Senate where this Bill was drafted, and afterwards passed, so that I think this matter has already received a great deal more attention than this House is in a position to give it, and with all due deference to every one I may say more intelligent thought and attention.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DANIEL. Because these gentlemen were present and had an opportunity of having the various matters argued before them, pro and con, on every clause that came up before them. Now the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) has given I have no doubt a very able legal argument in favour of the change he proposes, but at the same time he is a gentleman who lives on the land pretty much; he is acquainted with fire as it occurs in houses and places of that kind. But I take it he is not much of a seaman and he has not spent many days, weeks or months of his life on the ocean. I think it is only necessary to call to the mind of that hon. gentleman the fact that there is no greater horror in existence than fire at sea, and I cannot imagine any one having charge of a ship, either as master or mate, or in any other capacity, who would for a moment relax efforts calculated to prevent the occurrence of a fire at sea, for such a fire puts in jeopardy not only the cargoe and the ship, but also the lives of the people who are managing and navigating the ship. So I take it that there are other reasons besides merely legal reasons which might have been brought out by the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) why this matter should remain as it is, because the word 'fire' has been put in there after a great deal of consideration by those who were appearing for the ship-owners and also those who were appearing for the shippers. There is another point which I think we should not forget. This Bill is a Bill in favour of shippers as opposed to ship-owners. It has, as has already been mentioned, taken away from the ship-owner the power to make his own contract with the shipper, something which has not been done by any nation having a large maritime fleet. It is not done by England, Italy, France, Germany or Norway and Sweden. These latter two countries are really stealing away a great deal of our own shipping business, especially as between the maritime provinces and the port of Montreal. I think that we as a parliament will have to give some little attention to both sides of this controversy, and not give all the law and all the sympathy to the shipper at the expense of the ship-owner. The United States have practically driven their ocean tonnage off the sea and their freight trade is now being carried on by ships sailing under foreign flags because the countries to which these vessels belong have not surrounded these ships with the restrictions of every shape and form which the United States have and which Canada is now beginning to do. For my part I think the section ought to stand as it is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it the intention of those who are supporting the Bill to relieve the ship-owner absolutely from liability for negligence in these respects?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I understand that to be the intention. In cases where the damage arises from loss by fire or from damage of the sea or from the acts of God or public enemies, it was considered reasonable to relieve the ship-owner absolutely from responsibility for negligence, keeping in mind that the ship-owner has his own property in risk, that he has employed a captain competent under the law, that the ship is of value, that if the ship is lost the owner loses everything, and that he is also not in a position to insure the shipper's property. He can insure his own property but not yours.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Suppose the ship-owner sets the fire or is contributary to it? Does that relieve him from liability?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Oh, no, he would then be guilty of a crime.

Mr. DOHERTY. You may send him to penitentiary for the crime of arson, but you are indicating there without any conditions that he shall be relieved from liability for loss by fire.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not understand it that way. It is the law now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course under the common law the carrier is an absolute insurer, and has always relieved himself from liability by means of provisions in the bill of lading. This statute in the 4th section prevents him from doing that under certain conditions, but at the same time, under the section we are now considering, I think it goes a little too far in the opposite direction; it is taking away with one hand, and giving more with the other, at least it is giving a great deal. You might have a case of the greatest possible negligence and a claim might be made against the ship-owner who at common law is an insurer, and he would point to this law and say: Although I have been guilty of the greatest possible negligence in consequence of which your goods have been destroyed I am not liable. That is departing in a very marked degree from the principles of liability that are usually recognized.

Mr. BUREAU. I understand that this Bill is practically the result of a compromise between the two parties the ship-owners and the shippers, and its provisions have been drafted after both parties have been heard and represented before the committee who had charge of the examination of the Bill before it came to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Should parliament not exercise its judgment in enacting a law?

Mr. BUREAU. Certainly it is just to show the principles of the Bill. I understand as the leader of the opposition says, that it is relieving the owner of quite a responsibility, the responsibility for loss by fire, but on the other hand the nature of the case affords a certain guarantee. The idea of self-preservation is sufficiently well developed in every individual, whether at sea or on land, to stay his hand from performing any act that will lead to the destruction of his own life.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I realize the importance of that argument, but when actively engaged in the practice of my profession I had a good many of these maritime cases, and I am bound to say that the considerations which the hon. gentleman has mentioned have never tended very much to prevent acts of very great negligence at sea. I call to mind just one illustration. Two large ships in the middle of the Atlantic ocean with no land near, no other ships near, in broad daylight, in calm weather collided, and one of them was sunk. You might apply the consideration mentioned to a case of that kind, and say it would be absolutely impossible that such an event could be brought about, that the law of self-preservation, the desire to perform a man's duty, would have prevented an accident of that kind, and yet it did happen under the conditions I have stated with no possible reason for the collision. In the end it came down to a question of the direction of the wind, each ship insisting that having regard to the direction of the wind, and the course she was steering the other should have given way. The result was that neither gave way and one went down. There was no loss of life, but a very narrow escape.

Mr. BUREAU. I do not contend that the thing is impossible, I remarked that the chances, the probabilities, are very small.

Mr. DOHERTY. How does the hon. gentleman explain the number of cases of fires that occur where it has been pleaded that the ship-owner was not responsible for fires. Then fires do not always destroy the whole vessel, only a portion of the goods may be destroyed. It must be remembered that we are dealing not only with ocean going vessels, but with inland passenger boats as well.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend in order to back his argument said that in 1886 the statute made it without fault or negligence on the part of the ship-owner, his agents or employees. But the ship-owner contracted himself out of liability not only in the case of fire, but of every possible eventuality, while loading. I was even told that when during the investigation before the committee it was found that they had inserted a clause whereby ship-owners carrying cheese and cattle contracted themselves out of any liability for manure or anything of that kind running through the deck, and damaging goods beneath. I suppose that this was a compensation for taking away from the ship-owner the right to contract himself out of liability. I am not a maritime man. Three Rivers has some shipping, but not enough to make a man an expert. If we are going to put this Bill through, I think that, as my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) has said, it would be a disappointment to the parties most interested if we did not let it go as it is. I would, therefore, ask my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty) if he would have any objection to allowing his amendment to stand for the present?

Mr. DOHERTY. I take no objection to letting it stand, but what is going to happen in the meantime if we pass the Bill?

Mr. BUREAU. The law will remain as it is in the revised statutes.

Mr. DOHERTY. When I saw this discrepancy in the revised statutes I made a note of the necessity of amending the revised statutes. Now, I must confess that the thing is so palpably opposed to every sound principle, that I would feel rather ashamed to allow my amendment to stand. The persons interested, whom the Solicitor General represents as having accepted this wording, were, I think, under the erroneous impression that the words as they came at the end of the section qualified the whole section.

Mr. BUREAU. The hon. member for Guysborough tells me not.

Mr. DOHERTY. Well, to my mind to allow that to pass is creating a situation quite new, and giving a most exorbitant privilege to the ship-owner. You must remember that even with the words 'without fault or privity' the ship-owner is going to escape if he can show that he did what he could to take care of his ship. The hon. gentleman says: Of course they will take care of their ship; yes, and of course they will prove it every time. It is not asking much of a man to ask him to take care of his ship.

Mr. DOHERTY.

Mr. BUREAU. It is shifting the burden of proof.

Mr. DOHERTY. If he proves what the hon. gentleman says, that he always does, why, he will escape his liability. I think it is my duty at all events to submit my amendment. I move:

That section 7 be amended by inserting in the second line after the word 'arising' the words 'without their actual fault or privity or without the fault or neglect of their agents, servants or employees'; and by inserting in the tenth line thereof after the word 'arising' the words 'from other cause.'

Mr. SINCLAIR. By placing these words in there 'without their actual fault or privity,' I ask the hon. gentleman how the ship-owner could be negligent in case of an act of God or of the King's enemies? I think he does not intend to make the amendment in the way he has made it, or to put it in the place he puts it, for it makes the whole section absurd. We have already enacted that the shipper is bound in all respects to see that his ship is seaworthy and properly equipped, and that section is binding upon us. The ship-owner, therefore, cannot be liable for any negligence of his own, from dangers of the sea or other navigable water.

Mr. DOHERTY. I have no objection to putting the words somewhere else. The absurdity of the section consists in our enacting a statutory legislation to say that the ship-owner shall not be liable for the loss resulting from the act of God or the King's enemies. That is the law now. It did seem to me, even if the words were put where they are, that everybody might take his chances that the courts would not interpret them to mean that after a man had proved that something was the act of God, he required to prove in addition that it was not his own fault.

Mr. SINCLAIR. If the hon. gentleman is acting in the interest of the owners of goods, he is taking a step that is very likely to destroy the Bill altogether. There is no person who would be better pleased, if this Bill does not become law, than the ship-owner. This Bill is taking away valuable concessions and rights from the ship-owning people of this country, and if the hon. gentleman pretends to be acting in the interest of the shipper and the people who own the goods, he will allow this section to pass as it stands.

Mr. DOHERTY. I am not acting in the interest of anybody, either the ship-owner or the shipper, I am trying to act as a member of this parliament to see that the legislation that goes through is in accordance with what I conceive to be justice. That is my entire motive in discussing this matter. The hon. gentleman, assuming that I represent the interests of the shippers, says to me: Well, though this thing may be an unjust thing to you, if you do not consent to this unjust thing, why, the ship-owners will refuse to allow this parliament to pass these other sections which this parliament considers are just, and which prevents them from contracting out of obligations which this parliament thinks should not be allowed to be contracted out of. I think it is putting this House in a humiliating situation that we should be told that we are to be compelled to do something prejudicial to one interest because if we do not, there is another interest that will force this House to refuse to pass three or four sections of this Act.

Mr. A. M. MARTIN. Supposing the hon. gentleman's amendment carries, what will be the effect on section 964 of the Canada Shipping Act?

Mr. DOHERTY. This being the last legislation, it will repeal section 964 so far as there is a difference between them. But I am not quite clear that section 964 deals with precisely the same classes of carriers in all respects, but if it does, the effect of my amendment would be to modify section 964.

Mr. A. M. MARTIN. It is not clear. I might read the clause that I referred to for the hon. gentleman. It provides that they:

> Shall not be liable when such loss or damage happens by reason of fire or the dangers of navigation.

Mr. DOHERTY. It will be modified to the extent of making it read, 'except that they shall not be liable when such loss or damage happens,' etc. The effect of my amendment would be to strike out letter (a) simply, and embody the rest of it in the first paragraph, making it read this way:

> Carriers by water shall be liable for the loss of or damage to goods except that they shall not be liable when such loss or damage happens without their actual fault or privity or without the fault or neglect of their agents, servants or employees.

Then striking out the word 'or' simply, and going on:

> By reason of fire or the dangers of navigation; or, from any defect in or from the nature of the goods themselves; or, from armed robbery or other irresistible force.

It would bring section 964 back to read just as did read section 2 of chapter 82, R.S., 1886. If the hon. gentleman will look at that section in the Revised Statutes of 1906 he will see that it purports to reproduce section 2, of chapter 82, of 1886, but does not reproduce it. When I say purports to reproduce it also purports to revise, but in the process of revision they have altered the sense. It will bring it back to the original form of the statute.

Mr. SINCLAIR. In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Doherty) I would say that he has altogether misunderstood me. I did not hold any threat over the hon. gentleman or anybody else. He has a perfect right to propose any amendment that he chooses to this Bill. I intend to vote against his amendment for two reasons, first, because it does not seem to me to be intelligible. The amendment renders the clause almost meaningless, because we all know that a ship-owner could not possibly be liable by his negligence for the acts of God, the King's enemies, and all those other things that are mentioned. Then, I intend to vote against his amendment for the further reason that I do not consider it is proper legislation. In my opinion, ship-owners should not be liable for damage from fire, I care not how it was caused; they should not be liable for the whole value of the goods that are shipped. The ship-owner has always been able to make a contract up to this date. He does not consider whether the cargo that he takes on is valuable or not. It is not his cargo, he risks his own property and he undertakes to carry it and do the best he can, but it has hitherto been his privilege and right to make a contract that he will not be liable for the value of goods provided they are lost by fire at sea. I think that is a proper contract for him to make, and up to this date he has the right to make it under the law of Canada. Now we are taking that right away from him by section 4 of this Bill, and it ought to be conceded by every reasonable man, when we are taking that right away, that there are certain rights which we should leave with him. If we intend that shipping business is to be done, if we intend that capital shall go into shipbuilding, and if we are to be in the position of having our wheat, agricultural products and manufactured goods carried cheaply across the ocean, we must at least give the ship-owner the right to make a reasonable contract. It will be most unreasonable if the owner of the ship who loses his own property, a property, perhaps, worth a quarter of a million dollars, must also lose another quarter of a million dollars for the goods which have been lost. There is no reason why the clause should not be enacted as it stands. I beg to differ altogether from the hon. member for Montreal, Ste. Anne, with regard to that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mr. Doherty moves that after the word 'arising' in the second line of clause 7 there shall be inserted the words 'without their actual fault or privity, or without the fault or neglect of their agents, servants or employees.'

Amendment negatived.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is also moved by the hon. member for Montreal, Ste. Anne, that in the tenth line of section 7, after the word 'arising' there be inserted the words, 'from other cause.'

Mr. BUREAU. That is the same amendment.

Mr. DOHERTY. That is only a necessary consequence of the other one.

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, it has no application, the other having been lost.

Amendment negatived, and section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 198) to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.—Mr. King—read a second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister give us some general light on this?

Mr. KING. The proposed amendments are intended to simplify the procedure in the light of experience, and to meet what appears to be the very reasonable request made on the part of the working men through their organizations in respect to certain features of the Bill which they believe to operate to their disadvantage. The proposed amendments do not in any way change the principles of the Act as it stands. The Act has given general satisfaction during the three years of its existence, but the railway employees allege they are at a disadvantage as compared with the members of other labour organizations. For example, the Act requires that before a board of investigation is asked the parties must take an oath that the necessary authority to declare a strike or lockout has been obtained. Where the dispute is confined to one locality it is not difficult to secure this declaration, but where a dispute extends through various provinces, the railway men's organizations represent that the taking of a vote of their members is a great expense and inconvenience. The railway organizations have duly constituted grievance committees which take up grievances with the companies, and they claim they can get a long way in the settlement of differences by mutual conference, and that if they cannot succeed in that way the certainty of a vote being in favour of a strike is virtually established. Then, if the board is constituted after the vote has been taken before a strike can be declared, should the parties be unwilling to accept the findings of the board a second vote is required over the whole system, which also involves considerable expense. It is proposed by one of these amendments to remedy that, and with proper safeguards, to allow the organizations to apply for a board if their officers can make a declaration to the effect that the difficulties between them and the company have already been the subject of careful negotiation and that they have got as far as is possible in the negotiations. A declaration to that effect the provisions of the Act in other particulars being complied with will be sufficient to warrant the government establishing a board.

There is one other point—under the law as it stands at present, if either of the parties change the conditions and the other party is not satisfied with the change of conditions, then before a strike or lockout can take place a board of investigation must be appointed. Experience in the working out of the Act has shown that while either party may change the conditions, in so far as employees are concerned they must always make the application for a board. We are proposing an amendment here which will throw upon the party who proposes the change, the onus of asking for the board. In the case of the strike of the machinists on the Canadian Pacific railway, in 1908, the company proposed certain changes which the men were not satisfied with, and before the men could go on strike they were obliged to ask for a board which reported adversely to them. It was then represented in the press that the men had asked for the board and refused to accept its findings. There is a slight element of injustice in that representation. The company having changed the conditions should have been obliged to call for the board before putting the changes into effect, and had that been the case it would not have appeared that the men were responsible for the calling of the board. There is an amendment framed which will remedy that state of things. I may say that I have submitted the amendments to the various railway brotherhoods, who are generally speaking the only parties that up to the present time have taken exception to the measure. The replies which have been received from them indicate that this proposed change removes the objection almost in whole, which any of them may have entertained towards the Act. I think it important to give this information to the committee, and with the permission of the House, I will read a communication which I sent to the duly authorized representatives of the different brotherhoods of railway employees, inclosing a copy of the proposed amendments and the replies that I have received :

Department of Labour, Canada,
Ottawa, March 5, 1910.

Dear Sir,—I am inclosing a copy of proposed amendments to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, which have been framed, after consultation with yourself and others, with a view of meeting what seem to me very reasonable requests made on behalf of the workingmen of this country through some of their representative labour bodies and officers, and in particular with a view of removing the possibilities of certain injustices which have been alleged on behalf of railway employees as existing, in so far as the provisions of the measure are applicable to them.

I wish you would kindly look carefully over the amendments proposed, and let me know whether in your opinion they are satisfactory, and whether if adopted by parliament they would bring the Industrial Disputes Act into a form generally satisfactory and acceptable to railway employees.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

To this communication I received the following reply from Mr. Calvin Lawrence, the legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers :

Windsor Hotel,
Ottawa, March 5, 1910.

The Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, C.M.G., Minister of Labour,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. King,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of March 5, together with a copy of the proposed amendments to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, and in reply, I am pleased to say, that I have very carefully looked over the suggested amendments and they appear to me to be very satisfactory and, in my opinion, if adopted by parliament they should bring the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act of 1907 into a form generally satisfactory and acceptable to railway employees; therefore, as representing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, I can consistently endorse the Act when so amended, believing that it will, if amended as proposed, be a benefit not only to railway employees, but also to the public generally.

I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to express to you the appreciation of myself and those I represent for the courtesy and consideration you have extended to me during our interviews regarding railway legislation.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Yours very respectfully,
(Sgd.) CALVIN LAWRENCE,
Legislative Representative B. L. E.

The following communication was received from Mr. Donald, the legislature representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers:

Ottawa, March 10, 1910.

W. L. Mackenzie King, Esq.,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I have your letter of the 9th instant with inclosed copy of proposed amendments to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.

I have gone carefully over the amendments proposed and I am of the opinion that they will be satisfactory should they become law as they are drafted. I am also of the opinion that the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, if it is amended as proposed, will bring the Act into a form that will meet with the general approval of the railway employees that I have the honour to represent.

Thanking you for the many courtesies that you have extended to us in the past,

I am, respectfully yours,
(Sgd.) W. J. DOWELL,
Legislative Representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

From Mr. John Maloney, the legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, I have received the following reply:

Ottawa, March 10, 1910.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Honourable and Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 5, inclosing copy of the proposed amendments to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act of 1907.

I have carefully read over the amendments, and wish to state, as a representative of the Trainmen's Organization, I find them entirely satisfactory, and in my opinion will bring about all desired results. I also feel if proposed amendments are adopted by parliament, they will bring the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act into a form satisfactory and acceptable to all members of the Trainmen's Organization.

Respectfully yours,
(Sgd.) JOHN MALONEY,
Dominion Legislative Representative
Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Mr. SPROULE. May I interrupt the hon. gentleman? Is there any need of risking the time of the committee with these letters when he has told us that all the letters are in approval of the legislation?

Mr. KING. I think it important that these letters should be placed on record, as these amendments are being introduced to make the Act acceptable to the railway employees, and I think the public should know the view of the amendments taken by the representatives of the various classes of railway employees.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the House is accepting with full confidence the statement of the hon. gentleman that he has written to these bodies and has received replies from them in approval. I think that should be sufficient, as no person is disputing his statement.

Mr. KING. Possibly I might abbreviate by giving the gist of what is said in one or two of the letters. The next letter is from the representative of the telegraphers:

Order of Railroad Telegraphers,
264 Rusholme Road, Toronto, Mar. 14, 1910.

The Honourable
W. L. Mackenzie King, C.M.G.,
Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. King,—Replying to your favour in reference to the proposed amendments to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, I desire to say that if these amendments can be obtained, the Act will be entirely satisfactory to our organization. In fact, we have felt the need of these amendments almost ever since the law has been enacted, and we are hopeful that parliament will see the wisdom of them.

Wishing you success,
I am,
Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) D. CAMPBELL,
Third Vice-President.

Mr. Harvey Hall, representing one of the other branches, writes in part as follows under date of March 14:

This will acknowledge yours of March 9, with a draft copy of proposed amendments to the Industrial Disputes Act attached. * *
I have gone carefully over the proposed amendments, and believe they will, to some extent, relieve the railway employees of a very serious complaint, namely, delay and expense, when they are forced to apply for a board. * * *
I must admit that the amendments proposed, if adopted, will certainly meet the views of the railway men as far as they go.

Mr. HUGHES. What order does Mr. Hall represent?

Mr. KING. I think he represents at this time the railway conductors. Then, I have a letter, dated March 11, 1910, from Mr. A. B. Lowe, the president of the International Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, in which he says:

My opinion of the Act itself has never changed, that it is one of the best pieces of legislation that has been passed to my knowledge, in the interests of industrial peace.

And on March 18, he writes:

I hope that the amendments proposed may be placed in the law.

The House will observe that these communications cover all the different classes of railway labour—locomotive engineers, firemen, trainmen, telegraphers, conductors and maintenance of way employees. I have also discussed these amendments with representatives of the railway companies and they have stated to me without exception that they think they are fair and reasonable, and I understand that no opposition will be offered to them if they are enacted by the House.

There is another amendment to increase the allowance to members of boards, and to simplify proceedings in the matter of the oath which members of boards are required to take. They in common with the other amendments have been requested by workingmen through the Dominion Trades Congress and other labour organizations, and appear to be fair and reasonable.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are these allowances as liberal as in the Act that went through to-day in regard to combines?

Mr. KING. Yes, the allowance is the same as that in the investigation of combines.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 192) to amend the Fisheries Act read a second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I might explain that this Bill, although four or five pages in length, is very largely a Bill correcting and slightly amending some clauses of the present Fisheries Act. This section 1, repeals subsection 4 of section 9 of the Fisheries Act, which reads: 'The holder of any such license shall not operate more than one whaling steamer in connection with the whale factory under license.' That particular section refers to the licensing of whale factories and the use of steamers. The custom hitherto on the Pacific coast has been to license factories about 100 miles apart, I think, and under the regulations the use of one steamer was permitted at one factory. By removing this clause from the Act it will be possible for the minister to permit the use of two steamers at one factory. On the coast it has been found that sometimes whales were not numerous in the vicinity of one factory, and it was desired that the steamer attached to that factory might be used at another factory. The object of striking out this clause is to permit the use of two steamers at one factory, and when that is done, one of the factories will be closed up.

Mr. BARNARD. As a matter of fact, have not factories on the Pacific coast been using two steamers in the past?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not at all. A factory can only use one steamer under its license.

Mr. BARNARD. I know that, but I wanted to know whether the minister knew as a matter of fact that factories had been using two steamers, evading the law or having had permission given.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department is not aware that the law has been evaded, and, of course, permission has not been given to evade the law.

On section 2, boundaries of estuary fishing.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is simply adding the three words, 'to do so,' which are placed there for the purpose of making the section more explicit.

On section 3, space between nets and dimensions of nets.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is simply to correct a clerical error. The word 'hundred' in the second line should be 'thousand.'

On section 4,

Mr. BRADBURY. What is that section?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This repeals section 22 of the Fisheries Act, and will stop fishing by rod and line at fish-ways.

On section 5,

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This will discontinue the practice of taking small trout for bait, which has been a privilege, I believe, in the past.

On section 6, no net or device to prevent passage of fish-screens to prevent escape.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The change in this section is the addition of the last three lines, 'providing that the minister may authorize the placing and maintaining of screens or other obstructions in streams to prevent the escape of fish held for breeding purposes. At present, ponds are used for breeding purposes under the law, and this is to provide that screens may be placed by permission of the minister where ponds are being so used.

Mr. CROSBY. Has the Bill been before the Fisheries Committee?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. CROSBY. Why?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Why, I cannot say except that the enactments of the Bill are of a very minor character, largely corrections in the present Fisheries Act.

Mr. CROSBY. It seems strange that it should not be sent to that committee whose members would have a better opportunity of ascertaining whether or not they approved of the Bill.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Bill has been circulated for several months and contains corrections of a minor character, and one or two slight amendments to the existing Act not of sufficient importance to be sent to the Committee on Fisheries. Then it is a government Bill and it is not the practice to refer all government Bills to a standing committee.

Mr. CROSBY. If it is to be understood that government measures in connection with Marine and Fisheries matters are not to be sent to the standing committee I am glad to know it, but I understood the reason for the appointment of the committee was to facilitate such matters by having all Bills pertaining to these matters referred to it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I trust my hon. friend will not interpret my remarks as meaning that government measures will not be referred to that committee. As a matter of fact the department has received great assistance from that committee, and will avail itself of that assistance on every possible occasion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the minister has not quite an adequate idea of the importance of the Bill in one respect at least. On section 15, the discussion of the regulations which have been agreed to should come up, and I would have thought it eminently proper that these regulations should be under investigation by the standing committee on Marine and Fisheries.

On section 7, closing of traps, &c., over Sunday.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The amendment is in the last three lines, providing for the closing of these fishing apparatus in such a way that fish cannot enter. It strengthens the clause.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Does this mean that it will not be permitted to allow a trap net to remain set over Sunday? It has not been usual to prevent a fisherman from leaving his trap net set. It is a very difficult net to move, it is large, it is put down with stakes, and anchors, and it is two days work to get the trap down. It would not be practicable to take it up over Sunday. I understand that this allows the closing of the trap so that no fish can get in on Sunday. What is the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Does this Bill affect the international waters?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Clause 15 authorizes the department to take authority to proclaim the bringing into force of the fishery regulations established under the International Fisheries treaty.

The only change in clause 7 is to allow the effective closing of all traps during the weekly close season so that fish cannot enter them at all. It has been pointed out that the closing of pound nets is the method adopted in the state of Washington, and that the same system has been used successfully in New Brunswick. It does not require the fishermen to remove the weirs or nets on Sunday, but simply to close them effectively.

Mr. CROSBY. The trouble we are having to understand this Bill simply shows that it should have been referred to the Fisheries Committee. It seems to me that the object of the last three lines is to prevent the fishermen from desecrating the Sabbath. If this Bill had been referred to the Fisheries Committee, it would save this House bothering with it.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I suggest that the last three lines of this section will not help the case at all so far as they are intended to preserve the fish from being taken in traps during the close season:

All sedentary fishing stations and weirs, all pounds and trap-nets, seines, gill-nets and other apparatus used for catching fish, whether under license or not, should be so raised or adapted as to admit of the free passage of fish through, by, or out of such apparatus, or be so effectively closed as to completely obstruct and prevent the entrance of fish into such apparatus.

If this matter had been referred, as suggested, to the Committee on Fisheries, I think that some members of that committee would have been able to show to the minister how that clause must fail of beneficial effect. While it provides that the traps themselves shall be closed, it makes no provision to prevent the fish getting into the leads, which are commonly about half a mile long, and into which the fish go and from which they do not return. So the effect of this provision is virtually to give continuous fishing to the traps. We have had experience of that in the past few years where the trap fishermen on Puget Sound have fished continuously because of a provision such as this. I know that the minister has in his department evidence of the effect of this provision on the Puget Sound traps, and I would ask him whether it would not be well to strike out the last three lines, and make this Act provide absolutely that there shall be free passage through the traps during the close season.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My understanding of the effect of the statute as at present on the statute-book is that a fish trap has to be opened at one point in order to allow the fish to escape during the weekly close season. The addition provided by this amendment is that the entrance to the trap shall be closed so as completely to obstruct the entrance of the fish into the trap, and by preventing them from getting in, or permitting them when they are in to get out, during the weekly close season; that is what is contemplated by this amendment. That is the whole thing, it does not affect the hours of the close season. Previously, if fish got into the fish trap during the close season the trap was supposed to be open and the fish could get out. Under the present law the fish cannot be retained in the trap in the close season. The effect of this is to make it more difficult during the close season for fish to get into the traps.

Mr. CROSBY.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to know if this applies to fishing on the Atlantic coast as well as to British Columbia? It appears to me that it applies to all waters. It strikes me this is rather a stringent rule to impose upon the fisherman owning a trap, that during the prohibited hours from six o'clock in the afternoon of every Saturday to six o'clock on Monday morning in tidal waters, fishing cannot be allowed, and that the net must not be opened at all during those hours. That is a new provision that I never heard of before, and I think it will take away a very valuable privilege from the trap fishermen that they now possess. On the Atlantic coast there are a great number of them.

Mr. DANIEL. The hon. member is quite mistaken as to its being a new provision, it is a provision of the law now. The only change in this clause is in the phraseology, that is all.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This has been the law for years. The clause is the same as it is in the present Act, except the last three lines, which simply make it more difficult for the fish to get into the trap; that is the only change we are making. We are simply trying to limit the catching of fish in traps during the present close season—we are not changing the close season at all. We are trying to make the Act more effective, and trying to make a regulation that will prevent the fish from getting into the trap, and to allow them the chance to get out if they should get in. The law contemplates that there shall be during every week a close season, and it is because the present fixtures in the trap are not perfect, and because the fish are caught in traps and retained there, and the aperture is not open for them to get out—those are the reasons the department has thought it advisable to say that the fishermen must effectually close their traps so that the fish cannot get in. There can be no doubt of the necessity for conserving the fish by permitting them to have one day's rest at all events, so that no trap or net will take them. This has been the law for years and years. It may not have been effective, and it may not be under this amendment properly enforced, but that is the intention. We want to make it a little more possible to enforce the law.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not think the minister has answered the contention raised by my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Taylor). This lead is from half a mile to three-quarters of a mile long, and while the trap may be closed the lead practically holds all the fish there, and as soon as the trap is opened fish which have congregated all Sunday will move into the trap. It is absolutely necessary in the interest of the fisheries that the fish should have free passage one day in a week. If the fishery department wants to make this law effective there must be more than the closing of the trap; the lead must be closed also.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I quite understand that the point raised is important particularly on the Pacific coast. The leads leading up to the traps in the Pacific ocean are very long, and no doubt keep back a large number of fish. I may say, however, that nine-tenths of the Canadian salmon caught in traps in the Pacific ocean are caught in American traps on the American side of the boundary, and that there these leads are in use. We have in British Columbia very few traps indeed, not a quarter as many as they have on the American side. I am informed that this amendment that we are putting into the Fishery Act, and which will apply to all Canada, was approved of by the Fishery Commission, and will apply also to the traps on the Pacific ocean. This is an attempt to make the taking of fish in traps during the close season more difficult than formerly. In the fishery regulations which have been drafted by the fishery Commissioners of Canada and the United States, there are some regulations in regard to trap fishing and this is one of the provisions of these regulations. This is the best we can do as between Canadian and American fishermen in regard to international waters. It is a very desirable addition to this clause. I am sure that what the House and every person interested in the fisheries wants is to conserve the fisheries, and if there is a close season for one day in the week, which may be Sunday or any other day, the whole object and intention is to make that closed day effective so that fish will not be taken in traps.

Mr. BRADBURY. I agree with the minister that everybody who has any interest in the fisheries, must admit that there should be one day in the week during which fish cannot be taken, but I contend that the contention raised by my hon. friend from New Westminster is absolutely correct, that as long as these trap nets are allowed to remain in the water, and these long leads are allowed to remain down while the trap is not catching fish, the fish are congregating there, and when the trap is opened next day the fish that would have passed through, if the lead had been opened or up, will simply find their way into the trap. I can understand very well that this amendment is a step in the right direction, but I contend that it does not go far enough. The leads to the trap nets should be lifted during the day when fishing is not allowed. If that had been taken up with the International Commission it should have been arranged, because I understand that on the coast the Americans are really getting our Canadian fish. The amendments you are proposing I do not think will be effective to a very great extent as far as protecting our fish are concerned. While you do not fish on Sunday the fish are congregating there and they will go into the trap on Monday.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would like to point out that the addition which the minister has made to the section renders it absolutely inoperative in so far as providing a weekly closed season is concerned, and that before he added anything to it it was an effective provision. It was provided that the fish should pass freely through the traps at all times. Now, it simply erects a barrier against which the fish may congregate while the trap is not supposed to be in operation and where they will remain until the hour comes for the lifting of the gate of the trap when all the fish will go in and be caught. The remedy is very simple. If the government does not think it wise to provide that there must be a free passageway through the traps, there is another device by which they can effect a close season and that is to provide that there shall be an opening in the lead through which the fish will pass when they find their way barred by the gate of the trap. The International Fisheries Commission recognized that when they were dealing with fish other than the salmon of the Pacific coast. Unfortunately it is true that the provision that they have made with regard to Pacific coast salmon is not effective. We seem to have deferred to the American greed for the catching of fish without respect to the effect on the industry, and we have allowed them to make a provision with respect to the Puget Sound for continuous fishing. But, with regard to Ontario, they have made an effective regulation which I see no reason for not applying to the Pacific coast. The Ontario regulation reads as follows:

> During this weekly close season, all weirs or other fixed apparatus used for the capture of salmon shall be so raised, closed, or adapted as to admit of the free passage of fish through, or by, or out of such weirs or other fixed apparatus.

There is an effective provision. What I want to know is why we cannot have a provision so simple and so effective as that under the general operation of the law so that it may apply to the traps in Ontario, the maritime province and British Columbia alike.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think that a careful perusal of this section will show that exactly what the hon. member for New Westminster wants is provided for. The trap may be either closed or opened, whichever way is the more effective.

Mr. BRADBURY. The trap?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The trap may be either opened or closed:

It shall be so raised or adapted as to admit of the free passage of fish through, by, or out of such apparatus, or be so effectively closed as to completely obstruct and prevent the entrance of fish into such apparatus, whether under license or not.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Is it at the option of the trap operator or the fishery officer that it shall be opened or closed?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This amendment is recommended by the British Columbia Fishery Commission.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. At whose option is this?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am stating that this amendment is on the recommendation of the British Columbia Fish Commission. The same regulation has been adopted by the American commissioner in the state of Washington. It would seem to me from the reading of the clause, that it will be at the option of the party operating the trap, and I would at once concede to my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Taylor) that if the House thinks it desirable to make it at the option of the fishery inspector I am prepared to do so The most effective way to close the trap is to have it at the option of the fishery overseer, who will see that the trap is open or closed as the case may be.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. If the minister makes it at the option of the fishery inspector and not the trap operator, for myself I can see no objection to it.

Mr. BRADBURY. In that is involved the important question that our legislation on the Canadian side should be uniform with the American legislation. Unfortunately, for many years the Americans have always got the best of us in this respect, and if we make our law stringent and allow the Americans to have theirs as lax as they like, they will get the salmon and we wont. The concession which the minister offers to make is undoubtedly a proper one, but if we make our fishery officer responsible for seeing that the traps should be opened or closed then there should be some pressure brought to bear on the American authorities to have a similar regulation on their side. We have been protecting the fish in Canadian waters, but the Americans have been fishing how and when they like, and that is a great hardship to Canadian fishermen. If we cannot induce the American fish commissioners to meet our Canadian regulations, then a good deal of our work for fish preservation is useless.

Mr. CROSBY. If this Bill is of such a simple character as the minister has stated, and if we have had practically the same law on the statute-book for a great many years, no interest can suffer by allowing the Bill to stand over for another session, and referring it to the fisheries commission, so that we may ascertain the conditions both here and in the United States, and try to make uniform the regulations of both countries.

