Mr. HENDERSON. Before we leave this item of Ontario public buildings, I would like to point out that the minister has been very generous to some counties. Take, for instance, the county of Wellington. Besides the armoury at Guelph, which the minister told us this afternoon would cost over $140,000, we find estimates here for public buildings for Elora, Fergus, Harriston and Mount Forest.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are not in the same riding.

Mr. HENDERSON. But they are in the same county. Harriston and Mount Forest are in North Wellington, and Elora and Fergus in South Wellington. Here is one county getting four buildings. True, it is represented by two Liberals. To the victors belong the spoils—that is the principle on which the Minister of Public Works proceeds. And I do not know that I should find fault with him. Sarnia is given a public building—and that constituency is represented by a Liberal. Seaforth—also, I think, is represented by a Liberal. I am almost afraid the minister made a mistake—Tilbury is given a public building; I am not sure whether that is represented by a Liberal or not.

Mr. ALEX. McCALL. It is.

Mr. HENDERSON. And Tilsonburg?

Mr. BLAIN. That is in South Oxford.

Mr. HENDERSON. Also represented by a Liberal. And Whitby, represented by a Liberal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member (Mr. Henderson) passes over Toronto.

Mr. HENDERSON. It was quite impossible for the minister to overlook Toronto. They are only reaching out the long arm trying to capture Toronto.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And Uxbridge, in North Ontario.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose that was started before the last general election.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not started yet.

Mr. BLAIN. The amount was put in the estimates before the last general election.

Mr. HENDERSON. It was one of these items carried over, I presume. I am not making a plea for the county of Halton. But here is a county that has never had a public building. I suppose it is the mistake made by the people in sending a representative who does not support the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman says 'hear, hear.' He approves of that policy. The money spent on these public buildings is the money of the people; Conservatives contribute to the revenue of the country just as well as Liberals, and I submit that to erect public buildings on political lines is hardly in keeping with what I would think the good judgment of the minister under ordinary circumstances would be. I think he has allowed himself to be carried away when he puts a public building in a small place like Elora with a population of 1,200, and in Fergus, Harriston and Mount Forest, four public buildings in one county in a year, and leaves other counties that never had a public building without any consideration. Does it not appear to the minister that there is something political in the whole matter? I do not know that I have any right to complain. The hon. gentleman thinks he has a right to serve his friends. Does he think it will require four public buildings in the county of Wellington to bring back two Liberal members at the next election? He must think there is some doubt about the result of the next election or he would not spend so much money in one county. The money belongs to the people and it is the duty of the minister to consider the necessities of the country, independent of political considerations. If the minister will frankly state that he is guided by politics in this matter I shall rest the matter there and not complain, but every district in the country has a right to some consideration in the distribution of public money whether it sends a supporter of the government or one not in sympathy with them. I do not say this to try to influence the minister because I have no idea that I would influence him. He apparently has fixed on a decided policy. If that is his policy, I would like him to make an announcement, do not do it in a concealed way, do not try to keep away from the point by saying: Oh look at Toronto, and make Toronto a scapegoat for everything. Toronto is a big city, but it is not the whole country and there are other parts of the community just as much entitled to consideration as Toronto.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure that on reflection my hon. friend will not feel he has been very happy in his address to the committee. When I mentioned Toronto, I did it in good faith, simply to show that we are not generous to Toronto, but that we are just, as we are seeking to be just to all parts of the country. We cannot erect all the public buildings required at once, nor improve all the harbours. My hon. friend will recognize that I did not allow the fact that his constituency sends a Conservative to this parliament to interfere with my doing justice to the port of Oakville. I have made provision for improving that port. I would not allow the fact that my hon. friend represents that constituency to influence me. The hon. friend speaks of Toronto, and says that we are making a strong bid to win some seats in Toronto by erecting public buildings. If we had a vote here for a public building in the constituency of my hon. friend, he would say to his electors: The Minister of Public Works is trying to capture you by holding out a bribe to you, and are you, the independent electors of Halton, not going to resent such an attempt as that to bribe you by the erection of a public building? It was not a happy speech of my hon. friend, and I am surprised that he should so forget himself as to depart from his ordinary practice of speaking with judgment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have heretofore taken the other stand. I have said to my people that I did not believe this government was corrupt enough to do that sort of thing and would only erect public buildings in ridings represented by Liberals. But, I am sorry to say I have lost my good opinion of the Minister of Public Works to-night, notwithstanding, that he has given us a very respectable grant for the harbour at Oakville, which I think was generous and just. Oakville was entitled to it, Oakville has never had a public building and it is a very small sum, yet I feel thankful the minister did that, because it is an important port. It is a sort of harbour of refuge between Toronto and Hamilton, where boats can call and in the event of a storm can go in and ride at anchor in the harbour and be protected. Heretofore, I have defended the minister as I have said, and I am sorry that I had to-night to change my mind on that question.

Portage la Prairie public building—revote, $50,000.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the first amount put in the estimates for this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At the session of 1907-8.

Mr. BLAIN. Immediately before the election?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The election happened to take place afterwards. This is urgently asked for by the people of Portage la Prairie.

Mr. STAPLES. Has the minister given any further consideration to the erection of a public building in the town of Carman, in the constituency I have the honour of representing? I have brought this to the attention of the Public Works Department every year since I have had the pleasure of sitting in this House. Carman is a town of over 2,000 inhabitants. It is a progressive little town, the citizens have expended a large amount of money in putting in a sewage system and water works, and if there is a town in Manitoba entitled to a public building, Carman is. The minister on former occasions, agreed that I had a good case, and said he would look into it and would undoubtedly give it the consideration to which it is entitled. Taking the minister at his word, I now have to say that if he has looked into it he certainly will have to come to that view and erect a building. Carman is a railway centre. Three lines of railway run through it, the Canadian Northern, the Canadian Pacific railway and the Great Northern, and I was in hopes that the minister would have placed in his estimates, an appropriation towards the construction of a customs office and post office there. Other towns throughout the Dominion which are much inferior to this have been given consideration. The postal revenue is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $5,000 a year, and the amount of business that goes through the post office is greater by 50 or 75 per cent than that of a large portion of the towns which have got public buildings. I bring it to the attention of the minister, and I hope that he will, before this House rises, see fit to put an appropriation in the supplementaries towards the construction of a public building in the town of Carman.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are a great many places, without speaking particularly, where, I think, public buildings might be erected without exciting any just criticism. I do not say that they would not excite criticism, because my experience has been that no matter what care we exercise there will be some criticism. But, I have been obliged to omit them from the estimates. The supplementary estimates have been brought down, I do not anticipate that there will be any more during the present session, and therefore, I am unable to give my hon. friend the assurance that he would like to have.

Mr. STAPLES. You might give us a promise and probably we will live on that for a year if you cannot go any further.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what I am not able to do.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the minister look into the case I have cited before the end of the session of parliament?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have already looked into it.

Mr. STAPLES. Do you not think it is entitled to the consideration I have asked?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can say to my hon. friend that if I had decided to have a public building at Carman I would not expect that I could be very justly criticised for providing for it. But, outside of what my hon. friend has said, I have not had it urged upon my attention very strongly from the people. I have had no intimation from the Post Office Department that the people are suffering any particular inconvenience at Carman. But, I may say to my hon. friend that I will continue to give the matter consideration.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister has said that he has had no pressure brought upon him by the citizens of Carman. I might call his attention to several resolutions that, if he will take the trouble to look at the records, he will find either in his department or the Customs Department, passed by the board of trade and other organizations of Carman, and I might go a little farther, and say that I think he has strong letters from the citizens of Carman who are of the same political faith as he is. When he says that he had no representations from the city of Carman, if he will take the trouble to look at the records, he will find that what I have said is correct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have the matter inquired into.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose the Minister of Public Works is perfectly willing to say that he does not refuse to put a public building in a town, because it is represented by a Conservative.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not intend to make any such statement.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think perhaps the minister would state that that would not be a guiding feature in his policy, that he does not decide where a public building shall be located by the character of its representation. What does he say in respect to that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I always feel it to be my duty to give very careful consideration to the representations of our friends.

Mr. HENDERSON. That hardly answers my question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think so.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want the minister to say whether or not the fact that a county is represented by a Conservative is to be taken as a reason why a public building should not be erected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, these estimates prove the contrary to that.

Mr. HENDERSON. These estimates prove that where a county is represented by a Liberal public money is expended.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And where represented by a Conservative, if a building is needed in the public interest, provision is made for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Just as freely?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In quite a number of cases.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the minister say just as freely?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well that is a pretty hard question to put to me.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will be perfectly satisfied if the minister will say so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We would hear of it from the county of Halton.

Mr. STAPLES. I might further say that the citizens of Carman have been put to a great deal of inconvenience. Dutiable goods have been coming in there, and the fact that there is no port of entry has made it very inconvenient. The minister will find a requisition along those lines for a public building if he will look at the records.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will be in the Customs Department.

Mr. STAPLES. Carman is one of the oldest towns in Manitoba. It is the first town that was established south of the Assiniboine river, and I state again that if there is a town in that province that is deserving of consideration at the hands of this government it is Carman.

Winnipeg examining warehouse (new), $25,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will that complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it will complete the building.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this on Main street?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is on McDermott street, a little off Main.

Winnipeg Post Office building (old)—fitting up ground and first floors, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to fit up the post office building for savings bank and customs purposes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is $50,000 the entire cost of the alterations?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We expect that will complete the alterations.

Winnipeg immigration buildings—government's share of cost of asphalt pavement laid by municipal corporation on Maple street, between Higgins' Avenue and C. P. Ry., in front of buildings Nos. 1 and 5, $871.28.

Mr. A. HAGGART. The city collector of taxes sent me several communications about the pavement in front of several other public buildings in Winnipeg. I left these papers with the proper officer in your department, and I would request that the matters be expedited.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Pursuant to my direction the matter has been taken up by the proper officer in my department, and he is now in communication with the authorities of the city of Winnipeg on the subject.

Estevan—public building, $15,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $36,000. Estevan is quite an important and growing town, and the cost of building is greater there than in the east. We have to build for the future, perhaps more so than in the small towns in the east, because of the rapid growth.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I do not like to trouble the minister, but I tried to be here at eight o'clock and missed it. On the item for Uxbridge, Ontario, does the minister object to give me a little information about that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No objection at all. We propose erecting a public building there, the cost of which will run to about $15,000. We expect to call for tenders during the present season as soon as plans and specifications can be prepared.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Is there a proposition before the minister in reference to having an armoury in the basement of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. There has been a suggestion made that there should be an armoury in a portion of the building. That, of course, will increase the cost, probably about $3,000.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I would like to urge that upon the minister. Uxbridge is quite a market town, and a good sized town. It is the headquarters of Company 5 of the 24th Regiment, and for a number of years, as captain of that company, I have paid out of my own pocket the rental of an armoury. The young man who is in charge now is a mechanic and he cannot afford to pay the rental. I could not afford to pay it, but I did. I do not think it is fair, where a public building is being erected, for the government to ask the 'officers' to pay for the rent of an armoury when it could be constructed in conjunction with this building. I think the idea would meet with the approval of the citizens. I would urge upon the minister that when they are drawing the plans they should draw them with the idea of having an armoury in the basement of the post office.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The matter will be noted, and carefully considered.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Then I would like to ask the minister if there were any objections taken to the site which has been selected?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been purchased.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Were there any resolutions or petitions sent in to the minister objecting to it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not at this moment recall any.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Upon whose recommendation was the site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We sent an inspector from the department to look over the different sites that were available, and it was upon his recommendation that this site was chosen. The price is very reasonable, $1,200. The property is a corner lot, 60 feet on one street by 90 on the other.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I understand that the majority of the citizens object to the present site because it is not central enough, it is off at one end of the town. The central site is the O'Neill site that the department had an option upon. What is the price of the O'Neill site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not a memorandum of that. But the gentleman whom we sent there is an expert in the business of selecting sites.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Did he receive any recommendations from public bodies?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell my hon. friend, but if he desires I will have the matter looked up to-morrow and let him know.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Did he receive any legal expenses?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $52.74 for the legal expenses, including the travelling expenses of the inspector.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Have you the expenses separate?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not say as to that.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Was it Mr. Ormiston?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not any memorandum of that.

Mr. BLAIN. He got $49.45.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Would there be any chance of the minister changing the site? I understand that sometimes when citizens object to the site purchased the department make a change. The overwhelming sentiment of the town is that the central site at the market building should have been selected by the government. Three parts of the population reside in that part of the town, and if the central site had been selected it would have met with the unanimous approval of the citizens. I was wondering if the department had any petitions or objections registered against this site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am satisfied that the site selected is a good one. I think it would be very objectionable now to attempt to make a change in the site; it would mean selling this piece of land, and it would mean dividing the people on the question of the site, which is always unfortunate. The site has been bought; it had better go on the present site.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I thought perhaps the department in selecting the site might have consulted the representative of the constituency, and the residents of the town.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No doubt the inspector consulted the people of the town; that is his duty, and those were his instructions.

Mr. BLAIN. Surely my hon. friend did not select the site in the town of Uxbridge without consulting the member for the county?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the sitting member was consulted.

Mr. S. SHARPE. What was his answer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know, but I know he was consulted.

Mr. BLAIN. What sitting member, may I ask?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Grant.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was purchased in 1909; it was decided upon before that, in 1908.

Mr. S. SHARPE. About what date was it decided on?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some time in the summer of 1908, I think.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I think the minister is in error about the time of deciding upon the site. On the eve of the election there were three or four options taken on various sites, the options were allowed to expire, and after the election they took up this lot again. So it was not decided until after the election in 1908.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know as to that. I can say that the gentleman who selected it is a man who would consult with the people, he would examine different sites, and he would give his judgment, as I have no doubt he did in this case. He is a man of very excellent judgment, and is not influenced by personal considerations at all.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Were there any public bodies sending in requisitions for this building, or did the Post Office Department ask for a new building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was a public meeting in the town as early as December, 1907, and they passed a resolution, and a memorial was sent in urging that a public building should be erected for a great many reasons, which are set forth in the memorial.

Mr. BLAIN. Would my hon. friend read that memorial?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would take too long. I will send it over to my hon. friend.

Lethbridge immigration building—removal of building to new site, and repairs, renewals, etc., $6,000.

Mr. U. WILSON. This requires some explanation. We want to know why the building was removed, and how far it has been removed. This is a considerable amount for removing a building of an ordinary size.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The cost of the site was $2,200; and the estimated cost of moving the building to the new site, and repairing the same, and putting it in a state of completion, as per tender of Smith Brothers and Wilson, is $3,650; contingencies, $150, making a total of $6,000.

Mr. U. WILSON. How far was it moved, and why was it moved?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was because the Interior Department urged that it should be moved. In these western cities, which are growing, some of them with great rapidity, it becomes necessary sometimes to move the buildings to more convenient situations or for other reasons. In this particular case, I believe the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who owned the land and leased it to the department.

wanted it, and it became necessary to move this building to another lot.

Mr. U. WILSON. I am sorry you are so poor in a country where you own so much land.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to be regretted

Mr. HERRON. Has the minister had any representations from the Post Office Department regarding a public building in the town of Macleod? I have had very serious complaints from there in regard to the post office, which is certainly not suitable to the place. The Postmaster General has spoken to me several times on the subject, and has said that he hoped that something would be done in the near future.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that quite recently, and only quite recently, I did receive a representation from the people of Macleod, urging that a public building should be erected, but it was too late to take the matter up during the present session.

Mr. HERRON. Is it under serious consideration for next year, and may the people hope that it will be erected then?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are degrees of consideration.

Mr. HERRON. The town is a very important one, with a population of nearly 2,500, and with two railways. The mail is distributed in a small room about six feet by ten feet, and the condition is most serious. The place is not at all suitable for a post office in a town of its importance. It is a disgrace to the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that I have directed that a report be obtained from the Post Office Department as to the condition of affairs at Macleod with the view of giving the matter my serious consideration between now and the next session of parliament.

Strathcona immigration building—improvements, $3,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Apparently Strathcona is rather a doubtful constituency.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not a kindly remark to make. There are also three items for Lethbridge.

Mr. U. WILSON. This is a pretty large item for repairs. Will the minister give us some idea of what it is for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building was constructed in 1900. It is a wooden building, set up on wooden posts, and these improvements are all absolutely required. The building has cost in the way of construction up to the 31st March, 1909, $7,407.08. and there have been repairs to the amount of $1,548.35. The building is 2½ stories, 55 feet by 28 feet, and there is a 3-story annex in the rear, 32 feet by 10 feet. It contains kitchen, baggage room, dormitories, washroom and storeroom.

Mr. U. WILSON. Are these immigration buildings finished on the inside with boards or plastered??

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is plastered.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the minister if he will supply at the next sitting of the committee a list of the newspapers, with the amount paid to each, in which advertisements were inserted for tenders for public buildings at Whitby to the amount of $354.95, at Welland to the amount of $340.80, at Leamington to the amount of $362.94, and at Dauphin, Man., to the amount of $236.91.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be glad to do that.

Chilliwack, B.C., public building, $10,000.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Will the minister kindly tell the committee what his intentions are in regard to this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The intention is to purchase a site and later on to proceed with the erection of a public building. I may say we have not yet purchased the site. I believe there is a considerable difference of opinion as to what would be a proper site for the building. We have made a good deal of inquiry and have had our good deal of inquiry and have had our representative there, but we intend to completing the purchase. Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor), who is familiar with the situation, would let me know what he thinks of the present post office site for the new building.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. That is rather a delicate question to ask because I happen to have possession of the adjoining property. I would like to say, however, that Chilliwack is really suffering very much for the want of this building. I do not think there is any place in the whole country where one is needed more.

Fernie public building—$10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to complete the public building at Fernie.

Mr. GOODEVE. Is that a post office building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is a post office building now under contract.

Mr. GOODEVE. I have a long letter here a column and a half in length, the writer of which states that he has had to wait as long as half an hour and three-quarters of an hour in order to register a letter owing to the bad accommodation there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the new building?

Mr. GOODEVE. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would be in the old building. The letter shows the necessity for the new building, which is nearly completed.

Greenwood public building—revote of $5,000, lapsed, $10,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What will this building cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think we can get this constructed for less than $25,000 to $30,000. Greenwood is quite an important place.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the item first put in the estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it was put in the estimates in 1908-9, but I am not sure. However, Ithink there is no question about the building being very urgently required, and I regret that I have not been able to build it before this.

Vancouver public building—$15,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that the post office building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The new post office.

Williamshead quarantine station—improvements and repairs to building and fittings, etc., $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Before we pass from the British Columbia items, will all this work in British Columbia be done after public tenders have been invited?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, unless some repairs, but all the new buildings will be constructed after public advertisement and tenders.

General—tobacco curing experimental stations, $5,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. What are these?

Mr. PUGSLEY. These are requested by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. U. WILSON. Where are these stations to be located?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The intention, as I understood, is to put one in Ontario and one in Quebec.

Ottawa public buildings—grounds, $12,000.

Mr. U. WILSON. Wha t grounds are these?

Mr. PUGSLEY. These are the parliamentary grounds.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is a contract, I understand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is all done by day work under our own foreman.

Mr. GOODEVE.

Mr. U. WILSON. Do you mean to say that it costs $12,000 a year to keep up the parliamentary grounds?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. And they are very badly kept at that.

Mr. U. WILSON. Do they include the grounds at Rideau Hall?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This item does not include the grounds at Rideau Hall.

Mr. GOODEVE. Walking around the rear of this building to-day I found the cedar hedge in very bad order. It ought to be replaced. Perhaps the minister has not noticed it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I notice that it is unsightly. But, if it were taken away, we should be under the necessity of putting up a nice substantial fence which would be expensive, and so we have not decided to do anything yet.

Mr. GOODEVE. Why not replant the hedge?—it would be much handsomer than a fence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It might not be a success. My hon. friend (Mr. Goodeve) knows that here as elsewhere, cedar hedges have not been thriving of recent years.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. All the trees around the summer house and the Queen's statue have been allowed to die for want of throwing a little water on them. I think that the grounds receive very poor attention. I would invite the minister, the first time he goes to Toronto, to observe the way the parliament grounds there are looked after. It seems to me that the men in charge here are not competent to do the work. The condition is simply disgraceful.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are supposed to have, and I believe we have, a first-class foreman gardener. I will see that my hon. friend's views are conveyed to him.

Rideau Hall, including grounds, improvements, furniture and maintenance, $35,000.

Mr. U. WILSON. This item ought to be explained. When our friends who now occupy the treasury benches were in opposition, they used to find a great deal of fault with a much smaller expenditure on Rideau Hall than this. And perhaps the minister could tell us what becomes of the old furniture that is put out of the building. Every year, there seems to be a lot of new furniture purchased, but I have never been able to find what was done with the old. It would be good enough, I fancy, for the houses of most of us. But these things seem to be appropriated by some one and no account given.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is entirely in error. All the old furniture which seems to be of no use is auctioned off and the proceeds go into the treasury.

Mr. U. WILSON. Perhaps the minister would give us an account of that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give it to-night, but if my hon. friend would like it I will have it prepared.

Mr. U. WILSON. I would like to have it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have asked the chief architect to make a note of it.

Mr. U. WILSON. Now, perhaps the minister would tell us how this money is expended.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The best way would be to give some details of the expenditure of the past year: decorating dining room, $1,600; tennis court, $720; plants, bulbs and seeds, $992; dry goods, &c., $6,533; lumber, $1,752; hardware, paint and glass, $1,376; furniture, flags, cleaning carpets, &c., $1,231; sand, cement and manure, $305; salaries, &c., $18,110; sundries, $180. That is the expenditure up to December, and gives my hon. friend an idea of how the money goes.

Mr. U. WILSON. When I get the other account I shall have made a start for what I am after. I have a lot of figures, and I think they come to a good deal more than the minister has given.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will get the information my hon. friend (Mr. U. Wilson) wants.

Dominion cattle quarantine stations, renewals, repairs, &c., $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In this case, as in others, 25 per cent of the amount has already been voted. And as the amount voted, $5,000, is sufficient, I move that this item be struck out.

Mr. BLAIN. How does this happen?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We find that under this head we do not require more than $5,000.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Item struck cut.

Yukon public buildings, rents, repairs, fuel, light, water services and caretakers' salaries, $60,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How is the money for Yukon public buildings to be expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be the same as last year, rent, repairs and renewals, light, fuel, caretakers' salaries, etc. I am asking the same vote as last year, and I have no doubt my hon. friend will find in the Auditor General's Report a full statement.

Interior Department, civil government—salaries, $876,866.27.

Mr. U. WILSON. There seems to be a large increase?

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice the number of officials in the Interior Department is to be increased from 670 up to 722. Is the minister simply making provision for that increased number, or are they already at work in the department?

Mr. OLIVER. Owing to the increase of work in the department we were compelled to employ a larger number of temporary clerks during the last year than we had provision for in the estimates. They were employed under the Act, and were paid out of the contingencies vote. I desire now to provide for that number in the permanent vote, and that accounts for the larger part of this increase. These people have been in employment under the Civil Service Act as temporaries. We wish to make permanent provision for them, and also for further requirements to meet the increase of work. We would prefer to employ permanent people, because the employment of temporaries is not satisfactory. Under the Civil Service Act we cannot employ a temporary clerk for more than four months in any one year, and of course where we have permanent work that is most unsatisfactory no matter how efficient the clerks may be.

Mr. LANCASTER. How many temporary clerks were employed last year?

Mr. OLIVER. About forty-five.

Mr. SPROULE. You are providing for fifty-two new ones this year?

Mr. OLIVER. Forty-five were in employment temporarily. We are making provision for fifty-two, including forty-five permanents instead of these forty-five temporaries, and as our work increases we will be able to take on further permanents up to the total number of fifty-two.

Mr. BLAIN. Do the temporaries have to pass the Civil Service examination?

Mr. OLIVER. Under the Act we cannot employ any one who has not passed the Civil Service examination and been approved by the commission.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why do they have to go in four months?

Mr. OLIVER. Because the Civil Service Act says they can only be employed for four months.

Contingencies, $47,000.

Mr. OLIVER. The increase of $10,000 in contingencies is due to an increase in the amount of printing and stationery, owing to the increased business of the department by reason of the larger number of homestead entries with consequent issue of patents, etc.

Mr. BLAIN. Is any of this printing done outside of Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. Not of this vote; this is all done in the Printing Bureau.

Immigration—salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries, $200,000.

Mr. U. WILSON. I think this requires some explanation.

Mr. OLIVER. The amount is the same as was voted last year, and the division is as follows: Salaries in Canada, $117,412; United States, $42,180; Great Britain and Ireland, $34,834; Europe, $5,500.

Mr. SPROULE. Where have you W. T. R. Preston now?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Preston is in the Department of Trade and Commerce. He has not been in the Interior Department for some years.

Mr. U. WILSON. I want to call the attention of the minister to the fact that we have had an inspector on the Bay of Quinte railway. I put a question on the paper the other day asking how many immigrants had been located along that line. The answer was that they did not keep track of those located, and I do not know what they want an inspector there for. They also gave the information that they had deported sixty-eight. Following that question I asked how many had been located between Deseronto and a place just at the other side of Tweed—I forgot the name. I find that the department are in the habit of sending their special agents to the old country every year. Has that been done this year?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. U. WILSON. And that they employ some of them the year round?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, some of the men who are in employment the year round are sent to Great Britain during the season of immigration effort.

Mr. U. WILSON. Have you not some who are not employed the year round that you send abroad?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. U. WILSON. I find there is Anson Aylesworth, and I do not want to make any exception in his case, because he happens to be a brother of a minister. The only exception I take is that I think this officer was entirely unnecessary. He was immigration agent in the old country, and the Auditor General's Report for 1908 shows that it cost this country $988.98 for a trip occupying four months which I call a pleasure trip. I moved two years ago for a return showing the reports that these people who went as special agents to the old country had made to the government. I did not find any reports made by any of these gentlemen. Mr. Walker, the assistant superintendent of immigration in London, made a report. He spoke in glowing terms of the success of these gentlemen, and told how they had eloquently addressed public meetings, how they had attracted a great deal of attention, and he added that afterwards there had been a great many inquiries made as to this country. But, I did not find any particular report from him as to the number of people that they had induced to come to this country. At page K—118 of last year's Auditor General's Report Mr. Aylesworth is put down as superintendent of immigration on the Bay of Quinte railway. The report shows that he received $100 a month. The total cost to the country was $1,070.14. I would like to know what Mr. Aylesworth did as inspector on that road. I have no knowledge of any considerable number of immigrants being placed anywhere along that line except that they were sent to Deseronto during the time we had that great influx in 1907. The work gave out, some were deported, some returned to Napanee, some were scattered in various places, and they were a pretty unsuccessful lot of people. In addition to his other duties Mr. Aylesworth found it necessary to come to Napanee during the election and deliver an address in the committee room of the Liberal party. He did that at the last general election. At that time I did not know that he was in the government employ; I presumed that he had had his pleasure trip to the old country, and was through. But, I found that he was constantly in the employ of the government. I would like to know whether Mr. Aylesworth is still in the employ of the government as a regular official, what his salary is, and what his duties are? I do not take any exception to Mr. Aylesworth as an officer, but I think he should keep out of committee rooms, and refrain from making speeches. I remember that the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made a promise to this House that any civil servant that dabbled in politics would be given an opportunity to devote all his time to politics, but in those days most of the officials were Conservatives, and most likely a great many of them were dealt with accordingly, but I have never known of a single instance where he dismissed a Liberal for interfering in politics. There are some other matters that I want to speak about, but I would like to hear what the minister has to say about Mr. Aylesworth, and his conduct in interfering in the elections, and what his duties were as inspector of the Bay of Quinte railway.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Aylesworth was employed temporarily—I cannot give just the time—as a farm delegate. He was a practical farmer.

Mr. U. WILSON. The return says four months.

Mr. OLIVER. He was employed temporarily as a farm delegate in the old country. I think it is not necessary to enter into a disquisition as to the value of the services rendered by these farm delegates, but I think the results of their work in past years is very well shown in the quantity and character of the immigration we are getting this year. However, Mr. Aylesworth was employed temporarily, and we believed that he gave satisfactory service. He afterwards was given employment as inspector of the farm labour distributing agencies that we have throughout Ontario. If he is listed in the Auditor General's Report simply as immigration inspector on the Bay of Quinte railway it is not a correct statement of his duties.

Mr. U. WILSON. That is what it says.

Mr. OLIVER. That is not a correct statement of his duties, because his duties are not confined to the Bay of Quinte railway; in fact, I do not know that they have any particular connection with the Bay of Quinte railway. He is simply employed in Ontario inspecting the agencies which we have throughout the province to distribute farm labour, and during the season of immigration effort in the old country we have employed him during the past two years for three or four months. We believe that he is a very satisfactory officer. We have every reason to believe so; we thought he should be so by reason of his experience, character and ability. His salary when employed is $100 a month. I have no knowledge of the part he took in the election. If he was in the employ of the department I certainly think he should not have taken that part. I care not who he is, if he is drawing government money to an amount sufficient for his livelihood, if that is his salary, he should certainly have given his whole time to the government, and should not have interfered in elections. But I am not at this moment aware whether he was in permanent employment of the government at the time. Of course if he was not in permanent employment, the position is somewhat different.

Mr. U. WILSON. I do not take any particular objection to Mr. Aylesworth speaking against me in that election. He stumped against me in 1892, and our fellows rather made sport of him, pretending to speak for the other man while he was talking in my favour. He is a glib tongued chap, quite a good speaker. In the Auditor General's Report for 1908, vol. 2, I find these items:

K—30 G. A. Aylesworth as special agent to England four months to 31st March at $100 per month, railway fares, $88.40; travelling expenses, $400.58, total $988.98. Return February 4, 1910.

5—G. A. Aylesworth January, 1909, for four months got $833.24. Auditor General's Report, 1909.

K—118 G. A. Aylesworth as inspector on the Bay of Quinte for nine months, $1,070.14.

I hardly know where he got his Pullmans on the Bay of Quinte railway. I never heard of Pullmans on that railway. I just call the attention of the minister to this item, because it looks to me absurd for any man who is inspector of immigration on a little railway like the Bay of Quinte. I recollect talking to the station agent, who was distribution agent of immigration at Yarker during the election. He had been appointed as one of the men to locate immigrants, and he said, I never located any. But you remember a man by the name of Miller, and he stole some money from the government that he had to refund, but the government never made him come to time as they would an ordinary criminal. If an ordinary man had settled with a criminal as they did with Miller, it seems to me he would have got into trouble. I would like some explanation about the children that Children's Aid Societies are bringing to this country, whether they pass a regular examination like ordinary immigrants; also I would like some information about grants to the different women's societies that bring out females, and I would like to know whether they also have to pass examination like ordinary immigrants. Then would the minister say whether female domestics are examined like ordinary immigrants. I see bonuses were paid on them to the amount of $4,878. I would like an explanation of the different societies to which you give bonuses, and whether all these people have to pass an examination like ordinary immigrants. I suppose you have got a number of inspectors, and I hope they are more useful than out friend Aylesworth has been, apparently. Tell us how many inspectors you have, where they are located, and what their duties are. I suppose they report to the department from time to time. There was another matter that I used to be interested in before the Agriculture Committee, that is, as to what reports were made by agents who were getting salaries. I have not heard of any of them reporting the numbers they sent in. But we always get reports from the men on commission, and I wondered sometimes whether they worked together. It seems strange that we never heard any particulars about the men on salaries sending in great numbers of people. But they do come in here in large droves, and we find in the Public Accounts considerable bonuses paid for them.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the children who are brought out, they, as well as all other immigrants have to pass a medical inspection at the port of landing. There is no exception in that respect. But the children who are brought out are also subject to medical inspection before they leave the old country, that is, they are required to have a medical certificate before they start, but that does not relieve them from the medical inspection on their arrival in Canada. The same is true in regard to all people who land in Canada as immigrants, whether brought out by societies or not. We have inspectors for various purposes in different branches of the immigration service. We have one inspector whose duty it is to look after distributing agents, that is, those who are authorized to secure employment for farm labourers throughout Ontario. Mr. Aylesworth is the only inspector we have for that purpose. Then we have inspectors for the boundary inspection service, or the exclusion service, as it might be called. We have inspectors also of the children who are placed in homes throughout the country. So we have three different classes of inspectors. But we have only one inspector for the farm labour distributing agents.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that inspector report to you?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is that report to be found?

Mr. OLIVER. Those reports are in the department, they can be produced on an order of the House. They are not printed; if we printed all the reports we get they would make a very bulky volume, and probably not be required. But the reports are in the department and can be produced.

Mr. U. WILSON. Does Mr. Aylesworth travel on a pass?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, he has a pass.

Mr. U. WILSON. Over all the roads?

Mr. OLIVER. All the large railway systems. The societies whose names are mentioned on page 124 of the Auditor General's Report for 1908-09, simply get the ordinary bonus on the people they bring out, under the regulations, the same as any other agents. They do not receive any special consideration. They get $5 a head on domestic servants, but not on factory women or any other kind.

Mr. U. WILSON. What guarantee have you that these are domestic servants who come to this country? I see that the Ontario government are also giving a bonus on domestic servants. I do not approve of it, but they insist that a domestic servant must bring a letter from a clergyman as to her standing, and a recommendation from her last employer in this country, before the agent gets the $5. So far as I know, with this government all one has to do is to pass as a domestic servant and the agent gets the $5. Is that the case?

Mr. OLIVER. No. The agent who claims the bonus has to tell us where the person on whom the bonus is claimed is employed. We then inquire of the employer, and on receiving a satisfactory reply, we pay the bonus.

Mr. U. WILSON. How do you apply—by letter?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. It might interest my hon. friend to know that in the immigration branch last year we got 220,000 letters.

Mr. U. WILSON. Were they all answered?

Mr. OLIVER. All that required answer.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am informed that about at present 100 domestics are expected to arrive in Toronto, in two parties of, I think, 50 each. Does the minister know anything of that or whether they are brought out under Dominion or provincial arrangement?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no specific knowledge of any party of that particular number. As my hon. friend is aware, the Ontario government is at present taking an active interest in immigration work, and it might be a party they were taking a special interest in. I may say that, as a department, we do not specially undertake to bring out domestic servants or to assume responsibility in regard to them. They are taken in hand by parties who make practically a business of conveying them out and seeing to the placing of them. We recognize the people who do this as long as we think they do it satisfactorily, and they get the benefit of the bonus.

Mr. U. WILSON. Of course, I do not agree with that view, because I think people who want servants ought to pay for them. When your inspectors are away from your office, I suppose you pay their board and lodging and their fare?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. U. WILSON. Mr. Aylesworth could not have been away a great deal, because I find that his board and lodging cost only $116.50, whereas the board and lodging of Mr. McInnis, of Detroit, cost $513. Mr. Aylesworth paid only $3.75 for sleeping car, $19.04 for transfer of baggage, and $11.40 for fares. I understood that Mr. McInnis was supposed to be located in Detroit. Either one of two things have happened: either Mr. Aylesworth has not travelled a great deal as the general agent of the department to locate farmers throughout Ontario, or Mr. McInnis got a good board for very little travelling, or lived pretty well for a man supposed to be living in Detroit.

Mr OLIVER. It is rather a mistake to suppose that the agent in Detroit has no other duty than to attend to the office there, The business of Mr. McInnis, as of all our agents of that class in the United States, is to go wherever in the state it may seem to him to be necessary to go, either to hold meetings, to give information, or to assist prospective settlers in commencing their journey.

Mr. U. WILSON. Have you not several agents in that state?

Mr. OLIVER. No. The only office we have is in Detroit, and Mr. McInnis is the agent. While he has control of the office, his business is more important outside of the office than in the office. Mr. Aylesworth has not the same class of duty at all. His business is simply to visit the different men who are authorized to act as distributors of farm labour, and it may easily be seen that such duties do not require nearly as heavy expenses as the duties of Mr. McInnis.

Mr. U. WILSON. I think Mr. McInnis' office cost more than $8,000 a year. Although it is a rented building, he put a stone front on it and plate glass windows in it. Why should he put on such expensive repairs instead of the owner of the property? If the owner wants to rent the building, he ought to put it in a rentable shape. I think Mr. McInnis pays $900 a year for rent.

Mr. OLIVER. $1,200.

Mr. U. WILSON. And he does his own repairs. Is it pretty general in your department to allow your agents to rent buildings at such prices as they like, and then to make such repairs as they think fit at the public expense of Canada, instead of renting a suitable building and letting the landlord do the repairs? That is done in several cases, and I think it should not be continued.

Mr. OLIVER. I will take all the responsibility upon myself for the expense of fitting up the office at Detroit. Some years ago when I first visited Detroit, our office was in an upper room, where a visitor under ordinary circumstances would not find it, although it was in a very good street, and it seemed to me that if we were trying to do business in an agricultural state like Michigan, and in a city like Detroit, which is the centre of an agricultural population, it was not economy to have an office in an upper room not convenient to the public or in the public view. Other people who are trying to attract public attention, who are trying to do business with the public, obtain the best situation and make the best front they can, and I took the responsibility of authorizing our inspector for the United States, Mr. William White, to secure a building or office accommodation that would be better adapted to our purposes, and the accommodation was secured. We made the best arrangement we could as to rental, and we would have had to pay more rental if we had not put in the fittings ourselves. We wanted the fittings to suit our purposes, and I think it will be agreed by those who have seen our office that we have a very suitable place for the purposes we have in view, and one entirely creditable to our country. I do not think it is economy to spend $8,000 in rent and salaries for an office, the purpose of which is to get in touch with the public, and not get full value for the sake of spending a few hundred dollars more in order to secure a good situation and an office with a good appearance and proper conveniences and appliances.

Mr. U. WILSON. I am very sorry that there was not another building in Detroit that was suitable and that might have been rented without a great deal of expense on repairs. That is a very exceptional situation in any city or town, for you can easily get a suitable place without putting on repairs. So far as my knowledge goes a landlord who has his rent assured would prefer to meet the tenant on reasonable terms. The fact that the minister takes the full responsibility does not alter the case a bit. He might have done what he thought was best, but that is a matter of opinion. I think he should not have required so many repairs.

Mr. HERRON. Before we leave this item I wish to draw the attention of the minister and the House to a matter I previously discussed and to offer an explanation of some statements I made in this House on the 22nd March of this year, when a similar item was under consideration. On that occasion I called the attention of the minister to a statement that was alleged to have been made by Bruce Walker who, I thought at that time, was Commissioner of Immigration for the Dominion in all foreign countries, but who, I now understand, is Commissioner of Immigration to the United States. I find that the remarks I then made have been very much misinterpreted or misquoted. The newspapers in my locality, the southern part of Alberta, have construed my remarks on that occasion into something that would lead the people to believe that I was very much opposed to immigrants from the United States coming into our country. I wish to assure the House that I have never taken such a position either in this House or out of it. I have always upheld both here and elsewhere the immigrants from the United States as the best immigrants we get into our prairie country. In case I might be misquoted again or misinterpreted, I would just like to place on 'Hansard' a few of the remarks I made on March 22 for the information of the writers of the articles, extracts from which I am about to read. I wish to make it clear what I said on that occasion; here is the statement alleged to have been made by Bruce Walker in Chicago, which I then read:

J. Bruce Walker, commissioner of immigration of Canada, made this statement recently at the Great Northern hotel in a discussion regarding modern methods of handling immigration. He said his country was benefiting by the mistakes of other nations, that it took care of all immigrants for one year and considered the heart, brain and brawn could be better interpreted than laws.

'The boundary line between Canada and the United States,' said Mr. Walker, 'is little more than a line between two states or two provinces. Our immigration laws are so similar that there is really a mere exchange of courtesies at the boundary, but once with our nation an immigrant becomes a ward of the government for a year. Once a newcomer enters the immigration area—that is Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—we care for him in sickness or distress, pay his doctor's bill, nurse him, rebuild his house if it burns and are responsible for his welfare. Why do we do it?—because it pays. We have found that the nearer the government comes to the immigrant the nearer the immigrant comes to the government. It makes him a better citizen. He feels that he has something better to depend on than even neighbours and friends. And from that feeling springs a regard for his adopted country that can only be likened to a man who adopts religion; he believes in it.'

I would like to read another line or two from another part of my remarks on that occasion. I asked the minister if this statement of Bruce Walker was true; it was not my statement, and here is what I said. I do not know how my remarks could be misinterpreted:

At least, if the statement of Mr. Bruce Walker is not true, then I do not think he should be employed as representing this government in a foreign country.

At that time I was not aware that he was exclusively representing Canada in the United States. I supposed that he was Commissioner of Immigration for all foreign countries. Now I repeat what I said on that occasion. If the statement made by Bruce Walker or alleged to have been made by him, was not true then I claim he is not fit to represent Canada in a foreign country, and if his statement was true, then he was misrepresenting the facts to the people who are coming to our country. To show how some of the papers have misrepresented me, perhaps I may be allowed to quote this paragraph:

'John Herron, M.P., is credited with saying that the Federal government pays the doctor's bills of American settlers, reconstructs burned buildings and in other ways pampers the 'Alien' and deals but scant courtesy to the Canadian or Britisher. John will have to do some 'squaring' when next he faces the electors.'

That is from one paper, and I have three or four others which have misquoted me in the same way. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee as we are all anxious to get through with the business; I simply wish to say that I have nothing to apologize for in respect of anything I said on that occasion. I have always upheld the American settlers. I have said that they make the best settlers because they are better accustomed to the prairie country coming, as they do, from the western states. When they come into our country they are better able to adapt themselves to the conditions which they find on our western prairie. They are people of fine moral character, independent in their ways, and with experience of conditions similar to those we have in our prairie provinces. In one of the papers which I have here reference is made to some remarks made by Mr. J. A. Currie. I have only to say that I was not present when Mr. Currie made these remarks, and that I am not responsible for Mr. Currie's views.

Mr. U. WILSON. There are supplementary estimates for this service of $125.000, making an aggregate appropriation of $1,040,000, which is the highest estimate we have ever had for immigration up to this date, I believe. What has occurred since the main estimates were prepared to make it necessary to have this supplementary vote?

Mr. OLIVER. It is partly due to the greater precautions being taken from time to time in the exclusion of undesirables, and partly to the very great increase in the number of immigrants coming this year for whom we have to provide. The main estimates were prepared in the fall of last year. We could not know then what the movement this year would be. The hon. gentleman (Mr. U. Wilson) knows that the movement this year is beyond all previous records.

Mr. BEATTIE. Is there any record of what these agencies do? For instance, the Detroit agency is an expensive one. Unless it pays by the number of immigrants it is not desirable to keep it going. I think a record should be kept of what the agencies do, to ascertain whether they pay or not.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not possible for us to keep a record of the results of the work of any agent or agency, for the reason that we have no control over the movement of people. We can only judge of the results of the work of the agency by the movement from the locality it serves. My hon. friend (Mr. Beattie) is aware that the movement of people from the United States during the past few years has been increasing, and is particularly large this year. We do not claim all the credit for that for our agents, but we do claim that they are a contributing cause, and that the continual growth of the movement is evident that good work is done. I have not the figures before me, but I think the record of the homestead entries from the different states will show that there is good work done in the state of Michigan by the agency there.

Mr. BEATTIE. Do the agents give a monthly, or a yearly report?

Mr. OLIVER. A monthly report. There is also the annual report which appears in the blue-book, but it would be too cumbrous to publish their monthly reports.

Mr. SPROULE. How much did you spend last year in the aggregate?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not the full accounts for the last year, but I am informed that the total expenditure, including that from the supplementary estimates for the year, will amount to about $975,000. In the year 1908-9, the Auditor General's Report shows an expenditure of $979,326.

Mr. U. WILSON. If you add the supplementaries for last year $60,000, you will have an expenditure of over $1,000,000.

Mr. OLIVER. The estimates I have given includes the expenditures from the supplementaries. Including this, the expenditure will be about $975,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Speaking of Mr. Aylesworth, the minister said he was travelling on a pass, which accounted for his not charging so much for railway fares. How many of the agents of the Immigration Department make use of passes, and how are these passes paid for if at all?

Mr. OLIVER. The agents of the Immigration Department whose business it is to travel receive passes from the railway companies which are not paid for, and not charged for. It is a courtesy that is granted by the railway companies to the officials of the department whose business it is to travel.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is not the minister aware that the granting of these passes is illegal under the Railway Act. It is legislated against in this country as discrimination. Under the Railway Act, there are certain passes that may be issued, but such passes as the minister refers to are not among them. When travelling on trains, I have observed these officials with passes. I thought perhaps they were travelling on private business; but it was no affair of mine, and I am not a detective. But, if these passes are gratuitous, if they are not paid for by the government in some way, they are contrary to the Railway Act of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. My object in asking was to find whether these passes were paid for, and so would form an addition to the expenditure.

Mr. OLIVER. I have all the burden I can carry in administering the immigration law, and the land law, without administering the Railway Act.

Mr. CROSBY. How many officials of the Immigration Department, such as doctors, are there at Halifax, and what are their salaries?

Mr. OLIVER. This vote covers the salaries of the medical officers. There are two medical officers at Halifax, Dr. Hawkins and Dr. Chisholm, and their salaries are $1,800 each.

Mr. CROSBY. Has any one been acting there besides these two doctors?

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. Chisholm broke his arm some time ago and another doctor has been acting in his place.

Mr. CROSBY. What do you pay him for his services?

Mr. OLIVER. He was paid $150 a month for the time he was employed.

Mr. CROSBY. Dr. Chisholm was paid his full salary, and Dr. Hogan, who was acting in his place would get $150 a month?

Mr. OLIVER. That is right.

Mr. CROSBY. Are you aware that Dr. Hogan is also military doctor there and has a private practice as well?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. CROSBY. Are these doctors permitted to have a private practice?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, there is no restriction on them in that particular.

Mr. CROSBY. It seems rather unfair that medical men should be paid from $1,800 to $4,000 by the government, and should at the same time carry on a private practice in competition with other medical men who are not receiving such salaries.

In Halifax, I understand, there are eight or ten medical men thus employed. It would seem to me to be more fair in cities to make one medical man the government doctor and pay him a sufficient salary to enable him to live without carrying on a private practice in competition with other medical men. This is a matter that the government should look into.

Immigration—Contingencies, in Canadian, British, foreign agencies and general immigration expenses, $700,000.

Mr. OLIVER. This is the same amount as last year.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is any provision made in Canadian cities for looking after immigrants after they arrive? Is there any such provision in Toronto?

Mr. OLIVER. In some cities there is provision and in others not. We have provision at the ports of landing, St. John, Halifax and Quebec. We have detention accommodation in Montreal and general accommodation in Winnipeg and various other distributing points throughout the western country. We have none at Toronto. We have an information office there but no accommodation for immigrants.

Mr. RUSSELL. I believe that Toronto is quite an important distributing point. Most of the farmers go there to get their help, and I have noticed lately something in the paper about the British Welcome League and their work. There is no doubt they are doing good work, and if it were not for such an institution there would sometimes be great hardship in Toronto. Would the minister not look into this matter and see if it would not be advisable to establish some sort of a place at Toronto where immigrants could be taken charge of while waiting to be taken up. Years ago there was an immigration shed where people went to pick out their help and I think it would be well to have a shelter where they could at least have a bed and be kept from the streets. It is not fair to rely on the Welcome League to do all this kind of work.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice a newspaper report of trouble between the agent of the British Immigration League at Winnipeg and the Immigration Department. Has the minister received any communication with reference to that?

Mr. OLIVER. I saw that item and communicated with the commissioner at Winnipeg and have his side of the case. I should be glad to give it to the House in a minute.

In regard to Toronto, many years ago, under the system of immigration effort that then prevailed, there was accommodation for immigrants at Toronto, Kingston, Hamilton and possibly other points in Ontario. After a time it was decided that the work of caring for immigrants in the province of Ontario might better be handled by the province than by the Dominion, and these different buildings which were used for the accommodation of immigrants were closed. Then for a number of years the Dominion made no provision and the province made such provision as was made. The province, I think, had some arrangements for caring for immigrants at Toronto. That did not seem to be satisfactory to the province, and after a while they abandoned it and gave the Dominion authorities notice that if they wanted to take any interest in immigration effort at Toronto, they were free to do so. Under the circumstances that had existed while the province had handled the matter at Toronto, using Toronto as a converging and distributing point, a sort of depot of immigrants, there seemed to have grown up a very considerable congestion of immigration at Toronto, and it seemed to us when we took the matter over that our business was rather to keep the immigrants out of Toronto than to get them in there, and we established throughout Ontario commission agents, whose business it was to find places for immigrants, placing an officer in Toronto to give information to immigrants that would carry them out of Toronto; that is to say to provide them with information which would enable them to make their railway connections in Toronto and generally secure and give out information that might be helpful, but in no way to make provision for the entertainment of the immigrants in Toronto, our business, as we understand it, being to keep the immigrant out of Toronto, to see that he gets on the farm and therefore we do not assist him in any way to stay in the city. That is the attitude that we have taken in regard to Toronto. As far as the matter has gone yet it has been more satisfactory than the former system. There is private effort for the entertainment of immigrants. There is the Salvation Army and the Welcome League, both of which have accommodation. I think very probably that these institutions, both of which are very worthy in their way, meet the case as it is there to better advantage than if the government undertook it, because experience showed that it is in the interest of Toronto and in the interest of the province, that the immigrants should not be induced to congest in Toronto, but that they should be sent out to wherever their labour will yield the most advantage to themselves and the country as quickly as possible.

Mr. RUSSELL. Around Toronto there is quite a farming district. In the townships of Scarboro and Markham and west of the city quite a number of labourers are needed to work on the farms, and the farmers come to Toronto to get their help. Immigrants have to stay in Toronto for some little time before they are taken up, although in some cases they are snapped up as soon as they arrive, and the Welcome League have a lot to do, and have done a lot of good. If, on investigation, it is found that the British Welcome League are able to handle this work in a satisfactory manner I think it would be up to the government to help the league by giving them a grant each year. There is no doubt they have been doing good work, and the people of Toronto have had to put up for it, and they have done it willingly. I think it is only fair that these people who are working, not for the benefit of Toronto, but for the benefit of the outside country, should receive consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. There is considerable complaint from farmers that they find difficulty, notwithstanding the large influx of immigrants, in getting men. I had some letters during the present session about it saying that they had written to Toronto, and had written down here, and yet they had failed to get any satisfactory answer. They complain that while the country is paying out a lot of money for immigration, the immigrants are all shipped through to the west, and there is little opportunity for the farmers of Ontario, and the eastern provinces to get the help which is required. That seems to be one of the troubles. If you write down here they refer you to Toronto, but when you get to Toronto there does not appear to be very much chance of getting any satisfactory information as far as I can understand. Farmers complain that there is a disposition to send the immigrants to the prairie provinces, and not make any arrangement for a distribution through the older provinces as well.

Mr. OLIVER. We were able to place about 20,000 farm labourers in Ontario last year, but the demand is greater than the supply. We have no contract to do it, but we are not able to meet the demand when the demand is as large as it is. We have made a very reasonable effort. We have established these distributing agents throughout the country, and the distributing agent in the hon. gentleman's county would communicate directly with the booking agent in the old country.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a distributing agent at Flesherton, but he does not know anything about it.

Mr. OLIVER. Our agent at Flesherton would make inquiry among the farmers of the surrounding country as to how many wanted labourers, and what wages they would pay, and then he would communicate with the booking agents in the old country informing them that there were so many positions available in the vicinity of Flesherton in the expectation that the booking agent, knowing that these places were available, would be able to induce people to book direct to Flesherton.

Mr. SPROULE. What do these agents know about the booking agents or where to write?

Mr. OLIVER. They are informed on the subject, and that is the way they are supposed to carry on their business. Our idea is to get as direct communication as possible between the farm and the immigrant, and by all means to avoid the direction of the immigrant to Toronto as his ultimate destination. Our whole idea is to direct him only through Toronto to his ultimate destination, and we have the office in Toronto for that purpose. We have an agent there for the purpose of giving information to immigrants, and for the purpose of giving information to farmers as well. The services of our agents are available to either the farmer or the immigrant, but we do not think, in the light of our former experience, that it is well for us to do anything in the way of entertainment at Toronto.

Mr. U. WILSON. Will the minister tell us what change he has made in the pay of the distributing agents? I think it has been greatly cut from what it used to be. The amount used to be $2 per head for every man, woman and child in a family that went on a farm.

Mr. OLIVER. We pay now $2 for the farm labourer himself, but not for any member of his family unless it should be that his wife was going to domestic service, in which case the agent would get a commission on her employment also.

Mr. NESBITT. I would like to suggest to the minister that in place of the distributing agents in the various towns writing to the booking agents in the old country, they should write to the head of the Immigration Department here. I believe that a great many of these agents throughout the country do not write as well as they should to the booking agents. I think it would be better for them to write to the head of the Immigration Department and let the head of the Immigration Department distribute the immigrants according to his judgment.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to ask the minister how far the territory of the agent extends east, west or north from Toronto?

Mr. OLIVER. He has no specific territory. His office is in Toronto. His business is to give information to the immigrants who are passing through as to their trains and destinations. His business also is to answer any inquiries that may come to him with regard to labourers. Any inquiry that comes to him from any part of the province it is his business to attend to as best he can. Wherever the farmer may come from, whether it is five, ten or a hundred miles away, it makes no difference; if Mr. Stewart is able to find a suitable person for him, of course, that man gets the benefit of it, and if he is not, there is no help for the situation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then the farmer in Markham would have to come to Toronto?

Mr. OLIVER. He could either come or write. Mr. Stewart said to me: The man who comes in here naturally gets the preference. When the man is here and is able to see the man he wishes to engage, and when the man who wants the engagement is able to see the farmer, it is very much more satisfactory than communicating by letter. The man who comes to Toronto gets the advantage over the man who writes, but the man who writes gets the information as well as it can be given to him.

Mr. RUSSELL. That goes to prove that there is need for some accommodation in Toronto for these immigrants. The farmer who leaves his work and comes in gets the best man, and there is no doubt that the best time to select a man is when you can see him. It would be unsatisfactory to undertake to select a man who was away across the ocean with no means of knowing what kind of a man would be sent out. Farmers generally do not realize that they want a man until the very day they need him, and then they run to town and try to find a man. I think that the minister should give consideration to the question of providing better accommodation for immigrants in Toronto. Some years ago the number of immigrants coming to this country was a great deal less than it is now. Everything has gone ahead so rapidly with the immigration business that it is getting almost beyond control. I think it would be wise to have something set aside to provide for accommodation for these people in Toronto.

Mr. OLIVER. In the light of experience it was our judgment that it was better not to provide accommodation in Toronto by the Dominion government. It is not for any lack of attention to the matter, or any lack of willingness to do it. But judging from our experience in 1906-7 when there was such a congestion of immigration in Toronto, we did not think it was desirable by offering accommodation there to favour that congestion. As I told the representatives of the Ontario government when they spoke to us about taking over the office in Toronto, I said our business will be to keep the immigrants away from Toronto, not to bring them there, or entertain them there.

Mr. SPROULE. It is desirable that there should be some central place where people can go and get a man. Sometimes it is impossible for weeks or months to get such a man as you want. It frequently happens that a man is sent who turns out to be absolutely no good. For instance, a man was sent to me who couldn't even drive a horse. I set him digging post holes, and he spent the whole afternoon at one post hole. What is needed is some central place where the farmers can go and select such a man as will suit his purpose.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend asked me in regard to a matter that occurred in Winnipeg, and which was mentioned in the papers. I inquired from the commissioner in Winnipeg, and he replied as follows:

> Man named Rogers, presumably local president English Welcome League, refused admission to immigration hall here late Monday night by night watchman acting upon my general instructions. Have hitherto refused to permit unknown and unauthorized young men access to the immigration halls under any pretext after 10 o'clock at night as in this particular case. If Rogers admission was desired or desirable it would doubtless have been arranged by the simple expedient of applying to the proper authority.

Mr. THOBURN. I would like to know from the minister on what class of immigrants the government pay bonuses. If it is domestic immigrants, where are they sent to? Are they sent to the cities? Because in the towns of the province of Ontario there is a dearth of domestic servants, we have never had one sent to our town. I venture to say that in the town I live in we could place 75 to 100 domestic servants. It is only fair, if the government pay bonuses on domestic servants, that the towns should get their proportion.

Mr. OLIVER. The question of domestic servants is a very serious and important one, and I may add a very difficult one. We have taken some means of dealing with the question of farm labour, but we have not taken the same measures in regard to domestic servants. There are difficulties in the way of handling the domestic servant question which lead me to hesitate at taking up a matter as a government responsibility. The domestic servants who are brought out as such come under the auspicies of certain societies, or of certain ladies who make a business of selecting servants in the old country, of fetching them out here, and of placing them after they get here. They are entitled to a bonus upon those servants after they have been placed in positions. But we do not assume any responsibility or control of the movements of those servants, except that the person who claims a bonus upon them does not get the bonus unless the servant has been placed in domestic service. We do not undertake to say where the servants shall go. But as I say, there are difficulties in the way of handling domestic servants, and we have not undertaken to do more than offer these inducements, and to give as close supervision as we can to see that the work is not wrongly conducted.

To pay the balance due on rent of house leased for W. T. R. Preston while engaged as commissioner of immigration in London, Eng., $801.71.

Mr. U. WILSON. Do you continue to pay rent for the successor of Mr. Preston?

Mr. OLIVER. I have an explanation which I might as well read:

This sum is to cover the amount due for the rent of a house leased for Mr. W. T. R. Preston while engaged as commissioner of immigration in London, England, for a period of fifteen months from the 25th September, 1906, to 25th December, 1907. On the 25th December, 1902, a lease was entered into with Mr. Henry Lovatt for certain premises known as No. 7 Fitz-James Avenue, Fulham, London, England. This lease was made for a period of seven years at the rate of £130 0s. 0d. per annum, with the privilege of terminating the same at the expiration of five years, that is, on the 25th December, 1907. Mr. Preston paid the rent for a period of one year, when, as the result of an understanding between himself and the department, the latter undertook to pay the rent and continued to do so until the 25th September, 1906, when Mr. Preston was assigned to do other duties. The lease was terminated after a period of five years on the 25th December, 1907, and the owner is claiming payment for £164 15s. 0d. as follows:—one year and three months' rent at £130 per annum, £162 10s. 0d. and £2 5s. 0d. for depreciation during vacancy.

The arrangement was that Mr. Preston was to receive a certain salary and a certain allowance for rent. He rented this building for the period mentioned, but did not continue his tenantcy for the whole of that period. When he left the service of the department, the department did not hold itself responsible for this lease; but in the discussion that has gone on since it would appear that legally and properly the department is responsible for the balance of rent for the term, and we ask the House to vote the money.

THE LOBSTER FISHERIES.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, I desire now to ask the House to dispose of the report of the committee on Marine and Fisheries dealing with the lobster industry, which I discussed shortly yesterday. I will not make any apology for taking up a short time this morning in giving the House the reasons why the committee arrived at their conclusions. My only apology is the importance of the question. I think I can say that it is of much greater importance than very many of the questions that have engaged the attention of this House during the present session. The committee have made some recommendations in the direction of changing the present law in regard to the lobster industry, and it is absolutely necessary that the government and the House should be put in possession of the reasons that led the committee to arrive at these conclusions. The most important of the changes recommended is in regard to the size limit of lobsters to be taken along the coast. The coast of Canada is divided under the present regulations into nine divisions extending from Gaspé to the international boundary line on the coast of New Brunswick. The reason for this division is largely climatic. The ice disappears from the coast in certain parts of eastern Canada much earlier than in other parts, so that the fishing can be carried on in those parts at earlier dates. It is absolutely necessary, in order to give the fishermen the opportunity of prosecuting their business, that this fact be taken note of in dividing the country into districts. I pointed out yesterday that the committee had found it necessary to ask that exact information be obtained as to the size of the lobsters that were being caught along the coast, as a great deal of difference of opinion on that point existed. The committee asked the department to instruct their officers in every division during the past fishing season to have a large number of the lobsters measured, to find out what size were being caught. It was impossible of course to measure all the lobsters arriving at the different points; but the instructions were to select a boat coming in with fish that was a good sample of all the others, and to measure every lobster in that boat down to a fraction of an inch, and to record the measurements and return them to the department. Those instructions were carried out, I am informed, in every county along the coast of the four provinces, where lobster canning is carried on. There are a few counties in the Bay of Fundy district where no canning is carried on, and where measurements were not made, but in all the other counties along the coast it was done. It appears that 600,000 lobsters were measured, and the results tabulated, showing the numbers measured in each district and the percentage of those that were below the size limit. It turned out that in some of the districts more than one-half the lobsters taken were under the legal size, and in one district about two-thirds. This proved two things: in the first place, that the violation of the present law is general all over the coast; and, in the second place, that it is practically impossible to enforce the present size limit, because the result would be to close up every lobster canning factory on the coast of Canada. The regulations relating to the size limit have been in force about 36 years, and the evidence appears to be that they have never been respected at any period in their history, that at no time did the packers refuse to accept what are called illegal or short lobsters, that at no time did the fishermen on any part of the coast throw such lobsters back into the water, that the universal practice has been to boil everything that was caught.

Now there are great difficulties, as any person will see who is acquainted with the business, in the way of enforcing the size limit. This fishing is carried on over 5,000 miles of coast by about 3,000 boats, the packing is done in about 700 canneries, many of those canneries are situated at isolated points on the coast and are difficult to reach, and a small force of officers would be utterly helpless in enforcing a regulation of that kind. It is so easy to conceal, and so easy to violate it. I do not say it is impossible, I think it is possible, but it would occasion vast expense and if it could be done, I say it would not be wise to do it, because it would be equivalent to the destruction of the industry so far as the packing is concerned. Some fishermen would object to that. There are fishermen in some districts who sell their lobsters alive, who are favourably situated with regard to the Boston market, and who are able to sell them at large prices at points on the coast of the United States. This, however, is not possible on the greater part of the coast of Canada. Most of the fishermen are still dependent on the packing industry. If you will look at the figures, you will find that the packing is a very large business. The total output of lobsters each year is valued at about $4,200,000. Less than one million of that value pertains to the live lobster industry. Three times as much has to be credited to the packing industry, so that the packing or canning industry is by far the largest industry of the two, and it could not be turned down without very grave consideration. This question of the size limit appears to have been a sort of stumbling block to the officers of the department for many years, and as far as I can find, the official opinion has been that it was very difficult to enforce. As far back as 21 years ago, Lieut. A. R. Gordon, R.N., who was the chief fishery officer at that date in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, made a report to the department in which he says :

The present regulations in regard to size limit and the destruction of females carrying exuded ova are intended as protective measures and are without doubt protective enactments; but the question arises how far the enforcement of the enactments is possible with the existing means at the command of the department and the still wider question as to whether the enforcement of the regulations is compatible with the existence of the industry. I consider the fact undeniable that taking the Gulf of St. Lawrence district if the above quoted regulations were strictly enforced not one single packing factory could run for one single day, and if the packers, whose interest and desire it undoubtedly is to maintain this fishery, were to attempt to enforce the law, the fishermen would directly reply that they could not make a living at fishing with adherence to those regulations, and therefore could not fish for the packers. The rigid enforcement of the existing regulations is therefore tantamount to the closure of the factories.

That was the opinion of Lieut. Gordon 21 years ago, and he was the officer at that time in charge of the protection of fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Now, coming down to the present day, I may give the opinion of Mr. Venning, who is the present commissioner of fisheries. Mr. Venning did not make up his mind without a good deal of consideration. He is a very able officer as we all know, and has given great attention to this branch of the department. Mr. Venning visited the coast of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and I think of all the maritime provinces two years ago, in order to investigate this matter. He called every fishery overseer, every fishery official, or at all events, every fishery inspector in charge of the enforcement of the law and consulted them in regard to the enforcement of the law relating to the size limit, and after these consultations which were very carefully gone into, this is what Mr. Venning says in his report to the department:

The preponderance of opinion developed at the inquiry was to the effect that in many cases a strict enforcement of the existing size limits would, if not entirely close up the canneries, so cripple them as to make it unprofitable to continue operations.

The view held by the canners to-day seems to be that if they are obliged to render a strict observance of the size limit they cannot proceed with the prosecution of the industry.

Now, I will also call another witness, Mr. M. H. Nickerson, member for the county of Shelburne, in the local parliament of Nova Scotia. Mr. Nickerson is a man well acquainted with the fishing industry. He was so prominent in that line that he was selected in 1898 as a member of the Royal Commission that investigated this important question. Both Mr. Nickerson and Mr. W. Whitman, M.P.P. for Guysborough, were on that commission, and they both gave the commission the benefit of their evidence. I will read what Mr. Nickerson says on that point:

Q. Is not the great danger to the lobster industry the taking of small lobsters?—A. Yes, I have admitted that is so.

Q. The first object would be to protect the industry, and is there not a danger of the fishery being destroyed because of small lobsters being taken?—A. The law gives that nominal protection already; what we want is that the small lobster shall be protected in practice as well as in law.

Q. The law that is not enforced is no good. Whose fault is it that it is not enforced?—A. I am obliged to say that it seems to be tacitly agreed by all parties concerned that the law with regard to size should go by default. It is a very unsatisfactory state of affairs.

Q. That is what is destroying the whole industry, the law is not enforced?—A. I have nothing to say in opposition to that.

Then I want to give the opinion of Mr. H. E. Baker, of Cape Breton. Mr. Baker has been all his lifetime engaged in the lobster industry, and there is no man in the maritime provinces who is better acquainted with that industry. The question asked of Mr. Baker was:

Q. If you reduce the size to 7 inches would you not be encouraging the destruction of the female lobster before it reaches the age where it is easily distinguishable as a berried lobster?—A. They are destroyed now almost about that size, some about 4 inches in size I understand in some places.

Q. Well, what do you say about that, do you think it is a good thing?—A. No, it is not a good thing if one can prevent it. The size limit has been universally disregarded not only in this country but even in the United States where they have been trying to maintain a 10½-inch limit, particularly in Maine. The fishermen find a way of getting a market for their short lobsters.

Then I take the opinion of Capt, Chas. Lonnes, of Canso, Nova Scotia.

Q. There is no use having a regulation that is not enforced?—A. I think there is not a packer who would not stand up and tell you himself that there is not a factory in Canada that does observe the law, if it did it might as well go out of business. Now what is the good of a law that is just discredited to that extent that the man himself will tell you so? There is no good having that law on the statute book.

Michael Leehan, of Mount Stewart, Prince Edward Island, was asked:

Q. Do you think it would be possible to enforce the regulation?—A. If you did enforce it, it would put us out of the business and the fishermen could not fish.

Q. Supposing we tried to enforce it?—A. We would only last about a week and there would be nobody in the business.

Q. It would drive everybody out of the business?—A. Yes, drive everybody out.

I want also to give you the opinion of a prominent man in the fishermens' union, Mr. D. Scott, of Main-a-Dieu, in the island of Cape Breton. Mr. Scott says he has had large experience in this industry, that he worked in a factory for 18 years, that he has the experience of four years' lobster fishing. And he is now the secretary of one of the most active fishermens' unions on the coast. This is an abstract from the evidence of Mr. Scott:

There is one thing I have to say, and that is that the law in reference to the protection of the spawn or berried lobster, and the small lobster, that is the lobster under the size limit, has never been adhered to or observed by the fishermen or the packers in this locality during my 18 years' experience

I might say that away back in 1893, there was an effort made to enforce the size limit here in this locality, we had the late inspector coming in to harass us, at all hours, even at night, he was coming morning, noon and every other time of day.

Q. That was in 1893?—A. In 1893. It was necessary then in order that we might protect ourselves, I was working then in the factory, to take all precautions. They kept such a close watch on us, and were so hard on us, that the men who were receiving the lobsters on the wharf had to cull all the undersized and all the spawn lobsters as quickly as they could and put them in a separate part of the dock, hiding them to-day in one place and to-morrow in another, in order that we might save the factory or the proprietor from being fined. This was done so successfully, that I think from 1902 to 1906 the factory paid three fines.

I could go on and multiply these opinions of men who are prominent in the business and know what they are talking about, all going to show that this regulation in regard to the size limit has not been observed and that it is not practicable to observe it. The question was asked a number of times what they would think of the proposal to reduce the size limit from eight inches to seven inches. Very little encouragement was given to the committee to report in favour of that proposition. In the first place, it would seem to be too low a size to produce seed lobsters. The lobster, we were informed, does not reproduce itself until it is about eight inches in size. So if we legalized the killing of them down to seven inches, we should not arrive at the object we seek. And besides, we should have the same difficulty in regard to enforcement—the enforcement of the seven inch regulation would not be any easier than the enforcement of the eight-inch regulation. It would appear that, unless the department is willing to put a large force of men on the coast, and, for that purpose, to spend a great many thousands of dollars, it would be impossible to enforce a regulation of that kind. The committee, therefore, sought to learn whether there was not some other plan that could be adopted that would conserve the industry better than this size limit. Of course, I need to say, we were all impressed with the great importance of preserving the lobster industry. It is the greatest fishing industry we have at present on our coast, and next to the salmon industry in British Columbia, it is the greatest fishing industry of Canada. When we know that it is the last remaining great lobster industry in the world, we realize how important it is. I am informed that lobsters are not found in the Pacific ocean, nor in the Indian ocean; they are not found far north nor far south. They are found only in the North Atlantic. They are now, I believe, quite scarce on the coast of Europe, and there are not many on the coast of the United States, with the exception of Maine. So we have in the maritime provinces the last great lobster fishery of the world, and it is of the greatest importance that we should preserve it. The members of the committee were all impressed with the idea that, as it had proved that the present regulation is not working well and is not resulting in the preservation of the lobsters, and that it is not possible to enforce it without stopping the industry altogether, it was necessary to arrive at some other method by which the smallest of the lobsters could be protected. And the proposal submitted is that a regulation trap be prescribed with the slats so far apart that the small lobsters will have a chance to escape. In this way the lobster can look after himself without the fishery overseer chasing around to look after him. We think this method would work out to the preservation, to some extent at all events, of the industry.

There is some but not much difference of opinion in regard to the question as to whether the trap will work out in practice or not. A great many witnesses—men who had large experience in these matters—were asked their opinion and frankly expressed an opinion and it was always present to the committee in looking over the evidence that, of late years, as the lobsters began to get smaller in size, the slats of the traps began to come closer together. It was obvious that the fishermen were doing this for the purpose of keeping in the small lobsters, and it was thought that, if we could arrive at a regulation trap with slats far enough apart to let the small lobsters out, we should be making a long step toward preserving the industry. Having settled in our own mind that the old regulation had proved useless altogether, it was felt that a regulation of the kind proposed, if established and carried out, might be of great advantage in preserving the industry. Regarding the recommendations made by Commander Wakeham, we could not make up our minds to agree with altogether, some of them were very good, but others seemed not entirely advisable. For example, he recommended that, west of Halifax, the size limit should be 10½ inches. When we looked over the measurements made in that district we found that only about 15 per cent of the lobsters caught in that district came up to the limit he recommended. We felt that to adopt the regulation he proposed would be equivalent to stopping the lobster industry altogether in the district west of Halifax. We found that measurements made were as follows :

County.	No. of Lobsters.
Lunenburg	4,060
Queens	19,513
Shelburne	20,730
Yarmouth	3,924
Digby	12,094
Total	60,321

It was found that 55·9 per cent of these lobsters were under the legal size—that is, under nine inches—and only 15 per cent were over 10 inches. To adopt a limit of 10½ inches, as any hon. member can see, would be equivalent to stopping the whole lobster industry in that territory. There were 53 canneries operating in that territory in 1909, and they produced a total pack of 1,451,720 1-lb. cans valued at $362,930. The regulation, in that case, of course, would protect the lobsters. But, in my opinion, it would kill the fishermen. We do not think the lobster industry in such a bad position that it is necessary to do that.

But instead of this, we are making the recommendation, of which I have already spoken, prescribing a certain kind of trap to be used. You will see, sir, how easy it is for the inspector to inspect the traps. He can take a trip along the coast in the spring of the year before the fishing begins and have a look at them. He can easily tell whether the traps are or are not made according to the rule requiring that the slats be not less than 1¾ inches apart.

While it would be impossible for him to watch 10,000 or 12,000 fishermen and 700 factories, it is quite possible for the inspectors along the coast to have an eye on the traps and to see that they are not used unless they are made according to the regulations. This question was put to a large number of witnesses, and if the House will bear with me I would like to put these witnesses on record. I know that there will be a great deal of criticism of what the committee have done. I know there are many theorists along the coast who will say we have taken a step backward, and that the step we have taken is likely to result in the destruction of the lobster industry; and, for that reason, I would like to show to the House and the country that in this investigation held by Commander Wakeham along the coast a large number of men have undertaken on oath to give their opinion in regard to this proposal, and also in regard to the right kind of trap or engine to be used so as to protect the fish. I shall read a number of these opinions. The following is the opinion of Mr. Wm. O. Porter, who describes himself as a fisherman:

Q. What is your opinion about the matter of the trap, do you think that the taking of small lobsters could be regulated by insisting on a certain legal trap with a fixed space between the slats?—A. I do not think there is any doubt but what you could build traps so that all of them below the proper size would find their way out, because they are very active in hunting their way out of the trap. I have found them nearly out when hauling the trap.

Q. Some fishermen hold that once the trap is disturbed the lobster will not try to get out?—A. I suppose that is a matter of opinion. I know that if I put a trap in the water with the laths wide apart I do not get as many small lobsters, it is a question whether they get in or not.

Q. Is there a tendency in recent years to narrow the slats?—A. There has been with me I know.

I wish to give the evidence of Augustus Harris, a member of the executive of the Fishermen's Union of Long Beach, N.S.:

Q. Is there any difference in the trap you now fish with compared with that in use when you began years ago?—A. Yes, I doubt if the space between the laths will now average three-quarters of an inch, and it used to be one and three-quarters.

Q. That reduction must have been made for the purpose of holding the small lobster. was it not?—A. Certainly, that is the only reason.

Q. Do you think we could protect the general run of small lobsters by insisting on a standard trap with a certain space between the laths, say one and a half inch?—A. Yes, I have always been of that opinion.

Q. You think that would govern it largely? —A. Yes, I could give you the figures of lobsters that I counted myself and the number of traps; one man fished 38 traps and he had 381 lobsters, 152 from 9 to 10½, and he had only 12 tinkers; another man had 96 traps closely lathed, and he got 36 large lobsters, 156 from 9 to 10½ and over 400 tinkers.

Charles Lonnes, of Canso, says:

Q. We were looking at some traps on the wharf and they run about one inch here?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think that has anything to do with the capture of small lobsters? Do you think that the capture of these small lobsters can be controlled to any extent by regulating the width between the slats?—A. To a very great extent. If you put the slats close enough together you are bound to capture the greater amount of small lobsters that go in, whereas if the slats were far enough apart so that they could go out any way you would get very few of them.

Take the opinion of Mr. John W. Sproull, a fish dealer and packer of Canso, N.S., who has a large experience in this business and whose opinion is worth as much as that of any man on the coast of Nova Scotia on such a question:

Q. Other propositions have been made, some have said, 'give us a 7 inch limit instead of an 8-inch limit and we will observe the law.' You know that we began with a 9-inch limit which was not enforced and then an 8-inch limit was given because they said they would observe that, and now they want a 7-inch limit.—A. I would not propose anything of that kind. If you were going to propose anything along this line I would propose that the trap should have a certain space between the slats.

Q. What would you put that at here?—A. The fishermen around here use the head of the hammer as a gauge, and that is about an inch. There are a few undersized lobsters caught in those traps, but I should say that if the space were made 1 and ⅛ inch it would be all right.

Take the opinion of a man in the Magdalen Islands, Mr. W. C. Leslie, a lobster packer of the Magdalen Islands, who says:

The ordinary traps here have laths an inch apart and they very seldom take lobsters under 7 inches.

Mr. Robert Bell, of Alberton, P.E.I., gave the following testimony:

Q. Do you think the regulations have ever been enforced in your recollection?—A. Not strictly.

Q. Were they ever, at any time, more strictly enforced than they are now?—A. Scme 15 years ago there was a law passed that the first two laths of the trap had to be an inch and a quarter apart. That was strictly enforced. At that time also there was a limit regulation and that was very strictly enforced. I know that because I was fined once.

Q. Have you ever heard of anybody being fined recently?—A. Not very recently.

Q. Was that when Sir Hibbert Tupper was minister?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you think yourself of that regulation limiting the space between the slats? —A. I think it had a great tendency to protect the small lobster and the really small lobsters are of no value to the packer. It is a great injury to the industry to destroy them.

Here is a man who had had experience, and who used the trap made according to that regulation 15 years ago, and he gives his experience that it did operate to protect the small lobster.

Take the opinion of Peter McIsaac, of Bay Shore, P.E.I.:

Q. What would you fix the limit of space at, say in the three lower slats?—A. I would say not less than an inch anyway. I put mine at about an inch or slightly over that. That is from my own experience, I find it better.

Q. Do you not think by having a space of at least an inch and a quarter a larger proportion of the undersized lobsters would escape?—A. Well, yes.

Q. It must be wrong, must it not, to kill off the small lobsters?—A. It is, but the trap at the end, as a general thing, has heads that are knit with quite a large mesh and a large number of the small lobsters work through anyway.

I want also to give the opinion of Mr. T. C. Gallant, a canner and fisherman of Summerside, P.E.I.:

If the fishermen build their traps with only half an inch space between the slats they will catch all the small fish, but if the slats are an inch apart those lobsters have got a chance to work their way out. I believe in hatcheries all right but not in spending money on them and then allowing the fishermen to take lobsters that are only four inches in size.

W. A. Macdonald of Grand Tracadie Harbour, P.E.I., said:

Q. What distance apart are the slats in your traps?—A. I don't think they would be more than three-quarters of an inch at the outside.

Q. Do you think it is desirable to have the slats as narrow as that; do you not think it would be wiser to keep them a little farther apart and in that way allow the small lobsters a chance to get out?—A. If you lost the small lobsters on the north side you would lose them all, and you might as well shut down.

Q. What lobsters do you throw out?—A. We dont throw out any.

Then take the evidence of Mr. J. A. Ellis, a canner at Cape St. Mary, N.S.:

Q. Do you think by establishing a standard space between the slats it would be possible to allow the escape of the small lobsters?—A. Yes, I think it is. Of course the narrower you have the space between the slats the smaller lobsters you will hold; you will let out the very small lobsters if you have a little more space between the slats.

Wm. McLeod, of Alberton, P.E.I., gave the following evidence:

Q. Now, with a view to protecting the fishery, are there any changes you would suggest in the regulations?—A. I would suggest to put the laths in the trap far enough apart to let a 7-inch lobster go. It would be a little hard for a few years but it would bring the fishery up again to its former state.

Q. What would you say to a regulation which would do away with the size limit, control the distance between the slats, and close the fishery on the 1st July, always protecting the berried lobster as thoroughly as possible?—A. I think that would be a good thing.

Q. Do you think if that were done and carried out strictly it would have the effect of preserving the industry?—A. It would have that effect.

Mr. SINCLAIR.

Q. And in a few years the fishermen would reap the benefit by an increased catch?—A. Yes.

I also wish to give you the opinion of James McMillan, canner, of Georgetown, P.E.I.:

Q. What is the width at present between your slats?—A. They are pretty close down now but the sill is about three quarters of an inch. If the lath is put down on the sill I think it would be all right. If that were done and the lath nailed across it would not catch the lobsters too small but they could get away. A small lobster can get out through a pretty small space if it has the opportunity.

Q. What size lobster would get out through an inch opening?—A. Well a 7-inch lobster could get out through that.

Q. Do you think the lobsters make any effort to scramble clear of the trap when it is coming up, or are they more likely to grab on to something until they get to the surface?—A. I think they do get out very often, some of the fishermen say they do anyway.

Then John P. Sutherland of St. Peter's Bay, P.E.I. :

Q. Do you not think it must exhaust the fishery very rapidly to destroy the young and immature lobsters?—A. Well, I would think so.

Q. Do you think we could stop the destruction of them by insisting upon a fair space between the slats of the trap?—A. I would think so.

Q. What would you put the space at?—A. I would put it at an inch.

Q. That you think would allow these very small lobsters to escape?—A. Yes, they would escape at an inch.

Norman McPhee, fisherman, of Clear Spring, P.E.I. :

Q. Do you not think that the modern trap with a very narrow opening is unnecessarily destructive, that it is destroying too many of the young fish?—A. Oh, certainly it gets too many young fish.

Q. How would remedy that?—A. By opening the trap.

Q. What width would you suggest?—A. I would think that about seven-eights of an inch would allow those small lobsters to pass out.

Q. Would you have that width all over the trap or only in the bottom laths?—A. In the bottom is sufficient. That is the way they naturally go out.

I wish also to give you the opinion of M. Nickerson, canner, of Clarke's Harbour, N.S. :

Q. What do you think about this matter of the traps? Do you think that it would be wise to establish a regulation—it has been suggested that the taking of the small lobsters should be regulated by having a trap so constructed that while retaining the large lobsters it would permit the small ones to escape, and the question is what kind of trap is best adapted for that purpose—providing that there should be a certain opening between the slats in the trap?—A. Well, that would let a lot of them go out, there is no doubt about that, if the opening were large enough.

W. H. Giffin, of Goldboro, N.S. :

Q. Do you think such a regulation would be of service?—A. It would be one of the best things in the world.

Q. Would the small lobster go out?—A. If you were acquainted with the lobster as well as I am you would think he would go out.

Q. As long as there is bait in the trap will he go out?—A. I have seen them all going out as fast as they could when you are hauling.

There are a large number of other opinions that I could give you but it would be too tiresome to the House. I will therefore refer you to the evidence which is comprised in two large volumes, which was taken by Commander Wakeham, and which is available to any person who wishes to study it. I think I have shown that there seems to be a general opinion among the fishermen and packers that were examined in regard to this matter, that the widening of the slats of the trap would have the effect of saving the small lobsters. It is quite clear to me that at present we do not save them, that the present regulation is an utter failure in that respect; and it is important, if we can get a better regulation that will save the small lobsters, that the government should adopt it.

One of the other questions that came before the committee and a question about which there has been a good deal of controversy is that of granting licenses. A few years ago I believe it was felt by the department that there were too many canneries, and that if it were possible to encourage the live lobster industry by restricting the number of canneries, we ought to do so. The way to do that of course was to refuse to grant any more licenses. Many of the licenses were in the hands of a few companies, and these companies acquired others, and it had the appearance in some parts of the coast as if a monopoly was growing up. After the department refused to grant new licenses, an agitation arose among the fishermen, and it was stated in some places that this was a reason why better prices were not paid for the raw materials to the fishermen. I have not found very much evidence of that fact. At the same time it was felt by the committee that there is no logical reason why the department should step in to protect lobster canners, and why a lobster canner should not be in the same position as a grocer or merchant and fight his own way with other lobster canners for business. It is certain that on the greater part of the coast it would not very much increase fishing to give more licenses because nearly every fisherman who is equipped with a boat and able to catch fish at all, is fishing at present. So if you cut off the license you simply divide up the work of these fishermen among new canneries. There are points on the coast in the northern parts of Canada where the canner owns the equipment, and where he hires the men and pays them wages. Of course on those parts of the coast the multiplication of canneries would increase the catch to some extent. However, there did not seem to be any logical reason why the department should refuse licenses to the men who had the proper equipment. The opinion of the committee was that where a man could show to the officers of the department that he had a proper equipment he ought to be given a license to carry on the business.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel at all despondent about the future of the lobster industry. You will find it stated that the lobster industry is a failing industry, that it is not likely to last many years longer. I do not think that is a correct view. I am of the opinion that the lobster industry has shown a great deal of vitality. I have shown you that during the whole course of its history, this method that we did adopt many years ago for its protection has not been carried out, that the berried lobster has been destroyed on all sides, that the small lobster has also been destroyed, and that very little protection was afforded. You will find that it is almost impossible to preserve the fishing on the coast by adhering to these old regulations, because the honest fisherman who wants to do an honest business and who is anxious to preserve the berried lobster, which of course is the foundation of the industry, the man who is anxious to do his duty when he threatens his neighbour for violating the law by killing berried lobsters, the latter immediately retorts, 'You are breaking the law too.' As a matter of fact, all the lobster fishermen in that way become violators of the law. That is one of the reasons that influenced myself and that influenced other members of the committee in getting rid of these regulations that make every fisherman practically a law-breaker who is engaged in this business. Now I was saying that we have no reason to be despondent in regard to the lobster industry. There has been a decrease in the live lobster industry, a very decided decrease in the catch of live lobsters. I am not certain but that the reason may be that the large lobsters are becoming scarce on certain parts of the coast.

The live lobster industry only applies to parts of the coasts of Nova Scotia and to the southern coasts of New Brunswick. It does not apply to the north at all, nor practically to Cape Breton. The statistics that we have with regard to the canning industry are reliable. We know every case that is canned because there is government stamp placed on every case, and it very easy to get correct statistics; therefore, we know that the statistics in regard to the canning industry are correct. I find that in the year 1898 the number of one-lb. cans put up on the coast was 10,730,594. I find that ten years later, in the year 1908, which is the last year for which we have statistics, the number of one-pound cans put up was 10,911,498, showing an increase of about 200,000 cans during ten years. That does not look like a failing industry. It looks as if it were a growing business. It is quite true that when you come to deal with the live lobster industry there is a decrease in the catch. I am not able to explain it. There was an explanation given that we have not correct statistics about the live lobster industry, because live lobsters are often sold in the markets of the United States and no record is kept. I do not know whether that is correct. I am told that the department is adopting a method that will be used for the collection of reliable statistics with regard to the live lobster industry. But, it does look as if it were a failing industry. And yet I am inclined to think that with proper regulations, by adopting this suggestion as regards the trap so that the smaller lobsters will escape, by protecting the berried lobster thoroughly and by increasing the number of hatcheries and pounds along the coast, the industry may be made a permanent one. I am not alone in that opinion. I suppose that the man in the department who has given the most attention to this matter is Mr. Venning, the present commissioner of fisheries, whose opinion we all respect, and this is what Mr. Venning says:

I do not take the pessimistic view that a great many people are taking with regard to the lobster fishery. I do not consider that the lobster fishery is anything like destroyed and I do not think it is within reasonable reach of destruction. I do appreciate that probably the time has come when the most persistent effort should be made to continue the lobster industry; but that the fishery is a thing of the past and that we have now to take some very drastic measures to bring it back to life again does not seem to be at all a correct view, in my opinion.

That is the opinion of Mr. Venning, and I am very glad to be able to state to the House that the industry does look so hopeful. The recommendations made to the committee are before the House. They are as follows:

1. That the existing regulations relating to size limit be abolished.

2. That in lieu thereof regulations be adopted and enforced providing that all traps used for the taking of lobsters constructed after 1910 shall have the laths placed not less than 1¼ inches apart, and that the mesh, when netting is used, be not less than three inches extension measurement; and that commencing with the year 1911 all existing traps be remodelled by removing a sufficient number of laths nearest the bottom from each side and replacing the same so that the three lower spaces shall be each not less than 1¼ inches.

3. That any person or firm equipped to the satisfaction of the department, be entitled to a license to pack; that a standard of equipment be aimed at and that existing factories be brought within the regulations as to equipment, within two years from date of the adoption of the new regulations; and that no officer or other person in the employ of the department shall be directly or indirectly interested in any plant or factory operating under license from the government.

4. That the present regulation, imposing a fee on each case of lobsters packed be amended so that commencing in 1911 five dollars be charged on any number of cases up to one hundred, and two dollars for each additional hundred cases or fraction thereof.

5. That more rigid regulations be adopted and strictly enforced providing for the protection of the berried lobster.

6. That an educational campaign be inaugurated and carried on under the direction of the department, among fishermen and packers, with a view of creating a sentiment in favour of observing and enforcing the regulations.

7. That the counties of Charlotte and St. John in the province of New Brunswick be a separate coastal division with a size limit of 4¾ inches carapace measurement, and that the fishing season in such division be from January 6 to June 29.

8. That having regard to the great importance of the Canadian fisheries with vast interest allied but distinct from the marine, your committee would suggest that due consideration be given to the advisability of having a deputy minister whose duties would be confined to the Fisheries Branch, independent altogether of the Marine Branch.

9. That your committee are of opinion from the evidence produced that the propagation of lobsters by means of pounds and hatcheries, is of special importance to the lobster industry, and would recommend the extension, with as little delay as possible, of this branch of the service.

I may explain, with regard to the exception made in reference to the counties of Charlotte and St. John in the province of New Brunswick, that there is practically no packing carried on in those districts, and that consequently the industry is a live lobster industry. The market is chiefly in the United States. They are able, where there is no packing to deal with, to get the largest lobsters. You cannot sell a lobster on the Boston market unless it measures nine inches. We therefore thought it was advisable to give Charlotte and St. John a separate limit and to set them apart as a separate district. Objection was taken yesterday with regard to my motion. It was said that the motion involved an expenditure of money and that it was not properly before the House in the shape in which I had presented it. In looking into the matter I find that is true. I have therefore decided not to move for the adoption of the report as it would be irregular to do so, although I believe that the report is in a large degree acceptable to the department and that there is no reason excepting a technical one why the House should not adopt it. I have decided, in place of moving for its adoption, to move that the report be referred to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for consideration. I therefore make that motion.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). Before this matter is disposed of, I would like to know why, in the corridors upstairs, if so much interest is being taken in this lobster industry, you will find from five to six cords of blue-books on lobster fishing lying from year to year, because I believe that many of these books came over from last year, and I would ask why they are not sent out to the people to read. Has it been an oversight? Do the people down there not take sufficient interest in lobster fishing to make it desirable to send out these books after the country has been at the expense of printing them, for, as the hon. member suggests, possibly the members think they cannot read. I think they are intelligent enough to read and understand these reports, but it seems to me we are wasting a fearful lot of money on this lobster industry, and that the members from that part of the country are not taking the interest which they ought to in disseminating information with respect to lobster fishing. In the lobbies of this building you will find blue-books on the lobster industry piled up by the cord, five, six or seven cords.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The department asked for 5,000 copies and I think that many of the books referred to belong to the department. The members have used very many of them. I sent out 1,000 myself to my constituents and I know that other gentlemen have done the same thing so that many thousands have been sent out this winter. They are very valuable to the fishermen and packers along the coast. I can assure the hon. gentleman that they can read, he need not worry about that, they are very intelligent men indeed. It may be that some hon. gentlemen who asked to have the blue-books printed did not send them to their constituents. The members of the committee were asked to say how many they would require in order to send the publication out to their constituents, they sent in their requests and upon this the calculation of the number to be printed was made.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a new departure in dealing with such reports. In the order of references to the old standing committees they were directed to examine into the subject referred to them, to examine persons and send for papers, etc., and then report to the House their observations and recommendations. That was for the information of the House and that information was before the department interested through the minister. Such reports contain much information of value to a department. The proper motion for the hon. gentleman to make in order to discuss this report would be that the report be now taken into consideration. Usually these reports are made to the House and there is no motion for their adoption because such a report (as this one does) may call for the expenditure of money. Numbers four, five, six, eight and nine involve the expenditure of public money and therefore if this House adopted it, it would be an instruction to the government to carry it out and it is not the usual custom to provide for the expenditure of public money in that way. With regard to departmental regulations, one, two, three, five, six and seven are recommendations to the department which should be taken cognisance of by the department. Thus, although the hon. member's aim may be a good one, his procedure is a departure from the usual practice and may lead to other irregularities in the future that will be rather confusing than otherwise to the average member of the House.

Mr. U. WILSON. If these reports were all referred to the joint committee on printing it would lead to the saving of a great deal of unnecessary printing.

Mr. FIELDING. The object of the hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) I fancy was simply to make a motion which would permit him to present to the House a little more fully than in the report, the reasons which led the committee to come to their decision. As one who is very much interested in the subject I want to thank the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) and the other members of this committee for what I regard as the very valuable service they have rendered in the investigation of this subject. Of course a vast territory like Canada has many industries. Many hon. gentlemen here have little or no knowledge of this matter and possibly may hastily assume that the question is not of the utmost importance, but I can assure them, as the hon. member for Guysborough has said, that in a large part of the coast district of Canada this is a matter of great importance affecting the living, the habits, the comfort and the prosperity of a large number of people and therefore, although the session is far advanced, no harm will be done by devoting a few minutes to the discussion of this subject. I must say I regret the determination of the committee to recommend the abolition of the size limit, but I am impressed with the reasons that have been advanced in support of that view and I am not disposed to find fault. The difficulty in the past has been to enforce the regulations. Whenever we put on the statute-books laws and regulations running far in advance of public opinion we must expect that there will be difficulty and failure in their enforcement. Unfortunately that has been the case with the lobster regulations. You will meet many men, especially those with access to the American market, who can sell live lobsters at a profitable rate, who are indifferent to the canning industry, who will say that the size limit should be rigidly observed, but as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) it has been perfectly clear that the enforcement of the size limit, while it may serve the interests of the fishermen in some particular sections, would destroy the canning industry of the country. I regard the canning industry as one which must gradually be pushed back into the more distant portions of the Dominion. Those portions of our coast that are within easy reach of the American market, and that have convenient methods of transportation both to the American market and the consuming centres of Canada, will find the live lobster trade profitable, and with a constant demand for live lobsters in a district the canning industry must find itself in difficulty and must be pushed back to those sections of the lobster fishing districts where the facilities for transportation are not so good. For the moment the canning industry is preserved by the recommendations of this committee, but every one interested in the canning industry within districts having easy access to the market for live lobsters must look forward to the time when that business will be a dying one and perhaps become extinct. One of the most unpleasant features of the situation in the past has been the inequality of the enforcement of the law. One not very well informed may say that that is the fault of the officials—why should they not enforce the law? Sometimes we pass laws that cannot be enforced. Here and there a fishery officer taking a rigid view of his duties would attempt to enforce the regulations. I remember a case of a man interested in a friend who had committed a violation of the laws, who came to me complaining that he had a great grievance. He said his friend had been put in jail for violating the law, I said: was he guilty or innocent? Oh, well, he said, he violated the law, of course. I said: what are you complaining about? He said: I am complaining because there are hundreds of others all along this coast who are violating the law and nothing is done; I am grumbling because the law is rigidly enforced in this case and not in other cases.

In view of all these circumstances I have reluctantly come to the conclusion that the abolition of the size limit may as well be abolished as it cannot be enforced. There is a small district in New Brunswick, including the counties of Charlotte and St. John, where they are able to enforce not only a size limit, but a very large size limit. There they only take lobsters of very large size; it suits the condition of their market; and the committee have wisely agreed to maintain the regulations in that respect. The purpose of the committee is not to keep up the enforcement of the size limit in the other portions of Canada, which has been found impossible, but to direct the attention of the authorities to the preservation of lobsters in other ways, for instance, in regard to the space between the slats of the traps. I am hopeful that what my hon. friend from Guysborough and his excellent committee recommend will be helpful in that direction. Above all, there should be strict enforcement of the law in regard to taking seed lobsters. In that respect we should have, as the committee recommends, a campaign of education among the fishermen, with the view of getting them to appreciate the importance of the industry, not only to themselves, but to those who come after them; and I would not complain of any severity that might be shown towards a fisherman or a canner who would take what is called a berried lobster. If the law is enforced in that respect and an improvement is brought about in regard to the space between the slats of the traps, I am hopeful that much good may be done. I do not wish to detain the House further than to express my appreciation of the work done by the committee. I belive I was criticised some time ago for saying that I represented more lobsters than any other man in Canada. I will have to amend that and say I represent a constituency which produces more lobsters than any other constituency in Canada. It is very important industry to the people of that constituency. Without any disparagement of other classes of fishermen, I may say that by reason of the fact that that part of the country is close to the United States, and that they are able to use the American market, they have brought the lobster fishing industry to a more than ordinarily high position. The business is well done and the fishermen use the most modern improvements. In these as in other lines they are introducing gasoline boats. I know that there will be a wide difference of opinion among fishermen in regard to this report; but I hope that the department will be able to carry out the recommendation in regard to starting a campaign of education among the fishermen who will be able to help them to enforce the law. The fishermens' union which has already been referred to, has done good work in educating its members. Much has been done, and there is room for more to be done. The work of the committee, I am sure, will have a most excellent effect, and as one representing a community largely interested in the matter, I desire to thank the hon. member for Guysborough and the committee for the attention they have given to the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I entirely agree in the importance of this question to many parts of the maritime provinces. A great deal of time and attention has been given to the subject by the Committee on Fisheries, and I only trust that the action of the department, coupled with the report of that committee, may result in bringing about better conditions in the lobster fisheries than those which obtain at the present time. The subject is one of very great difficulty. I have not given to it the same amount of attention that has been bestowed upon it by my hon. friend from Guysborough and the hon. Minister of Finance, although I have given it a good deal of consideration in connection with my own constituency. As far as I understand the problem, it is this; how can you find a course of action which will preserve the lobster fisheries as a great industry, and at the same time do justice to the fishermen and to invested capital in every reasonable respect. I am not prepared to say at the moment how far the recommendations of the committee are likely to bring that about. That is a matter principally for the consideration of the department, which is entrusted with the responsibility of taking such action as is consistent with the two conditions to which I have just alluded; and when I use the term invested capital, I refer not only to the canners, but to the fishermen themselves, who have a very large proportion of their own capital invested in this great industry, and who are well worthy of every consideration at the hands of this government and this parliament. I would have been glad if my hon. friend from Guysborough, who has made a very illuminating speech, had been able to condense his remarks into a little smaller compass, as the matter must be eventually dealt with by the department, and be brought back to this House for further discussion. I am not aware of the course my hon. friend proposed to take, or I would have put myself in a position to discuss this question more intelligently. Let me say in that regard that it seems to me rather a curious practice for parliament to refer a report to a department. It would seem to me that a department of a government does not need any reference of such a report from this parliament. It is the duty of the department without any reference from parliament to take this report into consideration and to accept executive responsibility with regard to it. I have never heard before of a reference by parliament otherwise than to a committee of parliament. A reference by parliament to a department seems to be something of an innovation. However, if it is thought best by the government and the chairman of the committee that such a motion should pass, I shall not interpose any technical objection. But I do not think that the House should have some notice of motions of this character. I did not know before this morning that my hon. friend proposed to make a motion to refer this report to a department of the government, or I would have looked into the precedents a little. Yesterday my hon. friend proposed a motion for the adoption of the report. I do not know whether that was proper or not. It was held eventually that it would not be proper, for some reason indicated by the Prime Minister yesterday and by the hon. member for Guysborough to-day. I am not prepared to say that outside of that consideration it would have been a proper course to pursue in respect to a report of this kind.

Mr. FIELDING. It is merely equivalent to a motion that it lie on the table.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I suggest is that if there is to be any motion dealing with a report of this kind, the House should have some notice of what is intended. For example, the Minister of Finance may have known of the motion.

Mr. FIELDING. Not until a moment ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does not the Minister of Finance think that he and I and all the other members of this House should have some notice of what the intended motion is? I am not imputing any special blame to the hon. member for Guysborough. He has very properly brought forward a very important subject, and is entitled to credit for having bestowed a great deal of time and industry and attention upon it; but when it is coming up for consideration in this House, I think we should know in advance what is coming. I do not intend at the present moment to raise a question of order. I desire that this matter shall be forwarded in every possible way; but I invite your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the question in relation to the general business of the House, as to whether we should not in the future have some practice established by which we shall know what is coming in respect to reports of this kind.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think the hon. member for Guysborough proposed yesterday to move concurrence in the report.

Exception was taken to that procedure by officers of the House and by the department on the ground that if parliament committed itself to the report it would have to carry out the regulations. Now, the hon.

member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) changed his resolution to avoid that difficulty. I take it, it does not matter very much whether it is a motion to take into consideration the report or to refer it to the minister. My hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair), I suppose, desired to conclude his speech with a motion. Now, in respect to the report, it was laid on the table of the House on Monday, I think, and the departmental officers have had little time to consider it. I had a conversation this morning with the deputy minister, and I was advised that on the whole the report was favourably received by the officers of the department, and that they are prepared to put in force, at all events most of the recommendations. There are several with which they do not agree, but they agree with the most important one, the abolition of the size limit of the lobster. They approve also of the increase of the space between the slats although they would prefer to have the space a little larger. In one or two other respects they slightly disagree. However, that is a matter for consideration and adjustment later. I believe that the recommendations of the committee will be of valuable assistance to the officers of the department in framing regulations protecting the lobster industry during the current year, and in applying them next year, and I am instructed that most of these recommendations can be enforced with the approval of the department, probably all of them.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before the hon. minister leaves that question, I would like him to tell us if his department is not able to carry out these regulations without being goaded by parliament by a special vote.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department can frame regulations and carry them out but the department is very pleased indeed to have the recommendation of the committee. The committee have gone to a great deal of trouble. They have called a large number of witnesses, and elicited a great deal of information that will be of great assistance to the officers of the department in enforcing the regulations in future. I have no views to express myself on the regulations; I am not familiar enough with the subject. On the Pacific coast we are trying to plant lobsters, having imported some from the Atlantic coast, and probably in a few years we will have as valuable an industry there as on the Atlantic coast, and if we do get it, we will try to conserve it. I can only say on behalf of the department, that this matter will receive the very earliest and best consideration they can give to it, and in the main, I believe that the recommendations of the committee will be incorporated in the regulations to be enforced next year.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN.

Mr. CROSBY. I must say that as a member of that committee, I have been somewhat surprised at the stand taken by the chairman in bringing in this report here. We have heard from the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the department will take this matter into consideration. Now, the Department of Fisheries have had a law standing on the statute-book for years which they have not even attempted to carry out. This committee all last session, and has been sitting all this session, and now we have a report that is practically a report of the department, because we have had all the officers of the department available. We are told that the department must be consulted. The department is for the purpose of carrying out the orders of this parliament. What is a department for but for the purpose of carrying out the orders of this parliament? I am somewhat surprised, because we are going to be in the same position as we have been in for a number of years. We have had for years a lobster fishery law on the statute-book, to carry out which no attempt was made. The only thing that has been carried out has been a monopoly of canning licenses. We have a report by which we propose to do away with that monopoly, and I think it is important that it should be put into effect as soon as possible. I do not see why it should not be put into effect. We have had the officers of the department taking evidence in Ottawa. We sent an officer of the department to New Brunswick, Quebec, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia last year, and that officer has brought back evidence, and based upon that evidence a report. We have had men, high officials of the department, associated with the committee during the session, and these men know the report from the beginning to the end.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Would the hon. member suggest what disposal he would make of the report? It appeared yesterday that the report could not be adopted on technical grounds, not that there was any objection to it, but that it involved the expenditure of money and could not come before parliament in that way. I have asked that the report be disposed of by sending it to the proper authorities. I would like to know what the hon. gentleman would do.

Mr. CROSBY. I will answer the hon. gentleman's question, although I think there was no necessity for his making a speech. As soon as I am called upon to become Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which I hope will not be very long, I will then come down to this parliament and tell it what I suggest, and what I suggest will be carried out. That is the position I take. I think our chairman has given very faithful attention to this matter and worked very hard, but what is the good of all that work when he comes and tells this parliament that he wants it taken over by the department? It is playing with the subject to take it up year after year. Now, we are in no better position than when we started, and no doubt this will go on next year. It does not seem to me to be the way to expedite this business.

Mr. SPEAKER. On the point raised by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and the leader of the opposition, I have consulted Bourinot, and I would advise the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) to move that the eighth report of the Marine and Fisheries Committee be now considered, as its adoption by the House otherwise would be contrary to the procedure. I think this would cover it.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BONDS GUARANTEED.

Mr. G. TAYLOR:

What was the total amount of Grand Trunk Pacific bonds guaranteed up to March 31, 1910, and of them how many were issued at that date?

Mr. FIELDING. Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company's bonds guaranteed up to March 31, 1910:

(a) By Dominion of Canada, £5,200,000.

(b) By the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, series A, £2,100,000; series B, £1,354,000.

Lake Superior branch, £1,550,000.

Prairie section, Cap. 19, 1909, $10,000,000.

On March 31, 1910, all of the above guaranteed bonds had been issued.

TEMPORARY LOANS.

Mr. G. TAYLOR:

1. What temporary loans were outstanding on March 1, 1910?
2. From what institution were they obtained?
3. At what rate of interest?
4. For what period?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. £500,000 and £3,000,000, making a total of £3,500,000.
2. Bank of Montreal, London.
3. £500,000 at 2¾ per cent and ⅛ per cent for placing outside Bank of Montreal, London. £3,000,000 at 3½ per cent and ⅛ per cent on £2,775,000 placed outside Bank of Montreal, London.
4. £500,000 from 8th April, 1909 to 1st July, 1910, £3,000,000 from 1st January, 1910 to 1st July, 1910.

RED RIVER DREDGING.

Mr. BRADBURY:

How many yards of sand or earth were moved last season by the government dredges at the mouth of the Red river, and what was the cost per yard for such work?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY. There was no dredging done at the mouth of the Red river during the last season.

CLEAN DOMINION PAPER CURRENCY.

Mr. LEWIS:

1. What is the government doing to assist in getting clean money in circulation?
2. Is there any standard by which one and two dollar bills are said to be unfit for use?
3. Has the government enough clean bills on hand to recall the dirty money now in circulation?
4. How far does the government keep ahead of the demands of the banks for clean money?

Mr. FIELDING:

I think the condition of the paper currency issued by the Dominion government is very much better than one would suppose from the criticisms that are sometimes offered. No doubt there are exceptional cases in which the notes have been too long in service and should be sent in for redemption by the holders. But it is safe to say that on the whole the condition of the currency from a sanitary point of view has steadily improved. As a test, I recently caused application to be made in the ordinary way of business at all the banks in the city of Ottawa, and obtained from each a number of dollar notes. I find only a few of these that could be considered objectionable, and these should not have been paid over the counter by the banks. The great majority of them are quite fresh and clean, and with very few exceptions all are serviceable.

1. The government redeems all Dominion notes unfit for circulation presented to it. Redemption agencies are established, under the Dominion Notes Act, at Victoria, British Columbia; Winnipeg, Manitoba; Toronto, Ontario; Montreal, Quebec; St. John, New Brunswick; Halifax, Nova Scotia and Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. During the year 1909 Dominion notes unfit for circulation were redeemed as follows:

Ones, $7,765,721; Twos, $4,769,576. Or practically three-quarters of the total circulation of Ones and Twos.

2. No. But no Dominion note unfit for circulation is issued by the government.

3 and 4. The government keeps on hand a sufficient supply of new Dominion notes to meet all possible demand that may be made upon it.

STEAMSHIP 'PRINCESS.'

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. What is the name of the officer in charge of the steamship 'Princess,' employed in the fishery protection service?

2. What are the names of the other officers of the same steamer and the nature of their certificates?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN:

1. William Wakeham.
2. Jos. Chalifour, sailing master, master competency, sea-going.
Edward Miller, first officer, master competency, coasting.
L. Ouelet, chief officer, second-class, competency.
L. Lapointe, second engineer, third-class, competency.

ST. ANDREWS RAPIDS IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. G. TAYLOR:

1. What portion of the cost of the St. Andrews Rapids construction was rendered necessary in order to provide for bridge accommodation between the municipalities?
2. What is the estimate of the cost of the approaches thereto?
3. What will be the total cost of the whole structure when completed?
4. What will be the yearly cost of operation divided into salaries, power and maintenance?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. About $54,800 to build a roadway above the service bridge.
2. $63,000.
3. The total cost of the lock, dam and bridge, to date, is $1,380,096.09.
4. Salaries, $6,000; maintenance, about $5,000 a year; power, included in above.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. FIELDING. In the absence of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), I move that the House do on Friday next go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolutions:

45. For a line of railway from Montreal to a point on the National Transcontinental railway in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 48, not exceeding 200 miles.

46. To the Little Nation River Railway Company, for a line of railway from Papineauville on the Canadian Pacific railway towards Lake Nominingue, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 70, not exceeding 30 miles.

His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

WESTERN GRAIN TRADE—TERMINAL ELEVATOR COMPANY.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I desire to ask the attention of the government to a matter of great importance, which under the rules I cannot bring forward in any other way than this. I desire to have some papers brought down, but I am not allowed to move for them. But the need for them will be explained by the following telegram which I have just received from Winnipeg:

Winnipeg, April 27, 1910

Dr. Schaffner, House of Commons, Ottawa.
Re Terminal Elevator Co. fined here by Magistrate Daly. Have government bring down return showing Castle's report and all correspondence upon the matter. Very important.

R. McKENZIE,
Secy. Grain Growers Assn.

This relates to the Trade and Commerce Department. I should like very much to get this information, and the only way I have of asking for it is by bringing this telegram to the attention of the government and the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I will call the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the subject. I would not like to say more at present.

THE GREAT NORTHWESTERN TELEGRAPH COMPANY AND THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.

Mr. E. ROY. I wish to bring to the attention of the government a regulation which I find in circular (No. 109) giving the rates for messages transmitted by the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company of Canada. I understand that a decision has been taken after conference with the government——

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman wants to move a motion he cannot do it on the orders of the day. He had better wait for a motion to go into Supply. He can ask a question now.

Mr. E. ROY. That is what I wish to do. I desire to draw the attention of this House, and of the government to a decision that has been taken in regard to special rates on telegraphic messages. I find that the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company has issued a circular (No. 109) under date April 16, 1910, in which I find this provision:

The rates for night letters are the standard day rates for ten-word messages for the transmission of fifty words or less, plus one-fifth the initial charge for each additional ten words or less. To be entitled to this rate night letters must be written in plain English. Night letters written in any other language than English must not be accepted.

I wish to know from the government if this decision has been taken after conference with the government, because I have understood that some ministers had something to do with the decision that was arrived at. I want to say that this clause of the telegraph company will prevent over two million people of Canada from taking advantage of these night rates, in fact the whole province of Quebec where the French language is spoken. We have in that province some very large newspapers, like 'La Presse,' 'La Patrie,' 'l'Action Sociale,' 'Le Devoir,' 'Le Soleil,' 'l'Evénement'—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot give a list of newspapers to the House at this stage. He must confine himself to the question.

Mr. E. ROY. The question I ask is this: has the government any information to give in reference to that matter, and can they say why French messages are not taken under this regulation at the same rates as English messages?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In answer to my hon. friend I may say that the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company has not consulted the government in the matter. But I may add for his information that all telegraph companies, as well as telephone and railway companies are now under the control and jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and that any complaint such as the one he has now made can be brought to their notice, and I am sure that the Board of Railway Commissioners will see that it is remedied.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

SUPPLY—NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the portion of the question this afternoon that I particularly wish to confine myself to, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is an evident possibility and perhaps a great probability that a large portion of the traffic of the Transcontinental railway may be diverted to a new American port. The discussions in the newspapers and the records that have come to light, have evidently come to the knowledge of the government, and I have embodied in the resolution which I propose to offer in amendment to the motion to go into Supply, a clause dealing with this phase of the question. But, inasmuch as there are other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who will follow me and who propose to deal with this question very fully, I shall not do more than merely allude to it in a very brief way. In the discussions in 1903 and 1904 a great deal of emphasis was laid upon the fact that we were, by reason of the arrangements that were then being made, securing to a Canadian line of railway the carriage of Canadian goods through Canadian territory and to Canadian ocean ports, and that we had entered into an agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific railway which would secure to Canada for all time to come, at all events, for all the time during which the Grand Trunk Pacific would be the lessee of the line, the certainty as the government supposed, of this desirable feature of the scheme being carried out. By clause 42 of the agreement which was entered into it is provided:

It is hereby declared and agreed between the parties to this agreement that the aid herein provided for is granted by the government of Canada for the express purpose of encouraging the development of Canadian trade and the transportation of goods through Canadian channels.

Section 43 provides:

The company further agrees that it shall not, in any matter within its power, directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of such freight by routes other than those above provided, but shall, in all respects, in good faith, use its utmost endeavours to fulfil the conditions upon which public aid is granted, namely, the development of trade through Canadian channels and Canadian ocean ports.

The government assured us when this scheme was being projected, that this would be effective, and that the ralway company would in good faith, to the utmost of its ability, endeavour to secure the carriage of Canadian goods through Canadian territory and to Canadian ocean ports, and that it would not directly or indirectly encourage the transportation of Canadian goods through foreign ports. Now, we are being informed that negotiations are being carried on, or have been consummated, by which the Grand Trunk Company propose to establish a large ocean port at Providence, Rhode Island, with the express expectation by the parties on both sides—the company and those with whom they are dealing—that it will have the effect of diverting a large amount of Canadian traffic to this newly established ocean port. Governor Pothier said in reference to it :

> It has been the dream of my life as a Rhode Islander to have Providence become the terminus of a great transcontinental railroad.
> I do not want to say what I think of the Grand Trunk railway's application for a charter, for I shall probably have to act upon that matter and I do not want to appear to prejudice the case.
> So far as a connection with a Canadian railway is concerned, I said recently, speaking in Boston:
> 'The export trade of the Dominion in years to come will open the eyes of the commercial world. The development of her wonderful natural resources, the stores of iron and coal, the fertile fields and virgin forests will result in an immense and increasing yield. The port that handles that trade on the Atlantic sea-board will assume a place of power and influence in the maritime circles of the world.'

The trade that is being spoken of there is probably a large proportion of the trade that will be carried over the transcontinental railway system which we have subsidized so very heavily and in which we are investing such a large amount. I merely refer to this, inasmuch as it is one of the important features of the motion with which I will conclude my speech, and I will leave it to others to develop this point. The matter is of the vastest importance, not only to all Canada, but it is especially important to the maritime provinces.

Now, I need not, I think, apologize for asking the attention of the House again this session to the question of the Transcontinental railway. It is a large proposition, it involves the expenditure of an enormous amount of money, it is of vital interest to the people of Canada, and the people are alive to the situation at the present time. An enormous amount of money, whether rightly or wrongly, and I do not propose particularly to discuss that phase of the proposition this afternoon, is being expended upon that undertaking. I have recently obtained from the government some information that has not hitherto been in the possession of the House, and I will be able to lay before the House, I think, a concise summary of the total amount which the railway is liable to cost the country; at least, I shall be able to submit to the House a statement founded upon actual figures, and to show that the railway will cost as much as I will indicate during the course of my remarks. Just as preliminary to going into more important matters, I will call attention to some items that are covered by this return. We are told that the amount paid by the government to the Grand Trunk Pacific for the surveys they made before the government took over the eastern division was $352,191.75, and that the amount which the surveys have cost which were executed under the authority of the government—the government surveys—is $3,381,072.41; a pretty round sum, Mr. Speaker, as you will notice. It is not out of place to add to it the $352,191.75 paid to the railway company, and to call attention to the fact that although we are paying for the surveys of this line, almost $4,000,000, the government newspapers and many of the supporters of the government are now taking the attitude that this survey was not expected to be in any sense conclusive, to be that it was merely a preliminary canter, and that the estimates founded on these surveys were not to be expected to be definite to any degree, were mere guess work, that the quantities of solid rock, loose rock and common excavation entering into the construction of the work were merely hazard and guess.

The total expenditure for supervising and overseeing the construction of the work, the staff of engineers placed in charge by the government amounts to $3,699,796.01.

The cost of the commissioners' office will be interesting to the House, and to the public. The singularly efficient way in which these gentlemen are discharging their duties in the public interest, the peculiar qualifications which they possess for that position, the special knowledge they have of railway building, render it interesting to know how much we pay for the carrying on of this office. We are told that we have paid, down to March 31, for the office of the commissioners, and their rentals, staffs, &c., $1,307,250. We are told that we are paying for our share of rentals at Winnipeg, $85,312.

Then as to the cost of the Quebec bridge which collapsed, I need not give the details which are well known. In round figures it is $7,000,000. The cost of investigating the collapse of the bridge was $31,765.44. The cost of plans and investigations preliminary to letting the new contract amounts to $149,087.75.

Coming to the position of the Transcontinental railway at present we are faced by the broad fact which must be admitted by every one on either side of the controversy that there has been an enormous and startling discrepancy between the estimated expenditure upon this road, and the alleged actual expenditure. The sums that are being allowed, and that are being paid out for the work from Moncton to Winnipeg may possibly be honest, and fair or they may not be, but the whole proposition is inevitably inconsistent with the belief that we had fair, honest, reliable information at the time that this scheme was launched, and again at the time the surveys were made, and that these returns are also correct and honest. If the information that we have obtained as to the facilities for railway construction was honestly announced by the government in 1903 and 1904, if the surveys and explorations which have cost this country about $4,000,000 were of any value at all, then there is cogent evidence that the amount that is being paid for this railway scheme is far too great. I propose to-day to call the attention of the House to the basis upon which the country was committed to this scheme, and to ask that an inquiry shall be made now into whether or not the large expenditure that is being made for the construction of this road is justifiable, and in the public interest. To do that I shall have to refer to statements that have been made by prominent members of the government. I wish to repeat a remark that brought forth cries of 'No, oh, oh,' on a recent occasion, that the government distinctly pledged the people that the total outlay of Canada, the total amount which Canada would be out of pocket, would not exceed $13,000,000. I am not going to confuse the issue between the cost of constructing the work, and the amount Canada was to pay, and be out of pocket, but I repeat what is constantly denied upon the public platform —and I propose to prove it—that the government clearly and distinctly pledged itself to the people that all the money that this scheme would cost Canada for the Transcontinental railway, from ocean to ocean, would be $13,000,000, and not one cent more.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. member is not serious when he says that.

Mr. LENNOX. I am as serious as my hon. friend, and I think I am a good deal more wise, because if the hon. gentleman will study this question instead of talking at random he must find that the evidence is so cogent and irresistible that he will have to admit it. However, let us go by the records. I desire also to call attention to the statements in reference to the character of the country through which the road will be built, and shall read from statements of only two or three of the ministers. The Prime Minister said :

In that consideration alone there would have been cause sufficient for us to go on with this work without any previous explorations, but I have to say this more, that we have a wealth of information on this subject. We have more information upon this scheme than ever was possessed by former governments when they decided the Intercolonial railway or the Canadian Pacific railway.

He goes on to point out that east of the Quebec boundary the land is well adapted for cultivation and farming and almost an unbroken stretch of good farming land. Then he deals with the land through which Mr. McArthur is building his 240 miles of railway and says:

The country east of Lake Abitibi has also been explored, and explored several times. . . . The Quebec government had it explored in the last few years by an engineer of eminence, Mr. O'Sullivan, and his opinion has been summarized by another engineer, Mr. Doucet, with the following language: 'From Roberval (which is a station on the Quebec and Lake St. John railway) to the western limit of the province of Quebec, a distance of some 375 miles, the line runs through a good farming country, the soil being chiefly clay.'

I need not continue the quotation, because what follows is simply an amplification of this sentence. He says:

This is a sample of the whole.

Then the right hon. gentleman quoting from Mr. Farrell:

It is established that the region between Winnipeg and Quebec is a fertile clay belt rich in good land, rich in timber, rich in powers, rich in all those resources which go to make a fine agricultural and industrial country. Such being the facts——

And it is very important to inquire if they are facts, because if they are facts they are utterly inconsistent with the proposition that we have practically 1,800 miles of solid rock road bed for the eastern division of the Transcontinental railway—

Such being the facts, what is the conclusion to be drawn from them? The conclusion seems to be obvious and imperative, that is, that we must at once provide for a railway to tap these rich and fertile territories.

Farther on, the Prime Minister deals with the question of cost, and I would like to challenge my hon. friend who interrupted me a moment ago to get up in the House and refute the statement that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance made it as clear and as emphatic as a proposition could possibly be made, that the total money cost to Canada would be between $12,000,000 and $13,000,000, and not a cent more. This is what the Prime Minister said:

Assuming the road across the mountains is 600 miles long, the cost of construction will be $18,000,000, and the total interest for three years will be $3,780,000. This is the whole of the liability which is incurred by the government for the construction of the railway from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean.

I understand that the right hon. gentleman meant independent of the guarantee on which he had stated that we would not ultimately lose one cent. Then, coming to the eastern division, he said:

The same abatement of rent is provided also as in the case of interest on the western section. During seven years the company will be exempt from the payment of rent, so that here again the whole of the liability which is incurred by the government for the building of that section from Moncton to Winnipeg is simply seven years' interest. The sum total of the money to be paid by the government for the construction of that line from Moncton to the Pacific ocean will be in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000, and not a cent more.

Is that reasonably definite for my hon. friend? He said further:

Now, Sir, what is $13,000,000 in the year 1903? It is about the surplus of our revenue over the expenditure. The surplus for this year will pay for the construction of this road.

What the right hon. gentleman said then was correct—$13,000,000 in 1903 was $13,000,000; but when we come in 1910, it has grown as the rock has grown, and it has grown into what would appear to be a fabulous sum were it not that I can prove and establish it by the records handed out by the government from time to time. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very important question at this juncture, and it is fair to see upon what pledges the government committed us to this scheme, for the purpose of insisting on the government giving evidence of their good faith in what they then stated; and, having regard to the subsequent developments which are now on record, we believe that it is full time that we should have some inquiry to see how these enormous discrepancies were brought about. As to the general character of the country, the right hon. gentleman said:

The information we have at this moment is to the effect that for three-fourths of the distance between Quebec and Winnipeg the line will run over a level plateau over which the construction of a railway will be almost as feasible as over the prairies. But even as to the general character of the country we have to-day abundant information that it is possessed of a character in regard to soil and climate which will be a painful disappointment to those gentlemen who have taken a morbid pleasure in maligning it.

It ought to be a painful disappointment to the government to find that for some cause, honest or dishonest, I know not which, the character which has been stamped on that country by the returns as to the expenditure is the very opposite of that described in the language uttered by the right hon. gentleman on that occasion. The right hon. gentleman said:

Once upon a time I made the statement on the floor of this House that we had in regard to this tract of country mountains of information. That statement was received with a great deal of sneering incredulity.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the returns which are being sent in from time to time in regard to the construction of this road are accurate, as the government supporters have been contending, were we not rather wise in sneering with a good deal of incredulity at the statements of my right hon. friend and his government at that time? Then, in support of his statements, the right hon. gentleman quotes Father Alband in reference to the country between the great lakes and Hudson bay, and here the right hon. gentleman ridicules the opposition, saying that the reverend gentleman was evidently picturing Her Majesty's opposition:

They have not seen those vast and dense forests, those beautiful plains, and those wide prairies bordering the rivers in various places, and covered with every kind of grass suitable to the maintenance of cattle. I can assert that on the 15th of June there were wild roses here as beautiful and fragrant as those at Quebec. The season seems to be farther advanced, the air extremely mild and agreeable. There was no night during my visit. Twilight had not yet faded from the west when the dawn of day appeared in the east.

This is all very beautiful, and, as far as the reverend gentleman is concerned, I have no doubt very true. The right hon. gentleman then says, as something he knows:

This is the character of the country that new railway will cross.

It will be recollected that the opposition did not oppose this scheme in toto; they were as anxious as were the government to construct a railway for the purpose of carrying the grain of the west to the markets of the world. But the opposition thought it was wise to have some necessary explanations, some preliminary investigations, some data more reliable than the flowery language of gentlemen who happened to see one or two spots of the country. But my right hon. friend, anticipating how reasonable would be that demand, before we ever made the demand, before he sat down after making his delivery upon the occasion of introducing this project, used this language. It is very striking, very picturesque, but it is not so distinctly characterized by good judgment or common sense:

To those who urge upon us the policy of to-morrow and to-morrow, those who tell us wait, wait, wait, to those who advise us to pause, to consider, to reflect, to calculate, our answer is, no, this is not the time for deliberation, this is the time for action.

And we have evidence now of how wise was the course taken by the government.

An hon. MEMBER. Unwise.

Mr. LENNOX. I venture to say that without regard to the question of whether it was or was not a wise matter to enter into this scheme by way of contract with the Grant Trunk Pacific, there is nobody who has followed the trend of events who does not feel, that at all events, it would have been wise to have had proper exploration and surveys before we committed ourselves to the contract, and that thereby we would have saved enormous sums of money. Well the right hon. gentleman says something further about this matter:

It has been stated and re-stated in all possible tones, from the plaintive wail to the indignant protest, that we are launching into a railway construction of gigantic magnitude of which we know absolutely nothing and without taking the usual elementary precautions of having a previous exploration. I say again there is not a shadow of truth in the charge, as I shall show later on.

The right hon. gentleman did not show it later on. But I want to call attention to the fact that the right hon. gentleman says there is not a shadow of truth in the charge that they are committing themselves to a gigantic scheme knowing absolutely nothing of the conditions surrounding the undertaking. Now the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) in speaking upon this question—he was then the Minister of the Interior said:

But a few days ago I sent the geographer of the Department of the Interior, who is himself a thoroughly qualified man, to the office of the Grand Trunk railway and to prepare a short statement of the results of the investigations that have been made in regard to the eastern line. That gentleman went down and collected the information, and this is his report (in part only): Enough work has been done, however, to show that it is possible to get a line from Winnipeg to a point at which the North Bay branch diverges from the main line, with grades not to exceed 0·4 per cent and curves of not more than 4°.

That is the railway that is now costing such an enormous sum of money. Then speaking of the first 100 miles he said:

First 100 miles from Winnipeg can be built for $25,000 per mile; that between the 100th and the 350th miles will cost $35,000 per mile; and between 350th and 530th miles, $30,000 per mile.

Now mark, Mr. Speaker, this is for the highest standard of railway built and the highest amount mentioned is $35,000 a mile:

From the 530th eastward to Quebec, cannot be estimated with any degree of accuracy till further surveys are made; but Mr. Stephens (the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk railway) considers $30,000 a mile ample. He also stated that these estimates were liberal estimates, and that the road should easily be constructed at these figures. The $30,000 estimate for the line through the clay belt may seem high, but it is largely due to the heavy cost of getting in supplies. For the reverse reason, the cost of the Quebec-Moncton section, other costs being equal, should be correspondingly reduced.

Now as to the Minister of Finance, I will quote directly from 'Hansard' as it is important that all that he said in connection with the financial branch of the case should be placed before the House. The Finance Minister said:

Now I come to the financial side of this question. We propose to build by the government through the intervention of a commission, from Moncton to Quebec, a distance which I have estimated at 400 miles. You will remember that I showed that an air line with an ordinary allowance for curvatures would make a distance 368 miles; but in order to be on the safe side I have put it at 400 miles. I am advised by competent authorities that from a general knowledge possessed of that country, that road can be built at a very moderate cost. From Quebec to Levis to near the point where they will leave the province of Quebec it can be built at a comparative low cost. There is some expensive work in passing from the province of Quebec into the province of New Brunswick, and as you get into the province of New Brunswick there are some portions which are moderately expensive. But I am informed that you can build a line through that country with maximum grades no less favourable than those on the Intercolonial railway—that is not so good a road as my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) wants—for $25,000 a mile. On 400 miles that would be $10,000,000. From Quebec to Winnipeg I estimate the distance to be 1,475 miles.

That makes a total distance of 1,875 miles whereas the actual distance is 1,804 miles. Then he says later on:

I put that down at $28,000 per mile which I am advised is a fair estimate. Remember that in both cases we are speaking of the road only without equipment. That would make the cost of the section $41,300,000. Taking these two together we have the estimated cost of the eastern division at $51,300,000.

Now we have got one of the estimates of the minister as to the cost of constructing the road, but that does not go to the question of the amount that Canada will be out of pocket. We will come to that later on:

Now according to the principle which is laid down in the Railway Act, the interest paid during construction is a part of the capital. Every railway company constructs its roads in that way. Therefore any money that we may pay during the construction is of course chargeable to the capital account, and the interest thereon is also added to capital. So that the road when completed will represent in capital, not only the actual money which we have put into it but also the interest which has accumulated in the meantime.

Then he says as to the interest:

In the first year we would spend only a very small sum. After that the expense would increase very rapidly. We would spend twelve to thirteen million dollars a year. Distributing the amounts over the period of construction in that way I estimate that at the end of the period instead of the capital of the road standing at $51,300,000, it would stand at $54,609,676. The annual interest on that sum would be $1,638,290.30.

Then he said:

Therefore, what we are out of pocket is just seven years' interest on the amount of the capital as it would stand on the completion of the road.

And he multiplies that annual interest of a little more than $1,500,000 by seven, and tells us what it would cost, as will be seen later on. The Finance Minister then deals with the declaration of the First Minister as to the cost of the road. He says:

My hon. friend the Prime Minister, in the course of his speech said that we could meet the responsibilities of this contract by setting aside the present year's surplus which is roundly stated at $13,000,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite have thought that was a rash statement. I am convinced that the figures I shall be able to give to the House will show that my hon. friend's statement is substantially correct.

Then the hon. gentleman proceeds to show that, by setting aside a sum of money which will be mentioned in the figures I shall give for each part of the railway, taking in the eastern division, the Quebec bridge, and the money we pay on the guarantee as interest on the western division, the whole will amount to $11,512,325.02. He does it in this way:

I add these items together. The present value, by actuarial calculation, of the cost of the seven years' interest on the eastern division is $8,853,502.47. Seven years' interest on the Quebec bridge represented by the present value, $324,246.65. Seven years' interest guaranteed bonds, mountain section, represented by $2,334,575.90. These sums making a total of $11,512,325.02. Why, we have some millions of a surplus left yet.

Then the hon. gentleman proceeds to say that, in order to bring up the road to the high standard of construction proposed by Mr. Charlton, then representing North Norfolk, he is prepared to place further money at interest so as to bring it up to four-tenths of one per cent grade, the highest standard of road construction. He says:

But if we are to have the high-grade--perhaps I should say the low grade—road called for by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), perhaps these estimates are not high enough. I am prepared that the millions of a balance should be devoted to the improvement of that road. I propose to add 25 per cent to the first estimate of the cost of construction of the eastern division, and so add 25 per cent to the present value of the seven years' interest of that portion of the road. That is an equivalent to an advance on the cost of from $25,000 per mile to $31,250 per mile for one part, and from $28,000 to $35,000 for the other part. That is a pretty liberal estimate and ought to build even the fine road called for by my hon. friend from Norfolk.

He is asked whether he has had expert advice upon these points, and he answers that he has. So, we have the statement of the Minister of Finance there, not only as to the matter of the $13,000,000 referred to, but also as to the cost of construction of the road. And you will notice that the highest estimate the hon. gentleman places on any part of the eastern division is $35,000 a mile for the 1,404 miles from Winnipeg to Quebec, and for the 400 miles from Moncton to Quebec he places it at $31,250. The result then, is:

400 miles, Moncton to Quebec, at $31,250 per mile..	$12,500,000
1,404 miles, Quebec to Winnipeg, at $35,000 a mile..	49,140,000
Total..	$61,640,000

This is the entire cost of construction of the road from Moncton to Winnipeg as announced by the Minister of Finance, as he said, upon the actuarial and expert opinion furnished him. This is without interest. Now, taking the actual facts as they have turned out, and still counting without interest, what do we find? Taking the figures furnished us by the government, and which I will refer to later on, we find that the road has actually cost $153,920,100, or more than $85,000 a mile. That is the difference on that basis. Now, I might refer just for a moment to the western division, and I do so because it emphasizes very clearly how egregiously the government has erred in its calculations. And there is a very significant parallel. It was represented that what, as a matter of fact, we were to pay as a subsidy for the western division of the railway through that wonderfully rich country—and what must be a paying proposition—was $3,024,000. As a matter of fact we are paying for that portion of the road $13,690,000, or practically the same money as the Finance Minister said we should have to pay both for the eastern division—with highest grade of construction—and as subsidy for the western division as well. Before I deal more fully with that, let me quote a word or two from the Prime Minister again. Those who were in the House at that time will remember in what a jaunty way the Prime Minister introduced the amendments which were agreed upon between the session of 1903, and the session of 1904. He said it was a little thing, in fact that the opposition would be disappointed because it was so little. Here is what he said, speaking of the amendments proposed:

The propositions which they made to us and the concessions which were made by us are now before the House. They are not numerous, and I venture to say that our honourable friends opposite, when they saw the narrow extent of the concessions which we had agreed to, were surprised at the moderation of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the comparatively unimportant modifications which we were called upon to make. Not only were they surprised at the moderation of the concessions which we made, but I believe they were vexed, because it deprived them of a good deal of the thunder which they were prepared to fulminate here.

Mr. Speaker, you represent that rich and beautiful county of Bonaventure. I represent a great riding, that of South Simcoe. When we reflect that, by a wave of his hand, the Prime Minister was giving away practically the value of a county, I am not quite disposed to join with him in speaking of the great moderation of these proposals. Taking now the mountain section, the Finance Minister gave us these figures:

Mountain Section.

Statement—under contract of 1903. Guaranteed not to exceed $30,000 a mile, and interest on the guaranteed sum.
Finance Minister, 480 at $30,000—liability	$14,400,000
Interest for 7 years on this amount	3,024,000
Under amended agreement of 1904. Guarantee of ¾ of total cost, and interest on amount guaranteed—total cost is	67,056,000
Bonds at 90 per cent to produce this.	74,506,667
Our liability, ¾ of this	$55,880,000
We pay interest on this for 7 years at 3½ per cent	$13,690,000
In 1903 our guarantee was actually.	$25,170,000
In 1903 our guarantee was declared to be	14,440,000
An error of	$10,630,000
In 1903 we were committed to pay interest amounting to	5,285,700
In 1903 we were told we were paying	3,024,000
A blunder of	$ 2,261,700

When the Prime Minister tells us that we are practically giving no important concession, I call attention to the fact that we were increasing our liability then from $25,000,000 to $55,000,000, or a difference of $30,000,000; and we are increasing our cash contributions from $5,285,700 to $13,690,000, or a difference of $8,404,300. Now, that brings us to this proposition, that in so far as the western division is concerned we are paying for the construction of that branch of the railway in cash as much as the Finance Minister and the Prime Minister said we would pay as our contribution to the entire scheme. Now, as to our actual cash contribution to this railway scheme, taking it as a whole, it figures out in this way: We are paying interest seven years on bonds for the mountain section, $13,690,000; we are paying interest on cost of construction of the eastern division for seven years, $42,690,560; interest on unreported expenditure, say, $1,000,000; investigations, legal expenses, etc., $500,000, making a total of $57,880,560. Then between the actuarial figures as given by the Finance Minister and the actual round sum at which the amount appears to stand, the difference after all is only between 10 and 11 per cent. Making a computation on the same basis and taking off upwards of $5,000,000, we have $52,000,000 left as the actual cash outlay that Canada will pay on undisputed items, or four times the amount at which the Finance Minister and the Prime Minister put it. If you add our share of the Quebec bridge, the four-ninths the Finance Minister said that we would be called upon to charge against this scheme, and if we add the differenec in interest, one-quarter per cent, for 43 years during which we borrow money at probably 3½ per cent and only receive back 3 per cent as rental, we will have $76,000,000, or six times the amount that the government said we would have to pay.

Now we have this fact to consider. After the government had made these declarations, then we had the surveys, costing about $4,000,000, and the engineers' reports to the government, and on these the contracts were let. At that time, for all the items that were embraced in those contracts, the engineers estimated the total cost would be in round figures $65,000,000. Taking those same figures, the actual working out shows that instead of costing $65,000,000, the road cost us $105,000,000, a very good reason for believing that there may be a good deal in the proposition which the government is so sedulously advancing now that the expensive surveys which we had there after all were only guess work, that the government was working in the dark. Now, in reference to that, assuming that the surveys were really guess work, I would like to show you upon high authority how fatal a matter that kind of thing is. There was a royal commission appointed after a portion of the Canadian Pacific railway was built, that is, the portions built by the government, and Judge Clark and some other prominent gentlemen, Mr. Keefer and Mr. Miall, composed the commission. It was argued in the course of that investigation that it was not necessary to have accurate surveys before the work was let to contractors. It was pointed out, that there were investigations much more thorough than these surveys are now alleged to have been made by this government. They said:

During the progress of the evidence it has transpired that in the case of the first four contracts for roadbed construction between Thunder bay and Red river, tenders were invited and contracts let before sufficient examination had been made of the projected line to enable the engineering department to state, in most cases, even approximately, what work would require to be performed.

The bills of works offered to tenderers were invariably calculated from nothing more reliable than profile plans. In every case the contract was let before the quantities had been made up from cross-sections.

Now, the government has the hardihood in certain quarters to put forward the statement that in some cases there was no profile plan at all, and what is more essential, that in some cases there was no location before this work was let to contract. They are either on one horn of the dilemma or the other; they neglected their duty to the people or else the statement put forward is a subterfuge to deceive the people. It was contended, however, in the Canadian Pacific railway case, that it made no difference. The commission said:

The evidence leads us to a different conclusion. If the quantities upon which the tender is based should turn out to be approximately correct, and the various tenders consistent as to prices, the relative position of the tenders, when subsequently based on executed quantities, might not undergo much change, but should the prices affixed to the tenders be incongruous and the relative proportions of earth excavation, rock, masonry, &c., be materially altered during the process of construction, then those tenders which seemed to be the lowest might turn out to be considerably higher than others.

That is just what happened in this case.

To exemplify this a statement has been prepared——

And so on. They sent out a long statement embracing twenty different features, but they summarize it in this way:

It will be seen by referring to the above statements that the five tenders which were assumed to be the lowest, were as follows:—

1. Martin & Charlton, actually 6th.
2. Sutton & Thompson, actually 5th.
3. J. A. Green, actually 3rd.
4. Talbot & Jones, actually 9th.
5. D. Hinkson, actually 1st.

Had the quantities contained in the bill of works furnished to intending tenderers been according to the work actually required to be done, the tenders would have rated as follows:—

1. D. Hinkson, appeared as 5th.
2. A. Farrell, appeared as 12th.
3. J. A. Green, appeared as 3rd.
4. Wright & Cachrel, appeared as 13th.
5. Sutton & Thompson, appeared as 2nd.

Thus by a change in quantities (the prices being the same in both cases) the lowest tender, that of Martin & Charlton, finds no place among the first five.

I do not think I need read more. They show here that, at the actual prices they were paid, large sums of money were lost on this transaction, and I venture to say that much larger sums will be lost upon the transaction in connection with the Transcontinental railway if we investigated it. Hon. gentlemen in the House will remember that upon a previous occasion during this session I showed just what was the results of analysing contracts in this case. Now, I have to present to the House the main feature of this proposition and that is: The actual cost of the work? When I say that, I do not mean that it may not be vastly more than the sum I mention, but I mean that it never will be less than the sum I mention. I am taking the government estimates, and I am saying that at all events it must amount to the sum of money that I am going to show. On a previous occasion, I showed that the figures on thirteen contracts, as estimated by the engineers at the time the contracts were let exceeded the contract sum by 62·8 per cent; that is $37,340,723 increased to $60,792,969. It is fair to assume that the other eight contracts will work out at about the same average increase.

This does not include entrance into Winnipeg. Locomotive shop equipment there and many incidentals and contingencies. It does not include a probable 3 years additional charge of $7,646,356 a year, or a total of $22,939,068 for the 3 years during which the company may claim inability to pay. It does not include terminals at Moncton.—What will these cost? It may be some guide to us to know that the Grand Trunk terminals at Portland are said to have cost $20,000,000 to $25,000,000.

This is equal to $120,000 a mile, a fixed charge of $3,600 a mile, equal to a three per cent interest charge of $6,554,013 a year for the road from Moncton to Winnipeg, and that is for the line of road about which the company was so doubtful that they would not undertake to enter into it unless the government would allow them to have the privilege of capitalizing three years additional interest after the expiry of the seven-year period. They were told then by the Minister of Finance, as the effect of his argument, that the rental would be about $1,500,000 a year. We are faced with a proposition now that the rental they will be called upon to pay will be $5,264,272 a year. Does anybody think they will pay it? They came back in 1904 for better terms, and they will come back again. Just as surely as the ebbed tide comes back and claims an additional tribute from the shore, so this company will come back and will claim, and if this government is in power—which Heaven forefend—they will obtain better terms from the government at the expense of the people of Canada. I venture the prediction now that if they come back, they will reduce the rental as low as $1,500,000 or $2,000,000, and the balance will have to be paid and borne by the people of Canada.

That is the financial proposition. I would like to show how certain items of expenditure are running up, but I have not time to do so. Some of these items have been placed on record before. The rock excavation alone on these 21 contracts is costing as much as and more than the Finance Minister stated to the House would be the total cost of the whole road. The solid and loose rock excavation alone, as is shown by tabulated statements I have here, is costing in ten contracts which I have analysed, as much as and more than it was estimated we would have to pay for the whole work upon these ten contracts. In other words, for rock excavation on ten contracts, we are paying $40,841,777, and we were to pay for the entire work, for the whole 103 items embraced in contracts of this kind, $40,209,205, or $632,572 more for rock alone than was to be paid for the whole work.

I have taken a longer time than I wished to take, and my only apology is that this is a matter involving enormous issues to the country. Let me summarize as briefly as possible some of the propositions which I lay down:

I claim it was the duty of the government to carefully verify the information they proposed to offer before submitting it to the House. The bewildering change in the whole situation as disclosed by progress estimates, and otherwise in the character of the country, and the roadbed, and the cost, inevitably forces the conclusion that, in making the declarations referred to, ministers of the Crown pretended to a knowledge of the situation that they did not possess, and asserted as fact that which they did not know to be fact, and possibly, too, and quite as bad, upon matters material to the issue, failed to disclose or concealed that which they did know, in order to prevent necessary investigation and surveys, and to secure the immediate adoption of the scheme; and I claim and charge that thereby the people were misled and deceived; and committed to a wholly unwarranted expenditure of enormous sums of money.

I claim too, that parliament and the country being committed to the undertaking, it was the duty of the government as declared and promised by the Prime Minister when he moved the resolutions providing for the appointment of a commission to build the road, to seek out men of acknowledged high standing, specially qualified for the position, and upon the basis of fitness alone; but I charge upon the contrary, that the position has been prostituted to political ends, that in making appointments, the government have been solely or mainly influenced by party and political considerations, that the office has been regarded as, and practically is a Liberal haven of refuge, that in most cases, if not always, integrity, fitness and the public interest has been persistently ignored; and the result is that the intention of parliament has been frustrated and the country subjected to an inefficient service, and serious, consequent, loss.

I claim that letting the work to contract, it was the duty of the government, acting through the commissioners, to secure a competent staff of engineers to thoroughly explore and locate the line, and to obtain reliable estimates and data, as to the quantities and character of the work; and also to have well thought out and unambiguous specifications prepared; to the end that all tenders received could be intelligently dealt with, and the contracts correctly awarded. It was also their duty during the progress of the work to have an efficient and trustworthy staff of engineers in constant supervision of the work; and having regard to these admitted conditions and the astounding discrepancies between estimated and actual expenditure. I charge against the adminstration that either the information submitted to the House by ministers of the Crown in 1903 and 1904, and the estimates upon which the contracts were awarded were outrageously misleading and incorrect, or the quantities now being returned, allowed, and paid for, upon progress estimates, are far in excess of what is fair and honest, and the country is being defrauded of large sums of money.

I charge that in all attempted or proposed investigations the position taken by the commissioners, whether with wrong intent or otherwise, has been in the interests of the contractors and opposed to the public interest.

I charge that the commission has on various occasions, if not invariably, sought to narrow the scope of proposed investigations within the narrowest possible bounds, to the great prejudice of the public interest.

I charge that the government and the commission in allowing serious charges of over-classification, overbreak and other wrongs to remain for nearly three years without investigation have flagrantly disregarded their duty in that behalf, and have entailed great financial loss to the treasury of Canada.

Mr. LENNOX.

