HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 8, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GIBSON—BASIS FOR QUESTION ON CHANGING OF "DOMINION DAY" TO "CANADA DAY"

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I wish to deny the error made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he falsely stated that I asked a planted question on the subject of Canada Day in the House, as quoted in the Hamilton Spectator of Friday, May 5. Actually, the foundation for the question was my own private members' bill which has been filed and has been before parliament since last October. I request—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must know that he has to give the Chair the required notice in writing before raising a question of this kind. No notice, to my knowledge, has been sent to my office; therefore the matter cannot be pursued.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

APPEARANCE OF MINISTER BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the Standing Committee on Regional Development to invite the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to appear before the committee this week in order to provide answers to questions posed at previous meetings on grants and other related matters concerning McCain Foods Limited, the distribution of industrial incentive grants by province, and the failure of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to maintain an adequate check on the impact of its grants on other industrial operations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether this motion has not already been put to the House. I appreciate there is nothing in the rules to indicate that a motion cannot be put ten times on the same day or ten times on ten consecutive days, but I think that would be an abuse of the rules. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO ENFRANCHISE PRISONERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-202, to amend the Canada Elections Act (prisoners enfranchised).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to permit inmates of jails and penitentiaries to vote in federal elections. It is submitted in the belief that prisoners must, to the greatest degree possible, exercise responsibility in the democratic process if their re-entry into society is to be successful.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

AUTHORIZATION OF STANDING COMMITTEE TO HEAR EVIDENCE FROM CERTAIN ASSOCIATIONS RESPECTING DISABILITY PENSIONS

The President of the Privy Council:

That the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs be authorized to hear evidence from spokesmen for:

1. The Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada, concerning disability pensions of members of the armed forces who were prisoners of war.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21, this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

Questions

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would the House not consent to passing this motion now without debate?

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs be authorized to hear evidence from spokesmen for:

1. The Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada,
2. The National Prisoners of War Association, and
3. The Dieppe Veterans and Prisoners of War Association, concerning disability pensions of members of the armed forces who were prisoners of war.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the government House leader has yet had a chance to confer with the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) with regard to the establishment of a committee to look into matters related to youth, as agreed earlier by the Secretary of State. Has there been any progress, and when will the government House leader be in a position to take some action on this matter?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet reached a decision on it and I am not so certain whether a decision would be material at this point.

2. During the last year (a) how many persons were arrested for smuggling heroin into Canada (b) what was the country of origin for each of the persons arrested?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise has embarked on a wide and varied training program for customs officers over the last three years. This program has proven most successful in the training of customs officers to identify narcotic materials and training in the methods of apprehending narcotic smugglers. As a matter of policy, all narcotic seizures made by customs officers are turned over to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for action under the Narcotic Control Act.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police work closely with the Customs Department who are very active in the suppression of illegal drug importation at ports of entry. A close association exists with the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) and this affiliation permits a reciprocal exchange of information on international drug trafficking. In recent months, the R.C.M. Police joined in a continuing tripartite meeting with France and the United States which is aimed specifically at increasing the exchange of information between the three countries involved.

Close co-operation in this area has always existed between Canada and the United States and, in addition, recent tripartite meetings on the ministerial level have taken place to establish closer liaison between Mexico, the United States and Canada.

2. (a) During the calendar year 1971, 14 individuals were charged by the R.C.M. Police for illegal importation of heroin into Canada.

Question No. 294—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the takeover of Rochdale College to utilize the premises as a senior citizens home?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): In accordance with the announcement made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs on August 4, 1971, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has taken foreclosure action againts the owners of Rochdale College. INDIAN AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO JAMES BAY AREA INDIANS IN OPPOSING HYDROELECTRIC POWER PROJECT—REQUESTS TO MINISTER BY DELEGATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have some questions for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising out of a report that he met with representatives of the Indian people of northern Quebec in connection with the James Bay development. Can the minister inform the House briefly what requests the delegation made to him and what his replies were?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, when I met the Indians of the province of Quebec on two occasions last week, they asked me to take part in the discussions with the Quebec authorities on the James Bay development; I told them I should be happy to do so. Since then I have been in touch with Quebec Premier Bourassa. We are to meet next Monday to discuss the situation and ensure that the Indians will be consulted on every aspect of the project that concerns them.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister inform the House whether the delegation did not also speak to him about some court suits they have started and ask him for financial and other assistance with respect to these court actions?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the Indians and Eskimos of northern Quebec told me that they had taken it upon themselves to bring legal action before the superior court so that it might give a ruling on the constitutionality of the act setting up the James Bay corporation. I told them our services were at their disposal but that the suit would have to be financed with the funds they have already received from us and other institutions.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister whether he did, in fact, offer additional financial assistance or any legal assistance to the Indians and Eskimos in connection with these cases——or if they have funds available for use?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, they asked me whether we could grant them more funds for research. I replied that we have the matter under review and that I believed we could help them a little more in this field.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister whether the delegation indicated to him that they intend to proceed with these court cases or whether they were taking these actions simply as a symbol to dramatize their rights? If they intend to proceed with the court actions, is he not prepared to give them legal as well as financial assistance?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this is a repetition of a question already asked.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In light of the fact that in accordance with chapter 45 of the Statutes of 1912 the province of Quebec placed itself in the same position as the federal government with respect to the rights of the Indians and thereby became the guarantor of those rights, would the minister not consult with his colleague the Minister of Justice and other colleagues so he might be prepared to intervene as protector of the rights of the Indians and Eskimos in connection with this matter?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that there is a great deal of communication between different departments of this government.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—COST OF TRAVEL TO MONTREAL FOR PROTECTING INDIANS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Could the minister tell us whether his department paid the travel expenses of the Indians who went to Montreal for a demonstration against the James Bay project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information. The Indians receive funds from our department and from other agencies, which they use for the best possible purposes. Concerning expenses for that particular trip, I cannot say whether or not they were paid for by our department or any other agency, but I must recognize that it is their right to hold a demonstration.

DRUGS

RESIGNATION OF DIRECTOR OF NON-MEDICAL USE OF DRUGS DIRECTORATE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT—PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare in relation to the resignation of Dr. William Craig, the head of the federal directorate dealing with the non-medical use of drugs. Does the minister propose to make any statement in the House with regard to the resignation of this very senior official?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I had not intended to do so, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Craig submitted his resignation, indicating at the time that he had no comment to make. I take it that as a public servant he has a right to submit his resignation at any time. and that is what he has done.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention of the minister to make any additional funds available in the hope that a suitable successor to Dr. Craig can be appointed who feels he can carry on this useful work?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I believe very useful work can be carried on now under the present allocation of funds. If the priorities are such that further initiatives have to be taken in this area, the government would be prepared to respond in such circumstances.

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF FINAL REPORT OF LE DAIN COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Would the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell the House when the full and final report of the Le Dain commission will be tabled and whether the report is now in the hands of the government?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, to answer the latter part of the question first, no, the report is not in the hands of the government. I cannot be very explicit as to when the final report will be submitted. The chairman has indicated that there will be another instalment of the report dealing with marijuana and I expect it fairly shortly. The final report, which will include all the research studies and the complete findings covering the entire area under the commission's mandate, I expect to be some months away.

NON-MEDICAL USE OF DRUGS DIRECTORATE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the internal strife, if I may use that word, that is going on, would the minister be prepared to appear before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to explain the situation to the committee and relieve the concern of Canadians?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first, I do not agree with the premise of the hon. member with respect to strife. Second, when I appear before the committee in the normal course of events to explain my estimates, committee members will have ample opportunity to ask me any questions they wish.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Did the minister have recent discussions with the Quebec authorities in connection with the proposed national park in Témiscamingue and if so, is he in a position to tell us where they stand?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I did get in touch with the Hon. Guy St-Pierre Friday last in that connection. We discussed it in general terms, but we hope to meet soon to discuss it more specifically.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM WAR—CANADIAN INITIATIVES TO OBTAIN CEASEFIRE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the worsening situation in Viet Nam with both escalation of the bombing and the potential fall of South Viet Nam, can the minister indicate whether or not Canada has taken any initiatives with the Soviet Union, China or the United States in the hope of obtaining a ceasefire?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I did answer a similar question last week and the answer is no.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister will admit that the situation grows appreciably worse. In view of the offer made earlier by the Secretary General of the United Nations to make his good offices available, may I ask whether or not we have had any communication with the Secretary General with a view to the Secretary General taking some responsibility in this area?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I did support the initiative of the Secretary General. He has not been in direct communication with us, but I felt it desirable to support him in his offer of good offices. As the hon. gentleman knows, however, neither of the Viet Nams is a member of the United Nations so he would have to intervene in his personal capacity. However, I hope that he is successful.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the crisis having a very serious effect on the great powers and, in particular, on the level of stability in Southeast Asia, would the minister be prepared to make a statement shortly on the government's own attitude with respect to the situation and any potential initiatives or intiatives that the government has already taken?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not think much purpose would be served by my making a statement on the very serious situation in Viet Nam at the present time. I might reiterate, however, the offer of Canada to act as an observer or in any capacity in which we could be useful. I doubt very much, if the Secretary General of the United Nations is unable to act as an intermediary, whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada would be successful.

FINANCE

HOLDINGS OF UNITED STATES DOLLARS—RELATION TO CANADIAN DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact government holdings of United States dollars have now reached $4.227 billion, can he say what exchange rate for the Canadian dollar this massive intervention is aimed at?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dollar is continuing to float.

Mr. Ryan: As the Bank of Canada's monetary policy has been designed to avoid any undue appreciation of the Canadian dollar, according to the Economic Review, can the minister inform the House what the government means by "undue" and whether the present appreciation is acceptable or undue?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious doubts about this kind of question.

Mr. Ryan: It is a very good question.

Mr. Speaker: The question may be of interest and important, but I think it is so broad it should normally be answered by way of a statement on motions or perhaps during consideration of the budget.

DELAY IN B.C. MUNICIPAL PROJECTS BECAUSE OF CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY DISPUTE—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FORGIVENESS PERIOD UNDER FEDERAL FINANCING

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Finance who, from what I can see, is his usual cheerful and generous self, particularly today. In the lower mainland of British Columbia a construction industry dispute has stymied a number of federally aided municipal projects, resulting in the danger of municipalities suffering losses because of their inability to get the projects in operation and thereby benefit from the forgiveness clause in federal financing. Will the minister look into the matter to see whether it is possible to extend the period within which municipalities can qualify for this aid?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I will certainly look into that, Mr. Speaker.

INFORMATION CANADA

IMPLICATION OF LACK OF PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE QUEEN FOR DISTRIBUTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour and has to do with the announcement by Information Canada of an expansion program costing several millions of dollars for the provision of computerized information and the like. Recently I have found that people who have written to Information Canada asking for a picture of the Queen have received a document in reply headed "Publications, Information Canada" and stating "publication permanently out of stock". Will the minister look into this to find out whether this is another step along the way to demoting the monarchy?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to receive from the right hon. gentleman the communication from which he has read and to look into the matter immediately.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT INCENTIVE GRANTS NOT BEING USED TO UNDERMINE LUGGAGE INDUSTRY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might ask for your indulgence before asking my question to refer to the presence in your gallery of a former member of this House, now the Premier of Newfoundland, and a distinguished delegation from the Newfoundland government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: My question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can he assure the House that funds under the Regional Development Incentives Act are not being used to undermine the luggage industry in Canada through grants being paid to companies that are importing cheap luggage into the country?

• (1430)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I read the same piece of news, Mr. Speaker, and I have just asked the department to inquire about it. This was the first time I heard about it. I do not know whether the situation is as described. As soon as I receive a report I will tell the hon. member.

Mr. McGrath: By way of a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, and in view of the interest of some of my hon. friends in the affairs of the minister and his department, would he agree to appear before the committee this week even though he is not scheduled to appear until next week?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): My appearance before the committee has been arranged by the steering committee, and I am going to follow that arrangement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In the talks with the postal unions has the government in fact made a formal offer on wages and job security?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, that question ought properly to be addressed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question. Inasmuch as the distinguished High Commissioner for Bangladesh has arrived in Ottawa, can the minister report on whether or not facilities have been acquired in Dacca for the Canadian plenipotentiary to perform his duties, and when that official will in fact be performing his duties in Dacca?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take the question as notice. I am not certain whether our new High Commissioner has yet appeared in Dacca. As the hon. member knows, there is a double accreditation to this post.

INCENTIVE GRANT TO MICHELIN TIRE—NUMBER OF NEW JOBS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the conflict between his department's figure of 1,278 new jobs for the Michelin plant expansion which his department is assisting and Premier Regan's estimate of 700 new jobs, can the minister tell the House which figure is correct and exactly how many new jobs are expected?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think that the apparent contradiction has been explained by Premier Regan. If the hon. member takes the trouble to read the second press release, he will realize that the statistics of the department are right.

INCENTIVE GRANT TO MICHELIN TIRE—POSSIBLE EXEMPTION FROM CUSTOMS DUTIES FOR CERTAIN IMPORTS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Has the Michelin Tire Company been granted an exemption from customs duties for certain imports? If so, when was this put into effect, is it now in effect, when will it expire, and has there been any change in the status of the exemption?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has not authorized any duty-free entry of certain types or certain sizes of tires for the Michelin Company, nor has any decision been reached as to when such a remission would come into effect.

SUGGESTED BAN ON USE OF DIETHYLSTILBESTROL IN MEAT PRODUCTION

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that diethylstilbestrol has been sharply attacked as a cancer-causing agent, and that recently two environmental organizations filed a lawsuit against both the United States Food and Drug Administration and the Department of Agriculture to demand that the use of this synthetic hormone in cattle feed be prohibited, will the government give our people the same protection as 21 other nations that have already banned the use of this material in meat production?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will have to look into the matter, Mr. Speaker, and report to the hon. member later.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT REASONS FOR REFUSAL OF PROJECTS BE GIVEN

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State who is the minister responsible for the Opportunities for Youth program. Is it his intention to change the content of the letters which are being sent to applicants whose projects have been rejected in order to give them more concrete information or definite reasons as to why their projects have been rejected?

Mr. Speaker: I believe this question was asked last Friday, but I may be wrong. Perhaps the minister might reply if the information was not given to the House then.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No, the question has been asked, Mr. Speaker—you are perfectly right—and I explained at length that we must send a concise letter which is necessarily too short and unexplicit so that young people whose projects are rejected can receive this letter as soon as possible and look for another job. But young people who insist on having specific details and individual letters can ask for them if they are patient enough to wait for the reply.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—INQUIRY RESPECTING RESIGNATIONS IN ADDITION TO THAT OF MR. BUREAU

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Since the resignation of a few young people engaged in the administration of Opportunities for Youth, is the Secretary of State in a position to indicate whether there have been other resignations after those and if so, how many there were?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, since the last ones, there have been no others.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Secretary of State is being funny, but he knows perfectly well what I mean.

Since the resignation of "Bureau and Company" last week or ten days ago, have there been other resignations?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, there is no organization incorporated under the name "Bureau and Company", and therefore I cannot be sure of what the hon. member means. And I am happy that for once he thinks I am funny.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

WITHDRAWAL FROM MARKET OF CERTAIN TYPES OF CHILDREN'S CAR SEATS AND HARNESSES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It relates to a matter which was dealt with in a recent news release issued by his department. Will he inform the House whether those children's car seats and harnesses dealt with in that communiqué, which according to its contents failed to comply with the standards mentioned therein, will be withdrawn from the market and, if not, why not?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention in the enforcement of the regulations that those will not be made available for sale. There are some inventories that in fact probably will have to be scrapped. We regret that, but the choice to me was obvious and we made the decision that they should not in fact be distributed.