Mr. DANIEL. How would this legislation affect the regulations issued by the National Fisheries Commissioners in respect to fishing in international waters? I presume that the regulations made by that commission, being the result of a treaty, will have priority over any law we may pass.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Taylor) will see the force of the observations of the hon. member for Selkirk, that it would be discriminatory to make more drastic regulations on the Canadian side than exist on the American side. The International Fisheries Commissioners have agreed to certain regulations, and this regulation now proposed is the regulation on the American side. If, as I proposed, we should make this provision enforcible by the Canadian inspector on the Canadian side, and the American inspectors on the American side have not the enforcement of it, we would be subjecting our fishermen to more stringent regulations than the Americans would operate under. Perhaps it is better to leave this clause as it is. We are working under extraordinary difficulties, particularly on the Pacific coast, with regard to our fisheries. The Americans catch our fish when passing through their waters, as they have a perfect right to do, and they catch them in their own way. They have been catching fish for a great many years in traps without comparatively speaking any regulations at all, while we on our side have been enforcing stringent regulations. Under the proposed agreement with the United States, what are practically the Canadian regulations have been adopted by the International Commission, and they will be enforced so soon as they are proclaimed the law on both sides.

Mr. BRADBURY. This Bill would in no way limit the conclusions arrived at by that commission?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I have a doubt whether the traps used on the Atlantic coast are capable of being closed. I am not a practical fisherman, but I have seen the traps, and as I understand it there is no machinery for closing them, so that you would require a trap differently constructed from that now used in order to comply with this regulation.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I sympathize with the Minister of Fisheries in the difficulty in which he is placed, for I think it must be admitted that he has at last let the cat out of the bag. We are not in this section doing anything to help to conserve the salmon, but we are facing the position that by our international agreement with the Americans we have sanctioned their deliberate intention to have no close season so far as traps are concerned; and having sanctioned that, we have amended our own law so that we shall not do on the Canadian side of the boundary what by international agreement we sanctioned on the other side. I think this is a most deplorable condition, a condition that is bound to work great hardship on the great mass of Canadians engaged in the salmon fishery industry to the extent that we are relaxing the law and giving sanction to continuous trap-fishing by the section now proposed. We should strenuously refuse to make any change in our law, but should insist upon our regulation, which experience has shown to be so advisable, to the extent, if necessary, of allowing these international regulations to fall to the ground because of the reluctance of this parliament to adopt them. I say that in all seriousness, because so far as we on the Pacific coast are concerned, we are apt to experience nothing but calamity from the operation of those regulations. On every point they are against us, most seriously against us. I will not discuss them now, because they come in under section 15; but there are other sections quite as disastrous to us as this section 7, which in two lines destroys the only prohibition we have had in the past against continuous trap fishing.

On section 9, fish guards in British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Northwest territories and Yukon.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is the clause as it stands at present that the words 'British Columbia' are introduced, making the law applicable to that province.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not know that there is any other clause in this Bill which will give me the opportunity of drawing the minister's attention to the fact that in the construction of the dam on the Red river at St. Andrew's rapids there is no provision for a fishway. This is a very serious trouble. The dam is situated 25 or 30 miles from Lake Winnipeg, and completely prevents the fish from getting up the river. I had the matter before the Fsheries Department, and I had the assurance of the deputy that immediate action would be taken and a proper fishway placed there. During the time the Minister of Public Works was passing his estimates, I called his attention to the matter, but the only assurance I received from him was that if a fishway were found necessary it would be placed there. I think it is absolutely necessary, because at present no fish from Lake Winnipeg can pass up the Red river or the Assinaboine. I would urge the minister to see that a proper fishway is provided there immediately.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I quite agree with what my hon. friend says. This clause has nothing to do with fishways; but if the ascent of the fish up the Red river is prevented by the dam, there should be an adequate fishway provided. We have many instances of the same kind in British Columbia, where dams have been erected and have stopped the passage of fish. I am a strong believer in allowing the free run of fish on all rivers. Natural spawning after all is better than artificial, and ought to be encouraged. The officer of the department has informed me that the matter to which my hon. friend has referred is receiving the consideration of the department now.

On section 11, standard size of oyster barrel.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I move to strike out section 11. Some legislation is required to standardize the size of barrels for various purposes, but it belongs to the Trade and Commerce Department rather than to the Fisheries Department. Not having full information as to what the standard of a barrel of oysters should be, it has been decided to leave the matter over for this session.

Mr. TALBOT. When this Bill was up before, I drew the attention of the minister to the great destruction of bar fish in the St. Lawrence river. I do not see anything in this Bill relating to this particular matter, but I would like to know whether the department has taken any steps to prevent the destruction of the bar fish. It seems to me that some very simple mode could be adopted. I have drawn the attention of Prof. Prince and other officials of the department to the great destruction of that fish. Thousands are taken every year of a very small size that is almost not fit for food, and I think something should be done to prevent this scandalous destruction of one of our finest fishes. I think the department should take action. There are two or three ways in which it could be done. The size of the fish to be caught could be limited or the weight. I know that in the province of Quebec there is a conflict of authority between the provincial fishery authorities and the federal authorities, but it seems to me that something ought to be done. It is really a very strong grievance; I would almost say it was a national disaster to have that fish destroyed by the thousands every year. It is not utilized for any purpose. The peddlers simply go from fishery to fishery, and are even ashamed to go to the market, but the fish is distributed on the highway and in the back parishes. I wish the minister would see whether he could do something to prevent the destruction of that very valuable fish.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that the matter is one for the province of Quebec. The fishery is under their control, and the taking of this fish comes under the regulations of the province of Quebec and not under the regulations of the Dominion government. I may also inform my hon. friend that the matter has been the subject of correspondence between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the province of Quebec, and there is some reasonable prospect of an arrangement whereby the bar fish will be protected more than it has been in the past. I am told that the result of the correspondence so far has been encouraging, and it is hoped that something will be done to prevent the destruction of what is a valuable fish.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 216) respecting the British Northwestern Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. A. Haggart.

RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION.

House in committee on Bill (No. 210) to incorporate the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada.—Mr. Gervais.

On section 1,

Mr. ROCHE. I would like a few words of explanation on this Bill. I had not the privilege of being present at the meetings of the committee except on one occasion when a Bill somewhat similar to this was up for discussion, and was, I believe, opposed very strenuously by the same gentlemen who are seeking incorporation under this Bill. I refer to the co-operative Bill which was killed in committee, largely I believe by reason of the strong fight put up against it by the Retailers' Association. What a good many cannot understand is how it is that the Retail Merchants' Association fought that Bill so strenuously, and refused incorporation to the consumers, whereas they are themselves seeking incorporation for a somewhat similar purpose in the Bill now before the House. Grain Growers Guide which voices the opinion of the farmers, the consuming population very largely in the west, says:

The Retail Merchants' Association did not want to see the co-operative Bill pass the House of Commons. They wanted it killed, and it was killed. The Bill would have allowed consumers throughout Canada to organize among themselves for fair play if they so desired, and would protect them against unjust prices on the part of all dealers. This Bill being killed leaves the consumers in the same helpless condition as they were before. The Retail Merchants' Association is getting busy, and has a Bill before the Senate to incorporate itself to do business. This is certainly 'doing things' with a vengeance. The consumers of Canada may not be allowed to co-operate, but the retail merchants want to become incorporated so that they can form a trust similar to the one existing in the United States. Down across the line it is considered that the retailers are more to blame for the high cost of living than probably any other organization. Are we going to sit by and see them do the same thing in Canada? We doubt if the farmers and consumers will stand for this.

I am not in a position to vouch for the accuracy of every statement contained in this paragraph, but I would like some explanation from the promoter to explain away some of these statements if they can be explained away. The accusation here made against the Retailers' Association would seem reasonable, that having objected to the incorporation of the Co-operative Society under that Bill, they are seeking under this Bill extensive powers which they would deny to the consuming population. In another issue of the Grain Growers 'Guide,' appears this article:

The Retail Merchants' Association has been successful in killing the co-operative Bill before the House of Commons. This is the Bill that would have allowed the consumers of Canada to do their own business and protect themselves from exorbitant prices on the part of the retailers. Following up their victory the retail merchants have now a Bill before the Senate to provide for their own incorporation. This will give them the powers of a trust, as one of the powers given by the Bill is: 'the promotion of the industrial and commercial interests of the retail merchants of Canada,' and another is: 'generally, all such other lawful objects for promoting the trade interests of its members as may from time to time be determined by the association'.

As will be seen by this clause they are very indefinite in their terms, and the Bill may cover great powers. I would like an explanation of the details to which I have drawn attention.

Mr. GERVAIS. I do not see how there can be confusion between the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, and the Co-operative Societies which some of the hon. members would have liked to have seen formed under an Act introduced in this House. The co-operative societies of which the hon. gentleman has just spoken were commercial societies trying to benefit themselves commercially to the utter detriment of other classes, and of the masses of the country. These co-operative societies in a general way were purely and simply commercial societies, organized for the purpose of trespassing on the ground of the consumers of trespassing on the ground of the retail merchants, and on the ground of the wholesale merchants of Canada. If I am allowed to define the object of this society, I will be able to show that the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada is more a philanthropic than a commercial society. The contrary was proved in reference to the so-called co-operative societies of Canada, for which incorporation was sought from this House. Let me quote for example from section 2 of the present Bill, defining the objects of our society:

The objects of the association shall be the promotion of the industrial and commercial interests of the retail merchants of Canada.

I may assure you that the Retail Merchants Association of Canada are not trying to derive financial benefit from the good work they wish to be enabled to do in the interests of all, because I think the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada as well as the wholesale merchants of Canada have done more for the progress, and the prosperity of Canada than any other class.

An hon. MEMBER. No, no.

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes, yes. If Montreal is something more than a little village, it is due to the marvellous audacity and tenacity of its wholesale and retail merchants, and the same remark may be made applicable to all the cities of our country. I shall try to explain to you in a few words what has been done in the past in relation to the promotion of the industrial and commercial interests by the retail merchants of Canada. For instance they have dealt with the abolishing of trading stamps, coupons in packages, and of all lotteries and merchandizing schemes; the adjustment of taxation, both municipal and provincial; the regulating of the hours of closing; advising and consulting on city by-laws regarding awnings, clean streets, the regulation of signs, &c. That has been one part of the work which the Retail Merchants' Association has been doing for fourteen years, for that society was incorporated fourteen years ago. Let me also say the association has been promoting all that time fair adjustments of freight rates, express charges, increase and decrease of duties on parcel posts; prosecuting fraudulent advertisements and sales, and adulterations of goods. The association has been also publishing information and statistics relating to, or concerning trade interests, such as supplying the Dominion government with the number of retail merchants doing business in Canada, the amount of their investments therein, the taxes paid by them, their employees and the amount of goods sold for cash or credit. This information is not supplied officially in any department from other sources.

Let me now speak of the arbitration and settlement of trade disputes between any of its members. For instance, the farmers who produced milk met not long ago, and they made a hard and fast rule that unless the retail milk dealers bought milk at their price that they would simultaneously cut off all milk supplies by them in Toronto, and the retail milk dealers appealed to their members, and the latter decided to arbitrate, which was done, and it resulted in a fair, compromise, so that the farmer, the retailer and the consumer received fair treatment. The working tailors also decided to strike, and their case was settled by the association, and entire harmony now exists among them. They have settled also disputes with regard to whether merchants sold the quality of goods to their customers that they represented them to be, also a great many other technical trade matters.

The procuring and furnishing to its members of information as to the solvency of persons who deal with any of its members. For instance, it is estimated that about 75 per cent of the retail sales made from day to day are made on credit. This means an enormous sum of money, and no matter how the condition is viewed, this system in my opinion, will continue, as it is more convenient for the housekeeper, and in many cases for the storekeeper, especially when orders are sent in, as a great many now are, over the telephone. There are some people who make it a practice to live on the storekeepers, and they have no moral sense of what is right. In many cases workingmen are out of work, especially in the winter time; others are absolutely honest and they meet with misfortune—to all these credit is extended, but those who deceive us are placed on a list, and if they will not pay, and it is thought they should, this acts as an incentive for them to be honest. The deserving ones are assisted through the organized associated charities, which are mostly conducted and contributed to by the retail merchants. Whereever possible they put themselves in touch with the ministers, preachers and priests and rectors of parishes regarding these people, and they have helped hundreds to help themselves.

'Generally, all other lawful and similar objects for promoting the trade interests of its members as may from time to time be determined by the association.' This clause applies to all of the preceding, and the words 'lawful and similar,' in our opinion, is quite sufficient to safeguard all concerned. No possible danger can come out of this charter, as everything that is acted upon must be first voted upon, and in the association are some of the most upright men in the community, men who are looked up to by the people and who occupy public positions such as mayors, reeves, magistrates, justices of the peace—men who hold high positions in the churches, on school boards and in other public capacities, and it would, therefore, be almost impossible to get them to impose upon the community anything that was unfair, and especially upon the consumers, who are their friends and customers. All the other clauses refer to the details regarding the rules of the association. I admit that they have been trying to do something in the interest of the retail merchants, but, their efforts have been more especially in the interests of the consumers and the general public. You will see by paragraph (b) of section 2 that the association asks for power to collect and publish information and statistics relating to or concerning such interests. Well, you will find in the work of the association that it has been for 14 years supplying the Dominion government with statistics as to the number of retail merchants who are doing business in Canada the amount of money invested, the taxes paid, and the sales on cash and for credit. I shall not detain the House by defining what is done under each of these paragraphs of section 2; I say they show in a summary way what are the aims and objects of this association. I think I have said enough to demonstrate that the association is more a benevolent than a commercial society, and that there is no danger to any class in the country or to the public interest in the little Bill which is now before the House.

Mr. NEELY. Will the hon. gentleman tell us why this association needs to be incorporated by an Act of this parliament for the purposes which are set out in the Bill. According to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) this is a voluntary association which has been carrying on this beneficial work for a number of years, and why then do they want an Act of incorporation from this parliament?

Mr. GERVAIS. The answer is that the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada was incorporated 14 years ago by a statute of the Ontario legislature, and, the Ontario association has been promoting its objects throughout the different provinces, but in some cases they have been confronted with the fact that the local association will not pay anything towards the good work. The Ontario association was always of the opinion that it would be more fitting that a general association should be formed under the charter of which the local branches should be forced to do their work when they are willing to enter the general association. This is merely the incorporation of a few retail merchants' associations for the benefit of all.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Why don't you seek incorporation under the provincial law?

Mr. GERVAIS. Trade and commerce are regulated by the parliament of Canada, and if the association is chartered by this parliament they will be better enabled to carry on their work.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But this is not trade and commerce, it is a benevolent association.

Mr. GERVAIS. Our association does not intend to do any trade or to interfere with the business of anybody in the land; it is simply a benevolent society.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I do not know that anybody can take serious objection to the incorporation of a retail merchants' association as a Dominion institution, but it is important to point out to the House that the very gentleman who led the attack against the incorporation of co-operative societies in this House, is the very gentleman who is promoting the incorporation of this retail merchants' association. And the same corporation that engaged that gentleman to do that work in their interests at that time are evidently employing him at the present time.

Mr. GERVAIS. I rise to a point of order. I wish to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) that I never was retained by the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada to do such work. What I am doing is I believe, in the public interest.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I said that the hon. gentleman was engaged by the Retail Merchants' Association to promote their interests against the Co-operation Bill. I would not suspect that my hon. friend would for one moment be retained further than that he was willing to use his influence to combat the principle of co-operation in the interests of the retail merchants' association. Now, I would point out that every reason which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) gave against the Co-operative Bill is given by him now as a reason in support of this Bill. He argued that the Co-operative Society should be incorporated in the several provinces, that it was not a Dominion organization, that it should not be recognized as a Dominion corporation, that it should be continued as a provincial work and so on. I would also point out to the hon. gentleman, and every one of these applies to his retail merchants' association, that this Bill provides that the retail merchants association shall hold real property, and that it shall carry on business in other respects.

Mr. GERVAIS. The fact is that section 6 of this Bill has only one purpose, namely, to enable the corporation to purchase and hold property notwithstanding the laws of mortmain. We are bound by the enactment of mortmain in this country, and to get over that even a benevolent society has to be authorized by parliament to possess real estate. As a matter of fact, the hon. gentleman cannot find in section 6 anything which tends to show that the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada intends to engage in any kind of trading. They simply want to be empowered to possess real property, the amount of which is strictly limited by the section.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Section 6 of this Bill provides that this association may carry on all kinds of business, and the same provision in the Co-operation Bill was vigorously opposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais). It does seem to me that the Co-operative Society was much more entitled to do a Dominion business between its own members than this society to deal with the general public. The same hon. gentleman who is promoting this Bill did everything he could to prevent the co-operative movement. Section 7 of this Bill provides for the acquisition of property of voluntary associations, and that means that this incorporated body is getting power to provide for the purchase of the societies that may not be able to exist when the organization of this society is completed. The provisions of section 7 give the necessary power to acquire property to a society that may not be able to operate as a consequence of this organization, and therefore, you create a practical monopoly of the Retail Grocers' Association. My hon. friend may shake his head, but there is the section that provides for the possession of that property. I have no serious objection to the incorporation of any society of this kind, but it is a very unfair thing for a responsible member of this House to object all he could to the organization of a voluntary institute that sought powers from this parliament simply to do business with its own members, when he is now in favour of granting far more extensive powers to an organization that seeks to do business with the whole country.

Mr. NEELY. This seems a very extraordinary Bill to bring in towards the close of this session in view of what occurred somewhat earlier in connection with those co-operative Bills that have been mentioned by my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith). My hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) who is supporting this Bill has not made clear to my mind any good reason why the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada ought to be incorporated by an Act of this parliament. As my hon. friend from Nanaimo has said, the same hon. gentleman opposed the formation of co-operative societies that merely had in view the mutual benefit of their own members, taking as one of his grounds that the provinces should deal with a matter of that kind. But, if the objects of this association are as innocent as my hon. friend stated, it seems to me that he has given no reason, no ground whatever, why this Bill should be put through this House. They have been carrying on practically all the work they propose to carry on under the terms of section 2 of this Bill as a voluntary association, and I see a lurking menace in this Bill against the interests of the consumers of this country. It seems to me that this Retail Merchants' Association, if it is incorporated in this way, might become a monopoly. We have spent a great deal of time in this House, to-day, and on other days, in passing a Bill with which to protect the consumers of this country from monopolies and trusts. I do not see any reason, if this association is incorporated by Act of parliament, why it may not become a menace to the consumers of Canada in so far as the regulation of retail prices is concerned. The promoter of the Bill may say that this cannot be, that the Bill that we have already put through the House will prevent it, but there are ways and means—underground ways and means—whereby these incorporated associations are able to do things, and it is very difficult to find them out or catch them in the act. One of the subsections of section 2 gives another object of this association as the arbitration and settlement of trade disputes arising between any of its members. We have an Industrial Disputes Act on the statute-books already. I do not know that we ought to delegate to the Retail Grocers' Association any such powers as this whatever. It seems to me that a general Act dealing with that question is quite sufficient. The co-operative Bills that were before this House some time ago were smothered in committee. I was not a member of the committee that dealt with those Bills, and I regret very much that the Bills were not reported to the House. I say frankly that I am opposed to this Bill. I am opposed to it for one reason besides those which I have already given, and that is because this very retail grocers' association were the people who were practically instrumental in the defeat of the co-operative societies Bills. I believe those Bills were in the interest of the consumers, the farmers and the workingmen of this country, and yet we had a large delegation of these retail grocers and other retail tradesmen of this Dominion who came here and brought every influence to bear on the committee that dealt with these Bills for the purpose of smothering them. They were smothered, and I say that it is only fair that this Bill, which is introduced by the people who are responsible for the destruction of the other Bills, should be accorded like treatment and sent to oblivion along with the co-operative societies Bills.

Mr. GERVAIS. I must say a word in answer to a statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely). It is rather a queer argument to say that we must kill this Bill because another Bill has been considered bad by the House or by one of its committees. I have not had a long experience in parliamentary life, but I know enough to say that each measure must be adjudicated upon with reference to its own individual merits and not with reference to a question of personality or of individuality which has nothing to do with the measure.

Mr. NEELY. What about precedent?

Mr. GERVAIS. There is no precedent. The Co-operative Bill was justly killed because it was against the public interest. It was so considered by the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and every other Bill which contains provisions which are regarded as a menace to the trade of the country will be considered in a similar way. But here we have a Bill in which a very important class of people are simply seeking for incorporation and nothing else. It is idle to assert that through this Bill there is any intention of doing any trade, and more especially of creating any kind of monopoly. Any gentleman who has any experience in business or of the law will support my contention that through this Bill the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada are merely asking for a charter of incorporation. I will leave it to the interpretation of any lawyer or business man of unbiased mind. Fortunately or unfortunately I have been fighting the Co-operative Bill. I did it because I had had sufficient experience to convince me that it was a bad Bill, and it was so held unanimously by the members of the Banking and Commerce Committee. I say this is a good Bill, that it is a Bill that is in accordance with the public laws, that it is a Bill which is in accordance with the constitution of 1867, and that it is a Bill which should pass, as we are bound to give any charter in answer to any demand which is made upon this House in accordace with the laws of the country and in accordance more especially with the rules of equity and justice.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I may say that if there was a possibility of this association going into trade, I would feel like my hon. friend from Humbolt (Mr. Neely), but if it is simply an institution that we are incorporating the same as we might incorporate the butchers' association, or the wholesale grocers' association, or the corn exchange, or any other exchange of that kind, there can be no objection to it. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) says it is not to carry on trade of any kind there can be no objection to it.

Mr. STRATTON. The powers which this company are applying for here can be acquired by them under the provisions of the Ontario Company's Act. I had for a time charge of the administration of the Ontario Company's Act, and my impression is that the powers asked for here may be obtained by order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. This is purely a matter which should come under the jurisdiction of the different provinces, and if this association desires to exceed the boundaries of any particular province they can obtain registration and do business in the different provinces of the Dominion. This is certainly not a Bill which should be enacted in this parliament.

Mr. ROCHE. There is another feature of this Bill to which I wish to call the attention of the promoter. I know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) is very plausible in his plea that this retail association is a purely philanthropic institution, but I draw his attention to a very innocent little subclause (a) of section (3) which says:

> The association may make by-laws for: (a) the administration, management and control of the property, business, and other affairs of the association.

Now, in the Act for the incorporation of the Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Timiskaming which passed this House this session, there was an almost word for word subclause which read:

> The administration, management and control of the property, business and other temporal affairs of the corporation.

And this House felt it incumbent upon it to safeguard the interests of the people, and in order that under that clause they might not engage in banking or business of any kind, the following amendment was added to that subclause:

> That after the word 'corporation' the following be inserted: nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the corporation to issue any notes or bills payable, or any promissory note intended to circulate as money, or as the note or bill of a bank, or to engage in the business of banking or insurance.

If the hon. gentleman is willing to accept such an amendment as that, for my part I am willing with that safeguard to let go through this innocent Bill for a benevolent purpose, as he describes it to be. Let us put in this Bill that amendment which is inserted in the other Bill which was to incorporate an institution much less liable to be a detriment to the public than this retail merchants' association.

Mr. GERVAIS. I join issue with the hon. member (Mr. Roche) on the ground that the amendment incorporated in the other Bill was useless, because any corporation which does anything not authorized by its charter would be compelled to desist by a writ of quo warranto issued upon information. That amendment was just as useless in that other Bill as it would be to insert in a law creating a public officer, a proviso that he should never be Emperor of Germany, or to insert in the Act incorporating the Railway Commission that none of the commissioners should ever become Emperor of Russia.

Mr. ROCHE. That is a reflection on the House of Commons.

Mr. GERVAIS. It was an absurd and useless provision to insert in the Bill in question. If my hon. friend would look at clause 2 of the Bill he will find that the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada cannot do any trade or business at all, and if they should try to do it then they would be prohibited by writ of quo warranto issued on behalf of the Crown upon the information of the Attorney General. At any rate we can take up the discussion of these matters when we come to the particular clauses referring to them.

Mr. NESBITT. I would like to ask the hon. member why he requires clause 6 which reads:

> The association may receive, acquire, accept and hold real property by gift, purchase, devise, bequest, lease or otherwise, for the purposes of the association, and may sell, lease, invest or otherwise dispose thereof in such manner as it may deem advisable for such purposes: Provided, however, that the annual value of the real estate held by the association shall not exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

Now, $50,000 per annum is a large amount of real estate for an ordinary association formed for benevolent purposes to hold. The phrase 'the purposes of the association' in that clause may be very widely construed. I would like to correct the hon. member for Humboldt in his reference to the Co-operation Bill. The Retail Merchants' Association were not heard before that committee at all. They had a solicitor there to represent them, but he was refused to he heard by the committee, and in the view of the committee, one of the Bills in connection with that matter was considered to be impossible as drawn and that is why it was thrown out.

Mr GERVAIS. As a matter of fact the Retail Merchants' Association were not instrumental in the rejection of the Bill by the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Mr. NESBITT. Not in the slightest degree in any manner, shape or form.

Mr. GERVAIS. And the hon. member (Mr. Nesbitt) attended every sitting of that committee?

Mr. NESBITT. Yes, and their influence had no more to do with the rejection of that Bill than had the Emperor of China.

Mr. STRATTON. All legitimate powers sought for by this society can be obtained under the joint stock companies Acts of the different provinces. Some of the powers they apply for here would not be given them in the provinces, and why should we interfere with the rights of the provinces by incorporating this company here. I am quite satisfied in my own mind that this legislation has some other purpose than that which appears on the face of it. They can obtain all the power necessary for carrying on legitimate business from the provincial secretaries of the different provinces.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. If we allow this Bill to go through, it will give these people power to form the largest combine that has ever been known in Canada. I am a retail merchant myself, and I am satisfied that this Bill will give the retail merchants power to form themselves into associations to restrict the number of stores in each little town throughout the whole country. They will be able to control prices and to restrict trade all over Canada. The hon. gentleman who has introduced the Bill says that the wholesale people of Montreal are practically a benevolent society. I want to say that I have bought thousands of dollars worth of goods from the wholesale people of Montreal, and I have never seen any sign of that so far.

Section 1 struck out.

Mr. GERVAIS. Before the question is put, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. SPROULE. The Chairman has declared the first section lost.

Mr. GERVAIS. I move that we reconsider the first clause.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I cannot accept that motion at this stage. If the hon. gentleman wishes to withdraw his motion that the committee rise and report progress, he can do so.

Motion of Mr. Gervais that the committee rise and report progress withdrawn.

Mr. GERVAIS. I move that the first clause be reconsidered.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. GERVAIS. I now move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to and progress reported.

GUELPH JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Mr. GUTHRIE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 218), respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company.—Mr. Clarke (Essex).

Mr. BOYCE. I would ask the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill to make some explanation of it. I think it calls for some explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the promoter is not here.

Mr. BOYCE. Then the hon. member for South Wellington had better ask that the Bill stand.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am not in charge of the Bill, but it is one that affects the constituency that I have the honour to represent, and I think it ought certainly to go to the Railway Committee. That committee meets on Thursday, and it is just possible that it may not have another meeting this session. I do not know another instance in which a private Bill has stood under such circumstances, and I would ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his request, and let the Bill go to the committee and be considered there. It is a Bill that has already passed the Senate. If a brief statement is wanted, I think I could perhaps outline the situation. This is a Bill practically in the interest of the city of Guelph, whereby that city asks for the right to take over all stock in this company which may be outstanding. The city of Guelph is practically the owner of a small road sixteen miles long, running from the city to the Canadian Pacific railway, constructed by the city of Guelph in 1888 at a cost of about a quarter of a million dollars, at the request of a number of gentlemen who claimed that they must have competition, as we had only the Grand Trunk railway at Guelph at that time. It was necesary that some men should qualify to be directors, and ten men took ten shares each in the common stock of the company, on which they paid $100 each. It turned out that the road cost more than was anticipated, and the city asked that the ten gentlemen should pay up the balance on their shares, which they refused to do, claiming that they held the stock as trustees for the city. The ratepayers finally passed a by-law to pay the indebtedness and relieve the shareholders from payment of the balance upon their stock and the stock-holders agreed to hold their stock as trustees for the city. The city assented to this, but allowed them to hold one share each and continue on the board. The road is indebted yet in respect of its bonds to the extent of between $60,000 and $70,000, but since it has been continued to Goderich by the Canadian Pacific railway it has become a very good earning proposition for the city of Guelph. Four or five of the shares originally held by these trustees are still outstanding. All the others have transferred their interests to the city and have received their $100 and $300 by way of bonus—$400 in all for the $100 that they had paid. Four or five have refused to hand over their shares, and this Bill, I understand, is to compel the transfer of these shares on the payment of the sum of $400 and also to permit the city to issue stock to represent the $70,000 of indebtedness still on the bonds.

Mr. SPROULE. Originally who paid for these shares?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The individuals who subscribed $100 each.

Mr. SPROULE. The individuals subscribed and paid.

Mr. GUTHRIE. They subscribed $100; the city then relieved them of $19,000 of indebtedness, and of the $900 which each was liable to pay on their call on signing the declaration that they held the shares as trustees for the city.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you are asking for the right to confiscate other people's property?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do not look upon it as confiscation. I have gone into the matter very carefully, and I am satisfied it is right. I think it would be far better to discuss it when the shareholders are before the committee, as they will be on Thursday.

Mr. BOYCE. In consenting to the second reading of this Bill we are necessarily adopting its principle, and in adopting the principle of this Bill we are adopting a very pernicious principle in respect to the legislation of this House. Let us look at clause 2, irrespective of any collateral circumstances.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend, but I am sure he wants to give this Bill fair treatment. There are only a few minutes left now, and there is only one more sitting before we prorogue. If he is reasonable at all he will allow it to go to the committee.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not like to have it insinuated that I am not giving this Bill fair treatment. I may say I do not think it was very fair treatment on the part of my hon. friend to slip in a motion to suspend the rule so as to get rid of the 24 hours' notice we ought to have had. This Bill was only introduced to the House last night for the first time.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I never heard of a motion of that kind until now.

Mr. BOYCE. This Bill was only read the first time last night, and but for the suspension of the rule, to the motion respecting which I fancy nobody paid any attention, my hon. friend would not be here to-night at all. Therefore, I do not think he can complain of any reasonable criticism upon his Bill, and I do not think I deserve, out of the mouth of my hon. friend, any such comment or charge that I have been obstructing or opposing any Bill which did not deserve, for some reason or another, to be opposed. I am speaking to the principle of the Bill, that principle which we are now asked to accept, and I want to say that if we commit ourselves to the principle of this Bill, we are committing ourselves to a very dangerous principle indeed, because as my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said, we virtually say to this minority of shareholders, those shareholders mentioned in section 2, you have got to sell your shares and you have got to deliver those shares at the valuation which parliament places upon them, irrespective of what their value may be to them in the future. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) himself has taken strong grounds with respect to the very same shares and to this very railway, grounds diametrically opposed to the legislation asked for under section 2. I propose to demonstrate that to him and then to satisfy him that I am not unnecessarily commenting upon what I conceive to be a pernicious principle in this Bill. What is the principle to which we are asked to subscribe? The corporation of the city of Guelph may, subject to the laws of Ontario, acquire any shares in the company not now standing in the name of the city, and the said corporation is hereby empowered and declared to be entitled to acquire the said shares of the company's stock from the several persons in whose names the shares stand or may stand, and to have transfers thereof made by such persons respectively to the said corporation upon payment to such person respectively of the sum of $400 in respect of each one share fully paid up, or of each ten shares, upon which ten per cent only has been paid; and it shall be the duty of such persons respectively to transfer such shares to the said corporation accordingly. Now, speaking for myself, I cannot subscribe to any such principle as that, that part can take any beneficial ownership of shares or of any property as that section empowers that company to do, and say, here is your $400 for that stock, though it may be worth a thousand dollars, and I believe that each one of those shares is approximately worth $1,000. But whether it be worth only $400 or $450 a share, have we the right as a parliament, and if we have the right, should it be exercised in this way, to compel the shareholders of that company, who are not trustees, but who are beneficially entitled to their own shares, to give those shares up? My hon. friend himself says that nobody wanted to take their shares away from them, that their shares were their own. I say, can he come nine years later and say, that which I said we did not want to take away, I now want to take away. I say this is an interference with the rights of property. It is an interference with civil rights. It is an interference with the right of a party to retain his own shares.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the House again went into committee, and resumed consideration of Bill (No. 192) to amend the Fisheries Act.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 192) to amend the Fisheries Act.

On section 12,

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The only change in this section is that the return asked for should be sent to the minister through the inspector of fisheries for the district not later than the 31st day of May of each year, instead of not later than the 1st day of September, as in the Fisheries Act.

On section 13,

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The change in this clause is simply the addition of the words in the 24th and 28th lines 'or of any international regulation.'

Mr. CROSBY. It does seem that this Bill covers a great deal of ground, and we should have some lucid explanation of the whole matter. I cannot understand why the minister having the Bill in charge should come before this committee, and ask us to pass it without having sent it to the Committee on Fisheries. It seems a complicated Bill, and the further we get the more complicated it gets. There must be something in it or the Bill would not be here.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Clause 13 is precisely the law as it is at present with the addition of the words I have cited, 'of any international regulation,' making a violation of the international regulations when they are brought into force, a violation of the Act.

On section 14, penalty for violations.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The only change is the substitution of $1,000 for $100. The object in thus increasing the fine is that with some traps, particularly on the Pacific coast, it is possible for a trap owner to violate the law, and be fined $100, and still make money. The penalty was too small, and we are increasing it to $1,000 with that object especially in view.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Does this remove all other penalties that have been in force?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised it does not.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Does the minister think this fine of $1,000 will be sufficient to secure compliance with the law by the owners of traps?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The previous clause provides that all the property of a party violating the law may be confiscated. The $1,000 penalty is heavy, and it is deemed by the department to be sufficient. I do not think that owners of traps would violate the law very often if they were fined $1,000.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would suggest in addition that the license of the man who violates the law should be cancelled, and a renewal refused.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is a question of policy. The department can very properly refuse a renewal to a habitual violater of the law.

Mr. BRADBURY. In drafting a law with severe penalty, the cancellation of the license should be one of the penalties, so that a man would know what he was facing when he violated the law.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The law might be violated by a trap owner inadvertently, and it would be hardly proper to deprive him of a license when he was not guilty of intentional wrong-doing. However, as the power of renewal is absolutely in the hands of the department, it is believed that the interests of the government are sufficiently protected.

Mr. BRADBURY. When the minister reminds me of the fact that the discretion as to renewal lies absolutely in the hands of the department, and says that that should be a guarantee that the man would be punished, and the license not issued, I would recall some of our experiences on the inland lakes. Glaring violations of the law have been committed, and the officials in Selkirk and in the department here knew of it. An investigation was held costing this country $1,200, and after it had been demonstrated that the American fish interests were violating the law, fishing twice the amount of nets allowed, fishing when they liked, and how they liked, the tools of the American Fish Company, for the company had no status in Canada, got their licenses year after year just the same. It is cases of this kind that make a man on this side anxious that the penalty should be included right in the Bill so that we we will be sure of its enforcement and not have to depend on the officials to protect Canadian interests.