I submit and charge that the attitude of the government, and commission in regard to persons making complaints of wrong doing in the carrying out of the work—notably in the cases of Major Hodgins and Mr. Lumsden—is calculated to deter engineers, and others in charge, from effecienty, honestly and fearlessly discharging their duties, tends to encourage dishonesty, and the allowance and payment of unjust claims, is distinctly opposed to the public interest, and is deserving of the severest censure.

The enormous differences shown to exist between the estimated, and pledged expenditure, and the alleged or actual cost are far too great to be accounted for upon any basis of reasonable error—they necessarily involve, upon the part of those having the initiation, management, and carrying out of the work, or of many of them: incompetency, or dishonesty, or both; and are of such grave public concern as to demand an immediate and thorough investigation into the circumstances under which this undertaking was launched, and the causes which have brought about this unwarranted expenditure of public money.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in concluding with a motion, I will ask that the House shall appoint a royal commission to investigate the whole matter; and let me say, although I have not incorporated it in my motion, because I think it will better come in this form, that I demand on behalf of the public that it shall be a fair appointment, and that the people shall have a fair chance. And let the criticism be what it will, I know with what vile criticism we were met when we demanded what were the people's rights in the Lumsden investigation. I have no fear of criticism either at the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite or at any other hands. I claim that no investigation will be satisfactory to the members of the opposition—that is not important, but no investigation will be satisfactory to the public—which does not recognize three or four essential conditions to which I will refer. One of them is that the leader of the opposition shall be conceded the right of nominating at least a minority of the commission. It is beyond question that it will be the government that will be on trial, and it is manifestly in the public interest and manifestly just that the proposition that I submit in that regard should be conceded. Further, no commission will be satisfactory or will command the public confidence unless the opposition are afforded reasonable means of bringing forward the evidence necessary to thoroughly sift the question as to whether too much money is being paid or not. To that end it will be right and just, and we will demand—or at least, speaking for myself, I demand, and I believe the people will demand—that the leader of the opposition shall have the right, not only to engage reasonable professional assistance in the nature of engineering experts, but also to nominate at least one or two of the counsel who shall be engaged in the prosecution of the inquiry. I have outlined as briefly as I could, and I am sorry I could not make it more brief, the situation as it presents itself to-day. I am not putting it as a question whether the government is guilty or not guilty, but I am saying that the government is on trial to-day in the minds of the people of the Dominion of Canada, and I am asking that the people shall put upon trial those who have misrepresented, intentionally or otherwise, the true situation, or who are maintaining in the management of the construction of this road those who must be squandering the people's money and defrauding the people of their just rights. I, therefore, move, seconded by Mr. Blain:

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor:

1. In the debate upon the proposed construction of the National Transcontinental Railway in 1903 and 1904, the Prime Minister and other members of the government declared that they had gone thoroughly into the whole question, and were in possession of abundant, expert and general information as to the character of the country through which the road would be built; that 'for three-fourths of the distance between Quebec and Winnipeg the line would be run over a level plateau over which the construction of a railway was almost as feasible as over the prairies;' that the government were then competent to correctly judge as to the extent of the undertaking and its cost; that delay for investigation was unnecessary and inexpedient, and that they had definitely ascertained that the total cost, to Canada, would not exceed $13,000,000.

2. That the Minister of Finance in the session of 1903 expressly professing to speak upon reliable information from competent expert authorities, declared to parliament that the actual cost of the eastern division would amount to no more than $51,300,000, or including interest during construction to the sum of $54,609,676; and moreover that with a grade of four tenths of one per cent, about 21 feet to the mile, and construction according to the highest known standards the cost without interest would not exceed $61,640,000, or an average of $34,170 per mile.

3. According to official returns since laid upon the table of the House this eastern division, without counting anything for interest, and with many items of construction as yet not included, will cost not less than $154,000,000, or an average of more than $85,000 per mile.

4. According to these official returns and statements of ministers, the total cost of the eastern division will actually amount to not less than the sum of $218,467,314, made up as follows:—

Payments under 21 contracts.. ..	$104,530,905
Four-ninths share of the cost of the Quebec bridges..	7,594,091
Terminals at Quebec..	2,000,000
Share of terminals at Winnipeg.	1,156,252
Share of shops at Moncton..	750,000
Share of terminal yards at Moncton..	97,000
Numerous items (not covered by contracts) as per statement recently furnished by the government..	37,797,852
Total exclusive of interest..	$153,926,100
Interest on outlay during one-half period of construction, that is average of four years' simple interest at 3½ per cent..	21,549,654
Cost at time road to be handed over to company..	$175,475,754
Add interest at 3½ per cent for seven years after road handed over, during which country is to bear the charge..	42,991,560
Total at end 7 years' period.	$218,467,314

Making an average expenditure of more than $120,000 a mile, and representing a fixed annual charge of $6,554,020.

5. To this cost of construction, and to interest account, must be added very large sums for entry into Winnipeg, for locomotive accommodation there; also for additional terminal requirements at Moncton and at other points; and for further probable interest charges.

6. According to the estimates upon which the contracts were awarded for the eastern division, rock excavation was to cost $23,322,976, whereas according to the official returns now brought down, the cost of such rock excavation alone upon that division will be not less than $52,000,000, a sum exceeding the Finance Minister's estimated full cost of the complete construction of this part of the road; and in many cases the contractor is being paid for rock work alone more than he was supposed to be entitled to be paid for fully completing all work upon his section.

7. Taking interest account alone computed on the actuarial basis adopted by the Minister of Finance, and granting that the company may take over the road and pay the stipulated rental, and leaving out of account our annual loss on the difference between the rate of rent received and the rate of interest paid out for forty-three years, Canada will be out of pocket in actual cash an amount more than four times as great as the amount stated to parliament as the cost to Canada for the purpose of inducing parliament to approve and pass the Transcontinental legislation.

8. That having regard to the astounding and unexplained increase in the cost of the said railway it is absolutely essential in the public interest that there should be a broad and thorough investigation into all matters connected with the building of the eastern division of the Transcontinental railway.

9. Therefore this House is of the opinion that a royal commission consisting of not less than three competent persons should be appointed to make inquiry into and concerning all the facts and circumstances connected with the inception of the Transcontinental railway project and undertaking, the conduct and efficiency of the various persons acting for the government or the country, the mode in which the work has been carried on both from an engineering and financial point of view, the manner in which the commissioners and the various officials and employees have discharged their duties, the manner in which contracts have been entered into and executed, accounts verified and payments made from time to time, and generally an inquiry into all facts and circumstances relating to or affecting the public interest in regard to the undertaking, with all powers usual in such cases including those provided for in an Act respecting inquiries into public matters.

10. That this House is also of opinion that the government should take immediate and effective action to investigate the danger of diversion of Canadian traffic to foreign parts and to prevent any such diversion.

I may say that the concluding part of the resolution is based upon the form of order made in the case of the Canadian Pacific railway investigation already referred to.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) on his industry, which is only exceeded by his imagination. If there were a fund earmarked for the destruction and not the construction of this great international undertaking, my hon. friend's indemnity might well be charged to that fund, because he has spent his whole time this session and most of it last session in digging and delving to see if he could not find something somewhere which he could add to the accumulation of injurious things that have been said about this great national work, said by companies and their agents on the other side of the line who are interested in not having this constructed, said by others who are interested in not having this road constructed, and reiterated by hon. gentlemen in this House, not with the object, perhaps, of injuring the undertaking, but with an object which can only be attained through the injury of this great undertaking. I imagined that once the Canadian people had approved of this project everything possible that could be said against it had been said, that the representatives of the people, no matter what their politics might be, would take some pride in this undertaking which is to assist in making Canada one of the greatest dominions in the British empire. But, no, Sir, every possible straw is grasped in order to make it appear as if this road should never have been constructed at all in its entirety, and these attempts having failed and the people having given a mandate to build the road, the object of the attack has since been against the method of constructing the road and against its cost. Now, I just want to point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) that the only thing that can be attained, if his words have any influence at all, and I do not think they will have, the only object that can be attained by such a speech is to make it difficult for the great company associated with this undertaking to carry on its finances in the old land. That is the only thing that could be attained. All that he has said to-day has been said before by able men on the platforms throughout the country, and has been written by hired men who filled columns of the newspapers in the United States, copies of which papers were spread broadcast throughout Canada. But in face of all that, the people of Canada said again, knowing all this, we want Sir Wilfrid to finish his work and to go on and complete the Transcontinental. I am happy to say to the members of this House and to the Dominion of Canada, that the results that followed the attacks on this undertaking in the year 1908, still remain, that is, the attacks have no effect at all, because after a discussion only yesterday with the president of the Grand Trunk railway, who has just returned from the old land, I am happy to say that the financial standing of that organization is good, and that the work will be carried out speedily. I am surprised at my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox), who is usually mild-mannered, using the long line of expletives which he has introduced into the concluding part of his speech. I noticed that he read that part where the large adjectives were, which leads me to believe that in his own mild way he could never have used them in making an address if he had not carefully written them out previously. In all my experience of public life, which extends over a few years, I have never listened to a more unfair presentation of a case than that of my hon. friend this afternoon. I say that advisedly. The insinuations made about men just as honourable as any member of this House, just as respectable, just as capable, were not called for, and should not have been made by any man unless he meant to make a distinct charge and face the issue squarely. The figures quoted about the cost of the line, concerning which there was a difference of opinion, I say, are misleading to the House and to the country, and I think I can prove to the House that the inference drawn from those figures by my hon. friend were not warranted by the figures themselves

The first part of my hon. friend's remarks were entirely ancient history. He dealt with the assertions of the Prime Minister, the Finance Minister and others as to what this road would cost. That has been threshed out time and time again. This resolution which the hon. member has presented, may be divided into two parts—possibly three. The first we might call the substructure—the recital found in sections 1 and 2. The rest we may call the superstructure, except the last section, which may be not unfitly termed the tower, because I think it was put on at the last as an afterthought. I am inclined to think that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition added the last clause as a sort of antidote to his anti-conduct on a Canadian-made navy; I take it that it is intended rather for consumption in Halifax and the maritime provinces as an offset to the hon. gentleman's position on the naval question.

Now, let me deal with these sections as I have outlined them. In the first place, there is the substructure, this long recital found in sections 1 and 2. This House is asked to vote seriously upon the statement that the Prime Minister tried to induce the House and the country to believe that this road would cost but $13,000,000. No matter what play there may be with words, that has been laughed out of this House, it has been laughed off the platforms of Canada, it has been laughed out of public discussion by the people. Did that statement deceive any hon. member of this House? My hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. J. Haggart) stated that the road would cost $125,000,000, and, speaking in all fairness, notwithstanding the remarks of my hon. friend from South Simcoe, I say that if I wanted an accurate statement as to the cost of railway construction or any other accurate information in that line, I would prefer to take the statement of the hon. member for South Lanark, probably, to that of any other man in this House. My hon. friend from East Grey made the same statement—that the cost would be $125,000,000. These hon. members were not deceived. I think that the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) estimated that the addition to the debt of Canada as the result of this construction would be in the region of $100,000,000, but I think he said it would be impossible to estimate it within $10,000,000. So, these leading members on the other side were not deceived by anything said on this side into believing that the cost of the road would be only $13,000,000. But, I want to show by the words of the hon. member for South Simcoe himself that he acknowledged in this House that he knew better, that he knew that what the Prime Minister intended to convey was not the entire cost of the road, but something entirely different. I will read his explanation. On this point of an estimate of $13,000,000 he said:

> We the members of this House understood that the Prime Minister did not mean that the total expenditure in the construction of the road would be $13,000,000. He intended to convey the proposition that the money that would be paid and not received back would be $13,000,000.

Now, my hon. friend from South Simcoe himself acknowledged what everybody else acknowledges. And while I am not surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite should occasionally refer to it, I am surprised at them seriously placing that statement as a clause in a resolution on which they ask the members of this House to vote. There is not a member of this House who believes that the attempt was made to convince them that the entire cost of the road would be $13,000,000—not one. And I give the public credit for knowing as much as I do about these matters, or as much as any member of this House.

Now, take section 2 of the resolution. My hon. friend gives here the statement of the Minister of Finance and proceeds to make that the foundation for some other clauses. The Finance Minister gave an estimate to the House based on the opinion of an engineer; and my hon. friend from South Simcoe will not gainsay the character, the reputation, the honour, the ability of that engineer, Mr. Schreiber. The Minister of Finance like every other hon. member, other hon. members who had had practical experience, like my hon. friend for South Lanark (Mr. J. Haggart), made their statements on our estimate of the chief engineer. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) might as well have placed in the resolution a clause referring to the statements of other members who made estimates. And when he assumes to attack the Finance Minister because he gave an estimate given to him by a man as prominent as Mr. Schreiber, and asks this House, and asks an intelligent public, to believe that he is seriously making that a reason for this resolution, he is going a long way indeed.

Now, I come to section No. 3, and I am getting along to what might be called the superstructure. The hon. member goes into a series of figures, and makes a statement from the official returns. I am not going to quarrel with that part of the statement or dissect his figures, but I think a very short consideration of the matter will show that I have been so generous in bringing down figures for my hon. friend's consideration that he has got lost in the mazes of the calculation.

Mr. LENNOX. That might easily be.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. member figures out that this road will cost $85,000 per mile. Now, let us stop right there for a moment. I do not concede that this estimate is correct. But, if it were correct, what about it? Has the hon. member the right to make this the basis of abuse of every person who has had to do with the road? I say, no. Let him look up the cost of building railways at a time when material was not nearly so expensive or labour nearly so high as at present. Let me give a few samples of what roads have cost in years gone by. In New South Wales, the roads have cost $64,000 a mile; in Germany, $107,000 a mile; in France, $126,000 a mile; in Italy, $109,000 a mile; in Russia, $83,000 a mile; in Austria-Hungary $87,000 a mile; in Great Britain and Ireland, $272,000 a mile. And in the United States, with all their poor railways, with all their small branch lines, where some have grades of one to two and a half per cent, where some have 67-pound rails, where they have no compensation on the curves or grades—the cheapest kind of road—and even there the roads have cost on the average $58,000 a mile. And take the Dominion of Canada. My hon. friend will know that we have in this Dominion some very poor roads, improving it is true, but some of them even yet mere colonization roads with 50-pound rails, very little ballasting, and the cheapest of construction. If my hon. friend will look into it, he will find that the average cost of these roads in Canada, including cheaper colonization roads is $56,000 a mile. Take the Intercolonial—and my hon. friend will not complain if I use this as a comparison for his friends had something to do with the construction of that line as well as ours—the Intercolonial has cost for construction $63,000 a mile. So, I say, if I stopped at that point, if I took the figures given by the hon. member, together with the quality and standard of this road from Moncton to Winnipeg, and assume that we have a road of that kind at a cost of $85,000 a mile, I say it will stand comparison with the construction of any railway system in the Dominion of Canada or on the continent of America.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask a question?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did the government know of the cost of these other roads at the time when they gave these assurances to parliament? Had they taken the trouble to investigate the question to that extent?

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) is asking me a question that he knows I am not in a position to answer. If I could tell what was in his mind when he made his estimate, I might have some sort of mental telepathic knowledge that would tell me what the government were thinking about before I became a member of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister (Mr. Graham) think that they ought to have investigated the question to that extent?

Mr. GRAHAM. Possibly they did. Whether they did or not, I am stating the facts. If they had not investigated, the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) should have given them this information, when he discussed the matter, because, no doubt, the opposition knew all about it. Now, we come to No. 4, and I want to say candidly that I cannot quite see how the hon. member reached the figure of $104,530,905 in his resolution.

Mr. LENNOX. I will tell the hon. minister, if I can be of any use to him. I got it by taking thirteen contracts with the amount that has been expended, and the amount reported as necessary to complete them. I add these together. Then, I assumed, as I stated, that on the other contracts on which work will be done will amount to about the same.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not find fault with my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox), because I can understand his difficulty in arriving at the results. I do not intend to go into all these figures, but I may say that there is a mistake of $16,000,000 in this one item. Now, I will take up those figures without going into details. On that item there is a mistake of something like $16,000,000. I think he took $67,890,697 up to December 31, as including only the twenty-one contracts, while as a matter of fact it included $20,358,679 that had been spent on items not in the contracts.

Mr. LENNOX. No, I took what the returns show as being expended, and what is yet to be expended, I added these two together, I took 13 contracts, because there are only 13 contracts on which there appears to have been considerable work done. I add the two sets of figures together, and I find they amount to some $60,000,000, while they were to have cost about $37,000. That means that they are actually costing at the rate of 62·8 per cent more than they were to have cost. I assume those on which very little work has been done will work out as I said on about the same basis. The minister, with the greater information, may be able to show that they do not work out on exactly the same basis. It may be that the warnings these parties have got have already had some effect.

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend is through, perhaps he will now allow me to proceed. Now, I will try and point out wherein my hon. friend's figures may be inaccurate. In making his estimate he was pretty positive, because he figured interest on these items. By his method of calculation, which I have now found out, a man could figure himself into affluence or penury in fifteen minutes if he had a good strong pencil, by adding a lot more to his revenue and capital expenditure on which interest must be charged. Now the amount actually paid up to December 21, 1909, on these 21 contracts is $48,578,614.19. The contract reserve—my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) will understand what that means—the contract reserve is $3,247,295. The estimate made by the chief engineer to complete is $35,949,958; total $87,775,867.19. But there was an amount omitted in the December estimates of $929,721.57. This makes a total $88,705,588.76 as against the $104,530,905; consequently there is an error in the first item of $15,825,317, if the chief engineer's estimate be accurate.

Mr. LENNOX. In the returns brought down the minister states there are several contracts on which a subsequent estimate has been made, and no work done. When he deals with figures in this way, he assumes there will be no extra money paid upon those other contracts. I am dealing with actual results already attained.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am dealing with figures given to me by the present chief engineer. My hon. friend is making an estimate without information given him by any person on which he could correctly make an estimate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman pledge his word that the percentage of increase on the other eight contracts will be less than upon the thirteen contracts included in the official returns brought down?

Mr. GRAHAM. I never object to any person asking me a question, but the hon. gentleman knows that that is a question that he should not ask, and that I could not answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The reason I ask it is that the minister stated that the alleged error of $16,000,000 is based upon the assumption that there will be no such increase.

Mr. GRAHAM. I made no such statement, and again I say that the results obtained are based on an estimate made by the chief engineer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask another question—because it is important just now to get down to hard-pan. There is an increase, according to the returns brought down by the government in thirteen contracts, of 68·8 per cent, and there are eight other contracts. What percentage of increase, if any, has the minister allowed upon these other eight contracts in making his statement as to this error?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend has asked me another question to which I will reply in the same way that I answered the other one, that the chief engineer, who is a greater authority than any one of us upon that point, has given certain figures, and from these figures I am taking actually what has been paid out and his estimate for the future.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister stated a moment ago that he had just seen these figures that required my computation to be amended. Does he forget that on the 31st of March, coming down to the condition we are now dealing with, to the actual figures exclusive of interest, that I presented exactly the same figures then as I presented to-day? And has the minister been able to show that my statement that $104,000,000 was the amount the government showed were expended, of which $60,000,000 in round figures was expended on these thirteen contracts, was incorrect? If he has not, what is he talking about?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is so very polite to-day that I suppose I might answer him in the same way. I am talking about what I think is an error of nearly $16,000,000. I told my hon. friend that I was not surprised that he should make this error in his calculations, and I told the House that I was not finding fault, but in order to be more accurate I was giving my authority for the figures given to me, and if these are correct, he has made a mistake of about $16,000,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister is aware that he has not answered my question at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. Because my hon. friend wants me to give an answer to a question which he knows that I, not being an engineer, am not in a position to answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not an engineering question.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend insists on asking me a question which can only be answered on the authority of the chief engineer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister mistakes the question if he says that.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is my understanding of it. Now, we take up another item—and I do not want to quarrel with these items—but I want for a moment to take up the Quebec bridge item. Whatever may be said about the Quebec bridge, everybody will admit that the Quebec bridge was a project before there was any thought of the Transcontinental railway. If there had never been a Transcontinental railway built the Quebec bridge would have been constructed. Every person admits that, but I am here to argue that the construction of the Transcontinental railway, instead of being a burden to the people in so far as the Quebec bridge is concerned, is going to assist in bearing that burden. It will assist to the extent of the amount that it will pay either in interest on the cost of construction or in rental for the use of the bridge. The people would have had to build the Quebec bridge had there never been a Transcontinental railway, and this is one more customer to help to pay the interest on the cost of this bridge. Therefore, the Quebec bridge should not be considered as part of the cost of this road. The $7,000,000 that my hon. friend has in his list there should come out because the Quebec bridge should not be part of the Transcontinental railway per se, as the legal gentlemen would say.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did the Finance Minister take four-ninths of it into consideration in making up his own estimate in 1903 and 1904?

Mr. GRAHAM. Because, I presume—and I may say I was not here—that the Transcontinental railway will probably pay an amount equal to four-ninths of the cost of the bridge for the right to run over it. If it is not part of the Transcontinental railway it will pay it in rent. If it is part of the Transcontinental railway it will pay it in interest. Going on a little further my hon. friend got down to large figures. I have already pointed out a few discrepancies, but I want to go on a little farther. I do not know what arrangements may be made as to Quebec terminals or the Quebec bridge. These are pretty large questions, and at the present time I could not give an estimate of the cost of the Quebec terminals because the commission has not decided as to what ought to be done there, but they hope to very shortly. I may say for the information of the House that I have suggested that the different railways interested should get together and form some kind of a company or combination by which they would secure the terminals in Quebec as well as the Quebec bridge for their general use. I do not know if that can be carried out, but if it can be carried out to that extent others besides the Transcontinental railway would assist in bearing the burden. It would be a reasonable solution, and it would be the better way of handling the traffic of the city of Quebec. It may not be possible to work it out, but shortly after the House rises I shall endeavour to get the views of the various railways interested in this question, and see what can be accomplished. I find that my hon. friend then makes up an item of $21,000,000 interest. I am not going to stop to quarrel with that, because by making the principal large it is easy enough to make the interest large, but I am going to ask my hon. friend and the House to judge of the fairness of this statement that contains this $42,000,000 the seven years' interest. However, that has nothing to do with what I am going to say now. A few minutes ago my hon. friend—and he says so in the resolution—in figuring out the cost of this railway, made it $218,000,000. He pointed out that at the rate of 3 per cent the fixed charges to the Grand Trunk Pacific railway would be $6,000,000 per year, and he turned around and asked his followers: Will any company pay it? By his own figures he put $42,000,000 into his calculation on which the Grand Trunk will never pay interest and never will be asked to pay under the contract. My hon. friend knows, this House knows, the country knows that the interest to be paid for seven years does not go into the principal or the rental and is not a fixed charge on the Grand Trunk Pacific. It only shows that my hon. friend has not treated the subject as fairly as he usually does in making out his case. The only result that can be accomplished is to make it difficult for the Grand Trunk Pacific to finance its undertaking, and if that can be accomplished then this road may be crippled, but I want to tell this House that that is not going to be allowed to be done, and that if it were to be the case that the Grand Trunk Pacific did not want this section of the road there is another strong company ready to take it in five minutes and proceed with the running of the road. Now, there can be a difference of opinion about this error of $16,000,000 that I pointed out, but there can be no difference of opinion about the $42,000,000 error, and the hon. gentleman, therefore, knows that this amount does not go into the capital upon which the fixed charge is made. Therefore, is it fair to ask, who is going to run this road?

Mr. LENNOX. I made the calculation to show what the cost would be at the end of the seven-year period, and I will challenge the minister, with all his eloquence, with all his extreme energy, to show that the statement is not correct.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will see that he made that statement. I will ask him to deny that he made the statement. Did he not, within the last hour, say that the fixed charges on this road would be $6,000,000?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. And did not he turn around to his friends and ask: What company will pay it? And did they not say: No?

Mr. LENNOX. I quite admit that I mentioned that the sum of $6,000,000 would be the fixed charge upon the cost of this railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. And that some company would have to pay it?

Mr. LENNOX. I pointed out that probably the Grand Trunk Pacific would not take over the road, and I was asking if the Grand Trunk Pacific does not take over the road, what position will Canada be in? Is it not a fact that it has a fixed charge of six and a half million on the actual cost of the construction of the road?

Mr. GRAHAM. I suppose we must accept this explanation, but I submit again, and I leave it to the hon. gentlemen who responded, when he asked that question: What company would pay this $6,000,000? —to say who is right in this matter. Now, coming to the resolution, we find the same calculation, and I am glad in this instance that my hon. friend wrote it down. It says:

Making an average expenditure of more than $120,000 a mile.

Mr. LENNOX. That is right.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does my hon. friend say that when the road is constructed and trains are running on it the road will cost $120,000 a mile?

Mr. LENNOX. As far as Canada is concerned, certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman knows that he made a mistake, and he knows that he cannot get out of it. I have read his resolution. In addition to the $120,000 a mile—and this is the only way in which he can work it out, this is the only way in which he can send the impression to the country—the hon. gentleman proceeds to declare in his resolution:

Making an average expenditure of more than $120,000 a mile and representing a fixed annual charge of $6,554,020.

After reading that figure, he turns around and asks his friends if any company would pay it. He went on to argue that the Grand Trunk Pacific would not pay it.

Mr. LENNOX. I will correct the minister if he will allow me. He says that after reading that figure, I turned around and asked my friends that question. I did not ask my friends any question after reading that statement.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend had the very same figures in his other notes, the identical calculation with which he ended the speech, and it is also in his resolution. I want to point out again to the people of this country, and to impress it upon them, because the House understands it, there is not a man in this House who does not know that what I have said is absolutely correct, that in again repeating that the Grand Trunk Pacific will have to pay $6,000,000 interest at 3 per cent on $218,000,000, my hon. friend, according to his own figures, was exaggerating the cost by $42,000,000.

I have always endeavoured to bring down every return asked for by my hon. friend, and to give him every figure, every estimate, whether it was in accordance with my ideas or not, of what this road would cost the people of Canada who must construct the road, and who should be informed from time to time what it is costing. When there has been an increase in an estimate I have not hesitated to give it to the House. My hon. friend has figured out his calculation on a very broad basis. I have told the House that the estimate of Mr. Lumsden was, in round figures, $63,400 per mile. I think that was in 1908. I have asked the chief engineer of the National Transcontinental railway to, so far as possible give me an estimate now of any increase or decrease, approximately of course, but as far as possible, so that I could lay it before the House. The return brought down for my hon. friend shows that there are yet to be paid on items not included in the twenty-one contracts, $16,149,084, and this is included in the statement I am about to give. I think it is fair to tell the House that since Mr. Gordon Grant became chief engineer there has not been a complaint of over classification, either verbal or written, made to the Transcontinental commission. Let me give the statement as it is furnished me by Mr. Grant:

Total payments to December 31, 1909, not including December estimates of contracts for construction paid in January	$67,890,698 00
December estimates of said contracts	1,010,014 00
Contract reserve	3,247,295,00
Amount estimated to complete 21 contracts for construction	35,949,958 00
	$108,097,965 00
Estimated to complete items not included in said 21 contracts for construction (but not including terminals at Moncton, Quebec and Winnipeg, entrance to Winnipeg, and shops east of Winnipeg), viz.:

Steel superstructure for bridges	$3,145,493 00
Right of way	771,566 00
Rails, fastenings and switches ..	4,782,220 00
Stations and divisional point buildings	3,657,105 00
Engineering and contingencies .	3,675,962 00
Substructure Red river bridge ..	116,738 00
		16,149,084 00
		$124,247,049 00
Less paid account rental of terminals	85,312 00
Less paid account shops east of Winnipeg	334,911, 00
		$123,826,826 00

The amount of $35,949,958 estimated to complete the 21 contracts for construction is only approximately correct and will be subject to revision, as no estimate for uncompleted work has as yet been made by engineers in the field.

GORDON GRANT,
Chief Engineer.

Ottawa, April 5, 1910.

This estimate made by Mr. Grant is of course, like all engineers' estimates, approximate. If my hon. friend desires that I should assume the responsibility of saying whether it is absolutely correct or not I could not do that, we have to take the best information we can get from the ablest men we have. Adding to the figures I have just given the $16,000,000 I mentioned a moment ago as being payable on items not included in the twenty-one contracts we have $124,247,049. We deduct from that the items paid, either on interest or on principal, for works at Winnipeg, and we get $123,826,826. This calculation was prepared in order to make a comparison with Mr. Lumsden's estimates of the cost of the road. Mr. Lumsden's estimates of a few years was $63,400 a mile, not including terminals, and I had the chief engineer exclude terminals from this statement. So that I could make a comparison between the figures I then gave the House, and what I think should be given to the House now on the same items. My hon. friend will see that there is an increase in the entire cost of $9,000,000 over Mr. Lumsden's estimate. I wish to give to the House the figures to show how this increase comes about as it is the balance between some increases and some decreases. The figures are as follows:

Items.	Estimate of June, 1909.	Estimate of April 5, 1910.	Differences.
			Decreases	Increases.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
Preparation and excavation	54,748,176 00	63,893,276 00	.....	9,145,100 00
Tracklaying and ballasting	8,188,247 00	8,473,863 00	.....	285,616 00
Trestles and bridges	11,638,222 00	13,521,328 00	.....	1,883,106 00
Sundry	2,198,055 00	2,960,356 00	.....	762,301 00
Rails and fastenings	12,945,281 00	11,984,000 00	961,281 00
Steel bridges	7,993,809 00	5,217,503 00	2,776,306 00
Buildings	1,962,628 00	3,710,500 00	.....	1,747,872 00
Right of way	1,168,342 00	2,153,000 00	.....	984,658 00
Surveys, engineering and expenses	13,550,415 00	11,913,000 00	1,637,415 00
	114,393,175 00	123,826,826 00	5,375,002 00	14,808,653 00

Or a total increase all told of $9,000,000 in round figures. Thus Mr. Grant's estimate is $68,640 per mile as against Mr. Lumsden's estimate of 1908 of $63,427, an increase of something over $5,000 per mile.

I wish now to give an explanation of the figures in these various items. In the preparation and excavation the increase is very large, $9,145,100. The explanation is as follows:

Preparation and excavation. Increase $9,145,100. This is due to substitution of embankments for wooden and steel trestles at points in districts 'A' and 'B,' greater quantities of rock encountered during progress of the work than was first estimated for, the nature of the material encountered in districts 'B,' 'D' and 'E' requiring flatter slopes, washing out of banks in district 'B' owing to unprecedented high water; extra rip-rap, elevating grades, train hauled material, additional grading in divisional yards, rock borrow for lake fills, &c.

Tracklaying and ballasting. Increase $285,616, due to greater mileage of track in divisional yards, 5 miles having been estimated for ordinary yards which was all that was considered necessary by the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities at the time, their later suggestions and plans requiring 10 to 12 miles; also, increase quantity of ballasting owing to shrinking of banks.

Trestles and bridges. Increase $1,883,106, due to greater depth of foundations found necessary in places, raising height of bridges, piers, cribwork, building larger culverts than first estimated for, when no information regarding high water was available, &c., &c.

Sundry. Increase $762,300. Due to outlay for gravity water supply doing away with the expense for future pumping; also $332,335 for extra work performed by chief engineer's orders, principally temporary trestles, &c., to expedite the work.

Rails and fastenings. Decrease $961,281, due to being purchased at less than was estimated.

Steel superstructure of bridges. Decrease $2,776,306, owing to bridges having been purchased for less than was estimated, certain bridges and viaducts thrown out and embankments substituted and on account of changes in line.

Buildings. Buildings increased $1,747,872, due to 12 and 18 stall engine houses being put in with heating, piping, repair shops, &c., instead of 10 stall buildings without these items; also, station buildings now estimated on bases of plans furnished by Grand Trunk Pacific being more expensive than those at first contemplated and larger structures at such points as Lake Superior Junction and Cochrane.

Right of way. Right of way now increased $984,658, due to increase of cost of land in Manitoba, New Brunswick and Quebec over prices estimated and provincial government lands now estimated at $10 per acre instead of $5, damages on timber limits, &c.

Engineering and expenses—

My hon. friend will notice this heading of engineering and expenses, because he dwelt very largely on the villanies of these engineers, and the amount of money they were spending. There is a decrease in the estimate for engineering of $1,637,415.

Mr. LENNOX. Has there been any decrease in the estimated expense for engineers since the minister gave me that return about a week ago?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot tell my hon. friend. I am giving the figures given to me by the engineer.

Engineering and expenses: Decrease $1,637,415.00. In the estimate of June 23, 1908, an amount of ten per cent was added to all grading estimates to cover engineering and contingencies in addition to $3,300 per mile for surveys. In the present estimate engineering, transport and headquarters expenses have been carefully estimated with the result stated.

Net increase of all items over estimate of June 23, 1908, $9,433,651.00, exclusive of entrance to Winnipeg.

That does not include, as I have said, the terminals. The figures show the cost to have been increased some $5,000 per mile. The next item of the resolution is No. 5, referring to the disaster to the Quebec bridge. I will not discuss that, as I have already discussed it. In the sixth item of the resolution my hon. friend points out that the rock excavation has cost a good deal more than the estimates. There is no question about that, and I submit that there is nothing astonishing or astounding about it. I am not going into the details, but I could point out a work costing several millions of dollars being carried on in this country by one of the greatest corporations in the world, the cost of which has been more than double the estimate, although it has been going on only two or three years, and the cost will perhaps be trebled before the work is completed. No person charges the chief engineer in charge of that work with being dishonest or inefficient. I know the head of the company, and I know the chief engineer, who is one of the best men on this continent for that kind of work, and everybody has the utmost confidence in him. Jokingly discussing it with him the other night, I asked him if he was not some kind of a sinner who ought to be looked after, seeing that his estimates had been more than doubled. He said not at all, and he expressed to me some opinions which I will not stop to give to the House, but which convinced me that the engineering world is not at all surprised at discrepancies of this kind. What the country is interested in is this. Let the hon. gentleman make his statement as strong as he likes, as to the men who are building this road playing into the hands of American competitors, or as to the miscalculations in the beginning, what the people of Canada want to know is, are they getting value for the money they are putting into this road?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. They know they are not.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend said that just as strongly in 1908, but the people said they were.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Not in my hon. friend's constituency nor in mine, for my hon. friend's majority was reduced and mine was increased.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend was busier in his constituency than I was in mine. They kept him at home very closely. I did not find it necessary to stay at home. However that may be, the people of Canada have decided that question in that way. But the question for us to decide as business men is, are we getting value for our money? If we are not, we ought to find it out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. GRAHAM. If we are, then all this talk, all these fireworks, all these pyrotechnics about errors, and about the cost being more than the estimate, vanish into thin air when they come to be dissected by the keen business minds of the Dominion of Canada. My hon. friend seems to laugh, but there are keen business minds in the Dominion of Canada, and they are not confined to this House.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not laugh.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not refer to my hon. friend, because he does not laugh. In the seventh paragraph of the resolution, my hon. friend says that the road has cost four times as much as the amount stated to parliament. I think I have dealt with that increase fairly well. Then, in No. 8, he says that having regard to the astounding and unexplained increase in the cost of the railway, it is absolutely essential that there should be a thorough investigation. I have shown that according to the standard of this road its cost is not astounding, and will compare favourably with the cost of any other road on this continent. Nor is it unexplained. It has been explained time and again, and before this discussion is through, I think it will be explained again, and satisfactorily explained, to the people of the country. My hon. friend goes on and asks for a royal commission. Of course, it would not do to put him on the commission, for he would not act. Judging by his conduct in reference to the Lumsden Committee, who are the best people to appoint? My hon. friend says in that connection that his leader ought to have the right to put on a minority of this board.

Mr. LENNOX. Not exactly that—that he should have the right to nominate a minority.

Mr. GRAHAM. His leader did that, but they would not act, on a committee of investigation. While not discussing my hon. friend's point, I would advise his leader, if he got that opportunity, to select somebody who would not run away from the job. But, apart from that, who would be the best people to investigate? Hon. gentlemen opposite have devoted their entire attention to the question of over-classification. Their chief point of attack on the commission and on the engineers has been that they have paid for solid rock or loose rock when they should have paid for common excavation. Who is the best able to judge of that? When this House was not in the heat of a political contest, when there was no striving for party gain, when it had been decided that this road should be constructed, there was a united attempt for a short period to make the contract workable and practicable. What did this House do then—not the government or the Liberals, but my hon. friend from Simcoe, the hon. leader of the opposition, and all the hon. gentlemen opposite? They united in providing for a tribunal of experts who would decide whether there was over-classification or not on this great work. That was not a government act; that was the united voice of parliament. I want to ask my hon. friend now, or any hon. member of this House, if this question of classification as between solid rock, rock in ledge, loose rock, common excavation or whatever you choose to call it, were to be investigated before a board, does he think that he or any gentleman behind him who is not an engineer would be as competent to decide that question as a practical engineer who understands the work? If my hon. friend wanted to have the conduct of a barrister tried, would he bring him before the bar or the benchers, or before a blacksmith's forge?

Mr. LENNOX. Does the minister think that the Lumsden Committee, which has just finished its labours, is a competent tribunal to investigate the question of classification, and does he know that they did it?

Mr. GRAHAM. Without expressing an opinion, I may say that this House ordered my hon. friend to find that out, and he would not do it. If there is any lack in the work done by the Lumsden Committee, my hon. friend cannot blame somebody else. He could have been there, and could at least have tried even if he could not have accomplished. As I was pointing out, this House selected a tribunal of experts to decide. My hon. friend this afternoon played much on the point, and was quite sarcastic about it, that the commissioners appointed to build the road were not practical railway builders. Was he in earnest? If he was, does he not want the men who are to judge as to classification to be practical men dealing with that kind of work. He cannot be on both sides of it, he must take the one or the other. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) dealt very strongly with that point. But let me proceed. The engineers were named by Act of parliament, the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific, which company has to pay the interest and is deeply and vitally interested in keeping down the cost and the chief engineer or the commission acting for the government, these two to choose a third party. These are the experts. Now let me ask my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) if he thinks any better arrangement could have been made for that portion of the work?

Mr. LENNOX. If the minister wants an answer, I get back to the basis of the transaction. I say that arrangement never was made by parliament, that it is not the meaning of the section, and I will challenge my hon. friend to get opinion of any prominent counsel and see whether the arbitration has been proceeded with under that section or not.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend has done what the hon. leader of the opposition charged me with doing. He has not answered the question, but his answer serves my purpose. My hon. friend knows that for the purpose of classification or the straightening out of those differences, it was the proper thing to do, and parliament did it.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know that.

Mr. GRAHAM. If he does not agree, he will disagree with the statute. That is how legal gentleman live. If they all agreed on the statutes, there would be nothing for them to do. I want to go back again to that tribunal. That tribunal was designated for the sole purpose of settling these matters; that tribunal has been at work and will re-commence its work. It has done some work, and I am here to say on behalf of the gentlemen who form that tribunal, Mr. Schreiber, Mr. Kelliher and Mr. Grant, that there is no man in this House who would not leave his case, if it were his own personal case, in the hands of these three men. For it seems to me it is a business proposition. It is a thing which could not have been done any other way than parliament did it, and I believe that this House will stand by it, and that it is giving satisfaction to the people of Canada. Now, we come to the last clause. As I said at the beginning, this last clause was probably added as an afterthought in order to serve as an antidote to the electors of Halifax for the position taken by the leader of the opposition in opposing a Canadian constructed navy. Now, I will read the resolution, and who will say: what connection has it with the cost of the Transcontinental?—it may have with the operation, but not with the cost—and I ask the House to reason out what possible connection this can have with the appointment of a royal commission, and why it was put there except for the purpose I have indicated. I have been told by lawyers that in a Bill passed by the British House of Commons years ago to define certain rights over public works, I think, there was a clause added granting a divorce to somebody, and this went through as a statute.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is to prevent the divorce of Canadian traffic from Canadian ports.

Mr. GRAHAM. But my hon. friend made no attempt to marry the traffic to Canada when he had the opportunity. In fact, he could be called as a witness in the divorce proceedings if traffic went away from Canada. In this connection he might almost be called a co-respondent. Leaving out the reasons for it being there, and it has as much reason to be there as three wheels on a cart, what is the situation? Sir, the position that this government has taken, that the party has taken, is that this road is to be constructed on Canadian territory, between Canadian ports. One of the great objects in the construction of this line was to bring the traffic, not to the American ports, but to Canadian ports.

Mr. CROSBY. Where is the eastern terminus of this road to be?

Mr. GRAHAM. There will be two when they get through.

Mr. CROSBY. But where is it to be?

Mr. GRAHAM. I may tell my hon. friend that to-day I heard that the Grand Trunk Pacific have purchased property for terminals at St. John.

Mr. CROSBY. Does the hon. minister know as a matter of fact that it has?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think I will be able to show my hon. friend in concrete form after dinner. Perhaps I should not tell him as it will be disappointing to him, but there will probably be two termini for this road, and traffic enough for both. Now the object of the country, one of the things the country had in view, was the carrying of goods between Canadian ports, and can we wonder at the astonishment of the people of Canada at the frantic appeals now made by hon. gentlemen opposite on behalf of Canadian ports. Sir, the operation of this line that they fought in every possible way, and with which they are now finding fault, is an operation that will carry all traffic to Canadian ports in the maritime provinces. If the plan which was proposed had been adopted, of taking the road to North Bay, and then dodging out to some other point to get the traffic of Montreal or Toronto, there would have been every possibility of that traffic going to Portland, as the Grand Trunk railway has its terminus there now. If that had been the case, there would be some grounds for alarm over the reports I have indicated, but as a Canadian I feel no alarm that Providence, Rhode Island, will take the place of any Canadian port either on the St. Lawrence or in the maritime provinces. In the first place there is going to be sufficient traffic for all the ports we have in Canada, and in the second place Providence has not the harbour that we have in the maritime provinces, and will never be in a position to handle the traffic that we will be in. We are not afraid of Providence. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox), went into hysterics about Providence being a port, but I am not a bit alarmed about any of those ports reaping the traffic of Canada. I want to point out to my hon. friend, and to the people that it was only by the determined effort of the government of the day, by the encouragement given to them by their followers, and by the people of Canada that there is a road being constructed that will take the traffic not to American ports, but to free Canadian ports. Now as I said a moment ago, I am not at all alarmed about anything that these other ports will do injuriously to the Dominion of Canada. I have faith in this Dominion. I have faith in the country in which I live. If I were so weak-kneed as to feel alarmed by somebody in some small town saying that they were going to get our traffic, I would not be a Canadian, and I would not be in the House of Commons. I would go away to the United States or somewhere else. But we are not a bit alarmed over those speeches made by our friends in the United States about our ports. They are pleased to hope that they will get some of the traffic. We are pleased, in fact we feel confident, that the ports of the Dominion will have all the traffic they can handle. Sir, this is a big country, and this is a big proposition. The transportation problem is too large a question to deal with generally, but I just wish to remind you, Sir, first of the ever increasing riches of our great west. We have our wheat lands there, and there will shortly be three lines through to the coast, for I believe that the Canadian Northern will be constructed shortly to the west; and then there is the Hudson Bay route, and in a few years there will be the construction of the Georgian Bay canal, and the Welland canal.

And why should my hon. friend from Simcoe get alarmed at Providence, Rhode Island? I want my hon. friend to join with me in the opinion that, when we have all these transcontinental lines, the Dominion of Canada will only be in the eve of her great development and will not have solved the question of transportation even of her own products. My hon. friend has shown alarm, and has spoken about Providence, Rhode Island, carrying our trade away. Sir, it rests with the people of the Dominion of Canada not to have the United States take our carrying trade from us, and not only that but to do a part of their carrying trade as well. That is the ambition of the people of Canada. This country has an advantage in transportation. We have the St. Lawrence route, because we own the outlets to the sea of that great river. When the St. Lawrence comes to the town of Cornwall it bids farewell to Uncle Sam and runs on through the Dominion of Canada to the ocean. That is our entrance to the Atlantic and it belongs to no other country. Sir, in knocking these great questions which the country is trying to solve, in finding fault and making it difficult for the men who have this work in hand to finance their undertaking, in aiding, knowingly—or, I would rather say, unwittingly—to make it difficult for us to have our own transcontinental line, hon. gentlemen opposite are undertaking a responsibility that men in any Canadian legislature ought to hesitate to assume. There are some things on which we should unite. And when it is a question of this kind, with the competition that to-day exists between our maritime ports, the city of Montreal, the city of Quebec, and the United States ports, instead of trying to tell the world that we shall never be able to compete with the United States, we ought to join hands in this House, and in the country to assert ourselves, and show the people of the world that we are able to compete with any other country. Sir, the people of Canada have undertaken this work. They have said to the present administration, and to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) at its head that this work is to be put through. And, after it had been begun and carried on a few years, they said again: Though we know what has been said as to the cost, though we have had put under our door mats, and in at our front doors and back doors all kinds of circulars showing that we are going to be ruined by this undertaking, though it has been pointed out that the Grand Trunk Pacific will never run this road, still we command the government of the day to proceed with the undertaking—or, in other words, 'Let Laurier finish his work'. In the face of that, why do not hon. gentlemen opposite accept the verdict? Why do they continue to rehash old statements to the effect that the head of the government said some years ago that the road would cost $13,000,000? Why my hon. friend from South Simcoe said himself that he knew that was not what the Prime Minister meant, but only meant, that this was the amount of money that was to be paid out and not got back.

Mr. LENNOX. I stated as distinctly to-day as my command of language would allow me to state that I distinguished between the total cost of the work and the amount that Canada will have to pay. I said that it was recognized that the First Minister meant that Canada would be out of pocket $13,000,000. And I have shown that the Dominion will be out of pocket fully four times that amount.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am glad to have my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) explain again that he did not mean to have the country understand that the Prime Minister had said that the construction of the road would cost only $13,000,000. It was rather indefinite before. But why rehash it? What influence has that on the country?

Mr. LENNOX. A good deal.

Mr. GRAHAM. Must history repeat itself again? It will be when the next opportunity is afforded the people. The matter has already been decided by the people. And I say again, in all sincerity, that Canada would look better in the eyes of the world if it were known that, once a public undertaking in this country is settled, we unite and bend all our energies to have that undertaking carried out so as to give the people, as soon as possible, the benefit of it. If that were done, we should present a united front to the world. The men at the head of this enterprise could then go to the old world and have no difficulty in getting cash. They would not meet the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite in the hands of the financiers of London and elsewhere when they seek money to carry out this Canadian enterprise.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken too long. I only wish to say that I believe the people are satisfied with the way the government is carrying on this work. That work has its difficulties. If the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) should, some day, occupy the position which I occupy, and to which, I know, he aspires——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAHAM. I say that without prejudice in the absence of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster)—I say that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) should occupy this position, he will find out that in carrying out these great works there are innumerable difficulties. He will realize how easy it was for him to find some little wrong done, some error in subtraction or addition; he will find how easy it was to criticise. But he will find also how difficult it is to carry out a great enterprise of this kind, particularly if men in the House of Commons and elsewhere, who should be encouraging the enterprise, are doing their best to give it a black eye every day. This work will be carried out. The people of Canada have undertaken it; the financiers of the old world, notwithstanding the efforts made to discredit it, are willing to stand behind it and will stand behind it, for they believe that what the people have said shall be done, will be done. And, in view of this, I have no hesitation in asking hon. members of this House to vote against the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) which can only serve one purpose, if carried, and that is to injure this great enterprise in the eyes of the financiers of the world.

Mr. C. A. MAGRATH (Medicine Hat). Mr. Speaker, I feel that the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) is to be congratulated on the eloquence with which he defended his cause. I believe also that the people of Canada should be deeply indebted to the hon. member for South Simcoe for the very exhaustive manner in which he has brought this National Transcontinental muddle before the public. As I am to devote some attention to the subject, it will be necessary for my purpose to give a brief history of the undertaking. It is evident that certain interests in this country considered another transcontinental road necessary. I understand that the Grand Trunk railway was prepared to extend its system from North Bay westward to Winnipeg and on to the Pacific coast. That, I have heard, was not agreeable to some friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, who insisted that the road should be carried down to Quebec and on to Moncton, New Brunswick. I have not attempted to verify these statements, as they are not of much account in the argument I am about to make. We know this, that in 1903 a bargain was arranged between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific, the offspring of the Grand Trunk railway, whereby the Grand Trunk Pacific was to build the line from Winnipeg westward to the Pacific coast; the people of Canada were to endorse the securities of the Grand Trunk Pacific to the extent of $13,000 a mile across the prairies, a distance that was afterwards determined at 916 miles, and that, for the balance of the distance to the Pacific, across the mountains, some 839 miles, the people of Canada were to endorse the securities of the Grand Trunk Pacific to the extent of 75 per cent of the cost of that section of the road. Then, Sir, coming to the eastern division between Moncton and Winnipeg, a distance of 1,805 miles, the arrangement was that Canada was to build the road, that upon its completion it was to be handed over to the Grand Trunk Pacific under a fifty-year lease. During the first seven years, no rental was to be paid, but for the balance of the period the annual rental was to be an amount equal to 3 per cent upon the total cost plus the accrued interest up to the date of completion.

There was some other details in connection with the transaction which it is unnecessary for me to refer to. I will not attempt to trace up these wild guesses that were made by the government regarding the cost of this road, which I understand commenced with $13,000,000, and which the Finance Minister subsequently extended to $50,000,000. We have had estimates of the cost placed before us to-day by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), and so far as I could see the hon. Minister of Railways has failed to give us any estimate of his own as to the probable cost of this road in Canada from ocean to ocean when completed.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not deal with that point, because it was not covered by the resolution; I was dealing simply with the resolution.

Mr. MAGRATH. The hon. gentleman at one point stated that no part of the cost of the Quebec bridge should be charged to this National Transcontinental railway. Are we to suppose that when the railway gets down to the St. Lawrence river there will be balloons to carry the cars across?

This road is to be carried from Moncton to the Pacific coast, and I cannot see how we can leave out of the cost of construction of the Quebec bridge.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MAGRATH. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock, I was stating that the hon. Minister of Railways appeared to think that no part of the cost of the Quebec bridge should be included in the cost of the National Transcontinental railway as if our trains would approach the river from both sides and be taken over in balloons. Of course, the Quebec bridge will form part of the National Transcontinental railway system and I believe that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has practically made an admission to that effect by presenting a statement to this House in which he has charged up against the National Transcontinental railway fourninths of the cost of the Quebec bridge. After all, Sir, the question is what interest have the people of Canada in this matter? The hon. gentleman's view is that the people will be satisfied if they are getting value for their money. That was the statement that the hon. gentleman made. Now, I beg to take issue with him. Were the government to invest the money of the people in an elevated railway system we know that it would cost an immense amount of money. The people would have their money invested in that system, but will any one attempt to say that the people would be satisfied with such work? I hold, Sir, that the people of the country are concerned in securing transportation privileges at the lowest possible cost. Therefore, the question of cost is a very essential feature of this matter. As the government do not appear to be disposed to submit an estimate at the present time, I must make use of the figures which have been placed before us by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). I have prepared a statement showing estimates of the cost of the Transcontinental railway under construction from Moncton to Prince Rupert, and the proportions to be borne by Canada and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

STATEMENT showing Estimates of Cost of Transcontinental line under Construction from Moncton to Prince Rupert and proportions to be borne by Canada and Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

(a) Estimate by hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox).
(b) Estimates by Mr. Schreiber, who placed cost of prairie section at $36,034 per mile.

Now, Sir, it appears from this statement that Canada will be behind this enterprise to the extent of about $280,000,000, while the Grand Trunk Pacific will be called upon to find about $38,000,000. The figures show this rather interesting feature that while the western division consisting of 1,755 miles and is to be built by the Grand Trunk Pacific at an estimated cost of $100,000,000 we find that the eastern section, being built by the government and practically the same distance—1,805 miles —will cost Canada about $218,000,000, and it must be borne in mind that the section being built by the Grand Trunk Pacific penetrates the Rocky mountains for several hundred miles and we do know that there is any quantity of solid rock to be found there. What reasons can be advanced for such excessive cost and, after all, there is where the people of Canada are interested in this matter. If we have excessive cost we cannot expect very low rates. We know that at the very outset of this undertaking the government undertook to depart from the ordinary rules which govern business people in the opening of new territory by projecting railways therein. We know that the principle is to lay down a moderately fair road and, as the traffic increases, to set aside from the earnings from time to time amounts for the betterment of the road. No fault can be found with the government for endeavouring to secure the very best location, no fault can be found in the matter of securing proper alignment or easy curves, but when it comes to insisting that the gradients shall not exceed four-tenths of one per cent, which is practically a level road, in that wilderness for several hundred miles east of Winnipeg, it is a case of extravagance let loose. Why, Sir, the very gentleman whom the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) placed in charge of the Railway Department of this country at that particular time would not father this project. The very gentleman who was supposed to know something about railway matters and who was placed in charge of the railway affairs of this country refused to continue in office and resigned. I refer to the late Hon. Andrew G. Blair.

Then, the Grand Trunk Pacific had held up before it as a standard the roadbed of the parent company between the cities of Montreal and Toronto, a roadbed that has taken fifty years to bring it up to its present standard of excellence. It is a wonder that these government railway experts of that day did not go to the extent of insisting that the face of the rock cuts should be sandpapered because evidently they looked upon the Canadian taxpayer as a cheerful giver, an easy prey and ready to freely part with his money.

Now, Mr. Speaker, take the section of the road between Quebec and Moncton, where we already have a railway of our own and the hon. Minister of Railways is getting thin chasing the country looking for traffic to get rid of the deficits. I refer to the Intercolonial railway. We are going to build a road over the same territory. It is true that the government stated that the road would be 120 miles shorter than the Intercolonial railway. As it turns out the road is now only about 28 miles shorter and the estimated cost of the National Transcontinental railway between Quebec and Moncton is something like $28,000,000. That shorter distance is secured at about a million dollars per mile while the National Transcontinental railway from Quebec eastward to Moncton, for over 100 miles, parallels the Intercolonial railway and within a distance of 15 miles therefrom. As to this extraordinary cost of the Transcontinental railway, I wish to show the extent to which it will be embarrassed by fixed charges. I have prepared a statement making a comparison with the Canadian Pacific railway based upon the figures that have been brought before us.

STATEMENT showing comparison of probable fixed charges G.T.P. and C.P.R.

G.T.P. RY.

Total	3,560	275,539,203	8,266,175

(a) This is the estimated cost to the Grand Trunk Pacific. The cost to Canada will be about $218,000,000. The difference is due to the G.T.P. Ry. having the use of the road without rental during the first 7 years—all of which time Canada has to pay interest on the investment.

(b) Railway and equipment as shown in last annual return.

This is not a fair comparison for the simple reason that for the Grand Trunk Pacific no amount is given for equipment or for terminals at the Atlantic ocean. Yet this statement shows this condition of affairs that the Grand Trunk Pacific, a trunk line solely, of 3,560 miles has fixed charges amounting to over $8,000,000 and the Canadian Pacific railway, with a trunk line of practically the same length and with feeders having mileage equal to double the length of the trunk line, has practically the same fixed charges. That is rather a serious state of affairs for people who live in Western Canada and who hope to have the enjoyment of very low rates on the Grand Trunk Pacific road. I might point out also that the bulk of the fixed charges for the Transcontinental railway are on the National Transcontinental end where there is practically no local traffic, outside of possibly 500 miles. I then hold that not only is Canada's credit being impaired by such unnecessarily heavy expenditures, but it is very questionable if the Grand Trunk Pacific will be able to meet its heavy obligations, and I want to say that the impression is gaining ground in this country not alone among railway men, that the Grand Trunk Pacific will be forced to drop a portion of the National Transcontinental railway and the actions of the Grand Trunk railway, to which I shall presently refer, lend some colour to that opinion. It is no pleasure to me to make a statement of that character. I have not got sufficiently far into politics to wish to discredit any undertaking, no matter what government has set it on foot, but I hold that to be the situation and I think it is my duty as a member of this House to bring it forward. The right hon. gentleman claimed that this railway shall be a Canadian railway for the development of Canadian trade for the benefit of Canadian ports. The language of the agreement made on July 29, 1903, between the Dominion of Canada and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company is very explicit. Section 42 of that agreement reads as follows:

Section 42. It is hereby declared and agreed between the parties to this agreement that the aid herein provided for is granted by the Government of Canada for the express purpose of excouraging the development of Canadian trade and the transportation of goods through Canadian channels. The company accepts the aid on these conditions and agrees that all freight originating on the line of the railway, or its branches, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall, when destined for points in Canada be carried entirely on Canadian territory or between Canadian inland ports, and that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater by a Canadian than by United States ports, and that all such traffic not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall be carried to Canadian ocean ports.

Section 43. The company further agrees that it shall not in any manner within its power directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of such freight by routes other than those above provided, but shall in all respects, in good faith, use its utmost endeavours to fulfil the conditions upon which public aid is granted namely: the development of trade through Canadian channels and Canadian ocean ports.

The opposition, the Conservative party in this House, at that time did not consider these covenants on the part of the Grank Trunk Pacific were of much use so long as the parent company, the Grand Trunk Railway Company, was allowed the fullest freedon, especially in view of the language used by the Minister of Finance, speaking of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in 1903, at 'Hansard' page 8570:

We have not been content that they shall stand behind it. We have required and they have readily consented that they shall be in it and of it and form the whole thing.

The Grand Trunk Railway Company then, Sir, is the whole thing according to the Minister of Finance, and at the same time it is free of the covenants contained in sections 42 and 43 in the matter of developing Canadian ocean ports with Canadian products. Then we have the valuable opinion of the Minister of Railways, when addressing this House last session, speaking of the Intercolonial Railway, at 'Hansard,' page 2694, 1909, he said:

We have, it is true, an understanding and agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway but the Grand Trunk Railway has its own connections to Portland and will shortly have connections further east. And while it may live up to its agreement with us, it does not give to the Intercolonial railway a pound of freight that it can get out of giving to that road. It gives as much as it can to its own line and carries it to Portland.

Mr. Speaker, that is ordinary business sense on the part of the Grand Trunk railway. The opposition saw the situation very clearly in 1903, when the Grand Trunk Pacific Act was under consideration. The hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Northrup) moved an amendment to the seventh clause, 'Hansard,' page 12711 of 1903, in which the following sections appears:

(a) That the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company so long as the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada shall hold the common stock of the said Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to the amount of $24,900,000, shall perform, fulfil and carry out according to the true intention and meaning thereof, all the provisions of this Act, and of the covenants, stipulations and conditions in the said agreement contained, which according to the terms thereof, ought to be performed, fulfilled or carried out by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

(b) That neither the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, nor the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada shall in any matter within its powers, directly or indirectly permit, advise or encourage the transportation of traffic by routes or at rates other than those in the said agreement, provided that each of the said companies shall in all respects and in good faith use its utmost endeavours to fulfil the conditions upon which public aid is granted and accepted, namely, the development of trade through Canadian channels and through Canadian ocean ports.

I cannot do better than read two or three paragraphs from the hon. gentleman's speech in support of this amendment:

When we consider that we are making a contract with a company whose whole line when completed will be mortgaged for every single dollar that it cost to build the line, I think no further comment is necessary to show of how little value the covenant of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway company really is.

Again he said:

If we look at the position of the Grand Trunk Railway Company we find that company by the Act being enforced to accept practically the whole of the stock, we have the Grand Trunk Railway Company controlling the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company without any obligation whatever.

Elsewhere the hon. gentleman stated:

Therefore as to this subclause (a), I think we are justified in assuming, that, as the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, which after all is as clay in the hands of the potter as between itself and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Grand Trunk Railway Company should covenant that it, itself, will see that the child of its creation shall carry out the contract which has been entered into. Another feature of the contract is as to the carrying of trade through Canadian channels and through Canadian ports. I will not occupy the time of the House in reading clauses 42 and 43 of the contract, which provide that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company shall see that freight is routed through Canadian channels and through Canadian ports. Subclause (b) of the amendment which I moved provides that the Grand Trunk Railway Company shall do, in fact, itself what the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company is bound by the contract already made with the government to do. It also provides that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, itself, shall not in any roundabout way defeat the true intent of the agreement by itself doing what the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company would be liable under its covenant for doing.

Now, Sir, we know that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company has built a branch from Lake Superior Junction on the National Transcontinental railway down to Fort William, a distance of about 200 miles; we know that it has terminals and elevators at Fort William; we know that the Grand Trunk railway has terminals at Depot Harbour and at Midland on the Georgian bay; we know that the Grand Trunk railway has the Canada Atlantic running from Depot Harbour to Coteau, we know that the Grand Trunk railway has its own line running from Midland to its main line, and thence to Coteau; we know that the Grand Trunk railway controls the Vermont Central, which runs southward from Montreal to New London in Connecticut on the Atlantic; we also know that the Ontario government railway intercepts the National Transcontinental at Cochrane due north of North Bay. So that there are two outlets from the Grand Trunk Pacific whereby freight can be diverted down towards the Grand Trunk railway system, and it appears to me, with that in view, that it would have been wise for hon. gentlemen opposite to have accepted the amendment offered by the hon. member for Hastings. The following information as to distances may be of some interest to the House:

Finally, I wish to bring before the House some evidences of Grand Trunk railway activities in acquiring another ocean port at Providence, R.I. I suppose it is only reasonable that the Grand Trunk railway should wish to get as much freight business as possible for its lines, the Canada Atlantic and the Central Vermont, but I do not think it will appeal to the people of this country, especially in our maritime provinces, to see so much activity on the part of the parent company in securing another ocean port when there is practically no activity on the part of its offspring or itself as the 'whole thing,' according to the Minister of Finance, to establish ocean ports on the Atlantic in this country, especially in view of the agreement which the government made with the offspring 'to promote the internal and foreign trade of Canada and to develop the commerce through Canadian ports.' I find that a Bill (H 78) substitute A, was presented to the general assembly of the State of Rhode Island in January, 1910, and being 'An Act to incorporate the Southern New England Railway Company.' This railway is designed to connect with the Central Vermont, and the measure was originally opposed by local railway interests and only became law a few weeks ago. The incorporators, according to section 1, are Charles M. Hays, E. H. Fitzhugh, James S. Kenyon, D. F. Sherman, Herbert W. Rice, Henry A. Carpenter, George H. Webb, G. C. Jones, E. C. Smith, Albert Tuttle, E. H. Baker, M. M. Reynolds and C. W. Witters. Section 3 provides that 'said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, maintain and operate a lateral branch from some convenient point on its road, through the city of Providence, to tide-water, etc.' Now, it is well known that Mr. Hays is president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and Mr. H. Fitzhugh is its first vice-president. These are responsible gentlemen, and their utterances either directly or through agents to the people of Providence justify me in giving some extensive quotations from the press of that city. From the Providence 'Journal' dated February 16, 1910, there is a long article under the heading:

Business men favour Grand Trunk project. Men representing millions of capital endorse move. Board of trade approves. Emphatically supports extension of railway into Rhode Island and appoints committee to investigate details of charter—Governor Pothier makes significant statement.

Among the expressions of opinion cited in the article, the following appear:

Governor Pothier—It has been the dream of my life as a Rhode Islander to have Providence become the terminus of a great transcontinental railroad.

I do not want to say what I think of the Grand Trunk Railway's application for a charter, for I shall probably have to act upon that matter and I do not want to appear to prejudice the case.

Governor Pothier continues:

So far as a connection with a Canadian railway is concerned, I said recently, speaking in Boston:—

The export trade of the Dominion in years to come will open the eyes of the commercial world. The development of her wonderful natural resources, the stores of iron and coal, the fertile fields and virgin forests will result in an immense and increasing yield. The port that handles that trade on the Atlantic sea-board will assume a place of power and influence in the maritime circles of the world.

In the same article Frederick W. Aldred, connected with one of the mercantile houses in Providence, states:

Providence has the greatest opportunity in its history in the knocking at its doors of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. Every manufacturer and merchant in Rhode Island has a vital stake in forcing the question to an issue at once in the General Assembly and in forcing our legislators to grant a reasonable charter now—not next year or next month, but at once.

The entrance of the Grand Trunk Pacific into Rhode Island means that Rhode Island will have, as a competitive railroad system, one of the most aggressive on the North American continent. It means that Rhode Island manufacturers will come into direct touch with the fastest growing, most prosperous and potentially richest sections on this continent—out Pacific Coast States, the Canadian Northwest and Alaska.

Mr. Aldred further states:

It means finally competition, rivalry and resulting improvement in our transportation facilities, lower freight rates and a great commerce on land and sea.

Mr. Rathbone Gardner is credited with saying:

Taking Mr. Hays' statement as sincere, and that the Grand Trunk railway intends, if allowed to enter Rhode Island, to afford full connections with its system throughout the western and northwestern parts of this country and Canada, it is certainly a very desirable thing for the legislature to grant the privilege asked for.

In the same issue of the 'Journal,' under the heading:

Hays declares Road Acts in good faith—Reasserts Grand Trunk's intention to build if chartered.

Montreal, February 15.

The intention of the Grand Trunk railway to build a line into Providence if the charter now pending in the Rhode Island legislature is granted was reiterated emphatically by President Hays of the Grand Trunk in an interview with a 'Journal' representative to-night * * * * *

To the question, What prospect is there under the Grand Trunk plans of Providence being made a great port for ocean service from the Canadian grain fields?

Mr. Hays replied, 'There is this to be said: When the Canadian wheat fields are developed there will not be ports enough to handle the great production from that area. There will be 250,000,000 acres under cultivation, with a yield of 20 bushels to the acre.'

* * * * * * *

I now propose reading some interesting paragraphs from the Providence 'Sunday Journal' of February 27, 1910, which presents five large photographs showing 'scenes at Montreal, freight centre, and in the vast grain growing territory whose development has been the decade's marvel.' The titles under these photographs are: Harvesting oats in Saskatchewan, modern methods of harvesting in the new northwest, threshing wheat in Saskatchewan, Grand Trunk elevator in Montreal, Grand Trunk freight terminals in Montreal, and the article is introduced under large headlines reading, 'How the Grand Trunk system taps the new northwest.' The following extracts are taken from the article in question:

Rhode Islanders will have several large slices of wholly new geography to learn, as a matter of purely local knowledge, if the Grand Trunk system is brought into the state, for that will mean the joining of Narragansett bay's tidewater to the immense tracts of the new northwest, which only yesterday were regions unknown to civilization, and even to-day have barely made their bow to the world.

Already men who desire to appear well informed speak familiarly of the resources of Saskatchewan and the mineral wealth of the areas just being tapped by the army of workmen who are busily adding to Canada's railroad mileage. But few, save those who have actually visited the country, have much conception of the development that is taking place.

No small part of this is due to the activities of the Grand Trunk system, under the direction of President Hays. In a general way these have been described since the petition for a charter was presented to the general assembly, but perhaps nothing could make it more graphic than the prediction, freely made by railroad men, that the Grand Trunk will ultimately be able to claim the title of 'America's greatest railway,' with America in this case the whole western hemisphere. * * * * *

Down along the water front of Port Arthur there are seven rows of huge, circular bins, not unlike the gas tanks so common in eastern cities. Ask a native about them and he will tell you that they are wheat wells; that they have a capacity of 25,000,000 bushels; and that they are only a part of the number that the railroad intends to erect. Some day, he will say, there will be enough bins to handle 40,000,000 bushels.

In those wells you have the secret of the Grand Trunk Pacific's anxiety to open up the far northwest—it is wheat and nothing more. From Winnipeg westward a hundred million bushels a year is being grown now, with only one-tenth of the soil being tilled. A hundred million bushels of wheat means much freight; its transportation means that thousands on thousands of freight cars must be brought into use.

This great northwest that the Grand Trunk Pacific will tap is mainly a wheat-growing country. Nowhere on earth are the conditions more conducive to raising wheat than here. Southern Alberta says with pride that it has the finest winter wheat lands on the continent. In the district around Calgary the average yield of wheat in 1908 was 31 bushels to the acre; on the best lands of the United States in the same year, it was little more than half that amount. * * * *

Such is the country with which the Grand Trunk railway, now desiring to gain another outlet to the sea by way of Providence, will connect Rhode Island. It is as full of vast posibilities as was our own northwest a hundred years ago. It is waiting only for people to develop it to make it one of the great food sources of the world. It is already up and doing; and it deserves more than any other country on either side of the Atlantic or the Pacific the name of the 'land of to-morrow.'

And now, Mr. Speaker, I come to some rather important and interesting statements attributed to Mr. William Wainwright, the second vice-president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I am quoting extracts from the Providence 'Journal,' Providence, R.I., March 2, 1910:

Grand Trunk Steamer lines here planned—
Officials find City's Tidewater Facilities excellent—Portland not satisfactory.

Vice-President William Wainwright of the Grand Trunk railway declared yesterday that the tidewater facilities of Providence are an important consideration in his company's plans, and that steamship lines are contemplated in connection with the projected local branch of the road—the Southern New England Railway Company.

Hereto the officials of the company have been cautious in their statements as to immediate development of steamship lines. Vice-President Wainwright, according to despatches from Montreal, is very candid in his statement of what the railroad is planning here if the charter is granted.

The officials until yesterday confined themselves to the assurance of adequate accommodation of the freightening interests of the section, and the prediction that, with the development of the Canadian west, there would be export business for all the tidewater terminals of the company.

The statement by Mr. Wainwright, however, aims directly at the establishment of an ocean steamship line or lines from this city.

Best Port on Coast—'We consider Providence the best place between Nova Scotia and Florida for our purpose,' said Mr. Wainwright, who has been connected with the Grand Trunk for many years, in an interview in Montreal.

'Both the Canadian Pacific and ourselves,' he continued, 'have had surveyors and experts up and down the Atlantic coast for the last 10 years looking for the best place to bring our rails to tidewater. We have Portland, but Portland is unsatisfactory in many ways.'

'We consider Providence the best place. It will do us out of any mail subsidy for our steamers if present conditions continue to exist, but we believe we shall more than make up for this in other ways.'

Mr. Wainwright declined to discuss plans further until a charter had been granted in Rhode Island to the Southern New England Railway Company.

Finally, the company's plans to extend the Grand Trunk system into Providence appear to have been ratified by the London directors on or about the 11th March last, as would appear from the following extracts from the same journal in its issue of the next day:

An announcement that the Grand Trunk directors in session in London yesterday had unanimously endorsed the plan of a branch to Providence furnished a sensation at the House hearing on the Southern New England's application for a charter at the State House yesterday. * * * * *

Mr. Murdock then unfolded a telegram received only a few minutes before by Vice-President Fitzhugh from Montreal. As he read the message the big gathering listened intently. The telegram said—'Following received from Mr. Hayes to-day—Providence Branch discussed by Board this morning. Action taken fully approved, and you may so state.'

* * * * * * *

A complete stenographic report of the Grand Trunk hearing, at which Mr. Murdock, the company's attorney, made such a sensation by announcing the decision of the London board, appears in the Providence 'Journal' of March 12. I propose trespassing a few moments longer on the time of this House by reading some statements taken from that report and made by certain prominent officers of the Grand Trunk Company:

Providence, R.I.,
Room 313, State House.

Hearing before the House Committee on corporations on 'An Act to Incorporate the Southern New England Railway company,' H. 7-18, beginning at 1.35 p.m. on Friday, March 11, 1910. * * * * *

JOHN S. MURDOCK. 'Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee I appear in behalf of the petitioners. I think it is no exaggeration to say that this is the most important question that you have had before you during your legislative career.'

* * * * * * *

But in the proposition now before you you have, without any asking of financial aid, opportunity to give to the people of this state the outlet that they longed for forty years ago, and through a connection with a line which as I have said before, extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific—or will when work under construction is completed.

* * * * * * *

Therefore you will be concerned, as members of this committee with the questions which must be uppermost in your minds, which I put as follows: First who are the people who are behind this petition? Second, what is their object in seeking an entrance into Rhode Island? And, third, will they build the road if this charter is granted? These questions gentlemen, being answered to your satisfaction, it seems to me that it leaves no doubt, must leave no doubt, in your minds, as to what your actions should be on this petition.

Now as to the first question. The person whose name first appears on this petition is Charles M. Hays—a man who has had a most remarkable railroad career.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Hays conceived the idea of a road extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and for a road more northerly than any other road across the continent.

Such a project as that, of course demanded government aid; it was beyond the means of a purely private enterprise; and Mr. Hays sought and obtained that government aid after a fierce political battle—the fiercest in the annals of politics in the Dominion of Canada; so that line is now under way. It is opening an absolutely new territory—a territory rich in possibilities, which Mr. Hays believes will be in the future the granary of the world. And upon that proposition he is expending these millions of dollars; and, if his judgment is wrong why his whole structure will fall.

On the possibilities of the agricultural development of that section of this continent we are intensely interested for two reasons. In all probability we will have to look to that portion of this continent for our wheat, I am informed that now we export only about three per cent of what we raise and with the increased population and the decrease in the areas devoted to wheat growing, we will be dependent upon the Canadian northwest for our wheat supply.

The full story of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the development of the Grand Trunk proper reads like a romance. * * * *

Now as to the advantages of this line. We have what we believe to be one of the finest harbours on the Atlantic coast, Mr. Hays and his associates believe that, when this vast territory about which you will hear more from Mr. Loud, is developed, that they will have further need of ports, to take care of this vast amount of grain that is coming out of this wonderful country. Besides Portland they have Montreal, which is closed during a large part of the year. * * * * *

I am authorized to state that if we can offer adequate harbour facilities, if the improvements now projected in the harbour are carried to completion, that when this line is built we will have a transatlantic service running from Providence to Europe. Mr. Fitzhugh was cautious in his statement. He says, if we have the facilities. We will not promise to spend the vast sums that will have to be spent upon our harbour itself; but if the expenditures now authorized are carried through and facilities are afforded we will have that service. * * * *

Now if these gentlemen are acting in good faith—and I believe they are, and you will believe so when you hear it from their own lips—they see the advantages here in Providence, see them much more clearly than we see them ourselves, and they offer to come here to spend a great many million dollars within this state and all that they ask of you gentlemen is favourable consideration of this charter such as you have given to other roads. * * * *

Mr. Fitzhugh: Mr. Chairmain and gentlemen, the question of extending the Grand Trunk system to run to the State of Rhode Island and Providence is one that has been before the company for a number of years and has been considered from time to time.

* * * * * * *

I want to assure you gentlemen that if the charter is granted upon reasonably fair terms the railway will be built, that the great corporation which I have the honour to represent, I would say has not only the means but also the charter to make the railway in this community a paying proposition, but in order to do so we must have the goodwill of the community, and we hope that, if permitted to build the Southern New England railway we will receive liberally of your help.

Gentlemen, on account of the difficulties under which I speak I want to ask Mr. Loud, our general traffic manager, to tell you some of the advantages to be derived by this community by the operation of the Grand Trunk system to tidewater, through the State of Rhode Island. Mr. Loud, who is the traffic manager of all the Grand Trunk railway system, is entirely familiar with not only the conditions that exist in New England but throughout the western states, the central western states, in which we operate, as well as the Canadian and the great northwest and the eastern provinces of Canada. In conclusion I desire to again assure you that if this charter is granted on reasonable terms the road will be built by the Grand Trunk system.

Mr. Loud. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will endeavour to explain to you the advantages that a connection with the Grand Trunk system would give or rather afford in the way of distributing traffic from this territory. You are all familiar with the situation in the east, for instance, the Grand Trunk is at Portland, Me. It is at New London and from a point in New London you have been told it is intended to run to Providence and on to Montreal through White river. * * *

The Grand Trunk has to-day its steamship lines at Portland in the winter and at Montreal in the summer, running to European ports. It has been pointed out to you in connection with this city that a steamship line, the advantages of a steamship line from here would be great. A successful steamship line not only needs to take business away from you such for instance as grain and the product which the United States has to ship, but a steamship company also needs to have inbound cargo in order to give it business in both directions. One of the conditions of a steamship company is in having a port where there can be imports. * * * * *

Now the Grand Trunk system is the parent of the Grand Trunk Pacific. The Grand Trunk Pacific to-day is in the course of building the road. It starts in New Brunswick running to St. John, N.B., Nova Scotia, through to Winnipeg on what is called the Transcontinental Commission of the Canadian government. A great deal of the mileage is already laid, but it is not connected up.

From the La Superior Junction to Winnipeg the rails are down and cargoes are actually taken over there, and it is expected during the year it will be in full operation from Winnipeg to Lake Superior. The Grand Trunk Pacific proper has built a branch line from Fort William to Lake Superior Junction, there connecting with the Transcontinental section and with the Grand Trunk Pacific proper at Winnipeg. The line is complete and in operation from Winnipeg to Edmonton a distance of 790 and odd miles. There are also branches at points to Yorkton.

Then follows nearly a column of material in which Mr. Loud deals with his company's railway development in the far west and dilates at some length upon the productivity of that section of Canada, especially its grain growing possibilities. He proceeds:

To give you some idea of this territory a thought which is suggested by some questions asked with regard to the grain production, it is a fact that the United States is ceasing to be an exporter of wheat. Of course it exports a little wheat to-day but as a matter of fact it is getting less each year and there are probably two reasons for it. One is that there is a larger consumption of wheat in the United States, and the country of itself is increasing in its population and is needing more flour each year. People are consuming more flour and the flour exporting certainly is decreasing. We are coming to a time when the United States will want more wheat, Mr. J. J. Hill has said that they are going to get it from the Canadian northwest. He is building his lines to go in to the grain traffic.

The Grand Trunk is building branch lines through different portions of that country for the interchange of business. In the future there will be a great interchange of business in that territory. With the greater interchange of business and with the Grand Trunk system extending its lines to Providence I believe that Providence will be greatly the gainer in being able to reach such a tremenduous distributing country as it affords now. Even if you are not interested in anything going on in Canada you are interested probably to some extent in the export to Japan and China. It is intended that the Grand Trunk will have its steamer lines from Prince Rupert, and when that line is opened it will be the shortest line from the Atlantic coast to China and Japan by several hundred miles.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we do not know what all the plans of the Grand Trunk railway are in the state of Rhode Island. I do not, however, think we would be very far astray if we concluded that their expenditures for terminals and building this new road would amount to at least ten millions of dollars, and without any financial aid given to them by the people of Rhode Island. Yet, we in this country obligate ourselves to an enormous amount in order to get another road across the continent. Our western provinces obligate themselves to assist the Grand Trunk Pacific, and we have a set of very prominent gentlemen coming here on behalf of the Grand Trunk Pacific making a contract with our government to in no way attempt to divert traffic from that road to the detriment of Canadian ocean ports, yet we find some of the same gentlemen acting on behalf of the Grand Trunk railway, dealing with the state of Rhode Island and certainly leading the people of that state to believe that they are to have an ocean port, to a certain extent built up by traffic to be diverted from the Grand Trunk Pacific. I felt it necessary to quote very extensively from the Providence papers, so that no one can say that they were merely accidental statements that were made by irresponsible parties to the legislatures of that state, and I consider, Sir, that is sufficient justification for bringing this matter to the attention of the House and the country.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, every condition which surrounds the moving of this resolution and the debate so far as it has progressed, indicates that the resolution is not offered in this House in any serious way or with the idea that there are any grounds why the proposal of my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) should be adopted. It has been brought forward at this very late period of the session, though my hon. friend has had in his possession for some weeks all the information upon which he thinks he is warranted in presenting this motion. A complete opportunity has been given him to investigate the integrity of the engineers connected with the construction of the Transcontinental railway, an opportunity especially open to my hon. friend, but it was deliberately refused by him and without warrant or reason. This motion is brought forward without any ground being given why a royal commission should be appointed. Surely, when the intervention of a body of that kind is sought, some reasonable ground should be given to parliament why the request should be granted. There should be something to be ascertained which parliament, even with all its machinery, could not ascertain.

My hon. friend has not ventured to suggest anything of that kind; on the contrary, he studiously avoided making any suggestion which would afford any ground for invoking the aid of a tribunal like a royal commission. No allegations of impropriety on the part of the cabinet are suggested, and no suggestion is made that any other course could have been adopted by this government during the past seven years since the inception of this project has been given to the House. We have simply and solely the assertion that because the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, or the National Transcontinental railway, to use its legal designation, is costing a great deal of money, that fact should be investigated. One needs only to state that proposition to realize the absurdity of it. If every proposition that comes before this House which involves the expenditure of a sum of money of $50,000,000 or $100,000,000, should be followed by a royal commission simply on account of the size of the expenditure, why, there would be nothing going on in this country but royal commissions, having regard to the way in which Canada is advancing and prospering and its expenditure increasing. Of course it would suit the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), nothing would delight him better than royal commissions going on all the time. If he would devote more of his time to perfecting the legislation going through this House, instead of asserting incompetence where none exists, he would be performing his parliamentary duties much better. Some hon. gentlemen have suggested that the reason why the hon. member for Simcoe has brought forward this resolution is because the country is beginning to realize that he and his colleagues have played the baby act when they withdrew from the Lumsden committee, and that fact has become so much appreciated all over this country, that he thought he would put up a big bluff before the session expired, and talk about a royal commission, which he did not want, and would not know what to do with if he had it. Then there is another suggestion, that this resolution is a bold attempt on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to try and resussitate some relic of a policy in which they once stood together with a united front before the country. If you recollect recent political history, you will realize that never since 1904, have our friends opposite ever stood united on anything in this country which has been the subject of legislation. Of course it is natural that they should endeavour to rally together their shattered ranks, very much shattered this session, ranks which are somewhat decimated, and before the close of the session to rally them together on attack upon the National Transcontinental railway administration. Then was the other hope that if they got back to first principles, at least they might stand together for the old policy. Let me commend to my hon. friends this one fact, that if they want to rally their party together they must catch some glimmer of the old faith, the old patriotism and the old belief in Canada that dominated the grand old man who led them in days that are past. If the Conservative party was dominated by the traditions of Sir John A. Macdonald to-day, you would not find them raising quibbles, and all kinds of false issues about the development of that northern country, and about the construction of a second transcontinuental railway, about attacking the credit of Canada, or the men who are building that road, you would find them standing together for that proposition and standing for the building up of this country. But that is not the position of hon. gentlemen opposite. They are back where they were in 1904, no further ahead, and just as far off from the promised land for which so many of them sigh. The one assertion upon which my hon. friend started out in this resolution was indeed a matter of ancient history. After their assertion that the right hon. gentleman the Prime Minister of this country had stated that the Transcontinental would only cost $13,000,000 in 1903, and after my right hon. friend at a previous period in this session absolutely disclaimed any idea of that kind, we find him bringing to the front and putting in his resolution the allegation that this country was practically deceived, because the right hon. gentleman had said that this proposition was only going to cost this country $13,000,000. My hon. friend went back on that proposition this afternoon; when reproved by the Minister of Railways he took it back in a most unqualified way. But they put that in the resolution for the purpose of deluding some people in this country who still believe in the Tory party, and who still listen to that old story. My hon. friend knows very well that the right hon. gentleman leading this House, was speaking about the interest upon the cost.

Mr. LENNOX. I know exactly what I stated this afternoon, and it is correct.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has stated so many things in regard to this matter, and put such quite different things in his resolution, that one hardly knows how he stands on the resolution. What are the facts? In that same session of parliament when the Finance Minister gave to this House the estimate which had been made by Mr. Schreiber of $55,000,000, or, if certain gradients were used $62,000,000, my hon. friend would like this House to believe that because Mr. Schreiber had given that estimate the country was deceived, dreadfully deceived. That is the allegation in the resolution, if it alleges anything. What are the facts? Every one knows full well that Mr. Schreiber had never made a survey of any kind in that country.

Mr. LENNOX. Then why did the Finance Minister quote him as an authority?

Mr. MACDONALD. Because he knew very well the conditions under which that statement was made; it was made from information gathered from exploratory surveys in that northern country made by engineers, from the information in possession of this House, and of the whole country

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman state whether that report of Mr. Schreiber was ever laid before this House?

Mr. LENNOX. And did the Finance Minister mention Mr. Schreiber at the time?

Mr. MACDONALD. Does the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) dispute the fact that it was Mr. Schreiber who made that estimate?

Mr. LANCASTER. The Finance Minister made it to the country.

Mr. MACDONALD. Don't let us resort to quibbling in this matter.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that that estimate was based on the statement of Mr. Schreiber; I ask him: Will he state whether that report of Mr. Schreiber was ever laid before this House?

Mr. FIELDING. Will my hon. friend state where anybody ever demanded Mr. Schreiber's report, or questioned the accurracy of the information which the Minister of Finance gave?

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend knew that when the Minister of Finance made that statement in the House he made it as the statement of an engineer who was speaking from the information that had been gathered by exploratory surveys, before any location survey had ever been made by any engineer in this country. Every hon. gentleman in the opposition knew that that information was given, not upon any location survey, preliminary or otherwise, that had been made in that northern country, and they knew that no survey of a preliminary character had ever been made in that land.

Mr. BOYCE. Did not the Prime Minister say that they had 'mountains of information' to give to the House?

Mr. MACDONALD. Of course, he had mountains of information. Is my hon. friend so green, is this erudite gentleman who comes from that northern country so green, that he did not know there never had been any location surveys made in that northern country? My hon. friend knew that, of course, and so did every other hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did not the hon. gentleman know that their campaign literature was headed, 'A New Transcontinental Railway for $13,000,000'?

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is living in the past.

Mr. TALBOT. He has not seen Halley's comet.

Mr. MACDONALD. In 1903, when the government came to this House and when the government went to the country asking for a mandate to build this road, they knew that no location survey for a railway had ever been made, and parliament knew that. They knew that there had been exploratory surveys, just as there are now exploratory surveys going on all over this northern country, certain information was coming into this government—mountains of information, if you like—and on that information Mr. Schreiber made this general estimate which was laid before parliament. Hon. gentlemen opposite were not satisfied with the information or with the estimate. They did not believe it then.

An hon. MEMBER. And they do not believe it now.

Mr. MACDONALD. And they do not believe it now. Let me give one or two statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite as to what their judgment was with reference to the cost of this Transcontinental railway just for the purpose of showing whether there was any deception in so far as they were concerned. The then hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), at page 9171 of 'Hansard,' said that the road would cost $73,000,000. Mr. Bennett said that it would cost $72,000,000. The hon. member for Lennox and Addington (Mr. Wilson) adopted the estimate of the Toronto 'Mail,' whose estimate was that it would cost $114,000,000. Then my hon. friend from Peel estimated that it would cost $100,000,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. At least.

Mr. MACDONALD. At least. So that my hon. friends are not at all put out when they find it costing more. Mr. Lefurgey stated that the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler), being the director of a railway company, ought to know, and that the hon. member for West Toronto believed that the railway would cost $280,000,000.

An hon. MEMBER. That is pretty near it.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friends knew better than we did apparently, and now they say that they were deceived.

Mr. BLAIN. What did Mr. Blair say it would cost?

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Lefurgey said that he did not think that the estimate of the hon. member for West Toronto was exactly right, but he thought it would cost from $120,000,000 to $150,000,000. The hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter) said that it would cost $150,000,000, and Mr. Clancy said that it would cost $120,000,000. Then the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) made up an estimate of $75,000,000, and later on he stated that no one could estimate within $10,000,000 what this railway, with four-tenths of one per cent grade, would cost. So that neither the leader of the opposition or anybody else was deceived by the statement that this railway was only going to cost $13,000,000, because every one of these hon. gentlemen were perfectly satisfied that it was going to cost over $100,000,000. The hon. leader of the opposition went so far as to say that nobody could tell within $10,000,000 what it was going to cost with a grade of four-tenths of one per cent. My hon. friend went to the country asserting this.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask my hon. friend whether he and other hon. gentlemen did not rise in their places and declare over and over again that our estimates were wildly and absurdly extravagant?

Mr. MACDONALD. I am surprised at my hon. friend the leader of the opposition putting forward a tu quoque argument like that. I would not expect that from the hon. gentleman; I would expect a back bencher to do that. Does the hon. gentleman remember that he made the statement that noboby could tell within $10,000,000 what it would cost.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, and I challenge any member of the government to do it.

Mr. MACDONALD. Now my hon. friend is complaining and he says that he was deceived as to the cost of the road.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have never said that I was deceived.

Mr. MACDONALD. What does this resolution say?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have said that there was an attempt, successful for the time being, to deceive the country.

Mr. TALBOT. The country was not deceived.

Mr. MACDONALD. Fortunately for this Canada of ours the people were not deceived by hon. gentlemen opposite on this question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was my hon. friend deceived as to the cost of the road?

Mr. MACDONALD. In regard to being deceived as to the cost of the road, I may say that I wanted to see this road built, no matter what it cost, for the benefit of Canada. I was not in the House at that time, but irrespective of the question of estimates or anything else—I would not have been bothered with estimates—I would have said that Canada must have this road, that Canada should have it in the interest of the country and in the interest of its future.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not quite an answer to the question. Will my hon. friend state whether he was deceived as to the cost of the road?

Mr. MACDONALD. Not at all, for the simple reason that the leader of the opposition assurely should know that while he fought as a maritime province man against the construction of the only link which will enable those little provinces down by the sea to participate in the development of the west and take their part in the national life of this country, I was prepared to stand for it no matter what the cost was.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will challenge my hon. friend to produce one line or word in support of what he has said in parliament or out of parliament.

Mr. MACDONALD. I was not in parliament at that time, but perhaps my hon. friend will tell me why he supported the resolution of his friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) who did not want the railway from Winnipeg to Moncton, but who wanted it to come to North Bay?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What resolution does my hon. friend refer to?

Mr. MACDONALD. Did you support it?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know of no such resolution.

Mr. MACDONALD. It was read by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Magrath) a few minutes ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was no such resolution read here to-day. I challenge the hon. gentleman to produce any such resolution that I supported.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is taking a very bold course. Let us have this question settled. Either the leader of the opposition was in favour of the construction of the railway from Winnipeg to Quebec or he was not. Was he in favour of it, or was he not?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I stated that I was in favour of it. I stated further that I was in favour of the construction of the road from Quebec to Moncton, and I stated in this House that I thought that the line from Quebec to Moncton ought to be constructed as part of the Intercolonial railway and not as a competing line with the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. FIELDING. Did my hon. friend not hear the hon. member for East Hastings state that every member of the opposition agreed with the policy that the road should terminate at North Bay?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not hear the hon. member for East Hastings state anything of the kind.

Mr. FIELDING. Is the hon. gentleman not aware that he said it?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not aware that he said it.

Mr. FIELDING. I will furnish the hon. gentleman with his words if he desires.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman can furnish them or not, as he likes. The hon. member for East Hastings spoke for himself, and I for myself never made any such statement as that. I spoke for myself in regard to that line; I made my views known on the floor of parliament both by speech and resolution, and I challenge the Minister of Finance to produce here or to quote one single word of mine in parliament or out of parliament that will support the statement which has been made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) and backed up by the Minister of Finance

Mr. FIELDING. I have no right to participate in the debate at this time, and I will sit down if I have not the permission of the hon. gentleman, but I state that the hon. gentleman for East Hastings made a speech in which he stated, amidst the applause of hon. gentlemen on that side—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FIELDING. I repeat my words that he made the statement amidst the applause of hon. gentlemen on that side of the House that what the opposition stood for was a line of railway from North Bay westward and not one mile of road east of North Bay. He was applauded, and 'Hansard' will show that he said in view of the cheers which he received. I am glad to see that I speak for the party.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I never before was aware that cheers in this House were the equivalent of resolutions. The hon. member for Pictou made the statement that there was a resolution, and the Minister of Finance has got up to support him in it.

Mr. FIELDING. I never said anything about a resolution.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Finance should not have arisen.

Mr. FIELDING. I am the best judge of that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should be seated when I rise to a point of order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Neither the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden), nor the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), has any right to the floor. The floor is now in the possession of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) and it can only be taken with his consent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. With all deference to you, Mr. Speaker, I had a perfect right to arise. I was——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Unless the hon. gentleman has himself risen to a point of order, he has not the right to address the House at this moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have always understood, subject to your ruling, that when I am absolutely misquoted in this House I have a right to get up to a point of personal explanation. That has been my understanding up to the present time, and I have yet to learn that that is not the reasonable and fair rule of this House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have given, I think, ample opportunity for personal explanation. It is not an absolute right of a member to rise to a point of personal explanation. He must rise to a point of order, otherwise he cannot rise. In this case, I have allowed the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to continue for some time. They have both interrupted the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald), who has the floor. There is no point of order before the Chair. There has been ample time for each hon. gentleman to make any personal explanation. I must now rule that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) has the floor and has the right to continue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have the right to rise to a point of order, and I do so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Certainly, if the hon. member rises to a point of order, he has the right to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I want to know whether, when I am deliberately misrepresented in this House, I have not the right to rise to correct that misrepresentation.

Mr. FIELDING. I wish to debate the point of order. I object to the hon. gentleman's rising under any such circumstances. He has a right or I have to give a personal explanation later on, but neither he nor I has a right to interrupt the hon. member except by his permission.

Mr. BOYCE. Then why did the hon. minister rise?

Mr. FIELDING. I rose to ask a question of the leader of the opposition, and I asked his permission to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was engaged in an endeavour, which I thought proper under the rules of this House, to put myself right in respect of a statement made with regard to me which was not founded on fact. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who was not concerned in that personal issue between the hon. member for Pictou and myself which I was endeavouring to settle with that gentleman in all courtesy, rose to make a political point and to interrupt me.

Mr. FIELDING. I rose to ask a question, and I asked the hon. gentleman's permission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was the point, and I say with respect to that, and with all deference to you, Mr. Speaker, that I was exercising only my just rights as a member of this House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have given my ruling in the case, and I still maintain that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) is entitled to the floor. Ample opportunity has been given to the hon. gentleman——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not deny that the hon. member for Pictou was entitled to the floor.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden)——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order; I have the floor and not the hon. gentleman. I have risen to order. The hon. gentleman has been given ample opportunity, more, I believe, than the rules of the House warrant under the circumstances, and I cannot allow the hon. gentleman to take the floor from the hon. member for Pictou, who even now stands waiting to continue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, may I put myself right with you? The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) had very courteously yielded the floor to me for the purpose of making a personal explanation. I would not have arisen unless he had yielded the floor to me. I thought I was perfectly right in arising to make a personal explanation when the hon. member for Pictou had yielded the floor to me, and yet, Sir, with some vehemence, that I do not think was called for by any action on my part, you have seen fit——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must not in that way criticise the action of the Speaker. The Speaker is giving the very best judgment he possibly can to the situation. The hon. gentleman has, I think, been repeatedly out of order. I do not acknowledge the right of the hon. member to interfere with the hon. member for Pictou, who has the floor, unless he has arisen to a point of order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not question that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not interrupt the Speaker in that manner. The hon. member for Pictou has the floor. I have given, as I said, ample opportunity for personal explanation. When it became a personal debate between the Minister of Finance and the leader of the opposition, I think I was amply justified in refusing to allow it to continue. The leader of the opposition has had ample opportunity to place himself in a correct light and is not, I think, at liberty to continue a debate with the Minister of Finance as to which of them was right as to certain statements of fact.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not claim—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I be permitted just to say this. I do not desire, with all deference to you, that you shall be under any misapprehension as to my attitude, I did not claim and I do not claim the right to take the floor away from the hon. member for Pictou, but when the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) yielded the floor to me for the purpose of enabling me to make a personal explanation, I thought, with all deference to you and I still think, that I had a perfect right to rise and make that personal explanation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I ruled and I rule again, that the hon. gentleman was given that opportunity, but he broke into a discussion with the Minister of Finance —possibly tempted to do so by the Minister of Finance—and when that point was reached, then, in my judgment, was the point to stop it. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has the floor, and I must now insist on his right to continue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman, I think, has time and again been out of order in this case, and I regret very much that it should be necessary to say so, but it must be closed at some point, and I presume that neither hon. gentleman is satisfied with the particular point at which it is stopped. However, I shall allow the hon. gentleman if he wishes——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will you do me the justice to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN——that I did not break into the discussion with the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Finance broke into a discussion with me and that is all I have to say about it.

Mr. FIELDING. I also must ask permission to put myself right. I asked the permission of the leader of the opposition to put a question to him. That was the beginning of my interruption. If he had said no, that would have ended it. I accept the ruling; I have nothing more to say about it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Nor have I—at present.

Mr. MACDONALD. If the hon. the leader of the opposition has again made friends with you, Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be permitted to go on. I desire to say that I welcome the leader of the opposition to the ranks of those who believe that it is in the interests of this country and has been in the interest of this country for the last seven years, that a line of railway should be built as proposed by this government from the city of Winnipeg down to the city of Moncton. The fact that he occupied that position was not altogether clear to me. I was under the idea that he had had two or three different policies at various stages of the game in regard to this matter, and it is therefore a matter of satisfaction to those of us in the maritime provinces, who realize the importance to us as a portion of Canada, in order that we may be identified with the future greatness of this whole country by means of this railway transportation—it is a matter of gratification to us to know now that the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is at one with us for the establishment and maintenance of that railway. But my hon. friend unfortunately through his followers comes to this House and declares that there is something wrong about this proposition for the reason that it was stated that this railway was going to cost Canada only $13,000,000. True, the next clause of the resolution asserts that it was going to cost $55,000,000 or $62,000,000 although both those statements were made in the same session of the same parliament. In that respect they are a little inconsistent, although the statements have no weight or reference to the proposition at the close of the resolution. This much is certain that my hon. friends on the other side vociferously asserted that the railway would cost all the way from $70,000,000 up to $200,000,000.

Mr. BARKER. No.

Mr. MACDONALD. I can refer my hon. friend to 'Hansard' where Mr. Lefurgey, speaking at page 9549 of 'Hansard', 1903, said that the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) estimated it at $280,000,000.

Mr. BARKER. Will you allow me to say one word?

Mr. MACDONALD. It is rather difficult to get along with the hon. gentlemen.

Mr. TALBOT. They cannot stand fire worth a cent.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman is referring to two distinct subjects. One is the cost to Canada and the other is the cost of the whole railway.

Mr. MACDONALD. Nobody wanted to introduce into this discussion any question or doubt about the cost, it is the hon. gentlemen who have been quibbling about the $13,000,000. Nobody ever thought until these gentlemen attempted to deceive the electorate of this country with their assertions that the government declared it was going to cost only $13,000,000, that that was what Canada was to pay for the railway, and yet my hon. friends are going back on that representation of their party in the back districts all over Canada where their supporters were asserting in 1908 that Laurier had promised to build this railway for $13,000,000 and it was costing over $100,000,000. When I am quoting the language used by Mr. Lefurgey in which he said that the hon. member for West Toronto stated that the road would cost $280,000,000, my hon. friend has no right to complain when I say that the people weighed every one of these statements and weighed the men who made them, and in 1904 decided that the country wanted this National Transcontinental railway built, and that the country must have it, no matter what it would cost. This government obeyed the mandate to construct it, and what did they do? What were estimates for, and why were estimates required after 1904, after the contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company had been ratified by this House and the country? Do hon. gentlemen opposite seriously mean to say that it was the duty of this government, or of the commission which they constituted, to spend millions of dollars of the people's money in boring holes and sinking pits all through that northern country, and in making exhaustive inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining how much this road which they had decided they were going to build was going to cost? Of what good was that going to be to the country? Of what purpose was it? The country had decided that this road had to be built, and built speedily. No great railway enterprise carried through in Canada during the last 30 years has had the kind of preliminary work which hon. gentlemen opposite contend ought to be had. The Canadian Pacific railway would not have made its way across this country to the Pacific ocean for 10 years after it did if the conditions which these hon. gentlemen impose as preliminary had been applied to the construction of that road. If we had sent troops of engineers through the northern country to dig pits and bore holes in order to satisfy the quibblers on that side of the House, there would not to-day have been a single contract let for the construction of the National Transcontinental railway. This country would have been put to the expense of millions of dollars in getting information for no purpose whatever. The only estimates this country required were for the purpose of enabling the commission to figure out the tenders in order to decide which was the lowest for the different sections. They were of no other value to the country; and when hon. gentlemen talk about estimates as to what this railway was going to cost or was not going to cost, they must feel on reflection that they are not only deceiving themselves, but are trying to deceive the honest people of this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should not attribute to any hon. member of this House a desire to deceive.

Mr. MACDONALD. I can say, I think, Mr. Speaker, that they may deceive themselves. Then I say that hon. gentlemen opposite need not try to deceive themselves any longer with the delusion that it would have been to the interest of the people of this country to have spent fifteen or twenty millions of dollars to find out what this railway was going to cost. If that is so, we might as well clear the air of a lot of cobwebbs that have got into the discussion of this question for reasons of political partisanship. My hon. friend from Simcoe quoted to-day from a commission, a partisan commission, which sat in 1880, for the deliberate purpose of imputing some blame to the government of Alexander Mackenzie in connection with the portion of the road which they built between 1874 and 1878. But there is to-day a living witness who spoke then and who speaks to-day, a man whose position as an engineer of this country is unquestionable and has been unquestioned during all his long career. He was charged by gentlemen before that commission with having done wrong to the interest of the country in going ahead and doing just what the engineers of the Transcontinental railway are doing to-day. He did not go out and dig holes in the ground for the purpose of finding out what the conditions were, because he would have needed to do that every ten feet from end to end of this continent; and this is what he said about the value of that kind of work in answer to an inquiry of the commission. I refer to Sir Sandford Fleming, who in a letter to the Secretary of State dated May 1, 1882, said:

> The commission proceed to blame me for not 'learning before locating and contracting for the construction of the road-bed, the nature of the material which was likely to be met with in the prosecution of the work. The serious omission to which we have here called attention would not have occurred, had the chief engineer and his subordinates acted on the elementary principles of railway engineering.'
> The commission appear to have made some researches in engineering literature in support of their accusation, and they base their criticism on the views expressed in a text book written by a professor in a college in Scotland.
> They quote Professor Rankin, and lay great stress upon the necessity of 'Trial pits and borings,' 'in order to ascertain the strata of the ground, borings are the less costly in time, labour and damage to ground, &c.'
> Do the commission mean that in equipping the various surveying parties where stores of food and clothing, with shelter, with axemen and axes to force a passage through the forest, and with packmen to carry supplies for all, that I should still further have increased the impediment? In all seriousness do they mean that I should have added boring implements and gangs of men to work them, with the additional food shelter which these extra men would need? Suppose I had so acted, would not the commission have had some ground for censuring me for absurdly wasting public money?

It is one thing to cite a sentence from a college text book, to sustain a far fetched argument; it is another to know what is reasonably expedient, and to carry into execution what is really practicable.

The Commission, sitting in their room at Ottawa, must have been reminded of matters which attracted attention twenty years ago and in which one of its members filled a prominent place. I refer to the enormous amount sunk in the foundations for the parliament buildings, by which the estimate and appropriation were so largely increased. On that occasion the principal officer of the Department of Public Works was censured for not having an examination made of the ground where the buildings were to be placed. The principal officer referred to is now one of my accusers, and he must know perfectly well that the cases are totally different. The examination of the ground for a massive building is an every day occurrence; that of the site at Ottawa might have been accomplished at any time in less than a fortnight. In the other case, such examinations are not common; they are not as a rule deemed necessary in this country, and in all probability, had they been ordered, it would have been necessary to delay construction for another year.

The Commission in one sentence pass censure because the surveying parties were unnecessarily expensive; in another they blame me for not making them more expensive still by adding more men, by dragging through forest and swamp, across rivers and lakes, the tools and machinery to make borings.

In a country like England, with good roads and good inns everywhere, and where land damages are an important factor, the practice may without difficulty be observed, but it certainly is not common in America.

At quite a different stage of the work, viz:—as construction advances, boring is sometimes resorted to, but the process is slow and tedious. A whole summer was spent in making the borings at one river crossing on the Intercolonial railway.

I have yet to learn that the practice, which the Commission condemned me for not observing is observed anywhere. I ask, is there at this moment any gang of men with boring implements, 'ascertaining the strata of the ground' on any of the new lines under survey in Ontario or Quebec?

I state, advisedly, that notwithstanding all the experience of the past there is not a single boring instrument in use to-day in the manner and for the purpose referred to by the Commission on any one of the surveys now being made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at any point between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

Here we have an illustration of how the Canadian Pacific railway was built, without any of these preliminary surveys carried on at an enormous expense. The country had decided to build the railway, and the engineers went out and made preliminary surveys merely to obtain sufficient information to enable the government to call for tenders in order to decide which was the lowest tender. That is the only purpose for which estimates of that kind are obtained by any railway constructors in Canada, or in the United States, according to the testimony of engineers whose position and knowledge are undoubted. If such extensive preliminary surveys as hon. gentlemen opposite suggest had been made, we would have hardly started with the work of construction to-day; the contracts would not have been let. The link between Fort William and Winnipeg, which every one, especially in the west, was anxious to see, instead of being completed as it is to-day, would not have been begun; because if you had to get an estimate which would indicate what the exact cost was to be, the whole line would have had to be cleared from end to end, and would have had to be cross-sectioned. The result would have been that it would have been an utter waste of time and money; and moreover it would not have enabled this railway to have been built by the country one cent cheaper than it has been.

Those statements cannot be questioned. There is no doubt about them. I am sure any one on reflection will see their effect and realize that if we had engaged in all that preliminary work it would have given to the country no information of a satisfactory character; once the railway had been decided upon, it would not have enabled us to get the road built one cent cheaper for the reason that the final locations having been made, the construction work having been started, the earth had to be removed, the loose rock had to be taken away and the solid rock had to be blasted, these had all to be classified and the prices had to be determined and it would not have made one cent of difference, if a preliminary location had been made to arrive at these results. This government went on and appointed a commission and an engineering staff was formed. They took Mr. Lumsden, who, was a man in my judgment too old to deal actively with a great undertaking of the kind, but whose previous record had been good; they took Mr. Butler as deputy chief engineer, and his record of success and his position to-day indicates that he was a man in whom the country should have full confidence, both in his integrity and in his equipment for dealing with a great work of that kind. Mr. Butler was the man who drew the specifications, it was he who prepared them. Then, as the under engineer, we have in section (B) when the work was first begun, Mr. Doucet. Mr. Doucet is a man who has had 25 years experience as an engineer in this country. He is a graduate of the Royal Military College. He is a man who in addition to his engineering experience did service for his country in the Riel rebellion in the Northwest, where he distinguished himself, and was wounded in active service. His whole record has been an absolutely clean one all through his business career, and no man who knows Mr. Doucet, and he is known not only in the province of Quebec, but throughout the whole of Canada, will question his capacity or integrity as an engineer. Then another district engineer was Mr. Poulin, who had served for long years with the Canadian Pacific railway in the days of its government construction and with the company afterwards, in South America, and all over Canada, who had been connected with various enterprises, and had spent 34 years of his life in fitting himself to carry on this great work. Both of these men are Canadians. Could you find in this country anywhere, two men with better records than those two to put in charge of the different districts they had to construct.

Now my hon. friend (Mr. Magrath) is a true apostle of the doctrine of 1904. He did not think that the railway to the east should be built, and in addition to that, he did not think we should have this four-tenths per cent grade. Too good a road, he said, for Canada, we should have gone on and spent our money, putting the rails down in any old way so that trains could run over them and afterwards the country could spend a lot more money in getting better grades. That, Mr. Speaker, would be a penny wise and pound foolish policy. Why, two years ago, I was in a position to know, that the Canadian Pacific railway, in one year spent over $40,000,000 in improving the construction of their road.

Mr. HUGHES. Not in re-constructing.

Mr. MACDONALD. Well the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. HUGHES. Double tracking its lines.

Mr. MACDONALD. Two years ago the Canadian Pacific railway spent $40,000,000 in improving the construction of its road, and at this very moment the Ontario government proposes to spend between one and two million dollars in reducing the grades on the Temiskaming and Ontario railway, in order to connect with this Grand Trunk Pacific railway of ours and in order to get the four-tenths per cent grade, so that they may haul up and down to the main line. They are spending this year on that comparatively small line, nearly two million dollars. Would it have been wise for Canada to have gone on with a policy of building any old kind of a line, a line with poor gradients and dangerous curvatures and all that? Is it not better, would it not be better, did not the country stand for it in 1904 and 1908, and would hon. gentlemen in their honest hearts not say that if we are going to build a national highway, let us build it of the very best, so that we will have a connection between east and west maintained under conditions the most favourable? There should be no difficulties of transportation anywhere. Hon. gentlemen say, Oh, but the percentage of cost is so much greater than the estimate. I do not know what estimate they are making their comparison on. I find that at various times within the last 20 years, the Canadian Pacific railway, on the scheduled rates in the northern part of Ontario and throughout the west, paid from 20 to 65 per cent in different cases more than what was estimated in the preliminary estimates at the time the contracts were let. The figures are at hand, and if necessary I can quote them, giving the contracts. Hon. members opposite, however, make an estimate and declare that the disproportion is very great. There has never been anything yet of an estimate brought down to this House with any degree of authenticity or indicating that there was any work put behind it from the time of the final location, with the exception of the estimate brought down by the minister two years ago of one hundred and fourteen millions. Those estimates were made up between November, 1905, and January, 1906, and they did not include in a great many cases some of the unforeseen difficulties that were encountered as the road went along. Let me give you one or two illustrations of the conditions that have arisen in some of those sections that show how legitimately and naturally the cost of construction is necessarily greater than it would be determined in any preliminary survey. After the estimate was prepared, a large contract was let in contracts numbers 9 and 10 on section B. There had only been a first location of 90 miles out of the 150. On the other 60 there was not then a preliminary location, no revised location, no final location, but basing the estimate of the balance of the 150 miles on the information they had from the 90 they made estimates which were sent up to the commission. Now, what followed when they came to the revised location and to the final location? As of necessity it would follow anywhere, in going into a new country under conditions like these, from the 56th to the 65th mile the final location was changed two miles from where it had been in the original preliminary location, because it was necessary to get the four-tenths per cent grade. Of course, if the road could have gone right along on the preliminary location it would not have been necessary to make a change, but in order to get the four-tenths per cent grade, it was necessary that the location should be shifted two miles. Then they came to the Milieu river, and about nine miles of location was changed there, shifted about three miles on account of the continuity of the river bank and in order to get the grade it cost $427,000.

That cost $427,000. At La Tuque, 12 miles of the railway was changed, causing a diversion of about 6 miles and adding 4 miles to the distance in order to get the proper grade and avoid the curves, which were difficult. This cost an extra $550,000. At the St. Maurice river, there was riprapping necessary on account of falling bank, to protect the track from the river, which is deep at that point, and this cost $252,000. Other changes needed owing to the depth of the water and the extra amount of earth to be taken down cost $238,000 more. These things were necessary. Every hon. gentleman who has studied the question or who has talked with the engineers concerning railway construction, must have learned that these things were the necessary result of conditions and the endeavour to get these gradients and curves. It is known that the only information in making the first estimate was that furnished by a preliminary location. The result was that reports sent in by the divisional and resident engineers when the tenders were made showed a largely increased cost in the work. My hon. friend says that this should not have been the case, that they should have spent the money to go out and make an estimate. But I have shown very clearly that there is no ground for that position, that it is utterly untenable. There were estimates before the specifications were issued in order that the the great enterprise might be actively undertaken. When the estimates were first made, it was with the intention of having momentum or velocity grades of one per cent. Subsequently, Mr. Lumsden, the chief engineer, gave instructions that these were not to be allowed, that there must be a uniform grade of four-tenths of one per cent. That also occasioned extra expenditure. In the estimates on which the contracts were made, there was no estimate for train haul; the estimate was for borrow, which, as the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) knows, would be about half as cheap as train haul. It was necessary to have the train haul in order to get the filling, and this cost $1,211,000 in the 150 miles of section 'B' alone. Then, there were divisional yards. The location of these could not be determined in any preliminary estimate; they had to be located as the engineers finished the location of the road, and in locating them regard had to be had to local conditions. This cost $513,000 additional. I have referred to these matters merely for the purpose of indicating samples of what would necessarily occur in the location of a transcontinental line. The instances I have given were all in Quebec, but let me give an illustration in Ontario—on section 'F.' There the estimates were prepared by Major Hodgins in the very early stage. They were revised by him and reduced a great deal, according to his statement. But what were the conditions under which they worked in northern Ontario? There, on account of the frost in the ground, and the coldness of the weather, there were practically only four months of the year in which operations could be carried on free from frost. The hon. member for South Lanark, with his experience of railway direction, would know that this is a material element in the work. And it is a fact that has been substantiated on oath and can be proven at any time that the 150 miles of the McArthur contract of section 'F' running around the north of Lake Superior is said to be the most difficult work of construction of its kind on the continent—far exceeding in difficulty the building of the Canadian Pacific railway around the north shore of Lake Superior. When we understand this we realize some of the difficulties that were met in carrying on this great enterprise. Well, we heard a great deal about classification, but if the earth and loose rock and solid rock were there, they had to be taken out, and this country had to pay for it on the certificate of the engineers who were there overseeing. But when over-classification is spoken of, it is to be remembered that the present chief engineer of the Transcontinental railway has stated on oath that there is not two per cent of the classification of the whole Transcontinental which is in question. With all this talk about royal commissions and investigations, after careful supervision, not only on the part of the government engineers, but on the part of the engineers representing the Grand Trunk Pacific, who have to pay the interest on the cost of construction, not two per cent of the whole classification of that railway is in question between the engineers at this time. Now, of course, I feel that my hon. friends are very well assured of that. The course of my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in moving this resolution is an indication of that. I know that we ought not to impute motives, and perhaps I was unkind in suggesting motives in the remarks I made in opening. But I cannot but think that the attitude of the hon. member indicates that he has learned some of these facts, which some of us have learned who have looked into the matter a little. But, unfortunately, the press outside cannot be controlled. My hon. friend's friends on the press will go on asserting things without the slightest justification. For instance, I have here a copy of the Toronto 'News' of 19th April, referring to sections 'B' and 'F' under flaring headlines: 'Startling conditions on Transcontinental—Table of facts submitted to Canadian people—Public opinion gathering force for honest administration of great undertaking.' And so on, with these headlines, which are so easily set up, and which form so important a feature of an opposition newspaper in these latter days. Let me direct attention to a couple of statements made here which are so wide of the mark that they deserve special mention. Referring to residency 10 on section 'A,' they say:

A cutting between stations 6,307 and 6,310 residency 10, contains 106,005 cubic yards classified as 23 per cent solid rock. It is described by Mr. Woods and his assistant, Mr. Boulton, as earth, clay, gravel and a few boulders. They report that it should be classified as 10 per cent solid rock, 60 per cent loose rock and 30 per cent common excavation. It works out as follows:

The country pays..	$ 80,774
It should cost..	62,602
Over-payment..	17,172

The cut on residency 10, given as between stations 6,307 and 6,310, should be stations 5307-5320. Yardage handled has been called 106,005 cubic yards, whereas it is actually 11,605 cubic yards, or more than nine times smaller. The gentleman who is writing this classification story for the press added a matter of 90,000 yards to the statement in order to make it read a little better and to afford some groundwork for his headlines. The classification of this is 22½ per cent solid rock, 61½ per cent loose rock, and 16 per cent common excavation. The cut has cost $6,148.17. You will notice that the loss to the country is said to have been $17,172, whereas the engineer shows that the whole thing cost only $6,148.17, at a cost to the contractor who took it of $9,038, so that he lost about $2,200 in making it up. I do not wish to delay the House, but we could run through the whole schedule in the same way. Let me direct your attention to another thing in the same paper, entitled 'A borrow pit':

Another startling case in residency 17 is the case of a borrow pit. The July estimate returned 149,000 cubic yards loose rock, costing $89,400. The engineer is not so specific as to classification in this case, but by his description of the picking, shovelling and ploughing which he found in progress, he evidently means that the work was not entitled to classification—was common excavation in fact, and should only cost one-half the amount allowed.

This is what the engineer says about that:

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD.

On residency 17. Borrow pit station 1266-1270. The article states that there was 149,000 cubic yards loose rock, costing $89,400. The fact is, as can be seen by looking over the July estimates, that the returns of that date were 14,900 cubic yards at 35 cents, $5,215, or $84,185 less than stated in the Toronto 'News' item.

The addition of a naught at the end of a statement makes quite a difference in the force of a newspaper article, as it does in the amount of money involved. I could take you through these other districts where we have had comments made on over-classification, and over returns, and when I tell you that the present chief engineer of the Transcontinental railway has sworn that all this talk about over-classification was a tempest in a teapot, and that not less than two per cent of the classification on the whole road was in question at this moment, you can see how much warrant there is for hon. gentlemen talking about a royal commission. Now there is only one way in which this country could be cheated in the quantity of earth or rock taken out, and as to classification, and that would be by means of a conspiracy between the district engineer and each one of his subordinates. Every one would need to be in the conspiracy, and if there was any false allowance of solid rock in any residency, it would be speedily known by the other men who are working alongside and the proposition has been made on behalf of hon. gentlemen opposite, though not in this House, that on each one of these districts these reputable men to whom I have referred, the head of each district, have entered into a conspiracy to defraud the government by over-classification, and wrongful classification. You can readily see what an absurd proposition that would be. Not only that, but the professional reputation of every one of these men in position would be forever shattered at the instance of any one of these men who could at any time disclose the facts. To suppose that there exists any such condition in connection with this work of construction, is to my mind so utterly ridiculous that, having regard to the ordinary conditions that exists among men to-day, I marvel that presumably intelligent gentlemen like our hon. friends opposite should ever have given it credence. I am glad to note that my hon. friend from Simcoe does not take the responsibility of suggesting any cause of that kind for this commission, but he has confined himself to these extra estimates and figures to which he has treated the House, and which I have not been able to understand, and I do not think anybody else, but himself could understand. I say, Mr. Speaker, that in view of these facts, which I have gathered hurriedly to-night, and in view of the further fact that no reasons have been presented to justify the conclusion that a royal commission should be appointed, I submit that hon. gentlemen opposite have not seriously put forward this proposition, and that it should not be treated seriously by this House, as I am sure it will not be when we come to decide upon it

I am at a loss to understand why the clause should have been tacked on to the conclusion of this resolution, which asserts that 'the government should take immediate and effective action to investigate the danger of a diversion of Canadian traffic to foreign ports, and to prevent such diversion.' Judging from the remarks of my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Magrath), I would understand that the talk about the resolution was only put in for filling, and that this clause is the meat of the whole thing; because the hon. member for Medicine Hat read some menacing editorials in American newspapers showing that those gentlemen had awakened to the fact that Canada possesses the best half of this continent. It is gratifying to know that they have discovered that fact down there. But I want to say that it is rather peculiar to see my hon. friends becoming so solicitous about trade through Canadian ports. I did not see so much anxiety here a year or two ago when some hon. gentlemen from the maritime provinces were pressing upon the attention of the House the importance of adopting a proposition that the British preference should be limited to trade which came through Canadian ports. Some hon. gentlemen who will vote for this resolution to-night would not, or did not, manifest any particular enthusiasm for the proposition that the trade which came to Canada from the mother country, and which was entitled to receive the benefit of the preference, should only receive it if it came through Canadian ports. It may be that they had had a change of heart, I trust they have; it would be a matter of great satisfaction to know that a good many of the hon. gentlemen opposite stand with us on that proposition. And let me remind my hon. friends who are solicitous about this last portion of the resolution, that were it not for this government proposition whereby this additional Transcontinental railway is to be provided from Winnipeg down to Moncton, connecting with our maritime points through present and additional railway facilities, this proposition of trade through Canadian ports, so far as the Grand Trunk is concerned, would never be a matter of consideration at all. I cannot understand why this matter should be injected into this discussion, in view of the contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific, which hon. gentlemen are fully acquainted with, and which guarantees, so far as any thing can be guaranteed in a bond, the pledge of that great enterprise that the trade going to and fro over this road shall, as far as possible, go through Canadian ports. I am satisfied myself to leave that matter in the hands of this government, as a maritime province man, the government who initiated the idea of giving us a transcontinental railway, and making this Canada of ours one country from ocean to ocean; I am willing to leave in the hands of this government the protection of Canadian interests as regards our maritime ports. I think the last clause of this resolution is entirely out of place in the resolution itself, and is one that will not be accepted by the House.

Mr. CROTHERS. If the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) will allow me, I would like to ask him if he thinks he is in a proper state of mind this evening to give a fair and impartial judgment on the report of the Lumsden Committee?

Mr. MACDONALD. My judgment on that matter is found in the report of the Lumsden Committee. which I am willing to discuss at any time with the hon gentleman.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, let me, in the first place, apologize to my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) for having been the unfortunate cause of a considerable hiatus in his speech. I asked him a question in the course of his remarks, and, with his usual courtesy, he was good enough to yield the floor to me for the purpose of settling a matter of personal difference as to a fact. I did not anticipate at the time that my hon. friend the member for Pictou would have been interrupted to the extent that ensued. Otherwise I would have awaited my turn to speak without putting a question to him at that time. I can only say that the extent of the interruption was, to a certain extent, a matter beyond my control and that I did not anticipate when I asked the question that the interruption would be so prolonged.

Now, my hon. friend from Pictou has said that he gave judgment on the Lumsden charges last night. I would be inclined to think that he would have been a little more accurate if he had said that he had given judgment last year. We have heard a good deal about the condition of mind of those hon. gentlemen who have undertaken to become impartial judges on this question, and I think that the hon. member for Pictou, even if he had not had the advantage of sitting on that committee and making that which he evidently believes to have been a very thorough and complete investigation, would have made pretty much the same speech to-night as that which he has made after sitting as a member of that committee.

tenders which deal with the price of this road, not as a lump sum, but which tender for its construction at so much per yard of solid rock, so much per yard of loose rock and so much per yard of common earth excavation, it is absolutely unnecessary for any government to have the slightest information for the purpose of determining which is the lowest tender. It is inconceivable that men of reasonable business experience, such as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) and the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), could possibly arrive at such a conclusion. Take three tenders, one one the highest in loose rock, one the highest in common earth excavaton; how is it possible for any government, corporation or company to come to a conclusion as to which is the highest tender or which is the lowest tender unless they have some reliable information in advance as to how much there will be of solid rock, how much there will be of loose rock and how much there will be of common excavation? We do not need engineers to tell us that it is impossible. We can see it for ourselves. You must know how much solid rock, you must know how much loose rock, you must know how much common earth excavation there is before you can tell whether tender No. 1 is higher or lower than tender No. 2. There can be no gainsaying of that statement, and all the equivocation, argument and humbugging, that any man in or out of this House may employ cannot possibly change that conclusion in the mind of any reasonable man.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that there were no borings, that there were no cross sections and nothing in the possession of the government which enabled them to tell whether one or the other was the highest or the lowest tender. If that is so he has uttered the gravest condemnation against the government that has been uttered by any hon. member in this House. We were told by members of the government sitting on the treasury benches, over and over again, not only that they had reasonable information in regard to this matter, but that they had information which enabled them to give the assurance to this parliament and to the people of the country that the cost of that road could not exceed a certain sum. A member of the government, the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), at that time Minister of the Interior, said that it was of no use for the opposition to laugh at the statement of members of the government in regard to $13,000,000 being a sufficient sum to cover every responsibility of this country in connection with the construction of that road. The member for Brandon, speaking for the government in that regard, said that it was an absolutely proved and demonstrated fact that the liability of this country could not by one single cent exceed $13,000,000. I am not giving his exact words but I am giving a fair and reasonable interpretation of the language which he used on that occasion.

The hon. member for Pictou practically says that all this has been investigated sufficiently and that there is no further need of investigation. He speaks of classification. Does he recall the statement of Mr. H. A. Woods, assistant chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, in regard to classification? It will be found at pages 2675 to 2677 of unrevised 'Hansard.'

Mr. MACDONALD. Is that the letter written by Mr. Woods, dated October 7, 1907, because he withdrew the statement.

Mr. LANCASTER. That does not matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who withdrew the statement?

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Woods.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When?

Mr. MACDONALD. Last night.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend say that Mr. Woods declared that these statements over his signature were absolutely false?

Mr. MACDONALD. No, he did not say that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What did he say?

Mr. MACDONALD. He said that statements had been made by him there and that he had made a mistake in regard to them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Every one of these statements?

Mr. MACDONALD. I do not suppose he went into them all in detail. He referred to the statement to the effect that there were directions from the superior that wrong classification must be changed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the words used by Mr. Woods upon which my hon. friend relies?

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend will find that when we come to discuss the report of this committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am sorry that the recollection of my hon. friend, which goes to a certain extent, does not go farther. I have the statement here of Mr. H. A. Woods, which has been quoted over and over again in this House, brought down in a government return, and which declares that the classification upon this road in more than one of its sections and on more than one of its contracts was so abso-

Take the cutting from stations 5818 to 5826, estimated 71 per cent solid rock and 29 per cent loose rock. Slopes taken out 1½ to 1.

That means common earth excavation, as every man knows who is at all familiar with railway construction. Then he goes on to say:

Very little ledge in this cut.

What is the meaning of the word 'ledge' as used by engineers?—solid rock. Therefore, this is classified as 71 per cent solid rock, when there is very little solid rock at all. He continues:

Some large boulders but a very large percentage is common excavation.

Yet, this is classified and proposed to be paid for by this government on the basis of 71 per cent, or nearly three-fourths solid rock. The hon. member for Pictou in the face of illustration after illustration such as that, declares to this House upon his responsibility as a public man, upon his responsibility as a representative of the people, that there is absolutely no cause whatever for an investigation into the circumstances disclosed by Mr. Woods over and over again in regard to the construction of this railway.

The Minister of Railways referred in a somewhat sneering way to the industry of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). The hon. member for South Simcoe has his reputation in this House, he has the reputation of being an exceedingly industrious and capable member of parliament. His industry is not to be sneered at by the Minister of Railways, who might very well employ for a better knowledge of his own department some of that industry which he sneers at in the hon. member for South Simcoe. He says that the industry of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) was only equalled by his imagination. Imagine a statement such as that coming from a member of the government which had declared that this whole road from Moncton to Winnipeg would cost no more than $51,300,000. What wealth of imagination is that! I would ask whether the sneer of the Minister of Railways was one which we might properly have expected from that hon. gentleman in making an answer to one of the gravest indictments that has ever been levelled against this government or any government in respect to the construction of a railway or any other work? The Minister of Railways pumped up a good deal of fictitious indignation in regard to this. He spoke of articles written in the public press by hired men. Might I ask to whom he was alluding in that statement? Did he intend to suggest that any hon. gentleman on this side had hired any one to write articles about this railway?

Some hon. MEMBER. Answer.

Mr. GRAHAM. If I am required to answer I say distinctly and positively not that members of the opposition in this House, I did not make any such suggestion—but I say that members of the party to which my hon. friend belongs, and which he leads engaged men to write articles condemning the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, and these articles were distributed throughout the country by the cart load.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my hon. friend state who they were?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is now asking for something that he knows no hon. gentleman would give.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I appreciate the considerations which animate my hon. friend, and I do not press him. But at times when similar statements are made by members on this side we have had loud shouts of 'name, name,' from the other side, and I would suppose that what is a fair question from one side would be a perfectly fair question from the other.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not objecting to the question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend is not objecting to the question, but it is difficult, as in a good many other cases, to get him to give any answer to very pertinent questions. I may tell him that so far as I am aware no person with the knowledge of any member on this side of the House ever did anything of the kind. I declare on my responsibility as a public man that if any person connected with the party with which I am allied ever did anything of that kind, to-night is the first occasion on which I ever heard of it. I know nothing of it, and, with all deference to the Minister of Railways, I still have a great deal of doubt as to whether any such thing was ever done.

Mr. GRAHAM. I made the statement publicly the day it was brought to my attention, without any qualification, in Guelph. It was fully reported in the papers and has never to this moment been denied by any one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What statement?

Mr. GRAHAM. The statement I have made to my hon. friend.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That hired men were doing it?

Mr. GRAHAM. The statement I made a few moments ago, so far as I remember, I made in the city of Guelph.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was not brought to my attention. All I have to say is that so far as I am concerned or have any knowledge I give it the most emphatic and direct denial. My hon. friend said that the figures presented by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) were misleading, and he would undertake to prove it. I leave it to the judgment of any hon. friend as to whether he did prove it or whether he had got within 1,000 miles of proving it when he arrived at the end of his speech. What was his position? He said there was a substructure, a superstructure and a tower to this resolution. Well neither the substructure nor the superstructure, nor the tower had any such fate as that which befell many of the structures of this government. My hon. friend, with all the dynamite of his very forcible, and somewhat vehement speech was not able to disturb either the substructure or the superstructure or the tower and his efforts from beginning to end were absolutely and utterly unavailing.

The minister referred to the clause of this resolution which speaks of $13,000,000 having been put forward by the Prime Minister as the total cost to Canada for the construction of this road. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) put in the resolution exactly the words which were used by the Prime Minister. Does the Minister of Railways deny that? He does not. Further than that, he gave in this resolution a statement respecting that sum of $13,000,000 which is infinitely fairer than the statement which I hold under my hand, distributed by the hundreds of thousands of pamphlets in the campaign literature of hon. gentlemen opposite in 1904. Does the Minister of Railways deny that? Because if he does I will read it to him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (reading):

Transcontinental railway for $13,000,000.

Further down.

The feature of the bargain in regard to which most of this is done is the financial arrangement. It is an actual fact, and an indisputable fact, that $13,000,000 will cover every cent of the country's expenditure in connection with the railway. If $8,853,502 were invested to-day in some insurance or investment company it would have grown large enough by the time the railway is completed to actually pay all the expenditure the country will make.

Mr. GRAHAM.

The Minister of Railways referred, as he has on other occasions, to the cost of other roads. He told us that in New South Wales, in France, in Germany, in Russia, in Austria-Hungary, in Great Britain, and in the United States, the average cost of railways was very much in excess of the estimate which was brought down by the government of this country to parliament in 1903 and 1904, and in some cases was a good deal greater than the actual cost of the National Transcontinental railway to-day. I asked the Minister of Railways what I thought to be a fair question, I asked him whether the government in 1903 or 1904, had taken the trouble to look into the records of the Department of Railways and Canals, and ascertain that fact before they made in parliament their statement with regard to the probable cost of this road. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways has referred to three hon. gentlemen on this side as having run away from the Lumsden Committee. Who was it that did the running away when I put that question to the Minister of Railways? I would have thought that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals was a big enough man not to run away from that. What answer did he make to me? The same answer that he made to me on another occasion—he said he was not a member of the government at the time, and therefore, he could not give me any information on it. That was a bold way to meet that question, which was a very pertinent one. If the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House now rely on the cost of other railways in Canada and other countries, is it not legitimate to ask why they did not take the cost of all these other railways into consideration, and give the House that information at that time? The Minister of Railways and Canals gave me no answer to that question, but took refuge in the statement that he was not a member of the government then. Surely he knows that he is invested with political responsimility for all that this government did in 1903 and 1904, and I would have expected him to have given me a bold and straightforward answer either one way or the other.

Let us come to the next point. He states that no portion of the Quebec bridge should be taken into consideration in dealing with the cost of this road. I have under my hand the statement of his colleague the Minister of Finance, made in 1903 or 1904, and recorded in 'Hansard', in which he fixed the cost of the Quebec bridge at $4,500,000 as far as the country was concerned, and declared that it would be fair and reasonable to charge $2,000,000, or four-ninths of the total cost, to the Transcontinental railway. Whom are we to believe—the Minister of Finance at that time, or the Minister of Railways at the present? My hon. friend from South Simcoe did not take the course which I think he might very well have taken, of charging the whole cost of the Quebec bridge against the National Transcontinental railway, which could not become an accomplished fact unless there were a bridge built across the St. Lawrence river. He took the moderate course of accepting the statement of the Minister of Finance, speaking on behalf of the government in that regard, and included four-ninths of the cost of the bridge instead of the whole cost.

Then the Minister of Railways and Canals went on to a very remarkable statement. He said that the contract of 1903 was the united act of the government and the opposition. That is to say, section 7 and section 47 were not the action of the government at all, but the united act of the government and the opposition. Why, my hon. friend is possessed of an ignorance in regard to this matter that is absolutely appalling. Has he not read this contract even enough to know that it was made by the government before the measure was presented to parliament at all? They signed, sealed, executed and delivered the contract on the 29th of July, 1903, and the Bill was introduced into parliament on the 30th of July, 1903, and I may tell my hon friend that I had no part in it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Did not parliament ratify that contract, and if hon. gentlemen opposite objected to that part of the contract, should they not have said so in the customary way? By not saying so, does the hon. leader of the opposition not agree with me that they agreed to ratification of the contract with that clause in it?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my hon. friend meant that in the course of his speech, he has the very unhappy faculty of saying what he does not mean.

Mr. LENNOX. And the Minister of Finance said that they could not alter one line of the contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Absolutely nothing. It was declared in 1903 by the Minister of Finance and by other members of the government, that not one line in that contract could be changed; and yet we had the spectacle of their coming back the next year and presenting to parliament another contract containing terms by which the first contract was changed in some particulars in favour of the railway company and not in favour of the country. My hon. friend declared, for the reason he has mentioned, that we were committed in some way to the abnegation of all our rights in connection with this expenditure, because he said that section 7 and section 47 afforded the best possible remedy, and indeed the only remedy for determining whether or not there had been any mal-administration or extravagance in connection with this contract. I want to tell my hon. friend that I do not concur in the slightest in that view. Section 7 does not deal with expenditure at all. It deals with adherence to specifications, and it says that if there is any question as to that, such question shall be determined by engineers. In order to make my point perfectly clear, I will quote that section:

> In order to insure, for the protection of the company as lessees of the eastern division of the said railway, the economical construction thereof in such a manner that it can be operated to the best advantage, it is hereby agreed that the specifications for the construction of the eastern division shall be submitted to, and approved of by, the company before the commencement of the work, and that the said work shall be done according to the said specifications and shall be subject to the joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of the chief engineer appointed by the government and the chief engineer of the company, and, in the event of difference as to the specifications, or in case the said engineers shall differ as to the work, the question in dispute shall be determined by the said engineers and a third arbitrator, to be chosen in the manner provided in paragraph four of this agreement.

If I understand the English language, that is not a provision for arbitration in respect of cost; it is a provision for arbitration in respect of the character of the construction of the road and adherence to the specifications according to which the road was to be built; it is that, and nothing more. My hon. friend did not refer, as he might have done with a great deal more force, to section 47 of the agreement. I am bound to say that while he sneers at the hon. member for South Simcoe, a little of the industry of that hon. member would be of great assistance to the hon. Minister of Railways, as it would enable him to find out that there are clauses in this agreement which he might have used for the purpose of his argument, but which he does not cite at all, while he does cite clauses which have no relation to the point he is dealing with. Section 47 deals with the question of cost, but it has never been invoked or acted upon up to this time. It is as follows:

> Any dispute which may arise as to the meaning of construction of this agreement, or as to the performance of any of the obligations of either of the parties to this agreement, or as to working expenditure or cost of construction, shall if not herein otherwise provided for, be determined by the award of a single arbitrator, if the parties concur in his appointment, or if not, by the award of three arbitrators, one of whom shall be appointed by the government, one by the company, and the third by the two so appointed, or, in the case of their being unable to agree, by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, and the award of a majority of such three arbitrators, shall be final.

If my hon. friend had understood the contract on which he is relying, he would have referred to that, but he took care not to refer to it, perhaps for the reason that it has never been invoked up to the present time. But it would not make any difference so far as my point of view is concerned if it had been invoked. What does section 47 do? It simply creates a tribunal for the purpose of determining certain questions between the Grand Trunk Pacific Company and the government. If that tribunal had not been so created where would these questions have been determined? They would have been determined in the Exchequer Court of Canada. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways then is driven to this argument, that because it might be open to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to bring an action in the Exchequer Court of Canada, or because the Grand Trunk Pacific Company had brought a proceeding in the Exchequer Court of Canada, therefore this parliament would have no further jurisdiction to investigate the question of extravagant expenditure and possible maladministration in connection with the construction of that road. Such an argument as that is unheard of and unthinkable. I will give my hon. friend some reasons for that. Suppose we had an arbitration under section 47, suppose my hon. friend had had the advantage of being able to argue that—he has not that advantage and therefore he is absolutely out of court—but suppose he had had the advantage of that, it would not interfere in the slightest degree with the jurisdiction of parliament. In the first place the Grand Trunk Pacific Company themselves are contractors, and in so far as they are contractors, section 7 and section 47, would give absolutely no relief, would afford absolutely no safeguard in respect to classification or cost or anything else, because it would be the interest of the Grand Trunk Pacific to get the highest classification and to make the most they possibly could out of the contract. On the other hand there would be the question so far as they are concerned of the payment of three per cent during a period of 43 years as rental upon that cost. But the country is interested as bearing the ultimate cost and also in the rental which it does not receive during the first seven years. It is interested because it may receive no rental after the expiration of 50 years. It is interested in the rental during the period of 43 years in so far as that rental is less than the interest which this country must pay. I say to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, that a parliamentary investigation might be necessaary for the very reason that an action had been brought in the Exchequer Court of Canada or an arbitration had taken place under section 47 and that the disclosures in that action, or in that arbitration had shown that parliament ought to take a hand in the proceedings and find out the conditions under which this road had been constructed.

Now, I have disposed of this which was the only argument from the Minister of Railways and Canals which could be dignified by that name. But he went further. He said he was going to show that there was an error of $16,000,000 in the estimate of the hon. member from South Simcoe, and in the terms of this resolution. Did the Minister of Railways and Canals show an error of $16,000,000. I asked my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals a direct question with regard to that. I pointed out to him, or it was pointed out to him in the course of his speech that the hon. member for South Simcoe had made up his statement on a certain basis. What was the basis of the statement of the hon. member for South Simcoe. First that according to the official returns brought down by this government there were 13 contracts which according to the first estimate were to cost $37,340,723. The official return brought down by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals shows that these 13 contracts will cost $60,792,969. My hon. friend for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) took the other 8 contracts. According to the original estimate they were to cost $26,866,054. My hon. friend the member for South Simcoe correctly stated that the 13 contracts had been increased over the original estimate by 62·8 per cent, and he made a perfectly reasonable, and legitimate argument, that the other eight contracts will be increased in certainly no less a proportion. Therefore we may reasonably expect that the $26,866,054 will be increased to $43,737,936 or about $16,000,000 more than the original estimate made by the government engineer. What was the course of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals? He took that item of $16,000,000, because his argument did not apply to anything else, and he said my hon. friend the member for South Simcoe has made a mistake of $16,000,000. My hon. friend from South Simcoe made no mistake unless he was not justified in applying the same percentage of increase to the eight contracts they had entered upon by the test of experience of the 13 contracts. Yet when I asked my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals across the floor of this House as to whether he was allowing any increase upon these eight contracts I got absolutely no answer, no satisfaction from him in reply to what was a perfectly fair and direct question.

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend will allow me, what I said was to try to make it clear that my estimate was absolutely made on the estimate and calculation of the chief engineer, and I thought that was the best average I could give. I freely admitted that I did not make the calculation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the way in which it was made up. I understood perfectly from the speech of the hon. member for South Simcoe. He took 13 contracts and said the official returns brought down to this House show in respect of these 13 contracts an increase of 62·8 per cent and he said: I take the other 8 contracts, I have the original estimates for the other 8 contracts, and I am perfectly justified in saying that there will be at least as great an increase in respect of these 8 contracts as in respect of the 13 contracts that we know about. And the $16,000,000 difference is the alleged mistake pointed out with so much gusto by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals in attempting to answer, and a very poor attempt it was, the indictment of my hon. friend from South Simcoe. Well, what becomes then of the argument of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals? Why, Mr. Speaker, it vanishes just as some light sprinkling of snow in May may vanish before the sun as soon as the light is poured in upon it. We say that there is absolutely no foundation whatever, no scintilla of evidence whatever to demonstrate to this House that my hon. friend the member for South Simcoe has made the slightest error in the estimate of the cost of this road.

Well, let us go on. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals and the hon. member from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) ventured upon some very singular statements in respect of the safe-guarding of Canadian ports. I understood both these gentlemen to bewail the fact that the members of the opposition in 1903 and 1904 had not a due, proper and a patriotic regard for the interests of Canadian ports and for the safe-guarding of Canadian traffic through these ports. I do not want to weary this House, but I think this point is of sufficient importance to make it perfectly plain. My hon. friend the member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Magrath) has pointed out to this House in his speech this afternoon that the Grand Trunk railway having a great terminal in the United States of America, in the city of Portland, is building a railway and creating another great terminal in the city of Providence, and that the Grand Trunk railway is doing with the express declaration and pledge to the people of Rhode Island and the legislature of Rhode Island, that that city of Providence by means of those terminals and of that railway will be a great port of shipment for the grain which is to be grown in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta. There is absolutely no question about that. If any hon. member of this House ventures to think that these newspaper articles are unfounded, I desire to assure him that I have under my hand here, and can produce, an official stenographic report of the application to the Rhode Island legislature on behalf of the Grand Trunk railway. So, there is absolutely no question about the application or about the purpose of the application. Now, how does the government of this country stand in that regard? Are they able to control that situation or are they absolutely unable to control it? And, if they are unable to control that situation, how does it happen that the people of Canada, spending $250,000,000 on this National Transcontinental railway are liable to have the great traffic of the west diverted to ports of the United States? I will tell my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham)—for he was not a member of the government of that time and does not know anything about these matters—and how it happened. I can tell him that, in 1903, when this measure was being put through the House, a member of the opposition moved this resolution:

> That the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada shall covenant and agree as follows:—That the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, so long as the Grand Trunk Company shall control the policy of that company, shall perform, fulfil and carry out, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, all the provisions of the National Transcontinental Railway Act and all the covenants, stipulations and conditions in the schedule agreements, which, according to the terms thereof ought to be performed, fulfilled or carried out by the said Grand Trunk Pacific Company.

And this further resolution was moved by another member of the opposition:

> That the Grand Trunk Company shall covenant and agree as follows:—That neither the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company nor the Grand Trunk Company shall in any manner within its power, directly or indirectly, permit, advise or encourage the transportation of traffic by routes or at rates other than those provided in the said agreement and that each of the said companies shall in all respects and good faith use its utmost endeavours to fulfil the conditions upon which public aid is granted and accepted, namely, the development of trade through Canadian channels and to Canadian ocean ports.

It is perfectly true, and I ought to state to the House, that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company is itself committed to that covenant by the terms of the agreement. What we pointed out, and what I point out now, is that the Grand Trunk Railway Company owns the whole of the common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and absolutely controls it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) put that in perfectly plain and direct terms and I have his words here under my hand. In 1903, as reported at page 8570 of 'Hansard' of that year, the hon. gentleman said:

> We have not been content that they—the Grand Trunk Railway Company—shall stand behind it; we have required and they have readily consented that they shall be in it and of it and form the whole thing.