DISCUSSIONS WITH ONTARIO GOVERNMENT TO ENCOURAGE BORROWING IN CANADA—POSSIBLE LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the announced borrowings of the government of Ontario, both for itself and the Ontario Hydro Commission, amounting to between $800 million and $900 million. In view of the stated intention of his department that borrowings be conducted in Canada rather than abroad, can the minister indicate whether he has held discussions with officials of the government of Ontario to encourage them to borrow in Canada, and is he prepared to make some arrangement to assist them in that borrowing?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I had discussions two months or more ago with Mr. Darcy McKeough, Provincial Treasurer of Ontario, when he indicated to me what his borrowing intentions were. I repeated what I said at Jasper, namely, the request of the federal government to all provinces, made by my predecessor, that they seek accommodation where they could in the Canadian market. He assured me that would be done and that he would go to foreign markets only where he needed to do so. A good deal of the foreign borrowing to which the hon. member refers is in the form of roll-over and reinvestment of funds and does not involve the total exchange that he has mentioned.

Mr. Saltsman: In the minister's conversations with officials of the government of Ontario did he give any indication to them that he was willing or prepared to take action with the Bank of Canada to lower interest rates in Canada, in order to accommodate their borrowings in this country?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, even if I had outlined this I would not at this stage make it known.

BARLEY—SUGGESTED ADJUSTMENT IN ASSESSMENT OF FREIGHT CHARGES AGAINST ALBERTA GROWERS

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Is the minister considering any adjustment in assessing freight charges against Alberta barley growers in view of the fact that most of the barley is shipped through Vancouver rather than the Lakehead, which results in Alberta producers paying an average of six cents per bushel more than they should pay?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's figures are in error. This matter has been discussed frequently by myself with the Wheat Board. The Wheat Board has indicated to me on a number of occasions that at any time when more Alberta barley appears to be moving through Vancouver than through the Lakehead a change in rate structure may be sought.

Of course, for that to happen a change in legislation may be required, and the co-operation of the House in putting through the amendments to the Wheat Board Act now on the order paper may be of assistance in that regard.

FUTURES TRADING—POSSIBLE UPDATING OF ACT TO PROVIDE FEDERAL SUPERVISION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Has the government any intention of updating the Grain Futures Act, passed years ago but not proclaimed, in order to provide federal supervision over trading in futures on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the committee I set up to study rapeseed marketing referred to this matter and it has been under review by us. The existing Grain Futures Act would not be of much use in connection with rapeseed trading. Therefore the question we will have to put before the House is what kind of amendments may be required to make the act effective.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEWFOUNDLAND—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—ACTION TO CORRECT PROBLEM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the continuing problems in regard to the delays in payments to claimants under the Unemployment Insurance Act, particularly in the province of Newfoundland because of the distance between the office there and Moncton, would the minister indicate to the House whether any action is being taken to correct this problem and to relieve the pressure?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised this question on several occasions, and as a result of representations made some time ago I asked for a study to be made on the feasibility of an alternate computer service which would be available in Newfoundland. I should have that report this week, and I hope it is a positive one.

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—ACTION TO PREVENT LOANSHARK OPERATIONS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, Mr. Speaker. A while ago there was some trouble with loansharking associated with unemployment insurance cheques. At that time the minister's parliamentary assistant who was being questioned in the House indicated that legislation might be prepared by the government. Is the government considering the preparation of such legislation and if so, what form will it take? Will it be by amendment of the Small Loans Act?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, preliminary investigation shows that if there is any weakness in the act or law it lies in the provincial jurisdiction. We are suggesting now that perhaps we should be concentrating in that area, with the co-operation of the provinces of course, in order to bring an end to this type of situation.

Mr. Rowland: May I suggest to the minister that he take a look at Bill C-187 and see if that might solve the problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a representation, not a question.

SALES TAX REMISSION TO GREAT CANADIAN OIL SANDS LIMITED—SUGGESTED RETURN IN VIEW OF PROFITS—OTHER REMISSIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of some questions I asked him some time ago with respect to the $6 million remission to Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited. In view of the fact the latest report from that company shows that in its last fiscal year it made profits of $152 million, would the Minister of Finance now ask the company to return the $6 million remitted to it by the government on pleas of having lost money?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, those were not the grounds on which remission was made, and similar treatment was accorded that company by the government of Alberta.

Mr. Lewis: My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago I asked the Prime Minister whether he would inform the House about any other grants or remissions which Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited had received from other departments of the government and he said he would. Perhaps he has the information now.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do, Mr. Speaker. I have had the information for almost a month now. I have to refresh my memory and see what the information is in detail or else read a long paragraph to the House. In short, Mr. Speaker, may I say that no other department has made any grants of the nature in which the hon. member is interested.

[Later:]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I did not hear the Prime Minister correctly but he seemed to say that there were no grants of such a nature as might interest me. Would he be good enough to tell me exactly what that means? Were there no grants or were there other grants in which the Prime Minister thinks I am not interested?

Mr. Trudeau: What I meant to exclude were such programs as PAIT and other programs which apply to all industries. I am not certain that there was no such program applying to that particular company, but on the basis of the inquiries I have made the answer is that no grant has been made by the government to Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited or Sun Oil Company Limited or any subsidiary of these companies. This is the answer to the question as the hon. member asked it, but as I said it does not exclude the possibility of other programs that apply across the country for which perhaps some demand has been made by this particular company.

SUGGESTED REMISSION OF SALES TAX TO BRITISH COLUMBIA HYDRO

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Is the government considering the remission to British Columbia Hydro of the same tax in respect of the millions of dollars it has spent on developments over the relevant period?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I do not see any immediate connection between the two subjects, Mr. Speaker.

WHEAT—SUGGESTED INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT ON PRICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the strong statement made by 11 major United States and Canadian farm organizations which met at St. Paul with reference to wheat prices, namely, that recent prices for wheat have not been satisfactory to farmers and have not given them any financial benefits from the increasing world wheat markets, and their suggestion that we should press for an international agreement under which prices would be fixed that would bring the farmers a reasonable return, would the minister say what the present situation is, whether the government of Canada is pressing for an international wheat agreement, and what are the hopes for early signature being secured by both the producer and consumer nations?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the sentiments of producers referred to by the right hon. member seem to follow exactly the lines of my own as expressed in a speech in Minneapolis. We have made our position very clear to the world that we are eager for orderly marketing and support price levels in the International Grains Arrangement which are adequate to recover the cost of production of producers all over the world. We have made this known to other participants and potential participants in such an agreement and we are watchful for the right opportunity to come back to discussions on such arrangements.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister and I should like to ask him whether or not, in view of his general acceptance of the suggestions made by these major farm organizations, he agrees that farm prices for wheat today are so low as not to give farmers any financial benefits from increasing world markets?

Mr. Speaker: I have serious doubts regarding the form of the question. The right hon. gentleman is asking the minister whether he agrees with a statement made outside the House in certain terms. I would not think that is in order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will ask the question more directly, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister of the view, shared by these various companies and organizations, that today the Canadian farmer, who is getting $1.73½ at Fort William for top grades, is receiving a price that does not secure for the farmer any return even though there are massive increases in the sales of wheat?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it was our view of the level of international prices that led us to hold the domestic price at $1.95½ and at a later date to introduce the two-price system. I have no hesitation in saying that the recent price levels in international trading have been too low from the point of view of the over-all cost of production. As I indicated in my speech in Minneapolis, that is exactly the point which leads me to believe that the nations of the world should agree on price levels which are fairer to everybody over all, both to buyer and seller.

PROPOSED CLOSING OF QUAKER OATS PLANT, SASKATOON—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. A. P. Has the minister been in consultation with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and are they preparing to meet with officials from Saskatoon to discuss this matter and see what action can be taken to protect this industry?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, no meeting such as that referred to by the hon. member is planned at the present time. We are of course looking at the total potential use of this particular plant and some discussions along those lines are taking place.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member. Perhaps he might allow a supplementary to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. We will then return to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Gleave: Is an investigation under way to determine whether this foreign-owned company is entitled to move its operations out of Saskatoon without consultation with the government and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I really do not think that question raises any doubt that requires investigation. Our objective, of course, will be to see if any alternatives are available.

Hon. What response has Canada made to requests from France and Great Britain that in future their airlines be permitted to fly SST aircraft through certain corridors over Canada at supersonic speeds?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall consult with my colleague the Minister of Transport and ask him to answer the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, a point of order, since Thursday last when the government was questioned on government business a new order has appeared on the order paper, namely, government order 25 which concerns educational rights for the Pentacostal Assemblies of Newfoundland under the British North America Act and consequential amendments thereto. Since the same order appeared on the order paper last session, may I ask the government House leader whether he can inform the House when this order will be brought forward, bearing in mind the limited duration of the present session of parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. President of the Privy Council will be allowed to reply, but that is not a point of order, it is a question which might properly be asked during the question period. Having said this, and the question having been asked, the President of the Privy Council might reply.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting with the House leaders tomorrow, I hope. It should be possible for us to consider this and other items to which the House might wish to give priority.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the amendment of Mr. Korchinski (p.1872) and the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Knight) (p. 1903).

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, the other day when I was speaking on this bill I suggested that, while my impression of the Farm Credit Corporation had been quite favourable and that while I felt it had performed a useful service, I also had the impression that upon occasion it became a little overenthusiastic about lending money to buy land at inflated prices. In the years 1968 and 1969, the Russians and Chinese were buying a lot of grain so farmers in the prairie provinces sometimes got a little carried away and paid too much money for farm land in expectation of continuing high prices for their products. It seems to me that officials of the Farm Credit Corporation got a little carried away too, and were prepared to lend too much money for the purchase of these farm lands. This is to be regretted because many farmers now find themselves saddled with a debt out of proportion to the productive value of the land at the present time. I think the corporation should be careful not to extend credit to the point where farmers will get in trouble.

The $100,000 limitation proposed in this bill may help inflate the price of farmland. This might be an advantage to those who wish to sell land but the Farm Credit Corporation, when lending money, should consider the productive capacity of that land in relation to the projected crop price. I am somewhat concerned about the possible duplication of services in respect of that portion of the bill concerned with the small farm adjustment program. At the moment, some provinces are providing advice and counselling to farmers on management questions and it seems to me that this bill will bring the Farm Credit Corporation into this area as well. It seems to me there is also some duplication with regard to the possible establishment of a land bank for the assembly of land. I do not think this would be useful, and in addition it would mean that the federal and provincial governments would be doing practically the same thing. I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), who is not in the chamber, and the parliamentary secretary look carefully at this aspect of the bill. Instead of going ahead on its own, I suggest that the government should continue to press for an agreement between the provinces and the federal government.

The problem of land ownership, land tenure, mortgages and absentee landlords has plagued many countries for centuries. Those problems have been the cause of much political unrest, especially in older countries where there was not enough good land to go around. The result was that exorbitant rents were charged by absentee landlords. In some ways the difficulties in this country are similar. Often, passing farmland from one generation to another is difficult. Industry has evolved a system under which industrial shares are bought and sold on the market. I think there is room for similar action in connection with land ownership. Land banks are being established; one hears of land assembly programs; the government makes loans available for farmers, and the size of farms is increasing. The government is actually advocating the elimination of certain farms.

Although this may not be the proper debate in which to raise this subject, I cannot help but feel that we have not sufficiently studied the side effects of enlarging the size of farms. In our towns and cities social difficulties are increasing. Crime and pollution are showing upward trends. There are transportation difficulties in urban areas. All these social evils are being created in the name of economic efficiency. These are the consequences that flow from encouraging our people to leave the countryside and move to the cities for the sake of some of these so-called other advantages. We have not looked carefully enough at this aspect of our problems.

I have conducted some studies with regard to land ownership, because I wanted to see what was being done in other countries. These studies, unfortunately, are not yet complete. If they had been completed I would have brought forward some recommendations in my speech. Perhaps I can do this another time. In the meantime, may I suggest that we examine this bill carefully in committee. Let us call witnesses and see what farmers themselves as well as other interested people think may actually happen to land prices if credit is expanded to $100,000 per farm. How many do they think will take advantage of this scheme and what will it do to land prices. As I said, I suggest that the Standing Committee on Agriculture call witnesses and hear the farmers' point of view on what may happen in rural communities if this program is implemented.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this bill and on the amendments to it, may I say that, to me, it seems this is largely a housekeeping bill, providing for credit to be expanded to $100,000 for individual farmers and for a certain broadening of the act to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to step in and perhaps manage farms under certain circumstances. I do not think the principle under which farm credit is to function is materially different from the principle under which it functioned in the past. Here we see merely a continuation of expanded policies that have largely the same thrust as previous policies.

I am sure that it would be of value if I were at this time to assess the impact of farm credit on agricultural production and assess, particularly, the effect on grain production in my riding. Since farm credit, either from the provincial or federal viewpoints, seems to be a vehicle by which land changes hands, I think we need to consider the situation in this light and to ascertain what the impact of farm credit on the agricultural community in general has been and on the farms of western Canada in particular. A recent news report suggested that agricultural credit had allowed a greater consolidation and a better adjustment for farmers. It is difficult to gauge what should be considered that better position in which the farmer should be.

In going around my riding and discussing the impact of farm credit on the economy, nearly all people agree generally, that farm credit has raised the price of land and inflated land values. Such credit has created problems connected with overcapitalization, particularly for young farmers who, in view of current, reduced grain prices, have been finding a great deal of difficulty in meeting their payments. Certainly, a survey of the value of grain marketings in western Canada would indicate that the higher prices paid for land are not really related to the productive value of land. For instance, in 1952-53, grain receipts totalled $1,132 million. In 1960-61, they amounted to $708 million. There was a gradual rise in prices, to the peak of $1,353 million in 1966-67, which was followed by the disastrous decline to $860 million in 1968-69. There has been little change since then. We are told that record numbers of bushels have been sold and are being shipped from our ports.

An examination of the money involved will show that few additional dollars are available to the farmer, for reasons that are quite obvious. The record is being set in barley. If the estimate of 250 million bushels is reached, the value per bushel will be small. In addition, the price of wheat on the world market has been substantially reduced in recent years. Even if we reach the estimated figure of 400 million bushels, not a great deal of additonal money will be involved. The situation of the farmer is being made worse by the steadily rising cost of production. This has put him into an economic squeeze and has prevented him from attaining what he considers to be his right.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the tax policies of the three levels of government are increasing the farmer's costs of production. Our basic tax structure is having that effect. The effect of the low price of grain on farm credit is very great indeed. The western grain farmer, finding his price set in the world markets at a time when those prices are dropping, is in a particularly difficult position. That position can be made worse by the sort of sales failure encountered in 1968-69 or the sort of price failure that has occurred in recent years.

The problem of farm mortgages has been with the western Canadian farmer almost since the beginning of the grains industry in this country. Those who remember the so-called "dirty thirties", when mortgage companies foreclosed on many farmers, also remember that it was necessary for the government to pass the debt adjustment act to safeguard farmers and save a portion of our farming industry. Since then, conditions have improved. However, at present, in view of low cash incomes, farmers are again in difficulties, particularly those with high capitalization problems who may have encountered, for various reasons, an unfortunate set of circumstances.

I think we can now examine what the effect of all these factors has been on the farm grains industry. First, we are considering an industry which is using newer farming methods. The advent of the tractor enabled the farmer to dispense with his four or six horses and use the equivalent of 30, 60, or even 120 horses available with his tractor. This being so, it is quite obvious that the individual farmer could cultivate more acres than previously. Of necessity, many grain farms had to be consolidated into larger units. However, a survey of any given group of farmers will show widely differing circumstances affecting the individuals within that group. Some of the farmers to whom I refer might be small farmers working with a quarter or a one half section of land. Some might be young farmers; in many cases, the farmers would be older. If a farmer were displaced by a neighbour who used farm credit to buy him out, in many cases the farmer who left the farm was too old to acquire a good skill or job in the industrial field. On the other hand, perhaps he was too young to retire.

The use of farm credit, which has brought about the quick consolidation of farms within about 20 years, has had a profound effect in that it has helped to depopulate the rural prairies. In my own area, according to the latest census, between 1961 and 1970 the population has dropped by about 5,000 people. Considering the size of the villages and towns of my area, one can well say that the rural population has decreased severely. Perhaps farm credit should not be entirely blamed for this because the advent of consolidated schools many miles away in the village or town has also had a profound effect. There were lesser things which had an effect, too, such as the closing of small post offices and the building of hospitals in larger communities as a result of which older retired people were closer to medical services. These and many more factors had a profound effect on the rural population on the Prairies. I am sure there will be widespread disagreement about whether this has been beneficial.