On section 15, International fishery regulations may be brought into force.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As the committee is aware, in the year 1908, a treaty was made between the United States and Canada, for the purpose of regulating the fisheries in the inland waters contiguous to the two countries. By that treaty, commissioners were appointed by both governments under article 3, to prepare and put into operation with as little delay as possible, regulations, restrictions and prohibitions, with appropriate penalties for breaches thereof. The day when they were to come into operation was to be fixed by concurrent proclamation of the Governor General of Canada, and of the President of the United States. In pursuance of that article of the treaty, representatives of the United States and of Canada have agreed to regulations governing fishing in international waters as set out in the treaty. The clause in this Bill is to give to the Governor in Council power to bring those regulations into force by proclamation as required by the treaty. The proclamation in Canada and the proclamation in the United States are to be issued concurrently. That is the only object of this clause. When the United States are ready to bring the regulations into force on their side of the line we want to be ready to proclaim the regulations on our side, and we have been advised by the Justice Department, that it is necessary that we should take this power by statute.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would like to point out to the minister that while the penalty of $1,000 prescribed to this section, like the section we have just passed, may be sufficient on the Canadian side, there is grave reason to doubt whether it will be a deterrent on the American side. There has been a law on the American side against fishing traps in certain days of the week. The government knows from observation made last year that that law has not been carried out, and although there has been a suggestion that the authority for regulation and supervision shall be taken from the state and conferred upon and exercised by the federal jurisdiction, we have heard nothing of any progress made in that direction; and we have no assurance, so far as I have heard, that the federal government of the United States is to be in effective control of the waters of the state of Washington. I presume if any such arrangement had been made it would have been communicated to the House by the minister just now. In the absence of any assurance of that kind, we are interested in what happened last year, and on that point I have the authority of Prof. David Starr Jordan, the American representative on the International Fisheries Commission. In his report to Washington he says:

With upwards of 2,500 square miles of fishing territory, the state of Washington has no patrol vessels, and so far as I know, but a single gasoline launch. The present statutes are fairly well enforced in most of the eastern boundary states, notably so in Ohio and Pennsylvania. In Washington they are not adequately enforced. It is claimed that in the current season the fishermen of Washington caught by encroachment on the close season salmon to the value of upwards of $600,000 to which they were not entitled. Part of these should have been taken in British Columbia waters. The others should have escaped up the Fraser river to the spawning grounds. In Canada, throughout the boundary waters, the statutes now in effect are rigidly enforced. It does not even occur to any one to violate them. The real need of the boundary situation is less that of stringent legislation than of equal enforcement of law on either side. I see no way to accomplish this except by a federal patrol, corresponding to the Dominion patrol of Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the only deterrent we have against the prospect of another American raid upon our salmon during the close season, a raid which netted $600,000 last year, is this fine of $1,000, which is the limit allowed by the international regulations, I fear it will be found ineffectual. I would like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that one of these traps caught last year as high as 110,000 fish in one day. At the price at which these fish were sold, 20 cents each, that would mean $22,000 worth of fish that one of these traps has been known to catch in a single day, and the sole penalty for an open and wilful violation of the law that will yield $22,000 in one day would be a fine of $1,000. Of course any trap owner who could reap that rich harvest would accept the risk of a fine every time. I would suggest to the minister that if there are to be any further negotiations in connection with the international regulations, he should press for some such further provision with respect to traps as he has now with respect to net fishing, that is, that if a net fisherman wilfully violates the law and the department has cause of complaint against him as an incorrigible, the department may confiscate his license and his nets, and I would recommend that he press for power to deal in the same way with the trap fishermen. I would ask the minister whether the government has examined that phase of the situation, and whether, in view of the enormous profits of trap owners to be obtained by paying a fine for violating the law, the government has considered it advisable to make the penalty more drastic than it is in these regulations.

Mr. CLARK. I would be very glad if the government could see its way clear to suspend the clause of this Bill that relates to the confirmation of the international regulations with the United States. It seems to me that the regulations which have been framed, have not been framed with proper inquiry and proper care for the interest of the fishermen who have been carrying on operations in international waters. Along the whole length of the Detroit river men have been fishing for their life time; they have got their plants, and now, by the operation of this treaty and of these regulations, their business is going to be cut away from them. It may be that it is in the interest of fish culture generally that that should be done, but I think it would be much more satisfactory if a committee of this House could hear the fishermen themselves in order to find out whether the interest of the fishery is so very important as to require so drastic a measure as is proposed by these regulations. It appears to me that it has gone too far now. What I would like to suggest to the minister is that the matter be taken up with a view of a further conference in order to have it dealt with in the light of the greater information that can be got by hearing the fishermen themselves. They feel very much aggrieved. Many of them have almost made their living from fishing in the Detroit river. It is not so on the American side. There the river front is so much taken up with wharfs that they have not the fisheries on their side, and I can quite understand their acquiescence in regulations which are no loss to them. But on the Canadian side, where people have been fishing for their lifetime, or for many years, it is a great hardship, and I hope the minister will take this into consideration and see even at this hour if there is not some way of at least giving the fishermen a hearing.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I would point out to my hon. friend (Mr. A. H. Clarke) that the clause now before the House does not necessarily mean that the regulations agreed to are going to be proclaimed. I suppose that the government could refuse to proclaim them. They are simply taking power to bring these regulations into force. My attention has been called to the fact that one of the regulations affecting the fishing in boundary waters prohibits net fishing in the St. Mary's, St. Clair, Detroit, Niagara and St. Lawrence rivers where they form part of the international boundary line. I am not in a position to say whether it would be deemed advisable to prohibit net fishing altogether, but I would naturally suppose that net fishing in these waters was destroying the fish and it was deemed wise to prohibit net fishing. However, that is simply an expression of opinion. We take power to bring into force by proclamation any agreement that may be reached, whether this agreement or a subsequent agreement is necessary, and it is necessary for the government to have that power, because otherwise no treaty made with the United States could be proclaimed and made law. I would suggest to my hon. friend that, while he may have a good point in trying to have that regulation changed, it does not necessarily follow that fishing in that way would be prohibited as a result of taking power to proclaim the treaty. Under the treaty the regulations are revisable by the mutual consent, I think, of both governments at any time, and it might be found that before the treaty was proclaimed, with the concurrence of the United States commissioner, a change in the treaty would be advisable. The treaty provides that it shall remain in force for a four year period. In regard to my hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. J. D. Taylor), I want to point out that the condition there will be, in my opinion, vastly improved by this treaty. I think my hon. friend from New Westminster will admit that fact. Generally speaking hitherto there has been practically no law, well observed, at all events, in the state of Washington. The states control the fisheries, and up to the present time the state of Washington has had certain regulations, but these regulations were never enforced. A close season was not observed and our fishermen have thought that by the rather rigid enforcement of the regulations made by the Fisheries Department they were unfairly discriminated against. This treaty applies to the United States side of the line, with respect to the Pacific ocean, practically the regulations which hitherto have been in force in Canadian waters. The American government have undertaken to enforce these regulations, not the Washington state government. The United States government take the ground, I think, upon the advice of their highest legal authority, that although the various fisheries are controlled and regulated by the states, when the federal government enters into a treaty with a foreign power the right of the United States to regulate the fisheries is paramount and must prevail. Therefore, we feel quite sure that when the United States government undertake, in the words of the treaty, by legislation and executive action, the regulation and restriction of the fisheries we must depend upon them to carry out their treaty obligations. The treaty does not impose any penalty; it simply provides that each government shall impose its own penalty for any infraction of the treaty. This government is imposing a penalty of $1,000 for a violation of the regulations under this treaty. I would assume that the United States government would impose about the same penalty. I quite agree with what my hon. friend says with regard to the destructive character of the fishing carried on south of the boundary line. As a matter of fact, if we did not have this treaty with the United States government to regulate fishing in Puget Sound, and if no restriction, other than those which have been imposed in the past, were to be imposed in the future, we might just as well conclude that fishing on the Fraser river would be absolutely destroyed in another ten years. I read in a newspaper the other day a statement by the fishery inspector for British Columbia who, disheartened by the fact that the people in the state of Washington were not living up to their own regulations, and were catching salmon which would, if not intercepted, have gone up the Fraser river to be caught by the Canadian fishermen, declared that if the United States would not impose effective restrictions, the restrictions imposed by the Canadian government should be removed, and apparently concluded that the river should be fished until the last fish was taken out of it. I do not think it is in the interests of the Canadian fishermen that this government should not make a very earnest effort indeed to obtain from the United States government a treaty imposing upon the citizens of that country the same restrictions as we are imposing upon the fishermen in British Columbia with the view to conserving the the great fishery of the Fraser river. I believe that this is a good treaty. As I understand its application to the province of British Columbia, I think it is a good treaty. I must confess with regard to other portions of Canada, and especially in regard to the complaint made by my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Clarke) I am not very familiar with the facts, but in regard to British Columbia, if we are ever going to restore the Fraser river to its position as a sock-eye stream we must do it by a treaty with the United States government. It is a fair treaty. The same regulations are to apply on each side of the boundary line. I know it is said that they will not carry them out. There is some little reason for that suspicion from lations were supposed to be carried out their regulations in the past, but the regulations were supposed to be carried out by the state governments. Now, the obligation to do so is imposed upon the federal government, and I believe that it is really in the interest of the fishermen of the Fraser river, in which interest the hon. member for New Westminster is speaking, more than in the interest of the canners, as well as in the business interests of British Columbia, that the yield of fish should be restored to its normal condition, as it can be by the enforcement of a treaty of this kind. Whether the American government will enforce the treaty as the Canadian government will enforce it I do not know, but I have faith enough in the American government to believe it will. At all events, if the treaty does not work well, we can terminate it in four years after it goes into effect, or try to get a better one.

Mr. CONMEE. I agree to a large extent with the remarks made by the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Clarke), and I believe to a great extent the Canadian fishermen have not had the opportunity they desire to present their case. I understand from the minister that while this Bill may pass it does not follow that it will come into force except by proclamation.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Bill will come into force when passed, but the clause under consideration takes power to proclaim the regulations concurrently with their proclamation in the United States.

Mr. CONMEE. It does not come into force automatically through the passing of the Bill?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. CONMEE. Would the fishermen of Canada have an opportunity of being heard as to the hardship these regulations may work upon them.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The joint commission appointed by Canada and the United States to carry out the treaty can at any time hear the fishermen, and they have the power to revise or change any of the regulations.

Mr. CONMEE. It so happens that along the north shore of the Georgian bay, the north shore of Lake Huron, and Lake Superior, Rainy lake and the Lake of the Woods, the open lake is on the American side while the most of the islands are on the Canadian side, and this territory affords the best fishing grounds. In certain cases this Bill would not bear so hard on the fishing interests of the United States as on Canada from the minister's statement, I assume our fishermen will have a right to be heard before that joint commission which it is assumed will deal fairly with all these matters. If our fishermen have the right to present their case, and seek redress, notwithstanding the passage of the Bill, I would not so strongly object to it, but otherwise I would agree with the member for Essex that it would be better to defer this legislation.

Mr. BRADBURY. I have given considerable attention to our fresh water fish supply, and I can say that in my opinion this legislation is an effort in the right direction. I believe that if the provisions of this treaty are carried out by the Americans, as it will be by the Canadians, honestly and faithfully, it is bound to have a good effect. The trouble in the past has been, and I suppose it will continue in the future, is to get the American officials to be honest in enforcing the law. I think we can depend on our officials to carry out faithfully their part of the duty cast upon them by the treaty. However, I want to point out to the member for Rainy River, as he no doubt knows, that on the Rainy lake for instance, nearly all the fishermen who have been engaged there, and on the Lake of the Woods have been fishing for American companies. The Canadian fisheries have been exploited for many years by large American concerns, and while the treaty makes it obligatory upon the Canadian government to protect their side of the line it does not deal with the Americans on the other side. I do not believe that Canadians would suffer so much loss as the Americans, for the reason that two-thirds of the Canadian fishermen catching white fish, pickerel, and other species, on our lakes are largely in the employ of the American companies. It is an open secret that our laws have been openly violated for years on the Great Lakes, and the inland waters as well, by the American companies who have obtained control of our fisheries in a round about way. They get Canadians to take out licenses, and thus evade the law. We, on our part have not been receiving the benefit we should receive from our fish wealth. Lake Winnipeg used to be one of the greatest white fish fisheries in the world, but now it has been destroyed or nearly destroyed, simply because the Americans have been allowed to come into our waters, and evade our laws. They formed what they called the Dominion Fish Company which has operated all the way from Lake Winnipeg down to the great lakes and that fishing company was no other than the Booth Fishing and Packing Company of Chicago. I repeat that if the treaty is carried out faithfully it will have a beneficial effect, and I trust the minister will watch carefully to see that the Americans are not allowed to take advantage of us, but are compelled to live up to the terms of the treaty. The minister will have to watch them very closely in that respect. Now, the sturgeon fishery is a most important industry to us, and I notice that in the regulations under the treaty the commissioners have recommended that for a term of four years next following the date of the promulgation of these regulations, no sturgeon shall be killed or captured in the treaty waters. I would like if the minister would extend that law to our inland waters, and I have already asked that the government should prohibit the export of sturgeon for a certain number of years. That may seem a drastic law. We have in Manitoba a small sturgeon lake, Lac du Bonnet. Although the commission appointed to investigate the Manitoba fisheries recommended that the exportation of sturgeon should be prohibited, the department has carried out all the recommendations of that commission with respect to granting to the settlers licenses to fish, but has not included that one important provision in the regulations. If the export of sturgeon is not prohibited, that lake will be fished out of sturgeon probably in one year, and the profits will go to the American companies, and the Canadian people will have received very little benefit. As soon as this law goes into force, it will be no hardship for the minister simply to include the inland waters in this clause, and to say that no sturgeon should be exported from Canada for a term of four years. By doing that the minister will be doing something that will be of very great benefit to the fisheries not only of the west, but all over Canada. I wish to say something about our whitefish in Lake Winnipeg. I notice that no whitefish under two pounds weight are allowed to be taken out of treaty waters. The treaty of course cannot very well be changed, but there should be some understanding as to what that means. Does it mean round weight or dressed weight? Because two pounds round weight means about one-and-a-half pounds dressed weight, and a whitefish weighing that is hardly mature, and ought not to be taken out of our waters. I warn the minister that if some precaution is not taken to protect the sturgeon fisheries of the west, I shall probably be able next session to say to the House that Lac du Bonnet as a fishing ground for sturgeon has been destroyed, and I shall be very sorry to have to say that and the government will surely be held responsible.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I appreciate the views that my hon. friend has expressed in regard to sturgeon fishing, and I will see that they are conveyed to the minister, who is not present. As far as I understand the question, I sympathize with what he has in view. I am told that to prohibit the export is impossible under the regulations, although the same result can be arrived at in another way. I am also told that the matter is not finally disposed of. I believe that the Manitoba Fishery Commission has not made its final report, and the department officials have not finally concluded their examination. Although they have disposed of the question probably for the coming year, the matter is still a live one, and I am hopeful that the proper course will be taken to conserve the Canadian fisheries.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am very glad to see my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) and my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Clarke) taking a hand in this discussion of fishery matters, especially on the side of the fishermen. The Bill under discussion is certainly an important one, especially as we are legalizing regulations that have been adopted by the joint commission. One thing in connection with these regulations which I cannot understand is that the north channel of the Georgian bay is included in the international waters, that is to say, the channel north of the Manitoulin island, which is many miles away from the United States, and is virtually a huge inland river or canal. The question of our fisheries being controlled by Americans is not at all a question of surmise. It is a fact that is established by the evidence of Prof. Prince given last year before a committee of this House. He stated that the boats and the gear used in the fishing business on the Great Lakes and on Lake Winnipeg were owned by Americans; and under a clause of their customs regulations fish caught in boats or with gear owned by Americans are admitted into the United States free of duty. The result of that has been to place the fisheries of the Great Lakes entirely in the hands of Americans and to make Canadians virtually hewers of wood and drawers of water to the American companies. The fish taken from our inland waters by these companies is carried to the United States and put in cold storage, and when Canadians want any fish, it is sent back into Canada from Buffalo, Chicago and Sault Ste. Marie. It would not be difficult to correct this, but there is no use of my asking the minister to make any change, because I know that it would not be made. The only thing to do would be to put a clause in the Act providing that foreign craft and gear would not be allowed to be used in Canadian waters. I think we have attained that measure of nationality where we should not any longer be hewers of wood and drawers of water to any people. The statements I have made are facts which cannot be controverted, as any one can see by looking at the evidence given last session by Prof. Prince before the committee on Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. CONMEE. It is quite true that the fishing interests of the Great Lakes are entirely in the hands of Americans. There is only one section, that is, the north shore of Lake Superior, consisting of a stretch of 150 or 200 miles, where the fishermen own their own outfits and carry on the fishing on their own behalf. All the other fishing interests, on both the Canadian and the American side, are under the control of one or two companies. But I think my hon. friend's information is not correct when he says that American craft and American implements are used entirely in the taking of fish. What happens is that these American companies have gradually driven the Canadian fishermen into the position of catching fish for them, and later they have acquired their outfits, their tugs, their fishing smacks and their entire plant; so that, speaking generally, the Canadian fishermen are catching fish with the plants of these great companies, but they are Canadian bottoms. The trouble is not altogether with the licenses. The licenses are issued to Canadians, but the Canadians are in the service of these companies. The provincial government, I am speaking of the government of Ontario, for I know the circumstances perfectly well, are aware of this monopoly, and they have not yet adopted or grappled with anything in the shape of a remedy. Now, I do not know to what extent that could be remedied by action here, because this government does not give licenses for the taking of fish. It seems to me that the remedy could be used with much greater force by the provincial authorities than under the regulations of the federal authorities so far as Ontario is concerned. As I understand it, Ontario is the only province that has taken over the management and control of their own fisheries. The other provinces under some arrangement permit the federal authorities to issue licenses and to regulate the whole procedure of taking fish in the provincial waters. That is not the case in Ontario. Ontario has a department which manages and controls the whole matter. I am finding no fault at all. I am just pointing out that it is not so much a question of issuing licenses; it is the difficulty of finding a market, and that is where this American monopoly and the advantage and control, having the capital at their command. Whether there is anything in this treaty that will enable the joint commission to remedy an evil of that kind, I am not prepared to say. I doubt very much that there is such a remedy. Speaking of Ontario, I am afraid it will not be remedied unless the provincial government takes very strong action in the matter, or unless there is some arrangement made by which this government would assume control and make regulations necessary to put an end to that monopoly.

Mr. BRADBURY. What the hon. gentleman said suggests another question on which I had intended to say something, and that is the question of the American fish interests in the west. Now, the hon. gentleman says that the Americans do not own the nets and gear and boats. I want to say most emphatically that the American fish companies on Lake Winnipeg have owned for years every steamboat, every sail boat and all the nets that were used in that lake by those companies up to a year or two ago. They secured the license in defiance of the law. The law is pretty clear and well defined that no license should be issued except to a British subject, and that that subject should own all his boats and gear. That is laid down in the fisheries regulations, as drastic a law as there is on the statute-book. But that law has been evaded openly and the Fisheries Department has been aware of it for years. There has been no secret about it at all.

Mr. DANIEL. Whose fault is it?

Mr. BRADBURY. The fault must lie with the officials or with the department, because it has been an open secret and everybody knew about it. It has been going on for the last fifteen or eighteen years now. How does it operate? There is a duty on all fresh fish that goes into the United States, but under some special arrangement with the Customs Department of the United States any fish said to have been taken in gear owned by American citizens is admitted free. The consequence is that in Lake Winnipeg the American companies, taking the oath that the fish were caught in their own nets, get the fish into the United States free, while the fish taken by Canadian fishermen in Canadian nets has to pay three-quarters of a cent duty on the fish. I say that is a great hardship, and the government should take very drastic measures to compel the enforcement of the law so that Americans will not be able to control our waters to the detriment of our Canadian fishermen. The Booth Fish Packing Company failed in Chicago about a year ago, I think. Now, what happened? The great plant of the Dominion Fish Company came under the hammer, and there was proof positive that that great company owned that plant. As soon as it failed in Chicago everything belonging to it was tied up. I repeat it is an open secret, and something in regard to which the goverment ought to take action. To say that the American fish companies do not control our waters is a great mistake. The American fish companies have controlled them for years, and it is up to the Fishery Department to take the full responsibility. This matter has been brought before them time after time, and surely there must be some way by which the government could protect their own waters, especially the inland waters. There is no reason under the sun why the American companies should come to Lake Winnipeg and be allowed to control that lake to the detriment of our own fishermen. That has been going on for fifteen years, and as the licenses are issued by the Dominion government, it is a matter absolutely under the control of this government which ought to act in defence of our fisheries.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I may say that under the international regulations the government takes control of the gear. They limit the number and size of the nets that shall be allowed and various other things, so that I think the jurisdiction over the gear is certainly in the Dominion government. The licenses, as we have seen in Manitoba, are issued by the Dominion government, and they permit this work to go on in Manitoba. It is quite true that licenses to fish without virtually any control are issued by the Ontario government, but the only control the Ontario government has is in Georgian bay, and a large section of that control has been taken away by these very regulations, because it puts the North channel, one of the best fishing grounds, under international waters. I think the government should take action in this matter, and that something should be done which would gradually return the control and operation of our fisheries to the hands of Canadians and Canadian capital.

Mr. HENDERSON. All I have to say in connection with this Bill, and clause 15, is that the minister should not be in too great a haste to bring the regulations into force. I think it is highly desirable that plenty of time should be taken. I know that in the western part of Lake Ontario the fishermen will be obliged to procure new nets under the new regulations, because they will be compelled to fish with a net of a different mesh when these regulations are brought into force. Now, these men are anxious not to be forced to do that too soon, and they desire to be permitted to use their own nets practically until they are worn out. Instead of the regulations being brought into force at the end of the year 1910, I think the time should be postponed for at least another year. By that time the nets now in use would be pretty well worn out and the fishermen would be obliged to secure new nets in any event. I, therefore, appeal to the hon. minister in the hope that he will exercise his influence with the other members of the government, and not have these regulations brought into force too hurriedly. There may be a way out of some of the difficulties that have been referred to by hon. gentlemen tonight. Perhaps some new investigation may be made by the two countries, and I hope that better counsels will prevail, and that so far as the part of the country I live in is concerned there will be no interference, at any rate for another year, by which time the fishermen will be better prepared to enter upon the changed conditions.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

VOLUNTEER BOUNTY ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 163) to amend the Volunteer Bounty Act of 1908.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When this matter was up before I asked the minister whether or not the government had given any intimation to the public last year as to any possible changes. His reply was 'not in his recollection'. My memory happened to be better than his and I said so. I wish now to bring to his attention his reply on February 4 of last year to a question by my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Sharpe). The question was

Has the government under consideration any change in the conditions relating to the South African land grants.

The minister's reply was:

No changes are contemplated.

That was the reply to a question which covered absolutely this condition as to the time. A minister coming here ought to be up in the subject to be discussed, and should not make statements such as he made to me on that occasion which are absolutely misleading. I object entirely, or almost entirely to any change in those conditions because the great majority of that scrip has got into the hands of speculators, it is out of the hands of the men who actually earned it, and if a special bonus of this kind is to be given by the government it should be given to the men who went out and took their lives in their hands. I would not object to this additional time being given in the case of military bounty warrants still held by the volunteers, or by the widows or heirs of men who died in the service. The government should also consider the case of those who went out there, such as nurses who took care of our boys in time of sickness, but who were not under military supervision, and for that reason did not get warrants. Their case ought to be taken up, and a recognition of their services in this way would meet with little, if any, opposition.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend has seen fit to open his remarks by the suggestion that I was not frank to the House in a statement I made last session. If my memory and understanding are right, the question at issue and under consideration at that time was the extending of the scope of the Act, and I replied at that time as I reply now, and as this Bill is the evidence, that the government had no intention of changing the Act. The extension of time for the location is not a change in the principle of the Act, but a change in the operation of the Act, and that matter is now submitted to this parliament for their judgment. If it is in accordance with the judgment of parliament this extension will be given, if it is not it will not be given. As to extending the operation of the Act to embrace other classes, it was the judgment of parliament in 1908 that the Act should apply to the people to whom it was made to apply. The government has seen no reason to change the opinion then expressed. That is to say it has seen no reason that would warrant the opening of the Act, and the widening of its scope as has been suggested on various occasions. Therefore on this occasion the government offers for the consideration of the House the proposition that the time for the location of the warrants granted under this Act shall be extended for one year, being moved to do so by the request of the men who were themselves volunteers and who by reason of their election to the position had the right to speak for the volunteers who went to South Africa, and were entitled to this scrip.

Mr. BRADBURY. Has the minister any idea how many of these warrants are still in the hands of the original holders?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no means of knowing that. There have been issued altogether 6,846 warrants, and of these 3,142 have been either located or the transfer has been registered. There remain 3,704, or more than one-half which have not been accounted for, and of the present possession of which we have no knowledge. So far as we know they are still in the hands of the parties to whom they were issued.

Mr. ROCHE. Was the scrip for lands given in years gone by under similar circumstances negotiable?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROCHE. In every case?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. TURRIFF. And in all former scrips of this kind the time for location was extended for many years, year after year. I have to leave in one-half hour and will not be here again this week, so that I may not have another opportunity of discussing the Bill, and if you will allow me I would like to discuss it now for a few minutes. I have an amendment to section 4, and this will probably be my sole opportunity of discussing it. It is not for the purpose of extending the scope of the Bill. The amendment is to cover the case of those veterans, or the substitutes, the assignees of the veterans, who have located their scrips on different half-sections throughout the country, some of whom, a small proportion, have unfortunately been either misled by others or have misled themselves, and have located their warrants on land that subsequently turns out to be practically worthless. They are in this position, that it will not pay them to go on and put in their three years residence on that half section in order to secure the patent, and under the present Act it seems the minister has no authority, or claims to have no authority, to allow them to make an exchange. Now, here is the way it has worked out. Take the case of one young man in my constituency, a man who has been in that country for 15 or 20 years. He volunteered to go to the war, he went all through the war, and he got his warrant. He went away southwest of Moosejaw, 150 or 200 miles, he spent over $100 in cash looking at various lands, and he selected five or six different half-sections. He came back to the office at Moosejaw. In the meantime it had been advertised that some half dozen or dozen townships were to be opened on a certain day, townships he had looked at. When he got back to Moosejaw, there was a tremendous rush for the land. He had to get in line with the others, he was some 40 or 50 back from the head of the line, and by the time he got to the counter every one of the sections that he had examined personally, and of which he had selected three, had all been taken. When he got there the man in front of him said to him: There, I got my first choice. But there is another section that is first-class, just as good as the one I took. Now, this man wanted to avoid what might easily happen a second time, he did not want to be obliged to spend another $150 in cash to go back and make a second selection, and here was a chance to get a first-class section. The result was that he took the man's advice, and he made an entry there and then for a homestead pre-emption, and also located his warrant that he had earned himself as a volunteer in South Africa on the other half-section. Then he immediately goes back to this land and examines it, and he finds that the man who gave him the information was either deceived himself, or had deliberately deceived the man of whom I am speaking, Mr. Brockway, one of my constituents, and he found out that both the section of land entered for homestead and pre-emption and the other section under warrant were absolutely worthless. He told me he could not get $10 for the section. Now, the department allows him to abandon his homestead pre-emption and take up another on payment of $10 for the entry. But, so far as the warrant is concerned he cannot do that. He is therefore in the position of losing one or the other of them, and all I am asking is that an amendment be made to the law—I do not think myself that it needs an amendment, I think the minister has the authority, but he thinks not, and his opinion goes—but if an amendment is necessary I think there should be one made to that clause that would permit a man who has selected a half-section under a warrant and who finds the land is no good, to enable that man for once—I would only give him one more chance—to abandon that and get authority to substitute another half-section under the same warrant. Now, I have mentioned one case, but I have another case that is ten times more serious. There are a number of cases of hardship, but this one is an especially glaring case, and I want to bring it to the attention of the committee to show how unfairly this law may work out. It is the case of a man who formerly lived in my constituency, his brother is at present in my constituency. This man himself has moved up west of Battleford and located land there. I will read a copy of his letter:

Stainsleigh, Alberta, November 5, 1909.

Mr. J. G. Turriff, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Turriff,—I had the pleasure of meeting you once many years ago when I was teaching at Carnduff; my brother, J. A. Thompson was Massey-Harris agent at C., and you were agent for that company at Estevan. Not on the grounds of that slight acquaintance, but because you are familiar with our western conditions, and because I believe you have a sympathy with a thing that is essentially just, I am making free to ask your assistance in a matter of very great importance.

I have been unable to do a day's work since midsummer of 1905, when I was stricken down with tuberculosis of the spine. Dr. Chown, of Winnipeg, diagnosed my disease, and I have for past four years been under the treatment of Dr. Clarence L. Starr, an orthopoedic specialist of Toronto.

In 1906 I came west to homestead, locating on N.E. 18—T. 40—R. 1—W. 4. I have resided on my homestead continually since May 5, 1906, sleeping under canvas from that date until the present, excepting two and a half months the bitter winter of 1906-7.

Last winter I purchased two South African scrip claims, believing that by doing the necessary duties to prove up on the land I saw means of making provision for my wife, my children and myself. In this way I would be making use of practically the only earning power I possessed.

I may say that this man was a minister, either a Presbyterian or a Methodist, when he was stricken down with this disease.

Mr. TURRIFF.

In the purchase of the scrip I invested about all that I owned, as it seemed to me a perfectly safe venture. It was utterly impossible for me to endure the driving necessary to locate land myself, and I had to depend on some one else to do the work for me. I had arrangements made with a couple of men who were thoroughly competent and reliable to make an exploring tour for me, when a couple of men with whom I had an intimate acquaintance, came to me with the story that they had unexpectedly made a discovery of some excellent land and, knowing my wish to locate land, had hurried across to give me the first chance. The land was within seven miles of a town; peculiar circumstances had prevented it being filed in before, and if I wanted the land I must decide immediately, and get out at once to secure it, as land-suckers were in all around, and such land as this would soon be picked up. I trusted them without the slightest misgiving, and, being unable to examine the land personally, and supposing they were really showing me some consideration because of my position, I hurried to Battleford and filed the land. I filed on May 5.

The land proved to be worthless. Three-quarters are absolutely worthless for either agriculture or pasture, and the fourth quarter has fair surface, but is underlaid with gravel. To spend the money necessary to do the duties would be to make an outlay for which there would be no compensating return.

I paid $50 for the locator's information, and they took the entire responsibility. It was pure fraud on their part.

The land on which I filed is S.E. 18 and S. ½-7 in Tp. 38, R. 28, W. 3rd M. Homestead Inspector McArthur, inspector for that district, chanced to call on me, and, at my request made an examination of my land. His report was forwarded by R. E. A. Leech, inspector of agencies to the department with request that, owing to special conditions, some consideration be shown. The deputy minister replied stating that the law did not allow the privilege of abandonment with a view to re-entry.

So this disposition of the question means almost complete financial ruin to me, and involves an essential injustice, I am wishing to ask for a consideration of the question by the minister, or if the minister feels that he should not exercise discretionary power owing to the wording of the law, should not a law that involves such hardships and injustice be changed.

Dr. Clark is member for our constituency and will, I feel sure, lead in advocacy of my cause. John Tolmie, of Kincardine, Ontario, has promised to support earnestly any effort made to secure redress for me. If you feel that my request is right when I seek redress, may I not ask for the kindness of your support. Your familiarity with homestead conditions will make your advocacy of special value to me.

Trusting that you may feel free to grant me the favour that I ask, I am,

Sincerely yours,
A. THOMPSON.

There is a case surely that would call for the sympathy of any member of this House. This man has already been to blame in the matter, but under the law he cannot get any redress, and what I ask is that section 4 be amended as follows:

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would ask the hon. gentleman, if he is proposing to enter into a discussion of section 4 or to offer an amendment, to wait until we come to that section.

Mr. TURRIFF. I am quite aware that I am transgressing the rules of the House, but I have to leave in a few minutes, and with the permission of the House I would offer this amendment:

That section 4 of the Volunteer Act, 1908, chapter 66, be amended by adding to it the following words: 'Every such grantee or his substitute may within six months after the date of entry, abandon the land so entered and may thereafter, within the time limited for selection and entry by subsection 1 of this section, or within six months after such date, make a second entry; provided that nothing in this subsection shall authorize or entitle any grantee or his substitute to make any further entry in place of the land abandoned as aforesaid.'

That is to say that he shall have the opportunity of making one exchange, but no more. It is probable that out of 6,000 or 7,000 cases, there will not be more than a hundred cases in which such an exchange is made. It seems to me a small matter to do that. We have taken the position that it is proper and right to give a South African veteran a half-section of land, and that being the case he should be given the opportunity of making an exchange if he has got poor land. We all know that when a man takes up a homestead he can abandon that homestead or it may be cancelled. He may enter for ten homesteads and have them all cancelled, and if he does so he does not lose his homestead right. In that case we are giving the land for nothing. Here is the case of the South African veteran who has served in the war in South Africa for the empire, or, in the case of the substitute, here is the man who has bought his warrant at a price ranging all the way from $300 to $1,000. I think it is only fair and just that some consideration should be given to these men. This is the amendment that I wish to make to subsection 4, and I trust that you will see that it is passed.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if that amendment would not have the effect of extending the operation of the Act for six months beyond the year for which it has already been extended?

Mr. TURRIFF. No, it would extend the time for six months only to make the exchange, but it would not extend the time for the location of the warrant.

Mr. S. SHARPE. It would have the effect of extending it for six months under the Act.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In spite of the explanation given by the minister as to what he meant, the words I read were absolutely plain. In answer to the question:

Has the government under consideration any change in the conditions relating to South African land grants?

His answer was:

No changes are contemplated.

The point I want to make is that if he did not understand the meaning of the question, the hon. member for Lisgar had in mind nothing else except the possibility of an extension of the time. The people who held the warrants believed that the minister's answer meant that by the end of 1910 the time for taking up these warrants would expire. For that reason, many of them sacrificed those warrants for a very inconsiderable price as compared with their actual value—somewhere about $700 and down to $500. They sacrificed their claims because they believed that the Minister of the Interior meant what he said in answer to the hon. member for Lisgar. There is no question that that was the belief of the majority of the people in Canada. Even the men who were buying and dealing in scrip, in making a deal, brought in an argument in favour of low prices that by the end of 1910 the warrants would be of no use whatever, and they could not resell them. For that reason they acted as bears on the market and held down the price. That was the case until January of this year when we find that a firm who dealt in half-breed scrip before and are now dealing in bounty warrant scrip came down here and had an interview with the minister, or some official, or some one who was in the know. They telegraphed to their brokers in Winnipeg to buy all the scrip they could get. That is a true sign that there was inside information given to men who were dealing in scrip with the view of putting up the value of the warrants. For that reason I think we should have an explanation from the minister before he forces this legislation through. In the west it has been generally understood that in matters appertaining to the west the minister's word is good, and a year ago he gave his word absolutely in this connection. I would feel hurt personally if on this occasion he departed from the course by which he has won this good name.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that there is any use of my hon. friend and myself imputing motives across the floor of the House. My hon. friend has seen fit to represent that I did not give a frank answer to a question that was asked last year, and he tells the House now what was in the mind of the questioner when he asked the question, and what was in the mind of the House when the question was asked. The only question that had been under consideration was as to whether there should be other rights included in the grant. There was no question of an extension of time and whatever may have been in the mind of the questioner or whatever may have been in the mind of the House I may be permitted to answer that what was in my mind, and what my answer was given in regard to the question of the extension of the provisions of the Bill and not in regard to the question of the extension of time. However, from that my hon. friend has seen fit to say that I gave a pledge or a promise that there would be no legislation. My hon. friend has not read any such words from 'Hansard'. He has not read any words that could be construed into that meaning. What I said was that the government had not in contemplation a change in the Act. So that whether the hearer thought I meant one thing or meant another, there was no pledge on my part or on the part of the government. I stated the fact whether you take the one meaning or the other: that the government had not in contemplation. But, as my hon. friend is aware, there have been representations made to the government since last session upon this subject, representations that were entitled to some weight, representations made by the official representatives of the volunteers, asking specifically for an extension of time for location for a period of two years. The government did not think it well to accede to the request for a two years' extension, but thought that a one year's extension would not be any serious injury to the public interest and would remove any complaint that might seriously be made against the short time that was given for the location of the scrip. It was with the desire, and only with the desire to do what was fair and right by the people to whom the bounty was extended, and to do no more than was fair and right, so that there should not be any undue advantage to any particular class of the community nor any undue disadvantage to the settlement of the western country. Since the matter was up in the House before, I have received this copy of a circular on the subject, which I will take the liberty to read:—

Committee.—Capt. W. Hart McHarg, Vancouver, British Columbia; Lt.-Col. W. G. Hurdman, Ottawa, Ontario; Col. G. Sterling Ryerson, M.D., Toronto, Ontario; Major H. B. Stairs, D.S.O., Halifax, Nova Scotia; Major F. C. Jamieson, Strathcona, Alberta;

Major A. C. Macdonald, D.S.O., Winnipeg, Manitoba; Major B. R. Armstrong, St. John, New Brunswick; Major W. A. Weeks, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island; Lt.-Col. O. C. C. Pelletier, Quebec, Quebec; Major J. Cooper Mason, D.S.O., Toronto, Ontario; Lt.-Col. Wm. Hamilton Merritt, Toronto, Ontario, Secretary.