The Grand Trunk Railway Company is in it, and of it, and forms the whole thing so far as the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company is concerned. Here was a measure passed upon the recital that its object was to conserve Canadian commerce and traffic to Canadian ports, to protect and safeguard the interests of Canadian ports. And we asked that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, absolutely controlling in every respect the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, should be bound by the same covenant which was made binding upon the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, and that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, receiving through the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company enormous aid for the construction of this transcontinental railway, should not be at liberty to divert traffic brought over the Grand Trunk Pacific railway to its terminals in Portland or elsewhere in the United States. And my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals sits upon the same treasury benches with the gentleman who absolutely refused to accept that amendment, and absolutely refused to impose any stipulation whatever upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company in that regard. So that, to-day we have a singular position. I have not heard that the Grand Trunk Railway Company or the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company are purchasing any lands or building any terminals in the city of Halifax. The Minister of Railways and Canals has told us twice in this House during the present session that he has heard that they are buying some lands in the city of St. John. Up to the present time that is only a rumour. But it is not a rumour so far as Providence, R.I., is concerned. They have gone before the legislature of that state and they propose to expend $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 in developing an American port. And they propose that this railway, which according to the ex-deputy Minister Railways and Canals, as reported in the public press, will cost $350,000,000—

Mr. J. HAGGART. Butler's report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether the report is an accurate one, but it is in the press to-day, that Mr. Butler has stated that the whole enterprise will cost $350,000,000. And more than $250,000,000 of that will have been furnished by this country before the road is completed. Well, the position is that this road, costing the people of this country at least $250,000,000, is to be used for the purpose of building up and developing a great port in the United States of America. What about the recital of the agreement? What about the stipulation that we asked to have made binding on the Grand Trunk Railway Company? What have the gentlemen sitting on the treasury benches to say in regard to that object? I understand that the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company has said that Providence, Rhode Island, is to be used as an overflow. There is nothing in the address of his counsel which indicates that; there is nothing in the reports which appeared in the Providence newspapers to indicate that. Is there any reason why Providence, Rhode Island, should be equipped at enormous cost for the purpose of carrying and receiving traffic from our Northwest, while not a finger is being lifted or a dollar spent to develop St. John and Halifax in that regard? The situation is a most remarkably peculiar one, Mr. Speaker, and one which, I think, demands the attention of this government. Let us look at the circumstances for a moment. I have the figures, but I will content myself with speaking in general terms. The Grand Trunk Railway Company can haul grain to Portland at less cost than it can haul it to St. John or Halifax, for the distance is shorter. It is bound under the contract to make the rates to St. John and Halifax the same as to Portland; it is bound—if I understand the terms of the contract correctly—to make the rates to St. John and Halifax, the same as to Providence.

Well then if it gets the same rate for St. John and Halifax that it gets for Providence and Portland, and if in hauling grain to St. John and Halifax it is obliged to give a certain proportion of the haulage to the Intercolonial, will its interests lie in the direction of St. John and Halifax, or will they lie in the direction of Portland and Providence? Is there any question about that? The members of the government, when we put that point up to them, over and over again in debate were obliged to admit what I am saying now. Then does not every circumstance emphasize the absolute necessity that existed when this contract went through the House, that there should have been some stipulation inserted binding the Grand Trunk Company to conserve the interest of our Canadian ports? My hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Magrath) to-day said something with which I absolutely concur; he said the Grand Trunk Company having its interests to carry to Portland and Providence, would do so, and that in doing so it would only exercise good business sense. I entirely concur in that view from their standpoint. I find no fault with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for making the best bargain they could, but I denounce this government for having been weak enough absolutely to refuse the imposition of any stipulation or safeguard whatever which would prevent the Grand Trunk Company from doing that very thing. The financial aid contributed by the maritime provinces towards the construction of this railway will not fall short of $35,000,000 or $40,000,000, and if the ports of Halifax and St. John are to have no safeguard whatever that that enormous grain trade of the west will go in the winter months at least to the ports of Halifax and St. John, I ask whether a contract such as this is to be regarded as fair, just and reasonable to the interests of the maritime provinces. I unhesitatingly declare that it cannot be so regarded. And so, Mr. Speaker, the circumstances to-day suggest either that the government is either in a position to deal with this proposed diversion of traffic to the terminals of the Grand Trunk Railway at Portland and Providence, or it is not; if it is not capable of dealing with the situation, then its incapacity is due to its own default, to its refusal in 1903 and 1904 to impose any stipulation or condition upon the Grand Trunk Railway in that respect. I say if the government are in a position to deal with this question, they should take the matter into immediate consideration and act at once in such a manner as to conserve the interests of the maritime ports of Canada; if they are in a position to do that, if they are absolutely incapable under the terms of the contract they have made of conserving and preserving the interests of the maritime ports, then I say that, in all fairness and in all honour, they ought to give up the seals of office, resign their seats, and give place to men who are actuated by a more patriotic regard for the true interests of this country.

Amendment (Mr. Lennox) negatived.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Before you put the motion, I just want to draw attention to the fact that when the vote was being taken last night the deputy clerk made a mistake in calling the name of the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I., (Mr. Fraser) for that of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Russell). The hon. member for Kings was away and was paired. The hon. member for East Toronto was in his place, but his name was called as Mr. Fraser.

WESTERN GRAIN TRADE.

Mr. A. MEIGHEN. Mr. Speaker, before this motion is put, I desire to take occasion to draw the attention of the government to a matter communicated to me by parties in western Canada who are interested in the grain trade. The communication draws attention to the fact that on the 22nd February last a deputation representative of the grain trade of the west waited upon certain members of the government, inclusive of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King), whom I see present to-night, urging the immediate need of legislation to remedy certain grievances that then weighed upon the grain trade of the west, having relation to the over-classification of grades, to the necessity for sufficient registration of terminal elevators, to the necessity of preventing the elimination of competition by terminal elevators purchasing other elevators, and the further elimination of competition by the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk railway companies leasing their terminal facilities to alien interests. They also called attention to the fact that the government has recognized one of these grievances and purposes and are proceeding in an indifferent way, to apply some remedy this session, and to the further fact that the recent fining of certain terminal elevator owners in the police court in Winnipeg emphasizes the correctness of the representations made by the representatives who waited upon the minister on the 22nd February. I would like to ask the members of the government who were present at that interview why it is that the application of a remedy to the other three grievances is being deferred by the government.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I have not been able to catch clearly what my hon. friend has said. I did not get a thorough understanding of his question, and, therefore, I am not able to answer at the moment. I would suggest that the matter stand until to-morrow, when there will be an opportunity of seeing the report of what he has said in 'Hansard,' and I will be able to give him a more complete answer than I could to-night.

OBSCENE LITERATURE.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, although the hour is late, I take this opportunity of adverting again to a matter which was brought to the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) on April 14. That is the release in a summary manner of the two men, King and Skill, who, upon their own admission, were found guilty of selling and distributing obscene literature. The matter was first brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice on the 14th April, and not then being in a position to give any definite information to the House he postponed his answer until the following day, when he gave to the House certain reasons why he had recommended executive clemency to these men. The reasons given by the hon. gentleman on that day are somewhat extraordinary. I do not desire, Sir, to comment upon any reasons which may have guided the Minister of Justice in recommending executive clemency where he thought the circumstances of the case were such as to call for the exercise of the prerogative of the Crown. But when an hon. gentleman presents a statement such as that put forward in this case I think it calls for some comment, as it has called for considerable comment of a public nature from sources which are generally in sympathy with whatever views the hon. gentleman advances in this House. But before I refer to that, I would like to remind the hon. gentleman of the concluding paragraph of the speech in which he gave his reasons for recommending executive clemency in this case.

I seek to put no responsibility upon him in this matter.

That is referring to the Attorney General of Ontario.

I willingly assume the whole responsibility myself, I gave the advice to His Excellency that these men should be summarily released, because, in my humble judgment, speaking as a lawyer, they were not guilty of the offence with which they were charged.

It was not, therefore, a recommendation of executive clemency. It was a statement of the Governor General that these men had been improperly convicted. These men were represented by three eminent counsel in Toronto, and upon the recommendation and advice of these counsel who had seen the literature they pleaded guilty of the offence with which they were charged, and they were severely reprimanded by the learned judge, and were sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the central prison. The Minister of Justice recommends their summary release, because in his opinion as a lawyer they were not guilty of the offences with which they were charged. I do not want to add any more comment: I think the paper I have in my hand is sufficient comment to pass upon the matter, and I think possibly it may appeal to the Prime Minister, coming from the source it does. I refer to the Toronto 'Globe' of April 21, 1910, a leading article which reads as if it came from the pen of the reverend editor himself. It is as follows:

April 21, 1910.

The abuse of executive clemency.

The time has come for great plainness of speech. In the name of everything decent and clean in Canadian life the 'Globe' makes deliberate and emphatic public protest against the clemency of the Crown being extended to men convicted of traffic in obscene pictures and vilely immoral books. This public protest is made necessary by a suspicious laxness in prosecuting such offenders shown from time to time by subordinate Crown officials, and still more by the occasional pardon or release from prison of vicious-minded convicts whose trade in life was more pernicious than a pestilence. Words need not be minced. The 'Globe' protests, for instance, against the release of King and Skill. These two traffickers in prurient and licentious books were sentenced, on their own plea of guilty, to one year in the Central Prison, and their release after serving two months was defended in parliament by the Minister of Justice on Friday last. The 'Globe' protests even more emphatically against the defence offered for their release. This case and other instances in subordinate courts make the situation utterly intolerable.

In parliament the Minister of Justice defended his action in recommending the clemency of the Crown. He represented that the books are 'classics.' He admitted that they contain 'passages' which if singled out or collected and published together might properly be described by the word 'indecent;' but in this respect he said they were not different from 'that best of books we all revere.' The minister stated that he had 'letters with regard to this case urging clemency' from 'a bishop of the Protestant faith, three other clergymen, one a leading clergyman in the Methodist Church,' 'who are acquainted with the prisoners and knew the style of business that they had been carrying on.' The Minister of Justice made reference to 'a personal discussion of the case with the Attorney General of the province of Ontario,' who 'in his capacity of Attorney General of the province wrote a candid, frank letter expressing his own views and his own recommendation in regard to the case.' The minister closed his speech as reported in 'Hansard' with these words: 'I gave the advice to His Excellency that these men should be summarily released, because, in my humble judgment, speaking as a lawyer, they were not guilty of the offence with which they were charged.'

In the clear light of known facts all this conduct on the part of the Ministers of the Crown and of the ministers of the church is inexplicable where it is not impious. It is not a fact, as the Minister of Justice states, that 'the learned judge, upon the admitted facts of the case, made a conviction.' Judge Winchester did not need to make a conviction. The two men pleaded guilty. They did so on advice of eminent counsel, and that, too, after many weeks of delay and the exercise of all the arts and ingenuities by which the giving of evidence in open court is avoided. The evidence of the Crown was damning to the last degree and its publication would have shocked the public. The chief coroner of Toronto, to whom the books were referred for report by the Crown, testified that they are absolutely without scientific value, and 'are unutterably vile, reeking with filth from beginning to end. After a careful examination of a dozen of these books, the 'Globe' endorses that judgment of Dr. Arthur Jukes Johnson. Their only value to science is as samples of the erotic factors in the making of degenerates and perverts. As literature they range all the way from the scrofulous French novel, unexpurged, vilely illustrated, and elegantly bound, to the still more lecherous exposition and advocacy of the grossest unnatural sensuality.

How comes it, then, that the persistent and even defiant purveyors of this corrupt, and corrupting literature, having pleaded their guilt in open court, were 'summarily released' on the advice of the Minister of Justice? How comes it that, as he declared in parliament, such executive clemency was 'urged' by 'a Protestant bishop and a leading clergyman in the Methodist Church' and 'recommended' by the Attorney General of Ontario? The only answer the 'Globe' can give is that no one of these gentlemen—not the minister, not the Attorney General, not the bishop, not the clergyman—could have had personal knowledge of the essential facts. Their ignorance is their excuse. But in this case and under its circumstances to give 'character' letters or to recommend clemency without knowing the facts was itself inexcusable, while to do it with a knowledge of the facts would have been criminal.

But the obscene picture postcard is even more of a leprous plague than the immoral book. Many of those books are expensive, while the cards are scattered broadcast in every part of Canada, polluting boys and girls in the schools, and leaving on their minds and memories scars which neither repentance nor lifelong experience will wholly eradicate. Last week the police authorities in Toronto destroyed 87,000 picture cards of unimaginable obscenity, taken from a man now serving sentence, but for whom, the 'Globe' is informed, the clemency of the Crown is now being urged. More than 50,000 of such cards were circulated in Toronto a few months ago, and thousands of others were sold to towns in Ontario. They are all unspeakably vile. And yet for the assassins of youthful purity who engage in this business, the protection of the Crown is claimed. Such a thing would violate every sense of decency and would rightly involve all parties to it in shame and inevitable disgrace.

The 'Globe' offers no apology for this protest. It will not cease its open denunciation so long as the need remains. This is a matter neither of politics nor of law, but of fundamental morality, and touches the very life of the nation. No quarter can be given in Canada to the vices that ruined ancient Rome and are sapping the virility of modern Europe. Of those corroding vices, the immoral book and the obscene picture are the chief agents. Every citizen, who is not a traitor to private decency and national character, must stand unflinchingly against what makes only for decay.

Those are not my comments on the matter, they are the comments of the Toronto 'Globe,' after, as I understand it, a personal inspection of the literature which formed the subject of the charge. Unless I am incorrectly informed the Prime Minister has been interviewed in regard to this subject. He has been shown some of this literature and is in a position to make a public statement as to whether he agrees with the Minister of Justice in the view he takes, both with regard to law and fact in recommending what he is pleased to call executive clemency in this case. I think it only fair to draw public attention to this article in the 'Globe,' the chief organ of the government in Ontario, in order that both the right hon. the Prime Minister and the hon. the Minister of Justice may have an opportunity to publicly state in this House, what their views are with respect to offences of this kind.

I have read in another paper, a letter from a gentleman holding a high position in one of the churches of Ontario, in which he makes a comment, which is very unfair, that a gentleman holding a seat in the House of Commons, not behind the government, he is careful to say, is seeking to obtain some public notoriety by bringing this matter to the attention of the House. There is only one hon. member to whom that letter can refer and that is myself. I resent it utterly. I made no comment on the case, I did not even ask the Minister of Justice if the article in the 'Canadian Municipal Journal,' to which I drew his attention as Minister of Justice on April 14, was true or not, but I felt it was proper to bring an item like that to the attention of the government and especially of the minister, in order that such explanation might be given as was called for by the nature of the article which imputed directly to the Minister of Justice, that these men were released as a result of the exercise of political pressure upon him. That feature of the case the Minister of Justice utterly denied, and it is only in view of the second statement made by the Minister of Justice, which called forth this comment from the 'Globe,' that I rise now for the purpose of putting on 'Hansard' that comment from that organ, and of asking the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Justice, whether they care or feel disposed or feel it due to the public to make any further statement concerning this matter.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). It will lie in your memory, Mr. Speaker, and in the memory I have no doubt of every member of this House, that when this matter was first brought to the attention of the House by the hon. gentleman, it was by the reading of an article in some Montreal newspaper, in which the charge was made, not in any insinuating or disguised form, but in so many words, that these particular prisoners, who had been pardoned then some six weeks or two months before, had been released solely and only because the application for their pardon was made by Mr. Robinette of Toronto, who was said to be a personal friend of my own, and a man who had a pull with me in matters of this kind. That was the gravamen of the charge which the hon. gentleman made, or which he endorsed to the exent of reading the article in question and asking some statement from me on the subject.

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. Speaker, I must ask permission to correct the hon. gentleman in that statement. I neither made nor endorsed any charge at all in reference to this matter.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have read what the hon. gentleman said when he brought the article to which I have referred to the attention of the House. In saying that he endorsed the article to the extent he did, I mean that he took the responsibility that I suppose any hon. member of this House takes when he reads in the House an article from a newspaper, and asks or suggests that there should be some explanation in regard to it, made by the member of the House against whom it is levelled I need not stop to discuss whether that constitutes an endorsation of the charge or not The question I want to bring to the attention of the House is whether the recommendation I made to His Excellency in this matter was an honest and bona fide exercise of the responsibility which is placed upon me in that regard, or was something which I had done improperly, and as I would think dishonourably, and in contravention of the duty which is put upon me—if I had in fact acted as the newspaper which was read in so many words charged. With regard to this whole matter, I have nothing to say in addition to what I have already said in this House, unless it may be to say that if the same thing were to be considered over again, under the same circumstances, I should act in exactly the way in which I have acted throughout. I have taken the course which I thought was right, and which I still think was right, I am sorry if my hon. friend cannot concur in it. I am very sorry if the learned gentleman to whom he refers as in his opinion the writer of some editorial comments upon my action which appeared in the 'Globe,' newspaper does not concur in the course I took. I have nothing to say in that regard except that the writer of that article is as entitled to his opinion as everybody else in this country is entitled to his opinion in the matter. But the important thing to be borne in mind is that this prerogative of pardon, one of the most important, possibly the most important, of the remaining prerogatives of the Crown, is one which under our system of government cannot be exercised upon the personal responsibility of His Majesty or His Majesty's representative in this country. The action which was taken in this matter, and which is taken in any of these cases, is something which can properly be taken only upon the advice of some person who is responsible for that action. I do not know that I can take any exception to the phrase which the hon. gentleman has used to-night, that these men were summarily released by me. Of course, that is not strictly accurate, as every one knows. My action in the matter was not to order any release; it was to recommend, and I take the whole responsibility for what was done. I thought I made that as clear as I could in what I said on this subject some days ago. I have never sought to place any responsibility upon the legal gentlemen who applied for the release of their clients, who urged that release, who made their representations, and their pleas for clemency or for executive action in the way of the granting of a pardon. No more did I seek or do I seek to put any responsibility in the matter on the men in the various walks of life, to whom I alluded in speaking before, who did not sign petitions, but who wrote independent letters to me on the subject, each urging in his own way his own view. Nor did I ever seek to put the slightest responsibility in the matter upon the learned Attorney General for the province of Ontario. That gentleman has, according to this morning's Toronto newspapers, made a statement with regard to the letter which he wrote to me in connection with this matter, a statement which I need not say is entirely in accordance with the facts, which gives the purport of his letter, as it was his privilege to do if he saw fit, though I certainly would not have considered that I had any right to give to the public the contents or the substance of a letter which he had written to me on such a subject. I put no responsibility whatever upon him in the matter. I do not seek to say that his advice or his views influenced me in the matter. I take the whole responsibility for what was done, because it was upon my advice, and my advice alone that His Excellency was pleased to exercise his power of pardon in the premises. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House that this responsibility is not a responsibility upon any of my colleagues—is not a responsibility upon the government as a whole. The instructions to His Excellency from His Majesty himself, under his own hand, are that in the exercise of the prerogative of pardon he is to be guided by the advice of his minister, not by the advice of his Council; and His Excellency acted in this matter upon my sole advice, without my having conferred with any of my colleagues, without there being the slightest responsibility upon the First Minister, or upon any other member of the cabinet. Now, the question is, was I wrong? If I was wrong, I trust that the hon. gentleman, and every other hon. member of this House, will acquit me of the original charge, the charge that was made in connection with this case, as I am sorry to say it has been made with reference to the same Mr. Robinette on other occasions by other members of this House, that because of the man who applied, and because it was Mr. Robinette, some course was taken in the matter which otherwise would not have been taken. That charge, at any rate, hon. gentlemen see for themselves, has not a particle of foundation.

If I made a mistake it was an error of judgment. I have the satisfaction of knowing that it received the approval of His Excellency and I cannot refrain from saying that I value, in a matter of this kind at all events, the approval of His Excellency the present Governor General of this country far and away beyond any importance I would attach to the approval of the editor of the Toronto 'Globe.' I based my action in this matter as I stated to the House the other day simply and entirely upon the fact that as a lawyer I was of opinion that those men by selling the books in question, which it was admitted they had done, had not committed the offence with which they were charged. I say nothing as to whether they had committed some other offence. The question did not arise for consideration. They were charged with distributing literature which was obscene in character. I mentioned, when speaking before, some of the authors whose works were in question. I referred to those authors whom I mentioned as classics. I have nothing to modify in that respect. I did not pretend to say that those writers whose names I mentioned were the only writers. I stated on the contrary, that there were others, that there were some of the more modern French school. I did not refer to those modern writers as classics. I do not know whether the term could or could not properly be applied to them. The question which was presented for consideration here was upon the undisputed facts of the case, whether or not the books which were in evidence, which were marked by the officer of the court and sent by him to me, were books which properly fell within the meaning of the word 'obscene' as used in the particular section of the Criminal Code upon which this charge was founded. I do not know whether all the members of this House would understand the same thing as the meaning of the word 'obscene' that I understand by it. I have simply to say that having examined those books which were sent to me by the officer of the court as being the books in question they did not constitute such literature as I understand would be, as a matter of law, covered by the term 'obscene'. That is the whole question of the conclusion to which I came in this matter. I looked upon it as entirely a lawyer's question. Long explanations were given of the reason which had led the legal advisers of the prisoners, advising them to enter a plea of guilty. Statements as to why that was done, how it came to be done are matters which I need not enter into, and which I may say at once did not influence me. I do not think that in a case which has been disposed of by a court we need enter into a consideration of what the reasons were which led learned counsel for the defendants to take a particular course in court, and certainly I am not passing one way or the other upon any question of the wisdom of the course which was so advised. The whole importance of the matter is this, that there was no dispute about the facts of the case. The books were there. They had been sold by those particular prisoners. That was admitted, and the question was simply whether the sale of those particular books did or did not, as a matter of law, constitute an offence within that particular section of the Code. I have merely to repeat that in my humble opinion as a lawyer, it did not constitute any such offence. Having reached that clear conclusion about which I felt no hesitation at the time, about which I certainly feel no hesitation now, and in respect to which I am not in the least degree influenced by anything which has appeared in the newspapers, I adhere to the opinion upon which I acted in advising His Excellency that the thing which those two men confessedly had done did not constitute the particular offence which was described by that section of the Act. I regard that as a pure question of dry law and though I may have my opinion other lawyers may have an opposite opinion, or men who are not lawyers such as the writer in the 'Globe' is, I presume, may have a different opinion. As to that, I have nothing in the world to say. Many a time before now I have found gentlemen more learned in the law than I am, having a different opinion from mine on matters of law. I have never resented it or considered I had any grievance because they expressed it. In this particular matter I may have a feeling that an attempt has been made to divert popular attention from the real truth of the matter, and from the real facts of the case as I put them before the House when speaking previously. I have simply to rest upon the statement which I made before, and which I am repeating now, that this was a question entirely of law as I understood it then, and as I understand it now, and if I have made a mistake in this matter it is just like a great many other mistakes that I have made in matters of law in my time in coming to a conclusion upon a legal question which was in truth erroneous though I honestly believed it to be correct.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

National Transcontinental Railway, $27,000,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. minister remember the date when this was up last?

Mr. GRAHAM. March 11. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) asked a question as to the date when it was found that the real cost was differing from the estimated cost. I think he asked also as to the data on which estimates were made, and the names of the engineers who made the estimate. I have a long statement from the secretary of the commission on behalf of the commission, which is as follows:

Ottawa, April 11, 1910.

Hon. Geo. P. Graham, P.C.,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

Sir,—In compliance with your verbal request, I have the honour to submit herewith, on behalf of the commissioners, a statement furnishing the information requested by Mr. R. L. Borden, M.P., leader of the opposition, as reported on page 5385 of 'Hansard' (unrevised edition); also a statement from our chief engineer setting forth the data upon which were based the estimates of the quantities made by the engineers before the work was opened up and the several contracts let, which includes an explanation for the apparent discrepancy between the quantities as originally estimated and as returned under the various contracts.

To make clear the distinction between 'solid rock' as generally understood by the layman, and 'solid rock' within the meaning of the general specifications for construction, it may as well, at the outset, to quote the approved interpretation of clause 34 of the specifications defining solid rock excavation, as made by the chief engineer, in January, 1908.

Clause 34—solid rock excavation—reads as follows:—

Solid rock excavation will include all rock found in ledges or masses of more than one cubic yard, which, in the judgment of the engineer, may be best removed by blasting.

The chief engineer's approved interpretation of the above is as follows:—

I am of the opinion that rock found in ledges or masses as specified must (firstly) be rock, and (secondly) it must be in ledges, conglomerate form (known as plum pudding stone), boulders, or ledge rock displaced (in pieces each exceeding one cubic yard in size), rock assembled, also shale rock, such as in the judgment of the engineer may be best removed by blasting.

Accompanying the foregoing interpretation is a diagram in explanation.

When the discrepancies in quantities of solid rock, loose rock, and common excavation as between those estimated by the engineers before the ground was broken and the contracts let, and those actually returned under the several contracts first became manifest; and when difficulties in matters of classification, &c., became apparent in Major Hodgins' district east of Winnipeg, realizing that, however inaccurate the original estimates might have been, the real and predominating question affecting the public interest was to see that what was returned and paid for as solid rock was actually solid rock within the meaning of the specifications; and that, similarly, what was returned and paid for as loose rock was properly classifiable as such under the general specifications for construction; the commissioners determined on the appointment of an inspecting engineer whose duty it would be, under the direction and subject to the instructions of the chief engineer, to go over the line, and report directly to the chief engineer on all matters of classification, &c., along the line under construction. Accordingly, on Mr. Lumsden's recommendation, Mr. Gordon Grant, the present chief engineer of the commission, was, on the 16th of May, 1907, appointed inspecting engineer.

There appears to be a disposition in some quarters to give currency to the view that where, say 1,000 cubic yards of solid rock were originally estimated by the engineers before the work was opened up, and 1,250 or 1,500 cubic yards have been actually returned by the engineers under the contracts, that the difference represents and must be over-classification, or the improper transfer of 250 or 500 cubic yards, as the case may be, from the loose rock or common excavation column into the solid rock column, and that the contractor is paid at the higher rate when he should be paid at the lower. Of course nothing could be more misleading.

Any layman can understand how difficult it is for an engineer to go over a piece of country, particularly if it be a timbered country, with heavy side hills, &c., and estimate exactly, or even very approximately, the number of cubic yards of solid rock (even if that be confined to ledge rock and boulders over a cubic yard in size) in hills, &c., down to a certain grade line.

In the case of contracts Nos. 9 and 10 (150 miles from the Quebec bridge westerly), the quantities were estimated partly on a first location, partly on preliminary, and partly on projected lines and after the contracts had been awarded, it was found necessary to change the location of the line in several places, thus vitiating the value of the original estimates of quantities as a basis of comparison, while at the same time improving the line; in district 'F,' in the case of contract No. 21 (McArthur contract), no allowance was made in the engineers' estimates of quantities for excavation of one foot below grade in rock cuttings; nor was any allowance made for the removal of material outside the regular slopes in rock cuttings or rock borrow; all borrow for fills was estimated as common excavation, although after the work was opened up it was found that from the Canadian Pacific railway crossing at Rennie to Superior Junction, a distance of about 180 miles, the country is all rock; and in district 'A,' from Moncton to the Quebec boundary, there was no outcropping of rock shown on or near the line.

These are some of the reasons accounting for the apparent discrepancy between the quantities as estimated before the ground was broken and the contracts awarded, and as returned under the various contracts. It will be doubtless contended that much more accurate estimates might have obtained had the engineers been required to make borings say every one hundred yards over the entire 1,804 miles of line between Winnipeg and Moncton. And this is readily admitted. But, to have done so would have required a large additional expenditure of time and money before the actual work of construction was commenced on any single contract, without any saving in the cost of construction; such a course, our engineers advise, is rarely, if ever, followed in this country, as it is not believed that the results warrant the additional expenditure of time and money involved.

As has already been pointed out, the important thing is to see that the contractors shall be paid for only what they are entitled to under the general specifications governing the construction of the railway, and that the work is executed up to the standard required. The commissioners believe that they have taken every possible precaution to safeguard the public interest along these lines. Two inspecting engineers reporting directly to the chief engineer are practically continuously going over the work in the different districts. In addition, there are the inspecting engineers of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company constantly passing on the work as it is performed, and when they do not agree with the engineers of the commission as to the work, their complaints are promptly filed in writing, to be passed upon by a board of experts acting as arbitrators under the authority of the National Transcontinental Railway Act. It would be difficult indeed to suggest any safeguards to protect the public interests which do not already exist on this work.

With respect to the cost of the line, the fact cannot be too much emphasized or too frequently repeated, that when the National Transcontinental Railway is completed, the people of Canada will have a railway constructed to a standard of perfection with respect to gradients and curvature, character of roadbed, and permanency of structures (such as steel bridges and viaducts, culverts, &c.,) which but few railways in the world can equal. Railways such as the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk have within the past ten or fifteen years expended many millions of dollars to bring their lines in some places up to the standard which will prevail over the entire National Transcontinental Railway. The costs of operation will be infinitesimal in comparison with those of lines having ruling gradients of one per cent, and the benefits of this economy in operation should accrue to the people of Canada, not only through the development of the country through which the railway runs, but also, eventually, in materially reduced freight and passenger rates.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) P. E. RYAN,
Secretary.

Estimated quantities based on final location.

Remarks as to District 'A.'

Some of the reasons accounting for the apparent inaccuracy of the estimates of quantities, made before the opening up of the work and the award of the contracts in this district, are as follows, viz:

(1) There was no outcropping of rock showing on or near the line between Moncton and the Quebec boundary, this in large measure accounting for the underestimate of the quantities of solid rock; (2) test pits were not dug in cuttings, as a rule, as to have done so would have involved a heavy additional expenditure of time and money, without any improvement of the line or saving in cost of construction; (3) no provision was made for rock borrow where earth could not be obtained; (4) quantities were computed from certain heights; no allowance having been made for side hill work, of which there is a large amount in this district; (5) no allowance was made for taking out work one foot below grade in rock cuttings; no allowance was made for material moved outside of slopes in rock cuttings.

District 'B.'

Contract No. 7.—Through mileage 256·61 to 310·22. Length of contract 53·61 miles. Quantities estimated by A. E. Doucet, District Engineer, still in service as District Engineer.

Estimated quantities based on 53 miles first location.

Estimated quantities based on 20 miles preliminary, 5 miles projected, 92 miles first location, and 33 miles final location.

Contract No. 9.—Through mileage 460·45 to 510·31. Length of contract 49·86 miles. Quantities estimated by A. E. Doucet, District Engineer.

Estimated quantities based on 50 miles preliminary and first location and 50 miles projected lines.

Contract No. 11.—Through mileage 610·41 to 656·83. Length of contract 46·42 miles. Quantities estimated by A. E. Doucet, District Engineer.

Estimated quantities based on 22 miles preliminary, 22 miles first location, balance revised location.

Remarks as to District 'B.'

Some of the reasons accounting for the apparent inaccuracy of the estimates of quantities, made before the opening up of the work and the award of the contracts in this district, are as follows, viz.:—

(1.) In the case of the 150 miles from the north abutment of the Quebec bridge westerly (contracts Nos. 9 and 10) the surveys were not completed before the contracts were awarded, and the estimates of quantities were based partly on first location lines, parly on preliminary, and 50 miles on projected lines, the demand for the estimates being made by the chief engineer; on revising the work errors in levels were found requiring a change of line in several places and heavier work to get a 0·4 grade; the opening up of the work disclosed a vast quantity of mixed material not provided for in the estimated quantities; no allowance was made for train filling where common excavation borrow could not be obtained; the estimates were based on the use of velocity grades, the elimination of which increased the quantities greatly; the estimates were made on the orders of the chief engineer before sufficient information had been obtained regarding the rise and fall of some of the streams encountered, and this in some cases required the subsequent raising of the grade and in increase in the quantities, thus adding to the cost both of the grading and the bridges; the location ran along steep side hills in many places, thus adding to the difficulty of making accurate estimates of quantities, cross-sections not having been taken; (2) many of the above reasons apply to the district generally, and test pits were not as a rule dug in cuttings.

District 'C.'

Contract No. 12.—Through mileage 656·83 to 763·83. Length of contract 107·00 miles. Quantities estimated by District Engineer A. N. Molesworth, still in the service as District Engineer.

Estimated quantities based on revised location. No changes yet reported.

Contract No. 13.—Through mileage 763·83 to 878·80. Length of contract 114·97 miles. Quantities estimated by District Engineer A. N. Molesworth.

Estimated quantities based on final location 59 miles; remainder revised location. No changes as yet reported.

Contract No. 14.—Through mileage 878·80 to 956·74. Length of contract 78 miles. Quantities estimated by District Engineer A. N. Molesworth.

Estimated quantities based on 6 miles revised location; 36 miles first location; (remainder of contract then in District 'D').

Remarks as to District 'C.'

The quantities have been increased on this district owing to the fact that the grades have had to be raised higher than those shown on the profiles from which the first quantities were taken. This was necessary owing to the wet nature of the country; the nature of the material encountered after the cuts were opened rendered flatter slopes in many instances necessary, which resulted in larger quantities of material having to be moved; no allowance made for extra train filling owing to shrinkage on muskeg dumps; no allowance made for catch water ditches, off-takes, etc.; sufficient information could not be obtained at the time to estimate culverts, culvert excavation and bridges; no allowance made for material moved outside of slopes in rock cuttings; no allowance made for spread of material in filling of muskegs and bays.

District 'D.'

Contract No. 14.—Through mileage 956·74 to 1020·80. Length of contract 72 miles. Quantities estimated by District Engineer S. R. Poulin, still in service, employed as District Engineer, District 'F.'

Estimated quantities based on 54 miles first location; 54 miles revised location.

Contract No. 15.—Through mileage 1028·80 to 1172·85. Length of contract 44·08 miles. Quantities estimated by John Aylen, acting District Engineer; not now in service.

Estimated quantities based on 31 miles location; remainder final location.

Contract No. 16.—Through mileage 1128·77 to 1172·85. Length of contract 44·08 miles. Quantities estimated by John Aylen, acting District Engineer; not now in service.

Estimated quantities based on 44 miles revised location. No change as yet reported.

Remarks as to District 'D.'

The quantities have been increased on this district owing to the fact that grades have had to be raised higher than those shown on the profiles from which the first quantities were taken, this was necessary owing to the wet nature of the country; the nature of the material encountered after the cuts were opened rendered flatter slopes in many instances necessary, which resulted in larger quantities of material having to be moved; no test pits were dug; complete information could not be obtained when first estimate was made for calculating of culvert quantities, culvert excavation and bridges; no allowance was made for divisional yard at Cochrane; many banks were made from muskeg; after being dried out this material shrinks over 50 per cent, necessitating a great increase in train filling.

Contract No. 16.—Through mileage 1128·77 to 1172·85. Length of contract 60 miles. Quantities estimated by T. S. Armstrong, district engineer, still in service as District Engineer.

Estimated quantities based on 60 miles revised location. No changes yet reported.

Contract No. 17.—Through mileage 1232·85 to 1332·85. Length of contract 100 miles. Quantities estimated by T. S. Armstrong, District Engineer.

Estimated quantities based on final location. No changes yet reported.

Contract No. 18.—Through mileage 1332·85 to 1407·85. Length of contract 75 miles. Quantities estimated by T. S. Armstrong, District Engineer.

Estimated quantities based on final location.

Contract No. 19.—Through mileage 1407·85 to 1428·04. Length of contract 20·19 miles. Quantities estimated by T. S. Armstrong, District Engineer.

Estimated quantities based on 20 miles revised final location. No increase yet reported.

Remarks as to District 'E.'

No test pits were dug, and greater amounts of solid and loose rock were encountered than the surface indicated; sufficient information had not been obtained when the estimate was prepared for the calculating of culvert quantities, culvert excavation, and bridges; no allowance made for removal of rock outside of regular slopes, or below grade in rock cuts.

District 'F.'

Contract No. 19.—Through mileage 1428·04 to 1534·04. Length of contract 106 miles. Quantities estimated by S. R. Poulin, District Engineer, still in service as district engineer.

Estimated quantities based on 106 miles final location. No increase yet reported.

Contract No. 20.—Through mileage 1,534·04 to 1,557·80. Length of contract 24·13 miles. Quantities estimated by S. R. Poulin, District Engineer.

Estimated quantities based on final location. No increase yet reported.

Contract No. 21.—Through mileage, 1,557·80 to 1,804·47. Length of contract 246·67 miles. Quantities estimated by A. E. Hodgins, District Engineer, not now in service.

Estimated quantities based on first location.

Remarks as to Contract No. 21.

Insufficient soundings were made in muskegs. No provision was made for rock borrow in bay crossings and very soft muskeg where trestling was not practicable. No test pits were dug in cuttings. No allowance made for spread of material in muskegs. Many trestles were replaced by train filling for which no allowance was made in first estimates. No allowance was made for grading of sidings. Insufficient allowance was made for lowering of lakes. No allowance was made for temporary haulways, pipe lines and grading material yards. No allowance made for removal of material outside regular slopes in rock cuts. Quantities were figured from centre lines and bare centre line quantities recorded. No allowance made for side hill work, catch water ditches, offtakes, etc. In rock cuttings no allowance was made for excavation one foot below grade. No details had been procured for the proper estimation of culvert quantities and culvert excavation, and bridge foundations. In first estimate all borrow for fills was estimated by the district engineer as common excavation, although it was impossible at the time to know whether or not common excavation to make these fills was available. The profiles from which the first estimate was made showed quantities in fills far in excess of the quantities in the cuttings. When operations started it was found that common excavation borrow could not be found in that part of the country from the Canadian Pacific railway crossing at Rennie to Superior Junction, a distance of about 180 miles, as it is all rock, consequently the line in many places had to be revised and thrown further into the side hills to reduce the fills to practicable dimensions and make the only available excavation—rock—balance the fills. This revision was also necessary as it was found that owing to the boggy and soft nature of the bottoms of the swamps, bays of lakes, etc., that trestles could not be built, which, together with the fact that no allowance for rock outside the regular slopes and no rock borrow, and no rock below sub-grade was estimated for, accounts for the rock moved exceeding the rock estimated for in the first estimates.

GORDON GRANT,

Ottawa, April 11, 1910.

My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) also handed me a memorandum, which I did not return, and I am not sure whether he wants it to go on 'Hansard' or not. I will send it to him. It is in relation to the Peterson matter. I have an explanation from the district engineer, and Mr. Gordon Grant on the subject. The other question he asked was as to certain items to complete, and I think I gave them in the short remarks I made this afternoon.

Mr. J. HAGGART. There was a clause in the agreement by which the Grand Trunk Pacific were to put $20,000,000 of rolling stock upon the road. It was to be distributed, $15,000,000 worth west of Winnipeg and $5,000,000 on the rest of the road. I desire to ask if any of that rolling stock has been placed upon the road. One of the conditions promised by the Minister of Justice and which he said was one of the conditions of the contract, was that there should be no claim or lien of any kind on the rolling stock—it was to be part of the security for the advance made by the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. So far as the security is concerned, that has been adhered to. I am informed that $10,000,000 worth of rolling stock has already been purchased, and they are getting about $500,000 worth per month. A large portion of this rolling stock is already in use on the line between Winnipeg and Edmonton and east of Wolf creek.

Mr. J. HAGGART. What I am particularly interested in is that no lien is to rest on this rolling stock, that it is to be free from any lien by any one but the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. There are no liens whatever. There were equipment bonds issued under the Act for this rolling stock, but I am informed there is no charge against the rolling stock.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The equipment bonds are not a lien upon the equipment?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, I think not, in the sense the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. Haggart) means.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not like to ask too many questions to-night; the minister seemed to think this afternoon that he had given me too much information. I hope he will not think there is any hard feeling between us if I ask a question or two. What is the position of the arbitration proceedings of the three engineers under, as the minister alleges, clause 7 of the agreement? Have they gone to work this spring?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have been making inquiries for the last few days as to what day they would resume, as they had started. I understand that they hope that the conditions along the line will soon enable them to do work.

Mr. LENNOK. Nothing this spring?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the minister is mistaken in saying that they did anything as an arbitration. I saw, by a return moved for by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that the members of the arbitration had met at Winnipeg and proceeded on the line, but found it was too late in the year. The snow was on, and they could not make inspection. Then, the engineer of the company and Mr. Gordon Grant went together and made some adjustments. I think that that is as much as has been done.

Mr. GRAHAM. The three arbitrators went out on the question of overbreak. As a matter of fact, the weather would not permit measurements in regard to classification. But the chief engineer of the Transcontinental and the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific agreed to about 70 per cent of the differences between them on overbreak.

Mr. LENNOX. No arbitrator?

Mr. GRAHAM. There will be no arbitration except as to the thirty per cent remaining, but on this the arbitrators will have to act.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 29, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS—SUSPENSION OF RULES.

Mr. MILLER moved that paragraph (a) of sub-section 3 of rule 88 and rules 102, 107 and 114 be suspended for the remainder of the session in so far as the same relate to private Bills from the Senate, in accordance with the recommendation made in the 13th report of the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is there any special reason for this—any special bill the hon. member has in view?

Mr. MILLER. There is no special bill. There are two coming from the Senate, and they can only go through if there is a suspension of these rules.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand, it is to avoid the usual delay in respect to bills coming down from the Senate?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Motion agreed to.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On behalf of the Minister of Finance I beg to move that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution, standing in his name:

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that no bounties shall be payable in respect of rolled, round wire rods after the thirtieth day of June, 1911, under the provisions of section 1 (d) of chapter 24 of the Act of 1907, an Act to amend the Act respecting Bounties on Iron and Steel, except on such rods as may have been otherwise entitled to the payment of bounties under the provisions of said section and which were, on or before the said thirtieth day of June, 1911, sold to wire manufacturers for use or used in making wire by the makers of such rods in their own factories in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE—MR. AYLESWORTH

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I rise on a matter of privilege. I have on very few occasions indeed felt any need to call the attention of the House to anything that may have been said in the newspapers with regard to myself; and although during the last few days some of the newspapers in Toronto have been devoting a good deal of their valuable space to matters of a more or less personal character so far I am concerned, I should not have taken up the time of the House to say one word with reference to those matters but for a statement which I find in the Toronto 'World' of yesterday morning. The statement, which is at the end of several columns dealing with matters of the description to which I have alluded, is worded in this way:

A lawyer said that there was dissatisfaction among legal men because the Minister of Justice has given so much work to G. F. Shepley, K.C., and the firm with which he himself was formerly connected.

With respect to Mr. Shepley I have nothing to say except that in regard to any work which as Minister of Justice I have sent to him, I have been guided wholly and entirely by the identical business principles upon which I think any business man would have acted. Legal work of important character on behalf of the government has been sent to Mr. Shepley since I have been Minister of Justice, has been freely sent to him, because with a knowledge of Mr. Shepley extending now over more than 35 years, and with a considerable knowledge of the legal practitioners of Ontario, I have thought that that work would be better attended to by him than it would probably be by any other legal gentleman of the province within my acquaintance. With that portion of the statement which I have read I am not in any degree concerned. But with reference to the remainder of the statement, by which it is charged that since I have been Minister of Justice I have sent a large amount of work to the firm with which I myself was formerly connected, I want to say first that since I have been a member of this House and from the day I became a member of this House I have had no manner of financial interest in the earnings of that firm. I have a natural interest in the success of that firm certainly, not only on account of former associations during the whole period of my professional life, but also because my son is now and has been for a few years a member of that firm. But with reference to the principal matter contained in this newspaper statement, namely, that I have taken advantage of my position as Minister of Justice to send legal work to that firm, I wish to say that there is not one word of truth in it, and that, although prior to my becoming a member of this House, that firm, with which I was then connected, received a very considerable amount nearly every year for the doing of public business for the government, from the day when I became Minister of Justice not one dollar's worth of legal work has been sent to that firm by me or by any department of the government so far as I am aware.

WESTERN GRAIN TRADE.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, last night the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) asked certain questions which I was not able to answer at the time, regarding certain grievances, which I may mention as follows: Over classification of grades; the necessity for sufficient registration of terminal elevators; the necessity of preventing the eliminating of competition by terminal elevators and other elevators; the further elimination of competition by the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific railways leasing their terminal facilities to alien interests. He said:

The government purposes to apply some remedy in an indifferent way to one of these grievances. I would like to ask the members of the government who were present at that interview why it is that the application of a remedy to the other three grievances is being deferred by the government?

In reply, I beg to say that I was in the office of the Minister of Trade and Commerce when Messrs. McKenzie and Henders, representing the Western Grain Growers Association, were there for the purpose of presenting their views regarding possible improvements in grain trade conditions. If I remember correctly the securing of amending legislation was not the chief purpose of their representations. As I understood it was not so much to advise as to legislation as to suggest to the government the propriety of removing the lake front elevators from operation by persons or companies who were traders in grain; preferably to secure their operation by the government. The government has had the suggestion under careful consideration, but it was felt that the matter was one of such importance as to require more full and careful consideration than could be given it in order to reach a satisfactory decision before the close of the present session. The government has been keeping a careful scrutiny of the work of the elevators, with the result that action has recently been taken that may be expected to have a material effect in improving conditions.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Before the orders of the day are called I may say that I was asked by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. W. H. Sharpe) on different occasions to bring down a return moved by him in the course of the session. I caused inquiries to be made and found that the file had been lost, but this morning I am pleased to inform my hon. friend that it has been found and sent to the Secretary of State and will be laid on the table in a day or two.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It has been represented to me that there are on the order paper several private Bills which stand for second reading and that unless these Bills are advanced a stage immediately they would have no chance of being brought back to the House before prorogation which we hope will take place next week. In these circumstances I would beg to move that the order for private Bills be now called so as to permit the Bills now standing for second reading to be read a second time and referred to the respective committees. This is not very regular and I cannot make this motion except with the unanimous consent of the House. For my part I see no objection to this course being taken and I do not think that any interest can be prejudiced by it. If there be no objection I move accordingly.

Mr. J. D. REID. I certainly object to that at this late stage of the session. There are several Bills that should have been brought in here long ago. To bring them on at this late hour I certainly object.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On Monday last, as chairman of the special committee appointed to revise the rules of the House I laid on the table a report of that committee, and it was then agreed that this report should be taken into consideration this morning. I therefore beg to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider this report.

Motion agreed to and House went into committee.

On the first paragraph:

The committee have carefully considered the present rules of the House and have agreed to certain amendments and additions to the same, which they beg leave to submit herewith.

1. That present rules Nos. 73, 74 and 75 be cancelled and the following substituted therefor:

PETITIONS.

A petition to the House may be presented by a member at any time during the sitting of the House by filing the same with the Clerk of the House.

Petitions presented before 4 p.m. on any day shall be entered in the Votes and Proceedings of that day. Petitions presented after 4 p.m. are to be entered in the Votes and Proceedings of the next day.

Any member desiring to present a petition in his place in the House must do so during routine proceedings and before introduction of Bills.

On the presentation of a petition no debate on or in relation to the same shall be allowed.

Members presenting petitions shall be answerable that they do not contain impertinent or improper matter.

Every member presenting a petition shall endorse his name thereon.

Petitions may be either written or printed; provided always that when there are three or more petitioners the signatures of at least three petitioners shall be subscribed on the sheet containing the prayer of the petition.

On the next day following the presentation of a petition the Clerk of the House shall lay upon the table the report of the Clerk of Petitions upon the petitions presented and such report shall be printed in the votes and proceedings of that day. Every petition so reported upon, not containing matter in breach of the privileges of this House and which, according to the rules or practice of this House, can be received, shall be deemed to be read and received.

No debate shall be permitted on the report but a petition referred to therein may be read by the Clerk of the House at the table, if required; or if it complain of some present personal grievance requiring an immediate remedy, the matter contained therein may be brought into immediate discussion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps I may explain what the change is. This new rule deals with the method of presenting petitions to this House. At the present time, the only way in which a petition can be presented to the House is for the hon. member to present it here, on the floor of the House of Commons. It is the first thing that is done after the Speaker has taken the chair and the doors have been opened. It is suggested that we adopt in this respect the British practice, that is to say, that petitions can be presented to the House not only openly as is done at the present time, but also by filing them with the Clerk of the House.

Mr. LANCASTER. It can be done either way.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It can be done either way. If the member who presents a petition marks an asterisk upon it, it is sent to the Clerk of the House and dealt with accordingly. But there may be some petitions to which members might attach some importance and to which they might desire to draw attention and therefore the old method is kept whereby they can be presented on the floor of the House. So the only change is that it is optional for a member either to move or to file with the clerk. I think the rule can be adopted.

Mr. SPROULE. The only observation I would make upon this, I am not objecting to the change, is that it might be misunderstood. It first says 'a petition to the House may be presented by a member at any time during the sitting of the House,' and then it says 'any member desiring to present a petition in his place in the House must do so during routine proceedings and before introduction of Bills.' The one part gives a whole day to a member to present a petition and the other says it must be done during the routine proceedings. I would be inclined to think that a good many members might misunderstand that. A member might be in his place in the House at any part of the day, whereas it means I take it, that he must present his petition by standing in his place during the routine proceedings.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly. The only alternative is that a member can hand his petition to the clerk. If he hands it in before 4 o'clock it will appear on the proceedings of the following day, if after 4 o'clock it will go over one day.

Mr. SPROULE. I see plainly enough what it means, but what I refer to is the fact that a great many members might misunderstand it. One part says you can present it at any time during the whole day and the other part says you must present it during routine proceedings.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, but in the one instance the petition is presented to the clerk and in the other it is dealt with in the House by the member who presents it.

2. Present Rule 36 to be amended to read as follows:

QUESTIONS.

36. (1) Questions may be put to ministers of the Crown relating to public affairs; and to other members, relating to any Bill, motion, or other public matter connected with the business of the House, in which such members may be concerned; but in putting any such question or in replying to the same no argument or opinion is to be offered, nor any facts stated, except so far as they may be necessary to explain the same. And in answering any such question the matter to which the same refers shall not be debated.

(2) (a) Any member who requires an oral answer to his question may distinguish it by an asterisk.

(b) If a member does not distinguish his question by an asterisk, the minister to whom the question is addressed hands the answer to the Clerk of the House who causes it to be printed in 'Hansard.'

(3) If in the opinion of Mr. Speaker a question on the order paper put to a minister of the Crown is of such a nature as to require a lengthy reply, he may, upon the request of the government, direct the same to stand as a notice of motion, and to be transferred to its proper place as such upon the order paper, the Clerk of the House being authorized to amend the same as to matters of form.

(4) If a question is of such a nature that in the opinion of the minister who is to furnish the reply such reply should be in the form of a return, and the minister states that he has no objection to laying such return upon the table of the House, his statement shall, unless otherwise ordered by the House, be deemed an order of the House to that effect and the same shall be entered in the Votes and Proceedings as such.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The next question refers to the item of questions. The present rule No. 36 is as follows :

QUESTIONS.

1. Questions may be put to ministers of the Crown relating to public affairs; and to other members relating to any Bill, motion, or other public matter connected with the business of the House, in which such members may be concerned; but in putting any such question or in replying to the same no argument or opinion is to be offered, nor any facts stated, except in so far as may be necessary to explain the same. And in answering any such question the matter to which the same refers shall not be debated.

(2) If in the opinion of Mr. Speaker a question on the order paper put to a minister of the Crown is of such a nature as to require a lengthy reply, he may, upon the request of the government, direct the same to stand as a notice of motion, and to be transferred to its proper place as such upon the order paper, the Clerk of the House being authorized to amend the same as to matters of form.

The new rule is as follows: The first paragraph is maintained. Questions may be put to ministers of the Crown relating to public affairs and to other matters, there is no change. But a new provision is put in:

Any member who requires an oral answer to his question may distinguish it by an asterisk.

If a member does not distinguish his question by an asterisk, the minister to whom the question is addressed hands the answer to the Clerk of the House who causes it to be printed in 'Hansard.'

There are many questions which are asked simply for information, and if the member does not require an oral answer to such question, the minister hands the answer to the Clerk of the House, who causes it to be printed in the 'Hansard.' There are some questions to which members may desire an oral answer, and he may continue to have it. There is no change as to the next paragraph. But there is a new provision which I think is an important one:

If a question is of such a nature that, in the opinion of the minister who is to furnish the reply such reply should be in the form of a return, and the minister states that he has no objection to laying such return upon the table of the House, his statement shall, unless otherwise ordered by the House, be deemed an order of the House to that effect and the same shall be entered in the Votes and Proceedings as such.

The House will understand the meaning of this rule if I remind them that very often a question is asked for information, and the minister will answer. There is no objection to that, but if it is too long to be answered, it will stand as a notice of motion. Then the question is put as a notice of motion and it can be called as such. If, when a question is put asking for information and the minister says: There is no objection, but the answer would be too long to give verbally, but I will supply the information; the order of the House issues at once, and that question will stand as an order of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I think an objection to the first part would be that most members of this House usually listen with a good deal of interest to the answers to these questions. It is one of the educative ways by which members keep themselves familiar with the work of the House going on from day to day. If this suggestion is followed out it will deprive them of that advantage. I know for my own part I have often listened eagerly to answers that are given to questions in the House. Many members will ask questions, and by that means draw the attention of other members to them when otherwise the subject matter would escape the House entirely. But if, under the proposed rule, the answers are handed in without being read, the members may never take the trouble to look them up. The new rule seems to be following the customs which obtains in the United States Congress, where questions may be handed in and the answers to which are never brought to the attention of the House. It seems to be drifting towards the practice that obtains there and which I think is not quite as good as our own.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as answers to questions in this House are concerned, I am bound to say that I have never been able to understand the answers to ten per cent of them, I always have to look them up in 'Hansard' the next day. Having questions answered by the method which is suggested in this amendment, is the rule which prevails in Great Britain, and it has been found to work very conveniently, and I am inclined to think it will work conveniently here. If a member should desire to see the answer before it appears in 'Hansard', he could go to some officer of the House to whom the minister has entrusted the answer, and get it. But apart from that, he can star his question, and have it answered orally if he desires. Therefore any member of this House who desires to have a question answered orally may retain that right by simply making a mark upon it.

Mr. SPROULE. It is to be remembered that sometimes answers given by ministers are not correct, some portions are omitted, and then the member who puts the question calls attention to the omission. Under this new method there will be no opportunity of correcting the answer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend will understand that many questions which are put on the floor of the House have no interest except to the member himself who puts them. But if a member desires to have an oral answer, he has only to put an asterisk to his question and it will at once come before the House.

Amendment No. 3,

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The following new rule is to be added after Rule 36:

Notices of Motion for the production of papers which the member asking for intends to make without discussion should be marked by him with an asterisk and should be placed by the Clerk on the order paper above 'Notices of Motions,' under the heading 'Notices of Motions for the production of papers.' All such notices when called should be forthwith disposed of; but if on any such motion the government may desire a debate, it will be transferred by the Clerk to the order of Notices of Motions.

The object of this rule is obvious. Almost every day we have notices of motion which go through unopposed, and these may be marked by the member with an asterisk, and the motion may pass without any discussion.

Mr. SPROULE. I think this suggestion is a wise one and will result in economizing time.

Mr. LANCASTER. What would happen supposing an hon. gentleman puts a notice of motion in the way indicated to show that he did not want to discuss it, while another hon. gentleman might want to discuss that very matter? I do not think any one hon. gentleman should have the right to prevent a matter being discussed by simply indicating by an asterisk that he did not want it discussed; he has no right to control the opinion of the whole House on that matter. I appreciate what the Prime Minister is trying to do and I am with him; but it seems to me we are going further here than we intend to go. We do not want to have half a dozen different notices of motion on the same subject on the order paper. When a notice of motion is on the order paper it seems to me that the consent of the House ought to be obtained if that motion is not to be discussed; else we would be in the incongruous position that, because some matter was of great importance and several hon. gentlemen thought it should be discussed, one of them would be able to say that it should not be discussed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I doubt that, in point of fact, that this is very likely to arise. If any hon. member on the other side puts a motion on the order paper asking for the production of papers and desires that the motion should be presented without discussion, I do not know that anybody on this side will object. The government may object, and, if they do, the motion is transferred to the notices to be debated.

Mr. CROCKET. But suppose that a notice comes from the other side, and a discussion is desired on this side, it would seem that there is no provision for that. If the government have a right to transfer a motion to the orders by requiring discussion, there should be some provision by which members on this side should have the same right with regard to notices from the other side.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think there is something in that. The difficulty could be obviated by providing not 'if on such motion the government may desire debate,' but 'if on such motion debate is desired.'

Mr. LANCASTER. That is my point.

Mr. U. WILSON. How would that affect it so far as the order paper is concerned? Would it go to the foot of the orders?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It would go to notices of motion.

Mr. U. WILSON. But if it went low on the order paper it might not be reached again.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It would take its place at the end of notices of motions of that day. The clerk will see to that.

Mr. U. WILSON. If there were many notices on the paper and it were put at the foot, it might never be reached again.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possibly,—it will take that chance.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. While we are dealing with notices of motion, something should be done to prevent the use of what are known technically here and in England, as 'blocking motions.' Our order paper of this session contains examples of tactics of this kind. Notices of motion are given in grandiloquent terms of legislation supposed to be for the benefit of the people, and these are allowed to stand day after day taking precedence of other motions. And, under our rules, so long as a motion stands on the order paper, the subject matter cannot be referred to in debate, except on that notice of motion. Here, for instance, on our order paper is a notice of motion that has stood there for five months and has blocked the debate of a subject which it is very desirable to have debated. This is a very old legislative trick and was first played by Mr. Gladstone and his friends to prevent the discussion of disagreeable subjects. They put notices on the paper covering these subjects, and then, when a member desired to refer to these subjects, whether on a motion for supply or in any other way, he was called to order, reminded that there was a notice on the paper covering that subject and told that it could not be discussed until such notice of motion was reached. And the notice of motion would be allowed to stand and never discussed. I referred to this once before in an attempt to prevent what is obviously a blocking motion. The difficulty could be overcome by providing that, if a notice of motion is called twice and it is not proceeded with, it should go to the foot of the list, and, if called the third time, dropped altogether.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have such a rule now, but it is not acted upon. We have had no blocking motions in this House this session, nor has there been such a motion within my memory. I think the hon. member (Mr. J. A. Currie) has only to recall what has been going on this session to see that I am correct in that statement. No one has stood in the way of any one else. The rule we have is that, when a notice of motion is called, it must be gone on with or dropped, unless it is allowed to stand at the request of the government.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am well aware that that is the rule. But, unfortunately, the government is interested and sometimes orders call for notices of motion to stand. I have a distinct recollection of instances of two hon. members being blocked in mentioning the agricultural item. This occurred in my hearing this session, the Speaker calling the attention of these members to the notice on the order paper in respect of this matter, and ruling that they were not free to discuss the subject. I think that is very unfair. I do not think the government should have the right arbitrarily to order a notice of motion to stand. The government and everybody concerned should go on with the motion, except by unanimous consent of the House. Anyone who knows the parliamentary history of England knows that these 'blocking motions' have been adopted again and again to avoid the discussion of matters that were regarded by some parties as unpleasant. I think we should have no more of that system, but, when a motion is called the second time and not proceeded with it should go to the foot of the list, and when called the third time, it should be dropped.

Present rule 32 to be amended by striking out the words 'or Thursday' in the second line from the top.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think I understand what the object of that is. I apprehend the point is that Thursday is a government day after the first four weeks of the session. But for the first four weeks of the session, certain matters, public Bills, for instance, have precedence, and if on one of these Thursdays, there is a long debate with the intention of talking out a public Bill, it had a perfect right to the floor of the House under the rules until the government took the responsibility of taking Thursday. At the time that change in the rule was made, some four or five years ago, I protested because I thought the government ought not to take Thursdays until they could give to the House some good reason for preventing any more discussion of public Bills. If we should adopt this amendment, it would be possible for a number of members to kill any public Bill by talking on it until the proper hour of adjournment had arrived. Instead of striking out 'on Thursday' make it read 'and on Thursday after the first four weeks of the session.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think my hon. friend has any cause for such apprehension as he now expresses, but if he thinks the proposed change will at all interfere with the privileges of hon. members opposite, I am quite willing to leave it as it is.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have had reason for apprehension, because in the last two or three sessions hon. gentlemen have had important public Bills, and the Prime Minister will remember that until four years ago public Bills had precedence all session, prima facie, but the government undertook to arbitrarily take Thursday by the amendment in the rule. As the rules are to-day, public Bills have no precedence, and are not likely to be reached except in the first four weeks. The House generally meets on a Thursday and as that day is consumed in organization there are practically only three days available. Public Bills are sometimes very important. If the government wish to take Thursdays they should assume the responsibility for doing so by a motion as in the case of Mondays and Wednesdays.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend is entirely in error, but if he thinks the privileges of the opposition are interfered with by this change I shall not press the matter. The existing rule is quite intelligible so far as Wednesday is concerned, because the House adjourns at 6 o'clock on Wednesdays. It is not so on Thursday. Years ago, at the time of confederation, notices of motion had precedence on Wednesday and Thursday up to 6 o'clock, and after 6 o'clock the House went into public Bills and orders. Then the rule was introduced for Wednesday and Thursday. There has since been a change; Thursday is now devoted to public Bills and orders after notices of motion all day from 3 o'clock and therefore there is no reason to make any provision for the business of the House on Thursday evening, because it is the same as on any other day. I do not think my hon. friend is justified in his fear, but I am quite willing to leave the rule as it is.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why not add ' after the first four weeks of the session'?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think it would meet the case at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. As I said, if my suggestion is not acceded to hon. gentlemen could practically talk out a Bill, because when public Bills were next called another Bill would go on instead of it and it would lose its right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as I understand the matter, the word ' Thursday ' was inserted in the new rules by the clerk or some one else two or three years ago under a misapprehension. Six o'clock on Thursday is just the same as 6 o'clock on any other day except Wednesday. Nothing happens, the business goes on at 8 o'clock just where it left off at 6 o'clock on Thursday, and therefore the insertion of Thursday in a rule regarding Wednesday for which there is special provision, is unnecessary and confusing, and for that reason it was thought best to drop it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. By our present rule, for the first four weeks of the session, on Thursdays, we take public Bills and orders after motions at 3 o'clock, and they are to continue until the end of the sitting. It does not matter what is before the Chair at 6 o'clock, if a Bill is before us at 6 o'clock on Thursday it goes on again at 8 o'clock. The rule in 1867-78 for the order of business on Thursday was:

> Until the hour of 6 o'clock p.m questions put by members, notices of motion, public Bills and orders; and after 7.30 o'clock p.m. public Bills and orders.

So if, at 6 o'clock, a notice of motion was under discussion, it dropped when the House met again at 8 o'clock and we went into public Bills and orders.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the Prime Minister mean that the reason Thursday is now in the rule is simply because it has been forgotten in the revision since 1867? And is the leader of the opposition quite sure that no harm of the kind I suggest is likely to result? I do not want to run counter to the opinion of both the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition in this matter. They have been on the committee and I have not, and I would like to know from the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that he is quite certain there would be no danger to public Bills under this amendment to the rules.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I feel quite confident that there will not.

On clause 5,

> That the present rule 13 be amended by adding the following: Speeches in Committee of the Whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under discussion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the English rule.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That looks very nice.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend object to this?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Well, I am relevant occasionally. There is no necessity for the application of a clause of that kind. I have been here for two sessions, and I know a little about the work of the House. I have never known of anything in the nature of what you call blocking the work of the House or trying to hold the rules of the House up to contempt. It is true that some Bills have been talked out, especially private Bills. We have a recollection of some private Bills here this session that had to be talked out, and with respect to others we had to talk until we got some amendments to them. I think that the application of a closure rule is not going to benefit the public. Any one who has followed the legislation this year must come to the conclusion that next year we will have more calls from corporations demanding blood and more strenuous efforts will be put forth for the purpose of getting something that is contrary to the interests of the public. Whatever merit the rule may have as applied to public business, certainly, when the House is in committee on private Bills it should not be applied. I have no recollection that the country has ever suffered one particle by these discussions or all night sessions. I have never heard of an all night session by which anybody was injured, but on the contrary the all-night sitting, and the fight which took place this session was for the benefit of the public. The reason why the rules were restricted in the English House of Commons do not obtain here. There the Nationalists deliberately proceed to hold the rules of order up to contempt by discussing every motion that was produced by the Speaker, even such a simple motion as: Shall this Bill be read a week hence or tomorrow? We have had no trouble with obstruction of that kind in this House. This House has always had absolute freedom in debate and the members of the opposition have never taken advantage of the laxity of the rules to unduly harrass the government or hold up the business.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would be inclined to think that this is the rule of the committee now, if the chairman of the committee sees fit to guide himself according to what should be the practice of the committee. I think it is merely placing in the written code of this House, in respect to its work in committee, that which at the present time is and ought to be in the unwritten code.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. May I be permitted to observe that my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) that this was a standing rule of the House of Commons in England long before the Nationalists were heard of, and I think moreover that it is a rule which is in line with common sense. This is a deliberative body and the discussions ought to be confined to the question which at the moment is before the House. My hon. friend says there may be occasions when the opposition should fight strenuously a proposition put before it and he instanced the all-night sitting which took place during the present session. There have been all night sittings almost every session of this parliament since I have been in this House, and that runs back for more than thirty years. But the all-night sitting which took place during the present session was an exception to all the all-night sittings that I have ever heard of. It was not my good fortune or misfortune to be present, but I read the debate carefully and I was surprised at the high character of the discussion which took place. It was not at all confined to one side of the House. All-night sittings for the purpose of obstruction are generally confined to one side of the House, the other side taking no part, but on the occasion of that all-night sitting both sides of the House discussed and discussed strenuously the proposition which was before the House. There was no irrelevant discussion as far as I could see in the debate. The discussion was of a very high character and under the circumstances I do not think the chairman would have been justified in imposing such a rule because there was no occasion to do it. I have also his word for it that he was impressed with the high character of the debate. But, if the debate goes on in a rambling manner, without any purpose, I think it is only right that the dignity of the House should be preserved by having such a rule as they have in Great Britain. We are only following the provision of the British House of Commons and I must say that I am shocked that my hon. friend, who is a Britisher, should even interpose an objection.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. My right hon. friend knows and we all know that from the time that rules were first provided for parliamentary usage there has been a general rule that a speaker must speak to the question. In the Committee of the Whole the practice has arisen of allowing greater laxity in discussion than when we are speaking directly to a motion, and a member has only one chance of speaking. Of course, I do not care—I am only one member of the opposition, but I feel that the House, by putting this rule in, is casting a reflection upon its past action. I do not feel like giving up any privilege or right in the way of obstruction than I have at the present time as a member of the opposition in any legislation which I consider not to be in the interest of the country is being forced through this House against my will. I do not think the Speaker has ever had occasion, since I have been a member of the House, to bring us up very strongly: it is only occasionally that things get a little hot and then he does it under the old rule. I do not see why there should be any rule of this kind unless it is intended to do something that has not been done before.

Mr. S. SHARPE. In every Bill there are certain formal clauses. Is this new rule going to confine us strictly to the formal clause that may be under discussion, or will it be allowed under such a clause to discuss the merits of the Bill? If not, I think this will considerably restrict the discussion.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If this new rule is applied, a member cannot discuss a Bill in committee in a general way, or the chairman will immediately shut him off. If a certain clause is before the committee, it will not be allowable to refer incidently to its bearing on other clauses.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not regard the rule as going that far. In the discussion of one clause, it would, of course, be allowable to refer to its meaning taken in connection with other clauses.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I thought the rule did not permit that, I would not consent to it for one moment. Moreover, on a motion that the committee rise or that the committee rise and report progress, there is always room for wide discussion. It does not seem to me unreasonable to say that the discussion in committee shall be relevant, and that is all that the rule amounts to. If the discussion in committee or anywhere else is not to be relevant, it is, of course, impossible to have any business done in order.

On paragraph 6,

The following new rule to be added after rule 18:

Mr. Speaker or the chairman, after having called the attention of the House, or of the committee, to the conduct of a member who persists in irrelevance, or tedious repitition either of his own arguments or of the arguments used by other members in debate, may direct him to discontinue his speech.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the English rule copied word for word.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that we are making a new departure which may be of a more serious character than is intended. Hitherto members have always had the right to appeal from a ruling of the Chair to the House. In this case, I take it we have no right to appeal; the Speaker is to do just what he likes. I do not wish to insinuate that any Speaker would be partial in his ruling, but the Speaker of the English House of Commons continues to occupy that position no matter what party is in power, whereas the Speaker of this House is elected for every new parliament and is taken from the side of the House which for the time being is controlled by the ministers, so that if he gave a ruling that might be considered a partial one, there would be no redress. If it could be done without materially changing the rule, I think there should be an appeal to the House from the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Under this rule the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole could compel a member to cease speaking during the whole session of the committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, it is simply on the question for the time being, certainly not for the whole sitting.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does this mean that if a member speaking in committee persists in beng irrelevant, and the chairman stops him, he can speak again while the House is in Committee, not on the same clause, but on the same Bill?

Mr. LANCASTER. As I understand, he could speak again so long as he did not sin again.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In other words, the chairman could direct a member to discontinue his speech, but he could not direct him not to begin again.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that the sense of the House is that there should be no appeal from this decision of the Speaker.

On paragraph 7,

The following new rule to be added after rule 78:

All members who are returned for two or more electoral districts shall make their election for which of the districts they will serve, within twenty days after it shall appear that there is no question upon the return of either district.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this a suggestion of the Prime Minister?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell).

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that this clause is imported here without any justifiable reason. I think it should be embodied in the Election Act instead of being a rule of the House of Commons.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I see no objection to that, but we have followed the practice in England, where it is not a rule of the House, but a standing order.

Mr. S. SHARPE. What would be the result of a protest being entered against both seats?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If a member is elected for two seats, and one of them is protested, he is not bound to elect until the protest is disposed of.

Mr. CROCKET. If there is no petition filed, and there is no return from either district, what will happen? And the practice is, is it not, for a member to make his election in the House of Commons.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At present the question which my hon. friend presents is disposed of by statute. The rule is simply to force them to elect within a certain time, and we have fixed the time at 20 days.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think perhaps that the Prime Minister does not quite appreciate the force of the observation of the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket). Where there is a petition against the return of any member we know by the records of the court that a question has arisen and the member in that case is not obliged to elect until the question is determined. The hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) asks as to cases where there is no petition against the return of a member either in the one district or in the other, how shall it appear? Well, I suppose it would have to appear just in the same way. That is, if one required technical and effective evidence, it would be necessary to go to the clerk or prothonotary of the court where the petition shall be filed, and procure from him a certificate that there was no petition. That is the only way I think it could be done. I am not aware, although I am not sure about this, that there is any report from the Speaker of the House upon the filing of a petition. There is a report when the petition has been dismissed.

Mr. CROCKET. But when there is no petition there is no return to this House at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And there is no return on the filing of the petition so far as I am aware. So whether there is a question or not must be determined outside of any infomation which by law is in possession of the Speaker.

8. The following new rule to be added after rule 28:

SENATE BILLS.

Bills originating in the Senate and sent to this House for concurrence shall be placed for first reading on the order paper under the heading 'Routine Proceedings', immediately after introduction of Bills.

9. The following new rule to be added after rule 29:

PUBLIC BILLS AMENDED BY SENATE.

Public Bills returned to the House from the Senate with amendments shall be placed on the order paper for the consideration of such amendments on Monday immediately after private Bills.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

10. Present rule 25 to be amended by adding after the words: 'Private Bills' the words 'Senate amendments to private Bills.'

Mr. LANCASTER. Which part of 25? The words 'private Bills' appear in several places in 25.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is simply to provide that on Monday after private Bills, there should be on the order paper another item for Bills coming from the Senate.

Mr. LANCASTER. But the words 'private Bills' appear in several places, one part relating to Mondays, another to Tuesdays, and a part to Fridays.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is moved that after the words 'private Bills' there be inserted the words 'on Monday'.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I now move that these rules come into force at the beginning of next session.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. A moment ago I moved to have the item private Bills called for the purpose of giving second reading to several private Bills, and advancing them a stage. Objection was taken by my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid). But I have a note from him informing me that he agrees to withdraw his objection, and therefore I renew my motion.

Motion agreed to.

GUELPH JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 218) respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company.

Mr. SPROULE. This Bill is very objectionable and it was doubtful whether it is likely to pass this session. I know there are several members who strongly object to it. Whether it would make any difference objecting to it at this stage I do not know.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If there is any objection to the Bill there will be plenty of opportunities in the committee, and there will be the third reading, so that nobody's interest can be prejudiced.

Mr. SPROULE. We have this disadvantage that when a Bill comes from a committee it has the stamp of the committee upon it and it is urged as a reason in this House why the Bill should go through as a matter of form. Now to my mind the principle of this Bill is a very dangerous one. It is absolute confiscation, there is no doubt about it. We have never so far as I remember in my acquaintance with parliament adopted the principle that is embodied in this Bill of compelling a man to sell or hand over to another his property without fair and reasonable compensation, or by arbitration. We do give people the right to expropriate property, but this is under the rule of arbitration, and for the public good. But we have never adopted, so far as I know, the principle of compelling any man to give up his property to another without the individual who is sacrificing the property having some reasonable say in what he should receive by way of compensation. So we are adopting in this parliament a principle that has never been adopted in the history of the Canadian parliament to my knowledge, and I think it is a very bad one, and one which will undoubtedly be quoted in the future as a precedent. I think we should go slowly before adopting any such principle.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 209) to amend the Canada Temperance Act.—Mr. Murphy, was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

1. Paragraph (g) of section 2 of The Canada Temperance Act, chapter 152 of the revised statutes, 1906, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

(g) As respects the province of British Columbia, 'county' means every county into which the province of British Columbia is divided by the 'Counties Definition Act,' chapter 51 of the revised statutes of British Columbia, and amending Acts, or other Act of the legislature of British Columbia dividing the province into counties, and includes every town, township, village and other division or municipality except a city municipality with the territorial limits of such county; and 'city municipality' means any city municipality or city as defined by the 'Municipal Clauses Act,' chapter 32 of the statutes of British Columbia of 1906 or any amendment thereof, or by any Act substituted therefor.

Mr. MURPHY. The word 'municipality,' where it occurs in line 15 should be struck out. The definition in the British Columbia Act which it is proposed to insert in this Act is a definition of 'city,' not 'city municipality.'

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the word 'municipality,' be struck out as proposed? Carried.

On section 2,

2. Subsection 2 of section 7 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

'2. In the province of British Columbia, in any land registry office or in any sheriff's office in the county or in the city to which it relates.'

Mr. MURPHY. This amendment is inserted in order to make the Act conform to the additional electoral divisions in the province of British Columbia, over and above those that existed when the Act was framed.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 217) to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.—Mr. Aylesworth, was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps there is no great advantage in reading these sections. If we had some explanation as to the amendments effected by the Bill, we might be able to dispense with the formality of reading all the sections.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The purpose of this legislation, as I very briefly explained in introducing the Bill, is to supplement legislation which has just been passed by the provincial legislature of Manitoba. In the Act of the provincial legislature, which was assented to on 16th March last, provision is made for the establishment of an industrial home within the province to which girls or women may be sentenced. Under the present Dominion statute with reference to prisons and reformatories, no provision is made for sentencing prisoners to such an institution, because none was in existence until the passing of the legislation to which I have just referred. Accordingly, this Bill proposes to repeal the four sections of the Prisons and Reformatories Act here named, which four sections apply to the province of Manitoba, and to substitute for these four sections the sections of the Bill. The only difference made by these sections is that the Bill introduces the word 'industrial home.' In line 15 of the first section of the Bill, power is conferred upon the court to commit a prisoner to either some reformatory or industrial home for boys or girls in the province of Manitoba. Under the existing law, the power to sentence is simply to the provincial reformatory for boys. The same thing is true of sections 140, 141 and 143 of this Bill. Section 142 is entirely new and has been introduced at the suggestion of the deputy attorney general of the province, who tells me that he has been urged to secure it by Hon. Mr. Daly, police magistrate of Winnipeg, who is also judge of the juvenile court in Winnipeg, and who is of opinion that a short term of imprisonment for girls or women who have gone astray is often of very little use in the way of their reformation. Mr. Daly's experience suggests the advisability of an amendment to the Dominion law, such as this section 142 proposes, by which the court may, in its discretion, sentence such an offender to any term it thinks fit, not exceeding three years. The provisions of section 142 are new; the provisions of the other sections are mere amendments of the existing law in the way I describe.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand the Bill, the whole of it has the approval of the Attorney General of the province of Manitoba?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Bill is suggested by the Attorney General of Manitoba.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

MANITOBA AND QUEBEC JUDGES.

Bill (No. 207) to amend the Judges Act, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the minister give a brief explanation of the Bill? It may have been given before, but I cannot recall it.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This Bill is introduced to carry out the resolution passed by the House just previous to its introduction, whereby it was resolved to be expedient that provision should be made for the salaries of four additional judges to the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, and one additional judge to the King's Bench of Manitoba. The way in which that is carried out as a matter of legislation is simply to repeal the existing clause of the Judges' Act and to substitute the new one contained in this Bill. Under the existing clause there is provision made for the payment of a salary of $7,000 annually to each of 17 puisne judges of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, whose residences are fixed at Montreal or Quebec. The word 'seventeen', by this Bill is changed to 'twenty-one.' In the same way the present law as to the province of Manitoba is for the payment of a salary of $6,000 per annum to three puisne judges of the Court of King's Bench, and this Bill proposes to substitute the word 'four' for the word 'three.' The other provisions of the Bill are merely repetitions of the existing statute.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

ESCHEATS TO THE CROWN.

Bill (No. 206) respecting escheats, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I may explain briefly the purpose of this Bill. We have no provision upon our Dominion statute-book for the disposition which is to be made of property which may escheat to the Dominion Crown. The ordinary escheat of property within any of the older provinces of the Dominion goes to the provincial Crown, and with such escheats the Dominion has nothing to do. But in the case of the territories where there is no provincial representative of the Crown, the estate of any person who dies entirely without heirs, escheats to the Dominion. As a matter of fact, there is at the present time in the hands of the Receiver General as part of the consolidated fund of Canada, the proceeds of an estate of this character amounting to nearly $50,000. There is no statutory provision for the disposition which should be made of such estates, and while the bulk of any such estate would of course simply go to add to the resources of the country, it is thought that in many instances it is desirable that there should be power to do something out of the estate for people who have not a legal claim, but a moral and equitable claim, upon the property, or upon the individual who had, during his lifetime, owned the property. The case out of which the money I have spoken of has arisen, presents features of that character. A man owning a considerable amount of property in what, in his day, was the Northwest Territories, died, having made a will, but having no descendant or legal heir. The will does not dispose of the whole of his property, and there is this surplus of nearly $50,000 which falls to the government. Now, there are people who, while not legally related to him, are still of his own blood, kin of the half blood, chidren who I think were of the same mother. At all events, in a relation, naturally speaking, as distinguished from legally speaking, they are half brothers or half sisters This Bill provides that the Governor in Council may make a grant out of property which becomes the property of His Majesty in circumstances such as I have described to Any person, who in the opinion of the Governor in Council had a legal or moral claim upon the previous owner, or a just or natural right or claim to succeed to his property or to any part thereof.

The power is also sought by this legislation to the Governor in Council to carry into effect any disposition of the deceased owner's property which it is believed he may have intended. I do not know that that situation arises in the particular case I have been alluding to, but a case might arise in which a man had made a will which, as a matter of law, was defective, which might, for instance have been signed before only one witness or might otherwise be of such a character that the courts would have no power to carry it into effect. It would seem only right that in such circumstances, or if in any way a clear intention was demonstrated on the part of the owner of the property to make some disposition of it, there should be power in the Governor in Council to carry out, to the extent which may seem just, such clear intention. Finally, power is asked to devote some portion of an estate of the character I have mentioned, in the way of reward, to any person who may make discovery of such property to the Crown. These are, in outline, the provisions of the present Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that 'the Governor in Council' means the federal authority. It would not apply to the provincial authority?

Mr. MURPHY. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Would this not bring on a conflict between the rights of the provinces and of the federal authority? The provinces believe and have acted upon the belief that it is their right to claim escheated property. For instance in the old Mercer escheats case, the estate was taken possession of by Sir Oliver Mowat, on behalf of the province, and both real and personal property disposed of by the provincial government. Would this not be assuming to the federal government the same authority which is believed to be vested in the provincial government? If it becomes law would it apply to personal property in the shape of money held by the banks and for which there was no owner? We find many of these unclaimed balances in the reports made every five years. Suppose some person gave notice of an unclaimed balance in the bank to the credit of some one who had died intestate, and to which there were no heirs, would that individual be entitled to the remuneration which this Bill provides might be given to him and in both cases would the property go to the provincial or federal government?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Bill is drawn with the effort to make it impossible that there should be any conflict with the well-established provincial authority. It can have no application to a case of an escheat in any of the older provinces of the Dominion. In the province of Ontario and also in the province of Quebec it has been authoritatively established by decisions of the courts that in case of escheats the property escheated goes to the province. The same law must, upon a like reasoning, apply to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and I suppose to British Columbia. I do not know that any case has ever arisen in these latter provinces in which the question has been discussed, but so far as I am aware there is no ground for supposing that escheated property in those provinces of the Dominion does not go to the province. I am not so clear as to the position of property which might escheat in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, because in those provinces the ungranted land of the Crown is the property of the Dominion, and the whole origin of the legal doctrine of escheat for want of heirs, is a remnant of the feudal law of the land reverting to the hand which gave it. In those circumstances it may be that the courts would hold an escheat of property in the three provinces I have mentioned should fall to the Dominion and not to the province. That question, however, has not practically arisen. In the case to which I have alluded and which has produced this considerable sum of money in the hands of the Dominion government, the estate fell into the Crown before the provinces were created, while the property was still within the Northwest Territories of Canada, and to-day, if a man died without legal heirs, owner of property in the Yukon or in the Northwest Territories, Keewatin, Mackenzie or Ungava, such property would necessarily fall to the Dominion government, because there would be no provincial government to which it could go. So this Bill, as hon. gentlemen will see, opens with the statement:

Where His Majesty the King, in his right of Canada, is entitled to land or other property, &c.

And the whole Bill is posited upon the case wherein right of the Dominion government, the Crown becomes entitled to a windfall such as this. In all other cases, of course, this Bill has no application; wherever it is His Majesty in right of a province or of any other jurisdiction than that of the Dominion, this Bill does not touch the matter.

With reference to the other point, the unclaimed balances which may remain in banks, if there was any such unclaimed balance the property of a man who died without legal heirs, it would, like any other portion of his property, fall into the hands of the Crown but not otherwise. If the man who owned the unclaimed balance left legal personal representatives, children or other heirs, that unclaimed balance would go, like any other property which the deceased had owned, to such legal, personal representatives and the Crown would have nothing whatever to do with it, so that this Bill does not profess to deal with unclaimed balances in banks except to the possible extent I have indicated where such unclaimed balance or any part of it was the property of a man who died without heirs.

Mr. SPROULE. With regard to money, and there was such a case, an unclaimed balance of a considerable amount remained in the hands of a bank in Ontario, and an effort was being made to escheat that, would it go to the province the same as real estate or to the federal authority under this Bill?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In a case such as my hon. friend describes, if the unclaimed balance escheated at all in Ontario it would escheat to the province and not to the Dominion.

Mr. PORTER. I notice in the wording of the Bill that the Governor in Council may grant 'out of the moneys or out of the escheat'. Are the words broad enough to enable the Governor in Council to grant the whole escheat or should the words 'the whole or any part' be inserted there?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think the words in the third section are quite wide enough to authorize the disposition of the whole property—may grant 'any land or other real or personal property or any part thereof'.

Mr. DOHERTY. I quite understand this legislation is intended to apply and would apply only to cases where property was escheated to the Crown in the right of Canada, but I would like to ask whether this legislation does not affect the provinces to this extent that a question might arise as to whether a particular estate should escheat to the Dominion or the province as in the case of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, with regard to which provinces the minister said there might be some question as to which Crown the right would be vested in. Would not this legislation affect these provinces to this extent that it would confer upon the Exchequer Court the exclusive jurisdiction of determining the question of right as between the Crown in the right of Canada and the Crown in the right of the province?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think the only answer it would be possible to make to the question which my hon. friend has propounded would be to say that if the property escheated to the Dominion government then certainly jurisdiction would be conferred on the Exchequer Court only, but, on the contrary, if the property did not, as a matter of law, fall to the Dominion government, this Bill would not touch it at all.

Mr. DOHERTY. I quite understand that if it were once decided, but I am asuming a case where the escheat takes place in a province, where, as the minister says the question is not absolutely decided whether the escheated property would fall to the Dominion of Canada or fall to the province. I am assuming the case that Canada claims that the escheat is to her. Then, under this Act, would not she be entitled, as against the province that might be claiming the right, to proceed before the Exchequer Court as this Act provides and to that extent are you not affecting the position of the provinces to the extent that you are compelling them or putting them in a position where they can be compelled, to submit the question of their right to the escheat to the determination of a Dominion court? You are putting them in a different position from an individual having a right to enforce or defend in regard to a property within the province when you are compelling them to meet the claim of the Dominion of Canada before the Exchequer Court. I am not prepared to say that perhaps it is not proper to do it, but I only want to make it clear. It seems to me that you are, in this instance, affecting the position of the provinces.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

OCEAN CABLE COMPANIES.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 104) to control the rates and facilities of Ocean Cable Companies, and to amend the Railway Act with respect to Telegraphs and Telephones and the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners. He said: It was enacted in the Bill as presented to the House that it should come into force upon a proclamation of the Governor General in Council. As it will not come into force unless there is concurrent legislation in the imperial parliament or provision of a similar nature made by the British government, the Senate has amended the Bill to insert on page 2, line 5, after the word 'force,' the words 'upon similar provision being made by the proper authority in the United Kingdom.'

Motion agreed to, and amendment read the first and the second time, and concurred in.

TELEGRAPHS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 105) to amend the Telegraphs Act. He said: This Bill should be read with Bill (No. 105). The amendments are the following: On page 1, line 8, after 'direct' add 'and at such rates as may be determined from time to time by the said board for the different classes of messages, or hours of the day or night during which such messages are transmitted, without discrimination within each class.'

The explanation of this amendment is that it will give a better understanding of the section. When I introduced this Bill to the House I explained that the object was to give the three classes of messages, urgent messages, deferred messages and press messages. Now there is a section in the Telegraph Act which forces under a penalty the companies to transmit messages as they receive them. If there is a differentiation between the classes of messages the companies according to this amendment and according to the Act which was introduced, the amendment making it clearer, will be under the same penalty obliged to transmit them as received. That is the first amendment. Then, another amendment leaves out section 4 of the Bill in order not to confiscate any rights which have been acquired by the cable companies. The next amendment is in the last section, line 19:

After 'Council' insert 'and simultaneously with the coming into force of the Act of the present session, intituled: 'An Act to control the rates and facilities of Ocean Cable Companies, and to amend the Railway Act with respect to Telegraph and Telephones and the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners.'

That is to say if we do not obtain from Great Britain the necessary provision to put into operation this legislation, then that amendment in the Telegraphs Act shall not come into force. The one is dependent on the other.

Motion agreed to, and amendments read the first and second time, and concurred in.

VOLUNTEER BOUNTY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. OLIVER moved that the House go into committee to further consider Bill (No. 163) to amend the Volunteer Bounty Act, 1908.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. The hon. minister received a lot of suggestions the other night. Perhaps he might just explain which, if any of them, he has accepted.

Mr. OLIVER. The other night the Bill stood over in order that I might have an opportunity to consider a number of suggestions that were made. I have them before me, and will refer to them in detail. Before doing so, however, I may say that after giving them the most careful consideration I have not been able to agree that it would be well to add them to the Bill or to adopt them in the Bill. Taking them in the order in which they came up in the debate, there was the amendment suggested by my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turiff). He suggested as an amendment to section 4:

That section 4 of the Volunteer Act, 1908, chapter 66, be amended by adding to it the following words: 'Every such grantee or his substitute may within six months after the date of entry, abandon the land so entered and may thereafter, within the time limited for selection and entry by subsection 1 of this section, or within six months after such date, make a second entry; provided that nothing in this subsection shall authorize or entitle any grantee or his substitute to make any further entry in place of the land abandoned as aforesaid.'

My view with regard to that is that volunteer scrip cannot in fairness to the administration be treated differently from other scrip, that is half-breed scrip, and everybody agrees that it would be entirely improper to allow a location of scrip to-day and to allow it to be exchanged to-morrow. Besides that, the amendment would practically give an additional six months, that is to say that instead of the time limit terminating at the time set by the statute it would be extended by the operation of this provision for six months longer in the cases of those who desired to speculate in this scrip. To put the matter shortly, it would be an undesirable addition to the speculative element which necessarily enters into the dealing with this scrip. Moreover, I do not think it would be fair to the ordinary settlers that these scrip holders should be allowed to take part in a rush for entry, thereby tending to displace the ordinary homesteader, and afterwards to have the right to exchange their location. Another suggestion was made by the hon. member for St. Anne (Mr. Doherty) in the following words :

That section 4 be amended by inserting in the second line, after the word 'Act,' the following words:

Or any bounty certificate that has been, prior to the passage of this Act, sold or transferred to any person acquiring the same for purposes of speculation or resale.

That amendment is intended to meet the view that has been expressed by a number of members that it would be desirable while giving an extension of time to the present holders of their own scrip not to give it to the men who had bought scrip. In regard to that I would observe that the fundamental principle of the Act as it was first passed was to put the substitute or buyer on an equal footing with the original holder, the view being that by doing so the original holder who did not wish to locate would get a higher value. The purchasers bought in the belief that this principle having been affirmed by parliament would be adhered to. Volunteers who have sold have had the benefit of this belief on the part of the purchaser. This belief was further warranted by the action of parliament in dealing with the scrip of 1885 in regard to which extensions were given. On that point I might mention that there have been a number of previous issues of scrip. There were issues to the veterans of the first Red river expeditions between 1870 and 1873, of 1,559 military bounty warrants for 160 acres of land without settlement duty. There was no limitation of time as to the location of those warrants, and to-day we are advertising in the newspapers hundreds of those warrants, giving notice to the public that there are such and such warrants that have not been located which are just as good to-day as they were when they were issued nearly 40 years ago.

Mr. LANCASTER. Because there was no limit, I suppose?

Mr. OLIVER. No limit in that case. Then in the case of the Northwest rebellion of 1885, scrip was issued and the volunteer had the choice of taking what is called $80 money scrip or 320 acres land scrip with settlement duty. There were issued in that connection 1,025 land warrants and 5,296 scrip notes. Now, the time for location of the land warrants was first fixed at August 1, 1886. That was a year after the rebellion. But this time limit was extended from time to time by Act of parliament: first, for six months from July 1, 1892; then for one year from January 1, 1893; for two years from January 1, 1894; for two years from January 1, 1898; from June 14, to December 31, 1900, and from June 26, 1906, to December 31, 1908. There was in the minds of both seller and buyer the precedent set by the treatment given in the case of the scrip issued in 1885, the terms of settlement and the conditions generally being approximately the same in that case as in the case of the South African scrip. I, therefore, think that my position is maintained that both seller and buyer had reason to expect some moderate extension of time for location, and that they did both sell and buy with that idea in mind. Now, as to administration in accordance with my hon. friend's proposal, my conclusion is that it would be impracticable in administration to protect buyers if two classes of scrip were created, whose differences in value could only be found out through some means of registration of original sales not now provided for. The result would be to create confusion and uncertainty that would be reflected in lessening value of all scrip and cause a serious loss to many innocent parties. To deal with the actual terms of my hon. friend's suggestion: scrip now in the hands of the volunteers and sold after the Act comes into force would have the benefit of the extension. The scrip sold before the passage of the Act is entitled to the benefit of the extension if located by the first purchaser. The proposal is not confined to the volunteers, but the first purchaser is to be allowed the benefit. Now, for the information of the House, I may say that the papers coming before the department in all cases must show on their face that the proposed locater is the first purchaser. It is not the fact, it is true, but the papers show that, and that is all the knowledge we have of the matter in the department. If the provision suggested by my hon. friend were adopted, proof as to speculation or resale would have to be brought forward from time to time on each separate occasion, and I need not enlarge on the subject to show that there would be the widest opening for perjury on the one hand—that is, the man who had not bought from the original locater, but who wished to locate—and for the work of the informer, who, knowing there had been a sale, would try to injure the man who had final possession of the scrip. I am bound to say that, in my judgment, it would be a very unfortunate provision to make, both for the volunteer, who holds the scrip, and for the public who might possibly be interested in the scrip. I am sure my hon. friend is not familiar with the operation of dealing with the scrip or he would soon see the matter exactly as I have placed it before the House.

Then, my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) suggested that:

> The grantee may personally or by his agent appointed by him in that behalf in writing and acting for him, or by his substitute duly qualified in that behalf, as already provided in the Act, perform settlement duties.

That is, the owner of the scrip may hire his duties done. I will not dwell on that point more than to say that hiring the residence duties done is contrary to the foundation principle of the Homestead Act, and is objectionable from every point of view having regard to western settlement, and I think that every man who comes from the west will agree with that statement of the case. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) suggested an amendment as follows:

> The provision of this Act, and of the Volunteer Bounty Act of 1908, shall apply to any volunteer whose domicile was in Canada at the time of the opening of the war, and who produces indubitable evidence of his service in the field in South Africa, although he may not have been duly sworn in and enlisted.

In regard to that, I would say that either that amendment would have no practical effect—that is, if it were strictly interpreted, it would practically add none to the number of those who are entitled to share in the scrip grant—or, if it were not strictly interpreted, it would open the door to such a class of applications as would, in my estimation, constitute a very grave abuse, and would be entirely contrary to the intention of parliament. As a matter of fact, a loose interpretation of the words 'service in the field' would include camp-followers as well as combatants, and, of course, nobody has any desire to widen the scope to that extent. Then, my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. S. Sharpe) suggested that subsection 2 should be amended by adding the words:

Canadian civil surgeons who served in South Africa during the war, and persons enrolled with any Canadian corps proceeding to South Africa on active service, and who died before such corps reached its destination.

The Act draws, and was intended to draw, a sharp distinction between the enlisted and the non-enlisted man. The non-enlisted man may do as good service as the enlisted man, but he has not entered upon the same obligations, and, therefore, is not entitled to the same consideration. The heirs of the enlisted man who died on the way to South Africa are in an entirely different class, but they were excluded by the specific terms of the Act. If it is decided to revise the views held at the time the Act was passed, that none should share except those who landed in South Africa, it would be better, in my opinion, to meet the case by a money rather than by a land grant.

My hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Herron) suggested an amendment which would include those who after having enlisted, suffered injury or illness, and because of this injury or illness did not proceed to South Africa. In regard to that proposition, I would say that this shows the difficulty that must arise if any attempt is made to widen the scope of the Bill, even to the extent of recognizing the case of those who died on the way. If the man who died is recognized, why not the man who fell ill or was injured, and, therefore, did not go? And if he is recognized, why not the man who was ready and willing to go, as in the case of the Halifax garrison, in accordance with a suggestion made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Crosby), that they should also share in this bounty?

These, I think, are all the suggestions that were made; I have given them the best consideration I was able, and I have presented the conclusions which I have reached. I would ask the House to agree to the Bill as it has been brought forward, with one exception. There is a schedule to the Bill regarding scrip which has been lost; we have allowed all people who lost the scrip to locate land in the place of it. But in order that the country may not suffer any loss if this scrip turns up, we have required them to put up bonds to the amount of $3,000 in each case as a guarantee. If the time for locating this lost scrip is extended for a year, these people will have to carry that heavy load for an additional year. I think that is in accord with the views of the House and with the general administration, that having taken that security, we should not add to the burden by extending the time in this case. Since the Bill was printed, three other cases have come to hand, and I would like the privilege of adding them to the Bill. That is the only amendment I would ask the House to agree to.

Mr. LAKE. I am very sorry that this Act has been introduced at all by the Minister of the Interior. Even now there are still some eight months within which persons who have received this bounty will have time to locate their land. It is very much against the wishes of the farming community throughout the Northwest that there should be any extension of time. However, the minister seems determined to force this Bill through the House. That being the case, I think it would have been wise on his part to accept some of the suggestions which have been made on this side of the House, and especially that suggestion which was made by the hon. member for St. Anne, Montreal, namely, that the extension of time should be made applicable only to the veterans themselves, those who intend personally to locate their scrip. I regret that that suggestion has not been accepted by the minister. I would urge him especially to accept one other suggestion which has been made by the hon. member for Macleod. I hope the minister will think that over again, and that he will change his mind. The principle is generally recognized everywhere, I think, in regard to giving war medals, that the man who gets as far as the seat of war becomes entitled to a war medal, even though he never saw a single shot fired in anger. That principle is certainly recognized in the mother country, and it should be equally applicable to those men who volunteered from Canada to serve the empire in South Africa. They started in on their duty, but either through illness or through accident, they were not able to reach the seat of war in South Africa, and they or their legal representatives, in cases where they have died, are now going to be deprived of the benefits which I think they are rightly entitled to. I am sorry the minister has not come to the conclusion to accept the principle that those men who enlisted and started on their way, but through illness contracted owing to their service, or through accidents which have happened to them during that service, were unable to reach South Africa, should receive the benefits of the Act.

Mr. OLIVER. The question as to who should receive the benefit of this bounty was discussed very fully at the time the Bill was passed. For good or bad reasons, parliament came to a certain conclusion. It was not my wish, in introducing this Bill, to raise any question of that character whatever. It seemed to me that if you raised the question, you opened a door that it would be difficult to close. There was a request made to us by certain representative volunteers for an extension of time, and they seemed to give good reasons for that. We agreed to give them only a part of what they wanted, thinking it would not be unreasonable, and would not do any great harm to any one, and might do good. But I did not wish, in bringing that position before the House, to raise any other question, nor do I desire to do so at the present time. There is no doubt that a good case can be made out for certain men whose circumstances have been brought before the House by different members. But I ask the House to consider the position. You have to put a limit somewhere, you have to put a limit some time, and wherever you fix that limit, there is somebody going to be just outside of it, and somebody else going to be just inside of it. It is as if you drew a circle: somebody is going to be just inside that circle, and somebody is going to be just outside it; and the man who is just outside of it feels that he has a grievance, and his friends feel that way also. You proceed to enlarge the circle and take in a few more. Do you reach a conclusion by that means? No; the more you enlarge the circle, the more you increase its circumference, the more people you find are beyond, on the outside of that circle. You have satisfied those who are included in this enlarged circle, but you have created dissatisfaction in the minds of the larger number of people who are still outside the larger circle. I quite appreciate the feelings of my hon. friends, and I quite appreciate their arguments. But I want to assure them, and I ask them to realize the fact, that there is no way a line can be drawn that won't leave people just outside of it who have nearly as good a right to be inside as the people who are inside. Now, in order not to raise the question at all. I would think it advisable in everybody's interest not to open the Bill. There is one particular class that appeals to me very strongly, and that is those who died on the way to South Africa; but even in that case, if the House should see fit at a later date to do something for them, it would be better to do it by way of a money grant than to open the question of an increased grant of land scrip. There is no doubt that the sentiment of the country is against any further grant of land scrip for any reason whatever. That being the case, I think it would be well for us not to put ourselves in the way of increasing the number who would become liable for land grants under this.

Mr. LAKE. Would the minister be personally in favour of such a measure as he suggests might be introduced in the future, if such a measure were introduced next year, that is to make a money grant for those who died from injuries received on the way to South Africa?

Mr. OLIVER. If I could dissociate my personality from my responsibility I would say yes, the case appears to me so strong; but I do not think it would be wise in the interests of these people, to change the present limitations of this Bill.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I know that in my district the rule was absolute that no young man who was married or had parents or others dependent on him was permitted to go to South Africa. In my own corps there were two or three hundred volunteers for South Africa, but they were weeded out if they were married or had any one depending on them. It seems hardly in keeping that after such care in the selection of men claims should be put forward on behalf of their heirs.

Mr. LAKE. There are one or two cases in which scrip for the 1885 volunteers has not yet been located. Could not the minister under this Act provide for an extension of this scrip in cases where the volunteers are still anxious to locate?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think it would be wise to bring that under this Act. I read a list of the extensions given to the 1885 scrip. It was extended up to 1908, and it was supposed that would bring everything in. If there are any outstanding scrips of 1885, I would prefer to propose a special Act to cover them. It is not our wish to cut out any man from the reward to which he was considered to be entitled.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. I know of one of these 1885 scrips that has not been located. The party was not aware that these extensions had been made, and he is entitled to every consideration. I shall draw his attention to this matter. In listening to the debate so far I think the minister is not very far wrong. I know the west fairly well, and I think he has the interest of the west pretty well at heart in the way he is trying to administer this scrip. My sympathies are considerably with the minister in the way he is handling this subject.

On section 3, extension of time.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister referred to the case presented by the hon. member for Hamilton the other night, although he does not appear willing to accede to the request of the hon. member (Mr. Barker). I thought that was a case of extreme hardship, and that the minister would do something in that particular case. Is there no way, say by order in council, in which a special case of that kind could be dealt with? The government seems to do a great many things by order in council, and to my mind a case of that kind, which appeared to be one of extreme hardship, might well be treated in that manner.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no provision whereby the privilege asked for could be granted even by order in council, and if my hon. friend will remember when the Bill was up for consideration in the session of 1908 that question was raised, and it was decided by the House at that time that the privilege which we gave in the case of the man who sold his scrip would have to be the consideration that he would get, that is to say, we gave liberal consideration in regard to the sale of scrip so that the man who could not himself, in his own bodily person, go into residence on the land, would be able to realize as much as his scrip was worth from the man who would actually go on the land. That was the position at that time, and I do not think it would be well to revise it. The principle of the homesteader being on his own land is the very foundation of our whole system in the settlement of the west, and I do not think it would be well to deviate from it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am sorry the minister could not meet that case. Of all the cases cited I thought that was the one where the greatest hardship came to the volunteer. What settlement duties has a man holding South African scrip to perform in order to get his land?

Mr. OLIVER. He has to live on it personally for six months in each of three years, and has to get under cultivation in that three years a total of thirty acres. He has to have upon the land, at the end of three years, a house of the value of $300.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does that apply to the substitute as well as to the original scrip holder?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. The same terms apply to them both?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; the foundation principle of the Bill, in dealing with it in the House, was that we should put the substitute in exactly the same position as the grantee.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. In the case of the '85 scrip, was it possible to speculate in it the same as you can in the South Africa scrip?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Was it transferrable?

Mr. OLIVER. It was transferred at any rate. It was dealt in just the same as this scrip is dealt in. In our Act we have made provision that the scrip shall not be trafficked in but our Act—

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. You left it wide open.

Mr. OLIVER. —is not effective in that. We did our best, but we were not able to prevent it. The same attempt may have been made in regard to the '85 scrip, but it has not prevented trafficking in it just the same as in this.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much land would it take to satisfy all the scrip of all kinds that is now outstanding—half-breed scrip, '85 scrip, South African scrip and scrip of all other kinds?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not, off-hand, give my hon. friend any idea on that subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. Can the minister give any opinion or some idea? I think it is—

Mr. GRAHAM. Highly desirable.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, highly desirable. My impression is that the time has come when we must stop this scrip business. In the interest of the west it should have been stopped sooner. Information of that kind would be a guide to the House as to what action should be taken in dealing with the matters. I am afraid that it would absorb an enormous amount of the Northwest, probably half of one of these new provinces, or even more.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the amount outstanding is hardly as much as that, but I quite appreciate that it is a very interesting matter. It is too late to do anything this session, but I think that possibly I may be able to give my hon. friend the information at another session if we are both here.

On section 4, time for location under certificates in schedule.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the minister state why no extension is given in respect to these cases?

Mr. OLIVER. Some of the scrip that has been issued has been lost. It is reported to us that the scrip has been lost and a claim is made for the land that the scrip would have called for. On satisfactory evidence to us that the scrip was lost we allow entry for the land that the scrip would call for, but we take from the person who was entitled to the scrip a guarantee bond to the amount of $3,000, which bond is forfeit if the scrip turns up. The carrying of this bond is a somewhat expensive affair, and under the terms of the Act as it stood when the bond was issued it would expire at the end of 1910 and the liability would expire. We have thought that when we propose to extend the life of the valid scrip for another year it is not fair that we should require these people to carry that guarantee for an additional year. Therefore we provide that that specific scrip under the Act shall not be extended beyond 1910

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As a matter of fact the bond would probably become void if you did not except this.

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly.

Mr. DOHERTY. This is the section to which I had suggested an amendment to be dealt with by the minister. I am not prepared to say that I find that the reasons which he has given for refusing to accept it are quite conclusive, nor would I consider that they are satisfactory reasons for abandoning the amendment. There is perhaps a better reason why I should not press it and that is that reason of the stronger is always the better reason inasmuch as if I moved the amendment the minister, being stronger than I am, would defeat it. Therefore, I do not think that any good purpose would be served by moving it now.

On the schedule:

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to move an amendment to the schedule in accordance with what I have already said. I therefore beg to move:

That there be added to the schedule the following names and numbers: William Patrick Bagley, 3057; George Henry Wise, 2200; Ernest Mostyn Hoops, 6417.

Schedule as amended agreed to.

Mr. BLAIN. May I take the opportunity to ask the minister if the government has reached any conclusion in respect to the proposed land grant to those who took part in the Fenian Raid of '66, and is it the intention to do anything this session.

Mr. OLIVER. It certainly is not the intention to do anything this session. I am not able to answer farther than that.

Mr. BLAIN. Under consideration yet, I suppose?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not answer that. Several deputations waited upon the premier. I was not present at these meetings, and I could not say what conclusion has been reached.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was just on the point of rising to ask the same question which has been asked by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) because I have myself sent in petitions on behalf of the volunteers of '66 and '70. I desire to say that in my remarks in reference to the issuing of any further scrip, I would not like to exclude the application of the volunteers of '66 and '70 which has been before the government for several years. I would be perfectly willing that scrip should be issued to those on whose behalf requisitions have been made, but otherwise I think the government should take a firm stand.

Mr. HERRON. I should like to ask the minister if representations have been made regarding the early settlers of Manitoba —those who settled before 1870, and if so has any action been taken on that request this session? May we expect that that will be taken into consideration?

Mr. OLIVER. Requests have been received from the people mentioned by my hon. friend, but there is no intention of any action in regard to that matter this session any more than in regard to the Fenian Raid veterans. I am not authorized to make any further statement in regard to either of these cases.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. OLIVER moved concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 102), respecting Immigration. He said: There are two amendments of some importance. One is in subsection 7 of section 33, which relates to exclusion at ports of entry, and to the arrest of those whom it is desired to exclude. The Senate amendment was made at the suggestion of the department, as we believed the provision should be strengthened by the insertion after the word 'entry', of the following:

Or who at a port of entry eludes examination by an officer of the Board of Inquiry, or who enters Canada by force or misrepresentation or stealth or otherwise contrary to any provisions of this Act, or who escapes from custody of an officer or from an immigrant station when detained for any cause under this Act, shall be guilty of an offence under this Act, and liable on conviction to a fine of not more than one hundred dollars.

The Senate have also inserted in the second line of the same section, after the word 'detained' the words 'without a warrant'. That is to say, if there is to be detention, it should be at the moment, as the officer has not time to go and get a warrant. Then, it is proposed to amend section 45 as follows:

Part 17, line 31.—Leave out from 'the' to 'and' in line 34 and insert the following:—'railway company or companies which brought him to the place in Canada where he is being detained for deportation to the ocean port where he was landed, or the nearest available winter ocean port, as may be directed by the Board of Inquiry, and thence he shall be conveyed free of charge by the transportation company which brought him to Canada to the place in the country whence he was brought or to the country of his birth or citizenship.'

This is an amendment dealing with deportation from interior points. As the Bill passed the House the provision was that the total expense of deportation from an interior point to the port of landing as well as to the original port of embarkation should be borne by the steamship company. They object very strongly to this. They say that as the railway company gets the income from the fares from the port of landing to the interior point, they should pay the cost of transportation from the interior point to the port of landing. These representations made on behalf of the steamship companies were acceded to by the department, and the Senate has amended the Bill accordingly. I may say that the railway companies have not objected to the amendment. These are all the amendments.

Mr. U. WILSON. Can the minister tell us about how much money he spent in deporting immigrants last year?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot tell at the moment. I may be able to do so during the discussion of the estimates, when I have the advantage of the presence of an officer.

Motion agreed to, and amendments read the first and second time, and concurred in.

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. OLIVER moved concurrence in Senate amendments to Bill (No. 125) amending the Land Titles Act. He said: In this case the Senate has disagreed with our wording of the Bill, and they have substituted a wording of their own to convey the same idea.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the difference between it and our Bill?

Mr. OLIVER. Our Bill is an addition to the last section and says 'provided that such place may be the city of Ottawa in the province of Ontario until a more convenient and suitable place in the district can be selected. The Bill is to provide that in the Northwest Territories where there is not sufficient business to warrant an establishment of local registration of property, registration may be made in Ottawa until the district becomes of sufficient importance to warrant the establishment of registration.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was that not clearly expressed?

Mr. OLIVER. The Senate disagreed with the wording which I think expressed the same idea.

Mr. LANCASTER. They wanted to do something, I suppose.

Motion agreed to, and amendment read the first and second time, and concurred in.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY BRANCH LINES.

Mr. GRAHAM moved concurrence in Senate amendment to Bill (No. 17) authorizing the government of Canada to acquire by lease the lines of railway connecting with the government railway.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know what the amendments are.

Mr. GRAHAM. The proposed amendments of the Senate attach additional conditions before any road can be taken over by the government. I am not sure that they impose any conditions that we would not comply within any case, but I will read them to the House:

4. No such lease shall be ratified by parliament, unless a return has been laid before both Houses for at least one month showing:

(a) The cost of the road proposed to be leased, together with the amount of stock subscribed and all moneys received from sale of bonds or by way of bonuses or otherwise;

(b) Present equipment of road together with the average rate of freight and charges for passengers on the same and a statement showing approximately how above rates compare with those charged on the Intercolonial railway;

(c) Present condition of the road and the estimate of outlay required to put it in good running order;

(d) Total receipts and expenditures for three years last past;

(e) List of shareholders and bondholders;

(f) Other creditors of the road;

(g) Estimate of future receipts and expenditures in the event of the road being leased by the Intercolonial railway;

Such return to be signed and certified to by the chief engineer and traffic manager of the Intercolonial railway and the deputy minister.

I am not sure as to the effect of these. Most of this information will be given to both Houses in some way. Whether it could be carried out in detail as this amendment asks I am at a loss to know.

Mr. EMMERSON. This proposition was brought to the notice of this House originally as a business proposition, not only in the interests of the Intercolonial railway, but also in the interests of the lines of railway which were constructed under the authority of this parliament as feeders of the Intercolonial railway, and constructed I assume, because of the assistance given to them by this parliament, to afford adequate railway facilities to sections remote from the trunk line of railway. Now when this Bill was first under consideration in this House I took some exception to it. I thought it was too restrictive, that it was not dealt with as a business proposition in the way it should be. Apparently we did not go far enough in this House to limit, and restrict, and retard the movement towards the acquisition of branch lines, at least in the judgment of the hon. members of the Senate, because they propose by this amendment apparently to hamper in every possible way, and obstruct this proposition. In the first place I lay it down that necessarily this information would be procured not only by the managing board, but also by the government through its officials, and that the Minister of Railways in seeking the ratification of a lease would unquestionably, in so far as he could, lay before this House all the information available, inclusive of the information specially referred to in the amendment. It does not even mention a time limit, but says 'all future receipts.'

Mr. GRAHAM. Would it be possible for them to sign that information accurately?

Mr. EMMERSON. I say it would be absolutely impossible. In many instances there is certain information that could not be secured. I know one particular instance in the province of New Brunswick, where a certain railway was foreclosed; it was known as the Alberta railway, running from the town of Salisbury in Westmoreland county to Hopewell Corner in the county of Albert. That was away back in the 80's, and in the foreclosure proceedings, and just previously, there was a movement on the part of the government of the day to gethold of the bonds which were held against that railway in order that the government might take some action in the way of securing that railway; and it was obsolutely impossible for the government of that day to find the bond-holders in Great Britain, and in the foreclosure suit and the proceedings for winding up the matter, these bonds were still outstanding, the holders not being known. Now it would be in many instances impossible to get this information. You can assume a case; there has been a proposed lease and agreement entered into for a lease on the part of the government, and that lease could not be made effective under the provisions of section 3 until parliament had ratified that lease; and although it might be represented to parliament to be a business proposition in the interest of the Intercolonial, and of the country, important in every respect, yet parliament would be powerless to ratify such a lease until such time as the information which is set forth in this amendment was laid before parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. Has the hon. gentleman considered that possibly the Senate will be asleep when we are ratifying this?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know what was in the minds of the hon. gentlemen who moved in this matter. I would assume that it was discussed from a business standpoint, and not from any party standpoint. I want to make no reflections upon them. But it does seem to me to be an absurd amendment, and one which I think no self-respecting—pardon the word—Minister of Railways would accept. It seems to me it is tantamount to saying to the government and to the Minister of Railways that he would blindly go into a matter of this kind without having all possible information to place before parliament. Further than that it assumes that the parliament of Canada, when such a matter was up, would not demand and secure this information if it were found to be desirable, or if there were reasons apparent why the lease should not be ratified. I certainly object to this amendment, as I think it only obstructs this movement. And, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that there is a supersensitiveness on the part of many members of parliament, whether in this House or in the Senate, with respect to any proposition that is made in regard to the Intercolonial. I do not propose to advance any arguments now in favour of the acquisition of branch lines. Parliament has approved of the idea, the principle has been adopted by the government, and the question now is: Shall we give effect to it, or shall we put every obstacle in the way? Every one will admit that if the Intercolonial were under the control of any of the great railway corporations of Canada every branch line would be acquired and absorbed. Every one will admit that that has been the history of railway corporations in Canada, in the United States, and in Great Britain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. With a view of saving discussion, might I be permitted to point out to my hon. friend that the provision inserted by the Senate is practically inoperative? It cannot bind the action of parliament as set forth in this schedule, it cannot bind the future action of parliament, and if at another session such a thing should be ratified by parliament this would simply be repealed. It does not amount to very much.

Mr. GRAHAM. It says that parliament cannot do certain things.

Mr. EMMERSON. It certainly is not proper legislation. It seems to me that parliament should determine when such a matter is before it what it will do, the responsibility is upon parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Senate passed this resolution, thinking that the House of Commons will be abolished at that time.

Mr. EMMERSON. It seems to me an insult to the House of Commons:

No such lease shall be ratified by parliament unless a return has been made before both Houses for at least one month.

If there is any business in that proposition, I would like to know it. It certainly is not in good form as legislation, and in my judgment it should not receive the concurrence of this House. It will always be within the right of parliament to determine what road shall be taken, if any. But I object that we shall be hedged about now, or that there should be any legislation, however inoperative, as it must necessarily be, with respect to the future action of parliament. There should not be any such legislation placed upon the statute-book. I shall oppose concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think after the discussion, and after the particular point raised by the leader of the opposition, in addition to the fact that I think it is not in conformity with the Bill as we passed it ourselves, I move that we disagree with the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER. Has the hon. gentleman leave to withdraw his motion for the second reading? Carried.

Mr. GRAHAM moved that the House disagree with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 17), and that a message be sent to their honours informing them of that fact.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. GRAHAM moved the second reading of Bill (No. 145) to amend the Railway Act. He said: This Bill covers several amendments which I explained on the introduction of the measure. In addition, some Bills proposed by other hon. members, having been referred to the railway committee, were approved by that committee, and these I have embodied in the Bill as well as one or two other amendments of my own. These are now all in reprinted form in the hands of members of the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. GRAHAM. You will notice, Mr. Chairman, that many of these sections have been renumbered. This is owing to the fact that section 1 in the reprint is a new section, taken from a Bill introduced by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). I would prefer that that hon. gentleman should explain this provision.

Mr. LANCASTER. At the beginning of the session I introduced a Bill to somewhat limit the appeals from the Board of Railway Commissioners to the Supreme Court. After a great deal of attention given to the subject by the subcommittee to which the Railway Committee referred the Bill, and after consultation between the subcommittee and the Board of Railway Commissioners—because the object was to make a piece of legislation that the board, as administering the law, could work out—the matter was sent back to the Railway Committee and reported unanimously to the House. The effect of the section as here proposed is to eliminate subsection 3 of section 56 of the Railway Act and enact the following:

3. An appeal shall also lie from the board to such court upon any question which in the opinion of the board is a question of law, upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board within one month after the making of the order or decision sought to be appealed from, or within such further time as the board under special circumstances shall allow, and after notice to the opposite party stating the grounds of appeal; and the granting of such leave shall be in the discretion of the board.

3a. No appeal, after leave therefor has been obtained under subsection 2 or 3 of this section, shall lie unless it is entered in the said court within thirty days from the making of the order granting leave to appeal.

Until this session there was no time limit for the making of application for leave to appeal. The board passed rules from time to time which, however, they found they could not enforce very well. The latest rule made a limitation of 14 days, but they found that they could not always hold people to that. Besides, we all agreed that it was necessary to have a statute fixing the time. So, it was made as here proposed that application shall be made within one month and the appeal must be prosecuted within thirty days after leave to appeal is granted. These limitations were thought reasonable so that an appeal cannot be kept for ever hanging over either the railway company or any other party to a case before the board.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Is that the whole effect of this section?

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, except that we make it clear—which was in doubt before that the board shall have discretion to allow an extension of time under special circumstances. The head of the Railway Commission, ex-Judge Mabee pointed out that cases might arise of delay through persons not knowing the actual result of the decisions given, or there might be other special circumstances in which they would desire to extend the time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The proposal is that section 1 of the Bill as reprinted shall be section 1 of the Bill before the committee.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Section 1 of the Bill as before the committee now becomes section 2 as shown in the reprint. The section is as follows:

The said Act is amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 59:—

59a. Whenever this Act requires or directs that before the doing of any work by the company the approval of the board must be first obtained, and whenever any such work has been done before the.....day of....., one thousand nine hundred and nine, without such approval, the board shall nevertheless have power to approve of the same and to impose any terms and conditions upon such company that may be thought proper in the premises.

It will be observed that there are two blanks in this section. The object of the section is to provide for cases of this kind. It has been found that some railway companies have proceeded to locate their lines and do things which they should not have done without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners. And, when the board has been appealed to, the chairman has held that the board has not power to deal with the road unless it begins at the beginning and practically starts with the rails torn up. All that this section is intended to do is to give the Board of Railway Commissioners power to deal with a situation of that kind. If they see fit to make the company put the road somewhere else, they can do it, or if they like, they can approve of what has been done. I propose that the blanks should be filled in so as to make it read 'before the 31st day of December, one thousand nine hundred and nine.'

Mr. J. HAGGART. The section will not have any post facto effect beyond that date?

Mr. LANCASTER. That is all. The chairman states that he has come across several cases of that kind and he really thinks he has not power to deal with them unless we give him that power.

On section 3, vice-presidents who are not directors.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is introduced in response to a request from the railway companies that they be allowed to appoint officers who may not be members of their boards of directors. They want to have vice-presidents who are not on the board of directors. I think the Canadian Pacific railway has a special Act permitting this, and one of the other companies asked for a similar Act, but I said I would introduce a general Act and permit them all to do it. They argue that there are cases in which they wish to appoint an officer to give him a title and engage him, although he is not to be a member of the board of directors. It means nothing except to the board itself.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The idea apparently is to follow the American practice of making the working officials directors, not to have figureheads on the board of directors. That is a good practice. The English practice, of course, is the reverse, and all the directors are outside of the company, who know nothing about the affairs of the company, the officials being simply servants.

Mr. GRAHAM. One thing I had in mind was, for instance, the case of a company with the majority of its directors living in the old country, so that it would be impossible to make a selection from these gentlemen to do some particular work requiring the man doing it to have some standing.

On section 4, orders of the board relating to crossings with telegraph and telephone companies, &c.

Mr. GRAHAM. This clause is merely to expedite the crossing of electric or telegraph wires over a railway line where the two companies can agree and the work is done under a regulation of the board. Heretofore, they have had to get an order from the board in each case, and some small crossings have occupied a good deal of time and caused a good deal of trouble. The commissioners and the companies agree that where there is no dispute, these crossings can be made under regulations framed by the board, and both parties may agree.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Wilcox) is interested in this clause. The idea prevailing was that the Railway Commission were to establish two or three standard forms of crossings and that blue prints would be supplied to parties who wished to make crossings, and if any one applied and put in that standard form of crossing, underground or overhead, following the specifications laid down by the board, there could be no question about the right to cross by either company. As it is now, the application must be made. The board has not made a standard form of specification.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not yet.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is it the intention of the board to make it? As it is now, every time a crossing is to be made, costing perhaps $5, there are expenses of $35 or $40 in connection with the application.

Mr. GRAHAM. This section really provides for the adoption of such a standard. In 90 cases out of 100 the companies will agree, and if they should not agree, it will be going too far to say that one company shall cross the line of the other without the board saying how it shall be done.

Mr. LANCASTER. On general principles, if they do not agree, the board will decide.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am informed that if they do not agree, that the railway company will send the telephone company to the board every time. I would strike out the words 'with the consent of the company.' Let the board establish a standard crossing, and if the people will follow that exactly, I do not think the railway company should have any kick at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. Suppose the railway company insisted that a certain point was not a proper place for a standard form of crossing, or take the case where they persist that the usual form ordered by the board was the one to use and the municipality thought it was not, and would not agree. Would my hon. friend say that it was right that the railway company should be allowed to force the use of the standard arrangement? Should they not be allowed to do, as I advised a municipality to do in such case, go to the board and secure an order to have the work done under a special regulation? It works two ways.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. member's argument would be all right if there was a standard form, but the minister has said there is not one.

Mr. LANCASTER. The very legislation we are dealing with presupposes that there is one, and I was referring to the customary form.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think these clauses should be carefully guarded, that these telephone companies have certain rights, and I do not think they should have to spend $30 or $40 coming to the Railway Commission every time a railway manager says: You cannot cross that railway. In western Ontario, where there are many farmers' telephones, they have to cross the railway at almost every concession, and a standard form of specification should be adopted. I do not think that these small companies should be put to the expense of securing an order if they want to make a crossing at a country road. The proper way would be to strike out the words 'with the consent of the company.' As it is, the whole matter is still left in the hands of the company.

Mr. LANCASTER. No.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The section reads:

An order of the board shall not be required in the case in which telephone, telegraph or electric light wires are erected across the railway with the consent of the company——

Mr. LANCASTER. That is the railway company.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (reading):

—in accordance with any general regulations, plans or specifications adopted or approved by the board for such purposes.

It does not say which company it is; it may mean the telephone company.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, it means the railway company by the interpretation clause.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There are lots of railway companies that are not half as big as the Bell Telephone company.

Mr. GRAHAM. The interpretation clause of the Railway Act would cover that.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The clause would read just as well if that were struck out. Then it would mean that the standard specification of the board would govern unless they appealed to the board against it. If there were an appeal the railway company would have to appeal to the board. The grievance which exists is not righted by this Act. This clause is put in here to give a little soothing syrup to the country, but it is no good.

On section 6, section 254 amended by adding at the end of subsection 3 the word 'lands.'

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a portion of the Bill of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), and I think if he would just explain his Bill it would apply to the different clauses as they come up.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Section 5 of the reprinted Bill is a portion of the original Bill that I introduced. However, this amendment has really nothing to do with the main portion of the amendment that I introduced. Consequently I can simply refer to this now, and when we come to section 8 I shall take that up. Section 5 simply adds the word 'lands,' to section 254 of the Railway Act. Section 254 compels railway companies to fence their railways. The courts have held that it simply compels them to fence their railways. The courts have held that it simply compels them to fence their rails. A very serious miscarriage of justice has occurred by reason of that interpretation. Adding the word 'lands' does nothing more than carry out what was originally intended that they should fence their own property.

On section 6, leave to carry traffic.

Mr. GRAHAM. At the present time the Act reads that the Board of Railway Commissioners, to accommodate the public, may, on a road which is not completed, allow them to carry freight traffic. I am proposing to amend that by striking out the word 'freight,' so that, if the board see fit, they can ask the construction company to carry passengers as well as freight over a part of the line even if the whole line is not completed.

On section 7, warning of moving trains.

Mr. GRAHAM. Brakesmen have been, and are compelled to stand on the rear of an engine that is running backwards. Cases do occur where light engines are sent twenty or thirty miles backwards.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why does the engine have to go backwards?

Mr. GRAHAM. It may be that there is no place to turn, or the engine may be ordered to go back to assist a freight or to render assistance at a wreck, and she is sent back twenty or thirty miles. Cases have been brought to my attention where men have almost frozen to death while standing on the rear of the tender. The idea of a man riding on the back of a tender is to protect the public at crossings where they are shunting. This clause protects all that because, it requires the railway men to remain on the back of the tender when they are shunting, but it does relieve them from remaining on the back of the tender when they are on these long runs.

Mr. LANCASTER. The object of the Act has always been that people will naturally suppose that an engine is going the way it is headed, and, therefore, when they see an engine facing east, they will go west to get behind it. I do not want to oppose it if the minister thinks it is absolutely necessary to trust the board in this regard, but when an engine is headed west people will naturally suppose that it is going west when it may be going east. It is natural for a man to assume that an engine is heading in the direction in which it is pointing, but when he drives up he may find that it is going the other way. I can understand that there may be exceptional cases, as where there is a wreck, and it is impossible to turn the engine around, and it must be run down the line twenty or thirty miles. If this provision is necessary, I will consent to it only with the understanding that the board see that the privilege is not extended or abused.

On section 8, damages caused to or by cattle on railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a portion of the amendment of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie.

Mr. MEIGHEN. This section embodies the principal part of the amendment which was contained in my original Bill. Its purpose is to extend the liabilities of railway companies in the event of their own default. At the present time railway companies may default under any section of the Act. Section 427, in addition to imposing other liabilities, renders a railway company liable for any damage that may result by reason of its default under any section of the Railway Act, that is to say, if a company violates any section of the Act, and damage is caused thereby, under section 427 the railway company is ostensibly liable for that damage; but unfortunately it has been held, and held repeatedly, that notwithstanding the provisions of section 427, there are certain sections of the Act which the railway company may violate without being under the necessity of paying the damage apparently provided for by the wording of that section. The sections I refer to are 254 and 294, more particularly section 254. Reasoning back from these sections through their history in the older Acts, the courts have come to the conclusion that notwithstanding that a railway company may be in default under section 254, and may thus be liable for damage under section 294, the class of damage to which it is liable is not as general as that to which it is liable, for violating any other section. Section 254 provides that the railway company shall fence its railway, and maintain gates and cattle guards. The limitation to which I call attention has the effect of restricting them in the event of their violation of these provisions to such damages as result in the killing or injury of cattle by the company's negligence or wilful act or omission. Under the old law that was the only liability, and the courts have held, notwithstanding the provisions of section 427, that the company is still limited, in the case of a violation of section 254, to the same liability as it was formerly under; that is to say, it is only liable if by reason of its default animals are killed or injured through its negligence or wilful act or omission. A large class of damages may result and have resulted which do not come within that old limitation—damages occasioned by animals which have got on the track through the default of the company in failing to maintain fences, gates or cattle guards—escapes and does damage to neighbours' crops or other damage which the company escapes. In a case with which I was connected animals got on the railway track through the absence of a fence, ran down the track and were injured so as to be useless by having their legs broken on a bridge, and the railway company was not liable because the damage was not caused by their trains or engines. Many other cases occur. For instance a company is bound to fence its right of way so as to keep all cattle out, and the term 'cattle,' includes sheep. This the companies have refused to do in certain cases, and as a consequence the farmer who owns sheep has either to go out of the sheep business or run grave risk of damage, because his sheep can get through the railway fences, and do injury to his neighbours' crops. Under the present amendment the railway company would be liable for all damage done by their default in these respects, the same as under any other provision of the Act. There is a provision added at the end of section 8 in the following words:

Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be taken or construed as overriding the provisions of section 407 of this Act.

Section 407 of the Act has the following language:

Every person who—except as authorized by this Act, without the consent of the companies, rides, leads or drives any horse, or other animal, or suffers any such horse or animal to enter upon the railway, and within the fences and guards thereof; shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a penalty of $20 for each offence, etc.

He is also liable for various other offences, such as leaving gates open, taking down part of a fence, or turning animals loose. When my original Bill was before the Railway Committee, just at the moment when it was accepted, this provision was placed before me for my approval:

'Provided however that nothing herein shall be taken or construed as overiding the provisions of section 407 of this Act.' At the time, I read it as carefully as I could, and I could see no objection to it. However, later on my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), who has had more to do with this class of legislation than I have, and doubtless knows better the difficulties that have arisen under that class of legislation, drew my attention to a dangerous feature of the amendment. It would be quite possible under the proviso at the end of the section, in fact it would certainly be held that section 407 was the dominant section prevailing over subsection 8 of the reprinted Bill, and that wherever they were in conflict section 407 would prevail with the possible result that the whole benefit of the amendment would be obviated, because if a man unconsciously allowed his animals to be on the track and, if the company then escapes liability for injuring then the real benefit of subsection 4 of section 294 would be lost. The subsection renders the company liable even if a man has suffered his animals to be on the track so long as that suffering is not due to any wilful act or neglect of his own. Consequently to the wording of the proviso of section 8 of the reprinted Bill, I cannot consent. I think, however, it could be amended so as to obviate the danger to which I have alluded. So, long as it is restricted to preserving the penalty I have no objection, but to the word 'override,' I cannot agree, because its effect would be too far reaching.

Mr. LANCASTER. I agree in the main with what has been said by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen). This matter was referred to a special committee, and I think it was the law clerk of the Railways and Canals Committee that suggested to the minister that those words should be added. They were not really considered by the committee, but the hon. member for Portage la Prairie at the time did not think they would do any harm, and the Bill was reported. The position is this, that previous to 1901, just because of the language of the section now replaced by 407 there was no liability for animals killed. It was because of the language of what is now section 407 that we had all the trouble for three years. We finally got section 294 as it is to-day. The object of that section was to protect the owners of animals, who without any default of their own allowed their animals to escape and get on the railway track. My hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) rightly enough in my opinion thinks that if the railway company is in default and the animals are not injured, but cause other damage, the railway company should be responsible. While he is attaining that, I think it is proper that we do not unconsciously deprive the owner of the animals of his right to recover, as we declared after all the contest which went on for three years, and which ended in 1903, that the railway company may be liable for the animals themselves. I suggest that instead of saying 'provided, however, that nothing herein shall be taken or construed as overriding the provisions of section 407 of this Act' that we say 'provided, however, that nothing herein shall be taken or construed as relieving any person from the penalties imposed by section 407.' Section 407 is two-fold. It prevented civil liability which we determined after a great deal of trouble should exist, and it also imposes penalties. I think the penalties should stand. I think if one is within the penalty clause of section 407, he should be liable. If he is not within the penalties of the section, we should not attempt to bring section 407 in here.

Mr. GRAHAM. That would be acceptable, and I move that amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is moved that the words 'over-riding the provisions of section' in the last line of section 8 be struck out and in lieu thereof the following added: 'relieving any person from the penalties as imposed by section.'

Motion agreed to.

On section 9.

Mr. MEIGHEN. This is rendered necessary by section 8 of the reprinted Bill in order to work out the same effect. Section 295 is the excepting section, consequently it must be made to read in compliance with the new reading of section 294, which is the section imposing liability.

On section 10.

Mr. GRAHAM. This was part of a private Bill which I am putting in here as a government Bill. Hon. members will remember that this is a Bill which was introduced by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Papineau). It means this: Last year we passed an Act providing that, where damage is done to property by a railway company up to their limit of liability, that is, $5,000, and that the party injured received insurance, the railway was practically relieved from paying damages to the amount of that insurance. Damages often exceed the amount of the insurance. Consequently, this section is to provide that the railway company, even though no negligence is shown, and though the injured party has received $5,000 insurance, is liable for the damage done by the railway up to the limit of $5,000. A section designed to provide for this case was passed by the Railway Committee; but, as I said before, I am merely adopting these and have the right to amend them. I submitted the matter to the Minister of Justice, who made a little alteration in the draft which I submitted also to the chairman of the Railway Committee. It seems to accomplish the object and reads a little more smoothly. I propose the words approved by the Minister of Justice instead of the words included in the Bill. The words of the Bill on this point, as will be seen, are as follows:

Provided further that where there is any insurance existing on the property damaged the company shall only be liable under this subsection for the amount of such damage over and above the amount accepted or recovered by the assured by way of insurance upon the property, but where the company has used modern and efficient appliances and has not otherwise been guilty of any negligence such liability shall not exceed the said sum of five thousand dollars.

Instead of these, I propose that the section shall read in this respect as follows:

Provided also that if there is any insurance existing on the property destroyed or damaged, the total amount of damages sustained by any claimant in respect of the destruction or damage of such property shall, for the purposes of this subsection, be reduced by the amount accepted or recovered for the benefit of such claimant in respect of such insurance——

Mr. LANCASTER. But will not this leave unprovided for the proviso of the section:

—but where the company has used modern and efficient appliances and has not otherwise been guilty of any negligence such liability shall not exceed the sum of five thousand dollars.

Unless we make it clear that $5,000 is to be over and above the insurance, I think the inference might be that the total amount must always be not more than $5,000, and that you deduct from the total amount the amount of insurance a man carries, so that his insurance is for the benefit of the railway company and not for himself.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think that this language, if examined, will be found to cover the case that has been put in illustration. Take the case of a man whose loss is $10,000 and who has $5,000 of insurance, and consider whether or not it is covered by this language. It provides that where insurance exists on the property destroyed or damaged, the damage sustained by the claimant shall, for the purposes of this subsection, be reduced by the amount recovered in respect of such insurance. That is to say, in the case that we have been putting 'the total amount of damages sustained' is $10,000, and this amount 'shall for the purposes of this subsection be reduced' by what? 'By the amount accepted or recovered' in regard to the insurance. That is, the insurance recovered is $5,000, the total damage is $10,000, and the claim for the purposes of this subsection will stand as to the remainder.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a point of legal construction. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) is clear in his opinion that the amount of the loss makes no difference as the clause has been drafted by him.

Mr. LANCASTER. What we did in the Railway Committee was to make it clear, and I cannot understand why our clear statement should be struck out and that of the Minister of Justice substituted. We say in the Railway Committee that this man insures for his own benefit. Now, if he is going to be limited to $5,000 when he is damaged $20,000, the company should pay that $5,000. If he is insured for $5,000 he should get $10,000 in all. That is what we say in the printed Bill, but the Minister of Justice strikes out that and says that the liability should be limited to $5,000. We have two liabilities in the previous part of the section. If there was no liability but the one stated in the previous part of the section, I would agree with the Minister of Justice. But there are two liabilities: the one is the absolute liability if they do not use proper appliances; the other is that if they do use proper appliances, they are only liable to $5,000. So there are two liabilities that we are dealing with in this reprinted Bill. The Minister of Justice speaks of liability. Which liability? Judges would undoubtedly differ in the interpretation of the term. I think the positive statement put in by the Railway Committee is clear and distinct and had better remain.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The clause gave us considerable difficulty in the Railway Committee, and I think that the clause suggested by the minister is much more clear than the one the Railway Committee put in. If I understand the amendment now proposed, it is that the amount of insurance shall be deducted from the total damage suffered; then, that the balance recoverable against the railway company shall be limited to $5,000, where the railway company have used proper appliances and have been guilty of no negligence, but unlimited where they have been negligent.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think it says that the total damage is recoverable.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The total damage sustained; the insurance shall be deducted from that. If the company then has been guilty of no negligence, its loss is limited to $5,000; if it has been guilty of negligence or has not used proper appliances, there is no limit. I must say that the clause gave me some trouble, and when the amendment was first suggested, I did not agree with it; but after examining it I think it expresses our intention better than the clause drawn in the Railway Committee.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. I may tell the committee now so as to save discussion later on, that the Government Railways Act as amended practically puts the government railways in the same position as other railways in regard to fires. I am giving notice of an amendment to be added in the Government Railways Act; so, while we are accepting the disabilities, we are also having advantages of the General Railway Act.

Mr. J. HAGGART. What good will it be if you do not give them the right to sue without a fiat?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have passed an Act giving them the right to sue up to a certain amount in their own local court.

Mr. J. HAGGART. It will be limited to that small amount, $200.

On section 11—free carriage and reduced rates may be given in certain cases.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is another amendment, a portion of which is asked for by the railway employees. In brief this is to allow to former railway employees transportation if they wish; and also to allow Canadian companies to give the Interstate Commerce Commission reduced rates or free transportation if they desire.

On section 13—working agreements to be approved by board.

Mr. GRAHAM. The real meaning of this is to include telegraphs in section 13. The original Act has only telephones, and I am putting telegraph companies in the same position.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does this clause allow the government telegraph company to make an exclusive agreement with another telegraph company?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to provide that all these agreements, agreements of telegraph companies as well as telephone companies, must be subject to the approval of the board. Heretofore, telegraph companies were not included in that section.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Does it apply to government telegraph companies?

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine not.

On section 14—safety at highway crossings.

Mr. GRAHAM. In passing the Act of 1909 we had a provision making it incumbent on railways to make protection to level crossings, constructed hereafter, at their own expense. In framing that Act, we used the words 'at the passing of this Act.' That means the passing of the original Act, as I am informed; and to make it clear that that clause was to be operative from the passing of the Act of last session, I am asking the committee to change the words to read '19th day of May, 1909.'

On section 15, rate of speed at certain crossings.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a section which I wish to submit to the House with an explanation. My hon. friend (Mr. J. A. Currie) introduced an amendment really to place the control of level crossings, as it was before, in the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have had representations from men in charge of fast trains, engineers, conductors and firemen, concerning the clause which we placed in the Act last year saying that no train could run over a level crossing where an accident had occurred during the preceding ten years, at a speed exceeding 10 miles an hour. That was considered very drastic. The object as I explained to the House was that there would be no difficulty in finding where the work of reducing level crossings should begin because where an accident had occurred there was a prima facie case that it was a dangerous crossing. In its operation that is found to be very drastic. The railway companies have instructed their employees to comply with this provision of the Act. That means that the fast trains cannot begin to make their time. I have had some experience of the fast trains on the Grand Trunk railway, and I have found that the Act works out as contended by these men. Then I took the position with the railways: Hurry up and fix your crossings. They pointed out that it was impossible to do that with sufficient rapidity to comply with the law.

Mr. LANCASTER. They have had five years under the Act.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Act passed last year was very drastic and it was impossible to live up to it. The railway companies said: Suppose you reduce that from 10 years to 5 years, then we will proceed with all rapidity to protect the crossings where accidents have occurred in the past 5 years, and then we will have to continue until all dangerous crossings are protected; in the meantime it will not work a hardship on us and will allow us to keep within the spirit as well as of the letter of the Act, and at the same time not disarrange all the traffic in relation to making time. The clause I submit to the committee reduces the time to five years so that trains can pass these crossings at a greater speed than 10 miles an hour if protected, leaving the other 5 years to be dealt with later. The proposition did not seem to me to be unreasonable, and I submit it to the House for consideration.

Mr. RUSSELL. How much difference would it make in the running time of a train from Montreal to Toronto?

Mr. GRAHAM. I would have to have a list of crossings. Take the International Limited, it would have to slow down to 10 miles, at every crossing where an accident had occurred within ten years. Slowing down scuh a train and getting up the momentum perhaps two or three times within 10 or 15 miles, consumes a good deal of time, and yet perhaps only one accident has ever occurred at a particular crossing. Yet they have to stop or be criminally liable if anything should occur. It places the employees in a very awkward position. They are expected to make time, and if they disobey orders and an accident occurs they will be criminally liable because the company has given them orders to comply with the Act. There is a difficulty both with the employees and with the company, and it struck me that it would be reasonable to reduce that period to 5 years, the company to pay attention immediately to as large a number of crossings as require attention.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There is another aspect of this case. Consideration, of course, has been extended to the foot passenger and the driver, and the man who wants to travel on a fast train, but no consideration seems to be given to the shipper. I have no hesitation in saying as a shipper that the operation of that clause has cost the shippers of this country $1,000,000 in added interest on goods delayed in transit. Take goods shipped from Sydney to western Ontario, they had been delayed nearly two weeks longer than they would have been under ordinary circumstances and when you ask the railway companies for an explanation they say that a freight train has to come to an absolute stop at each of these crossings, not to slow up to 10 miles as a fast passenger train does. When I came to analyse the question I found that 25 per cent of the accidents that have occurred at these crossings have occurred on crossings that would not be called dangerous crossings, most of the accidents have occurred through carelessness of the people themselves driving on the track where they could see the train openly for miles. There are carried on the railways of Canada each year 67,000,000 tons of freight, and when you stop the carriage of these goods for two or three weeks in a year the mere banking charge for carrying these goods for that time means a lot of money. In shipping there is the haulage by the railway, there is the traffic charge, but there is a larger and more deadly charge because it goes on day and night, that is the interest that the banks or some one must be paying on the money value of these goods, and whilst this Bill may have benefited a few careless people, and perhaps have saved the lives of one or two innocent people I do not see why the business interests of the country should be held up on account of a section of this kind. If the section is amended so that the Railway Commission may order the train to stop at any crossing which they consider dangerous—and they have examined them all by this time I understand —and shall order that the train shall slow down to ten miles an hour until the crossing is made right, we would have a more satisfactory condition and there would not be so much difficulty. The Railway Commission are really violating their oath of office every day. It is well known that in some cases they have given the railways permission to cross where there has been no protection put up, a few trees may have been cut out and the trains go on at the same speed. Some amendment is necessary. The present legislation involves a danger to the railway companies and to the men—because the man on a locomotive is as much afraid of an accident as the man driving a team on the road, because his life is in danger—a man might drive a team of horses on a crossing, ditch the locomotive and kill the fireman and engineer just as easily as the locomotive might run down the team.

Mr. LANCASTER. They never do it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I remember a case fifteen years ago in which a horse got on the track, and upon a bridge and was struck by a locomotive, the result being that the engineer and fireman were killed. In delaying 65,000,000 tons of freight for three or four weeks in the year by this legislation it seems to me that you are taking a pretty bold, drastic stand. I am quite in sympathy with any legislation to protect what are considered dangerous crossings and to compel the railways to make the necessary arrangements to protect those crossings as quickly as possible. But why treat the subject in a blanket clause like that? There are crossings where men have been killed accidentally but where under ordinary circumstances, there can be no chance in the world of people being killed. They can see the train two miles away, but in some cases people try to beat the train. It is a very grave thing to stop all the traffic on these railways the way it is done now. A freight train has to come to a stop. It cannot slow down to ten miles an hour because the air will not apply on one of those long trains, and the train will break in two. If you have a train of fifty cars and apply the air you can stop the train, but you cannot slow it down, because if you try to, the train will part. I think the government should consider this matter, and I believe that they would meet the case by inserting the words: 'if so ordered by the board'.

Mr. LANCASTER. The effect is practically the same to-day as that contended for by my hon. friend from North Simcoe. These trains cannot pass over any highway crossing at rail level at a greater speed than ten miles an hour if at such crossing an accident has happened, unless the crossing is protected to the satisfaction of the board. The board can order any protection and in doing so it may say to the company: You do not need to do anything but clear away this embankment with which you are obstructing the view, or widening your track. We have had cases of that kind in the Niagara district. It does not cost the company more than a mere bagatelle. By putting in their plans and showing their elevations the company may be permitted to run without any special protection. The board have full power under this section to absolve them from any responsibility of this section under such circumstances as they see fit.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Where?

Mr. LANCASTER. By the very language of this section which I have just read. Trains are run as fast as they were ever run over crossings protected to the satisfaction of the board. The power of the board is nothing more nor less than the power to say what is absolutely necessary in order to protect the interests of the country.

PRIVATE BILLS.

RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION.

House in committee on Bill (No. 210) to incorporate the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada.—Mr. Gervais.