My observation of the rural Prairies has been that more than anything else, the agricultural farm credit has been very useful in the consolidation of land and, apparently, in making farmers more productive. However, it has created a significant social problem. Even without farm credit, there would have had to be a consolidation of farms in the grain areas, but the use of farm credit has hastened that process. Farm credit has not been as beneficial as it might have been. I think the reason lies in the fact that farming is not a monolithic industry, such as pulp and paper, mining or some manufacturing industries. It is made up of many small and relatively insignificant economic units. It varies from a few acres to many thousands.

A family farm provides the basic needs of food and shelter for many people. It is interesting to note that relatively small farms with a quarter or half section provide the farmer with a standard of living that in many ways seems comparable with that of his neighbour who farms on a much larger scale and whose farm is apparently much more productive. The reason seems to be that much of the efficiency and productivity of the larger farm is lost as a result of his higher costs. This may indicate that when an individual farmer increases his acreage, and thereby the production of his farm, with the same amount of manpower, the displaced farmer moves further up the ladder to the feed mill in town or into the retail end of selling food. Statistics indicate that the number of people involved in the passing of food from the farmer to the consumer has remained relatively constant at about 30 per cent of the people engaged in our economy. One of the most significant consequences of the use of farm credit is that loans would be given out in such amounts that they would, in effect, amount to a subsidy to farmers extending their operations by buying out their older neighbours. If farm credit should be used as a subsidy, it would not entirely improve the lot of the farmers.

An interesting editorial in the Manitoba Co-operator of June 3, 1971 entitled "Dubious Objective?" discussed the findings of Charles L. Schultze of the Brookings Institute in the United States. This study dealt with the effects of the United States farm price support program on the farm economy, but the findings could be applied to many programs being attempted or proposed for this country. Dr. Schultze showed that it is difficult, if not impossible, for the United States farm price support program to increase the farmers return on his own labour and investment to the point where it would be equal to what he could earn in a non-farm enterprise.

The Brookings economist found that in the long run, farm subsidy programs, related as they are to the production of farm commodities, tend to benefit farmers chiefly in their role as land owners and not in their role as farm operators. It seems that too many farmers will accept a less than parity return on their own labour while still remaining in agricultural production. Dr. Schultze wrote, and I quote:

> If this is true, then any attempt to increase income above that level by a price-support program will result in a rise in land rents which will gradually be capitalized into higher land prices—
> In turn, with higher land prices, a subsequent calculation of parity income will show that price support programs have not improved the relationship between actual and parity income, since the parity rate of return, applied to the higher land prices, raises the level of parity income right along with the rise in actual income.

In essence, where there was a price support policy, first generation owners captured the benefits in the form of capital gains when they sold the land. Second generation owners lost many of these benefits through high carrying charges. If there is any removal or reduction of price supports or subsidies, there will be substantial losses to second generation land owners who are paying sizeable carrying costs in the form of mortgage interest. What the economist was saying was that where subsidies are given, they clearly do not have the required effect because of the basic conclusion that most farmers will accept a less than parity return on their own labour in order to stay in agriculture.

If farm credit has many virtues, it seems it also has significant dangers. Perhaps the most significant responsibility lies with the official of the Farm Credit Corporation who must decide whether a particular individual should receive a loan. One of the most significant decisions he must make is whether or not a particular farming enterprise will be a viable operation, and whether the farm credit will increase the viability of that operation. Obviously, this is extremely difficult because what was an obviously viable farm operation in 1966 may not now be a viable operation.

As far as the grain industry is concerned, those who grant farm credit lean towards making the medium sized farm larger, but tend to shy away from increasing the size of the small farm. Perhaps this is because the small farm cannot show the initial capital, and the management skill of the farmer is doubted by the farm credit official. The farm credit official must make judgments and must often make loans to quite young farmers. Unfortunately, many of these young farmers have not yet attained the ability or management skill to cope with a change of circumstances such as an unexpected fall in prices or a crop failure. Also, the young farmer or perhaps his wife may not wish to remain on the land and this creates some difficulty.

One of my greatest concerns is the lack of diversity available to the prairie grain farmer should there be bad times for his grain growing enterprise. In the past, a grain farmer could keep some pigs, milk cows, turkeys or cattle to supplement his income and have a truly mixed farm. One of the advantages of low capitalization where a farmer's labour content was high was that he could change over his barn to keep hogs, chickens or milk cows at a small expense. However, in recent years, this avenue has been closing for the individual farmer. The proliferation of marketing boards, quotas and so on has seriously reduced the elbow room which enables a farmer to change his farming ventures and keep his head above water.

By means of quota restrictions, the Canadian Dairy Commission enthusiastically and effectively moved the farm separated cream industry out of western Canada and gave the quota to the province of Quebec. We now have the situation where the province of Manitoba is a dairy deficient area, into which seven million pounds of butter are shipped at the taxpayers' expense and where many farmers are asking for a cream quota. The answer of the Dairy Commission is that a small producer of 600 or 700 pounds a year is inefficient, and that these people would be better off if they where phased out. Their quota should be reserved for the larger and more efficient operator. But the fact that a producer milks cows by hand for a few hundred pounds of butterfat each year does not mean he is inefficient, particularly when it helps to keep groceries on the table. In my own riding failure to obtain a quota has meant that some families have left agriculture when they might well have remained on the farm. This has been particularly so over the past few years when returns from grain have been so poor.

In Bill C-176, the government has paved the way for the establishment of marketing boards which will control the industry by means of quotas. As I see it, imports will also need to be controlled in order to keep the market stable. It will, of course, be necessary to ensure that quota holders are reliable and able to produce the amount their quota calls for. This inevitably means that the small producer will get short shrift from marketing commissions and boards, because the commission will require reliability. The bother of supervising many small producers will be too great for them. In my own province of Manitoba, a person cannot turn to cream production at the present time because there are virtually no quotas available. The few which do become available are from farmers who retire or who sell their farms.

The number of turkeys which a producer is allowed to raise without applying for a quota is somewhere between 200 and 300. Again, in the area of broiler production, efforts at curtailment appear likely, and, obviously, under the direction of a national marketing broiler board, the farmer who might be primarily a grain farmer but who wished to augment his income by broiler or chicken production will be out of luck, especially if his operation is of the so-called family farm size. The operations of the egg marketing board will have a similar effect. Regulations in the interest of public health further restrict a producer's ability to move into egg production.

The hog commission in Manitoba is already instituting a quota system. In this case, hog producers will not be able to get quotas from their neighbours by buying them, or being given them. The commission seems intent on maintaining the privilege of allotting quotas. What does this mean? It seems that quotas will be given, not on the basis of fitness or ability to produce, but at the whim of the head of the commission. He may turn down a farmer because he does not like him personally, or because he is of a different political stripe, or because he wears a green tie. This, again, will seriously restrict the ability of a farmer to diversify his income should he encounter difficulty in meeting his loan payments. Cattle raising remains. But with the passage of the marketing bill, it appears it will only be a matter of time before the supply of finished cattle from western Canada is reduced in order to allow more of the finishing to be done in eastern Canada.

What remains for a farmer whose grain growing operations are in a bad way and who is unable to meet his loan payments? What alternatives are available to him? Obviously, the only real alternative, if he does not possess a quota entitling him to produce, is to work off the farm or to send his wife out to work. I do not think this is the best means of retaining a viable and efficient farming industry. It occurs to me that by establishing marketing boards, applying quota restrictions and so on, we are building up a bureaucratic apparatus which will not serve us very well. We ought to look at what is happening in the European Common Market. Farm marketing there has been so beset by fees, quotas and so on that the resulting situation is one of the prime reasons for the predicted head-on trade war between ECM and the United States market. In Europe, even the manufacturers are complaining that high agricultural prices are reducing their ability to compete in the world market. We ought to be very careful before moving further in a similar direction.

As to the operations of the Farm Credit Corporation, as far as they affect the grain industry, may I express the hope that loans from the Corporation are not the only means whereby farmers are able to acquire land. I would hope that conventional lending agencies such as banks, credit unions and mortgage companies, continue to have a share of the business. Should the Corporation assume what amounts to a monopoly in connection with farm mortgages, this, to me, would indicate that it is being too generous in its mortgage policy. It would seem to me that a case could be made for giving young farmers, at least once in a lifetime, some assistance in starting a farm either by allowing them a low interest rate for a specific number of years, or in some other manner.

There is one other suggestion I have to make in connection with mortgages. At the present time it seems that a farmer who applies for a loan is required to mortgage all his property in order to qualify. It appears to me to be more logical that each parcel of land should stand on its own. Farmers might then tend to be more careful when borrowing money, and loans would be more directly related to the actual productivity of the land. There would be a further advantage. If a farmer were so unfortunate as to be in danger of losing his land and going into bankruptcy it might be possible for him to salvage, say, one quarter of the land; he would not lose his farm completely. At present there seems to be no way in which a farmer who has fallen on hard times can salvage something in compensation for his labour. There may be areas of farming in which the limit of $100,000 on any single loan is a reasonable one. I doubt, however, whether a loan need be as large as this in the grain industry today. In my view it would not be good for a large proportion of our agricultural land to become mortgaged to the state.

Whatever else may be wrong with Canadian agriculture it is certain that individual farmers here are much more efficient than their counterparts in a state-run economy such as Russia, and able to produce a great deal more. It is generally agreed that the agriculture industry in Russia should perform much better than it seems to be doing; in this context it is significant that some 40 per cent of the Soviet people are still working on the land. It is my belief that the mortgaging through the Farm Credit Corporation of an increasingly large proportion of our farmland will eventually amount to government control of agriculture with a consequent loss in efficiency. Many of the so-called land bank schemes will, in fact, work in this way. The leasing of land from government sources seems to result, inevitably, in inefficiency, causing an increase in food prices without, however, benefiting food producers to any significant extent.

In conclusion, I suggest that this bill should be given a thorough examination in committee, bearing in mind that the making of large government loans to individual farmers, creating a heavy capitalization, carries with it many social and economic implications of which we are only now becoming aware.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, by way of beginning I will say that I am not going to be very long so that whoever is to come after me may prepare accordingly. If there is a theme to what I am about to say it is this: with the possible exception of clause one and the related clauses of this bill, I find myself to be in agreement with its provisions and I would say it is a reasonably good piece of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rowland: However, and this is the point, farm credit legislation, even good farm credit legislation, is useless unless farmers are in a position to take advantage of it, and today they are not. The farm economy is so depressed and the farm cash income so low that too many farmers are already finding great difficulty in meeting their obligations to the Farm Credit Corporation. The experience of the last three years will, I predict, make farmers extremely reluctant to take advantage of the changes in the legislation provided in this bill. If the measure is ever to have the effect the government intends, then the government must first take action to improve the dollar return to the farmers and to introduce an element of stability into farm cash income. And any such stabilization plan must be based on net, not gross, farm income.

If this legislation is to have beneficial effects, the government must first remove the farmer from the effects of the cost-price squeeze in which he now finds himself trapped by taking, in addition to the measures I have just suggested, immediate action to implement the major recommendations of the Barber Commission on Farm Machinery, for example. That is the point I wish to make. However good farm credit legislation may be, it is doomed to be ineffective, indeed useless, unless conditions are first created which will permit those for whom it is intended to use it. Those conditions do not now exist in the agricultural sector of our economy, and despite the fact that this government has been in office for four years it has done very, very little to create those conditions.

To illustrate, may I read into the record two questions placed on the order paper by my colleague the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) and myself respecting the Farm Credit Corporation as it is presently constituted, and the replies that we received to those questions. First, my question No. 402, answered on Wednesday, April 19, asked:

> What percentage of farmers having loans with the Farm Credit Corporation have been unable to meet their obligations to the Corporation during the past two years?

The answer was as follows:

> The percentage of all borrowers in arrears increased from 6.4 per cent in 1968 to 9.9 per cent in 1969 and to 15.1 per cent in 1970.

Then I asked:

> Of those farmers who have successfully met their obligations, what percentage have been forced to borrow money from other sources in order to make their payments to the Farm Credit Corporation?

The answer to that question was "information not available". Then, I asked:

> If the information requested in part 2 is not now available, is any attempt being made by the Farm Credit Corporation or any other government department or agency to obtain such information?

The answer to that was:

> No. The Corporation does not believe it should, nor does it have the power to, require borrowers to declare the source of funds with which they make their payments.

It is well known to all of us with any association with rural communities that a great many farmers are paying back Farm Credit Corporation loans by borrowing money from their families, relatives and friends, and their debt position is increasing. The figure of 15.1 per cent would be considerably higher if farmers did not have families, relatives and friends to draw on in times of difficulty.

The question of my colleague from Battleford-Kindersley asked:

> What percentage of Farm Credit Corporation loans were in arrears in each province in the years 1969, 1970 and 1971?

The reply was as follows:

The Farm Credit Corporation advises that as of the end of the fiscal years the amount remaining in arrears as a percentage of the amount due during the year was as follows:

Then followed a table for the three fiscal years. In the year 1969-70, the amount in British Columbia was 15.5 per cent; in Alberta, 19.3 per cent; in Saskatchewan, 11.6 per cent; in Manitoba, 14.0 per cent; in Ontario, 7.8 per cent; in Quebec, 3.8 per cent; in New Brunswick, 4.9 per cent; in Nova Scotia, 10.2 per cent; in Prince Edward Island, 11.3 per cent, and in Newfoundland 7.8 per cent. I will skip the intervening year, but in 1971-72 British Columbia showed a slight decrease to 14.9 per cent, Alberta increased to 21.0 per cent, Saskatchewan to 21.1 per cent, Manitoba to 24.7 per cent, Ontario dropped to 7.0 per cent, Quebec increased to 4.5 per cent, New Brunswick to 6.2 per cent, Nova Scotia down to 7.5 per cent, Prince Edward Island increased to 14.3 per cent and Newfoundland to 13.9 per cent. Those figures are staggering and they demonstrate just how greatly depressed is our farm economy, especially in the west. They also, I submit, cast severe doubt upon the ability of the farming community to avail itself in any significant manner of the improvements in the farm credit legislation which the bill represents.

To give the devil his due, there are, as I have said earlier, a number of provisions in this bill which I look on with favour and I might mention some of them. I like the idea of changing the word "necessary" in the act, with respect to when loans may be provided, to the words "will facilitate", so that loans may be made for any reasonable purpose related to the acquisition, operation, maintenance or development of a farm business. I like the idea that the provisions of the Farm Credit Corporation Act will apply only to Canadian citizens or landed immigrants. I like the idea of increasing the amount of money available to farmers. Even single farm operations nowadays grow large enough to require the amount of capital input that this act will now make available.

I like the idea of the Farm Credit Corporation making money available to farmers to undertake an enterprise on their farm that is not directly related to agriculture, so they can supplement their farm income and stay on the land. I like the idea of allowing persons to remain on the land for a period not exceeding their lifetime or the lifetime of their spouse if the land should pass from their hands. I also like the idea of making the age of majority, according to the legislation, correspond with provincial legislation since many provinces have now reduced the age of majority.

Indeed, as far as the actual provisions of the bill are concerned—I speak of its contents, not those things which it omits to include—I can find very little with which to quarrel. However, I am somewhat troubled by clause 1 of the bill, as I said earlier, which provides that section 11 of the act be amended by adding after subsection (1) the following:

The Corporation has all the powers necessary to carry out such duties or functions as may be assigned to it by the Governor in Council in relation to the administration of any agricultural program or as are assigned to it pursuant to any other Act of the Parliament of Canada.