Toronto, Ontario, April 18, 1910.

Dear Sir,—We have read the discussions which took place in the House in connection with Mr. Oliver's Bill to extend the time by one year in which the South African veterans may locate their grants. It appears to be the wish of some of the members that those persons who have speculated in these warrants should secure none of the advantages which an extension of time would involve, and in so far as the advantages which should accrue to the veterans themselves are secured, this committee is desirous also that these speculators should be given no consideration.

The amendment which has been suggested, however, we feel, will work to the disadvantage of both the veteran and the speculator, and in nullifying the advantages which the veteran would receive under the original Act, would destroy entirely the purpose of that Act.

If the extension is granted only to those persons who still retain their scrip on the understanding that these people will themselves locate their own land, the cash price will doubtless suffer, and those who have held in the hope of receiving full value for their grants will be forced to sell within the next nine months at such prices as they may be able to get, and as it is apparent at this time that two years was not a sufficient time for all this scrip to be absorbed without manipulations on the part of the speculator, it is likely that the prevailing price during the next nine months will show the result of the forced sale of a large number of grants within a short time.

On the other hand if the Bill grants the extension for all scrip at the present time in the hands of the original holders, who will be entitled to settle or sell as they may desire, it is felt that such legislation will have the effect of establishing two classes of scrip on which there will be a separate and distinct price. (a) Scrip that must be located within the present year, and (b) scrip that need not be located until the end of 1911. This would doubtless serve the purpose intended, but we feel that the confusion arising therefrom would lower the prices of both classes of scrip and there would be many misunderstandings, and intending purchasers would be obliged to have scrip verified at Ottawa before it would be safe for them to purchase. In the United States scrip has depreciated in value on account of the doubtful authenticity of part of it and of the trouble involved in establishing the authenticity, and a similar condition would doubtless prevail in this country.

We think that in the interests of the veterans the Act should be passed in the form in which it was presented to the House. In asking for the extension we are not asking for more than we believe it was the government's intention we should have when the Act was passed in 1908, sufficient time to allow of all this scrip being taken up or sold without unduly forcing or crowding the sale of it all in a shorter time than the natural supply and demand laws would take care of it.

Yours very truly,
WM. HAMILTON MERRITT, Lt.-Col.,
Secretary.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is the hon. gentleman in accord with the position stated in that circular?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not necessary for me to say whether I am in accord with it or not. I am presenting to the House a Bill which these gentlemen see fit to endorse. Their reasons for endorsing the Bill may not be the same as mine, for presenting the Bill, but our conclusion is the same when we ask the House to support it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not wish to say anything that would indicate that I was opposed in any way to any due reward along the lines of the present Act, to the South Africa volunteers. There is, however, another question involved in this extension. If the three year term had been fixed by the original Act and had I been a member of the House, I certainly would not have opposed it, but under the present circumstances, the case is entirely different, and on that difference the minister has not seen fit to establish the rights to the extension of time. Now, the minister is faced tonight with the answer he gave to the hon. member for Lisgar on the 4th of February last. The hon. member for Lisgar asked across the floor whether or not there was under consideration by the government, any change in the conditions relating to the grant of lands to the South Africa volunteers? That was the wording of his question. I do not think that what there was in the mind of the hon. member for Lisgar has any particular bearing on the discussion now, nor has what was in the mind of the minister any bearing. The words of the minister are clear as words can be; these words conveyed a clear meaning to the country and to the volunteers, that meaning being that in no respect whatever was any change in the conditions relating to the granting of the South Africa veterans' land in contemplation. The minister gave the explicit answer that no change of any character was contemplated. The country and the holders of scrip could take but one meaning from the answer, namely: that the governrment did not intend to extend the time, nor did they intend to extend the number of acres, nor did they intend to extend the classes to whom the benefits of the Act were to come, nor did they intend to extend or alter the conditions in any way. That and no other was the meaning of the answer of the minister, and every holder of the South Africa land grant had the right to conclude from that answer that no change would be made. Answers as to what are in contemplation by the government have that effect as the minister well knows. The people take such answer to mean that the government have nothing in contemplation and do not intend to pass such legislation. When a minister says that legislation of a certain character is not in contemplation, it means that the cabinet do not purpose referring such matters to parliament.

The minister started out to argue tonight that this was not an extension of the Act; he said that it was only a change in the operation of the Act. I cannot rise to an understanding of that position. If it is only an extension of something in the nature of the execution of the Act, the minister has that in his power without coming to parliament at all. The only thing he has to come to parliament for is a change in the Act, and the very fact that he comes to parliament proves that what he wants is a change in the Act. If the minister came to parliament and asked for an enlargement of the acreage of the grant, would he say that was only a change in the operation of the Act? If he were to come to parliament and ask for an enlargement of the class to which the grant is applicable would he say that was a change only in the operation of the Act? All the three classes of changes are of the same nature they are changes in the Act, and very important changes. The value of the grant which the parliament of Canada made to the South African veterans consisted of various constituents. One of these was the time during which the veteran was allowed to locate; another was the acreage he was allowed to locate. If the time had been three years the value of the grant would have been greater than it was under the two years limit. If the land had been twice the acreage it was, its value would have been greater. In one of these material constituents of value, the minister comes along, after many of the veterans have sold their scrip, and adds to the value of the scrip. Is that fair to the man who has sold his scrip? It is doubly unfair to the man who sold after he had the word of the minister a year ago that such increment would not be added to the value.

The minister's position with respect to the speculator is also untenable. In fact my objection is in the main to this alteration in so far as it applies to the speculator. In so far as it applies to those South African veterans who still hold their scrip, I have no objection to it except to say that it gives them an advantage over those who have already sold. I would have liked to have seen all treated alike. But so far as the speculator is concerned, I object, and I object as strongly as I can. I do not see that the minister has made any case at all for this extension to the speculator. He says, in the language of the circular—and I understand that on a previous occasion he adopted much the same contention—that unless you grant it to the transferee, the present holder of South African scrip will not get the benefit that the Act intends. That is to say, unless he is able to sell and is not forced to locate, he will be compelled to throw his scrip on the market in the next few months at whatever the market will stand. That may be the case, but it is easily gotten over. If the minister does not propose to throw a plum to the speculator, why not say that only such scrip as is now in the hands of South African veterans shall be entitled to the benefits of this Act? There was something in the circular venturing to argue that to do so would be an inconvenience to the soldiers, but so weak was it that the minister refused to endorse it. It argued that if you are going to draw a distinction between the scrip now in the hands of the veterans and that in the hands of speculators, you are going to compel the purchaser of scrip held by the original grantee to make a search to make certain that it is so held, and that it is distinct from the scrip already transferred. That is not very much of a hardship. Here is a grantee who holds his scrip getting a material advantage over the one who has sold. He has not much to complain of if, in order to effect his sale, he has to make a search at Ottawa. Surely the minister was well advised in declining to endorse the argument embodied in the end of the circular, which I will venture to say was framed by some astute solicitor acting not for the veterans but for the speculators. I know nothing myself as to the composition of that circular. I simply judge how it arose by the way it reads and by the arguments therein contained. There is no difficulty whatever in limiting the benefit of this amendment, if it is to go through —and apparently the minister is determined that it shall—to the veteran who has earned the scrip. Why should we grant that benefit to the speculator who has purchased, and who has secured his grant at a bargain by reason of the minister's words of the 4th of February last? This is certainly a grant of something that belongs to the Crown. The very extension is an increment of the value that is now a possession of the people of Canada, and, if this Act passes, that will go to the speculator. Why should the speculator get that for nothing? The principle is bad and cannot be defended, particularly in view of the fact that he bought on the understanding, so far as the vendor was concerned, that no such increment was to be added. Therefore I submit that it is the duty of the minister to submit an amendment limiting the benefits of this Act to such as at the time of the passing of this Act were the original grantees.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am at a loss to understand what my hon. friend who has just sat down means when he talks about the people who bought scrip from the veterans as being speculators, in a tone implying that they are people who should be despised. The men who bought scrip from the South African veterans were gentlemen doing a service to the veterans who lived in eastern Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I said nothing derogatory of the speculators.

Mr. MACDONALD. If my hon. friend thinks that those whom he dubs speculators are perfectly estimable people and that no legislation should be passed to discriminate against them, then I do not understand what the whole tenor of his speech was about.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not want to discriminate against them; neither do I want to discriminate in favour of them.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend proposed an amendment which would be a discrimination against them.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Just leave them where they are now.

Mr. MACDONALD. Why should they not be treated as well as anybody else? I say that the speculator who bought the land from the veteran who lived in the east was a public benefactor. Those of us who sat in parliament and pressed on the minister and the government the wisdom of granting these lands to the men who went to South Africa did not want the boys who lived in our counties, when their rights to these lands accrued, to be compelled to go to the Northwest in order to get the benefit of them. We all hoped, we all knew, and we all expected that there was to be an opportunity to dispose of these rights once they were given to them, and I am sure a great many of us who were proud of our veterans would not have been so enthusiastic about the grant if we knew it meant to take away our boys to the west. We anticipated that their rights would be disposed of, and that there would be some people in this country who would want to buy them. There is no use in saying that those boys who went to South Africa and got the scrip did not know what they were doing. It is an imputation upon their intelligence and ability which is at least as good as that of ordinary citizens, it is, I say, an imputation upon their intelligence and ability to say that these boys when they sold their scrip did not know what they were doing, or that they were not doing what they wanted to do, and that when somebody came along and gave them in cash what they did not want to take in kind, they were not entitled to take it. They did not want to leave their homes to go to the west: Now why should a man who gave a veteran the value for his scrip be treated differently from any one who buys real estate in this country? That is the proposition. There are to-day outstanding 3,704 warrants to men who went to South Africa that have not been located, and that have not been sold, and those veterans, those boys who went to South Africa want to sell them, and want to get the most they can out of them, and they have a perfect right to do that. But my hon. friend says the minister said last year that there was not going to be any extension of time. Probably there were some gentlemen who did not want to see any extension of time granted. There might not have been anything contemplated by the government, but I am in close touch with a large number of young men who are veterans, and I know that they looked forward and believed that the government this year would grant an extension in order that they would have more time to dispose of those warrants. They hoped it would be done, and they fully expected it would be done. I have had communications from some veterans who live in the east, and whose names are on the circular which was read by the minister, and I discussed the matter frequently with them during last year, and they hoped for an extension, and they believed it would come.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. May I ask the hon. member a question. After the question was asked last year, how much did the value of the scrip depreciate on account of the answer?

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend was probably more interested in the value of the scrip than I was. I did not follow the fluctuating value of that scrip. But I may say for the benefit of my hon. friend that I have been pressing upon the minister for the past two years the desirability of this legislation in the interests of the men in the east who wanted to sell their scrip, pressing for an extension of the time in which location should be made so that the men who were late in taking out their warrants for various reasons, and every one knows there were a great many reasons why the taking out of those warrants was delayed, should have an opportunity of getting every dollar they could out of them. Speaking for the east, without any prejudice against our good friends in the west in whose future we all take a pride, I may say that we are specially jealous of the fact that our boys are going west. There are plenty of vigorous people going into that western country with the view of building it up, but we hope that our boys in the east will stay at home and we want them to get all they can out of those warrants and give their vigour and energy to the eastern country. Where more than half are not located up to date, are we going to limit them and prevent them from getting every dollar they can. I say that the man who buys this land from the veterans in the east is a benefactor to the veteran who wants to sell and who does not want to go out to the west, and there should be no discrimination at any time which would impair the value of the warrants given to the boys who went to South Africa and who are entitled to get every dollar out of those warrants possible.

Mr. DOHERTY. It seems to me that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) rather misconceives the effect of the proposition. There is not, as I understand it, any desire to discriminate against the speculator, but we all heard the minister say that the motive that inspired this legislation was to protect the interests of the South African veterans and to enhance the benefit to be derived by them from their scrip. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) speaks with a good deal of indignation against any attempt to do anything that would in any way prevent the South African veterans from getting the full value for their scrip. Now, I am prepared to be as indignant as he is against any endeavour of that kind, but as I understand it the suggested amendment cannot in the slightest degree affect what any South African veteran has got or will get for his scrip. It will not affect what he has got, because the man who sold it has now got every dollar he is ever going to get, whether this legislation is passed or not, and it will not affect what any South African veteran will get in the future, because, as I understand it, the suggestion is to limit the application of this Act to scrip that is now held by South African veterans. Provided it is now held by a South African veteran, he will be at perfect liberty to sell it at any time after the passing of this Act, and will receive the enhanced value that will attach to it by reason of the extension of time.

Mr. MACDONALD. Does not the hon. member recognize that the effect of the legislation is to discriminate against the man who is prepared to purchase scrip from the veteran?

Mr. DOHERTY. The effect of this legislation is to confer a benefit on the South African veterans and to decline to give the same benefit to the man who is not a South African veteran, but who is a member of a very respectable class, whom the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) describes as the purchasers of real estate. The hon. member asks why should this particular purchaser of real estate be treated differently from any other purchaser of real estate? I say he certainly should not be. But in what other instance has legislation been introduced to enhance the value of the property of the purchasers of real estate? Nobody ever came before this House and said that the purchasers of real estate are a deserving class in the community and therefore we will enact legislation to make their property more valuable than it was when they bought it, and yet that is precisely the position that will be created if this legislation is made applicable to scrip in the hands of persons who have bought and purpose re-selling it. These very excellent persons bought scrip which gave them a right to a property provided it was located before the 31st of January, 1910. With that restriction upon it that property had a value, and when they bought it, they presumably paid that value. However excellent people they may be, I do not think I am doing any injustice in saying they paid that value and not more than that value. What they bought and paid for they have got, they have everything they bought, a right to that property provided they located before the 31st of December, 1910.

Mr. MACDONALD. Does that not also apply to veterans?

Mr. DOHERTY. The veteran has today everything the legislation gives him; but this parliament says that we consider that the South Africa veteran is entitled to something further and we, out of our judgment that perhaps we did not give him as much as his services earned, are prepared to give him a little more, but we do that because we think under all the circumstances his services earned a little more. In the case of the purchaser, that man got precisely what he bought, and paid for, and we are coming in now by legislation to attach an additional value to that thing which the especially privileged purchaser of real estate bought. We are doing that out of consideration for the merits of the gentleman who sold to him, and that gentleman will not get one cent more. So we are going to reward this purchaser for having purchased from a very meritorious person. The legislation as it stands makes a distinction or a discrimination between this particular kind of purchaser of real estate and all other kinds of purchasers of real estate. I ask in all fairness why this House should come to the rescue of a particular purchaser more than of any other purchaser. The hon. gentleman says that the South African veteran when he sold knew what he was doing. I do not want to question that, but again we say that the purchaser when he bought knew what he was doing, and if he did not receive any increase he would have no ground on which to say that he was to have anything more than the right to this property provided he located it within this particular period of time. I have been seeking a reason why this gentleman should be given this advantage. It is not a question of legislation to his detriment, it is a question of whether we shall legislate to confer an advantage on him. I had the advantage of receiving a copy of the circular which the hon. gentleman has read, I read it carefully, and I have listened to its reading by the minister. As far as that circular argues against any restriction that will bear on the scrip in the hands of the veterans, I have nothing to say. I am not arguing for anything that would affect that, but when the writer goes on to find reasons why this legislation should apply even to scrip that has already been sold, and is in the hands of a purchaser, then it seems to me that my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), has done ample justice to that reason. What does the reason consist of? That there will be two classes of scrip, and the man who goes to buy the scrip will therefore have to find out whether the scrip he is buying is of one class or the other. What does that difference reduce itself to? That the gentleman who goes to buy will have to verify the claim that the gentleman he buys from is a South African veteran, the original holder.

Mr. MACDONALD. In a case where a young man, say in the east, has assigned, as I know he has done in two cases, to his brother who lived in the west——

Mr. DOHERTY. The amendment I suggested before would not exclude that brother. The purpose of the amendment I proposed is not to get at cases of that kind.

Mr. MACDONALD. How would you help yourself?

Mr. DOHERTY. I would provide that the extension would not cover cases of that kind. My amendment reads:

That section 4 be amended by inserting in the second line, after the word 'Act,' the following words:

Or any bounty certificate that has been, prior to the passage of this Act, sold or transferred to any person acquiring the same for purposes of speculation or resale.

When I suggested that it should be put in that shape, I did so, precisely to avoid injuring in any way, the person who would have acquired under circumstances, such as have been suggested, and I think there is a reason for making the difference. Where a South African veteran has parted with his scrip to any relative, where the consideration is presumably the affection of the veteran for the person to whom he chooses to give it, then in giving the enhanced value to the person to whom the veteran gave the land, you are indirectly benefiting him, you are giving to the person on whom he chooses to confer that benefit the benefit he would himself have got, and you are indirectly benefiting him. The situation is different from the situation with which I have been dealing. My amendment would cover the case of a man who went out into the market and bought with a view to resale. In the case of the latter man this legislation simply enhances the value of what he bought. In the case where the South African veteran has chosen to part with his scrip to a relative or a friend where it is not a matter of some one coming in and trying to turn the property over for a profit, where it is not being dealt with commercially, I would not make my amendment apply. I quite understand that in restricting it as I do, I am perhaps enabling some classes of persons, who ought not to get the benefit, to do so, but I want it made clear, that I am not desirous of doing anything that either directly or indirectly through others will injuriously affect the veteran. The case I would like to see excluded from the operation of the Act, is the case of the man who purchases to resell, the man who speculates in this scrip. I have no criticism to make of that man, but as I have said, I have not heard suggested one reason why this parliament should intervene to make that speculator's property more valuable, or his speculation more likely to be profitable. I do not see why we should give an advantage to that man more than to any other real estate speculator.

Mr. MACDONALD. What tribunal is to try out the question of the intention that exists in the mind of the party who purchases as to whether he is going to sell or not?

Mr. DOHERTY. Of course when the party comes forward to claim the right to make his location, he will have to produce his title. I call attention to the fact that the original purchaser under my amendment would not be precluded from locating. I am not trying to reduce the time of the man who has bought and actually located. Where I find the evidence of his purpose in making the purchases where you have to look for evidence is in what he does, that is to say, where you find the intention proved by the fact that the person who will come and locate will be a person who bought from a person who had bought from the original holder; there you will have at all events a prima facie case that the original holder bought for the purpose of reselling. It may be susceptible of rebuttal, but my hon. friend knows that it is not at all an exceptional case that courts are called upon to decide what was the intention in doing a particular act. What people do speaks loudly as to what people intend to do. Now of course in the practical application of this, it would be for the department to take its position whether they will recognize the particular application or not, and if an application is refused and it is considered unjustly refused, why, the person holding the scrip will have his recourse to the court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend does not indicate what tribunal has to determine this question.

Mr. DOHERTY. I did not rise for the purpose of giving to my hon. and learned friend a complete course in law, of which he has no need at my hand. But if I understand it rightly, the transferee of this scrip who would claim the right to locate a property and who would have that right refused to him because the time had expired, will be in the position of a man whose rights the Crown was refusing to recognize. Does my hon. friend think I am right to that extent?

Mr. MACDONALD. You are getting along pretty well, but it is rather complicated.

Mr. DOHERTY. Now in what does his position differ from the position of any man who has a claim against the Crown which the Crown disputes? As I understand the law, where a man has a claim against the Crown, and the Crown disputes it, he is entitled to recourse upon a petition of right to the Exchequer Court, and it has jurisdiction to determine that question as well as any other. But assuming that there may be more difficulty than I see in enforcing the right, it does not seem to me that is a conclusive reason why we should create rights for people for which they have no claim whatsoever, simply because, if we do not, perhaps there will be somebody who will claim them, and succeed in evading the law, or somebody who may have difficulty in showing he comes within the law.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Might I suggest to the minister that, as it is now 11 o'clock, he suspend the consideration of this Bill until to-morrow, and in the meantime he can consider the amendments offered by my hon. friend from St. Anne (Mr. Doherty), and my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff).

Mr. OLIVER. I have no desire to force the Bill. I appreciate the importance of the suggestions made by the hon. member for St. Anne and by the hon. member for Assiniboia. But I understand that there are other amendments to be placed before the House, and I would suggest that we spend half an hour more in hearing what other hon. gentlemen have to say, and what amendments they desire to make.

Mr. HUGHES. I believe my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has an important amendment, and the hon. member for North Ontario has an important amendment, and I suggest that these be made now in order that the minister may have time to consider them.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Before we go further with this Bill I wish to say that I am in harmony with it as it stands, though perhaps some amendments might be made to it. But I rise to refer to some implication that has been cast upon a gentleman who signed that circular, Col. Hamilton Merritt. It was suggested that he had at bottom some scheme to speculate in land grants. Now, every person who knows Col. Merritt knows very well that he is not that kind of a man. He is a man of ample means, a man of integrity, and of the highest honour, and I do not think for a moment that he would lend himself to any scheme of the kind. Everything he has done was for the purpose of aiding these men who still have their scrip, and I think it adds very little to the strength of any argument in this House against the Bill to cast reflection on the gentleman, who gave up a European tour to go at his own expense and serve his king in Africa. He is a man of considerable means, and he would not be a party to any attempt to bunco, as I may say, the Minister of the Interior into any legislation that is going to help land speculators. There is another thing that the House fails to note. I agree that the minister last year left the impression that there was not going to be any extension. Now, I am not an old parliamentarian, but I am an old enough Canadian to know that the minds of the government are never fixed on anything, and if I could find out from the government what they are going to do two years from now in regard to a certain thing, I could make a large sum of money. Consequently when a person asks the government what they are going to do on anything or at any time, they generally say that they have not considered it, or they have not contemplated doing that sort of thing. Sometimes when they are getting ready for an election they say they have got it under their serious consideration. Now, a question has been raised about speculators. It does seem to me that it would be almost impossible to pin a speculator on these amendments. Supposing we did pass a measure which would only have effect from now on, is it the intention to make the amendment such that the man who purchases from the veteran from now on will not be entitled to an extension for two years?

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Most of these grants are passed from hand to hand, made out in blank, payable to bearer and without any date on them. The result would be that any speculator who owned scrip of this kind, if he had eight or ten of these blank scrips in his possession, would, in five minutes, put in the dates, and how could you prevent it? The only way you could do it would be to get the veterans who hold their scrips to return them and get new ones. Whatever strength there is in that suggestion I will leave to the judgment of the House. I think that the veterans are entitled to this extension. I have received fifty or sixty letters from individual veterans who hold their land scrip asking me to support a measure of this kind. I do not think there is any objection to it, and I think that if the House got down to the consideration of the clauses we might get to the meat of the thing much more quickly than by making speeches aimed against particular sections of the Bill, which might be construed as a general attack on the Bill.

Mr. BARKER. I have an amendment that I think will not raise any of the difficulties which we have been discussing so far this evening. In the original Act of 1908, provision was made for a bounty to the South African veterans, and it was there provided that the grantee, as he was called, or his substitute, should select, enter and perform his settlement duties before a fixed time. A veteran might appoint a substitute under the original Act, but the peculiarity of the Act was that the substitute could not be an agent. He must be practically a purchaser, an assignee or transferee of the rights of the veteran, and the patent could issue only to the substitute and not to the veteran. It has happened in several cases that the veteran had become incapacitated so that he could not personally make the entry or selection. I have brought before the department one instance of that character. Mr. Smart of Toronto had become incapacitated in South Africa while on service there. On his return he suffered from rheumatism and nephritis, and he was quite incapable of going on the land and doing the settlement duties, but he is a man who hopes to go upon the land with his family and settle. He objects to being compelled to sell out. He wants no dealing with speculators; all he wants is the privilege, if it can be called a privilege, of putting a man on the land to do the work for him that he cannot do himself. But, instead of employing an agent or putting his own servant on the land to do the work, he must do it himself, because the department says that if he is not doing it himself he must do it by a substitute and the substitute must get the patent in his own name. It seems so monstrously absurd that I can hardly explain it to intelligent people. Anybody would suppose that a man in the position of the man I refer to might beyond question employ somebody to do the work for him and take the patent in his own name. To man after man having applied to the department in Ottawa here they have said: You cannot do it, you must either go upon that land yourself or send a substitute, and if you send a substitute the patent must go to the substitute. It seems a monstrous thing to treat a deserving veteran in that way. You are giving him a bounty, you are doing something for his benefit in gratitude for what he has done, but you say to him: You are rheumatic, you cannot before the 31st December personally do settlement duty, and we will not let you do it by anybody else. If you put anybody else on the land he will get the patent and not you. It seems an absurdity that such should be possible, but it is actually the case. I placed the case of Mr. Smart in writing before the department and I had the reply of the department that they could not meet his difficulty, that they could only deal with the man who himself makes the entry. All I propose to do is to say—and I have submitted the clause to the minister, and I hope he is not going to oppose it—that 'the grantee may personally or by his agent appointed by him in that behalf in writing, and acting for him,' perform the settlement duties; that is, he may either do it by his own hand or send his own employee to do it for him. Then a veteran who wishes to sell out may do so by appointing a 'substitute,' as already provided for in the Act of 1908. This man wants no speculators. He wants to get the grant that the government has made to him, that he is entitled to, but he wants, because he is physically incapable of making that entry and doing the work by his own hands, the power of doing it by an agent. The department will not allow that. I hope there is no gentleman in this House who will say that there is anything unreasonable in making the statute operative in such a way that a veteran may employ some other person to do the work, and then claim his rights.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have already spoken on the amendment and I only rise by reason of the remarks made by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) in which he stated that a certain implication had been levelled by the previous speaker against Mr. W. Hamilton Merritt. Inasmuch as my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) and myself were the only parties who spoke with reference to the circular to which Mr. Merritt's name was attached, I feel that I should say something. I just wish to express my regret that before the hon. member made that remark he had not waited until he had read what I had said in 'Hansard'. I made no implication against Mr. Merritt by inference the most constrained. I do not know Mr. Merritt. I have never seen him. I did not have him in mind favourably or unfavourably, and I used no words that could be so construed. I regret that my hon. friend did not wait until he had read exactly what I said in 'Hansard' because I can assure him and the House that I made no such implication; and I am sure that Mr. Merritt, if he possesses the high mental faculty and moral standing ascribed to him by my hon. friend will certainly so understand what I said.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I said there was an implication that this was an organization that was to benefit speculators, and that the agent of this organization was around here wire-pulling with the minister. Now, knowing Colonel Hamilton Merritt as I do, I do not believe he would be a party to anything of that kind for a minute.

Mr. DOHERTY. I hope the hon. gentleman does not think I made any such imputation?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not think you did.

Mr. DOHERTY. I certainly had no idea of it.

Mr. MOLLOY. There is a big difference between the actual veteran and the speculator. For my part, I am in favour of a year's extension to the veterans, but I also wish to go on record that I shall never vote for any extension for the speculator. So far as the speculator is concerned, I will not grant him one minute more time. I have lived in the west as long as have the majority of members in this House who come from the west, and I am opposed to the speculator from beginning to end. That the speculators have retarded progress and settlement in the west every one knows. The question has been well placed before the House by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie and by the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) in that this parliament is granting to the speculator more than he expected and more than he paid for. There was no arrangement made between the veteran selling his grant and the speculator that he would have a year longer, but nevertheless parliament steps in and says: You have bought this South African grant from the man who actually earned it, and now we will give you another year to work on it. I won't support it.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. There has been a good deal of discussion on this question which I asked a year ago. When I asked the question a year ago, it was because I heard there was going to be just such an extension of time granted by the governmet as is now proposed. At that time the scrip was worth about $800, and when I received the answer from the minister that there was not going to be any change made at all, the price of the scrip went gradually down until about a month or so ago it was only worth $500.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Where does the hon. gentleman get his quotation?

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. From the grain exchange in the city of Winnipeg, and scrip was sold in that city as low as $400.

Mr. DOUGLAS. To my knowledge the price in western Canada has never been under $625.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I know it has been lower than that in western Canada, and right here in the city as well.

An hon. MEMBER. And in Toronto.

Mr. MOLLOY. And many of them less than $500.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Yes. But the moment it was known that this Bill was going to be introduced, the price went up to $800, and the speculative price to-day is from $800 to $900. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the people of western Canada are against this Bill from start to finish. The grain growers at Prince Albert passed a very strong resolution against it. All the grain growers' associations throughout western Canada are against it, because it retards the settlement of that country. The fact is there has been scrip issued by this government covering over 2,000,000 acres, and less than ten per cent of that is settled by actual volunteers who went to South Africa. I am decidedly against the extension of this time to the speculators, but I will support my hon. friend from St. Boniface in his proposal that an extension should be given to the men who actually went to South Africa.

Mr. NESBITT. Would the hon. gentleman mind telling me how the extension of time for a year retards settlement?

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Surely the hon. gentleman does not want an answer to that question?

Mr. NESBITT. I do.

Mr. MOLLOY.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Why, if the time is not extended, all this land will be settled before next fall, and if it is extended, settlement will be held back for another year. That's why.

Mr. HUGHES. As the intention to-night is merely to submit proposals for amendment, I shall not now take up the time of the House in discussing the question in detail. I may say as to this circular sent out in Colonel Merritt's name, that the names of the committee at the head of the circular which was read by the minister are no indication that any one of these gentleman ever saw the resolution or ever heard of it. As a matter of fact, it is a matter of physical impossibility that they all could have seen it, because some of them live on the Atlantic coast and some on the Pacific, and there is no evidence that they did see it. I have received circulars from gentlemen in Toronto—I will not call them speculators, but they are land agents and very decent fellows—asking in the interest of the volunteer who has already sold that the time be extended, and they tell me that a lot of the poor volunteers have already bought the scrip back from the speculators and are wanting an extension.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I suppose the hon. member (Mr. Hughes) admits that Colonel Merritt, who sent out that circular, knew what was in it. I have received a personal letter from Colonel Merritt in connection with it.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not at all referring to Colonel Merritt. Colonel Merritt is a very fine gentleman.

Mr. GUTHRIE. If he signed it, you would think it would be genuine and that you could depend on it.

Mr. HUGHES. So far as Colonel Merritt is concerned, it is genuine enough, but the circular is presented here to influence the House and to make us believe that the gentlemen whose names are on the top of the circular, signed it. We have a perfect right to discuss that circular without referring at all to the gentlemen whose names are printed on top of it. We can do that without any disrespect to Colonel Merritt, who is a very fine fellow, or to the others.

Mr. NESBITT. Will the hon. gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. HUGHES. With great pleasure.

Mr. NESBITT. How do you know that the gentlemen whose names are signed to that circular did not know about it?

Mr. HUGHES. In the first place these gentlemen did not sign the circular; their names are printed at the head.

Mr. NESBITT. How do you know they did'nt see the circular?

Mr. HUGHES. It is a physical impossibility that they could have read the circular.

Mr. CONMEE. That would mean that there was a misrepresentation on the part of Colonel Merritt.

Mr. HUGHES. Nothing of the kind. If you look at the circular you will see that the names of these gentlemen are merely printed at the head of it, and there is nothing to say that they ever signed it or saw it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is a charge that must involve the honour of these gentlemen.

Mr. HUGHES. There is no question of the honour of these gentlemen about it in any sense, and I object to the interruption.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would like to inform the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES. I don't wish to be interrupted.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Currie) has no right to interrupt without the permission of the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. The question of honour was dragged in by the hon. member for North Simcoe when there was no necessity for it at all. Are we going to let that circular go on record as an argument for giving the speculator an extension of time, because the member for North Simcoe says that somebody's honour is involved? I will not for one.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member has said that these gentlemen did not know anything about the circular, and I may say that I presented a petition to this House on behalf of one-half of these gentlemen in favour of the principle involved in that circular.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not want to be interrupted by the hon. member.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Currie) cannot interrupt.

Mr. HUGHES. At the proper time, I will propose an amendment to this effect:

The provisions of this Act, and of the Volunteer Bounty Act of 1908, shall apply to any volunteer whose domicile was in Canada at the time of the opening of the war, and who produces indubitable evidence of his service in the field in South Africa, although he may not have been duly sworn in and enlisted.

My objection in this is to meet a number of cases that I think should be covered. The case of the doctors who went out and did splendid service will be covered by another amendment. Then, I wish to mention the case of a lad named Devine, from Halifax, who went out in one of the corps under Capt. Beardmore. He was too young when he started to be enrolled; but he served all through South Africa, wore the uniform, answered the roll-call every day; but owing to the fact that he was not technically enlisted and properly sworn in, he is not entitled to the benefit of the Bounty Act.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The circular read by the minister was one dated the 18th of April, 1910. The circular and correspondence to which I have referred was some months earlier. The circular which the minister read is signed Wm. Hamilton Merritt, lieutenant colonel, secretary, and the names of the committee are at the beginning of the circular. The association is not specifically named in the circular, but I think it is of some importance to the committee to know whether this circular is authentic or not. I assume that it is authentic, and that it expresses the views of the officers whose names are at the head of it. I assume also that the secretary had instructions to send that circular, and I think this committee might very well be guided by what that circular contains. If any one makes the imputation that the circular is not authentic, I think we should have some definite information on that point. I for one shall take it as authentic, and shall be guided by its contents.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman and the hon. member for North Simcoe are the only ones I have heard to-night throw any discredit on the circular. I shall deal with that matter to-morrow on its merits, and not on any ideas that may be promulgated for the extension of the Act for the benefit of the purchasers.

Mr. S. SHARPE. In regard to the circular, I understand that there was a South African committee appointed some years ago, and this is no doubt the same committee whose names are at the head of this circular, which was sent out by the secretary and no doubt expressed only his own personal views. No doubt the members of that committee are in favour of the Bill, as we are, in a restricted form. I understood that this Bill was on behalf of men who performed a service to the country, South African veterans, but not for speculators.

Mr. CONMEE. How are you going to draw the line?

Mr. S. SHARPE. It can be very easily drawn; make them produce their scrip and have it certified by the department.

Mr. CONMEE. Take the case mentioned by the hon. member who moved the amendment. There are hundreds of such cases.