On section 1,

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. The parties who are asking for this incorporation are a very important class of people; I think they represent the largest amount of capital of any class in Canada. I understand that they do not intend to go into business as an association; but if we allow this Bill to go through and give them incorporation, it will combine all the retail merchants throughout this country, and they will be able to control prices, the number of stores, and everything of that kind in every town in Canada. They will be able also to control the wholesale people. Suppose there are five or six stores in a town, and a man wants to start another store. These people will have such power that they will be able to go to the wholesale men and say: We do not want you to sell goods to this store; if you do, the retail dealers throughout the country will not buy goods from you. In that way they will be able to control the retail business from one end of this country to the other. The great excuse they are giving for wishing to have this Bill passed at the present time is that the retail merchants will be able to compete with the great departmental stores of the country. It is true, the great departmental stores, such as Eaton's and Simpson's, are doing a great injury to the retail trade; but I maintain that this is not the proper way to deal with them. The retail dealers should go to the various provincial legislatures and get them to pass laws whereby each municipality could put a tax on all goods coming into the municipality from these departmental stores. I wish to protest against this Bill going through.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I fail to see the point our good friend is trying to make. Why should not the Retail Grocers' Association be entitled to the same rights and privileges as the Wholesale Grocers' Association or the Manufacturers' Association or the Shipping Federation, for which I had the honour of putting a Bill through this House, and it went through unanimously? If any of these associations could be said to represent a monopoly, as my hon. friend suggests, surely it would be the Manufacturers' Association. I hope this Bill will go through, and with the unanimous assent of this House; there is no reason why it should not. Do not let us do injustice to the Retailers' Association, because there may be some little feeling against them. I do not think this House will stoop to that.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I wish to say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that the people in western Canada know how much the Manufacturers' Association has hurt them. That association is taking undue toll from the people there to-day. Because we have put through other Bills, and allowed other combinations to work hardships on the producers of this country, is no reason why we should continue to do the same in this case.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. When this Bill was before the House two or three days ago, I put myself on record as being opposed to it, and I want to do the same now. My hon. friend wants to know how it would be unreasonable to pass legislation in this House in favour of the Retail Grocers' Association when the Wholesale Grocers' Association has had Dominion legislation. Well, it seems to me that there is a good deal more necessity for wholesale business to receive Dominion legislation than retail business. Retail business is local, distributed all over this country; but wholesale business has necessarily to have its interprovincial connections in order to operate and to provide and distribute its supplies all over this country. It does seem to me that this is purely provincial local legislation. I would like to call the attention of the committee to this institution which is asking for incorporation. In the last few days, a convention has been held in the city of Toronto by the manufacturers of food products in this country, combined with the Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, at which representatives from the Retail Grocers' Association were present and discussed the food-supplying trade of this country; and what happened at that convention? This very association, which to-day is asking for powers from this parliament, entered into discussion and came to conclusions with the other parties represented, to arrange and maintain prices of food products in this country, and went further than that—intimidated the manufacturers who refused to enter into what they called the contract-selling system. All this happened in the last few days, and has been reported in the daily press. Now, my opinion is that what this institution wants is power from this parliament to combine with these other Dominion bodies for the purpose of fixing and maintaining high prices at the cost of the consumers of this country. I think the evidence of the convention which has just been held, if the members of the committee have read the correspondence, will convince them that this is a very dangerous power to place in the hands of an association which, after all, is simply a local institution doing business all over this country under local conditions. There is not expressed on the face of the Bill any necessity for Dominion legislation for the purpose of carrying on that business. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I want to put myself on record, for those reasons, as being entirely opposed to the Bill.

Mr. ROCHE. I desire to reiterate my objections to the Bill. I took exception to it the other evening, and I have seen no reason to change my opinion. It is true that the promoter of the legislation claimed the other night that this was a purely benevolent institution which did not mean to go into any trade or business whatever. If that is the case I think they are coming to the wrong shop. I do not see why they should not secure their legislation from the provincial legislatures and the suspicion in my mind is that these gentlemen under the guise of this Bill are seeking powers that they feel confident they could not secure from the provincial legislatures. That is the reason they are coming to the Dominion parliament. It was pointed out by a former provincial secretary the other evening, one who ought to be conversant with the legislation of the province of Ontario, that all the powers necessary for this company could be secured under the Ontario Company Act. The only objection offered to that is that they wish to spread their business beyond the confines of the province of Ontario. What is there to prevent them doing exactly what the insurance companies or other companies do, and registering, taking out a license in the other provinces. There is no reason whatever why they should not do that, and we may view with suspicion an association coming to the Dominion House to seek such wide powers as we find in the various clauses of this Bill, when the proper sphere to secure that legislation from, is the provincial legislature. Now the hon. member who has just sat down (Mr. Ralph Smith) has referred to the danger there is of those gentlemen associating together for the purpose of combining and raising prices. We are pointed to the fact that there is a combines Bill which has been amended and passed through this House. But, I think that Bill will not be of very much service to those who may invoke its aid, and I do not think it is at all necessary to impose upon the people of this country the burden of calling into requisition a combines Bill in order to strike at a possible combination of retailers. The hon. member from the St. Lawrence division of Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) said why should we object to incorporating the retail groceries association any more than the wholesale grocers. Yes, and why should we object to incorporating the consumers of this country, such as members of this House did the other day. The very association which is now seeking incorporation were the principal objectors. They might not have been the cause of the defeat of the Bill, but they were represented there by their counsel to oppose it and they would have opposed it if that counsel had been heard. If they had shown a less selfish spirit and allowed the consumers to be incorporated to do business with their neighbours, their case might have been treated a little more leniently at the hands of the members of this House to-night. I think the retailers have no more reason for seeking incorporation here than the consumers, who were simply asking for power to do business among themselves. That was denied because the promoter of this Bill says it was detrimental to the public interest. Fancy the consuming population of this country, the masses, enacting legislation on their own behalf that would be injurious to themselves. It is a preposterous proposition and I take the position taken by some hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this subject that the legislation necessary should be sought at the hands of the provincial legislature and not here.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. May I point out that this is a Dominion association and that it is a Dominion Act, an Act to incorporate the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada. Now, I ask, can such an association go to the province? It is said that because the promoter of this Bill, or some other gentleman appeared before this committee and asked that the Co-operation Bill be thrown out, that this Bill should be thrown out. Surely we are not going to prosecute the retail grocers of Canada simply to have revenge on the member for St. James division (Mr. Gervais). Surely that is not the intention of this House.

Mr. ROCHE. That is not the idea.

Mr. M. CLARK. I find myself on this subject in hearty agreement with my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike). I can see no harm whatsoever in the principle of this measure. I greatly enjoyed the other day the banter which my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) addressed to the promoter of this Bill on his inconsistency, but I fail to see that because the promoter of this Bill was inconsistent, my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) does not suffer a little the same way. Because, if he says that a member is inconsistent who opposed co-operation a little while ago and supports a similar principle now, I think inconsistency can be traced equally to him who supported co-operation a little while ago and opposes it now. I think there is a fallacy lying at the root of all that has been said by those who are opposing this measure. It is assumed that the retailers are asking for powers which they intend to exercise against the consumer. Now, that is not at all a safe conclusion. The wholesalers are now organized. May it not be that the retailers are seeking the powers in order to arm themselves against the wholesalers and in the interests of the consumers. But the elementary proposition is the one which was pointed out by my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) that every class of the community in the British empire has the right of combination. My hon. friend who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Roche) is a member of the medical profession, a profession to which I have the honour to belong, myself, and we have both in this country and the old country our medical associations, whereby medical men combine for the protection of their legitimate interests. In my few remarks on the Combines Bill the other day, I pointed out that one of the struggles of the Liberal party in the last century in Britain, was for the right of workmen, and my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) knows it well, to combine in their trades unions. Legal gentleman have their combinations, employers have their combinations, in fact all men are to have their combinations except these retail grocers. I do not think that is a position which will be seriously taken up and maintained by any one in this House. I think it the more easy to support this measure because of the Act that was passed by parliament the other day. I pointed out at that time that there was no harm in combination, that combination was only harmful when it acted in restraint of trade and in the raising of prices. But, all that is now perfectly safe in the hands of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour, and if this retail association shows that it is endangering for one moment the rights and interests of the consumers, we can safely leave it to be dealt with by the piece of legislation which went on the statute-books a few days ago.

Mr. BOYCE. Can my hon. friend point out to the committee any benefit that would accrue to the community by this Bill being passed?

Mr. M. CLARK. Suppose the wholesalers are charging the retailers too much, will the retailers not have a better chance of buying well from the wholesalers if they are combined in a union. We all know that union is strength. I should think my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) sees that that is a perfect answer to his question. And if they buy better, they will sell cheaper to the consumers.

Mr. NEELY. It is somewhat of a surprise to me to see that this Bill, which was considered some days ago, and the first section of which was defeated by the committee, is before the committee once again. When the promoter of the Bill asked that the vote on clause 1 be reconsidered, I understood that he wished merely an opportunity to withdraw gracefully when he found that the committee was not in a mood to sanction the passing of the Bill. Otherwise, as one who voted against clause 1 of the Bill, I certainly would not have given my consent—and I think others who voted as I did would not have given their consent—to the reconsideration of that vote. I thought the promoter of the Bill understood the action of the committee according to its true intent.

My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) thinks that those who are opposing this Bill are arguing from false premises. I do not agree with him on that point. In the first place, he draws a parallel between the trades unions of this country and the Retail Merchants' Association, and argues that because combination does good in one case it will do good in the other. There is no objection on my part, nor, I think, on the part of the committee, to the retail merchants of Canada having a voluntary association such as they have at the present time for the advancement of any interest that they may think it their duty to advance. But I would call the attention of my hon. friend from Red Deer to the fact that, as far as I know, not a labour or trades union in Canada is incorporated by an Act of this parliament or any other.

Mr. GERVAIS. They are all incorporated by the general law.

Mr. NEELY. My hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) says they are all incorporated——

Mr. M. CLARK.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Neely) was in the House when I introduced the Bill incorporating the Shipping Federation. If he was not, he should have been here.

Mr. NEELY. I think not. But I still fail to see why this committee ought to assent to the incorporation by Act of this parliament of an association of the retail merchants of Canada. They have their association to-day, and they have the privilege of going to the various provinces and being incorporated under the Joint Stock Companies Acts of the provinces. I should think that they could secure all the powers they require in that manner. So far as I can see, all the names given in this clause 1 are names of people from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. What objection is there to that.

Mr. NEELY. I do not find the names of any from any other provinces of the Dominion. Yet these gentlemen must be incorporated by Act of the parliament of Canada. Now, it is true that the medical men of the various provinces of Canada have their associations, but not under Dominion Act, their powers are obtained from the provincial legislatures. And I want to say to my hon. friend from Red Deer that, so far as the medical profession at least is concerned, there is no parallel between that case and the case of the retail grocers of Canada in this respect.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. member (Mr. Neely) allow a question for information? With regard to the medical men, is it not true that a large number of them have been anxious to get Dominion incorporation, but cannot agree among themselves as to the terms?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. This House has refused it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought they were unable to agree.

Mr. NEELY. I have always understood that they have never been able to secure such incorporation. But, in any case, there is this difference between the case of the medical profession and that of the retail grocers, that, whatever protection is furnished by law of the provinces to the medical profession is furnished with the primary object of protecting the public from quacks and quackism, and not for the protection of the profession.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. That is the object of our Bill exactly.

Mr. NEELY. So far as the consumers, the public, are concerned, the incorporation by Act of this parliament of this association is certainly not intended primarily for their benefit. That is the great and essential difference between this and the case of the medical profession—in one case, the statute is for the protection of the public, while in this case, if there is any benefit, it is purely and solely for those who are interested in having this incorporation brought about. I say, as I said when this Bill was before the committee on a former occasion, that very many possible evils lurk in this legislation should it come into effect. We should be giving to these gentlemen the prestige of an association incorporated by Act of the parliament of Canada. That would enable them in many ways to bring about a certain measure of coercion in so far as securing membership is concerned. They would be able to bring pressure to bear on the men engaged in the retail trade who are opposed——

Mr. GERVAIS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEELY. One moment—who are opposed to the——

Mr. GERVAIS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEELY. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) will not let me finish the sentence, I will give him the opportunity to ask the question.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Neely) to point out to the committee any word in the Bill to support his contention that the Retail Merchants' Association is seeking for power to establish a combine which will produce any of the many evils of which he speaks, but which he has not stated definitely. Let him mention one word in the Bill in support of his contention.

Mr. NEELY. No matter what the ulterior object of the promoters of this Bill might be, we certainly do not expect them to state on the face of the Bill any such object. Most assuredly the Bill is drafted so as to appear on the face of it as innocent as possible. But I am simply stating the fact, that we are placing in the hands of these gentlemen, if we incorporate them by Act of this parliament, certain powers which they might very easily use to the disadvantage of the consumer, and the public. I have said that we give them the prestige of incorporation by Act of this parliament. By the aid of this prestige they would have great influence in coercing into their membership many of those in the retail trade who might not be willing to enter. Here is one way in which that might be accomplished. This association, let us say, is incorporated; it has its president, its executive and its secretary. Its representatives the towns and cities of this country, and we will suppose that they secure a large proportion of the retail tradesmen as members of the association. But there were some independent tradesmen who did not see it to their advantage to join this association. They see no need of it, they are getting along very well as it is without paying tribute to this association. Sir, this association in a very short time will be strong enough to go to the wholesalers of this country in a certain city or a certain town, and say to them: There are certain tradesmen who will not join our union, who will not come in as members of the Retail Grocers' Association. Now we say to you that you must not do business with these men. We have a right to protection the same as other trades unions, we have a right to have our association recognized by men who are occupied in that particular trade, and we say to you wholesale men that you must not sell those tradesmen unless they consent to become members of the Retail Grocers' Association. I am not saying that that appears in the Bill, of course it does not, but that is a power we will be putting into the hands of this association if we incorporate them by this Bill. There are other ways by which men might be coerced to become members of the association. It is a very simple matter, when a man is in business difficulties and finds himself hard pressed, for rumours to be circulated that he is getting into deep water, that he is not in the best financial circumstances, and it is an easy matter to undermine his credit. If a man is obstinate and refuses to join this association, I say there is another method by which his financial standing and his credit with the wholesalers, and with the public might be undermined.

Now, there is another consideration. I cannot for the life of me see why these retail grocers cannot have their local associations if they require them for the discussion of the betterment of trade conditions, and their own individual affairs, without incorporation by Act of parliament. When my hon. friend was introducing this Bill the other night he told us of many things that had already been done by the voluntary Retail Grocers' Association. Well, so far as the cities and towns of this country are concerned, I think they can very well look after their own interests by their organizations. For instance, there is hardly a little town in western Canada, and I understand it is so in the east, but has its board of trade, and I think the boards of trade in the cities and towns are quite capable of looking after the local commercial affairs of their respective centres. In the Bill that sets forth the objects of this association, nor in the remarks of the promoter of the Bill, have I found one single substantial reason given why this Bill should be put through, why these retail grocers associations should be incorporated. Let me call attention to another way in which the public of this country might be injured by this incorporation. Here is an association of a Dominion character having a membership in every town and city in the Dominion of Canada. A certain individual in a certain town is unfortunate, he is in poor financial circumstances, he cannot pay his grocer's bill. What happens? That grocer refuses to give him credit. Is that all? I conceive the possibility that a man in straitened circumstances might seek to benefit himself by moving to another part of Canada, and by reason of this Dominion-wide association that man might be black-listed by every retail grocer from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I say that is a possibility. Does my hon. friend deny that that is one of the objects? Of course it is not so stated in the Bill, but does he deny that that is one of the objects? Of course he will deny it, he will say that the object is to secure protection from poor creditors. But it may be protection in the way of a black-list against men who are unfortunate, and who cannot pay their grocer's Bill. I conceive that that will be one of the primary features in the incorporation of this association. Of course my hon. friend will say that that is not in the Bill, and I am willing to agree with him.

Mr. DANIEL. But it is, in subsection 2, clause 2.

Mr. NEELY. Whether it is or not, to my mind there is not a doubt but what the association would benefit its members in the way I have indicated. I hope I need not say anything more. I do not think that the sentiment of this committee has changed much from the last time the Bill was before us, when the first section was defeated. I do not want to block the Bill in any way, I am perfectly willing it should go to a vote.

Mr. BLAIN. Did my hon. friend say that the Medical Association of Canada was not incorporated?

Mr. NEELY. No, I said that the medical profession had provincial protection. There is no Dominion law dealing with the medical profession.

Mr. BLAIN. I only wanted to direct my hon. friend to a slight inconsistency in his position. Let me remind him that he sat in the House last session and assisted in the incorporation of the Medical Association of Canada.

Mr. NEELY. That was purely pro forma.

Mr. BLAIN. I have under my hand the clause of that Act which empowers the Medical Association to hold exactly the same value of property, $50,000, that is to be found in the Act under discussion.

Mr. DANIEL. The intention of the medical profession in applying to this parliament for incorporation, as alluded to by the Minister of Public Works, was to allow a professional man who had passed his examination to practise in any province in Canada. It was not to create an association for any purpose other than that.

Mr. BLAIN. That is not the Bill to which the Minister of Public Works referred.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister spoke of the application which it was the intention to make to this parliament this session, but which was not made. I was here the other night when the Bill now before the House was under discussion, it was put to a vote and voted down almost unanimously.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then it was reconsidered.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not know how, in the face of the vote of the other night, there can be a sufficient number of members present to-night to make a majority in favour of this Bill without any reason being advanced in the meantime to induce them to change their minds. If any one reads over the objects of this association he cannot but come to the conclusion that it is a combination for purely commercial reasons, in so far as the retail merchants themselves are concerned, and must result in a combination to raise prices in Canada. We as a parliament have hitherto been rather favouring the interests of the corporations as opposed to the general public, and it is now time that the general public had some little show in the legislation passed by this House. It is time that the ordinary consumer comprising the great mass of the people, had some one to stand up for their interests as opposed to the corporations. I have seen no reason, I have heard no argument offered, to induce me to change my mind from what appeared to be the general opinion of this committee when this Bill was up before.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. I have listened to the discussion on this Bill, and have come to the conclusion that the only reason the Bill is being opposed is that the retail merchants came down here in a large body and opposed the principle of co-operation.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Oh, no.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. My hon friend says no, but I heard my hon friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely) the other night use that as his main argument, and I heard the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) to-night, use practically the same argument.

Mr. ROCHE. No, you did not.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. I was present in the Committee on Banking and Commerce when the question of co-operation was discussed. There were no retail merchants there. A vote was taken and I voted for the principle of co-operation myself, because I am not opposed to it; if it will assist the people to buy more cheaply, I am in favour of it. The Bill was defeated on a vote of 10 to 8. I supported the measure, because I wanted to hear it discussed in the House of Commons, as I am not unfavourable to that principle. The objects of the proposed Bill seemed to me to be very harmless. It has been argued by various members that the association should ask incorporation from the various provinces. If I understand the principle of granting incorporation to various organizations, prima facie, where a body of men are carrying on business in various provinces, this is the proper place for them to come, and it is only a question for us to consider what rights we shall give. I fail to see anything very harmful in the objects of this Bill. It has been argued that they will create a combine. If that is the case, they can be prosecuted under the Criminal Code. The great majority of the arguments against the proposed measure seem to me to be very hazy, and to depend on something that may occur in the future, so that they do not constitute any objection to the Bill at all. Clause 2 of the Bill says:

> The objects of the association shall be the promotion of the industrial and commercial interests of the retail merchants of Canada, the collection and publication of information and statistics, &c.

So with the rest of the section, there is nothing with respect to the carrying on of business. This association is being formed for the purpose of obtaining information which will be beneficial to its members, and if I understand the proposition, it is similar to a Bill which we passed the other day respecting the Dominion Millers' Association.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. If the object of this Bill is not to form a combination and to affect prices, what object would a merchant in the province of Quebec have in common with a retail merchant in Saskatchewan in joining the association?

Mr. W. M. MARTIN. I can only refer to clause 2 of the Bill and say that the object in joining the association would be to get information. I cannot see any argument in stating that this association is going to increase prices. No information has been placed before the House as to that. It does not say so in reciting the objects of the association. My hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely) says it would not say so in any case. But we must find within the four corners of the Act the object for which an association is incorporated, and I fail to see anything that would lead me to oppose the Bill. I have heard clause 8 discussed, which says they may accept, endorse and become parties to promissory notes and bills of exchange. That might lead us to think they intended to carry on commercial operations, but I find that this is to be for the purposes of the association, and in clause 2 I fail to see anything which will lead me to believe that they are going to carry on a large retail business or attempt to enhance prices.

Mr. HENDERSON. After an experience of 25 years in the retail business, I am satisfied that you cannot get that harmony and unanimity amongst retail men that will bring about an enhancement of prices. I do not fear at all that any such combination can be brought about amongst retail men even if this Bill is adopted. I would support this Bill if it were nothing more than one clause—clause (d), section 2. I think it is a good clause:

> The procuring and furnishing to its members information as to the solvency of persons who deal with any of its members.

To my mind that clause is worth all that is in it.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Henderson) thinks that there would not be unanimity enough to enable them to accomplish any of the objects of a combination, but if my hon. friend had read the proceedings of the meeting of the Wholesale and Retail Grocers' Association in Toronto during this week he would have found that they have a great deal of power to do that very thing. They are proposing now that the manufacturers should make a price at which any particular article should be sold to the consumer, that neither wholesaler nor retailer shall be able to compete one with another. That is what they are trying to bring about. I am opposed to this legislation for the reason that we have had a little taste of just such legislation, or just such efforts in the west. A few years ago we had the Retail Lumbermen's Association, and it can be said about the Retail Lumbermen's Association just what has been said here to-night, that they did not propose to do any large business themselves. The Retail Lumbermen's Association as an association did not go into the handling of lumber. They did not open lumber yards or sell lumber to the farmer or the builder. They had a far deeper object in view and they accomplished that object. What they did was this: They stifled competition from one end of the west to the other. For years and years there was no competition in the lumber business, and the retailers were making anywhere from $6 to $11 a thousand feet B.M. That association accomplished that in this way: They went to the mills cutting lumber for the market and said: There is our list of retail merchants in the different towns. We propose that there shall be only one lumber merchant in a certain town, that there shall be only two lumber merchants in a certain other town, and if you sell to anybody outside of this one merchant or outside of these two merchants, as the case may be, not one single member of the Retail Lumbermen's Association will buy a carload of lumber from you. That went on year after year, and if this legislation were passed what is there to prevent the retail merchants from doing the same thing? You give them the opportunity. Why should we in this Dominion parliament usurp the powers of the provincial legislatures and pass legislation of this kind that would be a benefit to the retail and wholesale merchants, but which would certainly not be in the interest of the consumer? We might as well stand by the consumer instead of standing by the merchant. We had a very unfortunate experience in the west in connection with lumber, and it became so bad that we were forced—

An hon. MEMBER. Time is up.

Mr. TURRIFF. No, time is not up yet for a minute.

Mr. GERVAIS. I will answer the hon. gentleman later on.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not understand the question of the hon. gentleman; therefore I am unable to answer it. I hope the House will take warning by the experience we had in the west and not think of passing legislation of this kind. This is the wrong kind of legislation and even if it is—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Nine o'clock.

WATER AND WATER-POWER IN RAILWAY BELT, B.C.

The hour for private Bills having expired, House again went into committee on Bill (No. 187) to confirm and declare the rights of the Crown with respect to water and water-power, and relating to the diversion, acquisition and use of water in the railway belt in British Columbia.—Mr. Oliver.

On section 2—interpretation.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to have some explanation of what that means.

Mr. OLIVER. There was an explanation given before the Bill was read the second time; however, I will give another explanation if it is considered desirable.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to know if this Bill takes the control of these water-powers from the local government and transfers it to the Dominion government.

Mr. OLIVER. What is called the railway belt of British Columbia is a strip 20 miles wide on each side of the Canadian Pacific railway from the eastern boundary of the province to nearly its western boundary. This is land that became the property of the Dominion by reason of the agreement made with the province of British Columbia in regard to the construction of a Pacific railway. The ownership of the land is vested in the Dominion. Until comparatively recently the administration of water rights within the railway belt was carried on by the provincial government. The provincial government administered the water rights in the railway belt as well as in the other parts of the province. There was always some question as to whether the right of administration of water in the railway belt properly rested in the province or in the Dominion. However, the province was exercising the right and the Dominion was not contesting it, but it was so uncertain that the right was in the province that on several occasions, where large works were being carried forward, the parties who were interested in the water rights in connection with these works, having received authorization from the provincial government, came to the Dominion government for a confirmation of their rights. In certain cases where large amounts of money were involved, the parties who secured the water-rights from the British Columbia government, in order to make themselves secure in their title, came to the Dominion and got a quit claim from the Dominion. I point this out to show that the question of title was always in doubt. At last, the issue was raised. A case was entered in the Exchequer Court, and that court gave a decision to the effect that the right to water in the railway belt was vested in the Dominion and not in the province. The case was then appealed to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court has given a decision confirming that of the Exchequer Court. The case is again being appealed to the Privy Council, and until the Privy Council has decided, the question is not settled.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did that decision go to the length of holding that after the land was alienated, the Crown by virtue of the Dominion would still control?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer that question. I am merely stating the facts as I understand them. As soon as the decision of the Exchequer Court was given the province ceased granting water rights within the railway belt. They took for granted, whether wisely or unwisely, that that decision set aside their jurisdiction for the time being. The result of that decision is that the water rights which were granted by the province within the railway belt have no standing in law.

Mr. DOHERTY. Do I understand the minister to say that the judgment is now in appeal before the Privy Council?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. DOHERTY. Then the question is still open?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. DOHERTY. I understand the minister to say that the judgment of the Exchequer Court had the effect of settling it?

Mr. OLIVER. For the moment.

Mr. DOHERTY. If the case is still pending, I cannot see how anything is settled. Who appealed it?

Mr. OLIVER. The province. The judgment of the Exchequer Court is the law until it is reversed on appeal, and under that condition of facts, the water rights granted by the province in the railway belt have no legal status.

Mr. LANCASTER. But does not the hon. gentleman see that if we interfere now by legislation we shall be rendering the judgment of the further court nugatory, even if on the merits it reverses the decision which we act upon. We would be interfering with the ultimate decision of the courts, and we certainly should not do that until we get the decision. Our legislation might be used to prejudice the decision.

Mr. OLIVER. Our legislation cannot affect the decision of the Privy Council.

Mr. DOHERTY. If the Privy Council reverses the judgment, our legislation will be nugatory.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. DOHERTY. Does it strike the minister to be a wise thing to legislate in that state of affairs, with the question of our authority being liable to disappear as a possible effect of the judgment of the Privy Council?

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I am trying to convince the House of. Let me repeat that, as I am advised, from the decision of the Exchequer Court the rights granted by the province within the railway belt have no legal status, and will not have any unless and until that decision is reversed by the decision of the Privy Council. That means that rights of serious importance within the railway belt, which should be maintained in legal status, have not that legal status. There is a chaotic condition, then, in regard to water rights within the water belt. That is a very undesirable condition, and what we want to do by means of this Bill is to say that these rights, which have been invalidated by the decision of the Exchequer Court, shall be, under the conditions set out in the Bill, re-established by the authority of this parliament, so far as this parliament has authority to do that.

Mr. BURRELL. I am informed that there is a possibility of the Privy Council taking up this case next fall. Has the minister any information as to that?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that leave has just been granted for the hearing of the case by the Privy Council. I cannot say how soon a decision will be reached; no person can say that. There is good hope that it will not be interminably delayed. But it makes no difference whether it is one month or six months or six years, during the interval these important rights have not that legal status to which they are properly entitled, and I conceive it to be the duty of this parliament not to allow that condition of affairs to continue. So long as this parliament has jurisdiction, it is its business to re-establish those rights. That is one proposal of the Bill. The other proposal is this: There are large investments of capital at present and in prospect. There is the work of irrigation, which is necessary throughout a large part of the railway belt, and neither the investments of capital nor the work of irrigation should be hampered if it can be avoided. The Bill, then, in another part assumes that the decision of the Exchequer Court will be upheld, and authorizes the Governor in Council to grant licenses for water rights within the railway belt.

It may be said that it is not wise for parliament to take or give that power when the power may shortly be taken away by a reversal of the decision of the Exchequer Court. But on the other hand it does not seem to me to be wise that the development of power or the work of irrigation in the railway belt should for any reason be delayed, certainly not because of any lack of legal right in the matter. Now, so long as the legal right was assumed to rest with the provincial government, the provincial government granted all rights that were required, and when the parties got those rights they came to this government and got a quitclaim. The British Columbia government not now being in a position as I am advised to grant rights, this parliament may assume to itself the power to grant rights. And persons coming to this government under the proposed legislation and getting rights may go to the province of British Columbia or to the provincial government of British Columbia and get a quitclaim of the provincial rights, just as under the former conditions an applicant went to the provincial government and came to us and got a quitclaim. The object of this Bill is to validate existing rights, and to provide for continuous development of the water privileges in the railway belt. Notwithstanding the litigation that is now in progress, that is the whole purpose of the Bill. That is all we have in view. We consider it absolutely necessary in the line of good government and for the safety of capital, and for the continuous development of the railway belt. For that reason we ask the House to agree to it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. If what has just been described by the minister in his last few sentences were the scope of the Bill I do not think it would be open to very much objection. But unfortunately the Bill goes very much further than that. I have had occasion to look into it with more care than I would usually bestow upon a matter affecting rights in British Columbia, by reason of the fact that I happen to be acting as solicitor and counsel in a rather heavy case, now pending before the Exchequer Court of Canada in regard to certain water rights in British Columbia. On account of the case no doubt my attention has been drawn particularly to the various clauses of this Bill. I think the object of the minister is a most laudable and proper one in seeking to give definite confirmation to rights which may be more or less in jeopardy owing to the uncertainty of the matter as it now stands, as between the jurisdiction of the province of British Columbia and of the Dominion of Canada. But I would point out to my hon. friend the minister that the decision of the Exchequer Court was given in the month of May, 1909, just a year ago. The case went to the Supreme Court, was decided in the Supreme Court last December, the judgment of the Exchequer Court being upheld, and it has now gone to the Privy Council. Leave to appeal was granted the day before yesterday, and in all probability the matter will be argued and probably decided by the Privy Council at its sittings in mid-summer, probably in one or two or, at most, three months. I should think under the circumstances it would be reasonable for the minister to allow this measure to stand over until the next session of this House, some time next fall. By that time I have no doubt we will have the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and we will know just what the rights of the respective governments are in regard to the waters in the railway belt of British Columbia. I think if the only object of the minister is to confirm existing rights that can be done in a single clause and capital will not be left in uncertainty or jeopardy. A single clause will be all that is necessary by way of confirmation of rights granted by British Columbia or of rights granted by the Dominion of Canada. But my hon. friend the minister has gone much further than that in his Bill. He has sought to wipe out common law rights, the rights of riparian owners in British Columbia, a matter which I should say this parliament has nothing to do with. He has sought also to introduce a licensing system to be carried on under regulations which are not laid down in the Act, and which are to be hereafter prescribed by orders in council. He has given other rights in regard to expropriation which particularly affect the case in which I am interested in the Exchequer Court.

Now, if these matters are to be legislated on in this Bill, I can only say to my hon. friend the minister that at this late hour of the session, he has stirred up about as contentious a measure as we have had before us this parliament, and certainly one of the most intricate measures. The interests involved are almost innumerable. In the first place there are those people who own land in the railway belt, who acquired their land before confederation. I know of the case of one man who is now a suppliant in the Exchequer Court, and who got his land from the old Crown colony before British Columbia entered confederation. He claims common law rights as a riparian proprietor which this Bill seeks to take away from him. There is another class of persons who obtained their land from British Columbia after confederation, but before the conveyance in 1880 from British Columbia to the Dominion of Canada. They have rights to be protected. There is a third class who obtained their land after the transfer from British Columbia to the Dominion of Canada, by patent from the Dominion government. That land has been alienated by the Dominion government. And then there is a balance of land remaining now, so far as proprietary ownership goes, in the Dominion of Canada. These various rights have to be safe-guarded in this Bill. Then there are other interests to be looked after. There are persons who have obtained water rights in the province of British Columbia and unconfirmed by the Dominion government. There are others who have obtained water rights which have been confirmed by the Dominion government by way of a quitclaim deed as my hon. friend the minister has announced. And there are others such as my clients, the city of New Westminster, who have both land and water rights in the railway belt granted to them by order in council, not by a quitclaim deed, but by an order in council.

Mr. LANCASTER. By which government?

Mr. GUTHRIE. This government, and it is now the subject of litigation in the Exchequer Court. I understand from a conversation with my hon. friend the minister that he is quite willing to put a clause in this Bill protecting the rights of litigating parties. That is usually done and I am content with that. But, there is another clause in the Bill which might wipe out the effect of any judgment which the Exchequer Court might give. I mention this case because it is a case of a good deal of prominence, and of a great deal of consequence in the province of British Columbia. It is a case in which the city of New Westminster acquired by an order in council, a grant of 18,000 acres of land and the water on the land, as we maintain, in the railway belt. The water was procured for a special purpose and the land was granted for the protection of the lake where the water came from. That was done by an order in council by this government in 1902. After the decision had been given by the Exchequer Court last summer, the Vancouver Power Company came to Ottawa and made application for rights in that same water and upon that same land. The order in council of seven years ago was cancelled and a new order in council issued granting the rights that formerly belonged, as the city contends, to the city of New Westminster to the Vancouver Power Company. It is upon that question that the city have on a fiat obtained from the government entered a petition in the Exchequer Court. But the point is this. If the action succeeds, if it be declared that the city of New Westminster is entitled to hold its land and is entitled to the waters which it obtained, any power company having a license from this government under the present legislation can immediately expropriate New Westminster of all its lands and all its water.

That is my own particular interest in regard to this pending legislation. But I also look to the broader question, and I submit that the broader question is one of too great intricacy to be dealt with in the closing hours of the session; there are too many interests to be looked into, too many interests to be safeguarded and very large interests too. I am told that some of the power companies of that province have investments of $20,000,000 and others have large though not so large, amounts. It may be that the title of all these companies is more or less uncertain under the decision of the Exchequer Court. I agree that some confirmation might well be given, but let it be by some simple enactment without attaching a licensing qualification which this Bill seeks to attach, without interfering with riparian and private rights, as this seeks to do, and without prescribing regulations by order in council, which no one knows anything about as is proposed under this Bill. These are all proper matters for legislation, I admit, but I do not think that this is the time for that legislation. If the excuse is to confirm doubtful or uncertain rights, I say, by all means confirm them, but do not go further pending a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. If that decision upholds that of the Supreme Court and I am bound to say that I believe it will—there is no doubt that this government has power to regulate the waters in the railway belt of British Columbia. I think a comprehensive measure should then be brought forward and passed, proper regulations framed, licenses issued, and the government should take control of rates and tolls; but to do all that for the purpose of holding it for three or four months until a decision can be reached is, I think, absurd. I would urge the minister to pass, in one clause, the confirmation he speaks of, and allow the matter of his Bill to rest until the Judicial Committee has decided this question. Next session we shall have the decision one way or the other, and when that decision is reached, we can legislate with some intelligence on the subject. For, I am free to say, that I do not know when a more difficult question has come before this House. Far greater lawyers than I am, or can ever hope to be are very much puzzled as to the respective rights in these matters. The province of British Columbia conveyed a large block of land to the Dominion of Canada, there is no doubt. The Dominion of Canada obtained proprietary rights in that land. Did it obtain legislative rights? I doubt it very much. Could the Dominion, for instance, establish a municipal institution there? I say they could not; such matters are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. LANCASTER. You say the Dominion became land-owners?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Yes, they have proprietory as distinct from legislative rights. But the decision of the Exchequer Court is that, on the Dominion's own land, at all events, they have the right to regulate the waters flowing therein. I know a case where a stream rises outside the railway belt, flows through a portion of it and then on into private property. Can it be said that the government has the right to pass legislation affecting the flow of that water, and the use of it though only a small portion of its flow is within the railway belt? These are some of the questions that come up. I would urge upon the minister, for the sake of peace, and for the sake of this legislation and do justice to all concerned, that he should, as he proposes by the statement he has made introduce some legislation by way of confirmation, and nothing more. It would be only a provisional Bill in any case. It may be upset in a few months. I understood the confirmation was to last for two years. But I think the minister is on dangerous ground if he goes further, and it is hardly a proper time to bring in legislation so intricate and comprehensive as the present Bill.

Mr. BURRELL. A large portion of this territory is in my own riding, so this Bill is of great interest to me. I have a good deal of sympathy with the view put forward by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), and I think the minister, if he could see his way to it, would do better to put through a Bill with a simple clause validating existing rights and providing a modus vivendi until the matter is settled. In the dry belt of British Columbia, in which this land is largely situated, there would be many complications if this Bill is put through in its present form. Many of these difficulties have been pointed out by the hon. member for South Wellington. If we look forward even to the Privy Council confirming the decision of the Exchequer Court, there are many sections of the Bill which, to my mind, call for serious consideration. For instance, there is the validation of the records since 1880 and up to May, 1910. But, under this clause, they are validated only for two years, and, after that, practically all the provincial records, as I understand the Bill, would be wiped out, and the decision as to private record holders would be left to the Dominion government. From our point of view of the question of jurisdiction, it would be wiser to leave all these things to the province. The question arises: Will they confirm the private records as they passed, or will they confirm them as we are doing now in the province, because we have recently passed a comprehensive Act in which we are going to alter the records and apportion the water in a fairer way, and give the users the benefit of the somewhat limited supply that exists in some districts. So far as irrigation is concerned, as the hon. minister knows, nearly every creek in the dry portion is recorded up to the full, that is as far as low water is concerned. Then, there is the question concerning water arising outside the railway belt, and a lot of similar questions that, it seems to me, would give rise to complications under this Bill. I confess, as I have said, that I think the suggestion of the hon. member for South Wellington, if the minister can see his way to accepting it, would be a happy solution of the difficulty—a simple Bill with a validating clause, and providing a modus vivendi pending the settlement.

Mr. CONGDON. I cannot see the clause which has the effect spoken of by the hon. member for South Wellington of taking away private or riparian rights.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Section 4.

Mr. CONGDON. It certainly preserves them.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Read the last clause.

Mr. CONGDON. I have read it—it certainly preserves them. The last clause relating to riparian rights merely refers to riparian rights in Crown property, not in respect of property already granted by the Crown. And, in any case, the saving clause to which, as my hon. friend intimated, the minister has expressed his assent, that the Bill should not interfere with vested rights or pending litigation will cure any danger of that kind. It seems to me that it is necessary not merely that existing rights should be confirmed, but that there should not be a hold-up of all business in that belt by reason of the want of power in the Governor in Council of Canada to act. We must take it that at the present time, these rights are vested in the Governor in Council. Having considered the matter, I cannot see that, while the case is pending before the Privy Council any one would make a large investment under a grant made under regulations of the Governor in Council. He certainly would make no large investment under such a grant without getting it confirmed by the province of British Columbia. It seems to me also that my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) is a little too sanguine when he expects a decision of the Privy Council in a week or two. I have had some experience with the Privy Council, and I know that it is not the custom of that body to give a decision within a month of two after leave to appeal has been given. If a decision comes within a year, it will exhibit the usual activity of the Privy Council in respect of such matters.

Mr. LANCASTER. They hear these cases in July.

Mr. CONGDON. Leave was only granted yesterday, and it would be impossible that that appeal should be brought on in July. With respect to the other question that has been raised as to water outside the belt, this legislation cannot interfere with that. With respect to the rights of the Dominion within the twenty mile belt as to streams passing through it, this Act does not increase in the slightest the rights of the Dominion, or take away from the rights of the province. The Dominion can only exercise those rights with due regard to the rights outside, as an ordinary proprietor could. They can divert the water, but they must return it to the stream exactly as it was before. It seems to me it is essential that this Bill should apply not merely to the confirmation of existing rights, but to make sure that any one can act who receives something in the nature of a confirmatory grant from the province of British Columbia. There may be some objectionable features in some of the sections of the Bill; I do not know about that, but at all events, they can be dealt with as we reach them.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think my hon. friend has misapprehended the meaning of clause 4 in regard to riparian rights, which says:

> Also saving the right of every riparian owner in the use of water for domestic purposes as that expression is defined in this Act.

But domestic purposes is not the only right of a riparian owner, that is one of the purposes that is saved to him, that is his common law right, and he can do what he pleases with the water provided he returns it to the stream and does not interfere with the man below him. But the only right preserved to him under this section is to use water for domestic purposes. He may run machinery, he may do what he pleases with it, so long as he returns it, and allows the joint proprietor the natural flow of that water uncontaminated.

Mr. CONGDON. I do not understand that the Act intends to take away from any present riparian owner any of those rights which he now has; it merely provides that in grants of that land there shall be preserved to him in the ordinary manner the riparian rights as defined by this Act. This Act can never be interpreted as taking away any personal right which he has already. It can only be interpreted as limiting the rights which a riparian owner will have under the rights hereafter granted by the Dominion.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would ask the minister whether, in his view, this Act goes beyond the judgment of the Exchequer Court?

Mr. OLIVER. Our view is that it does not. Our view is that the decision of the Exchequer Court covered not only the proprietary rights, but the legislative authority. I think the British Columbia government has assumed the same thing. So we are merely acting as we understand the matter.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I think the minister informed the committee a short time ago that the British Columbia government had ceased to exercise water rights within the railway belt. I would like to ask him whether he speaks with authority in saying that?

Mr. OLIVER. I have been so informed, I believe it is correct.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. That is, that they are issuing no new licenses and collecting no further revenue from the present licensees?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say about collecting revenue, but I understand they are not issuing new licenses.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I may say for the information of the minister, that reading the daily press of the province, I continue to read notices of application from time to time for water privileges within the railway belt, addressed to the water commissioner of the provincial government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can understand that applicants might publish notices of their intention to apply, but it does not follow—

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. These notices are advertised by the water commissioner himself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, I would be very much surprised to learn that after the Exchequer Court of Canada had decided that the British Columbia government has no property in, or right to deal with, water rights within the railway belt, and after that decision has been confirmed by the Supreme Court, I would be surprised to learn that the British Columbia government was still continuing to act as if it owned the water rights, and as if such judgment had never been given. The law to-day, notwithstanding an appeal to the Judicial Committee, is that these water rights are vested in the Dominion government; that is the law, and until the judgment of the Supreme Court is reversed, all inferior courts are bound to take notice that this is the law. If, on appeal to the Privy Council, of course, then the law would be different from what we must all understand it to be to-day. While upon my feet, I desire to say that I feel that my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) who has had occasion to give close attention to the rights of parties who might possibly be affected by this legislation, has approached the discussion of the subject in the fairest possible spirit. I do not think he and the minister are very far apart in their view of what is really the object to be aimed at. I understand that what the minister seeks by this Bill is to preserve the status quo so far as any rights have been granted by the British Columbia government. He recognizes, and my hon. friend from South Wellington recognizes also, that an enormous amount of capital has been invested, upon the idea that the British Columbia government had power to deal with these water rights. Now, the minister desires, and I am sure my hon. friend from South Wellington, and no doubt every hon. member of this House, would desire that those rights shall be preserved as far as possible, and that the capital which has been invested in these great undertakings should be protected to the fullest possible extent. I think all will agree with the Minister of the Interior upon that point. Now, the minister seeks, by section 6, to safeguard the interests of the capitalists in that particular. The next question is as to whether all existing rights are preserved. It is desired, I think by all, I am sure it is desired by the minister, that no existing rights should be interfered with. As to that, I am bound to say that it is just possible that the new section 4 is not quite as broad as it should be. I am inclined to think myself that it would be only right and proper that the rights of every riparian owner, whatever they may be, not simply to the use of water for domestic purposes, but whatever those rights might be, should be preserved and not interferred with in any way by this Act. Then I understand the only other serious objection which my hon. friend from South Wellington raises is that if the Governor in Council were to issue a license under section 9, the licensee might have power to expropriate land under the provisions of the Railway Act, and so in that way interfere with vested rights. I think myself the suggestion of my hon. friend is well worthy the consideration of the Minister of the Interior. I know he does not desire to have any provision in the statute which would at all imperil or jeopardize the rights which already exist in the city of New Westminster or in any other municipal or other body. It seems to me we might well enter upon the consideration of this Bill, and as we come to different sections suggestions might be made which I have no doubt will be carefully considered by the minister, and it may be that we could get together, knowing that we all have practically the same object in view, to protect the status quo, to protect capital, pending the final decision of the Judicial Committee, and also to safeguard existing rights. Having these objects in view, it should be possible in the different sections to so safeguard the Bill as to carry out the views which we all, I think, entertain.

Mr. LANCASTER. I cannot agree that the matter is as free from doubt as the minister would make it. I see the force of what has been said by the hon. member from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) as to the wisdom of waiting until the ultimate Court of appeal gives a decision. I have here the judgment of the Exchequer court. I do not read that judgment as declaring that this parliament has legislative power. That would be like this Dominion declaring that because it owns the Welland canal which runs through the counties of Lincoln and Welland, it would have the right to legislate in those counties.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend suggest that in respect of Dominion lands, the Dominion government would have to go to a provincial legislature for legislation?

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not want my hon. friend to make a foolish argument and put it in my mouth. He might wait until I advance my argument, and see if it is as foolish as he suggests. It would be a foolish argument——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am inclined to think it would too.

Mr. LANCASTER. He might pay me the compliment of believing that I would not advance such a foolish argument until I have stated my position. The court has not decided that the Dominion has sole jurisdiction to legislate for these lands. What has happened is that the government as owners of property, just as they own the Welland canal, have a right to object to that property being interfered with or confiscated. The judgment of the Exchequer Court is that a certain grant which the Dominion government was asking them to hold invalid is invalid and conveyed no interest to the defendant company. Why? As being an interference with property subject to the exclusive authority of the Dominion of Canada, that is property over which the Dominion government has a right to exercise rights of ownership. Second, because the diversion of water-power therein will be a serious interference with the navigation of the river and thirdly because it is not in accordance with the Water Concessions Consolidation Act of the province of British Columbia of 1897. This implies that if there was any legislation of British Columbia which had undertaken to properly deal with this matter it would have had some force and effect in the opinion of the judge of the Exchequer Court because he says it is not authorized by a certain statute of British Columbia. The judgment continues:

And this court does therefore order and adjudge that the beforementioned grant of the 7th of April, 1906, be cancelled.

It seems to me we are undertaking to assume that legislative authority has been given to us, but on that judgment that matter has never been decided. The judge merely gives to the Dominion of Canada, as to any other owner of property, a right to object to interference or trespass or confiscation of that property and says that the province of British Columbia had not legislated to interfere with such ownership. Therefore, the person who claimed those rights had no standing for want of that legal authority from the statute of British Columbia and because the Dominion of Canada was the owner of property affected by it. As the hon. member for South Wellington has said, legislative power to control a title to lands is one thing, but the ownership of land, say the Intercolonial, does not give the Dominion government the right to legislate in New Brunswick in respect to matters not within the jurisdiction of the Dominion. I agree with the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) that this matter is full of very serious complications, and I do not think it is wise for the government at this stage of the session to press such a controversial matter as this, which will be very far-reaching in its effect from one end of Canada to the other. It will affect every province, and every interest of every province.

Mr. OLIVER. No doubt the question is complicated, but it is the duty of parliament to deal with questions, whether complicated or otherwise, if the public interest requires that they shall be dealt with. Our duty is to bring to bear the best intelligence we have, and the best methods we have of dealing with these difficult, complicated and important questions. As to the legislative authority in regard to this matter, if there is any doubt about that the sooner that doubt is set at rest the better. Every one will agree on that point, and the way to set that question at rest is to exercise legislative authority and then the matter is brought to an issue forthwith. This question of water rights in the railway belt of British Columbia is, we all agree, of such great importance that we cannot afford to leave a particle of doubt in regard to the jurisdiction, either as to property rights or legislative jurisdiction. It is in the interest of every one that the question should be brought to an issue as quickly and plainly as possible. The question of legislative jurisdiction will certainly be raised by the passing of this Bill; I believe that the sooner it is raised the sooner it will be settled, and the sooner it is settled the better for British Columbia, and for everybody else. The Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia was here some time ago in consultation with the Department of Justice in regard to matters affecting the province and this question was under discussion between the Department of Justice and the Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia. The Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia and the Department of Justice at Ottawa agreed that certain amendments would be right and proper. I shall read these amendments; I assume that the Attorney General was satisfied that they safeguarded the interests of the province, and I assume that the Department of Justice was satisfied that the interests of the Dominion were fully represented in them. The first amendment is to strike out section 3 as it stands at the present time and substitute the following:

This Act applies to all lands within the railway belt in the province of British Columbia as herein defined: Provided that nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect any riparian rights or rights to water in or appurtenant to those lands described in section 11 of the terms of union between the Dominion of Canada and British Columbia as held under pre-emption right or by Crown grant, or to affect any riparian rights or rights to water in or appurtenant to lands which having been heretofore granted by the Crown in the right of Canada are not now vested in the said Crown.

I think it will be agreed that this proposed change of section 3 covers a number of the important points raised by the hon. member for South Wellington. When we come to the consideration of the section I will move that this be substituted. It was agreed that section 6 should be amended by striking out the words between the word 'issued' in the fifth line and the word 'two' in the eighth line, and substituting therefor the words 'prior to the passing of this Act'. The effect of this would be that all rights granted up to the passing of the Act would be confirmed, or would be eligible for confirmation, whereas, as the Act stands now, it is only rights granted up to the date of the decision of the Exchequer Court. Then, I would further propose as section 11:

That nothing in this Act contained shall affect any vested right or pending litigation.

With these amendments the Department of Justice of Ottawa and the Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia were both satisfied, and I would ask the committee to accept them when we come to their consideration.

Mr. LANCASTER. Have they both agreed to section 5 as it stands?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand so.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Is it the minister's intention to exercise the right he proposes to take there to confirm the rights heretofore granted?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is the intention. That is the purpose of this provision.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think that the amendment just proposed by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) with regard to the question of riparian rights probably gets over the difficulty I referred to. I am quite satisfied that the difficulty did exist in that acute form under the Bill as drawn, and I am also quite satisfied that this will protect the rights and property of the riparian proprietors. But the other sections remain, to my mind, just as objectionable. The minister knows much better than I do what the view of the government and the Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia may be, but my information is that so late as the day before yesterday telegrams passed objecting to the Bill—I do not know with what department—but the objection came, as I am informed, from the British Columbia government, accompanied by the request that nothing be done pending the appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. However, as to that my information may not be accurate. Clause 4 certainly is one of the most objectionable clauses in the Bill, and they do not seek to alter it. I have not been able very clearly to find out what the latter half of clause 4 really means. If it is intended by that language to establish all rights that have been granted by British Columbia or by the Dominion parliament heretofore, they have gone about it in a very clumsy fashion. The particular language that I refer to is this:

> Unless, and until, and except only so far as some right therein, or to the use thereof, inconsistent with the right of the Crown, and which is not a public right or a right common to the public, is established.

These two last words certainly imply that the owner of a private right has to do something to prove and establish that right either before my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior or before some court. He may have his deed or order in council, but it is of no use to him until he takes some subsequent step to establish that right. I know of instances in British Columbia where parties have both orders in council from this government and from the British Columbia government and quit claim deeds from this government. These rights are not established by that clause, but these parties must come to the Department of the Interior, submit their proofs and establish their rights if they can establish them. As the minister says that it is his intention to confirm rights, I ask for a substantive clause that such rights be and the same are hereby confirmed. Then, if the clause suggested by the minister is placed in the Bill I do not think the Bill can be very much objected to, particularly if the clauses with respect to regulations, licenses and defining the rights as to water be stricken out. That would limit the Bill, merely in the first place, to declaring the rights of the Dominion government, and, secondly to the confirmation of rights heretofore granted, and thus protect the rights of the riparian owners.

Mr. GUTHRIE.

Mr. DOHERTY. I have a good deal of difficulty in seeing what is the purpose of this Bill, by section 4, declaring that these things are vested in the Crown which I understand to be the Crown in the right of Canada. Is not that precisely the question that the Privy Council is going to decide one way or the other? Am I right in that?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. DOHERTY. Then, what is the purpose of our declaring that these things are vested in the Crown in the right of Canada while we have a pending suit as to whether they are or are not? Upon this question at the present time we stand in the same position as any other litigant, and we are trying to make a title unto ourselves by declaring that these things are vested in the Dominion of Canada, a declaration which the Privy Council may make in a few months, or which the Privy Council may deny in a few months. I am at a loss to see what we gain by making a declaration of that kind when the question as to whether that declaration is true or not depends upon the interpretation to be put upon the effect of the agreement established by the statute, as I understand it, of British Columbia. This question will have to remain open until the Privy Council decides it. It may be that I do not grasp the effect of this legislation, but perhaps if I do not grasp it that is a reason why it may be inferred that there are other members of this House who do not quite grasp it. If this legislation cannot go over, as this has been our first opportunity of dealing with it, it might be well for the minister to give members of this House an opportunity of looking into it so as to place themselves in a position to deal with it intelligently. If the minister is not prepared to let the legislation absolutely go over, I would suggest that he at least let it stand for the time being until we can have an opportunity to look into it and get an understanding of it. I admit that it is only this evening that my attention has been called to this Bill, and in the examination that I have been able to give to it I have had difficulty to grasp its significance. I am unable to see the wisdom of passing legislation declaring that we have a title when the question whether we have one or not is pending before a court whose decision we can reasonably expect to have in a few months. I think the minister might at least consider the advisability of letting the Bill stand over until to-morrow or the next sitting day so that we can look seriously into it.

Mr. OLIVER. Everybody will concede that there is nothing that comes up for legislation quite so complicated as the question of water rights, and it is no discredit to any man that he fails to grasp the full import of that question at first view. It is on good authority that in the United States in the irrigation states 90 per cent of the litigation is in regard to water rights. That does not relieve us from the necessity of dealing with the question when it is important.

Mr. DOHERTY. I am not suggesting that we should be relieved from dealing with it; but precisely because it is important, and because the minister admits that at first glance it is difficult to deal with, I suggest that it should stand over for a day. He seems to think that it is difficult to grasp because it is a question of water rights. There are other reasons why it is difficult to grasp. If the minister will afford the members of the House some time to examine the matter with a little more care than it has been possible to do since the Bill has been brought up this evening, we could deal with it more intelligently, and therefore we would perhaps get through with it more promptly than we can when we have difficulty in seizing the purpose and effect of its provisions.

Mr. OLIVER. The question has been raised why a declaration is made. The water rights, as I say, are important, they are of stupendous importance and if nobody owns them, as it may be held that nobody does own them to-day, then anybody may go in and take possession of them.

Mr. LANCASTER. They will not run away.

Mr. OLIVER. No, but possession being established when there is no law against taking possession, there may be some difficulty about dispossession arising afterwards.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Is there any real danger of that?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, very real. In evidence of that I find that in the Irrigation Act there is a parallel clause, and for exactly that reason; and one reason why we have so little litigation in regard to water rights on our western prairies as compared with the prairie states, is because of this declaration of ownership on the part of the government in these water rights. As I understand the situation, the water rights of the railway belt in British Columbia are not in possession of either government at the present time, and what is wanted is a declaration by this government that so far as it is concerned, it has the right to these waters, and that any right acquired must be acquired from this government. That begins a title, and without such declaration there is a possibility of title being acquired by possession or occupation, or other means, which only tends to litigation and to confusion. That is the reason for this section.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does not the hon. gentleman think that the very litigation which he wants to avoid will be multiplied by our acting now, pending the decision of the Privy Council? We will put the public entirely on their defence, so that they are bound to take some action in regard to every one of these matters. The government of the Dominion butts in and says: We are going to force you to fight for your rights when perhaps after the decision of the Privy Council all cause for litigation will be avoided. It seems to me that you are passing a Bill to promote litigation, and for the benefit of the legal profession of British Columbia.

Mr. OLIVER. No, it is a Bill to avoid litigation. The only question is in regard to the assumption of possession by the Dominion and the granting of rights under that assumption. I maintain that it is just as necessary that the Dominion should make this declaration, and that means should be taken that rights might be acquired under the authority of the Dominion, as that the rights now existing should be affirmed. Unless there is a foundation for the title which this section proposes to establish, a title may be acquired in the present condition of affairs by mere occupation, by possession, by various means, which tend not only to litigation, but to hamper legitimate development.

Mr. LANCASTER. Titles could not be obtained by possession against the Crown.

Mr. OLIVER. But the Crown in the right of the province has been declared by the courts not to have title, and the Crown in the right of the Dominion has not declared itself to be in possession. If in the end the Crown in the right of the province is declared to be in possession, it is true no harm is done; but if in the end it is declared that the Crown in the right of the Dominion is in possession, then the man who has entered into occupation since the decision of the Exchequer Court, and before the Dominion takes the authority that will come to it, if it does come to it, by the decision of the Privy Council, has established a squatter's right to the water, has found an impediment in many cases to proper development, and has laid a foundation for litigation and for trouble that is absolutely desirable from every point of view that we should try to avoid. I speak not from lack of knowledge, but from actual knowledge in regard to the effect of this parallel provision in the irrigation law as it governs in the prairie provinces. What was necessary in that case is just as necessary in this, and what is to the benefit of these provinces in that regard is just as necessary to the benefit of the railway belt of British Columbia in regard to its water rights.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Is it possible to obtain a squatter's right in the railway belt? I understood that that was specially provided against in the Act

Mr. OLIVER. In what Act?

Mr. GUTHRIE. In the Act conveying the land to the Dominion government.

Mr. OLIVER. I probably misused the word 'squatter' when I spoke of occupation of water rights as a squatter's right. Probably a squatter's right is confined to a land right. What I meant to say is that the man who actually acquires the use of water, not contrary to law, who has invested his money in the use of that water, has acquired an equitable right, if not an actual legal right, that it would have to be so regarded and might be an impediment to proper development and a foundation for litigation. I am not speaking without authority. It is that condition of affairs existing in the irrigation states which has been a fruitful source of litigation in those states in regard to water rights, and it is because we have avoided that in the prairie provinces that we have been successful in avoiding litigation in the prairie provinces.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I only wish the minister had shown as much regard for the owners as for those who have an equitable right. If his regard had been as strong when the New Westminster application was before him, I think we would have established a very strong equitable right. However, on the question of declaration, I do not think any harm will come from that. I do not know that any good will come particularly from it either, and I do not think that the minister's fears are justified, if by the decision they obtain rights. If they do obtain rights, all the government will have to do is to remove them by force if necessary. But I think it would be quite reasonable to insert a clause declaring that the government claims to have such a right. It is true that in a few months the courts may say that the declaration is no good. If it does no good, it cannot do much harm. But the minister desires to go further than declaration and further than confirmation. He speaks now of granting future rights, and I do not think that is proper, having regard to the case before the Judicial Committee. I think that if he stopped with the declaration and the confirmation, and if he safeguards, as he proposes, the rights of riparian owners and the rights of litigants, the House would probably agree with the Bill. But the Bill goes much further than that. If the minister is content to reduce it to that, I think no great difficulty would arise. But I think there is a great deal to be said in favour of the suggestion of my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Doherty) that it is a pretty intricate question to pass upon such short notice at this hour of the night and before such a slim House. I know that on this side of the House there are some members who are interested in this proposal and who are not present to-night, having had no notice that the Bill was coming up. I think there are some members opposite, particularly from British Columbia, who had intended to take part in this debate if they had known that the Bill was coming up to-night. It cannot prejudice it very much to let it stand over until, say Monday, and see if in the meantime we cannot come to some conclusion or amendment that will perhaps meet the views of all parties. I am satisfied that if it is merely a declaration and confirmation we can, but the Bill goes much further than that in its present form.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no wish in the world to force this Bill on the House, or to have it discussed when members are not fully informed in regard to it. I must clear myself from the imputation that I was undertaking to do so. The Bill passed its second reading some weeks ago, and has since been before the members for committee consideration, and of course it has only been brought up in due course. In fact, it was postponed on one or two occasions at the request, I think, of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). So, I must not be blamed for having delayed it until this late stage in the session, and I do not wish it to be thought that I am forcing such an important measure upon the House without the very fullest and most satisfactory consideration. If it is understood that the Bill will come up for consideration not later than Monday, I would move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Before the committee rises, I would like to call the minister's attention to a point which he has not yet discussed. First of all, I come from the railway belt in British Columbia and from New Westminster where they are seriously concerned with this Bill. They have sent me a very urgent protest against the provision in the last clause which I will not discuss just now, as I will have another opportunity. But, I would like to point this out, that so far from there being any confusion in British Columbia because of the existing conditions of the law, I as a resident in the railway belt know that there is no confusion at all. There is nothing to indicate there that the province of British Columbia is not in possession of the water-powers within the railway belt, and is not exercising it the same as it has exercised it during the 39 years we have been in confederation, exercising it without any question on the part of this government up to this day. The case now on appeal to the Privy Council does not set out in plain terms that the Dominion government does possess the rights which we are asked to declare by section 4 that the Dominion does possess. I would like to point out to the minister that while he proposes to put all the holders of water rights upon their defence at once, to see that they have those rights, his authority in the premises is not nearly so extensive as is set out here, and as I will show by reference to the judgment of the Exchequer Court. That judgment states that whatever right he has disappears, with respect to any portions of the railway belt, so soon as he sells that portion to settlers. Now a large proportion of the railway belt has been alienated already, sections of the railway belt are being disposed of to settlers right along, so that day by day or year by year, whatever right this government has there is vanishing and in the course of a short time the rights of the Dominion will cease altogether. Now, I ask the minister in view of that condition whether it would not be much better to come to an arrangement with the province of British Columbia that that province should continue to exercise the right which for 40 years has been exercised, rather than to make all the confusion that will be created by the passing of this Bill. I have not heard the minister refer at all to the section of the judgment which says that his right disappears with the alienation of the property to settlers. It seems to me that he could not have given attention to that. In view of the vanishing of whatever right he has there, it is all the more necescary that we should not do anything so drastic as pass a Bill, the effect of which will be to put every water owner there on his defence.

Mr. OLIVER. The suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) that we come to some arrangement with the province has in my mind a very great deal of merit, but we cannot come to any arrangement until we know whether we have any standing or not. Of course the case that is now before the Privy Council will decide whether there is anything to arrange or not. We may be entirely out of it after that decision is given, and certainly the province is not going to come to any arrangement until it is satisfied that we have some standing.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Will the case really decide it?

Mr. OLIVER. It may not, but it will be a step towards a decision at any rate. And, as I say, I think the province could scarcely be asked to come to an arrangement with a party that, possibly, has no standing whatever. I think that matter would have to wait until some decision is arrived at.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why not hold the legislation for the same reason?

Mr. OLIVER. For the reasons I have given which, I think, are not affected by what my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) has said. However, Mr. Chairman, if the committee will permit, I shall be glad to have sections 1 and 2 passed—that is, the title and the interpretation clause—because I would like to move, so as to get in its proper place in 'Hansard,' the amended clause 3 which, of course, is very different from clause 3 in the Bill. I desire to leave it for the consideration of hon. members in the interval.

Mr. LANCASTER. Without passing it to-night?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Why could not the government submit a stated case to the Supreme Court, and get a decision on the rights of the federal and provincial powers? To hear and give judgment in such cases that was one of the great reasons for establishing the Supreme Court.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) was not in when some of the discussion was going on. A certain side of the case has been settled by the Supreme Court and is on its way to the Privy Council.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I desire to make a suggestion to the minister (Mr. Oliver), which he can think over. Would it be possible to appoint a joint committee or commission, one member representing this government, one representing British Columbia, and they to appoint a third, this body to administer this matter pending a decision in the litigation now in progress? That would enable business to go on, for the minister is anxious to see water rights granted, and I fancy that the province is granting some too. Everybody would be satisfied with some arrangement for management in the meantime by a commission if a commission could be arranged. As the minister says, there is no body in possession. I merely throw out the suggestion for him to think over. Possibly if the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) and all concerned were to take the matter into consideration, they would work out a plan on that basis.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that suggestion would quite answer. It is not a question of administration, but of law that is at issue.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister has two things under consideration, as it seems to me. One is the question of such pro perty rights as have been granted by the province, and by the Dominion. But there is another part of this Bill which proposes to give the Dominion government the right to grant rights pending the decision. It is just possible that the Dominion government, whilst in temporary possession, might grant rights which would not be recognized by British Columbia, so that further litigation would ensue. But if rights were granted by such a commission, both governments being interested would immediately confirm them, and there would be no difficulty in the title.

Mr. OLIVER. There is great merit in that suggestion, but we are not able to deal with it at the moment. It is necessary that we should have the position established.

On section 3,

Mr. OLIVER. I move that the following be substituted for section 3·

This Act applies to all lands within the railway belt of the province of British Columbia as herein defined: Provided that nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect any riparian rights or rights to water in or appurtenant to those lands described in section 11 of the terms of union between the Dominion of Canada and British Columbia as held under pre-emption right or by Crown grant, or to affect any riparian rights or rights to water in or appurtenant to lands which having been heretofore granted by the Crown in the right of Canada are now vested in the said Crown.

I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

THE INSURANCE ACT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 166) an Act respecting insurance.—Mr. Fielding.

Mr. FIELDING. There were several clauses allowed to stand.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think No. 59 was the first of these.

Mr. FIELDING. Under paragraph 3 of subsection (b) of section 59, dealing with the investments of the companies, it is provided that a company may invest in:

The preferred stocks of any company which has paid regular dividends upon such stocks or upon its common stocks for not less than five years preceding the purchase of such preferred stocks, or the stocks of any company which are guaranteed by a company which has paid regular dividends upon its preferred or common stocks for not less than five years preceding the purchase of such guaranteed stocks.

The point was raised, I think by my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley), that a small company might guarantee a large amount of bonds of another company, and that would defeat the intention of the clause. It was suggested that we should put a limit upon the amount to be guaranteed in that way. The point seemed well taken, and I propose to add to this paragraph 3 these words:

Provided that the amount of stocks so guaranteed is not in excess of 50 per cent of the amount of the ordinary or common stocks, as the case may be, of the guaranteeing company.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. I wish to call up again section 14.

Mr. MILLER. Section 14 provides that Canadian companies should make a deposit with the minister to the amount of $50,000, and that foreign companies should make a deposit of $100,000. There are some Canadian companies doing an insurance business in some states of the American union who say that this provision interferes with their business, they say that the state of California, for instance, is discriminating against them in California because we in Canada discriminate in this way against foreign companies; and they say that within the last few days they have received advices that the state of Kansas also threatens to discriminate against Canadian companies for the same reason. Therefore, these Canadian companies ask that section 14 be amended to the effect that Canadian and foreign companies should be asked to make the same deposit, and they, therefore, ask that the word 'Canadian' in the second line of subsection 1, and the whole of subsection 2, be struck out, which would have that effect.

Mr. FIELDING. How would it do to make them both $100,000 instead of $50,000?

Mr. MILLER. I think that would answer the same purpose; there would be no discrimination.

Mr. FIELDING. It is only fair to say that the Canadian companies would probably complain of that. There is something in the argument that if we do discriminate in this way we provoke retaliation on the part of the United States companies. I think under the circumstances, however, I would prefer to make both $100,000. I do not feel like resisting strongly the view of my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Miller), but I would ask the sense of the House upon it.

Mr. MILLER. Perhaps the minister might compromise and make it $75,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Should not the deposit have some relation to the amount of business that they do? $50,000 would be a small deposit if they do a large business.

Mr. MILLER. The department will see to it that they have to keep a reserve proportionate to the amount of business that they do.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I am in favour of the suggestion to make them all $50,000. If you discriminate against foreign companies you provoke retaliation.

Mr. DOHERTY. I think if $50,000 is enough to make a Canadian insurance company safe towards its policy-holders, it ought to make it equally safe for the policy-holders in any company.

Mr. FIELDING. I am disposed to accept the amendment of my hon. friend from Grey.

Further consideration of section 59, subsection 3, other securities authorized by Treasury Board.

Mr. FIELDING. We provided that a company might purchase securities not strictly within the scope of this clause in exchange for other securities which they wished to get rid of it. But it was pointed out that if they should buy these securities or take them in exchange for others, some provision should apply as to disposing of them within a reasonable time. I think that is a fair suggestion, and I propose that the following words be added to subsection 3:

But the bonds, stocks or debentures and other acceptances so authorized shall be absolutely sold or disposed of within five years after the acquisition thereof, or within such further time not exceeding one year as the Governor in Council shall, on report of the minister, fix and determine.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 60, subsection 2, custody of securities abroad.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a provision there that in case it is necessary to exchange securities they may be entrusted to a responsible person residing out of Canada. The point was taken that this ought to be done by a bank or trust company, and while we do not want to discriminate to the extent of indicating the particular kind of companies, we propose to say that instead of being entrusted to a responsible person, they may be entrusted to 'a bank, trust company or other corporation carrying on business outside of Canada'.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be possible that they would be entrusted to a corporation carrying on business outside of Canada, say in the United States, to which it would not be desirable to entrust them?

Mr. FIELDING. That might possibly occur, but it is necessary to leave some discretion to the treasury board.

On section 93, quinquenial apportionment of profits.

Mr. FIELDING. It was not thought that any change should be made in this section.

Mr. DOHERTY. Then I am to suppose that the minister has not approved of the suggestion I made that this section is objectionable as being retroactive to this extent that it imposes on companies with regard to policies issued before this legislation was enacted, obligations which do not come from the contracts they entered into in accordance with the law in force at the time the contracts were made and creates a right or protection in favour of the insurer to which he was not entitled. That would be avoided if the section were not made applicable to policies issued before the passing of this legislation. As a general principle retroactive legislation is not looked upon with favour and unless substantial reasons are given, this section seems to me to be open to those objections.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand this point was fully discussed in the Senate Committee and representations made concerning it. After full consideration the conclusion was reached that this was the better way of dealing with it. I understand that the companies generally are quite satisfied with the clause. One outside company objected, but after hearing representations from that company the committee agreed that this was a wise provision. It is sometimes unavoidable in making a law that you have a retroactive clause, but it is necessary in order to carry out the general policy. For instance in this Bill we give the policy-holders the right to vote. Some companies had decided to give that and others had not, but we give them all that right, and in that sense it might be called retroactive legislation.

On section 95, subsection (b) incontestability after two years.

Mr. FIELDING. The point was in regard to military service. I find on inquiry that some companies already specify that the policy-holders may engage in war for the defence of Canada without any extra charge, but if they leave Canada and go abroad to engage in war they have to pay an extra premium which could not be very well fixed by law as various circumstances may change the nature of the risk. I doubt if we could by legislation make any improvement on the provision.

On section 11, assessment life insurance companies.

Mr. FIELDING. I desire to say that all the sections under the head of assessment life insurance companies are repetitions of the present law. We are not proposing any change in the law respecting these companies.

On section 123, notice of intention to maintain a reserve.

Mr. FIELDING. I desire to make a change in conformity with a change made elsewhere in the Bill. I, therefore, beg to move that in line 3 of the section the words 'office of the superintendent' be struck out and the word 'department' be inserted in lieu thereof.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 139, insurance in unlicensed companies.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I think there is a misprint in this section. There is evidently a contradiction of the previous clause. It was understood that no broker from the United States would come into Canada and do business here. It was provided in the amendment that any man in Canada might insure his own property, but he could not become a broker for that purpose. I suggest that we change that clause so as to provide that a man shall simply insure his own property. I therefore propose that the section be made to read:

Notwithstanding anything in this Act contained any owner of property situated in Canada may insure such property.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the clause as to which there was the most discussion when we had the Bill before us a year ago, and as to which there has been the most contention. I have already explained the change desired there. In substance it was decided by the Senate, which I am willing to accept, that these outside insurance companies might under certain circumstances be permitted to do business when the business was offered to them, but they could not send here to solicit business or employ agents. Roughly, that is the substance of it. I do not know whether the words suggested by my hon. friend will carry out that purpose or not. My hon. friend means to distinguish between the owner and the broker?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Yes.

Mr. DOHERTY. Would not that, if it were adopted, prevent a man who had an insurable interest, other than a broker, from insuring his property? Any person might as the principal to the contract insure his property, but when a broker insures, he acts only as the agent of the person having the insurable interest. He is not insuring the property, he is procuring insurance for the person who employs him.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. That has been the objection all along, and I do not see how this got into the clause. It is not the intention of the Senate. It was understood that no outsider should be allowed to come into Canada and do the business of insurance.

Mr. DOHERTY. No person can insure a property unless he has an insurable interest in it, and it appears to me that the words 'any person may insure any property' should be followed by the words 'in which he has an insurable interest.' It is not to be supposed that this clause can be interpreted as meaning that a broker may start out and insure property wholesale.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. That is what we want to make clear, that no man can go around and insure other people's property.

Mr. FIELDING. If he made a business of it he would be liable to the penalties of the Act. But suppose my hon. friend wants to take some outside insurance, and he has not time to attend to it, and asks his neighbour to do it for him. The neighbour in that case would be acting as his agent. Would there be any objection to that?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. It would open the door, and I do not think that was the intention.

Mr. SPROULE. How could any one insure except through an agent who would act for the company, and give the company's official receipt?

Mr. FIELDING. Any man who acted as agent for a company would violate the Act, but the case suggested by my hon. friend was the case of an agent acting, not for the company, but for the owner.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. As the clause reads, it says: 'Any person may insure any property situated in Canada.' I am afraid that is a contradiction of what was originally intended. I think it might be worded in this way: 'Any owner of property situated in Canada may insure it.'

Mr. DOHERTY. It is necessary to make a distinction between the owner of property and one who has an insurable interest in it. You permit the owner to insure his interest, but the hypothecary creditor has not the same advantage. Why not provide that any person may insure any property in which he has an insurable interest?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the words 'may insure his property or any property in which he has an insurable interest,' would meet my hon. friend's view.

Mr. SPROULE. When a creditor, say a bank, requires a certain amount of insurance as collateral security for an account, and the insurance must be obtained within a limited time, unless there is an agent of the company to give an official receipt that would be accepted by the bank as evidence of the insurance, the account might be impaired.

Mr. NESBITT. A company does not wait until the last moment to place insurance. If they are insuring outside of Canada, they will have an agent outside of Canada who can provide for any additional insurance at any time by telegraph.

Mr. ROBB. The amendment suggested by the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) might interfere considerably with the grain business of the west. There is a large amount of insurance carried on the grain in the elevators at Fort William, and it is often carried by the elevator company or by the brokers to whom the farmers consign their grain. The Bill as it is now provides for that, whereas if the amendment of the hon. member for St. Lawrence division is adopted, it will hamper the elevator companies in handling the insurance.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the words suggested to be added 'or any property in which he has an insurable interest' will meet the objection of my hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the minister kindly explain what effect the Bill has in relation to the canvassing for insurance by foreign or unlicensed companies by means of circulars or other literature?

Mr. FIELDING. My attention was called to that the other night. We in general terms forbid advertising, but the word 'circular,' is not used, and we propose to submit an amendment to include the circular as a form of advertising which should be forbidden.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. This is the clause regarding which I have received a great deal of correspondence from my constituents, and I would like to know what changes have really been made. I understand that outside companies have hitherto been allowed to come to this country, and get business, and that you are now preventing that.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the spirit of the insurance law in the past has been that these outside companies should not do business in Canada, otherwise there would be no excuse for having an insurance law. It would not seem to be reasonable that we should require all our Canadian companies, and all other companies that desire to do regular business, to take out licenses, to make returns, and submit to penalties, if outside companies could come in, and do business without putting up any deposit, without any license or without making any returns. I think the spirit of the law always was that these companies should not do business in Canada. However, the law was found not to be strict enough, and they did business. When the Insurance Act was being revised that question received a great deal of attention. The conclusion we reached before the committee of the House of Commons was that it would not be wise to forbid the business altogether, even although the spirit of the law seemed to contemplate that, because it was held both as respects the volume and the cost of insurance that large owners of property ought to have some liberty beyond that of dealing with licensed companies. Sometimes the licensed companies could not furnish the volume of insurance required at short notice, and sometimes thought they might indicate their ability to furnish the volume of insurance required, they quoted rates so much in excess of the mutual companies rates that the large owners of property felt very much aggrieved. Therefore the conclusion reached by the Banking and Commerce Committee was that we would permit them to do their business, but that we would impose a tax upon them for doing it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What was the tax?

Mr. FIELDING. The tax was 15 per cent on the premiums collected, with the qualification that in certain cases it should not exceed a certain limit. We regarded that as a fairly good compromise. However, it was one of those compromises I regret to say which pleased nobody. The insurance companies complained because they said we should not allow those companies to come in at all, and the large property owners complained, because they said we were preventing them from obtaining the insurance they desired. The Senate Committee devoted a great deal of attention to it. They heard gentlemen both for and against it, and I understand the representations made were both full and effective. The end of it was that the gentlemen on the Senate Committee, many of them insurance men, came to the conclusion that it would be fair and reasonable to permit what might be called overflow insurance, that is insurance that cannot be furnished or obtained at home except at excessive rates, that property owners might be allowed to go out and obtain insurance from the foreign companies, but that the foreign companies should not be allowed to come in and seek it. And so the Bill comes to us in that form. As it stands now, an owner of property who is not content with the arrangements at home can get his insurance in these mutual companies, taking his own risk, making his contract in the United States, and bringing his suit, if he has to bring a suit, under American law. But the foreign company cannot come into Canada, and seek the business or solicit business in any form. They cannot send agents in, they cannot open an office, and they cannot advertise, and we will have it so that they cannot issue circulars. In other words I can go out, and take insurance if I care to take the risk, but the company cannot come to Canada, and solicit business from me.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Did these unlicensed companies not pay anything before for a license or make a deposit?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Did the insurance men who appeared before the committee admit that they were unwilling or unable to take any amount of insurance that might be offered to them?

Mr. FIELDING. I think in some cases they did, though somewhat reluctantly, but there were some cases in which they stated that they were not able to supply the volume of insurance required at short notice.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They are not admitting it all over the country.

Mr. FIELDING. I think I am safe in saying that they did admit it to the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. They certainly did. One man stated in the presence of the representative of an insurance company that he had admitted that he could not take it. I think $450,000 was the amount. I was going to say with reference to prohibiting the distributing of circulars and advertising, that it might make it very difficult for a great many of those who desire insurance to know how they can get it. Suppose I wanted to insure and I am not in touch with any insurance men, and do not know the name and address of any insurance company, how am I to find out if they are not allowed to advertise.

Mr. FIELDING. Business men who have a large amount of insurance to take out usually inform themselves on these matters. Every manufacturer or merchant, or large owner of property, is well acquainted with the system commonly called the New England Mutual and he knows he can get insurance in that way if he is willing to take the risk involved in it. But I think if we can give our Canadian companies and the foreign companies which come and take our licenses and submit to all the conditions of the law, if we are giving them any measure of protection at all, I do not think we should allow outside companies to come in indiscriminately.

Mr. SPROULE. Not indiscriminately. But suppose the Finance Minister himself wanted to insure, and I asked him which company he was going to insure with, I venture to say that offhand he could not tell me.

Mr. LANCASTER. How will the minister prevent circulars coming in? Suppose I am a manufacturer in St. Catharines and some company sent me a circular soliciting business, how are you going to stop them doing that. Who is going to punish them?

Mr. HARTY. I may be excused from speaking upon this clause of Bill (No. 139), from the fact that the insurances of the corporation with which I am associated are all carried in the unlicensed companies referred to. Now some of these companies are in the habit of sending out monthly statements showing the result of each month's business, and if I understand the construction some of my brother members are endeavouring to place upon this clause I would not be able to receive these statements without incurring the risk of paying a penalty, for they come under the heading of circulars.

Again, suppose I desire to place additional insurance upon our premises tomorrow, I would be obliged to go to Boston or Providence to do this, as I understand I am debarred from allowing any agent of these unlicensed companies to visit our works, inspect the same, and fix the rate at which the insurance can be carried. This appears to me to be both unfair and embarrassing.

Mr. FIELDING. The inspector is allowed to come, that is provided for.

Mr. NESBITT. And the statement also would be allowed.

Mr. HARTY. The monthly statement that I have spoken of comes as a circular.

Mr. FIELDING. It would not be a circular advertising for business; it would be the rendering of an account in a transaction already made. All that we can hope to prevent—and I know that there are difficulties in the way—would be the sending of circulars to solicit business. But the difficulty of carrying this into effect is rendered less by the fact that, as hon. members know, these companies, as a rule, do not come with offers of business; you have to go to them. Knowing that to be the general practice, I do not think we shall have any difficulty in working it out.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is the practice, why do you need the clause at all?

Mr. FIELDING. You have to prohibit all from doing it, otherwise, somebody might do it.

Mr. A. HAGGART. I have followed this clause as it was in the old Bill, and as we have it now from the Senate. It seems to me that this clause which has been so much debated in the House and the Senate, has nothing in it. It is simply declaratory of what the law was before the Act was introduced. The Bill would be just as effective if the clause were struck out, except for the fact that the insured has to make a return to the department. I do not think the Act would be either better or worse if the clause were struck out. It is a fake, pure and simple.

Mr. FIELDING. In that case, it might just as well be allowed to stand. I am informed that, after very great discussion, the representative manufacturers and merchants who discussed the question on one side and the insurance companies on the other side, though neither party was fully pleased, agreed that this was about as wise a conclusion as could be reached.

Mr. A. HAGGART. It does neither good nor harm.

Mr. FIELDING. If that could be said of all legislation, the world would be much better off than it is.

Mr. MEIGHEN. There can be no question that the main purpose of insurance legislation is sacrificed by the arrangement, whoever may have agreed to it, that is, there is no protection for the public who may insure in these foreign and unlicensed companies. I would like to understand two things: first, do we as a committee proceed upon the assumption that, if the insured goes and seeks the company and is not made the subject of a canvas by agent or circular, he is entitled to no protection against a company that, possibly, is not in a financial position to meet losses? Second, in arriving at the 15 per cent tax that was formerly proposed, was it estimated that this would represent an equally onerous burden on the licensed companies to that which is imposed upon the licensed companies in the way of putting up a deposit and complying with the other obligations imposed upon them by the statute ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not say it was mathematically adjusted. It was regarded as a certain measure of protection which might fairly be given to the home companies. I suppose that the companies would claim that it was not equal to the burdens imposed upon them. But, as I say, it was not intended to be a mathematical adjustment of burdens.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do I understand that the present clause does not contain the provision for a 15 per cent tax?

Mr. FIELDING. That is struck out; there is no tax. That is the material change that was made in the clause by the Senate Committee.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I am surprised that we should allow that to go through here. I did not know that the Senate had proposed that. I enter my protest on behalf of those I represent here. I think it is exceedingly unfair. The 15 per cent tax was a very slight tax under the circumstances. Our companies have to take out licenses, put up deposits, make reports and comply with all the conditions of the law, while the outside companies can do all the business they like quite free from these conditions. I say it is exceedingly unfair, and I protest against it.

Mr. FOWKE. Is it not clearly in the interest of the insured public of Canada?

Mr. LANCASTER. There are two classes, the insured and the insurers. The insurance agents do not seem to think that it is in the interest of the companies that they represent, or in their own interest, for they protest against it earnestly. I do not know what the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Fowke) means by saying that it is in the interest of the insurance companies, when the agents of those companies protest against it. I agree with the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner), and I think the Senate went a long way when they struck out this clause. I believe they should have left it in.

Mr. BURRELL. My view is the same as that of the hon. member for Souris. I have had many representations on behalf of insurance companies and their agents against this legislation.

Mr. FIELDING. It is the old question whether we shall protect one class or the other.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The manufacturers want protection in big things and free trade in the little ones.

Mr. FIELDING. I thought there was some force in the argument that this was unfair to the licensed companies. It is, however, a vexed and complicated question. If the parties chiefly concerned—of course, the whole public are concerned—the insurance companies on the one hand, and the representatives, so far as they can be assumed to be such, of the large insuring public, the owners of large manufacturing establishments and the great merchants, have accepted this as, on the whole, a fair compromise, I do not think the House will make a mistake in assenting to it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I cannot understand why we should go on in this country continuously giving everything to the manufacturers. That is about what we are coming to as fast as we can. I am exceedingly sorry to think this fifteen per cent tax has been removed and, I say again, I enter my strong protest against the clause as it stands. The manufacturers are getting nearly everything in this country now, and it is about time that something were done to curtail their privileges.

Mr. TALBOT. Fifteen years ago it was worse.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I am following the policy of Sir John Macdonald, who held that when these manufacturing industries ceased to be struggling infants we should cease to protect them.

Mr. FIELDING. It is only fair to say that this is not a manufacturers' question. The large merchants were represented also. For instance, Mr. Greenshields, of Montreal, representing one of the largest importing houses in Canada, I am informed, made one of the most effective speeches before the Senate committee in support of the view that they should be allowed to get outside insurance. Every large importer, every large manufacturer, every large merchant, or handler of produce is interested in this. Petitions came in in reams, not only from these people, but also from the agricultural interests, from the cheese and butter factories, complaining that if the fifteen per cent clause remained they would be severely pressed. I am not always supposed to be too favourable to the manufacturers, but it is only fair to say, as I have already said, that this is not a manufacturers' question, nor is it a merchants' question, but it covers practically all classes, including the agricultural.

Mr. LANCASTER. The policy of self-interest will come into play.

Mr. FIELDING. In all these cases self-interest is the moving principle. It is only the few gentlemen who sit in this House that can be impartial.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It seems to me the chief danger is that the public is not protected against companies that may not be warranted by their financial standing. Another thing is that while the House has forbidden companies to solicit insurance by agents, it has so framed the conditions that there will be no need of a foreign company advertising or soliciting business, business will be forced upon it. They will be able to get business, or to offer business, at a so much lower rate that as soon as it is known that Mr. A has insured at such a low rate in a certain company in the states, his neighbour will at once apply to the same company for insurance, and before long the poor local agent will be completely out of business. I do not think this House should too hastily accept the amendment of the Senate. It should be the duty of the House to see that whatever tax may be imposed should be such that the burden will be not less than upon the Canadian company.

Mr. NESBITT. I may say that the insurance companies were not satisfied with the conditions imposed by the Senate, but they made up their minds to accept the conditions imposed by the Senate rather than discuss the Bill any longer, and if it did not work out reasonably satisfactory, they could come back again to the House, and get it amended. That was their idea, I speak frankly, in accepting the conditions imposed by the Senate. There is no doubt that clause 139 is more or less of a farce, as it has been called, because it will be evaded, no matter what you do. I would like to say that it was not the so-called New England mutuals that were being kept out by the insurance companies so much as it was what we call the underground companies, the companies without any standing which are allowed to insure throughout the country, and of course the people that insure with them have to take their own risk. They do here now by this clause. There is a preventive to a certain extent. My own idea about the insurance business in this country is that there should be no exception or excuse, every company should be licensed, what is fair for one is fair for another, and if we are to have licenses at all, every company should be licensed without regard to where they come from. But the licensed companies tried to get that in the Bill for two years, and as I said, made up their minds they would accept the Bill as it is rather than continue the agitation, and see what could be done.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think we should try, and make the legislation in the true interest of the country. The insurance people felt that they were suffering an injustice, and the fact that they gave in, and said they would go without their just rights for a couple of years, does not concern me. What concerns me is whether this legislation is fair to the whole country. I agree with the hon. gentleman that they all ought to be licensed, but we should not say that a company must continue to submit to an injustice, because they are afraid of the powers that be, or afraid of the Senate. If the thing is wrong we should say it is wrong, and if it is right we should put it there. I say again that there should be some license, or some tax imposed upon these companies that come into this country, and interfere with our domestic companies. I believe in the principle of protecting Canadian industry in every way.

Mr. FIELDING. At the end of subsection 1, to meet the criticism about circulars and so forth, I propose to add:

Provided further that no such company, underwriters or persons shall, within Canada, advertise their business in any newspaper or other publication, or by circular made in Canada or elsewhere, or maintain an office or agency therein for the receipt of applications or the transaction of any matter or thing relating in any way to their said business.

I would understand that advertising by circular would not mean a statement of business.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the use of passing legislation if we cannot enforce it? How can you stop a man from sending me a circular from New York?

Mr. FIELDING. You could not prevent him sending it in, but you could punish the inspector who came here to inspect the risks of the company which violated that condition. By a special clause we allow these companies to send inspectors to examine the risks; but if we found that these companies were violating the intention of this Act then we could have recourse against the inspector.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do you mean to say that you could punish the inspector for some one else doing something in New York, for sending a circular into Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. We would try, but we might fail.

Mr. DOHERTY. You could get after the insured. If the company sends him a circular, he has no right to insure in that company.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why all this sumptuary legislation? I am very much surprised. This House started out to make an insurance Bill for the people, to try and get them some rights which they were not getting from the insurance companies in the first place. We have landed up by giving the bulk of the rights entirely to the company; every particle of it is for the company except these two clauses. I think the least said about this the better. Because a man sends me a circular from New York, and if I get insured in a New York company, why should I be punished? I think that is very drastic legislation. I think people should have a few liberties left to them in business matters in this country. I think that is most absurd legislation. If you look over all the statute-books of every country, even Turkey, you would not find such foolish or sumptuary legislation, and I am surprised to find members asking for more of it.

Mr. HERRON. I have very serious protests against this clause from my portion of the country, and I would be prepared to vote against clause 139 if I had an opportunity of doing so.

Mr. HARTY. It strikes me that you cannot prohibit any one from sending a circular from 'elsewhere'. You cannot prevent a man sending a circular into Canada from any American city. How you are to prohibit that by putting in the words 'from elsewhere' in this clause I am not able to comprehend.

Mr. A. HAGGART. And I do not see how we are going to prevent the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty) from going to Boston or New York, making a contract there and getting all the insurance he wants. The contract is made in that country, and he has to enforce it there. I do not think this parliament has any jurisdiction.

Mr. FIELDING. Sometimes you prohibit the doing of certain things with a fairly good knowledge that somebody will do them, and all you can do is to provide a penalty. I think in this case it is a measure of protection to our own companies. You cannot prevent a man issuing a circular in New York, and sending it through the mails, but if a company is discovered to have done that it violates the provision of this clause and we can go after it by proceeding against the inspector.

Mr. LANCASTER. For what crime?

Mr. FIELDING. We would consider that the company doing the business had violated the law, that his inspection did not come withing the law and therefore he could be proceeded against.

Mr. LANCASTER. What would be his offence, before what court would he be tried, and what would be the penalty? I challenge the Finance Minister to say what is to happen to a man if he does this. Let us have no such nonsensical legislation as this is. I think I see the reason for this legislation. Men who have obtained standing in communities, who have used energy and skill in building up a business as insurance agents, who are thoroughly honourable men, and who know how to carry on their business have had their living interfered with, and this is done as a sop to them, they are led to believe that some one is going to be punished for sending a circular,

Mr. FIELDING. I can only refer my hon. friend to the penalty clause, section 70.

Mr. LANCASTER. How is he going to get the man into Canada who sent the circular and does he believe that when an inspector comes in on another piece of business entirely he can punish him for what some one else did in New York? The inspector can say he did not know anything about it. Let us not humbug the people.

Mr. SPROULE. We should not lose sight of the important educative work carried on by these companies in instructing individuals how to prepare their risks so as to minimize the danger of fire. That is antecedent to the insurance, and the inspector must come there before the insurance is affected. This educative work was never done to the same extent in Canada before. Why will a Canadian company ask me eight per cent to carry insurance, when this company will carry it for one-quarter of one per cent after they have given instructions how to prepare a building so as to minimize the danger of fire and to reduce the cost of insurance? It is the individual who wants the insurance who should be considered, not the company. They are not coming here soliciting business, the individual, who wants insurance and cannot get it in Canada without paying an exorbitant figure should be allowed to get his insurance where he can get it.

Mr. HARTY. The risk is all his own.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think we can do better than take the clause as it is.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the word 'circular' should be left out. They send circulars giving instructions as to what shall be done and a statement of the standing of the insurance from time to time. Perhaps that might be construed as coming within this clause of the Act, and it might be said that they were sending circulars for advertising purposes.

On section 148, by-laws.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that these were all provisions of the old law.

Mr. FIELDING. Where there is any material change I will call attention to it.

On section 150, capital stocks, calls, and increase of capital.

Mr. FIELDING moved:

That the heading before section 150 be changed so as to read 'the capital stock and calls thereon.'

Amendment agreed to.

On section 153, forfeiture of shares for default in paying calls.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Where a company is approaching a point at which it is virtually in liquidation the directors might call and cancel the unpaid shares and thus relieve themselves from liability in case of disaster.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the law as it has been for years and I think there has been no trouble about it.

On section 166, arrears prevent voting.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would ask the minister to make provision, the same as that which is in the English company's Act, that where two or more persons are registered for shares as joint trustees, the one whose name is first on the roll shall cast the vote.

Mr. FIELDING. This is the existing law, and I am advised that there has been no difficulty arising under it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think it is not the law. Where two parties are down for the same stock or where executors are down as holding stock in trust, the one whose name is first upon the register casts the vote That is the English law.

Mr. FIELDING. I believe it is in the English Act, but I hope my hon. friend will not feel it necessary to press it this evening. I am told that no difficulty has arisen under this clause.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not wish to delay the Bill; if I had noticed it sooner I would have called the minister's attention to it.

On section 179, actions against shareholders.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Did the companies make any representations to the government in reference to this question?

Mr. FIELDING. I am advised that the matter was not specially considered. No attention was called to it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It is a very dangerous provision. I do not think you will find it in the Companies Act.

Mr. FIELDING. It is the existing law and it is in the Companies Act.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Not in that form.

On section 184, cost of incorporation chargeable to shareholders.

Mr. FIELDING. This section is designed to make the cost of incorporation chargeable to the shareholders and not to the policy-holders.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, April 30, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

TREATMENT OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. LENNOX. Before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if he has inquired into the matter I referred to the other day as to the delay at Halifax in connection with a ship that arrived there.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I have a memorandum on the subject, but I have not it in my desk at the moment. But I would be glad to hand it to my hon. friend or lay it on the table at any stage.

Mr. LENNOX. Perhaps on Monday you could do it.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I will do it on Monday.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

House went into committee to consider certain resolutions respecting the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of lines of railway therein mentioned.

Mr. GRAHAM. I may say that all the subsidies granted in this respect have been voted before. There are two or three cases where the subsidies apply to different parts of the line, but only in two cases is there any different mileage, and in both cases I think the measurement was found to be incorrect, in one case by three and a half miles, and in the other by one mile. The other subsidies are all taken from the statute and revoted in the same terms for the same distances and to the same amounts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the necessity for re-voting these? Was there a time limit in the statute which made provision for these subsidies?

Mr. GRAHAM. The time limit in all these is two years unless construction has begun and four years if construction work has been started. But under the statute they all run out at the end of two years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Unless the work has been commenced.

Mr. GRAHAM. Unless the work has been commenced.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Section 4 has that I think. What is the reason that they are put in? Are we voting them for the second time only, or for the third time, or for the fourth or fifth or sixth time?

Mr. GRAHAM. I would not like to say positively, because I have not gone back through the statutes further than 1906. There are two or three which were voted in 1906, but the great majority we revoted in 1908. Possibly some were renewals at that time, I would not like to say. In the statute they do not appear as renewals. I have had representations with reference to all these subsidies, and it is the usual statement I imagine with respect to a great many of them that during the past two years or four years, as the case may be, they have not been able to get into position to proceed with the work, but they think now that if the subsidies are revoted, in fact they assure me that they think they will be able to proceed within the two years extended by this statute. In some cases the work has been started. I have not included any new ones at all.

Mr. ROCHE. The Minister of Railways will remember that a deputation from Manitoba waited on him two or three weeks ago. On that deputation there were representatives from Brandon, Hamiota and Birtle, and probably some other towns, asking for a subsidy for a line between Hamiota and Birtle. The Canadian Pacific railway was considering the question of constructing a branch line there. It is a portion of the country that is badly in need of facilities and the Canadian Pacific railway promised with the usual assistance, to construct this road this summer. I understand the deputation left here very hopeful of receiving this assistance after their interview with the Minister of Railways and his colleagues, but I do not notice any subsidy for this road in the list presented to the House. Does the minister not sympathize with the aspirations of the people in that important portion of the country? What is the reason for refusing it?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have a good deal of sympathy with the proposition that the gentlemen referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) placed before me. As he says there is considerable need there for railway facilities and for a connection between these two points. The Canadian Pacific railway representatives also discussed the matter with me. As he will understand, however, there are scores and scores of applications for new subsidies, and after investigating them the government thought that for this session at least, they should not recommend the granting of any new subsidies; but in order that no person who was in a position to proceed with the work might suffer, it was decided to renew certain of the old ones that had been already voted. I assure my hon. friend that if any new subsidies had been voted at all, the one to which he refers would have been included, as they put up a pretty strong case.

Mr. RHODES. Are all these renewals made upon representations of the parties interested, or are they renewals as a matter of form, in some instances ?

Mr. GRAHAM. There have been requests made for every one of them, or they would not have been renewed. There are scores that have not been renewed that were on the statutes before.

On resolution 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand it, every one of these is a renewal of a subsidy granted in 1908.

Mr. GRAHAM. As I said, there are exceptions, three or four of them were granted in 1906-7, but the majority are of 1908.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did those of 1906-7 expire ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

M. R. L. BORDEN : Could the minister tell us which of them are of the year 1906-7 ?

Mr. GRAHAM. They are named in the resolution as we go along. For instance, No. 5 was granted by chapter 40 of 1907 ; No. 12 was 1907; No. 13 was 1907. The chapter and the year of the statute are indicated.

On resolution 2,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are these and the following paragraphs exactly the same as those which have been enacted by the House in such matters in the past ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, they are an exact copy of the statute.

On resolution 8,

Mr. DANIEL. Is section 8 the same as in all the railway subsidy Acts?

Mr. GRAHAM. An exact copy.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and agreed to.

House went into committee to consider the following additional proposed resolutions for subsidies to railways :

45. For a line of railway from Montreal to a point on the National Transcontinental railway in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 48, not exceeding 200 miles.

46. To the Little Nation River Railway Company, for a line of railway from Papineauville on the Canadian Pacific railway towards Lake Nominingue, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 63 of 1908, section 1, item 70, not exceeding 30 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM. These were passed in 1908, but after my resolutions were prepared it was called to my notice that I had not included these. I had included them in the Act, but not in the other list of resolutions. They are an exact copy of the statute of 1908.

Mr. RHODES.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 226) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Bill contains nothing that is not in the resolutions.

On section 5,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The section of the resolution is different from that of the Bill. The resolution contains these words :

And the said board shall have absolute control, at all times, over the rates and tolls to be levied and taken by any of the companies, or upon any of the railways and bridges hereby subsidized.

In the Bill the words ' and bridges ' are omitted.

Mr. GRAHAM. The reason is, I think, that there are no bridges subsidized under the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, it should not be in the resolution.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is superfluous in the resolution. There are no bridges covered by the Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Except in so far as these may be part of the railway lines ?

Mr. GRAHAM. But there are no special subsidies to bridges.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall section 5 stand as part of the Bill? Carried.

Mr. HENDERSON. Could the minister tell us the total amount of the subsidies we are authorizing to-day at the maximum and minimum rate, and the total mileage subsidized?

Mr. GRAHAM. The total mileage is 3,277·4 miles. At a subsidy of $3,200 per mile that will amount to $10,487,680; at a subsidy of $6,400 per mile that will amount to $20,975,360.

On the preamble,

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is there any intention on the part of the government to grant the subsidy to the Ontario government railway which has been granted to all the colonization roads? I understand that this railway is to be an important link in the Transcontinental. The next time the minister brings down his subsidies for railways, I suggest that he should propose and pay a subsidy to the Ontario government railway, such as the ordinary railway company have received.

Mr. GRAHAM. The government at present has no intention of granting a subsidy to the Ontario government railway. That road did not get any subsidy when it was inaugurated. It has now been largely constructed by a very rich province, and I think it would hardly be wise for this government to interfere with the government of a province in that way, particularly under all the conditions. Then if we were to grant a subsidy to that line I would be inclined to say that the line should come under Dominion jurisdiction, under the Dominion Board of Railway Commissioners, and the government of Ontairo would not care to permit that.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If I were discussing the question of jurisdiction, I should say that the Dominion government railways ought to come under the jurisdiction of the Ontario government, and then they would be able to give a profit.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the hon. gentleman will give me the rate the Ontario road charges I will give a profit of $2,000,000 each year on the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why do you not take it?

Mr. GRAHAM. The people get the benefit.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have heard so much about low rates on the Intercolonial railway as compared with other railways that I really would like to have some information on the subject. I would invite the minister to bring down, before the close of the session or before his supplementary estimates go through, a table comparing the rates on the Intercolonial railway, both through and local, with the standard rates on the other great railways of Canada. I have not understood that the local rates on the Intercolonial railway were so much lower than those on other railways as the minister would have us imagine.

Mr. GRAHAM. It might take some weeks to prepare such a table. The rate sheets, unless in the hands of an expert, do not show the income from freight. The classification of freight has a great deal to do with it. As a matter of fact, the location and the classification of freight of the Ontario government road is such that if its rates on a sheet were exactly the same as on a sheet of the Intercolonial railway its income would be much lower on account of the higher class of freight it has to carry. They are in a much better position per mile.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That does not mean that the rates are higher, but that they are favourably situated in respect to the particular description of freight that forms the bulk of their haulage.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is one reason.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the other?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have made a statement before the House as to passenger traffic. Their passenger rates are higher than the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should not imagine that they are very much higher. I realize that the through passenger rate from Halifax to Truro or Montreal is a very reasonable one, but the local passenger rates on the Intercolonial railway in Nova Scotia are about the same as on any other railway in Canada, so far as I am aware. I am rather tired of hearing about these rates. It is creating an impression throughout the country that the people of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Quebec, are getting a sort of pauper rate on the Intercolonial railway. I do not think that that is the case; I think they are paying the usual rates, in respect of local traffic at least. If I am wrong, I want to be corrected. If the minister cannot give that information before the close of the session, I would like to have it after the session, or at all events at the commencement of the next session.

Mr. GRAHAM. The information my hon. friend has asked for is on 'Hansard' either this year or last. We took the local rates on the Canadian Pacific railway in the maritime provinces and compared them.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The question was asked last year if these figures were on a ton mile basis, but the minister said they were never calculated on a ton mile basis on the Intercolonail railway. The only statistics the people will accept in the United States are the statistics published in the manuals and based on a ton mile basis.

Mr. GRAHAM. These returns are placed on the table of the House every year.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If we had the information we could tell what the rates are. You can juggle the other figures in any way you like.

Mr. GRAHAM. The information published in reference to the Intercolonial railway is the same as the sworn statements in regard to other railways, and the hon. member has a copy in his desk.

Mr. TURRIFF. I had occasion to look into the freight rates on coal to ascertain whether the rates in the west were higher than in the east. I got the freight rates for coal on the Intercolonial railway and found that whereas in the west we are paying a much higher rate to carry coal 400 miles than the Intercolonial railway was carrying it for 800 or 900 miles. I think it is absolutely unfair that the Intercolonial railway should haul freight for one half the price charged by the other roads. We in other parts of the country do not get any part of the cheap rates on the Intercolonial railway. We have to pay our own high rates and have also to put our hands in our pockets and pay taxes to get cheap rates for those who happen to have the advantage of living along the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. STANFIELD. In inland towns we pay a good rate. From Stellarton to Truro, a haul of 40 miles, we pay 80 cents a ton, although the through rate to Halifax is the same. So in making up their rates it is hard to strike an average.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And there is a low rate, established many years ago, from the coal mining centres to Montreal. This was done advisedly with an idea of assisting in the development of the mining properties of Nova Scotia. I am not prepared to dispute that that is a fairly low rate.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, it is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I say that so far as the local rates in Nova Scotia are concerned, they are not materially lower than rates on other railways. Take the case mentioned by the hon. member for Colchester, 80 cents a ton for 40 miles, that seems a fairly substantial rate, and I doubt whether the rates in Ontario are higher than that. My hon. friend (Mr. J. A. Currie) tells me that for such distances in Ontario the rates are lower.

Mr. GRAHAM. On all these things my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) is not a strict authority. There are special cases. The question of freight and passenger rates is very complicated, and the study of a freight or passenger sheet is a science.

Bill reported.

AID TO CANADIAN NORTHERN ALBERTA RAILWAY COMPANY.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide:

1. That the Governor in Council may aid and assist the construction of the line of railway of a company to be incorporated under the name of 'Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company,' from a point at or near Edmonton or Strathcona, in the province of Alberta, thence, in a generally western direction, to the coal areas, situated at or near the Brazeau river and the headwaters of the McLeod river, for a distance not exceeding one hundred and fifty miles, by guaranteeing the principal and interest of the bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities, hereinafter called securities, secured as hereinbefore mentioned, of the company, to the extent of thirteen thousand dollars per mile for the first fifty miles of the line so aided, and, for the remainder of the said line, to the amount of twenty-five thousand dollars per mile, not exceeding in all one hundred and fifty miles, the interest upon the said securities to be at the rate of three and one-half per cent per annum, payable half yearly, the principal to be payable in fifty years; and that the aid granted or authorized by chapter 25 of the Statutes of 1908, intituled: 'An Act respecting aid for the extension of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific railway,' be cancelled.

2. That the said securities so guaranteed shall be secured by a deed or deeds of trust, by way of mortgage or charge, to a trustee or trustees, approved of by the Governor in Council, and such deed or deeds of trust shall respectively grant a first mortgage or charge upon the said line of railway so aided, and the right of way, station grounds, or other real estate and interest therein, buildings and other structures and improvements, rolling stock and equipment, plant, machinery, tools, supplies, materials and other personal properties, present and future, acquired for the purposes of the said line so aided, and in connection with operating, repairing and maintaining it, and the tolls, incomes and revenues of the company arising and to arise from the said line, and the rights, privileges, franchises and powers of the company now or hereafter held with respect to and in connection with the said line and the operation, maintenance and repair thereof.

3. That the kind of securities to be guaranteed as aforesaid, and the forms thereof, and the form and terms of the deed or deeds of trust securing them, and the times and manner of the issue of securities and the disposition of the moneys to be raised thereon, by sale, pledge, or otherwise, pending the expenditure of such moneys for the purposes of the line of railway so aided, and the form and the manner of guarantee, shall be such as the Governor in Council approves, and such terms, provisions and conditions may be included in such deed or deeds of trust as the Governor in Council deems expedient or necessary.

4. That the said guarantee shall be signed by the Minister of Finance or such officer as is designated by the Governor in Council to sign it; and upon being so signed the Dominion of Canada shall become liable as guarantor for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities so guaranteed according to the tenor thereof, and the said payment shall form a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

5. That any moneys paid by the Dominion of Canada under any guarantee herein provided for shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the Dominion and not in discharge of the liability of the company under the securities guaranteed, or under any deed of trust securing them, and the moneys so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and deed of trust, and the Dominion shall be subrogated in and to all the rights of the holders of such securities, the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the Dominion, and the Dominion shall, with respect to all moneys so paid, be in all respects in the position of security-holders with respect to whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the Dominion.

6. That the decision of the Governor in Council as to the length of the mileage of the said line of railway so to be aided shall, for the purposes hereof, be final.

7. That the books of the company shall at all times be open for inspection for and on behalf of the government by any person named in that behalf by the Governor in Council or the Minister of Finance.

8. That the Canadian Northern Railway Company shall, by guarantee included in the said deed or deeds of trust, or in some other instrument agreed to by the Governor in Council or the Minister of Finance and the last named company, in such form as the Governor in Council shall approve, guarantee to his Majesty the due payment by the company of the principal and interest of all securities issued and guaranteed under the provisions hereof, according to the tenor and effect of such securities, respectively, and in accordance with the terms of the said deed or deeds of trust, and shall also guarantee to His Majesty the due payment by the company of all loss or costs which His Majesty may sustain or be put to in enforcing, after default, the provisions of the said deed or deeds of trust against the line of railway and premises thereby mortgaged and charged.

9. That the company may acquire the line of railway constructed or partially constructed or located by the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company, or by the Canadian Northern Railway Company as its successor by amalgamation, between the points set forth in paragraph 1 hereof, and all properties, works, surveys, plans and locations, held, made, approved or established in connection therewith; and the same shall, for the purposes hereof and the guarantee hereby authorized, be taken to form part of the line of railway hereby aided. The deed of transfer or acquirement (which the respective companies interested are hereby authorized to execute) shall be executed and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State of Canada before any securities are issued or guaranteed hereunder in respect of the line of railway and incidental properties so acquired; and the said deed upon being so executed and deposited shall, without further formality, be taken to vest in the company all the properties, works, surveys, plans and locations held, made, approved or established by or for the transferring companies, or either of them, in respect of the line of railway or portions thereof so transferred, with the same rights, privileges and priorities as were at the time of the execution of such deed held by the transferring companies respectively.

Mr. GRAHAM. This resolution is somewhat unusual, but under the conditions that exist the introduction of such legislation seems to be imperative. In 1908 certain lines of railway were guaranteed by the Dominion government. The Edmonton Yukon Pacific was given a guarantee of bonds of $13,000 per mile for fifty miles, and $25,000 per mile for the balance of 100 miles, the length of the road being 150 miles with the proviso that the Edmonton Yukon Pacific should become part of and amalgamate with the Canadian Northern. When the amalgamation came to take place, and the securities were about to be issued a difficulty arose. The Canadian Northern itself has practically two sets of securities, one Dominion guaranteed or provincial guaranteed, as the case may be, for I think it is $15,000 per mile, and these securities become a first lien on the roads to be constructed, and a second or third mortgage on the lines already constructed. But they have another class of security called consolidated debenture stock, extending over their entire system, and in the Act giving them authority to issue these securities it is provided that there shall not be more than $15,000 per mile of an underlying security. That being the case, when the amalgamation took place, the portion of the guarantee by the Dominion for $25,000 on its 100 miles was found to come in conflict with the other Act of the Canadian Northern. It was impossible under existing conditions for the Dominion to get its first mortgage on this 100 miles for more than $15,000 per mile, although the guarantee was for $25,000 per mile. In order to overcome that the solicitor of the company, Mr. Phippin, after consultation with the Justice Department, and the Finance Department decided to introduce a Bill to really incorporate a new company. This new company is to be called the Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company, and the guarantee is to be given to this company and executed. Then after this is done, and the guarantee provided for, and the road constructed, they are to amalgamate with the Canadian Northern, and the securities would then run for the $25,000 per mile, for the 100 miles, no Act interfering. That is all the Act is intended to cover, and it is what the Justice Department, and Mr. Phippin assure me is provided for by the Act. If asked if the company gave up this guarantee given under the Act of 1908, I say that they do release that absolutely. I have submitted this to the Justice Department, and to the Finance Department. Some little changes were made, and it was approved of by Mr. Phippin.

Mr. HENDERSON Perhaps the minister can tell us what the estimated cost of this road will be, whether the $13,000 and the $25,000 will be sufficient to build the road or whether it will be more than sufficient.

Mr. GRAHAM. Much more than that. The $25,000 per mile is granted on account of representations made that this part of the line would be quite expensive. It was discussed in 1908 when the guarantee was first made. That is the reason an increase over that amount was asked.

Mr. HENDERSON. If it is to be very expensive, my impression is that it would be better to drop it. The Canadian Northern can build cheaper than that.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not much of a road that can be built for $25,000 per mile.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand there is likely to be a lot of heavy bridging?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does this resolution or the proposed Bill do away with the guarantee of 1908 alluded to by the minister?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. MAGRATH. Is this the same guarantee that was passed in 1908, or are there any extensions?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, the same guarantee. This is to make practical and work out the guarantee we gave in 1908. There was a desire to add a little to the mileage, but I struck it out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The mileage, I understand, is exactly the same as in 1908.

Mr. GRAHAM. I know it is not any more, and I think it is some less.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 227) to incorporate the Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company and to aid in the construction of its railway.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister before him any figures showing the total amount of railway subsidies that have been voted by the government of Canada since confederation?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not the figures before me, but if the hon. member will refer to the last report on railways and canals, he will find them in the schedule that I had prepared by the statistician.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second time, considered in committee and reported.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Government of the Yukon — Salaries and expenses as connected with the administration of the territory, $130,000.

Mr. OLIVER. That item is a decrease of $35,000 since last year by the reduction of the staff.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the revenue of the Yukon last year?

Mr. OLIVER. The revenue from the export tax on gold, which is a special tax on the Yukon, was about $90,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Have you the figures of the total revenue?

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, the Yukon pays its share of customs and other taxes, but we have not the Yukon figures separately. The special tax of which I have spoken is estimated to have yielded, in the fiscal year year just closed, over $90,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the cost of governing this territory decreasing?

Mr. OLIVER. There is the decrease of $35,000 which I have just mentioned. The other items remain at the same figures as before.

Mr. BLAIN. And is the revenue higher than two years ago?

Mr. OLIVER. In 1907-8, it was $70,504; in 1908-9, it was $81,000.

Dominion Lands—chargeable to income—Salaries of the outside service, $300,000.

Mr. ROCHE. I take this opportunity to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) if he has ever had his attention called to the idea of allowing women to homestead. I noticed, some time ago, an article in one of the city papers of Winnipeg commenting upon a letter by a reverend gentleman in Saskatchewan, in which letter this idea was advocated. I have seen also a great deal of comment upon the subject in the press of western Canada. I think the minister might do worse than allow women to take up homesteads. Undoubtedly, there are men who have families of girls who would move to the west if their girls had the privilege of homesteading. And the minister knows also that in the west we have a surplus of bachelors. The change suggested would not only allow our ladies an opportunity to acquire some property, but would afford the male members of the population an opportunity to find helpmeets. As the letter I have referred to puts the case better than I can do, I take the liberty of reading it:

Let Women Homestead.

Editor 'Telegram.'—I wish to call your attention to the remedy for one of the serious problems in our western world.

It is everywhere conceded in the province of Saskatchewan that there is a great dearth of marriageable ladies. In almost any of our new districts you will find ten young men for one young lady.

It seems to me this could be remedied by allowing girls over eighteen to homestead. I have just returned from a trip to Toronto and meeting an old friend down there I said to him, 'Why don't you come west?' He said, 'Oh, if my girls were only boys I would have been west long ago.' I told him we needed him more with his girls than if de had boys. He had four grown-up daughters.

Now, I ask you, why that man had not just as much right to homestead and get a quarter section for each of those girls as the man who happened to have four grown-up boys?

I claim, sir, that the west has more need to-day to allow such a man to come in with his girls and give him every right that a man with boys should get, than we have to encourage the single man. Again, in conversation, on the train, with a Norwegian from North Dakota, I got more information on the subject. He said down in the Dakotas and Minnesota, there are many men with large families of fine, strong, healthy girls, who would come to Canada if their girls could homestead, but because they cannot they are moving on down into the new country in Montana, where they have the privilege. Now, sir, we all know what fine blood we have received from the Norwegian and Swedes; should we not encourage them to come?

We look forward to a big year in the growth of our population in this year 1910. But if it is going to receive the stimulus which will make it a red letter year in the history of the growth of Canada, our government cannot too soon grant the ladies the privilege of homesteading. For it would bring fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, lovers and sweethearts that we could never get in any other way.

REV. R. W. BEVERIDGE.

Watrous, Sask., Jan. 15.

I was unaware before reading that letter that Montana had land laws permitting ladies to enjoy the same privilege as the men, that is, the privilege of homesteading. Apparently, it is quite an attraction in that state, because Norwegians and Swedes go there from Minnesota and the Dakotas on that account. I would like to know if the minister has ever had his attention drawn to that, and if he does not think that it is worthy of serious consideration?

Mr. OLIVER. This matter has been brought to my attention frequently, as it was no doubt brought to the attention of preceding ministers and preceding governments. But it has never appeared to them, and does not appear to me, that it would be in the interest of the settlement of our country. I am aware that that law is the law of the United States, but I am not aware that it is an advantageous law, even there; so far as my judgment goes, I do not think it would be advantageous in our country. The purpose we have in view in our homestead law is not merely that people may acquire land which will mean money to them; the purpose we have in view in giving free land to homesteaders is that the land may be made productive; to secure the productiveness of the land is the reason of our homestead laws. Our experience, and I have had considerable experience, is that in order that a homestead may be made fully productive, there should be, not a single woman upon it, nor even a single man, but there should be both the man and the woman, in order that the homestead may be made fully advantageous to the country. The idea of giving homesteads to single women would tend directly against that idea; the idea of withholding homesteads from single women, as my hon. friend will see, tends strongly in favour of that idea. I do not know that I need emphasize the point that the single man on a homestead is not in a position to bring that homestead up to its full measure of productiveness.

Mr. ROCHE. Because he has not got the woman with him.

Mr. OLIVER. Exactly. Then it is for him to get the woman, and for the woman who wants to settle on land in the Northwest to get the man, rather than that she shall have land of her own, simply to hold it down. The single woman cannot bring the land into productiveness under ordinary circumstances, even as well as the single man. We have provision for granting homesteads to women under certain conditions, and the princple underlying that system is this, that where a widow has children, although not of age to enable them to take homesteads, they are yet of sufficient age to help her satisfactorily to improve a homestead, then under those conditions, the woman is allowed to have a homestead. Having once given the privilege to widows with dependent children to secure homesteads, we find that it is used as a means of acquiring land by women who are not in a position to make improvements, and who were not in the position that was contemplated when the provision was first made. Our experience is entirely against the idea of women homesteading.

Mr. LAKE. One or two questions have been asked across the floor of the House during this session in regard to the duties of Mr. Leach, inspector of homestead agencies, and whose salary I presume, is provided for in this item. I would like the minister to give us some idea of what those duties are, and why it is necessary that Mr. Leach's office should be at Brandon. Looking through the Auditor General's Report for the last two years, I find that Mr. Leach appears to have drawn an extraordinary amount of money for board and lodging, and for travelling. I have calculated that during the two financial years of 1908 and 1909, he drew for board and lodging $2,135.90, or an average of nearly $3 per day for the whole time, or nearly $3.50 per day exclusive of Sundays. His travelling expenses during that time amounted to nearly $3,000, or upwards of $5.50 a day for every travelling day. It does seem to me that that is a very large sum of money, and either that Mr. Leach's office should not be at Brandon, or that he is charging very high amounts for board and lodging and travelling expenses.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Leach's business is that of inspector of land agencies at the present time in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I think until a year ago he was inspector of all the land offices in the four western provinces. He is also employed at times in the adjustment of difficult cases that arise in regard to land, and his duties therefore require a good deal of travelling. It does not matter where the office is, because he is not supposed to be in his office any more than is necessary for the compilation of his reports, and generally to give him an opportunity to look over the field of his inspection. There are in the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan four land agencies and 32 sub-agencies. I need not enlarge on the amount of business that is done or the intricate and complicated nature of the business that is done in these agencies, and the disputes that are continually arising. But I can assure my hon. friend that Mr. Leach's duties should occupy all his time, so that he would have very little time to spend in the office at Brandon. It makes little or no difference whether he is located at Brandon or anywhere else, inasmuch as Brandon is 130 miles west of Winnipeg, and as his duties extend westward to the boundary of Saskatchewan, his travelling expenses are lightened by his residing in Brandon rather than in Winnipeg.

Mr. LAKE. Does not the minister think that an average of $3 a day for board and lodging for every day in the year, for two years, is somewhat high charge when compared with the usual prices for board and lodging in those two western provinces?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I could not answer. I am sure it cost me more than that for board and lodging when I travel. It would depend upon the number of days that Mr. Leach was absolutely away from his office whether it was a fair charge or not.

Mr. LAKE. Has the department any check on the number of days Mr. Leach was absent. It struck me as a very large charge, indeed, and I think the department should have some means of checking it.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Leach puts in a monthly account to the department, and it is checked there. I presume the account is all right, although I agree with my hon. friend that it seems a large amount. However, travelling is not inexpensive in that country, and Mr. Leach is supposed to be travelling pretty nearly all the time.

Protection of timber, forest reserves, &c., $146,250.

Mr. ROCHE. Is it the intention of the minister to take any portion out o the Riding or Duck mountain forest reserves and throw it open to settlement. I have had sent to me a petition largely signed by those living along the Canadian Northern railway, not far from the town of Roblin where it is said there are two townships with very little timber on them and which would make splendid agricultural land. It is stated that there are a number of people waiting to see if the government would throw this open for homesteading. I had a letter from the Department of the Interior stating that the government were thinking of taking out a certain amount along the Canadian Northern railway, but they were not prepared to do it this session. Has the minister any idea as to what particular part of the reserve it is intended to throw open for homesteading?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no intention, so far as I know, of taking any portion out of the reserve, except at its northwest corner where the main line of the Canadian Northern railway cuts a little into the reserve. I was discussing that with the officer in charge with a view of deciding if it would not be well to cut that out of the reserve so as to leave the Canadian Northern railway outside the limits of the reserve entirely. We have had no discussion so far as I know about taking two townships out. I would certainly advise the people who are looking for occupation of these townships not to depend on it, because the matter has not been under my consideration yet. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) said is the first I have heard of it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I think the Minister of the Interior should take into consideration the question of opening to homesteading a portion of the Turtle Mountain reserve south of my town. There is a township, or probably there are two townships there that we will never be able to do anything with as a forest reserve. The government is spending money all the time on it, but the growth of the trees has not been satisfactory, and we will never be able to make it a forest reserve. That fact can easily be ascertained from the officers of the department, and if it cannot be made into a reserve why should we not throw it open to homesteading. I think the minister understands what I mean.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner). We have no wish to hold land in reserve simply for the purpose of having it under reservation. But, of course these reserves were created on the supposition that it would be possible to improve the source of water supply by securing the growth of timber, and we are trying to do that in that locality. If we fail the reasonable thing will be to abandon the effort, but we cannot abandon it without having made a fair attempt to succeed. I will ask the hon. member to have patience to give us an opportunity to make good fair test, and if we fail we will no doubt have to take the other course.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the Department of the Interior having any considerable amount of printing done outside of Canada at the present time?

Mr. OLIVER. We have still a very large amount done in the United States, and especially the atlases that we print for circulation for immigration purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. Why should not those be printed in our own counry?

Mr. OLIVER. Since I have been minister, I have made several attempts to get these atlases printed in Canada, but so far without success. I presume the reason is because, in order that such an atlas may be turned out in good quality and style and at the lowest price, it must be done by a well equipped establishment which carries on a very large business in that particular line. There did not seem to be an establishment in Canada which was willing and able to take hold of the work in the same manner as this institution in the United States can do it. The hon. gentleman understands that when we want immigration literature we want it at a certain season of the year, and unless we get it at that season, its value is largely lost. One of these establishments we were dealing with took an order at a certain price, but they did not make delivery within anything like the time stipulated, and while it was not a dead loss, it was not an advantageous commercial transaction.

Mr. BLAIN. Was that a Canadian company?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, one of the largest in Winnipeg. However, I managed to get some of this work done in Canada, and we have recently given a trial order for some atlas work that will be used for distribution at the Brussels exhibition. We are having that done in Canada as an experiment, and if we get satisfactory results we will be glad to give further orders. In view of the necessity for getting quality, and prompt delivery, at a certain price, the printing of this atlas cannot be handled as in the case of an ordinary printing contract. Now, as to the printing which we require for use in the United States, if we printed it in Canada the United States customs charges would make it an altogether disadvantageous transaction for us. The hon. gentleman may take it for granted that for any printing we want in the United States, we will have to get it done in the United States, because of the customs duties. I am anxious to have any printing we want in England, or Canada, or on the continent of Europe done in Canada.

Mr. BLAIN. That seems to be all right.

Immigration salaries, $125,000.

Mr. LAKE. What is the reason for the large increase in this vote?

Mr. OLIVER. It is rendered necessary by the increased number of arrivals of immigrants and the necessity for increased officers to take charge of them. Our exclusion service has also considerably increased, and that necessitates further expense.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to direct the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the necessity for taking greater care of the immigrants arriving at the Union station at Toronto. The minister himself must be thoroughly conversant with the condition of affairs in that respect. Any person who passes a few hours of any day during the summer months at the Toronto Union station will see congregated there a very large number of immigrants, including some of our own people from other parts of Ontario, who are making ready to go to the west. Among the immigrants are also to be found a considerable number who intend to locate on farms in various parts of Ontario. I heard the minister state the other day that it was not the duty of the government to make provision to detain the immigrants in the cities, but rather to send them out to their destination as soon as possible, and I do not at all criticise that idea. But, I would point out to the minister that money expended on employing one or two extra immigration officers at the Union station at Toronto during the summer months to look after these immigrants, would be money well expended. These officers could direct the immigrants how to get to their destination; they could give them information as to the conditions which they would be likely to meet with, and they could communicate with the farmers who are coming into the city every day looking for these immigrants to engage their services. I believe that the government could wisely expend a sum of money for the employment of one or two capable and intelligent officials who would counsel and advise the immigrants and look after their comfort. If this were done by the government it would be in the interests of the government themselves, in the interests of the farmers of Ontario, and it would be especially in the interest of the new immigrants who are very susceptible to first impressions, and who should receive some special attention from the government when they arrive in great centres of population like the city of Toronto.

Mr. OLIVER. The suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) is well worthy of consideration, and I will take it up and discuss what can be done.

To pay expenses connected with water-power investigations and reports in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and the railway belt in British Columbia, $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this a new vote, and if so, what is its purpose?

Mr. OLIVER. The question of water-powers is attracting more attention than ever before, and it is thought well that the department, in order to administer the water-powers that come under its jurisdiction in the prairie provinces and presumably in the British Columbia railway belt, should have advance information as to the character of all these powers and their possible value for development purposes. If a person comes to the department and makes application to develop any water-power, the department has either to delay the application until it ascertains what the possibilities of that water-power are, or accept the statement made by an interested party. We want to gather information so that when applications are made we will be able to deal with them on their merits. This, of course, will cost some money, and the information may not be turned to account immediately, but I think it is in the interest of the country that the department should have that information.

At one o'clock, Committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Naval service — including the purchase, construction and maintenance of ships, the maintenance and upkeep of dockyards at Esquimalt and Halifax, and the establishment and maintenance of training schools, $3,000,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On a previous occasion I stated to the House that it was our intention, as soon as the Navy Bill passed, to ask for tenders for the ten ships with which we propose to commence our navy. It is not probable that any portion of the $3,000,000 for which we now ask will be applied this year to that purpose. Tenders will be called for, and the first thing the successful tenderer will have to do will be to put up a plant, and therefore I do not think we shall be in a position this year to spend a single dollar of this amount. I will explain to the committee how we propose to deal with this appropriation. I stated on a former occasion that we had entered into negotiations with the imperial government for the purchase of the steamship 'Niobe.' Those negotiations are practically completed and are only awaiting the assent of parliament. The amount of the purchase money agreed upon, as I have already stated, is $1,075,000. This will be taken out of this appropriation. The 'Niobe,' it is expected, will reach Canada early in the season and will form the first nucleus of our navy. We propose to appropriate for the maintenance and upkeep of this steamship the following amounts: Pay of nucleus crew and training personnel, $174,000. We estimate that the crew will be composed of 27 officers and 324 men, including sailors, mechanics, etc., a total of 351. For the victualling of the crew, $38,000; this is based upon an estimate of 30 cents per day per man. For medicine, $1,000; this is an estimate based upon the experience of the admiralty. For clothing gratuities, that is, uniforms, $10,000. For the upkeep—hull, machinery, sea stores and fuel—$140,000; this is based upon the calculation of the admiralty. For alterations in fitting the 'Niobe' as a training ship, $50,000. These appropriations total $413,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Have any officers been appointed yet?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. BLAIN. A newspaper indicates that a Mr. Macdonald of Victoria or Vancouver has been appointed to take charge of one of these vessels.

Sir WILFRED LAURIER. I may say that Capt. Macdonald, though not yet appointed, has been designated for the command of the 'Niobe.' He is a Canadian, a son of Senator Macdonald of British Columbia, and has had considerable training and experience in England.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the 'Niobe' be stationed in the Atlantic near Halifax?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It will be stationed in the gulf and will be used as a training ship. Coming to the 'Rainbow,' I may say that it has already been purchased. The appropriation for this purpose was taken last year, but we now include this ship in our navy. The 'Rainbow' is to be employed in the fisheries protection service along the Pacific coast, chiefly in Hecate straits and the waters adjacent thereto. For the maintenance and upkeep of the 'Rainbow' the appropriations are as follows: Pay of nucleus crew and training personnel, $95,000. We estimate that the crew will be composed of 16 officers and 163 men. For victualling the crew, $20,000. For medicine, $500. For clothing, $5,000. For upkeep—hull, machinery, sea stores and fuel, $110,000. To pay balance of purchase price of $250,000, $35,000. For fitting magazine cooling arrangement to prepare the 'Rainbow' for the work it has to do, $27,600.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will the 'Rainbow' cost when completed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $277,600. Then, we provide at once for 422 recruits, made up of 228 seaman class, 170 engine room ratings and 24 other ratings, such as cooks, armourers and electricians.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these 422 men of the crews for both boats or for only one?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Both. The next item of importance is the educational service. This year we cannot expend a very large amount under this heading, and we estimate the expenditure at $35,000. It is our intention at once to prepare plans for the building of a naval college. It has not been finally settled, but it is almost finally settled that the college will be in Halifax, which after consideration seems to be the most appropriate place for the college. In the meantime, the 'Niobe' will be taken advantage of to give the cadets training, and they will receive their education on the 'Niobe.' For the dockyards we have an estimated appropriation of $210,000. I understand that this is based on the calculation of the admiralty. For the purchase of reserve stores for the 'Niobe' and the 'Rainbow' we estimate an expenditure of $50,000, and for the purchase of reserve ordnance for the 'Niobe' and the 'Rainbow' an expenditure of $100,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Where are the 'Niobe' and the 'Rainbow' at the present time?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The 'Niobe' is at Portsmouth ready to sail as soon as the proceedings before parliament are received. The 'Rainbow' is also undergoing repairs in England.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these boats to be furnished with the wireless telegraphy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. Are you borrowing officers and men from the royal navy for training purposes?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. How many will be required and what rates of pay are you going to give them?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The estimate for the rates of pay on the 'Niobe' has not finally been determined, but the figures which I will now give are those we have under consideration at the present time:

Mr. LAKE. Do these men enter the Canadian service, or do they remain in the royal navy and are merely loaned to this government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The men who are borrowed from the imperial navy to organize the Canadian service will remain in the imperial navy.

Mr. LAKE. Does Captain MacDonald remain in the imperial navy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister gave an item in connection with the college.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, $35,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the educational service?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the educational service. We do not propose to spend this year anything on the capital account. It is our intention to have plans at once prepared for the building of the college and to ask for tenders. In the meantime, we expect to have 30 cadets who will be trained on the 'Niobe,' and for that we appropriate $35,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the nature of the expenditure upon dockyards?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This item is the estimated expenditure of the admiralty, the last year they had the dockyard, 1904-5.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was the expenditure in connection with the dockyards at Halifax and Esquimalt?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, both.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has any estimate been made of the expected expenditures at the two places? Could the Prime Minister give a statement of what is to be done, for example, at Halifax? As I understand it, the dockyard at present is simply used for storing certain articles belonging to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. As one of my hon. friends from British Columbia said of the dockyard at Esquimalt, it might be regarded as no more than 'a glorified junk shop.' I understand that it is to be something more than that in the future, and I would like to know just what.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that I am informed that the dockyard is in rather a dilapidated condition. It is proposed to establish there the naval college, with houses for captain and college director, barracks, drill shed and so on, and to spend something on dockyard construction, making a total of about $590,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is to put the dockyard in good condition?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, the dockyard at Halifax.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand that the dock at Halifax is owned by a private company?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The dock—yes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is any of this money to be spent to enlarge the dock so that it will take in the ships of the new navy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. None of this expenditure is for that purpose; it is for the preparation of the dockyard.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is to be spent, I understand, on what was formerly the imperial dockyard at Halifax. I may explain to my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) that the Halifax graving dock and the imperial dockyard are entirely distinct things. There is no graving dock in connection with that dockyard. The graving dock is owned by a private company which has had assistance from the imperial government, from this government and from the city of Halifax. I would like to ask the Prime Minister how it is that this very great expenditure is necessary? The imperial government as I understand, handed over that dockyard in perfectly good condition. I do not know to what extent it was dismantled if at all; I never understood that it was dismantled. I brought to the attention of the government in January last the statement of an English gentleman of experience, Sir. Wm. White, who spoke with authority on these matters. He had visited the dockyard at Esquimalt, and he gave an exceedingly bad report of it. In effect he said that it was in very poor and ineffective condition. He stated, further, that he had not visited the dockyard at Halifax, but understood, from information that had been given him, on what he conceived to be reliable authority, that it was about in the same condition. I received from the government a rather reassuring reply. True, like many replies that we get from the government with respect to such matters, it was not very definite, but, so far as it was definite, it was reassuring. I cannot understand how it is possible, if that dockyard has been kept up by a proper system and by reasonable expenditure in the meantime, that it should be in a condition necessitating the expenditure of about $600,000. If the expenditure is necessary, I am not objecting to it; but I think that before the committee votes the amount, we should have a very clear and definite explanation as to why that enormous sum of money is necessary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As to the dockyard at Esquimalt, that has been like Mahomet's coffin, which was suspended between heaven and earth—the dockyard has been in the possession neither of the imperial government nor of this government, and so it has got into a rather dilapidated condition. Of course, I have never seen it. But I have seen the dockyard at Halifax, and I must say that it is not in so bad a condition. There is a splendid property there, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows better than I do. I do not know that there is much to be done in the way of repairs, except what might be expected in a property of that kind. But the expenditure I have spoken of is made necessary because of the character of the new navy and the works and buildings in connection with it that are to be put there. For instance, in this expenditure is included the naval college. It is impossible to say how much that will cost until we have seen the plans and specification prepared by the architect, but I understand it must be a fairly expensive building.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has this expenditure of $590,000 anything to do with the naval college?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It includes the college. Let me give the items covered by this expenditure of $590,000—naval college and furnishing of the same; workshops in connection with the college; houses for captain of college and director of studies; barracks for men; battery for heavy and light gun drill (this is something new, and I do not know what expense may be involved in it); arming of battery; drill shed; alteration of admiralty house for officers of barracks; dockyard construction.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is that—dockyard construction?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That covers the repairs to the building and the wharf. All this expenditure cannot be very definitely estimated until we have the plans and specifications from the architects. But this is the nearest approximate that the officers of the department have been able to give us.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I had the pleasure of going through the dockyard at Halifax last year. The epithet applied by Sir William White to the dockyard at Esquimalt applies to some extent to the Halifax dockyard. This plant is there, but it is not modern. Of course, there are some modern tools, but, in order to carry on the work of the navy under modern conditions, fully three-quarters of the appliances and tools might as well be cast into the sea. There are no air tools, the power is not applied by electric motors, and there are none of the economies that ought to appear in a modern dockyard. Everything there is substantial, but old-fashioned, and evidently intended more for the repair of ships built of wood than for the repair of modern steel vessels. The condition of the tools and machinery, I must say, speaks well for the staff, for everything not in use was carefully oiled and in good repair. But I have not the slightest doubt that it would take a couple of hundred thousand dollars to put modern tools and appliances in that dockyard so that ship repairs might be made economically.

As to the admiralty house, that is to say, the quarters and that sort of thing, I think they are very good quarters, some slight repairs might be needed. Another thing in connection with this college, if it is to be in Halifax, is that it should be placed where the cadets of the college can be given practical employment in the yard where these tools are used, and then there would be no necessity of duplicating the tools at the college. I cannot understand why the government does not renew that dock and enlarge it. An expenditure of possibly $200,000 would lengthen that dock, and by means of concrete piers and widening the bottom, it could be made a first-class dock. It will also be necessary to provide the necessary crane equipment to handle the heavy steel and cast iron bars and ordnance, and everything of that kind to be placed on those ships. That is expensive, but if the government is going to do this work, I would strongly urge that they make it up to date, and not do it by piecemeal, and be coming down here every year for additional small items. It is better to go right on and tear out what is old, and put in what is necessary to make it an up to date shipyard. Plant of this description becomes antiquated very quickly. Labour-saving appliances and inventions are brought into use so rapidly now, that of the men who were well acquainted with these things some years ago, you could hardly find one man in a thousand now that knows how to use them. However, I am glad that the dockyard is to be fixed up, because it is a magnificent site. I do not think there is a harbour in America that is equal to the Halifax harbour. There is no situation equal to it in the world for a dockyard such as is proposed. I have also been out to Esquimalt, and I think that the opinion of it given by Mr. White is corrrect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know anything about Mr. White's opinion except that he is supposed to be an eminent authority on these matters. But I think some of my hon. friends from British Columbia who are familiar with the conditions, would be much inclined to agree with him. So far as Halifax is concerned it was a naval base up to about five years ago, when we had a very considerable squadron on that station. About ten years ago one of the largest battleships in the navy was in that squadron. Up to the time that Halifax ceased to be a naval base that dockyard was sufficient for the purpose, and it was handed over to this government, as I understand, in that condition. I still desire to express surprise that it should be necessary, if proper care has been taken, to expend so large an amount for the purpose of making it effective. There may be some conditions I do not understand. Certainly the government were not lacking in one respect, for they have put a considerable number of men at work in the dockyard from time to time, and more especially at the time of general elections, when more than 400 unnecessaray men were put on according to the sworn evidence of persons in Halifax who were interrogated with regard to that by Mr. Justice Cassells, and by the counsel attending that commission. Except when a general election was imminent the ordinary staff seemed to be reasonably adequate for the purpose. We shall have, I suppose, at another session some information as to what has been done with this money, and perhaps some fuller information as to the conditions which make the expenditure necessary. It would have been better if the Prime Minister could have found it convenient to print and distribute among us the memorandum from which he reads, as it is not easy to get a definite idea of what the expenditure contemplates merely hearing it read.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is typewritten, but I will send it over to my hon. friend. The condition of the Halifax dockyard is very much as it has been described by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie). The building and constructions are all of a very substantial character, every one who has been in the dockyard is impressed by that fact. I think also that it has been kept in very good condition of repair, and perhaps this explains the extraordinary number of men who were employed at election times. It shows that they did not lose their time, they oiled the machinery very well and kept it moving.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN Did they spend much of their time in oiling the election machinery?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At Halifax it is probably necessary to do what has been suggested by the hon. member for Simcoe in order to put the works in modern condition. When the dockyard was first established many years ago it was prepared to handle wooden ships, now we have to get in a new plant to meet modern conditions, and the establishment of a navy. That will also necessitate a new building. I think my hon. friend from Simcoe is quite right in saying that we should have the naval college in close proximity to the dockyard. We must also have barracks for the men, and houses for the officers, we must have a battery, and all the conditions implied thereby, also a drill shed. We shall probably need many new constructions, as well as repairing what already exists there. My hon. friend from Simcoe suggests that the dock itself ought to be lengthened, and I understand that the same idea has occurred to several others. But I am informed that the officers of the admiralty, who are expert in matters of that kind, think it cannot be lengthened, they have made an examination, and found it impossible to lengthen the dock.

Mr. RHODES. I understand that the governfent are to borrow officers from the imperial navy. What is the plan proposed to substitute them for those men who have been in the Canadian service, and how is the exchange to be effected, and for what period?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The officers would be borrowed for three years, and a skeleton crew will be brought over for five years. This will be the nucleus upon which we propose to build our own navy.

Mr. RHODES. Is it the intention to employ some Canadian sailors at once to work with the nucleus of the British sailors?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. How many?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We propose to begin at once to train 400 recruits.

Mr RHODES. How many imperial officers will remain on board, and how many Canadian officers will go on board at once?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have no Canadian officers at the present time. All the officers on this boat must be brought over from England But we propose to train our own men as fast as we can.

Mr. RHODES. The intention is to man the ships with imperial officers until such time as you can educate Canadian officers?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear; that is it.

Mr. RHODES. Are these to be educated in the Canadian college?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the intention.

Mr. LAKE. The Prime Minister stated that the intention was to place the Halifax dockyard in a modern condition. Has he an estimate of the whole expenditure required for that, because obviously the appropriation taken this year will not be sufficient for the whole work.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is intended, as I understand it, to rejuvenate the dockyard at Halifax, but, of course, it is not possible to do it in one year, and it must be done gradually.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the amount for that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The estimated expenditure under all these headings will come to nearly $600,000.

Mr. RHODES. How are the 400 recruits which are to be taken on at once, to be selected?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. By recruiting officers and advertisement, I presume.

Mr. LAKE. Is it the intention to make Esquimalt the naval base for the Pacific squadron, and if not, where will the Pacific naval base be?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Esquimalt is intended to be the naval base. We have not yet had a full transfer of Esquimalt, but as soon as we have, it is proposed to do there exactly what we are doing in Halifax, barring, of course, the naval college. We will not have a naval college on the Pacific, but everything else will be the same as at Halifax.

Mr. DANIEL. This item speaks of the establishment and maintenance of naval schools; what other schools are contemplated besides the naval college?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It should be school; there will only be one school.

Mr. RHODES. What is the proposed rate of pay for the men in the Canadian service as compared with the pay of the men in the imperial service?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The following table shows the pay in the British and the American services, and the proposed pay in the Canadian service. Of course, it must be understood that those rates are not definitely fixed yet.

In additian to above, men in United States navy receive $6.36 a month extra on first re-enlistment, and $4.36 a month extra on each subsequent re-enlistment. It is proposed to grant men in the naval service of Canada an allowance of $1.50 per month for each re-enlistment if the term of service is 5 years, or proportionate rates if enlisted for a longer period.

Mr. RHODES. At what rate is it proposed to pay the officers from the imperial service for the time they serve in the Canadian service?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The same as the Canadian, the rate of pay I have just stated.

Mr. DANIEL. Can the minister give us the minimum ages in the British and Canadian services, for the admission of midshipmen?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The proposed age in the Canadian service is from 14 to 16 years. I understand that in the imperial service it is from 12½ to 13 years.

Mr. LAKE. Will members of skeleton crews from the imperial service be paid at the Canadian rates?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What expectation has the government with respect to recruiting? The Minister of Militia stated some time ago that in the permanent force not more than 20 per cent are Canadians born. I do not know how the rates of pay compare or what greater attractions the naval force presents, but assuming that they are about the same there might be the same difficulty in securing Canadian recruits.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that we have any expectation upon this. It is a matter which must be governed by experience. We may have some difficulty on account of the smaller field to draw from as compared with Great Britain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One has to take into consideration the fact that there are perhaps greater opportunities in a country in process of development for an active and enterprising man, and therefore men who in Great Britain would enter the navy would here be diverted into some other form of activity and occupation. However, as the minister says, we will have to learn that by experience. Is any, and if so what portion of the $3,000,000 now proposed to be expended in the construction of ships?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I stated before my hon. friend came in that we did not expect to be called upon to spend a dollar of this. I stated it was our intention as soon as the Bill received the sanction of His Excellency to ask for tenders. We have no plant at present which is prepared to go into construction of ships. It may be some months before we are in a position to accept a tender, and if a tender is accepted the first thing the tenderer will have to do will be to put up a plant. It is not expected, therefore, that within the present fiscal year we will be called on to pay anything out of this appropriation for construction.

Mr. DANIEL. It appears that at the last conference of representatives of this government and the admiralty, the question of the flag was raised. What flag is this navy to fly?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That question has not yet been considered or determined. The suggestion has been made to us, and no opposition has been made to it, that we should fly the white ensign with the Canadian coat of arms on the fly. As to the uniform of the officers, it has been suggested that we should adopt the uniform of the imperial navy, simply substituting the maple leaf for the laurel leaf on the buttons.