It is apparent from the minister's remarks when introducing the bill for second reading that the section is designed to enable the Farm Credit Corporation to administer the farm adjustment program, the minister's conception of how to help the small family farm. We do not yet know the details of that program, we do not know how it is to operate. Indeed, most of us have gained at best only a fuzzy understanding, from the minister's statements to date, of the principles which will govern the operations of the plan. Passing this clause of the bill as it now stands gives the government carte blanche to operate as it chooses in the area of farm adjustment, and that is the kind of power that any legislature would be mad to give the executive arm of government except in the most exceptional circumstances. I know that clause 1 will come under intensive scrutiny by the Standing Committee on Agriculture when the bill comes before the committee, but I would urge the minister to accept the fact that such scrutiny is entirely warranted in view of the magnitude of the powers he is requesting for himself and his cabinet colleagues. I urge this view on the minister, especially in light of his repeated assertions that he wishes the legislation to have hasty passage.

For example, it would seem from the minister's statements on the farm adjustment program that the program will actively discourage the part-time farmer, the man who may have a marginal farm but who enjoys farming and wishes to stay on the land and to supplement his income by working in a town, in industry or in commerce. I stand to be corrected if that is not the purpose of the minister's farm adjustment program, but that is the understanding that I gained from reading his speech. If this is the case, if the minister does actively wish to discourage the part-time farmer, then I wonder if this kind of policy is wise. There is already an over-concentration of population in our cities, and this concentration is increasing. I am wondering whether we should not be doing everything possible to arrest or to reverse this trend till such time, at least, as our cities are able to cope with the problem that is generated by this massive increase in population, this massive influx of people in their late forties and early fifties who are looking for work and have been trained to work on farms, not in industry.

It would seem to me there is a practical virtue in doing everything possible to reduce the flow of people from rural parts of this country to the urban parts, at least until such time as we know how to cope with the concentration of population in the urban areas which we do not know how to do at the present time. If I am correct in the assumption that it would be best to arrest that flow, and if I am correct in assuming that the minister's adjustment plan would actively discourage the part-time farmer, and it would seem to me these two ideas are in conflict, the minister should have another look at the adjustment program, and this House should consider it and discuss it before any action is taken. This bill would allow the minister to put the program into effect virtually through order in council. That was really an aside, and I shall now return to the main theme.

I very much fear that this legislation, which is reasonably good when you look at what the bill includes and not what it excludes, will not accomplish the objectives the minister desires simply because the necessary steps have not been taken to assure farmers of the kind of stable level of income necessary to permit them to take advantage of the plan.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I find myself with many of the apprehensions about the present course of farm policy just expressed by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland). I suppose, therefore, I should thank him for making part of my speech for me.

Having regard to the amendments themselves, in light of the philosophy from which derives most government farm policy in Canada at the present time, I have few serious reservations about them. I feel it is appropriate under the circumstances that the maximum amount of a loan should be raised and that the restrictions, in some cases, placed by the present legislation on farm improvement loans applications, should be repealed. The increase in the total capital of the corporation from $56 million to $66 million is no doubt appropriate and will allow the corporation to have lent to it 25 times that amount, which is something like $1.4 billion. As the hon. member for Selkirk has pointed out, loans should be made in cases where they will facilitate the operation of a farm and not only where they are necessary for that operation. It is important as well that the maximum loan, regardless of the type of ownership, should be at the same ceiling of $100,000.

There are other good factors such as the continued use of the home, not including the buildings on the farm establishment, for security of the loans, and the adjustment or flexibility in respect of the age of persons making loans, considering the changes which have recently been taking place in some provinces in respect of the age of legal majority.

I support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) as I believe it will improve the bill. Having said that, I have grave doubts about the whole direction farm policy is taking at all levels of government in Canada at the present time. Farmers generally have an overwhelming apprehension about the fact that their fate is being sealed by some mysterious backroom boys in the apparatus of government who have little real understanding of or sympathy for the rural way of life, or any understanding or appreciation of the rich rural culture that has contributed so much to Canada up to now and which is now being blotted out. Whether it is being done overtly, unintentionally or represents a change in conditions I do not know, but we should have some control over whether or not that should be the trend. Whether we could have complete control, of course, is another thing.

Coming from Prince Edward Island as I do, I am fully aware that we down there have been sort of the guinea pig for the policies which the theorists would undoubtedly apply to the whole of Canada if they had the chance. When one reads government farm policy he sees that it frequently compares favourably with a treatise on how the New York Rangers should be coached, written by a self-appointed expert of ice hockey who has never been out of Tahiti in his life. I do not think it is necessary that this should be so, nevertheless it is the case.

[Mr. Rowland.]

Let me quote briefly from a statement made by Theodore Geiger, Head of the International Studies Section of the National Planning Association of the United States. This is Written in Dialogue and is from volume 4, 1971. He states:

> The need to be aware of the wide range of social and cultural factors, not commonly taken into account in devising government programs, and the fact that this knowledge depends largely on empirical investigation rather than on a priori reasoning, make the problem of involving the small farmers effectively in the economic growth process one of the most difficult in development strategy. Moreover, many political leaders and government officials are inclined to shirk this task not only because of the lack of knowledge of how to do it, but also because they tend to identify the rural commercial-subsistence part of the private sector with the rejected traditional past and to see only its urban industrialized portion as the desired, modern future.

That expresses well the problem which Canadian farmers are up against. Their future and farm government policy it would seem are being devised and brought into being by people who neither understand nor appreciate the value of that type of life or the complexity of problems farmers face. There seems to be among these theorists a worship of bigness. They have over-estimated out of all proportion the economic benefits of scale, and they have pushed the utterly false assumption that if a farmer increases his efficiency he will reap the benefits. This has not been the case. As a matter of fact in the last 20 years or so the agricultural industry has increased its efficiency more than any other industry in Canada, but the farmer is not any better off. He is worse off. This is neatly illustrated in an article in the current issue of Reader's Digest, written by H. Gordon Green, former editor of the Family Herald, who gives an example of what I am talking about. Dealing with dwindling profits he writes:

> The story of Winston Hansen of New Denmark, N.B., is typical. Hansen grew up in one of Canada's best potato-growing regions at a time when potatoes were planted by hand. The labor to pick the potatoes and put them into barrels was supplied largely by the owner's family and schoolchildren. 'A man who planted 20 acres of potatoes, and had a fair crop, figured he had a good year,' Hansen says. 'The machinery he needed didn't cost much: a couple of hundred would get you a mechanical potato picker,—

I think that should read "a mechanical potato digger".

> —and if you couldn't afford that, you could use a horse and plow.' But those were the days when a 165-pound barrel of potatoes sold for $4. or $5. At that price a man could make his payments and still have a bit of money to put into the bank.
> The last $5 year for the New Brunswick potatogrower, however, was 1950—about the time when Hansen, like many other enterprising young farmers, began his struggle to make up for an ever dwindling margin of profit by becoming bigger and more efficient. Today he plants 225 acres, owns $55,000 worth of the latest equipment, has his own storage cellars and grading tables. A shrewd soil conservationist, he spends $60 an acre on fertilizer alone.
> 'It costs me $2.50 to produce a barrel of potatoes,'' he says. Yet the price for top-grade potatoes at harvest time in fall 1970 was only $2.25 a barrel.

That was 25 cents below the cost of production, and the sum he received continued to decline until the end of the crop year.

I represent a constitutency in Prince Edward Island where there is a big number of large potato growers. Most of these are family farms in a technical sense, but they are large, highly mechanized operations. They have followed the same course as is cited in this article. Some 20 years ago they were getting along and making a living. Now I know of family farms that have followed the advice of the experts and have done what they were told would bring them profits. They have grown more, and become more efficient, but today some of these farms are in debt to the tune of as much as $120,000. Their assets in used machinery would not begin to cover their debts.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that if a farmer's cost of production per unit for any product is $1 and the market price is 95 cents, and if he were able to double his efficiency and produce the same unit at a cost of 50 cents, given the present marketing situation his selling price would be only 45 cents, and he would be no better off. But the consumer would not be paying any less for his food, because the gains made through increased efficiency by primary producers have been swallowed up by increased costs of distribution and processing. This is also illustrated in the article in Reader's Digest, and I quote:

—few city people have any idea of how small a percentage of their food dollar goes to the farmer. For instance, top-quality green peas in July 1971 brought a Quebec grower only $120 a ton shelled and ready for the can—a mere six cents a pound. In 1971, Ontario farmers in Essex County got only $1.50 a bushel for sweet corn. The magnitude of the gap between such a price and what the housewife pays for the finished grocery item is best illustrated by the farmer who bought enough corn flakes to fill a bushel basket—and found that it cost him $26.75!

Of the $2.1 billion spent on Canadian food in 1949, farmers received $1.2 billion, or 57 per cent. In 1969, when consumers spent $6.4 billion, farmers received $2.9 billion, or only 45 per cent. Clearly, an ever-increasing percentage of the food dollar is going into the food-processing and marketing industry, whose 1969 revenue was $3.5 billion—half a billion dollars more than the farmers were paid for providing the basic product.

It is frequently said that in the average restaurant, depending on the content of a meal, the waitress who puts the meal on the table gets more as a tip than the primary producer gets for the food which makes up the meal.

Mr. Osler: She is usually better looking, too.

Mr. MacLean: Yes, but farmers are not in business for their looks.

Mr. Whelan: But there are an awful lot of good looking farmers.

Mr. MacLean: To show the percentage of the housewives food dollar that goes to the primary producers, these are some figures for the year 1971. They show that the average cost to the consumer of a 16 ounce loaf of bread was 21 cents, of which the farmer received two cents. The price of pork per pound to the consumer was 59 cents to 95 cents, and the producer got only 22 cents. The cost of a dozen of eggs to the consumer was 47 cents, of which the producer got 25 cents. A 42-pound box of apples cost the consumer $5.50, and the producer got only $1.92. A 48-ounce tin of apple juice cost the consumer 40 cents, but the producer got only seven cents. For milk, the consumer paid 35 cents per quart, of which the farmer got 17 cents.

It seems to me that many of the planners of our present agricultural policies, whoever they may be, are getting most of their ideas from textbooks that were discarded in eastern Europe about ten years ago. The huge, industrialized collective farm, which was the fad in eastern Europe, has not proven to be as desirable or as profitable as theoretician economists would have us believe.

Again, I quote from Mr. Green's article:

Perhaps our agricultural planners should cease to encourage the survival of the fittest for a moment, and remember that Danish agriculture, perhaps the most progressive in Europe, is still pretty much in the hands of the family farm; that the Soviet Union, for all its emphasis on collective farming, has had to permit farm workers to cultivate individual plots of land for private use and profit; that the strength of the new China derives largely from the production of peasants who still retain a share in the land.

The so-called benefits of scale are not the only way in which the problems of the farmers can be tackled. I maintain that it is not the only solution. I go even further and say that it is not a solution at all. I believe that time will prove me to be correct. Farmers have increased their productivity in the last 20 years more than almost any other industry, yet they have not benefited, nor has the consumer gained, because the savings of the farmers have been swallowed up in the skyrocketing costs of transportation and distribution. These costs are higher in cases where there is a great deal of specialization. For instance, in Prince Edward Island people eat carrots which were grown in Texas and turkeys which came from California. I would say that the benefits do not accrue so much to the highly mechanized farmer in California or to the consumer in Prince Edward Island but they go rather to the transportation and distribution system.

Agricultural elephantiasis does not make for increased efficiency either, I believe. Large areas under one crop are an abhorrence to nature and invite epidemics of every conceivable disease that a plant might have. They invite epidemics of insect pests which have to be dealt with by excessive uses of insecticides and other dangerous chemicals in most cases. It follows that in mass production of food, so far as perishables are concerned, the food must be subjected to excessive processing to preserve it. The result is that more and more of the consumers in North America eat highly processed food which—and I believe nutritionists will agree—is not as beneficial to humans as is fresh produce. I believe that there is room, as is the case in Europe, for the production of specialized perishable foods near the areas where they are to be consumed so that the consumer will have the benefits of a fresh product rather than frozen or more highly processed foods. The larger is the area that is used for one crop only, especially if it is not in rotation, the more the balance of nature is disturbed, forcing an excessive use of chemical fertilizers, insecticides, fungicides and other chemicals which in the long run poison the whole biosphere.

I am leery of the much heralded small farm assistance program, because we have had a sample of it in my province where the experts who believe that the solution of everything is bigness are offering to buy out marginal farms. This is beneficial to many farmers who are at the end of their productive years, and certainly they are entitled to any benefits they can receive, but in my humble opinion this will not serve to solve the agricultural problems in Prince Edward Island or anywhere else. There is a program to reduce the number of farmers in Prince Edward Island from something like 6,000 to 2,500. If this is done, I predict that the 2,500 farmers who are left will be working harder, producing more food for less benefit, living a more unsatisfactory type of life, and going more deeply into debt than do the present 6,000 farmers. In addition to that, the ecology of the agricultural land in Prince Edward Island will be considerably more damaged than it is at present. I believe that the solution will not be found in expanding the size of the farms.

The benefits which may accrue from the economics of scale have, in most cases, been reached at the stage where reasonable mechanization could take place. To go on far beyond that stage, such as to 150 horse power tractors which cost many thousands of dollars, is, in my judgment harmful, unless the intention is to destroy the family farm entirely. If that is the intention, I think the situation is grave. Let us not forget that this country was built in the last century and in the pioneering era on what were family farms. It is the family farms which have contributed more than their share toward building this country, raising families who have contributed more than their share to the professions, to the sciences, to education, to religion and to many other endeavours in this country than have their city brothers.

As the hon. member for Selkirk said, surely we must not encourage too greatly the migration of rural people to urban areas, at least until such time as we can design and bring into being an urban area that is liveable for everybody in it, where everybody can have a job, and where everybody can aspire to a reasonable quality of life. That is not the situation at present. However, I have hopes that lessons will be learnt in time to prevent unfortunate trends from continuing unduly.

I should like to quote again from Mr. Geiger as follows:

> Evidence from all parts of the developing world suggests that small farmers will adopt technological improvements in response to price and income incentives under conditions that do not threaten certain other values and objectives important to them. As the "green revolution" is showing, small farmers at or close to minimum subsistence income levels will endeavour to increase production and productivity in response to satisfactory prices (a) if the necessary innovations in agricultural inputs and cultivation techniques are available and within their means; (b) if such changes do not significantly increase the customary risks that affect the probability that they can continue to raise at least the minimum output essential for maintaining their families; and (c) if a sufficient percentage of the increased income thereby generated will accrue to their benefit and not to that of landlords, moneylenders, merchants and tax collectors.

I think that is the key to the whole thing, Mr. Speaker. At the present time farmers are encouraged to borrow up to $100,000; at current interest rates of, say 8½ per cent, that would cost $8,500 per year. If a farmer had $100,000 in hard cash, I doubt if he would invest it in more machinery and land. Under present conditions he would be more likely to continue farming on a small scale and buy $100,000 worth of securities—perhaps even federal government bonds—and live happily ever after.

I am reminded of a story about three people who held winning tickets on the Irish sweepstake. The first was a taxi driver and when asked what he would do with his $125,000, he said that he was going to pay off his mortgage and send his children to college. The next winner was a widow who said that she was going to pay off all her debts and then buy a nice home for herself and her children. The third winner was a farmer and when asked what he was going to do with this $125,000 he said "I guess I will just keep on farming until it is all gone".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, my remarks may have sounded pessimistic and I have reason to be pessimistic. However, I am also optimistic in that I think the rising generation will have a better standard of values than we. The young people in our universities are already indicating a greater appreciation of enduring values and I think in their hands a suitable solution will be found. If I may quote again from Mr. Green's article in the Reader's Digest, it reads:

> The concern of youth. The new generation, with its growing interest in conservation and the simple life, may ultimately play the greatest role of all in determining what is to happen to farming. And if our youth should decide that the production of our food is much too important an industry to surrender to millionaires and cartel farming, and that the green acres still left in this country are too precious to entrust to a sort of landed gentry, all the professional predictions about the inevitability of our farms growing continually bigger and fewer won't mean a thing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak very long in this debate, but as one who has had some personal experience with farm credit and Farm Credit Corporation, and who has listened to a lot of farmers tell how they think it should operate, I must say that I think the Farm Credit Corporation and farm credit in Canada has come a long way. However, when one compares what has been done in this country with what has been done by countries in direct competition with us, to aid their farmers, it is evident that our Farm Credit Corporation has a long way to go yet.