Mr. S. SHARPE. In reference to that specific case, the young man is now in the west farming, and, being right on the ground, he can surely locate his land before December, 1910. I have an amendment which I submitted to the minister some time ago, enlarging the scope of the Act. There were certain civil surgeons who served in the war, who were in active operations in the field with the Canadian forces, and endured all the hardships; and if any persons who were not properly enlisted are entitled to the benefits of the Act, I think they were. If the benefits of the Act are to include nurses, I think surgeons should also be included. Then, there were certain volunteers who died on their way to South Africa. My amendment includes them, so that the scrip will go to their heirs. The effect of my amendment is very limited; it does not extend to more than eight or ten men; but if the minister wishes to do substantial justice to the men who served in South Africa, he should accept this amendment, and I commend it to his favourable consideration. I understand that under the regulations of the department existing at the time this Act first passed, the members of the families of two of those who died on the way to South Africa did receive scrip. My amendment is only to make the Act general in that respect. It reads as follows:

Section 2, subsection 2 shall be amended by adding thereto the following words, viz.: Canadian civil surgeons who served in South Africa during the war, and persons enrolled with any Canadian corps proceeding to South Africa on active service, and who died before such corps reached its destination.

Mr. HERRON. When we come to deal with the Bill clause by clause, I wish to move an amendment which will be number six of the present Act changing section 2 of the original Act. It is meant to cover such cases as those who enlisted for South Africa, and received injuries while on duty which caused them to be invalided home, before they reached South Africa. I have just a few words in clause 2, that I wish to be inserted; in the 5th line after the word 'Africa,' I would insert the words 'Or began the journey thereto,' and in the 6th line after the word 'War,' there might be added 'or injuries received on the journey.' That is the change I suggest, and it will make this difference that all the men who enlisted, and entered upon their duties, but who received injuries while on duty and were invalided home would receive the privileges of the Act to which I think they are entitled just as much as the men who went to the front, in many cases much more so, because some of the men invalided home are still unfit to earn a livelihood for themselves. I do not think there are many cases, there is only one or two to my knowledge in the whole Dominion. Of course, this amendment will also cover the cases of those who died on the journey. That is all I wish to say until we come to deal with the Bill clause by clause.

Mr. CROSBY. This is a favourable time to make propositions, and amendments to the Bill which we have before us. Last session I think I asked the Minister of the Interior to take into consideration the case of the men who garrisoned Halifax, and enabled the imperial troops to go to South Africa. These men enlisted, and were liable to be called at any moment to the front; in fact they were desirous of being called to South Africa, but they were not permitted to go there. I would urge the Minister of the Interior to take this matter up in connection with this Bill so that we will have the Bill made perfect. I think that last session the minister was good enough to tell me that he would bring the matter before the attention of his colleagues in the government so that I hope that when the Bill comes back he will have an amendment to the effect I have suggested, for I would rather it came from him as I know it would be more likely to go through.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. As the hour of twelve o'clock has now arrived, and as I presume the minister has heard all the suggestions he wants to hear to-night, we may adjourn, and he will be able to bring a perfect Bill before us at another time.

Mr. PATERSON. If none of those amendments are intended to be moved to section 1, perhaps section 1 should pass.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I intended to say that it was only at the invitation of the minister that these amendments should be made at this stage, and none of them are to section 1, and none are before the House at the moment. They will appear in 'Hansard,' and will have to be moved when the Bill comes up again.

Mr. DOHERTY. Section 1 might pass, if the amendments proposed are to section 4.

Mr. S. SHARPE. The second one deals with section 3 of the Act, and my amendment deals with section 2, consequently mine would come in prior to this section.

Mr. OLIVER. I am quite willing to accept the suggestion of the member for Leeds, but if there are any other gentlemen who have an amendment in mind or a suggestion to make, I thought perhaps we might get it to-night, and it would appear in 'Hansard,' as the Chairman has said. It would be convenient for reference and might shorten the discussion on a future occasion. If there is no other proposition to be placed before the House, however, I would move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. PATERSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Before the House adjourns will the hon. minister say what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. PATERSON. We will take some of the Bills that are upon the order paper, and then Supply.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I understood there was an arrangement between the leader of the opposition and the Prime Minister that we would take Supply early, because an hon. member on this side of the House has something to say. I think there is an arrangement to that effect.

Mr. PATERSON. I think there has been notice of a motion that will be made on going into Supply, but I think perhaps that in the forenoon we might take up some Bills that we are anxious to get through, and send to the other Chamber.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Some non-contentious ones?

Mr. PATERSON. There are one or two I think that are non-contentious, and they may be taken up first.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12 o'clock (midnight.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 27, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

THE LOBSTER FISHERIES.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the motion of which I gave notice on Monday morning for the adoption of the report with regard to the investigation of the lobster industry. It will be known by the hon. gentlemen who have kept track of this matter that there has been a good deal of dissatisfaction on the coast of the maritime provinces for some years past in regard to this question. Certain regulations were objected to, such as the refusal of the department to grant further licenses to packers. This policy was commenced some three of four years ago, and it was felt by men who wished to start in the business for the first time that they should have an opportunity, like other people who had been formerly engaged in the business. There was also a good deal dissatisfaction in regard to the size limit of lobsters. In some of the districts on the coast of the maritime provinces the law fixes the size limit of lobsters at eight inches. West of Halifax the limit is fixed at nine inches and in parts of the Bay of Fundy at ten and a half inches. But the regulations regarding the enforcement of this rule were found to be difficult and almost impossible to work out. Accordingly, this matter was referred to the standing committee on Marine and Fisheries last year. The committee commenced its meetings on the 8th of March last year, a large number of meetings were held, witnesses were examined and their examinations taken down and reported to the House. The officers of the department furnished the committee with all the information that was in the possession of the department and they also submitted themselves to examination on oath. The witnesses examined by the committee were : Professor E. E. Prince, Commissioner of Fisheries; H. E. Baker, Sydney, N.S.; F. H. Cunningham, Superintendent Fish Culture; R. N. Venning, Superintendent of Fisheries; Wm. Whitman, M.P.P., Guysborough, N.S.; George Walsh, Canso, N.S.; Alexander Keating, Canso, N.S.; Lewis Connors, Blacks Harbour, N.B.; John S. Cousins, Park Corner, P.E.I.; W. F. Tidmarsh, Charlottetown, P.E.I.; John McLean, Souris, P.E.I.; Meddie Gallant, Tignish, P.E.I.; Thomas Canty, Bathurst, N. B.; Onésiphore Turgeon, M.P., Gloucester, N.B.; J. J. Hughes, Souris, P.E.I.; M. H. Nickerson, M.P.P., Clarks Harbour, N.S.

These witnesses were all examined and cross-examined by the committee and their evidence was compiled, making a volume of 300 pages of printed matter, and reported to the House. The committee had not proceeded very far, however, until it appeared that they had undertaken a task of very considerable difficulty, and that they would require some further evidence in order to come to a correct conclusion on this question. There was a great deal of conflict of testimony or opinion with regard to these matters and it was felt that the committee could not, by the cumbersome methods of a parliamentary inquiry, find out what would be required in order to come to an intelligent decision on this disputed question. They recommended therefore that a commissioner be appointed to travel the coasts of the four provinces on which this industry is carried on, that he hold public meetings at various points on the coast, these meetings being advertised, that all parties presenting themselves and willing to give evidence be examined and that the evidence be reported to the committee. This recommendation was carried out by the minister and Commander Wakeham, the officer in charge of the gulf division of the fisheries in the province of Quebec, was appointed by the department to perform that duty. In my opinion no better selection could have been made. Commander Wakeham's long experience in the fisheries, as an officer, and in conducting investigations and taking evidence, qualified him for the position and no one can read his report without feeling that he performed his task in a very able manner. He visited a large number of places on the coasts of the four provinces. He examined no less than 261 witnesses and no less than 175 of these witnesses were fishermen. A good many of them were representative fishermen, men who came there to disclose the views not only of themselves but of other people who were not in a position to attend personally. He began work at the Magdalene Islands on the 12th day of July, he then came across to the mainland in the province of Quebec and continued along the coast until the 22nd of September when he closed the investigation at Grand Manan, N.B. During this time, as I have said, he examined 261 witnesses, the evidence was taken down, compiled and printed and it is now before the members of the House. It comprises two volumes of 1,227 pages. From this mass of evidence the committee were endeavouring to arrive at some conclusion when it was felt that a great deal of the evidence was a matter of opinion, that many men would say that in their opinion the size of lobsters caught in their district was so and so. It was felt by the committee that something more exact and definite was required in order to ascertain with certainty what the sizes of lobsters were in the different districts where the business was carried on. The committee therefore recommended that the officers along the coast, during last season (1908), be instructed to measure the lobsters taken at the different points and report the measurements to the department. These instructions were sent out and a large number of officers were employed in different districts along the coast of the maritime provinces to make these measurements. They measured in all 600,000 lobsters down to the exactness of half an inch and they tabulated each measurement and reported these measurements to the department. From these measurements the committee have collected their information. That information of course, is exact and authentic, the officers of the department have compiled these figures and reduced them to percentages, showing the percentage of undersized lobsters caught in the different districts. From the figures thus compiled it is seen that, in some districts, of the lobsters caught more than one half were undersized. I think in one district two thirds of the lobsters taken were under the legal size. The evidence disclosed that the rules and regulations regarding the size limit were totally disregarded and had been constantly violated ever since they were made 36 years ago, that no attempt had been made by the officers for many years—

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, but I think the procedure he is now adopting is a new one. I see that the committee in their report ask that the regulations concerning fisheries be changed. If this motion be adopted, the House would be committing the government to a new procedure. The procedure is a new one altogether. There are two reports from the committee, one is for the printing of the report, to which I suppose there would be no objection, and the other is asking for an alteration of the rules governing the fisheries. I am informed it is a new procedure.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not understand why it is irregular for me to support the motion and show the reasons why the committee arrived at their decisions.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am informed the procedure is a new one. If there is no objection——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If you have any doubt as to the regularity of the procedure, it would be well to have the motion stand over in order that the matter may be examined during the day and the hon. member could proceed to-morrow.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have inquired of the minister in charge and he informs me that he is not in a position to deal with the matter to-day.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The report, as far as I am aware, has had no consideration by the department. I understand it recommends very radical changes in the regulations. Whether the experts in the department and the minister would be prepared to put in force all these regulations or not, and whether by the adoption of this report the department would be bound to put them in force is a matter on which I am not very well advised, but I would think it would be prudent that the department should have cognizance of the report before it is adopted, particularly if the adoption means the acceptance of every recommendation. I would suggest that the report stand for a day or two.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would suggest that I be allowed to lay before the House my reasons why the report has been made, and at the conclusion of my remarks the minister might move the adjournment of the debate or deal with it in some way, so that the report would not be adopted until the department has had ample time to consider it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member is moving that the report be printed.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is the motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the only motion, that the report be printed.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is one of the motions.

Mr. SPEAKER. There are two motions, one for the printing of the report, and the other for the adoption of the recommendations.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman cannot speak to both at once.

Mr. DANIEL. What motion is now before the House?

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion, I understand, is for the printing of the report of the committee.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The regulations regarding the size limit for lobsters has been disregarded ever since it was introduced by the department some 36 years ago.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Are we to understand that if the hon. gentleman makes a speech some hon. gentleman on this side can keep up the discussion?

Mr. SPEAKER. There is a motion before the Chair which can be discussed.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. The motion is for the printing.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion for the printing can be discussed.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. He must confine himself to the printing.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member will have to confine himself to the motion he makes, his remarks must have relevancy to that motion.

Mr. SINCLAIR. If the Speaker decides that I am not at liberty to show the reasons why the report was introduced and should be printed, I will have to reserve my remarks. I think there are good reasons for making these recommendations and I want to show why I lay such a report before the House.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. When we see it printed——

Mr. SINCLAIR. It has been printed. It was presented to the House last Monday morning and at the time notice was given to the House that I would move its adoption to-day at the opening of the House, so no mistake should have been made by any member and every member should be ready to discuss it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion is regular, only I thought it my duty to call attention to it. I understand that the hon. member will move now for the adoption of the report of the committee.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is what I would like to do.

Mr. SPEAKER. If there is no objection to it——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understood my hon. friend to intimate that this report contains recommendations in relation to the regulations which may or may not be accepted by the government. These suggestions are merely recommendations of the committee. The minister says he is not prepared to give assent to these regulations to-day, and therefore my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) would perhaps do better not to proceed with the motion now; he could take it up to-morrow. The motion of the printing could be proceeded with.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It is understood that I may take the matter up on motions tomorrow. I move the printing of the report of the investigations into the lobster industry which I presented the other day. The committee have asked for the printing of 6,000 copies of their own report and also of the evidence of Commander Wakeham, given in connection with his report.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the report presented on Monday last and includes the report of Commander Wakeham as well as the evidence connected therewith.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) moves that rule 72 be suspended and the report be printed forthwith.

Mr. SPROULE. As this report entails an expenditure of a considerable amount, involving a charge on the consolidated revenue, on what ground can we adopt it without dealing with the proposed expenditure by resolution? Is it sufficient that a vote for printing be passed in the estimates, and that the expenditure be taken out of that?

Mr. SPEAKER. The custom, as I understand, has been, and it has been repeatedly done every session, that this rule must be suspended before any document may be printed at all. It is for the House to decide whether the rule shall be suspended or not.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, it is already printed.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not the question of suspending the rule that I refer to. It is the question of any motion passing this House for the expenditure of money out of the consolidated revenue without the expenditure being authorized by a resolution of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This report is printed in the Votes and Proceedings, and the motion that the rule be suspended and that the papers be printed, is simply in order that this report may be printed in the appendix of the Journals of this House as well as in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. LENNOX. Does not the Joint Committee of both Houses on Printing decide what papers shall be printed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. Rule 72 provides that the Joint Committee on Printing shall determine what reports shall be printed in the Appendix to the Journals, and the motion asks for the suspension of that rule and an order of the House for immediate printing.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. This is frequently done, with the result that a great deal of printing is done that is not necessary. I think the matter should be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing for them to decide.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether the Prime Minister understood the point I raised. It was whether this motion can be passed without a resolution voting money out of the Consolidated Revenue for the purpose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In the estimates for the House of Commons which are voted each year there is a sum provided for the printing of documents of this kind.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER COMPANY.

Mr. S. SHARPE:

1. Has the St. Lawrence Power Company complied with section 13 of the Act of Incorporation, 1901?
2. Has the government investigated the facts in regard to this question?
3. If so, in what way and what conclusion has the government reached?
4. If not, does the government propose instituting any investigation with the view of ascertaining whether the powers of the Company under the Act of 1901 have become null and void?
5. Does the government entertain the view of the Solicitor General, that the amendments inserted in the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company's Bill dealing with the St. Lawrence Power Company, created by the Act of 1901, cannot possibly control or affect the Company under the Act of 1901?
6. Do any of the amendments inserted in the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Bill, in the opinion of the government, have the effect of reviving any of the powers of the St. Lawrence Power Company under the Act of 1901, which may have become null and void by reason of the said company not complying with the provisions of said Act?
7. Was it the intention of the government or the hon. member who had charge of the Bill, by any of the amendments, to revive said rights?
8. If the said company had forfeited any of the rights, is it the intention of the government to claim the benefit of such forfeiture?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY. When this question was asked at a recent sitting of the House in the absence of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sharpe), I referred to the fifth portion of the question, and stated that the government was not aware that the Solicitor General had expressed the view stated in the question, and my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) said that he would ask the hon. gentleman to give me the information as to when and where the Solicitor General had made the statement. As this is an allegation of fact, it ought not to be put into a question. I am informed that it is an erroneous statement, that no such view has been expressed by the Solicitor General, and unless my hon. friend gives me the information, I think he will see the propriety of withdrawing the question and submitting a new one if he so desires.

Mr. S. SHARPE. When the question was being discussed by myself, I understood the Solicitor General to interject that opinion. I also understood from the words of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) that he entertained the same opinion, and I think the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet) also interjected the same opinion; and, if I am not mistaken, the Minister of Public Works expressed the same opinioin.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all.

Mr. S. SHARPE. However, I accept the denial of the Solicitor General, and I will eliminate No. 5.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If I am in order, I may say that the hon. gentleman is entirely in error. I expressed no such opinion, and I find that the Solicitor General is not reported in 'Hansard' as having expressed any such opinion. Indeed, I do not find that the Solicitor General expressed any opinion or took any part whatever in the debate.

Mr. S. SHARPE Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot allow a debate on this question.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Leave out the words 'Solicitor General.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I insist on the point of order. I think it is very much better to have questions put that do not contain allegations of fact that are not correct.

Question dropped.

LT.-COL. B. A. SCOTT.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. In what years was Colonel or Lieutenant-Colonel B. A. Scott at the head of the 18th Regiment?
2. In what year did he cease to be in that position?
3. Did he resign? If so, for what reasons?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN:

1. From February 1, 1900, to January 7, 1903.
2. January 7, 1903.
3. Resigned the command and was transferred to the reserve of officers. The records do not show the reason for the resignation.

REVENUES FOR 1909-10.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR:

What are the exact figures of dutiable and free imports, respectively, and the amount collected in customs, excise and other revenue, respectively, for the year ending March 31, 1910?

Hon. WM. PATERSON:

The figures are not yet finally completed, but I have the unrevised figures, which are nearly correct. The unrevised total imports and exports for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1910, were as follows:

Imports, dutiable	$241,912,200
Imports, free	149,891,136
Total	$391,803,336
Exports, domestic	$279,211,537
Exports, foreign	22,146,992
Total	$301,358,529

The unrevised amount collected as customs duties during the year was, $61,031,336.90.

CHARGES AGAINST QUEBEC OFFICIAL.

Mr. MEIGHEN:

Does the Minister of the Interior purpose investigating the charges made against Mr. Lavoie, agent at Quebec, by J. J. O'Flaherty? If so, when and how?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER. I will read the report of the Superintendent of Immigration :

Hon. Frank Oliver,
Minister of the Interior.

I have received the letter addressed to you by Mr. J. J. O'Flaherty, No. 38 St. Anne St., Quebec, formerly an employee in the immigration service there.

Mr. O'Flaherty was dismissed for cause and I do not think that any attention at all should be paid to his letter making charges against Dr. Lavoie.

There are only two of these charges that concern the department in the slightest degree: (1) the charge of discourtesy towards the public having business with the Quebec Immigration Office; (2) the charge that Dr. Lavoie exhibits antipathy towards Protestant ministers performing missionary work among the immigrants.

The reference to his granting holidays to the staff and falsifying the attendance certificates has already been gone into in connection with the Stein case, and there is simply nothing in these allegations.

The statement that in the summer seasons of 1908 and 1909, foreign immigrants, especially Galicians, were drastically treated and that one Oscar Bliss was allowed to have dealings with them, is explained by the negotiations which took place, resulting in the release from detention of a number of immigrants going to railroad work on a guarantee of such work being obtained for them, the immigrants themselves being desirous of taking this work in preference to going back to Europe. Dr. Lavoie simply carried out the instructions of the department in this connection.

The first of the two charges enumerated above, viz., that of discourtesy towards the public, was gone into in connection with the Stein case and thoroughly disproved.

In support of charge 2, viz., that Dr. Lavoie exhibits antipathy towards Protestant ministers, Mr. O'Flaherty states specifically that: 'Upon one occasion, June 6, 1909, on the arrival of the Allan Line steamship 'Virginian,' Dr. Lavoie publicly and wantonly insulted the Rev. Mr. Caffin, the Church of England minister and missionary.'

This is worthy of investigation, and I am writing to the clergyman referred to to get his statement of the affair, which I will communicate to you in due course.

(Signed) W. D. SCOTT,
Superintendent of Immigration.

SATURDAY SITTING.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to move that when this House adjourns on Friday, the 29th instant, it stand adjourned to the following day, Saturday, the 30th, at 11 o'clock a.m.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Before the motion is adopted might I ask the hon. the Prime Minister if his intention is to prorogue next week on Wednesday?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, that is our intention.

Mr. HUGHES. Do you intend to carry it out ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I see no reason why it cannot be carried out. Can my hon. friend see any?

Mr. HUGHES. None.

Motion agreed to.

AID TO CANADIAN NORTHERN ALBERTA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM. I beg to move that on Friday next I will move that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution, the subject matter of which has been submitted to His Excellency the Governor General who has approved of the same :

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide:

1. That the Governor in Council may aid and assist the construction of the line of railway of a company to be incorporated under the name of 'Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company,' from a point at or near Edmonton or Strathcona, in the province of Alberta, thence in a generally western direction to the coal areas, situated at or near the Brazeau river and the headwaters of the McLeod river, for a distance not exceeding one hundred and fifty miles, by guaranteeing the principal and interest of the bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities, hereinafter called securities, secured as hereinbefore mentioned, of the company, to the extent of thirteen thousand dollars per mile for the first fifty miles of the line so aided, and, for the remainder of the said line, to the amount of twenty-five thousand dollars per mile, not exceeding in all one hundred and fifty miles, the interest upon the said securities to be at the rate of three and one-half per cent per annum, payable half-yearly, the principal to be payable in fifty years; and that the aid granted or authorized by Chapter 25 of the Statutes of 1908, intituled: An Act respecting aid for the extention of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway,' be cancelled.

2. That the said securities so guaranteed shall be secured by a deed or deeds of trust, by way of mortgage or charge to a trustee or trustees, approved of by the Governor in Council, and such deed or deeds of trust shall respectively grant a first mortgage or charge upon the said line of railway so aided, and the right of way, station grounds, or other real estate and interest therein, buildings and other structures and improvements, rolling stock and equipment, plant, machinery, tools, supplies, materials and other personal properties, present and future, acquired for the purposes of the said line so aided, and in connection with operating, repairing and maintaining it, and the tolls, incomes and revenues of the company arising and to arise from the said line, and the rights, privileges, franchises and powers of the company now or hereafter held with respect to and in connection with the said line and the operation, maintenance and repair thereof.

3. That the kind of securities to be guaranteed as aforesaid, and the forms thereof, and the form and terms of the deed or deeds of trust securing them, and the times and manner of the issue of securities and the disposition of the moneys to be raised thereon, by sale, pledge, or otherwise, pending the expenditure of such moneys for the purposes of the line of railway so aided, and the forms and the manner of guarantee, shall be such as the Governor in Council approves and such terms, provisions and conditions may be included in such deed or deeds of trust, as the Governor in Council deems expedient or necessary.

4. That the said guarantee shall be signed by the Minister of Finance or such officer as is designated by the Governor in Council to sign it; and upon being so signed the Dominion of Canada shall become liable as guarantor for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities so guaranteed according to the tenor thereof, and the said payment shall form a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

5. That any moneys paid by the Dominion of Canada under any guarantee herein provided for shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the Dominion and not in discharge of the liability of the company under the securities so guaranteed, or under any deed of trust securing them and the moneys so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and deed of trust, and the Dominion shall be subrogated in and to all the rights of the holders of such securities, the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the Dominion, and the Dominion shall, with respect to all moneys so paid, be in all respects in the position of security holders with respects to whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the Dominion.

6. That the decision of the Governor in Council as to the length of the mileage of the said line of railway so to be aided shall, for the purposes hereof, be final.

7. That the books of the company shall at all times be open for inspection for and on behalf of the government by any person named in that behalf by the Governor in Council or the Minister of Finance.

8. That the Canadian Northern Railway Company shall, by guarantee included in the said deed or deeds of trust, or in some other instrument agreed to by the Governor in Council or the Minister of Finance and the last named company, in such form as the Governor in Council shall approve, guarantee to His Majesty the due payment by the company of the principal and interest of all securities issued and guaranteed under the provisions hereof, according to the tenor and effect of such securities, respectively, and in accordance with the terms of the said deed or deeds of trust, and shall also guarantee to His Majesty the due payment by the company of all loss or costs which His Majesty may sustain or be put to in enforcing, after default, the provisions of the said deed or deeds of trust against the line of railway and premises thereby mortgaged and charged.

9. That the company may acquire the line of railway constructed or partially constructed or located by the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company, or by the Canadian Northern Railway Company as its successor by amalgamation, between the points set forth in paragraph 1 hereof, and all properties, works, surveys, plans and locations, held, made, approved or established in connection therewith; and the same shall, for the purposes hereof and the guarantee hereby authorized, be taken to form part of the line of railway hereby aided. The deed of transfer or acquirement (which the respective companies interested are hereby authorized to execute) shall be executed and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State of Canada before any securities are issued or guaranteed hereunder in respect of the line of railway and incidental properties so acquired; and the said deed upon being so executed and deposited shall, without further formality, be taken to vest in the company all the properties, works, surveys, plans and locations held, made, approved or established by or for the transferring companies, or either of them, in respect of the line of railway or portions thereof so transferred, with the same rights, privileges and priorities as were at the time of the execution of such deed held by the transferring companies respectively.

Motion agreed to.

DRY DOCK SUBSIDIES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On behalf of Mr. Fielding I beg to move that to-morrow the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions which have been brought to the attention of His Excellency the Governor General and approved by him :

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the repeal of chapter 24 of the Acts of 1908, the Dry Dock Subsidies Act, and that in substitution therefor it be provided, as an aid to the construction of any dry dock approved as to location and capacity by the Governor in Council, that a subsidy, as hereinafter set out, may be paid out of consolidated revenue fund to any incorporated company, approved by the Governor in Council, which shall enter into an agreement with His Majesty to construct the same with all necessary equipment, machinery and plant, the cost on which subsidy is to be calculated to be determined by the Governor in Council before the agreement for construction is entered into, the Governor in Council being satisfied that such dry dock is needed in the public interest.

2. That for the purpose of constructing a dry dock under the provisions of any Act founded on these resolutions the company may utilize, or acquire for the purpose of utilizing, the works and property of any existing dry dock company whose dock has been constructed under the provisions of chapter 17 of the statutes of 1882, chapter 9 of the statutes of 1899, chapter 116 of the Revised Statutes, or chapter 24 of the statutes of 1908, and the value of any such works and property so far as the same may be useful in constructing a dry dock of greater dimensions or capacity shall be deemed to be for the purposes of subsidy calculation a part of the cost of the dry dock to be constructed, such value being fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Public Works, based upon a report of the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, before the agreement for construction is entered into:

Provided, that the aggregate amount of all subsidies paid under the provisions of any of said Acts by the Governor in Council on account of the dock so utilized shall be deducted from the subsidy payable under the provisions of any Act founded hereon, such deductions being made in equal annual portions during the period in respect of which subsidy is payable under the provisions of such Act; and that the remaining payments, if any, of subsidy called for by the agreement entered into under either of said chapters shall not be made;

3. That dry docks constructed under the provisions of any Act founded on these resolutions, shall, for the purposes of such Act, be divided into three classes;

1. Dry docks of the first class, for naval and general purposes, costing for the purposes of subsidy calculation not more than four million dollars, being—

(a) Dry docks, other than floating dry docks, of dimensions when completed not less than the principal dimensions next hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, clear length on bottom from caisson groove or hollow-quoin to head 900 feet; clear width of entrance, 100 feet; depth of water over the sill at high water ordinary spring tides, 35 feet;

(b) Floating dry docks of a lifting capacity of at least twenty-five thousand tons, and in which vessels can with ease and safety be received and repaired:

Provided, however, that any dry dock shall not for the purposes of such Act be deemed to be a dry dock of the first class unless capable of receiving and repairing therein the largest vessels or ships of the British navy existing at the time at which the contract is entered into;

2. Dry docks of the second class, costing for the purposes of subsidy calculation, not more than two and one-half million dollars, being—

(a) Dry docks, other than floating dry docks of dimensions when completed not less than the principal dimensions next hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, clear length on bottom from caisson groove or hollow-quoin to head, 650 feet; clear width of entrance, 85 feet; depth of water over the sill, 30 feet at high water ordinary spring tides if constructed on tidal waters, and 25 feet at ordinary low water if constructed on non-tidal waters;

(b) Floating dry docks of a lifting capacity of at least fifteen thousand tons, and in which vessels can with ease and safety be received and repaired;

3. Dry docks of the third class costing for the purposes of subsidy calculation not more than one and one-half million dollars, being—

(a) Dry docks, other than floating dry docks, of dimensions when completed not less than the principal dimensions next hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, clear length on bottom from caisson groove or hollow-quoin to head, 400 feet; clear width of entrance, 85 feet; depth of water over the sill, 22 feet at high water ordinary spring tides if constructed on tidal waters, and 18 feet at ordinary low water if constructed on non-tidal waters;

(b) Floating dry docks of a lifting capacity of at least three thousand five hundred tons, and in which vessels can with ease and safety be received and repaired;

4. That the subsidy payable in respect of dry docks, which have been constructed under the provisions of any Act founded on these resolutions, shall be,

(a) If of the first class, a sum not exceeding 3½ per centum of the cost of the work as fixed and determined by the Governor in Council each year during a period not exceeding thirty-five years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under the provisions of the Act that the work has been completed;

(b) If of the second class, a sum not exceeding three and one-half per centum of the cost of the work, as fixed and determined by the Governor in Council each year during a period not exceeding twenty-five years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under the provisions of the Act that the work has been completed;

(c) If of the third class, a sum not exceeding three per centum of the cost of the work, as fixed and determined by the Governor in Council each year during a period not exceeding twenty years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under the provisions of the Act that the work has been completed;

5. That the work of construction be done under the supervision of the Department of Public Works.

6. That the Governor in Council be empowered, after a subsidy becomes payable, if such dry dock is not in a state of efficiency and repair, to take possession thereof, and to expend out of Consolidated Revenue Fund a sufficient sum to repair the same, and thereafter operate such dock until the cost of such repairs, after payment of operating expenses and maintenance, is received by the Crown;

7. That the tariff of tolls and rates for the use of the dock prescribed by the company shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and that the company shall make an annual statement to the Governor in Council of the operations of the company with a statement of receipts and expenditures in detail;

8. That provision be made in the agreement under which a floating dry dock is to be constructed for the annual setting aside by the company of a sum which the Governor in Council may deem sufficient to provide a fund wherewith to renew the whole of the floating part of the dock at the expiry of the time at which that part of the dock shall have ceased to be serviceable;

9. That, on the application of the government of Canada, or any minister thereof, ships in the British naval service, in the naval service of Canada, or other vessels the property of or employed by His Majesty, shall at times be entitled to the use of such docks in priority to all other vessels.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BLONDIN. Before the orders of the day are called I desire to rise to a question of privilege. I see in the Ottawa 'Citizen' of April 25, 1910, the following statement: It is headed:

'Like Irish Party—French Canadian recommendation for Ottawa House.' Montreal, April 24. D. E. Blondin, M.P., for Champlain, speaking at a meeting held at Coteau Landing to-day, advocated the formation of a French Canadian party from the province of Quebec at Ottawa on the same lines as the Irish party at Westminster. Mr. Blondin, who declared himself as a supporter of Mr. Monk on the naval policy, said that a French Canadian party should eventually hold the balance of power at Ottawa as the followers of John Redmond now hold the balance of power in the British Commons.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

Mr. Speaker, I give the most emphatic denial to all that is said there. 'La Patrie' and 'Le Devoir' the only two newspapers represented at the meeting have given the full sense of my remarks, and their reports which are exact do not contain anything of the kind. I did not say a single word which could justify in any way, such a statement as that made by the 'Citizen.'

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I desire to rise for the purpose of making an explanation in connection with the Bill that was passed yesterday afternoon by the Minister of Labour, for the purpose of amending the Industrial Disputes Act. I have to say on behalf of certain constituents of mine that in the latter part of last session and again in the early part of this session, I introduced a Bill for the purpose of amending the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act in certain respects. The Bill was not reached last session, being introduced too late, and this session after the Bill was introduced by myself, I had a conversation with the Minister of Labour, and in the course of that conversation, the minister stated his intention of bringing in a Bill to amend the same Act in substantially similar respects. I had an understanding with the hon. minister, which is contained in 'Hansard' of December 9, by which it was agreed that these two Bills should come on together and should be discussed at the same time. Since that date my hon. friend and myself have had several conversations, during which he notified me that his Bill would not be proceeded with in my absence as the Bills were largely the same, and I desire to be present for the purpose of discussing my Bill, which was the prior Bill, in accordance with the understanding I have mentioned. My Bill has been side-tracked and cannot be reached this session, but the Minister of Labour put through his Bill yesterday. I received no intimation from the minister of his intention to give his Bill the second or third reading yesterday and I was not present on the occasion which I regret. It is a distinct breach of the understanding contained in the arrangement I have referred to on December 9, at page 1341 of 'Hansard.' I regret that the hon. minister should have taken this course in dealing with his Bill without giving any notice to me.

Mr. KING. I am very sorry that the hon. member should think there has been any breach of understanding. As I remember the understanding he refers to, it had reference to the Bill he introduced last fall, the understanding reached in January did he say?

Mr. MACDONELL. December.

Mr. KING. The understanding had reference to the question of how far his Bill should proceed at that time and after conferring with the hon. member and mentioning that I was introducing a government measure, it was agreed that if I would allow his Bill to go as far as the committee he was prepared to leave it there until my Bill reached the same stage. That was the extent of the understanding I think.

Mr. MACDONELL. Your Bill was read the third time yesterday.

Mr. KING. Yes, but the understanding was that the hon. member's Bill should not proceed further until my Bill reached the same stage as his had. There was no further understanding than that. As to my Bill going on yesterday, I can only say I was as much in the dark as to proceeding with the measure as he was until the afternoon. I took my chances here, and, seeing it was so near the end of the session, I watched for the first opportunity to get through the committee stage of my Bill. I found that opportunity when we got through with—I think it was—the Bill relating to the water carriage of goods. I had only a few minutes notice myself. I had no understanding with the hon. member (Mr. Macdonell) to notify him when that stage should be reached—

Mr. MACDONELL. Yes.

Mr. KING. I am sorry if the hon. member thinks so. I do not remember giving him any promise to notify him. I assumed that, if he was following the legislation he would——

Mr. MACDONELL. I ask the privilege of reading what took place——

Mr. SPEAKER. A discussion on the matter cannot be allowed at this stage.

Mr. MACDONELL. All I desire is to read 'Hansard' showing what took place.

Mr. SPEAKER. But the minister (Mr. King) may desire to answer, and so this may be the beginning of a discussion, and discussion is not in order at this stage. It is only by the courtesy of the House that it can be permitted.

Mr. MACDONELL. With the permission of the House, I desire to read what took place. I read from the same page, 1341, of 'Hansard' to which I have already referred:

Mr. MACDONELL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 23) to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907. He said: The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King) has some amendments to consider in connection with the Industrial Disputes Act which may conveniently be considered at the same time with the amendments which are contained in this Bill, and as I am anxious to advance the Bill to the committee stage I move the second reading with the understanding that it shall be allowed to stand until the Minister of Labour is prepared to consider this Bill and his own amendments.

Mr. KING. The hon. gentleman has correctly stated the position, and I am entirely agreeable to what he proposes.

Mr. KING. That is exactly what I have just said, and exactly what took place.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I desire to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) when I may expect the return in connection with Windygates post office?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was under the impression that I had brought that return down. I will see to it at once.

Mr. CROCKET. I desire to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) when the return respecting the St. John river channel survey may be expected?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will make inquiry. This morning I brought down a large return, the preparation of which has taken a good deal of time, and, no doubt, the staff has been busy.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When may I expect the return, which, the minister was good enough to say I could have in a few days—with reference to printing and advertising?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did the hon. member (Mr. Armstrong) ask me? I think that is with the Secretary of State.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It has reference to the Department of Public Works, and I understood that the deputy minister of Public Works was having it prepared.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a matter in charge of the Secretary of State. I will make inquiry about it.

THE AIR-BRAKE MAGAZINE.

Mr. HUGHES. Some time ago, the Postmaster General will remember I drew attention to the air-brake magazine, and the question of postage. Has any conclusion been arrived at in that matter?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes; I will communicate with the hon. member (Mr. Hughes).