Mr. LAKE. When is it expected the 'Niobe' will arrive at Halifax?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. About the month of July.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do I understand that $50,000 is to be expended on the 'Niobe' and $27,600 on the 'Rainbow.' That of course is speaking approximately. Where are these repairs to be effected?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In the admiralty yard in Great Britain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where are these two ships to be stationed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The 'Niobe' will be stationed in the gulf of St. Lawrence, and the 'Rainbow' in the northern waters of British Columbia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where will their headquarters be?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At Halifax and Esquimalt.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. On the Great Lakes there are between three and four thousand sailors, seamen, artificers and officers possibly as well disciplined and intelligent a class of sailors as can be found in the whole world. They are well trained, pilots and expert machinists, most of them understanding machinery of all kinds such as they would encounter on a warship with the possible exception of the guns. Will any steps be taken to provide training for these men? Will a naval militia be attached to the navy so that these men may spend their winters at sea so that they can learn the only other accomplishments they require, gunnery and ocean seamanship such as taking astronomical observations? They are all men of fine physique. They are employed under modern mechanical conditions, and among them you could get stokers, engineers, electrical men and all kinds of men who would be required by this government to superintend the navy in time of war. All you would require to do would be to teach them gunnery.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It seems to me a very good suggestion. If we could take some of those voters down and put them on the ships, I can see no objection. They are good seamen and I am told a very fine population.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think some arrangement might be made whereby they would get three months' training a year, and arrangements could be made that their expenses to Halifax and back in the spring should be paid.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand there is such a naval reserve in England and an officer on the lakes, who could pass an examination, should be entitled to fly a special flag, as in the English merchant marine.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Fisheries protection service, $281,500.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is nothing new in this appropriation; it is the same as we have had year after year; but I would like to amend this item by adding 'including cost of vessels engaged in fisheries inspection for the Department of Marine and Fisheries.' Hereafter the protection service will be under the Naval Department, while the inspection service will remain under the Marine Department.

Mr. SPROULE. How will you apportion the expense between the two departments?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At present we have several ships which are doing both inspection and protection service. We have certain vessels policing our waters and preserving them from poachers; these are the protection service. Then we have a certain number of smaller boats, with very small crews, employed for the inspection of the fisheries, distributing provisions, and so on, and reporting to headquarters. These will remain in the Marine Department, while the others will go to the Naval Department. It is intended that in the course of time the vessels engaged in the fisheries protection service shall be replaced by vessels of our navy, which will be of a very much superior character.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I understand that those in the protection service will be charged to the Naval Branch, and those in the inspection service will be charged to the Marine branch?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the men in the protection service be under the naval discipline and uniformed like the men of the fleet?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the intention in the course of time, but not at present. I think I can safely say that the intention is to replace all the ships that we have at present in the protection service with ships of the Canadian navy; but so long as our present ships are in service, it is not intended to change them from their present condition.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. When the navy is in existence, I understand that the protection service at present given by the Marine and Fisheries Department will virtually disappear, and the line of cleavage will be between what may be called the customs revenue or protective service and the naval service. I should think that the local service might be better undertaken by the Customs Department, as is done in the United States with their revenue cutters, so that the other department would be clear and promotions would go direct.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Owing to our geographical position, I do not think that our coasts would be sufficiently protected by revenue cutters such as they have in the United States. It has been found that a particular class of men have to be trained for our protection service, and I think it is better managed as it is than it would be in the way suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. My idea is that the men who are at present in the service should have a chance to be absorbed into the navy. These ships are doing the same kind of work that naval vessels are doing in Great Britain and other countries, and if you leave them in a separate category, you will give cause for a certain amount of jealousy and disagreement, whereas if you have just the one service, with a chance for the officres to gain naval promotion, I think it would work more smoothly than it will if you have two departments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend confounds the protection service with the inspection service. The inspection service is done largely in our inland waters, for which vessels of the protection service would not be suited.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. No, I mean the protection service. The crews, I understand, will be absorbed into the navy?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I should imagine so.

To provide for the construction of a steamer for surveying the Gulf and River St. Lawrence to replace 'La Canadienne,' $75,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The steamer is under contract, being built in England. It is ready now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What has become of 'La Canadienne'?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. 'La Canadienne' is rather a veteran, and will have to be placed under another service—not absolutely put out of commission; but she is not suitable for this service.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the new boat going to cost?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $175,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did the construction begin?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. About a year ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any difficulty about having a steamer of that size built in Canada?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, I do not know. It was built by tender, and the lowest tenderer got the contract.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand there was very little difference between the tenders.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon friend is right. There was not much difference. The tender of Swan and Hunter was $177,653 delivered at Sorel, and that of the Collingwood Ship Building Company was $181,462.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is a very small difference, and last year the Finance Minister said that if there was only a difference of 5 per cent or 10 per cent the government would not hesitate to give the preference to a Canadian shipbuilding concern over a British shipbuilding concern. The difference is so very small in this case that I think the government should have hesitated before they gave the contract to the English firm, especially bearing in mind that the customs department would have received considerable benefit from the material that went into the building of the ship and that the railway companies and Canadian workmen would also have received benefit. I do not like to criticise the department in the absence of the regular minister, but I hope that in another case of this kind the Prime Minister will bear in mind what I have said and recall the promise made last year by the Finance Minister that if there was only a difference of 5 or 10 per cent the Canadian firm would have the benefit.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I agree altogether with my hon. friend. I am surprised that the Collingwood Company did not get the contract when the difference was so small. But knowing the mind of the minister, there must have been some other reason. Not only he but the cabinet as a whole would have been disposed to give it to the Canadian firm. I am delighted to find that there is such a small discrepancy between Canadian building and British building. It is a hopeful sign and I will be only too glad to remember the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Hydrographic surveys, including survey of Hudson bay, $320,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you a vessel now making a hydrographic survey in the Hudson bay?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, we have not. We have a vessel doing hydrographic survey work in the gulf. But we intend to send shore parties to the Hudson bay this year to commence a survey of the bay. We have no vessel there yet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that the explanation of the increase?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the Prime Minister mean by saying he will send two shore parties to the Hudson bay if they have no boat?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will have to charter a vessel to send them up to Hudson bay, to both the Nelson river and the Churchill river. Then in small boats they will carry out the survey of the bay 20 miles from the shore, the object being to ascertain exactly what are the conditions for navigating purposes on both the Nelson and Churchill rivers.

Tidal service, $42,500.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is being done?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend knows that the study of currents is a work that never ceases. We have at the present time a steamer in the Gulf of St. Lawrence which is stationed there during all the seasons taking surveys at all times of the day. We are doing some similar work on the coast of British Columbia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose these observations are tabulated and published.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, published every year.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is any hydrographic survey work being carried on in Hudson bay. They are talking about building railways up there and establishing grain elevators and grain routes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the service which we commenced this year. We have taken an appropriation for this purpose. I repeat that we intend to send two shore parties to Hudson bay where, it is proposed, they will apply themselves to surveying 20 miles from the shore, at Nelson and Churchill. The object is to ascertain, in view of the early construction of the railway to Hudson bay which is the better harbour. We have been under the impression that the only good harbour in Hudson bay was Churchill, but an impression has grown up recently that in certain respects Nelson harbour would be the better one. The object in sending the two parties this year is to secure as accurate information as we can collect to enable us to determine that very point. It will only be a preliminary step, for we will have to survey the bay as accurately as the St. Lawrence and the great lakes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand that a great deal of money is spent every year on these surveys, and that they are simply duplicating the work done by the British admiralty years ago. I understand that the admiralty charts are very complete.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The admiralty charts are certainly very complete and the chart prepared by Admiral Bayfield is as good a piece of work as has been done in any part of the world. But in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the river St. Lawrence there are displacements all the time and the hydrographic survey cannot stop. It must always go on because every year there are displacements which have to be recorded for the benefit of navigation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What kind of displacements?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Boulders in the river St. Lawrence especially. I understand that the currents at the bottom of the river are different from those at the bottom of the ocean and all the time you have to keep a detailed survey going on. New maps are published every year also.

To provide for the building and maintenance of wireless stations, $150,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are these stations?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will give the list. First, there is the maintenance of the east coast station as follows: Father Point, $3,500; Clarke City, $3,500; Fame Point, $3,500; Heath Point, $3,500; Point Rich, $3,500; Cape Ray, $3,500; Harrington, $3,500; Point d'Amour, $3,500; Belle Isle, $3,500; Cape Race, $3,500; Cape Sable, $3,500; St. John, $3,500; Cape Bear, $2,500. On the west coast, maintenance is provided for Point Grey, Cape Lazo, Pachena, Estevan, Triangle Island, Deluge Point and Prince Rupert. In addition, there is the construction of one station proposed in British Columbia. We propose also to duplicate the equipment at Point Grey, Victoria, Pachena, Estevan and Cape Lazo. The construction of stations in British Columbia will cost $20,030 and unforeseen expenses, $8,936.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not notice that Halifax and Sydney are included. Are there stations at these points?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Has the department taken into consideration the establishing of wireless stations on the Great Lakes? The United States Steel Trust have decided to install the wireless on their vessels, and Canadian owners are considering the question. In order to have the operation successful, there should be at least three stations on the Huron-Superior division.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is a proposition before us to grant provision for the erection of four stations.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is the government going to handle the stations themselves the same as the Marconi in the east?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is under consideration.

Department of the Naval Service—
Deputy minister..	$ 5,000
First division, subdivision B, 2 at $2,100..	4,200
Second division, subdivision A, 3 at $1,600..	4,800
Second division, subdivision B, 1 at $1,300, 8 at $800..	7,700
Third division, subdivision A, 2 at $900..	1,800
Third division, subdivision B, 2 at $550, 7 at $500..	4,600
Messengers, 1 at $550, 2 at $500..	1,550
Contingencies..	20,000
	$49,650

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps it would be satisfactory if I give the committee a statement of the proposed organization of this new department. There will be the deputy minister, who will have in his office, three clerks, one each in 2B, 3A and 3B. The accountant will be an officer in class 1B, and he will have also one in 2A, one in 2B and two in 3B. The director of stores, who will be in class 1B will have three officers, one each in 2A, 2B and 3B. In the records and correspondence office, there will be five officers, of whom one will be in 2A, two in 2B and two in 3B. The director of gunnery will have an officer in 2B with one assistant in 3B. In the office of the chief of staff, will be one officer in 2B and one in 3B. The same will be the case with the office of the naval engineer—one in 2B and one in 3B. The office of director of the naval service will have one officer in 2B and one in 3A. There will be two messengers. This makes a total of 28.

Mr. JAMESON. Who is to be the new deputy minister?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a point that has not been settled yet.

Mr. SPROULE. The estimate here shows the number to be employed. Are more to be employed than are shown here?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is all.

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to government steamers and ice-breakers, $710,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is an increase in this vote of $75,000, which is almost entirely accounted for by the 'Earl Grey,' which did not figure largely in last year's estimates. For wages, provisions and so forth on the 'Earl Grey' we require $86,683. The other ships are practically about the same as last year.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the 'Earl Grey' a new steamer?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. She is the new ice-breaking steamer between Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. DANIEL. It is singular that a new steamer should require so many repairs. Was she damaged?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There are no repairs to the 'Earl Grey' among these items.

Rewards for saving life, including life-saving stations, $40,000.

Mr. DANIEL. With regard to this item, the minister may recall the facts of the case that took place in connection with the wreck of the steamer 'Hestia.' He will remember that the seamen were on board that steamer from Sunday night, or about 1 o'clock Monday morning, until the afternoon of Tuesday, without any one coming near them to rescue them from that wreck. There is a life-saving station not far away, and a lighthouse only about three or four miles distant. It will also be remembered that this steamer sent off continuously rockets and bombs, and also lighted a large bonfire on the deck of the ship on Monday night. It was an absolutely clear night, all shore lights were visible, and that light should have been seen at a very long distance. But apparently no notice was taken of it by the lighthouse keeper at Gannet Rock, and as a matter of fact, the wrecked seamen were not relieved until the afternoon of Tuesday. I think the minister will also remember that when the court of inquiry took place on that wreck, the chairman, Captain Lugard, said that it was the intention of the government to make a further inquiry into all the circumstances of the case, because the court refused to go into anything that occurred after the stranding of the ship. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, also, when I brought this matter up early in the session, stated that he would hold a further inquiry into the matter. If any other inquiry has been held it has certainly not been a public one. I have kept a lookout for such an inquiry, and I have seen nothing of the kind, and no reference to it anywhere. I think it was due to the department, it was due to the shipping interests, that a further and more searching inquiry should have been made into the circumstances attending that wreck, and why these wrecked persons were left so long almost within sight of help, without any assistance being rendered them. I think some explanation is due to parliament and to the public from the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

The lighthouse and life-saving service is most important, and it is growing in importance all the time as the commercial marine increases in numbers, and tonnage. One peculiar circumstance was stated with regard to the absence of the life-saving crew coming to that wreck earlier, and it was that the life-boat could not be manned, because the crew refused to go in her owing to the fact that a considerable amount of back pay had been withheld from them. The correspondence brought down in answer to my motion demonstrates that, and it is a serious condition of affairs. The allegation that the light-keeper at Gannet Rock took no notice of these wreck signals, and bon-fires, is another thing we are entitled to have information about. I would suggest to the minister that in the appointment of lighthouse attendants, especially on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, only men should be appointed who have been formerly at sea, who know the anxiety which is caused to navigators approaching land in hazy weather, and who know how important it is that everything in connection with the lighthouse and signals and appliances should be in proper order. I would therefore urge that only men be appointed who have experience as mariners, and who have been accustomed to keeping watch at sea. I hope the hon. minister will give us information as to the condition of that life-saving station, and as to the reason why the further inquiry promised by Mr. Brodeur and by the chairman of the commission which investigated the wreck of the 'Hestia,' was not had.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The wreck of the 'Hestia,' was discussed at very great length, and very fully in the earlier days of the session, and the minister explained the facts and the result of the investigation which appears on 'Hansard.' I am advised that the minister came to the conclusion that a further investigation would be of no service.

Mr. DANIEL He promised it from his place in the House.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The minister was later on advised that a further formal inquiry would not be productive of any good results. The department has been very active since that time, and a new and modern life-saving station is nearing completion on Wood island in the neighbourhood where the wreck occurred. A very competent man has been brought out from England to take charge of the life-saving stations on the Bay of Fundy in order that a better service may be rendered in the future, and the steamer 'Stanley,' has been placed in service on the Bay of Fundy to take care of the life-buoys, and beacons, and to keep them in proper order. This is all a decided improvement over former arrangements, and I suppose it is largely due to the unfortunate wreck of the 'Hestia.' The department has since that time done everything in its power to meet the requirements of the situation. A modern gasoline life-saving boat manned with a good crew and supervised by a competent man brought out from England for that purpose, will be placed on the station. I agree with my hon. friend as to the advisability of employing seafaring men in the lighthouses. I understand that on the Atlantic coast fishermen and ex-sailors are generally if not always selected for positions of that kind.

Mr. DANIEL. Not always.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN My experience is that they are about the only class of men who will take such positions in these isolated stations. The great difficulty is to get good men, and my own opinion is that the salaries of the light-keepers are very low indeed and probably do not command the salaries of the light-keepers are very estly hope that the policy of the department in initiating a system of classification of lighthouses, and increasing the pay of the lighthouse keepers will be extended.

Mr. DANIEL. The statement of the minister as to the improvements that have been made since the wreck of the 'Hestia,' are reassuring, and satisfactory, but at the same time the further investigation promised by the minister, and by Captain Lugard during the inquiry, has not been held. We have no information as to whether the lighthouse keeper at Gannet Rock did his duty on the night of the wreck. There have been statements made in the press as to his seeing this vessel coming in too near and giving no warning signals. I do not know whether that is correct or not, but it is due to the department as well as to the shipping interests, and to the passengers who travel on these ships that a real investigation should have been held. If the lighthouse keeper was not at fault he certainly should be freed from blame. The promise of the minister that a rigid inquiry would be held has not been carried out.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The investigation showed that the light was burning.

Mr. DANIEL. It is not denied that the Gannet Rock light was burning.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The investigation made by the commissioners was considered to be complete, and I understand the minister promised further inquiry by himself, but he concluded afterwards that nothing further could be ascertained.

Mr. DANIEL. The investigation stopped short at the moment of the stranding of the vessel. The delay in taking these men off the ship occurred after the stranding, and Captain Lugard and his associate commissioners would not allow evidence as to that.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The minister ascertained afterwards that the life-saving station was not in the best place, and I presume that it is in consequence, that he is building a better station in a more suitable location.

Mr. DANIEL. Can the keeper of the Gannet Rock light now signal to the main land for assistance?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They are putting a telephone connection between the Gannet Rock light and the new life-saving station.

Mr. DANIEL. Will that give continuous communication with the mainland and St. John?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes; it will connect with an extension and give them communication to St. John.

Mr. MARSHALL. Has there been anything done to improve the condition of the harbour at Port Stanley? The minister will remember that a car ferry which was trying to make the port last winter went to the bottom with 24 hands on board. I understand that the residents of Port Stanley have been asking that some protection be given in the way of a fog signal.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The people of Port Stanley have been asking that some dredging be done in order to make the harbour more accessible, and that is a question for the Department of Public Works. The question of putting up lights would be considered afterwards by the Department of Marine.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose the minister will communicate with the Minister of Public Works in respect to the Port Stanley harbour?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I will be pleased to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to what my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) has said, and my reply thereto.

Schools of navigation, $8,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are these schools?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Halifax, Lunenburg, Yarmouth, St. John, Canso, North Sydney, Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, Collingwood, Midland, Vancouver, Victoria.

Mr. SPROULE. What do they teach in these schools?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Men conversant with navigation teach the rudiments of the science to all seafaring men who apply for instruction. I know that in Victoria the lecturer is the agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and he is a very competent man.

Mr. SINCLAIR. One of these schools was carried on in Canso for a year or two, and did very good work. Fishermen and sailors, attended the school in winter at night and received instruction on questions of navigation. The instruments are found very useful, and when the men get their training they go to Halifax or another examining point and get their certificates. It seems that the instructor left the place without giving any warning to the school board, the instruments were withdrawn by the department and the school discontinued for a year. I hope the minister will try to have it revived next year.

Mr. JAMESON. For the information of the minister I may say there is need for a school of this sort at Digby. During the winter there are many sailors there who desire to improve themselves in their profession, but for lack of opportunity near at home are unable to do so. The expense of such a school does not seem to be great, and I think it would be a good plan for the minister to extend the system if the department has found it has resulted satisfactorily. I trust the minister will see his way clear to establish such a school at Digby.

Salaries and expenses of cattle inspection, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Should this not come under some other department such as quarantine or agriculture?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is for the inspection of the fittings of ships for the carrying of cattle, to see that they are properly stalled, and that there are the proper number of men on board to take care of them. It has always been under this department.

To continue subsidy for wrecking plant at Quebec, maritime provinces and British Columbia, $30,000.

Mr. BURRELL. I wish to draw attention to the case of a man named T. H. McNeil who has been lighthouse keeper at Fiddle Reef. He understands that there was something like a promise made to him by Mr. Gaudin, inspector of Marine and Fisheries, that he should have charge of the Trial island lighthouse when it was completed, and I understand that another man who applied for and obtained the appointment was physically incapable of rendering assistance to those who were carried away by the dangerous currents near this point. Mr. McNeil gets $35 a month. He has many tstimonials, and I would ask if some recognition of a financial character could not be given him in the shape of either an increase in salary or a promotion. I shall read two letters as samples of the testimonials he has received:

Agency of Department of Marine and Fisheries,
Victoria, B.C., March 9, 1907.

Sir,—I am requested by the deputy minister to convey to you the thanks of the department for your services in extricating the SS. 'Montara' from her dangerous position amongst the reefs and dangers in the vicinity of your station.

The attention of the minister will be called to your valuable services in this connection.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
JAS. GAUDIN,
Agent.

Mr. D. H. McNeill,
Fiddle Reef Lighthouse,
Care of P. O. Victoria, B.C.

Victoria, B.C., October 16, 1909.

Mr. D. H. McNeill,
Keeper of Light,
Fiddle Reef, Oak Bay.

Dear Sir,—I have to convey to you the united thanks both of myself and sister for your much valued service rendered off Trial island, when we were swept out in the Straits of Juan de Fuca, by a strong flood tide and westerly wind. We were unable to get back in our small skiff and you were the only person who rowed out and showed yourself able to get us back.

I consider your conduct in this case deserves consideration from the Marine Department of Lighthouses, and I think you should be promoted to a better station.

We thoroughly appreciate your much valued assistance rendered on August 29 last.

With best wishes,
Yours very truly,
M. BUCKLEY,
735 View St., Victoria, B.C.

There are many other leters and testimonials of this kind, and I trust the minister will be able to give some assurance that this man's merits will receive some recognition.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am quite familiar with the circumstances of this case, I quite agree with what the hon. member says of Mr. McNeil, except the statement that he was promised the Trial island light. That is incorrect.

Mr. BURRELL. I am not quoting that as official.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I quite agree as to the inadequacy of the salary of $37.50 a month. It must be remembered, however, that this lighthouse is probably a quarter of a mile from Oak Bay hotel, in front of his house. Mr. McNeil rows out to it and puts up a light, and I believe he has rendered good service to a number of inexperienced men and women who foolishly went out into these waters trying to catch salmon. I know Mr. McNeil very well. I quite sympathize with the views expressed by my hon. friend, and I will say a good word for Mr. McNeil to the department.

To provide for the maintenance of vessels employed in patrolling the waters in the northern portion of Canada, also for establishing and maintaining police and customs ports on the mainland or islands, as may be deemed necessary from time to time, $59,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the Bernier expedition?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is for the 'Arctic.'

Mr. DANIEL. Is it all for the 'Arctic'? Because it says 'vessels.'

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is all for the 'Arctic'; but it might be necessary, I am told, to send another steamer to bring the 'Arctic' back. This is approximately the amount required for the outfitting of a steamer for a two-years cruise, and paying the salaries for one year. The items are: Salaries, $14,000; fuel, $5,000; repairs, $9,000; supplies and sundries, $32,000. The total amount is the same as last year.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the total outlay in connection with the expedition?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, this covers everything for a two-years cruise.

Mr. SPROULE. What authority has Captain Bernier to establish police stations and customs ports there?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. An officer of the Customs Department goes on the 'Arctic' with Captain Bernier, who has full authority to collect and does collect customs dues from American and other foreign whalers in our northern waters. I do not suppose that he will establish any permanent customs ports, but for the time being he will collect customs dues wherever he finds foreign whalers in our waters. I am bound to say that the voyage of the 'Arctic' to the northern waters for the purpose of planting our flag and exercising our authority has been fully justified.

River St. Lawrence ship channel, $800,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This vote is the same as last year. The details are as follows:

This vote is to make provision for the operation of the ship channel dredging fleet, for the construction of additional plant, for the maintenance and improvement of the Sorel shipyard, as well as general additions to the machinery and plant, all according to the subjoined detailed estimate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Last session the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Herron) brought up the question of a dredge which had been built at Sorel at immense cost to the Dominion, and when launched it was found would not hold water, and a false bottom had to be built in it. We would like to have some information in regard to that.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that the dredge was built there and was found to be too short for the work, and was lengthened by 20 feet.

Mr. DANIEL. Did she turn turtle after she was launched?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, that is a fiction.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Did she stay above water?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What was the object of the false bottom?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is not any false bottom; there never was any.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am referring to a statement made by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Herron) that a dredge was built at the expense of Canada at Sorel, and that when she was launched she was not able to float, without anchor, coal or anything else, and that she was put in the dock again and had a false bottom put in. That is the information I am asking for.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The minister is authorized to say that it is a fiction absolutely. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Herron) was incorrectly advised. There was no such dredge, and there is no truth whatever in the case.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask who authorizes the minister to make that statement?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The deputy minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is he correctly informed?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think so.

Purchase of yard property at Sorel, $30,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What has been done with this property at Sorel. Are the government operating it?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The government has had this property under lease. We took a vote last year to buy it, but we did not do so, and we are taking a vote again.

Mr. CAMPBELL. To buy it outright?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many yards of frontage has the property?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is about 35 acres in extent.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I asked for the water frontage.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am told the total frontage is about one-eighth of a mile.

To provide for the completion and construction of a dredging plant for the River St. Lawrence from Montreal to Father Point, $250,000.

Mr. SPROULE. You have a specific item for dredges that you are building, and now you seem to have another item for dredging.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is proposed to deepen the channel from Montreal to the sea to 35 feet, the present depth being 30 feet, and it was necessary to provide a plant to dredge deeper than the present plant.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are these dredges to be built?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. At Sorel.

Mr. SPROULE. All at Sorel?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Amount required for permanent piers in Lake St. Peter and other places in the ship channel, River St. Lawrence, $50,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is a decrease here. Most of the work is done.

Salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $400,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is an increase here of $30,000. It is simply for the purpose of covering the salaries of new lighthouse keepers and of giving slight increases to the present lighthouse keepers.

Mr. DANIEL. Are there more lighthouse keepers or are the salaries of the present lighthouse keepers being increased merely?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There are more lighthouse keepers and slight increases in the salaries.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the average salary for a lighthouse keeper employed all the year round?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is a wide scale of difference in the salaries of lighthouse keepers. They run from $60 a year to $1,500 a year.

Mr. DANIEL. I mean those in exposed positions.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Well, $1,500 a year. I think in that case the lighthouse keeper has to pay the salary of an assistant. The lighthouses are divided into classes, there being some 19 different classes. From one to six, they are combined light and fog alarm stations, and in these cases the maximum salary runs from $640 to $1,200. Then there is another class of lighthouses where there is no fog alarm, and they are subdivided again into minor classes, the salaries running from $300 to $530 per year. Then there are minor stations where the exclusive services of a keeper are not required and where the salaries run from $65 to $240 per year.

Mr. DANIEL. Do they get any supplies in addition to their salaries?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They get no personal supplies, but they get coal and oil and lighthouse supplies.

Mr. JAMESON. Will there be a general increase in the salaries throughout the entire service? And what will the percentage be based on, the old salaries?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand that it was a readjustment and reclassification of the lights, and that necessitates an increase of salaries. The average increase was about 10 per cent. That increase was made a year or two ago.

Mr. JAMESON. I brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), last year, and I would like to say to the acting minister (Mr. Templeman) now that I think the increase given to the light-keepers was not in proportion to the advance in the cost of living The duties of the light-keepers are very important; upon their faithful attention to these duties the lives and property of many people depends. Many of these light-keepers are practically exiled, and the post is one which, perhaps, is not very eagerly sought. In many cases, their duties are of such a nature that it is impossible for them to engage in any other calling. The salaries paid are too meagre altogether. I can speak definitely concerning those in my own county; I know that the light-keepers and others in connection with the service there are underpaid. They render excellent service, and, I believe, are faithful in the performance of the duties entrusted to them. I hope the minister will endeavour to do justice to these faithful public servants.

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation, including apparatus, submarine signals, and providing suitable boats for carrying on construction works; also for the improvement of the West Coast Trail, British Columbia, $1,000,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Does this include the new occulting buoys, the automatic whistling buoys?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, all the lighthouses, fog alarms, and machinery appertaining thereto.

Mr. DANIEL. The evidence brought down relating to the Old Proprietor buoy showed that it was at fault, and that thereby the wreck was caused. It appeared that this buoy had not been visited for fifteen months after it was placed in position. When it was visited, of course, everything was wrong—the light was out, and the whistle was not operative. I understand that it should not have been left unvisited, certainly, for longer than twelve months. Perhaps the minister might explain what the regulations are with regard to the visiting of these buoys, and who sees that they are attended to. For this seems an extremely important thing. If buoys are left unvisited for three months longer than they ought to be, somebody is responsible.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As I explained a moment ago, the steamer 'Stanley,' having been placed in the Bay of Fundy to attend to the lights on those coasts alone, she will have ample time to visit them all very frequently. As a matter of fact, they have to report to the department once a month now with respect to the condition of every light in the Bay of Fundy, and along the coast. Of course, lighthouses need not be visited so often as beacons and buoys that have no personal attendants, but they ought to be visited by the steamer practically once a month.

Mr. DANIEL. I am glad to hear the minister's statement, for the evidence in the case of which I have spoken shows that, although that light had been out, and the buoy defective for nine or ten months, the fact was never reported to Ottawa until after the wreck took place. I am glad the department is waking up to the necessity of looking a little more carefully after these things than it has done in the past.

Mr. JAMESON. The minister has placed in the estimates this year $1,000,000 for lighthouses and aids to navigation. This is an increase of $200,000 over the appropriation for last year. I have no criticism to offer of the increased expenditure in this branch, for I think this a very important service. But I hold also that the aids to navigation should be properly distributed. Some time ago, I brought to the attention of the department the need for a 'Fairway' whistling buoy at Grand Passage, Brier island. The Lighthouse Board have said that they did not consider there was any need for a buoy at that particular place for the safety of navigation. That is not the opinion of mariners who navigate those waters. That is not the opinion held by Mr. E. C. Bowers, a former member of this hon. House, a lifelong resident of Brier island, and a man largely interested in shipping at that port. I am going to add that for the lack of this urgently needed aid to navigation, there may be a serious marine casuality at that place, and I wish to be on record as having stated this danger. I understand an application was made for this aid to navigation some years ago, but was not granted. The real trouble, I think, is that the Lighthouse Board does not fully understand the situation, because if they did, I do not believe they would decline to grant this 'Fairway' buoy. There are a great many of these automatic buoys lying about the marine agency at Halifax, when they should be in use, and this is one of the cases where they are needed. The harbour at Westport is a very important harbour, and is much in use by a large number of vessels, but it is almost impossible in a fog for a vessel to safely make that port lacking this 'Fairway' buoy. I am going to make a request now to the hon. the minister. If he will, during the coming summer, send an officer of the board to visit Westport and make a personal examination of the locality, I will be glad to accompany him myself, and if that is not possible, I will place him in the hands of people who know the situation thoroughly, and I am convinced that if he does make an inspection, he will report that there is a need for this whistling buoy.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand my hon. friend is speaking about Westport. The department built a lighthouse there last year. I have suggested to the deputy minister that the request of my hon. friend is a very modest one, and if he is content with a buoy, I promise that we will send an officer of the department to make an inspection, and if he finds it is necessary, I promise him that the buoy will be placed there.

To provide for breaking ice in Thunder bay and Lake Superior, and other points deemed advisable for the good of navigation, $40,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Has this all been used up at Thunder bay?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. A part of this money was spent last year. The department has a contract with the Canadian Lake Towing Company for breaking the ice in Port Arthur and Fort William. The contract price is $30,000 a year, and was made for three years, to expire in 1911. Other contracts were made for breaking the ice in Parry Sound, Depot Harbour, Midland and Collingwood. In these cases the water is kept open by tug boats.

Signal service, $9,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. These are signal stations for signalling passenger vessels, largely in connection with the lighthouses. There are five stations: Quebec, St. John, Brier island, Partridge island and Pointe Bleue.

Mr. DANIEL. How do these stations, Brier island, for instance, signal? By means of flags, or in what way?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They report by wire and by telephone.

Mr. DANIEL. I saw a complaint some time ago that a steamer belonging to the Canadian Pacific railway line tried to communicate, and hoisted her number for the Brier island man to signal her, and he did not do it. I know that the steamer reported the remissness afterwards.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department has no complaint from the Canadian Pacific railway about that, and they would be apt to report any mistake of that kind.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not suppose the Canadian Pacific railway made any complaint to the government, but I saw the complaint in the press, and it showed that the vessel endeavoured to get a signal from the Brier island man, and he did not signal her.

Mr. JAMESON. I happen to know the keeper of the signal station at Brier island, and he is a most trustworthy man. I think there must be some mistake, and that my hon. friend perhaps has read a report in a newspaper that is not correct. I know that mariners have the utmost confidence in the fidelity of the signal keeper at that port. I notice that the minister is only paying him a salary of $250. That salary is altogether too small for the duties this man has to perform. He is stationed on a bleak hillside, away from all houses and human society, and he has to live in quarters which are not the most cheerful. I am told by people living at Westport who know the situation, and who know the life he has to lead, that the salary he receives is not sufficient. When the minister makes a readjustment of the salaries, I hope he will bear in mind the keeper of the signal station at Brier island.

Amount required to pay pensions of $300 each to fifteen pilots, $4,500.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN.

Mr. DANIEL. Why does the government pay pensions to these pilots? I do not suppose the government pension system applies to pilots all over the Dominion?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Some years ago there was a corporation of pilots on the St. Lawrence. They had the right to pilot on that river, they were a close corporation. The department thought it necessary to make an arrangement with them, many of them were getting old, and had to be retired, and the whole pilotage system of the St. Lawrence was put on a new basis some few years ago. An arrangement was then made that when the pilots retired they would get this allowance of $300. They are compelled to retire from the service at a certain age.

Mr. DANIEL. In the other ports pensions for pilots are provided out of the pilotage fund made up from the earnings of the pilots. That is the case in St. John, and I do not think they make any more money than the pilots on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The formation of a fund of that kind is purely voluntary with the pilots. I do not know whether that has been done on the St. Lawrence river. I know that on the Pacific where there is a pilotage authority they have no such fund. It is a matter for themselves, they receive good salaries, but I doubt if they put much away for a rainy day.

Purchase or construction of a lighthouse and buoy steamer for River St. Lawrence to replace the 'Shamrock,' $175,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is to build a new steamer to take the place of the old 'Shamrock,' which is out of date, and practically out of use.

Mr. SPROULE. What will it cost?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The estimate is $175,000. Plans are being prepared, but no tenders have yet been called for.

Purchase or construction of a lighthouse and buoy steamer for the Pacific coast, $200,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That will have to be built by tender. On the Pacific coast the department practically owns only one steamer, the 'Quadra,' for lighthouse service, and as a result in the last few years the department had to charter two steamers to aid the 'Quadra.' It is absolutely necessary to have another steamer there, in fact we may have to get two.

Mr. JAMESON. Will these be built in Canada?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They ought to be, and probably on the Pacific coast if price is satisfactory.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I wish to enter a protest against these estimates being brought down and put through to the extent of millions of dollars in the dying moments of the session, especially the estimates for this department, which are between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000, and which, I can say from my own experience, is one of the departments of the government which is not being run in the way it should be. For instance, it takes over a year to get a little return from this department. On February 4, 1909, I asked for a return in regard to the Pembina river in the province of Manitoba, and I did not receive that return until February 14, 1910, one year and ten days afterwards; and before I could get it I had to visit the department several times. I also took it up with the Prime Minister, who promised to have it brought down, and even after that, I had to write a letter reminding him of his promise before I received the return. The Pembina river runs through my constituency into North Dakota. In the early days the farmers who lived along this river were able to get all the fish they needed for their own use; but some years ago some people in North Dakota built a dam at a town called Walhalla, which is just across the line, and since then the fish have not been able to come up the river into the province of Manitoba. I visited that town last year in company with Mr. R. N. Lee, who has always taken a great interest in this question, and we found that a dam 14 feet high, over which it would be impossible for any fish to get. We saw plenty of fish below the dam, and if there had been a fish ladder put in the dam, there would have been no difficulty in getting all the fish we needed in that part of the province of Manitoba. I may say that the settlers along the Pembina river have been trying to get this government to do something that would afford them relief ever since they have been in power. My predecessor, Mr. Greenway, took it up a good many times with the department, as the return will show, and he was unsuccessful in getting the department to act. The commissioner of fish and game of North Dakota, from whom I have a letter here, did promise to have this done, and if the matter had been followed up by this government there would have been no difficulty in having it done. I will not take up the time of the House to read this letter, but I wish to say that though this matter may not be of much importance to the Marine and Fisheries Department of this government, it is a very important question to the settlers who live along that river in my constituency, and I would respectfully ask the acting minister to take some action in regard to this matter. All that is necessary is either to write or to send a man to the commissioner of fish and game of North Dakota to show him the conditions that exist at Walhalla, and I am sure that he will be only too pleased to comply with the wishes of this government.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The explanation given to me in regard to the delay in bringing down the return to which my hon. friend has referred—and I think the explanation was made to him by letter—is that the delay was due to the fact that Prof. Prince, the Canadian commissioner of fisheries, had with him when in California the particular file of the department bearing upon the question about which my hon. friend asked for the return, and it was not returned to the department until after the close of last session. But I do not know why my hon. friend did not get the return immediately after the file was returned to the department. With respect to the dam on the Pembina river, I am advised that the question has formed the subject of some correspondence between the Marine and Fisheries Department and the officials of the state of North Dakota. I understood my hon. friend to say that he had a letter from the game warden of that state pointing out a way in which this matter might be remedied. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he send a copy of that letter to the department.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. They have got it. It is No. 30 of the return.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If it suggests a way of overcoming the difficulty, I think, without knowing anything about the facts, that the difficulty ought to be overcome. I can understand quite well the great value of the fishing streams to the farmers along the Pembina river; and if a 14-foot dam prevents the fish ascending into Canadian territory, and if a mere fishway, which is not expensive, could be erected, I would assume that, being in American territory and controlled altogether by the people of Dakota, it would be built altogether by the state of Dakota.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. They built a mill there, and made this dam.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If our department can facilitate the building of a fishway, I would suggest to the officials of the department that they ought to try to accomplish the object my hon. friend has in view. I am a very strong believer in conserving the fish in every river in Canada and in seeing that no natural or artifical obstructions are put in the river in the shape of dams. I know particularly in the province of British Columbia these dams prevent the salmon from spawning and so means should be taken to overcome these difficulties and to permit the fish to ascend the rivers. The expense of doing so is not great. I am glad that my hon. friend has called the attention of the department to that particular matter. The officers of the department are here and heard what has been said, and I would assume that if anything can be done it will be done.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. The files must have been taken away with the object of doing something in connection with this river. Did they do anything while they were away?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, the file was not taken with the special view of doing anything with regard to this river, but I might have added when I was on my feet a moment ago, that very probably, in fact I think it is altogether likely, that the Pembina river is not mentioned in the treaty between the United States and Canada, notwithstanding that it is an international water. But I would assume that although it is not mentioned in the treaty, a regulation might be agreed to by the two commissioners jointly to improve the condition of the Pembina river or any other river that crosses the boundary line. It is a small stream, nevertheless there are a great many small streams crossing the boundary, and I think it ought to be the duty of that commission to supervise the fisheries in these small rivers just as well as in the larger waters.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. The minister is mistaken if he understood me to say that this government would have anything to do with the obstruction of or the controlling of the dam in North Dakota, because I did not say anything of the kind, and I did not wish to convey that idea at all. The idea I wished to convey is that this government will not follow up and carry out the suggestions that have been made to it in connection with this proposition. There have been 68 letters between this government and private individuals which are on the file in the department at the present time. Now, the letter I referred to particularly is from the state commissioner for fish and game in North Dakota. It is not addressed to this government, though this government has the orignal in their department. It is addressed to R. N. Lea, game warden, Pembina Crossing, Manitoba, and it says:

Dear Sir,—Your courteous letter of November 5 is under consideration, also copy of letter to T. M. Daly, Esq. I thank you for calling my attention to this matter of obstructing on Pembina river in North Dakota. It is my duty to see that fish sluices are placed upon all dams of the streams and rivers in North Dakota for the free passage of fish over the same. Can you forward the names of owners of the dams that you refer to, giving their names and addresses. I will commence such action as I trust will result in the construction of the needed fishways or sluices. This department is anxious to provide sluiceways for the passage of fish over all obstructions in all waters, especially those rivers and streams passing into Manitoba.

Now, the department has had this letter in their care for four or five years that I know of, because Mr. Greenway, my predecessor, got these letters from R. N. Lea and gave them to the department. But the department has not followed up the suggestions or tried to have the sluice or fishway put into this dam, and I claim it is the department that is to blame for the fact that we have no fish coming into Manitoba up the river Pembina.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Of course, I am not prepared to admit that it is the department that is to blame at all, and I do not think my hon. friend in his own statement of the case has shown that it is the fault of the department. The facts are, that in the state of North Dakota a dam has been put on the Pembina river on American territory and by Americans, and the game warden in that state has written to somebody saying that if the department will point out where the obstructions are he will undertake to have them removed.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. That has been done.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The first thing that occurs to me is that if the game warden of that state wishes to know where the obstructions are he does not need to write to the city of Ottawa to find out. He ought to know where they are.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. He did not write to Ottawa at all.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He is not a very good game warden if he does not know. There is some correspondence in the department in regard to this matter. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Sharpe) give me the date of the letter he has just read?

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. On November, 1894.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is a very old complaint.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Certainly it is an old complaint, that is what we are kicking about.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Probably the grievance does not now exist.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I stated before that I was there last summer when I made a special trip to see it myself.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has been in communication with the state of North Dakota, and the two last letters sent by the department have not been replied to, and they were written long after that date of the letter quoted by my hon. friend.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Will, the minister be good enough to have the department look into this matter and try to give us relief in southern Manitoba?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. All right.

Mr. DANIEL. Before we got onto the fisheries, I wanted to ask a question about the marine. A short time ago the steamer 'Lansdowne' ran on a rock on the coast of Nova Scotia. At the investigation which was held shortly afterwards, the captain of the steamer stated that he had received no sailing directions. Now, what I wanted to ask the minister was, whether it is the case that all the fishery or government steamers receive no sailing directions for the safe navigation of waters through which they are likely to pass. Capt. Lugard, who was chairman of that commission, and one of the other commissioners, expressed surprise that the captain of the 'Lansdowne' should have been sent to sea without any sailing directions. I bring this to the notice of the minister, and ask if that is the condition of things generally with regard to these government steamers, because if it is, it certainly ought to be remedied.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am told that all the captains of government vessels have sailing directions, and it is the duty of the captain before he sails, to see that he gets them.

Mr. DANIEL. Well, this, the captain certainly stated on oath, that he had not received sailing directions, and that he could not get them.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand it is the fact that that captain had not sailing directions. But, the sailing directions are comprised in a small book which is supplied freely to all captains of vessels. If any captain has not a copy, he ought to procure it. It is no fault of the department if he loses his copy of the directions and does not supply himself with another.

Mr. DANIEL. I have here the report of the examination—

The formal examination in connection with the stranding of the steamer 'Lansdowne,' on January 24, at Pubnico, commenced yesterday morning before Captain Lugard, with Captain James Hayes and E. C. Elkin as nautical assessors. In the course of his evidence, Captain Burns said he had no sailing directions for the Bay of Fundy. He had asked for them, but hadn't yet received any.

And, later on,—

Murdoch McLean, chief officer of the steamer, testified that there was no proper place on the 'Lansdowne' to take soundings, which drew the remark from Captain Hayes that it was a strange condition of affairs on board a government steamer.

There is a statement that the captain had applied for directions and could not get them.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that the department are prepared to dispute that statement. Every person who applies for the instructions gets them—not only captains, but every person. It is a captain's duty to get them. If he applied for them and did not receive them, the department has no knowledge of that matter. It is the easiest thing in the world for a captain to provide himself with them.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there any record of that application in the department? For this captain makes this statement on oath.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The deputy minister tells me that there is no record of the captain applying for these papers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. May I ask the hon. member for St. John if he is reading from the transcribed record of the hearing or from a newspaper report?

Mr. DANIEL. From a newspaper report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That might make a difference. They do not always get the statements accurate.

Mr. DANIEL. They very often get them the opposite.

Mr. BRADBURY. I was glad to hear the minister declare in favour of rivers being taken care of and fishways being put in where necessary. I called to the minister's attention the need of a fishway at the mouth of the White Mouth river. I do not wish to detain the House at this stage of the session, but I would like an assurance from the minister that the matter will be investigated, and, if found necessary, that the fishway will be provided.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) handed me two letters which I carried in my pocket for several days. But, this morning I sent them to the officer of the Fisheries Department and asked him to advise me with respect to the request made. Probably I shall be able to give an answer on Monday.

Mr. BRADBURY. I am to be absent on Monday. I would like to have the assurance of the minister that the matter will be investigated, and, if found necessary, the fishway put in.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It will be investigated, but I do not want to make too many promises about putting in fishways.

I have expressed my own personal opinion that appliances for conserving the fish in our rivers should be provided as far as possible. These fishways do not cost much money.

Mr. BRADBURY. We have settlements all along that river. The river empties into Lac du Bonnet, which abounds in fish. But, a small fall prevents the fish from getting up. Now, an inexpensive fishway would provide the people all along that river with fish.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to bring to the attention of the minister, a matter of importance to the people living along the Salmon river in Digby county. Several years ago, complaint was made by certain fishermen with regard to a dam on the Salmon river at a mill owned by a Mr. Saulnier. The department required Mr. Saulnier to place a fishway in the dam. He replied that he did not know how to construct one and asked for advice. The local officers stated, as I am informed, that they did not know how to construct one and called on the department for information. The department, as, I am informed, gave information and plans and a fishway was constructed by Mr. Saulnier under the immediate direction of the fishery officers on the grounds, up to the plans which has been furnished by the officers of the department. About a year ago, further complaint was made to the department that the fishway was not giving satisfaction, that it did not allow fish to get up the river. Later some letters were written to me. I visited the place and obtained a statement from Mr. Saulnier, a statement of the facts, the substance of which I have given. Having already put a fishway in that dam under the direction of the officers of the department and according to the plans furnished by the department, he naturally objects to defraying the cost of building a new one. If a new one is found to be necessary, I trust that the department will provide it at its own expense, and out of this appropriation of $10,000 which is being asked for to-day. In fact, I enter a protest now on behalf of Mr. Saulnier against his having to pay any part of the cost of a new fishway.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that instructions have been given already to the inspector of fisheries for that district, to visit that locality and prepare plans for a new fishway.

Mr. JAMESON. I know that this matter has been before the department for upwards of a year. But, do I understand the minister to agree with the position Mr. Saulnier takes, that he, having built the fishway according to the plans of the department and under the direction of the officers of the department, should not be required to pay any part of the cost of a new fishway?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The record does not show anything with regard to that position. The hon. member (Mr. Jameson) wants me to admit that Mr. Saulnier is not liable for the fishway. I do not know enough about the facts to be able to make any such statement. I am told that the Act holds him responsible. The department is acting upon it. They sent an officer there to prepare plans and advise as to the best kind of fishway to construct. I suppose it is not a very expensive matter, but I am not going to say whether the party or the department will build it. I assume, from the actions of the department, that the fishway will be put there this summer.

Mr. JAMESON. Mr. Saulnier is a poor man, and it will be a serious matter if he has to defray the cost. The department, in all fairness, should defray the cost.

Fisheries—salaries and disbursements of fishery inspectors, overseers and guardians, $220,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to know what is paid to the fishery inspector at Winnipegosis in Manitoba, for the last year, and what work he has done for the salary that has been paid him.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. Colliston is the fishery overseer living at Winnipegosis. His salary is $700.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When was Mr. Colliston appointed?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Last year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What time last year?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The official of the department, speaking from recollection, says that he was appointed some time in the fall of last year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not asking these questions from any desire to be factious, or to make fun; I am asking because the inspector who was in charge of that district until some time last fall, was a man by the name of Clenny, who was not only inspector for this government, but who was the secretary of the Northwest Fish Company that held, under this government, the monopoly of fishing up in that northwestern part of Manitoba, and which extended up into Saskatchewan. While, I say, he was inspector for this government, he was at the same time secretary for this American fish company, which was robbing the people, my constituents, right and left, under the patronage of this government. I want to know if there was any dissatisfaction with his services, and why he was deposed and Colliston appointed.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend has just stated the reason himself. I am informed that Mr. Clenny was asked to resign because he occupied a position with a private company, and Mr. Colliston was appointed in his stead.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who asked for Clenny's appointment?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The appointment was made by the minister some two or three years ago.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who recommended him?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He was appointed by order in council on the recommendation of the minister.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But who recommended him to the minister?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Can you not find out who recommended him?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If I was the minister who made the appointment, perhaps I could say.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the new regulation for Lake Winnipeg. I received a copy of those regulations to-day, and I noticed a very wise provision to the effect that after 2,400,000 pounds of fish have been taken out of Lake Winnipeg the fishing would cease, and that the inspector would have power to order all the nets to be lifted. I commend the department for making this arrangement. Now, how is the officer in charge going to arrive at the amount which has been caught? I understand there was a recommendation made by the commission that all these fishermen would be compelled to make a sworn statement to the fishery officer of the quantity of fish they had taken. I do not notice any protection of that kind in the regulation, and unless some check of that kind is provided, I would like to know how the officer at Selkirk is going to know when there are 2,400,000 pounds of fish taken.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand the companies have entered into agreement that the maximum amount of whitefish to be taken by them this year shall not exceed 2,400,000 pounds. The inspectors will have to be responsible to see this regulation is carried out. The particular method by which he will do so has not yet been evolved by the department, but probably affidavits will be required as to the quantity of fish taken. The inspector will probably report the quantity landed at Selkirk each week, will keep a close check upon it by personal observation, and take every means in his power to see the regulation carried out.

Mr. BRADBURY. If what the minister suggests, and that only is done, I fear the regulation will not be enforced. There should be some provision made in the license that you give——

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It will probably be embodied in the license.

Mr. BRADBURY. There should be a sworn statement.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It will be a condition in the license that when the stipulated quantity of fish is taken fishing will have to stop. The particular methods by which our inspectors will check up the catch will be decided upon by the department. I suppose we can require the companies to make a sworn statement, and the inspector can report at intervals that they have landed so many fish, and no more.

Mr. BRADBURY. I urge on the minister the suggestion made by the commissioners, that a sworn statement should be made by the fishermen themselves as to the amount of fish they catch. The mere fact that the companies agree that they will only take 2,400,000 pounds does not mean that they will not take more if they get the chance. But if there is a condition in the license, and a sworn statement required, and a severe penalty provided for infraction, then, there will be a possibility of the regulation being carried out. If a man makes an incorrect sworn return his license should be cancelled, and he should not be allowed a license in the future. I speak from experience when I urge the adoption of these precautions upon the minister.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think the department will attend to that.

Mr. GERVAIS. I direct the attention of the minister to the following facts: About fifteen years ago, a dam twenty-two feet high was constructed in the Chambly river between Chambly and Richelieu, by the Chambly Manufacturing Company. There was no fish run provided for in that dam, and the consequence is that the Chambly river which was once full of fish is now almost entirely depleted. Is it the intention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to force the Chambly Manufacturing Company to construct proper fish passes in that dam, so as to permit the fish coming from the St. Lawrence to reach their habitat in Lake Champlain. No action has been taken by the department for the last fifteen years in this direction, and it is high time that we should now ask the department of government concerned to force this wealthy company which is rated at $15,000,000 to spend a few thousand dollars for the benefit of the fishermen who live along the Chambly river. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries should give some promise that this matter will be attended to.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I will call the attention of the officers of the department to what my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) has said, and if the thing is possible I will ask them to attend to it. That is all I can say.

Mr. GERVAIS. I understand that a fish run may be constructed there at a cost of about $3,000, and there is a law at present under which the company can be compelled to do that work. The people of the county of Chambly, and of the other constituencies along the Chambly river have suffered long enough in this regard, and the minister should now give a specific promise that he will ensure the construction of a fish run in this dam.

Mr. BRADBURY. I wish to have some assurance from the minister that there will be a declaration required under oath with regard to the catch of white fish. The hon. gentleman may think I am unreasonable, but I may tell him that I have a good deal of experience in this matter, and my experience leads me to believe that unless my suggestion is carried out the law will be evaded. If a sworn declaration is required from these fishermen they will have no excuse for making a false return, and if they do so they can be prosecuted for perjury. If you take from them a mere statement they may say they have only taken 2,400,000 pounds, but if it is afterwards found they have taken 5,000,000 pounds you cannot successfully prosecute them because their plea will be that they did not know they had taken so many fish. I hope the minister will assure me that there will be a sworn declaration required from each of these companies as to the quantity of fish they take.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I thought I was very explicit in stating that the department is bound to see that this regulation is carried out.

Mr. BRADBURY. I know you say that.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think I ought to be asked now to give an assurance that we will make every man give a sworn affidavit.

Mr. BRADBURY. It is the only way that is any good.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is one way, but possibly it may not be the best way. I think the fish are landed for Wininpeg at Selkirk, and we can station our inspector there to check every fish landed at the wharf, and charge them up against each company, and when they have reached their limit we will stop them fishing. I will give my hon. friend the assurance that this regulation will be carried out in the very best way that the department can devise.

Mr. LANCASTER. The statement of the minister is not satisfactory in view of what the hon. gentleman from Selkirk has said. I should think the time of the inspector of the department is more valuable than that he can stay there watching these fishermen take the fish. After all, is not the suggestion of the member for Selkirk the best that can be adopted? If a sworn declaration is required, the man cannot afterwards say that he did not know he had taken so many fish, and give other excuses. If a fisherman makes false affidavits, he would know there was no technical way of escaping the consequences of his deception. He knows, and is the only one who does know, and if he stated what was not true, he would be liable to perjury. If the license contained a provision that these affidavits were to be made by the fishermen themselves, they would fear to run the risk of being imprisoned for perjury. If, on the other hand, the affidavit is made by an officer of the company who must depend on the statements of the fishermen, and who would have no personal knowledge of the facts, so that he could evade conviction by saying that he was informed or instructed that the statements were true, there would be no protection. If the minister expects the inspectors to go up and inspect every fish, he is placing a very low value on the inspectors' time.

Salaries, building and maintenance of fish-breeding establishments, $322,300.

Mr. SPROULE. This would indicate that it is not intended to increase the number of fish-breeding establishments.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Provision is made for two new hatcheries on the great lakes costing about $10,000 each, a salmon trout hatchery on the north shore of Lake Superior, and a whitefish hatchery on the northern end of the Georgian bay. The exact sites have not yet been decided. There is also provision for lobster-breeding establishments or retaining ponds in the maritime provinces, and several new establishments in British Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would the minister give some account of the work of the fish hatchery at Lake Winnipegosis?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I can get that information.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want it now.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That hatchery has been in operation two seasons. This year

60,000,000 young whitefish are to be distributed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He closed the hatchery last season.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The hatchery was closed the season before, as my hon. friend is no doubt aware, because there was no supply of eggs with which to fill it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am sorry the minister is so lost to knowledge of the conditions there as to make a statement of that kind. It was not closed for the reason he alleges. Two million eggs were taken in the fall of 1908.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is very little.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The minister will find in the Public Accounts $1,500 paid on contract to Coffey and Company for 25,000,000 eggs which were not delivered in the fall of 1908. The contract provided that no fish were to be taken at that time except for the purpose of collecting the eggs. Fish were not to be taken for commercial purposes. Coffey and Company employed inexperienced men and wrong methods and collected only 2,000,000 eggs. The eggs were put in the hatchery on October 25, 1908, and the staff was employed there taking care of their hatching until on in January, when they found that owing to the methods that had been employed by the government employees and contractors the eggs were absolutely unfertile, and they dumped them into the lake in January, 1909. That cost this government $1,500. This occurred during the time the minister said the hatchery was not in operation. In getting this spawn, 151,200 pounds of whitefish, 43,540 pounds of pickerel, and 43,000 pounds of jacks were taken and were all shipped to points in the United States, absolutely against the wording of the contract entered into by that company with the government. In other words, about 75,000 full-grown whitefish, two-thirds of which were females—and I understand that is a very small proportion—were destroyed. The average, I believe, is something like 4,000 eggs to each female, so that if you make the computation you will see that this means that 200,000,000 eggs were destroyed in an attempt to secure 25,000,000 eggs, which attempt proved absolutely abortive, as no eggs were hatched; and the minister has cloaked his department under the excuse that the hatchery was not running. The hatchery was closed during the spring of 1905, and was only opened in 1908; and during the time that the lake was open in 1908, 175 cars of fish were shipped from the shipping point nearest the lake, and every one of those cars was a case of law-breaking on the part of Coffey and Company, who shipped them. They had no permission to do this and in fact had signed a contract in which they bound themselves not to ship any fish. We have seen that the cost of the hatchery up to last year was $18,754, and not even a sucker has been hatched out during the three years that it has been more or less in operation. I understand that this year there has been some change for the better, and I am glad of it, because I heartily approve of hatcheries being established in those northern lakes. I want to point out another matter which pertains to the fisheries up there; that is, the fact that the hatchery requires a large amount of cordwood to keep it going—to keep up the steam in the boilers and to keep the hatching rooms at a proper temperature, and that the contracts for the cordwood are given to partisan friends of the government. I think it is only right that tenders for supplies for a government institution should be called for, and that all parties, whether Liberals supporting the government, or Liberals antagonistic to the government, or Tories, should have an equal right to tender. This year I know that the men who got the contract were partisan friends of the government, and I hope that the minister, if he is going to act for any length of time in charge of his department, will see that this does not occur again, or I will talk a little more freely on the next occasion than I am doing now.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Public tenders have been called, for cordwood and other supplies, for the Selkirk hatchery, and the same thing is going to obtain hereafter in respect to the other hatcheries.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why the delay? Why has not this been done before?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I cannot give the reason why it has not been done before this.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was just as easy to do it at Winnipegosis as at Selkirk. While we live far back, we have both mail and telegraphic communication.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I may as well confess at once that I cannot possibly enter into a discussion of all the matters brought up by my hon. friend in regard to the Winnipegosis hatchery, the cost of its building, the cost of the eggs and the reason why 25,000,000 eggs were not obtained and 2,000,000 were obtained. I am afraid that it would take too long to master the letters which have been placed in my hands, and I do not suppose my hon. friend would care for me to read the instructions given to the officer in charge who made the contract for the delivery of these eggs. My hon. friend, I imagine, rather desires to make his own statement and get it on 'Hansard' and in the press.

The department is quite willing to let it go at that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I must take exception to that. I am asking for information. There have been the worst kind of abuses in the north end of my riding. I tried last year to bring them to the attention of the minister. I pointed out to him how this Northwest Fish Co., an American company, who shipped all their fish to the United States held a monopoly under this government, were protected by this government in every way, robbed the fishermen, failed, and did not pay their just debts to the fishermen, who were compelled to sell to them at a less price than the market would have afforded them had this government and its officials not insisted in upholding this monopoly. Then, in the case of this hatchery, I am drawing to the attention of the government again the abuses that have existed there and that exist to-day, and I want the government to sit up and take notice. I am not making a grand-stand play for the sake of getting on 'Hansard.' I never look at 'Hansard.' I only try to bring to the attention of the government abuses that exist in my riding, in the hope that the government will at some time wake up and correct them.

Fisheries—legislation and incidental expenses, $4,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What are these expenses for?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They are for minor cases which the department may have to prosecute for violations of the regulations about which they may know nothing, and they instruct the Department of Justice to prosecute.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the Department of Justice instruct local lawyers to do the prosecuting? Where are those lawyers situated and what do they do?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They may be in any town in Canada?

Mr. LANCASTER. But where were they, they might be in the moon?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We pay them their fees as they may be retained from time to time.

Mr. LANCASTER. Again I ask where do they live?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They might be in Halifax or in Vancouver.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where. There is a good deal of money going out from the departments in that general way for legal and incidental expenses. It is a very handy way of rewarding political friends for doing party work, and sometimes rather disgraceful party work. We are beginning to find it necessary to know who these gentlemen are.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not know where these people reside. They may be in any province of the Dominion, or in any city. The expenses would be paid to the lawyer who was retained for the time being to prosecute a particular case.

Mr. LANCASTER. At what rate are they paid?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not know. The Justice Department certifies the expenses and the department pays it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Perhaps I can help out the minister. There was a legal gentleman of the name of Markey, who was mixed up in some of those fish leases. Perhaps the government paid him for accepting these monopolies, and the payment may be included in that charge. Does his name appear among the legal lights who have been paid?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department is not aware that Mr. Markey has been paid any fees whatever.

Canadian fisheries exhibit, $16,000.

Mr. CROSBY. What is that used for. Is it used for exhibits in the Dominion, or for exhibits abroad?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is in the city here a fishery building, and this item is largely to pay the cost of maintaining that. A small sum goes to a small exhibition in the province of British Columbia where a miniature hatchery is exhibited yearly.

Mr. CROSBY. We have a provincial exhibition in the city of Halifax which is conducted by the provincial government and the city. It is more or less an agricultural exhibition, but the fish interests have been trying to arrange a fishery exhibit there. As no funds are provided for that purpose by either the province or the city I think it would be fair and reasonable if the department could see its way to assist that exhibition, because it is in the centre of the Atlantic coast fisheries. We have the exhibition there every year, and a small annual contribution for the fishery exhibit would help materially the fishing interest of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and perhaps New Brunswick.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The request of my hon. friend appeals to me, because I am a little familiar with the good results that have followed from the slight assistance given to the fisheries exhibit at the New Westminster exhibition, and with the success that has attended the fishery exhibit is the most popular one on the grounds. They show the fish alive and the process of hatching. Without making a distinct promise I may say to my hon. friend that I will request the deputy minister to do what he can along the lines we have followed in New Westminster, as we recognize that the maritime provinces are a great centre of the fishing industry, and ought to have a fishery exhibit at its annual industrial exhibition.

Oyster culture, $10,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the increase in this item for?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. For the proposed establishment of an oyster bed in Prince Edward Island.

To assist in the establishment, maintenance and inspection of cold storage for bait, and the conservation and development of the deep-sea fisheries, $40,000.

Mr. CROSBY. While we approve of the system of cold storage and admit that it has been of great assistance to the fishermen, I am sorry to say that in a great many cases it has not proved of such assistance as might have been expected. When the cold storage systems were established it was understood that they were for the purpose of enabling the fishermen to put in their bait during the season when they could collect it, so that they could get it out of cold storage when they could not get fresh bait from the sea. I do not wish to say anything derogatory to the gentlemen who have those cold storage systems in charge, but there are complaints that the fishermen cannot get the storage facilities for their bait that they expected. It is said that they cannot get their bait in storage and that they have to pay the cold storage men very high prices sometimes, and in some cases have to make a contract to give the fish that they catch with the bait back to the cold storage men at their own prices. The department might make some inquiries during the recess into this matter. I have no doubt that the government established this cold storage system for the purpose of helping the fishermen, and if it is the case that they are not being helped, I think it would be wise for the government to ascertain the facts.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We will do so.

To provide for the maintenance of experimental works for the reduction of dog-fish, $60,000.

Mr. CROSBY. What success has the department had in this work? Are the establishments that were first set running still being carried on, and have the results been such as to warrant the continuance of the experiments?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The works first established are being carried on. The amounts realized for scrap and oil sold are as follows:—1905-6, $30; 1906-7, $1,675; 1907-8, $15,900; 1908-9, $346; and 1909-10, $10,498.

To provide for expenses of inquiries respecting the relative rights of the federal and provincial governments in regard to the fisheries, under Privy Council decision of 1896, $10,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the condition now in this controversy?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Of course, the hon. member knows that the question of jurisdiction over the fisheries has been the subject of negotiation and correspondence between the several provincial governments and the Dominion for some years.

Mr. LANCASTER. And what is going on now?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. With respect to the province of British Columbia, Mr. Bastedo, a year or two ago, carried on negotiations with the government with a view to arriving at an agreement whereby one government might administer the fisheries. But nothing came of that. Recently, the deputy attorney general of the province has been in Ottawa discussing with the Justice Department a reference to the Supreme Court of these fishery matters.

Mr. LANCASTER. You propose to state a case by agreement as to the facts between the province and the Dominion for the decision of the Supreme Court on matters supplementary to the Privy Council decision and with a view to working that out?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. And it will be heard this year?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I can hardly say that the question to be submitted is absolutely agreed upon, but I think they have made progress.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will that include only one province, or will there be more?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It has been discussed so far with the province of British Columbia. But any decision arrived at, I assume, would have a bearing on all the provinces.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is the reason why I was going to suggest that it would be better to have all the provinces, or, at all events, the provinces likely to be concerned, engaged in it, because if they were not parties to it they might not be bound in exactly the same way as if they were heard on the same argument.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I understand that it would be the desire of this government that all the provinces should join.

To pay customs officers for services in connection with issuing of modus vivendi licenses, $700.

Mr. CROSBY. Has the department taken into consideration doing away with these licenses? I do not wish to take up time at this stage of the session. But that matter was gone into very fully by Mr. Maclean the former member for Lunenburg. Has the department in view the bringing of this to an end?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department has not been considering the question of doing away with the modus vivendi in regard to this matter. I am not certain, but, probably, the questions being submitted to the Hague tribunal will have an effect upon the government's policy in this matter.

To pay customs and other officers for services in compiling and forwarding daily reports in connection with the fisheries intelligence bureau for the season of 1910-11, $500.

Mr. JAMESON. The minister of Marine and Fisheries is asking parliament to vote $828,000 this year, an advance of $69,000 over the amount asked for last year. I wish to make a few remarks on fisheries generally. I do not believe in criticism for criticism's sake, but I believe that there are many ways in which the condition of the fisheries and those connected with them may be improved. It is in that spirit I offer the suggestions that I propose to offer, very briefly, and I trust the minister will receive them in the same way. If he does so, I think he will find that many of the suggestions I make are practical and can be carried out to the benefit of the fisheries and fishermen and with little trouble to the department.

First, as to the reports of the fisheries intelligence bureau. The minister is asking $500 for this purpose the same as last year. I think a much more generous vote should be taken for this service. The reports are very meagre. They are telegraphed to the daily papers, but they do not in all cases, or even in many cases, reach the fishermen in time to be of much value. If they were telephoned to the fishery stations, many of which have telephones, they would be of great utility. I think also the weather probabilities should be telephoned to the fishery stations. In my own county of Digby the weather forecast is telephoned every day to the signal at Westport down Digby neck. The fishermen have frequently said that if this weather forecast could be taken off the wire at the different fishing stations when it was sent down to the signal station and placed in a bulletin, it would be of the utmost assistance to them. And the same on the opposite side of St. Mary's bay, and in almost every part of Nova Scotia. This system would be of the greatest advantage to the fishermen when they are leaving home, it would enable them to know what the weather was likely to be during the next 24 hours. I think an appropriation should be made for that purpose. I could recite many instances of fishermen who have been blown off the coast of Nova Scotia, and who have suffered great hardships and perils by reason of not knowing when a storm was approaching.

Another suggestion I wish to make is for the establishment of a fishermen's library at the various fishing stations. In many places there now exist fishermen's unions, associations which are formed amongst the fishermen. These have been established in many parts of Nova Scotia through the initiative and assistance of Mr. M. H. Nickerson, M.P.P., who resides at Clark's harbour. These associations are gradually extending their influence and are well patronized. Where they now exist I do not think there would be any difficulty in establishing fishery libraries, and where they do not exist the libraries could be developed by the assistance of the customs house officer, postmaster or other prominent person. Reports of the Department of Fisheries, together with the results of investigations made by the department could be furnished to those libraries, and other information along that line. We are desirous of improving the condition of the fisheries and those engaged in them. At the present time the fishermen are scattered along 5,000 miles of the coast and there is little community of interest among them. We wish to improve their condition, and I think this would be a very effective means of doing so, and it would tend to secure co-operation among the fishermen in a better observance of the laws. Many of the fishermen are educated men, they are great readers, and very intellectual people.

Another subject which of late years has received a good deal of consideration by the people engaged in the fishing industry, is the question of bounty paid to fishermen. This was begun by the government of Sir John A. Macdonald, in 1882, and I understand that an amount of $160,000 has been voted from year to year for that purpose. The amount of the Halifax fishery award was capitalized, and the interest from year to year is applied to this purpose. Now, the bounties which have been paid to the fishermen have varied from year to year, according to the number engaged in the industry. The vessel fishermen receive a much larger bounty than the boat fishermen, and the boat fishermen consider that now, since they are obliged to have more expensive boats, fitted up generally with gasoline engines, they should receive more equitable treatment, they should receive a larger sum. The fishermens' union have discussed this matter and taken strong ground. I do not mean to say that there should be any reduction in the amount paid, either to vessels or to vessel fishermen, but I think a more generous grant should be made for the purpose of paying these bounties.

The amount received by the government from year to year for licenses under the modus vivendi is about $10,000; something less than $500 of this is paid to officers of the department who issue the license, and the balance of $9,500 might very properly be turned into their fishery bounty fund. The fisheries are developing, and the revenues of the country are increasing, and it seems to me a further amount towards the fishing bounty might be voted. The boat fishermen, as I say, are now using boats much larger and better equipped than in years gone by. A fishing boat now costs five to eight times more than it did ten years ago, and it also costs considerably more to maintain and operate it. This is a further suggestion I would commend to the consideration of the department.

Now, on the subject of the oyster fishery. We had during the sessions of the Fishery Committee last year, the evidence of Captain Ernest Kemp, the oyster expert of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, who gave his testimony on the 25th of March, 1909. I see there is a sum of $10,000 in the estimates this year, an increase of $4,000 over the amount voted last year for this purpose and I hope the work will be proceeded with systematically. Sometime ago there was an experiment made in Digby basin, but I have not been able to learn the result. I will quote from the evidence of Capt. Kemp on the occasion to which I refer when I asked him with regard to the subject:

Q. You have given us some information with regard to your knowledge of Nova Scotia coast. Have you any knowledge of the conditions in the Bay of Fundy, St. Mary's Bay or Digby Basin with respect to oyster culture?—A. I have examined the area in Digby Basin. Some years ago I planted oysters as an experiment on Goat Island and I have heard that those oysters have grown well. I have not had an opportunity of ascertaining whether there has been any spat derived from there or not. These oysters were planted in different places and grew well, I am told.

Q. Do you remember the year in which they were planted?—A. They were planted in 1902.

Q. Have you visited the locality since?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Those oysters were planted in Annapolis Basin?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you at that time examine St. Mary's Bay, or are you familiar with the formation of the bottom there?—A. No.

Q. Are you familiar with the formation of the bottom of the Bay of Fundy?—A. No, that is the only place that I have no knowledge of.

Q. You found the conditions were favourable within Digby or Annapolis basins for the culture of oysters?—A. The waters on the north of Goat Island, I think it is, were the most suitable. I had difficulty in finding suitable bottom on account of the heavy sediment on the sides of the basin and river.

Q. There is a large volume of fresh water from the Annapolis river flowing into the basin, would that interfere with oyster culture?—A. I did not want to go up too far. I thought if I could plant any on Goat Island that would be a suitable locality. The farther I went up the shore I found more mud bottoms. Suitable bottoms are limited there.

Q. Who has charge of the cultivation of the oysters which you planted in Annapolis Basin?—A. The ground was in charge of the lightkeeper on the opposite side, as far as I know.

Q. On the Grenville side?—A. Yes.

Q. You have had no reports from him?—A. No.

Q. Was the oyster farm leased to any person?—A. No, I do not think so. My time has been so wholly taken up that I have not had the opportunity of going down to see how those oysters were getting on. I wanted to go there last fall but was detained with my boat and did not have the opportunity.

Now, this seems to me to be a most extraordinary way to conduct experiments of this kind. The oyster industry can be made a most profitable one, and I hope the minister will see that Captain Kemp visits Digby basin and inquires into the condition of this oyster bed that was set out there. There are other places along the Bay of Fundy and St. Mary's bay where I believe oyster culture is not only a possibility, but where there is very strong reason to believe that it would prosper and flourish and become a profitable industry. I trust the minister will take pains to see that Captain Kemp shall adopt a more systematic method of procedure. I do not think it is right at all that he should leave an oyster bed set out nearly seven years ago and not have any reports from it. If this industry is worth spending $10,000 a year on, it is certainly worth while that the department should keep in touch with it and see what progress is being made from time to time. These suggestions are not offered in the way of hostile criticism, but merely with the view of placing before the department the ideas I entertain on the subject. I believe that if the minister will take them into consideration he will find they can be worked out profitably and beneficially to the fisheries and to the people who are interested in them.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department appreciates the suggestions made by my hon. friend (Mr. Jameson), and I am quite sure they will be taken into serious consideration. I am advised that the department has at present under consideration very considerable improvements in connection with the fishery intelligence service. It is hoped that the service will develop into issuing bulletins and even embrace telephonic communication. As to the libraries, my own view is that they do not come within the scope of the Marine Department or even of this government. I cannot, of course, speak with full knowledge as to the bounty question, but I think the bounty money was fixed at five per cent on the Halifax award. Of course, the more fishermen there are, the less will be paid to each in the division, and the fewer there are, the higher the bounty will be to each. Whether it would be advisable to pay a higher interest than that provided is a question of policy on which I would not care to express an opinion. I will call to the attention of the experts of the department the suggestions made by my hon. friend as to oyster culture, and I shall ask for them the very best consideration.

Mr. JAMESON. Do I understand that the minister will take the question of weather bulletins into consideration, and endeavour to have them communicated to the fishermen by telephone.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am advised that the meteorological service is being extended very rapidly, and that still further extension will be made.

Mr. JAMESON. There is now in the county of Digby a very perfect system of telephonic communication between the fishing stations, so that the experiment would cost very little indeed. I believe that if it were once given a trial, the department would be so impressed with its advantages that they would beyond doubt continue it and extend it.

Mr. CROSBY. I endorse what has been said by the hon. member for Digby with regard to the fishing bounties. The Halifax award was $4,500,000, which would produce $225,000 yearly at five per cent, but I understand that we only pay $160,000 a year in bounties. The boat fishermen get a very small amount of this, and I would urge on the minister that their bounty should be augmented. In many sections the fishermen have to come to the fishery officer, 10 or 15 miles in some cases, to file their claim, and then have to travel the same distance again to get $3 or $4 of fishing bounty, so that it is hardly worth the trouble. The Washington treaty, of which the fishing bounty is an outcome, was brought about by the admission of the American fishermen within the three-mile limit, so that in reality the compensation granted by the award belongs more strictly to the boat fishermen who fish within that limit. I do not say that a bounty should not be given to the fishing vessels and the men engaged on them, but I do hold that that bounty should come out of the general revenues of the country. The deep sea fishery is open to the world, and every dollar we take out of it is so much brought into the country, whereas the inshore fisheries and the fisheries in our inland lakes may in a sense be said to belong to the country, and they, therefore, stand on a different footing from the other fisheries. Did time permit, I could prove that all countries in the world interested in fisheries are paying bounties to their fishermen. The people of the little island of St. Pierre Miquelon, whose fish comes into competition with our Nova Scotia catch, have a bounty from the French government of nine francs for every quintal exported from St. Pierre to Canada or to any other part of the world outside of France, and in addition to that a considerable bounty is paid to the men and to the ships. I would urge on the government that they should consider the question of paying the bounty to the deep sea vessels and deep sea fishermen from the general revenues of the country, and permit the interest on the Halifax award to go to the shore fishermen to whom it specially belongs. Now that we require a great many men for our navy, whether it is a tin-pot navy or a runaway navy, or whatever else you like to call it, your recruits must come from amongst the deep sea fishermen, and they deserve encouragement from the national treasury.

To provide for the settlement of the claim of the British Columbia government for a share of revenue from fishery licenses collected by the federal government from 1901 to 1907, both years inclusive, $56,137.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is a final disposition of a question between the province of British Columbia, and the Dominion which has been pending for some years. After the decision of the Privy Council which placed the ownership of the fish in the province, the provincial government made a demand on the Dominion government for a share of the revenue which this government had been collecting from fishing licenses in that province. In 1901, Sir Louis Davies, then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, entered into a modus vivendi with the province whereby the Dominion government continued the administration of the fisheries, and collection of revenue, a balancing of accounts to be made later. In 1907, British Columbia passed its own Fishery Act, and proceeded to administer its fisheries, as far as it had authority to do so, and began the collection of licenses, imposing a license fee of $5 for salmon-fishing license. This terminated the modus vivendi. This amount is the sum arrived at between the province and this government as the share of the province in the revenue collected by this government between 1901 and 1907.

Investigation of ore deposits and economic minerals; examination and delimitation of peat bogs, determination of fuel values, coals and peat of Canada, including salary of a producer gas expert and mechanic; investigation of ore dressing; collection of information regarding mineral and metallurgical industries and operations, $41,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would save time if the minister would explain all these increases together.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In the total vote for the Mines branch there is a decrease of $2,000. In this particular item there is a decrease of $7,500. This is for the publication of a monograph on various subjects in connection with the investigation of ore deposits and minerals. The increase can be accounted for by the desire of the department to carry on this work on a larger scale.

Operation of government peat bog, $4,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department acquired a peat bog in Alfred, near Caledonia Springs, of 300 acres. We are now putting into operation a plant for the experimental manufacture of peat to determine how cheaply it may be manufactured. I invite all members to visit the bog in the next three months, and see the process in operation. We are hopeful of very considerable results from this experiment. This $4,000 will pay the expense of operating this peat bog. There may be another small sum in the supplementary estimates. We expect in this experiment to manufacture 2,000 or 3,000 tons of peat. If we were going to sell it, we might make some money out of it. The experiment is for the purpose of demonstrating the production of power from peat, the object being to show that peat will make gas which will produce electric power as cheaply as water-power. My hon. friend can see the demonstration going on any day in Ottawa at the experimental station, very successfully, and very cheaply.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is there any quantity of the raw material in Ontario?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There are millions of tons all over Ontario. Another part of the work of the Department is the locating of peat bogs in the settled portions of Ontario and Quebec, and especially in the maritime provinces.

Mr. HENDERSON. Can the gas be used for fuel purposes as well as for power?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I imagine that it can be, but when it is used in a gas-producer engine it goes into the engine as quickly as it is manufactured and is used in that way to produce power. We believe that it will be much more economical for this purpose than coal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Coming from a prairie province, I am interested somewhat in these experiments with peat. Is it the intention of the government to experiment in making peat brickettes to take the place of coal or wood for heating purposes?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes. The operation of the peat bog is simply to make brickettes to be burned in furnaces or stoves for heating purposes. The purpose of this experiment is, first, to demonstrate how cheaply peat can be produced as a fuel instead of coal; and, secondly, to demonstrate that peat can be put into a gas-producing engine, and the gas used direct to create power.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How far west have these experiments been made? Have they been made in Manitoba or in any of the western provinces?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The department is making the experiment with this particular bog of 300 acres which we bought at Alfred. We put a plant on it, and last week we started to make peat. This is the only place in Canada where we have done any experimenting. We have also put up the experimental testing plant in Ottawa. But the location of peat bogs has been carried on for a number of years by officers of the department, and we now have in the department a record of hundreds of peat bogs in the country. Our investigations have been chiefly in Ontario and Quebec and the maritime provinces, although we know that there are peat bogs in Manitoba and other western provinces. Although the peat bogs in the more populated parts of the country will be the first to be brought into use, we will not neglect the west. For instance, if it is possible to make peat cheaper than you can buy coal in the city of Winnipeg, we will try to demonstrate to the people there that it is their duty to utilize the peat bogs which are not very far from that city.

Mr. GERVAIS. Is it the intention of the department to get the report made by Mr. Mystrom translated?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The translator is very busy getting our reports translated, but I am not sure whether that is one of them or not.

Mr. GERVAIS. I have read the report which Mr. Nystrom has made to Dr. Haanel. I have also read the letter of instructions from Dr. Haanel to Mr. Nystrom, and I notice that Mr. Mystrom has been instructed to inspect the peat bogs of Denmark, Ireland, Belgium and Germany, but there is not one word said about the French peat bogs. As a matter of fact, the largest area of peat bogs, as many as 4,000,000 acres, and the most complete and perfect instruments for the manufacture of peat are to be found in France. I hope that this report, which is only a partial one, will be translated into French for the benefit of the province of Quebec, where many large peat bogs are to be found. I regret that Dr. Mystrom should not have been instructed to visit France, where there is the largest area of peat and where the comparative value of peat, soft, Anthracite, Cardiff coals for self-producing gas engines have been tested and studied more especially by Mr. François Depeaux, of Rouen.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am not sure about the instructions, but there is no doubt that Mr. Mystrom was the engineer who went to Europe on that occasion some years ago. I know he visited the northern countries of Europe, Denmark, Sweden, Germany and Russia, where the manufacture of peat and the utilization of peat are on a larger scale, even than in France, though there is in France a very large quantity.

Mr. GERVAIS. 4,000,000 acres.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Peat is more plentiful in the countries I have named. However, Mr. Mystrom's report I think should be published in French, and that will probably be done if it has not yet been done.

Geological Survey Branch—for explorations and surveys in Canada, including wages of explorers, draftsmen and others, $140,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why that increase?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The explanation is that more parties are being sent out, and they are being made a little larger and stronger. There will be more men in the field, covering Canada as well as they can, from Nova Scotia to British Columbia, this year than ever before.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does this cover the exploration of Canada in conjunction with the work of the Conservation Commission?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We have nothing to do with the Conservation Commission.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does not the Conservation Commission cover the same ground as is covered by this item?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think so.

For the publication of reports, maps, plans, illustrations, &c., $75,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The increase here is due to the increased number of publications and reports.

For the purchase of books, instruments, laboratory apparatus, chemicals, mapping material, stationery, maintenance of offices and museum, transfer and packing of specimens, clothing for three firemen, miscellaneous expenses, $40,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The same reason for the increase here, the increase in departmental work.

To pay for specimens for Victoria Museum, $10,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is an increase of $2,000. We have in view the occupation of the new museum probably before the next session of parliament, and we desire to be in a position to acquire all the specimens that may be offered.

Investigation of the manufactures and storage of explosives in Canada, $10,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That item is due to the fact that we purpose next session introducing a Bill to regulate the manufacture and importation of explosives of all kinds, based upon the English Act. There is nothing of the kind in this country at present. The many fatal accidents that have occurred in mines, and that have been due to premature explosions, and that kind of thing; have brought the matter to the attention of the department, and meetings have been held in mining communities at Cobalt, in British Columbia, and elsewhere, and have adopted resolutions asking the government to pass an Act regulating the manufacture and importation of explosives of all kinds. We have entered into the collection of information already and have some information prepared, but we thought it wise to let the Bill stand over until next session. In the meantime we are going to continue our investigation. We expect to bring an expert from England, an official of the British government who enforces the explosives Act there, with the view of examining all the manufacturing establishments where explosives are made, and with the view of helping us to frame an Act, and of giving us whatever information may be necessaray. That is the purpose of this $10,000 vote. We will certainly require to pay the expert a decent fee, and travelling expenses.

Militia and defence—chargeable to income —ordnance, arms, lands, rifle ranges, reserves, stores and equipment—transferred from militia capital, $1,300,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. For the convenience of hon. members I have had a memorandum printed and circulated, and I hope that every hon. member of the committee has a copy. I have endeavoured to explain the items as fully as possible, and perhaps at this late hour, and at this late period of the session it would be better for me not to make a statement, but simply to endeavour to answer any questions respecting points, which are not dealt with in this memorandum, as we go along. This particular item is one which has been voted for a number of years in capital account. It was changed this year to revenue as it was thought desirable to do so. But, that is the only change, a mere matter of book-keeping. The object for which the money is voted is the same as in former years, and the explanation will be found in the memorandum on page 16, namely the purchase of military stores of various kinds, armament, rifles, artillery, reserve clothing, lands, and constructing rifle ranges.

Mr. DANIEL. That is to be expended during the coming year?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Will that include any of the Mark II * * Ross rifles?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that the rifle you expect to arm the militia with?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In part. We shall have about 80,000 of the Mark 2 rifle with the Mark 3 sight. About 30,000 are being distributed to the cadet corps throughout the country, which will leave about 50,000, which are being distributed to the troops. It is possible that the sight called the Mark 3 sight—which is not the best; there have been many improvements —may be changed to give us the latest up to date sight. We consider that rifle quite as good as any rifle, except, perhaps, the Mark II * *. It is intended to secure the manufacture of, probably, 5,000 of the Mark II * * at the earliest moment, and, later on, a still larger number. But we do not intend to throw over the rifles which have been manufactured; that is not necessary. In point of fact, there is practically no difference between the Mark 2 with the Mark 3 sight, and the Mark II * *, except the length of barrel.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there not a difference in the rifling?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is practically no difference except in length of barrel, and the weight of barrel, which makes the rifle about one pound heavier than the Mark 2 with the Mark 3 sight.

Mr. CROCKET. Is there any difference in the price?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. None, except that we have had to pay $12 more for the Mark II * *, because we have simply had the other rifle converted—the Mark 2 with the Mark 3 sight converted to the Mark II * *. But the company claim that they should receive more for the Mark II * *. We do not admit that, but there is means under the contract by which any difference of that kind can be settled by one expert appointed on either side, and, if they do not agree, these appointing a third.

Mr. CROCKET. What does the department pay apiece for the new rifle?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The price under the contract is $25.

Mr. CROCKET. But the new one?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I say that we pay for the conversion about $12, and we had converted some 700, I think.

Mr. HERRON. Making $37 for the new rifle?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, those that have been converted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Mark II is the rifle we heard of in the early part of the session as having been issued to a few of the members of the House. Have any more been issued?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We provided 500 made last year, and 200 more are being converted now, and I placed an order with the company for 1,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I refer to the discussion with regard to certain members getting rifles for the use of their constituents, the Mark II * * and I want to know whether any more members have got them. I would suggest to the Minister of Militia that all members of this House who are interested in rifle practice should have the privilege of having these rifles sent out for the use of the rifle clubs in their constituencies.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. More have been issued, and I have stated in the House that it was a perfectly proper thing to do. I have had a number of applications since, and shall be very glad to receive others.

Mr. CAMPBELL. From every member?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. ROCHE. Has the minister decided what new rifle ranges should be established in Manitoba this summer?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There are some places mentioned in the memorandum. I would refer the hon. gentleman to page 17—'under consideration'. That does not mean that these will all be constructed, nor does it mean that some others may not be. We have not been able to settle on the list yet. As soon as parliament prorogues, I expect to take that matter up with my officers of the Militia Council.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Are the rates of annual pay to the volunteers who go to camp uniform throughout the Dominion?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Would the minister tell us what they are.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The basis of the pay is 50 cents a day. There is a further sum of 50 cents for good conduct and excellence in rifle shooting. It is the same throughout the Dominion, but the pay a man receives depends upon the way he comports himself in camp.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I understand it is regulated rather by marksmanship and that good conduct does not enter into it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The man who misbehaves does not get it.

Mr. S. SHARPE. There is a good deal of dissatisfaction at the camps in regard to that, arising out of the inefficient marking. As a rule the green men, the worst men in the company, are sent to the butts to do the marking, and consequently it is apt to be inaccurately done. Pay should depend in large measure upon the length of service. Marksmanship might enter into the matter, but there should be more emphasis placed on the length of service.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Great difficulty was found in the first place in ascertaining correctly the length of time an individual may have served, and there is the temptation to misrepresent. Further than that, you might have a man in camp who had attended six years, say, yet who would be unable to hit the target at fifty yards. Such a man is no good as a soldier, we do not want him. I am advised by the adjutant general and other military advisers, that, after careful note of the experience, the present plan is decidedly the best. If the system of marking is defective, that is a very serious matter. I am glad the hon. member (Mr. S. Sharpe) has called attention to it. What he has said here will be carefully read by the officers in charge, and, in any case, I should consider it my duty to bring the subject to their notice. We must see that absolute fair play is given to all the men in this matter which is so vital to them, and on which the amount of pay they receive depends.

Mr. HUGHES. The point referred to by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. S. Sharpe) is very important. But there is another matter which I have officially drawn to the attention of the minister, and which I desire to impress upon him now. Many of the men in camp shoot at a target for the first time. They do not understand sighting the rifle, and unless some one in the regiment is detailed to see that each rifle is properly sighted before the competitor fires, he loses a round or two before he gets his elevation properly. As I pointed out to the minister in a letter some time ago, four or five of the best shots among the officers in a camp last year failed to qualify by reason of having rifles handed to them and having to find the sighting. Major King and Captain Farrell, of the 46 Regt. expert shots took the trouble to sight every rifle before the volunteer fired it. It was a very useful expenditure of ammunition, but it took a couple of rounds extra per man, which were provided at the expense of the regiment. The sighting is a very important matter, because none of the sights put on the rifle are absolutely accurate for the range they are sighted for. I am afraid that there is too much truth in what the hon. member for North Ontario has stated. A good many scorers are not experts, and sometimes, possibly, sufficient care is not taken with the register keepers. That will always require oversight on the part of the range officers and musketry instructors. But the rifles should be tested by one of the officers on the range to see that they are accurate. This will mean a couple of rounds extra per man, and it would be worth it to the department to provide these.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I quite agree with that.

Mr CROSBY. I would like to read a resolution I have here from the municipality of Halifax:—

Moved by Councillor C. E. Smith of Sambro, seconded by Councillor J. V. Reno of Herring Cove.

Whereas the big gun ball and shell practice by the artillery at the forts at the entrance to Halifax harbour causes the fish to swim into deep water and prevents the mackerel from schooling on the south shore of this county and therefore deprives the fishermen living on said shores of the chances of catching these fish with their seines and nets as heretofore, more particularly in the vicinity of said forts.

And whereas the fisheries of our country are of great importance to this province as well as being the chief means of livelihood to hundreds of our fishermen and their families living to the south of Halifax, and every protection should be given to the toilers of the sea in prosecuting their occupation.

And whereas the said big gun practice could be done between the 30th day of November and the 15th day of June in each year, when the fisheries are of less importance to our fishermen as mackerel do not school in such quantities up to that time as they do later in the season.

Therefore resolved that the Dominion government be requested to make such regulations with regard to the time of the big gun practice as will result in the least injury to the fisheries, and to the fishermen on the south shore of Halifax harbour as aforesaid.

Further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Minister of Militia of Canada, and also copies be sent to our representatives in parliament, Messrs Borden and Crosby.

I hereby certify the above to be a true and correct copy of the resolution passed by the Municipal Council of the Municipality of Halifax, Nova Scotia, on the 28th day of February, A.D., 1910.

PARKER ARCHIBALD,
Municipal Clerk.

I presume that the Minister of Militia has received this resolution.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that from the county of Halifax or is it the city?

Mr. CROSBY. Yes, the county. For the benefit of those who may not understand the schooling of mackerel on our Atlantic coast, I may say that during the months of July, August and September, the mackerel school in large quantities on the surface. They run into our bays and harbours and school along the coast. But, with this heavy gun practice at the mouth of Halifax harbour, the fishermen claim the fish are disturbed and they have not the opportunity to catch the fish that they otherwise would. I have heard that the department is trying to meet the views of the fishermen. I hope the minister will see to it that their wishes are met as far as possible.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I received a copy of the petition which the hon. member has read, direct from the municipality. My attention was also drawn to the matter by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). The question was at once referred to General Drury, who took it up with the fishermen. And I believe that an entirely satisfactory arrangement has been reached for the future.

Mr. CROSBY. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. So far as I know, there is no rifle range north of Toronto in the section in which my riding is located, that is, there is no rifle range either in the county of Simcoe or in the county of Grey. I do not wish to press upon the minister any unnecessary expenditure, but I think that possibly a couple of thousand dollars would purchase land and rig up a range that would do for the regiment there, and that possibly could be used by both the Grey and Simcoe regiments.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. At what place?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It could be around the shore of Georgian bay, in the vicinity of Collingwood, or on the sand plains south of Collingwood. I think that a hundred acres of land could be got for, perhaps, $1,500. That is, there is waste land that could be obtained.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A rifle range at Barrie is in the list of those proposed. That would be in that neighbourhood, I think.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I suppose that would do, but I should think it could be put further north than Barrie. If located in the place I have in mind, there would be no danger of people being shot.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am glad to have my attention called to this. We are extremely anxious to afford all the accommodation possible. It is vital to the militia to afford the means of using the rifle at every possible point, because that is the most important part of the training of the militia. I shall be glad to look into this again with a view to seeing whether Barrie is the best point at which to place a range.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the minister doing with regard to cadet rifles?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. With regard to cadets, I stated before my hon. friend came in, that 30,000 of Mark II. rifles are to be issued to the cadets wherever possible. I suppose the ordinary rifle ranges will be used. The cost of constructing special ranges for the use of gallery ammunition is not very great and we will be prepared to afford the necessary expenditure to give the accommodation at every point where it seems to be justified by the numbers who are taking advantage of it.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the minister buying any sub-target guns now, and how many has he purchased?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think there are none provided for this year. We have on hand 550. I gave to the House some time ago the points at which these sub-target guns are distributed. So soon as there is a further demand for them, I expect to ask for a vote. But we do not want to buy them until they are actually required. I think in connection with the very general cadet movement throughout the country, it is probable there will be a considerable demand for these guns at schools and colleges. They have proved to be a most useful accessory to the militia force in teaching the use of the rifle. They are looked upon as indispensable: we could not get along without them in the camps. Men who try to shoot with the rifle and fail, are given a course with the sub-target gun, then they return to the targets and make very good shooting. So I think the results have fully justified our course in purchasing this sub-target gun. I may say that in England it is becoming more and more popular, and I think the same is true in the States.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Has the department under consideration the adoption of a new rifle in line with the rifle which the British War Office is supposed to be experimenting with at the present time? I understand they propose purchasing a rifle of about ·25 to ·28 calibre, and adopting a fire arm of automatic action. Now, a Canadian has the honour of inventing a rifle that has been in use in the British army for a great many years. I think the minister ought to take into consideration the advisability of offering some reward for the best invention along those lines, to stimulate the inventive mind of Canadians to produce a weapon for the British army. I think that in a few years a very modern arm will be made with an automatic rifle of a small calibre. The advantage is that the ammunition required is so small that a discharge can be carried over and above what is carried even with the ·303 which has a small cartridge, and a soldier can carry about half as many again. Has the minister taken that into consideration?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. Of course we know that experiments have been carried on in England with a view to procuring possibly an automatic rifle. We are perhaps not experimenting exactly in that direction, but I have employed the services of two or three expert men in that respect, who have been engaged in the matter of perfecting the Ross rifle with great success. The question of offering a premium or a prize is worth considering. But I say in answer to my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) that if a rifle is adopted by the war office which is better than our rifle and better than theirs, I would consider it my duty to recommend that that rifle should be adopted by Canada; and notice given under our contract to the Ross rifle factory, that at the expiry of a certain time provided by the contract, a year I think it is, we want that rifle manufactured. They would have to do it, and it would be our duty to give them such notice.

Mr. HUGHES. Experiments are being carried on in England at the present time, and I may say—it is not necessary to keep the secret any longer—that we have been carrying on experiments in Canada with automatic rifles. However, I am a little conservative in this matter, and I have very little use so far for an automatic rifle. I think that the experience of riflemen the world over goes to show that it is impossible to keep up the supply of ammunition for automatic rifles in the firing line. I think it would be much better to have long range machine guns with telescopic sights. In my opinion, at all events, until I see an automatic rifle that will win me over, the best rifle in the hands of the soldier would be one with, say a ·280 or ·285 calibre, with a high velocity of 3,000 feet per second, and with telescopic sights. If this were carried out, I am satisfied that the enemy would hesitate a long time before they would advance to any position held by men armed in this way. However, the automatic rifle seems to be the fad at present, and they are experimenting with them in various places, but I have not yet heard that they have been successful.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the difference between a repeating and an automatic rifle?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot say; not very much I should think.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. My experience with the automatic rifle is different from that of the hon. member (Mr. Hughes). I have used a military rifle for many years of course, and for three years I have used a sporting automatic rifle in the bush for days and weeks and under what are equal to war conditions, and I found it not only reliable but just as simple in action as the Snider. There are always prejudices among military men, especially those who are growing older, about changes in equipment. The Duke of Wellington prevented the adopting of the repeating rifle through having laid it down that the bullet must be sufficiently large to break the leg of a horse, and if we apply that rule to-day we could not have high power rifles. Germany and Japan are adopting the automatic rifle as well as Norway and Sweden, and France and England are experimenting. Automatic rifles having proved successful for sporting purposes which is a good test, I think we should begin to consider the matter. When the ·303 rifle was adopted the opinion was generally expressed by officers that it would be useless because the men would not keep it clean, but I know of four or five hundred of these rifles which have been in use for over 12 years, and fully 50 per cent of them are good for active service to-day. I have every confidence that a satisfactory automatic rifle can be obtained.

Militia annual drill, $881,250.

Mr. HUGHES. Will this drill the whole force?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I would suggest to the minister that he might curtail on certain items and increase the pay of the men. Fifty cents a day when everything is so expensive is not much inducement to a young man to join the militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Quite true.

Mr. S. SHARPE. There should be a minimum per day of 75 cents and the efficiency pay added, so as to attract men of better character and better education. We must make our militia more attractive to the young men if we want to get the better class into it. There has been some criticism, how well-founded it is I do not know, against the Militia Department as to the headquarters staff being too large and being over paid. If the minister can make any curtailment there and add it to the pay of the men it would meet with the approval of the country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that would be false economy, but of course it is impossible to discuss that question fully to-night. I do not think there is a dollar more paid to the staff than ought to be paid, provided the staff does its work properly. The question of increasing the pay of the militia is well worth considering. In former days my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) brought up that question a great many times and we eventually adopted the 50 cents efficiency pay idea. I think it is our duty to throw no unnecessary obstacles in the way of the men earning the extra 50 cents efficiency pay, but rather we should make it as easy for them to do so as possible.

Mr. HUGHES. And as honest and as accurate.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly. I would think that all deserving men should earn the dollar per day without difficulty. We shall watch the matter closely during this season, and when we come together again we may take some action

Mr. S. SHARPE. How many on the headquarters staff?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 28.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have long advocated increased pay to the volunteers, and I may say that I am requested to do so again. In fact, the inadequacy of the pay of the volunteers has been, I think, my only criticism with regard to the Militia Department. I do not see why the minister should hesitate to give the men something more than they are getting now.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The statute limits us, and we would have to amend it to increase the pay.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I think I may say that parliament will amend that statute just as soon as the minister brings down the Bill. I believe the sentiment of the House and of the country is in favour of giving our militiamen a little more pay than they are getting now. It is unreasonable to expect men to leave employment at $1 or $2 a day to go to camp for 50 cents. If you increase the pay a little, I am sure you will get a better class of men, and I would ask the minister to consider the propriety of doing so.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not going to advocate a decrease in the pay of the men, but I am going to advocate an increase in the pay of training officers. The only system of training that has been successful in this or any other country is to train the officers as cadets and let them take their place in the ranks as privates, corporals and sergeants, and holding their certificates, work their way up to the command. Then we could select our officers from the men who in subordinate positions had proven their efficiency. The record shows that the increased pay has not brought out a better class of men; indeed, I verily believe that we have not as good a class of men in the militia now as we had when we had well trained officers and the men were paid only 50 cents a day. What you want is efficient and energetic officers in the regiments who will inspire enthusiasm in the men. I know one company in my own regiment in which the assessed value of the property held by the young men and their fathers was over $3,000 each, and that was common in the old days when the pay was only 50 cents, and when the officers were efficient and enthusiastic for the service. The chief inducement to a young man now to go to camp is: Come along and if you make good shooting you will get the increased pay. That is not the way to build up a militia force. A militia force must be a patriotic force. Many regiments, city corps and some rural corps, never touch their pay, they turn it into a fund for other purposes, and I am satisfied that what is wanted is to see that the officers are trained and well trained, and that each company is equipped with officers and non-commissioned officers capable of putting spirit into the men and of leading them on the camp field or in action.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If you compare the militia list of to-day with the militia list of twenty years ago, you will find as many qualified officers now as then and more. However, the young man who takes a commission in a militia regiment is put to a large expense, probably $250 for qualifying and uniforming himself. In Great Britain formerly they granted to each volunteer officer to assist in paying for his uniform twenty to twenty-five guineas. Then to-day the militia uniforms have to pay duty, running $30 or $35. If officers who qualified themselves at a school or military instruction were given an allowance towards providing their uniforms, in two years there would not be a single unit in the country that would not have well qualified, and efficient officers. The pay given officers while attending the schools is really not sufficient to meet their expenses. The social advantages obtained by taking a commission are not great. The officers all over the country give their services, they do not expect pay for them, in fact they invariably fund their pay, and I think it would be highly desirable to adopt some plan as I have suggested.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The suggestion is a very good one, and I agree with my hon. friend that the allowance to officers attending schools of instruction is ridiculously small. I found it there when I came into office. I was discussing it the other day with one of the staff, and I think a change should be made.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister inquired into the system of messing, and the general mode of living in barracks?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We are doing that now.

Mr. HUGHES Proper supervision should be exercised even over officers high in the permanent corps in connection with mess rooms, &c., at the schools. Officers should be taught also that their chief function is to educate those attending the schools along military lines, and not along social or other lines.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is sufficient supervision now. I think, we can scarcely remove the duty on officers' clothing, and I see no reason why uniforms should not be made in Canada, although of course the price would be greater. I agree that the better way out of the difficulty is to give some special allowance for uniforms, and I feel disposed to do that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to call attention to the case of a messenger who was employed in the Auditor General's office. He had been there about ten years, and although technically a temporary officer he was virtually permanent in the same sense as many men in the service, until the passing of the recent Act. He went to South Africa, fought in the war, and his position seemed to have been exactly the same as that of other men who received full pay during their absence, and were reinstated in their positions as soon as they returned. For example, I understand, that his case is exactly the same as that of Cawdron of the Justice Department and Ross of the Dominion Police. He was not reinstated and remained idle for nine months. He lost the continuity of his service, certain statutory increases, and his pay for the nine months during which he was absent, and his pay from the department while he was in South Africa. Certainly in their case there was no delay after they returned. They were reinstated at once, as I am informed, in the positions which they had left to go to South Africa. I do not see why there should be any discrimination in the case of this man.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may say that this man was employed by the Auditor General, and he refused to reinstate him. My hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton brought this case to my notice the other day, and I read all the papers relating to it, and I cannot see in what respect the Militia Department could have any responsibility in the matter at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not say that it has, except that the order in council under which some of these men were re-instated in their positions and received their pay was made on a report of the Minister of Militia and Defence. It seems, therefore, proper to bring it to his attention now.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That was as to the service; but we could not change the rule. The Auditor General insisted on the letter of the rule being followed, and as he employed this man in his department, when he raised that difficulty we could do nothing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have been informed that the present Auditor General takes a different view of it. I do not see why one department of the government should take a different view. The government ought to come to some conclusion about these men. There should be one rule for all and no discrimination. I am informed that there has not been the same rule for all, and that there has been discrimination. If that is so, it ought to be rectified.

Mr. HUGHES. I might point out to the minister that this matter was up years ago. The Auditor General employed this man, and he declined to recommend him for reinstatement, and I presume that the minister took for granted that that settled the case. I wrote to the minister the other day, calling his attention to the fact that Cawdron and Ross had both received their gratuities, although they served under the same conditons as young Cottee. In the same way the friends of two or three men who died on their way to South Africa have received gratuities while the friends of others who died have been refused them. There should be even-handed justice all round.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister, I hope, will look into this matter.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I really do not see that I have anything to do with it; but I shall be glad to take it up and see who is the proper officer to deal with it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the attention of the Minister of Finance been called to it?

Mr. FIELDING. I remember that there was a young man of that name, and my recollection is that he was a temporary employee, and that when he returned his services were not needed. However, I have only a hazy recollection of the facts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He may have been a temporary employee, as other men, who have been in the service of the government for 25 or 30 years, are technically called temporary employees. It is useless to consider these men as in a different position from permanent men in the service, because in honesty and common sense they are not. They are called temporary employees in the statute, but in reality they are permanent employees. This man, I am informed, had been 10 years in the service of the department before he went to Africa. It is idle to talk of that man as a temporary employee.

Mr. FIELDING. I hardly think that is right. There are two classes of temporary employees—the permanent temporary, if one may call them so, and the temporary temporary. There are men who are technically temporary employees, but have been in a department a great many years. Then there are the bona fide temporary employees who are only employed for a short time. I understood that this man belonged to the latter class.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will read this memorandum in more detail than I have done:

Prior to his South African service he had been in the employ of the government for ten years. He had applied in the usual way for leave of absence to serve his country in the war in South Africa. He served in the 6th Regiment Canadian Mounted Rifles. On his return he reported for duty and was told that his position had been filled, as the work could not wait, and for nine months after his return he had no regular or steady employment.

We know that even private corporations kept positions open for men who went to South Africa to fight in that war, and I think it would be very petty for the government to adopt a different principle.

Militia and defence — engineer services, $300,000.

Mr. S. SHARPE. There is an increase of $25,000. Will the minister explain the necessity of it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The increase is simply returning to the normal vote. We had to cut down the vote last year owing to the shrinkage of the revenue, and we are putting it back where it was.

Grant to 65th regiment for armoury, $50,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is to assist in the construction of a large armoury, the government paying one-half. That has been done in two or three cases, and we think it is a very advisable thing to do in the city of Montreal.

Grant to 5th regiment for armoury, $15,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the same thing, the balance of our contribution.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I would like to urge upon the hon. minister the desirability of considering, where the Department of Public Works is erecting a post office or customs building, of placing the headquarters of the militia company, if there should be a company, in the building, and of providing an armoury for the company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In the same building?

Mr. S. SHARPE. Yes, say in the basement of the building. There has been an appropriation for a post office in the town of Uxbridge, and there is no reason why an armoury should not be constructed in the basement of the building. It would save the officers paying the expense of rental. I would strongly urge the minister to have that done. The Minister of Public Works stated the other night that he had had the matter under consideration, and thought favourably of the idea.

Mr. HUGHES. It would be even better to have it in the rear of the building where the boys could have miniature rifle practice, and where the arms could be stored.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Where there is one company, or even two companies the suggestion made by my hon. friend (Mr. Sharpe) would be a very good one. It is being carried out in one or two cases. I think there is a case in the eastern townships, and I think there are one or two others. I will be very glad to take it up with the Minister of Public Works, for I believe it would be an economical arrangement, and it would help us to get armouries more quickly than in any other way.

Mr. CARVELL. There are one or two in New Brunswick.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I think it is very unfair that officers should have to pay rental for an armoury out of their own pocket.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is a special allowance.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Yes, but it is only a small sum, not sufficient to cover the rent of an armoury. I think it is unfair to the officers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of course the old practice was in the rural district for the captain to provide a room in his own house, or to take some outbuilding, and then the $60, or whatever the allowance is was given to him to pay somebody to keep the arms and the clothing in order. That was the origin of the provision many years ago, and it has worked fairly well. Perhaps the country is outgrowing that system, and we have got to adopt a better and a more expensive one.

Mr. S. SHARPE. A few years ago in Uxbridge we had a building and in one room we kept the stores, and we used it for drill, but the department took all the stores to the regimental town of Whitby, and took away our armoury. Now, I think this is a splendid opportunity for the minister. Uxbridge is a suitable town to have a good company headquarters in, and I trust the minister will favour the idea of providing an armoury in conjunction with the post office.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do.

Gratuities, $6,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I want to reduce that amount by $4,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Why?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The intention was to pay a gratuity to Colonel White, but it has turned out as a result of the amendment to the Pension Act that he is entitled to a small pension by counting time he served in the active militia, so that the gratuity will not be necessary.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There was a gratuity to an officer in my corps who caught disease in Quebec?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Henderson?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Yes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is to be paid. The gratuity is to be $1,000 and it will be paid.

Maintainance of military properties, $80,000.

Mr. ROCHE. I would like to make my annual request for a drill hall in the town of Minnedosa.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it not in the supplementaries?

Mr. ROCHE. I have failed to see it in the supplementaries. For a number of years I have been urging the minister to construct in my town a drill hall. We have a number of enthusiastic young men there who have banded themselves together and have a very good company of dragoons. They have carried away first prizes in competitions at the annual drills, but they have not a suitable place for the storing of the government arms. They constructed a frame building at their own expense, but unfortunately that building was burned this winter, and the stores, saddles, bridles and other accoutrements were consumed. I do not know whether there was any insurance on the property or not. I presume a request has been sent in for a new supply. I heard that the town council had been looking for a site which they would be willing to tender to the government in order to secure a drill hall. I think it rather petty that the government would ask them to furnish a site. It is a comparatively small town with 1,700 of a population, and the price of property is comparatively low. Some intimation must have come to them, but if the government will not give a drill hall on other grounds they are willing to give the site. I would strongly urge the minister to give a drill hall to that town. They are very much disappointed and discouraged that they have not one, especially seeing that it was partially promised some years ago.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Roche) has brought the matter to my notice more than once. If there was any correspondence with the town council in regard to a site, it must have been with the Department of Public Works. I have no knowledge of anything of the kind emanating from my department. There is a general vote for the construction of armouries, and it is not necessary that the place should be named in the estimates.

Mr. ROCHE. I was told that six years ago.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the misfortune which our militia friends there have met with in the loss of their building fortifies their claim to have something done, and we will see whether we cannot do something this year.

Mr. JAMESON. I wish to bring to the attention of the hon. minister the need for an armoury at Digby. There is now, as the minister knows, a battery of artillery, and they are very seriously handicapped for lack of a suitable place to store their accoutrements. I understand there are likely to be some guns placed there, and with the added interest which is being taken in the battery, I would like to see better facilities afforded the men. I trust the minister will provide the necessary grant.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We will either have to construct a suitable building or rent one in three or four of the towns in Nova Scotia where the heavy artillery has its headquarters. Yarmouth, I think, is one place, Digby, Pictou and Mahone bay are other places. They are all under consideration, and we will have to provide a proper place for the storage of these expensive guns and equipment.

Mr. JAMESON. Then the matter is receiving the consideration of the minister?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, but I am not saying whether we shall rent a suitable building or build one. That will depend upon the money at our disposal.

Pay, allowances, provisions and supplies of the permanent force, $1,950,000.

Mr. HUGHES. In connection with the headquarters staff and the district staff, it has been the custom for many years to issue a sort of syllabus from time to time for the camps of instruction, prepared, I presume, by some clerk in the department, and these are supposed to form the routine for the instruction in camp. I need not say to any one who has had any experience with them, that those sent out are utterly absurd. The department should undoubtedly prescribe the sections and subjects to be taken up in camp and in which the volunteers should be proficient, but it should be left to the discretion of the officer in command of the camp to prepare his own routine. Where you are out for twelve days camping, and have officers who are supposed to know their business, it is quite out of place to issue such a syllabus.

Salaries and wages of civil employees, $155,000.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I think the minister has adopted a good plan in issuing a memorandum explaining the estimates. Unfortunately it has not been issued soon enough to be of much service to us. I desire to register a protest against allowing the estimates to stand until this late day in the session, near Sunday morning, when we are putting through several million dollars without examination and criticism. The members cannot do themselves justice, nor the public justice, under those circumstances. If that memorandum had been issued earlier in the session we would have been better able to study it. This item, and a previous item for paying allowances at headquarters to command and district staffs, seem to be large amounts in connection with our militia affairs, they seem to be out of all proportion to the number of men we have on the permanent staff. It seems to me the staff is overcrowded. I cannot understand why we should require so much expense at the headquarters staff and so many civil employees.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The explanation with regard to civil employees is to be found here. The small increase is due to the fact that certain things that were done by the Public Works are taken over by the Militia Department. As regards the staff, it is altogether too late to discuss that question. But I agree entirely with my hon. friend that it would be much more desirable that these estimates should be discussed earlier in the session. I expected that would be done, and this memorandum was prepared in the month of December. It was not issued, because I thought it would be better to issue it only two or three days before taking up my estimates in the House, and it was issued the day before yesterday. I hope next session we will be able to take the matter up earlier, and I think I will be able to prove to my hon. friend, who is himself a militia man, the absolute necessity of having a large and efficient headquarters staff. I think I can demonstrate to him that our staff is less expensive, even taking into consideration the relative strength of our militia, than is the staff of Switzerland, whose militia is, of course, ahead of the world. There is no other force in the world that, for cheapness and efficiency, can be compared with the militia of Switzerland. In a memorandum that I laid before parliament two years ago, I demonstrated that fact beyond doubt; and I had the advantage of laying before the House a carefully prepared memorandum made by General Lake, which entirely supported the view I have presented. I hope at some other time to have an opportunity of discussing this matter more fully.

Mr. S. SHARPE. How does the minister explain the large increase of $75,000 in salaries and wages to civil employees?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. $17,000 is taken over from the Public Works, and $39,706 which was paid out of clothing vote, is put into this vote. So the only difference consists in certain new appointments, and increasing the rate of wages, $7,800.

Topographical survey, $30,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Speaking of the general staff, how many members of that general staff are supposed to be in Canada?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Five I think. We change them from time to time.

Mr. HUGHES. Are they elected on account of any general fitness?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They must all have passed the staff college, that is their only recommendation. As I explained to the House a few days ago in connection with the Royal Military College, we have brought out an officer to take charge of the Royal Military College, and two persons who are specially qualified to be members of the general staff. General Lake and General Otter are members of that staff.

Monuments to battlefields — amount required towards the erection of a monument to commemorate the battle of Stoney Creek—revote, $5,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to draw the minister's attention to a matter which I had the honour of speaking to him about a few days ago. In the county I represent, in the township of Nelson, on Lake Ontario, there is a small graveyard in which are buried some of those who took part, I am informed, in the battle of Stoney Creek, Queenston Heights, Lundy's Lane, and also at Detroit. The graveyard has been practically abandoned for over forty years, and the descendants of those old warriors who were buried there seem to have all passed away or left that section of the country, and there is no one to look after this old cemetery. It is the desire of the people living in that neighbouring that it should be cared for in some way, and I think it is fitting, when the minister is asking a sum in connection with the battlefield of Stoney Creek, that something should be done to commemorate the memory of those who fought for their country and who lie buried in this old graveyard. I hope the minister will take the matter into consideration. The old graveyard is 80 yards long and 30 yards broad and it would not cost much to build a wall round it to protect it from desecration. I hope the minister will meet the wishes of the people.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall be very glad to look into the matter.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I call the attention of the minister to the conditions with reference to Fort Malden on the Detroit river. From that point issued the expedition under General Brock that captured Detroit, and so it is an epoch making land mark in our country. I understand Fort Malden is now owned by private parties and is being laid out for town lots so that in a few years that famous spot will disappear from the ken of the public. Fort Malden is just as worthy of preservation as Fort George or any other of the historic places along the frontier. Mr. Clarke of Essex and I have received communications from parties interested in having the land at Fort Malden taken over by the government. I hope the minister will see what can be done.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall be very glad to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where is the monument to be erected at Stoney Creek?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Where the battle was fought, I think.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the cost to be?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it is to cost $10,000, and we are contributing one-half.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is the government contributing to the Laura Secord memorial?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a contribution to the association.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is the government grant on condition that the memorial should be in the form of a monument?

Mr. FIELDING. That is in the hands of the association, but I believe the monument is being erected.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have had correspondence at the beginning of the session with a lady who is in charge of that, and she understood then that no provision was made for a contribution.

Mr. FIELDING. I have given direction that the amount should be paid before the close of the present fiscal year, and I think the matter has been arranged satisfactorily.

Mr. LANCASTER. These people are not in my county, but I have promised them to do what I could in the matter.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman will find it is satisfactory.

Mr. LANCASTER. The prevailing opinion now is that it would be better to erect a memorial hall rather than a monument. Is the government insisting that it should take the form of a monument?

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that the proposal made was for the erection of a monument and that we granted aid to that. I do not think we have imposed any condition that it should be a monument.

Mr. LANCASTER. If those interested change their idea and decide on erecting a memorial hall rather than a monument, I hope the government will not insist that their original request be adhered to.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the monument, if not constructed is under contract.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not think it is, because it is only this session I was asked to advocate this with the Minister of Militia.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is it the intention of the government to give a grant to the memorial tower at Halifax?

Mr. FIELDING. I think there is a vote in the estimates for that.

Some resolutions reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING presented a message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1911.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, His Excellency's message, together with his estimates were referred to the Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. What business will be taken up on Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. Private Bills, and when we reach government orders all the resolutions that stand on the order paper will be taken up in their turn.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.57 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 2, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

ALIEN LABOUR ACT—ALLEGED IMPORTATION OF RAILWAY LABOURERS.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I have a matter to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. King). I received a letter from Boissevain concerning men coming across the line to work on the Great Northern railway. The employers are dismissing all the Canadians along that line from the boundary to Brandon and substituting for them Greeks imported from the other side. This has been giving us trouble for some time, and I would like the Minister of Labour to look into the matter.

Mr. KING. If the hon. member (Mr. Schaffner) will send me the communication to which he refers, I will make the necessary inquiry.

WESTERN GRAIN TRADE.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I wish to put on 'Hansard,' for the benefit of the Department of Trade and Commerce, a letter I received this morning. It is from Mr. R. McKenzie, secretary of the Grain Growers' Association of Manitoba, and is as follows:

Winnipeg, Can.,
April 28th, 1910.

Dr. Schaffner, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

My dear sir,—

In further reference to the subject matter of my telegram to you, as you will no doubt know, the stock of the different grades in store in the terminal elevators was weighed in August of last year, and immediately on the close of navigation Inspector Gibbs made an estimate of the quantity in store of each grade by measurement. There is a report current that this estimate showed that the amount of high grade wheat shipped out far exceeded the amount received and as a consequence the Department of Trade and Commerce ordered the warehouse commissioner to institute an investigation. This investigation has been going on for some time and culminated in three of the terminal elevator companies being fined on information sworn out by Mr. Castle on the 22nd inst. Report has it that the solicitor representing the elevator company and the solicitor representing the department and Mr. Castle had arranged that the charge should be that of making false statements rather than the more serious charge of mixing grain. Be that report true or not, the fact remains that in place of the former being tried in open court, the solicitor for the terminal elevator companies met Mr. Daly in Mr. Hudson's office (Mr. Hudson being Mr. Castle's solicitor), and pleaded guilty, and was fined, the object apparently being to prevent the matter from coming before the public.

We think that this 'star chamber' method of holding court should not be tolerated. If these terminal elevators are offenders against the law they should be treated as other offenders. It is a matter of common knowledge that practices in contravention of the law and against the best interests of the country were indulged in in these elevators for many years, and when the offenders were once brought to justice there should be no effort to endeavour to minimize the effect it would have. A simple fine is no punishment to these people. Publicity is what they are afraid of.

In the few days you have at your disposal before the House prorogues, will you, in the interests of the farmers, do what you can to get Mr. Castle's report and all correspondence brought down so that the public may know what has been done. I do not think at all that the Department of Trade and Commerce want to conceal anything, and there should be no disposition on the part of anyone to protect those who are accused of tampering with our grades. Our government undertakes to deliver our grain on the world's market according to specifications defined by statutes. Their inspectors compel the farmers to meet the requirements of the specifications and they should see that their inspectors should also compel those who handle our grain to comply with the requirements of those specifications in the handling of our grain.

Yours very truly,

R. McKENZIE,
Secretary.

Mr. OLIVER. Following up the subject which my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner) has just laid before the House, I may say that Mr. Castle's report on this case was laid on the table on Friday.

TREATMENT OF STEAMSHIP PASSENGERS.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to read a report from the superintendent of immigration on the subject brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) some days ago:

With regard to the letter read in parliament on the 26th instant, by Mr. Lennox, M.P., I beg to state that full inquiry had been made into the question of the delay of passengers ex SS. 'Corsican' before the matter was brought up in the House.

Under date of April 4, M. J. V. Lantalum, our agent at St. John, wrote giving his reasons for the action he took. According to his report the 'Corsican' entered the dock at ten minutes to six o'clock, having on board 16 saloon, 364 2nd cabin and 250 steerage passengers. Mr. Lantalum's contention is that had the passengers been landed it would have been very late in the night before their baggage could be checked and passengers started on their railway journey. In support of his contention that it would be very late before the passengers would be able to get away from St. John, Mr. Lantalum mentions the fact that although landed at 9.05 a.m. Sunday morning, it was 3.30 in the afternoon before they got the first train away, and 4.15 when the second train left, seven hours and ten minutes from the time of landing until the last train left. Mr. Lantalum points out that if it required seven hours and ten minutes to check the luggage, &c., during daylight on Sunday, it is only reasonable to suppose that it would have required a much longer time at night when the passengers were tired and other circumstances not so favourable. He also contends it would have been a hardship for the women and children to remain awake while the preparations were being made. It is evident there was a difference of opinion among the passengers as to what should be done, many being of the same opinion as Mr. Lennox's correspondent, that they were undergoing a hardship by being delayed. On the other hand Mr. Lantalum says in his report:

'Many of the passengers were very much pleased at being kept on the ship all night as they said they had a good night's rest which would enable them to stand the long rail journey. One head of a family thanked the immigration authorities warmly for it.'

It is quite evident that Mr. Lantalum's action was taken solely in the interests of the passengers, and while I personally think it would have been wiser to have landed them, I do not think Mr. Lantalum is open to any censure for the action he took. I am, however, notifying him in future that when boats whose passengers had been examined at Halifax reach St. John before 8 p.m., he is to allow them to land, providing the steamship and railway companies desire him to do so.

W. D. SCOTT,
Superintendent of Immigration.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand that this is not likely to occur again.

Mr. OLIVER. Not at St. John.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to ask the government for three returns as follows: One ordered by the House on December 1 with reference to the British and United States agreement on the great lakes; the second ordered by the House on January 17 with reference to the commissions issued by this government, and the third ordered by the House on February 28 showing the employees in the civil service. I would like very much to get these returns.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With regard to the last named, I think it has been brought down. I will make inquiries. As to the agreement on the great lakes, I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) refers to the Waterways Treaty?

Mr. FOSTER. No, to the agreement concering naval armaments on the great lakes, the Rush-Bagot arrangement.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will inquire into that.

SURVEY IN ST. JOHN RIVER CHANNEL.

Mr. CROCKET. I call again the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the returns in connection with the survey in the channel of the St. John river. I am anxious to have that brought down before prorogation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have made inquiries, and was informed they had gone to the Department of the Secretary of State. I presume they will reach here to-day or to-morrow at latest.

SCRIP TO SOUTH AFRICAN VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior a question, and to get some information. On their way to South Africa a number of soldiers died, and I understand that the friends or legal representatives of those soldiers in many cases are denied the right to scrip because the soldiers did not land in South Africa. But the representatives of two, if not three, of those soldiers have been given their scrip, and I would like to know from the minister how he makes fish of one and flesh of the other.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that probably my hon. friend's question should be addressed to the Minister of Militia and not to the Minister of the Interior, as it is the Department of Militia which decides who should get scrip, and we only issue a land warrant on receipt of the bounty warrant from the Militia Department.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will look into this matter. All these matters have to be attended to by Col. Smith, who is an extremely careful officer. I have given no instructions to make any discrimination between applicants.

Mr. HUGHES. In case it is found that the representatives of two or three of these men who died before reaching South Africa, have received their scrip, may we expect that others in the same case will be dealt with in the same way?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I can hardly make any promise of that kind. If there has been an unintentional discrimination of the kind, I think that some remedy will have to be applied. I will look into the matter.

DELAY IN MAILS BETWEEN MONTREAL AND LOWER PROVINCES.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would like to invite the attention of the Postmaster General to the subject of the transmission of mails from Ontario to points east of Montreal, particularly to the maritime provinces. Letters mailed in Toronto or at Ottawa, or at any other point in Ontario west of Montreal, in the evening of any day, reach, in the ordinary course, Montreal on the next morning. They are there held apparently until the evening of that day, and are then sent out in the Canadian Pacific railway mail train to points east. Apparently, the Post Office Department is not aware that there is a mail train leaving by the Intercolonial at 12 o'clock each day, and if these letters and other mail matter were transmitted by that Intercolonial train, they would reach Moncton and other points east much earlier, and reach the recipients fully a day in advance of the time when they actually reach their destination. The difficulty appears to be in connection with the transfer of mails at Montreal. It seems to me that the letters should be sent forward by the Intercolonial at 12 o'clock, instead of being held in Montreal until 7.25 the same day.

Mr. CROCKET. That would apply only to mail for the north shore counties in New Brunswick.

Mr. EMMERSON. The mails for Fredericton and St. John of course reach St. John about the same time if they go by the Intercolonial. But the complaint arises in connection with the mails for Moncton, and points east on the Intercolonial in Nova Scotia and at other points in New Brunswick.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am glad my hon. friend has called my attention to that defect in the service. He saw me the other day, and immediately I wrote to the Montreal postal authorities to see that all mail destined to the lower provinces arriving in Montreal in the morning, should be forwarded by the noon train. There is no reason why the mails should not be transferred at once. A letter leaving Ottawa at night, even late at night, reaches Montreal at 8 o'clock in the morning by the western train. There is no reason why the mails should not be transferred from the Windsor station to the Grand Trunk station between 8 or 8.30 in the evening and 12 o'clock next day. There is something wrong in the service there, and I will give the necessary instructions that the complaint be remedied at once.

Mr. CROCKET. I hope the Postmaster General will not think of making the change in regard to all the portions of the maritime provinces. If the arrangement proposed by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) were adopted, it would cause a delay in the arrival of mail at St. John and Fredericton which are served by the Canadian Pacific railway sooner than by the Intercolonial.

FOREST RESERVE AT OKA RIVER.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to call the attention of the departments interested to a matter which I brought up earlier in the session; I refer to a petition that was sent by the people of the municipality of Oka river complaining that, owing to the fact that the forest reservation was immediately south of that municipality, the water backs up there and gradually overflows the lands, and prevents the farmers from putting in their crops in the vicinity of that reserve. I wrote to the Minister of the Interior asking favourable consideration of this matter, also to the Minister of Public Works and to the Prime Minister. I think it is only a moderate request on behalf of the people of that municipality that they should be aided in some way to build drains to take care of the water that overflows their land from the timber reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. Speaking for the Department of the Interior which is responsible for the existence of the forest reserve, I do not understand that the existence of that reserve has any particular bearing on the undesirable presence of the water. It is because of the topographical condition, for which the department is not responsible, and therefore it seems to me that the department or the government cannot be called upon to make good a damage which does not exist because of the action of the department or of the government; it is something for which no department of the government is responsible. While I am speaking on this subject, I may be permitted to say that I think the subject of drainage is one that is essentially a provincial matter; under these circumstances I do not think it would be right and proper that the federal government should undertake to do that which is essentially a provincial work.

Mr. SPROULE. How can the province drain through Dominion lands?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I realize that the minister is right in a great measure when he says that drainage is essentially a matter that appertains to the local provincial governments, but when they form a drainage district the lands within that district are charged with their share of the expense. It is impossible, as I understand, to charge Dominion lands and I just ask as a matter of fair play to the municipality that the Dominion contribute in some way towards the draining of this land which is absolutely necesary owing to the fact of the wooded country being immediately south of the municipality.

Mr. LANCASTER. I may say to the minister what my hon. friend contends for has been adopted by this House as a principle in regard to Dominion railways. The Dominion railways could not be made to contribute to the cost of draining their lands as well as the adjoining lands by provincial authority, but we saw the evil and we agreed to amend the Railway Act a few years ago by providing that we would make the Dominion railways which are under the control of this country contribute, under the provincial authority, in the same manner as my hon. friend contends that Dominion lands should. I think that parliament, in order to be consistent, should adopt the same system of legislation as that which was adopted in regard to the Dominion railways and for the same reason that Dominion lands should contribute as contended for by my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask——

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not permissible at this stage to discuss the question. It may be done on going into Supply.

Mr. HUGHES. I am only going to ask a question. Is it not the damming of the Ochre river cause by the debris, logs, timber, &c., from the forest reservation, and is it not the minister's plain duty to see that this debris is cleared out of the forest reservation so as not to dam the river?

Mr. OLIVER. The reason is because the land in the Dominion reservation is high and on a slope and the land through which the Oka river runs is flat. The water runs down on the flat land and the river does not run fast enough to carry it away for which conditions the Dominion government is in no sense responsible. In regard to what the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) said, the subject which he mentioned is a matter for consideration, but I submit it is a matter for legislation rather than for administration.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE CADETS—VISIT TO OTTAWA.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand that the cadets of the Royal Military College are to visit Ottawa to-morrow or next day, and I desire to ask the Minister of Militia if any arrangement has been made whereby the members of parliament could have an opportunity of viewing these young men. I think it is very proper that they should be brought here, and that the representatives of the people should have an opportunity of seeing them the first time they visit the city of Ottawa.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think there will be no difficulty in making an arrangement. I am not aware that any special arrangement has been made. It has been understood generally that parliament was likely to prorogue before the day of their arrival but if there is any desire of the kind intimated by my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) I will see that some arrangement is made to have them parade here.

WESTERN GRAIN TRADE.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) brought a matter up in this House some days ago, to which I made answer. He writes me that the answer was not correct, that it was not an answer exactly to the question he asked. He asked in regard to a certain deputation which visited Ottawa on a certain day. I gave him an answer in regard to one deputation, but he writes me that he wishes an answer in regard to another deputation. The first deputation was representative of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association. The second deputation, or the deputation which he has alluded to, was a deputation of parties who are interested in the export of grain. My remembrance of the interviews that took place is that both deputations were urging the same action and for the same reasons, and in neither case was it legislation that they required so much as administration.

COAL SUPPLY FOR NOVA SCOTIA LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the hon. acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Templeman) for some information with respect to the matter set forth in the following letter:

Will you kindly ask why the coal was taken from the light-keepers on the Nova Scotia coast last fall? I consider it a shame. One of the keepers, a friend of mine, was not notified of this until the 18th of December last. He was looking every day for his coal to be delivered as usual and the SS. 'Aberdeen' came along and the captain informed him, if he wanted coal he had orders to sell it to him, as that was the orders from Ottawa. This keeper is six miles from mainland and at that time of year to get that notice is shameful. We have another instance of it; the light-keeper and his only son at Marie Joseph, while gathering wood, were both drowned a few weeks ago. Had they been supplied with coal this would not have happened.

I do not know anything about the matters mentioned, but the gentleman from whom I received this letter is a very reliable and trustworthy man of excellent standing in the community in which he lives, and I knew that he would not have made these statements if they were not founded on fact. If the minister will kindly obtain the information and let me have it, I will be very glad.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I will be very pleased to give my hon. friend an answer, and if, in the meantime, my hon. friend will permit me to have that paper or memorandum—as 'Hansard' will be out too late in the morning—I will have an answer for him to-morrow morning.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) to have the return brought down that I moved for on the 14th February last.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Murphy) has the matter in course of preparation. There are some documents which were sent to the Prime Minister but the return will be down to-morrow.

CANADA GAZETTE—PUBLICATION IN FRENCH LANGUAGE.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would like to ask the government if it is their intention to comply with a request which I find contained in a resolution passed by the hon. the Senate on the 14th April, 1910, reading as follows:

The Hon. Mr. Landry moved, seconded by the Hon. Mr. David,

That in the opinion of this House the most elementary justice and respect for the constitution demand that every time laws, regulations, orders in council, or any documents concerning the public in general, are published in English in the 'Canada Gazette,' that journal, which is the official organ of the country, ought equally to contain the publication in the French language of the same laws, regulations, orders in council, or documents concerning the public in general.

The question of concurrence being put thereon, the same was Resolved in the affirmative, and Ordered accordingly.

I would like to supplement this resolution by one remark. In the province of Quebec very often——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot discuss that question now. He can only put a question.

Mr. GERVAIS. Well, I would like to ask the government, and the Secretary of State more especially, if it is their intention that the necessary orders shall be given to the King's Printer to bring about compliance with the request contained in that resolution?

Mr. FIELDING. I will call the attention of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to my hon. friend's question. I would not care to answer it immediately.

DETENTION OF MR. ALEXANDER LYONS AT ELLIS ISLAND, N.Y.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) to a despatch which I see in this morning's 'Citizen,' and which reads as follows:

Mr. Alex. Lyons, former vice-president of the Amalgamated Carpenters' Unions of Toronto, has been detained by the immigration authorities at Ellis Island, N.Y., and prevented from coming to his home in Toronto. As a result the local labour men are indignant. Mr. Lyons left for Toronto during the winter to visit the old country and to work at his trade for a while. He was on his way home when he was stopped by the authorities. It is understood that the amount of money sufficient to pay his fare to Toronto was not in his pocket at the time he landed and that is the excuse on which he is held. The local unions are taking up the case at once.

TERMS OF EMPLOYMENT OF RAILWAY MEN.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I have had placed in my hands a copy of the approved uniform code of rules for Canadian railways, approved by the Railway Commission.

I find in the general notice a clause which says that employees in acepting an employment assume its risk. I understand that such a code or rules as are approved by the Railway Commission are virtually the law of this country. I would like to know from the government if such a clause as this is to deprive the workmen on railways of their rights under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Is it the intention that this rule shall become the law of the land?

Mr. FIELDING. I should not imagine that a mere order of the Railway Commission could override the laws of the land. I would not care to discuss the question, but I shall call the attention of the Minister of Railways to it and ask him to give an answer tomorrow.

PRIVATE BILLS.

RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION OF CANADA.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 210) to incorporate the Retail Grocers' Association of Canada.—Mr. Gervais.

On section 1, incorporation:

Mr. EMMERSON. I was unfortunately prevented from being in my seat on Friday evening when this Bill was under discussion, otherwise I would have taken occasion to express my judgment on it. It seems to me that this legislation properly belongs to the provincial legislatures, and that at this stage of the session certainly the time of this House should not be taken up with it. We have had similar legislation before parliament this very session. I understand this legislation is designed to protect the retail merchants in the several provinces. We have had legislation proposed with a view to protect the consumer, and that legislation met with but scant courtesy at the hands of parliament. This legislation, I am sure, is not any more entitled to consideration. I wish to be placed on record as entirely opposed to the measure in its general principles and also in detail. It is not necessary for these men to apply to this parliament for legislation to govern any association which they may have. While I can understand that there may be some reason for the wholesale merchants having Dominion incorporation, the same reasons do not apply in the case of a retail merchant whose business horizon is necessarily a very narrow one, certainly not extending beyond his own province. Many of them do not go in their business transactions beyond the the community in which they reside. The retail merchants should go to their provincial legislatures for incorporation. It cannot be argued that the provinces have no jurisdiction over such matters. There is too strong a tendency for the Dominion to encroach on the provincial jurisdiction, and we should not permit these gentlemen to take up the time of this House. I feel that this committee should at this moment take a very determined stand against advancing this Bill any further during the present session at least.

Mr. NEELY. I had hoped the Prime Minister would be in his place when this Bill came up this morning, because I wanted to make an appeal to him, but as the Minister of Public Works is apparently leading the House in his absence, I would appeal to him. When the Bill first came up, a motion was made that the committee rise after the first section had been defeated by a considerable majority, but in deference to the feelings and wishes of the promoter that motion was withdrawn and the committee also consented to reconsider clause 1, the understanding of those who had voted against the Bill being that the promoter wished to withdraw it. This is the third time the Bill has been in the Committee of the Whole House. It took up the whole of the hour for private Bills on Friday night. A large number of the members have gone away, as the session is drawing to a close and numbers of those who had voted against the Bill are not present. I appeal to the fairness of the promoter, and I ask the minister of Public Works if it is a fair proposition to press this Bill to a conclusion after we have had a division of the committee, now to bring it forward the third time, when a large number of the members are not here to vote.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I might remind my hon. friend that this is a private Bill, and I do not think the government should be urged to take any charge of the committee upon it.

Mr. BEST. I am surprised to see this Bill again before the commitee. A few days ago we passed an Anti-Combine Bill. This morning, after discussing this three times, we are asked to pass a Bill that may lead to the formation of a huge combine. I cannot see where this Bill will help either the producer or the consumer, and I want to be placed on record as being straight against this Bill. I think it is unfair to bring it before the House at this time. The Bill was voted down and out the first time it was discussed, and now, when many members are away, it is brought forward again when we expect to prorogue in a short time.

Some hon MEMBERS. Vote.

Mr. GERVAIS. Before the vote is taken I wish to say a few words. I have been listening to the so-called arguments of the hon. gentlemen on three different occasions, on two nights and one day, and I think I am entitled to say a few words as a rejoinder of issue. The hon. gentlemen have tried to bring forward some arguments, but I can assure you that nothing but fiction, imagination, and something else which I shall not qualify has been advanced in support of the rejection of this Bill. Who are the promoters of this Bill? The retail merchants of Canada who are deserving so great consideration in Canada. I have been sitting in this House for seven years. In that time we have incorporated companies right and left at the request of groups of five persons. Provided five persons have paid $200, a fine of $100 sometimes, and sometimes a fee of $1,200, charters have been granted for the incorporation of companies of all kinds, so-called railway companies, so-called banking houses, so-called trade unions, so-called benevolent societies—as a matter of ract any group of five men in the land coming before this high court of parliament, the highest of Canada, has been granted a charter. Surely, before this parliament I can appeal under better circumstances than before any lower court, any Superior Court or Court of Appeal in my province and any group of men should be given a fair hearing in this parliament. In this particular case the retail merchants of our country should be granted a fair hearing, as fair as the many hundreds of corporations that have been created since confederation. I am now rather surprised to see so many hon. members of parliament speaking so lightly or slightingly of the retail merchants of Canada, the promoters of this Bill. As a matter of fact who are the retail traders and wholesale traders of Canada? They are well known, deserving and progressive people, they have done more for the benefit of Canada than most all of the workingmen of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes, yes. That may be a surprise to you, but if you read the latest discoveries of social history you will find that the traders of the world have done an immense work for the progress and advancement of humanity. This has been the case in Canada and hon. members should not speak so disparagingly of the traders of Canada.

Mr. TOLMIE. What about the farmers?

Mr. GERVAIS. The farmers have done their part of the work. What do you find in clause 1 of the Bill? That well known merchants all over Canada, numbering about 100, are now asking this parliament of Canada just to give them a charter to enable them to enjoy the powers and rights which are granted to any corporation under common law, under the civil law, under the law of confederation; because before all, I challenge any opponent of this Bill to point out to the House one paragraph, one sentence, one word, tending to show or of the nature to show that from the incorporation of this company a monopoly will be created, or a so-called combine or that any illegal act will be committed. I repeat, it is fiction, it is imagination—I do not want to give out the third epithet—it is fiction and imagination to pretend that through the instrumentality of this Bill a monopoly will be created or a combine will be brought into existence. As I said, I am surprised to see how the retail merchants of Canada are being treated by some hon. members of the House. The hon. member for Humboldt on Friday night last, tried but failed to advance reasons why we should not incorporate the Retail Merchants Association of Canada.

This House of parliament is a high court of justice to hear such demands as are made here and to grant them. Those demands or requests are framed in accordance with the constitution of 1867 and in accordance with the rules of parliamentary procedure. The Retail Merchants' Association of Canada have presented to this House a petition which has been properly signed. They have made the required deposit, given the necessary notice, and the Bill has been introduced in due form.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is no petitioner outside of Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. GERVAIS. I beg the pardon of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). This incorporation is being sought for by the general traders of Canada. This Bill is not being forced upon this House by the association of retail merchants of but one province only. It has been presented in proper form with due notice; it has been reported to the House, which, I claim, is in duty bound to pass it. There is no reason for the rejection of the Bill. I challenge any lawyer in the House, and if the Minister of Justice were in his seat I would ask him to give his opinion, to say that he can find anything in the Bill which can be interpreted as trespassing upon or invading the rights of anybody or to show anything in the Bill which would create anything like a monopoly, combine or commercial company. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) has told the House that the Retail Merchants' Association if incorporated would tend to create a monopoly or combine of the nature which the House declined to accept in the Co-operative Societies Bill. If you read over the Bill relating to the so-called co-operative credit societies, you will find that the societies which sought to incorporate under that Act were asking powers to borrow money or to lend money. I was a little aggrieved to see so many members not of the legal profession putting a construction upon the Bill which cannot be justified by the general rules of interpretation. I call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that there is no danger of any monopoly, trust or combine being created for the very simple reason that the association will have no power to buy goods or to sell goods or to borrow money. They will have no power to do any trade of any kind and they will be powerless to make any of the 20 contracts which are known under common law and under the civil law of the province of Quebec.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What about section 6?

Mr. GERVAIS. Under section 6 the association is merely authorized to borrow a few dollars on its notes or acquire a little property for its offices.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no limit.

Mr. GERVAIS. There is a limit. It is only authorized to borrow a few dollars for the realization of purposes as defined in clause 2.

Mr. EMMERSON. How about section 8?

Mr. GERVAIS. The limit is this, that they cannot use that money except for the purposes mentioned in section 2, and if any member will read over section 2 he will find that the association is powerless to make any contract or do any trade of any kind. My hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) is too clever a lawyer not to understand that under section 2 the association is powerless to make any contract, do any trade or any banking. He knows quite well that if they did, there are common law remedies, and the association could be brought to terms in any court of the land by a writ quo warranto on information. I repeat that this mischief feared by some hon. members is not possible under the provisions of the Bill, as the moment the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada tried to open a store, they could be enjoined by a writ quo warranto, while if they formed any combine they could be brought before the criminal courts and forced to account for their action. For, as we all know, there are provisions in the Criminal Code of Canada which have a very important bearing upon conspiracies in restraint of trade. Should any group of retail merchants use this association for the purpose of making what is known as a combine or monopoly, anybody in the land—anybody —can bring those offenders before the criminal courts. All fears of combine or monopoly through such a measure as this fade away the moment I draw attention to the fact that anybody in Canada may become informer and bring before the criminal court, not merely one man, but even all the members of this Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, to force them to withdraw from an illegal combine should any such be formed.

Then, there is a third remedy, and a very good one. Should the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada form a combine, the law which has just been enacted at the instance of the Minister of Labour can be made use of to prevent the continuance of any such anti-commercial organization. Thus, we have the three remedies, legal and complete remedies, should this Act of Incorporation be taken advantage of for the purpose of forming a combine in restraint of trade: first, the quo warranto on information of the Crown; second, the anti-combines law; and, third, bringing before the criminal courts the merchants accused of maintaining a combine.

Some hon. members of this House call for the rejection of this Bill but without showing any reason for such a course. I have said, and I think I have shown, that the retail merchants of Canada are entitled to some little consideration from this House. And all they ask is the same consideration that is given to any group of five men, which groups have been incorporated right and left by this parliament, the only conditions demanded being, proper notice for one month, a deposit of $200, and the following of a procedure established under certain rules. The Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, are, purely and simply —yes, and I say exclusively—requesting this House to give them a charter of incorporation. Is there any good reason to dismiss such an application? I wonder if the opposition to this Bill can arise because two Bills relating to the incorporation of co-operative societies which have claimed the attention of the House for the last two sessions have been dismissed? But it is rather queer to note that the most rabid opponents of the Bill now before us, who oppose it on the ground that its promoters have been fighting the co-operative Bills, never attended the sittings of the Banking and Commerce Committee before which the arguments for and against the co-operative Bills were brought out. This I believe, is true of these gentlemen with one exception. The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely)—

Mr. NEELY. I am not a member of the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Mr. GERVAIS. But as amicus curiae, as one interested in the matter, perhaps the hon. gentleman might have brought to the committee the supply of information which had been given him by an employee of this House. As we all know, everybody was welcome to appear before the Banking and Commerce Committee, and everybody who had information to give was well received and attentively listened to. I am surprised that the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) was not good enough to give the Banking and Commerce Committee the benefit of his extensive data and information in relation to co-operative societies and the marvellous things they have been doing in foreign lands—though they have brought nothing but disaster in Canada. I have acted as legal adviser for five or six co-operative societies in the course of my experience as a lawyer, and, so far as I have observed these societies, they have resulted only in failure, fraud and bankruptcy. It is for this very reason that I did not feel disposed to give my support to a general law to incorporate co-operative societies—a blanket Act under which any group of seven persons can form a trading society, a wholesale society or a banking society, if they will put up $1 apiece, making a capital, to begin business, of the magnificent sum of seven dollars. Is it because I stated before the Banking and Commerce Committee that I did not believe in any such financial theory that I find that in this House the supporters of these Bills make it a crime for me to have acted according to the dictation of my conscience and the warnings of my experience of twenty-five years? Fortunately or unfortunately, I have been the legal adviser of most of the co-operative societies established in Montreal within the last twenty-five years, and I could myself furnish a few data to the hon. member for Nanaimo who seems so well supplied with all kinds of information on this subject, taken from his head and from abroad and from his—

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. GERVAIS. I have not yet concluded my remarks. Every hon. member in this House has plenty of time to support his own request which he makes in this House; and I think that the many thousands of retail merchants of Canada, the retail merchants as well as the wholesale merchants, are entitled to a few hours of our attention in this House. These retail merchants' associations will have something to say when the election comes on, as well as the wholesale merchants, and I think these retail merchants' associations deserve to be heard.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. This matter has been before the committee for some time, and I feel sure every member on both sides of the House is well informed in regard to it. I beg therefore to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BOYCE. This House has voted several times on this Bill already, therefore, I do not think it is advisable that it should be permitted to delay the business of parliament any longer. I am opposed to the principle of the Bill, because I think it belongs to provincial jurisdiction. I think it is extraordinary that legislation of this kind can be introduced and take up so much time, when we have a Minister of Labour who is supposed to look after these things, and who persists in staying away while this Bill is under consideration. The Minister of Labour was not here this morning, this is the first order on Private Bills, and as soon as the order is called the minister goes out of the House. I say this Bill would not have taken up so much time if the Minister of Labour were here and had told us : In my opinion, as having regard to the Combines Bill, this legislation ought not to pass. I think it is unfortunate that this Bill has been brought up when we have not an opportunity of consulting with the Minister of Labour, to find out how far this Bill will affect the legislation he has introduced already.