Some years ago, a suggestion was made that farmers whose application for a loan had not been allowed should be able to proceed to an appeal board if they felt they had been dealt with unfairly. These appeal boards were fairly good but did not go as far as many members of parliament and farmers thought they should in aiding those whose applications had been turned down by the Farm Credit Corporation.

It is my contention that the Farm Credit Corporation did not follow the intent of the original legislation which was to lend money to those farmers who could not get it any place else—those farmers whom nobody else would trust. A study of the loss ratio over the years shows that the Farm Credit Corporation took very little risk. In the last three or four years the loss ratio has been practically nil. A comparison with farm loan associations in other countries shows that we have a long way to go to meet what they have done to aid their farmers. I am thinking specifically of the U.S.A., with whose farmers ours compete, and where the standard of living is comparable to ours.

I have visited farm loan associations in the U.S.A. to learn how they operate, and I have suggested that the same thing should be done here. There was one example of a young couple who wanted to buy a farm but they did not have the money, although they had a farm picked out. They went to their local farm loan association and their adviser suggested they should look around to see if there was not something which suited them better. They found another farm which needed a lot of work. The loan association improved the land by terracing. They improved the house, the buildings, the drainage system, equipped it, stocked it and said to the young couple "Now, you are ready to go farming under our supervision". One of the amazing things is that the farmers like this type of supervision.

The young couple were supposed to pay a certain amount off their loan and then eventually apply for a different type of loan in order to allow the money they had borrowed originally to be turned over to someone else in circumstances similar to theirs. We have not done this in Canada and I think this is one of our problems. I feel that when loan applications are appraised, the human need is not always considered. I have already explained this to some degree in the example of buying the farm which needed so much improvement and turning it into a productive economic unit. Our Farm Credit Corporation does not seem to have recognized the value, in human terms, of restoring property as have some farm loan associations in other countries. We need that type of close working relationship to make our loan association what many farmers think it ought to be.

We hear much talk about rates of interest, about our lending too much money to the agricultural producer and that if we lend him as much as this bill contemplates we shall get into trouble. May I read a telegram sent to me by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. It reads:

> The Canadian Federation of Agriculture believe it important that the upper limit on farm loans in Bill C-5 (an act to amend the Farm Credit Act) be raised to DLRS250,000 for partnerships, family-held corporation and co-operatives. Beyond this the Federation approves the changes in the bill. This policy request was made by the CFA Board of Directors at a recent meeting.
> It is also standing policy of the CFA that in the interests of assisting orderly developments of agriculture and transfer of farm properties in this high capital cost and rapidly changing industry, that the interest rate on loans under the Farm Credit Corporation should be set at 5 percent.

Perhaps the interest rate should be set at 5 per cent. I know that farmers in one province of Canada do not even pay 5 per cent on farm loans. A former premier of Quebec introduced a provincial farm loan program under which farmers who borrowed $15,000 or less did not pay all the interest, the government paying part of it. A farmer who borrowed did not pay all the interest, but only 2½ per cent. The provincial government of Quebec paid interest over and above the first 2½ per cent. Actually, in many cases, producers paid only 2½ per cent on loans taken out in that province. Those producers are at an advantage, as compared with producers in other provinces who must compete with them. Considering that a farmer on the Quebec side of the Ottawa river can get a loan more cheaply that a farmer on the Ontario side of the Ottawa river, how can anyone say that farmers in Canada are treated equally? When one considers interest rates farmers have to pay, I submit that our national frontiers are not the only frontiers farmers must consider. I have always maintained that if I were going in for broiler production now, and I have said this in the standing committee, I would go over to the Quebec side because I could produce them more cheaply than in Ontario. I could get my feed more cheaply and my money more cheaply. When I first talked about this, nobody paid much attention to me except the feed companies. The smart operators moved to Quebec and, by producing cheap broilers, for a time created chaos in the broiler industry.

I well remember before becoming a member of this great institution, Mr. Speaker, buying the farm next door to me. I made the down payment and applied for a farm credit loan. Three days before the election I received a letter pointing out that, under some particular section of the act and I do not remember which one, I was not eligible for a loan. I was told that I could not get a loan because I was running for parliament and, according to the law, it was illegal for a Queen's representative to obtain a loan from the Queen. I was not what you would call a Royalist at that time, but after receiving that letter my feelings, I tell you, were even more lukewarm than they had been. Actually, my wife did not show me the letter until after the election. So, I won the election, but lost the loan.

The interest that I am paying on the mortgage, which is still running, is at 7 per cent. Also, I am paying 9 per cent on other money, because I am a member of the House of Commons. I do not know whether one could say I am being discriminated against. At any rate, I cannot go along with the suggestion of the Farm Credit Corporation that the interest rate should be set at 5 per cent. I do say, however, that the rates for agricultural producers should be no higher than those that our city cousins are called on to pay because, in some instances, farmers are paying much higher rates of interest.

In the booklet, Federal Farm Credit and Related Statistics, 1971, some interesting comparisons are set out. These statistics reveal that Farm Credit Corporation loans for 1969, on average, bore interest at 8.2 per cent; Industrial Development Bank loans bore interest at 11 per cent; supply companies are shown as charging 16 per cent; the rate for private individuals was 8 per cent, on average. Bank loans, other than farm improvement loans, are shown as bearing 9.5 per cent, and farm improvement loans made by banks are shown as bearing 8.3 per cent. On the other hand, finance companies lending money for cars and trucks charged 18 per cent, and the treasury branches in Alberta charged 9 per cent. So, one can see that although the rates of interest charged by the Farm Credit Corporation are probably higher than one would like, they are probably not all that bad.

I agree with both the speakers who preceded me who suggested that the wrong people are deciding how much credit should be extended to a farmer under a farm credit corporation loan. I think this is true. Too many of the wrong people are making these decisions, and I condemn them. I have said in this House and in the committee that too many economists are involved in these matters. I have not known one to be right and I have not known one to make a humane decision. Economists make the cruelest decisions one can think of and I say that the Farm Credit Corporation bill lacks the humane approach. There seem to be few humane considerations in the criteria governing loans. I would welcome any move which would make the Farm Credit Corporation legislation a more humane piece of legislation than it is at present. Perhaps this will happen when we discuss the bill in committee and learn something about its background and what is intended. In the meantime, I do not see very much wrong with raising the limit of loans on family-held corporations and co-operatives to $250,000.

I did not realize that, since I am over 45, I am not eligible for a Farm Credit Corporation loan, as proposed here. Why should this provision be included in the bill? After all, I can borrow from the International Development Bank without difficulty. Little restriction is placed in one's way. That is not so with the Farm Credit Corporation. I think we are being a little sticky with this age limit, because there is a suggestion here that we are not placing too much faith in our agricultural industry. We should place more confidence in our agricultural industry. Surely, it is realized that farmers today are healthier than they were years ago, and that they probably will live longer than Farm Credit Corporation officials think they will. In time they might even pay off their mortgages. Even if they do not pay them off, the farm units will still be there. I know many farmers in my area are still active and expanding their holdings. They are still trying to get ahead of costs by becoming more productive. The hon. member for Prince Edward Island who spoke just now about agriculture was quite correct. I do not know how our city cousins view agriculture, but I do know that in no other part of our society are the returns smaller on any given investment. Few industries are more productive than the agricultural industry.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we talk about serving our country, and about the great deal of money we are putting into agriculture. Really, when you consider it, the amount of money to be put into the Farm Credit Corporation is infinitesimal. As I say, the amounts we are to make available to our farmers are infinitesimal when we compare them with the amounts we are giving to industry. Do not forget that in Canada over 50 per cent of our people earn their livelihood from the food producing and associated industries. Yes, 50 per cent of Canadians earn their livelihood from these industries.

When I look out of my window at home, I can see a $30 million plant that was put there by some of the most highly educated people in Canada, if you measure education in terms of the PhD. This plant never really got into production before going bankrupt because the owners had not done their homework properly. The system did not work. If the Farm Credit Corporation showed a loss of $31 million, there would be newspaper articles written all across this land stating that the farmers do not pay their debts. The government had invested $11 million in this plant, and the remainder was provided by Canadians who invested in stock. They probably will not get five cents on the dollar for their investment.

Why do I make this comparison? I do so because many people do not understand that this type of thing is happening. However, when a little bit of money is given to the farmers, everyone hollers bloody murder because the agricultural producers are again being given a subsidy. The province from which I come produces one third of this nation's wealth, but my part of the province receives the least subsidy of any agricultural part of Canada. These are efficient producers. All they want is a chance.

[Mr. Whelan.]

I wish to make a comparison of the loans made to farmers in the area I represent and the area right next door to me. These loans are made by the Farm Credit Corporation for every kind of farm corporation that exists in Canada. I give them marks for doing this. In our area we have vegetable farming, fruit farming, greenhouse farming, that is farming under glass, grain farming of every description, mushroom farming and whatever else you can name. The Farm Credit Corporation had the foresight to lend these people the limit allowed under the present act. Many farmers in that area who applied for loans were turned down. A tremendous number of the people to whom the Farm Credit Corporation makes loans are new Canadians. The Farm Credit Corporation recognizes them as capable technicians. However, people in another part of the government of Canada do not think these people can make a way of life for themselves which will qualify them to become landed immigrants. Some of the most successful farmers in that area came here after the last war.

We do not know how many of these people are discouraged from applying for loans, even to the extent of being told not to send in $10 for an application. There are no statistics to show how many of these people have become successful by borrowing from Shylocks and paying a very high rate of interest. I am concerned about people who borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation and must pay inflated prices for farm land. Many successful people, especially in some of the technical types of farm operations, did not borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation. They paid a higher interest rate than people are paying today on loans they obtained from the Farm Credit Corporation. I think the Farm Credit Corporation has a long way to go. The wishes and desires of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture must be authentic or they would not be making these representations which, I am sure, represent a certain point of view of many Canadians. They ask the government to go even farther than this bill does at this time.

I think Bill C-5 is a step in the right direction or the Canadian Federation of Agriculture would not be asking for it. If I had any further criticism of the Farm Credit Corporation and the bill presently before the House, it would be that the bill does not go far enough. However, I commend the minister for bringing forward this bill in its present form. At least it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate. I have been interested in the Farm Credit Corporation for a long time. I have become aware of many of the problems which the Farm Credit Corporation has had to face, not because of a lack of efficiency on the part of its staff, but because many farmers who made loans were forced to accept such low prices for their produce. Many farmers have had their backs forced against the wall, and been unable to meet their obligations. I think the increase in the amount of the farm credit loan may work out very well. However, without this amendment, I do not understand just what these changes will accomplish.

Many owners of small farms, including young men and women, cannot make a loan of any kind in order to get started. They cannot obtain assistance through the Farm Credit Corporation. Many of these people have spent all their lives in agriculture. However, because they do not have anyone to back them up or give them a tract of land which the Farm Credit Corporation can use as security, these young people have been unable to obtain a farm. The Farm Credit Corporation has been of great help to many people, but someone has had to provide the security in order for them to obtain a loan. Therefore, I can understand the need for this increase. No doubt it will help many people. However, without the amendment, this program will do away with many more small farmers, and this is what we want to avoid. Many of us see the need for small farmers, whether this government does or not.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cadieu: The member opposite says "oh, oh". I wish to quote some unaudited figures as of March 31, 1972. These are for the area I represent. In my area there are 561 active loan accounts. Of these, 110 are in arrears. This represents 19.6 per cent of the total active loans. Of that number, 41 are less than one annual payment in arrears; 47 are one annual instalment in arrears; 19 are two annual instalments in arrears and three are three years or more in arrears. In all of Saskatchewan, there are 19,810 active loans. Of these, 3,930 are in arrears. This represents 19.8 per cent of the total accounts. I think this proves the necessity of the amendment.

Something has to be done about the present rate of interest. In many cases, the rate is as high as 8.5 per cent. With the prices these people receive for their commodities, I do not see how they can carry on. They are receiving less for their grain and other produce than at any other time in the past 20 years. Today, the dollar will only buy a little over 50 per cent of what it did 20 years ago. The farmers are in serious trouble. If we have enough confidence in agriculture, we should pass this amendment.

This government has given large amounts of money to other industries through forgiveness of loans. If we do not do something about this high rate of interest, many people will be in a lot worse trouble than at present. When we see that 19.2 per cent of the loans are in arrears, we realize that something must be done. Other industries have been given interest free loans to establish themselves. Many young people are trying to pay for their farms. If this amendment is not accepted, many of them will be forced to enter the labour market. This important fact has already been placed on the record on two or three occasions. I am sure all hon. members have read the amendment. Unless there is some forgiveness of many of these loans, we will be doing just what this government has been accused of doing, regardless of whether or not it has been doing it. However, it appears as if the government is going a lot farther toward eliminating the family farm.

I don't care where you want to go, I am sure you will find the same thing as I found. Some districts possibly had better crop conditions, there were different varieties or something, but when you take the percentage of land that is under development and when you go back to look it over, that is how it appears to me. I had the pleasure of being a supporter of the government which set up the Farm Credit Corporation and when I look back on that time, and what we were getting then by way of profit—yet we were only paying 5 per cent interest—I think this is what we must take a look at. We must come up with something in the way of forgiveness of some of this interest. I cannot see what point we are coming to. If they cannot pay when they are only able to get up to $40,000—and many get much less—and we are now making it possible for them to borrow up to $100,000, it is absolutely no good. It is good only for the monied guys, because anybody who is going to borrow $100,000 has to be worth 25 per cent of it before he can get it, and this is what we are up against today with the young people.

I know lots of young people who are anxious to get land to take up farming, but because they do not have fathers who are rich enough to give them 25 per cent as security, they cannot get loans. So, what are we going to do? We are going to eliminate the little farmer. The little fellow is the guy who is going to get it in the neck. He will have to go into some other industry. I think it is a shame that we have to throw these boys and girls off the farm without giving them some opportunity to get set up in farming. I believe it can be done. I do not see any reason in the world why it should not be done, if we can give away good money the way this government has been doing on some propositions. I cannot for the life of me see why these young farmers should not be recognized and given some consideration so that we can keep them on these farms, because they are the ones who should be on them. I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, that if something is not done a good many more of them will be forced off the farms because they cannot carry on at the prices they have to pay for everything they must buy to operate these farms and go on paying the interest on these loans. I think it is the right time now to give some consideration to their needs. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) could come up with some forgiveness of some of these interests payments and we could make it far more encouraging, through other forms of loans, to help these young people get started.

I am not saying anything against the Farm Credit Corporation or the efficiency of their operations. They are only doing what they are supposed to do. The government should step in and do something to make it possible for boys and girls who are being forced off the farm into other industry, with the unemployment situation such as it is today, to remain on the farm by using some other method. I cannot for the life of me see why we cannot figure out some way of doing this, and this amendment to the bill is a start. Unless we can come up with something on these lines, then, as I say, I cannot see much point in the bill, because many people have got much less than $40,000 yet they find themselves in grave trouble. How much better is $100,000 going to be to them if there is that much more interest to be repaid?

There has been so much repetition that I will not continue at length on this subject, though I could do so. The Farm Credit Corporation is a good organization and there might be a place for Bill C-5. Nevertheless, I believe this amendment warrants consideration.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, a major feature of the bill before us is the provision which would serve as a vehicle for the government's small farm consolidation program. As such, it is an important measure and it is one which has received a good deal of consideration in recent years. Many proposals have been put forward and there have been many alternatives suggested in terms of how to deal with the situation which has developed in the farm economy and in rural societies in Canada.

As we are aware, the small farmer finds himself in many instances unable to garner an income which is in any way comparable with that to be expected in other sectors of the economy and other parts of our society. He is unable to mobilize the resources necessary to develop his enterprise in such a way as to secure an adequate income. The farmer is basically in a poor bargaining position in our economy. He is not able to bargain with the same effectiveness as other entrepreneurs when it comes to securing a fair share of the national income. This is a serious situation and one which is reflected in the deterioration we are presently witnessing in rural Canada where we find a process of disintegration taking place which is resulting in the demise of many family farm enterprises and of many rural communities. The outlook is bleak and there is no prospect of any change in the basic situation.