MAIL MATTER CARRIED BY FREE DELIVERY.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. On Monday last, I asked a question of the Postmaster General with regard to the delivery of parcels in places where free delivery is carried on. The question was in part, as follows:

Has the Post Office Department established any regulations respecting free delivery of matter, other than letters? If so, have such regulations been made public and where?

And the answer—or, rather, the response—was as follows:

The only class of people affected are the business men, senators and members of parliament, living in cities, who are perfectly aware of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I take exception to that answer under two heads. In the first place, it is a violation of the rule of the House which provides that no opinion shall be offered in answer to a question or anything stated beyond what is called for by the question. In the second place, it is not a correct statement of the facts. For, I may tell the Postmaster General, the question was based on complaints that I had received from New Westminster that small packages and even magazines addressed to residents of the city, were not delivered. Mail received for which there is supposed to be free delivery is held at the post office, and a card is delivered by the carrier notifying the addressee that a parcel is there, and asking that it be called for. Now, I am a businessman and a member of parliament, and I had no knowledge of the regulation. When I put a question here in a courteous manner relating to the Post Office Department, I think I am entitled to a courteous answer and not a statement asserting that I have the information I ask for. I desire to have an answer to my question.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. member (Mr. J. D. Taylor) thinks there was any intention to show discourtesy in the answer, I assure him there was no such intention, nor do I believe that the answer given by me to the hon. member's questions bears any mark of discourtesy. What is the question? Everybody is aware that parcels of large size are carried through the mails. Such parcels are sent, especially after the session is over, to members and senators—blue-books and matter of that kind. Is it expected that the letter-carriers shall deliver the same on their regular routes? It would cripple the service to attempt to do so. Therefore, in places where there is free mail delivery, we have long had a regulation in force in the department under which a card is delivered to the addressee making him aware of the fact that there is a parcel of large size addressed to him lying at the local post office. The addressee sends for it. As I have said, if we were to force the letter-carriers in the cities to deliver these large parcels, we should cripple the service and delay the delivery of mail matter. Under these circumstances, I cannot see my way clear to change the regulation. As I stated in that answer, members of the House, senators and some business men are affected by this regulation. But it is a case of force majeure.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The minister has not yet answered my question, which is, whether there is any regulation, and where it is to be found?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have just answered that. I said that it was a regulation of the department, established many years ago, that, in the case of large parcels addressed to people in cities, a card should be sent to the addressee and he should send for the parcel to the post office. But small parcels are delivered. If this is not carried out, my hon. friend is justified in making his complaint. But I say that the regulation exists, and rightly exists, in the case of large parcels. Small parcels are delivered every day by the letter-carriers. But the House will agree that it would be unfair to impose on the letter-carriers in their every-day delivery such a load as would be involved in the delivery of large parcels.

HARBOUR OF ST. JOHN.

Bill (No. 204) to authorize the erection of certain wharfs and buildings in the harbour of St. John—Mr. Pugsley—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. DANIEL. I understand that this Bill is introduced at the instigation of the common council of the city of St. John, that they have passed the order to transfer a certain amount of the property referred to from the city to this Mr. Durant. I might ask the Minister of Public Works if this Bill was drawn by the common council or by the recorder of the city or by whom?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This Bill has been drafted by the recorder of the city of St. John and by Mr. Taylor, solicitor for Mr. Durant, of the Atlantic Sugar Refining Company, which he is organizing. It was submitted to me, I made some suggestions as to slight changes in it and it was approved by them, so it represents the views both of the city of St. John and of Mr. Durant. It is simply carrying out what has been agreed to and what has been already confirmed by the legislature of the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. LANCASTER. Briefly, what is the object of the Bill?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The city of St. John owns a piece of property on the eastern side of the harbour, a portion of which is covered with navigable water. The government of Canada owns the piece of land immediately to the south where the Ballast wharf now is. Mr. Durant has made a proposition to the city of St. John for the erection of a very large sugar refinery on the condition that the city would procure for him a suitable site for the erection of his refinery, the building of wharfs, and the making of other improvements in connection with the undertaking. He has thought it desirable that the property should be erected upon property immediately to the south which is owned by this government and an arrangement has been made under which that property owned by the city shall be exchanged for the property owned by the government and occupied by the Intercolonial railway. The matter has been under consideration for a good many months and an agreement has been arrived at under which the city and the government through Mr. Durant are to make an exchange of the respective properties, and the refinery will actually be erected on the property owned by the government, but the city will convey to the government a property which is regarded under all these circumstances as of equal value and giving equal advantages to the Intercolonial railway. The matter has been agreed upon by the city of St. John, Mr. Durant and the Intercolonial railway authorities, and has been approved of by the legislature of the province of New Brunswick. The object of this legislation is to supplement or implement the legislation of the legislature of New Brunswick. It is thought necessary by reason of the fact that a portion of the land is covered by navigable water. That is the reason and the only reason for coming to parliament for the purpose of obtaining this legislation.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister is satisfied, and I presume the city of St. John is satisfied that the financial ability of Mr. Durant is capable of carrying out what he proposes, that is, to build a large sugar refinery there. Is the minister quite satisfied in regard to that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say I have preferred to take the request of the city of St. John as my guide in the matter.

Mr. DANIEL. I just wanted to know if the minister had any better knowledge than some of the members of the common council, because some of them did not appear to know very much about the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The legislation of the province of New Brunswick contains ample safeguards protecting the interests of the city. If the undertaking is not carried out in good faith in accordance with the terms of the agreement the transfers become void and the respective properties become revested in the city of St. John and the Crown. I may say that I believe Mr. Durant is acting in good faith, and that he has the financial ability to carry out the undertaking, but I give no pledge of that to this House. As I have said, the city of St. John, represented by the common council, has gone into the matter very thoroughly, has satisfied itself of the bona fides and ability of Mr. Durant, and of the desirability of entering into this arrangement. I think the interests of the city are thoroughly safeguarded, as are also the interests of this government.

Mr. DANIEL. If this exchange of property should be made, I presume it would be made before any building took place. Suppose the arrangement becomes void by non-fulfilment of duties by Mr. Durant, and the exchange of property has already been made, then how could it be undone? The property could not revert because in that case the government, as represented by the Department of Railways and Canals, would have possession of this property which is being transferred to the city and Mr. Durant would have possession of the property transferred by the Department of Railways and Canals. That is the one feature I have not been able to understand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Under the statute of the legislature of New Brunswick if there is any failure to carry out the terms of the agreement, the property, by operation of the law, becomes re-vested in the government of Canada and the city of St. John respectively. That is the provision of the statute of New Brunswick.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the legislature of New Brunswick the authority to dispose of the property of the Dominion in that way?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I propose adding an amendment to implement that legislation, as section 3. I have submitted it to the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways, and they approve of it. It reads:

3. All conditions and limitations which may be contained in such conveyance from the city of St. John to the said Frederick C. Durant or in any conveyance from His Majesty to the said Frederick C. Durant of adjoining lands are hereby declared and shall be deemed legal and valid, and shall be binding upon the said Frederick C. Durant, his heirs and assigns, and any failure to comply with the conditions contained in such conveyances from the city of St. John and from His Majesty shall have the effect of revesting the title to the lands respectively conveyed by such conveyances in the said city and in His Majesty respectively; provided, however, that in the event of the happening of the contingency hereinbefore mentioned under which the city would be entitled to have revested in it the said property so conveyed by it to the said Frederick C. Durant, and His Majesty should be entitled to have revested in His Majesty the said property so conveyed by him to the said Frederick C. Durant, His Majesty may elect to retain either one property or the other.

I put in that provision for His Majesty having the election, because the Crown might make certain improvements in the meantime upon the property which is now owned by the city, but which is to be transferred to the Crown. I think it better to safeguard the interests of the Crown by giving it that right of election. Thus, taking together the legislation of the province of New Brunswick and of this parliament, I think the interests of both the city and the Crown will be thoroughly safeguarded.

Mr. SPROULE. What would happen if Mr. Durant encumbered that property very heavily in the meantime?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would make no difference, it would come back to the city and Crown respectively, and persons who would advance money on mortgage if there were a mortgage, would do so subject to the provision of the statute and would take the risk.

Mr. HUGHES. How long has the Intercolonial railway been in possession of it, what was the cost of it, and what is the present value?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to give that to my hon. friend. I may say that the negotiations for this undertaking, and for the exchange of the property were carried on for a good many months by Mr. Butler, of course, under the direction of the Minister of Railways and Canals. Mr. Butler was the deputy minister, and the opinion of the Railway Department was that it would be of advantage not only to the city of St. John to secure the erection of a large sugar refinery which will have a capacity of 2,000 or 3,000 barrels per day, and which will employ several hundred hands, but that, being situate right at the deep water terminus of the Intercolonial railway, the Intercolonial railway would get the benefit of the freight. The sugar will naturally be forwarded by the Intercolonial railway, as it will be the only railway connecting with the refinery, and the opinion of Mr. Butler was that the erection of a refinery with a capacity of 2,000 barrels a day at the terminus of the Intercolonial railway would be the means of giving the Intercolonial railway a very large trade, and presumably a profitable freight. The property which it is to obtain, and which is now owned by the city, in the opinion of Mr. Butler, offers equal advantages to the Intercolonial railway in connection with its terminals.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it equal in value? Was not this property now held by the Intercolonial railway and which is being transferred in exchange for this other property purchased only a few years ago by the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was purchased at least 37 years ago. My hon. friend is thinking of the property at the head of the harbour.

Mr. DANIEL. Will any change be made in the Intercolonial railway trestle that passes right over this property? What is proposed to be done with it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not gone into the details, but I understand that certain changes are to be made which are necessary for the most beneficial utilization of the property for the purpose of the refinery, and also for the purposes of the terminus of the Intercolonial railway, but just what these changes are I do not know. Everything was determined upon by the Department of Railways when Mr. Butler was deputy minister.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think that the point raised by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is perhaps a little more important than it appears to the minister. I have not had the advantage of seeing the new section 3 which is going in. I heard it read, and if I heard it correctly, I am afraid it does not quite go far enough to cover the point raised by my hon. friend. Section 1 of this Bill gives the title to Frederick C. Durant absolutely. There is no condition in the section that it is to be forfeited under any circumstances. By the ordinary rules, if there were a mortgage, as suggested by my hon. friend, I am afraid that the mortgagee would have the rights that the Crown had given away. I mean the Crown as represented by the Dominion parliament; I do not mean the Crown as represented by the province. I am not concerned with the province; I am only concerned in seeing that the property owned by the Crown in the Dominion is properly protected. I understand the hon. gentleman to mean that if a mortgage were to be put upon such property the mortgagee would lose his rights and could have no claim, and that under the arrangement the rights of the Dominion are protected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Clearly so.

Mr. LANCASTER. If it were so, it would be all right, but I am afraid that the Bill does not quite protect us in that respect.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend allow me just a word? I think we may facilitate the discussion. Section 1 does not confirm the conveyance or does not declare as to what the terms of the conveyance are, but simply says that the city of St. John is authorized to make the conveyance.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is what I am afraid of.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Both the conveyances from the city of St. John to Mr. Durant, and from the Crown to Mr. Durant, would contain this clause that if the conditions of the agreement are not fulfilled the property shall revert to St. John and the Crown respectively, and the object of the provincial legislation and to this legislation is merely to place upon the statute-book what is apparent in the deed.

Mr. LANCASTER. The usual way of doing that is to append a schedule to the Act setting out the agreement which you are proposing to have carried out. That is not being done here. There might be half a dozen conveyances. As far as section 1 goes the effect of it is to confirm the conveyance that these other people may agree to, but which is not authorized to be made with this parliament. We have not got that conveyance in this Bill as a schedule to the Bill, although we generally have such a schedule in legislation of this kind, so that we may know exactly what are the terms and obligations and conditions which are to be conformed to and which agreement declares that they must forfeit their rights if they fail to conform to them. In the absence of that schedule, section 1, authorizes any conveyance that these people may ultimately make. They may propose to make a conveyance to-day but by mutual consent they may abandon that conveyance and make a new one. I do not think this parliament ought to go it blind in that way. Section 3 would be all right if we knew exactly what the terms of the conveyance are, but what I do not like is delegating to the city of St. John and the province of New Brunswick the right to make any conveyance they like and to have that conveyance confirmed by this parliament without seeing it. I object to it as a matter of principle. We must look at the matter as dealing with the Crown land of the Dominion. We are legalizing a contract that we have not seen. The minister knows what it is supposed to be, but I would point out to him that by the ordinary rules with respect to the rights of people in contracting, they may cancel that conveyance and make another one which is not in the contemplation of the hon. gentleman, and we will be authorizing them to do anything they like in regard to it. That is what I object to in this legislation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Section 1 of this Bill authorizes the city of St. John to make a conveyance. I did not think it was desirable to set out the conveyance or agreement in full. The agreement is fully set out in the statute of the New Brunswick legislature.

Mr. LANCASTER. You do not even mention the date of the conveyance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. It only authorizes the city of St. John to make the conveyance. Surely the city of St. John might well be trusted as to the conditions which it will put into this conveyance.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. It is their own property.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is their own property, and the conveyance definitely provides that unless Mr. Durant complies with the terms of the agreement, erects this sugar refinery within a certain time and does other things which Mr. Durant stipulates shall be done, the conveyance shall become void and the property shall be revested in the city. All we do in this respect is to empower the city of St. John to make the conveyance. They will safeguard their own interests by putting the necessary provisions in it. All the conditions are put on record, and if there should be any failure to carry out the obligations which Mr. Durant has entered into, the properties shall revert to the Crown and the city respectively, and the Crown shall have the right of election as to which property it shall have—whether it will take back its own property or retain the property which it got from the city.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Minister of Public Works think it is a work of supererogation to have a sugar refinery in St. John while the minister himself is there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Possibly, though, you cannot have too much of a good thing.

Mr. CROSBY. Does the minister know if Mr. Durant is personally in a financial position to undertake this scheme, or is it his intention to form a company. Have we any guarantee that he is able to carry out the conditions of this agreement? I understand that the Minister of Public Works says that the sugar refinery is to turn out 3,000 barrels per day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. 2,000 is the minimum, but it is expected to have a capacity of 3,000 barrels.

Mr. CROSBY. Have we any contract that this parliament knows anything about as to the certainty of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the city of St. John has an agreement which is set out in the statute passed by the provincial parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are all these conditions spoken of in the provincial statute?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why does not the Bill say it is to be subject to the terms of that particular agreement. These gentlemen may make a great many different agreements, and as the agreement referred to is not specified in this Bill it is the last agreement they make that will govern, and consequently this appears to be careless legislation. We must have some guardianship over this property or we would not be asked to legislate with regard to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Simply because it is covered by navigable water.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am not disputing that the agreement may be fair enough, but I point out that the legislation sanctions the last agreement whatever it may be, and that in that respect the Act is defective.

Mr. DANIEL. This property is owned by the city, and there is no doubt in the world that the city has a right to alienate a portion of its property, as it is doing here, for what it considers a quid pro quo. There may be some doubt as to whether it is really necessary to come to this parliament at all, but the recorder of the city thinks it is necessary, and so they have come here. I would suggest to the minister that the words in clause 2: 'all necessary improvements,' should be stricken out, and replaced by the words: 'all improvements necessary for the undertaking.' If this is not done, it seems to me it will leave it open to Mr. Durant to build improvements for a sugar refinery or anything else, whereas the improvements he should be allowed to build should be improvements necessary for his undertaking of a sugar refinery.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see the advantage of the change. The agreement sets forth that he must erect a sugar refinery. All we are doing here is to give him power to obstruct navigation upon the eastern side of the harbour line, and it seems to me that the words now in the Bill mean improvements necessary to a sugar refinery.

Mr. DANIEL. Why not state it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is stated. The Bill was agreed on by the city of St. John and Mr. Durant, and I do not think it advisable to change it by substituting other words which in reality make no change in the meaning.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it the minister's opinion as a lawyer that the words now in the section would confine such buildings as are put up by Mr. Durant to buildings necessary for the purposes of a sugar refinery and nothing else?

Mr. LANCASTER

Mr. PUGSLEY. Surely so.

Mr. DANIEL. If the minister gives that as his legal opinion I am satisfied.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The words are: 'for such purpose,' which is the purpose of a sugar refinery.

Mr. CROSBY. I have no desire to interfere with the city of St. John doing anything they can with their own property to encourage industries; in fact I would help them in that laudable desire, but we are interested in this legislation or else it would not be before us, and I want to know from the minister whether Mr. Durant is financially able to carry on this undertaking, or whether it is his intention to get it and turn it over to somebody else? We have had a case of that kind happen in Nova Scotia, and we have found it difficult to get the contract carried out under such conditions. I would like to know some particulars as to Mr. Durant's ability to carry out the terms of this contract. Sugar is a good sweet article to produce in St. John, and I have no doubt the personality of the Minister of Public Works, whose sweetness is well known, will augment the output of the refinery in some way; but I have not the honour of knowing Mr. Durant, and I would like some information regarding him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not felt it my duty to inquire very closely into the financial standing or ability of Mr. Durant to erect a sugar refinery or as to whether he intends to form a company or not. The city of St. John, after very careful consideration extending over a great many months, and having an opportunity of inquiring into Mr. Durant's standing, having come to an agreement with him to obtain legislation from the province and to ask us to implement that legislation so far as may be necessary by reason of a portion of this property being covered by navigable water, I felt it my duty to act upon the request of the city of St. John and present this Bill to the House for its consideration. I may add that I am informed that Mr. Durant has now in process of formation a company to be called the Atlantic Sugar Refinery Company. I am also informed—I do not know whether the information is reliable or not—that that company has ample capital for the purpose of proceeding with this very important undertaking.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister ever had the privilege or honour of a meeting with Mr. Durant?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Previous to the arrangement with the city of St. John?

Mr. PUGSLEY. While it was in progress.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

BOUNTIES ON CRUDE PETROLEUM.

Bill (No. 208) to provide for the payment of Bounties on Crude Petroleum—Mr. Graham—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

Mr. GRAHAM. In order to meet the point raised by the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve), I move that in the eleventh line, after the word 'to,' the words 'or divided amongst' be inserted. The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) took the matter in hand, and after consultation with the hon. member for Kootenay, decided that this would cover the point they had in view, as far as it was possible to cover it.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Would it not be possible to introduce a provision in this Bill that would make specific the proportions that would go to the different parties? I submit that one-quarter or one-half should go to each party. It seems to me that when these regulations are not standardized, they leave too much in the option of the Governor in Council.

Mr. GRAHAM. That was discussed at length the other day, and, as I pointed out, some gentlemen who are quite capable of finding a solution of the question of making a standard rule came to the conclusion that it was impossible. The conditions may vary so much that it would be impracticable altogether. After working at it for the summer. I had a Bill along these lines, but they came back to this as the only way in which it could be practically worked out.

Mr. HUGHES. Who is the officer who will make this determination?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Minister of Trade and Commerce will have charge, and he is to make regulations.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Would there be specific regulations in every case, or would there be general regulations?

Mr. GRAHAM. The regulations would largely be general, and he would have to deal practically with every case on its merits.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Is it the intention of the department to send a man to investigate the conditions on the ground, and will there be evidence produced? How will they proceed to administer the Act?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Bill provides that the regulations must be approved by the Governor in Council. which means the whole government. After full discussion, they will decide on general regulations. There is no doubt in the world that the minister will take ample means to find out all the conditions arising, whether it is a proper claim or an improper claim, and to what extent the bounty ought to apply to each individual. It will all be done under regulations approved by the Governor in Council, and nothing can be done by one minister without the approval of the whole council.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. Is that not a peculiar word 'interested' in the 13th line? The Canada Land Company might be interested in this, and would not the Canada Land Company be entitled to a part of the bounty?

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine that the Canada Land Company might get part of the bounty under their arrangement with the lessee. They lease the mining rights to a third party, and under their lease it might be that they would share in a certain portion of the bounty. These words are used to give the minister authority to divide it amongst those who are interested in any way. I think the old Act will be found to include that word as well as the new one.

On section 4,

Mr. HUGHES. Some time ago. as the Minister of Railways and Canals is aware, the committee over which he has the honour to preside, the Railway Committee, brought in a resolution that all such sections as this should be printed in full, that where we repeal a section, that section should be printed in full, and also the section proposed to be put in its place. Why does not the minister follow the rule established in the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is merely repealing the old statute, and this whole Bill takes the place of the old one.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Will this Bill allow the farmer on whose property there is no oil well found to get compensation from the bounty, that is, on a property where damage has been done in digging a well, but where no oil has been found? Will this Bill make any provision for that?

Mr. GRAHAM. If the party who did the damage is entitled to a bounty for oil in any property, a certain bounty would be given though no oil was discovered.

Mr. S. SHARPE. But in the case of one who is entitled to a bounty by reason of success in other fields, is there any provision?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a matter this parliament cannot deal with. The only possible way of getting at the lessee is by depriving him of part of the bounty for a proportion of the oil. If it were possible to pass an Act in that regard, it would have to be done by the province and not by the Dominion.

Mr. GOODEVE. The suggestion raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Sharpe) is this. Possibly this government could get a portion of that bounty to pay the farmer whose property is damaged where no oil is produced.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—THE BOUNDARIES OF MANITOBA.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. HAGGART (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, the subject of the amendment I propose to make a conveyance to-day, but many members of this House. We have all heard of Manitoba's claim for an extension of her boundaries. I do not propose to indulge in much declamation on the subject, I shall confine my remarks to a plain recital of the facts upon which I rely for affirmance by this House of the principle of the proposed amendment. Manitoba was formed into a province in the year 1870. It was at the time a very small province—about a hundred miles square, in round numbers, with a population of about 17,000 and an area of about 15,500 square miles. It was quite evident at the time that it was not intended to be permanent, because, during the life of the first legislature, application was made to this parliament to have the boundaries of that small province extended and the financial terms rearranged. The delegation from the first legislature came back and reported that it was not feasible at that time because the western and north-western boundaries of Ontario had not been delimited. Nothing was done until the year 1881, about eleven years later, when a Bill known as the Campbell Bill was passed by this House. That Bill extended the western boundary of Manitoba about 100 miles farther to the west, and the northern boundary about 160 miles further to the north, while the east boundary of Manitoba was made coterminous with the western boundary of Ontario. The western boundary of Ontario, as I have said, was not defined. It was thought in Manitoba that the western boundary of Ontario was the meridian running northward from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers which would run a short distance east of Port Arthur. So, it was understood and believed that, under the extension of boundaries given by that Act, Manitoba would have a port or two on Lake Superior. At the time of the passing of that Act, it was also provided that the question of the western boundary of Ontario should be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as arbitrators. An award was made under which, much to the disappointment of Manitoba, it was found that the western boundary of Ontario was a line running north from the northwest angle of the Lake of the Woods. On this basis, the boundaries of Manitoba were delimited and the province was made as it is now shown upon the maps hanging in the various rooms of this building. I mention the Act of 1881, because it is evident that, by reason of the eastern boundary of Manitoba being extended to be coterminous with the western boundary of Ontario, it was the intention of that Act to give to Manitoba all that territory northeast of the present boundaries of Manitoba, a part of which, I believe, is now being claimed by the province of Ontario. Nothing further was done until the year 1905. At that time, Alberta and Saskatchewan were being formed into two separate provinces. It was thought that this would be a very opportune time to have the boundaries of Manitoba fixed. It was pointed out that all that area of prairie land lying between the province of Ontario and the Rocky mountains might be divided into three provinces with about equal area, and equal resources, so that they might have an even start in the march of progress. A deputation came from the legislature of Manitoba and presented their case to the government. But this government, in a paternal way, patted Manitoba on the head, and said: 'Go home and keep quiet; we have a serious job on hand, and when we get Alberta and Saskatchewan fixed up we will attend to you. We always got fair words from this government. The answer to Manitoba was given in a report to the Privy Council, dated 21st March, 1905. That portion which refers to the matter under discussion is as follows:

> The committee are likewise of the opinion that the desire of the province of Manitoba for an extension of its boundaries to the shores of Hudson bay is not an unreasonable one, and they suggest that when the measures now before parliament for the formation of the two provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan are disposed of, the subject of such an extension of the boundaries of Manitoba might profitably be considered.
> The committee therefore, recommend that at a convenient date after the formation of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the request of the province of Manitoba for an extension northward be taken up, with the object of coming to a speedy conclusion, and trust that this suggestion may be acceptable to the government of the province of Manitoba, whose welfare and development the present ministry desire to promote in every way compatible with their obligations towards the other provinces of the Dominion.

There was nothing for the Manitoba delegation to do but to go home and wait to see what the government would decide. Nothing further was done until January, 1908. The Manitoba legislature memorialized this parliament and government, and a copy of that memorial I have in my hand. It set out all the facts and circumstances, all the documents, all the interviews, and stated the grounds on which Manitoba made its claim for increased territory and increased indemnity. In the prayer of that memorial, they ask for all the territory lying west of the northwestern boundary of Ontario and for an extension northward to Hudson bay. This, I have said, was in January, 1908. Now, we come to July of that year. The question was a live question in Manitoba; both parties in that province were interested. On the main question, there was unanimity of feeling, and as the Dominion parliament was soon to expire, it became necessary to attend to this Manitoba question. It became necessary for the then representatives of Manitoba, if they could not go back with increased boundaries and increased indemnity, to take back some fair speech at least from the government of the day. On the 13th of July, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved a resolution which I have recited in the amendment, which I intend to move, the substance of which was that it would be proper to give to Manitoba, not the area asked for, but a smaller area. The eastern boundary was to be the present eastern boundary to the northeast corner, and then an arbitrary line to be drawn northeasterly to the shore of Hudson bay at the intersection of the 89th meridian. Nothing further was covered by that resolution except that the increased indemnity should be the subject of negotiation. Parliament was dissolved. The election took place, and nothing was done further until the following February, 1909.

In February, 1909, the right hon. the First Minister sent to the Premier of Manitoba, with a letter, a copy of the proposed Bill which enacted that the boundaries as described in the resolution of January 13, 1908, should be the boundaries of the province of Manitoba, and that in lieu of the lands which the government intended to retain they should get a sum of —— dollars. There was some other correspondence between the right hon. gentleman and the Premier of Manitoba, and the result of the correspondence was that a day was appointed for meeting the delegates of the province of Manitoba. The delegates were the Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works, and the Hon. Colin Campbell, Attorney General. At one of the interviews the right hon. the Prime Minister was accompanied by the Minister of Finance and at another by the Minister of Agriculture. That conference was practically abortive. Here I may say there is a difference as to what took place in that conference between the recollection of the right hon. the First Minister and the recollection of the representatives of Manitoba, but I do not think anything depends upon that at this date. We will accord to the gentlemen upon each side honesty in stating what may be their recollection. Of course, the Manitoba delegation came here for a specific purpose and for that purpose alone, and after the interviews in Ottawa were over they returned to Manitoba and reported to the executive in Manitoba and the legislature. I will read the report of these gentlemen so that there may be no doubt, as I want to be accurate to the very letter. The following is their report.

We, the undersigned, appointed to represent the executive of the province of Manitoba at the conference with the federal government, report as follows:—

Pursuant to an appointment made by the Right Honorable Sir Wilfrid Laurier, we met in conference at his office on Friday, the twelfth day of March, 1909, Hon. W. S. Fielding being also present, representing the federal government.

Sir Wilfrid suggested that the first thing necessary for us to consider would be the resolution of the House of Commons in respect to the allocation of our boundaries. We urged the position taken by the government and by the legislative assembly of this province, pointing out that this allocation was depriving Manitoba of a large territory which had already been given to us by an Act of the parliament of Canada, passed in 1881, and afterwards confirmed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and that it was not as large as the government and the legislative assembly of this province thought fair and equitable.

Sir Wilfrid then stated that he could not and would not make any change in this resolution of the House of Commons delimiting the area to be given to us, in view of the fact that it was an arrangement made between the Liberal members in the House of Commons from Manitoba and himself before being introduced into the House of Commons, and was, therefore, unchangeable, nor would he discuss the merits of a larger area as urged by us.

At this point, it being one o'clock, Sir Wilfrid proposed that we adjourn until the sixteenth, in order that we might consider this first essential of the conference, viz., the settlement of the territory to be added.

On Tuesday, the sixteenth of March, Sir Wilfrid being indisposed, the conference was further postponed, and it was not resumed until the nineteenth.

On re-assembling on that date, your delegates, believing that the refusal of the parliament of Canada might afford some reason for further delay in the settlement of the matter under consideration, accepted the area so suggested by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the hope that by so doing we would have removed every obstacle that we considered could possibly be raised against the settlement of the whole question.

The allocation of the territory thus being disposed of, we proceeded to discuss the financial terms that ought to be given this province. We presented the memorandum of the legislative assembly of this province, which, in a word, was to the effect that we simply asked for a position of equality in respect to financial terms with our sister provinces to the west, the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

"To this Sir Wilfrid most strenuously objected, claiming that we were not entitled to similar treatment. We then pointed out to him that, inasmuch as he had determined the territory and offered the same by resolution it was incumbent on him to suggest the financial terms, and we pressed him to name what he considered would be adequate compensation and proper financial terms, when he suggested the amount of ten thousand dollars a year, which amount, of course, we regarded as ridiculously absurd. We strongly urged upon him to give us some reasonable definite statement that we could submit to the government and the legislature of this province for their rejection or approval, but he made no other suggestion than the one indicated above.

"The discussion continued, and we then made the alternative offer of accepting equal treatment with Ontario and Quebec along the line of ownership of lands, timber, ore. etc., in the territory to be added, and a like ownership of the undisposed-of Crown lands in Manitoba, that we might have equality of treatment with Ontario and Quebec in this respect, so that, if it was more desirable from the federal point of view to give us equality of position with Ontario and Quebec, we would agree to recommend the same for acceptance to the executive of the province and through them to the legislative assembly.

"The conference then adjourned, to meet again on the twenty-third of March, Sir Wilfrid and Hon. Sydney Fisher representing the federal government. No further progress was made, Sir Wilfrid still refusing to consider the propositions of equality of treatment, either with Saskatchewan and Alberta or Ontario and Quebec, so set out, nor could we obtain from him any further statement as to the financial allowance he would make to the province on addition of the territory.

"Sir Wilfrid then informed us that he considered there was no object to be gained by further continuing our conference.

(Signed) COLIN H. CAMPBELL.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. A. HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, just before the adjournment, I had given to the House the report of the Manitoba delegates to the conference held in March, 1909, which was presented by them to their associates in the government and the legislature, and which set forth the result of that conference. There has been some subsequent correspondence between the right hon. the First Minister and the Premier of Manitoba. That correspondence shows that there has been a difference as to the recollection of the Manitoba delegates and the right hon. gentleman as to what took place at that conference. I am willing to accord to all parties honest motives, and I concede that each now states what he believes to have been the result of the proceedings of that conference. The different parties were naturally biased in a different way. They left the conference, perhaps, with different impressions. but those differences, I believe, now cut no ice in the matter. As to the offer of Manitoba to accept a smaller area, the correspondence shows that the right hon. gentleman had no recollection. The Manitoba delegates came here with a specific object, and they went back and reported. The right hon. gentleman says that he thinks the Manitoba people are not serious in the statement that $10,000 was mentioned to them. That, I think, makes no difference now, and although some things have been said in the newspapers since that time which are not very pleasant, I think we can dismiss all this. Remember that this conference took place in March, 1909. We will come to November, 1909, when the right hon. gentleman, in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), said:

On February 26 last the Prime Minister sent to the government of Manitoba for their consideration a Bill to increase the boundaries of Manitoba as outlined in the said resolution, and until the government and legislature of Manitoba have signified their acceptance of these boundaries, and until the Dominion government and the provincial government had come to an understanding as to the financial conditions consequent thereon, the government has no authority to introduce any legislation to give effect to the above resolution.

That appears in 'Hansard' of that date. The Premier of Manitoba asks the right hon. gentleman if he has been correctly reported, and he says in reply, that the report is absolutely correct. He also calls his attention to the financial consideration of $10.000, and the right hon. Prime Minister makes a denial of that in a very nice way. He says in reference to the $10,000:

I have further to observe that it cannot be seriously contemplated to ask parliament to enact legislation which would be final and which might be thrown aside as unsatisfactory by the province of Manitoba.

It is this parliament which must take the initiative. The statute under which the boundaries of any province may be increased, diminished or altered, is the imperial statute, 35 Victoria, chapter 28:

The parliament of Canada may, from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

Thus, the initiative has to be taken by the Dominion parliament, but there can be no finality until the terms are accepted by the province affected. The province of Manitoba, in the memorial presented in the early part of 1908, asked for the whole territory lying west of Ontario. The Dominion parliament offered them the lesser area described in the legislation. Manitoba said in the same memorial: Give us the same financial terms as you have given Alberta and Saskatchewan. The Dominion parliament have not done that. At the conference the delegates said: If you cannot do that, then give us the terms that have been accorded to Ontario and Quebec; give us the land, give us the natural resources; it may all be barren rock and muskeg, but we will take our chances and do what we can to devolp what is given us. Then, if you will not give us that, do not take the position that was taken by the right hon. First Minister in February last—do not say: We will not give you an answer at all. Name what you will give. It is not fair for the government to say: We cannot do anything. It is true you made propositions which we cannot accept, but we will not make any compromise. That is practically the situation. Now, I think that the whole matter is placed very clearly in the last letter, which is a part of the correspondence brought down in the legislature of Manitoba in response to an order, in which the Premier of Manitoba writes to the right hon. First Minister, and I may add that this closes the correspondence. This is from Mr. Roblin to the right hon. leader of the government:

> You, yourself, will agree that Manitoba is not asking for anything but that which is fair and just; for certainly if we did not think our claim to be such, we would not be making it.
> In regard to our claim, we will be entirely satisfied whether you elect to give us a position of equality under the terms and conditions that govern your treatment of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchwan to the west or of Ontario to the east.
> I cannot see why you should hesitate to name such terms and conditions by resolution of your parliament. This would only be following the same form which you adopted in the case of the allocating of our boundaries. You have our proposition, approved by resolution of our legislature; now then, if this is not satisfactory to you, let us have your alternative proposition, when I will at once submit same to our legislature which meets about the first of February.

That is the position and that closes the correspondence. To show that the people of Manitoba are a unit upon this question I will now refer to what took place at the last session of the legislature of Manitoba. The Liberal opposition there is composed of 13 members—an unlucky number, but it is an opposition. It ought to be loyal to and avoid creating any trouble for this ministry because of the 13, according to a return brought down to this House, 11 were in the pay of this government. That does not disqualify them, but it is a circumstance that it may be well to know. That opposition no doubt desire to place themselves in harmony with the best public opinion, at least they want to place themselves abreast or in front of the dominant public opinion in the province. And during last session of the legislature they moved a resolution in the House with reference to the Manitoba boundaries, and the substance of that resolution was—it recited the acceptance by the delegates of the boundaries as defined in the resolution of this House of the 13th of July, 1908, and the resolution then resolved that: 'The Manitoba legislature accepts this territory, and requests the Dominion parliament to enact legislation this session enlarging the boundaries without prejudice to the claims for financial arrangements, and that the claims for financial arrangements be presented to the government of the Dominion by a committee of the legislature'.