Mr. GERVAIS. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down complains that we have not the advantage of consulting the Minister of Labour on this question. Well, I will read to him the opinion of the law clerk of the House of Commons, which has been confirmed by the Minister of Justice, and I think that the opinion of the law clerk is more pertinent on this question than even the opinion of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. EMMERSON. Dispense.

Mr. GERVAIS. No, I think that opinion will be useful to the committee.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Take it as read.

Mr. GERVAIS. No, I will not, I will read it. You are in need of it.

April 29, 1910.

H. Gervais, Esq., K.C., M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Gervais,—With reference to Senate Bill S, to incorporate the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, in the form in which it passed the Senate on the 13th instant.

Mr. LANCASTER. We have not got to the 13th instant yet.

Mr. GERVAIS. (reading):

Replying to your question as to whether, under this Bill, the association has a power to do a banking or loan business, or to engage in retail or wholesale business, or to create a monopoly of any kind.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to you to keep order. I am reading the opinion of the law clerk of the House of Commons.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As the hon. member has appealed to me for order, I ask hon. gentlemen not to indulge in conversation to any extent.

Mr. GERVAIS. (reading) :

Without having been able to give very careful consideration to the above, I can, however, reply that the question of doing a banking business is prohibited to the Association under the Interpretation Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 1, section 30, subsection 2, which says:

'2. No corporation shall be deemed to be authorized to carry on the business of banking unless such power is expressly conferred upon it by the Act creating such corporation.'

Then the law clerk continues:

There would appear to be no authority in the Bill——

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Is this not a private letter, and did not the writer of that request the hon. member not to read it in this House?

Mr. GERVAIS. No, and I told him I would read it. The opinion is not given in a private letter, but it is the opinion of the law clerk of the House of Commons. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) can examine it if he wishes.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Then what right has the hon. gentleman to read it?

Mr. GERVAIS. I know the rules of etiquette as well as the hon. member for Nanaimo, I know them well enough not to make use of a private letter. The letter was given to me to be read in the House. Then the law clerk continues:

There would appear to be no authority in the Bill, either expressed or implied, which would enable the association to carry on a loan business. Clause 8, which has been called to my attention, relates to the drawing, endorsing, etc., of bills and notes, but does not in my opinion give loaning powers. I do not find any words which would indicate power to carry on a retail or wholesale business. Clause 2 says 'the objects of the association shall be: (a) the promotion of the industrial and commercial interests of the retail merchants of Canada.'

Mr. EMMERSON. By what means?

Mr. GERVAIS. The law clerk will answer the hon. member for Westmorland.

I think that if the association attempted to carry on a wholesale or retail business under the authority of this clause, they would be acting without authority, and could be enjoined in the proper way. I also observe that there is no capital stock, without which it would seem improbable that any such business could be engaged in.

We know that the way to enjoin this corporation is by writ of quo warranto, or by a writ of injunction, in those provinces where such a writ exists.

* * * * This apparently is intended to be covered by clause 9 of the Bill, which says that the existing constitution and by-laws of the voluntary association, in so far as they are not contrary to law or this Act, shall continue to be the constitution and by-laws of the association.

This letter is signed, 'Faithfully yours, A. H. O'Brien.' That opinion is just as good as the opinion of any layman who may attempt to interpret the Bill according to his wishes, and irrespective of any questions of law which are involved in that Bill. Section 1 may be carried, and then if there is any amendment needed to any objectionable clauses, they can be amended and put in proper shape. But I state it as a legal proposition, that this House cannot take it upon itself to refuse incorporation to any body of men who are asking for incorporation in accordance with the laws of the land, and with the forms of procedure of this House. This House is a court of law as well as a court of legislation.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I did not intend to move that the committee be directed to sit again. I simply move that the committee rise.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have listened to a good many of the speeches against this Bill, but there has only been one argument of any force that has been brought forward by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely) and that argument is that the whole of the petitioners are from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. There has been no point made against the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me the reasons from the public standpoint why this Bill should pass?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. It should pass for the same reason that any similar Bill has been passed by this House. The Bills incorporating the Manufacturers' Association, the Shipping Federation and dozens of others were on exactly the same footing. Why should this Bill be killed?—because it is introduced by the hon. member for Montreal—St. James?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Or because the members of the association belong principally to Ontario and Quebec?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. These are very strange reasons. The merchants of Canada are asking for this Bill. They are an important body, and they are simply asking for what the wholesale grocers asked for and which you gave to them. They are asking what the Manufacturers' Association and the Shipping Federation asked for, and which you gave to them. For some reason or other some of the members of this House are determined to fight this Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman asked why this association should be given any less consideration than the Manufacturers' Association. Does the hon. gentleman say that the Manufacturers' Association is incorporated by Act of the Dominion parliament?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. What year?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I cannot tell from memory just what year, but I myself introduced the Bill to incorporate the Shipping Federation, and it passed this House unanimously.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does my hon. friend say that the Manufacturers' Association was incorporated by Act of the Dominion parliament?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to see the statute.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I cannot give it to the hon. gentleman at a moment's notice, but, as I say, I introduced the Shipping Federation Bill myself. There is no reason given why this Bill should not pass except that these people are from Ontario and Quebec, and the gentleman who introduces this Bill has offended the Co-operative Association. Surely this House is not going to stoop to anything of that kind—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. BICKERDIKE—for the sake of persecuting the hon. member for St. James. I hope that every member of this House will vote for the Bill.

Motion (Mr. Ralph Smith) negatived. Yeas 30, nays 36.

On section 1,

Mr. EMMERSON. It seems to me that the objection is very strong against this legislation being passed by this parliament. By looking at the names of the incorporators in the Bill it will be seen that on its face it is not of general application, that it does not relate to the whole Dominion, that there was no petitioner from the west and none from the east asking incorporation. To meet the description of a Dominion organization there should be representatives from every section of the Dominion. That shows that the country has not asked for it.

Mr. HUGHES. Are there not enough names for an incorporation? Five are all that are needed.

Mr. M. CLARK. If my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) will allow me, I would like to tell him that of my own knowledge there are numerous retailers in the west who wish this legislation.

On section 8, promissory notes and bills, liability of officers in respect of notes and bills.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) that section 8 should be struck out. This association has no capital stock, and I do not think it should be allowed to accept bills of exchange and make promissory notes.

Mr. GERVAIS. This Bill will have to go back to the Senate, and any amendment means that the Bill may be killed. As a matter of fact, the law clerk says that there is nothing objectionable in the Bill. The association want simply to discount notes for their own little business. There is a limitation in clause 2. If you wish to carry the Bill, it will have to go through now, because prorogation will take place on Wednesday and we will not have time to have the Bill amended in the Senate. Anything in violation of the tendency of clause 8 is limited by clause 2, and I assure the committee that proper remedies will exist at common law. I ask that clause 8 be left as it is for the time being.

Mr. TURRIFF. That clause 8 is not necessary and should not be carried as part of the Bill. I do not think the Bill should be carried. If the legislation is right, it should come from the provinces. Judging from the experience we have had with this sort of legislation in the west, that clause should be struck out, because the only purpose for which such a power as that contained in clause 8 was used by the Lumbermens' Association was the quashing of competition. If this association wants money and wants to discount notes for the purpose of getting money, it can only be with that object in view. The promoter of the Bill says that it is not going into business, either retail or wholesale. It must be for the same purpose as that for which the Retail Lumbermen's Association in the west wanted money, and that was to get the men engaged in that business into a combination so that there will be no competition. I move that clause 8 be struck out.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would suggest to my hon. friend the promoter of the Bill (Mr. Gervais) that if he is anxious to have this Bill passed, he had better accept the amendment. The object of the Bill is such that if you give power to this company, which has no capital at all, to incur liabilities you adopt a very dangerous principle, and, moreover, if my hon. friend expects this Bill to go through at this stage of the session, he had better accept the amendment, and let it go to the Senate. It will come back from the Senate to-morrow, and it can be amended again if necessary.

Mr. GERVAIS. This association simply wants the general power that is conferred upon any company to issue promissory notes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But there is no capital.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend is anxious for the Bill to go through especially at this stage of the session, I would suggest that he allow that clause to be stricken out.

Amendment (Mr. Turriff) agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

OTTAWA AND MONTREAL POWER AND TRANSMISSION COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 178) to incorporate the Ottawa and Montreal Power and Transmission Company, Limited—Mr. Perley.

Mr. CONMEE. It was agreed in commitee that the word 'power' should be stricken out of the name of the company; it is now a transmission line only.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The proper time to change the name is on the third reading.

On section 8.—Powers.

Mr. SEALEY. It was distinctly understood in the committee, that this company was to have no powers except those incidental to the purposes of a transmission line. If the words of this section give the company the right to acquire water-powers it is not what was understood in committee.

Mr. BOYCE. This clause is for the purpose of enabling them to lease power or force for the purpose of transmission.

Mr. SEALEY. That was the intention.

Mr. CONMEE. My recollection is that the words 'or other power' were to be stricken out of the Bill wherever they occur. The company was to get power to transmit electrical energy or force, but this clause would seem to give them the right not only to transmit power which they might acquire in any way, but also to create power. There is nothing in the clause that would prevent them from dealing with hydraulic power as well as with other powers and that was not the intention.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. BOYCE. Hydraulic power was stricken out of the Bill.

Mr. CONMEE. The words 'or other power' should have been stricken out too. The Bill is inconsistent if they are allowed to remain in it, I move that they be stricken out.

Mr. BOYCE. This Bill was considered by the committee, referred to a subcommittee and carefully considered there, and it was finally agreed to. My hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) stated this objection before the subcommittee and I do not think it is fair at this late stage of the session to move an amendment which may have the effect of killing the Bill for this year. The clause is not capable of the construction which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) gives to it. He knows perfectly well that everything in this Bill that in any way gave rights as a water-power company has been eliminated, and that the intention is to make it purely a transmission company. Had there been the powers of a water company given these words might have effect, but these powers being eliminated the words have absolutely no other meaning than to carry out the object of a transmission line.

Mr. CONMEE. I did raise this point before the committee, and the committee agreed upon the Bill, and then the promoters in reprinting it have put into it just what the committee struck out of it.

Mr. BOYCE. Oh, no.

Mr. CONMEE. I say, yes.

Mr. PERLEY. This clause is copied from the St. Lawrence Power Bill and these words are inserted just as they are in that Bill. It is not right for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) to suggest that the words have not been put in as agreed to by the committee.

Mr. CONMEE. I understand that, but the clause in the St. Lawrence Power Bill would not be applicable in this Bill without the phraseology being remodelled. My hon. friend knows that the clerk and the promoter of the Bill were to change it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is not that what they say they have done?

Mr. CONMEE. But they did not do it. That is what I am finding fault with. They did not strike out these words as they should have done. What are the words:

(a) For the purpose only of transmitting electricity or electric or other power, current or energy.

There is no objection to them having as many words as they please for the transmission of electric energy or current, but there is objection to the word 'power'.

That is from my point of view, and if they said the words were to be struck out. then they ought to live up to that agreement.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. PERLEY. This Bill stands in my name, but I wish it understood that I have no personal interest in it whatever. There is no person who is more anxious to have it put into proper shape than I am. Those gentlemen who are asking for the legislation have already got a water-power in Hull which has been in active operation for several years, and they own other water-powers on rivers running into the Ottawa from the north, and all they want now is the right to a transmission line. Anything that is needed to put this Bill in proper shape I am prepared to accept. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) suggested that the word 'power' in line 27, and also the word 'power' in line 30 might be misconstrued. Although I do not agree with him, at the same time I can see no objection to their being left out.

Mr. CONMEE. Would the hon. member strike out the words in the third line 'or other power'; then it would read 'electrical current or energy'. If the hon. gentleman wants something wider, then put it in.

Mr. PERLEY. The word 'power'. with a comma after it, in the nineteenth line, and the word 'power' in the twenty-seventh line, and the word 'power' in the thirtieth line might come out; but the word 'power' in the twenty-ninth line would have to stand, because that has another application.

Mr. CONMEE. Would the hon. member put it in this way 'light, heat, or electrical power'?

Mr. PERLEY. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. CONMEE. I was discussing this particular section at 1 o'clock, and I made a motion. Now, after hearing the remarks of the hon. member, I wish to withdraw that motion, as I understand these words are to be struck out. Now, I wish to point out to the committee what I think is an objection in this particular clause. As the Bill was originally printed, clause 12 provided for the consent of a municipality by by-law; as the Bill now stands, the consent of the municipality is to be obtained subject to section 247 of the Railway Act, which does require consent by by-law, but by by-law of the municipal corporation only. In the previous section it provided that they should not enter cities without the consent of the city. In this case they are empowered to enter without the consent of the city, because if they cannot agree with the city, then the Board of Railway Commissioners fix the conditions. I do not object to that provision, but I am merely calling the attention of the committee to what I think ought to have been the provision, namely, that in case of cities the by-law should not only be a by-law of the municipal corporation, but it should have the assent of the qualified-ratepayers.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why have a different franchise in cities from any other municipality?

Mr. CONMEE. For my part I think it would be a fair provision for both cities and towns. My hon. friend will say: Why in cities and towns, and not elsewhere?

Mr. LANCASTER. And in a village which may be bigger than a town.

Mr. CONMEE. It could be put, perhaps, on the basis of population; we should have some general provision governing that, but we have not, the reason is that in rural municipalities through which these lines pass there is not the same interest to protect. The line can go through without doing a great deal of harm, and we all know that its construction and operation does a great deal of good, it is a public utility in that sense. But I am not raising the question with an idea of taking objection to it. I am simply calling the attention of the promoter of this Bill and some other hon. gentlemen opposite, just to show where I think they are inconsistent with their previous position when they support this Bill. Here is a Bill which gives power to go to a great city, a Bill which is purely provincial in character. The gentlemen asking for this Bill did not ask for the power, in their notice, or in their petition, to cross the Ottawa river or to enter Montreal now. They have got power in the Bill to cross the Ottawa river, and to enter Montreal, but they have no right to it, they did not ask for it in their petition. Now, I am not objecting to it from my point of view. But hon. gentlemen have taken up a great deal of time in this House combatting other Bills which less invaded provincial rights than this Bill does. Here is the situation: That because an hon. member in the ranks of the opposition has this Bill in charge, their theories of provincial rights have all vanished, so far as we have any evidence at present. Now, I have objection to clause (c) in this Bill, which reads this way:

> Acquire such lands, easements and privileges as are necessary for the purpose of its undertaking.

In a further amendment subsection 5 of section 16 there is a provision which confines them in the taking of land required for a transmission line only. I think this subsection (c) is inconsistent with section 16. If they are to have the power to expropriate land for purposes other than a transmission line across the bed of the Ottawa river, then I have serious objection to it. We in the west expect that some day the Ottawa river will be made a navigable stream to a much larger extent than it is to-day by the construction of the Georgian Bay canal, and no obstruction should be placed in the way of that undertaking, when it can be reasonably avoided without any injury to the promoters of this Bill. I would like to know from the member in charge of the Bill if, in view of the provisions of subsection 5 of section 16, he would consent to have section (c) struck out.

Mr. PERLEY. The great distinction between section 8 and subsection 5 of section 16 is that section 8 gives them power to buy lands, etc., by private purchase. But section 16 is an expropriation section, and what they can expropriate is limited.

Mr. CONMEE. I think the Bill has to be read as a whole, and that this cannot be separated from the meaning of the statute. It gives wider power, I am afraid, than is intended.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is moved that in line 19 of section 8 the word 'power' be struck out. Carried.

It is also moved that in the 27th line where the word 'power' occurs it be struck out. Carried.

Mr. CONMEE. In subsection (a) of the third line the words, 'or other power,' should be struck out.

Mr. PERLEY. No, the word 'power.' The chairman has declared that carried.

Mr. CONMEE. I did not hear it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood the motion to be simply to strike out the word 'power.' If I did not understand it, that point can be explained. It was also moved to strike out the word 'power' in the 27th line. Carried. It is also moved to strike out the word 'power' where it occurs in the 30th line. Or, perhaps, it would be better to take up an amendment in the 29th line—before the word 'power' to insert the word 'electrical.' Carried. Also to strike out the word 'power' where it occurs in the 30th line. Carried.

On section 9, disputes to be decided by Railway Commission.

Mr. SEALEY. I agree with the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) that subsection (c) of section 8, perhaps, was not definitely dealt with. The hon. member (Mr. Conmee) had a suggestion that that subsection be struck out. I am not sure whether he put it in the form of a motion or not, but I think it would be quite proper.

Mr. CONMEE. I suggested it, but it was not accepted. The section has been carried.

Mr. BOYCE. All I can say is that if my hon. friend from Thunder Bay and Rainy River proposes that section 9 be struck out——

Mr. CONMEE. I do not. It is subsection (c) of section 8 that I referred to. As to section 9, I think that in its present form it does not convey what was intended, and I hope the hon. member in charge of the Bill will accept the suggestion I have to make. The section now reads:

In case of any dispute or difference as to the price to be charged by the company——

And so on. I think it should read:

In case of any application for power, as herein provided, as well as the price to be charged by the company.

And so on. It is not a question of dispute, for the section goes on to provide that the government of the Dominion or of the province of Quebec, the province of Ontario, or any municipality, may make application to have the prices and terms fixed. These parties would not have a dispute. I do not think it is intended to defeat the latter part of the section by the language of the first line or two, and I would suggest to the hon. member that it would not weaken the position in any sense to amend it as I have suggested, and it may prove a possible difficulty. I would recommend the adding of these words:

Mr. BOYCE. What words?

Mr. CONMEE. Strike out in the first line the words 'dispute or difference' and insert 'applications for power and prices as herein provided.' Then, in the third to last line on that page, that is on line 43, I propose to insert the word 'and,' making it read 'and the said board, on the application of any person,' and so on. I do not want the section weakened in such a way that either of the governments named or any municipality may not take advantage of this provision to step in and ask for a regulation of prices and conditions and thereby relieve the individual from having to do it. That is the object, and I think that the language I have suggested would make it clear. Then, in the forty-second line, I think the words 'or transmitted' should be added after 'produced'. That is an important point. This company has the right not only to transmit power which it itself generates, but to transmit power that it leases from other companies. This language might not include the power that it takes from the other companies.

Mr. PERLEY. That suggestion is all right. Let it read 'produced or transmitted'. The other suggestion is for a merely verbal change. This section was discussed at length in the committee, and it appears as reported. Except for the addition 'or transmitted', which is reasonable, the section should stand as it is.

Mr. CONMEE. Then, we are agreed, all but one word. Let me point out that the section goes on, that in case of dispute or difference as to method of distribution, the time within which the power is furnished or the quantity or conditions, that dispute or difference shall be settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada 'on the application of any user of or applicant for power or electrical or other energy produced by the company, or upon the application of the company'. That seems to be the end of the sentence. Then, this section goes on:

The said board, on the application of any person or municipality, or on the application of the government of Canada, or the government of the province of Ontario, or of the government of the province of Quebec——

It is intended that the government, or a municipality, may, without dispute, and of their own motion, for the benefit of their citizens, make an application. But after the word 'and' they proceed: 'The said board has acted as is already provided, it may be argued that the board would have exhausted its jurisdiction.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not know that the promoter of this Bill has any very serious objection to the proposal of the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), but I do feel it my duty to point out that my hon. friend was a member of the subcommittee appointed by the Private Bills Committee to investigate this Bill, that he sat there for several days, that this clause was the subject of very serious consideration by the subcommittee, that he proposed several amendments, that upon several of these amendments this clause was put into its present shape, that the amendments agreed to by the subcommittee were just the same as they are now, that this clause was moulded in accordance with my hon. friend's suggestions to the subcommittee, and that the hon. gentleman was perfectly satisfied, or he did not express any dissatisfaction therewith. The subcommittee reported the clause to the Private Bills Committee. The Private Bills Committee reported it to the House, and now the hon. gentleman, within the last hours of the session, endeavours, according to my way of thinking, rather unfairly, to obstruct the passage of this Bill by pressing amendments absolutely contrary to the position which he took in the Private Bills Committee. Personally, I have no objection to them, I do not think they amount to anything, I do not suppose that the promoter of the Bill objects, but I desire to emphasize my very strong objection to the hon. gentleman, at this time, taking a position inconsistent with that which he took before the subcommittee of the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman is not warranted in making the statement that I am taking a position different from that which I took in the subcommittee. This clause was to be drafted. I had no opportunity of seeing it printed until to-day. I was not here on Saturday. I was not at the committee meeting, although I attended at the hour at which it was called. I tried to get a copy of the Bill, but the clerk said that the print had not reached him; I could not remain all the afternoon. I believe the committee did sit afterwards and pass the Bill but I am not responsible for that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. SEALEY. I wish to suggest that there be inserted as the first line of section 9 that 'the company must supply applicants nearest the source of development first.' My reason for suggesting this is that western Ontario and in the Niagara peninsula we have two transmission companies in operation and another will be in operation in a very few days, I expect. They transmit from the source of supply to large centres like Toronto, Hamilton and other places, but they decline to consider the applications of people who wish to use their power in the intermediate territory. The people of the intermediate territory have to submit to all the inconveniences and dangers of the transmission lines passing their places, sometimes on the roadway, at all events crossing the roadway in many places, and in quite a number of places in front of their doors or between their doors and the street or highway. It is only fair that if they have imposed upon them all the dangers and inconveniences they should be entitled to the benefits and conveniences that accrue to the central points. In the case of this particular company it will be very much more advantageous, if, between Ottawa and Montreal there should spring up a hundred towns where manufacturing industries will be established, where workmen can live in comfort and with healthy surroundings free from the disadvantages which generally afflict the congested communities in the great cities, than it would be to have this power transmitted in bulk to Montreal, there to develop that city's industries and increase its population by 100,000. The decentralization of population from the great cities could be effected to a wonderful degree by these transmission lines. These transmission lines may be useful in building up thriving communities throughout the country without continuing to further stimulate the centralization of everything around large cities. For that reason I think it is in the interest of the particular community and for the welfare of Canada generally, that the company should be obliged to give power to the applicants en route, and upon terms not any more expensive or difficult to comply with than at the centres. I believe that if that line were inserted at the beginning of section 9 it would cover the condition that I would like very much to see provided for.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend proposes an amendment which is already in the clause. My hon. friend, at least three times in the subcommittee and in the Private Bills Committee, proposed the same amendment, and it was pointed out to him that it was contained in this clause. The condition as to price, methods, time, quantity, and all conditions upon which the power shall be supplied to everybody, are all referred to the Railway Commission, and my hon. friend was satisfied in the committee that everything that he contended for was done by this clause. My hon. friend spoke about twenty people making an application for power. I pointed out to him that twenty people or less might make an application for power under clause 9. But, suppose that only three people on this line want power. They simply have to apply to the company, and if the company refuses to give them power on terms which are satisfactory to them, all they have to do is to go to the Railway Commission under the clause as already framed and as amended by the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee). Under that clause the question is not as to twenty people, but one man may apply and the whole question will be decided by the Railway Commission. First, there is the question of price; second, methods of distribution; third, time within which the power shall be finished; fourth, the quantity to be furnished, and fifth, the conditions upon which it shall be furnished. Anything further that my hon. friend might engraft upon this clause would be mere surplusage. His suggestion was considered by the subcommittee of the Private Bills Committee. His objection was raised there, and it was pointed out that the addition that he proposed would be surplusage. I am satisfied that it is surplusage and, therefore, I appeal to him to allow the section to go through as it is, because the objections which he has raised have already been met. When he raised those objections, I considered them carefully, and we looked at this section so as to see that it included all that my hon. friend was contending for. Any one who wants power and disputes as to the price or the conditions may go to the Railway Commission and have it settled.

Mr. SEALEY. It is quite true that this question did come up in the subcommittee, and that my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) said that these provisions were embodied in the section. The company are not obliged to supply power to any one, but the provision is that any application may be referred to the Railway Commission, and the Railway Commission may so order if they wish and they are permitted to so order upon the circumstances and conditions which are shown. The circumstances and conditions as shown will be that it costs so much more to tap the line between here and Montreal and to give a number of applicants the power that the Railway Commission would in all probability determine that the power should be supplied at ten times what it would cost in Montreal. This would immediately put the applicant out of business, as he would not be able to pay any such price. If our friends are sincere in what they say, then it is only right that the Bill should be put in the language which would make clear what we intend. From the best information I can get, a number of individuals who would make application for 25 horse-power would not be able to get it except on terms that the company would deem to be profitable to them. If hon. gentlemen are right in saying that the language suggested would only be repeating a good thing, then let us repeat it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There has been no notice of any amendment to this Bill in committee except that by Mr. Sealey with regard to clause 9.

Mr. CONMEE. I understood from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perley) that he would accept the change I have suggested in the first line of section 9.

Mr. PERLEY. The hon. gentleman must have misunderstood me. It would seem rather ridiculous to suggest that a man who is able to make an agreement with the company privately for the supply of power, should not be at liberty to do so. If there is no difference between the two what is the necessity for going to the Railway Commission? The clause provides further down that if the user of power is unable to agree on terms with the company he will have power to apply to the Railway Commission to get the terms fixed. I cannot accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee).

Mr. BOYCE. The suggestion made by my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) does not make the wording grammatical. The Bill as reported from the subcommittee says: 'In case of any dispute or difference as to price,' and the hon. gentleman suggests it should read: 'In case of any application as hereinafter provided as to the price to be charged by the company for power, etc,' which would destroy the sense. Besides I take the objection that no notice has been given of this proposed amendment.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think that notice for such an amendment is necessary, and if the words suggested are not correct we can easily find other words to express the meaning. The Bill as drafted does not carry out the intention of the subcommittee. This clause is taken from the St. Lawrence Power Bill, under which the board is empowered to act either for the purchase or sale of the power, and if this clause means anything it means that the board on the application of the government of Canada, or the governments of Ontario and Quebec, or of a municipality, may fix a price. These governments or municipalities referred to may not be consumers of power, but they are to have the power to act on behalf of those they represent, and the clause as it stands now may defeat that object. I see in it a difficulty, and there is no reason why that difficulty should not be removed by inserting some such words as I suggest.

Mr. SEALEY. If I may be permitted, I wish to add a few words to the amendment of which I have given notice. I have my clause proposed as an amendment in a wording here which I think is slightly better than that contained in the printed amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman, having given notice of this motion, he had better adhere to it.

Mr. SEALEY. I would like to have the amendment of which I have given notice read in this way, the words in parenthesis being added:

Provided, however, that in any case where the quantity of power or energy applied for (anywhere along the main transmission line) exceeds twenty-five horse-power per annum (the company must supply it and), the price to be charged therefor shall not exceed the minimum price per horse-power (for the same or any less quantity of power, than is), charged to any other user of the company's power or energy, whether supplied directly by the company, or by any other company selling and disposing of the company's power and energy for use.

In view of the custom of the House, I think I should be permitted to insert these words, but if the Chair rules against that, I will move the amendment in the words in which the notice is given.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am not able to at once decide as to the seriousness of these proposed changes, and I shall be bound to accept the notice of motion as the hon. gentleman has placed it on the order paper, unless the committee unanimously accede to his desire.

Mr. PERLEY. I must object very strongly to this amendment by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Sealey). I think this Bill should be safeguarded in every possible way, so as to give these gentlemen the right to build their transmission line and at the same time preserve the rights of the public. This clause 9 provides that in every case the Railway Commission shall have full authority to decide any disputes between the company and those who wish to use the power, as to price, as to whether a sufficient number ask for this power in any particular place to warrant the company in giving them a service and as to whether 25 horse-power is sufficient to warrant the company in supplying it. It is no use for us to decide these matters here. This is simply making an exception to the general power given under clause 9 to the Railway Commission, and I think we ought to have sufficient confidence in the Railway Commission to trust them to give the public justice. This amendment ties their hands and practically makes an exception to the powers given in section 9.

Mr. CONMEE. My suggestion which I again urge is to strike out the words in the first line, 'dispute or difference.'

Mr. PERLEY. Does the hon. gentleman not think that the company, and a private individual should have the right to settle the price to be paid?

Mr. CONMEE. Oh yes, I do not touch that point. This is an application to the Board of Railway Commissioners; if there is an agreement between the consumer, and the company there would be no such application. In case an application is made I would suggest adding these words: 'An application for power as herein provided, or as to price.' If it is the intention of the promoter that this government or a provincial government or a municipality shall have the right to apply to the Board to regulate the price, then I think they should accept this suggestion in all fairness. If my suggestion is not adopted the individual may be met with all kinds of technicalities, and will have to fight out a case where he will have to employ a lawyer, and perhaps incur heavy expense.

Mr. SEALEY. We have not a general Act providing a maximum and minimum charge for electrical energy. There are Acts for the several railway rates, both freight and passengers. For instance the Railway Commission are obliged on application to grant a passenger rate between here and Casselman or Coteau on the line between Ottawa and Montreal, at a price not exceeding 3 cents per mile. The railway company may be able to show that it costs them 10 cents a mile or more to slow up the train and fire up again, but still their rate must not exceed 3 cents a mile. My object in this amendment is to see that no intermediate applicant shall be charged a larger rate than is charged at any other point equidistant from the source of generation. In that way I think it is entirely fair, so fair that I trust the promoter will accept it. If not, I trust that this committee, in the interests of Canada generally and especially in the interest of the communities through which this transmission line passes, will adopt it.

Mr. PERLEY. I submit in a word that the amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sealey) is an impossible amendment to put into execution. The Railway Commission cannot say that every user of power shall pay the same price; that must depend on the quantity used, and other conditions. I ask the committee to vote down the amendment.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not think the amendment means that. The hon. member (Mr. Boyce) will see that by my amendment the powers of the Railway Commission are not in any way interfered with.

Mr. BOYCE. Any attempt which is made by this amendment to limit, and restrict or hamper the discretion of the board would be wrong legislation under the circumstances and should not be passed. If the board is to control at all it should have absolute control free of any restrictive legislation as to price. What is the use of leaving to the Board of Railway Commissioners full control as to the price if the provisions of clause 9 were restricted by imposing certain conditions under this amendment?

Mr. PERLEY. This section is taken from the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company Bill which was threshed out so thoroughly in this committee, and passed by this House.

Mr. CONMEE. I think the remarks of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie are perhaps not altogether correct. As stated by the hon. member this clause is taken from the St. Lawrence Company Bill, but there it was in connection with the provisions of that Bill, but now it is proposed in connection with the provisions of another Bill, and has not the same effect. Certain portions of the clause have been struck out, and it is not in reality the clause that is in the St. Lawrence Power Bill. All the motion of my hon. friend does is to provide that in case an application is made the board shall consider it, and shall have the power that my hon. friend pointed out. They may fix the terms and prices. I do not see that the company is at all hurt by that. And some section of the community may be protected. I do not see any harm in the amendment at all. It seems to me to be in the right direction.

Mr. SEALEY. Under the provisions of the Railway Act the Railway Commission have not any jurisdiction over rates. This is merely to prevent discrimination in favour of large centres as against rural communities, and to provide that the prices fixed must be uniform. I think it is quite consistent with the general usage of the government and with the legislation of Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am delighted to see so many hon. gentlemen having such implicit confidence in the Board of Railway Commissioners. The hon member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) and I have been contending for the board in the Railway Committee for a long time. I am glad to see that hon. members think that there should be no restrictions and that the powers of the Railway Commissioners should be left unimpaired, and I agree generally with that. In dealing with the powers of the Trent Valley canal system which were of an intricate character, the House supported me on a clause which meant that if the parties agreed themselves on the price, no person should interfere, but if they failed to agree then the Board of Railway Commissioners were to decide. Having accepted that principle and asked the House to accept it in that Bill, I do not want to do anything else than abide by it.

Mr. CONMEE. The amendment does not touch that principle.

Mr. BOYCE I must protest against the continued effort of my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) to force through this amendment, especially at this late hour of the session. For what purpose was the Bill referred to the Private Bills Committee and by the Private Bills Committee to a subcommittee? My hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) and the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) took up a great deal of the time of that committee in trying to get this amendment put in this Bill. It was fully discussed, and my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Sealey) and the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) were apparently then satisfied. Why do they bring it up in the same shape at this stage of the session? By this amendment we are tying the hands of the Railway Commission, which ought to be in the consideration of this case as free as air.

Mr. SEALEY. I am satisfied when the majority of the committee or the majority of this House decide. If the majority accepts or rejects an amendment we will accept or reject it. The subject of the amendment is to prevent discrimination and to guide the Railway Commission in the matter of rates. The government have a rate per mile for transportation on the railways, and it is uniform. But the government have not a fixed rate for power.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Railway Commission do not fix all railway rates uniformly. In certain localities they allow discrimination as compared with other localities. They do not have the same rates all over Canada per mile. You must take all the geographical and other conditions into consideration and if you have faith in the Board of Railway Commissioners at all, do not hamper their hands so that they cannot do justice all round.

Mr. SEALEY. Under the Railway Act the Railway Commission cannot possibly authorize a higher rate between Ottawa and Coteau than between Ottawa and Montreal. I simply want to prevent discrimination, and I think it is the duty of the committee to prevent it.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CONMEE. Before you drop that clause perhaps the hon. member in charge of the Bill will give me a reply to the question I put some time ago. I suggest that the words 'dispute or difference' in the first line of section 9 be struck out and the following substituted therefor 'application for power as herein provided, or as the price to be paid.' I have already made some remarks as to that, and I think this amendment is necessary. I hope the hon. member (Mr. Perley) will accept it.

Mr. PERLEY. I am afraid I cannot accept the amendment suggested. No notice of it was given, and I would point out that it is only in cases of disagreement that the Railway Commission shall act. That is the intention of the clause as stated by the hon. minister (Mr. Graham).

Mr. CONMEE. It does not affect that clause at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. May I ask the hon. member who is in charge of the Bill why some changes have been made from what purports to be a similar clause in the Bill of the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company. There are one or two changes, and I was wondering whether they were there as results of printers' errors or were intentional. In the St. Lawrence Transmission Company Bill the words are 'the Board of Railway Commissioners shall fix the price' at which electrical energy is sold, while this section, though professing to follow the section in the St. Lawrence Transmission Bill, has been changed and the word 'may' appears instead of 'shall,' giving a discretionary power to the board.

Mr. LANCASTER. It means the same thing, does it not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. I do not see why the words have been changed.

Mr. LANCASTER. I say the change was a correct one, as when we are giving power to a court we always say 'may,' not 'shall.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is very curious that in one clause it is provided that the board shall fix the price at which the company may purchase electricity, and that in another it may fix the price at which it shall be sold.

Mr. LANCASTER. There cannot be a purchase without a sale.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A court would naturally ask itself why parliament used the word 'shall' in one case and not in the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no need to argue it, the promoter is willing to change it.

Mr. PERLEY. I am quite willing to change it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the word is to be changed, I think we might very well pass the section, because that point was very carefully considered in the case of the St. Lawrence Transmission Bill.

Mr. CONMEE. Has the minister (Mr. Pugsley) considered that point as to whether the word 'and' is necessary?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see that that will make any difference. My suggestion is that 'may' be changed to 'shall,' so that it may be the same word in both cases.

Mr. LANCASTER. Of course, we cannot change the St. Lawrence Power Bill. But 'may' is the proper word to use. We do not issue a mandamus to a judge to direct him to do so and so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is the committee agreed that 'may' be changed to 'shall'? No objection. It is unanimously agreed that the word be changed. Shall the section as amended stand part of the Bill? Carried.

On section 16, expropriation clause.

On subsection 5:

5. The land to be taken or used by the company without the consent of the proprietor, for the purposes of its transmission lines, shall not exceed such land as is necessary for the proper construction, operation and maintenance of the said transmission lines, and as shown on the plans to be approved as in this Act provided. Any easement that may be taken by the company shall be confined to the carrying of the said transmission lines across any highway or public place or across any river or stream; and, except in the cases aforesaid, the company in the taking of land shall not only pay the value of the land so taken but shall also pay due compensation to the owner for any damage which the taking of such land and the building of such transmission lines may cause to the remainder of the property or otherwise.

Mr. CONMEE. As I understand this Bill, it gives this company all the powers of expropriation that can be exercised by a railway corporation in regard to its right of way. The intention, of course, was to give the company these powers in so far as a transmission line was concerned, and in so far as a transmission line was concerned only. Under subsection (c) of section 8, the company may:

—acquire such lands, easements and privileges as are necessary for the purposes of its undertaking.

Take this in connection with subsection 5 of the clause we are now discussing. It was alleged by the hon. member (Mr. Perley) in charge of the Bill that this subsection was a limitation upon the powers which I have just read. It was intended to be so, but I do not think it really is such a limitation. At the time this subsection 5 of section 16 was agreed to, subsection (c) of section 8, which I have just read, had been struck out by the committee. I believe this subsection 5 of section 16 should read:

The land so used by the company without the consent of the proprietor shall be confined to the lands required for the purposes of its transmission line.

Mr. BOYCE. Has the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) given notice of that amendment?

Mr. CONMEE. I have not.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the use of taking up time?

Mr. CONMEE. Since I have been in this House, the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) has taken up much more time than I have.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not taken up the time trying to promote my own interest, at all events.

Mr. CONMEE. I think the hon. gentleman has done that at least as much as I have.

Mr. BOYCE. Was not this the hon. member's (Mr. Conmee's) own clause as put in by the sub-committee?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Mr. CONMEE. Quite correct. But it was put in at a time when the other clause was struck out. I point out that this clause will not have the effect it was intended to have unless it is limited, as I suggested. I am not going to take up time discussing it, nor am I going to move an amendment. If the committee choose to let the Bill go through in the form in which it is, it is not affording the protection to the general public which the clause was intended to afford.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall section 16 stand part of the Bill? Carried.

On section 17,

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to empower the company to export electricity or electric or other power to the United States.

Mr. CONMEE. I desire to point out that this clause has not at all the effect it was understood to have. It was agreed in the subcommittee that a provision should be inserted by which this company should not be allowed to transmit power for exportation from Canada, and this clause was put in, apparently, with that object in view. But this will not prevent the exportation. For this reason: Under the other provisions of the Bill the company has the right to purchase, lease or hire power from any other company. It also has right to connect its lines with any other company either in the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario. That is, it may cross the Ottawa river to connect with Ontario lines. If the power thus transmitted in Ontario were exported to the United States, that would not be exportation of power by this company, the exportation would be carried on by some other company. If it is intended to carry out exactly what was agreed upon, that clause should read:

Nothing in this Act shall empower the company to transmit over its lines electricity or electrical or other power for export to the United States, and all electricity or electrical or other power transmitted by the company shall be wholly used in Canada and shall not be exported therefrom.

In my judgment, the only way to prevent this exportation is to provide, not that the company shall not export, but that the lines shall not be used for that purpose, no matter with what lines they may connect. We took up a good deal of time in the committee discussing the St. Lawrence power question, but here is a company that can supply any other company without any of the restrictions imposed upon the St. Lawrence company to prevent them transmitting power to the United States.

Mr. BOYCE. Is not this the same clause?

Mr. CONMEE. No

Mr. J. HAGGART. Can they transmit the power without leave from the government?

Mr. CONMEE. No, I suppose that the exportation Act would interpose and prevent. But hon. members opposite were not satisfied with that in the case of the St. Lawrence site.

Mr. PERLEY. Will the hon. member permit me to say a word? I am sure he does not wish to make a mis-statement. I desire to point out that this is exactly the clause from the St. Lawrence Bill. Here is section 12 of that Bill:

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to empower the company to export electricity or electric or other power to the United States.

That is the clause in the St. Lawrence Bill.

Mr. CONMEE. If that is the clause in the St. Lawrence Bill it is not a sufficient clause to protect public interest.

Mr. LANCASTER. Cannot the hon. gentleman trust the government to see, under the general Act, that the power is not exported if it is not right to be done?

Mr. CONMEE. I am quite willing to trust this government, we have an honest government to-day that will protect the public interest, but we don't know when we may have a bad government. Hon. gentlemen opposite might cross over to the treasury benches, and I want to protect the public interest now. I want to point out to the hon. gentlemen who have taken up so much time in claiming that they were labouring in the public interest in preventing the export of power, that they are by this Bill giving machinery by which this company can export power; and if hon. gentlemen are willing to sacrifice their principles for which they have contended so strenuously in regard to other Bills, it is their business. But I am pointing out to them where they will stand. The public will be able to judge whether hon. gentlemen were in earnest in their desire to protect the public interest when they took up the time of this House for days arguing against a principle which they are now accepting, simply because, as it would appear, one of their own colleagues has the Bill in charge.

Mr. BOYCE. I desire to ask my hon. friend whether this is the same clause as the one in the St. Lawrence Transmission Company's Bill? He said it was entirely different, when in point of fact they are exactly alike.

Mr. CONMEE. I don't want the hon. member to put these words in my mouth. I pointed out that you are taking a clause out of the St. Lawrence Bill and putting it into this Bill under different conditions.

Mr. BOYCE. I asked that question for this purpose: When this clause was under consideration in the Montreal Power Transmission Company Bill I moved an amendment to put it in the regular way on the order paper, and when that amendment was put one of the most vociferous 'no's' came from the hon. member for Rainy River. He has given us a lesson in consistency, and this is the exhibition of consistency which the hon. gentleman himself has just shown us.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

GUELPH JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 218) respecting the Guelph Junction Railway Company.—Mr. A. H. Clarke.

Mr. LANCASTER. I want to put myself briefly on record with regard to this Bill. I think this Bill should never have come before parliament at all. It is absolutely unconstitutional, it is confiscatory, it puts back civilization hundreds of years. It means that because a few stockholders in a railway company do not want to sell their stock to the city of Guelph which owns the rest of the stock of the railway, the city asks this parliament to direct them by force to sell the city the stock at a certain price, namely, $400 a share. I say we have no business to put ourselves in the position of interfering with such a matter at all. It is not like a matter of expropriation where a man's land can be taken to build a railroad. The city of Guelph can control this road, these are a minority of the stockholders. It is said on the one hand that they are trustees for the city of Guelph, and should hand over their stock; on the other hand it is said that they are not trustees, and the preamble of the Bill alleges that they are agents, which fact is disputed. And instead of the city going to the courts to get a declaration as to whether these men are agents and thereby bound to transfer that stock, or as to whether they are not, we are asked, in this twentieth century, to do what we should never have been asked to do, the suggestion should never have been made, and I cannot imagine that the people who are bringing this Bill forward really understand what it is they are asking us to do. The city of Guelph has a railway. It practically owns it all with the exception of a very few shares. There are some four of five other shareholders. It has turned out a good thing for the promoters. These people have an investment that is worth a great premium to them. It happens that it has been a profitable investment or speculation. Suppose the converse were the case. If, as in many cases in this country, since we started to build railways, people had put their money into a railway and lost it, if the enterprise had been an absolute failure, could they come and ask the municipality which was going to get the benefit out of it, to take it off their hands, pay them a certain price for it and ask this parliament to fix that price? That is exactly what we are asked to do by this Bill. My first reason for opposing it is that we are not competent to judge the merits of this matter, if there are any merits to be decided as to whether these people are trustees or agents, and therefore in equity should hand over their stock

Mr. J. HAGGART. What interest have they in it?

Mr. LANCASTER. There are three or four of them who each own a share.

Mr. J. HAGGART. What is a share worth?

Mr. LANCASTER. They paid $100 each for them and the city of Guelph says: We will give you $100 and 6 per cent compounded, making a total of $400 for each share if you will sell us your stock. Parliament is asked to declare that these people must do so; first, that without their consent they must sell their stock, and secondly, that we shall fix the price of these shares. I ask hon. gentlemen if we are competent to decide any question that we are asked arbitrarily to act upon in regard to it. If these people are trustees or agents the courts of the land can so declare. It is fair to say so as not to mislead any gentleman in this House, that it was admitted by the promoters of this Bill that technically these people were not trustees and that there is an obstacle in the way of the courts so declaring. Where are we going to stop if we begin this thing? If you grant that a man is not a trustee, that you cannot succeed in court in proving that he is, that he is not obliged to transfer his stock to you, are we to be told by the city of Guelph or by some other municipality that because the city wants this to be done this House must enact that the property of this man must be expropriated. It means confiscation. Take the case where a man would go out and grub stake people, supply money and try to develop a coal mine. Suppose that he spends a thousand dollars in prospecting each mine, and one mine near a town or city which wants the coal turns out to be a paying concern. According to this Bill which we are asked to pass, in principle, we will be compelled to say: The public interest requires that you shall turn that coal mine over to the city. You have spent a lot of money in other parts of the country on what never turned out to be paying concerns, but this property has turned out well and we will give you what it has cost you to locate and develop it and 6 per cent interest compounded, and you must turn it over to the city which is nearest you and which wants that coal. I say that is confiscation. I say it is not civilization. This is not civilized legislation or legislation that is in accordance with British institutions or principles. If we open the door I do not know where it will end. I want to be quite understood as not saying that I think this is not a fair price. I am not competent to judge whether it is a fair price or not. I am not saying that I think they should have more, and I am not saying that they were the agents or trustees of the city of Guelph, and that the city should not pay them anything. I am not competent to judge that, and I do not think that there is any legal gentleman in this House who will say that he is. The courts of the land are there to say whether they are trustees. The city of Guelph can give evidence to show that they are and they can get the courts to issue a mandamus compelling this transfer without coming to parliament. Surely, it is a most unheard of proposition that this parliament must put itself in the position of saying, in the most socialistic way, that it shall determine what a certain man's property is worth, which he is not obliged to sell by the laws of the land, and that it shall so determine upon evidence, such as we have brought before us, which would not be admissable in a court of law. We are asked to say that if a man is getting a fair price for something that he owns, which he has acquired, which he has a right to speculate in if he wants to, he must transfer it, not for the public service of the Dominion, but for the benefit of a municipality. That, is a most unjust proposition. The city of Guelph practically owns this road, but there are these four shares which now are worth a great deal of money, and the city of Geulph jealously wants to have control of the whole property and not allow these stockholders to have any of it. In the matter of expropriating land, we have a general Act to prevent railway building from being obstructed and which makes provision for the expropriation of properties the value of which parliament does not even undertake to settle. Parliament would not dare to say: We shall compel you to sell your land at a certain price. We make provision, in order to get railways built, that men must not obstruct the building of these lines, but if land is taken for the purpose of the construction of a railway its value is fixed by arbitration. In the case under consideration we are not dealing with a railway that is to be built and no public interest requires expropriation at all; the railway is already constructed. The railway is owned by the city of Guelph except these few shares. The strongest argument which was made by the gentlemen representing the city of Guelph in the Railway Committee was that the ratepayers of Guelph were unanimous in this legislation.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Are the owners of the stock opposing it?

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, of course they are opposing it. They opposed it in the Senate. It was argued that because six out of ten were willing the other four must be. Let me suppose that I go into some arrangement for the establishment of an athletic ground for my city. I contribute ten per cent and nine other gentlemen contribute ten per cent of the cost of the ground. It may turn out to be very valuable as a factory site afterwards and it may be that I am willing to give up my interest in the ground if I get my interest and $1,000 or whatever I put in, but am I to say that my other partners are obliged to be governed by the same rules of ethics and charity as those to which I apply to myself. Should we by statute say that because some of these gentlemen should differ in their ideas of charity and fairness, they all should be compelled to do what the rest of them are willing to do? Therefore the argument was presented, that because the ratepayers of the city of Guelph were unanimous, this Bill should pass, and the stock of these men should be taken away from them. Suppose the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific railway company came here and said that the hon. member for any place you like has some stock in our railway; we do not want him to be a stockholder; we want to acquire his investment, and, in support of that application, suppose they should say that every shareholder of the Canadian Pacific railway or Grand Trunk railway wants us to do this and therefore you should do it. The ratepayers of the city of Guelph are simply the shareholders in this regard.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. How much did the city of Guelph put in?

Mr. LANCASTER. According to the first statute of 1901, the city put in $20,000 capital stock.

Mr. GUTHRIE. $173,000 in bonds and $20,000 in stock.

Mr. LANCASTER. I care not how much or how little the city of Guelph invested, I say that on the merits of the thing parliament is asked to perpetrate an act of confiscation on the property which these men hold.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What proportion of the ownership do these men hold?

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not care; I say the principle of the thing is wrong. I say that it is not any better in principle than if the Bank of Montreal should come here and ask us to force a widow who had only three shares in the bank to sell them for a certain price. It makes no difference whether these men have a large or a small amount invested; they are entitled to do with their investment as they please, and this parliament has no right to deprive them of that control. I am told that this is a paying investment now, and naturally the city of Guelph wants to get it, and no doubt it will pay the city of Guelph to get these shares at $400 each, or this legislation would not be sought. It is true that these men only paid $100 each for these shares some years ago, and that six per cent interest compounded would make them worth $400 to-day, but my position is that whether the city of Guelph is liberal in this offer or not, these people have the right to hold these shares even if they were offered $20,000,000 each for them, if they do not want to sell them. In this legislation the city of Guelph asks this parliament to interfere and to arbitrarily dictate to these men that they shall accept a certain price for their property. It seems to me that even if this legislation be passed it is ultra vires of this parliament, but my main argument is that this legislation opens the door to the confiscation of private citizens' property if in the opinion of parliament they are offered fair compensation. I object to that confiscatory feature of the Bill. Now, let me make it quite clear to the Prime Minister: The city of Guelph is the majority stockholder in this railway, which is in operation. There is no difference between the city of Guelph coming here and asking these men to be compelled to surrender their holding than if some one should say: Lancaster, of St. Catharines, holds stock in the Bank of Montreal, which is now selling at $280 a share, and we will give him a little more than that, and ask parliament to say that he must deliver it up to us at that price. Unfortunately, I have no stock in the Bank of Montreal, but I give that as an illustration. If we do this, where are we going to end? We are simply allowing people, who seem to have had some influence to get the Bill through the Senate, to interfere with the rights of a man to do as he likes with his own property. Why should such a Bill as this pass at this stage of the session, and if it stopped to-day and does not pass, no one is going to be hurt, from the standpoint of the people of Canada? Let me point out to the Prime Minister that the city of Guelph has no municipal rights in this connection, and that when the city of Guelph says, with the consent of its ratepayers, that it will go into the railroad business, in that quality the city of Guelph is just in the same position as the Canadian Pacific railway or the Grand Trunk railway. Would the Prime Minister for one minute allow these companies, or any other railway company, to say as is said here in the mischievous part of the section, that they are allowed to acquire the shares of the company's stock from certain persons owning them, at a certain price per share, and that it shall be the duty of such persons respectively to transfer their shares to the said corporation? I am quite sure that the Prime Minister would not endorse any such legislation as that in the case of the other railroad companies. The city of Guelph owns the majority of this stock. It is exactly in the same position as if a railway came here saying that they wanted to expropriate the investments of a certain number of minority shareholders by adding six per cent to the amount they paid for each share, and that parliament should drastically and confiscatorily and socialistically remove their rights. That is all that is in the Bill, and I protest against the principle.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As my hon. friend has appealed to me, I have no hesitation in giving him my opinion. I knew little of this legislation until this Bill was introduced the other day. I must say that to some extent I would agree with him, but I take exception to his statement that the principle of confiscation of which he speaks is to be found in it.

Mr. LANCASTER. The last clause of section 2.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend knows that in these matters, municipal as well as national, the supreme law is the old Roman law, that is to say the interest of the state is the supreme law of the state. That applied to a city as well as to the nation itself. In this matter the city of Guelph has acquired a railway. It is a public utility which is to be operated by the city. I think that is a principle perhaps dearer to my hon. friend than to myself; at all events, it is an experiment that is to be made in Guelph. This is agreeable to the large majority of the ratepayers of Guelph. Thev find in their way three or four shareholders who do not want to part with their property. My hon. friend knows that it is one of the primary principles of the law in regard to railways that they have the right of expropriation. It is provided that if a railway is to be built anywhere it shall have the power to expropriate.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is in the interest of the people to get the railway built, but how are the people interested as to who owns the stock?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is in the interest of the people to have the railway built. Now, the interest of the people is to have the railway administered, and they want to have it administered by the city of Guelph. That is the interest of the people, at all events that is the way the people of Guelph interpret their interest; they think it is proper for them to administer that railway. They have acted accordingly; they have passed the necessary legislation, but it is found that three or four shareholders are not willing to part with their stock. Therefore, again in the interest of the people of Guelph, they say these shareholders should be expropriated, and if the power of expropriation is fair in one case it seems to me it is as fair in the other case. The only principle at which we have to look is whether or not these men are to receive fair and legitimate compensation. If they receive legitimate compensation, the element of confiscation which is relied upon by my hon. friend does not exist. We have not in our laws a principle to determine what would be legitimate compensation in a case of this kind, as we have at the commencement of the railway for the expropriation of real estate, but the city of Guelph, as I understand, do not want to take away the property of the shareholders; they ask parliament for permission to expropriate it, and by this declare the amount of compensation to be given; the amount is $400 for one share of $100. Is that a legitimate compensation or not? My hon. friend says it is not.

Mr. LANCASTER. I say we are not competent to decide.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I say he has no means of knowing, and I have no means of knowing, but it strikes a man of common sense that all parties in Guelph, on both sides of politics, agree that this is a fair amount of compensation.

Mr. BOYCE. Is my hon. friend aware that these shares are earning dividends of about 90 per cent?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am aware that it is not the case; I am aware that the dividend is 6 per cent, but I am told the earnings have been 90 per cent. That may be, I do not know as to that. I understand there is a liability to pay and the city of Guelph has operated the road for a long time at a loss, and I dare say if in 1901 the legislation now sought had been asked for it would have been obtained without difficulty. The property has appreciated to a large degree. You have here a whole community agreeing not to confiscate the property, not to take it away, but to give these shareholders a fair amount of compensation. How are we to determine that amount? It seems to me that when all parties in the community agree that this is a fair amount of compensation—

Mr. LANCASTER. All parties interested are against the parties who object.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. All parties in the city of Guelph have come to a conclusion to give that amount of money to the shareholders, $400 for $100; it seems to me to be a pretty steep price to pay. Under such circumstances I think the legislation is legitimate, and I do not see that there is this element of confiscation of which my hon. friend speaks.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does my hon. friend realize that instead of doing our duty as members for Canada, we are simply subordinating our judgment to that of the city of Guelph? I object to that, whether it be the city of Guelph, the city of St. Catherines, or any other city. In this case the city of Guelph are the people interested in freezing out the men who object.

Mr. SPROULE. The Prime Minister cannot be aware that the city of Guelph have leased this road for 99 years to the Canadian Pacific railway, and not the city of Guelph, but the Canadian Pacific railway are operating it and paying the city a rental for it, so it is not municipal ownership.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I cannot help thinking after hearing the right hon. gentleman that if he will condescend to give a few moment's consideration to the Bill he will entirely change the opinion he has expressed. The right hon. gentleman drew a parallel between an ordinary case of expropriation in the case of the construction of a railway, and the expropriation of these shares. Is there the slightest similarity in the world between the two propositions? We all know that originally railways had not the power of expropriation, and we who live along the line of the Grand Trunk railway, between Toronto and Montreal, know to our cost that they had not that power for they were compelled to erect stations at such inconvenient places that we have been subjected to great inconvenience ever since. Then the power of expropriation was given to them in their own interest, and in the public interest. In this particular case we find there is no cause of expropriation in the interests of the public. There is a railway which has two classes of shareholders. One class of shareholders deem themselves entitled to confiscate property of the other class who have as good a right to their property as the city, according to the evidence of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) in 1901. There was no pretension then that these gentlemen had not a perfect right to their shares. The hon. gentleman brought down an extraordinary measure in 1901, but he was very careful to point out that there was no compensation, these directors were to retain their shares, and they were given praise, because they had devoted their time to the working of this railway during the dark years when it did not pay, and as far as one could judge every one was filled with gratitude to the gentlemen who are to-day attacked. The wheel of time rolled on. This railway is being operated by the Canadian Pacific railway, and I venture to say that all under Heaven that Guelph has to do in connection with it is to pocket a certain amount of profits on a certain amount of stock. Can any one suggest a way in which a railway running past the city of Guelph, operated by the Canadian Pacific railway can help Guelph one particle more if the dividends and profits go into one pocket or the other? The operation of the road is exactly the same as was provided for in 1901. The hon. gentleman who fathers the Bill came here in 1901 and carefully——

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am not interested in the Bill if you refer to me.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am not finding fault with that.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am not fathering it, it is not my Bill.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It is not in the name of the hon. member, it is in the name of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. A. H. Clarke), but the hon. gentleman appears from 'Hansard,' to have been really the father of the Bill in 1901, and so to-day in the passage of the Bill through committee the hon. gentleman is interested, and properly has taken an active part in pushing it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I object to that, I have not taken an active part in pushing it.

Mr. NORTHRUP. We will not take up time discussing that.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Be sure of your facts before stating them.

Mr. NORTHRUP. In 1901 the member for Wellington, the same gentleman who represents that riding to-day, brought down a Bill the object of which was to do away with what they thought appeared to be an injustice, that the minority of the share-holders had a majority of the directors, so parliament made a provision by which the city of Guelph, having the majority of stock, should have a majority of directors, and they have had a majority of directors from that day to this. If they had a majority of the directors of the board, in the city of Guelph, and in the city of Guelph they have the bulk of the stock, and the road is being operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway, how in the name of all that is reasonable can there be any benefit to the public except as a matter of dollars and cents, taking it from the pockets of one party and putting it into the pockets of another, if these shares are to be confiscated. What is the position? Did anybody ever hear of a railway company coming to this House, and asking for power to expropriate lands at a price to be fixed by the railway company? Was there ever any such thing heard of? It is a matter of indifference to me personally whether the shares of these gentlemen are to be expropriated or not. As a matter of fact I know only one of the ten gentlemen whose names are mentioned, but it is the principle that seems to me to be so important. Is the principle to be laid down that such legislation as this can be put through this House in its dying hours, when there is no time to consider it fairly? Is this House so anxious to pass confiscatory legislation, and to suspend the rules of the House to allow such legislation to go through that would not otherwise pass, because if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) had not succeeded in getting the rules suspended we would not be considering it now? The same thing was done in 1901. I do not think anybody in the light of the experience of the ten years can say that there was any particular reason why the rules of this House should have been suspended in 1901 to pass the legislation that was passed then. In 1910 this House was told, as it is told to-day, that Guelph was wholly in favour of the legislation, and a petition was sent in under the seal of the town council, setting forth that the city of Guelph was in favour of the legislation, and yet at that very time a counter-petition was signed, and a letter appeared in the newspapers which was verified by one alderman and supported by another alderman, stating that although they had all agreed in the council, it was under misrepresentations. Still under those circumstances parliament suspended the rules and allowed that rather extraordinary legislation to pass. Now, in the year of grace, 1910, we have parliament doing the same thing again, and in the dying hours of the session. Why was it not brought up before? We have been sitting here now for six months, and it seems to me that there was no reason why it should not have been up before.

Mr. GUTHRIE. There were very good reasons. It was not thought that any legislation would be necessary until December. Negotiations took place and six of those holding stock agreed to accept $400, and it was expected that they would all accept it. It was then too late to introduce the Bill in this House, but it went through the usual course in the Senate, where it was thoroughly thrashed out, all parties being heard, and passed by a majority of four to one. It was not a party division for Senator Lougheed supported the Bill, while Sir Mackenzie Bowell opposed it and so on. There has been no unnecessary delay.

Mr. NORTHRUP. All those years have rolled by and the conditions are such that at the time my hon. friend's supporters wish legislation they find it too late to get it in the ordinary way through this House, and rather than wait another year they go to the other House, I am not blaming them for taking that course.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The reason that the legislation became necessary was that in last November, or December, the Guelph Junction Railway Company undertook to declare a dividend of six per cent on their stock, notwithstanding the fact that they owed the city of Guelph at that time $4,000 arrears of interest, and $60,000 odd of compound interest. They had no right to declare that dividend though the amount was small, and that was what brought the application to parliament.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It would seem that all this trouble has been raised and the suspension of the rules of parliament rendered necessary because three or four shareholders are liable to pay six per cent on $400 for one year. This is the immense constitutional principle that necessitates the suspension of the rules of this House. Personally I cannot see, if the city of Guelph had a majority of the directors on the board, and there are only three or four of those shareholders, why it should not have been possible to get a majority to give these parties six per cent. It is a very simple way of compelling railways to pay their debts before they pay dividends. I would ask the Minister of Railways if he has considered this point. It seems to me there is a great deal in it. Have we the right as a matter of law to confiscate stock in this way, because it amounts to confiscation? I quite understand that this parliament has the power to pass we shall say insurance laws and it has the powers to pass the necessary legislation to enable the company to carry out its duties. And there is no doubt that we have the power here to-day to pass any Act to enable this railway company to carry out its duties as a railway, but the burden is on the gentleman who comes here and asks parliament to do something that is a gross interference with civil rights, to convince this House that the piece of legislation he is asking for is necessary in order to enable this railway company to carry out its work for the benefit of the people as a whole. Unless that can be shown, it seems to me that the local legislature and the local legislature alone could deal with those civil rights. Has this parliament the right to order the sale of those shares? If it has the right to order the sale it has the right to compel them to buy, and so it seems to me to be a clear case of interference with the provincial rights of which we have heard so much. We can pass a piece of legislation touching the insurance companies, giving them all the rights to do business, but the courts have decided that the local legislature can state how that business is to be carried on and can suggest conditions. Similarly, the local legislature having control over civil rights, and seeing that this Act has nothing to do with the operation of the railway but only with the division of the dividends or profits that come out of the railway, I think that we are interfereing with provincial rights, and that on that ground the Bill is objectionable.

Mr. M. CLARK. I spoke and voted against this measure in committee and a very few words will suffice for me to state the grounds here on which I did so, and on which I will do so again now. I agree word for word with the argument we have heard from the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster)), and I cannot say that that argument was at all shaken by what fell from my hon. friend the Prime Minister. He based his case so far as I could hear his remarks upon a quotation from Roman law. Well, so far as I am concerned the dictates of the ancient empire of Rome need a very considerable infusion of modern salt to go far in the British empire. And it does not appear to me that my right hon. friend himself was quite satisfied—having in himself the instincts of freedom at least as strong as any member of this House—because he went on immediately to change his ground by arguing that this was not a case of confiscation but a case of expropriation. Now, as I understand the rights of expropriation conferred by law, they are strictly limited, limited to the removal of difficulties which would otherwise be insuperable, to the running of a railway at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. In the public interest.

Mr. M. CLARK. In the public interest. But to take shares in a concern which is already running does not appeal to my mind as being on all fours with expropriation so defined. There is a question of trusteeship which was raised in committee, but which, I do not understand to have been raised here to-day. And I must say that on the question of trusteeship my mind was set perfectly at rest in committee by a quotation read from a speech by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) in 1901. Lucid in its expression, unmistakeable in its meaning, that speech declared, if language can declare anything, that these men have the property not as trustees, but as absolute owners in fee simple. But, if they have not, if there be a question about this matter, the place to settle that question of trusteeship is in the courts of law, and not in parliament, and parliament ought not to act as a court of law on such a point. The question of trusteeship excluded, all that appeals to my mind is this: Has parliament the right to take away the property of these people against their will? Now, the primary function of parliament, the very basal and elementary function of government, that upon which our whole civilization rests is the protection of life and property. And let me say, Sir, that the discharge of that function is all the more important if the minority concerned be a small one. There are plenty to cry out for majorities—majorities can generally take very good care of themselves. It is only in the case of small minorities that the power of government need be exercised. I am not at all concerned at the smallness of the number of people affected. I recall that there were not a great many of the citizens of Great Britain, at the beginning of the Stuart wars, who were put in the pillory. But the fact that even a few British citizens had their persons put in the pillory led a freedom-loving people to establish the rights of the citizens, even though to do so it became necessary to deluge Great Britain in blood. And the right of property is only one which is less sacred than the right to life; it also is one of the fundamental functions of all government. Nor does the question of the amount of money involved appeal to me for a moment. If the amount were only ten cents, it would be just as important in the establishment of this principle. As the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has said, the question of the amount of money does not enter into the case, and it certainly does not enter into it in my mind. The question is whether the parliament of this country, so far from discharging its primary function of protecting the property of its people shall set an example to those who take away that property, and itself become the breaker of the law, and the disturber of the very foundations of our civilization. For, depend upon it, if this be done in the small thing to-day it may be done in the bigger thing to-morrow. I shall give a vote, without a shadow of hesitation, in the interest of freedom, in the interest of the elementary rights of citizens of a free country, and a free empire, believing that for parliament to take away these shares—independently of all consideration of their number or their value—will be an act not of expropriation, but of confiscation.

Mr. BOYCE. I agree substantially with what has been said by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. M. Clark). I must confess to some surprise at the manner in which the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) views this question and the very unfortunate manner in which he put the case. If I read aright the political history of this country, and especially that with which my right friend has had to do as the leader of a great party, there is no man in Canadian public life who has shouted louder for provincial rights, for property rights and the protection of minorities, than the right hon. gentleman himself. There is no man who has tried harder to win the votes of the majority more by crying for the rights of the minority. It seems to me that the illustration which he used was a very unfortunate one for his own argument. Let me put a proposition which is applicable to the special case he submitted. He says that this is an absolutely straightforward transaction, that the city of Guelph owns this road, that the city of Guelph wants its industries built up and must have this road, and so he says they can expropriate these shares and take them away from the minority. But he has not shown that the minority stand in the way of the success of this enterprise. The road is built; as the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) has said, it is an established fact. And all the prosperity and the great revenue from its earnings of 90 per cent on the capital come to the city of Guelph. Can the fact that five shares are outstanding in the name of individuals who are undeniably entitled to them interfere in any way with the rights of the city of Guelph? I misunderstand the right of expropriation if the right hon. gentleman has stated it correctly. He states that there is a right of expropriation by convenience, and a right of expropriation by necessity. I would ask him again what benefit can there be to the public by the exercise of the right of eminent domain over five shares out of a total of 3,000 shares? My hon friend does not reply. Then, leaving aside that argument of the right hon. gentleman—which, in my humble opinion, is not of the soundest—let me see how far the rights of these people are recognized. This Bill does not recite at all that these shares are necessary for the city of Guelph or for the public. It does not proceed upon any such principle. It proceeds upon a false declaration, false by the records and statutes of this House. I cannot point out too vehemently that that declaration is absolutely false by the statute, because the declaration states that these men are trustees. They are not trustees, there is no argument that can make them trustees, trusteeship being a question of fact. There is absolutely no proof of trusteeship, and when, in the Railway Committee, the city solicitor of Guelph addressed that committee, he was asked why he didn't go to the court and prove that trusteeship, he said he would not go there because he could not prove it. Now, my right hon. friend says that that which cannot be proved to the satisfaction of a court shall be taken in parliament as a fact, and that private property shall be wrested from private individuals upon the assumption of that fact, without any public interest being served at all. The plea of public interest is exploded, it is a mere chimera, it is dissipated as the morning mists before the sun. It is simply a matter whether my right hon. friend is going to lend his prestige to the exigencies of taking away from a man a share which is very valuable to him, which he is equitably entitled to, simply because my right hon. friend thinks possibly there may be votes to gain or other objects to serve. That is absolutely all there is in this case. It may be well for the city of Guelph to say that the city desires to control that company absolutely. But why should they be permitted to do so against the legitimate rights of owners of shares in that railway? The question of trusteeship is the sole question.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does my hon. friend think that on that question parliament is competent to decide anything?

Mr. BOYCE. I do not think that can be contended for a moment. If there is a question, should not parliament say to these people, decide that question in the courts. What are the courts for? If the city of Guelph came to us and said: There is a question of trusteeship here, we have applied to the courts and the courts have said that by reason of a technical defect we cannot get the relief that we should have; then if they came back to parliament and asked for relief it might temporarily be granted. But without any investigation before the courts, without any trial, are we going to declare men to be trustees who are admitted here not to be trustees? Doubtless my right hon. friend cannot carry to his mind the history of this case, which was inquired into in 1901. My hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) was here in 1901, when the city of Guelph came here for some legislation. The question came up in regard to these shares, and when the House was in committee on the Bill, this is what the hon. member for Wellington said—I quote from page 1915 of the 'Hansard' of 1901:

No real injury is being done to anybody; no one is to be deprived of any property. The stock now held by the directors is to remain their stock.

And let me tell my right hon. friend that those directors are the same persons whose stock he says now must be taken away from them. That is the representation upon which statutory relief was granted, and which statutory relief itself, on the face of the statute, admits the bona fide ownership to be in these men.

The stock now held by the directors is to remain their stock; they are still all to be eligible as directors; but the anomaly of the present position is very apparent. By the original Act the city council is allowed three representatives on the board, the mayor and two others; the stockholders have five representatives on the board; and the anomaly of the situation is that two-thirds of the stock has a minority on the board and one-third of the stock, of which only ten per cent has been paid, has a majority on the board.

Could anything be more definite than that statement? If it is, let them quote it. The Hon. James Sutherland, then a member of this House, said:

It is true that some residents of the city, in whose interests especially this scheme is being promoted, became shareholders and paid into the treasury of the county $100 each.

The same men whose rights are now being disposed of. Then the question was asked, Why not take these shares, why not tender these men the full value of their shares, and the Minister of Public Works at that time, said:

The hon. gentleman propounds a theoretical question, but I will tell him the exact state of affairs and I will then ask him what he would do. He wants to know why a man should be forced to accept a low price for a valuable share. Of course, any legislation of that kind would be wrong.

Of course any legislation of that kind would be wrong.

But, in this case, it is well known in this House or out of it that there is no value in these shares.

In the debate my hon. friend from East Grey (Dr. Sproule), page 1923, said this:

Now, the proposal made by Colonel McRae, I think, was a reasonable one. He said: If these parties want to get our stock, let them pay us back our money, take the stock from us and release us from any further liability. But they did not choose to do that.

They refused to do it, and why? For the very reason stated, that the stock was not worth a dollar, as the Hon. James Sutherland said. I will not quote any further from that debate, but I want to show that for that legislation, for that Bill upon which that debate took place, there was a petition. That petition was dated on the 15th April, 1901, and it recited that the petitioners had mutually agreed that, subject to the approval of the Senate and House of Commons the amendment set forth in the schedule should be the amendment that should be enacted. Here is the Act of 1901, which was passed as a mutual recognition of the rights of property. The statute of 1901, chapter 64, section 3, provides that:

The directors of the company shall, upon the request of any of the present shareholders of the company holding ten shares of the capital stock of the company, and upon whose shares ten per cent only has been paid, issue a fully paid-up share for one hundred dollars to each of such shareholders holding ten shares as aforesaid, being for the aggregate amount paid upon his present shares——

That was the settlement.

—and shall pass a by-law or by-laws, which the said directors are hereby empowered to do, cancelling the subscription for and all liability upon the remaining nine shares held or subscribed for by any such shareholder or shareholders; and thereupon all liability of any such shareholders for the payment of the amount of the said remaining shares subscribed for or now held by them respectively, or any part thereof, shall cease and determine——

Here is the important part:

—and the word 'shareholder' in this section shall include as well any one or more persons holding shares in trust as those holding shares in their own right.

Now, the contention upon which this Bill proceeds is that there never has been and never could be any one holding shares in his own right. Well, by 'Hansard', by the statement of the minister, by the petition itself, by the Bill itself it was shown that these men held these shares in their own rights. I would ask the right hon. the first minister to reconsider the proposition that he has stated to this committee. He says: Why should not these people sell? The exigencies of the public demand it; they should be compelled to sell in the public interest. Why should they? If they should sell why should they accept the valuation which my hon. friend puts upon their stock? My hon. friend says that $400 is good value for their shares. I would ask my hon. friend if, with 90 per cent earned on the stock of this company, it would not make that stock more valuable than $400?

My hon. friend must see that whether it is $400 or $1,000 the value was not established and he does not suggest any method of ascertaining the value of the stock. I protest against this legislation for the reason that I have stated, and because the rights of those individuals have not been recognized. Some hon. gentleman has stated that a dividend has been declared upon this stock. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) says 'no', but I say 'yes'. My hon. friend, if he says 'no', does not know the facts. A dividend has been paid to these gentlemen on the stock.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I have a memorandum here, and I know that there is a year's interest due and that this company is away in arrears. How can any company pay dividends when it is in arrears?

Mr. BOYCE. I have stated a fact, it is a fact and the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) will not deny it that 6 per cent was paid on the stock held by these gentlemen. That dividend was paid and no attempt has been made by the city of Guelph to limit the amount.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The dividend was paid but improperly paid and this Bill follows.

Mr. BOYCE. Does my hon. friend seek by this Bill to take these dividends back from them?

Mr. GUTHRIE. That is not what it means. We gave them that.

Mr. BOYCE. Why not apply to the courts? If we adopt this legislation we do so in derogation of well established principles and we give the majority of shareholders the right to extinguish the minority. The rights of eminent domain and of expropriation are absolutely foreign to this question. We are asked to pass this Bill by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) upon the absolute fiction that the preamble of this Bill is proved notwithstanding the fact that no court in the land would allow it to be proved.

Mr. EMMERSON. When this Bill was before the Railway Committee, I gave very close attention to the gentlemen who had the duty of presenting the case both on behalf of and against the Bill. After weighing what was said I concluded that this was a Bill that should not receive the support of that committee. I voted against the Bill and ordinarily, when any one of the Standing Committees has determined with respect to a particular Bill, I do not feel called upon to take any further part in it when it comes before the Committee of the Whole, because I recognize that the findings and recommendations of these committees should weigh with the House or with the Committee of the Whole. But this is not an ordinary Bill; it is extraordinary in its terms. When the matter was placed before the Railway Committee, it was claimed that the parties who held these five shares of stock were trustees on behalf of the city, and that therefore the city should be placed in a position to deal with it. But it was said that while these gentlemen were merely trustees and merely held this stock in the interest of the citizens the city of Guelph would be magnanimous enough to give them a compensation amounting to $400 per share. Now, I thought we were not clothed as a committee with power to adjudicate as to whether these gentlemen were trustees or whether they held the stock in their own right. I thought that the courts were the proper tribunal to determine the question as between the city of Guelph and these individual stockholders in connection with this company. But, if we were clothed with the power to determine that question we had, in so far as the evidence was concerned, the admission on behalf of the city of Guelph that the stock was held by these gentlemen in their own right, and that admission was made in 1901 when they sought legislation in connection with this very matter. If the facts as they existed before 1901 were presented to the committee there would be no difficulty, but when the matter is weighed in the light of the circumstances attending the passage of the legislation of 1901, no one can say that these men held their stock as trustees. The city of Guelph is estopped from saying these men did not hold the stock in their own right, because they treated with them as being the sole owners of that stock. That being so the very foundation for this Bill disappears.

Mr. J. HAGGART. What reason has the city of Guelph given for the position taken by it now?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Bill is based on the pretention that these men were trustees and they want power to confiscate—because that is the proper word to use—the stock, but they are willing to pay $400 per share. Why the city wants to do this has not been made clear to me.

Mr. LANCASTER. For the sake of the investment.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is merely conjecture, but at all events they have given no good reason why and how the interests of the city are interfered with by these gentlemen holding that stock. As the facts are, I cannot, and I do not think this parliament should attempt to interfere with what is plainly and clearly a civil right of certain citizens. Why should we by federal legislation, seek to determine what are individual rights in property, when that duty is relegated to the courts of the country. The vote I gave in committee I will repeat here because I feel that a wrong is being done to these men and that it is an arbitrary exercise of the power of this parliament to divest them of their rights in their property. I recognize that the recommendation of a committee deserves great weight and were the circumstances of this case other than they are I would not have raised objection on this occasion.

Mr. SPROULE. I took some interest in this legislation in 1901 and I have refreshed my memory as to the explanations made in the House, especially by the hon. member for South Wellington. The desire of the city of Guelph in this matter at that time, is not the desire of the city of Guelph now. In 1901 the city desired to get the right to elect a majority of the directors because, while the city took $20,000 stock out of the total of $30,000 the city had only three directors and the holders of the balance of $10,000 of the stock had six directors, so that the tail was wagging the dog. There was no contention in 1901 that these stockholders were other than the absolute owners of their stock. In compliance with the request of the people of Guelph we amended the law to give the city of Guelph the right to elect five directors instead of three, to restrict the other holders of the stock to electing three directors instead of six, and we further gave the city the right to elect men who were not qualified as stockholders to be directors of the company at all, but who might be aldermen, or ratepayers duly qualified to be elected as aldermen, and we further provided that the mayor should be ex officio a director of the company. In this way the legislation enacted in 1901 gave the city of Guelph complete control. Then by clause 3, in that Bill we provided:

> The directors of the company shall, upon the request of any of the present shareholders of the company holding ten shares of the capital stock of the company, and upon whose shares ten per cent only has been paid——

That is these private stockholders, because while each man held $1,000 stock he only paid 10 per cent of it.

> —issue a fully paid-up share for one hundred dollars to each of such shareholders holding ten shares as aforesaid, being for the aggregate amount paid upon his present shares, and shall pass a by-law or by-laws, which the said directors are hereby empowered to do, cancelling the subscription for and all liability upon the remaining nine shares held or subscribed for by any such shareholder or shareholders; and thereupon all liability of any such shareholders for the payment of the amount of the said remaining shares subscribed for or now held by them respectively, or any part thereof, shall cease and determine; and the word 'shareholder' in this section shall include as well any one or more persons holding shares in trust as those holding shares in their own right.

They now come before the Railway Committee and declare that no one held shares in his own right and say that they relieved the shareholders of the liability which rested on them, because they were only holding one share each in trust for the city. The preamble of their Bill is amended to carry out that intention. What does the Bill say?

> That the corporation of the city of Guelph holds, itself or by trustees on its behalf, all the shares in the capital stock of the company except a few shares upon which five hundred dollars in all have been paid, which few shares were subscribed for by persons acting in that behalf as agents for the city.

And, therefore, holding it in trust, they put deliberately a falsehood in the preamble of the Bill to mislead either this House or the Railway Committee, and perhaps both, into the belief that these stockholders only held their shares in trust.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Might I correct the hon. gentleman. The clause that he refers to was not in the Bill as introduced, that put in by the Senate committee of its own motion, and no charge of misleading should be made in regard to it.

Mr. SPROULE. I am dealing with the preamble of the Bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The preamble was put in by the Senate Committee, it is not in the original Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Somebody put it in there.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The Senate Committee did.

Mr. SPROULE. It is false on its face. Upon what evidence did the Senate put it in there?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The evidence that was put before the Railway Committee which passed it yesterday.

Mr. SPROULE. Yet the very statute we passed in 1901 declared that they shall receive paid up stock to the extent of $100 and continue to hold that in their own right. No claim was made that they were holding it as trustees in any sense of the word, and when they asked the city through Col. McRae that that $100 be paid back to them and they would abandon all the stock the city of Guelph refused the offer. They were not willing to take it then, it was not earning a dividend, but now when it is earning a big dividend the city wants to take it from them. The present Bill says they are holding it as agents for the city. That I hold is absolutely incorrect. As to whether or not they were holding in their own right, I need not quote the words of the hon. member for South Wellington, who said that there was no dispute as to how the stock was then held, no one contended they did not hold it in their own right, and the only contention was that the city of Guelph wanted the majority of directors. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) spoke at that time, and said:

The present mayor will not always be the mayor of the city of Guelph, and while the rights of the railway company may be safeguarded at the present time, there is no guarantee that the same safeguards would surround the future board. I look upon the treatment which these ten shareholders are to receive as altogether unprecedented in the history of legislation in this House.

That is the taking away their right as to having the number of directors on the board they were entitled to by virtue of their Act. Then Mr. McGowan, reperesenting an adjoining constituency, said:

I am thoroughly in sympathy with the opposition to this motion. These directors paid 10 per cent each on their $1,000, and the understanding was that they should have one paid-up share and be relieved from all further liability, but under this amendment they will still be liable for the balance of their stock.

And he opposed it on that ground. Several others spoke, among them Mr. Seymour Gourley, who took exactly the same ground that it was an injustice to them. I said with reference to it:

Now, the proposal made by Colonel McRae, I think, was a reasonable one. He said: If these parties want to get our stock, let them pay us back our money, take the stock from us and release us from any further liability. But they did not choose to do that; and will this House pass a law to compel men to abandon their rights and to give up their property without any consideration after they have made it valuable, when they are the only parties that have made a reasonable endeavour to give the city of Guelph the advantages of a railway that to-day is on a workable basis?

That was the whole contention then, but the whole contention to-day is a different one entirely. The contention to-day is: We will compel these people to sell their stock for what the people of Guelph wish to give them. I say, as the member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) said, that there is no other word in the English language that will convey the meaning of that condition except the word confiscation. It is absolute confiscation, pure and simple. I have been in this House for a somewhat lengthy period, and I never knew in the Canadian parliament such a principle to be endorsed by us. I am not aware that the Canadian parliament affords in its history any example to show that we have ever done that before. Are we to depart from the well-understood, sound principles which every legislature in the civilized world follows to-day and confiscates people's property whether they will or will not give it up? In my judgment, we will be doing a great wrong if we do it. I was opposed to it then and I am opposed to it to-day, and if it is carried it will be carried by a majority of this House, but not with my sanction. I regard it as one of the greatest injustices we could possibly do to any individual, to take from him what belongs to him and give it to another without his having a voice or say as to how much he shall receive in return for it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. This question is one I think which should not be viewed from any partisan standpoint. It seems to me that the gentlemen who own this stock are getting a fair figure for it if they are getting $400—I wish I could get that for some stocks. There are only four of them, and as nearly as I can understand they are getting about $400 for each $100. There must be some ulterior motive that four men with $100 stock each in a concern of this kind can get so much opposition raised in this House. The question of confiscation is raised. There is confiscation in many cases, and it is always under different names. In case of war things are commandeered. In case of railways they are expropriated, and when the other fellow says he does not want to give up the stuff he says it is confiscation. The city of Guelph, as near as I can understand, put into this $173,000 good hard cash. These people were putting in something like $500.

The trouble, as nearly as I can make out is that these poor men want to share up to about 40 per cent, of the profits now that it has become a paying road. However, the question to me is this: In cases of this kind when a municipality desires to go into public ownership, and is prepared to pay 400 per cent for going into it, I am not going to object. It is not confiscation to take away from a man for $400 what he paid only $100 for. If they took the shares away for 40 cents I would say that was confiscating. We are having questions of principle discussed here every day. This is not a court of law, this is a place to which the people bring questions which they can settle in the law courts. It is true there is uncertainty as to whether there is a trusteeship here. The argument raised throughout by those supporting the Bill is that there is not trusteeship. I have seen advertisements and letters in the newspapers—unfortunately I have not them here—which say that whenever these directors went to the city of Guelph and asked them to effect a fresh bonus they always laid stress on the fact that they were simply holding the interest as good citizens, not as trustees for this stock. I hope the House will pass this measure.

Mr. J. D. REID. I oppose this Bill because I think it is very unfair. I understand that no evidence was brought before the committee which considered it to show that these persons were really trustees. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Currie) states that he saw letters in some newspapers, but if there was any evidence of that kind I think it would have been brought before the committee and considered.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I did not argue that they were trustees. If they were trustees the city could take the stock from them by law.

Mr. J. D. REID. They are either trustees or they own the stock outright. The hon. member (Mr. Currie) says they are not trustees, therefore they must have owned the stock outright, and got it legitimately in the first place. It is the principle I am objecting to, not the amount of money involved. I do not believe that the gentlemen who own this stock care one iota about the amount involved, but they invested their money in this years ago, and though the amount may have been very small, now that the road is likely to be a paying road, we are asked to vote them out of their stock. If we pass this Bill we will create a precedent which will recoil on us in years to come. In the Railway Committee when a Bill is brought up and some of us object to something in it, other members stand up and state that in a Bill passed a year ago, or two years ago, there was a clause in which such and such a company was granted a charter, and therefor, we are told, that is a sufficient reason why we should pass another Bill. This is getting to be a very common practice in the Railway Committee. I say it is wrong to allow anything to pass that we in our hearts do not believe to be right. It should be no trouble for the city of Guelph to get rid of these share-holders. If they claim they are trustees the laws of this country will protect their rights. If we pass this Bill it will form a precedent, and next year or the following year, or some other year we will have Bills of this kind coming up.

At six o'clock, Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. D. REID. Mr. Chairman, when the House rose at six o'clock, I was pointing out the principle involved in this Bill, and had expressed my opposition to the measure on the ground of principle. The whole question is whether these present shareholders, at whom this Bill is aimed, are trustees or not. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to have that question decided by the courts. The courts of Ontario are open, and there need be no difficulty about the city of Guelph establishing its case if the facts are there to establish it. As I understand it, there were ten original shareholders in this company, six of whom have sold out voluntarily, taking the money they had paid in and a bonus in addition. But the other gentlemen do not wish to dispose of their stock, and for that reason the promoter of this Bill brings in this measure, I suppose, to force these gentlemen to sell. Mr. Chairman, that is a bad line for us to take. It sets a precedent which, in the future, may bring us trouble, for it will certainly be quoted to justify other Bills which this parliament ought not to pass. I understand that these stockholders are prepared to go before the courts, and if there is anything to prove that they are trustees, they are willing to give up their stock and lose what they have put into the railway. They simply ask for justice. I have no interest other than to see that right is done to the minority. I do not know any of these shareholders but one, but the rights of property ought to be protected by this House. I do not wish to say more about the Bill at the present time, but I sincerely hope the government will take a stand on this subject and not allow it to go down in history that in this parliament the majority of the members of this House were willing to take away rights that were granted to men in days gone by, rights which were recognized by the city of Guelph, and which are attacked in this parliament only now that the enterprise is prosperous.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I would like to say a word at this stage in regard to this Bill, for the purpose of explaining the real situation, as I think I am, perhaps, more familiar with it than many hon. members who have already spoken. I do not speak as the promoter of the Bill, because the Bill is not in my charge, but more as a citizen of Guelph, and one who has been pretty familiar with the history of the whole transaction. And I am satisfied that any one who considers all the facts will conclude that the four gentlemen who claim to be shareholders and who are dissenting from the general scheme of transferring their shares to the city are not being harshly dealt with, but very generously dealt with.

Now, this road had its inception in the year 1887 at the request, the particular request, of about a dozen leading men of the city of Guelph, all manufacturers and large shippers. Of these original promoters, two are stokcholders, Colonel McRae and Mr. Kloepfer. The two other stockholders, whose names have been used in this discussion, were not original promoters or original shareholders. In 1887, through the board of trade and their own efforts, they induced the ctiy of Guelph to go into the construction of seventeen miles of railway to give the city connection with the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) says that two of these were not original stockholders. How did they become possessed of their stock?

Mr. GUTHRIE. One purchased the shares of a deceased stockholder, and the other acquired his otherwise. The city was reluctant, as cities are, to go into an undertaking of that magnitude, but through the efforts of these gentlemen in particular—and they worked hard—the city was induced to pass a by-law to finance this undertaking. The amount of stock in the road was $30,000. It was supposed that a bond issue of $155,000 would construct the road. The city passed the necessary by-law, and construction of the road began. The first thing that was necessary to do was to get a board of directors, and, under the Railway Act as it stood at that time, a director must have at least ten shares of stock in his own name. Ten gentlemen came forward and agreed to qualify as directors, and paid $100 apiece of their own money. So, each held ten shares with ten per cent paid and was still liable for calls amounting to $900. The road was constructed in the year 1888. After the construction it was found that there was an indebtedness on consturction of between $18,000 and $20,000. There was no money to pay it. The city had taken $20,000 of stock and paid it up, but the ten gentlemen who had qualified as directors did not pay up their stock. So there was nothing to pay the deficit. What were they to do? The creditors were clamouring for their money. These directors applied to the city of Guelph, saying, in effect: We do not own this stock in our own right, we are acting for you; we are stool-pigeons for the city of Guelph; this is a municipal scheme, not a private undertaking. And so they applied for relief from the indebtedness which they could have been called upon by the creditors to pay to the extent of $900 apiece. The city took that view of it. But I should mention that that was the city's view of it even before that time, because the city financed $155,000 of these bonds, and the mortgage deed was registered to secure the advance, and a special clause, clause No. 17, was inserted by the city that these stockholders should not be liable for the principal or interest, or arrears of interest on these bonds for any of their unpaid stock. That was before the indebtedness of about $19,000. On this indebtedness the city took the same position, and the city council said it would submit a by-law to the ratepayers to raise the money and relieve these directors of all payments.

Mr. LANCASTER. When was that?

Mr. GUTHRIE. It was started on 1st October, 1887, when the $155,000 was first financed. The city did submit the by-law. That submission was made in the summer of 1889. The first by-law submitted was defeated; or, rather not defeated; there was a majority in favour of it, but, under the municipal laws of Ontario, more than a majority was required, and the necessary number of votes were not polled. Mr. William Bell, the president of the railway company, wrote a letter to the citizens. I will read it in order to make the case clear. This is taken from the Guelph 'Herald,' the leading Conservative paper in the city. There is no politics in this question:

Letter to the editor:

Sir,—Citizens, please note that the directors or stockholders of the Guelph Junction Railway Company have no money interest in the railroad stock. They have already assigned to the city all their right, title and interest, and have handed over practically all the money they have paid on their stocks to the city for nothing whatever, and will not receive one cent of benefit from their stock whether they pay up in full or whether they pay only $100. The city owns everything and has all the earnings of the road to pay interest on its money advanced. The stockholders gave all these privileges and advantages to the city on the distinct understanding that they were to be relieved from all further liabilities on their stock. It was enormously for the benefit of the city that it should be done in this way. I hope the citizens will look on the matter in a just manner to the stockholders, who have given valuable time and means to build this road, and which will be and is of great benefit to the city.

(Signed) WM. BELL,
President Guelph Junction Ry. Co.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman say as a lawyer that that letter would be any evidence against these people?

Mr. GUTHRIE. That is the difficulty, in a court of justice technically that would be ruled out. The Bill was submitted and was defeated.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Was it true, as stated in that letter, that all these gentlemen had made over their interests to the city of Guelph?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The transfer had not been made. But the day before the by-law was submitted, on the 17th July, the following statement appeared in both the city newspapers:—

Guelph, 17th July, 1889.

To His Worship the Mayor of Guelph:

Dear Sir,—We understand that some persons object to the $18,000 by-law to be voted on to-morrow, upon the ground that the loan of the money to the Guelph Junction Railway Company will enable the stockholders to obtain the benefit of their stock without really paying for it.

This is not the case, and it was never supposed that the stock held by the undersigned would be of any value to them individually.

As the loan of the money will enable the undertaking of the company to be completed, to show our good faith in this, we now offer and agree with you on behalf of the city that, upon the loan of $18,000 being made, we will surrender or assign our stock, and all benefits which may be derived from it, including the payments which have been made by us, to the city or to any persons designated by the city, or to hold the stock in trust for the city, as the council may deem advisable, the city assuming our position with regard to the same.

Mr. SPROULE. Was not that the one that was not signed by four of them?

Mr. GUTHRIE. It is not signed by John and Charles Crowe because they were not stockholders. It is signed by the following gentlemen: Geo. Sleeman, John M. Bond, J. B. Armstrong, Charles Raymond, Charles Davidson, D. Guthrie, executor for estate the late John Hogg, D. McRae, C. Kleopfer, W. Bell, T. Gowdy. It is dated 17th July, 1889. Now it came to my notice on Thursday or Friday last, that one gentleman. Colonel McRae, is now inclined to say that he never signed it. Well, all I can say is that this is the first I ever heard of his taking such a position. I know that he never repudiated it until then. It has been before the people, published in the newspapers, and in 1901 was read before the Railway Committee of this House. Then I remember perfectly well hearing Colonel McRae say that he did not deny signing it, but he said if he signed it it was never carried out, because the city did not pass the by-law. Well, the city did not pass the by-law the following day, but a few months afterwards, in the January elections following, the city did pass the by-law by the necessary majority of the electors, and the money was handed over. That was in 1889, and the men who exerted themselves to pass the by-law were these ten gentlemen that subscribed the money to have it passed. Among the letters I have in my hand is a letter from Colonel McRae, sending his cheque for his share of the expenses in carrying the by-law. The amount of the cheque is not stated, but other cheques were produced showing that the amount was $25 per head for each of these ten men. The money was handed over, and the question then arose as to whether if the $18,000 of new bonds to pay the indebtedness should become in arrear, whether these ten individuals could still be called upon for the other $900 unpaid upon stock; they were released from the first issue of the bonds. An agreement was then signed by the city of Guelph and the Guelph Junction railway, dated the 12th of March, 1890, providing expressly that in respect of this $18,000 loan, if the principal or interest remained unpaid, the directors, or the ten gentlemen holding stock, would not be called on for any payment on account thereof. That was in the year 1890. Now for some reason that agreement was lost, it only turned up in January last. It was not drawn by the solicitor of the city of Guelph, or by the solicitor of the company, but by the secretary of the Guelph Junction railway, and although it was properly signed, I have no doubt that if its existence had been known in 1901 there would have been no application to parliament at that time. However, it turned up last January, and that relieves them again from all their liabilties. Now the road continued, it was built and operated, and a lease for 99 years was taken by the Canadian Pacific railway. The directors have nothing to do with it. The money was handed over to the city, either quarterly or half yearly, the amount was small, the interest ran largely in arrear, and in the year 1901 the city desired to have a larger representation on the board. While it had $20,000 of paid up stock and $173,000 of bonds, it had a minority on the board, and they sought legislation. Now, let me point out what was asked of this House. The Bill passed this House, but it did not pass the Senate, the Senate as then composed was not favourable to it, and when I spoke in this House, I spoke in regard to the Bill which was then introduced, and what I said then was true, and it is true now. But even if my statement was inaccurate then, it could not affect the status of those parties. If they were agents of the city, if they were trustees of the city, if they were acting on behalf of the city, any statement of mine could not have changed their status, and did not change it. But what I said then, was that the shares which they had would remain just in the same position. The Bill passed this House and went to the Senate, but did not pass there. Then an arrangement was made and an agreement come to which resulted in the Act as it stands to-day being passed. I do not see anything inconsistent in the language of that Act with the proposal made to-day. I know section 3 of the Act of 1901 contains a provision whereby parties who desire to transfer their stock might do so, and give the city power to acquire it, but the municipality cannot acquire unpaid stock, without special legislative authority. Now it does speak of private stockholders and of trustees; the reason was that certain of the original stockholders were deceased, and they were represented by executors and trustees, but the private stockholders remained in the same position as they did in 1887 when they subscribed their stock. At that time there was an arrears of interest on the bonds of between $60,000 and $70,000, the stock was worth nothing. Time went on, and the Canadian Pacific railway extended the road from Guelph to Goderich.

Mr. SPROULE. What did the directors agree to do?

Mr. GUTHRIE. This is what section 3 says:—

> The directors of the company shall, upon the request of any of the present shareholders of the company holding ten shares of the capital stock of the company, and upon whose shares ten per cent only has been paid, issue a fully paid-up share for one hundred dollars to each of such shareholders.

Now there is not a single man who has made a request yet. They have had an opportunity, but they have not made a request. But nothing in that Act has changed the status of the company, or of the individuals, in regard to that stock. In the last two or three years the road has paid a handsome return to the city by reason of the extension of the road from Guelph to Goderich. The Guelph Junction Railway Company cannot contract any debt. That is in its agreement with the Canadian Pacific railway. They have absolutely nothing to do at that board but meet two or three times a year, receive the Canadian Pacific Railway cheque, and hand it over to the city of Guelph. It is absolutely a municipal institution now. The city of Guelph has gone into municipal ownership to a greater extent than any other city in Canada. It owns its own radial railway, its gas and electric plant and every other public utility and this is one of them. To-day the city claims absolute ownership. When the question of the dividend which was paid on this stock last year was brought to the attention of the city, people began to inquire what right these people had to dividends, and then for the first time the question was raised as to the rights of these individuals to receive a dividend of 6 per cent on their stock at a time when there was $4,000 of interest due. There is over $10,000 due now, but I understand that there is money enough in the bank to meet it, and there is an accumulation of compound interest of between $60,000 and $70,000 which the city, by this Bill, desires to turn into stock, and which it does not expect to get on this road. Whether that dividend should have been paid may be a question, but having been paid, as the matter is only a small one—$60 all told on the ten shares—it was obvious that it would not be worth the city's while to contest it in the courts. But as soon as the question was raised all the original stockholders, save two, came forward and agreed to the city's request, saying: We were trustees, we were simply representing the city and we are willing to hand over our stock and take what is fair. The city gave them compound interest since 1887 down to the present day, and it must be remembered that it is only within the last three years that the road has been earning money. In no event are these gentlemen being harshly dealt with.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman think that we ought to decide that question in this parliament?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think we should or I would not support the Bill. I think these gentlemen were more than generously dealt with.

Mr. BOYCE. If these men are trustees for the city, why did not the city go to the courts and get them to declare that they are?

Mr. GUTHRIE. There may be some technical objections to the evidence that they have to put before a court of law, and another difficulty might arise in that the judge might say that a municipal corporation has no power to receive those shares or no power to get unpaid stock.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman say that if the courts would not do it we should do it?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I say that these men are the trustees and agents of the city. The Bill did not contain that statement in the preamble when introduced, but the evidence submitted to the Senate Committee convinced the Senate Committee that that was the fact, and the Bill was thereupon amended and that statement was placed in the preamble. The sum payable when the Bill was introduced, was merely $100, the amount of the stock, but the Senate Committee thought that as these other shareholders had received 6 per cent compound interest it would be fair to put these men on the same level, and they made it $400.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the people who were the innocent purchasers of the stock?

Mr. GUTHRIE. If the stock was at any time impressed with a trust it would be still impressed with that trust and the present holders would be as much trustees as the original holders were.

Mr. SPROULE. They paid their money for it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. They paid $125 a share; $100 was advanced in the first place and $25 was advanced by each individual to help to carry the by-law. Now, the city is willing to pay $400. This is the high court of parliament; why go to a court of justice? We have to judge of these things on their merits without the same strictness of proof that is required in a court of law. No favours have been shown in this Bill. The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) seemed to think that this Bill was being crowded through the House. It was introduced a long time ago in the Senate and it has come in the regular course from the Senate to this House.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Is it not being considered now by a suspension of the rule?

Mr. GUTHRIE. It is just in the same position as fifteen other private Bills. The rules were not suspended for this Bill on any occasion so far as I know. The motion was made by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister to suspend the rules for all private Bills and there are fifteen in the same position.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend is mistaken. This Bill got its first and second readings on the same night.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I was not here at that time and I do not know. The Bill is properly before the House and before the committee, and judging it merely as an individual, and, perhaps also as a citizen of Guelph, I may say that my conviction is that these men are being well and fairly treated and properly dealt with. Let any hon. gentleman put the test to himself. Did these men originally go into this business as an investment or for the benefit of the city of Guelph? Did they go into it as a speculative investment or from a policy of pro bono public? Did they expect a money return or did they give their money to the city of Guelph to enable the city to carry out this proposition? We all know how these things are done in municipalities. Men get together, they join hands, they give in a certain amount and they do not hope for a financial return. For these reasons, I would ask the committee to pass the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am bound to say that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has confirmed, if any confirmation were necessary, the position that several hon. gentlemen in this House have taken this afternoon. He has shown the utter wrong of this House attempting to decide a question that ought to be decided by a court of justice. So enthusiastic is he in perpetrating that wrong on the country that he admits that the evidence that he was using would not be admissible in a court of justice. The hon. gentleman has so far forgotten the principles which are involved and the unfairness of this House being called upon to confiscate people's property, that he says that this is the high court of parliament, that it is higher than any other court, and that we should attempt to influence members of this House by evidence which he admits would not be admissible in any court of justice in support of his contention that this Bill should pass. The hon. gentleman has shown that for twenty years these people went on dealing, that for twenty years the city of Guelph was perfectly content that these people should carry the load whatever it was and it was not until this became a profitable stock that the city of Guelph wanted to confiscate the property. The principle that is involved is confirmed by the argument of the hon. member for South Wellington. He asks us at the end of his remarks to put ourselves in the position of these men. He says: Put the test to yourselves and say what was their object in going into this transaction. I do not care what their object was. If I answered what I thought their object was, I would say that the idea was to help the city of Guelph to get the railway. They succeeded in that, they lent their names, and the city of Guelph, through its representatives in this House, is asking us to admit that Guelph has perpetrated a fraud upon parliament by putting up men of straw instead of bona fide men under their own names.

The laws of the Dominion require that men shall be interested actually in their own name, in stock, when they become incorporated as a company, and the city of Guelph is asking us to confiscate the property of these people upon the fradulent excuse that a fraud was perpetrated on parliament at the time they were incorporated, as these men were not bona fide interested in the company. Well, the city of Guelph served its purpose by representing them to parliament as bona fide, and having obtained the railway, this is now advanced as an argument why the stock should be taken away from them. I say to hon. gentlemen who are not lawyers that that would at once put the city of Guelph out of court on the principle that he who comes into court asking equity must come with clean hands. No judge of common law or equity as we have it in Ontario would listen for a moment to any application to confiscate a property where the applicant had to admit that he had perpetrated a fraud on parliament in getting these people into the position complained of. We must assume that these men were in good faith, and that they were then, and have been for twenty years past bona fide stockholders in this company. In section 4 of the Bill of 1901 the city of Guelph holds up these men as being owners of fully paid up shares, and in that legislation the city of Guelph never dreamed of suggesting that they had the right to that stock except by voluntary purchase and sale. And yet, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) asks us on inadmissible evidence to confiscate the rights of these people, and to declare that the Act of 1901 is nonsense. It is a simple case of some people who have the majority stock in a company grasping at a monopoly by driving people out of their investment which they have a right to enjoy. The statute passed at the instance of the city of Guelph in 1901 makes it an absolute injustice outside of the question of the constitutionality of the matter, for us to pass this Bill.

Mr. BOYCE. Do I understand that the city of Guelph holds all the stock of this company with the exception of these four shares, and that this railroad is paying handsomely?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think the return to the city last year was about $26,000 on its stock and bonds.

Mr. BOYCE. Then it follows that the acquisition of these four shares is not absolutely essential to the city carrying on the business of the company?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Yes, to become sole owner of the road.

Mr. BOYCE. But these shares are not necessary to constitute a board of directors or to carry on business?

Mr. LANCASTER. Not at all.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2,

Mr. LANCASTER. I have not given notice of an amendment to this section, and therefore, I suppose I cannot move one, but I would suggest that the following words be stricken from the Bill:

> And it shall be the duty of such persons, respectively, to transfer their shares to the said corporation accordingly.

That is the most vicious piece of legislation it is possible to conceive. If these words were out of the Bill there would be less vice in it, and if the hon. gentleman wants legislation that is not going to furnish a precedent for the most outrageous confiscation of property he should strike them out.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. LANCASTER.

Mr. GUTHRIE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think this is too important a Bill to be advanced two stages in one day.

Mr. SPEAKER. Receiving the report of the committee is not a stage.

Mr. LANCASTER. Having gone into committee only to-day I do not think we can advance the third reading, but I leave it to your judgment.

Mr. SPEAKER. There cannot be more than one reading in the same day, but I am informed that the report from the committee is not a stage.

Mr. LANCASTER. If you rule that this is not a second stage, I am bound by your ruling, but it struck me the other way.

House divided on motion for third reading.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER TRANSMISSION COMPANY.

Mr. PARDEE moved concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company, Limited.

Mr. SPROULE. In this connection, I desire to draw attention to rule (No. 113), which is as follows:

> When any private Bill is returned from the Senate with amendments, the same not being merely verbal nor unimportant, such amendments are, previous to the second reading, referred to the Standing Committee to which such Bill was originally referred.

Two amendments have been made by the Senate to this Bill. The first strikes out the words:

> The works authorized by this Act are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

That is certainly more than a verbal amendment.

The second amendment is that section 11 is amended by adding the words 'for the purposes of its transmission line only.' Both of these are more than verbal amendments.

Mr. PARDEE. Both of these amendments were made by consent. The clause declaring the works to be for the general advantage of Canada was stricken out because they thought that sufficient advertising had not been done, and it was limited to the municipalities in which advertising had been done. As to the second amendment that it should be for the purposes of the transmission line only, I take it that no one would have any objection to that, because the object was to have it only a transmission line. Therefore, the views of the opponents of the Bill have been met in these amendments. So, I cannot see how any one could be prejudiced by allowing the Bill to go through this stage. The Bill is even more curtailed than when it left the House, so I do not see how any opponent of it can object on that ground.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have an amendment I wish to move to this Bill. Hon. members will note that clause 17 provides:

> This Act shall come into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Governor in Council.

The promoters of this Bill at the time they were putting it through were very anxious to furnish power at once to Brockville and Prescott. They claimed that they were getting a contract for power to Brockville immediately the line could be built. I know that power can be supplied to Prescott and Brockville by other companies, and that this will be done unless this company go on with the work at once. But with such a clause as this in the Bill, they may not go on with the line at an early day. I would suggest, and I hope it will meet with the approval of the House, that a clause something like this be substituted:

If the construction of the transmission line is not commenced, and 15 per cent of the amount of capital is not expended thereon within six months of the passing of this Act, or if the line is not finished and put in operation to Brockville within two years of the passing of this Act the powers conferred upon the company by parliament shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the line as remains uncompleted.

I take that from the Railway Act. The object of this clause in the Railway Act, of course, is to make parties who take out charters go on with the construction of the railway. But for such a provision, charters would be held up to the disadvantage of the community. We have not had anything of this kind in the power Bills so far, but I do not think it is unreasonable that we should commence now, for the power is to be supplied to these municipalities in the interests of the public. If this is the proper time——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Here is what Bourinot says on the point. The question is on amendments made by the Senate:

When amendments made by one House to a Bill from the other House are received back and are under consideration, it is not regular to discuss the Bill itself, or its principle, or the policy of the government thereon, but the debate must be confined to the amendments.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the point I raised.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, but I am calling the attention of the hon. member (Mr. J. D. Reid) who seeks to propose an amendment.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be in order for me to propose an amendment on the third reading?

Mr. SPEAKER. We are now considering the amendments made by the Senate, and the only amendment that can be made now is what is called a consequential amendment, following the amendment made by the Senate. The amendments being important, I think I would have to send the Bill back to committee, unless it were the sense of the House to dispose of them now. Otherwise the rule will have to be insisted on.

Mr. GRAHAM. The question is one of a technical nature. As a matter of fact, that clause about its being to the general advantage to Canada appeared to all parties unnecessary in the Bill. In that sense it is an unimportant amendment; in this Bill it is not at all necessary under the circumstances. Rule 113 says:—

When any private Bill is returned from the Senate with amendments, the same not being merely verbal or unimportant, such amendments are, previous to the second reading, referred to the Standing Committee to which such Bill was originally referred.

The question is: Is this amendment important? Ordinarily if there were a great deal of debate on that point, and if this House took the view that it was not important, and the promoters insisted that it was all important, and the Senate threw it out, then I think it would become important. It was agreed to by all parties as unnecessary, and in that sense, I do not think it could be considered of any importance whatever.

Mr. LANCASTER. The trouble is this, that if we are to have jurisdiction in these matters, it seems to me that there should be a section to that effect. I do not agree with the Minister of Railways, that in this particular case, it is unimportant. Because it seems to me that if we did not have that statement in this Bill, we have no right to pass this legislation. There is nothing in the British North America Act which says that a province cannot incorporate a power company like this. Part of this works could be done in one province and the other part of it could be done in another province; I mean to say there is no reason why a power company could not operate under a provincial charter. I cannot agree with the Minister of Railways, that this is an unimportant matter, because it is a kind of legislation that I think we have no jurisdiction over.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Before the amendments are considered, I would like to have an answer to a question on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman confine himself to the point of order?

Mr. S. SHARPE. I have nothing to say on the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have no option in the matter, if it appears to come under rule 113, which has just been read. In my view, the amendments are important. The first amendment strikes out the clause which says that this work is for the general advantage of Canada, and the second amendment limits the power of the company over the transmission line. Both, of course, are more than mere verbal amendments, they are both important amendments, and unless the sense of the House is otherwise, I will have to send the Bill back to the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does it go back to Private Bills Committee without any motion?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand it does.

CENTRAL CANADA MANUFACTURERS MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Order called for consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 123) respecting the Central Canada Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know whether these amendments may be regarded as important. But apart from that, I ought to inform the House, that I have received a number of telegrams from insurance companies, which have expressed a desire that these Bills should be referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I think the parties who sent the telegrams had the impression that by so referring the Bills back the clauses might be reconsidered. I have had to point out to them that that is not the operation of the rule. But if the Bill be referred back, I take it for granted the committee will confine their consideration entirely to the amendments. I only wish to state this in fairness to the House, so that if anybody is interested in pressing the matter further, they may do so. The question is whether these amendments are merely verbal or important. The hon. member who is in charge of the Bill is not present. My purpose in rising, is to inform the House that I have had that communication from a number of gentlemen outside, who wanted to have the whole question opened up again before the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I take the same objection to this Bill as was taken to the last, under rule 113.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think these amendments are important; the clause in subsection 2 of section 1 is important, and there is another amendment at the end of the Bill, which I think is important.

Mr. NESBITT. I submit that the amendments are of infinitesimal importance.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I persist in my objection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Could these Bills be referred to the committee without any motion at all? I think there must be a motion to refer to same committee.

Order allowed to stand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that in connection with these amendments a different procedure ought to be adopted. I am not finding any fault with the present practice in one sense as it may be the established practice, but I would think that the proper course ought to be that the Speaker and the officers of the House should take into consideration the question as to whether or not these amendments are important. Then, instead of wasting time by having them put on the order paper, and waiting three, four or five days, they should be sent to the committee at once. I see no advantage whatever in putting them on the order paper having them wait for a week, and then sending them to the committee. When they are brought to the attention of the Speaker, and he decides that they must go to the committee they should go to the committee as a matter of course under rule 113. Rule 113 says that they shall go if the amendments are important, and the speaker has authority to declare as to that. After he declares as to that, what is the object of keeping them on the order paper for four or five days?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not quite sure whether that point has to be decided by the Speaker; I think it is rather by the House. The object of the rule seems to be that when a Bill comes back with amendments they are to be referred to the committee. It is for the House to determine whether they are trivial or not, and that can only be done by looking at them. In reference to this matter it is stated by my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) that the amendments are unimportant. When that particular condition presents itself how is one to determine that? Nobody can determine that unless he looks at the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have exactly the same view as my right hon. friend, but it seems to me that the Speaker must decide. Otherwise there would require to be a motion put to the House as to whether or not the amendments are important. The House can only decide that by motion, and the motion must be carried. However, perhaps you can accomplish the same result in another way by moving that it go to the committee. In matters of this kind the Speaker ought to be the person to decide in the first instance. It may be that there should be an appeal from him, but I think it would be much more convenient if such matters were left for him to decide.

QUESTIONS.

18TH REGIMENT.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. Does the Minister of Militia know that Lieutenant-Colonel Savard, of the 18th regiment, is said to have retained from Captain Réné Talbot since 1907 a sum of $8.70 for the carriage of dress from Lake St. John to Chicoutimi?

2. Does the Minister of Militia intend to oblige the said Savard to pay without delay?

3. Does the government intend to make an immediate inquiry to ascertain the amount collected by Lieutenant-Colonel Savard, of the 18th regiment, for the sale of old uniforms, of which mention is made at page 6954 of 'Hansard' of the 11th of April instant?

4. Will the Minister of Militia, in making this inquiry, ascertain the use that has been made of this money?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall at once make the inquiries suggested by these two questions.

ST. LAWRENCE POWER COMPANY

Mr. S. SHARPE:

1. Has the St. Lawrence Power Company complied with section 13 of the Act of Incorporation, 1901?

2. Has the government investigated the facts in regard to this question?

3. If so, in what way and what conclusion has the government reached?

4. If not, does the government purpose instituting any investigation with the view of ascertaining whether the powers of the company under the Act of 1901 have become null and void?

5. Does the government entertain the view that the amendments inserted in the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company's Bill dealing with the St. Lawrence Power Company, created by the Act of 1901, cannot possibly control or affect the company under the Act of 1901?

6. Does any of the amendments inserted in the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Bill, in the opinion of the government, have the effect of reviving any of the powers of the St. Lawrence Power Company under the Act of 1901, which may have become null and void by reason of the said company not complying with the provisions of said Act?

7. Was it the intention of the government or the honourable member who had charge of the Bill, by any of the amendments, to revive said rights?

8. If the said company have forfeited any of the rights, is it the intention of the government to claim the benefit of such forfeiture?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1, 2, 3 and 4. By order in council passed on the 16th May, 1904, and being within three years of the passing of the Act incorporating the St. Lawrence Power Company, the Governor in Council approved of a deed of assignment from Mr. M. P. Davis, and the Quebec Bank to the St. Lawrence Power Company, of the property and premises demised to Mr. M. P. Davis, by the Crown by lease dated 25th June, 1896, together with the water-power, buildings, machinery and all right, title and interest of Mr. M. P. Davis, and the Quebec Bank in the premises; and also of plans and specifications for the head race, tail race, power house, foundations and buildings for water-power development at the site mentioned in the said lease. As the properties thus approved of are capable of producing upwards of 1,000 horse-power, it would seem as if the company had complied with the requirements of section 13 of the said Act. There has, however, been no approval by the Governor in Council of plans for further water-power development by the construction of a dam in the St. Lawrence, and it is not deemed necessary to make any further investigation as to the matters inquired of by questions 1, 2, 3 and 4, by reason of the fact that not only has the government assured parliament that no such plans will be approved of without the previous authority of parliament, but also because it is expressly provided in the Bill for the incorporation of the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Company, Limited, that no further works for the development of power shall be constructed by the St. Lawrence Power Company in the St. Lawrence river without the authority of parliament thereto being first obtained.

5. No. It entertains exactly the opposite view.

6. No.

7. No, as to the government, and I believe that the member in charge of the Bill had no such intention, as neither the Bill itself as originally introduced nor any of the amendments have or profess to have such an effect.

8. Answered by reply to questions 1, 2, 3 and 4.

4. Who was the owner of the land when the purchase was made, and what was the purchase price of same?

5. Has the purchase price been paid, if so to whom, if not, why not?

Mr. GRAHAM:

2. 81 acres have been taken out of the said lot for canal purposes.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

Mr. FOSTER:

2. Our treaty with France does not entitle us to the French minimum tariff on everything, neither does France receive our intermediate tariff on everything. We are entitled to the French minimum tariff on a list of articles which practically covers everything of importance that Canada has been exporting. On all these products we continue to receive the most-favoured-nation treatment and the United States receives no advantage over us.

There are no available public documents setting forth the exact arrangement recently made between France and the United States. But press statements informally issued by the United States State Department are to the effect that France, to obtain the American minimum tariff, granted the French minimum rates on products covering 96 per cent of the United States exports to France. Canada to obtain the same consideration from the United States made a reduction in her general tariff on articles representing less than three per cent of American exports to Canada.

3. The German government grants to the countries named the full conventional tariff in return for the granting by those countries of their lowest tariff rate to foreign countries.

Canada does not grant to Germany the lowest rates which are granted to other foreign countries, and consequently cannot claim the full German conventional tariff. But Canada receives from Germany the conventional tariff on a list of articles which it is believed, cover all the important articles of Canadian export.

STENOGRAPHERS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. TOLMIE:

1. How many meetings of Select Standing Committees and Special Committees have been held during the present session of parliament?

2. Has it been found necessary to employ outside assistance to take the notes of evidence in any of the committees? If so, why?

3. In how many committees, and how often, has an extra staff of stenographers been required, and what has been the total cost of such assistance?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. The number of meetings of select standing committees during the present session, up to April 30, has been 141; special committees 122.

2. It has been necessary to employ outside assistance to take the notes of evidence in some of the committees.

The necessity arose by reason of the fact that more than two of the committees were sitting at the same time, and consequently the present staff of two reporters was unable to keep up with the work.

3. Extra stenographers have been employed in connection with eight different committees and at 76 meetings of the same.

The amount paid for such assistance to date is $2,549.83, and there remains unpaid about $400.

MR. ALFRED DELAUCETTE.

Mr. GIRARD:

Has the Minister of Justice proceeded against a Mr. Alfred Delaucette, of Roberval? If so, why and at whose request?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH:

Proceedings were taken against Mr. A. Delaucette, one of the sureties of Mr. T. A. Donahue, some time Indian agent at Pointe Bleue, Que., under instructions from the Department of Indian Affairs and at the request of that department.

MR. ARTHUR DU TREMBLAY.

Mr. GIRARD:

Has the Minister of Justice proceeded against a Mr. Arthur du Tremblay, of Roberval? If not, why?

Mr. AYLESWORTH:

Proceedings were not taken against Mr. A. du Tremblay, because he agreed to pay to the Department of Indian Affairs one-half of the amount due, in respect of which he was a surety.

WEIGHT OF ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. TALBOT:

1. Has the attention of the government been called to a leading article in the Montreal 'Daily Star' of April 26, 1910, in which comment is made upon an extract from the report of the inspector general of the militia for 1909, in which that officer remarks unfavourably upon the weight of the latest pattern of the Ross rifle, as making it unsuitable for adoption for active service?

2. What are the weights of the different patterns of Ross rifle as compared with those of British service rifles?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN:

1. Yes. The exact words used by General Lake were: 'The latest pattern of Ross rifle has been well reported on. It is an excellent target weapon, but the increased accuracy has been obtained at the cost of rather more than a pound of extra weight, which is a drawback from the service point of view.'

Sir P. Lake informs me that the words 'a pound of extra weight' were used in comparing the weight of the latest pattern Ross rifle, Mark II, with that of the previous pattern, Mark II. with Mark III. sight, which rifle he had discussed in the corresponding paragraph (paragraph 62) of his report for 1908, and not in reference to any British rifle, of which the weights vary widely. The Lee-Enfield at present in use weighs 9 pounds 4 ounces, or exactly 4 ounces less than the Ross Mark II., whilst the Lee-Metford Mark I.* and II. weighs precisely the same as the Ross. It will be observed that he considered the extra weight 'a drawback' only, and did not say it rendered the rifle unsuitable for active service. He is not of that opinion.

2. All rifles vary slightly in weight; the following are average weights:

Ross rifle, Marks I. and II., average weight 8 pounds 4 ounces.

Ross rifle, Mark II., average weight 9 pounds 8 ounces.

British rifles—

Lee-Metford, Mark I.* and II., average weight 9 pounds 8 ounces.

Lee-Metford, Mark II.*, average weight 9 pounds 4 ounces.

Lee-Enfield, Mark I. and I.*, average weight 9 pounds 4 ounces.

Lee-Enfield, Converted Mark I.*, average weight 9 pounds 5 ounces.

Short Lee-Enfield, Mark I., average weight 8 pounds 2½ ounces.

Short Lee-Enfield, Mark I.*, average 8 pounds 7 ounces.

Short Lee-Enfield, Mark III., average weight 8 pounds 10½ ounces.

Short Lee-Enfield, Converted Mark II., average weight 8 pounds 2½ ounces.

Short Lee-Enfield, converted Mark II.*, average weight 8 pounds 7 ounces.

Short Lee-Enfield, converted Mark IV., average weight 8 pounds 14½ ounces.

Rifles of other countries—

Germany, weight 9 pounds.

Russia, weight 9 pounds 12½ ounces.

France, weight 9 pounds 3½ ounces.

Austria, weight 8 pounds 5½ ounces.

Belgium, weight 9 pounds 14 ounces.

Italy, weight 9 pounds 9 ounces.

Holland, weight 9 pounds 11 ounces.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 226) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of lines of railway therein mentioned.—Mr. Graham.

Bill (No. 227) to incorporate the Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company, and to aid in the construction of its railway.—Mr. Graham.

CANADIAN ASSOCIATED PRESS.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to continue for a further period the granting of aid towards the maintenance of an independent and efficient service of telegraphic news from Great Britain for publication in the Canadian press, and that for such purpose it is expedient to provide for the payment of the following sums:—

A sum not exceeding $12,000 for the twelve months terminating June 30, 1911;

A sum not exceeding $10,000 for the twelve months terminating June 30, 1912;

A sum not exceeding $8,000 for the twelve months terminating June 30, 1913;

A sum not exceeding $6,000 for the twelve months terminating June 30, 1914;

And a sum not exceeding $5,000 for the twelve months terminating June 30, 1915.

Mr. FIELDING. Some years ago the attention of parliament was drawn to the fact that the cable news which came to us from Great Britain was at that time almost entirely prepared for the journals of the neighbouring republic and had very little regard for the news in which Canada was concerned. The desirability of reform in that respect was generally recognized, and with the general consent of the House an arrangement was come to with the leading Canadian newspapers whereby we should give them an annual subsidy to assist them in obtaining a better cable service, on the basis of contributing dollar for dollar with them for that purpose. That is to say, for every dollar which they paid for cable rates we should contribute a dollar to assist them, with a certain limitation as to the maximum sum. That arrangement ran for some years and is about to expire. We hope the time will come, and that before long, when our Canadian newspapers will be strong enough to perform this service of themselves. However, they have represented that it is very desirable we should give them some further aid, and after consideration we have concluded to ask the House to agree to the resolution which is now presented, which proposes to give them for five years the following sums: $12,000 for the first year, $10,000 for the second year, $8,000 for the third year, $6,000 for the fourth year and $5,000 for the fifth year. When these subsidies were originally granted we certainly had the hope that the service would gradually become self-supporting. However, it is represented to us that if the subsidy were dropped the service, which, take it all in all, has been a very useful one, might be affected, and as the object in view is one which I am sure will commend itself to the consideration of the House generally, we have concluded to ask the House to give this further aid. The arrangement is made with a combination of journals known as the Canadian Associated Press. A number of the leading journals of Canada, irrespective of politics, agreed to form an association for that purpose. They arranged for the receiving of the cables, and they in turn distributed them to other journals throughout Canada which might be willing to receive them. At one time there was some criticism as to the efficiency of the service, and occasional suggestions have been made that the government should interfere with a view to affecting the class of information to be furnished. We have always had a very decided opinion that the government should not interfere in the matter at all. We said to the newspaper proprietors that if they can agree among themselves to establish an organization for the purpose, taking all responsibility of management, we would be very glad to help them, but the government had no desire to have anything to do with the management or control of the service. Although there is occasional criticism, and I will not say the service has always been satisfactory, it has been the means of giving to Canada a very useful class of information which probably we could not have received but for the making of this arrangement. I am very glad to present the matter to the House with the view of giving the newspapers this further assistance for the period of five years.

The correspondence I have on the subject comes from Mr. J. Ross Robertson of the Toronto 'Telegram,' who is the gentleman most keenly interested in the matter, and has been from the beginning. He has addressed to me a letter setting forth what he believes to be evidence of the efficiency of the service. I would be very happy to read it.

Mr. SPROULE. It might be well to give us the benefit of it.

Mr. FIELDING. I may say that there had been an earlier arrangement, and that the contract which is about to expire was a supplementary contract. Mr. Robertson's letter is as follows:

Toronto, March 3, 1910.

Hon. W. S. Fielding, M.P.,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Can.

Dear Sir,—As the time is approaching when the present arrangement between the Canadian Associated Press and the government expires, I am instructed to lay before you the application of the association for a renewal of the subsidy for a further term.

The present arrangement with the government was for a period of two years, which term expires on the 30th June, 1910. Under the agreement, the government paid one-half of the outlay of the association up to $12,000 per annum, and the association paid the other half.

Of the amount granted the association, namely $24,000 for the two years, it is estimated the association will have earned about $19,000, or in other words, it will have spent an equal sum from it own resources on the cable service received by its members.

Increase in Membership.

The association has endeavoured to widen its membership and its efforts in this regard, have resulted in two evening papers in Hamilton, Ont., and two in the maritime provinces, the 'St. John Telegraph' and the 'Evening Times,' now taking the service.

Western Canada, a greater field has been opened up by reason of the Western Associated Press taking the full Canadian Associated Press services and through its membership, distributing the news to some fifteen papers located between Winnipeg and Vancouver, so that the people of the west have now the advantage of reading empire news from a British source—a complete and impartial service furnished by news gatherers who know the wants of the Canadian reading public.

The Works of the Past Two Years.

Permit me to call your attention to the extensive news field that has been covered by the association. It has handled trade, market, cattle and produce reports which have earned for it the commendation of the classes of men directly interested in the trade, as well as of retail men who are served by the wholesalers.

Further, we cover all news appearing in the British press affecting any of the colonies, every discussion in the British parliament on Canadian affairs, the opinions of the British press on colonial subjects and reports of all Canadian cases coming before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and its decisions. These have all been promptly cabled to Canada. The important matter of the Canadian cattle embargo received special attention during the discussions in the British parliament.

As one example of the good work done in Privy Council cases, it gave a great deal of satisfaction to the Canadian press and people that the Dominion Steel judgment which was of vital interest to the Canadian commercial world, was cabled almost in full by our service.

Other features of our service are also worthy of note.

The visits of our Canadian ministers in England in matters of business connected with Canada, have been chronicled, and when news offered it has been cabled. Negotiations in support of cable and postal reductions were also specially followed. Cables covering the successful visit of the Finance Minister in placing Canadian loans on the London market and his visit to France, and the resultant Franco-Canadian Treaty, with the press and ministerial opinions, were covered at considerable length. Not only has Canadian news orginating in England been dealt with, but Australian, New Zealand and South African news items, such as parliamentary debates and press comments on general colonial subjects connected with tariffs and other imperial affairs. The proceedings of the Imperial Press Conference in London were cabled in extenso and the views on imperial matters of the visiting colonials were recorded at a cost of about $1,200. The Imperial Defence Conference also received due attention at a cost of about $800.

The recent British elections were covered in a manner never before attempted by a cable service. The press of Canada has paid the highest compliment to the Canadian Associated Press for the complete manner in which the returns of the British elections were given to the Canadian people. The importance of the recent elections to Canada and the empire, fully merited the cost incurred. The service was simply perfect. It is worthy of remark that in the cabling of these returns the names of each parliamentary constituency and the contesting candidates and the number of votes polled by each candidate, were cabled. Further, condensations of all the speeches by both party leaders were sent daily during the progress of events. On this important subject the Canadian Associated Press gave about 30,000 words at a cost of $3,000. There were about 1,500 despatches, all of which were received without an error.

The West Indies Commission was also dealt with in a satisfactory manner, reports of the proceedings being sent daily from London. The German-Canadian Treaty was also covered with the British and German press views from day to day.

British parliamentary debates in the prepresent parliamentary crisis are also being furnished daily while press comments on the situation are given by our service, which is practically the only service on this continent keeping fully in touch with the British political situation.

In the realm of sport the Canadian Associated Press furnishes an efficient service. Such sporting events of national interest as the Olympic games were cabled fully and to the great satisfaction of the Canadian public. Football, cricket and such leading athletic events have also been cabled promptly. This service includes recording the result of all important races run in Great Britain.

The annual Bisley report is one of the features of the Canadian Associated Press service. This important national meeting is covered in a manner most gratifying to the Canadian public, and at considerable cost. The Canadian Associated Press is the only cable service covering the complete scores at Bisley.

Our service has been free of criticism during the last two years. Its cables are carefully edited and its London office uses excellent judgment in the selection of news to be forwarded. The members of the association have in their newspapers and in personal letters to the president, congratulated the management on the excellence of the services furnished.

There is one important point in connection with the Canadian Associated Press service which I desire to emphasize in this letter. It is this—our service practically goes to about thirty papers in Canada, that is, fifteen who are members of the association and about fifteen who are served by the Western Associated Press.

All these papers received the despatches daily. But there are a large number of dailies that do not take our service, but who use our despatches after our publication—not only dailies but a large number of weeklies. Some time ago an examination of the daily and weekly papers received in the head office at Toronto, revealed the fact that no less than sixty dailies and two hundred and fifty weeklies, non-members, were using the despatches of the Canadian Associated Press. Many of these dailies are not financially able to pay for the service. The point is that the Canadian Associated Press service has a much greater constituency outside of its membership than it has within, so that indirectly the association serves a large proportion of the daily and weekly press of the Dominion, in fact, it reaches nearly all the newspaper readers of the Dominion.

The present income from membership and aid from the government is only sufficient to provide a daily average cable service of about 570 words.

To have a more extended service, that is, a general news service which would cover the same field as the American Associated Press, would involve three or four times the expenditure.

This suggested service could not be entertained while cable rates for press messages are at 10 cents a word. But, if the day ever arrives when the cable rate will be cut to six cents a word or less, a fairly good general service could be maintained for about double the present expenditure. The service would be a handpicked one which would give the largest amount of value for the verbiage received. In fact, by a close skeletonizing of the despatches, a good general service could be guaranteed. I merely mention the foregoing to show the possibilities of future service.

The present subsidy of $12,000 a year is for two years, expiring as before stated, on 30th June, 1910.

The association asks that the subsidy be renewed for five years instead of two. The difficulty is that for a short period there is an uncertainty in the basis of rates we are able to quote. The withdrawal of government aid would make cable news a nonopoly of the richer members of the association and crowd out the smaller newspapers. The grant for two years does not give the necessary stability to our financial arrangements, and this prevents us attracting new members by offering them rates based on the certainty of a government grant for five years. In this event our income would be more settled. The smaller papers could be assured of a continued cable service and thus be delivered from the fear of being driven out by a greatly increased assessment.

I might point out that as a result of the government grant the farmers of this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are served with the latest prices as to cattle, cheese, butter, bacon and other such commodities, including a weekly return of the hogs killed in Denmark and Ireland, which latter information is important to bacon producers of this country—so that virtually every newspaper reader in Canada is supplied with market reports that would never reach him if the government grant were withdrawn and cable news became the monopoly of a few papers rich enough to stand the heavy expense.

The government grant has enabled the Canadian Associated Press to create a national news service. Its enterprises during the recent British elections enabled newspaper readers of Canada to know how the political fight was going from day to day. Had they had to depend on the American news service, which cares nothing about British elections or the variety of news interesting and valuable to Canada, their information would have been meagre.

In obedience to the instructions of the association, I have submitted a set of facts which the association offers as ample justification of its request for a continuance of the government grant for the next five years.

If you require further information, the association will be glad to furnish such, either in the form of a letter or at an interview if you should grant us an opportunity of presenting our case verbally.

Your truly,

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
President Canadian Associated Press.

Mr. HUGHES. That is a very long letter that the minister has read. Mention is made half a dozen times of the 15 papers which take this service and yet the name of none of the papers is mentioned. I would like to know what papers take the service.

Mr. FIELDING. They have not given me a list of the papers, but I know as a matter of fact that what are considered to be leading dailies generally of Toronto and Montreal receive it, and it has been stated that a couple of St. John papers are now taking it. Then there are two Hamilton papers, I think, and the 'Globe,' the 'Mail,' the 'Telegram,' and the 'Star,' and I think I am right in saying the Montreal 'Gazette.' There are others that I cannot for the moment think of, but the recognized leading papers in our larger cities receive the service and they in turn distribute it to a number of smaller papers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the amount of the present grant?

Mr. FIELDING. The original grant was $15,000 for several years and then it was reduced point by point to $12,000, which is the amount of the present grant. We are now proposing to give that amount for 5 years. It will be on a sliding scale beginning at $12,000 and reduced in time to $5,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it expected that the service will be self-sustaining?

Mr. FIELDING. They do not say so, but we do not encourage them to think that we will go on paying this forever. We hope that as the papers grow in strength and resources the service will become self-sustaining, but I would not like to guarantee that they will not come back for a renewal.

Mr. HUGHES. I have before me the Montreal daily 'Herald' of Monday, 18th April, to an item in which I would like to call the minister's attention. There is no harm in considering how things are going on elsewhere and possibly some steps may be taken to improve the service to Canada. I heartily approve of the plan of publishing items from the other British colonies and from the motherland and giving them prominence in the papers of this country. These items are much better than the sensational items that have appeared in our papers in the past:

Imperial News Service.—The Empire Press Union has been informed that as a development of a suggestion made by the Eastern and Eastern Extension Telegraph Companies at the interview between the Hon. Harry Lawson, M.P., chairman of the Cable Rates Committee of the late Imperial Press Conference, and Sir John Denison-Pender, K.C.M.G., on the 9th June last, negotiations have since taken place with Reuter's Telegram Company, with a view to largely increasing the supply of news of the empire to India, Australasia and South Africa.

The Eastern Telegraph Company has agreed to transmit a very largely increased service of British imperial news for distribution to the press of the above British possessions.

It is an essential part of the arrangement that this increased service, amounting in some cases to fifty per cent, shall be distributed without extra charge to newspapers in the colonies and India. This special news has been available from the 4th April, and is being distributed in South Africa, and it is hoped that arrangements will shortly be concluded with the governments of India and Australasia, whereby these countries may have the benefit of the increased service; also that later on the same news will be distributed in the Straits Settlements and Hong Kong.

Canada has not benefited by this arrangement, no better terms from press messages being obtainable from the cable companies.

Now, has the minister or any one on behalf of the government taken any steps with the view of getting the cable companies to give more favourable rates to this organization of ours?

Mr. FIELDING. We have been endeavouring to bring about reduced cable rates generally, but not particularly for this service. As my hon. friend knows the whole subject has been engaging the attention of the Postmaster General with the view of a cable reduction generally.

Mr. HUGHES. That is a reduction of the general business rate?

Mr. FIELDING. It would naturally follow that if they reduced the business rate, they would reduce the rate for this kind of service. There is something to be said also in favour of the Marconi system which, according to a recent announcement, is able to take business. I do not know what progress it is making; we all know that while it made some progress it was not able to handle all the news, but if we are able to succeed with the Marconi system, perhaps that will grant some relief. However the subject has been engaging the attention of the Postmaster General rather than of myself.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 228) concerning the maintenance of an independent and efficient service of telegraphic news from Great Britain for publication in the Canadian press.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first and second times and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there an extra copy of the Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. The Bill is in print, but has not yet been distributed. It is a mere repetition of the words in the printed resolution. If there be any objection, I cannot press it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No objection.

Bill reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved third reading of the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I presume that this Bill follows the provisions of the existing statute.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we hold to the same system.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUBSIDIES TO DRY-DOCKS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution respecting subsidies to dry-docks. He said: There are several dry-docks in Canada which have been built and owned by the Canadian government. They are not in any way affected by the resolutions which are now in your hands. There are other dry-docks which have been built by private corporations with the assistance of government subsidies. We have had on our statute-book for some years legislation designed to encourage the building of dry-docks and several docks have been so built. The law has been changed from time to time to meet the changing conditions of the country. As it stands now, the Governor in Council is authorized to grant a subsidy of three per cent per annum for a period of twenty years for the construction of an approved dry-dock not exceeding in cost $1,500,000. With the ever-increasing size of steamships, larger docks become necessary, and the need of these docks is emphasized at present in connection with the naval movement. Of course, it is recognized that new dry-docks are necessary for the ships of our own navy and for receiving and repairing any ships of the British navy which may be employed on our coasts. We propose to readjust our dry-dock legislation and make it conform to modern requirements. We propose to divide our dry-docks into three classes. One which, for convenience, is called the third class is recognized by the terms of the existing law, that is, for what may be called a smaller or moderate size dock, we retain the present arrangement of a subsidy for twenty years of three per cent with a maximum cost of $1,500,000. Then, we have a larger size, called a second-class dock. In that case, the subsidy is for a period of twenty-five years, and the rate of interest three and a half per cent instead of three per cent, and the maximum cost $2,500,000. Then, we have a larger class, which we call a first-class dock for general and naval purposes. In that case, we still retain the rate of three and half per cent, but provide that it shall be for a period of thirty-five years, and that the maximum shall be $4,000,000. This first-class dock for general and naval purposes, we provide, must be at the making of any contract under this Act, capable of receiving for purposes of repair the largest ship in the British navy, and, necessarily, as that will involve a very large outlay, we have thought it well to be generous and liberal with our subsidy.

Mr. HUGHES. They still might not be able to receive the largest ships in the British mercantile fleet, because these are much larger than battleships.

Mr. FIELDING. Much longer.

Mr. HUGHES. And wider.

Mr. FIELDING. Not always. But the hon. member will see that under these resolutions we make alternative provision for fixed or floating docks. In the case of a floating dock, you can receive a vessel much longer than the dock itself, but you cannot do the same in a fixed dock. But I am told that the existing dock in Halifax will take any ship in the Canadian trade, and, indeed, I believe it will take in what is ordinarily called a Dreadnought. But they are building a larger class of ship, called, I believe, for want of a better name, super-Dreadnought, and I believe that, neither the Halifax dock nor any other dock in Canada could receive such a vessel. There are rival views as to the usefulness of the fixed or masonry dock and the floating dock. It is one of these questions on which engineers have different opinions. Perhaps the proper view is that in some localities the masonry dock is best while other localities can be served by the floating dock which will cost less money. In the resolution we are making provision for either as may be deemed best. Then, we are making provision for the enlargement of any existing dock, so that, if the proprietors of any present dock wish to avail themselves of this present subsidy and provide a larger dock the scheme will admit of their doing so. What we provide for in that case is that we may take the value of any existing dock, so far as it is useful for the purpose of enlargement, and include it in the cost of the new undertaking under which the subsidy provided by these resolutions may be paid. But as these docks have already received subsidies, we provide that what they have received shall be deducted, so that the effect will be that an existing dock may be rebuilt under the new scheme, but deducting any subsidies already paid. I think it will be found that this is a fair and reasonable arrangement. The matter is one of considerable detail, but I think I have said all that is necessary to indicate the general character of the proposed scheme.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has spoken of a first, second and third class.

Mr. FIELDING. The first-class is a dock, which, while it is designed for general purposes, is also designed particularly to meet the case of a navy, and will have a maximum cost of $4,000,000; the subsidy will be three and a half per cent for 35 years. For the second or medium class of dock, the subsidy will be three and a half per cent for 25 years, with a maximum outlay of $2,500,000. For the third-class, which is the class established by the existing law, the subsidy will be three per cent for 20 years, with a maximum of $1,500,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the reason for discrimination in the length of time over which the guarantee extends?

Mr. FIELDING. In the case of the larger docks such as required for a navy, or in any case where the outlay will be considerable and the risk very great, we are inclined to think that unless we increase the subsidy these docks will not be constructed. The smaller dock will find considerable to do in commercial business, but the larger dock will have to depend to a considerable extent on naval business.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The subsidy is an absolute one, irrespective altogether of earnings.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the earnings go to the company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose that matter has been carefully considered. But the conditions of this country at the end of 25 years might be such as to enable one of these docks to earn a very handsome return on the investment, apart altogether from the subsidy. I merely make that suggestion, which possibly might point to a different method of subsidizing. I do not pretend to have considered the subject carefully, but it struck me that such a contingency ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. FIELDING. The point is worthy of consideration. Experience has shown that these docks are not successful as purely commercial ventures. In Halifax there is an excellent dock, aided both by the Dominion government and by the city of Halifax, and although the aid at the time was supposed to be liberal, I am advised that it has not proven to be a profitable undertaking. Experience shows that these dry docks as a rule are not very profitable ventures, and unless they are liberally aided by government grants they will not be constructed at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the construction of the largest size docks proposed, has the government taken into consideration the possibilities of an increase in the size of shipping during the next quarter of a century?

Mr. FIELDING. To a certain extent we have. The docks proposed here are larger than we would make for present day purposes; but we are considering the future.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the size?

Mr. FIELDING. The minimum length of a first-class dock must be 900 feet at least; that is much larger than any docks we have hitherto built, and larger than any ships we have to-day in the Canadian trade.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There are ships on the Great Lakes over 700 feet long.

Mr. CROSBY. I suppose the valuation of the whole dock will be taken into account in fixing the cost, less the $200,000 which is paid by the Dominion government as a subsidy?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, not necessarily the total cost of the existing dock, but so far as it might have a value in the enlargement. So far as that dock would be useful when enlarged, the old work would count in the same way as the new; and then they would receive the full amount of the subsidy, if it is a first-class dock, for 35 years, subject to the deductions, distributed over the period, of the amount that is already received.

Mr. CROSBY. There would be some method of valuing the dock as it stands at present, and then the three and a half per cent on the present value, with the value of the further construction to extend it to 900 feet, and they would get the subsidy of three and a half per cent for thirty-five years, the present valuation of the dock being taken into account.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, that is in a measure correct. But it would not be the exact present value of the dock, but the value of so much of the dock as will be useful for the purpose of reconstruction. So far as the work is useful for a new dock, it will be treated in the same manner as a new dock, and the subsidy will be paid on the whole, less the deductions I have mentioned.

Mr. CROSBY. The breaking up, and opening up of the old dock as a matter of fact would increase the value. Like a ship in distress, she is not as valuable as she is before she meets with her trouble. The breaking up of the dock for the purpose of extending it would increase the value of that dock.

Mr. FIELDING. It might be something less than the original cost. There would be a possibility of that being the case.

Mr. CROSBY. There would be some method or means of getting a fair valuation, so that the persons extending the dock would have an opportunity of getting a fair return, as if they were constructing a new dock.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What width is it proposed to have these docks that are 900 feet long, and what depth?

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will look at the resolution, section 3, he will find that dry-docks of the first-class are to have a clear length on bottom of 900 feet, a clear width of entrance 100 feet, and a depth at high water of 35 feet.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does the hon. gentleman propose to build floating docks, or to have them built in this country? I think that this idea of a floating dock is altogether foolish for a country such as Canada, which is a civilized country. It is all right for the British admiralty to build floating docks and send them off to the Bermudas or the Falkland islands, but for a country like Canada to build a dry-dock is to my mind extremely foolish. What is supposed to be included in the word 'dry-docks?' Does it just comprise a hole in the ground with gates, or are there any other works attached to it?

Mr. FIELDING. The several works for the repair of vessels described as repair works, but construction works or ship-building works would probably not be deemed to be a dry-dock. A dry-dock with capacity to deal with ships as described here would be entitled to come under the operation of this Act. With regard to floating docks it is only another case of doctors differing. Some gentlemen, professing to be well informed in such matters, tell me that it is the most foolish thing in the world to build a masonry dock.

Mr. CROSBY.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. They tell you that in Scotland, where they want to build floating docks, haul them across here and make a big profit.