I see very little in this bill which would bring about basic change in the situation though I have to acknowledge there is some recognition of the problem. Nothing has been done, however, to put forward a satisfactory solution. The government has produced nothing more than the old, piecemeal type of approach to which we have been accustomed for so long. It seems that the government has taken note of its own program in this field. It is not only in the Department of Agriculture that there has been recognition of the problem. The fact is that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is also interested in the question of small farm units as it relates to poverty in Canada, and this has been recognized in some of the ARDA programs. The department has made some play of the fact that it is engaged in a program of assistance to small farm units. But I am at a total loss to understand what co-ordination there is between the small farm program that is being carried out under ARDA and the small farm consolidation program that is proposed in this legislation and which will be administered by the Farm Credit Corporation.

It also seems to me that there is some conflict here, certainly a potential conflict. As I read the legislation and as I understand the government's proposals to the extent they have been elaborated on, I have no clear idea about what the government is doing. To the extent that what the government is doing can be determined, it seems that the government is interested in consolidating farm units, in creating larger farm units, in throwing people off the land, in doing away with farm units and cutting down on the number of farmers in rural Canada. Through this legislation the federal government is paying homage at the altar of size, of bigness. It is saying that the only solution to the problem it is trying to grapple with is to increase the size of farm units. This is the kind of approach that has been taken for 30 to 40 years in this country and it still has not produced any solution. I suggest that the legislation before the House will bring us no closer to a solution to the small farm problem than has any other legislation in the past. This is a repetition of the same old approach—a little bit of tinkering with the program to try to grapple with the new situation. There is nothing fundamentally new here. There is no basic change or new approach. The government is bankrupt of any imaginative ideas with regard to dealing with the problem, one that must be of concern to all Canadians.

We have here a conflict in what would appear to be a program that the government is trying to promote through ARDA to help small farm units improve their income position. Two departments are carrying on programs in this field. Are they co-ordinated? Are they working together? Have the two programs been reconciled? We have seen no evidence to suggest that this is the case. In addition, we also have the fact that a number of provinces are interested in this problem and are taking action. In my own province of Saskatchewan some initiative is being taken in the passage of legislation to provide for the establishment of a land bank to buy out farm units which are available for sale at a reasonable price and then either leasing them to young farmers, people new to farming, or eventually disposing of them if this is the wish of the farmer. The province of Saskatchewan is to be commended for launching such an imaginative new program as embodied in the land bank legislation.

From what I have read in the press, an attempt was made to see whether this program could be worked in with the proposals of the federal government as embodied in this legislation, but the federal government was not interested in what the province was attempting to do. The only thing the federal government was interested in was in buying up land and selling it off, burdening farmers with the debt of land costs, as has been the case throughout the history of Canadian agriculture. The federal government was not prepared to go along with any new proposal or concept, or even to give it a chance to work with its own program. I suggest such a government is not worthy of the confidence of the Canadian people, and the sooner we turf it out, the better.

We must also keep in mind the role played by the farm credit program in the over-all picture of the agricultural economy. I think some years ago the concept was that one of the main ways of helping the farm economy was through the provision of more adequate credit facilities. This was advocated by everyone concerned about the situation and who had any knowledge of farming. The farm credit program has been in effect now since the later 1950's and there is no question at all that it has been of assistance to many farmers.

However, we are still no closer to a solution to the over-all problem of farm income than we were when this program was commenced. We are still facing the same basic questions, and I think this demonstrates the fact that the solution to our farming problems does not rest with any one, single program. Rather, what we need is a variety of programs. We need more than simply a farm credit program, quite apart from the inadequacy of the present legislation, as I mentioned a few minutes ago. What we need is a farm credit program that has a proper thrust and focus, one that is directed toward ensuring that farmers have adequate income, that they have adequate prices, that their costs are kept under some sort of reasonable control. All of these elements are required if we are to produce an adequate solution to our farming problems.

To translate this idea into mathematical terms, two times nothing ends up as nothing. Two times nothing times nothing still ends up as nothing, as one big zero. Even with an adequate farm credit program we would not be brought closer to any basic solution to our farming problems. A farm credit program can only do the job expected of it if it is developed in concert with an adequate income program, an adequate pricing program, a program that will ensure that our farmers are able to secure their goods and materials at reasonable cost and that adequate services will be available to them.

I see it is five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and that you are pressing forward in your chair. Might I call it five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Would the hon. member also adjourn the debate?

Mr. Burton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I move that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

OPPORTUNITIES FOR AGE

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM FOR IMPROVEMENT OF SITUATION OF SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give immediate consideration to initiating an Opportunities for Age program designed to improve the health, economic, occupational, recreational, social and cultural opportunities of the senior citizens of Canada, and that in the organization and administration of such a program the senior citizens' associations be consulted and involved.

He said: Mr. Speaker, having in mind the non-political nature of what I propose and the great deal of support it has received from senior citizens and their organizations in many parts of the country as well, I might add, as having in mind the indication of interest and in some cases support from members of the present government, I intend to make my presentation of this proposal very brief. I shall urge my colleagues to allow it to proceed for detailed consideration to the appropriate committee, which in this case I would think would be the Committee on National Health and Welfare.

In brief, what this proposal calls for is the adoption and utilization of the same principle parliament has applied in respect of opportunities for youth. This would be applied in an appropriate way to opportunities for the aged. There is no doubt in my mind that if this were done, and I believe something of this nature is already under consideration by the government, it would result in great benefit not only to many of our senior citizens who have a wealth of experience not being utilized in employment or occupation, but also to the many communities in which these people reside.

In my opinion, and I am sure many other hon. members share it, there is both the need and opportunity in Canada at this time to improve the living as well as the economic condition of our senior citizens. I especially urge old age pension and superannuate organizations to play a part in developing the administration of a federally initiated program of this type to combat the isolation of the older people. This would have a beneficial result to the community as well as to the people concerned. This would be particularly so if, in line with the proposed opportunities for the aged occupational program, we had a substantial increase in the basic old age pension such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and myself have urged for many months. We should increase the basic pension to at least $150 per month. When we mention that figure of $150 per month today, let us keep in mind that the Canadian dollar, as a result of inflation, has lost almost half its purchasing power of 1950. This gives a better perspective as to the value of $150 old age security pension.

Among the senior citizens of Canada there are a million men and women with ability, experience and a desire to be of use to themselves and others. Their potential endeavour as a resource should be studied and co-ordinated for the benefit of all. I urge that a decision be made to establish an opportunities for the aged program at an early date, and that a conference be held in Ottawa of federal, provincial and regional people in that field, plus a representation of the old age pensioner organizations. There is a need for improvement in the health, economic, occupational, recreational, social and cultural opportunities of the senior citizens in Canada. Such a conference would emphasize and coordinate the efforts of the many and growing government departments and agencies already at work in this area. This would be of great interest to senior citizens and those people who will soon be in that category.

Some of the more immediate and obvious benefits which might accrue through this type of conference of organizations across the country would be to the old age pensioners or senior citizens. One such very obvious benefit would surely be a stimulation of the financing of low-cost travel by senior citizens. There are thousands of empty seats in aircraft flying across the Atlantic every week, and there are thousands of senior citizens in Canada who come from old countries in Europe and elsewhere who would like to make one trip to their earlier land. This could be very easily organized by such a procedure, thus providing opportunities for an aged project.

Other countries are ahead of us in this endeavour. In the United Kingdom, for example, I am told that for many years now there has been a program in operation under which retired people with special experience or skills are taken on contract by the British government for a year or perhaps two years and sent out to developing countries. In these places, the skills and experience of the British senior citizens have been of particular value to those countries to which they have been sent, and this has been of great benefit to the citizens themselves.

I have a report which indicates that in the state of New York alone there are now 38 such programs in operation in 19 counties involving 750 senior citizen volunteers. This program is called the "Serve Program" and is supported by the Health, Education and Welfare Department of the United States government. Let me quote from this report as follows:

> Unique to the SERVE programs is the group approach. Volunteers are recruited in groups to serve, in individual assignments, on the same day each week at a given agency. In most programs, this makes it possible to provide group transportation from one or two central pick-up points to the agency and back. Regular group discussion meetings provide continuous in-service training. This group association gives the older volunteers an opportunity for social contact and to form new friendships.
> SERVE volunteers in different communities perform varied assignments in general hospitals, hospitals for the mentally ill, schools for the retarded, homes for the aged, children's institutions, schools, libraries, museums, and other social, health, and welfare agencies.

There are many other endeavours they undertake which I will not take up the time of the House to enumerate. With the earlier retirement age coming, and already here in some instances, with some increase in social security over what was so 40 or 50 years ago, and with automation displacing older workers as well as keeping the young off the labour market, we have a general situation in Canada which would benefit by a federally initiated program of opportunities for the aged. This could operate in conjunction with the provinces and old age pension organizations to the benefit of both the individuals and the areas involved.

I mentioned that I was encouraged last year by some response from the government side of the House. I mention this particularly for the encouragement of my colleagues in the government benches, and so they will not talk this matter out this afternoon. I received a letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in which he said:

> The basic proposition appears to have fair support and I am interested to find out more about what could be achieved in this respect.

I have been told by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) that this is a good idea. My prize support from the government side came from the former Minister of Justice, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). He is in a very good position to help promote this program I am urging.

• (1710)

He says:

> I, too, have received a great number of letters from across the country expressing interest in the proposal that you mentioned. I still think it was a great idea and will do my best to persuade my colleagues when we are discussing this sort of thing.

With that sort of support I can hope, if I cannot get a green light for the motion, that I can at least get an amber one so that the subject might be allowed to idle to the appropriate committee.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I begin by commending the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) for presenting this excellent notice of motion for our consideration. The hon. member has a most enviable record for proposing important, interesting and worthwhile new ideas and programs for the consideration of parliament and the government of Canada. He certainly is to be commended for this particularly valuable notice of motion now before us.

In recommending an Opportunities for Age program I note that the hon. member subscribes to the basic concepts which are embodied in the Opportunities for Youth program, and that he is enthusiastic and excited about the general over-all success of that program. Now he wishes to see it extended so that we may provide more opportunities for other persons in our society. I agree with him.

I think that the concept of encouraging innovative ideas and projects which involve people in performing socially beneficial tasks ought to be expanded into a year-round all-inclusive opportunities for people program. But maybe before going that far, what we should do, as the hon. member suggests, is to test a little farther the validity of the concept and make it available to another age group which is also potentially very rich with ideas for projects that deserve to be encouraged and supported with public funds. Here I am talking about that age group which is usually referred to as our senior citizens.

Some observers of the passing scene have suggested that what exists in our society now is a cult of youth. Hooked on an apparent youth binge, we tend to ignore the special needs of our aged. Our preference for youth causes us to shun those who remind us of growing old, to isolate them wherever possible into ghettos or reserves called nursing homes or homes for the aged. It is something of a shock to realize that as a nation we collectively spend more money on preparations to keep ourselves looking young than we do in assisting our senior citizens. We shove them out of useful careers whenever we can and as soon as possible. Then we go on to ignore their needs as well as their potentialities.

In Canada, there are nearly two million citizens over 65 years of age. I think that the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock was using different statistics than I am using. He mentioned a figure of one million. Recent information from Statistics Canada shows that there are two million citizens older than the age of 65 years, or just over 8 per cent of our population, and it is estimated that Canada will have more than 3 million persons aged 65 and over by 1991. Of that number, Mr. Speaker, only about one-tenth have a physical or mental handicap, and only 5 per cent of them are in institutions. There is a heavy obligation on our society to provide a wide range of suitable services for these persons, and more adequate pensions for those who need them. But even more than that, there is an obligation to make opportunities available to these people, whereby our senior citizens can themselves continue to serve the communities in which they live and in which they themselves have worked.

Our country, it seems to me, could be immeasurably wealthier in social and human terms if we were wise enough to mine this rich vein of talent, ability and dedication that exists among our citizens 65 years and over. Generally speaking, if an older person makes a serious effort to remain in society and participate actively with the rest of us, we do our best to make his or her short time as miserable as possible with compulsory retirement, inadequate pensions, lack of community services for senior citizens, and little opportunity to use the skills and knowledge gained during an entire lifetime. This is the common lot of many of our senior citizens, and it is not right that it should be so. A psychiatrist who specializes in problems of the aged said recently that one-third of our senior citizens are living in quiet despair, stemming both from physical and spiritual poverty, that in turn stems from the chilling realization of powerlessness and non-participation.

The country is moving toward earlier retirement at the same time that the life expectancy of the population is increasing. I do not argue against the trend toward earlier retirement, but it seems to me that we must recognize and appreciate that there are related social problems. Although the problems accompanying retirement have long been recognized, little has been done either to provide new opportunities for work after retirement, or to prepare people for the period following an active career.

There is one program which does exist and which I think deserves some mention here. I am referring to the Canadian Executive Service Overseas, which is a non-profit organization operated by a group of Canadian business leaders with the support of the Canadian government through its Canadian International Development Agency, known as CIDA. The Canadian Executive Service Overseas, abbreviated to CESO, recruits Canadian volunteers—and this is important—either retired or active, who have technical, professional or executive skills and are willing to go abroad to work in developing countries in either the public or private sector. The tour of duty is for a maximum of six months.

In 1967-68 there were 31 volunteers. In 1969, 115 persons accepted the challenge. I do not have more recent statistics, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is very plain to see that the program, although a very modest one, meets important needs not only for the developing countries, which I am sure it does, but also for the volunteers themselves. I think that what we have here is the germ of a proposal which could involve thousands rather than just hundreds, and involve these people not only abroad in developing countries but right here in our own country in the very communities where these people have been active for most of their working years.

Psychiatrists point out that enforced retirement and the absence of social roles often affect the mental health of those over 65. The incidence of psychopathology rises with age, as do depression and suicide. Older people need, and they want a chance to remain a part of the working world. Many, of course, require the additional financial resources which come from such endeavour. There are those as well who have deeper needs: the need to be needed, the need to do something worth while, to enjoy the experience of warmth, understanding and companionship, all of which comes from joining with others in designing a useful project and accomplishing some specific task.

It is rather interesting to note that federal funds have been granted under the Opportunities for Youth program, and under the Local Initiatives Program for studies of the needs of the aged. In the main these studies have discovered what has long been known, in other words very little that is new has come from these studies so far as I have been able to detect. Perhaps if we assisted some of our senior citizens to do their own studies there would be some startling breakthrough in our understanding of the aged as well as some solutions to the most pressing of their social, psychological and economic needs.

The majority of the senior citizens in Canada were active before retirement and they continue to be active in one way or another after retirement, and yet, many of these people have unfortunately become isolated and helpless. Efforts must be made to draw our senior citizens more fully into the mainstream of life. Most of these active persons need continuing opportunities to be active. Society must learn to involve its older members so that they may continue to have normal opportunities for self expression, intellectual stimulation, service to others, and joy in living. There is no doubt that such a goal is a challenge to governments and also to the senior citizens themselves. The success of such a program depends on our willingness to allow older adults to participate in the planning, the organization, and the implementation of programs which will serve the aged and in which the aged themselves can and should serve.

Wherever this approach has been tried, in Canada or elsewhere, it is encouraging indeed to observe the inventiveness being displayed in using the time and the talents of the older members of the society. It is equally encouraging to find more and more adults in Canada asking what they can do to help themselves, what they can do to help each other, and what they can do to serve the communities in which they live. Those who are seriously asking these questions are the same people who are actively engaged in trying to find some of the answers. They deserve to have the interest and support of the government and, as the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) said, they deserve a specific opportunities for the aged program. For them it could be a very appropriate answer indeed in meeting some of the needs that have been considered and to which the hon. member has referred in his motion.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): First, Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock for having introduced this motion which is so relevant to our Canadian society today. I also wish to compliment the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) on his meaningful statements.