That is, that legislation be passed by this House fixing the boundaries of Manitoba according to the smaller area. And then they were to appoint a committee to press their financial claims. The government party moved an amendment to that resolution, and that amendment after reciting all the steps that had been taken: the claims of the province under the statute of 1881, the various conferences, the resolution of the House of the 13th of July, 1908, the holding of the conference, the report of the delegates, the subsequent correspondence, offered to accept equality of treatment, and it was resolved: 'That the legislature consents to affirm and ratify the acceptance of the smaller area, and it affirms the right to equality of treatment with Alberta and Saskatchewan, or with Ontario and Quebec, and urges the government to make an offer, and name the terms it might deem just'. That main amendment was subsequently carried and it was the deliverance of the legislature of Manitoba. But, to that amendment, the opposition moved an amendment to the effect: 'That the financial arrangements should be either equality of treatment with Alberta and Saskatchewan, or equality of treatment with Ontario and Quebec by receiving the land, and that a committee be appointed to report as to which of these two would be best for Manitoba'. The amendment to the amendment was lost, and the main amendment was carried, and that was the deliverance of the House. Now, that is what Manitoba asks to-day. But the Liberal party did not stop there. The House adjourned, and the Liberal party had time to think. They shifted their ground. The 13 opposition members with all the Liberal stalwarts outside met in convention—they think there is an election coming on—and they want to leave no doubt as to where they stand on the question of the Manitoba boundaries. They put planks in their platform with reference to economy and efficiency, and good roads and education but there was a special plank constructed by that convention on the question of the extension of the Manitoba boundaries. In the convention it was moved by the leader of the opposition, and it was seconded by Mr. J. W. Defoe.

Mr. HUGHES. Who is the leader of the opposition?

Mr. A. HAGGART. Mr. Norris. He is a gentleman who is in the employ of this government; he is a very fine gentleman, and he is the leader of the opposition, and the fact that he receives large sums by way of compensation for selling the school lands in that country does not disqualify him, and I do not see why it should. The plank in the platfrom adopted at that Liberal convention relating to the Manitoba boundaries is this:

'That the Liberals of Manitoba in convention assembled believe that a satisfactory adjustment of the boundary question consists in the acceptance of the extension of the boundaries as offered by the Dominion government provided it is accompanied by the transfer to this province, of the lands, minerals, timber, fisheries, and other natural resources of the added territory.

Mr. BRADBURY. Who is Mr. Dafoe?

Mr. A. HAGGART. He is the managing editor, I believe, of the 'Free Press' newspaper; at least he is so reputed to be. Now, we can see from this that the people of Manitoba—the government party and the opposition party—all the people of Manitoba are anxious for the extension of the boundaries; they have a laudable ambition to have their boundaries extended, and to have the same terms that are given either to their sister provinces to the west, or to their sister provinces to the east. That was the deliverance of the Liberal convention held some weeks ago in the province of Manitoba. Now, Sir, I know that the right hon. the Prime Minister cannot be responsible, and ought not to be held responsible for all the utterances made in the press, even in the press supporting the government. But this 'Free Press' newspaper of Winnipeg has an article here in which the right hon. gentleman's name is associated with the very question which we are now discussing, and the 'Free Press' newspaper ought to be loyal to this government because it is a beneficiary of this government; it does a large amount of work for, and it gets a large amount of money from this government. I believe that during the life of this government it has got something like $68,000 for printing and lithographing and advertising; in one year they received from the public funds the sum of $36,791.09, so that that paper ought to be careful not to embarrass its employers in this House. I refer to this article in order that the right hon. gentleman may disavow it. I think it is published in the issue of February 21 last. It is referring to this $10,000 which is supposed to be offered to Manitoba, and after accusing the delegates from Manitoba of manufacturing lies out of whole cloth it speaks of the matter in this way—Of course it eulogizes the Prime Minister, and for my part I do not think that we can do too much honour to our leaders in this parliament, or in the provincial parliaments. It speaks in high appreciation of the right hon. gentleman, but it does not speak so highly of the politicians of Manitoba, and then there is a gross threat that while the Conservatives are in power in Manitoba, Manitobans may expect nothing; there is a veiled threat that when we send delegates to this government we need not expect to have very fortunate results. Here is the part of the article to which I refer:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has doubtless had many experiences with public men during his long official life; but it is probable that he regards the Manitoba politicians as in a class by themselves. Unwearied as is his patience, illimitable though his courtesy may be, he would doubtless prefer to discuss these grave matters of state—in the successful settling of which the future of this province is largely involved—with representatives of this province who have not got the morals of Ananias, the manners of chimney sweeps and the diplomatic methods of deckhands. It is imperative that at the next conference to be held between Manitoba and the Dominion government this province should be represented by gentlemen. If the present government cannot supply such representatives this is an additional strong reason for a change of administration in this province at the earliest possible moment.

And then we would be represented by gentlemen like the gentleman who wrote that dirty stuff. Now, Sir, Manitoba deserves not to be discriminated against; she deserves not to be penalized. Her people were the pioneers in that country, her pioneers endured the hardships and the vicissitudes that are incident to early settlers. They solved the problems of that western country, on the solution of which the prosperity of Manitoba and the other provinces to the west depend. They solved the question of transportation by securing transportation rates that would make agriculture a paying industry. They taxed themselves, they taxed their credit and their future to its utmost limit, and they could not benefit themselves without benefiting their neighbours to the west. Manitoba stands to-day at the bar of this House, not pleading or praying, not threatening or whining, but relying on the justice of her cause, asking to be treated with equality, as the other provinces are treated. By complying with this fair and reasonable demand this House will do more to solidify this Dominion than it can do by any other measure that can be introduced during the present session. I think the facts I have set forth should be sufficient for this House in affirming the proposition set forth in the motion which I now submit in amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply.

That all the words after 'that' to the end of the motion be left out and the following be substituted therefor:

Whereas, this House did, on the 13th day of July, 1908, pass the following resolution delimiting the area to be offered the province of Manitoba;

Whereas petitions have been presented to the government and to this House from the legislative assembly of Manitoba, praying for an extension of the boundaries of the said province northward and eastward, and for an additional subsidy to the said province in lieu of the ownership of public lands in the territory to be so added.

'Be it resolved,

'That it is expedient that the prayer of the said petition should be acceded to, and that upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislative assembly and by parliament, the boundaries of Manitoba be extended as follows:

'The northern boundary to be the sixtieth parallel of latitude; the western boundary to be the present eastern boundary line of the province of Saskatchewan to the said sixtieth parallel; the eastern boundary to be the present eastern boundary as far north as the northeast corner of the province, thence on a straight line to the most eastern point of Island lake, and thence on a straight line to the point where the eighty-ninth meridian of west longitude intersects the shore line of Hudson bay.

'And be it further resolved:

'That whereas notwithstanding the extension of territory above described, the ungranted lands of the Crown in the territory so to be added to the said province will still continue to be administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of the Dominion; and the said province will not have the public land as a source of revenue.

'It is just and equitable to recognize the increased cost of civil government which such extension of territory will occasion to the province, and in view of the premises, to make to the said province an increased allowance by money payment, the amount of which should be the subject of negotiation between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba.

'And be it further resolved:

'That, upon the legislature of the province of Ontario consenting thereto, it is expedient to extend the boundaries of the said province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature and by parliament, so as to include all the territory to the north of the said province lying between the extended boundaries of Manitoba above described and the waters of James bay and Hudson bay.

'And be it further resolved:

'That, upon the legislature of the province of Quebec consenting thereto, it is expedient to extend the boundaries of the said province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature and by parliament, so as to include all the territory to the north of the said province now known as Ungava, and extending to the waters of James bay and Hudson bay, and the entrance thereto from the sea.

'And whereas at a conference subsequent to said date the delegates of the province of Manitoba did offer to accept the said area upon receiving equality of treatnent either with the province of Saskatchewan and Alberta to the west of the said province of Manitoba or upon a basis of equal treatment with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, lying immediately to the east of the province of Manitoba. And whereas the legislative assembly of the province of Manitoba did subsequently agree and confirm the said offer of the said delegates of the said province of Manitoba.

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that this House affirms the province of Manitoba is entitled to equality of treatment with either the said provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan to the west or with the said provinces of Ontario and Quebec to the east, and regret that the government of the Dominion did not agree to give to Manitoba such equality of treatment.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, if the object of my hon. friend who has just addressed the House (Mr. Alex. Haggart), was as he asserted to plead the cause of Manitoba for what he called equal justice with the other provinces, I am sure that on reflection he will agree with me that the method he has adopted of presenting his case to the House was not calculated very effectively to achieve the object he had in mind. My hon. friend knows that by the rules of this House a motion presented under the circumstances under which this motion is presented, that is, as an amendment to go into Supply, cannot be amended, and therefore, cannot be met in all its bearings, and in all its different aspects. If there be in this motion, as I think there are, statements of fact which are true, and statements of fact which are wrong, if there be conclusions which can be accepted, and conclusions which cannot be accepted, they have all to be accepted in the whole or denied in the whole. My hon. friend, since his sole object, as he says, was to plead the cause of Manitoba, would have been better inspired if in the early stages of this session he had brought his motion forward as a notice of motion, which could have been met in all its bearings, accepted in part or amended in part, accepted in the whole or rejected in the whole; whereas, as his motion is presented now, it leaves us no option, but to reject it, because there are parts in it which it would be impossible to accept. I sympathize with the statement of my hon. friend, that the province of Manitoba has been anxious for years past to have its territory extended. We can all agree that the territory of Manitoba from the beginning was altogether too exiguous; we can all agree that it should have been extended, which it would have been easy to have done at the time, to the north, and to the west. Years ago the province of Manitoba came to the doors of this House, and the last time it was successful. That was in the year 1905, when it submitted a petition to this House, supported by a delegation from the province of Manitoba which waited on the government, including seven members from the other side of the House, asking for an extension of its boundaries. Unfortunately for Manitoba at that time, it set up a pretention which encroached on the west, on the pretentions of the province of Saskatchewan, and which encroached on the east on the pretentions and claims of the province of Ontario. The province of Manitoba, in that petition, asked that its boundaries should be extended westward beyond the limit which was then under the jurisdiction of the legislature of the province of Saskatchewan, and that legislature protested, and protested vigorously, against its territory being encroached on, and any portion of it being given to the province of Manitoba. Later on it also protested against any part of the territory north of the boundary of the province of Manitoba being given to that province. Under these circumstances we thought it advisable—and I think everybody will agree that it was a wise step—that we should have a conference of the three provinces interested—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Ontario—to discuss the question. That conference took place, if I remember rightly, in the fall of 1906, unfortunately, we could come to no agreement. I may state what took place, because it is a matter of history. The province of Saskatchewan asked that its boundary should be extended north of the present boundary of Manitoba to the shore of Hudson bay. The federal government, after giving the matter due consideration, could not come to such conclusion. We thought that according to the geographical condition of the country the territory north of the present boundary of Manitoba should be given to Manitoba itself. Upon this ground we set aside the claim of Saskatchewan, and we gave to Manitoba what it asked for in that part of the territory. At the same time we could not agree to extend the territory of Manitoba westward further than its present boundaries. Then we came to the question of the claim of Manitoba eastward. The claim of Manitoba eastward was that the boundary of the present province should be extended north to the present boundary of Ontario, north of the Albany river up to a line drawn from the confluence of the Mississipi and Ohio rivers, which would bring the province of Manitoba into the vicinity of Fort William at the head of Lake Superior. The province of Ontario asked that the present boundaries of Ontario should be extended to the waters of the Churchill river, and that the Churchill river should be the boundary between Manitoba and Ontario. After giving this matter the best consideration we could, and with no other object than to do substantial justice to all the parties interested——

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. the Prime Minister does not mean that the Churchill river was to be the boundary between Manitoba and Ontario?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not in error. My hon. friend may smile, but he has only to look at the proceedings to see that the claim put forward by Sir James Whitney was that the province of Ontario should be extended westward to the waters of the Churchill river, and that the Churchill river should be the boundary between Ontario and Manitoba. We could not agree to this. We thought the pretensions of the province of Ontario on that point were exaggerated. On the other hand, we thought that the pretensions of the province of Manitoba were exaggerated also in asking that their boundary should be extended to the vicinity of Lake Superior, and we brought a resolution before the House which is recited in the resolution my hon. friend has quoted, extending the boundary of the provinces of Manitoba and Ontario, the present boundaries at least, forward to the 88th and 89th degree of longitude on the shores of Hudson bay.

'The Northern boundary to be the 60th parallel of latitude; the western boundary to be the present eastern boundary line of the province of Saskatchewan to the 60th parallel; the eastern boundary to be the present eastern boundary so far north as the north east corner of the province, thence on a straight line to the point where the 89th meridian of west longitude intersects the shore line of Hudson bay.'

This proposed line seemed to meet with the fair judgment of the members of this House and was adopted by the unanimous resolution of it. Then the question arose as to how far the territory of Manitoba was to be extended, as it was to be given the administration of a larger area than it had at that time. It was fair and reasonable as we thought that the province of Manitoba should be given for that purpose, for the civil administration of that territory added to its present territory, fair compensation. We were not prepared to say what should be the amount of that compensation, but the resolution went on to say upon this point that the compensation should be determined as follows:

That whereas notwithstanding the extension of territory above described the ungranted lands of the Crown in the territory so to be added to the said province will still continue to be administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of the Dominion; and the said province will not have the public land as a source of revenue.

It is just and equitable to recognize the increased cost of civil government which such extension of territory will occasion to the province, and in view of the premises, to make to the said province an increased allowance by money payment, the amount of which should be the subject of negotiation between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba.

This resolution therefore affirms one thing, that for the civil administration of the new territory which was to be given to the province of Manitoba as an extension of Manitoba, and as the public lands in its territories did not belong to the province but to the Dominion, we should give it a money compensation and that this being determined as a principle that amount should be determined by negotiation between the two governments, that is to say the government of the Dominion and the government of Manitoba. This was in the month of July, 1908. In the following month of February I wrote in these terms to Mr. Roblin, the Premier of Manitoba:

Ottawa, 26th February, 1909.

Dear Mr. Roblin:—

I have the honour to inclose the draft of a Bill for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba. This Bill is on the line of the resolutions adopted by the House of Commons at the last session. The amount of the allowance to be paid to the province in lieu of lands, has been left in blank. According to aforesaid resolution of the House of Commons, this amount should be fixed by negotiation between the Dominion government and the government of the province.

We will be happy to confer with you at any time that may be convenient to yourself and to your government.

Yours respectfully,
WILFRID LAURIER.

The Hon. Mr. Roblin,
Prime Minister's Office,
Winnipeg, Man.

The Bill which was inclosed as a draft Bill was on these lines:

An Act to provide for the increase of the limits of the province of Manitoba.

Whereas a petition has been presented to the House of Commons on behalf of the legislative assembly of the province of Manitoba praying, amongst other things, for an extension of the boundaries of that province northward and eastward and for an additional subsidy to the province in lieu of the ownership of public lands in the territory to be added to the province by such extension, and it is expedient to grant the prayer of such petition to the extent and in the manner provided in the enactments hereinafter contained; therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. Upon the legislature of the province of Manitoba consenting thereto, the limits of the said province shall be increased so that the northern boundaries of the province shall be the 60th parallel of north latitude; the western boundary shall be the present eastern boundary of the province of Saskatchewan; the eastern boundary shall be the present eastern boundary of the province to the northeast corner thereof, thence in a straight line to the most easterly point of the Island lake, and thence in a straight line to the point where the 89th meridian of west longitude intersects the shore line of Hudson bay, thence following the said shore line to its intersection with the 60th parallel.

2. And whereas in accordance with the provisions of the Act establishing the province of Manitoba the ungranted lands of the Crown in the territory so to be added to the said province will continue to be administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of Canada, and the province will not have such lands as a source of revenue, it is further enacted that there shall be paid by Canada to the province an increased allowance by money payment to an amount to be agreed upon between the government of Canada and the government of the province.

3. The increase of limits hereunder shall take effect upon the date to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Having by the letter which I have just read inclosing this draft Bill to Mr. Roblin, invited a conference between his government and the Dominion government, the conference took place here some time in the spring of 1909. I should say before I go further, that this conference was attended on behalf of the government of Manitoba not by Mr. Roblin, who unfortunately was away in poor health, as I understand, but by Mr. Rogers and Mr. Campbell, Mr. Rogers, the Minister of Public Works and Mr. Campbell, the Attorney General. My hon. friend has read a report which was made after the conference by Mr. Rogers and Mr. Campbell to their government. I have only this to observe to my hon. friend on this point at the present time. A conference took place between the government, represented by myself, and on the first day, by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and on the second day by my hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture, with the two gentlemen I have just named, Mr. Rogers and Mr. Campbell.

We separated without effecting anything, but they gave a report of the proceedings of what they conceived to be the proceedings, to their government.

I have only this to observe to my hon. friend on this report: It is customary—and everybody will agree that there is no necessity for defending the practice—when a conference has taken place between two parties, that a common report should be made so that, if there is a difference of opinion, that difference of opinion can be settled then and there, and, if it is not possible to agree upon an identical statement, each party can state its own version. I never heard of the report being made by Messrs. Rogers and Campbell until I saw it in print. Perhaps I shall not surprise my hon. friend if I state that Messrs. Rogers and Campbell had told us at the end of the conference that, as we had not agreed, each should prepare a report for our respective governments, I would have agreed to that. We might, or we might not have agreed upon the report; we might or we might not have differed upon the facts; but, at all events, I think it would have been only fair, since Messrs. Rogers and Campbell intended to make a report that they should ask us whether we thought it was advisable to make a report or not. In the report made by Messrs. Rogers and Campbell to their government, it was stated that I had offered, as compensation to the government of Manitoba, for administering justice and the civil requirements of that community, the sum of $10,000. When my attention was drawn to this I refused to discuss the statement; I refused to take it seriously. Whatever may be the opinion of my views held by hon. members on the other side, or by hon. members on this side, I think that all will give me credit for some common sense—I should expect that at all events. Messrs. Rogers and Campbell state in the report, as read by my hon. friend in the House, that they thought this offer was ridiculous. I would agree with them—such an offer would have been ridiculous. I have nothing more to say. The fact is, we never came to any conclusion, no offer was made on one side or the other. After the report had been made, my attention was called to this question by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) who asked me last session if it was our intention to introduce a Bill to extend the limits of Manitoba. To that question I gave the answer read by my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. A. Haggart) that we were not in a position to bring in a Bill until we had agreed upon the financial terms, and no agreement had been reached. Thereupon, Mr. Roblin wrote to me on the subject. My hon. friend (Mr. A. Haggart) stated in his opening remarks that he intended to give a complete history of the negotiations on this question, but he has omitted to give this letter of Mr. Roblin's and my answer to it. I think hon. members will agree with me that the history of these negotiations is not complete without that correspondence. Mr. Roblin's letter to me was as follows:

Province of Manitoba,
Premier's Office,
Winnipeg, Nov. 19, 1909.

Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, K.C.M.G.,
First Minister of Canada,
Ottawa.

My dear Sir Wilfrid,—My attention was called to the press despatches in the morning papers, reporting your remarks in reply to an inquiry from Dr. Roche, member for Marquette, regarding extension of the boundaries of Manitoba.

I am disposed to think that you are misquoted, as the despatch says as follows:—

On February 26 last, the Prime Minister sent to the government of Manitoba for their consideration a Bill to increase the boundaries of Manitoba as outlined in the said resolution, and until the government and legislature of Manitoba have signified their acceptance of these boundaries, and until the Dominion government and the provincial government had come to an understanding as to the financial conditions consequent thereon, the government has no authority to introduce any legislation to give effect to the above resolution.

If you are correctly reported, you must have forgotten that representatives from the province consisting of Messrs. Rogers and Campbell waited on you at your request as stated and agreed to the boundary extensions as proposed by your government.

As to the financial consideration, you intimated, according to their report, that $10,000 would be adequate for the additional responsibilities assumed by said extension of boundaries.

Permit me to call to your attention that what we ask for in so far as financial consideration is concerned, is embodied in our memorial of 1908 in which we ask, the area now having been agreed to, for equality in finance with our sister provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Again permit me to say that you also have the memorial from the legislature of 1909, which left here on the 10th of March last, in which we repeated that we request the same financial terms as those allowed to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

We cannot accept (and I do not think you could have been serious when you suggested it) $10,000 as compared to what our claim is based upon—equality with Saskatchewan and Alberta.

You further say that you cannot take any action until an agreement is reached between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba. In this you surely are misquoted; because you cannot be unaware of chapter 12 of the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, Vol. I., which reads as follows:—

Further Enlargement.

Section 4. The legislature of Manitoba agrees and consents that the bounds of the province may be increased and enlarged to such an extent as shall be enacted by the parliament of Canada, and on such terms and conditions as to the effect of such increase of territory with regard to an increase of subsidy granted to the said province and with regard to other purposes and subjects as may be provided by the said parliament of Canada:

Provided always that such increase of territory shall not take effect until such terms and conditions have been approved by the legislature of Manitoba.

From this, therefore, you will please note that special provision has been made by the province of Manitoba, enabling the parliament of Canada to enlarge the boundaries upon any terms and conditions that in their wisdom may appear just and proper; with the proviso that it shall not go into effect until it has been approved by the legislature of Manitoba. Therefore, you will see that you are at liberty to pass any Bill with any terms and conditions that you choose, and then it will be for the legislature of this province to decide whether it will be accepted or otherwise.

If you are correctly reported, I would suggest that you correct the statement; because I presume the members from the other provinces who have not studied the question are not familiar with the statute (chapter 12, Consolidated Statutes of Manitoba) which provides for parliament to make any extension of boundaries upon any terms and conditions they choose, subject to the approval of the legislature of the province.

I think it well that the law and the facts should be placed fairly before parliament, and then there can be no ground for complaint from any of the parties to the negotiations.

With assurances of my personal regard,

Yours very respectfully,

R. P. ROBLIN.

My reply to this letter was as follows:

Ottawa, 30th November, 1909.

Dear Mr. Roblin,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant.

I am surprised that you should think that the answer which I gave to the inquiry of Doctor Roche was not correctly transmitted in the press despatches. The report was quite accurate and indeed the existing conditions of things did not admit of any other answer.

You assert that we have sufficient authority to legislate in chapter 12 of the revised statutes of Manitoba, wherein it is enacted that the legislature of Manitoba agree and consents that the bounds of the province may be increased and enlarged to such an extent as shall be enacted by the parliament of Canada, and on such terms and conditions as to the effect of such increase of territory with regard to an increase of subsidy granted to the said province and with regard to other purposes and subjects, as may be provided by the said parliament of Canada.

The authority would have been quite sufficient for immediate action to be taken, if your statute had stopped there, but the enactment is mullified by the provision which immediately follows that such increase of territory shall not take effect until terms and conditions have been approved by the legislature of Manitoba.

In other words, you tell us that we may ask parliament to legislate, but you reserve to yourself the right to object to such legislation.

I have only to observe that the above mentioned statute does not give us any power to deal with the question that we had not before, and that does not by a single step advance the solution.

I have further to observe that it cannot be seriously contemplated to ask parliament to enact legislation which would not be final, and which might be thrown aside as unsatisfactory by the province of Manitoba.

Everybody who will dispassionately review the situation must agree that, as I stated in answer to the inquiry of Doctor Roche, we are not in a position to act until the Dominion government and the provincial government have come to an understanding.

In one respect your letter is quite satisfactory. You therein assert that our conference with Messrs. Rogers and Campbell, 'they agreed to the boundary extensions as proposed' by us. My colleagues and I had not understood that they had so asserted. We are glad to learn that such indeed was their intention. This point may therefore be now considered as settled.

There remains to agree upon the financial conditions, and we are ready as we have always been to discuss these terms within the lines of the resolution of the House of Commons. As to the report of Messrs. Rogers and Campbell that on this question I intimated that $10,000 would be adequate for the responsibilities assumed in consequence of the extension of your boundaries, I hope I will not be taxed with discourtesy if I do not think the report can have been made seriously.

Believe me, dear Mr. Roblin,

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER.

The Hon. R. P. Roblin,
Premier's Office,
Winnipeg, Man.

To this I received the following reply:

Winnipeg, 9th December, 1909.

My Dear Sir Wilfrid:—

I returned this morning from a trip to Toronto and found your favour of the 30th ultimo on my desk. I have read the same very carefully and hasten to reply.

I shall not attempt to conceal my astonishment at the position you take in it as well as your understanding of the conference held between yourself and Mr. Fielding, representing the Federal government, and Messrs. Rogers and Campbell, representing the government of this province, regarding the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba.

The ministers from this province made an official report of the conference to the executive council under date of April 14, 1909, in which they advised that they had accepted the delimitation of boundaries as proposed by your resolution in the Commons, although satisfied that both in law and equity we were entitled to what the legislature of the province had set out in its memorial.

They further say in said report that you only offered $10,000 as financial consideration for the lands, timber, minerals, etc., covered by such extension. Your intimation that you did not so understand it appears extraordinary to me in view not only of the official report aforementioned but the newspaper announcements made at the time. The Toronto 'Globe' of March 20 contained a statement which appears to me to be an authoritative and inspired one from your point of view. I may say that every other newspaper in Canada that made any reference to the matter, published a similar report.

The 'Globe' article reads as follows:—

'Ottawa, 19th March—Hon. Robert Rogers and Hon. Colin Campbell, who have been in the capital for the past week to press the claims of Manitoba in connection with the proposed extension of the provincial boundaries, had an interview with Sir Wilfrid Laurier to-day, who had sufficiently recovered from his illness of last week to again be at his office. The proposed terms of the Dominion government's Bill to extend boundaries were discussed. In respect to the question of the division of territory in the district of Keewatin between the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, the Manitoba ministers stated that they would accept under protest the boundary line as defined by the resolution of last session. It was pointed out by Sir Wilfrid that this allocation of the territory in question had been considered as satisfactory by the Manitoba members last session, and to give Manitoba any greater proportion of the territory to be divided would certainly be resisted by Ontario. With respect, therefore, to the territorial division, the Manitoba government is now willing to abide by the terms of the resolution.

The chief issue now is as to the financial terms, and the Roblin Ministry is evidently holding out for the full measure of the demand made for the additional cash subsidy, similar to that given to Saskatchewan and Alberta, in lieu of the withholding of the Dominion lands in these provinces.

I regret that your recollection of the matter is different from the facts as reported both officially and in the public press at that time. Also permit me to say that your recollection of the financial matters discussed is equally at variance with the published fact and the report made by Messrs. Rogers and Campbell to the executive council in April last.

Their statement was that you offered $10,000, which they positively declined to entertain, but pressed for an offer which they could submit as an alternative to the legislature for their demand of equality with Alberta and Saskatchewan. You declined, so they report, to amend your original offer of $10,000 and when they suggested placing Manitoba in the same position as Ontario in relation to public lands, you also declined to consider that.

A moment ago I used the words 'authoritative and inspired' for the reason that Messrs. Rogers and Campbell informed me that Senator Jaffray was seated in your secretary's room when they arrived for the conference of the 23rd of March and remained there until the conference was concluded when he immediately entered your office after Messrs. Rogers and Campbell withdrew. The next morning, the 24th, the 'Globe,' owned by the Senator, contained the following, and which agrees absolutely with the official report of Messrs. Rogers and Campbell:

Special despatch to the 'Globe.'

'Ottawa, 23rd March—The Manitoba Ministers, Hon. Messrs. Rogers and Campbell, had another interview with Sir Wilfrid Laurier to-day, relative to the province's demands for better financial terms in connection with the proposed extension of the provincial boundaries. Sir Wilfrid said the government could not agree to Manitoba's request for an extra cash subsidy similar to that given Alberta and Saskatchewan, and that the bargain made when Manitoba entered confederation, with reference to the ownership of the Crown Lands, should not now be revised. Manitoba, Sir Wilfrid maintained, could not, after the lapse of so many years, be considered as being on the same footing as the new provinces just starting in to administer vast territories, with all the incidental expense of organization, to maintain law and order, build roads, etc. But in lieu of granting Manitoba the ownership of the Crown Lands in the territory to be annexed to the province, he said the government was willing to allow an annual cash subsidy sufficient to cover the cost of administration of the new territory. At present the enforcement of law and order in the portion of Keewatin to be allocated to Manitoba only costs about $1,500 per year. It is understood the Dominion government is willing to make an annual grant of $10,000 or any reasonable amount necessary to cover all expense to the province in this connection. The Manitoba Ministers are, however, still disatisfied with the government's terms, and are holding out for the full measure of their demands for an annual cash subsidy as set forth in the memorial presented to the Federal government last year. They are evidently desirous of keeping their grievance for campaign purposes when the Roblin government next appeals to the electors.

In view of the refusal of Manitoba to accept the terms offered by the government, it is practically certain that there will be no Bill brought down this session to extend the provincial boundaries.

Hon. Messrs. Rogers and Campbell left tonight for Winnipeg.

I can understand how in the multitude of cares incident to your office, details such as these could have escaped you; but presume that your mind, freshened with these records, will enable you to recall all the circumstances and facts as they occurred.

However, be that as it may be, the fact remains that we have received nothing that we can submit to the legislature in the way of financial terms. The power and authority to initiate is vested in you and the commons.

The legislature asked in their memorial for certain area and certain terms; you said 'No' to our area, but moved a resolution outlining certain other boundaries. We have accepted your alternative in boundaries, subject to legislative approval, and ask you to bring a resolution regarding terms, to the Commons on the same authority as you did the one regarding area.

We respectively press for this for the reason that the legislature of this province meets in a few weeks, and I desire in the public interest to submit to it a complete proposition. There is no reason, so far as I know, why you should not do this and thus place the responsibility of accepting or rejecting the proposition on the legislature which is the final arbiter in the matter. You assumed the responsibility for determining the area; I assume you will have no hesitation in taking similar action respecting the financial terms.

I think you will agree with me, the province of Manitoba is suffering from the delay and, therefore, it is in the public interest desirable that a complete, final and satisfactory conclusion be reached not later than the approaching session of the provincial legislature.

In conclusion, allow me to summarize as follows: Manitoba has stated what she desires, both as to area and terms. You have offered us an alternative of area, which was accepted by our delegates; but nothing (I consider $10,000 nothing) as to terms. We respectively ask you to accede to our proposals or make an alternative offer. I shall await your action with considerable anxiety.

With assurances of my personal regards and wishing you the compliments of the season,

Yours very respectfully,
(Sgd.) R. P. ROBLIN.

The Right Honourable
Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Ottawa.

In reply, I wrote to Mr. Roblin as follows:

Ottawa, 27th December, 1909.

Dear Mr. Roblin,—In reply to yours of the 9th instant, I have only to observe that I persist in believing that the report that we offered at a conference with Messrs. Rogers and Campbell $10,000 for the financial terms to be granted to Manitoba, cannot be taken seriously.

You will pardon me if I will not take part in a discussion of the inference which you desire to be drawn from the fact that Senator Jaffray was in my office when Mr. Rogers and Mr. Campbell came to the conference and was still there after the conference was over. The suggestion that there was a breach of confidence somewhere is one which might be averted between honourable men and, moreover, if the inference is to be drawn, it might be placed on other shoulders, for if you look at the newspapers at the same date as the 'Globe' you will find that the item was in most of the eastern papers.

You suggest that we bring in a resolution in the House of Commons fixing such financial terms as to us may seem advisable, leaving them to be afterwards accepted or rejected by the legislature of Manitoba. The same suggestion was made by you in your previous communication. I still believe that in my answer I conclusively showed that such a course would be unwise and impracticable.

I have only to add that we are ready to reopen negotiations, with the full assurance on our part that we are anxious to meet Manitoba in a fair and generous spirit.

With my best wishes for the coming year,

Believe me, dear Mr. Roblin,
Yours very sincerely,
(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER.

The Hon. R. P. Roblin,
Premier's Office,
Winnipeg, Man.

The House is now in possession of all the facts. I shall resume them in a few words. In 1908 this House passed a resolution fixing the western boundary, the northern boundary, and the eastern boundary of Manitoba. By so doing we had to deal with the respective pretensions of Ontario on one side and Saskatchewan on the other side. The pretensions of the province of Saskatchewan we ignored altogether, we could not accept them. The pretensions of Ontario we ignored in part, but we had to take action and we believe that the boundaries which we proposed were fair to Manitoba, fair to Saskatchewan and fair to Ontario, and I am glad to say that at the present time the province of Manitoba at all events thinks them fair and is disposed to accept them.

Then there was the consideration of the financial terms to be granted to Manitoba. I was impressed a moment ago by the statement made by my hon. friend that the province of Manitoba came here asking simply for justice. I am disposed to treat Manitoba in no other spirit. Manitoba has a fair claim to make, and we are disposed to meet that claim. The question is what is fair in this matter. We disputed first of all with Manitoba as to the extent of the claim which she presented, and which she wanted to have accepted. Now, I believe that my hon. friend himself who has presented this motion to the House must agree, must admit that the claim put forward by the province of Manitoba with regard to territory, when she wanted to infringe upon the territory of Saskatchewan, was not fair. I think he will agree also that when the claim of the province of Manitoba went so far as to seek to have its eastern boundary in the vicinity of the head of Lake Superior, that too was not fair. But we determined to do the best that could be done for the province of Manitoba, and I think on the whole we can invite the judgment of friend or foe that the territory which we offered to Manitoba was as much as we could do for her.

There was another question to be considered. The province of Manitoba was given a territory. The lands which are now in that new territory which is to be added to Manitoba cannot belong to Manitoba under the constitution which was given to Manitoba. Here is section 30 of the Act of Manitoba:

All ungranted or waste lands in the province shall be from and after the date of the said transfer vested in the Crown and administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of the Dominion, subject to and except in so far as the same may be affected by the conditions and stipulations contained in the agreement for the surrender of Rupert's Land by the Hudson Bay Company to Her Majesty.

When Manitoba was taken into the family of the confederation, the family of provinces, the parliament of that day decreed that the lands should belong not to Manitoba, but to the Dominion. My hon. friend (Mr. A. Haggart) stated in the course of his observations that Manitoba had been discriminated against and he wanted Manitoba not to be discriminated against or penalized. I have to say to my hon. friend, if Manitoba has been discriminated against, if Manitoba has been penalized, who has discriminated against Manitoba? Is it this government?

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes? What government was in power when this Act was passed? It was not the Laurier government, it was not the Mackenzie government, it was the Macdonald government.

Mr. MOLLOY. A Tory government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Tory government of 1869. That was the government which imposed these terms on Manitoba. My hon. friend may say we have given terms to Saskatchewan and Alberta. When, Sir, we gave terms to Saskatchewan and Alberta which appeared to be just and fair to every member in this House——

Mr. LAKE. No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If Sir, the terms were not fair and just that is the first intimation I have had of it. I maintain that the terms which we offered in 1905 in respect the money compensation were fair in the judgment of every member in this House. There were men who contended that Saskatchewan and Alberta should be given lands. That is another matter. So far as the terms were given they seemed to everybody to be fair and just. But my hon. friend says: But these terms are in excess of what is given to Manitoba. I shall come to that presently. The question we have now to deal with is this: What are we to do to give satisfaction to Manitoba? What are we to do to give to that province the extension of its limits for which it asks? In 1908 we passed a resolution offering them certain limits. I understand now that Manitoba has accepted those limits. We passed a further resolution that Manitoba should be given a money compensation to carry on the civil government. That has been agreed to by every member in this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The amount of the compensation was left to be determined by negotiation between the two governments. We could not agree. There was a conference, and I do not put any blame upon this person or that in connection with it. We could not agree. Then, what are we going to do? The government of Manitoba say to us: Bring in a Bill, such as you have in your mind, and we will accept it or reject it.