Mr. FIELDING. People are always ready to attribute improper motives.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am not attributing improper motives.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not mean the hon. gentleman, but I refer to those who make that suggestion. The floating dry-dock men say that the contractors who want to build masonry works always say that that is the only kind of dry-dock to build. On the other hand, reputable engineers say that floating docks are excellent for the purpose. Therefore, we propose to pay our money and take our choice.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. gentleman is following a policy which is at least fifty years old in regard to these docks. The floating dock is all right enough for the purpose of repairs, but the hon. gentleman must know that a dry-dock is now used for more purposes than the mere repairing of a ship. In fact, owing to the change in the character of the docks in the United States, with the exception of two or three old ones on the Atlantic coast, ships are now built at the slips at the sides of the docks, and they are launched sideways. It is only at a few places in the old country, and at one or two places on the Atlantic coast in the United States that they continue to launch ships endways. To give the House an idea of the advantage of building a ship alongside of the dry-dock, I may say that when a ship is built to be launched by the stern or the head, in every measurement that is taken on that vessel from the plumb line, there has to be an allowance made. The doors have all to be hung on a slant, while when a ship is built alongside of the dry-dock and dropped in squarley, it is possible to plumb and true up everything about it by gravity. These are modern conditions, and for that reason I say that when this government are paying out money for dry-docks, it must be prepared to have modern slips such as they have in Germany and the United States, where they can build warships if they want to at the side of the dock and launch them into the dock sideways. The plant that has to be used at a dry-dock is the same as that used for ship-building. There is no need of having two yards, because the one can be used for two purposes. The amount that is proposed to be voted for this purpose is excessive; $4,000,000 is a tremendous amount of money to pay simply for a dry-dock. I feel satisfied, from my own knowledge and experience, that you can build three dry-docks of masonry work for that amount of money.

Mr. FIELDING. I doubt that.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I know what it costs, and my hon. friend does not know anything about it. I have seen tenders giving the actual cost of the work. Two docks I know, have been built, one 500 feet and the other 450 feet long, and the two were not worth a million dollars.

Mr. DANIEL. What depth?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. 25 feet.

Mr. DANIEL. These are 35 feet.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It does not matter; it is only so many more cubic feet of material. I think the sum is excessive, and I think that if the minister allows floating docks to be built in the old country and be brought over here, he is going to spend a lot of money to very little purpose.

Mr. FIELDING. The dock can only be subsidized for the amount that it costs, and $4,000,000 is the maximum cost. We will only pay the subsidy on the proved cost. As to what my hon. friend has said with regard to floating docks, I do not presume to know anything about this matter myself, but engineers who profess to be authorities do not agree with the opinion which the hon. gentleman has expressed.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Who is your authority?

Mr. FIELDING. Messrs. Vickers Sons & Maxim, one of the most eminent firms of shipbuilders in the world, and they are proposing to build a floating dock in Montreal. I do not know whether they will do it or not.

Mr. BOYCE. Did not the British admiralty float a dock out to Bermuda?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and the American authorities built one and took it to the Philippines. The dock that was taken to Bermuda in 1868 was broken up forty years afterwads. One of the difficulties we find is in obtaining definite information as to the life of a floating dock, and when the Bill comes before this House I propose to make an amendment with which I will not trouble the committee at present. We get conflicting opinions as to the life of such a dock. If we were satisfied that the life of a particular dry-dock is not great we would have to provide something in the nature of a sinking fund, but there is a fair amount of engineering authority which states that with proper management a floating dry-dock will last for seventy years. That matter is one that must have careful investigation. But my hon. friend makes a mistake if he thinks that this floating dock is a foolish thing.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I did not say that it was a foolish thing. Floating docks are all right in their place. If you are going to establish a dry-dock in a barbarous country or far away from civilization and mechanics such as in Manila or the Bermudas or at a point from which you may expect to move it again and take it to some other place, then, of course, the floating dry-dock is the proper thing to have. It would be a good plan no doubt to have a floating dry dock or two so that you could haul them around amongst the doubtful constituencies at election time. But, as far as the actual work of a dry-dock is concerned it should be at a fixed place where the cars could go alongside with material. Material now is very heavy and there must be an opportunity for taking the cars alongside of the dock.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion of this amount is traceable to the establishment of a Canadian navy?

Mr. FIELDING. I think that the larger dock or what I might call the first-class dock may be regarded as being attributable in some degree to the naval movement. The construction of a large dry-dock suitable for the largest vessels of the British navy would be regarded as desirable no doubt from the point of view of the naval question. While I do not say that we would not have desired such a large dock without it, I do say that the naval movement has given additional reason why we should have large docks.

Mr. BOYCE I would like to ask the minister how this enactment will apply to applications for subsidies under the old regulations?

Mr. FIELDING. Of course the rate of subsidy for the smaller class of dock or a dock of the minimum cost would remain the same.

Mr. BOYCE. The second class?

Mr. FIELDING. The second class is a new class. A new application may be made, or if the dock has been constructed of a smaller class and they wish to enlarge it we will have power under this Act to permit them to do so.

Mr. BOYCE Assuming that the plans and specifications and all the obligations under the old law are complied with and the dock conforms to the second class, would that application be dealt with as an application for a subsidy under this or under the old Act?

Mr. FIELDING. Would that be an application to enlarge?

Mr. BOYCE. No, an application for a dock that was going to be built.

Mr. FIELDING. I would not like to answer that question.

Mr. BOYCE. About a year ago an application was made for a dry-dock subsidy, and the town of Sault Ste. Marie has passed a by-law granting certain aid. I understand that all the details under the old Act have been complied with. Are they entitled to the increased subsidy?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans and specifications have not yet been approved.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand their project is not large enough to come within the second-class, but I know very little about it.

Mr. BOYCE. It is a 650 feet dock.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is it 25 feet on the sill?

Mr. FIELDING. It has to comply with all the conditions.

Mr. PERLEY. Can the government authorize an unlimited number of docks under this resolution?

Mr. FIELDING. They could do so at any time for the last 25 years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What expert advice has the government had on the important question of properly framing these conditions set out in clauses 1, 2 and 3?

Mr. FIELDING. We naturally turned to the engineers of the Public Works Department, and to some extent of the Marine Department, and we have had occasion to make some inquiry of the admiralty. From these various sources we have been able to define the details.

Mr. BOYCE. The Minister of Public Works with some gusto stated that the plans for the Sault Ste. Marie dry-dock had not yet been approved by the department. I have several times asked in the House as to this matter, and it was always going to be attended to. Will the minister let us know now what the difficulty is. At the same time, and through the same solicitor a similar application was made for a subsidy by a Port Arthur firm which the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Conmee) was advocating, and the Minister of Public Works went up to turn the first sod of that dock. That application went through with flying colours, and people do suspect that the minister with certain other gentlemen is discriminating against the Sault Ste. Marie dry-dock, and in favour of the Port Arthur dry-dock by reason of certain political influences. There does seem to be a grain of truth in this. Will the minister explain if he can why the Sault Ste. Marie dry-dock specifications have not been approved while the Port Arthur dry-dock, the application for which was made at the same time, has already received a large subsidy, larger than was contemplated by the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend be good enough to tell me who it is that has stated that the minister has been influenced by political considerations?

Mr. BOYCE. I did not say the minister had been influenced; I say it is reported that political considerations have had weight.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Reported by whom?

Mr. BOYCE. It is reported generally, and it has been conveyed to me as gossip and rumour.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend should not take street gossip as the foundation for assertions in this House. Any delay which has occurred is a result of the action of the company itself. The company submitted certain plans and specifications, and they afterwards desired I should not act upon these plans, because they wished to make an alteration, and that alteration has not yet been submitted to me for consideration.

Mr. LENNOX. What are those floating docks constructed of?

Mr. FIELDING. Formerly of iron, and now of steel.

Mr. LENNOX. What would it cost to tow a floating dock from the old country to Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. We have estimates of the relative cost of masonry docks and floating docks, and the cost of the floating dock would naturally include delivery in Canada at the point at which it was to be erected.

Mr. LENNOX. I should think it would be a costly undertaking to tow a floating dock across the Atlantic, and there should be some estimate.

Mr. FIELDING. I am told that in the modern method of construction it is built in sections, brought out as ordinary freight and set up at the place it is to be established at. The old idea of towing may not have to be carried out, but before we make a contract all that will have to be looked into.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is it the policy of the government to decide where a dry-dock will be established, and where there is necessity for it, or are these docks to be erected in any old place at all where some Tom, Dick or Harry, may want to establish one?

Mr. FIELDING. The location has to be approved by the government on the report of the Minister of Public Works. Any body has the right to go into the construction of a dry-dock, but he cannot get a subsidy until he has had the application approved and entered into the contract.

Motion agreed to, resolution considered in committee, reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 229) to encourage the construction of Dry-docks.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Finance be authorized to pay out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, for the purposes hereinafter referred to, in addition to the sums authorized to be paid under the provisions of chapter 10 of the Acts of 1899, an Act respecting the city of Ottawa, and amending Act, chapter 45 of the Acts of 1903, the sum of forty thousand dollars annually, for a period of ten years from the first day of July, 1909, making a total annual payment during said period of one hundred thousand dollars; such additional sums to be paid into a chartered bank to be designated by the minister, to the credit of the Ottawa Improvement Commission, and to be by the commission expended for all or any of the purposes for which the commission is authorized by section 7 of said chapter 10, to expend sums placed at its credit.

2. That the Minister of Finance be authorized to pay out of the consolidated revenue fund to the corporation of the city of Ottawa, as a contribution to the maintenance of the fire protection service of the corporation, the sum of fifteen thousand dollars annually for a period of ten years from the first day of July, 1909, the first of such payments to be made as soon as may be after the passing of any Act founded on these resolutions, and the remaining nine annual payments to be payable in advance during the month of July in each year, the last payment to be made in the month of July, 1918.—Mr. Fielding.

Mr. FIELDING. It will be remembered that a few years ago parliament took the view that the national capital of Canada had a special claim upon us for consideration, and that not merely for the pleasing of the citizens of Ottawa, but as a matter of pride in the national capital, the government should contribute an annual sum for the improvement of the city. A body known as the Ottawa Improvement Commission was appointed and the government granted the sum of $60,000 per annum to the city of Ottawa, or rather to the Ottawa Improvement Commission. Arrangements were made whereby the city of Ottawa was represented on the commission, but the control was largely in the hands of the government through its commissioners. The commission did very excellent work, and I think it will be admitted that within the space of a very few years a great improvement has been made. I think the success of the commission in beautifying the national capital has probably commended their work to the consideration of the House, and will render the House well disposed towards the extension of the aid which it is now proposed to grant. The sum we have hitherto granted is $60,000 per annum. It is only fair to say that in reality that was an additional grant of $45,000, because prior to that time we had been paying $15,000 to the city for fire protection and water. It is proposed now, in addition to the $60,000 which we have been paying them, to add a sum of $40,000, making a grant of $100,000 per annum to be paid to the commission, and we also propose to pay the city $15,000 as we paid in former years for the fire and water service. The arrangements of the past have been pretty well understood. The operations, I think, have, on the whole, proved satisfactory and I am hopeful that the proposal to give this further aid for the beautifying of the national capital, will commend itself to the judgment of the House.

Mr. CROSBY. I have no desire to offer any opposition, but in the city of Halifax we have a large amount of Dominion government property, somewhere between $5,000,000 and $8,000,000 worth, and I think it would be nothing but fair under the conditions that a grant of some kind should be made to the city of Halifax in connection with the keeping up and improving of streets there, the police, fire protection, and services of that kind. The Finance Minister is aware that a great portion of our very best water front is taken up now by the Dominion government and is exempt from taxation. This property was formerly owned by the imperial government, but it has now been handed over to the Canadian government, and I really think Halifax is entitled to some consideration on that account. The Finance Minister, knowing the situation as well as I do, will certainly sympathize with that request. We have a large street mileage, and do a great deal to keep up the streets, sidewalks, etc., and everything of that kind is done without assistance from the government, as they are exempt from taxation of all kinds, even for fire purposes. The city is well governed, and well prepared to give every accommodation to people there and this government should certainly give some assistance.

Mr. FIELDING. An appeal for the city of Halifax naturally enlists my sympathy. We are doing this for Ottawa not merely to please our good friends the citizens of Ottawa but because Ottawa is our national capital. Once we depart from that principle and grant assistance to Halifax then a dozen other cities will claim like assistance.

Mr. CROSBY. There is no other like Halifax.

Mr. FIELDING. To use a slang expression, there are others; it is not the only pebble on the beach. We can justify to a moderate extent a generous grant for the beautifying of the national capital because it is the capital, but once we get away from that principle and undertake to deal with other cities my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) will discover that he has a claim for some city up in his constituency which he would assure us was as important as Halifax. Of course he would be wrong, but he would urge it. I do not want to express any opinion that would govern us in the future, but so far as I can see the reason we give for a grant to Ottawa would not apply to any other city in the Dominion. It is because Ottawa is the capital that we give the grant. Just at present Halifax is not the capital—it may become so at some future time.

Mr. HUGHES. I have never asked for any favour for my county, but the argument advanced for an expenditure of money here is not alone that it is the capital but because the civil service and the government buildings and many government institutions and persons are exempt from taxation here and the city has to maintain the usual civic services. If the government has property in Halifax which is a burden to the taxpayers in that city and does not contribute any taxation, the electors of Victoria and Haliburton will be only too ready to say that the government should do something as an equivalent to their taxes.

Mr. FIELDING. We have it in all parts of Canada.

Mr. CROSBY. Will the hon. gentleman tell me another city in Canada, outside of Ottawa, that has $8,000,000 worth of government property? Will he name one with $4,000,000?

Mr. FIELDING. I hope my hon. friend will not claim that Halifax has too much Dominion property. I have sometimes tried to get more for it.

Mr. CROSBY. The hon. gentleman did not do it, it was imperial property and the imperial government handed it over. If this government had to purchase it I am inclined to think we would not have got so much. The hon. gentleman has said that there are other cities that have the same claim.

Mr. FIELDING. I said they would urge that they had.

Mr. CROSBY. That is a mistake. I ask him to name another city that has $4,000,000 worth. This government did not pay for the property I spoke of. We have an armoury there that cost $300,000 to $400,000. It was not constructed by this government. I do not know anything that was built by them, except one elevator, towards which we had to contribute $55,000. The city had to come up here and offer $55,000 before they could get the government to stir the Conservative government. They gave us an elevator, but that grain elevator was burned down and the present government offered to put up another one for $55,000. It might as well not have been built for it has never been much good to us. In fact I intended to ask the government to give us back our $55,000 because they got it under false pretences. It was understood that the railway company was going to put a terminus there but they have not done so. If there are any other cities in the Dominion that have the same claim as Halifax, I am sure the people of Halifax will be delighted to contribute as they have contributed in the past to other enterprises in Canada. We do not come here begging for anything. My hon. friend, the Finance Minister, said there were hundreds of other cities who have got as much right to consideration as Ottawa.

Mr. FIELDING. I said they think they have, not that they had.

Mr. CROSBY. I am not asking what other cities think, I am asking the Finance Minister if he thinks that we have a claim to some consideration or not?

Mr. FIELDING. I think this is a good Bill.

Mr. CROSBY. Yes, it is a good Bill to build up Ottawa. You started with $60,000, and goodness knows where you are going to stop. Next year you may be asking for $200,000. I am not complaining of Ottawa getting anything. It seems to be getting everything, and in a short time there will be no other place except Ottawa where we will be able to spend a cent. I claim that Halifax is entitled to some consideration. The property is there, we give you every convenience, we have a well governed city, and we invite any of you to come down there and see us. We would like to see the Prime Minister there. The people would be very kind to him if he came, notwithstanding that on many things they might not agree with him. But they are a kind hearted people and will give him a good reception. We also give you good streets, good sidewalks, a good police force, every thing in fact that we can have in a well governed city.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Everything good except the representation.

Mr. CROSBY. Now, if my hon. friend the Prime Minister thinks this claim is not good representation, I will tell the people when I go back what he says, and I am afraid his reception will not be quite so good as if he had never said it. I hope I am making a fair claim, and that if the Minister of Finance is not in sympathy with it, that the Prime Minister will be, because he has been in Halifax many times, and I hope he will be there again.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CROSBY. I could describe the property, but I do not want to take up the time of the House. I could show you that we have a property worth over $8,000,000, and, therefore, I think we are entitled to some consideration.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to call the attention of the Finance Minister to a certain circumstance which has come under my observation. I presume this grant includes the driveway east of Rockcliffe and extending in the direction of the rifle range, does it not?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, that is part of the work.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, I have observed that there is a retaining wall some little distance beyond Rockcliffe, and that it has been built of wood, a good deal of which is decayed. Now, it does not seem to me that that is a judicious expenditure of money. Stone is in abundance down there, and I think that when work of that kind is being executed it ought to be executed in a permanent way so that it will not require to be rebuilt in a short time. Building with wood is in itself a pretty expensive matter. I have noticed that several of the logs used in building the wall are partly decayed, and they must have been in that condition when they were put in.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Was that wood put in by the commission?

Mr. LENNOX. The walls would be built, I presume, by the Improvement Commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think so.

Mr. LENNOX. I am referring to the driveway extending along the shore to the rifle ranges. Certainly the road has been built recently by the Improvement Commission and I venture to say that anybody who will take the pains to look at that retaining wall will see that the timber could not have been in proper condition when it was put in. More than that, I submit that it is not a judicious expenditure of money to build it of wood at all. I think that whatever we are doing in the way of improvement ought to be of a permanent character, something that will not require to be renewed in a few years.

Mr. FIELDING. I will see that the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) is called to the attention of the commissioners. I am inclined to agree with him in what he has said and I shall see that it receives attention.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I went over that portion of the road with a member of the commission who pointed out to me the work that the commission had done in that particular place to prevent the sliding away of the bank into the river. It had been done by a system of drainage and not by a system of putting in timber. If I remember correctly, he said that before the commission took charge of the road, there had been some work done in the way my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) mentions, but if I am correct, he told me that they had not done work of that kind, having confined their efforts to a system of drainage which he said had been very successful, as the landslides which had occurred in the past had been almost entirely, if not altogether prevented. I think on the whole, the work of the commission has been very good.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is so far as my observation goes, I do not profess to be very competent to judge. I say, however, that they have not been altogether successful in their ideas of landscape gardening. To take Strathcona park for example, I think there is too much concrete in sight there, and too many little scattered bushes instead of the system that is usually followed in landscape gardening, of massing large clumps of shrubs together in an artistic way. Any one who happens to look at Strathcona park will see little shrubs not gathered together in clumps, but dotted all over the place, presenting what does not seem to me to be as good an appearance as it might otherwise be. I think it might be a judicious expenditure for the commission to get sometimes the services of an expert landscape gardener in doing work of that kind. So far as the structural part is concerned, the commission has so far as I know, and so far as I am able to judge done very excellent work in a very inexpensive way.

Mr. LENNOX. The matter I refer to is this. When you go a short distance up from the grandstand at Rockcliffe where the cars stop in the early part of the season, and diverge from the old road and get onto the new driveway, you see a part that is kept from sliding away by a system of logs in line with the roadway and with cross logs to hold them together. These logs of decayed wood have evidently been put there for the purpose of keeping the earth from sliding down into the river. That, I would assume was part of the driveway, and that I would assume, I do not think there is much doubt about it, would be built by the Improvement Commission. I submit it was an injudicious expenditure of money. I do not propose to press that further to-night, but before leaving the subject, I would point out, as further evidence, that surmounting that retaining wall is a metal guard rail, to my mind, of a very suitable character, and all a part of the same scheme as I understand. But, unless there was very great haste required to make that connection, I do not understand the reason for making that of timber. As I have said, there is ample rock, and the tendency now is to build such constructions of concrete.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was only an impression on my part that another system had been adopted. It may be, as the hon. member has said, that this is the work of the commission, but I know that at some portion of that road it was pointed out to me that the prevention of landslides had been accomplished—or an attempt had been made to accomplish it—by means of a system of drainage. I remember the point to which my hon. friend refers. It would seem from his statement that it is the work of the commission.

Mr. JAMESON. How much has been paid out to the Ottawa Improvement Commission? Also I would like to know whether there is a maximum amount fixed beyond which the government will not pay. Also, has the government had under consideration the creation of Ottawa into a federal district, and the disfranchisement of public servants? There is an opinion in certain parts of the country that it would be well to follow the American example and that our capital should be a federal district, and should be represented by the Prime Minister from time to time.

Mr. FIELDING. The sums expended by the Ottawa Improvement Commission from the beginning of their operations down to the end of last year—calendar year, I take it—were as follows:

Construction..	$645,750 00
Maintenance..	111,181 01
Other expenditures..	26,128 79
Purchase of property.. ..	29,259 46
Redemption of debentures.	128,730 00
	$941,049 26
Total (including redemption of debentures)..	941,749 00

These are figures which the hon. member will find in 'Hansard', more in detail, as I gave them at an earlier stage in answer to a question. With regard to making a federal district of Ottawa, that has occasionally occupied our attention, but I am bound to say that the idea has not found general favour. There is a point of marked difference between Washington and Ottawa which adds to the difficulty of such a plan. Washington is a residential city simply, but Ottawa is and, while we have the magnificent power available near the city, must continue to be, an industrial centre, and such a city is rather unwilling to give up its franchise. The idea has occasionally engaged our attention, but it would be incorrect to say that our very grave attention has been given to it. I do not think that the citizens of Ottawa would view it with favour. However, the idea is well worth considering.

Mr. JAMESON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has not stated whether there is a maximum sum up to which the government intend to pay?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the Ottawa Commission have, from time to time, made plans of their own, but we have only approved of them so far as our appropriations would enable us to do so. The only limitation the government has fixed is that provided by the Acts hitherto passed and this resolution. If the commissioners have schemes involving the expenditure of more money, they must come to this parliament and receive approval at a later stage.

Mr. HUGHES. In regard to beautifying the capital, I am sure the Prime Minister has noted some of the industrial establishments of the city belching forth a great deal of smoke and a great deal of useful fuel, which is very bad for the clothes-lines all over the city. Has he ever suggested to the Improvement Commission the advisability of having smoke consumers placed on these tall chimneys in the vicinity of the Chaudière and elsewhere? In England, as the First Minister knows, there is no such thing as one of these chimneys to be seen in any part of the country.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think the Ottawa Improvement Commission have control over either the tall chimneys or the clothes-lines. With the immense power available in the Ottawa river and its tributaries, I should think its use would probably diminish the evil to which the hon. member has called attention. It should not be so serious in the future as in the past, and the clothes-lines will have a better chance.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 230) respecting the city of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into committee on certain proposed resolutions respecting bounties. He said: The Act respecting the granting of bounties on iron and steel, as respects the greater part of the bounties, that is to say, those that are paid on pig iron, puddled bars and steel ingots, will expire on the 31st of December next, and the parties interested have had ample notice, therefore, of the time when these bounties will cease to be payable. But there is one item of the steel bounties not limited in time, and that is the bounty paid on the manufacture of rods. We have thought it desirable therefore, to introduce an Act to repeal that particular bounty, but, as there has been no previous notice we propose that the bounty should cease on 1st of July, 1911, thus giving them six months notice beyond the time when the other bounties will expire.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Will the hon. minister please explain the last clause?

Mr. FIELDING. The bounties are only payable on rods manufactured for the purpose of being manufactured into wire. All bounties cease on 30th of June except that, if they have actually made and sold rods prior to that date payment may be made after 30th of June. That is the effect of the arrangement.

Motion agreed to, and resolution was considered in committee, reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 231) respecting bounties on iron and steel made in Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

WAY AND MEANS—TRADE RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding: 'That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a motion for Committee of Ways and Means for the purpose of moving the resolution to be found on page 753 of the Votes and Proceedings respecting tariff reductions. In committee I shall move the resolution.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wanted to say a few words on this motion; I did not know the minister was going on.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman prefers to postpone it, I have no objection.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not wish to speak at great length. I would go on with it now, except that I have not my papers here.

Mr. FIELDING. Then we will take it up at some time to-morrow. I withdraw my motion.

WATER AND WATER-POWER IN RAILWAY BELT, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 187) to confirm and declare the rights of the Crown with respect to water and water-power, and relating to the diversion, acquisition and use of water in the railway belt in British Columbia.

On section 3,

Mr. OLIVER. I move the amendment of which notice has been given to strike out section 3 as it stands at the present time, and substitute the following:

This Act applies to all lands within the railway belt in the province of British Columbia as herein defined: Provided that nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect any riparian rights or rights to water in or appurtenant to those lands described in section 11 of the terms of union between the Dominion of Canada and British Columbia as held under pre-emption rights or by Crown grant, or to affect any riparian rights or rights to water in or appurtenant to lands which having been heretofore granted by the Crown in the right of Canada are not now vested in the said Crown.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to know what those rights are that are reserved.

Mr. OLIVER. They cover all existing riparian rights, and the reservation that is expressed here is for the purpose of leaving at the disposition of the Crown all such rights as are not thereby included, it being the policy to deal with water rights separate from land rights, to divide water rights from the land rights. That is the purpose.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. This Bill was before the House the other night. Has the minister thought over any of the amendments suggested at that time, and does he propose bringing any of them forward?

Mr. OLIVER. The amendment now under consideration was proposed when the Bill was up for consideration previously, and it was placed on the 'Hansard' so that members of the House would have an opportunity of considering it. I have no doubt it has been fully considered, and perhaps it will not be necessary to discuss it at great length.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am one of those who took exception to the latter portion of clause 4. I think that the proposed amendment to clause 3 will meet my objection, my objection being that the Bill sought to take away common law rights of riparian proprietors. I think this amendment properly protects those rights. But section 4 will have to be amended.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not understand why this legislation should be rushed through now. There must be something behind all this that is not disclosed. Here is a case pending in the Privy Council to decide what the rights of these people are as between the province and the Dominion. It has been decided by the Exchequer Court, decided by the Supreme Court, and leave of appeal granted the other day by the Privy Council in England where it will be decided in a few months more. Why in the world at this stage of the session is this Bill to be rushed through? It makes one very suspicious. I can't see how the public needs require any such Bill as this to be passed at this time. The Dominion government own some land out there, they do not own all the land in the railway belt, as was clearly proved on the discussion two or three days ago. They only own some land that has not been sold, and the Dominion has no right to say anything about these water-rights on land that has been alienated. Why should this Bill be pressed to make a disposition of those disputed rights while the other suit is pending? It is a strange position for the government to take. I am not satisfied until I hear some more reasons. There must be, according to the common expression, a nigger in the wood pile somewhere. This is not legislation that appeals to me as being at all necessary. Somebody or other wants to get an advantage of somebody else, and the government, in my opinion, is trying to help somebody to get the advantage ahead of the decision of the Privy Council. If that is an unfounded suspicion, it can be removed by a frank and clear statement of the reason of this legislation other than appears on the face of it. The government must know it. We have a right to the information without being called upon to make charges against any minister of the Crown. It is not necessary for me to say that, because I have no charge to lay, I shall not get the information I am entitled to. But I suspect, and have cause to suspect, by the character of this legislation, by the facts disclosed, by the judgment of the Exchequer Court which was read the other night, that there is some ulterior motive in this legislation, and I am not prepared without further information to vote for this Bill; on the contrary, it seems to me that we would be justified in vigorously opposing it, even for days, if necessary. It is not quite fair to the opposition or to the people of the country for a contentious piece of legislation like this to be brought in when hon. gentlemen have begun packing their trunks, and getting ready for prorogation. This is not the way to get prorogation. This is the most contentious legislation that could be brought in involving as it does a question of provincial rights, and trying to anticipate the decision of the courts of justice. I am bound to protest against the government arranging a day for prorogation, and then rushing in legislation of this kind, and expecting it to go through, because the members want to get home on a certain day. I am prepared to unpack my trunk and to send word to people with whom I have made engagements telling them that the public business requires me to stay longer rather than submit to legislation of this character. I cannot see how this government needs this legislation before next session. I have had no reason given to me why any such legislation should be brought forward at this stage of the session. It would be much more intelligent legislation if we should pass it after the Privy Council has decided what the rights of the parties are in the case that is now pending for decision. I would urge the Minister of the Interior to say if on reflection it is not a reasonable proposition that was made by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), that this legislation should stand over until next session when we would be able to consider it in a more satisfactory way, assuring the minister, as I do, that I will assist him in passing legislation which would properly deal with the question. It need not be a party question, but it makes it a party question when it is brought in as it has been in the last few days of the session, and when the day of prorogation has been agreed upon. I would appeal to the minister to allow this to stand until next session.

Mr. OLIVER. If it were a fact that this legislation had been brought in at such a date as my hon. friend has hinted at I would think that it would be very unfortunate. But there are times when there is urgency and when it is necessary to bring in legislation at a very late date.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the urgency?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not the case that this legislation was brought in at any such date as my hon. friend has suggested.

Mr. LANCASTER. When was the Bill read the second time?

Mr. OLIVER. More than two weeks ago; I think three weeks ago. It was on the order paper, printed and in the hands of members for a considerable time. It has been the subject of consideration for two or three weeks, and the statement of my hon. friend is not fair in suggesting that there is any attempt to force an unconsidered Bill through the House or in suggesting that there is a reason for suspecion that there is an ulterior motive in connection with this Bill. The purpose of the Bill has been explained before, and there is no reason why it should not be explained again if it is necessary, but I beg to assure my hon. friend that there is urgency for the passage of this Bill for the protection of large and material interests. There is nothing concealed in the Bill, and there is no intention of using the Bill to the advantage of one interest or another. It is a common interest that requires protection, and it is the duty of parliament to protect that interest. The government, being aware of that fact, asks parliament to give the necessary authority by means of this legislation. As to whether it is necessary to pass this legislation, the jurisdiction which has heretofore been exercised by the province of British Columbia in regard to the water rights in the railway belt has been declared by the Exchequer Court, a decision which has been sustained by the Supreme Court, to be vested in the Dominion of Canada; in other words the water rights which have been granted by British Columbia, have, under that decision, no legal standing at the present time. These water rights involve value to the extent of thousands and perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars, and I submit that it is not proper to leave these rights unprotected by proper authority. We ask parliament to pass this legislation so that the rights which are now in question as the result of the decision of the Exchequer and Supreme Courts may be confirmed and maintained. That, it seems to me, is a matter of urgency and necessity. There is no infringement of provincial or any other rights and there is no advantage to be gained by one right over another.

Mr. LANCASTER. What would be the great calamity if we did not pass this Bill until next session?

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand the matter, the man who holds a water right under a grant from British Columbia, if that right is questioned either by force or by law, is not in a position to maintain his right It has no legal standing, I think my hon. friend will agree that that is a very serious position to leave a very large and important matter in.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It has stood that way for a year now.

Mr. OLIVER. The fact that it has stood that way for a considerable length of time is all the greater reason why it should not stand any longer. It leaves the man who has a serious interest in the country at the mercy of the pirate, and as far as I have any responsibility in regard to the administration of the legislation of this country that is a condition that is certainly abhorrent to me and it is my business to protect that interest.

Mr. LANCASTER. Has it not occurred to the hon. gentleman that the Privy Council may decide that he is the pirate?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. Because it is the question who is the pirate, who owns the boat, that has to be decided by the Privy Council. That case is before the courts and we are anticipating the decision. The hon. gentleman may find that he is the pirate in this question by reason of the passing of this Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. That is not dealing with the point at all. The question that is before the Privy Council is a question between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia. The question I was alluding to was the question as between the legitimate property owner and the pirate who may attack his private ownership.

Mr. LANCASTER. You are going to undertake to say which is which, and you have no right to do that.

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. There is no need of any such thing. The Supreme Court has declared that the jurisdiction rests upon the Dominion government. Then, I say that that decision having been rendered, if a man's property is unduly exposed to piratical attack because of the lack of any action on the part of this parliament, this parliament is responsible.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the Supreme Court were the court of final resort the hon. gentleman would be quite right, but what I say is that the minister by letting the Bill stand will have the advantage of the decision instead of looking upon this Bill as giving a decision. But what makes me suspicious is that the decision quoted by the hon. gentleman is under review and is not jurisprudence until the highest court pronounces upon it.

Mr. CONGDON. There is another reason which requires this Bill to become law immediately. In British Columbia more than in the eastern provinces, the value of water rights is appreciated; a value not merely for power purposes, but also for irrigation purposes, and this plan is nothing but an endeavour with respect to the land belonging to the federal government, to make the same divorce between water rights and realty as is made in the British Columbia Act of 1892 in respect to the same things. I wish to point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster), who thinks there is no reason for immediate action, that it is most undesirable that homesteaders should be permitted to go in there and initiate what will lead to a homesteader obtaining the same rights they would in other parts of Canada, and not having the water rights separated, as is usually done in British Columbia. If you leave the law as at present, the moment any one homesteads, when he makes good his claim for the homestead he is entitled to a grant, not reserving any of these water rights as is sought by this Act. Sections 4 and 5 of this Act practically accomplish this when they prevent the grant which is made in the ordinary way to a homesteader or to any one who buys land, carrying the water rights. He must apply for these water rights and get them by virtue of this Act, adopting under the federal authority exactly the law which prevails in British Columbia in this respect.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Supreme Court and the Exchequer Court have decided that this right of the Dominion government ceases as soon as the lands are granted to the settler. The hon. gentleman, therefore, is under a misapprehension when he says that the settlers get no water rights. When the land passes over to the settlers, it may be that the province has the right to butt in, but what right has the Dominion government to interfere if it belongs to the province? That is why I think there is an Ethiopian in the lumber pile. The Minister of the Interior has no right with regard to these lands at all so far as they have been granted to settlers, and the rights of the settlers will be interfered with by this legislation. Although the decision of the Supreme Court and the Exchequer Court is favourable to the Dominion government to the extent that it declares that the Dominion government has control over its own land, yet so far as the lands that pass to the settlers are concerned, the decision is that the Dominion government has ceased to have any jurisdiction or control over them and that they belong to the province. There is an undue rush to pass this legislation, and I cannot see what the reason for it is.

Mr. CONGDON. I must have been very confused in my statement, because my hon. friend took from it the very opposite meaning to that which I intended. This Act does not interfere with any homesteader who has now acquired his rights. It is merely providing that if to-morrow, after this Act is passed, a homesteader comes in to take up land, he takes it without taking water rights, and if he or any one else wants the water rights, he must get them by specific grant. Sections 4 and 5 are identical with the sections in chapter 47 of the British Columbia Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. British Columbia has the authority to say what shall be done directly the lands are alienated.

Mr. CONGDON. My hon. friend is under a misapprehension with regard to that, because, both by common law and statute law, this parliament alone can legislate with regard to Dominion property. The only thing done by the transfer from British Columbia to the federal government was to transfer the administration; the title still remains in His Majesty. Before the transfer the administration was exercised by British Columbia, and now it is exercised by the federal parliament. The moment that became federal property under the first clause of the section of the British North America Act it was made subject to the legislation of this parliament, and surely this parliament alone can legislate with regard to it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Have any rights been cancelled by order in council within the last six or nine months since this fight has been on?

Mr. OLIVER. There have been no water rights cancelled; there is no intention to cancel any water rights. The intention of this Bill is to authorize the government to confirm water rights which have been granted by the provincial government.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Have any water rights been granted by the Dominion government which were claimed by parties under a previous order in council of this government or the government of British Columbia?

Mr. OLIVER. There have been no water rights granted by this government, because this government had no legislation under which water rights could be granted. It is now asking for legislation that would enable it to give grants for water rights.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Have any lands, or water rights, which are in dispute, and which this legislation would heal, been applied for by any company or party?

Mr. OLIVER. There are many applications for land in British Columbia, but there are no applications for land that have anything to do with this Bill so far as I am aware. This is a Bill dealing with water rights and not with land, and it is for the purpose of enabling the government to segregate the water rights from the land rights so that there may be an administration of water rights separate from land rights so far as these water rights have not yet passed into private hands. There is the other authority that is asked for to give the sanction of such right as the Dominion has to the water grants which have been given by the province of British Columbia, which water grants at present are without legal sanction owing to the decision of the Exchequer Court and the Supreme Court, but to which, under that decision, this parliament may give its sanction so long as that decision remains unreversed. We think it is desirable that that should be done. That is the purpose of the Bill.

the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has taken some interest in the case of a water-power, near the city of New Westminster. A company had a grant of water from the province of British Columbia, or from this government, it neglected to secure a title by having a survey made, and a short time ago another corporation stepped in and obtained an order in council from this government dividing those water-rights with them. I would like to know if that is correct, because it would be interesting to know what particular rights this Bill is going to adjust.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I went into that case when the Bill was up before, but I am assured by the minister that the clause will be inserted protecting all rights in litigation.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why not tell us about the case?

Mr. GUTHRIE. You can read about it in Thursday's 'Hansard.' I understand that such a clause is to be inserted. My difficulty with the Bill is to understand just what it does mean, and having heard the minister on two occasions and had conversations with him, I must confess that I know about as little about it now as when I first read it. If what the minister says is his real desire, is merely, in the first place, to declare that these water-rights are vested in the Dominion of Canada, I do not see any objection to that being added by a very simple clause. If it does no good it can do no harm; if the Judicial Committee decides they are not vested in Canada it is invalid, and if the Judicial Committee decides they are vested, this Act cannot grant any greater vesting than now exists.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why make the declaration?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I cannot see that it does any good. The minister says he wants to confirm all existing rights. That can be done by a very simple clause. It is not done, I submit, by clause 4. What right does he propose to confirm? I understood that on a former occasion he proposed to grant confirmation to all rights hitherto granted by the province of British Columbia and all rights granted by this government, a general confirmation, I have since understood from him that he does not propose to grant confirmation to rights which have only been granted by the province of British Columbia, and have not so far been confirmed by this government. There are many rights to water in that province which depend on what they call water records in British Columbia. Some of the holders of these water records have come to this government and obtained orders in council confirming them, and likewise conveyances, Crown grants confirming them, and granting the free use of certain waters. Surely no further confirmation of such rights is required than the grants which the holders now possess. Under the Bill as presented to the House, I submit that these rights may become somewhat jeopardized. Clause 4, by implication at all events, renders it necessary for the holder of such a right to have his right established in some way. The last line of clause 4 states that he must have it established. Why have it any more established than it is established by his order in council and his Crown grant? It merely says that he must submit his documents and deeds to some tribunal, which, I presume, can either confirm or refuse his title. Men who hold these water privileges and have invested large sums in them are staggered by the proposal, they do not know whether their rights will be confirmed or not. The clause can be made right by a simple amendment. I would again urge my suggestion which would be to strike out in the 32nd line the words, 'unless and until and,' which only complicate the question, and the two last words on page 1, 'is established.' Then it would read:

> Except only so far as some right therein or to the use thereof, inconsistent with the right of the Crown and which is not a public right, or a right common to the public, has been acquired by any person, company or municipality prior to the 10th day of May, 1909.

That is the date on which the Exchequer Court gave its decision. If the minister's intention is to confirm such rights he could do it in two or three words, and confirm all the rights granted prior to the Exchequer Court decision. But that is evidently not his intention if we may judge from the Bill. In clause 6 he provides simply for a provisional confirmation which is not absolute but is only good for two years. Holders of rights granted by the Crown, by this government, could not tolerate a clause of that kind, it is not fair to them. The next clause provides that holders of such rights must then apply for a license and come under various restrictions and provisions which have not yet been prescribed, nobody knows what they will be. Many men have invested large amounts of capital already, large works are in process of construction, heavy amounts are to be expended in the present season. Men do not want to expend their money with such uncertainty hanging over them. The Bill is not clear and definite, it goes very much further than the statement of the minister goes; if his intention is merely to have a declaration of these individuals' rights and a confirmation of existing rights. I see no objection to that being done, I think it should be done and that the minister's reasons for doing it are good reasons, except that it seems rather absurd after waiting a year after the Exchequer Court's decision to say that the Bill must be pushed now when we know that we will have a decision from the Judicial Committee probably in from three to five months at most.

I do not appreciate the difficulty mentioned by the hon. member from the Yukon (Mr. Congdon) in the case of grants to settlers that would give water-rights. This Bill is not necessary for that purpose, a simple clause in the grant reserving the water-rights would be sufficient. The minister wants to segregate the rights to water from the ordinary rights. Let him by a simple clause in the grant do that. No difficulty could arise. I must repeat the position I took a few nights ago that a Bill of this importance and intricacy, involving such serious consequences, should not be rushed at this stage of the session and no harm could be caused by allowing it to wait until the fall. If the minister thinks that is impossible I would ask him to limit the Act and put in simple clauses merely to give a declaration of Dominion rights and to confirm all other rights. If we do that then the financial interests of which he spoke will not feel that they are in jeopardy, they will feel secure and development can go on

Mr. CONGDON. I think the objects of sections 4 and 5 are to enable the minister to make the reservation in the grant of which the hon. gentleman has spoken but without that the minister is bound, when he comes to give a grant, to give the water and everything else belonging to the realty. This section merely declares that the water is in the Crown distinct from the other and can only be granted not by an ordinary grant of realty but by a grant as provided in section 6.

Mr. GOODEVE. I certainly agree with the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) that this Bill might be left over until another session. I cannot agree with the explanation given by the hon. Minister of the Interior when he says that the legislation is only desired to confirm grants that have already been issued by the British Columbia government. If that is his desire, it would be a simple act to confirm those rights. The member for the Yukon (Mr. Congdon) has stated that the idea of the minister was to segregate the water from the land. Now, as I read the decisions of both the Exchequer Court and the Supreme Court, they have distinctly affirmed the principle that the moment the land is alienated from the Dominion it comes under the jurisdiction of the province of British Columbia, so that by segrating the water from the land, the minister would simply be complicating the matter further instead of straightening it out. If he segregated the water as is suggested, and endeavoured to give certain water-rights and privileges he would find that they were ultimately void, for as soon as the land was alienated they would come under the jurisdiction of the provincial government only. Further it has been wisely pointed out that it will be only a short time before the final decision of the Privy Council in this case is given. Now, what would be the position, as has been well pointed out by the member from the Yukon (Mr. Congdon) if the minister undertook to make certain grants, and the decision of the Privy Council went against him. If the Privy Council should decide that the jurisdiction is vested not in the Dominion, but in the province of British Columbia, instead of protecting vested rights the minister by this legislation would only be complicating them. So looking at it from these three standpoints I think that instead of being an advantage to the people at large, or to the people who are interested in these water-powers, it would have the effect of creating further difficulties. It has been well pointed out by the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) that there are large interests there, and if it is the minister's desire that their rights should be confirmed it would be a simple matter to bring in a Bill giving effect to that and wait until the decision of the Privy Council is given before bringing in a Bill of this kind. That would be a simple matter, and it would meet with the approval of the people of British Columbia, and of the people who have rights there.

Mr. OLIVER. This Bill is absolutely as simple as my hon. friend (Mr. Goodeve) suggests it should be.

Mr. LANCASTER. It does not read that way.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not responsible for my hon. friend's understanding of the Bill. There are just three points in the Bill. One is to declare the right of the Dominion in the water, and to separate the right in the water from the right in the land. The second is to confirm the rights which have been granted by the province of British Columbia, and the third is to take authority to grant other rights. The purpose of the one having reference to the segregation of the water from the land is in pursuance of the policy of a conservation of the water resources of this country to which the whole country has given its approval, and no place more strongly than in this parliament. That is to say, the right in the water should be kept as closely as possible under the control of the Crown and it should not pass from the Crown's control to private control except for purposes designated by and satisfactory to the Crown. In regard to the confirmation of the rights granted by the province of British Columbia, it is conceded that this is necessary where those rights have not already been confirmed by the Dominion. In the case of several of the large undertakings in the railway belt, where large amounts of money were involved, the parties secured their authority from the provincial government, and came to the Dominion government and got a quitclaim, or a grant of the Dominion right, but the small holders did not do that. The small holder was content with the right which he had got from the province of British Columbia, and unless we get this authority we are asking for to-day, the small holder will not be in the position that the large holder is in, but will be absolutely at the mercy of the pirate, whereas the large holder is protected by the quitclaim he got from the Dominion government. Now, I think it is only fair that the small holder should be put in the same position as the large holder, that what he failed to get by not coming to the Dominion government we should give him by the authority of this parliament. Then in regard to the granting of rights for the future, no man is going to invest his money in the development of water-power in the railway belt, in new enterprises, unless he gets a security of title. Now, I suppose that neither the province of British Columbia, nor anybody in the Dominion wishes to hold back the development of the water resources of that railway belt for one moment. It is desirable that capital should be secured, and if it is desired to introduce capital in any enterprise at present, there is no security of title, and no secure title can be got.

Mr. GOODEVE. Does the hon. minister say that capital would be invested in any right granted by the Dominion, when in view of the case now before the courts capitalists realize that any grant so made might be upset by the Privy Council, and particularly in view of the fact that two courts have already given a decision distinctly affirming the principle that the moment the land is alienated from the Dominion it comes under the jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. LANCASTER. And the water too.

Mr. GOODEVE. In doing what you propose you would put us in a position where capital would not invest.

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend had allowed me to finish my statement I think I could have shown him that I was absolutely right. However, he has brought out the point I wanted to make more clearly than I could. At the present time my hon. friend will admit that there is no secure title to any new enterprise that desires to enter upon the development of water-power in British Columbia, because until the question is decided by the Privy Council, the provincial grant is of no value, and this government has no authority to give a grant. Therefore, development is tied up, lacking the security of investment. But, if this Bill is passed, and this government is clothed with authority to issue a grant, then an enterprise can come and get the authority of this government, and go to the province and get its quitclaim, and it would be an absolutely secure title, just as some years ago the enterprises, my hon. friend has spoken of, went to the provincial government, got their grants, and came to the Dominion, and got the grant of such rights as the Dominion was able to give. That is what was done in that case, and the people have acquired a title no matter which way the decision of the Privy Council goes. If this legislation is passed any new enterprise can be put in the same position, and development in the railway belt will not be retarded. But without this legislation there can be no security in the development of water-enterprises whatever. I humbly submit that in the interests of British Columbia, in the interests of the railway belt, it is desirable that there should not be a retardment of development by keeping back the possibility of giving a clear title to any capital that may be invested.

Mr. GOODEVE. The minister has just stated that the government has already confirmed certain grants issued by the province to get a quitclaim. That is, of the larger holders, but they are proceeding further in this Act. They are undertaking to make a grant by the Dominion which the minister himself has admitted would not secure a perfect title and the holder of which would have to go to the province to get a quitclaim. That is, he would have to go to the province first and then come to the Dominion, or vice versa. Why undertake all that at this time when, within a very short time, a decision will be handed down under which everybody will know to whom they should apply?

Mr. MACDONALD. A friend of mine who is interested in this subject has called my attention to this Bill. I have listened carefully to the discussion. If the minister's object is to obtain a confirmation of rights, then, I submit, that the language used in section 4 is not very apt—not as lawyers usually read it. The first portion of section 4 vests in the Crown, the rights to the water 'unless and until and except only so far as some right therein, or to the use thereof, inconsistent with the right of the Crown, and which is not a public right or a right common to the public, is established.' Now, that language, especially the phrase 'is established' is not found usually in public statutes and is not one of which we can get a ready definition in any judicial dictionary known to me or in any law relating to the interpretation of statutes. Where you have a law passed confirmatory of deeds of title, the statement that such grants at a certain time, setting them out in general language and declaring these to be confirmed, is sufficient, unless there is a desire to becloud the question. The other is entirely unnecessary for the object if the object be merely to confirm the rights regularly obtained in the past. There have been grants I understand made by the Crown under order in council. I am told that they are in the nature of quitclaim. But, so far as I have had experience in dealing with grants from the Crown, I see nothing but quitclaims in them. The Crown never guarantees titles to any grantee, but simply gives the grantee whatever right is there, and this means nothing more in law or in fact than a quitclaim deed passing between individuals. If the right to grant these quitclaim deeds, to use the ordinary phraseology, has been exercised in the past, I do not see the point of my hon. friend from Yukon (Mr. Congdon) about this legislation being necessary to give the minister power to make these grants, because that power has been exercised in the past. And as a matter of policy, it would seem right that a clause should be passed confirming rights which have been regularly obtained from the authorities whom the public had a right to suppose had the power to give these in the past. The whole question as to water-powers is under appeal, leave to appeal having been obtained from the Privy Council. The Privy Council sits in July, and decision will be given before we meet again in October. The policy of parliament in the past has not been to go in and assume a right to exercise any power affecting property or civil rights while these matters were sub judice.

Mr. LANCASTER. As an ordinary individual, the Crown could not do it. If the Crown were an ordinary individual, it would be prevented from butting in in this way when the case is sub judice.

Mr. MACDONALD. To say that we are going to set up a system under which the government are going to deal with the rights in these water-powers while we are awaiting the decision determining whether such a power exists, is an anomalous situation. If the minister states that his desire is to confirm the rights granted that is a pre-eminently proper proposition and one that I would support. But, I say that section 4 does not do that in the clear language that should be contained in an Act of parliament.

Mr. OLIVER. Section 4 is not intended to do that at all. The provision that is intended to do that is section 6. Section 4 simply segregates the water rights and the land rights.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It goes further.

Mr. OLIVER. No, in section 4 there is no mention of a confirmation of right to any one.

Mr. MACDONALD. There is the government right in everything that has not been granted.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely. It declares the right of the government in everything that is not being granted.

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. minister constitutes himself the judge of whether it has been or not.

Mr. OLIVER. Who is to be the judge? Does my hon. friend want it to be declared in the Act how these rights shall be established? If it comes up for the consideration of the government, it is established as a matter of administration; if it comes before the courts, it is established by the courts. Why should it be stated here beyond declaring merely that it is to be established? As I stated, this section 4 is intended simply to segregate the water rights from the land rights. It is not intended for any other purpose, and it does not effect any other purpose; it is simply a plain statement of a fact which everybody admits to be desirable. But section 6 sets out, in so many words, to confirm rights which have been already granted. It may do so properly or improperly, but my hon. friend must not look in section 4 for provision contained in section 6, nor find fault with section 4 because it does not do what section 6 is intended to do. Section 4 is for declaratory purposes, and section 6 is to confirm rights which have been granted. I am ready to accept criticism of the terms of section 6, but I think it unfair that the hon. member should attribute to section 4 a purpose which is covered by section 6 and then find fault with the terms of section 4 because it does not accomplish that which it was not intended to accomplish.

Mr. MACDONALD. I wish I could agree with the minister in his interpretation of this section, but, so far as my legal judgment goes, it does not permit me to do so. I take it that section 4 does give the Crown the rights to water in British Columbia, with the exception of certain rights which are not inconsistent with the rights of the Crown, and the rights must be 'established' in some way. Where I disagree with the minister is as to the effect to be given to the words 'is established.' He says these rights may be established by him or by somebody else. That is, the Crown may not respect any rights given by a power which granted these rights in good faith. The confirmation ought to be absolute, so as to protect the person who has obtained rights from the Dominion or from the province as the case may be—rights which either power had the authority to grant at the proper time. This Bill gives to the Governor in Council power to make grants within two years, but this power is to be exercised by the minister in a peculiar way. If a man has had a grant from the British Columbia government and a quitclaim from the federal government, this would limit the grant under the Act to the extent that he would have to be subject to the power of the minister in regard to licenses. I disagree with the minister as a matter of interpretation of law. I may be wrong and he right, but I reiterate that the fair and proper way would be to confirm in the parties who hold them vested rights in these waters obtained from the British Columbia government but confirmed by the federal government by order in council or otherwise.

Mr. OLIVER. That is exactly what is done in section 6. My hon. friend cannot read section 4 in its proper effect. Section 4 does not give anybody any right, it has nothing to do with the right to use the water that my hon. friend is speaking of; it is simply a declaration that anything that is not under a private right is under the Crown right, and is reserved from being dealt with as a part of the land law. This is of the nature of a confirmation of the grant and ownership in all waters, it has nothing to do with the administration of waters. Then we come to section 6, which confirms those rights already granted, and there is no difference between a provincial right and a Dominion right. There is no declaration that the person who has received a provincial right must come under a Dominion right. It makes provision for the unconditional confirmation of every right that has been granted for that period of two years, in other words, it carries those existing rights past the time when we will certainly have a decision of the Privy Council.

Mr. BURRELL. What is the minister's position as to jurisdiction over those lands which have passed from the Dominion government control, those lands that have been actually alienated from the Dominion government? Does the minister intimate that he has any control over the water on those lands? Because the decision of the Exchequer Court seems clear that the Dominion had granted the lands, and, therefore, the grantee became subject to the enactment of the legislature of British Columbia.

Mr. OLIVER. My advice is that the amended section 3, which has been placed before the House, covers that point. I may say that that section, and an amendment to section 6 which I am going to propose, were agreed to between the Department of Justice and the deputy Attorney General of British Columbia; therefore, I assume they are good law and good drafting. I am not prepared to say that the government of British Columbia approves of the present Bill as a matter of policy, but I am prepared to say that so far as the drafting and purpose of these sections are concerned, they certainly have the approval of both the Department of Justice at Ottawa and of the deputy Attorney General of British Columbia. I can give no better authority for my belief that I was correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why does the minister fix a period of two years in section 6?

Mr. OLIVER. It is for the purpose of carrying the existing rights without change over the period of uncertainty until the decision of the Privy Council has been rendered; when this Bill is passed and these rights are dealt with, there will be no need of any other interference until the question has been absolutely settled.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that on the whole it would be better to leave the matter until there is a certainty as to what the actual rights are. The difficulty I have at present with this Bill is that I really could not undertake to say just what the effect of it would be, notwithstanding the minister's explanation. Take section 4, I really would not know what would be the effect of it, and I endeavoured to follow the minister's explanation as well as I could. I understood him to say that it was for the purpose of segregating the water right from the land right.

Mr. OLIVER. So far as the right of the land already rests in this government, it is to separate the water rights from the land rights.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me he uses curious language for that purpose. As a matter of fact, section 4 seems to say that the right to water, in so far as it has not passed out of the Crown, shall remain in the Crown. You really do not need to make that clear by statute. When I find a statute declaring something that is absolutely obvious, and when I find that embodied in a somewhat complicated section of considerable length, it occurs to me that a court, in endeavouring to interpret that section, might find itself landed in great difficulties.

Mr. CONGDON. That must be read with the next section, which provides that those rights can only be disposed of under this Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Really, I do not see that that makes it any better. Then when we come to section 6, we find a provisional arrangement for a period of two years, and after that period has expired then everything is left open. That does not seem to tend to certainty, I do not think one really gets much stability out of a provision of that kind. The whole Bill seems to be so complicated and of so unusual a character, that I venture to suggest to the minister that it would be better to let the matter stand until we get an absolute knowledge of what the law is, and that knowledge can only come to us by the decision of the pending appeal.

Mr. OLIVER. If there was some process of law or some authority that would stay all proceedings in regard to water rights in the province without injury to the province, then I could appreciate the hon. gentleman's suggestion. But there is no possibility of that being done. Development must go on, or there must be injury done; and I take it we are here for the purpose of preventing that injury, for the purpose of so adjusting the title that development can go on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am impressed with the sincere desire of the minister to act in the public interest in regard to this matter, but I have a different opinion perhaps as to how that can be accomplished. I understood the minister to say that the larger proprietors had in some way got an assurance of confirmation from this government. If that can be done as respects the larger proprietors, I suppose it can be done as respects the smaller proprietors. At all events, the government might declare its policy in that regard, namely, to deal with the smaller proprietors as they have dealt with the larger ones, and stay its hand in the meantime until it is absolutely sure that this parliament can legislate effectively. Then so far as investment is concerned, any person who has a grant in the province of British Columbia, the validity of which is not yet assured, upon which doubt has been thrown by decisions already given, any person having such a grant and desiring to invest capital, could I suppose, come to this government and get an assurance as to its future action. The legislation of this parliament should become absolutely assured by the judgment of the Privy Council. It seems to me that all the hon. gentleman desires can be done without this legislation. I admit that I do not understand this matter as well as the minister does, but it occurs to me that all that he desires to do can be done without this legislation, and perhaps better. I speak, however, with a great deal of diffidence, because the minister has given more attention to the matter than I have.

Mr. OLIVER. There might be arbitrary and unwarranted action by this government that would protect private interests, but I do not think the government should be required to place itself in that position, I do not think that is a safe position. I do not think we should expect or look to property interests to employ capital in the development of the country without that parliamentary authority to which the investment of capital is fully entitled. This government may give an undertaking or enter into an understanding with private capitalists without the sanction of parliament, but I do not think it is a good thing to do, and I do not think it will produce good results. We come before parliament with a fair proposition to meet a condition which actually exists, and a condition which requires to be dealt with. We put a fair proposition before parliament for dealing with that condition, and we ask parliament to assent to it.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is not a condition that is going to exist with any certainty for more than a few months. That is the trouble that the minister is in. Instead of the certainty that the minister wants to accomplish there will be uncertainty. Some poor fellow will think that he has some rights, and he will be foolish enough to spend all he is worth in trying to vindicate them. The minister will be the cause of a lot of inocent people getting into a couple of hundred law-suits under the conditions existing now between the province and the Dominion. If the minister wants to act pro bono publico he should say to these people: Now, boys, do not invest any money until the decision of the Privy Council is given. But, he notifies them to go in under this Act of parliament which will probably be quashed by the decision of the Privy Council. The hon. gentleman's argument is the very best reason why this Bill should not pass.

Mr. BURRELL. The minister seems to be afraid that in this interregnum there may be some piratical attempts made upon the existing provisional rights. As I understand the matter, the British Columbia government, under the Act which they passed last session, appointed a special body of three commissioners and they are still issuing certain water records in conection with the various waters in the railway belt. I do not think that these titles, such as are issued by the provincial government, will be interfered with piratically by any body pending the decision by the Privy Council, and after all, the security of title which the minister is going to give by this Bill is only a provisional one, because it is a title which will be wiped out immediately when the Privy Council decision is given. Under section 6 the minister says that this validation is only to be for a period of two years, and then the whole thing is in the melting pot again. No body knows where he is at. He does not know what regulations will be, or what title he will have. The whole thing is wiped out after two years, and that is an additional reason why I am rather reluctant to see the Bill pass. While I understand that the minister is sincerely anxious to protect the rights of those who have gone in, and acquired water-rights; yet, this Bill goes farther than that, because it foreshadows certain legislation which seriously jeopardizes the existing rights of those who are dealing with these matters under the British Columbia regulations, and it is not clear to me that the minister has yet answered my question as to whether the Dominion government, even if the Privy Council decision were to favour the Dominion government, thinks that it has any rights over the water after the land is sold.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is clear that it would not have.

Mr. BURRELL. No. This is simply a validation clause and no body would dispute it until the decision of the Privy Council is given. I cannot see, considering the short period of this validation as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has said, why, if you can give a quitclaim deed by order in council to the large acquirers of rights, the same process cannot go on with respect to the smaller ones.

On section 4, confirmation to Crown of ownership of all waters.

Mr. LANCASTER. That section should be struck out, because, as pointed out by the leader of the opposition, if it means anything, the result must be the same as it would be if it were not written at all, and for that very reason the court would be likely to strain at some other meaning. It is well known that when the courts are told that a section means what would be the effect without it being there at all, in construing that section they seek for some other meaning that would not be so ridculous as the one suggested. Although that section means perhaps, in the opinion of the minister what he said, I have not the least doubt that the courts will take it to mean something altogether different—I do not know what. I cannot grasp what that section does mean. It is a complication of language, of adjectives, verbs and adverbs, and two or three nouns to a sentence making it absolutely impossible to understand what it means. I do not believe there is any one who can take that section, and conscientiously tell what it means. It is the most incomprehensibly drawn section that I ever saw in a statute. If it is drawn for the purpose of creating confusion it will certainly accomplish that object. If it is drawn to accomplish anything, then it ought to be expressed in simple language that people could understand.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to put my legal knowledge against that of my hon. friend.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is not legal knowledge; it is common sense.

Mr. OLIVER. That particular clause is contained in the Irrigation Act, and in the Waterways Act of the province of British Columbia. In these Acts such a provision is found to be necessaray and desirable, and I presume that the same reasons which led to the using of such a clause in that Act led to its being placed here.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have the British Columbia Act which my hon. friend from Yukon (Mr. Congdon) was kind enough to hand over to me, and it contains no such language. There is a clause that everybody can understand. It is clause 2, as follows:

> The right to the use of all water at any time in any river, watercourse, lake, or stream not being a navigable river or otherwise under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, is hereby declared to be vested in the Crown in the right of the province, and, save in the exercise of any legal right existing at the time of such diversion or appropriation, no person shall divert or appropriate any water from any river, watercourse, lake, or stream, excepting under the provisions of this Act, or of some other Act already or hereafter to be passed, or except in the exercise of the general right of all persons to use water for domestic and stock supply from any river, watercourse, lake, or stream vested in the Crown, and to which there is access by a public road or reserve.

This clause 2 is a work of art, compared with clause 4 of this Bill, which should be dealt with as a curiosity and put in a museum. When the land is alienated it becomes the right of the province to administer it and the province declares in plain English that it is vested in the Crown in the right of the province of British Columbia. What capitalist will be afraid of understanding the law in the provincial Act. Why not leave well enough alone. Why complicate matters by this legislation, which will cause innumerable lawsuits between individuals.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Would the minister have any objection to simplify this section?

Mr. OLIVER. I got this drafting from the Department of Justice, and it certainly is in line with similar sections in the Irrigation Act and in the British Columbia Act.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The wording is different.

Mr. OLIVER. Because what is contained in one section in the British Columbia Act is divided into two in this Act with the object of making it plain, I suppose. I do not feel I would be warranted in changing the considered drafting of the Department of Justice which I submit is more to be relied upon than a momentary suggestion made on the floor of the House.

Mr. GUTHRIE. This is not a momentary suggestion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Can the minister construe this section himself?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and so could my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) if he took the trouble to read it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. If the minister and I have the same desire, as I think we have, the section can be put in very simple language. It is intended to be a declaration of the right of the Crown in all water except what has hitherto been granted away, but what it really means is that the Crown is the proprietor of all water which has not been granted away and the right to which granted away water is established. Why not strike out the words 'is established' and establish the Crown's right to all water which has not been heretofore acquired from the Crown prior to the 10th of May, 1909. As the language at present reads, it renders the highest right very very uncertain. I think it is highly unreasonable of the minister to refuse the request that is made here. It is not a question that has been sprung upon us; the clause has been thoroughly considered and I think there are those in this House who are just as competent of drawing a clear section, as is the deputy Minister of Justice.

Mr. MACDONALD. I will join the member for Wellington in this request. The use of the word 'until' here creates some kind of suspensory right in the Crown, a sort of Mahommet's coffin between heaven and earth, and a thing that is unheard of in such legislation. The request of the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) is so reasonable that if the intention is to vest in the Crown all the right to waters except such as have passed into the title of other persons, it is very easy to say so.

Mr. OLIVER. Does my hon. friend suggest that this wording does not say so?

Mr. MACDONALD. I say it does not. I say the use of the word 'until' in that connection is unheard of.

Mr. OLIVER. In my humble judgment, I will take the drafting of the deputy Minister of Justice and be satisfied with it. The trouble of my hon. friends from Wellington and Pictou is that they persist in confusing the purpose of clause 4 with the purpose of clause 6. If they remember that the purpose of one has no connection with the purpose of the other, they will be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The minister may say he claims all the water, and the applicant may say the minister does not, but the minister will answer: Oh, but you have not established your claim and until you do establish it you have no claim, and the applicant has to defend a title which he probably had secured years ago.

Mr. CONGDON. How can the minister find that some one has a claim unless that claim is established? This section is merely descriptive of the rights cut out of the realty which under the next section must be granted expressly separate and apart altogether from the grant of the water. I may say that I could not understand it and I spoke to the deputy Minister of Justice about it and he agreed that possibly it might be better drawn, but he pointed out that this was the language used in the Irrigation Act and he thought it desirable that all this should be under exactly similar legislation.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Is it the opinion of my hon. friend (Mr. Congdon) that it is in the discretion of the minister to say to a man holding the Crown grant in the water: Your claim is worthless, or, it is not established?

Mr. CONGDON. Certainly not.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Then what is the meaning of the language 'until it is established'?

Mr. LANCASTER. No two men in this House take the same meaning out of that section, and in the name of common sense why should we pass a law of that kind? The Minister of the Interior says it was drawn in this way because some other legislation was drafted in the same way. I ask the Prime Minister if it is not a farce to pass legislation of that kind? Hon. members called 'Carried.' They seemed to agree that was the meaning of this section.

Mr. CONMEE. Is it usual for lawyers to agree about matters of this kind?

Mr. LANCASTER. We could get lawyers in this House to draw a clause which would mean something.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With the permission of my hon. friend, I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

PUBLIC BILLS AND ORDERS.

INJURIES DUE TO MOTOR VEHICLES.

On the order being called for the second reading of Bill (No. 13) to amend the Criminal Code respecting injuries due to motor vehicles.—Mr. Lewis.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is a principle involved in this Bill that is a little strange. As it is worded 'the driver of a motor car, by giving his name or address, can escape liability both criminal and civil.' If we are going to put a statute of this kind on the statute-book, let us put it in a more sensible form than this.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The section of the Bill as reported by the committee imposes a penalty on the motor car driver, who, with intent to escape liability, either civil or criminal, drives on without giving assistance or his name or address. Does my hon. friend think it is a hardship if a man is arrested and brought to trial in such a case?

Mr. LANCASTER. No, I do not think that at all, but I think he ought to be liable under the code for the greater offence, as this reads he would escape that liability by simply calling out a name. You are creating a confusion of legislation; you are saying that a man is liable to a fine of $50 at the most no matter how many people he might injure, and that he can escape that penalty by simply shouting out his name and address.

Mr. CARVELL. If the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) will look at the Criminal Code, he will find that there is a provision making a man liable for an accident. This is something in addition. I have not the Criminal Code before me, but I was on the committee, as was the member for Portage la Prairie, I think, and we discussed it very carefully with the Minister of Justice. The hon. member will find that there is a provision in the code against furious driving, and this is only an additional provision in case the driver of the car fails to stop.

Mr. LANCASTER. It will become substitutional so far as motor cars are concerned. That is my objection to the legislation.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The whole point of my hon. friend's objection, as I understand it, is that this will be a substitute for the legislation already in existence. I do not think so. That was not the intention of the committee. The intention was simply to create a new offence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand the object of the legislation it is this. When an accident has occurred on the highway owing to the presence of a motor car, whether there has been negligence on the part of the persons driving the motor car or not, absolutely irrespective of that consideration, the motor car must stop and the driver must tender assistance and give his name and address. If he fails to do that, then he is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding $50 in costs.

Mr. CARVELL. That is correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would be irrespective of whether he is in fault or not. If the accident occurs, and he drives on without tendering assistance or without giving his name and address, then he is liable. I think, perhaps, the wording of it might be improved a little in the last line, but apart from that it would seem to me to have that meaning.

Mr. LANCASTER. What I mean is this. Under the general Criminal Code, I do not have it here, but I think I know its effect, if any man whether he be a motor car driver or a wheel-barrow runner for that matter, or the driver of a horse, drives furiously, negligently and dangerously along the highway he is liable. But under this section, it seems to me that if a motor car driver does that he will escape the penalty imposed by simply giving his name and address, without rendering assistance to the parties he has injured. Under this section he is not required to do both, and I think he should be made to do both. I would, therefore, suggest that the word 'or' be struck out and the word 'and' substituted. If a man causes an accident he should not escape liability by merely shouting out his name and address. If he is a man at all, he ought to render assistance to the injured as well as be known so that he may be sued for civil damages.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree entirely with my hon. friend, but I suggest that the purpose might be served by inserting the word 'without' after the word 'or.'

Mr. LANCASTER. If you say that he should render assistance and give his name and address I would agree. As long as the driver is required to do both.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Bill has been carefully considered by the committee, and certainly the intention was not to substitute one offence for another, but simply to add an offence to the one already existing. It seems to me that intention is so obvious that I cannot understand the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster).

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. Prime Minister may be right in saying that the intention was to create a new offence, but even if that is so, the legislation as framed will be of no practical benefit if a man can escape liability by simply shouting out his name and address without rendering assistance. I am pointing out that he ought to do both. I would move that the word 'or' be struck out and the word 'and' substituted.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 65) to amend the Winding-up Act—Mr. Meighen—was considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

On motion that the House go into committee on Bill (No. 75) to amend the Criminal Code.—Mr. Harris.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that, as a matter of principle, this Bill is not good. A person dealing with ordinary property in the way referred to by this Bill would be, prima facie, guilty of theft. But it is proposed here to pass a Bill for a minor punishment in this particular case. The provision of the Bill is that if any person takes a motor car, or automobile to be used, or driven, without the consent of the owner, he is liable to a penalty. But if he were to take a man's horse or wheel-barrow he would be prima facie guilty of theft.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Prima facie only.

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, unless he can show his authority. But the plea of a person that he intends to return the property, judge or jury might not conscientiously accept. But if such a thing is made to apply to motor cars, it should apply to horses, wheel-barrows, kits of tools, and other property. Why protect the owners of motor cars as against the owners of any other property? If people take motor cars without the owners' consent they should be punished. But why special legislation respecting motor cars that does not apply to other property such as I have described? We should have the same legislation for all. So on principle, I am not prepared to vote for the Bill.

Mr. CARVELL. This Bill was before the special committee, and its passage was urged by a number of gentlemen who said that this taking of automobiles for use without the consent of the owners requires special legislation. It is claimed that nearly all the accidents are caused by chauffeurs, who are on what are known as 'joy rides'. Having taken the owner to his office, let us say, the chauffeur goes off without the owners consent and somebody is injured. The only argument used against this measure is that it is special legislation. But it is legislation that is needed to meet a special difficulty.

Mr. RHODES. The hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) objects to this Bill because it is special legislation, and in favour of motor car owners. His position is amusing in view of the fact that a moment ago he supported a Bill dealing specially with motor cars. But in that case it appeared to be directed against the owner of the car. There is no legislation providing that if a man is driving a horse-drawn vehicle, and somebody is injured, he must stop and give his number and address. This Bill is necessary, because, as the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), has said, a large proportion of the accidents are due to the fact that cars are taken without the consent of the owners. It is almost impossible to punish this offence under the existing law. In England they have found it impossible to punish a man for taking a car without the owner's consent, and have even been driven to the expedient of trying the offender for theft of the gasolene used, and they are obliged to meet the case by special legislation. It is not for the benefit of motor owners, but for the benefit of the public at large, and for this reason I am heartily in favour of this measure.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. Notwithstanding what has just been said by the hon. gentleman, I think this is legislation purely in the interest of the owners of motor cars. It does not say anything about furious driving, there is not a word about doing injury to any one else. It is idle to imagine that this is intended to protect people on the road; it is intended to protect the owner of the car so that it will not suffer any injury, so that the machinery may not be damaged, and he will not have to spend money to repair it. I do not agree with the hon. member for Carlton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell) that the owners of motor cars are entitled to any special legislation. The farmer with his horse in the pasture, the livery stable keeper, with his horse in the barn, the artisan with his kit of tools, are just as much entitled to protection as the owner of a motor car. But some people who may have influence enough with the government to send agents to Ottawa to plead for special rights, have been successful with the government. I move in amendment to add the words ' or other personal property,' after the words, 'motor car.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I hope my hon. friend will not persevere in his amendment. He will see at once the reason of this legislation. There have been occasionally parties who have stolen a ride, or stolen a horse, or a kit of tools from another workman, but the cases have been so rare that there has been no need of special legislation. But since the motor car has come into general use the daily papers are full of reports of accidents which have been caused by chauffeurs taking a car without permission of the master, or some one jumping into the car and moving it. Now the motor car is a vehicle of such a character that unless it is directed by a skilled man, accidents are likely to be numerous.

Amendment, Mr. Lancaster, negatived.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. GRAHAM. I wish to ask the House to return to the order for the introduction of Bills, in order that I may have leave to introduce Bill (No. 232) to amend the Government Railways Act. The other day when I was putting through a measure amending the general Railway Act, I gave notice of this Bill. It transpires that we have made the government railways subject to all the liabilities of an ordinary railway as to fires, the Act has been changed to place them in the same position, but we have not put in the saving clause in reference to the $5,000 that is in the Railway Act. I merely wish to put the government railways in the same position as ordinary railways.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is not much left, but what will you take up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. First the tariff resolutions, and then Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.30 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 3, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

THE GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

Mr. PUGSLEY laid on the table of the House a return to an order dated the 14th February, 1910, relating to the construction of the Georgian Bay canal. He said: This return was moved for by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White). I may say that this return contains the last proposals which have been made, and I understand that the hon. gentleman who moved for the return stated that that would be sufficient.

BUSINESS BEFORE THE RAILWAY COMMITTEE.

Mr. LANCASTER. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the condition of affairs in the Railway Committee, which I think everyone in the House should consider.

Mr. SPEAKER. Has the hon. gentleman a motion?

Mr. LANCASTER. I have not written it but I move that the special report presented by the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines be now considered. Before the session closes I think it is my duty, as a member of the Railway Committee, to suggest to the House that next session the number of that committee should be largely reduced. The Railway Committee to-day, without any doubt, is unwieldy, and the result of its deliberations are not in any way as perfect or as correct as they would be with a much smaller committee. For instance, one day when some large principle is under discussion, perhaps 15 or 20 members of the committee may be present and vote upon it, with the balance of power against the proposition or against a certain principle. Probably two days later, or the next week, a different set of members, not the same members at all, vote to reverse that policy or that principle, and in that way they make the Railway Committee, so far as precedents are concerned, not only unsatisfactory to the House and to the country, but one might almost say without offence they make the committee ridiculous. What I suggest is that there should be not more than 40 members at most on the Railway Committee, and that 25 should form a quorum, instead of having nearly 200 members on it at present, with 25 to form a quorum. The prevailing opinion among members I have spoken to is that we would do much better work if we were a smaller body; we would be governed by precedents; we would feel our responsibility and the desirability of doing the same thing under the same set of facts, which we do not do now. We would be able to present to the House a report on some stated principle for the benefit of the House, as a result of our deliberations, instead of making reports contradictory in principle as we do at present. We have got to remember that human nature is such that if gentlemen would feel their responsibility, and that the House is going to hold them, and they alone, responsible for a duty that they cannot shirk, they must realize that they are answerable to the House for the work they do, and then they would do better work, the business of the House would be facilitated, and the legislation of the House would be much more uniform than it is at present. This has occurred to me for several sessions, but I have hesitated to remark upon it until this session in order that I might be absolutely certain that I was right in what some might say was a radical change in the constitution of the Railway Committee. After ten years of actual work in that committee, this being my tenth session, it is apparent that the evil is increasing and that a change such as I have suggested would result in greater expedition of the work and in greater benefit to the country and to this House. If we had a committee one-fifth the size of that which we have now, if we had a committee of forty members with a quorum of 25, so that there should be a sufficient number present to agree to what is enacted, I am sure that the results would be in every way satisfactory. I would suggest this to the government and to the House so that it may be well considered during the recess and at the opening of the next session we may make up our minds if there is not something in what I contend for. I think that the chairman of the Railway Committee agrees with me upon this, and is going to second anything I have said in regard to it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I regret that I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) who has just taken his seat. In the first place the recommendation to which he has referred was passed when there were but a very few present and I do not think the matter received that consideration which was its due. I believe that there is always safety in numbers, and I recognize that there are matters which come before that committee which are of great import to the people of the country. They affect great corporations and they oftentimes affect interests that are opposed to those of the great mass of the people. There are questions which come up in the interests of the few as against the interests of the many. I do not speak of this as in any way reflecting upon the views which are oftentimes advanced in the interest of the corporations, but the very conditions which prevail in Canada to-day make these a necessity. In my judgment, when it comes to a question of representation, there is always safety in numbers. My hon. friend has referred to the conditions which exist. I am sure that the interests of the masses of the people of the whole country will be more safely guarded in the hands of the larger committee than in the hands of a few. If the suggestion of my hon. friend were carried out and the committee were limited to forty, what would be the result?—that these Bills would come before the committee and, in the ordinary course of events, there would be not half of that number present.

Mr. LANCASTER. Twenty-five would be a quorum.

Mr. EMMERSON. There would not be even twenty-five present in the ordinary course of events. Hon. gentlemen, and especially those who live within a reasonable distance of the capital, are here to-day and away to-morrow and it is only on special occasions that there is anything like a full and fair representation at the committee to give consideration to the more important Bills that come before the committee. I would therefore think that the result would be disastrous, that Bills would be considered by the committee when there was perhaps only a very small percentage of the members present. If you had a committee of forty, or fifty, or sixty, or a hundred members who would always be present and who would feel their individual responsibility perhaps there would be something in the remarks of the hon. member. But that would not be the case.

Mr. LANCASTER. I was careful to say that I would desire a quorum of at least 25, so that we would always have 25 members present and business could be done. I think the hon. gentleman understood me also to say that the very fact that there would be a limited number of members would cause them to give strict and diligent attention to the duties that they had to perform. That is human nature.

Mr. SPEAKER. I fail to find anything in the report dealing with this question.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would suggest that this is a very important discussion and it should go over to the opening of next session rather than be proceeded with now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Motion allowed to stand.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—CLASSIFICATION OF MATERIAL.

Mr. GEOFFRION moved:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the sixth report of the Special Committee re Lumsden inquiry, proper fees and expenses be paid to counsel appearing before the said committee, and the Clerk of the House and the Law Clerk are hereby authorized to tax the said fees and expenses and to pay the same when so taxed, out of any moneys voted by parliament for the expenses of committees.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that there will be any objection, but it might stand as a notice of motion until to-morrow.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. DANIEL. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if he will lay on the table before prorogation a return that was called for by the member for York (Mr. Crocket), with regard to the survey of the St. John river between Fredericton and Woodstock. I understand that the minister promised to lay it on the table before prorogation, and the member for York asked me to remind him of his promise as he had gone away.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In order to more than fulfil my promise, I laid it on the table last evening.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Prime Minister as to one of the three returns which I asked for yesterday. Two have been brought down this morning, but there is another in reference to the armament on the great lakes. Does he think he can bring it down?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will make inquiries and let you know to-morrow.

ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). By your leave, Mr. Speaker, I would beg to interrupt the order of proceedings which is laid down on the programme of this day in order to remind the House that the term of office of His Excellency the Governor General is fast drawing to a close and that when we meet again at the opening of the next session he will no longer be with us and His Majesty will have selected another person to be his representative in this country. There is, I have reason to believe, a unanimous wish in this House that ere we separate we should convey to His Excellency an expression of our high appreciation of the great services he has rendered to this country whilst he has had the honour of being the representative of His Majesty. The observation has on more than one occasion been made that Canada has been extremely fortunate in the character of those who since confederation have held the high office now held by His Excellency, and the five years of his stay with us I am sure will give still more prominence to this prevalent opinion. From time to time in recent years paragraphs have appeared in the press to the effect that at the present stage of Canadian development it would be fitting that a Canadian should be representative of His Majesty. In this we find the expression of a laudable, but to my mind, a misguided expression of national pride. The system which has been in operation since confederation of His Majesty appointing to be his representative in this country some of the great names of Great Britain has worked most harmoniously and most satisfactorily, and any change in that system would not, I am sure, be productive of good results, but perhaps on the contrary would jeopardize something which we hold dear. The first effect of this system of having some high statesman of Great Britain to be the representative of His Majesty in this country has undoubtedly been to strengthen if possible the ties which bind us to the motherland and to keep them constantly before the hearts of the people. The next effect is to place at the head of the administration one who by the very nature of things is not connected with our party or political differences, and who by the same nature of things is more apt than anybody else to keep even the balance between all contending parties. The other value of the system is to ensure the presence at the head of the political administration of one who from early youth has been bound to public life and who has had the advantage of experience of constitutional government in the country where constitutional government originated, and where it is best understood. In these respects His Excellency was pre-eminently qualified. The name which he has the honour to bear, the name of Grey, may have equals, but it has no superiors in the long list of statesmen who for ages have been connected with the history of constitutional government in Great Britain, and His Excellency proved a worthy addition for he had a distinguished career not only in England, but in some distant parts of the empire. So in his case it was pre-eminently a case of noblese oblige, and from the very day he landed on our shores it is a matter of history that he gave his whole heart, his whole soul, and his whole life to Canada. Canada became the all-absorbing object of his thoughts. He was not satisfied, as every one knows, to give to the discharge of his official duties the most careful and close attention, but he associated himself with everything that went to make the national life of Canada. His constant object was to advance and to elevate the national character in everything, in all the human speculations which go to make up the highest expression of civilization. It is nothing but justice to say that under his wise and generous guidance the arts, letters and the sciences have received a notable impetus. In the matter of science especially he gave the most careful attention and was diligent and active in that branch which is connected with public health, and it is due to his efforts, not only his own efforts but to the efforts of those associated with him, that a disease has been checked which levied every year a large tribute, the disease that is known as tuberculosis. But if anything were the characteristic of the career of His Excellency amongst us, I would say it was the particular attention he gave to the study of our own history. The conception was his and his alone which resulted in the establishment of the Battlefields Commission, the effect of which will be to consecrate and to hallow the ground around the city of Quebec which has been marked by the most dramatic events in our history. But we should not forget the graceful and noble companion of his life. The Countess Grey associated herself readily with all the efforts of her illustrious husband to promote the Canadian welfare.

Several hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. She will be remembered not only by all classes in the different cities of Canada: she will be remembered by the social world especially, but I believe that her memory will be kept greener still in the hearts of the poor and lowly, because it was among the poor and lowly that her efforts were most bestowed. And in this she received the valuable assistance of her young and charming daughters, Lady Sybil and Lady Evelyn, who I am sure, when they leave our shores will carry away with them a large part of the hearts of the Canadian people. I beg, therefore, to move, seconded by Mr. R. L. Borden, that the following address be presented to His Excellency:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Albert Henry George, Viscount Howick, Baron Grey of Howick, in the county of Northumberland, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, One of His Majesty's Honourable Privy Council, and a Baronet; Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Victorian Order, &c., &c., Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of the Dominion of Canada.

May it Please Your Excellency:

We, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects the Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, beg leave to convey to Your Excellency an expression of the general feeling of regret with which all classes in this country have learned that your official connection with Canada is soon to cease.

It must be a source of gratification to Your Excellency, on your retirement from the high office of Governor General, to realize that the period of your administration has been characterized by general and increasing prosperity in every portion of the Dominion.

The zeal with which Your Excellency has sought, by personal observation, to gain an intimate knowledge of the character, possibilities and requirements of every section of the country, has been highly appreciated by the people of Canada.

The special interest which Your Excellency has taken in everything calculated to foster a high sense of public duty and responsibility, to stimulate intellectual development and to advance science and art, will long be gratefully remembered; while the success of your endeavours in cultivating the growth of a Canadian spirit has strengthened us in the belief that the full development of our national life is compatible with the closest and most loyal connection with the Empire. The National Park established at Quebec on the Plains of Abraham will remain as an enduring monument to Your Excellency's wise and enlightened efforts to this end.

We beg that Your Excellency will express to the King our loyal attachment to His Majesty's Throne and Person, and our united resolve to accomplish our part in the maintenance and upbuilding of His Majesty's Empire.

In saying farewell to Your Excellency and family, we cannot refrain from expressing our appreciation of the important and gracious part taken by Her Excellency the Countess Grey in the success which has marked the discharge of your high responsibilities and labours; the helpful, generous and sympathetic co-operation afforded by Her Excellency and by your daughters, Lady Sybil and Lady Evelyn in the performance of your public and social duties has won for them an enduring place in the affection and respect of the Canadian people.

In conclusion, we beg to assure Your Excellency that you will always have our warmest wishes for the future happiness of yourself and family.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I have very great pleasure in seconding this motion. The fitting terms of the resolution and the eloquent words of the Prime Minister in moving it leave little to be said by me. I join most heartily in the appreciation which the Prime Minister has expressed to the House of the work of their Excellencies Earl Grey and the Countess Grey and their charming daughters in all that concerns the welfare of Canada during the period in which Earl Grey has served this country and the empire as Governor General of Canada. To say that Canada has been fortunate in her Governor Generals, particularly during recent years, is so true that it needs not be emphasized. Earl Grey and his distinguished predecessor, Lord Minto, have presided over the destinies of Canada at a most interesting period, not only in the development of this country, but in the development of the empire as a whole. They have seen, in all the great dominions of the empire, wonderful material development. More than that, they have seen throughout the empire—in Canada, in Australia and in South Africa—a great advance towards the development of a closer co-operation between the great dominions of the empire and the mother country in all that concerns the welfare of the empire. The work and the activities of His Excellency in this country have been characterized by a broad and generous sympathy which has won the affection and the esteem of the people of Canada, and when he leaves these shores he will leave behind him an affection and an esteem in the hearts of the people of Canada which will be a monument to his memory more enduring than any other he could desire. A man of courage, of initiative, of imagination and of clear imperial vision, we recognized him when he came to the shores of Canada as a man than whom there was no truer imperialist throughout the empire. As he leaves the shores of Canada we recognize in him as true a Canadian as is to be found in this great Dominion. I may be permitted to say, in conclusion, that when he returns to the motherland he may bear with him from the people of Canada this message to His Majesty the King, that the free people of Canada are gravely conscious that there are great problems in respect of co-operation between the great dominions of the empire and the mother country which must in the early future present themselves for solution by the statesmen of the empire. I think he may bear with him this further message, that the people of Canada are not less gravely conscious of their responsibility in the solution of those problems and are perfectly willing, and indeed anxious, to accept every legitimate responsibility in connection therewith. The terms of the resolution and the words of the Prime Minister make it unnecessary that I should add anything further, except to say on behalf of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that I have the greatest possible pleasure in seconding the resolution which has been so appropriately and eloquently proposed by the Prime Minister.

Motion agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Borden:

That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this House has passed an Address to His Excellency the Governor General on the occasion of the approaching termination of His Excellency's official connection with this country, and requesting that their Honours unite with this House in the said Address.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. EDWARDS. Early in the session, I asked for some information in regard to drill halls and armouries in Canada. A part of my question was answered in due time by the Minister of Militia and Defence but the balance of the information which should have come from the Minister of Public Works has not been furnished.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume my hon. friend dropped the question. If he will send me a note I shall endeavour to get the information to-morrow.

Mr. EDWARDS. The minister will remember that I made a personal call on him some days ago.

Mr. U. WILSON. The Minister of Public Works promised me a list of furniture that had been sold from Rideau Hall and the prices paid. I have not yet got the list.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I judge that my hon. friend is engaged in an interesting examination in regard to furniture at Rideau Hall extending over a good many years and it will take some time to get the information. I did not understand that I was to get it immediately, but I will have it obtained as soon as possible.

Mr. U. WILSON. For how long ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend did not limit it particularly to any number of years. I presume I am to go back to the date of confederation.

ORDER DISCHARGED.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, No. 14,

House in committee to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient, in connection with Bill No. 95, now under consideration by this House, respecting the naval service of Canada, to provide for the establishment, under regulations in that behalf, to be made by the Governor General in Council, of pensions and gratuities for the permanent naval service; such pensions and gratuities not to be larger in amount or granted upon more favourable terms than the pensions and gratuities authorized under the Militia Act.

was discharged.

WAYS AND MEANS—TRADE RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Fielding to go into Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not intend, at this stage of the session, to make any extended remarks with regard to the matters that were brought to the attention of the House by the Finance Minister earlier in the session. The concessions which have been granted by the government as a result of negotiations with the government of the United States are not, of themselves, of great moment, although, of course, a certain importance is to be attached to tariff changes involving, I think, about $5,000,000 worth of business. I thoroughly agree that we should use every possible effort to maintain the best possible relations with the United States with respect to the tariff and all other matters, and I think that Canada is to be congratulated upon the fact that those now in authority in the United States of America evince the most friendly possible disposition towards this country.

The attitude of this government in November and December last was a very pronounced attitude indeed. I will not quote at length from the debates which then took place, but I may say that the position taken by the government at that time was substantially this: That the negotiation and acceptance of commercial treaties with other countries by Canada was a matter with which the United States, or the government of the United States, was in no wise concerned, and that, for this reason, it was not proper or prudent for the government to make any attempt whatever to discover what would be the action of the United States government under the Tariff Act of last year. Certain possible difficulties were pointed out by hon. members on this side of the House, but they were waved aside by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). We observe, in looking at the debate, that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) took ground on behalf of the government which, perhaps, was a little more definite than that taken by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. He said, as reported on page 210 of unrevised 'Hansard:'

> The United States, as I understand it, have always held that it is not to be considered a violation of the favoured-nation doctrine, if they considered themselves under it, when they choose to give to another nation certain favours for certain favours received. They have always taken that ground. In my judgment they will have to change their whole past procedure if they decide to penalize us because we have made a treaty with France in which we get advantage for advantage. They have their treaties. Would they ask from other nations, would they take away from other nations the liberty that they claim for themselves? They have a treaty with Cuba at the present time, I believe; they have had treaties that we did not participate in, a limited number, a treaty with Germany, and with France also. That has been their course all through. They have always taken that stand, and I see no reason why they should depart from that policy at the present time.

So far as I understand the attitude of the United States government in the past, the language that was used on that occasion by the Minister of Customs was thoroughly justified. Any hon. gentleman who is desirous of examining the attitude and record of the United States government with respect to such matters will find them very fully set forth in a volume I have here, House documents, volume 132, part 1, No. 551; Digest of International Law, vol. 5; 56th Congress, 2nd session, 1900-1. Beginning at page 257 of this volume, the whole subject is very elaborately dealt with, and at pages 272-3, I find the attitude and record of the United States government set out precisely as indicated by my hon. friend the Minister of Customs. Therefore, the position, so far as the United States government is concerned, is this: they have held, and, I assume, they still hold, that a favour granted for a favour received is not, per se, a discrimination. More than that, they have held, even under the most favoured-nation clause that a favour given for a favour received cannot be legitimately taken into consideration; in other words they hold that any country claiming concessions from the United States under the most favoured-nation clause must be prepared to give to the United States the same favours which are granted to the United States by the third country with which the United States negotiates a treaty. The principle is, favour for favour, and that principle has characterized the attitude of the United States throughout negotiations of this kind. Now, the Minister of Finance, in dealing with this question in this debate on the 30th of March, put the action of this government upon the ground of magnanimity. He said, as reported at page 6101 of unrevised 'Hansard:'—

> But there are victories that are dearly bought. If we had achieved such a triumph over the United States government as I have spoken of, while, for the moment, it might have been a cause for congratulation, yet it would not make for the future advantage of the relations between these two peoples.

My hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was a little more explicit as reported at page 6130. He said:—

> Sir, the answer we had to give to the American commissioners was easy for us. We have been requested to place upon the table the correspondence which embodied our answer to the question. Their was no correspondence on this point. The answer we had to give was known by the House even before we uttered it. The answer we gave the American commissioners was the same as we have given to parliament—that the relations between Canada and France as embodied in that treaty had nothing to do with the United States, and the United States had nothing to do with them, and could not be concerned in them.

That is a perfectly definite attitude, easy to be understood, and, in fact, it was the same attitude that was taken by this government in November and December last when this question was mooted in this House. But the Prime Minister went further. After entering into certain conjectures as to what would have been the attitude of the President of the United States if Canada had not made certain concessions, the Prime Minister continued as follows:—

Will anybody refuse to approve my words when I say that if we could avoid the possibility of such a result without the sacrifice of Canadian dignity or interest, it was our duty to take the course which would bring about that result? At any rate, I take the position in the name of the government and in the presence of the Canadian people, with regard to the United States and every other nation we will do everything possible to maintain in the case of one and all the best relations consistent with the maintenance of the dignity and the interest of Canada. It was represented to us that if we would make certain concessions we should avoid the possibility of any difficulty with our neighbours, we should avoid the possibility of having this maximum tariff enforced against us. Very well, our answer was easy. We were asked: Cannot you make it easy for us, cannot you make some concessions? We asked: What are these concessions? We were told a moment ago by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) that we had made a surrender. What have we surrendered? In this discussion with the United States representatives we were told: All difficulties will be overcome, all danger will be averted if you will give some concessions.

Now let us look for a moment at the tariff relations between Canada and the United States up to the time when these negotiations were entered into. We had made a treaty with France many years ago, we had made a further treaty with France which was ratified in the early part of the session. Both these treaties were in the nature of reciprocal concessions. Canada made certain concessions to France and France made certain concessions to Canada. According to the principle laid down by the Prime Minister, that was a matter purely and exclusively for the consideration of France on the one hand, and of Canada on the other hand, it was a matter with which the government of the United States was in no wise concerned.

Well, that is one consideration. The other consideration is concerned with the respective tariff conditions between the United States and Canada. How had trade developed between the United States and this country and were the duties of customs imposed by the United States against Canada higher or lower in the aggregate than the duties imposed by Canada against the United States? Let us look for a moment at the two tariffs, and you will find that on every important item of merchandise or agricultural products which might reasonably be expected to pass from the United States into Canada or from Canada into the United States, the duties imposed by the United States upon Canadian products under the Payne-Aldrich Act were from 25 per cent to 100 per cent higher than the duties imposed by the Canadian tariff upon the products of the United States entering Canada. There cannot be any doubt about that. I do not think any man in this House would for a moment dispute that. If it were seriously disputed I have here a comparative statement of the duties imposed by the United States on the one hand and by Canada on the other hand, and I would be prepared to lay it before the House in support of what I have just said. Let us look further at the figures of trade between the two countries from 1905 to 1909 :

Total imports from United States for five years, 1905-1909.

Dutiable	$ 448,253,118
Free	396,208,008
Total	$ 844,533,126
Duty collected	$ 111,511,493
Average rate of duty on dutiable goods	24·88
Average rate of duty on total imports	13·20
Exports to United States during same period	$ 392,303,187
Excess of imports over exports	452,229,939

So that the United States imported into Canada and Canada bought from the United States during that period of five years, no less than $452,229,939 in excess of the amount which the United States purchased from Canada during that same period. On referring to the items of the tariff, on referring to the relative duties in the two tariffs, on referring to the development of trade, certainly it does not seem that under the circumstances any reasonable man can find the slightest room for argument that there was any discrimination by Canada against the United States. If there is any discrimination at all in the tariff relations between the two countries, the discrimination is certainly not on the part of Canada. Now let us look at the trade returns in another respect, and to our imports from Great Britain during the same period:

Imports from Great Britain for five years, 1905-1909.

Dutiable..	$ 269,898,081
Free..	89,143,368
Total..	$ 359,041,449
Duty collected..	$ 66,653,091
Average rate of duty on dutiable goods..	24·70
Average rate of duty on total imports..	18·87
Exports to Great Britain during same period.. ..	$ 575,841,366
Excess of exports over imports..	216,799,917

So we observe that the rate on dutiable goods imported from Great Britain is practically the same, just a trifle lower than the rate on dutiable goods imported from the United States; while on the total imports from Great Britain the rate is about 50 per cent higher than on the total imports from the United States. Now look at our trade relations with Great Britain during the same period in another aspect. We exported to Great Britain during that five year period $575,841,355, and we imported from that country $359,041,449. So Great Britain purchased from us during that period no less an amount than $216,799,917 in excess of the amount which we purchased from Great Britain durthat same five year period. If any country in the world would have the right to complain of discrimination in regard to development and progress of trade, it seems to be that Great Britain would rather have that right than the United States, in view of the figures I have just read. Now look at our imports from and our exports to the United States during the past year. Our imports from the United States during the fiscal year, ending 31st March, 1909, were $170,066,178; our exports were $68,008,501, leaving an excess of $102,047,677 of goods purchased by Canada from the United States over goods purchased by the United States from Canada. During the same fiscal year our exports to Great Britain were $124,395,037; our imports from Great Britain were $70,555,895, showing an excess in goods purchased by Great Britain from us of $53,839,142 over goods purchased by us from Great Britain. In that computation gold-bearing quartz nuggets, dust and silver concentrates and ore are excluded, because these go to pay the balance of trade which exists between this country and the United States or Great Britain.

Now let us look for a moment at the Payne-Aldrich Bill of 1909, and let us consider what right the United States government would have to urge that the maximum rates to be found in the Payne-Aldrich Bill could legitimately be imposed on this country, having regard to the figures I have quoted, and having regard to any other condition which by any possibility might be brought into consideration of the whole matter. I will take section 2 of the Payne-Aldrich Bill, and I will consider what are the circumstances and conditions as set out in that Bill which could justify the United States government in imposing its maximum tariff against Canada. I will leave out the immaterial words and I will apply the various branches of this clause to the tariff relations between Canada and the United States. There are three branches of the section which are important for this consideration. In the first place, the United States would be justified, under the terms of this section, in imposing its maximum tariff against Canada if the government of Canada had imposed any terms or restrictions either in the way of tariff rates or provisions, trade or other regulations, charges, exactions, or in any other manner, directly or indirectly, upon the importation into or the sale in Canada of any agricultural, manufactured or other product of the United States which should unduly discriminate against the United States or the products thereof. That is the proposition, and I will ask any hon. gentleman in this House, having regard to that language, whether the United States could reasonably say that there was in the tariff conditions to which I have alluded any such discrimination as that which is embodied and referred to in the section from which I have just quoted. The second branch of section 2 is as follows. The maximum tariff could be imposed by the United States if Canada:

> Pays any export bounty or imposes any export duty or prohibition upon the exportation of any article to the United States which unduly discriminates against the United States or the products thereof.

Can any hon. gentleman in this House say that there was in the tariff of Canada, in the French treaty or in anything affecting the tariff conditions between the two countries any provision which could reasonably be held by the government of the United States to come within the condition set out in that branch of the section which I have just now quoted? Having read it over carefully and having given the best possible consideration to it, I must say that in so far as I am concerned, I cannot find anything that would have justified the United States in imposing its maximum tariff under that branch of section 2. The third branch is this. The maximum tariff could be imposed by the United States unless Canada:

> Accords to the agricultural, manufactured or other products of the United States treatment which is reciprocal and equivalent.

I venture to say that the treatment which we had accorded to the United States upon the statement of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Finance was in every respect reciprocal and equivalent. Why was it not equivalent? In so far as that is concerned, we do impose to-day upon the products of the United States entering Canada very much lower rates of duty than those to which the products of Canada entering the United States are subjected. The word 'reciprocal' may be quoted. Again I take my stand not only upon the attitude of the government in November and December last, but upon their attitude in March in this very debate. I also take my stand on the attitude of the government of the United States as set forth in their own congressional records with respect to their policy on such matters. The only possible argument which might be made on the part of the United States in justifying an attempt to impose the maximum tariff, would be the argument that there was a discrimination by reason of our having entered into the treaty with France which was confirmed at the commencement of this session. That could not justify such possible action by the United States if the attitude of this government were a correct one, and I have already quoted their words in that regard. The government of the United States would not be justified, having regard to their own action and to the principles upon which they had acted in such matters in the past. So that, so far as I am concerned, I am not convinced that the government of the United States were at all serious in suggesting to the government of Canada that the maximum tariff must be applied as against this country unless some concessions were made.

Now, I have said that I do not regard the concessions in themselves as of any very great moment. If it were merely a question of granting these concessions for the time being I would not have one word to say in criticism of the action of the government in that respect. Speaking merely of the amount and value of the concessions, I say that they are of no moment at all compared with the maintenance of good will and cordiality in trade and other relations between the two countries. But, let us look for a moment at the position in which the government find themselves to-day. Under the terms of the Payne-Aldrich Bill it seems to have been apprehended that the government of the United States would impose the maximum tariff unless Canada were prepared to make concessions. Well, the government did make concessions. What will be the position of this country in the future? I do not desire to use extravagant language in regard to what the outcome may be, but let us just consider one or two possibilities. How will it be possible at any time in the future to deal with these items in our tariff, the duty upon which has been lowered as the result of these negotiations, unless the government asks and obtains the consent of the government of the United States? The outcome of these negotiations seems to me to be practically this; the government of Canada have agreed with the government of the United States that it will not at any time in the future alter the duties of customs imposed upon those articles without the consent of the United States, unless it is prepared to have the United States instantly act against us by imposing the maximum tariff. Is there any reasonable or legitimate conclusions which can be drawn from the negotiations other than that which I have just stated? As a condition, in order to avoid the imposition of the maximum tariff, you have agreed to reduce certain enumerated items of our tariff. You have not agreed to that by a formal treaty, but you have agreed to it by negotiations resulting in an informal convention which may not in the future be disregarded any more lightly than a mere formal treaty or convention. This seems to be the practical result of it. So that, whenever the government of Canada proposes to deal with these items at any time in the future, it must have regard to its understanding with the United States, and it cannot lightly depart from the rates which are now fixed or imposed unless it first consults the United States government. But there is something further than that. I have referred only to the tariff items which have been reduced. The government of the United States has looked at our tariff as a whole. It has said, I assume, that its maximum tariff must be imposed under the terms of its statute unless Canada made certain concessions. These concessions have been made. I have said that these particular items of the tariff cannot in future be interfered with so as to alter or interfere with the understanding arrived at with the government of the United States. But farther than that, I say that the government has placed in the hands of the United States a very plausible argument that no item in our tariff can be interfered with in future without the consent of the government of the United States unless we are prepared to have that maximum tariff imposed. It has looked upon our tariff as a whole and has said: Grant us these concessions. How shall the government of this country deal with the tariff as a whole in the future unless it is prepared to invite from the government of the United States an expression of its wishes in that regard.

There is another illustration which I regard as being of an equally serious character with that to which I have already alluded. The government of this country has had complete freedom of action in dealing with other countries in trade matters. It was at liberty to make a treaty with France. That treaty did not involve any such condition as that which results from the negotiations with the United States. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance made that clear to us when the French treaty was being debated in this parliament. He said this treaty does not fetter us in any way in dealing with our tariff, we can raise our tariff and we can lower our tariff; the only thing this treaty requires at our hands, so far as France is concerned, is that the intermediate tariff so far as these items are concerned shall be granted to France at all times in the future. That in effect was the argument made. Suppose to-morrow we undertook to make a treaty with Germany or with Italy. The Minister of Finance has spoken of the possibility of our doing so. We may make with Germany a treaty somewhat on the same lines as the treaty with France. Will not the United States government the moment that treaty is concluded be in a position to come to the government of Canada and say: You admitted that the treaty with France involved a certain discrimination which would have justified the imposition of our maximum tariff unless you had made some corresponding concessions in your tariff and we likewise demand in respect to this treaty with Germany or with Italy that further concessions shall be granted to the United States. The same reason and just as legitimate grounds could be advanced as those which were urged by the government of the United States in the negotiations which have just taken place. I cannot see any distinction between the two cases. If it was a proper and legitimate argument for the government of the United States to say this treaty with France involved a certain discrimination against the United States, which must be compensated for by certain concessions in your tariff, equally the government of the United States can say, when we make a treaty with Germany or Italy, this treaty involves certain concessions, granted, it is true, for corresponding concessions, but it does involve certain concessions to Germany and Italy which we regard as a discrimination against us just as we regarded the French treaty as a discrimination against us, and therefore we invite you to make further concessions to us in such items of your tariff as may be agreed upon. If that is not the result of the situation to which the government has brought this country by its action, then I am absolutely unable to understand what is the nature of that situation, or in what respect the government have committed the country.

Now, one word more. I have spoken very briefly, and I do not know that I have made my meaning absolutely clear to my hon. friends on the treasury benches or to the House, but there is one other observation which I desire to make in concluding my remarks. It appears by the correspondence which has been brought down, that negotiations are about to be carried on between the government of this country and the government of the United States looking to the revision of the tariff in both countries with a view to the extension of trade between the two countries. As I have already said, no one is more desirous than I am for good relations respecting trade and all other matters between this country or the empire as a whole and the United States of America. But we have other considerations. We have the consideration of Canada and of Canada's relations to the empire as a whole. I am one who believes that the British empire is not very well organized. It is more a disorganization than an organization to-day, having regard to the utter absence of any effective co-operation up to the present time in trade, and having regard also to the lack of organization up to the present time, or almost up to the present time, in matters of defence. Now, I believe it to be the desire of every man in this country who has considered this subject with any attention that we may at some time in the future, and I hope in the not too distant future, bring about a system of mutual trade preferences within the empire, and I would say to the gentlemen upon the treasury benches that any negotiations which they enter into with the United States ought to be subject to that consideration above all.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And we ought not to place ourselves by such negotiations in any position which would hamper our future fiscal action with regard to any country in the world. Especially we ought not to enter into any such negotiations as will prevent the consummation of that great ideal which Mr. Chamberlain presented to the people of the British Isles and to the people of the empire some few years ago, and which I hope may have its consummation and realization before many years are passed. I think it would be a fatal mistake for the government of this country, whatever party might be in power, to embark upon any such negotiations as would hamper or prevent the consummation of that great ideal. I desire as much as any man may desire the extension of the trade of this country, but I desire also the maintenance of our own fiscal autonomy, the maintenance of our own industries in this country, agricultural, industrial, and of every other description. I desire last, but not least, that the fiscal freedom of this country shall be so maintained that Canada shall be at liberty at all times in the future to enter into the great scheme of mutual trade preferences between the mother country and all the dominions of the empire by which the whole empire will be bound together not only by ties of sentiment, but by ties of interest and of trade to the great good, not only of the mother country, but to the great good of every dominion of the empire and to the enormous advantage of this great Dominion of ours.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I will endeavour to take a very few minutes in making a few remarks upon the subject that is before us. At the outset I would say that I regret the position that has been taken by the leader of the opposition and I regret his utterances with reference to the negotiations that took place between the United States and Canada to their effect. I will not argue the question with him. I content myself with saying that the fiscal autonomy of Canada remains with Canada unabbreviated in any direction by any negotiations that have taken place. There is no danger of Canada's hands being tied unless there was a government in Canada which sympathized with his views. That might be the danger but there is not at present that government in power. Now what are the facts with reference to this case. Let us just get down to the facts and then we will understand the situation, and the leader of the opposition seems to take the same position as other speakers that President Taft, President of the United States, had the power to make a tariff which is recited in so many figures with 25 per cent plus added and that any negotiations that we had were with a view not of having Mr. Taft enact this 25 per cent but of his being allowed to take it off. The United States Congress made the law. President Taft did not make the law. President Taft could not make the law, and the law to-day in the United States is this: that they have a schedule commonly called their minimum tariff with 25 per cent ad valorem added. That is the tariff of the United States to-day. The power that President Taft was entrusted with was that of looking over the tariff of other nations and if he in his judgment determined that the relations between a particular country and the United States were favourable then he had the power to declare that the 25 per cent should be deducted from any imports from that country. President Taft did not make the law; the congress made it. The power in President Taft's hands was not to put on the maximum tariff; that is on to-day. The power put into his hands was under certain circumstances to reduce the tariff by 25 per cent ad valorem. They recognized that the tariff imposed by congress involved a consideration of the trade relations between the United States and the other nations of the world, Canada included. I am not arguing the question. I am not disposed to disagree with the leader of the opposition that Canada has certainly greater freedom and a lower tariff than the United States. That is not the question. The leader of the opposition is not to determine the question whether Canada shall come under the maximum tariff or not. That was a question for the President of the United States to determine, and the President of the United States said that he saw that there was discrimination, that we had in some way given to some other nations more than we had given to them; and therefore he felt that he would have to have negotiations with Canada just as he had with France, Germany and other countries. I need not detail the circumstances of what took place. You know how parties came from the United States authorized to have a conference with this government; you know how that conference resulted; you know how President Taft solicited an interview with the Finance Minister. You know how he went to the United States and discussed this question with the President. I need not tell you the position the Finance Minister took nor the position the President took. The President ultimately suggested that if certain concessions were made in the Canadian tariff, the United States in return would grant to Canada the concessions of her minmum tariff. The concessions made by the Minister of Finance are now before us for consideration. What are they? What is their effect? They affect articles imported from the United States to the value of $4,814,293 on which the revenue under the proposed tariff amounts to $927,861.94. The estimated reduction in the duties on these articles amounts to $192,814.03. This is the amount of the concessions asked by the United States and granted by the Minister of Finance of Canada. The question has been asked: What concessions do you get in return for that? You have given away something; what do you get? Why, what a question that is to ask! Canada sent into the United States in 1909, $43,072,010 worth of dutiable goods, on which we get a 25 per cent reduction amounting to $10,768,000 in return for the concession by Canada to the United States of a reduction of $192,814.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a pity the surtax had not been 50 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON. If the surtax had been 50 per cent and the imports had been the same, there would have been so much more reduction.

Mr. BRODER. You do not pretend to say that the shipper pays the duty?

Mr. PATERSON. Not always. Will the hon. gentleman say that the importer or the consumer always pays the duty? The hon. gentleman knows my view about the payment of the taxation—that in some cases it is paid by the importer and in some cases it is divided. But the net result of this transaction is that there is a reduction proposed in our tariff to the United States amounting to $192,814 and in return we get from the United States a reduction in their tariff amounting to $10,768,000. If any one can cite an instance in the history of diplomacy between nations, where one nation conceded so little and gained so much, I will yield the floor to him.

Mr. BRISTOL. Does the hon. gentleman consider that we could at the present time raise the duty on manufactured and other goods coming in from the United States other than the articles that have been dealt with under this concession?

Mr. PATERSON. Certainly. I understand that Canada is in a position to do what she chooses.

Mr. BRISTOL. Without any risk of having the United States tariff changed?

Mr. PATERSON. They can judge for themselves. We do what we like and the United States will do what they like.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. One suggestion occurs to me in connection with this matter, and I regard it as a most important point. The United States is attempting to assert a supremacy on this continent. It has taken under its control all the South American republics and is more or less dictating their policy, and is trying to organize them into a great commercial and other union of America. It would like to include the Dominion of Canada in that policy, and it will steadily try in some way to assert supremacy over the tariff arrangements of Canada.

President Taft, whose name has been mentioned to-day in a speech at Buffalo on Saturday night, used the term 'commercial union with Canada,' saying that it was now the policy of his government to enter upon negotiations that would look to commercial union with Canada. Commercial union with the United States means to the Canadian people, as we found out years ago, some kind of control of the Canadian tariff by the government and the Congress of the United States. Canadians want nothing of that kind nor do they want any negotiations with the United States which will end in commercial union, or in any disruption or dislocation of Canada's present tariff policy, which is based on what? Canada's policy to-day is a national policy for Canada, and it is based on east and west lines. Our policy and our tariff has in view that in some way our object must be to make our trade move east and west. We have built all our railroads to make our trade move east and west. We have entered into or have in view an imperial trade policy which is also based on lines of latitude, east and west lines, and the object of the United States to-day is to divert that movement and to have our trade move north and south. If we enter into negotiations with the United States, it will be to in some way change those trade lines which we have established and intend to perfect. So I regard it as a matter of the highest moment that we maintain in the fullest sense of the term our tariff independence, our fiscal independence, and that we have few if any negotiations with them on the lines of what the president said yesterday would end in commercial union. We want commercial independence in Canada, and a policy that in some way will make trade move east and west instead of north and south. The American nation sees to-day that a large portion of their population has started to move north into Canada. They would not object greatly to that if they could get a trade policy that would make trade move north and south. They have that in view, and I trust the government will be very careful in regard to any negotiations they may enter into with the United States for commercial union, because the people of Canada will have nothing of that. We want our own fiscal independence asserted at all times, and never to be in the position of the South American republics, that in some way our policy may be dominated by the United States. The Secretary of State of the United States to-day is being lauded for the letter that he wrote to the government of Nicaragua not long ago. It was the most dictatorial piece of diplomacy I have ever seen in connection with the history of America. That small republic was lectured, told what it ought to do and was threatened and bullied in every way. That same thing will be attempted in regard to Canada if they think they can do it. They are lecturing all the republics to the south, and would like to dictate to us as to our policy, and they do wish to anticipate and to side-track if they possibly can what I call imperial trade relations between the mother country and the various dominions that make up the empire. They have asserted what they call the Monroe doctrine in regard to the whole of this continent. They would like to extend that Monroe doctrine, whatever it is, for it is difficult to define, to trade matters as well, and, therefore, again I say our policy ought to be framed and directed to this end of constantly maintaining our fiscal independence, to be very careful in regard to any relations that would end in anything like commercial union, because, as I said, the people of Canada will not tolerate anything of the kind, and the whole future of Canada and her relations with the empire depend upon trade lines that run east and west, and not trade lines on this continent that run north and south. If we assert that principle Canada will continue to grow, the national policy will be vindicated and this country will be united. The moment you cause the trade lines to run north and south, the dismembership of Canada has begun.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hoped that the Minister of Finance would give some information as to who selected the special items which are found in this resolution for negotiations between this country and the United States. Were these special items suggested by President Taft or those acting with him or were they suggested by the Canadian government? I think the committee should be informed as to why these particular items were selected above all others to be dealt with. I am not complaining, as has been well said by the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) of the changes proposed, I shall not take exception to more than one or two of them. The changes, it is true, are slight. They may be important to some industries with which I am not familiar, but I have had no representations in regard to any except one, and therefore I do not propose to discuss them. Going back to 1895, before the present government came into power, hon. gentlemen opposite were fond of proclaiming that they were the low tariff party. Well, at last, after the lapse of fourteen or fifteen years, we find them proposing a reduction in the tariff, the first substantial reduction they have ever proposed. Their first step in relation to the tariff, after coming into power, was to increase the tariff very largely and on many items. But now we actually have a reduction proposed. And I am free to say that, after all the increases in the tariff that have been made time and again by the present government, I believe that these slight concessions will be welcomed, with the exception of one or two cases.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

604. Dongola, cordovan, calf, sheep, lamb, kid or goat, kangaroo, alligator, and all leather dressed, waxed, glazed, or further finished than tanned, n.o.p., harness leather, and chamois skin reduced from 17½ per cent to 15 per cent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice that harness leather is included in this item. Only three years ago the government increased the duty on harness leather from 15 to 17½ per cent. I am not authorized by any one to make any complaint with reference to this item, but I draw the attention of the government to something that I consider peculiar in this matter. Only three years ago it was determined that the proper duty on harness leather should be 17½ per cent. During those three years, I have no doubt that men engaged in the production of harness leather have largely increased their plant, and gone to a considerable expense with a view to larger production. I know that is the case in the village in which I live, where a large harness leather industry is carried on. I have had no communication from any one, but I apprehend that a good deal of feeling will be created when those people learn that the government, without notice, has again reduced the duty from 17½ to 15 per cent. I am not complaining about the reduction of duty, but in a special case like this where the duty was increased only three years ago, and where men were encouraged to increase their business with the expectation of a wider market for their output, it seems to be rather a hardship that they should, without notice, be called upon to carry on their operations in a market that is very much limited. I do not know the extent of the imports of harness leather into this country, but I remember a tanner in my riding telling me years ago with regard to sole leather, that if the American tanners were to throw into Canada two per cent of their output it would take up the entire market of the Canadian people for sole leather. If that should be the case, or anything approximating to it, with harness leather, it might be a very serious matter.

711. All goods not enumerated in this schedule as subject to any other rate of duty, and not otherwise declared free of duty, and not being goods the importation whereof is by law prohibited, 20 per cent to 17½ per cent.

Provided that duty shall not be deemed to be provided for by this item upon dutiable goods mentioned as 'n.o.p.' in any preceding tariff item.

Provided further that when the component material of chief value in any non-enumerated article consists of dutiable material enumerated in this schedule as bearing a higher rate of duty than is specified in this tariff item, such non-enumerated article shall be subject to the highest duty which would be chargeable thereon if it were composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value, such 'component material of chief value' being that component material which shall exceed in value any other single component material in its condition as found in the article.

Mr. HENDERSON. With reference to this first clause, under the existing rate of duty, that is under our tariff schedules, the duty is 20 per cent, but in future it will be 17½ per cent. Now I am not complaining so much about the reduction of duty as about the classification of some items contained in 711. Where an item is rated in our tariff under the general term, I see no reason why the government should change the rate in order to bring it under this item. To make my case clear, I refer to the article of lime which is named in a paper which the government has laid before us, stating the value of the articles entered under the tariff item 711: 'All goods enumerated in the tariff schedule in the general tariff, entered for consumption in Canada during the year ending 31st March, 1909.' Amongst those articles is mentioned the article of quick lime, hydrated lime, lime practically of any kind produced in this country. Now in our tariff we have an item 'manufacturers of stone, n.o.p.' I do not think it requires much thought to arrive at the conclusion that lime is a manufacture of stone. To my mind it is clearly such, as it is produced by heat being applied to the lime stone; it is the result of an industrial process brought about by the application of heat to convert the stone into lime. It is clearly a manufacture of stone, and therefore should not be placed among those items in article 711 of our tariff, or amongst the unenumerated items. The difference is this: Under the unenumerated articles the duty henceforth will only be 17½ per cent; treated as a manufacture of stone, as it ought to be treated, and where parliament declared it should be treated, it would be 30 per cent, because parliament passed a law placing manufacturers of stone not otherwise provided for, under a rate of 30 per cent duty. That is clearly to my mind where lime ought to be classified; it is a manufacture of stone, and does not require to be put in the unenumerated list. You can only classify in this unenumerated list an article which is not covered in any other way by the tariff. Clearly lime is covered by our tariff specifically, under the item of manufacturers of stone, n.o.p. What I ask the government to do is to change the classification of this article, and put it where it ought to be, under the item of manufacturers of stone, and not keep it as an article unenumerated in the tariff at all. Now this is an industry in which considerable capital is invested, it is an important industry all over the country. I know whereof I speak in western Ontario, and something of it in the great west. A considerable amount of money is invested in the production of this article, it employs a considerable amount of labour. It consumes a large amount of fuel which probably would not be required for almost any other purpose, furnace wood, which is usually wood of an inferior quality. In the burning of lime a large amount of coal is used. That coal is imported from the United States. Those who are engaged in the industry have to pay 53 cents a ton duty on their coal, and I think it hardly fair, on an article where such a high duty has to be paid on the raw material, or what is necessary to produce this article, that we should now reduce the duty from where it has been for a great many years. I cannot conceive what argument could be advanced for putting this article under item 711. I want to impress upon the committee that lime is simply a manufacture of stone, and manufacturers of stone are n.o.p., 30 per cent under the tariff, and there lime ought to be classified.

If it is classified in that way, as it ought to be, it would not be subjected to a reduction such as is going to be made under this new American treaty. I do not think it would interfere with the government's arrangement with the United States. All that the government is bound to give are the articles enumerated in item 711, but the United States cannot claim the right to send into this country at the 17½ per cent rate any item that is enumerated in our tariff schedules under any other heading. I think that is quite clear. The Minister of Finance would have no difficulty in relieving himself of any obligation to the American government with regard to this matter if he would simply change the classification. The only argument that I have heard advanced to justify this article being put on the unenumerated list is that lime is a chemical. You may call it a chemical, or an acid, or anything you like, but you cannot get away from the fact that it is a manufacture of stone, and manufactures of stone not otherwise provided for are on the 30 per cent list and not in item 711 at all. I care not whether those who have the interpretation of our tariff call it a chemical or not; if it is a chemical it is still a manufacture of stone, and would be properly rated in that way. You might as well call iron and steel chemicals because they are produced by means of heat from ore, but notwithstanding that fact no one hesitates to place such articles in our tariff schedules. Lime ought to be properly enumerated, but as it is not definitely enumerated under a name, we must fall back upon the general name under which it is enumerated as a manufacture of stone. I appeal to the government to see that those who are engaged in this industry do not suffer by means of this new tariff. Ordinary quick lime may adapt itself to the requirements of the tariff more readily, although this change might handicap the industry a great deal coming on the producer suddenly. But there is a class of lime known as hydrated lime, or hard wall plaster, which is more expensive in its production and is being called for very extensively. Recently in the city of Guelph a plant has been put in at a cost of $8,000 for the manufacture of hard wall plaster that can be shipped all over the country after it has gone through that process, and kept for six or ten months without deteriorating, in this respect being unlike ordinary quick lime, which would spoil in warm weather in four or five days or a week. Plasterers in the large cities during the winter season demand it, because it is easier for them to work it than the ordinary quick lime in the cold weather. A very considerable quantity of this is being imported into this country at the present time. The manufacture of hydrated lime is a comparatively new thing in this country, and, therefore, I think it is well that we should guard the industry as much as we possibly can. I notice that up to December 31, 1910, there were imported into Montreal of this product, 10,856 barrels of a value of $4,488, on which there was duty paid of $885.65. There were imported into Toronto, 14,686 barrels, at a cost of $8,060, paying a duty of $1,612. This, as I have said, is a comparatively new thing, it is a growing import, and I do not doubt that next year you will find the import of this article very much increased to the detriment of a new industry which has been established at a very considerable expense and which is yet simply in its initial stage. I appeal to the government, more especially on the article of hydrated lime, to see that it is properly classified as a manufacture of stone, and not put in the enumerated list in order that the duty will not be reduced from 30 per cent to 17½ per cent. It may be said that the import of lime is not very great. The importation of lime into Canada last year was 191,572 barrels, of a value of $116,946. So we see that the importation is very considerable, and it is growing year by year. Now, I make this appeal. I leave it to the members of the government to see that there is a new classification of this article before the matter is finally ratified, and that it is put into its proper place as a manufacture of stone and not left on the unenumerated list. There are many counties throughout the province of Ontario particularly that are interested in this question, for instance, the counties of Wellington, South Oxford, South Perth, represented by the chairman of this committee, Mr. McIntyre, and Renfrew; while the county that I represent perhaps produces more of that article than any other county in the province. Consequently, I feel somewhat keenly on the subject. I hope the interests of these people may not be jeopardized. I hope their interests may be guarded as well as they have been before, and that the government will not allow American lime to invade the country to a larger extent and at a lower rate of duty. I trust that the government will take a fair view of this matter and do what is necessary to comply with my request.

Mr. FIELDING. The point raised by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) has no particular reference to this Bill, although it affords him an opportunity of calling attention to what he deems to be an error. It is a question of the interpretation of an item of the tariff. Whether or not that interpretation is correct is a fair matter for consideration. The Board of Customs is the body authorized to rule as to the meaning of the tariff, and it has in the past held that lime ought to come within the list of unenumerated items. If that is a mistake, I am sure that I will be very glad to have my hon. friend call attention to it. I cannot offer any opinion as to what is the proper classification of this article. The Board of Customs, I am quite sure, will be glad to have any observations that my hon. friend may submit to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought this was a very proper time to bring this matter to the attention of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not objecting. My hon. friend's point would still seem to be quite in order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I took this opportunity, as I did not know that I would have any other. I repeat again that parliament has declared that stone not otherwise provided for is dutiable at 30 per cent under our tariff, and by what course of reasoning can any body of men occupying the official position that has been designated—the Board of Customs—take that article, which is a manufacture of stone, and place it in another item and say that it is not enumerated? I think that the government is responsible for this. It has been so classified for forty years. Possibly the Board of Customs is simply following what is the old practice.

Mr. FIELDING. Very likely.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the minister will go back for fifty or sixty years, I can show him that lime was on the enumerated list up to 1859. You will find lime on the enumerated list before confederation.

Mr. FIELDING. Where?

Mr. HENDERSON. In the Customs Act.

Mr. FIELDING. There was none before confederation.

Mr. HENDERSON. There was between the provinces of British North America.

Mr. FIELDING. They had their different tariffs.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am speaking of the tariff of Upper and Lower Canada. That tariff had the item lime which was then in the unenumerated list. Now, why should it be changed? If it was a proper thing then it should be a proper thing now.

The whole matter was possibly brought about as a result of an accident. Possibly it had been left out of the tariff and because it was not found in the tariff it was treated as an unenumerated article and continued in that way. I submit to the minister that it is a proper matter to bring before the Governor in Council in order to have what I consider to be an error rectified and in order to do justice to an industry which is of a very considerable importance in this country.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 233) to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time

DRY-DOCK SUBSIDIES.

Bill (No. 229) to encourage the construction of dry-docks—Mr. Fielding—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 4,

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to ask the minister what those statutes are that are referred to in this section? It refers to the works and property of any existing dry-dock company whose dock has been constructed under the provision of certain statutes. What are these statutes?

Mr. FIELDING. We have had for many years Acts on the statute-book of a general character authorizing the construction of dry-docks and providing certain subsidies for them. These have been changed from time to time to meet the changed conditions of the country. The law as it stands to-day authorizes the government to grant a subsidy of 3 per cent per annum for 20 years for the construction of a dry-dock with a maximum cost of one and a half million dollars and this would mean that any dock constructed under the terms of these Acts might be enlarged under the provisions of the new law.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do the latter statutes amend the former?

Mr. FIELDING. I think in each case the former Act was repealed and the new Act substituted.

Mr. LANCASTER. As to subsection 3, is not this a rather harsh regulation that the Governor in Council shall fix the amount that is to be paid for these works that are to be confiscated or expropriated? The subsection states that the value of the works and property shall be fixed and determined by the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Minister of Public Works based upon a report of the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works before the agreement for construction is entered into. Is it intended that the expropriation shall be arbitrarily determined by the Governor in Council without the company who owns the property having an opportunity to appeal to an independent tribunal like the Exchequer Court or any other institution to settle the dispute. The information of the Governor in Council might in his belief be correct and yet greatly unfair to the people who own these dry-docks.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend has a misconception of this clause. It does not contemplate expropriation of any company's property. This is to enable a company voluntarily to come and make a proposal to the government to enlarge its dock. It is not contemplated that the government or anybody else shall expropriate the property. If they do not want the dock enlarged things will remain as they are. It will be an entirely voluntary matter to be adjusted between the company and the government.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is a sort of bonus on a percentage basis?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the subsidy is on the basis of 3½ per cent for 35 years on a first-class dock, 3½ per cent for 25 years on a second-class dock, and 3 per cent for 20 years on the smaller docks.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is merely for the purpose of computing the value of the property?

Mr. FIELDING. It is for the purpose of determining the value of the old work. Let us take the case of a dock that has been built for some years and is now inadequate for the larger vessels. If the company desires to enlarge that dock it may have the benefit of the largest subsidy for the longer term, but we will have to fix the value of the old work in determining the total cost That is the purpose of that clause.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

Bill (No. 231) respecting bounties on iron and steel made in Canada—Mr. Fielding—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. minister explain this Bill?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend was not here last evening when I explained that the payment of most of the bounties on iron and steel will expire on the 31st of December next by the effluxion of time, but there is no fixed time for the termination of the bounty on steel rods used in the manufacture of wire in Canada, and we thought it well to introduce a Bill fixing the date. As there has been no previous notice, we fix the time at six months later than the date at which the other bounties expire, that is, the 30th of June, 1911, when these bounties on steel rods shall cease, provided that we may continue to make payment on any rods made prior to that date.

Mr. SPROULE. Will that be the end of the bounties?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, except one on electric smelting, which expires in a year or two later; but to the best of my knowledge, that has never been used at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. It seems very strange that the Finance Minister should be introducing such important Bills at this late stage of the session, when we have no opportunity of going into them at all. A Bill was introduced here to-day and put through that had not even been printed.

Mr. FIELDING. The Bill is a mere reproduction of resolutions which have been on the order paper for a considerable time.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then there is the Combines Bill, as well as a number of others. We have been here for six months, but the government has not brought these Bills before us until the last four or five days. In another session I hope they will bring their Bills forward at an earlier stage of the session. This is not the first time we have had this played on us.

Mr. FIELDING. The only suggestion I can offer is that on some of those occasions when hon. gentlemen feel disposed to take up a day on some matter which we in our erroneous judgment do not consider important, we take time instead for the consideration of government Bills. These Bills have been on the order paper for some time, and if they have not been taken up, it has been because the time has been otherwise occupied—whether wisely or not is a matter of which hon. members can judge.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. gentleman brings up estimates in the early stages of the session and leaves these important Bills to the last. If these Bills had been fully discussed, they would probably be in better shape than they are now. Does the hon. minister contend that the Combines Bill or the Insurance Bill should be left till within three or four days of the end of the session? I, for one, do not think so. He is now trying to justify that action.

Mr. FIELDING. How would my hon. friend keep the balance? There are only a certain number of hours in the day. There has not been a day from the beginning of the session that the order paper has not been full, not a day that the government had not its business ready and pressing, and sometimes, when we wanted to work a little later, hon. gentlemen opposite said we had done a good day's work and should adjourn. This has been a busy, active session, and the government has at all times been ready to push forward its business. As to distinguishing between one item and another, my hon. friend speaks of the estimates. We will be told by and by that estimates are going through in the last hours of the session. It is hard to judge which is the most important; they are all important and we are trying to press them forward.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is it the intention of the government to add a duty to take the place of the bounties that are removed?

Mr. FIELDING. We certainly have no such intention at present; what may come in the future I cannot say. The future will have to take care of itself on that point.

On the preamble,

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does the minister think that the retirement of these bounties will interfere with the building of steel ships in Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not anticipate that the abolition of bounties will change the fact that steel will be produced in Canada, and if we are capable of producing it for ship-building purposes no doubt those ships will be built. I do not think the stopping of bounties would prevent the use of our steel in ship-building. Some gentlemen in the trade have said that if the bounties are abolished they will set forth claims for something substantial in the way of duty. They will probably do so, but what will be the result is not for me to say at present.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand the Finance Minister, the vessels for the navy are to be built in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. We hope so.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think the Prime Minister practically stated that would be done. If that policy is to be followed for the navy, will the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister agree that vessels for the fisheries will also be built in Canada? Last year a steamer costing $300,000 was purchased that could have been built at Toronto or Collingwood. But the Finance Minister refused to have it built in Canada because it would cost $15,000 more. If the policy of having ships built in Canada is to be followed for the navy all ships should be built here in order to build up Canadian industries.

Mr. FIELDING. There should be one policy for both. I would certainly prefer to have them all built in Canada, and would willingly pay a moderate increase in price to secure that. Just where the line is to be drawn is difficult to say. If the difference were only slight, personally, I would prefer to see them built in Canada. To some extent we might make up the difference by the duty we would collect on materials imported into Canada for shipbuilding, although much would be imported free. Speaking generally, if our ships can be built in Canada at a moderate advance over the English price, I would be willing to pay a moderate advance, but in view of the fact that we are going to advertise for tenders, I would rather not fix a percentage where the line should be drawn.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Prime Minister has said he is willing to build in Canada even although the vessels cost 33⅓ per cent more.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember that.

Mr. J. D. REID. At least a certain percentage. If the government are willing to pay 10 per cent or 15 per cent more for a vessel built in Canada, they would not do so in the past. On a vessel costing $300,000, the difference of $15,000 would be only 5 per cent, but the Finance Minister was not willing to have that vessel built in Canada at an increased cost of 5 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend is in error.

Mr. J. D. REID. I can turn up the 'Hansard': I remember the discussion well. By having these vessels built in Canada, Canadian young men in Collingwood and Toronto who have grown up and learned their trade in Canada would be getting employment.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not recollect the case of which my hon. friend speaks. I certainly would not claim that a difference of 5 per cent would justify us in rejecting the Canadian building. I would personally be willing to pay more than 5 per cent, although I would not subscribe to the doctrine that these ships, naval or any other, shall be built in Canada at any cost. That would be a dangerous position to take. But I do say that if they can be built—I am not distinguishing between naval vessels and any other vessels—any vessel that Canada requires for any branch of her public service, if it can be built in Canada at a moderate advance on the British cost, I would cordially support the building of it in Canada.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understood that the Prime Minister stated the other evening that on a vessel costing $180,000 in Canada, the English tender was only about $4,000 less or, $175,000. Therefore for the saving only two and a half per cent on the cost, the Prime Minister sent that tender over to the old country. Now there have been a great many vessels built in England for these departments, and I think that when the Prime Minister promised to build them in Canada he should do so. The Prime Minister has promised this House that the vessels will be built in Canada if the cost is at all within reason. I might give instances where the difference has been five per cent. So far as I am concerned if it were five per cent, or even ten per cent, let them be built in Canada; because we have intelligent young Canadians, and skillful mechanics just as well qualified to build vessels as they are in England. I hope that when the tenders show a difference not greater than five per cent, or even ten per cent the Prime Minister will give the work to our Canadians, and they will build boats just as good as they can be built any where else.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to plead guilty. This government is altogether too economical, and we will try not to do it again.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not blame the Prime Minister so much for it, but I stated in this House the other night that there was a gentleman in Montreal that this government had sent to England to negotiate for these vessels. There was no chance of his getting a rake-off if they were built in Canada, whereas, by getting them built in England, or buying them in England, he could get a good commission.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The Finance Minister is giving wide notice of the abolition of these bounties. To my mind I think it is a vicious principle. He refuses to make any statement that a duty will take the place of the bounty. The result will be that all improvements in the way of enlargement of steel works will be halted until this decision is arrived at by the government. I understand that large improvements were contemplated by several companies, but the statement now made that the bounties will be withdrawn, coupled with the statement that there is no hope of any duty being placed on steel to take the place of those bounties, will work adversely against the companies, and will depress their securities and prevent them from getting the necessary capital to carry on their proposed enlargements. I think it would have been much better if the notice as to these bounties was delayed until the proper time came, then a statement whether there was going to be a duty to take the place of the bounties, would dovetail into the change, and would not seriously affect the companies.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am much interested in the question of bounties on the steel industry which is carried on so extensively in the province from which I come. But I apprehend that my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Currie) will hardly expect the Finance Minister to make an announcement in advance what action he will take with regard to items in the tariff. I think the best guarantee of the interest of this government in the steel industry is the success which has attended the policy of the government in dealing with it in the past. I would like to say to the government that I trust when the time comes to give the notice for the final suspension of these bounties, the government will take into consideration the absolute necessity of readjusting the tariff so that this great industry, which has made such strides in the past, may be further encouraged in the future.

Mr. CONMEE. On previous occasions I have called attention to the necessity of encouraging this industry. I still hold the same view, but I believe the time has come when perhaps the government would be justified in turning its attention more strongly to the manufacture of iron and steel from Canadian ore, than from foreign ore, all our furnaces, in Ontario, at all events, are using foreign ore. Ninety per cent, perhaps, or more, of the iron and steel produced to-day is produced from foreign ore. There was a time in the history of our country when we did not have smelters and furnaces to produce pig metal or steel, that time has to a large extent passed away. We have to-day a number of furnaces and steel works, we also have the iron ore. It can be no longer argued that we do not possess the necessary iron ore deposits to produce the metals which these furnaces are producing to-day. I do not want them to be crippled. I think fair warning ought to be given that the time must come in the near future when they must depend upon Canadian ore instead of foreign ore. That would give a great impetus to mining in this country. If the government can stipulate in its aid to railways that the rails, for instance, shall be manufactured in Canada, they could go a step further and stipulate that they shall not only be manufactured in Canada, but manufactured from Canadian ore. That would give a still greater impetus to mining in this country. That was the course followed in the United States when they gave a large sum of money towards the construction of the Union Pacific railway. Mining was then in its infancy in that country, and they stipulated, not only that the rails should be manufactured in that country, but manufactured from American ore, and I think that has a great deal to do with the development of the iron and steel industry in the United States. A similar policy would greatly assist us, and I hope in any revision of the tariff the government will keep that principle in view, and that at as early a day as possible manufacturers will be given to understand that they must look for the supply of their furnaces to Canadian mined ore.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

Bill (No. 230) respecting the city of Ottawa—Mr. Fielding—was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FIELDING. This measure was also very fully discussed on the resolutions yesterday. It was a proposal to extend the sum we are giving to the Ottawa Improvement Commission. They are now receiving $60,000 per annum. It is proposed by this arrangement to increase the grant to $100,000, and also to pay into the city treasury $15,000 per annum for ten years for fire protection and water service.

Mr. SPROULE. In addition?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the amount paid to the commission will be $40,000 in addition to what is already being paid, and $15,000 into the city treasury. There will be $100,000 to the Ottawa Improvement Commission.

Mr. SPROULE. And how about the $100,000 for the purchase of the hotel site?

Mr. FIELDING. That goes to the Ottawa Improvement Commission.

Mr. U. WILSON. Has the government always had to pay for water and fire protection?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and no. Prior to making the arrangement under which the Ottawa Improvement Commission was established, the Dominion paid $15,000 into the city treasury for fire protection and water. When the commission was constituted, we took that $15,000 and turned it over to the commission and added $45,000, making a total of $60,000. We propose, under these resolutions, to pay $100,000 to the commission and $15,000 direct to the city treasury for fire protection and water.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Has it ever struck the Finance Minister that, in carrying out these improvements in Ottawa, in connection with the commission, the government, if it has not the foresight to acquire lands before improvements are made, is supplying money to put up the price of real estate which the government itself must subsequently buy? I think that, in connection with this matter, the government ought to have a well defined policy for acquiring any additional lands needed for governmental purposes, and the sooner they do it the more economically it can be done.

Mr. FIELDING. I believe that thought was expressed years ago in the days of Sir John Macdonald, but I am told that Sir John expressed the opinion that it was not the business of the government to traffic in real estate, that if they wanted real estate for public purposes, they ought to buy it at the current rates. Perhaps that is too broad a statement, but we certainly do not want to buy a lot of property and have it lying idle.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) does not accept that statement?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not say we should not look ahead at all, but I say we should not buy a lot of property merely to have it lie idle. We should look ahead, but not too far ahead.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the government is dealing pretty generously with the city of Ottawa. The government gave the city $60,000 for twenty years, making $1,200,000. We are going to give them $40,000 for ten years, making $400,000, and $15,000 a year, I suppose in perpetuity?

Mr. FIELDING. No, for ten years. But it would be a reasonable expectation that it would be paid hereafter.

Mr. SPROULE. That makes at least $150,000 more, a total of $1,750,000. In addition, we have handed over $100,000, the proceeds of the sale of land for the hotel site, so that Ottawa gets the benefit of about $2,000,000. I think Ottawa is faring pretty well. As long as Ottawa can get these grants, it will not be slow to ask them and to find reasons that will justify the putting forward of claims every few years for something additional.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. As it is not the policy of the government to speculate in land, and as the government made a tidy speculation in Toronto under which they profited to the extent of $300,000 by the deal in the Garrison common, I suppose they will turn over that money as conscience money to the city of Toronto?

Mr. FIELDING. Or, perhaps, it would be better to hold it against other speculations in which we have not made money.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FIELDING moved concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 205) to amend the Civil Service Act. He said: The amendment appears to be the correction of some figures in the salary list of the Inland Revenue Department. A certain class of clerks are stated in the Bill to have salaries of from $1,500 to $1,600. This should have read from $1,300 to $1,600—a correction of what appears to be a typographical error.

Motion agreed to, and amendments concurred in.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 232) to amend the Government Railways Act—Mr. Graham—was read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. GRAHAM. As was explained on a previous occasion the object of this Bill is to bring the Government Railways Act into harmony with the General Railway Act in regard to limiting the liability of the railway for damages to $5,000, provided that modern protection appliances have been used by the railway and its employees.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is, in case of fire?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Why not extend to individuals in the case of the government railways the same right you give them in the case of other railways, the right to sue? The aggrieved person must seek a fiat, and the granting of that fiat is a matter wholly in the hands of the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a large question. We have encroached a little on the prerogatives of the King in allowing claimants for damages for cattle killed, and so on, to sue in the local courts up to $200. That is a departure from what has always existed. The Act has been changed materially for the benefit of those living along the line of railway. Heretofore the Government Railways Act did not allow as much latitude in the claiming of damages as the general Railway Act did. During the present session the Act has been changed so that the government railway will come under practically the same Act as that which governs an ordinary railway. We have accepted all the liabilities of the ordinary railway and this provision is the one that exists under the general Railway Act with respect to the $5,000 liability.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think there is a great deal in what my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. J. Haggart) says. The Crown still maintains the power to refuse a fiat. I am very much of the opinion that when the government carries on the business of transportation, or any other similar business it should not only subject itself to the actions for negligence to which an ordinary corporation would be subjected, but it ought to give to all persons dealing with it the same rights of action in the courts that such parties would have against a corporation. This is only a half measure that the government presents, as my hon. friend from Lanark very well pointed out.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Yesterday I brought to the attention of the House a copy of the rules. I suppose the minister has read my remarks in 'Hansard'. The Railway Commission has approved of a 'uniform code of rules for Canadian railways'. This book is issued to every trainman, and he has to sign a receipt of acceptance in which receipt he acknowledges that he accepts the conditions amongst which I find this: 'Employees in accepting employment assume these risks.' I would like to ask the minister if that is approved by the government, and if it is the intention to deprive workmen on the railways of their rights under the ordinary statute law in case they are injured.

Mr. GRAHAM. These are rules issued by the Board of Railway Commissioners after a good deal of study with the labour organizations and the railways. As a matter of fact I think the courts have held that an employee cannot contract himself out of his rights under the statute, and I do not think that the signing of that would alter the statute in any way.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then why does the commission put such an absurd rule as that in if that is the case? I understand that these rules have virtually the force of law once they are approved by the commission. A protest has been made by the railway train men against the inclusion of this clause in their rules, but in spite of that the commission has inserted it. I call the attention of the Minister of Railways to this fact, and I hope that he will inform the commission that it has no right to legislate in a code-book of this kind contrary to the statute law of the country.

Mr. GRAHAM. I never thought that any rule of the Railway Commission made could override the statute. That question has been raised and it has been decided by the courts. The question does not arise in the acceptance of employment per se, but it has arisen in connection with employees being members of a provident fund when, by accepting the benefits to be derived from the provident fund, they have waived their other claims to sue for damages, but the courts, I think, have held that they could not do that.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the object of the commission was this: The men have to run some risks, and the commission, properly, wants them to realize the risks that they will have to run. I think the intention of the commission is that men, on taking employment, shall look before they leap and see what they are signing, because some of the risks they have to assume are greater than those which they would assume according to the law.

Mr. RHODES. There is a matter that I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Railways. It is probably hardly germane to the discussion of this question, but as it is near the end of the session, I will ask the indulgence of the committee for a few moments in order that I may bring it up. Recently, employees of the Intercolonial railway have been called upon to take the oath of allegiance. In the first place, I would like to ask the minister why this has been deemed necessary in view of the fact that since confederation down to the present time they have not been called upon to do so. In the second place, since it has been deemed necessary to call upon them to take this oath, I would like to call his attention to its wording, which is as follows:

I solemnly and sincerely swear that I will faithfully and honestly fulfil the duties which devolve upon me as....., and that I will not ask, or receive any sum of money, services, recompense, or matter, or thing whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in return for what I have done or may do in the discharge of any of the duties of my said office, except my salary or what may be allowed me by law or by an order of the Governor in Council.

From this wording there is a question as to whether the employees of the Intercolonial railway would be precluded from asking for an increase of pay. There has been grave concern among the employees, who fear that it does preclude them. I would like to have the opinion of the minister upon this point.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am sure that if the employees think that it does preclude them from asking for an increase of their wages they do not act as if they did, because, like the rest of us, they are looking to the main chance. I had that declaration brought to my attention a few weeks ago. Perhaps I do not feel like the ordinary individual, but when I became a member of parliament, I did not think that I was humiliated at all by having to take the oath. A civil servant does not think he is humiliated by having to take the oath.

Mr. RHODES. I do not think it is a question of humiliation at all. A civil servant contracts to accept office at a given scale of pay. He knows he must comply with the regulations and that he will be classified according to his examination. But the employee of the government railway is in much the same position as the employee of any other railway privately owned, and as the cost of living increases he feels that he should have an increase in his wages. In view of the fact that each employee has been called upon to take this oath there is a question as to whether he would not be precluded from applying for an increase of pay. It would cripple the unions if that interpretation were placed upon the oath. I do not think they object to take the oath, although it is an innovation. But if there is to be an oath it would seem to be wise to have the wording changed so as to make it clear.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not very familiar with the object of the introduction of the oath, but I think it was owing to a desire that the employees on the Intercolonial railway should feel that they are civil servants just as others are civil servants. They are promoted now absolutely on their merit according to the rules of their unions where they belong to unions. If the effect is what they think it is, the oath ought to be changed, but I can assure my hon. friend that within the last two weeks I could give him absolute proof that they do not think it precludes them from asking for an increase of pay.

Mr. McKENZIE. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) made a statement a moment ago about the standing of employees on the Intercolonial railway as to whether or not they have the right to contract themselves out of an action for damages. The minister stated that he understood the common law to be that they could not contract away their right of action.