One of the things about which I wonder as I experience parliament is why we seem to want to cast aside the senior citizens in our country just because they have reached the age of 65. Many of our senior citizens are contributing to our economy, our culture and to every phase of Canadian life. I can think of some people right here in the House of Commons who are dedicated members, such as the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) with whose contributions in the committees of the House I am familiar. If there ever was a man who was dedicated in his participation in the House of Commons and in his representation of his constituents it is he. He is an example for our senior citizens in Canada whom we should be considering instead of casting aside.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: The idea of an opportunities for the aged program is an excellent one, and I can only say that I feel rather envious that I did not put forward this motion today.

Mr. Thomson: Jealousy will get you nowhere.

Mr. Marshall: Our senior citizens are only as weak as their strength and they can contribute much to our economy. About three or four days ago I was present at the opening of a senior citizens home in my district. I felt very humble on seeing the 32 or 33 senior citizens who for one reason or another are not able to contribute to our society. I must compliment the government for providing funds for the building of senior citizens homes so that not too great a burden is placed on those who wish to help our aged citizens. What is so distressing in our society today is the fact that there are so many disabled older citizens. I refer to veterans and those who have aged prematurely because they could not obtain help and could not take advantage of opportunities in certain parts of our country. More direction should be given in providing homes so as to give some comfort to these people as they reach their twilight years.

I will not spend much more time speaking on this motion because it should not be talked out. We live in an age of participatory democracy and we should give an opportunity to our older citizens to participate in producing programs and help for themselves as well as in contributing to the greatness of our nation. I agree with the motion. I know that there are other members who wish to speak on it, and I hope that we will pass this motion in a non partisan way. Again, I compliment the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock for putting the motion forward for the betterment of our nation.

• (1730)

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I do wish to join with the previous speakers to congratulate the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) for the motion he has just presented. This motion concerning those people 65 and over who are usually known as senior citizens, is a most valid one not only if we intend to help them, but also if we consider that a good many of them can be useful to Canadian society through their contribution to programs which, as the hon. member has suggested in his motion, can be known as Opportunities for Aged or Opportunities for Senior Citizens programs. However, I think it should be recognized that senior citizens have not been forgotten by the present government, at least by the members of the Liberal party, who have suggested the implementation of an Opportunities for Senior Citizens or Opportunities for Aged program.

The Liberal party has always paid marked attention to senior citizens. Indeed, it is the Liberal party which first initiated last year, in our society, the Opportunities for Youth program which could also be called "Initiatives for Youth".

Other equally promising programs will be set up this year. They concern youth, though the underlying principles are the same. The aim is to call upon the initiative of the unemployed or the neglected to help them earn money and to instil into them a feeling of pride in their work.

With regard to the Local Initiatives Program, developed during the winter, it has been a success and, in every part of Canada, especially in the region I am proud to represent, this program proved to be very effective and very useful to the Canadian people.

At the present, we even begin to speak about the Opportunities for Citizens Program, which could include all other programs, including the one which the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock mentions in his motion.

I am interested, as well as most Canadians I believe, in the fact that by developing such programs, one applies the work incentive principle about which many politicians and sociologists have been talking about for several years. It is a good thing to provide social assistance to the "have-nots", to help increasingly our elderly people, but it is also necessary to help young students who, during summer holidays, do not find any work and are concerned about how to finance their studies. However, when giving such money, one must not forget to use all possible means to encourage these groups to do a meaningful job.

We often say that we are living in a free enterprise society, but because of developments and rapid changes in our society, one must admit that the application of a kind of socialization, convincing above all the recipients of the pride and worthiness of work, is necessary, as far as possible, as one commonly says. These people must be interested in being helped to earn their living when they are able to do it.

With regard to "Opportunities for Age" Program, I suggest that one should rather say in French—I do not want to be accounted a purist since I am not one—one should rather say "Opportunities for Old People" or "for Old People of 65 and more", because, Mr. Speaker, as other hon. members in this House, I am in my middle years but I have not reached yet the official old age, that is of 65 or more.

As I said earlier, this motion is quite commendable. The Opportunities for Age program should be included in a more comprehensive scheme. As for its application, senior citizen organizations and persons interested should be consulted. Older people could no doubt give good advice to those who would set up and administer this program as well as their co-operation for such an organization and administration.

Would it not be better to include all those programs under a single one that could be called "Opportunities for Citizens" or "Initiatives for Citizens"? I believe the word "initiative" implies a suggestion of another kind that would enable Canadian citizens, regardless of their age or social position, to show some initiative or creativeness in order to be most useful to society.

"Opportunities" suggests "expectancy". One thinks of those poor people on welfare who spend their time waiting to get everything from other people and from the government. The government has responsabilities towards welfare recipients and older people, I agree. But if they are always asked to wait, they might develop a bad habit.

The comprehensive program I mentioned could include students, unemployed adults or welfare recipients and older people who are still efficient and alert.

However, considering the achievements of the last two years, I believe we must take care to ensure the best organization and the best administration for programs, according to well-established general and specific standards and criteria. It might be better for the government, in the case of a comprehensive program, to train a team of experienced, specialized and permanent officials, of course with the temporary co-operation of the people concerned, students, unemployed, welfare recipients and older people, concerning implementation of those programs. Because of the convictions of several—I would even say most—members of this House, and because of the misery and hardship which prevail in some areas and within certain groups, a formula that I would rather call socialization has to be applied. However, those principles must not be applied in a socialistic spirit, since we must not forget that for most of us, respect for the principles of free enterprise, of liberalism in the fullest sense of the word, is somewhat synonymous with respect for the freedom of the individual. In the main, we should implement those programs along the lines of a socialization concept which would be a lesser evil in some respects, because of the yet unadjusted effects of our technological society, of our changing society.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the venerable member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that I will not talk out this bill. In looking over the order paper this is one motion that I find interesting and worthwhile. It is, seemingly, always necessary that we sloganeer and make use of euphemisms and expressions such as "opportunities for age" and "opportunities for youth," but regardless of the nomenclature I think the idea put forth by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) is worthwhile and practical.

I do not know that I would go so far as to agree with those who say that what we really want is an opportunity for everyone. Of course we do; but if I have it in proper perspective, what the mover of this motion wants is some special effort made because of the special needs of people of advanced years. It seems to me that if you make everything special, you make everything general. This is what took place in large measure with reference to the designated areas program. When you designate practically the whole country, the special incentive for areas to participate becomes vitiated and weakened.

I agree with the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) who suggested that in this age we must think young. I think the high calibre of our youth is a source of pride. The situation today is somewhat different from that which existed in earlier societies when the expression "your elders" had an impact on the rest of society which was somewhat more sacrosanct than the impact of today. You venerated those who were aged just because they were aged. Conditions have changed now and all too frequently the aged are the recipients of less attention. In earlier ages they were the recipients of great attention and veneration. We must remind ourselves, as Ulysses did long ago, that old age hath yet its honours and its toil. We must recognize that there is room for government involvement through legislation at both ends of the scale, for youth and for the aged.

In some ways life has become such more depersonalized than it was before. The family unit is less integrated and less intense than it used to be. So we find that people, as they reach a certain age, respond to something less personal and perhaps less warm than the family unit. There are many reasons for this, but I will not this afternoon enter into a long sociological dissertation.

The hon. member who introduced this notice of motion suggested that older people should be given the opportunity to fly across the ocean to their former homelands. That, I think, is an excellent idea. I think, also, we should act on the ideas of the hon. member for Thunder Bay, perhaps under the CESO program. Some of the young people in the CUSO program used to call the CESO group the paunch corps. They were referring to people of advanced years, as they were seen to be by those 19, 20 or 21.

Improvement Program for Aged

I have been very interested in the CUSO program. Many leading figures in developing countries, having heard me laud the young volunteers in CUSO have pointed out almost invariably that these young people are not in the country nearly long enough. They say it takes almost one year for them to learn the nuances of the language spoken, even though it may be English. They are getting under way in the second year and becoming most effective, when they are withdrawn. I wonder if there is not a program for involving some of our people in CESO for fairly lengthy operational periods in other countries. I can think of some fine school teachers in this country who retired merely because they reached retirement age. Many of them are possessed of wonderful administrative experience and I think they would be of great value in helping many developing countries establish a good educational program.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are people like my hon. friend.

Mr. Macquarrie: My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre suggests that I could serve too. When I am a little older, I would be delighted to do so. I cannot depart in my prime.

I have always borne great affection for private members' hour, and it is appropriate for an hon. member such as the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock to bring our attention to this matter. Having shown interest in the subject before, he is being consistent on this occasion. In an age that thinks it is smart if you think young, which uses medical science and the whole field of geriatrics to prolong human life, we should do everything possible to enrich that prolonged life. As was said earlier, as more and more people reach retirement age it will be inevitable that more and more of them will want to live a richer life. There is no reason why in an advanced society like ours your life must suddenly change from one of routine labour to one of lassitude.

I think careful thought should be given to this matter. I will stand up with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and vote in favour of this notice of motion being given further study. In that way the House of Commons could examine the best way to adopt the practical and clearcut suggestions made in the notice of motion and all would see the very fine motivation which is behind the motion, which I salute most heartily.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret that there is only hour for dealing with the number of interesting issues and proposals suggested by this notice of motion. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) went through the usual exhortation of saying, as he said once before, that if we want this matter to become effective we need simply refrain from participating in debate, that the notice of motion will pass and something will be achieved.

Not long ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is a good friend of mine and for whom I have the greatest respect, tried to move a motion which would have added, if passed, $1.5 billion to government expenditures annually. There were 30 hon. members in the House at that time. Today there is a good attendance. I see three or four hon. members of the party of the hon. member who introduced this motion, there are three Créditistes, several members of the official opposition, and others.

The fact is that after debate of one hour for which about 30 hon. members attended, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre tried to add $1.5 billion to government expenditures and it was hardly reasonable to expect the government to accede to his proposal. The Canadian Press carried a story to the effect that with one minute to go, the hon. member for Ottawa West jumped to his feet and talked the bill out, thus guillotining the hope of senior citizens across the country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Canadian Press was right on the beam.

Mr. Francis: Subsequently, a number of abusive letters were forwarded to me because of my intervention in that debate. I support this notice of motion and want to say a few words on it. I had hoped that the hon. member introducing the matter would in his speech tell us in more specific detail how his idea could be implemented.

Mr. Mather: That can be done in committee.

Mr. Francis: I was, therefore, disappointed at the lack of originality and imagination displayed by the hon. member. He seemed to think that all old people want only to take a trip back to their homeland or travel a little and look around. I think he was selling our senior citizens short. I should like to hear from senior citizens organizations across Canada what sort of community services they would like. I should like them to examine the guidelines we have used in connection with Opportunities for Youth, a most successful program, and tell us what they want to do. The hon. member was right when he said we should consult with senior citizen organizations. Of course we should. We would be delighted to consult with them. We look to them for impetus in the creation, adoption and extension of public policy in this area.

We can make great contributions in private members' hour. I share the feelings of my hon. friend who preceded me who said he has great affection for this hour. It permits many members of the House to express ideas which are free, independent and go toward the development of policy. After all, policy does not come about because a motion was passed at a certain hour on a certain day. Policy is created by public opinion, with public debate. It is created when there is pressure for measures that I am sure will come.

I should like to know, Mr. Speaker, the area in which the senior citizens of Canada think they can make their greatest contribution. They do not want to be put aside. They do not want necessarily to compete with young people in other parts of the world. They do not want to be forgotten. In addition to their pension rights and economic security they want an opportunity to contribute in the community. They want the opportunity to show that they can do just as much as the young people in contributing to the health, welfare and well-being of other citizens.

We have paid our tributes to them today. We have all said pious things. We have talked about how great they are and about the great debt we owe the senior citizens of Canada. Yet more is required if we are to serve them. We must give them the opportunity to help themselves, and the first thing we must do is help them to tell us about the kinds of projects they can undertake. If we could adopt the sort of guides that have been used in the Opportunities for Youth program, extend them and innovate in this respect. The government, I am sure, will be happy to consider the suggestions of our senior citizens.

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, before I direct myself to the terms of the motion before us I wish to say a few words in support of the point made by my distinguished colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). It should be recognized by all members, certainly the senior members of this House, who were catcalling while he was speaking, that private members' hour is more an opportunity to put forward and build support for ideas than a time for passing resolutions. I think much is achieved if members on all sides of the House speak in favour of a resolution. Support is built up and their interest in the subject is drawn to the attention of the country and the government. It is mean for hon. members opposite to exploit any of us or this hour to allege that we have ulterior motives in speaking on the motions before us. I am sure they will agree that we have the same rights as them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Let me now turn to the resolution before us. In very large measure, the aged of Canada, our senior citizens, already have been considerable beneficiaries of the Opportunities for Youth program. It is true they have not received payments under it and they have not been hired under any of the programs toward which Opportunities for Youth is directed. That was not the intention of the program.

I have reviewed a large number of these projects and many are directed toward their needs and problems. I do not have time to give many examples. In my constituency there was an Opportunities for Youth program that provided free for senior citizens the services of young people to carry parcels from shopping areas to their homes, assist with repairs to senior citizens' property and generally support them in their role in the community. This is a very desirable benefit that senior citizens received from the Opportunities for Youth program.

Why did the Opportunities for Youth program not direct itself toward the employment of senior citizens? I think the reason is easy to understand: the Opportunities for Youth program was directed primarily toward providing employment for people who were badly in need of an interested in obtaining work. Statistics make it very clear that the unemployed of Canada are largely young people between the ages of 18 and 25. I understand that through this program the government was not trying to create employment in the public sector for its own sake; rather, it was directing itself toward two objectives. One was to try to combat the serious problem of employment among young people—in this dimension the program was very successful—the other was to enrich life in Canada by providing services to communities through our young people. The benefits achieved by the Opportunities for Youth program were very considerable. There were no handouts or grants. The money the young people received was earned through work which the community in which they lived agreed was valuable and ought to be done.

One other point about the Opportunities for Youth program is that its costs, when set out in a balance sheet, exclude a very major factor that commends the policy. The balance sheet does not show the fact that many of the people who came into the Opportunities for Youth program were on welfare. All of them were unemployed. Although not all of them were receiving unemployment insurance payments, many of them were. When you look at the absolute figures as a ground for condemning the program, you should bear in mind that the cost was offset by considerable savings not only in federal programs, such as unemployment insurance and welfare, but in savings to provinces and municipalities which bear part of the cost of welfare.

I believe this program should be extended so that senior citizens may use their imagination and initiative—I think the resolution states it very well—to enrich their communities and become active in projects. I repeat, much of the cost of this program can be offset by savings in the guaranteed income supplement, unemployment insurance and welfare benefits. The program is not as expensive as it seems. Notwithstanding the special reasons for limiting the program in the past to participation by youth, it should now be extended to the aged. They have a contribution to make.

In conclusion I wish to direct one point to the government. It is too easy for a government to be crisis-oriented, to consider responsibility as putting out fires and dealing with despair, confrontation and demands of sectors of the country which are prepared to put their case in terms of ultimatums. The senior citizens of Canada do not do that; nor do some other segments of society. It is important for the government to recognized that running the country and responding to its needs is more than a matter of dealing with crises and putting out fires: it is also a matter of recognizing that there is an element of good will among people who want to serve society. There are many people with enthusiasm, energy and good will toward their fellow men and their communities. They want to help and have ideas for helping. There must be room in the government's list of priorities to utilize this tremendous Canadian resource.

Mr. Harding: Will the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member agree?

Mr. Kaplan: No, Mr. Speaker. I will answer the question after.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): After what?

Mr. Kaplan: It is very easy to respond to crises. The government must respond to crises. But in many countries, particularly our neighbour to the south, we see the withering of good will in society, the growing of despair and a recession of the spirit as it has been called. This recession of the spirit can come to Canada. There is no inherent reason why it should, but it could very well come here. I urge the government to not only think about crises but about opportunities that exist in the hearts and minds of people and their desire to serve society. Opportunities for the aged will go a long way toward achieving this goal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hour set aside for private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 o'clock, when the Minister of Finance will submit a ways and means motion to the House.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

He said:

Mr. Speaker, my first words to this House as Minister of Finance last February were that my most urgent priority was jobs. This remains my first priority. No economy is working as well as it should if there are men and women in this country seeking work who cannot find it. The search for jobs is a human problem. The main thrust of this budget is to deal with this problem; to buttress the Canadian economy—to provide incentives for Canadian industry to grow and compete and provide jobs.