Mr. A. HAGGART. A resolution, is it not?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, a Bill. Mr. Roblin asked us to bring in a Bill. Here is the last letter which he wrote upon the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Resolution in the last letter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well, let us say that it should be a resolution. The terms of the resolution that we have before us are that there should be a negotiation between Manitoba and the Dominion government. We had a preliminary negotiation, but we did not agree. Then, I invited a new negotiation with the government of Manitoba. The government of Manitoba said to us: Pass a resolution; we will accept it or reject it. Now, I place myself in the judgment of every man in this House, whether he sits on that side, or on this side, is it not more reasonable, before we pass a resolution of this kind, that we should follow the policy of the resolution passed in 1908, and have another conference with the government of Manitoba to see whether we can or can not agree? We had a conference in 1909 which lasted two days. On the first day, I am glad to say that we discussed the boundaries of Manitoba and the boundaries were accepted. That much was accomplished. But upon the second day we did not agree. Is it not possible that upon another conference we can agree? Is it not more reasonable that we should have a conference and try to agree than to ask parliament to pass a resolution, which may be rejected by the legislature of Manitoba? Suppose we say that we offer $100,000, and suppose the legislature of Manitoba say: We do not accept it, but we reject it. Then Sir, it seems that it is not in conformity with the dignity of this parliament, it is not good business either that we should ask parliament to agree to certain terms unless we have beforehand the satisfaction of knowing, a perfect knowledge, that what we offer is satisfactory to Manitoba. I ask my hon. friend: Does he not believe that his friends would have been better advised if they had acted upon the suggestion of my letter of the 21st December, in which I said to Mr. Roblin: Come again, let us have another conference and try to come to an understanding rather than try to force this parliament to pass a resolution suggesting that the federal parliament should contribute any amount, let it be $50,000, $100,000, $150,000 or $200,000 without knowing whether or not such a resolution would be accepted? I think, Mr. Speaker, that we are in a strong position when we say that we are ready to confer with Manitoba, that we are ready to negotiate with them, that we are ready to discuss with them and see what we shall give to them and upon what we can agree. Now, my hon. friend says in this resolution that Manitoba asks for two things. First it asks:

Now, therefore be it resolved, that this House affirms that the province of Manitoba is entitled to equality of treatment with either the said provinces of Alberta or Saskatchewan to the west or with the said provinces of Ontario and Quebec to the east, we regret that the government of the Dominion did not agree to give to Manitoba such equality of treatment.

First of all let us look at the two alternatives we have here. The province of Manitoba asked that they should be given equality of treatment with Ontario and Quebec; in other words, that the province of Manitoba should be given the land. We have before us the memorial which was passed by the legislature of Manitoba on January 20, 1908, and if in this memorial of the legislature of Manitoba the province was asking for the land in the new territory to be added to Manitoba there would be something to be said in favour of it. But I want to call the attention of my hon. friend, and not only of my hon. friend from Winnipeg, but of all my hon. friends from Manitoba, to the fact that what is asked for in this resolution is that they be granted the lands, not only in the new territory which is to be given to Manitoba, but the lands in the whole province of Manitoba as originally constituted in 1869. That is what they are asking——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am glad that I have stated the position correctly. Or they ask that they be given the same terms as were given to Alberta and Saskatchewan; in other words, what is asked by our friends on the other side of the House is not only that they be given an addition to their territory, but that the financial terms upon which Manitoba was organized in 1869 should be absolutely and completely revised and that new terms should be given to them altogether. They do not ask simply that they should have the lands in the new territory, but that the whole terms of confederation, under which they have been in this Dominion for forty years, should be revised and that new conditions altogether should be made. Is that reasonable? Here is the province of Manitoba asking, and I think asking with good cause, to have their territory extended. Well, then you and I, in the simplicity of our souls, would suppose that they would ask for the land in that territory. No, they are not content to ask us to give them the land in the territory, but they say that we should revise our whole policy of the last forty years of keeping the control of the lands in the hands of this Dominion, set that policy aside and give to Manitoba the lands, not only in the new territory, but in the whole province. That is the position taken by Manitoba, is it not? I ask if there is, for such a position, any ground that can be taken upon this request for new territory. If the province of Manitoba is entitled to have the land of the whole province vested in the government of Manitoba it is not in consequence of this demand for new territory. It must be done, whether the territory is extended or not, but I submit that it is simply absurd to pretend that as a consequence of the extension of the territory of Manitoba the land should be given to the province, not in the new territory alone, but in the whole territory of the province. I can understand that the province of Manitoba has a good case when it says: If you give us new territory give us the means of administering it. We are prepared to do that, and that is what we did under the resolution of 1908, but Manitoba says: No, we will not do that; the parliament of Canada was wrong in 1869. When the government of Sir John Macdonald incorporated the province of Manitoba and brought it into the Dominion, parliament was wrong in keeping to the Dominion the lands of Manitoba. That is altogether another proposition, and that is a proposition that for my part, I say it to our friends, and I say it to our foes on the other side, to the members from Ontario, from Saskatchewan, from Quebec, and from all the provinces, that we are not prepared to reverse the policy which was adopted in 1869 by the government of Sir John Macdonald, and which has been followed ever since by all successive governments. Now, Sir, I am prepared to meet my hon. friend upon this, that Manitoba is entitled to compensation either in land or money in the new territory which is to be annexed, and the amount of compensation must be such as will give Manitoba the facilities and the means of administering that new territory. I am prepared to meet them upon this, and that is the reason we are asking for a new negotiation of these terms, because if Messrs. Roblin, Rogers and Campbell ask us—I will not discuss what took place in the conference—but if they ask that we should revise the whole terms of Manitoba, not only with respect to the territory to be annexed, but with respect to the whole province nobody should be surprised if we could not agree. But I hope that in a new conference, Mr. Roblin and his ministers will understand that we are to deal with new territory and nothing else.

My hon. friend, in his resolution, also asks that we shall not only give to Manitoba the lands in the whole province, but that we shall give to Manitoba the terms that we have given to Alberta and Saskatchewan. That is to say, that we should revise the financial terms which have been given to Manitoba. Well, Sir, I have only to observe that these financial terms have been revised again and again and again; they have been revised four or five times already. The last time they were revised was in 1907, by a resolution adopted by this House on the 25th of March of that year, and since embodied in an imperial statute which has fixed for all time the terms and conditions and financial arrangements which are to exist between the government of the Dominion and the provincial governments. The resolution which was passed in this House on the 25th of March, 1907, was in the form of a petition to His Majesty the King, asking that the financial terms which had been fixed at confederation for the provinces, should be revised for Manitoba as well as for all the other provinces; and revised they were. The petition went on to say:

> We pray that your Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the imperial parliament at its present session, repealing the provisions of section 118 of the British North America Act, 1867, aforesaid, and substituting therefor the scale of payments above set forth, which shall be a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be paid yearly to the several provinces of the Dominion for their local purposes and the support of their governments and legislatures.

This House so determined in 1907, and it is embodied in an imperial statute, and forms the law and the constitution at the present time. As far as that goes, to me it is final. But again, I repeat, as far as new territory is concerned which may be added to the province of Manitoba, it is fair and reasonable that compensation should be made to the province, either in land or money, to enable it to administer civil government for that territory, and that territory alone; and if my hon. friend with his friends come to Ottawa and have a new conference with us on this question, we are ready to meet them; and if it is our good fortune to come to a satisfactory agreement, we shall be only too happy to introduce legislation to give effect to the result of the negotiations which may take place between us. But, in the meantime, I do not see how my hon. friend can expect such a resolution as he has moved to be adopted by parliament when the whole matter is still open and we are still waiting for the answer of the Manitoba government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister found some fault with the mode in which this matter has been introduced to the House by the hon. member for Winnipeg. Resolutions in amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply have frequently been accepted by the government. I have within my reach a dozen cases, within the last dozen years, in which the government has accepted such amendments, not only from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, but from hon. gentlemen on this side of the House as well. Therefore, the only question is whether or not the proposal presented to this House by the hon. member for Winnipeg is a just and reasonable proposal, one which the government ought to accept, having regard to the just rights of the province of Manitoba. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister has gone over a great deal of ancient history in the somewhat lengthy and discursive remarks which he has addressed to the House. I am not going over the question of the delimitation of the boundaries. It was not necessary that the Prime Minister should go over that question at all. That question has been settled and determined. The government of Canada made a certain proposal by resolution presented to this parliament, and afterwards, if I remember correctly, embodied in an Act passed by this parliament. The province of Manitoba had made its proposal to which the Prime Minister has alluded. The province of Manitoba, for the purpose of bringing about a settlement of this question, which had been delayed by the inaction of this government for so many years, yielded a portion of its claims and accepted the limited extension of its boundaries proposed to this parliament by the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues. In that regard, I would like to make one observation and ask one question of hon. gentlemen in this House. The Prime Minister has taken strong ground upon the position that it is not a proper course for the government to present the financial terms to parliament by resolution, and then forward them to the government of Manitoba for its acceptance or rejection. I would like to ask any man in this House possessing ordinary reasoning faculties to tell me what the difference is between presenting the boundaries to parliament by resolution and then leaving them to be accepted or rejected by the legislature of Manitoba, on the one hand, and on the other hand, presenting the financial terms to parliament by resolution, and then leaving them to be accepted or rejected by the legislature of Manitoba? If there is any reasonable difference of principle between the two courses, I will be glad to take my seat and let the Prime Minister explain what it is.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The difference is very obvious. There was a dispute between Manitoba, Ontario and Saskatchewan as to what should be the limits. We had a conference on the subject, and we had to decide on our best judgment, since they could not agree.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There it is in a nutshell. Because there was a disagreement between this government and the government of Manitoba in respect of the boundaries, because the government of Manitoba insisted upon certain territory which this government thought should go to Ontario and to Saskatchewan, the government brought its proposals by resolution into parliament and passed it. There is an exactly similar difference of opinion between this government and the government of Manitoba with regard to the financial terms. Why, then, should not the government of Canada follow exactly the same course—bring in its proposals, have them embodied in a resolution of parliament, and then leave them to be accepted or rejected? There is no difference between the two positions.

But I would like to submit two or three further considerations to my right hon. friend. As I understand him, he takes the ground that conference No. 1, having absolutely failed, that conference No. 2, having absolutely failed, the government of Manitoba, having made a distinct and plain, and as it seems to me a reasonable proposition to this government, a further conference should be had without this government making any reply whatever to the proposals of the government of Manitoba. Indeed, my right hon. friend was so carried away by his imagination at the close of his remarks as to say that he was waiting for a reply from the government of Manitoba, when only fifteen minutes before he had read a communication from the Prime Minister of Manitoba to which up to the present time this government has not, so far as I understand, made any reply whatever. It is not the government of Canada that is awaiting a reply from the government of Manitoba; it is the government of Manitoba that has been waiting for more than a year for a reply from the government of Canada to a most reasonable proposition made by the government of Manitoba to the right hon. gentleman at the conference alluded to. My right hon. friend has said that a certain report in the press of a report made by the delegates of the province of Manitoba to the government of Manitoba is so absolutely absurd that it cannot be taken seriously. In that criticism, my right hon. friend involves more than the delegates of Manitoba. He involves in that criticism the able and intelligent correspondents of many Liberal newspapers in Canada, who took that report so seriously that they telegraphed it to all the great Liberal journals throughout this country, and did not regard the proposals as so supremely absurd as the right hon. gentleman would have us believe.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It did not come from me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not suggesting that it came from the right hon. gentleman. I accept his word unequivocally, but I would like to ask one question. There was a question about the boundaries of Manitoba, and Manitoba gave way. It accepted the boundaries as proposed by this government. There was then I presume a discussion as to financial terms. We know that the government of Manitoba made a proposal. Did the government of Canada make any proposal? Has it at any time up to the present made any proposal or offered any financial terms. I think that is a fair and reasonable question. My right hon. friend of course has a right to decline to answer it if he prefers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is your question?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My right hon. friend declares that he made no such proposal as that, namely, $10,000. Did he offer any sum whatever or make any proposal?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We made no offer whatever.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has my right hon. friend arrived at any conclusion up to the present time as to what he is willing to offer?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it not be well, then, instead of imputing any blame to the government of Manitoba or passing any criticism upon the course it has taken to make up his mind as to the financial terms which he is willing to offer to the province of Manitoba? There is no need of any further conference. When he has made up his mind and consulted his colleagues and obtained their approval as to the financial terms which he is willing to offer to the province of Manitoba, all that he has to do is to go to his office and write a letter to the Prime Minister of Manitoba and say to him: These are the terms which the government of Canada are willing to offer to the province of Manitoba and we propose to submit them to the parliament of Canada for its approval. That is what the government of Manitoba is waiting for in these negotiations at the present moment. The government of Manitoba has made up its mind as to the boundaries and has accepted the proposal of this government. It has made up its mind as to the financial terms. It has said: We will take either one thing or the other. We will take either the treatment you have accorded to Saskatchewan and Alberta, or the treatment which has been accorded to Ontario and Quebec. We will take either the one or the other. The right hon. gentleman did not at the conference say what he would do. He did not at the first conference say what he would do. He did not at the second conference say what he would do, and up to the present time he has not come to a conclusion as to what he will do, and up to the present time he has given no answer whatever to the proposal of Manitoba made to his government through him more than a year ago. That is the situation. This question has been hanging in the balance for years. Why does not my right hon. friend arrive at a conclusion? The first essential step he must take for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion is to make up his mind as to what he is willing to recommend to this parliament as fair and reasonable and just treatment to the province of Manitoba. My right hon. friend has spoken of the giving up of the lands of Alberta or Saskatchewan or Manitoba to provincial administration as if it were some unheard of and terrible thing which would bring about calamity not only to the provinces in question, but to the Dominion as a whole. What is the position of affairs? There are nine provinces in Canada to-day. In six of those provinces the lands of the Crown are disposed of by the Crown according to the advice of the provincial ministers and under the authority of the provincial parliaments. In three of those provinces the lands of the Crown are disposed of upon the advice of the ministers of His Excellency the Governor General and upon the laws and by the authority of the laws enacted in this parliament. They are lands of the Crown in the one case as much as in the other, the only distinction being that in the disposal of those lands the Crown in the three cases I have mentioned acts by the advice of the government of Canada, the members of the cabinet of Canada, and in the six other cases the Crown acts by the advice of the provincial ministers. Is there any reason why the government of Manitoba should not exercise the same wisdom and the same prudence and the same discretion in disposing of its public lands as the government of Ontario or the government of Quebec? My right hon. friend says we are asked to give up those lands. They are lands of the Crown in either the one case or the other, and the only question for consideration is as to the advice by which those lands may be disposed of in the one case or the other. For my part as I have said in this parliament over and over again and on the public platforms of this country, I see no reason why the public lands of Alberta should not be dealt with by the provincial legislature of Alberta, I do not see why that course should not be taken in respect of Saskatchewan, and I see no reason why it sould not be pursued in respect of Manitoba.

I further say that the attitude of the provincial government of Manitoba in this matter seems eminently reasonable, because they say: Do either the one thing or the other, accord us the same treatment that you have accorded to Alberta or Saskatchewan on the one hand, put us in that class, or accord us the same treatment that you have accorded to the two other provinces, Ontario and Quebec, and put us in that class; but bring this to a conclusion, and bring it to a conclusion according in either one or the other way.

My right hon. friend has spoken of the antiquity of the arrangement under which the government of Canada administers the public lands of Manitoba, and Alberta, and Saskatchewan. It is perfectly true that in 1869 under the administeration of Sir John A. Macdonald, this arrangement was in the first instance made, but I have not the slightest doubt that if Sir John A. Macdonald had been alive and in control of the destinies of Canada during the past 12 or 14 years, the public lands of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan would have been handed over to the adminstration of the provincial legislatures. Conditions to-day are not as they were in 1869. My right hon. friend knows we have made some advance and when he speaks of this matter having been settled in 1869, more than 40 years ago, I want him to remember that according to the very precedent which he stated only a little while ago, the financial terms which were settled at confederation between the government of Canada and the various provinces were entirely changed at the instance of his own government and after a conference with the provincial governments. Well, if that arrangement made at the time of confederation could be altered no longer ago than 1905 or 1906, what is there in the action of a Canadian government in 1869, that justifies my right hon. friend in regarding that as a law of the Medes and Persians one that is absolutely unalterable and final? He alludes to the fact that in the Act of the imperial parliament passed three or four years ago, by which that alteration in the subsidies was confirmed it was declared to be final and unalterable. But, he knows equally well that these words are vain and meaningless words. It would be an absolute absurdity for any parliament to say that an enactment passed by that parliament is final and unalterable. The same power that makes the enactment can repeal it. The imperial parliament to-morrow, if in session, could repeal the enactment which the right hon. gentleman has declared to be final and unalterable. I have assumed that the words alluded to are in the statute as finally passed, but my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Cowan) reminds me that these words were struck out of the body of the statute, but are, in the schedule.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They never were introduced into the Bill. Our petition has been added as a schedule to the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I say—they are not in the body of the statute, but they are in the schedule. As I understand it, the Bill as originally prepared included these words, but I think that Mr. Churchill, in presenting the Bill to the House of Commons, stated that they had been struck out for the very reason I have suggested.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) is in error. They were not in the Bill as presented to the House, but, at our request, they were put into the schedule.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has misunderstood me, if he understood me as saying that they were in the Bill as presented to the Imperial House of Commons. I say they were not in the Bill as presented to the House of Commons, but they were in the Bill as presented to the imperial government. I understood that they were in the draft Bill as presented to the imperial government by this government for enactment by the imperial parliament. And my recollection of the debate, as I read it at the time, is that Mr. Churchill, under Secretary of State for the colonies, explained that they had been included in the draft Bill presented by this government to the imperial government, but, for the reason, I have alluded to, it was thought they should not be included in the Bill, though, as my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says, they were retained in the schedule—that is, in the peition presented by this parliament for the enactment of this legislation.

I have nothing more to say. I think that the amendment of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. A. Haggart) points out a just and reasonable course to be pursued by this government and this parliament in dealing with the province of Manitoba in this respect. I think that the amendment ought to be supported. And, in concluding, I desire to congratulate my hon. friend from Winnipeg, on the remarkably clear and forceful way in which he has presented this matter to the House. I may venture also, I think, to say that his treatment of it was characterized by the utmost fairness and courtesy to the right. hon. Prime Minister and to every hon. gentleman who sits upon the government side.

House divided on amendment (Mr. A. Haggart).

Mr. J. A. LORTIE (Soulanges). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the House to the fact that I was paired with Mr. M. Martin, the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary. Were it not for that, I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

Mr. BARNARD. I wish to withdraw my vote, as I was paired with the hon. member for St. James division, Montreal (Mr. Gervais).

Mr. G. TAYLOR. The Solicitor General entered the chamber when you had read about half the motion in French, and he voted. He did not hear the question put. I am informed that the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., did the same thing.

Mr. BUREAU. I have heard and read the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. Bourinot says:

A member who has indistinctly heard the motion read may ask it to be read again, but the rule is that he should be in his place all the time, the question is being put in either French or English and he can only require it to be read again in case he did not hear it clearly on the first occasion in either language. If a question is raised after a division as to the right of a member to vote under the condition stated, the speaker will inquire if the honourable member was present in the House and heard the question put.

If the hon. member can answer to that question, yes, his vote is good.

Mr. BUREAU. I stated that I heard and read the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is simply: Did the hon. member hear the question put?

Mr. BUREAU. I was not here when it was being read in English, or during the first part of the reading in French. I was here most of the time, and I sent for the question and read it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BUREAU. I am allowed to make my statement, whatever remarks you want to make you can make afterwards. I was not here when the Speaker began to read the question in French, but I sent for the question and read the whole of it. I think that puts me in a position to give as intelligent a vote as any other hon. member.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule according to Bourinot is that the member must hear the whole question put.

Mr. NEELY. If a member hears it in either language?

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the same point raised in connection with the member for Queens, P.E.I.?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. PARDEE. The hon. member for Durham (Mr. Thornton) is paired with the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman).

Mr. G. TAYLOR. No, it is Mr. Thoburn. On the paper I have it as Mr. Templeman and Mr. Thoburn.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Guelph armouries, $2,250.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) is in his place, and will be able to give some additional information, if it is required, as to the necessity for the room which was erected over the gun-shed. I may first say that a request was made by the Department of Militia for this building on April 12, 1907, in the following communication:

To the Deputy Minister of Public Works.

Sir,—I have the honour to state that, if possible, this department would like to have an additional storey built over the gun shed which you are now constructing at Guelph, Ontario.

It is, therefore, requested that you will have your chief architect look into this question, with a view to making the portion over the gun shed into a drill room, and let me know if it is feasible under the present construction.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
EUG. FISET, Colonel.
Deputy Minister,
Militia and Defence.

On the 12th March, 1908, the following letter was received:

Proposed additional story Guelph gun shed.

Sir,—I have the honour to return, herewith, for action, the plans which you submitted to this department on the 30th January last, showing the proposed additional story for the gun shed at Guelph.

These plans have been approved by this department with the addition of a doorway and steps between the Assembly Hall and passage on the first floor.

I shall be glad if you can have this small change carried into effect.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. F. JARVIS,
Acting Deputy Minister.

To the Deputy Minister,
Public Works Department,
Ottawa.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much has the Guelph armoury cost the country to date?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I gave that when the item was under consideration before. Up to November 30, 1909, the total amount expended was $142,464.

Niagara Falls armoury, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for the erection of an armoury in Niagara Falls, which has been asked for by the Department of Militia. As hon. gentlemen know, Niagara Falls is right on the boundary, and it is desirable not only that an armoury should be erected there, but that it should be one of adequate dimensions for the accommodation of the militia.

Mr. SPROULE. This is to commence the work, is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $50,000.

Ottawa Government Printing Bureau, building for storing type and supplies, $7,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This has been urged on our consideration for a very considerable time, and we have felt that the time has now arrived when it is necessary to provide for what is now asked. It is to erect a building to store type and supplies at the Printing Bureau.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be interesting to know how much printing we are paying for outside of the Printing Bureau.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend would not expect me to give the information upon this vote, because it is not in my department. If my memory serves me right a motion was made for a return by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) and that return was brought down.

Mr. BLAIN. Partially.

Ottawa departmental buildings—improvements in lavatories, plumbing, etc., $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the improvements that we are making in the buildings.

Mr. JAMESON. Is an improvement going to be made in the ventilation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is difficult to improve that. I think the ventilation is all right.

Mr. LANCASTER. In this room?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the ventilation in this particular Chamber is all right he is very much in the minority amongst gentlemen in this House. I think it is the universal opinion that the ventilation of this Chamber is absolutely wretched. We work in other parts of the building, and we seem all right, but when we stay here for three or four hours at a time we get sick headaches. It has been that way for two or three years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had experts here who looked into the question of ventilation.

Mr. LANCASTER. They did not stay here as long as we do.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are 200 of us in this Chamber, and there are at times a good many people in the galleries as well, and it is impossible to keep the atmosphere absolutely pure under these circumstances.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is a different thing. If it is impossible to do it, that is one thing, but what I was protesting against was the statement that it was all right. I want to register my opinion that it is not all right.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I meant relatively.

Mr. LANCASTER. We can work in the Railway Committee room, or in other parts of the building, and we seem to be all right, but when we remain in this Chamber for three or four hours we get headaches from the bad air that we are breathing. I think that is the case with nine-tenths of the members who stay in the House for a few hours at a time. It may be that there are so many of us in the Chamber that it is difficult for the hon. gentleman's engineers and architects to deal with the matter, but I think it ought to be possible to find a remedy, and if it is not we should get a larger chamber, because the conditions existing at the present time are injurious to our health.

Mr. SPROULE. To find the remedy we should know the cause. The minister says that his experts have examined the chamber, and that there is nothing wrong about the ventilation. I take it that it is all right when there is no person in it. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) says that when we work elsewhere we have no trouble from bad air, but that when we come into the House we are in trouble. It must be, if we are all right outside, and that there is no trouble but plenty of pure air in the Chamber when it is not occupied by the members, then it must be due to the fact that we are brought into contact with the government, and that they are responsible for the impurity of the air in it.

Mr. HUGHES. This afternoon there were nine on this side of the House and fifteen on the other sound asleep when the right hon. First Minister was talking, and I do not think that he exercised a very soporific influence on the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That shows that the atmosphere was good.

Mr. HUGHES. That shows that the atmosphere was bad, that it was soporific. I do not like to blame any official, but when this new wing was constructed in which room 89 is located, with the exception of a few holes for windows, there was no provision made for ventilation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which is room 89?

Mr. HUGHES. The hole where the Conservative party is stored. I presume that the other rooms in the building are the same. There is not the first attempt at ventilation. The rooms were constructed the same as they were a thousand and fifty years before the birth of Christ.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that the chief source of difficulty is the long hours that we put in in this chamber. We are required to meet here at eleven o'clock in the morning during the latter part of the session after perhaps spending an hour in committee, and we sit here until midnight with only a slight intermission, and there is very little opportunity for the engineers to ventilate the room. I think that is the great source of the trouble, and I am sure that we are making a terrible mistake in trying to overtake the business of the country in a shorter time at the expense of our health. I have realized that fact, and I am quite sure that others must have realized the same thing. To-day we have a motion to sit on Saturday. After sitting five days in the week we are now compelled to come back on Saturday at eleven o'clock, and put in time possibly until midnight. I think it is absolutely absurd, and that the government are making a mistake in asking members of this House to work such long hours in a room where there are 200 members and, as the Minister of Public Works has said, often full galleries consuming all the fresh air that can possibly be brought in by the fans or otherwise. We are certainly acting very indiscreetly in our own interests. I see no good purpose to be gained by it. We had better put in two weeks more, and save our health than rush through the session in a shorter period for the sake of getting home a little earlier.

Mr. HUGHES. If the minister would take a trip to one or two of the public schools in Ottawa or go to any second-class town in the country and examine the schools there he would see proper systems of ventilation in use by which the air in a room can be changed in a minute or a minute and a half. To tell us that it is impossible to ventilate a building such as this is childish on the part of those who are advising the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it speaks rather well for the ventilation of this room that we are able to stay here, and feel so brisk. I notice that on this side there is a very nice breeze circulating in the chamber.

Mr. HUGHES. There is now, but there was not this afternoon when the First Minister was talking.

Mr. JAMESON. I have been told by members who have been in the House for some years that in the last few sessions the ventilation has not been as good as it was previously. That may be due to the fact that the new wing has been opened, and that the system of ventilation has been interfered with by it. I do not think that the ventilation has been as good during the last two sessions as it was three or four years ago.

Ottawa parliament grounds—driveway pavement, $21,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is around the parliament buildings. It is to complete the work of reconstructing the pavements. We had to make a new driveway by reason of the erection of the additional wing, and we have been replacing the old driveway.

Mr. SPROULE What kind of pavement is being put down?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Bitulithic pavement.

Mr. SPROULE. What is it costing per yard??

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1.90 per square yard.

Mr. CROSBY. Is that not very high?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The deputy minister informs me it is quite cheap; $2.50 was the lowest tender which we got.

Mr. CROSBY. What concerns did you have tenders from?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The different paving concerns.

Mr. CROSBY. Cannot you give us the names?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not them here. This was some time ago.

Mr. CROSBY. But we should know who gave tenders, and from whom you asked tenders. I know something of the bitulithic paving, and we have as well paved streets in Halifax as you have in Ottawa, and they do not cost as much as $1.90 per yard. I understand this is the main street you are paving.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, round the parliament grounds. It has nothing to do with a street. I would be glad to give my hon. friend information as to the cost of similar work done in 1905. The lowest tenderers were the Warren Bituminous Paving Company, of Toronto. We paid them $2.25 per square yard.

Mr. CROSBY. For paving round these parliament buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was street paving on Wellington street.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister tell us what the thickness of this pavement is? I notice that it is very much broken up, whether by frost or not I do not know. Down in front of the buildings there are great cracks nearly an inch wide.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend has in mind the sidewalk.

Mr. SPROULE. No, the front of the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend is mistaken, there are no cracks in it. The cracks are in the walk built some years ago

Mr. SPROULE. They are right from the building to the steps.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not noticed the cracks.

Mr. RUSSELL. Would the hon. minister tell us if it is his intention to tear up the driveway at present round the grounds and replace it with this bitulithic pavement? We have now what I consider a pretty fair macadam roadway, and in my opinion a good macadam roadway is better than a bitulithic pavement in a park system of driveway. They are not to be compared, and with the use of oil, these macadam roadways are far better for driving than either asphalt or bitulithic. I think that with very little expense the surface of the present driveways could be made almost perfect.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. member will go down by the east block, he will see the new pavement we have put in there. It is exceedingly good, and has excited very favourable comment, but alongside the west block there is no pavement. There is only an ordinary earth roadway, and we propose laying down this bitulithic pavement there and around the buildings wherever there is no pavement at present, or where it is worn out. I think it is all right for horses.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister has not told us the thickness.

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 6 or 8 inches of concrete underneath and then 1½ inches of asphalt on the top.

Mr. BLAIN. Why does not the hon. minister ask for tenders for this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We can do it more cheaply by employing the men in our own department.

Mr. BLAIN. Are you sure about that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that has been demonstrated.

Mr. BLAIN. How does my hon. friend get round the Act?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Act expressly states that where, in the opinion of the minister, the work can be done more economically and better by day work, it can be done without calling for tenders. We have men in the employ of the department, and we have a foreman, of course, and we find it more economical to do this class of work under the direction of our own foreman and by employing labouring men by the day.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. What Act does my hon. friend refer to?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Public Works Act.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to ask the minister again if he is bound to put in this bitulithic pavement? It's surface is so hard that it is like glass. I think if the minister were to consult the wishes of the horse-drivers and those who use public driveways, he would find that a macadam or gravel roadway would be preferred to any new form of pavement, and we have already a foundation for a good gravel road there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that a great deal depends on whether the roadway is level or sloping. There is a great deal of wash on this hill, and it has been found impossible to keep an ordinary roadway in good condition. That is the reason why we are putting down the pavement. I have heard no complaint from horsemen from driving on the pavement which we have already constructed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will register a complaint now. There is only one means of safety in driving on a pavement of that kind, and that is by putting rubber boots on the horse. I know a good deal about the bitulithic pavement, and it has only one advantage that I can see, that is in regard to dust; but by sprinkling crude oil on macadamized roadways you can overcome the dust altogether and make a very satisfactory surface.

Mr. BRISTOL. I entirely concur in what the hon. member for East Toronto says, and if the minister were to take the opinion of men who have to drive, I think he would find that it is absolutely correct. In park systems, like that around Boston, where the roads are supposed to be the best in the world, you do not find such pavements, but you do find excellent macadamized roadways well looked after, and there is nothing better for a country like ours, with such extreme changes of temperature. A pavement such as we have here, if it becomes wet and suddenly freezes, is so slippery as to be dangerous to drive over, especially if it goes down hill.

Mr. SPROULE. We are hardly in a position to make a fair comparison as to the cost and quality of the pavement around this building with ordinary street pavements. The pavement on the street is much deeper and ought to be more costly. If this pavement costs $1.90 a square yard and the street pavement costs from $2.25 to $2.50, I do not think there is much evidence that this costs less than the other, because this is lighter and is not so carefully put down. I believe that if a fair comparison were made, this would be found to be the dearer at the price stated.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. I do not like to dispute the hon. minister's interpretation of the law, but I think it is so plain that a layman can see that it provides, that any work costing more than $5,000 must be done by tender and contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is wrong, and my interpretation is that put on the Act by the Auditor General. Even if the amount is over $5,000, if in the opinion of the minister from the nature of the work it can be done more expeditiously and economically by day labour, it can be done in that way.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. I know that the opinion always entertained by the ex-minister of railways was that no work costing more than $5,000 could be done by day labour, except when a dam broke away or something of that kind happened.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I satisfied the ex-minister of railways that my view of the law was correct, and I have received a memorandum from the Auditor General confirming my view.

Ottawa parliament building—cleaning, painting and redecorating interior of senate chamber, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This has been urgently asked for by the Speaker and other members of the Senate, and more especially the Committee on Internal Economy of the Senate.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it to be done by tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not sure whether it can be done by tender or not. It will mean the renovating of the paintings in the panels of the Senate chamber and other work of that character, which it is somewhat difficult to do by tender.

Ottawa public buildings, Langevin block—new boilers and alterations in heating apparatus, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The old boilers are worn out and it is necessary to replace them.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Does the department pay for the heating or is it done by contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We buy our own fuel and have our own men.

Mr. S. SHARPE. What kind of fuel?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Anthracite coal.

Mr. S. SHARPE. About what price does the department have to pay for it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We invite tenders for all the coal supplied for the different buildings.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Can the hon gentleman tell the annual cost of heating the Langevin block?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell that. We could of course take the quantity of coal consumed and the wages paid to firemen and labourers, and in that way get at the cost. This will come up later under the item for heating, and I will then have the information for my hon. friend as to the price paid for coal.

Ottawa fuel testing building, $1,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the balance required to pay for the building for testing peat fuel.

Parkhill public building—$10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to complete the payments.

Port Arthur armoury—revote of $10,000, lapsed, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a new building which has been pressed upon our attention. An armoury is very much needed at Port Arthur. In addition to the armoury there will be a drill hall.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will that cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When I was at Port Arthur I discussed the character of the building which would be necessary with the officers of the militia. The city is growing very rapidly, and the military spirit is excellent, and I think we should give them a good armoury and drill hall. I do not imagine that we can do it for less than $75,000 to $100,000. If we give them a drill hall as well, it will probably run over $100,000.

Mr. HUGHES. What about Fort William?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There they said they would be willing to wait for a little. We had hoped that one building would do for the two cities, but owing to the considerable distance between them, there did not seem to be any proper place where an armoury or drill hall could be constructed that would suit both cities.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the strength of the militia who will use this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The city is growing so fast that we cannot tell. It is the 96th Lake Superior regiment that is there at present.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the strength of that regiment?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no particulars about that.

Sarnia armoury—revote of $500, lapsed, $20,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this going to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not prepared the plans yet. Of course, we will confer with the Militia Department, but my hope is that it will not exceed $50,00.

Mr. HUGHES. What troops are there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is the headquarters of the 27th Lambton regiment, the St. Clair Borderers, 'G' and 'H' companies, and the headquarters also of the 14th Field Ambulance.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Toronto drill hall—additional accommodation for new corps and armouries, $20,000.

Mr. DANIEL. What new corps is to be accommodated in Toronto?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The medical corps.

Uxbridge public building—revote of $6,740, lapsed, $15,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How much will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We hope to complete this for about $15,000.

Wallaceburg public building, $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost of this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably about $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Does that include furnishings, fittings, heating and lighting?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will include heating and lighting, but not furnishings.

Waterloo public building—revote of $2,970, lapsed, $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Waterloo is a very important place. The population even in 1901 was 3,500, and it is growing rapidly. There is a very large public revenue. This will be for a post office, customs and inland revenue. I think the cost of this building will run up to $35,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no customs there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps this is for inland revenue and post office only. But it is a growing place and there is a large business.

Mr. HENDERSON. And it is represented by a minister of the Crown.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite true. The revenue there is extraordinary for the size of the place. The inland revenue alone last year amounted to $509,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not very surprising when you have there one of the largest distilleries in the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Surprising or not, it means a large business.

Mr. BLAIN. Tenders will be called for by public advertisement for this building, I suppose.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Whitby public building—$15,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What is to be the total cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is estimated that the total cost will be $41,645.86, including site, heating, electric wiring, furnishings, etc.

Mr. BLAIN. Whitby is only a small place.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, Whitby is quite an important place. There is Whitby town and West Whitby, and the population of the two is considerably over 4,000. It is the county town, as well.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this building to serve the two places?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think so.

Mr. BLAIN. What constituency is it in?

Mr. PUGSLEY. South Ontario.