Mr. LANCASTER. That was in regard to the Railway Commission's orders that do not apply to the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. McKENZIE. Not at all. The minister stated that he understood that a railway employee could not contract in such a way as to deprive himself of the right of action for damages. That is sufficiently important to have no misunderstanding about it. I do not agree with the minister's understanding of that point. In so far as damages to the individual himself are concerned, of course, he can contract his right away in every province of the Dominion except the province of Quebec. As to any redress that the family or children of a workman would have they would have all the rights in Canada generally that we have under what is known as Lord Campbell's Act. His widow or his children cannot succeed under Lord Campbell's Act unless he could have succeeded himself had he lived after the Act. That is clearly the law under Lord Campbell's Act, and it is quite competent for an employee of the Intercolonial railway in any other province of Canada outside of Quebec to contract away the right his family may have to damages. But there is no statute in the province of Quebec under which it is possible for the individual to contract away the rights that his family would have to bring an action. I make this statement so that the Minister of Railways shall have no misapprehension as to the general state of the law in Canada outside of the province of Quebec.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am very glad to see an hon. member of the House giving a little light on this question. Not being a lawyer, modesty compels me to refrain from expressing the same view, but I am very pleased that my hon. friend from the east (Mr. McKenzie) has thrown a little light on it, and shown that when a man signs for this book and accepts everything in this book he virtually contracts himself out of any dangers for injuries by this last clause in the general instructions. I would therefore ask the Minister of Railways to bring to the notice of the commission that they have no right under any statute to insert any such regulation in this book.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

TELEGRAPHS ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 234) to correct an error in the Telegraphs Act.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Explain.

Mr. LEMIEUX. When the marine telegraphs were brought under the operation of the Telegraphs Act in 1875 it read as follows:

> This part applies to every company (a) hereafter authorized by any special or general Act of the parliament of Canada, or under the provisions of this part to construct or maintain telegraphic wires or cables in, upon, under or across any gulf, bay or branch of any sea, or any tidal water within the jurisdiction of Canada or the shore or bed thereof respectively so as to connect any province with any other province of Canada or to extend beyond the limits of any province.

When the statutes in 1886 were revised parliament used the word 'hereafter,' in the first line, and again when the statutes were revised three years ago the same oversight was committed. If the word 'hereafter,' were allowed to remain here the Telegraphs Act would not apply to cables which had been laid before the date when the Act came into force. So it is only to correct this error that this Bill is introduced, by using instead of the word 'hereafter,' in the first line of paragraph (a) the words 'authorized on the 8th day of April, 1875.'

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if his policy of state-owned cables and telegraphs has been dropped indefinitely?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh! State-owned cables. It is a magnificent theory, but we have not yet put it into practice.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I just want to say this, that the sooner Canada builds, and owns a cable between here and Great Britain the better it will be for this country, and the country will support such an expenditure. The way to get cheap cable rates is for the state to own its own cable across the ocean, and its own land lines across the continent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is it retroactive? It does not affect any litigation or rights, does it?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. The marine telegraphs or cables were brought under the operation of the Telegraphs Act in 1875, and in 1875 the legislature used the word 'hereafter,' because the first cables came into operation that year. In 1886, parliament in revising the statutes again used the word 'hereafter,' inadvertently. As a statute goes into force from the date of its being passed it must be read from that date, so that the cables in operation before that date would not be included under the operation of the Telegraphs Act. The same error was committed a few years ago when our statutes were revised, and this is only to correct that mistake.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT.

Hon. MACKENZIE KING moved concurrence in the Senate amendments to Bill (No. 101) to provide for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Give us some explanation?

Mr. KING. Sec. 32 setting forth the powers of the board gives the board power to summon witnesses and enforce their attendance. The Senate has added the words: 'from any part of Canada' to make it clear that when the board is holding sittings in one province it can compel the attendance of witnesses from other provinces. Sections 22 and 23 have been amended by striking out the word 'unduly' where it appears before the words 'to restrain or injure trade or commerce.' As the word 'unduly' does not appear in the Criminal Code before these words, it was thought it should not appear in these sections, that they may be uniform with the sections of the Criminal Code.

Amendments read the first and the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

SETTLERS' GRIEVANCES IN LABELLE.

Mr. C. B. MAJOR (Labelle). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to call, for a few moments, the attention of the House and the government on the grievances to which are subjected the settlers living on that part of the river Lièvre, extending from a point five or six miles distant from the town of Buckingham, to the townships of Wabassi and Kiamika, which grievances have caused the abandonment of the land in that part of the county of Labelle.

As is well known, extensive lumbering operations have always been carried on in the Ottawa river and its tributaries, which are the river Rouge, the river Blanche, the river Lièvre and the Gatineau river.

Within a few miles of the town of Buckingham these people complain of having no means whatever of communication with the large centres of population, inasmuch as they have no railways and are left with only the water route which is controlled by a powerful company claiming to be the owner of the improvements made for the driving of logs. Moreover, this company controls the prices and which puts these people under its dependency and deprives them of the benefits accruing to people of other parts where communications are convenient. I may point out the mistake made by people who assert that the settler and farmer do not protect the forest. The proof lies in the fact that that part which has been cultivated and worked for more than 80 years has still a forest reserve amounting to at least 35 or 40 per cent of its land considered unfit for cultivation.

This shows plainly that these people have taken good care to preserve that which is of primary usefulness to the country even before anybody had thought of creating a commission for the preservation of the natural resources of the country, as has been done quite recently. They had and have still on hand, if not 50 per cent, at least 30 per cent of the timber which may still be seen in the territory drained by the Gatineau, Lièvre, Blanche and Rouge (large and small) rivers.

What I state here, I have seen and ascertained. I have caused it to be ascertained by bringing on the spot, after heavy pressure, the late Hon. Mr. Marchand, then Prime Minister of Quebec, and he also, after travelling through the upper part of the Lièvre and Rouge rivers, was convinced of the great care with which the settlers turned the forest into account. He was also able to judge of the awkward and disastrous manner with which the king of the lumber trade, the lumberman, went to work to ruin the forest. Mr. Marchand had perfectly seen through all this.

Immediately after this trip, I had occasion to express my opinion and to point out, at a great meeting held at the 'Cabinet de Lecture Paroissial,' in Montreal, how things stood. I denounced the unskilful, discouraging and disastrous manner with which the lumberman worked the forest, and how he destroyed the young shoots which are the best means of rebuilding the forest. In order to cut down a tree they kill or uproot 15, 20 and 30 young saplings of two or three inches in order to take out the big tree. After I had denounced this system of destruction I was naturally attacked in the press, but a few years later, Mr. Fernow, who is a great authority on that question endorsed what I had said and denounced the very same abuses. He even wrote it in his work in which he says (pages 91 and 92) that unfortunately the lumberman, when pursuing his avocation does not think of the next day and still less of the day after. He sacrifices the young shoots which in five, ten or fifteen years would become big trees.

I stated these things while I was a member of the Quebec legislature. People admitted that I was right, but still I was pounced upon. The people living in that part of the Lièvre country to which I have referred a moment ago say: We have quite a number of small forest reserves, the soil of which is unfit for agriculture. We ask to be allowed to work them ourselves, but we can hardly do it for we are at the mercy of one sole buyer. In 1905, we tried to get a railway: but unfortunately the Dominion parliament refused to give us a charter. The motive of that refusal is certainly neither practical nor very patriotic; but one thing is certain, and it is that these poor people have no railway to get to market. They must accept the prices and conditions imposed upon them by the only buyer they have. They come to the authorities and say: We can no longer live under the system which is imposed upon us. On other rivers, such as the Gatineau, St. Maurice and the Kipawa, improvements have been made and are being maintained by the government, such as slides, piers and booms, all things which are absolutely necessary for the driving of logs. It is true we have these same things on our river, but the only buyer we have claims to be the owner and holder of such improvements and prohibits other lumbermen from using them.

It is true, we have the E. B. Eddy Co., Sharples of Quebec, the Sherbrooke Lumber Co., and even one of our colleagues, the hon. member from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin), who owns limits on that river, and quite a number of other persons who would be prepared to come and do business there should they be allowed to utilize these improvements. But they would be obliged to accept the prices which are imposed, and while, in other places, for instance, lumber was sold at a very high price, as shown in pages 5026, 5027 and 5028 of the 'Debates' of 1908, in the speech delivered by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin) who stated that an export duty should be imposed, because, in his own part of the country pulp wood was sold at $8, $9 and $10 per cord of four feet length, while in my own region it was sold at $7.75 a cord for 12 feet length. The same is still true to-day. These people certainly had a right and still have a right to ask that the Lièvre river be put on the same footing as the rivers on which a large trade is being carried on.

I am not prepared to say that the companies I have mentioned are not working their limits because the other company prevents them from doing so; but one thing I may assert and it is that the small dealers, the jobbers as they are called, would be disposed to go in there and do business if the slides and booms were free as they are on the Gatineau and the other rivers. They are not going in. They did go in, to my knowledge, and they have been unable to take out their lumber because the other company which claims to be the owner, prevented them from using these means of driving their logs.

The settler is getting discouraged and rightly so. Things have got in such a shape that last fall when I went to visit that part of my own county, I found within an area of three miles at Val des Bois, no less than eleven houses which had been closed. These good people had given up their betterments to go and live in the United States or elsewhere, being unable to sell their products at a price that would allow them to make a living. A little later on there were fourteen houses closed at the same place, that is to say, three others. If we are to believe the report of an officer of the Quebec government, Mr. Dupont, 10,000 of our countrymen would have left the province of Quebec during the year 1909. This is certainly exaggerated, at least I hope it is, but the best thing to do is to try and keep among us those who are native to the soil. There is no better policy than that which aims at keeping in the country our own countrymen whose presence is so necessary to the development of the country.

This brings me back to the year 1871, to a time when there was a large exodus from this country to the United States, and it was then that a young a member of the Quebec legislature rose in his seat and protested against the inert policy of the then government; and if at that time, they were justified in devising measures for stopping the exodus, we are equally justified to-day in calling attention to that movement; although, to tell the truth, the evil is not quite so intense as it was in those days, and instead of hundreds of thousands of our people being carried away by that stream, there is only a small number of our fellow-countrymen who leave us; but insignificant as that number may be, we should endeavour to keep those fellow-countrymen in our midst.

In the era of progress which the country is now enjoying, we have the necessary means for bringing men over here from other countries, let us first of all stop that exodus. As I said a little while ago, in 1871 a young member of the Quebec legislature did not hesitate to denounce, in a picturesque style, it is true, the lethargic sleep of the then government with respect to emigration. Unfortunately, to-day the attitude taken by the member for Drummond and Arthabaska seems to have been buried into oblivion. He was twenty-nine years old and I was nineteen, and I still have a vivid recollection of the facts. People then said of that speech: 'It is a youthful speech.' True, it was youthful, but it was grand! It was youthful, but it was true! It was youthful, but it was patriotic! . . So much so that, throughout the province of Quebec, Conservatives and Liberals alike were roused from their slumbers and it was then that was born that grand movement of colonization at the head of which stood the regretted Father Labelle, the parish priest of Saint Jérome, a movement which induced the government of the day to take the necessary steps for opening the forest to the settlers through the building of railways and bridges, so as to divert to the forest the overflow of our great centres and of our old parishes. Then were founded many new parishes at Lake St. John, in the county of Chicoutimi, and Saguenay, in Bonaventure, and in the northwestern section of Montreal, which I have the honour of representing here.

In bringing to a close these few remarks, as I said I did not want to let the session expire without calling the attention of the government to those facts and asking the proper authority to listen to our grievances and do justice to whom justice is due.

The Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Labelle has raised a question to which my attention has been called on several occasions, that is to say, the northern counties, and particularly the constituency represented by the hon. gentleman, have no other communications with the markets than by the Lièvre river, and from what he has stated, the passage of the river is obstructed by the works of a private company.

There is one thing I do not understand: why should that private company or any company whatsoever arrogate to itself the right of preventing the other lumber companies or the other citizens from using the river? A river is a public road. True, a company may possess exclusive rights; but, at least, that must be under a special Act granting a monopoly. There is nothing in common law that debars any one from the free use, without obstruction, of any river.

My hon. friend is a lawyer, a man of high standing at the bar and a patriotic member of this House. Let me remind him that in the case of Caldwell against Maclaren, that question has been tried by the judicial committee of the Privy Council, and the law lords decided that Maclaren, who had built a dam, had no right to close the river to Caldwell who owned limits further up stream. The lords of the Privy Council most emphatically declared that Caldwell had a right to use the river as a public road.

In the case referred to by my hon. friend, there is a position which I fail to grasp, and I would like to see the charter of the company. I cannot understand how that company can exercise such a monopoly. I do not know whether it is in virtue of a general statute passed by the Dominion or by the province, or even if it goes back to confederation.

The question deserves consideration. As I told my hon. friend who called the attention of the government to that matter, I hope that sooner or later and sooner than later, we shall be able to afford the settlers whom he represents here, the means of facilitating the carrying out of their work.

My hon. friend has stated that those people had applied for a railway charter, which they had been denied. I may tell him again, as I said before, that should a company be organized with a view to the building of a railway in that district, the government will be happy to grant them a subsidy.

THE CANADIAN NORTHERN.

Mr. J. P. TURCOTTE (Quebec West). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to draw the attention of the government to a state of things which seems to me detrimental to the public interest.

Last session, the Canadian Northern Railway Company was granted, by statute, the right of building a line of railway from a point on its line at or near Hedleyville, in the immediate vicinity of the city of Quebec, thence in a generally easterly direction to a point on the Montmorency river.

That statute was assented to in due course and I presume that the Act was passed, subject to the ordinary conditions, namely that in return for the power of expropriation, the right of way on the property of other people, the company should assume all the liabilities which result from such a state of things.

What happened? Last summer or last fall, the company constructed that line, secured the right of way or made the expropriation. Whenever disputes arose as to the price tendered by the company and the amount asked for by the owner, the sum fixed by the judge was paid into the office of the court, according to law, and there was a temporary right of way. I know whereof I speak, as I served the interests of the company upon that occasion. Thanks to our combined efforts, and in view of the fact that a railway line always results in increasing the wealth of the country thus accommodated, the road was put in operation late in the fall of the year, in November. But, instead of running passenger and freight trains, they kept freight trains in operation, without any stop, from Hedleyville to Montmorency. People said that the road was not in a proper condition to be operated in the winter season. It was only in April that the trains began to run in the same direction, but under similar conditions. The trains leave the main line at Hedleyville and run without any stop to Montmorency; there they take pulp wood and come back to Quebec. The line is out of repair to such a degree that serious accidents have taken place, and trains have been ditched.

Last winter, we made representations to the company, and in view of what had happened last fall, I was urged by my constituents in the parish of Beauport to go and meet them. I heard their grievances and as it was announced that the company did not wish to use that road for anything else but for the lumber operations that are carried out on the Montmorency river, I then formally undertook to communicate with the Railway Commission in order to reach some practical result, so that there should be freight and passengers run by the company, with stations between the termini, and that the railway should be worked not only for the personal benefit of the company, but also for the accommodation of passengers and the carriage of the goods of farmers on the line.

The answer I got from the commission not officially but officiously, was that they had no power to order the company to build stations on the line nor to give a passenger service. Those lines are called spur lines; they are intended as feeders for the traffic of the main line. I was told, moreover, that the farmers could by no means require from the government or the company that there should be stations built between the termini and that a regular passenger service should be established for the convenience of the public in general.

Well, Sir, I have undertaken to bring the matter to the attention of the government, and in case the Act should not provide for such an emergency, I invite the government to bring down some amendment. At any rate, I have undertaken to leave no stone unturned to reach the desired end.

I should have raised this question before to-day, but as the new service began only in April, the opportunity did not offer before.

Now, I bring this question before the government and before the House. Should it be found that the Railway Commission has no power to order the company to operate passenger and freight trains, for the accommodation of the public, it would mean that under the Railway Act, as it is, a railway company would be entitled to all the powers of expropriation and could vex and annoy the public; that it could take private property and convert it for its own use into money.

I believe that such a situation is abnormal. If the Railway Act is such as one of the members of the Board of Railway Commissioners holds it to be, it ought to be amended.

I have taken advantage of the occasion to discharge what I deem my duty not only to my constituents but also to the general public. For, should such a construction of the Act be placed on the case I have brought before the House, there is nothing to prevent its being applied elsewhere, and then other sections of the country will be liable to suffer from a state of affairs, things which seem to me quite prejudicial to the general interest.

I hope, then, that the authorities and particularly the hon. Minister of Railways, will see to it that an investigation be held into the facts I have just stated; and should my statements prove true, I trust that means will be taken to force the company to dicharge its duty, or should the Act be found inadequate, let it be amended in the direction I have suggested.

Mr. GRAHAM. The question raised by my hon. friend is one in which the people in the parish of Beauport on the line of the Montmorency river are deeply interested. As I understand, the railway has been constructed from the line of the Canadian Northern, but it only carries freight, and that in the summer time, it has no stations between the termini, and does not carry passengers. That is quite a list of grievances. I do not know whether this road has had any subsidy from the Dominion government.

Mr. J. P. TURCOTTE. It has.

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot understand why the Railway Commission would say that they have no power to deal with this matter unless it be owing to the fact that until the amendment to the Railway Act which we have just adopted becomes law the commission have no power to allow a construction company or a contractor building a railway to carry passengers. They could allow them by an order to carry freight when the condition of part of the road was such that that would be feasible, even although the whole of the road was not constructed, but they have no power under the Act to allow them to carry passengers. It strikes me that this road was being operated, though practically by the Canadian Northern, really by the construction company.

Mr. J. P. TURCOTTE. They were through with it.

Mr. GRAHAM. They might be through with it to all intents and purposes, but the road might not have been approved of by the Board of Railway Commissioners so that they could carry passengers. However, the amendment to the Railway Act will enable the Board of Railway Commissioners to allow roads even under these circumstances to carry passengers although they may not be taken over. If that be the condition the difficulty will be obviated after the passing of the amendment to the Railway Act which is now before parliament. It being a spur line probably does not make any difference as to the power of the Board of Railway Commissioners. If it is a completed railway they have full power not only to authorize them to give accommodation, but also to give direction as to the number of stations to be erected. I shall call the attention of the Board of Railway Commissioners to this matter which has been brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend.

GIFTS TO MINISTERS OF THE CROWN.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair to go into Committee of Supply, I desire to draw the attention of the House briefly to some matters of history with respect to this House, a course which I deem to be necessary in the light of recent events. The right hon. gentleman who leads this House, prior to the year 1896 was the leader of the opposition, and while enjoying the privileges of that position laid down and struggled for certain high principles to which he pledged himself. I am going to refer briefly to one of those principles. I speak of the complaint, the very vehement complaint that the right hon. gentleman made while leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition in 1891 with regard to certain gifts having been given to ministers of the Crown, and to the offence against good government which he said had been committed by ministers of the Crown or ministers of state, as he was pleased then to call them, accepting, while in office, gifts of money or other presentations as ministers of the Crown. A colleague of my right hon. friend who is now the leader of the Senate, Sir Richard Cartwright, moved in the House, on August 13, 1891, the following resolution to which I now refer, and which I unhesitatingly commend to my right hon. friend. At page 3827 of 'Hansard,' 1891, Sir Richard Cartwright moved:

> That Mr. Speaker do not leave the Chair, but that it be resolved: That the acceptance of gifts or testimonials of any kind on the part of ministers of the Crown or of any member of their families from contractors, government officials or other persons having pecuniary relations with the government, is entirely opposed to sound principles of administration, and is calculated to bring parliamentary government into contempt, and that the example thus given tends to corrupt and demoralize the officials serving under ministers who have accepted or permitted the acceptance of gifts or testimonials as aforesaid.

That is the resolution which was moved, and while deprecating the manner in which it was moved, and some of the statements that were made by the mover of it and by my right hon. friend who seconded it, Sir John Thompson, then Minister of Justice, on behalf of the government of the day accepted that resolution, and it became the resolution, and principle adopted by this parliament. But all the glory, all the honour, all the esteem, and all the prestige for the high principles laid down in that resolution were claimed by, and gathered in by my right hon. friend the present Prime Minister. At page 3839 the right hon. gentleman, then leading the opposition said:

> I congratulate the Minister of Justice upon what I conceive to be the very wise course he has now taken, but I still more congratulate the hon. member for South Oxford on the signal victory he has obtained. He has laid down a principle which has been long contended for on this side of the House, which has always been refused on the other side of the House, but which, at last, circumstances compel the government to accept.

So much for the principle that was so strongly contended for by the right hon.

gentleman, and, according to his contention, so strongly resisted by the then government. I do not desire to criticise or to offer any remarks that I may have to make on the subject in any hypercritical sense. I do not desire to offer any criticism upon the fact itself at the present time. I desire to state facts, and I propose to state facts, and then I propose to leave some questions to my right hon. friend. Public notoriety has been given in the last few days of this session to the fact that the Minister of Finance, who has enjoyed the office of minister of the Crown since 1896, and now enjoys it, while occupying that office of the Crown, to wit, Minister of Finance, has been presented with, and has received, according to newspaper accounts, especially that of the 'Globe,' which commends the transaction very highly, a gift or testimonial aggregating some $118,000, or $120,000 in round figures. If that statement be true, and I have never heard it denied, the government organs in different parts of the country have referred to it as a fact, then it is a matter for the consideration of the House, and I am quite sure that my right hon. friend would be the very last to reproach me as a member of this House, having the privileges and responsibilities of a member, for mentioning the matter and drawing the attention of the House to it in the light of the resolution which he so highly commended. That on or about the 26th day of April, a presentation was made to the Minister of Finance of so large a sum of money, a fortune in itself, is, as I said, a matter which certainly should, and does excite the curiosity of this country. That presentation was made, according to the newspaper reports, in the presence of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. More than that, the Liberal organs which I have read, and which refer to the fact, state that the right hon. gentleman expressed his unbounded delight at the exhibition of confidence shown by the magnificent gift. Well, Sir, the fact not being disputed, it does form a pretty bold, blunt presentation of a fact. Congratulations have been expressed with great unanimity in Liberal papers all over this country upon this matter. Some sombre effect has been given by criticisms coming from quarters where perhaps they were least expected, and which refer back to the good old days when my right hon. friend sat here as leader of the opposition, and was contending for the principle contained in the resolution to which I have referred. But if the fact be not disputed, if the notoriety which has been given to this transaction is just, if I am correctly informed by the government organs throughout the country, if the newspapers are not publishing that which would otherwise be a very serious reflection upon the minister, and the whole of this government, I say that the matter calls, here and now, for some explanation on the part of the government. There has been a dead silence on the part of the government. I am not saying that there is anything significant in that silence, but there has been an utter absence of any word in this House coming from government benches to the effect that that which has been done is openly declared to have been done with the absolut unbounded joy of the right hon. the Prime Minister himself, and was not within the mischief, and the purview of the legislation which he commended to this House in 1891. I, therefore, ask my right hon. friend the first question: Does he not think under the circumstances that it was his duty, if he was true to those principles, to come down to the House, and if there was any explanation, if this transaction did not infringe upon the principles involved in that magnificent resolution, that he should have explained the circumstances? I ask my right hon. friend now to state whether this gift, this testimonial, was not the result of a subscription, whether there was not a public subscription list, whether it was not delivered and presented in public, and whether the names of the persons who subscribed to this large testimonial of money were not made known to the Minister of Finance, and to the right hon. the Prime Minister, and if they were made known, I assume of course that the right hon. gentleman will without any hesitation make public the names of the subscribers. I can only assume that pressure of parliamentary business heretofore has prevented him from doing so. I am sorry indeed to have the matter so long delayed in the session, but I could not regulate the time at which this magnificent fortune was to be presented to the minister, and I can only assume that having risen to such high principles in 1891, having congratulated his colleague the present right hon. Sir Richard Cartwright upon having obtained this signal victory in getting this resolution through the House, the right hon. gentleman will certainly, before this House prorogues, and if possible without a moment's delay after I have taken my seat, lay before parliament and before the public the facts, so that in the light of day every one in Canada may see that that which has been done, that which is publicly reported to have been done, did not in any way come within the mischief of the resolution of 1891. My hon. friend will see, of course, that there is only one course to pursue along the lines of this resolution, and that is to make the facts public. Here and now is the time to make the facts public, and I think it will not be necessary to urge my right hon. friend very strongly. I quite conceive that he realizes his duty and responsibility in the matter. I urge him now to lay upon the table of the House forthwith the list of names, and the amounts subscribed which made up this magnificent testimonial. My right hon. friend will agree with me that that is due first to the Minister of Finance himself, secondly to the Prime Minister, and his government, to every minister of state, and ex-minister of state. It is due to this House, and it is due to the people of this country that a full disclosure of these matters should be made, and having brought this matter to the attention of the House I can only again say that the responsibility incident to the acceptance of such a gift—and I am making no comment as to whether the presentation or the acceptance of the gift in itself is right or wrong—the responsibilities incident to the acceptance of the gift of such a large sum of money make it absolutely imperative upon the government or upon the minister to make that full disclosure to which I have referred, and to forthwith give publicity to the list of all those who have subscribed. I shall not attempt to dwell upon the principles involved nor to moralize upon the dangers of the situation, but I feel safe in assuming that my right hon. friend, realizing that he spoke upon this resolution in 1891, and that he congratulated his party upon the signal victory obtained, will see that the grand victory of which he speaks, and which was attained as he would argue through blood and tears, be not besmirched now in 1910 by a derogation from the principles then enunciated. The only way, as I submit, in which my hon. friend can put himself square with the resolution, the only way in which I submit he can discharge the duty he owes to this country as Prime Minister and leader of the government, is to make full disclosure, and publish the names and lay the list on the table.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that in 1891, Sir Richard Cartwright was a prominent member of this House, and when I had the honour of leading Her Majesty's opposition, he introduced the resolution which has been read by my hon. friend, but which I think can bear to be read again. It was in these words:

> That the acceptance of gifts or testimonials of any kind on the part of ministers of the Crown or of any members of their families from contractors, government officials or other persons having pecuniary relations with the government, is entirely opposed to sound principles of administration, and is calculated to bring parliamentary government into contempt, and that the example thus given tends to corrupt and demoralize the officials serving under ministers who have accepted or permitted the acceptance of gifts or testimonials as aforesaid.

It is a matter of notoriety that the public men who have served Canada have not always been blessed with wealth. A prominent example was Sir John A Macdonald, and what Mr. Fielding's friends have done for him, Sir John A. Macdonald's friends did for him, they came to his rescue, and gave him a testimonial accompanied by a large sum of money, which was invested for the benefit of his family. I am not aware that any fault was found by anybody, whether by friend or foe, when the fellow countrymen of Sir John A. Macdonald thus provided for him in his old age and put him above the anxieties of providing for his family. I am not aware that any fault was found on that account, and I do not think that even the hon. gentleman who has addressed the House finds fault with that. But, there were other testimonials given on a subsequent day; a testimonial was given later to Sir Hector Langevin. I would prefer not to have to speak of these things. Nothing but good should be spoken of the dead. Sir Hector Langevin is no more, he has been long in his grave, and if I have to speak of his memory in this way the fault is not mine, but the fault is that of the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House. If the resolution of Sir Richard Cartwright, which I have just read was brought before the House, was accepted by the House without a word of dissent from anybody, was passed unanimously by the House, it was because the charge was made in the newspapers, not in the press of his opponents, not in Liberal newspapers, but in Conservative newspapers, that directors had been permitted to subscribe to that fund. I have before me and I could quote a paragraph from a pamphlet which was issued at that time, and which I read in 1891, in the presence of Sir Hector Langevin, when he was in this House, and which I do not care to read now when he is in his grave. But, that was the reason why the resolution of Sir Richard Cartwright was brought in, it was to prevent matters of this kind taking place, contractors, public officials, men having business with the government, subscribing to a similar fund and under similar circumstances. The resolution of Sir Richard Cartwright was adopted by the House.

Now, Sir, it may happen, and it has happened, that other men than Sir John A. Macdonald have not been careful of their own interests, have given their time, their health, their brains and their life to the public service, and have made no provision for their old age and no provision for their family, and such a man, unfortunately, is my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. But, if there is a man in this House, or if there is a man in this country, whose honour is above reproach, is above the rebuke of the hon. gentleman, it is the Finance Minister. If there is a man who has a high sense of honour, a most delicate sense of honour, it is my colleague the Minister of Finance, Mr. W. S. Fielding. Does the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House think that the man who has been at the head of the Department of Finance for the last fourteen years, and against whom there has never been raised even the breath of suspicion, does he believe that that man would consent to take a dollar of money if it came from a contractor, if it came from a man who had anything to do with the government? If my hon. friend holds such an opinion as that, he does not know the Hon. Mr. Fielding as I know him, and as his friends know him. When the friends of Mr. Fielding undertook to lay before him a testimonial and to provide for him and his family in his old age, the committee who had the matter in charge consulted me, and I told them that I approved of what was being done. The letter can be quoted, it was quoted the other day by the gentleman who presided at the meeting where the presentation was made to Mr. Fielding, and in the letter I said 'There is nothing too good for Fielding.' At the same time it was understood and stipulated that not a man would be called upon to subscribe to that testimonial if he was a director, if he was a government official, or if he had anything to do with the government. It was well understood that only men in private life would be allowed to contribute, men who had no connection whatever, directly or indirectly, with the government, who had no expectation of profiting ever so remotely from any transactions with the government. I am glad to say that the answer came, not only from the political friends of Mr. Fielding, but from his political opponents as well. I have this to say to the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House, that not a dollar, not a penny has been contributed to that fund, which I am glad to say has reached a very substantial amount, by anybody except personal friends and admirers of Mr. Fielding; not a dollar has come from public contractors, or government officials, or anybody who could expect to profit therefrom. Now, all sorts of rumours have been circulated in regard to this matter. I read yesterday with deep chagrin, in a respectable newspaper published in this city, the following paragraph: 'Where did the money come from'? The answer is that the money came from private sources; that I assert on my honour as a man, on my responsibility as the Prime Minister of Canada. I will read from the article I refer to:

> Sir Wilfrid and some other prominent Liberals could, of course, answer this, but so far as the ordinary member of parliament is concerned, the test has not been seen.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

> A report is going around the corridors of the House that the Bank of Montreal subscribed $25,000 of the gift.

There is not a word of truth in that statement. The Bank of Montreal did not subscribe one dollar to that fund. That I assert. And I made inquiry at once when I saw the paragraph about it.

> The Dominion Iron and Steel Company are also said to have contributed a very large sum toward the presentation.

Concerning this I have not the personal knowledge I have of the statement with regard to the Bank of Montreal, but I do not believe there is a word of truth in it. At all events, if such an institution as that had been allowed to subscribe, it would be a gross breach of the understanding which was arrived at when Mr. Fielding's testimonial was started. I will look into that further. I do not speak with the same authority as in the case of the Bank of Montreal, but I do not think there is any truth in this statement. At all events, it is not to my knowledge, and I think I ought to know if there is anything of that kind.

Sir, I have only to repeat what I have already stated; not a dollar has come into that fund except from honest, legitimate sources. And I do not believe that that which was done for Sir John Macdonald could not be done also for Mr. Fielding. I do not believe that there is a man in this House who, knowing Mr. Fielding as we know him, would believe that he has consented to put his hand upon a dollar the receipt of which would prevent him from looking his opponents in the face. The honour of Mr. Fielding is above reproach. This I say with full confidence that my word will awake an echo, not only in this House, but throughout the length and breadth of this land. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) told us that his curiosity—curiosity!—had been aroused by what has taken place. I am glad to relieve his feelings, and I am sure he will be glad to know that the suspicion he had in his mind had no foundation whatever.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Mr. Speaker, my only reason for rising on this occasion is that it seems to me that only half the question has been touched upon in the discussion that has so far taken place. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) called attention to the fact that a certain resolution had been passed in the year 1891 whereby both sides of politics in this House agreed that no testimonial should be presented to a minister of the Crown to which contractors or those having any financial relations with the minister had contributed. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), in his reply, has admitted that, in fact—and, of course, it could hardly be denied—such a resolution was passed, and he has said two things: First, that the honour of Mr. Fielding is above question—and on that point I have no intention of engaging in a discussion with the right hon. gentleman;—and, second, that no contractors or parties who have been forbidden by the resolution of 1891 had contributed to this fund. Sir, this is very satisfactory so far as it goes. Perhaps it would have been a little more satisfactory if the right hon. gentleman who made the statement had not been obliged to admit, in reading the quotation from the newspaper charging that the Bank of Montreal had made a subscription to this fund, that only since yesterday he had inquired into that matter, and, as to the other great corporation, he did not believe that they had contributed—I say it would have been more satisfactory had his statement not been weakened by these admissions. But, taking his statement in full, admitting that the right hon. gentleman had denied, and had proved to the satisfaction of every member of this House so that no member on this side would dare to contradict his statement, that no contractor or official had contributed to this testimonial, I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman: Does he himself think that that is a sufficient answer to the question propounded by the hon. member for West Algoma? There are different ways of viewing this question, of course, and the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), in introducing this question in 1891 was very careful to say that he had no intention of entering on the vexed question whether or not a minister of the Crown ought, under any circumstances, to accept a present while he was in office. Now, the case of the Rt. Hon. Sir John Macdonald has been referred to. I will not occupy more than a moment on that subject. I would only point out that the remarks made in 1891 by Sir Richard Cartwright and by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who now leads the House, showed that the testimonial to Sir John Macdonald was raised in 1870 when he was lying on what was supposed to be his deathbed, that his family was unprovided for, and both the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and Sir Richard Cartwright thought it a most laudable and most praiseworthy spirit, a most honourable spirit, that actuated the gentlemen who raised such a testimonial at such a time, for all the objections that naturally apply to a testimonial to a living statesman had practically ceased to apply to Sir John Macdonald then. And yet, Sir, even in that case of Sir John Macdonald, Sir Richard Cartwright, in referring to it, used this language,—and I wish particularly to call attention to these words, because they justify my statement that, even if every word that the present leader of the House had said, were accepted by this side of the House, the real question has not been answered:

It was perfectly well known that he——

That is, Sir John Macdonald.

—was in deeply embarrassed circumstances; deeply indebted I believe, and that but a very slender provision indeed had been made for his family. Under these circumstances, if ever, it was quite justifiable for the hon. gentleman's personal friends and admirers to have contributed for the purpose of relieving his family from any danger of want, and had two or three very obvious and reasonable precautions been taken no blame could have been attached to the parties who were engaged in getting up that testimonial. Unfortunately, these precautions were not taken, unfortunately, publicity was not given, as I have always said publicity should be given to the names of persons who subscribed.

The language of Sir Richard Cartwright seems perfectly clear and distinct. But his were not the only words heard on that occasion. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who now leads the House spoke on the same subject. He said:—

The testimonial to Sir John Macdonald, as was said by my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) was conceived in a very proper and laudable spirit at a critical time in his life, when his life was despaired of, and with a view of providing for his family, since he had not been able himself to provide for them. So far, so good. The only thing, with which my hon. friend found fault in regard to what was done on that occasion by the friends of Sir John Macdonald, was that, instead of being done publicly, as it should have been done, it was done in secret.

Later on, the right hon. gentleman said:—

The Minister of Justice said a moment ago in reference to the testimonial offered to the hon. Minister of Public Works, the member for Three Rivers, that that hon. gentleman did not know who were his subscribers. Sir, if he did not know, why did he not look at the list? If the hon. gentleman did not know, it was because he chose to remain ignorant of what were the names on the list, and if he chose to be ignorant of the names which were on that list, is it not because his moral sense told him that he might there find the names of persons giving contributions, which should not be accepted at all? Is it not simply because his conscience told him that if he were to look at that list he would find there the names of men who were every day suppliants in his office for favours? That is the reason why the hon. Minister of Public Works did not choose to have a look at that list. If that is not the reason why did he choose to be blind on that matter? Then, I call on the hon. gentlemen opposite to tell what is the reason, if there could be any good reason for it. Certainly there could be nothing wrong of the admirers of a man in public life coming to his help and rescuing him; but it seems to me that the recipient of such favours would naturally be too glad to know who are the persons to whom he owes gratitude, and if he does not choose to know who are those to whom he owes gratitude, it must be because his moral sense tells him that he would find there names that would be a condemnation of his accepting such a testimonial.

It seems clear from the language of Sir Richard Cartwright and the language of the right hon. gentleman who now leads the House that it was with them a sine qua non not only that contractors should not subscribe, but that the testimonial itself should be published, that the public, knowing who had subscribed, would have a guarantee that the contribution was bona fide. Now it is all very well for any hon. gentleman to stand up in this House and say that he has seen the list and that he knows that every name on that list was the name of a person who was justified in contributing to such a fund. Any gentleman might make that statement with absolute truthfulness, but he may not know the circumstances under which any name was attached, and he may not know that the names attached to any particular list were not the names of the individuals whose hands had gone into their pockets and who had put their names to that subscription. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says, going even farther than the right hon. leader of the government, says:—

I have observed, Sir, that some of that hon. gentleman's apologists have undertaken to mitigate the error, or the crime, call it what you will, which was committed by the reception of that testimonial under the circumstances by the plea, which I think was also advanced in the other case, that the hon. gentleman did not know who had subscribed to his testimonial. Such a plea, in my judgment, is a direct aggravation of the offence. A public minister has no right whatever to allow any gift to be made to him unless it is done publicly, and unless he knows from what sources it proceeds; and, Sir, I would say this, that if a minister of the Crown tells me that he has accepted a gift not knowing and not choosing to know from whom it proceeded, so far from regarding such a plea as a mitigation, I say that such a plea raises a presumption of guilt. It was his duty to know it; it was his duty to find out; it was his duty to see that not one penny went into his pockets or into his coffers unless it came from such sources that he could honourably and fairly receive it.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am quite prepared to admit that a testimonial might be presented to a public man in this country, to an hon. gentleman who had given the best years of his life to the country. I am quite prepared to admit that a testimonial of $120,000, or five times that amount might be presented under such circumstances that it would reflect equal honour on the donors and the recipient and I am equally sure that every one will agree that a testimonial might be presented under circumstances which would not reflect honour on either. Now, the question before the House is where, within the broad range of these two extremes, the case to which attention has been called by my hon. friend from Algoma falls. I think that in view of the utterances of the then opposition and of the present government, made in 1891, in which it was so explicitly laid down that it was a presumption of guilt if publicity was not part of the presentation, my hon. friend from Algoma was justified in bringing this matter to the attention of the House. We have read the accounts of the presentation that have appeared in the various organs of the government, to say nothing of the opposition press, and will just read what the 'Free Press,' the government organ of this city, says:

The list of donors is, of course, anonymous, and Mr. Fielding is made aware only of the fact that the future of himself and his family is provided for.

When we find the government organ in the capital stating that this donation is anonymous, that Mr. Fielding knows nothing about it, and when we find on the pages of 'Hansard' that two of his colleagues made the statement in the House in 1891 that under such circumstances the minister who received a testimonial without taking the trouble to inquire who the donors were rests under a presumption of guilt, or under the presumption that there is something wrong, I think that my hon. friend from Algoma would be amply justified in calling the attention of the House to the matter.

Let me just for a moment remind the House of the standard which existed in another House and in another country. It may be remembered by many hon. members of this House that at the time that George III. was about to be incapacitated from ruling by a mental affliction it was well known that as soon as the regent, his son, was appointed, Mr. Pitt, then premier, would be driven from office. I find in Stanhope's 'Life of Pitt' this statement:

It was well known by the public that Pitt would not be continued one hour in office by the regent. It was known that he had already taken measures for returning to his first profession. It was also known, perhaps, that his neglect of his private affairs had involved him in some debts, which he trusted to discharge by an industrious application of his talents at the bar. At this very time, however, there was held, by public advertisement, a meeting of the principal bankers and moneyed men of London, anxious to tender him on his retirement from office a substantial mark of their esteem. The sum of £50,000 was first proposed, but, so great was the enthusiasm, that in the space of forty-eight hours this sum was doubled, and Mr. George Rose, as his secretary of the treasury, was requested to press upon him, in the manner most likely to be acceptable, a free gift of £100,000. But Mr. Pitt answered his friend as follows: 'No consideration upon earth shall ever induce me to accept it.'

That was in 1789. Time rolled on, and in 1801, a couple of years later, Mr. Pitt was about to step down from office to begin the practice of his profession. He was at that time loaded with debts. The writer says:

So long as Mr. Pitt continued in great office his creditors were content to wait. But when they learnt that he was resigning, and that two-thirds of his present income would be lost, the impatience of some among them could no longer be restrained. The demands upon Pitt grew to be of the most pressing kind. There was reason to apprehend from day to day that an execution might be put into his house; that his rooms might be left without furniture, and his stable without horses. He determined on the sale of Holwood; but considering the heavy mortgages on that little property, its sale could only afford him on the balance a most scanty sum.

Pitt was too proud to utter a word of complaint even to his nearest friends. But they, and even, though in less degree, the public at large, soon became aware of the extremities to which he was reduced. . . . Next there was a renewal of the generous offer which the merchants of London had made Mr. Pitt in 1789. A deputation from them waited on him to state that they had already subscribed for his use a sum of one hundred thousand pounds, which should be paid into any banking house which he chose, and so that he should never know the name of any one of the subscribers. This noble gift was, however, as nobly declined. If (said Mr. Pitt) he were ever again in office, he should always feel abashed and constrained when any request was addressed to him from the city, lest by non-compliance he should be thwarting the wishes of some among his unknown benefactors.

That was the standard laid down in another chamber, and in another House, a House on which this is supposed to be patterned and moulded. I have only one word more. It seems to me that in justice to the hon. Minister of Finance the right hon. leader of the government should lay before the House the names of the contributors to this fund. Rightly or wrongly—and far be it from me to say rightly, for probably the newspapers who are commenting upon the facts know as much as myself, and I know nothing about them—insinuations are being made. It is an unfair thing to allow the insinuation to be made in the press of the country that the Bank of Montreal, one of the largest institutions with which the Minister of Finance is dealing, contributed $25,000 to this testimonial. That is one thing that the people of this country should know, because it would be an unfortunate thing if the suspicion were raised among the people that $25,000 was contributed improperly. It is an unfortunate thing that a great corporation like the steel corporation, one of the large industries in the country and having more intimate relations with the Minister of Finance perhaps than any other members of the government should be charged with having contributed to this fund. We all know that every year fortunes may be made or unmade by the stroke of the Finance Minister's pen either in bounties, or in deals for naval supplies, dock-yards, the construction of railways, and all these matters which are matters in regard to which the Minister of Finance has to take action, and it is not fair to the people of the country, it is not fair to the Finance Minister, it is not fair to his brother members in this House on whichever side they may be, that charges and insinuations should be going through the press of the country without the government giving all the facts and putting a stop to it. Therefore, without for one moment insinuating myself that there was anything wrong in this testimonial that, of course, I know nothing about, and I, while frankly admitting that the fund might have been raised by dollar subscriptions from 120,000 admirers of the Minister of Finance, it must be manifest that while it might be that the minister might have said under such circumstances that these statements in the press would not be justified, I still think that we are warranted in saying that the right hon. gentleman should lay before the House, and before the people of the country a list of the contributors in order to find out whether the condition which the Prime Minister himself laid down as being necessary to an honest testimonial would be found to exist in this.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will you allow me to say that I have just received a note from a member of the committee stating that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company did not contribute one dollar to that fund.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Law books and books of reference for library, and binding of same, $6,000.

Mr. J. HAGGART. That is a large sum for books surely.

Mr. BUREAU. That amount was added on account of new subscriptions.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Administration of justice—salary to stipendiary magistrate for the Northwest Territories, $3,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that the same as last year?

Mr. BUREAU. This is a new position. Justice has been dispensed in the Northwest Territories by various officers. There has been some dispute as to jurisdiction as to cases arising in the Northwest. For instance, an Indian was killed there, and there was no one to try the person accused of the murder until a special commissioner and a jury were appointed for the case.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will a member of parliament be appointed to this position?

Mr. BUREAU. No application has been received yet.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is this officer to devote all his time to his duties?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, so I understand.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member (Mr. Bureau) ought to know.

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, he is to devote his whole time.

Labour—Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, $20,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many cases of industrial disputes have been referred to arbitration during the past year?

Mr. KING. Thirty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many strikes have there been in which the Act has not been used?

Mr. KING. During the past year, all except four have been settled under the Act.

Mr. J. D. REID. How about the Dominion coal strike? Did the minister take part in that?

Mr. KING. A board of investigation was appointed to inquire, and presented its report, but the report was not accepted by the employees. Later on, the deputy minister of the department made a full report on the matter, and what he stated has since turned out to be correct—the strike has been declared off, and the men have returned on conditions as they existed at the time the award was given.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is an increase here of $4,000 over last year. What is the reason for that?

Mr. KING. The increase is apparent rather than real. The sum of $4,000 was voted in the supplementary estimates last year. Thus the amount is the same as last year.

Department of Labour—Technical Education Commission, $25,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has anything been done yet?

Mr. KING. The personnel of the commission has not as yet been determined.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the policy of the minister with regard to carrying out a resolution of the House?

Mr. KING. This virtually carries out the purpose of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). It is to appoint a commission to inquire into the needs for the promotion of industrial training in the Dominion, and to give power to the commissioners to visit other countries with a view to ascertaining the manner in which these countries have developed technical training.

Mr. GERVAIS. What countries is it intended the commission shall visit?

Mr. KING. The United States, Great Britain, France, Germany, and if it should appear that it would be of advantage to the commission to visit any other European countries in that connection, they would have liberty to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When is it expected the report will be made?

Mr. KING. When the money has been appropriated steps will be taken to appoint the commission forthwith, and it is altogether probable the commission will require a considerable period in which to carry on its work. It will not be possible to conclude its labours in less than a year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will there be one or more than one on the commission?

Mr. KING. Possibly five.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will they be officials of the government or outsiders?

Mr. KING. I think they will not be officials of the government.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think that in appointing a commission of that kind some particular official, such as the deputy minister would be better qualified to inquire into matters of that kind than possibly some politician who does not know anything about technical education. I suppose this is to be put through to give a trip to the old country to four or five politicians who will bring back a report. The minister has visited these different countries, and knows something about this matter. Instead of sending such a man, probably four or five political heelers will be sent to investigate the industrial situation in these countries.

Mr. KING. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the aim of the government in the selection of the personnel of this commission will be to obtain men eminently qualified to render useful service to the country in connection with the work which they are called upon to perform. They will be chosen primarily for their ability to give satisfactory service on the commission. As to Mr. Acland, the deputy minister of the department, acting, I quite agree it would be difficult to find any one who would fill a position of that kind more ably, but the commission will possibly be engaged in this work for a year and the deputy's services will be required in the department here. What is true of the deputy in this respect is also true as respects other officers of the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. We have heard that story before about the government engaging men with knowledge of these affairs, but generally some one who knows nothing about the subject is appointed. The minister, while acting as deputy minister, was sent abroad, he was all over the world, and since he has been a minister he has again been all over the world inquiring about these technical matters. He has had his deputy all over the world, and yet he comes here to-night and says he does not know anything about technical education and has to appoint a commission to tell him what he shall do. When the minister was appointed to his present position, the reason given was that he knew so much about industrial matters. There were members in the House who had served for a number of years and who knew all about political matters but they were turned aside, they knew nothing about industrial matters. These men have served their party, fought the battles. There is the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Tolmie) who knows all about it; there is the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty) who has employed labour, and we have a number of men from Ontario qualified to fill that position, but still the Prime Minister had to bring the deputy in because he knew so much more than these gentlemen did. I think it is a reflection on a gentleman of the ability of the hon. member for South Wellington for instance, that he should have been passed over and the deputy minister brought in. The Prime Minister should at once depose the Minister of Labour and bring in the member for Wellington or some gentleman like that. I believe that hon. gentleman does know something, even although he has not travelled abroad, and judging from its being necessary to appoint this commission, the minister certainly is not qualified for the position after all his travels.

Library of parliament, $50,212.50.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it contemplated to build a new library soon or to do over the present one? The library, it seems to me, has got to be a disgrace to parliament.

Mr. FIELDING. No. The matter has been talked of from time to time, but no steps have been taken. I rather agree with my hon. friend: the library is overcrowded, and the time is close at hand when some reformation will have to be made.

Royal Northwest Mounted Police, $753,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is an increase of $5,000 in the pay of the force, and a decrease of $5,000 in subsistence, which makes the total amount the same as last year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why should there be an increase in pay and a decrease in subsistence?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The increase in pay is due to the fact that we have increased the force from 600 men to 700; and as the country is getting settled, our subsistence is a little cheaper than it was formerly.

Royal Northwest Mounted Police — rifle range, Regina, $15,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is a pretty big price to pay for a piece of land for a rifle range. How many acres does it take?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. 296 acres.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is about $65 an acre for land in the North West. Does the Prime Minister know that there is any amount of land given away there for the settler?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not in Regina.

Mr. J. D. REID. You do not have to have the rifle range inside the city limits.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have to have it where our barracks are. At present we have a 1,000 yards range, and this is to give us a 2,000 yards range.

Mr. J. D. REID. This is the first time I have heard of land being sold for $65 an acre in the North West. Around Regina, if they can get $30 or $40 an acre, with buildings and improvements, they think they are getting a very good price. $65 an acre for vacant land seems to be quite a big price.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is in strong contrast with the lands of the Indians at Selkirk that sold for $5 an acre.

Mr. J. D. REID. From whom was this land purchased?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not purchased yet, but it is the intention to purchase it. It is land adjacent to our present barracks.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why should they pay such an awful price for land adjacent? When they buy a new rifle range for localities in Ontario they go two or three miles out of town. It is not necessary to purchase land at $70 an acre practically within the city limits for a rifle range. It seems to me the Prime Minister is getting a little extravagant. I think he ought to be more careful. When he comes to pay $15,000 for a rifle range he is paying a pretty big price.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am satisfied that the land can be got at a fair price. All precautions will be taken that we are not imposed upon, and that we only pay a fair price.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is the gentleman who owns this land?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have a telegram from the commander of the forces, Commissioner Perry, stating that the land is owned by Hamilton and March. There are 96 acres suitable for rifle range, two miles from the barracks.

Mr. J. D. REID. Two miles from the barracks the land is $65 an acre?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We ask an appropriation of $15,000 to buy this rifle range. The matter is not concluded. Every precaution will be taken, and next year the hon. gentleman can move for the correspondence and see whether we have abused the confidence of parliament.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the Prime Minister know this man Hamilton?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Never heard of him before.

Mr. J. D. REID. It strikes me that is the name of a gentleman that was mixed up in the Robins land deal out in the Northwest. That is the reason I am a little suspicious.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend will be suspicious without that.

Customs—salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, including overtime of officers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $50,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is this not put in the main estimates, and why are you tacking it on the Civil Service Act? I thought we had done with that.

Mr. PATERSON. We want $50,000. I am asking for $75,000 to prevent them from coming in for supplementaries during the current year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it not possible to make some reasonable estimate in time to put it in the main estimates?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. PATERSON. The main estimates were prepared in October last. We thought we would require $75,000 extra. My accountant tells me that $50,000 of that has gone on new appointments, additional officers we have had to appoint.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is the trouble of appointing so many of these gentlemen that have to be provided for. Were these men required, or was it necessary to appoint a lot of new men for political reasons?

Mr. PATERSON. Here is a list of the additional officers appointed since the main estimates were prepared on the 1st of October: 1 at Beachburg, $700; 2 at Fort William, $800 each; 1 additional at Dundas, $800; 2 additional at Cobalt, $600 and $650; 1 additional at Oshawa, $700; 1 at Ottawa, $800; 1 at Owen Sound, $650; 1 at St. Catharines, $1,200; 1 at St. Thomas, $650; 5 at Toronto, at $800, $600, $800, $600 and $800. Since then the collector at Toronto has asked for 4 more boys with salaries of $400 each, and 4 men with salaries of $800 each. These were put on within the last few days.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are these all appraisers?

Mr. PATERSON. No, they are landing waiters, lockers and clerks.

Mr. J. D. REID The minister has not explained the reason why this amount is increased. I can tell the minister why it has increased in many instances. The minister knows that whenever a political heeler wants a position he has to superannuate some of his officers to make a vacancy. I will give him a couple of cases. The minister knows that the collector at Prescott was superannuated against his will although he was doing his work in a proper manner. Provision had to be made for another man and of course the collector had to be superannuated. The result was that $600 or $800 per annum had to be paid to this superannuated official. The minister superannuated the collector at Port Stanley to make room for another man. This was one of the best officers in the service. I am satisfied that if the minister would give us a list of those who were superannuated during the last year or since October to make room for men who have been active workers, we would see where most of this $50,000 had gone. I can give the hon. gentleman instances of where they superannuated a postmaster sixty years of age on account of old age and appointed a man sixty-seven or sixty-eight years in his place. The Minister of Finance seems to pass all these things without any protest although he is the guardian of the public purse. This explains why we are spending $100,000,000 a year. In the Customs, Public Works, Militia and other departments there are increases in expenditure because of the superannuation of officials against their will in order to put others in their places. If the minister would stop increasing the expenditure by superannuating officials, and if he would increase the salaries of some of his officials so that they could live a little better, and so that he could get a better class of officials, I think it would be more satisfactory.

Mr. PATERSON. I suppose that I need not say any more?

Mr. J. D. REID. If the minister admits that this $50,000 of increased expenditure is practically all accounted for by the superannuation of officials against their will in order to enable him to appoint ward heelers in their places I will have nothing more to say.

Mr. FIELDING. I beg to deny the statement of the hon. gentleman that men are being superannuated without cause. The returns of superannuations are brought down to the House every year, and as far as I recollect this is the first time that I have ever heard any question raised as to the propriety of the superannuation of any officer. It is nonsense to generalize. If the hon. gentleman believes that any particular officer has been improperly superannuated let him designate the name, time, and place and we will look up the records and show that the superannuation is amply justified.

Mr. J. D. REID. When the minister says that this is the first time that the question has ever been raised he does not speak with a knowledge of the facts.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no recollection of any question ever being raised as to the superannuation of any official. If it has been brought up by somebody else it has escaped my notice. If my hon. friend will give the name of any official whom he states has been improperly superannuated I will undertake at the first opportunity to give him the information, and I think I will satisfy my hon. friend himself that superannuation was called for by the circumstances.

Mr. J. D. REID. Of course, according to the law, if an officer has served thirty-five years he may be superannuated whether he wishes it or not.

Mr. FIELDING. He can be superannuated at any time whether he wishes it or not if in the public interest it is deemed desirable.

Mr. J. D. REID. Exactly. But, I do not think it is fair that a man who has served the department up to 65 years of age and who is as active as the Minister of Finance himself should be superannuated against his will.

Mr. FIELDING. Give us the name and place.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of Finance was a member of the government at the time the postmaster at Kingston was superannuated. That gentleman who was about 60 years was superannuated on account of old age, and the minister knows that they appointed a man who was older than the man who was superannuated. Then, there was the case of the Collector at Port Stanley who was superannuated although he was active and doing his work well.

Mr. PATERSON. Why do you say that?

Mr. J. D. REID. I say that from information. Take the Collector at Prescott; he was active and doing his work all right.

Mr. PATERSON. How do you know?

Mr. J. D. REID. He was there every day doing his work and not the slightest complaint was made with regard to him. I am satisfied that the minister cannot say that that man was not doing his work as well as he had been doing it for the last twenty years. He had been there twenty-five or thirty years but it was necessary to make room for another gentleman. The President of the Liberal Association was appointed. I am not finding fault with that gentleman. He is all right, but I object that there should be $600 or $800 added to the expenditure in that way.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Customs mentioned a new officer at St. Catharines. Will he tell me the name of the gentleman and what the new office is?

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Geo. Beggy has been appointed appraiser there.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it a new office?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was it found necessary to have a new officer there?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, it was thought so.

Mr. WILCOX. I would like to ask the minister why the officers at Windsor are not paid overtime when they work. I have been informed that they go on at eight in the morning, that they are supposed to be relieved at eight o'clock at night, but that while they are compelled to work five and six hours overtime, they are only allowed two hours pay for it. What is the reason that they are not paid for the full overtime they work?

Mr. PATERSON. Well, we think that if a man works from eight to six, and puts in two hours besides, it is as much as we can expect a man to do.

Mr. WILCOX. But he is compelled to work. The service demands it.

Mr. LANCASTER. And he does work.

Mr. WILCOX. Yes, he does stay till two o'clock.

Mr. PATERSON. In some cases they have to do that. Facilities must be given in trade and commerce, but we think that on an average you cannot reasonably expect a man to do more than two hours extra.

Mr. WILCOX. Does not the minister think he is justly entitled to payment for the full overtime he works?

Mr. PATERSON. It is true that they are out, but they are waiting for trains, and may be they are not engaged in bodily work, if I might use that expression, all the time. They can perhaps lie down and rest between trains or something like that. But they must be there. I know it is not a very nice business, but we try to arrange it, and put on new men so that they will not have to work more than two hours extra.

Mr. WILCOX. It is not at the station, it is at the ferry boats. Sometimes he works till one and two o'clock in the morning, and it is impossible for him to get remuneration after ten o'clock.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, there are some on the ferry boats.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister gets a good fat vote every year to pay for this extra time, and I understand the men are paid for extra time at the harbours of Halifax, Montreal and ports of that kind. Why not pay them at the port of Windsor?

Mr. SPROULE. I notice you say: 'Notwitstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,' why do you put that in?

Mr. PATERSON. Just on account of this overtime we are discussing.

Mr. SPROULE. The Civil Service Act does not allow you to pay for overtime unless you put that in?

Mr. PATERSON. That is the reason.

Customs—salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, including pay for overtime of officers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $2,157,500.

Mr. PATERSON. That is the amount voted, and the reason we ask a supplementary of $50,000 was because $50,000 of this vote has been absorbed by new appointments. I do not know where the member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) has gone to, but I would have liked to give him an answer. I do not think he was fair in his remarks. It could not have been superannuation. These are new men that have gone on. There are 24 who have been put on in Ontario involving $16,760. In Quebec 11 new officers were put on involving $7,200 in the aggregate. In New Brunswick 4 officers were added at $2,250, and in Manitoba 6 officers were added at $4,600. With reference to Winnipeg, I feel we are to blame for not having more men there. But if Winnipeg was to be properly manned, I suppose we would require to put on about 5 more. We are willing to run the service if you are willing to let the work go on, but the men are doing everything they can. Winnipeg is a port of $4,000,000. About this superannuation, I would not like the idea to go abroad that there is anything weak. If there is anything weak, it is because we hesitate to put on the men we need.

Civil Government—Department of Trade and Commerce, salaries and contingencies, $7,425.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a small increase there due to the appointment of two extra clerks at $500 each, and there is the appointment of an actuary in the annuities branch also. Otherwise the staff is the same as before.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions, $1 647,200.66.

Mr. FIELDING. These are the steamship subsidies. Although they are very numerous it will be observed that with two or three exceptions, the services and the appropriations are the same as last year.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. There are only four increases. You will explain them when you come to them?

Steam service between Canada and Australia, $180,509.

Mr. SPROULE. How is the trade between Canada and Australia developing?

Mr. FIELDING. There is some increase, not very rapid, but there is an increase.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the trade now?

Mr. FIELDING. The total is about $3,000,000, both imports and exports. I have not the figures at hand, but the deputy assures me there is a moderate increase, though not very rapid.

Ocean and mail service between Canada and Great Britain, $600,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any one to answer for the Minister of Agriculture? It seems to me that some information would be very desirable with regard to the cold storage on the steamships, and the rates charged for transportation. It seems to me that the company are making a high charge for transportation and that the cold storage, while improved, is not altogether the best.

Mr. FIELDING. I will see that the attention of the deputy minister is called to the hon. gentleman's remarks.

Steam services between Canada and Mexico on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, $125,000.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Explain the increase of $25,000.

Mr. FIELDING. It is due to the fact that the Mexican government abandoned their subsidy, and we were likely to lose the service.

Steam service between Halifax and Newfoundland by Cape Breton ports, $4,000.

Mr. SPROULE. There are a number of small subsidies here. Can the hon. minister tell us in a general way whether there is any substantial trade kept up, for which we are paying this money, or are these boats doing merely a coasting service, whether there is much trade or not?

Mr. FIELDING. The report of the department contains all the information the hon. gentleman desires. In most cases it will be found that these small services are valuable in establishing communication between points which are distant from a railway, and the most convenient station, thus extending the benefits of railway communication to points which would otherwise be without any communication at all.

Steam service between Halifax, St. John's, Newfoundland, Liverpool, $20,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How often are the trips made?

Mr. FIELDING. Once in every seventeen days.

Steam service between Prince Rupert, B.C., and Queen Charlotte islands, $7,600.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $2,600.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a service performed by a steamer called the 'Bruno,', owned by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company; during November, December, January, February and March, not less than two trips each month; the remaining seven months of the year, not less than four round trips each month; subsidy $200 a trip.

Mr. SPROULE. Does it carry any mail?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. These boats are subsidized to carry the mails without any extra pay.

Winter steam service between Rivière du Loup, Tadoussac and other St. Lawrence ports, $2,500.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. This is a new service.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Have you made a contract?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, a contract was recently entered into for the amount of $8,000.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. It has not been laid on the table.

Mr. FIELDING. No. It would come within the next annual report in the usual way.

Steam service between Canada and Cuba, $25,000.

Mr. SPROULE. On a monthly service this is a little over $2,000 a trip. Does there seem to be a prospect of reasonable trade springing up from that place?

Mr. FIELDING. This subsidy, while it is designed to cover any traffic that might offer, was provided with special reference to the development of the potato trade between New Brunswick and Cuba. There is a considerable market, and this is to handle the trade in that article to a very large degree.

Mr. SPROULE. So this is for the benefit of the Irish.

Trade and Commerce, Chinese Immigration Act, $7,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Does there seem to be an increasing number of the Chinese coming in of late compared with last year?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the number is increasing. When the tax was first imposed it was almost prohibitive; quite a number seem to be able to gather up the money and pay the tax and come in. The number is not alarming, but it has shown some considerable increase.

Trade commissioners and commercial agencies, $95,000.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a gradual increase in that service as additional appointments are made. I think it is rather desirable we should make additional appointments in different portions of the world, and the expenditure will increase from time to time to that end.

Mr. JAMESON. What new appointments have been made in the past year?

Mr. FIELDING. An additional appointment has just been made to Germany; that is the only new one recently.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Has a successor to Mr. Larke been appointed?

Mr. FIELDING. One of the officers in the British service has been transferred to Germany, and that place will have to be filled. Mr. Larke's position is also vacant. Arrangements are being made to fill these now.

Administering Old Age Annuities Act, $35,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What accounts for the increase of $10,000?

Mr. FIELDING. The system is comparatively new, and as it extends its operations we must expect an increase from time to time.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Are you paying the postmasters who are acting as agents?

Mr. FIELDING. The postmasters receive a small commission on any business they bring to the department.

Steam service, Atlantic ports and Australia and New Zealand, $120,000.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. This is a new service?

Mr. FIELDING. This is to provide for an Atlantic service to Australia.

Hitherto our service with Australia has been on the Pacific. This is to give us an Atlantic service. It is almost impossible to carry expensive freight across the continent and ship it by Vancouver.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. With whom was this contract made?

Mr. FIELDING. The New Zealand Shipping Co.

Mr. DANIEL. Where does it go from on the Atlantic coast?

Mr. FIELDING. From Montreal in the summer, and from St. John or Halifax in the winter.

Civil government—departments generally —contingencies—care and cleaning of departmental buildings, including an amount of $50 each to E. Snowden and W. H. Jeffrey, for firing noon gun, $54,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is for the cleaning service of the various departments, and, as additional offices are rented, or additional buildings constructed, there must be additional employees in the cleaning service.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. This is a vote for departments generally. My hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. Wilcox) wishes to say a few words on the subject of fisheries.

Mr. OLIVER J. WILCOX (N. Essex). I appreciate fully the kindness of the House in affording me an opportunity at this time to make a statement on the subject of great importance to the people I represent. I had intended to speak at some length on the question of the international regulations for the preservation of food fishes in international waters, but, last week, I was very suddenly called home on what proved to be a very sad errand, and during my absence the Bill was brought down. These regulations affect the fisheries in the riding of N. Essex, and affect them very unjustly. They are said to be uniform regulations. In Essex there are twenty fish stations, and 150 men on the south side of the Detroit river engaged in the fishing business. They and their forefathers have been engaged in fishing for a hundred years. But under these regulations they will be absolutely deprived of this means of livelihood. On the American side of the Detroit river, there are no fishing stations and no fishing carried on. Consequently, the application of these regulations will deprive 150 men on the Canadian side of the opportunity to carry on their occupation, and there will be absolutely no giving up on the other side. Permit me to read from the address delivered by Mr. Wm. McGregor who represented N. Essex in 1895 upon this very question. He said:—

We have petitioned parliament and the government through the county councils of the counties in which we reside; we have petitioned through the town councils of the different towns along the borders; and we have petitioned this House through the townships. We have also had individual petitions asking for a change of policy in reference to the fishing regulations, but, Sir, we have had no answer to any one of them. We feel that this is a great grievance. We feel that our people having invested a very large amount of money in the purchase of land for fishing purposes and then being deprived of the fish, are obliged to suffer a great loss. They have not only invested in the lands, but they have cleared the rivers for the purpose of fishing, and the fact that they have not been able to utilize their means of livelihood has left many of them in debt. They have lost their boats, and their docks and many other investments they have made.

He says further:—

We feel that to be a great grievance. Talk about the Czar of Russia and his severity to Russian Jews. Sir, no Czar of Russia ever treated the Russian Jews as the people of Essex have been treated by these fishery laws.

There has been some relaxation of the laws since 1884, but under the regulations now proposed these fishermen will be deprived of the right of carrying on their operations. I will not detain the House at length, but I merely wish to put on record some petitions and letters in this case. The first is a resolution on this subject of the township of Sandwich East as follows:—

Sandwich, East, March 5, 1910.

Moved by Deputy Reeve Peter E. Ducharme, seconded by Councillor Israel Souillière, That the council of the township of Sandwich, East, approve the requisition made by the Canadian Fishermen's Association, and that they also ask the honourable members for the north and south ridings of Essex to join their efforts in order to obtain the amendments asked for in said requisition. Carried unanimously.

I, John Dugal, clerk of the township of Sandwich, East, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a resolution passed by the said council on the 5th day of March, 1910.

Dated at Sandwich, East, this 10th day of March, 1910

JOHN DUGAL,
Clerk of Sandwich, East.

I have also received the following letter from the Essex county branch of the Canadian Fishermen's Association, as follows:—

Tecumseh, North Essex, Ontario,
March 7, 1910.

O. J. Wilcox, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—The Essex County Branch of the Canadian Fishermen's Association wish to call your attention to the manner in which the interests of the fishermen of your riding have been lost sight of by the framers of the International Fisheries Regulations, which it is proposed to enforce beginning next season and to request that you endeavour to have the regulations altered, even to the point of bringing the subject up in parliament if necessary.

The Americans, as usual in all international arrangements they have made with Canada, have secured all the advantage.

In Lake Erie where they fish 2,268 miles of gill nets (eleven strings stretching from the mouth of Detroit river to Buffalo) as against 290 miles fished by Canadians and 2,150 pound and hoop nets as against 272 pounds nets fished by Canadians, they have succeeded in having all close seasons done away with entirely; the same is true of Lake Huron and Superior.

In all these areas where the Americans catch many times as many fish as the Canadians, there will be no close seasons enforced, but on the Detroit river, where there are no commercial fisheries on the American side, they insist on the waters being close to fishing altogether because only the Canadians will suffer in consequence.

It happens that even though all this advantage has been secured by the Americans, still because the Saginaw bay fishermen find the mesh regulations will work to their disadvantage, they have demanded that the regulations shall be changed by the Senate before being adopted by that body, and they are to be changed accordingly. Now the new regulations contain two changes which are an absolute hardship to the Essex County fishermen, and we trust you will have the regulations changed in the same way the Saginaw bay fishermen can get them changed, one is to strike out the close season for sturgeon for Lake St. Clair, and the other the prohibition for net fishing in the Detroit river.

If the Americans can demand changes, surely the Canadians can insist on such changes as they desire before consenting to the American proposals. After all the Canadians have been hood-winked by the Americans in the whole matter.

The federal government has no jurisdiction or authority to regulate the fisheries which are State property, and Canada is agreeing to a set of international regulations which will never be enforced on the American side of the line.

The Amercians have contended that close seasons are unnecessary; if close seasons are unnecessary, if the lakes are provided with sufficient hatcheries and the international regulations are based on that contention, we therefore wish to recommend strongly that our Canadian hatcheries must at once be greatly increased in capacity and whitefish alone be propagated, and we would also point out that the only way to secure a proper supply of eggs for hatchery purposes is to allow net fishing in the Detroit river where the eggs can be secured from the fishermen in large numbers and in prime condition.

Yours truly,
ARSAS DROUILLARD, President.
H. C. LAFOREST, Vice-President,
ARCHIE LABUTE, Secretary.

These documents set forth the condition of affairs in relation to these fishery regulations. I will not detain the House further but it does seem to me that it would be reasonable for the government, before these regulations are brought into operation—and, I may say, they are brought into operation by proclamation of the Governor in council—to send an officer of the department to the Detroit river and investigate the conditions in order that justice may be done to the fishermen on the Canadian side of the Detroit river.

Public buildings—Quebec—Rigaud, $7,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to know what the population of that place is?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is about 2,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not protest against the expenditure of this money, but I desire to point out to the minister the unfairness of the way in which the public buildings are distributed. At the beginning of this session, on December 3, I drew the attention of the government for the fourth or fifth time to the need of a public building in the very up-to-date and prosperous village of Grimsby, in my county. Grimsby is the centre of the most flourishing part of the well-known fruit growing and garden district of the Niagara peninsula, a place of about the same population as Rigaud, and a place that is absolutely starving for the need of a new post office building. The postal revenue is $4,500, the postmaster is allowed a rental of $225, and a salary of $1,518. Rigaud has only a revenue of $1,177, the salary paid to the postmaster is $524 and he is allowed $50 for rent. Grimsby has just about four times the postal revenue of Rigaud, it is patronized by a very progressive agricultural population, who do an enormous amount of post office business, as well as other business. Away back in 1904 the people were complaining of the need of a post office building, and the then Postmaster General saw the force of their complaints. If the hon. gentleman will look at pages 5585 to 5697 of 'Hansard' of that year, he will see that the then Postmaster General promised that before next spring a proper building would be furnished. These people are patient as well as progressive. They have constantly asked for this building. The Minister of Public Works will find that at the beginning of the present session I asked him a question about this post office, on page 967 of the 'Hansard,' and in his answer he said that if the place would be satisfied with a building worth $4,000 or $5,000 he would certainly take the matter into his favourable consideration with a view of complying with the request. Now, as the session is closing, I will be expected to report to these people what our authorities are doing. Look at the situation. The owner of the store who was also postmaster receives $220 a year rent for the post office. If the minister could spare the time to go up there I would like to take him into that post office; we could not both get in at the same time unless we went in in Indian file allowing him to go ahead.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are both a good size.

Mr. LANCASTER. We are both a good size, and we would be expected to be good sized men if we lived or associated long with the people of Grimsby. They expect to have men of some size both mentally and physically. The post office is carried on in a space three and a half or four feet wide and about thirty feet long. That is all the room there is, and the people have to enter in single file and turn around and come out into the street like a lot of penitentiary convicts. If there are more than ten or fifteen people there the remainder have to stay out in the rain or snow at night because they cannot get inside. They get their mails three times a day, from one direction and twice from another direction. The postmaster is getting $220 rent while if you spent six or seven thousand dollars on a new building you would not only have room for the post office, but you would have accommodation upstairs for the Customs and Inland Revenue, and the interest on the cost of the building would not be more than you are paying in rent. The people are contributing three times as much to the revenue of the country as the post office is costing. The salary of the postmaster is $1,500, and the revenue is $4,573; 300 per cent profit is going to the country from the business that these people are doing at this post office. A $5,000 or $6,000 building would satisfy the people of Grimsby. I am satisfied that the Postmaster General is doing what he can to get us these post office facilities, but as he tells me, the matter is in the hands of the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Public Works said that he would look into it and he certainly told us that he was going to give these people some accommodation. They are contributing a lot of money to the revenue. These people are producing thousands and thousands of dollars on every square mile of territory every year. They are an earning people, and they are a spending people. They highly educate their children, they live well, they earn a lot of money and they spend a lot of money. They are doing a great deal to contribute to the prosperity of this country and they are certainly entitled to have a building erected for the accommodation of the post office. I am not saying that Rigaud should not have a building. It certainly should have it if it requires it. But the hon. gentleman will see that that village which is getting a $7,000 building is contributing $1,100 to the revenue, while the post office at Grimsby is contributing $4,573, or four times as much, and is practically without a building, because you cannot call it a building that they have there now. The Minister of Public Works in 1904 undertook to see that proper accommodation was furnished in the next year; yet the people are in the same starved condition as they were in 1904. I trust the minister will supplement his general promise and meet the desire of the people of Grimsby for a public building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will take occasion to look up the 'Hansard' containing the statement of my predecessor. If he made the positive statement that my hon. friend refers to I shall feel it to be my duty to bring the matter before my colleauges. In so far as I am concerned, I stated that I would give the matter my careful consideration. I believe that my hon. friend has made out a strong case for a building at Grimsby. But I wish that he were Minister of Public Works for five minutes and had to deal with all the applications which come from all parts of the country, from hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, as well as hon. gentlemen on the other side. I am sure he would realize how many applications I am obliged to refuse because of not having money to meet them all. The country is growing rapidly, and the demands are very great. I will give the matter further consideration during recess.

Harbours and rivers, Nova Scotia—Pine Brook—wharf on St. Patrick's channel, $1,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I beg to move that that be struck out, because that is sufficiently provided for by the Gillis Point appropriation. Then upon page 11 strike out 'Port Joli West, or Herring Rocks extension of wharf'. We have an amount in the main estimates which, my information is, will be sufficient.

Mr. JAMESON. I wish to ask the minister a question in regard to the breakwaters at Centreville, New Edinburgh and White's cove, for the necessity of which I have called his attention some time ago, and for which I see he has made appropriations. Will this work be done by tender or by day work, and will it be undertaken during the present summer or not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The intention is to proceed with these three works during the present summer, but I cannot tell my hon. friend just at the moment whether they will be done by public tender or by day work. Centreville breakwater would be entirely repair work, and possibly it would be better done by day work. As to the New Edinburgh wharf, I would, as advised at present, suppose that that would be done by public tender, and I would think White's cove wharf extension would be better done by public tender, but I am not quite sure at the moment as my deputy is not present.

Mr. JAMESON. I hope the minister has made a note of Church point.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have that in mind.

Mr. JAMESON. While this item is under discussion will the minister say what will be the distribution of the amount for dredging in the maritime provinces? He said he was going to give the committee that information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry I have not that before me. I will send for my deputy, and we will come to an item for dredging when perhaps I will be able to give my hon. friend that information.

Mr. TURGEON. I see an item of $25,000 for dredging a ship channel at Bathurst. I would like to thank the minister for doing this work. I suppose the minister is aware of the immense interests which are there depending upon this work being completed. May I ask him if he intends to have contracts for dredging outside of that $25,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not yet decided whether that work will be done by contract or by a government dredge. If I can succeed in getting a government dredge available for the purpose. I would very much prefer that mode of doing the work. I think it is work that might better be done by a government dredge, but I am not able to give my hon. friend the information to-night. All I can say to him is that the work will be undertaken during the present season.

Public Works—Ontario, Harbours and Rivers, $140,350.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these all works that are under way?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, not all under way; there are some new works. For instance, French river—Lake Nipissing regulating works at outlets, will be a new work; the Hamilton harbour improvements will be a new work, although it is a continuation of work that has been done; Huntsville, extension of wharf is a new work; Harwood, extension and repairs is the same; Lake Nipigon, improvement of navigable channel, and Lakefield, extension of wharf are new works, and Peterborough and several others.

Mr. SPROULE. Is Whitby a new work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a new work in this sense, that we have made repairs at Whitby, but this vote is for further improvements, and also to acquire the water rights of the company at Whitby harbour.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend the minister was to produce a list of newspapers in which there were certain advertisements.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I will get it in a moment. Let me say to my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Jameson) that my deputy says he does not remember the information that my hon friend wants as to the apportionment of dredging in the maritime provinces. He has not the information with him, but would my hon. friend be good enough to write to the deputy minister, and he will give him the information?

Mr. JAMESON. Perhaps you could ask him if any provision has been made for dredging at Digby during the present year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I do not think there is any dredging urgently required at Digby at present, but we are constructing a very fine pier there, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Post office, outside service—additional amount required, $6,400.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is for the extension of the service in the west.

Mr. SPROULE. I have a letter from the owner of 'Cotton's Weekly,' who contradicts very flatly some of the Postmaster General's answers given to me a few weeks ago. On page 6032 of 'Hansard,' the Postmaster General, replying to my questions, said:

The case of Mr. Cotton is radically different. In the first place he has no subscribers, but he sends his papers to friends who distribute it.

I asked the question: how does it happen that papers like the Toronto 'World,' or 'Mail,' or 'Globe,' or 'News' can send extra numbers to news agents who have no subscription lists, but who sell them out over the counter? The reply of the Postmaster General was that they had a regular subscription list, but this paper had no subscription list. This man says that he is prepared to make an affidavit that he has a subscription list of over 6,000—that he has a list over 37 feet long of subscribers' names, and that whenever additional papers are sent out they are paid for before they are sent out from the office, and he is adding to his subscription list all the time as the result of canvassing. He says his paper stands in the front rank in the Dominion of Canada in the matter of subscription lists. If this is so, the Postmaster General has been misinformed, and is doing a great injustice to this man's paper.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the case were as my hon. friend has stated, certainly the publisher would have a real grievance against the department. I may tell my hon. friend that I ask nothing better than to investigate the facts at once, and if they are as stated, the publisher will be given all the mailing privileges granted to others. But we had a very serious investigation since this agitation took place, and we found that that was not the case.

Mr. SPROULE. He says:

I have before me a mailing list of Cotton's for Ontario, which, when put together, is 37 feet long, and hundreds have been added since I received this list from the publisher. I have personally taken and received payment for and sent in over 50 now.

He is operating in Berlin, Ontario, and he says he is prepared to make a solemn affidavit to the correctness of this statement.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If he does that and proves his statement, he is entitled to the regular mailing privileges granted to other papers. But the information of the department at the beginning of the agitation was that they were not really mailing subscribers.

St. Andrew's Rapid lock and dam, Red River, Man., $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have a somewhat pleasing announcement to make to the House, and I am sure it will be interesting to hon. members, particularly those from the province of Manitoba. It is a telegram from the resident engineer, dated yesterday, received to-day, and reads as follows:

Government steamer 'Victoria' locked through St. Andrew's canal to-day. Everything successful. The canal now open to navigation.

Hudson Bay railway—construction, $500,000

Mr. LAKE. I would like a statement from the Minister of Railways in regard to that. What specific work of construction is it proposed to do, where is it proposed to start the work, and what is going to be the prairie terminus of the railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. The work as proposed will start at Le Pas on the south side of the river. We propose utilizing this vote or a portion of it immediately to ask for tenders for the construction of a bridge across the river at that point. We intend to do that specific construction at once. It is a little difficult to say what will be the terminus of the line, but for 160 miles the line will be common, whether Churchill or Nelson is selected. In the Marine and Fisheries estimates there is an amount for sending a steamer around the straits this year for the purpose of obtaining more information in regard to the two ports. I think it fair to say that from the railway standpoint the route to Nelson would be the shorter one and would afford the easier construction. There is some difference of opinion as to which is the better harbour. The engineers report that Nelson has the foundation for a safe harbour and a larger harbour, while on the other hand, Churchill has a harbour already made, but not so large.

Mr. SPROULE. Is all this vote to be taken for the construction of the bridge?

Mr. GRAHAM. The bridge proper will cost between $300,000 and $400,000, that is for a railway bridge. A question has arisen whether it would not be well to also include a roadway over it, and I have put in an extra amount so that if we want to include a highway as well as the railway on the bridge we can do so.

Mr. LAKE. Is the Canadian Northern railway in actual operation as far as the Pas Mission?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot tell my hon. friend that. It was brought to my attention once and I took it up with the Canadian Northern. I understood they had inaugurated a service.

Mr. SPROULE. As a matter of fact this is for the construction of a bridge, not for the construction of a railway, although it may be part of a railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. This bridge is primarily for the use of the railroad.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it seriously intended to go on with the grading and construction of the road beyond that point this season?

Mr. GRAHAM. I would hardly like to say that to my hon. friend. Circumstances may arise making it advisable to grade a short distance on both sides in order to get the approaches to the bridge and the amount for the bridge proper would not cover that.

Mr. SPROULE. So it is only built as a bridge for the convenience of those who want to cross the river and the railway may not be built beyond that point.

Mr. GRAHAM. It will be.

Quebec bridge—construction, $500,000.

Mr. SPROULE. We have not yet had anything like a definite statement as to what the Quebec bridge is expected to cost us when erected. The government must have some estimate of their own engineers or some idea of what it will cost. Whenever we ask for it there is a kind of indefinite putting off that seems to imply that the government have been indifferent as to the necessity of getting information or do not wish to give it. It makes it embarrassing because that is information we ought to have.

Mr. GRAHAM. Neither of these is the condition. The committee are familiar with the arrangement approved by the House by which the construction of the bridge has been entrusted to a board of engineers. These engineers have got to the point where the contract for the substructure has been let and the contractor is now at work. The superstructure, which is a vast undertaking having a span of 1,758 feet, has cost considerable money in plans, tests, and what the engineers call studies. Experiments have been carried on in the old country, in the United States and here. Compression tests are now being made in the United States under the supervision of one of the professors of McGill University. So careful are the board that they make full tests before taking any step, and no person who has not been in close touch with the work can have any conception of its magnitude and difficulties. We have arrived at the point where the board of engineers are prepared to advertise for tenders for the superstructure. They have not given me an estimate of the cost, and I do not suppose they will do so at present. I was asked in the committee some time ago if the cost would be $10,000,000. I said it would be at least that and possibly more, but I have been given no estimate.

Port Colborne—improvements, $113,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What are you doing at Port Colborne?

Mr. GRAHAM. This work is under construction and partially completed. A small amount is yet to be done in the removal of a certain ledge of rock from the channel to make it a few feet wider.

Welland canal—surveys and borings for proposed new or enlarged canal, $25,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. Are we to take this $25,000 as an evidence that the government has definitely decided either to enlarge the present Welland canal or to construct a new one?

Mr. GRAHAM. The policy of the government has been announced by the government once or twice, that when the finances of the country would warrant he hoped to see this work done. In the meantime we are taking practical steps to get a fair estimate what the work will cost. For the last two or three years surveying has been going on, but I thought it wise to put in an amount to clean it up and so be able to tell the country fairly accurately what the work will cost. I have three or four educated guesses as to the cost but they are not based on a completed survey.

Mr. EDWARDS. You expect to have sufficient information before the next session to be able to give the House a definite idea as to the cost of the new canal or of enlarging the canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Contribution of the government railways to the faculty of Polytechnic School, Montreal, for the advancement of learning in connection with railway engineering and transportation in general, provided that the railway companies contribute an equal amount, $2,500.

Mr. GERVAIS. I am bound as a governor of the Polytechnic school of Montreal, to say a few words in explanation of this vote. I see from this item there is a proviso reading: 'Provided that the railway companies contribute an equal amount.'

The school was first organized, on the 20th of November, 1873, when its curriculum was agreed to between the Minister of Public Instruction of the province of Quebec, Hon. Gédéon Ouimet—for the province of Quebec had such a luxury as a Minister of Public Instruction for a few months—under the Act 31 Vic., c. 10, 1868, repealed by the Act, 39 Vic., c. 15, 1875—and the Catholic School Commissioners of Montreal, for the establishment of a scientific and industrial school, called the 'Polytechnic School,' under the control of the Superintendent of Public Instruction.

That arrangement was afterwards confirmed by the Act 40 Victoria, chap. 22, sections 44 to 51.

Year after year amending Acts have been passed, the school has been made a corporation; and finally affiliated with Laval university.

The first professors who were appointed were Col. Emile Balête, who had been made a general on the battlefield, in 1870, a most learned scholar in mathematics, and a former graduate from the Polytechnic School of Paris, and Mr. C. A. Pfister, a French chemist of very great repute. General Balète left for America because he would not submit to a reduction of rank.

Both have lately died after giving the school 35 years of their life for its final success. Over 350 graduates from this school have made for themselves and for the country very good reputations. To-day, the teaching staff of the school is composed of very brilliant scientists under the remarkably able directorship of Mr. A. Fyen, who succeeded Mr. Balète.

The personnel includes now such men as Dr. Duval, Mr. A. André, Mr. Charles E. Leluau, a brother of the Chief Engineer of the Chemin de fer du Nord of France, Belgium and Germany; Mr. Poivert, a graduate of the Ecole des Beaux Arts of Paris, Mr. Emile Dulieux, a graduate from the Ecole des Mines of Paris, Mr. Flahault, a graduate from the University of Lille, Mr. F. C. Laberge, Mr. Haynes, Mr. Quéva, Mr. Manseau, Mr. Beaupré, Mr. Boucher, Mr. Frigon, Mr. McConville, Mr. Busquet, E. Dyounet, A. Beaulne, Raoul Lacroix, E. Desaulniers, A. Beaugrand-Champagne.

To the course of civil engineering, which was for over 30 years exclusively taught, those of mining enginering, of chemical engineering, of electrical engineering and of architecture have been lately added. About $500,000 have been expended in constructing new school buildings and laboratories and in equipping both. One finds to-day in the Polytechnic School 240 students, studying those five branches of engineering. But the Board of Governors have some other little ambition of their own. They wish to extend, enlarge and complete the courses of study on railway construction and railway management both technically and financially.

New buildings must be put up, new professors must be engaged, more money must be expended, to reach that goal. Hence, the move started about five years ago by the governors to secure the necessary funds.

The princely gifts made to the school by Senator Villeneuve, Mrs. Beaudry-Lehmann and Mr. J. E. Vanier, the first graduate of the school, as well as the continuous protection of that good and public spirited citizen, Mr. Trefflé Bastien, have proved insufficient to crystalize the plan of the school for the extension of its teaching of the Arts and Science of Railway construction and management.

For the second time in this House this session, I feel bound to recall the fact that Sir Lomer Gouin has done marvellous things for the school. To-day it is receiving a subsidy of $20,000 from the Provincial Exchequer; for it is Sir Lomer's plan to make the Polytechnic School of Montreal the best equipped of the now well-established special school system, composed of two technical schools, one higher commercial school, one forestry school, one agricultural school, one veterinary school and our Polytechnical School, side by side with the 17 classical colleges and the two universities of the province of Quebec. That, I think, is the pedagogic formula of to-day, that, in any country, a system of public instruction worthy of the name, must include a group of classical schools as well as such a group of special schools.

Every one to-day admits that, while it is fair that the four or five ideas or ideals which have been pursued by humanity for a great number of centuries, should have had and should continue to have their followers, their friends, their schools and their temples; it is also quite proper that the ideals of wealth and happiness coming out of chemistry and physics, the many applications of which have brought about the construction of railways, should have at the same time their own followers, their own students and schools, and their own temples. The Corporation of the Polytechnic school therefore wishes to erect a department where the Science and Art of Railways will be thoroughly taught.

This item of the Budget is to enable our school to go on with its new work. Mr. Speaker, I may say, that the new railway curriculum framed by Mr. Lebuau was corrected and approved of by railway expert men amongst others, Mr. R. S. Logan, Vice-President of the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

But let me quote by way of conclusion of my remarks, one letter and one telegram which are worth reading:

Montreal, April 15, 1910.

Dear Mr. Gervais,—Naturally, as a Governor of Laval University, I am pleased with any movement calculated to strengthen the university as one of our great educational institutions, and I am particularly interested in the adoption in the course of applied science of such technical training as will give the students by the time they graduate the requisite technical knowledge of the works in which they are to engage as to make them immediately valuable to their employers.

It would be very gratifying if a greater number of the young men who graduate from Laval took up the technical branches of railway work, and if, as I gathered from our conversation, you receive from the government the co-operation that you anticipate toward the establishment of a technical branch, we shall see what assistance we can give, although at the moment I am unable to make you anything in the nature of a specific promise.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) T. G. SHAUGHNESSY,
President.

Montreal, Que., April 20, 1910.

(Telegram.)
Honoré Gervais,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Referring to your favour of April 19 in re subsidy to Montreal Polytechnic School. You are at liberty to state that we regard very highly the work of the institute and consider it worthy of the same measure of government and municipal support as any other institution of a similar character, and should such support be given I should be disposed to recommend that we should join the other railways in assisting the school to such extent as is practicable.

CHAS. M. HAYS,
President.

Mr. Speaker, here you find two transcontinental railway companies not only endorsing the action of the government, but paying over their own money to the Polytechnic School of Montreal, while Sir Lomer Gouin will give the school an increase of subsidy, equal to that secured by the school from the Parliament of Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

For, Sir Lomer Gouin, at a public banquet of the students of the Polytechnic School of Montreal, and afterwards, in several letters written to the school, has declared that the government of the province of Quebec, will give to the Polytechnic school of Montreal an increase of subsidy equal to one dollar for every dollar the school can get from the government of Canada and our two great transcontinental railway companies.

Mr. Speaker, in the name of the school, though I should have liked better to receive a subscription of $5,000, as was their request which should have been granted in full— I must offer my sincere thanks to the House of Commons, to Sir Thomas Shaughnessey, Mr. Charles M. Hays, and also to Sir Lomer Gouin, for joining in such a laudable effort to promote public instruction.

That move must be noted as a turning point in the history of public instruction and education in Canada. Such a combination of public authorities friendly to education as the one I have just referred to, will go far towards giving the public the whole benefit of the natural resources of Canada, and make this century that of Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I desire to submit a list of the newspapers in which the Leamington, Ont., the Welland, Ont., the Whitby, Ont., and the Dauphin, Man., public buildings were advertised, as follows:

Mr. GERVAIS. I desire to take advantage of the presence of the Minister of Finance to call his attention to the fact that a year ago a flat increase of $150 a year was given to every officer of this House. Every officer of the House got that increase, except one, that one being the clerk assistant, Mr. Laplante. I think that merely to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact will be sufficient to ensure the removal of this discrimination.

Some resolutions reported.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BRANCH LINES.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the following has been received from the Senate:

Resolved, that a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Masters in Chancery to communicate to that House the following reasons for their insisting upon their amendment to the Bill (17) from the House of Commons, intituled 'An Act to authorize the government to acquire by lease lines of railway connecting with the government railways.

The third clause of the Bill, as it passed the Commons, contained a proviso, intended to protect the public interests, to the effect that no such lease should have any force or effect until the Government Railways Managing Board and the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals should have approved the terms and conditions of such lease and until the parliament of Canada had first ratified such lease. The amendment made by the Senate proposed to further protect the public interest by enacting that certain further information necessary to enable parliament to form an intelligent opinion should be submitted to parliament before the ratification of any such lease.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I desire to move a motion in reference to that message. I move, seconded by Mr. Pugsley:

The honourable the Senate, having sent a message to this House, agreeing to the Bill (No. 17), entitled 'An Act to authorize the government of Canada to acquire by lease, lines of railway connecting with government railways, with an amendment, which is as follows:—

Page 2, line 3. After 'lease' insert the following as clause 4:—

4. No such lease shall be ratified by parliament unless a return has been laid before both Houses for at least one month showing:

(a) The cost of the road proposed to be leased, together with the amount of stock subscribed and all moneys received from sale of bonds or by way of bonuses or otherwise;

(b) present equipment of road, together with the average rate of freight and charges for passengers on the same, and a statement showing approximately how above rates compare with those charged on the Intercolonial railway;

(c) present condition of the road and the estimated outlay required to put it in good running order;

(d) total receipts and expenditures for three years last past;
(e) list of shareholders and bondholders;
(f) other creditors of the road;
(g) estimates of future receipts and expenditures in the event of the road being leased by the Intercolonial railway.

Such return to be signed and certified to by the chief engineer and traffic manager of the Intercolonial railway and the deputy minister.

And this House, having taken the said amendment into consideration, it was resolved, that the said amendment be disagreed to, for the following reasons: Because the said amendment unnecessarily and ineffectually attempts to limit the power of future parliaments.

A message having been sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours therewith, and the Senate having sent a further message to this House informing this House that their honours adhere to the said amendment.

And this House being of the opinion that if a conference is held between the two Houses, it is possible that an agreement may be arrived at, in respect to the said Bill, which result, it is, in the opinion of this House, desirable to attain, if possible.

Therefore, on motion of Mr. Graham, seconded by Mr. Pugsley,

It is resolved that a message be sent to the Senate respectfully requesting a free conference with their honours, to consider the said Bill and any amendments which, at such conference, it may be considered desirable to make thereto.

Mr. SPROULE. This seems to be a new departure for which I do not know that there is any rule

Mr. GRAHAM. After a little conversation over this matter, and after fully going into the rules, I am advised that this is the orthodox manner to proceed; that the Senate, having returned a Bill disagreeing with the amendments, the Bill is now in the hands of this Chamber, and it becomes our duty to propose a conference, I believe this is what is known as a free conference, as outlined in this motion.

Mr. SPROULE. Under what rule is this procedure taken?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The rule will be found on page 40:

84. (1) In cases in which the Senate disagree to any amendments made by the House of Commons, or to which the House of Commons has disagreed, the House of Commons is willing to receive the reasons of the Senate for their disagreeing or insisting (as the case may be) by message, without a conference unless at any time the Senate should desire to communicate the same at a conference.

(2) Any conference between the two houses may be a free conference.

(3) When the House requests a conference with the Senate, the reasons to be given by this House at the same, shall be prepared and agreed to by the House before a message is sent therewith.

It is laid down in Bourinot that this conference may be held wherever the Senate amends a Bill which the House declines to agree to.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does this motion name who is to be the committee of the House to take part in the conference?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the Speaker names the committee; he must appoint three members of the House as managers to attend the conference.

Mr. GRAHAM moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate respectfully requesting a free conference with their honours to consider said Bill, and any amendments which, at such conference, it may be considered desirable to make thereto.

Mr. FIELDING. There have been such conferences before, although the proceeding is unusual. I have myself been associated with a conference of that kind. It is entirely proper.

Mr. LANCASTER. There was a conference in 1903 with regard to some amendments to the Railway Act, and the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court was one of the conferees. But I think at the time, after the committee were appointed, the next day the Senate receded, as it was their duty to do.

Mr. EMMERSON. On the occasion to which my hon. friend refers, I was a member of the committee, and we met in the Senate. I think we are following on that procedure now that was followed on that occasion.

Motion agreed to.

HOURS OF LABOUR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. KING presented the fourth report of the special committee to which was referred Bill (No. 21) respecting hours of labour on public works.

The Clerk having read the report,

Mr. KING moved that the recommendations contained in the fourth report of said committee on Bill (No. 21) respecting the hours of labour on public works, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF.

Mr. FIELDING. There are several formal motions necessary in connection with the Civil Service Act as applied to the House of Commons. We have already passed the items appropriating sums to be paid to the various officers of the House, but it is necessary that we should formally confirm certain recommendations that were made by the Speaker at an earlier date, and which are now upon the journals. I therefore beg to move:

That the recommendations of the hon. the Speaker, laid on the table of the House on the 24th November, 1909, relative to the yearly increase in salary to certain officers and clerks of the House pursuant to section 37 of the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908, be approved.

Motion agreed to.

Motions by Mr. Fielding that the recommendation of the Hon. the Speaker of the second inst relative to the yearly increase in salaries to certain officials of the House and also of the 29th November, 1909, relative to the payment to the clerks of the joint distribution office of the House of Commons and Senate of the yearly increase in salary were also agreed to.

COAL SUPPLY TO LIGHTKEEPERS.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) quoted a letter from Nova Scotia yesterday complaining of the treatment which some lighthouse keepers had received with regard to coal. It was said that they had been receiving coal and that it had been taken away from them. I have here a statement from the department explaining that the salaries of the lighthouse keepers were increased, and that an allowance for coal is no longer made. The statement is as follows:

Under date 24th September, 1908, an order in council issued approving of a classification of light-stations throughout the Dominion together with regulations covering such classification.

The various light-stations were grouped into classes according to duties required to be performed, accessability, opportunity for supplementing income by other work in the neighbourhood, &c. Before this classification came into effect, some lightkeepers were remunerated in part by salary, in part by other allowances such as for fuel, water, horse-keep, &c. Under the classification a salary was allowed sufficient in itself without other allowances. Under this classification, many lightkeepers received inreases in salary, certain other lightkeepers were found to be in receipt of salary above the maximum allowed by the classification, but the classification provided that in such cases the salary of keepers then in the service would not be reduced and that such stations would come under the classification on the appointment of a new keeper. In many cases, the salary provided under the classification was equal to or more than the aggregate allowances hitherto obtaining. In such cases, allowances such as for fuel, &c., were discontinued, the new salary covering such. In other cases the salary under the classification was greater than the previous salary but not as great as the aggregate of salary and allowances, and in such cases the part of the allowances covered by the new salary was discontinued, the remainder being allowed to the keepers.

In the case referred to by the leader of the opposition, the keeper, no doubt, received an increase in salary which would cover former fuel allowance, and if the lightkeeper was offered coal for sale, he was in as good a position then as before the classification came into effect—that is, he received an increase in salary, which increase would at least pay for the coal and probably more.

With regard to the unfortunate drowning of the Marie-Joseph lightkeeper and his son, this can scarcely be chargeable to the discontinuance of fuel allowances, particularly in so far as the department is aware fuel had never been supplied to the Marie-Joseph lightkeeper by the department.

ADJOURNMENT — BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—THE LUMSDEN CHARGES.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. May we expect anything to-morrow except concurrence?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the business of the session is virtually concluded except concurrence, and the passage of the Supply Bill. The conference with the Senate which was the subject of remark a few minutes ago will have to be considered in the morning, and the final stages of concurrence and of the Supply Bill will have to be taken.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. At what time do we expect that prorogation will take place?

Mr. FIELDING. I see no reason why prorogation should not take place at three.

Mr. MACDONALD. With the permission of the House I beg to move the motion in regard to the payment of counsel employed in connection with the Lumsden charges, and which is recommended by the committee. The motion is:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the sixth report of the Special Committee re Lumsden inquiry, proper fees and expenses be paid to counsel appearing before the said committee, and the clerk of the House and the law clerk are hereby authorized to tax the said fees and expenses and to pay the same when so taxed, out of any moneys voted by parliament for the expenses of committees.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that was to stand until to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. It was brought to the attention of the House earlier in the day, and the leader of the opposition stated that he was not aware of any objection, but that he would prefer that the motion be not pressed at the moment. I have no objection to it standing till to-morrow if it is desired.

Mr. SPROULE. Carried.

Motion (Mr. Macdonald) agreed to.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 4, 1910.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE RULES.

Mr. TURRIFF. Mr. Speaker, I would ask permission to move that the portion of the 29th report of the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines dealing with the proposed change in connection with the rules governing the bringing of railway Bills before the committee be adopted. A recommendation has been made by the committee, but I understand that some action is necessary in order to bring it into force.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the matter will have to be dealt with in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. TURRIFF. Then, I beg to move that Mr. Speaker do leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the proposed amendments to the rules of the Railway Committee. I would like to ask whether it is the wish of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to take up this matter now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. I have looked at the rules and for my part they seem to be unobjectionable. On the contrary, they seem to have a good deal of merit, but at this stage of the session I do not think anybody has been able to give them the consideration which they deserve. The matter may stand as a notice until next session.

Motion withdrawn.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General:

Ottawa, May 4, 1910.

Sir,—I am commanded by the Governor General to inform you that His Excellency will proceed to the Senate Chamber this afternoon at three o'clock for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
LANESBOROUGH,
Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

CONFERENCE WITH SENATE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate acquainting this House that the Senate accedes to their request for a free conference to consider the Bill to amend the Act relating to government railways, and any amendments which, at such conference, it may be desired to make thereto, and appoint the hon. Messrs. Dansereau, Beith and Power to act on behalf of the Senate, and that the meeting be held in his honour the Speaker of the Senate's apartments forthwith.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That Messrs. Graham, Pugsley and Taylor (Leeds) be appointed managers on behalf of this House of the free conference of the Senate, and that a message be sent to the Senate acquainting their honours thereof.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask: Will these gentlemen have to appear in full dress this morning according to the ancient custom to face this conference?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In view of the advanced period of the session we will dispense with that ceremony.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

OYAMEL COMPANY, ROBERVAL.

Mr. GIRARD:

Does the Minister of Public Works know that the account of $105 paid to the Oyamel Company for tamarack, as reported in 'Hansard' of the 25th April, page 8044, was said to have been paid under false pretence, as it is alleged the company did not sell that wood? If so, what action does he intend to take in this matter?

Hon. Wm. PUGSLEY. No.

UNIFORM CODE OF TRAIN RULES.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE:

1. Has the Railway Commission approved of a uniform code of train rules?
2. Have these rules been published by the government and are they available to the public and to trainmen without charge?
3. Has the right to publish these rules been granted to the St. Thomas 'Journal'? If so, what is the price per copy?
4. What railroads have adopted the rules and who gave the St. Thomas 'Journal' the right to publish them?
5. What are the rules to be put into force?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM:

The following information is supplied by the Board of Railway Commissioners:

1. The board by order No. 7653, dated July 12, 1909, has approved of a uniform code of train rules for Canadian railways.
2. These rules have not, as far as the board has any knowledge, been published by the government, nor are they available to the public and trainmen without charge, except as to copy on file with board.

3. The board has not granted such right to the St. Thomas 'Journal,' or any other parties. The board understands the St. Thomas 'Journal' sells copies of the rules approved of by the board at fifty cents a copy.

4. As yet no railway companies have adopted the rules, but practically all the railway companies in Canada are arranging to adopt them, with the exception of two or three American lines which enter Canada for a short distance, in which case the rules in use, and known as the 'American code of standard rules,' have been approved by the board for use on such railways.

5. The order approving the rules did not provide a date for their coming into operation. It was thought after approval some reasonable time should elapse for further consideration and discussion before putting them in force. Some of the railways are arranging to bring them into operation very soon, and the board will doubtless soon require all railways to operate under them.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—SHOPS AT ST. BONIFACE.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE:

1. Did the Transcontinental Commission advertise for tenders for machine-shop tools and equipment for the railway shops at St. Boniface?

2. At what date were advertisements first inserted in the newspapers, and at what dates were tenders received?

3. Did the specifications allow for any tools being purchased except those of certain makers specified?

4. Did the time between when the advertisements were first published and the date of their being received allow of British makers tendering?

5. Were any tools except American tools and equipment specified?

6. What was the total amount of the tenders for tools and equipment?

Mr. GRAHAM:

The following information is supplied by the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners:

1. Yes.

2. The advertisement appeared first in the 'Canada Gazette' of March 5, 1910, and in Canadian newspapers immediately after. Tenders were to be received on or before April 12, 1910, at 12 o'clock noon.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

5. Several Canadian manufacturers' products were referred to, but no particular machine of any firm, Canadian or American, was specified, simply referred to in schedule as types of machines.

6. The whole number of tenders have not yet been compiled and classified.

Mr. GRAHAM.

TELEGRAPH LINE BETWEEN L'ANSE ST. JEAN AND ST. ALEXIS.

Mr. GIRARD:

What amount did the Minister of Public Works spend in 1903, in repairing the telegraph lines between l'Anse St. Jean and St. Alexis?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

$976.88.

COLONEL B. A. SCOTT.

Mr. GIRARD:

Is it true, as alleged, that Colonel B. A. Scott, while he was in charge of the 18th Regiment, was a defaulter for a considerable amount? If so, what was the total amount, has he repaid it, and was the repayment made before or after his resignation?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN:

The records at headquarters do not show that Lieut.-Col. B. A. Scott was a defaulter whilst he was in command of the 18th regiment.

PAYMENT TO MR. A. McLEAN.

Mr. GIRARD:

Does the Minister of Public Works know that it is alleged a person named A. McLean, mentioned on page V—165 of the Public Accounts, 1900, as having sold wood or timber for $130 never sold that wood? If so, is it his intention to demand repayment and oblige the paymaster to render an account?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

The answer is, no, to the first paragraph; the second paragraph is answered by reply to the first paragraph.

PAYMENTS TO J. TREMBLAY.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. Does the Minister of Public Works know that a person named J. Tremblay, mentioned in the Public Accounts, 1900, as follows, at page V—165 as having sold wood or timber for $690 and $348.50, a total of $1,038.50, it is alleged could not have sold this wood or timber?

2. If so, is it the minister's intention to demand repayment and oblige the paymaster to render an account?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. No.

2. Answered by reply to No. 1.

PAYMENTS TO CHARLES VEILLEUE.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. Does the Minister of Public Works know that a person named Charles Veilleue, reported in the Public Accounts of 1902 at page V—202 as having sold wood or timber at the wharf of St. Jerome for $1,947.74 is said to be unknown in that parish and could scarcely have sold wood or timber?

2. Does the minister know that at the time of payment for the works of that wharf, it is alleged the paymaster, Laroche, gave to a third party $300, to be divided among three persons?

3. If so, does the minister intend to demand the repayment and oblige the paymaster to render an account?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1, 2. No.

3. Answered by reply to No. 1.

PAYMENTS TO P. A. POTVIN.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. Does the Minister of Public Works know that a person named P. A. Potvin, mentioned on page Q—146 of the Public Accounts for 1899, as having sold wood or timber for $232.75, is said to have never sold that wood or timber?

2. If so, does the minister intend to demand the repayment and oblige the paymaster to render an account?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

No to 1st paragraph.

2nd paragraph answered by reply to No. 1.

PAY-LISTS—18th REGIMENT.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. Are the names D. Gagné, A. Morin and Edward Limard on the pay-lists of the 18th Regiment of the camp of 1908 at Lévis?

2. If so, does the minister know that it is alleged the two first named did not go, and were impersonated by others at the request of the officers?

3. To whom has the money due to these persons been paid?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN:

1. The following names appear on the pay-lists of the 18th Regiment for Levis Camp, 1908:—

Donizo Gagné on Regimental Staff;

Alfred Morin on 'F' Company, and there is also another A. Morin on 'H' Company.

No trace of any man named Edward Limard.

2. The Department has no information as to any alleged impersonation.

3. Pay of D. Gagné was included in payment to Lieutenant-Colonel Savard, and pay of Alfred Morin to Captain Gendron. Pay of A. Morin to Captain D. Tessier.

PAYMENTS TO ED. LEMIEUX.

Mr. GIRARD:

1. Is the Minister of Public Works informed that a person named Ed. Lemieux who appears in the Public Accounts for wood or timber sold as follows: 1898 (page Q—128), $14.78; 1899 (page Q—138), $75.15; 1899 (page Q—150), $87.60; 1899 (page Q—150), $110.45; 1900 (page Q—150), $74.36; 1901 (page V—204), $175; 1901 (page V—206), $50.50; 1902 (page V—192), $430.50; 1902 (page V—197), $99; 1902 (page V—200), $25; 1902 (page V—202), $85.50; total of $1,227.84, did not, it is alleged, sell that wood or timber at the places indicated?

2. If so, is it the minister's intention to make an inquiry in order to obtain a repayment and oblige the two paymasters concerned in these payments to render an account?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. No.

2. Answered by reply to No. 1.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVAL SERVICE.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. EMMERSON. I desire some information from the Prime Minister with respect to securing appointments in the naval service of Canada. A friend of mine made application for a position for his son, and in reply received this letter:

I am directed to inform you that your son's name has been noted as being desirous of joining the Canadian Naval Service as a cadet, and that when the regulations concerning this have been drawn up a copy of them will be forwarded you.

As far as known at present a competitive examination will have to be passed for entry. As to fees these have not been decided upon yet but it is anticipated that they will not be very heavy and along the same lines as those for the Royal Military College, Kingston.

Referring to the latter part of your letter (which had reference to the application of a Canadian who had secured his certificate from the Royal Navy and who had afterwards served with credit upon merchant ships) I am to inform you that there is no vacancy to which he could be appointed, nor will there be until the ships which the government propose to build are completed in the course of four or five years. The only officers employed now are those for instructional purposes who have been lent from the royal navy.

P. J. LING,
Secretary to Naval Staff.

When the Naval Bill was before the House, it was distinctly understood that free access to the Canadian navy would be given to Canadian lads upon terms which were suited to the conditions in this country. I am, however, informed that Admiral Kingsmill has laid down regulations which will give opportunities to very few families of average means in this country to have their boys available for examination for admission as naval cadets, and I would like to know if this is the case, and if so why? It was understood in parliament that the Canadian navy was to offer a career for our sons, and are we to be told now that the boys shall not only have to pass an examination in the rudiments of education, but before they are given examinations to enter for the Canadian navy, their parents or guardians must contract for an expense of several hundred dollars? If, as stated in the letter from the secretary of the naval service, the fees are to be as at Kingston, that involves some hundreds of dollars, and practically will shut out a very large number of deserving young men in this country. Our conditions here are quite different from what they are in England, as is well known, and it would be well if information could be disseminated broadcast throughout the country with respect to the prospects that young men will have in this regard.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is putting a question?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am, for information, stating the facts. I think I am within the rules of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is only as a matter of courtesy that a question can be put now, except relating to the business of the House. This is on the orders of the day.

Mr. EMMERSON. My question is whether young men, Canadians, who have qualified themselves by training on British ships by later service in British naval vessels and subsequently by service on British merchantmen in all parts of the seas are to be met with a declaration by the naval staff of Canada that there will be no vacancies in the naval service of Canada until the Canadian ships are completed, and is it understood that no Canadians, no matter how well qualified, shall be eligible until the ships which the government propose to build shall be competed? I do not think the understanding was that it would be years before young men could secure positions as cadets or otherwise, and it will be a very unfortunate circumstance if that is to be the case, and if the regulations involve that hardship upon Canadian boys.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend stated that Admiral Kingsmill had laid down regulations which would prevent young Canadians from being admitted to the navy. I would like to know his authority for that statement.

Mr. EMMERSON. I say that statement is made, and I am asking if it is a fact. I know nothing about the matter myself.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No rules or regulations have yet been made for the conditions of admittance to the navy. I stated the other day when we were discussing the estimates that at present we had to officer the ships which would be immediately ready for commission, the 'Niobe,' and the 'Rainbow,' with English officers who had been borrowed from the imperial service, because we have no such officers now. It is, I need not say, a matter of course that young Canadians will be not only admitted but invited at once to the naval college, and in advance of the construction of the college, as cadets to the 'Niobe.' The 'Niobe' is fitted to be a training school immediately without waiting for the college to be constructed. As to the conditions of admittance to the college this matter has not been determined, nothing has been done, but of course we have intended to take as a model the Kingston Military College. My hon. friend takes exception to this, I shall take a note of what he says.

SUB-LAND AGENCY AT PINCHER CREEK.

Mr. HERRON. Is the Minister of the Interior now able to give any information as to the establishing of a sub-land agency at the town of Pincher Creek? The minister a few years ago pledged himself that he would re-establish it provided a suitable man could be found to take the position at the minimum salary of $25 a month. If the subagency were established a very large section of country would be accommodated. I hope the minister will be able to give a guarantee that he will establish such an agency.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to give my hon. friend the assurance he asks that the office will be opened. The business of a subagency as of an agency necessarily decreases as settlement goes on, and it is a matter of question from time to time whether we should close both our agency and our subagency. The subagency at Pincher Creek was closed because the subagency declined to do the work for the salary that we thought should be paid. My hon. friend asked me if we would re-open it if we could get a satisfactory agent at the minimum salary. I told him that was a matter to be considered. I have not been able to give the matter any attention recently, but so far as my memory serves me, it appears that the evidence that came to my attention was not such as would warrant us in re-opening the office.

Mr. HERRON. The hon. minister did promise me when I asked the question in the House, that he would open the office if we had a suitable man at the same salary. I have it here in 'Hansard.'

Mr. OLIVER. Will my hon. friend be good enough to read what was said?

Mr. HERRON. This is what the hon. minister said in answer to my question:

Mr. OLIVER. If we could get an efficient and reliable man to act as subagent, I think we would be willing to pay him the sum suggested, but, of course, as the difference is not as large as it was some years ago, there is not the same necessity for a subagent. If, however, we could get one satisfactory to us to do the work at a fair compensation, there would be no objection to reopening the office.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not altogether agree with my hon. friend that that is a statement that if we could get such an agent we would open the office. I said that the objection which has caused the closing of the office would be removed; but the question as to whether there is business to justify a salary and the opening of an office must be always a matter for consideration. We cannot guarantee to keep an office in a certain place always open, because there had been one there. These offices must in the nature of events be closed as the business ceases.

THE LUMSDEN INQUIRY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance what is the total amount paid or to be paid to counsel employed in the Lumsden inquiry.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no information on the subject. The matter is in the hands of the committee. The resolution passed last night was that the payment should be taxed by the clerk of the House and the law clerk.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. After it has been taxed, the information will be available?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. I am informed that nothing has been arranged yet.

THE CUSTOM TRAIFF.

Mr. FIELDING moved second reading of Bill (No. 233), to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker before this Bill is read a second time, I desire to say a few words on a question which I think is of very much interest to the country at the present time. Going back to the year 1895, we were told by hon. gentlemen now on the treasury benches that they were the party of low tariff, that when they came into power the tariff would be reduced. The first action of the government in connection with the tariff was largely to increase very many items, notably coloured cotton goods of almost every character from the finished muslin to the coarsest cotton tweeds and ducks and denims worn by workingmen. Woollen goods were also increased. Women's shoes were increased from 25 to 30 per cent. Fur goods were increased from 25 to 30 per cent. I need not go on and enumerate the many articles on which the duty was materially increased preparatory to the application of the British preference, which was intended to bring the tariff down again to a lower basis. However, the government seems to have overlooked the fact that all the goods imported of the classes I have referred to on which the duty was increased were not brought in from Great Britain, but from the United States and many other countries against which the higher tariff prevails, the result being that in many instances the duties were enhanced enormously, as I propose to show. I intend to refer only to a few articles, because time would not permit this morning that I should deal at any length with the question. I will take the case of watches, an article which every gentleman and every lady desires to have, and therefore an article of common consumption. Under the old tariff the duty on watches was 25 per cent; under the new tariff the duty is 27½ per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. From what countries?

Mr. HENDERSON. The schedule is 27½ per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. But there are three schedules.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am speaking of the general tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. But my hon. friend is not fair when he ignores the British preference.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am going to show the result even when you apply the British preference. I am going to be perfectly fair, because I want the people to understand something more of the nature of the tariff that we have at the present time. Taking all the watches that came in from other countries and including those that came in under the operation of British preference, the average rate of duty paid in 1909, the last year for which we have full returns, instead of being 25 per cent as under the old tariff was increased to 29·90 per cent. All the watches we imported under the British preference was $1,641 worth, whereas we imported under the general tariff $10,559 worth from Switzerland and $16,157 worth from the United States. So that the people paid the larger tariff, the general tariff, on the larger quantity of imports. Taking a common article like brushes, used in every household, we find that the old Conservative national policy duty that was so much complained of was 25 per cent, whereas under the present tariff the general rate is 27½ per cent. The average rate paid in 1909 was 27·4 per cent, an increase of 2·4 per cent over the duty under the national policy. Shawls were imported under the old tariff at 25 per cent, whereas under the new tariff, under the general schedule, the duty is 35 per cent; the average paid in 1909 was 33·64 per cent instead of 25 per cent under the much-abused National Policy. Ribbons, 30 per cent under the old tariff, 35 per cent under the new tariff, making an average of 35·20. I shall have something to say of this item a little later. Ladies' blouses and shirt waists, an article of every-day use worn by the ladies, were 32½ per cent under the old tariff, that is the general rate; under the new tariff 35 per cent, the average rate of duty paid in 1909 being 33 per cent or one-half per cent more than under the old and much abused National Policy tariff. Take lead pencils, a small thing it may seem, yet an article that is in use in every household, an article that is extensively used in the province of Ontario by every child going to school, and yet even the little children are taxed higher than before; 25 per cent was the duty under the old tariff, 27½ per cent is the duty under the new tariff, that is the general duty, but taking into consideration all the various duties, British preference, general tariff, intermediate tariff, and surtax, the average rate of duty paid in 1909 was 29·22 per cent or nearly 4¼ per cent higher than under the much abused National Policy tariff. Railway rugs were 25 per cent under the old duty and were raised to 35 per cent, making an average in 1909 of 30·12 per cent. Then we have fishing rods. The sportsmen had to pay 30 per cent under the old tariff and 30 per cent under the new. That is a case different from the others where the duty was reduced to 26 per cent. Clocks were 25 per cent under the old tariff and 30 per cent under the new, I mean the general tariff, the average being 31·14 per cent. Corsets were 32½ under the old tariff and are 35 per cent under the new, making 34·31 as the average rate of duty in 1909 instead of 32½ paid prior to the advent of the present low tariff government. Ready-made clothing under the old tariff was 5 cents per pound and 30 per cent, equivalent in 1896 to 34¼ per cent. The present government raised the general duty to 35 per cent. Of course, the British preference has been applied, but notwithstanding that the duty in 1909 averaged 33·77 per cent. Baths, batting and sheet wadding was 22½ per cent under the old tariff and under the new tariff was increased to 25 per cent, making an average duty of 25·2 per cent as against 22½ under the old tariff. Then we come to the items of guns and firearms. These were 20 per cent under the old tariff, and were raised to 30 per cent. Then the British preference was applied and the deduction of one-third brought it back again to 20 per cent. However, as I stated before, the government omitted to take into consideration the fact that we do not import all the guns from Great Britain. We import largely from the United States, so that the average rate of duty paid on guns was 27½ per cent instead of 20 per cent as under the old tariff, and yet hon. gentlemen will tell us that they have reduced the tariff. Now, I have given these concrete examples, selected examples of various kinds of woollen goods; I have spoken of cotton goods and other articles of manufacture, so that the people may have their attention drawn to the fact that this government that promised a reduction in tariff has actually given us large increases. Now, we may demonstrate that in some other way, but before proceeding to give other statistics, I propose to give one or two illustrations of how the new tariff works. Take the article of lead pencils to which I referred a moment ago. There were imported last year, I mean in 1909, from Great Britain $11,091 worth. These came in under the British preference and got the benefit of the one-third off, and had we imported pencils from no other country than Great Britain certainly the duty would have been reduced. But we imported from the United States $117,303 worth as against $11,081 worth from Great Britain. Now, the result of that is that whilst under the old tariff the duty paid would have been $50,852, the new duty in 1909 was $59,446, making an increase on this little item alone of $8,594. And yet these gentlemen go through the country and boast that they are the low tariff party. Take the article of ribbons, which I think is a very good illustration of the effect of the tariff. This is an article used in every house. The ladies, the children, little girls, all like to be decked out in ribbons. The government seem to know this, and they say: if you will beautify yourselves by wearing ribbons, we will make you pay for them, and here is the way it works out. We imported from Great Britain in 1909, $13,584 worth of ribbons. We imported from France $320,553 worth. These came in under the general tariff of 30 per cent instead of 25 per cent. From the United States we imported $92,386 under the general or higher tariff. From Switzerland we imported $361,394 worth, all under the general tariff, whilst we imported from Great Britain under the British preference or reduced tariff only $13,584 worth. Altogether under the general tariff we imported $1,288,609 worth, whilst, as I stated before, under the British preference, all we imported from Great Britain was $13,584 worth. Now what is the effect when we compare this duty with what it would have been under the old tariff? The duty on ribbons under the old tariff would have been $402,616. On the $1,342,054 worth which we imported under the present tariff we paid a duty of $472,671, or in all, we paid $70,055 more duty on ribbons alone in 1909 than we would have paid had the old duty remained in force. And yet hon. gentlemen say they are the party of the low tariff.

On one single article of every day wear, every day purchase, the actual increase in duty is $70,055. I would think statements like this ought to be startling to the country, and to open the eyes of the people to the fact that this government have not redeemed their pledges to give a reduced tariff. I would not complain so much if they had not increased it, but the duty has been increased, and that is what I complain of. I complain that the duties to-day are abnormally high as compared with what they were under the previous government. On certain articles they are reduced no doubt, but there are others on which they are largely increased and unfortunately the articles on which the tariff ought to be maintained are those on which the duties have been reduced. Had the government applied this increase of duty to support Canadian industries, there would have been a justification for it, but when you apply it to articles that are produced in this country or are produced to only a very limited extent, and compel the people to pay high taxation without giving the benefits of employment of labour in the country or of protection, I say that the people do not agree with that kind of tariff. We are told that taxation has been reduced. Time and again this has been said, and last session the Minister of Customs particularly boasted of it. I shall give a table which I think will conclusively demonstrate that taxation, on the whole, instead of being reduced has been increased. The Minister of Finance gave us an important table giving the population of the country from 1891 down to the year 1910. I propose to utilize that table to show how taxation has been increased. That table is as follows:

Year.	Customs Duties.	Excise duties.	Total Taxation.	Rate per Capita.
1896	$19,833,229	$ 7,926,006	$27,759,285	$ 5 46
1906	46,064,598	14,010,220	60,074,818	9 60
1910	61,031,336	15,108,633	76,139,969	10 21

Thus, the average per head of taxation for the year ending March 31, 1910, is $10.21 as against $9.60 in the fiscal year 1906, and as against $5.46 in the last year of Conservative rule, 1896.

I shall take another plan to show how taxation has been increased. Hon. gentlemen in making their comparisons in the increase of taxation put together the amount of dutiable, and the amount of free goods. The dutiable goods are the only goods with which we have to deal in the matter of taxation, for, as we all understand, free goods pay nothing. It may be argued that a number of articles have been put on the free list, and that that ought to be taken into consideration. I grant it. Corn, for example, has been put on the free list, but when corn was put on the free list the government, being anxious not to lose the revenue, largely increased the duty on sugar, making up the loss they had sustained by putting corn on the free list. In 1909 the duty on raw sugar was $2,673,423. Under the old rate of half a cent per pound the duty in 1909 would have been $2,267,125, an increase under the present tariff on the imports of raw sugar for 1909 of $406,298. That is the people of this country pay as duty on sugar $406,298 more than they would have paid had the tariff of the Conservative party remained in force. I remember that a year ago the Minister of Customs drew attention to the fact that this duty was on raw sugar. He said the people of this country did not consume raw sugar, that they were so well off that they consumed refined sugar. The Minister of Customs need not have made that statement, because it is well known that refined sugar is the article that goes into consumption in this country. He should have told us at the same time that the refined sugar is made from the raw, that the raw sugar is simply the basis from which the refined sugar is obtained, and the moment you increase the duty on the raw sugar you increase the duty on the refined sugar. I wish to make a comparison on the importation of corn. The importation of corn in 1909 amounted to $5,414,672. This came in free. Out of this we exported 303,321 bushels leaving 5,111,351 bushels as comsumed in Canada. The old duty on this amount of corn consumed in 1909 would have been, at the rate of 7½ cents per bushel, $383,351. Now, we take the added duty on raw sugar of $406,298, and deduct the loss on the corn of $383,351, and we find as between those two articles that the government takes out of the pockets of the people $22,947 more than they would have done had they left corn at the old rate of 7½ cents a bushel, and left sugar at the old rate of ½ cent a pound. What advantage is it to the people of the prairie provinces that corn should be put on the free list? They are not purchasers of corn. I do not understand that corn is imported from the United States into the great west, and consequently they get no advantage whatever from the reduction of the duty on corn. But they are every one of them taxed heavily for the increased duty on sugar which they have to pay while they get no advantage from the reduced duty on corn. I submit that problem to hon. gentlemen from the west, and ask them if they have received fair treatment in the matter of these two items of corn and sugar.

There is one other consideration I desire to submit. As I said before, I am going to deal with the dutiable goods only, because it is rather a matter of no importance to many people who consume dutiable goods whether some other person gets an article free of duty. For example, what advantage is it to the lady who goes down Sparks street and buys a muslin dress, or any other dress, on which the duty has been increased; what advantage is it to that lady whether manufacturers of agricultural implements get their iron and steel free of duty, or at a reduced rate of duty? She gets no advantage out of the reduction of duty on iron and steel, but she is compelled to pay the high duty on all she purchases herself. Better would it be if these duties were so regulated that all parties would pay their fair share, and that the duty would not be taken off, or almost entirely taken off, to the benefit of only one class of the community, while another class is compelled to contribute to the revenue of the country. I say, therefore, we have only to deal with dutiable goods in order to ascertain what the taxation of the country is. In 1896, dutiable goods imported into this country amounted to $74,259,940, on which a duty of $20,290,037 was paid, making an average rate of duty that year on dutiable goods of 27·22 per cent. Now, I will come down to the year 1897, when there was a slight reduction. The amount of dutiable goods imported into the country was $74,108,590, paying a duty of $19,891,996, giving an average rate of duty of 26·84 per cent for that year, a slight reduction of the taxation of 1896. A revision of the tariff took place again in 1897, when the government seemed to need more revenue. In 1909, two years after the last tariff came into force, we imported in dutiable goods alone, $185,329,094; on these there was paid a duty of $52,670,287, making an average rate of taxation in 1909 of 28·28 per cent, as against 27·22 per cent in the last year of Conservative rule; and yet hon. gentlemen will tell us they have reduced the taxation.

Mr. M. CLARK. Are these calculations made only upon goods which pay duties? Do they take any notice of goods put on the free list? I am asking for information.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am only dealing with the dutiable goods, as I told the House.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. M. CLARK. The hon. gentleman would surely give the government credit for being reducers of the tariff in respect to the articles on which they abolished the duty altogether.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have done so. I gave the government credit for reducing the duty on corn, putting it on the free list, and for increasing the duty on raw sugar at the same time; but the increase on raw sugar was more than the reduction on corn. Now, it so chances that the constituents of my hon. friend in Alberta do not buy corn; consequently, putting corn on the free list was of no advantage whatever to the people of Alberta.

Mr. M. CLARK. Corn is not the only article.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am giving that as an illustration, and I might give many others. But every man in the province of Alberta buys sugar, the hon. gentleman knows that.

Mr. M. CLARK. They do not all use it, a large number.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think there are very few who do not use it. I think if I were in the hon. gentleman's place, I would have hesitated to make that statement. Sugar is an article of household use, and the people who consume sugar pay the increased duty, and if they do not consume corn they get no advantage in respect to corn. As I said, the lady who goes down Sparks street and buys a dress which is subject to a heavy duty, gets no advantage whatever out of the reduction of duty given to the manufacturers of mowers and reapers on their iron and steel. Consequently, I am justified in dealing with dutiable goods, and those alone. Now, some people may question the propriety of my saying that the taxation in 1909 was $52,670,287. I desire to make plain what those figures mean. The actual customs duty paid that year was $48,059,791. But apart from that, there was an increased duty on tobacco paid as an excise duty; nevertheless it was taxation, and we must add that in order to determine what the taxation of the country was. There was also paid in that year as bounties, $2,467,308. Who will venture to say that that is not taxation? I may be told by the Finance Minister that this was paid out of revenue. So it is. The Postmaster General has a surplus, a large surplus, and a large amount of these bounties may be paid out of that surplus. There is revenue also from other sources; the public works of my hon. friend produce a revenue, and it may be out of this revenue that the bounties are paid. They may be paid out of various sources of revenue, and possibly not a dollar of these bounties is paid out of customs revenue; perhaps the larger part is paid out of excise revenue. So I am not counting the item twice, I am perfectly fair, it is something added to the taxation. No man can question the fact that the payment of bounties is just another system of protection. It reduces the duties on iron and steel to give the manufacturers of iron and steel a bounty instead of the duty that was imposed. Practically it is a duty, to all intents and purposes. Therefore, I am perfectly justified in saying that the duty in 1909 was $52,670,287, making an average rate of 28·38 per cent, or about 1·16 higher than the average rate of duty on dutiable goods in the last year of Conservative rule.

Now I contend that there is a feeling abroad all over the country, and I sympathize with it, that there ought to be a hewing down of these extreme duties, more especially on articles which are not made in the country, but which people have to buy, and which are imported from other countries, and which constitute practically a direct taxation. I submit this proposition as a fair criticism of the government's tariff policy, and I have no doubt when they come to reduce their tariff they will take matters of this kind into consideration. Just fancy, on that one article of ribbons alone to-day the people of this country pay over $70,000 more in duty than they would have paid had the tariff of 1896 had remained in force. Examples such as I have given will tend to open the eyes of the people to the fact that they are being subjected to a system of high taxation that I do not think the circumstances warrant.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) did not do us all the honour of presenting this criticism of the tariff at an earlier stage of the session when we might have had an opportunity of doing him the courtesy of examining it in detail. Much of it, however, is a mere reproduction of the hallucinations which my hon. friend has permitted himself to entertain for a number of years and which, I suppose, he means to carry down to the end. Some features of his criticism, however, are somewhat new. We have reached a stage of the public business when I am sure we shall all desire condensation, and if I reply very briefly to him he will be aware that I have no desire to be discourteous to him, but that it is simply because time is precious. As to the general statement that there has been no reduction in the tariff I can only say that it is almost an amusing statement to me whenever I hear it made. We have discussed time and time again this question and I have presented to the House in detail lists of hundreds of items on which tariff has been reduced. They are all to be found in 'Hansard,' fully set forth and I shall not waste the time of the House by attempting to go into them. My hon. friend may select here and there some particular case. He says that there were some cases in which the tariff was increased but he forgets that if the general tariff was increased with regard to some items it was substantially reduced as respects the British preference, with a proper desire of turning trade towards Great Britain rather than towards foreign countries. Where goods coming under our tariff are not chiefly produced in Great Britain it is quite possible that in the cases of those particular articles the tariff works in the way of an increase. But take the standard staple articles, such as my hon. friend has mentioned, and what do we find? He says that the duties on cottons are higher than they were in former years and he makes the extraordinary statement that the duties on woollens are higher. The duties on woollen goods under the old tariff ran from 40 up to 50, 60 and 70 per cent. The duties on woollen goods under our present tariff were reduced. As every one knows woollen goods are articles which are, in a peculiar manner, the product of Great Britain, and if you have the duties reduced under the British preference, what folly it is to talk about these duties being increased under the general tariff which applies to countries which do not send us goods of the same class. Great Britain is the greatest competitor in woollen goods. Germany is a competitor to some extent, but Germany has not such favourable rates of duty. The duties on woollen goods have, if I may use the expression, been enormously reduced. Perhaps I should qualify that and say that they have been largely reduced—reduced so much, that from the other side of the House time and time again, the complaint has been made that we have reduced these woollen duties. But after all, we have to deal with the tariff as a whole and not with any particular individual item. My hon. friend asks what value is it to the lady who goes down to buy her ribbons if she has to pay a higher price? What concern is it of hers that the duty on agricultural implements is reduced? If the lady could deck herself out in ribbons only and be received in respectable society my hon. friend's criticism might be useful, but if that lady decked herself out in ribbons only—

Mr. HENDERSON. You would not have her deck herself out in mowing machines.

Mr. FIELDING. No, but it is the mowing machine of the husband that enables her to buy ribbons.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose she had no husband.

Mr. FIELDING. Then she had better get one, and in this country she will get one very quickly. In the happy days prevailing now, any good woman can readily get a good husband. There might be some excuse for her not having a husband in the olden times when every man could not support a wife, but in these happier days which now prevail she can get a husband readily and he can support her well and afford to buy her ribbons and silk dresses. Then my hon. friend enunciates the most extraordinary doctrine with regard to duties on dutiable goods only. My hon. friend says that all you have to consider is the duties on dutiable goods. What folly! Suppose we should put 90 per cent of our importations on the free list and to the remainder add 5 per cent in duties, what would be the result? True, the duties would be increased on one-tenth of our imports, but on nine-tenths of them we would pay no duty at all, and then my hon. friend would say that it would make no difference what we did in regard to the free list, that it is only the dutiable list that we have to do with. Then he points out that the duty on ribbons has been increased. If you make 90 per cent of the imports free and only take the dutiable list it might be easy to show that there has been an increase on particular articles. But, the payment of duties must be determined in the aggregate. We have discussed that matter over and over again in the House. It has been shown that, taking the imports into Canada of goods which have been brought from other countries, if the old tariff had remained in operation the people of Canada would have paid tens of millions of dollars more in duties during the last fourteen years than they have paid. It is not necessary to take up the time of the House by going into that matter in detail, but that fact will be apparent to any person who looks at the figures. Another argument that my hon. friend has brought in here is that bounties mean an increase of taxation in addition to. Could anything be more ridiculous? I was surprised to find my respected friend bringing that old yarn in here again. I would have thought that he had got over that delusion. He says we do not know where these bounties come from, whether they are taken out of the post office revenue, customs revenue or excise. He does not and we do not. Nobody can tell what particular source of revenue pays any particular item of expenditure. The revenue all goes into the common pot and it is paid out of the common pot for the benefit of the public services of the country. There is no difference between the fund out of which you pay a bounty and the fund from which you take the indemnity of a member of this House. They both come from the same source.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Are they charged to the same account?

Mr. FIELDING. That is another question. We are not now discussing the question of charges against income and capital.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. My hon. friend does not charge them to the same account. He eliminates them from the same account in order to show a surplus.

Mr. FIELDING. That is another question, which I will be happy to discuss with my hon. friend when I have more time. I intend now to confine myself to the points made by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) and to only a few of them because I have not the time to deal with them in detail. There is no means of determining what particular source of revenue pays the bounty. The revenue all goes into the common treasury, and the charges upon that revenue come out of the common treasury. A merchant may go into a customs house and pay $10,000 in duties and it goes into the revenue account. Next day one of the steel companies comes along and makes application for $10,000 in bounty and the money goes out. My hon. friend says that makes $20,000 of taxation. The $10,000 collected from the merchant went into the revenue and next day it went out to pay the bounty. There is $10,000 of taxation, but my hon. friend calls it $20,000 and he puts that in as a part of his statement. Surely my hon. friend must see that the thing is too ridiculous to admit of a monent's legitimate discussion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where do you put it?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is a kindergarten argument.

Mr. FIELDING. Then if it is I am addressing kindergarten pupils. It is the old story of the amount of taxation that a man pays. My hon. friend, in his delusion, takes the amount of revenue collected, and the various sources of taxation, and makes up what he calls a statement of taxation. I am not going to inquire whether the figures are correct or not; I am going to assume that they are correct. It is not a question of the amount of taxation that a man pays, but it is a question of the burden that it levies upon him. If in former times he could afford only one suit of clothes at a certain season of the year, he bought but one suit of clothes, and paid perhaps $5 into the customs on it. In these more prosperous times he will buy perhaps two suits of clothes and pay $10 in customs. He pays more taxation, but is he not better off? The rate of taxation is lower than it was before, but by reason of the greater prosperity, by the better times that have come to him, he can buy more goods, and instead of regretting that kind of increased taxation, I am glad that the prosperity of the people is so great that they are buying more goods, even although they thereby pay more taxes.

My hon. friend talks about there being no reductions. The curious thing is that whenever he comes to individual items, when we are dealing practically with these matters, he is generally commenting on our reductions.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister misquotes me if he says I contended there were no reductions. I could not have been more plain than I was. What about the corn? Did I not say it was made free, and that there were reductions under the British preference?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but my hon. friend insists on misleading the House, as well as himself. I know he does not do so intentionally, but he deceives himself. The hon. gentleman lays down the most marvellous doctrines of political economy. He says that when you increase the duty on raw sugar you thereby increase the duty on refined. Could anything be more preposterous? You increase the duty on raw sugar, but the duty on refined is fixed in the tariff, you increase it or not as to amend the tariff in respect to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the minister will find I spoke of the price.

Mr. FIELDING. Then let us take it at that. The price of sugar in Canada is not governed by the duty on raw sugar. The price of the raw sugar affects the profits of the manufacturer, but the people, as my hon. friend says, do not eat raw sugar, but refined, and the price of refined sugar in Canada is largely governed by the tariff on refined sugar. My hon. friend says we have increased the duty on refined sugar.

Mr. HENDERSON. On the raw sugar.

Mr. FIELDING. He does not eat any raw sugar. What difference for our argument whether the manufacturer is making more or less money; the difference between the raw and refined affects the manufacturers profits. As a matter of fact when this government came into power the duty on refined sugar was $1.14 per 100 pounds, and the duty on British refined sugar—and it is only from Great Britain it comes practically—is 72 cents per 100 pounds. Yet my hon. friend goes out and tells the people that we have increased the duty on the sugar the people eat.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FIELDING. The people do not use the raw sugar; the difference is that the refiner has less protection than before, but I believe that owing to the greater consumption and the increased business of the country he has been able to do very well. Whenever we do make a reduction my hon. friend is found to complain. In the little schedule we have had before us yesterday he regretted the decrease in the duty on leather.

Mr. HENDERSON. You allowed the Americans to do it.

Mr. FIELDING. Never mind how it is done, my hon. friend is complaining about there being no reductions and yet when we make reductions he complains. We reduced the duty on lime, but when we make the reductions,—and the hon. gentleman only mentioned these two items of leather and lime—he regretted that we had made them. How are we to satisfy my hon. friend? When we reduce the duties he will not be pleased, and when we increase them he is displeased.

Mr. HENDERSON. My complaint in regard to lime was that it was not properly classified. I claim that there is no reduction in this article if we classify it right. In the other article, of leather, two years ago you increased the duty and suddenly, after men had put their capital in the business, without notice, you decreased the duty.

Mr. FIELDING. As to their being no notice, tariffs are introduced for increase or reduction without notice; that is one of the advantages of our system that no one knows in advance of any changes. This arrangement with the United States does not affect the classification of anything. My hon. friend's complaint is that we are reducing the duty on this according to our custom classification and yet the whole trend of his speech to-day is that we are to make no reduction at all. There are many other points in my hon. friend's speech that I would gladly take up, but I feel that I should not detain the House.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

I. C. R. BRANCH LINES.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, the managers on the part of the House of Commons have the honour to report that they have met the managers on the part of the Senate at the free conference, which on their part was managed by the Honourable Senator Beique and others, for the purpose of further considering the amendments to the Bill (No. 17) intituled 'An Act to authorize the Government of Canada to acquire, by lease, lines of railway connecting with the Government Railways.'

The managers on the part of the Senate did not insist on the Senate amendment but agreed that the following be substituted therefor:—

Wednesday, May 4, 1910.

Resolved, that a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Masters in Chancery to acquaint that House that the following amendment made by the free conference to the Bill (No. 17), intituled 'An Act to authorize the government to acquire, by lease, lines of railway connecting with the government railways,' has been agreed to by the Senate.

Add to section 3 the following as subsection 2:—

2. The said board shall in their report to the minister recommending the lease of any line of railway—

(a) give their estimate of the cost of such line, and such information as they are able to give of the moneys received by the company owning the line from the sale of bonds or by way of bonuses or otherwise;

(b) state the then present equipment of the road, together with the average rate of freight and charges for passengers on the same and a comparison of such rates with those charged on the Intercolonial railway;

(c) the total receipts and expenditures for three years last past;

(d) an estimate of future receipts and expenditures in the event of the road being leased as a branch of the Intercolonial railway.

Attest.

S. E. ST. O. CHAPLEAU,
Clerk of the Senate.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MAGRATH. I would like to make an explanation to the House. A few weeks ago I complained here that the Postmaster General had not brought down some papers. I find on looking in the office this morning that the hon. gentleman brought down these papers some time ago. I wish to withdraw my remarks and I sincerely apologize for the statements I then made.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I can only say, thank you.

CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY BRANCH LINES.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate acquainting this House that the amendment made by the free conference to Bill (No. 17) intituled an Act to authorize the government to acquire by lease lines of railways connecting with the government railways, has been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. PUGSLEY moved that said amendment be now taken into consideration.

Motion agreed to, amendment read first and second time, and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS—SUPPLY BILL.

House went into committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. I beg to move:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 31st of March, 1911, the sum of $58,093,999.44 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

These are based on the main estimates.

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 31st of March, 1911, the sum of $5,197,781.63 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

These are based on the supplementary estimates.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 235) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1911.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FIELDING. The various items that have been from time to time adopted by the House in Committee of the Whole have been consolidated in the resolutions which we have just adopted, and have now carried in the form of a Supply Bill. The Bill has been prepared by the officers of the House, it follows the usual form, and is in all respects free from any objection.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

THE PUBLIC BUSINESS.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, as the hon. leader of the opposition is not in the Chamber, I want to impress upon the hon. Minister of Finance, now that the fiscal year ends on the 31st of March, that he have the Auditor General's Report ready to lay on the table at the beginning of next session. We lost several weeks this session owing to the delay in bringing down that report. And as the new rules will be in force next session, I hope we shall get through with the work of the session in two or three months, so that we shall have two or three months more in which to riddle the government with hot shot, which they richly deserve. We had not much time this year to deal with many matters that ought to be dealt with in the Public Accounts Committee, owing to the delay in the Auditor General's Report coming down. Several of these matters on which I am sure the government will be called on to answer have been held up, and in order that these may be attended to next session, I hope the government will be ready with the business of the session when the session opens.

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General, as follows:

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

The Commons of Canada have voted the supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill:

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1911.

to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks His Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the second session of the Eleventh parliament of the Dominion with the following speech:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I am glad to relieve you from further attendance in parliament, after a session which has been marked by legislation of the most important character.

The measure for the establishment of a naval service, which has become of pressing necessity, in view of the extraordinary advance, within recent years, of Canada as a nation within the British empire, is the crowning development of a policy which was anticipated from the earliest days of confederation.

The Act to amend the law respecting the Aid of Dry-docks will, it is believed, lead to the early construction of docks capable of receiving the largest warships and thus assist the movement for naval defence.

The Act making provision for the lease of lines connecting with the Intercolonial railway, and for their operation as a part of the system of government railways, will enlarge the sphere of usefulness of the Intercolonial, and tend to increase the development and prosperity of an important section of the Dominion.

The appointment of a commission to inquire into the needs and present equipment of the Dominion as respects industrial training and technical education should prove an important contribution to the work of the provinces in advancing the industrial development of Canada and the welfare of its working classes.

The measure to revise and amend the Insurance Act, which engaged the attention of parliament in the previous session, has now been completed and is likely to prove an effective and satisfactory law.

The amendments made to the Currency Act, with special reference to the production of a Canadian gold coinage at the Ottawa branch of the Royal Mint, marks another step in the advance of Canada.

The arrangement lately made between the United States and Canada, averting a threatened tariff conflict and opening the way for negotiations which give promise of further improvement in the commercial relations of the two countries, has, I am glad to know, given much satisfaction to the people on both sides of the boundary line.

Equally gratifying is the termination of the long standing tariff dispute with Germany upon terms which fully recognize the important principle for which Canada contended, and which encourages the expectation of an extended and mutually beneficial trade, between the German empire and the Dominion.

The Act for the investigation of combines, monopolies, trusts and mergers, will, it is hoped, without injuriously interfering with commercial and industrial enterprises, effectively protect the public against attempts to restrain trade unduly.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the liberal provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

My official connection with Canada is drawing to a close. My interest in it, however, will not be severed. I shall continue to watch its progress and development, with the sincere hope and belief that under God's providence it will ever increasingly prosper.

The Speaker of the Senate then said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this parliament be prorogued until Monday, the 13th day of June next, to be here holden, and this parliament is accordingly prorogued until the 13th day of June next.