The only realistic solution for matching the tremendous yearly increase in our work force, which will continue at the present rate for the next several years, is greater growth in the economy. It is growth that will create jobs. I mean growth in the private sector. I mean real jobs, not temporary jobs. I mean jobs that last and satisfy. I believe that we have to look to expansion of Canadian industry and the commitment of business to provide those jobs.

What makes it important to take stock of our position now is the fact that the world is caught up in the midst of far-reaching changes, the outcome of which is not easy to predict. The already rapid rate of advances in technology continues to accelerate, bringing about vast changes in our lives, in our way of producing goods, and in our way of doing business. Multinational corporate giants have to come to assume an increasingly dominant role on the world economic state and in the Canadian economy. I fear that the world is in the process of being transformed into massive trading blocs, which in itself is of immense significance to Canada as a major trading nation. Moreover, the relative competitive position of the various nations is also undergoing a pronounced change. This was the hard fact that lay behind the international monetary crisis which came to a head last summer when the United States adopted a series of measures to halt the deterioration in its own competitive position.

Because all of these developments have far-reaching implications for the future of our own country, it is only sensible and realistic for us to take a new look at our situation and to consider what policies will best serve our long-term interests.

What I shall strive to do tonight is to set the stage for Canadian industry to be competitive in world markets. Our ability to gain access to world markets is a prerequisite to the success of any industrial policy that focuses on growth and jobs.

I am hoping to achieve industrial growth at a pace that will not aggravate the inflationary impulses in the economy and escalate the cost of living. This government is committed to reasonable price stability. I am committed tonight to propose ways to render justice to those people in our community who have been hurt by the rise in the cost of living and who have no way of fighting back. I am speaking of those Canadians who have retired, whose working days are over, and of our veterans and their dependants.

I said once before to this House that a Minister of Finance is not an economic czar. It is true that through its fiscal policies the federal government can and must play a central role in guiding the course of the economy. It is important to understand, however, that there are some very real constraints on the ability of the federal government alone to ensure that the economy remains precisely on course at all times.

The policies and programs of the provinces and municipalities have a major impact on the economy, their combined revenues and expenditures now significantly exceeding those of the federal government. Then, too, in our free enterprise system the way in which our economy moves is determined in a fundamental way by the day-to-day decisions taken in the market-place by millions of Canadians. Of course, our economy is also strongly influenced by forces from abroad. The difficulty of anticipating and responding to the impact on the economy of all these forces is further compounded by the universal limitation of economic information. For all these reasons, it makes good sense for the government to stand ready to make periodic adjustments in its fiscal policies as the need for them becomes evident.

[Translation]

But there are also occasions when budgets must have a broader perspective and look further into the future. There are times when they must deal with more fundamental and longer-term problems related to the structure of the economy itself. In my budget tonight, Mr. Speaker, I shall propose an important revision in our fiscal system to strengthen the capacity of our economy to serve the needs of the Canadian people in the years ahead.

Budgets, however, need to be concerned not only with the economy as a whole. They must also be directed to improve the well-being of individual Canadians, especially those who find themselves in less fortunate circumstances. Over the years. we have made great progress in Canada in developing a social system to provide equitable and just treatment for all our citizens. We must make still more progress in the years ahead.

[English]

I turn now to a review of the economy. I propose to be brief since a comprehensive economic review has already been tabled for the information of members. There is a great deal of information in this document and I trust the members of the House will find it a useful reference document. This evening I propose to touch only on some highlights of our recent experience.

The Economy

The Canadian economy provided a substantially bigger increase in the goods, services and jobs available to Canadians in 1971 than it did in 1970. This improved performance owed a great deal to the expansionary policies of the government.

Personal incomes grew more rapidly in 1971 because of higher employment, higher wage rates and higher farm incomes. The cuts in personal taxes during the past year meant that the net incomes at the disposal of Canadians after allowance for taxes rose even more rapidly than their gross incomes. An increase in payments by government under various social assistance, cultural and educational programs contributed to this growth. The improvement in the financial position of our people permitted them to borrow more and to spend more. This they did. But while consuming considerably more, at the same time they increased their savings and reduced their debt relative to their incomes. Thus, in spite of greatly increased consumption, their financial position was significantly stronger at the end of the year than at the beginning. This means that consumers are likely to spend even more this year.

Housing starts in 1971 broke all records. CMHC concentrated on housing for low-income groups. Private financing of housing increased dramatically and provided a vigorous forward thrust in this sector of the economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, exports grew again in 1971 in spite of declining rates of growth in our major European and Asian markets and in spite of menacing developments in the international commercial environment during the second half of the year. The extraordinary growth of 1970 was not duplicated. That could hardly be expected, but the growth in exports of many commodities such as iron and steel, automobiles, oil and gas, lumber and wheat was particularly noteworthy.

Imports responded to the rising pace of activity in the Canadian economy and grew at a very fast clip. This speeding up was shown by a wide range of goods, including fuels and lubricants, industrial materials, and materials for home consumption. Imports of machinery and equipment remained sluggish in the first half of the year, but spurted ahead in the latter half.

This fast rise in imports resulted in the decline in our surplus on merchandise trade in 1971. At the same time, our traditional deficit in services continued its steady increase. Taking goods and services together we had a current account surplus in 1971 for the second year running but distinctly smaller than in 1970. With the United States there was a moderate increase in our current account dificit, which in 1971 amounted to over a third of a billion dollars.

Last year we saw a rise in productivity, but we also saw a considerable acceleration in the growth of employment. We saw, too, as the year progressed some considerable pick-up of inventory investment. The ratio of inventories to sales still remains low by previous standards, even allowing for the fact that new technology permits some economizing in inventories. The rise of demand had not yet progressed to the point, however, of inducing a major expansion of business fixed investment.

Although the number of new jobs created in 1971 was twice the number created in 1970, it was only in the latter part of the year that job creation outpaced the very rapid growth in the labour force. Since September the unemployment rate has been on a downward trend. It is still unacceptably high, and the first priority of this government is to bring about a further substantial reduction in unemployment.

[English]

Prices and incomes showed mixed trends last year. Labour income per employed person, for the second year in a row, grew at a lower rate than in the previous year. This rate was, however, still greater than the rate of increase of productivity and the cost of living combined. Profits increased from their depressed levels of the previous year. The consumer price index was dominated by the strong increase in food prices, which were held down in the earlier part of the year by a price war among food chains, but rose at rapid rates after that. Even apart from food prices, however, there was unmistakable evidence as the year drew to a close of a quickening pace of price advances.

The over-all fiscal policy of the government has continued to be expansionary. In this it has been supported by the monetary policy. This policy last year created credit conditions conducive to economic expansion and relief of upward pressures on the value of the Canadian dollar. There was a large expansion of the money supply. Interest rates, which varied somewhat over the course of the year, were on the average distinctly lower than during the previous year and lower at the end of the year than at the beginning. This year the fast expansion of the monetary aggregates has continued. Recently there has been some increase in interest rates both in Canada and the United States. On balance, the value of the Canadian dollar continues to be strong.

Summing up, the Canadian economy is expanding firmly and steadily. This in spite of the fact that as last year began, there was widespread uncertainty as to the future. This uncertainty was reinforced by the international economic crisis which beset us last August. The Smithsonian agreement of last December did much to dispel that uncertainty. Other factors contributed, particularly the expansionist measures introduced by my predecessor, now the Minister of National Defence. The mood of the country is one of growing confidence. I believe this confidence is well founded. I do not express this belief in any idle way, unmindful of some very real problems. We must continue to press for lower levels of unemployment. Price increases must be kept in check. But there is no question that the economy is advancing and gaining strength. Confidence is contagious and I believe it is spreading.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the government this year will expand its program of summer employment for young people. We are dealing here with a challenging problem. In recent years, there has been a great upsurge in the number of students who pour out of school in the late spring to seek interesting and well-paying jobs. This year there are about 1,400,000 students of 16 years and over who will become potential job-seekers or look to the community for interesting and meaningful summer activity. This is almost three times the number only ten years ago. Most of these young people will be absorbed in productive jobs in the expanding private sector of the economy. For a second year, however, a diverse range of programs in the federal opportunities for youth plan, aided by a number of similar provincial programs, will help to fill gaps in the supply of jobs this summer.

I should draw attention, also, to the significant improvements which the government has now proposed to the manpower training program. These amendments will extend its flexibility and efficiency. In that connection, the experimental program of on-the-job training introduced last fall was enthusiastically received, and the government has provided a total of $50 million for this purpose. I fully anticipate that on-the-job training will become a permanent and increasingly effective part of our overall manpower training policy.

[English]

Let me turn now to a brief review of some important, current developments in federal-provincial fiscal relations. The most significant of these, of course, has been the recent enactment by parliament of the new Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act. The passage of Bill C-8 brought to fruition a long and intensive period of consultations with the provinces.

We have now extended in time and content the framework within which the federal and provincial governments jointly share the personal income tax field on a co-operative basis. Taken together with previous announcements by Quebec and other provinces, the recent budget announcement by the Ontario government that it will bring into conformity its corporation income tax on essential fundamentals with the reformed federal act, also assures continued tax co-ordination across Canada.

Most important of all, however, we have renewed the equalization arrangements which are so vital to national unity in Canada. In recent weeks, I have been speaking on this criticial issue on several occasions, stressing that national unity is not just a question of language, important as that undoubtedly is.

National unity has a great deal to do with equality of opportunity—equality of opportunity for Canadians, no matter where they happen to be born or where they happen to live in our country. Equality of opportunity, in turn, means equalizing the ability of all the provinces to provide a national standard of services to Canadians. Our style of unity contemplates diversity and not uniformity. We are together as a united community of people in a unified, but not unitary, state. This is not to say that we want to pursue an inward-looking or narrow nationalism. Rather, as Canadians, we want to maintain and strengthen our sense of unity, our identity and our independence. With that goes the need to achieve a desirable regional balance across this beautiful land, to deepen the sense of belonging to a community and a nation, and to enhance the opportunities for meaningful participation in the collective decisions which affect our daily lives.

Equality of opportunity means a common standard of services to Canadians everywhere. National unity means sharing money and resources and this is the burden of our fiscal arrangements legislation. This is why the fiscal relations between Ottawa and the provinces are the cornerstone of confederation. It doesn't do anything for our country to try to do fine calculations of gains and losses, of who pays more and who receives more, because national unity cannot be calculated on a balance sheet.

Although equalization transfers are paid to provincial governments, it is obvious that their benefit is directed primarily toward the lower-income people in the receiving provinces. Without this sharing of national wealth, millions of Canadians would be deprived of the health, education, welfare and development services which are as much a part of income in a civilized society as the cash to buy three square meals a day. Equalization, taken together with shared-cost programs, provides much of the underpinning for social equity across the country.

Look at what parliament has done in the past few years to improve the lives of Canadians: medicare; increased supplementary pensions for the aged; the elimination of one million lower-income Canadians from the income tax rolls; the proposed fundamental reform and major increases in family allowances; the huge increase in federal contributions for education and student loans; a doubling of financial assistance for our native people; the broadening of unemployment insurance.

I should like now to speak briefly of certain features of our economic situation from a wider perspective.

Canada has a very fast-growing labour force, both because of the age structure of our population and because more and more women want to work outside the home. The population and the work force are concentrating in urban areas. That is where most people want to be, that is where they want to work and that is where jobs must be provided for them.

In an urban society people provide fewer and fewer services for themselves and they therefore demand more services in the market. Over the past quarter-century and more our service industries have grown substantially. By their very nature, most of our service industries are sheltered from foreign competition and are continuing to do very well.

Canada's resource industries are very strong and the outlook for them is bright. We have been blessed with a rich abundance of most natural resources to meet not only our own needs, but the growing demands from the rest of the world. They continue to be accorded favourable treatment under our reformed income tax system.

In agriculture, a very rapid rise in productivity with a corresponding decline in the need for farm workers, has necessitated a continuing process of adjustment. Here a wide range of federal programs have been put in place, including price supports, organized marketing, long and short-term credit, favourable tax treatment, and production development aid. New measures only recently introduced have improved all of these programs. Last year, farm net income rose by almost 25 per cent over 1970. The dairy industry is currently benefiting from a substantial firming in world price levels, and this year exports of grain and cereals from Western Canada will surpass all previous records. Much the same can be said of the fishing industry, where a number of important new programs have been implemented to improve productivity and stability and to raise the incomes of fishermen.

Our manufacturing industries are the largest single source of employment in Canada, providing jobs for more than one-fifth of all working Canadians. But by contrast with other sectors of the economy, this important sector is the one that is most exposed and most vulnerable to the challenge of change and international competition.

During the postwar period, the output of our manufacturing industries has not kept pace with the growth of the economy as a whole. Employment in the manufacturing industries has declined moderately as a proportion of total employment in Canada during this period.

In our trade in manufactured goods, we run a very large deficit, importing substantially more than we export. Excluding cars and parts, which are a rather special case, our trade deficit in manufactured goods increased by approximately $1 billion between 1965 and 1970.

Canada's manufacturing industries have been particularly hard pressed during the past few years. Unit costs of production have risen more rapidly than those in the United States. The problem has been further compounded by the appreciation of the Canadian dollar, which has reduced the cost in Canada of imported manufactured goods and at the same time increased the cost of Canadian manufactured goods abroad. Our manufacturing sector has also been exposed to growing competition from the new industrial giants—Japan and the expanding European Economic Community. It has been further jeopardized by export subsidies and protectionist measures adopted or contemplated in the United States.

The manufacturing sector is of crucial importance to our economy. We depend on it to provide a growing number of productive, interesting and well-paying jobs for Canadians in the urban centres where they want to live and work. We rely on it to keep us in the forefront of technological changes. It is important to the development of a balanced and stable economy, one that is not excessively exposed to the sharp swings that take place from time to time in demand abroad for raw materials. It is important, too, because of the support it provides to the other major sectors of the economy.

It is, therefore, essential for us to take whatever steps are necessary to promote the development in Canada of manufacturing industries that are dynamic, vigorous and resourceful, that are unceasing in their efforts to innovate, that develop new and better products and that are aggressive in their efforts to expand their markets in Canada and abroad. In short, we must do everything we can to promote the development of Canadian manufacturing industries that are fully capable of meeting and surpassing competition from other countries.

Budget Measures

Let me now get down to specifics. The thrust of the measures that I will propose to the House tonight has a two-fold purpose. The first set of measures is designed to strengthen the competitive position of our economy in order to promote the faster growth of production and employment. These measures are medium and long-term in their nature and structural in their impact. They are also intended as a permanent incentive. But they will also help to add new momentum immediately and in the months ahead to the already strong expansion now under way in the Canadian economy. The second set of measures is designed to promote greater social justice by relieving the financial burden that is being borne by particular groups or individuals in our nation. The new expenditures they entail will also add prompt stimulus to the economy.

As a major step in the development of a new industrial policy for this country I am bringing forward measures of a fundamental nature to revitalize the manufacturing and processing industries. These measures will help this sector improve its competitive position in the world and will thus protect existing jobs and provide well-paying new jobs for Canadians in and near the urban centres where they want to work. Moreover, these proposals will further reinforce growth throughout the economy by stimulating an early expansion in capital investment.

First, I propose that the cost of all machinery and equipment purchased after tonight by a taxpayer to be used for the purpose of manufacturing or processing goods for sale or lease in Canada may be written off in two years. A new capital cost allowance class will be established and a taxpayer will be entitled to claim as depreciation up to 50 per cent of the cost of the asset in the year in which it is acquired and the unclaimed balance in any subsequent year.

Second, commencing January 1, 1973, the top rate of corporate tax applicable to manufacturing and processing profits earned in Canada will be reduced to 40 per cent. Similarly, the effective rate of corporate tax applicable to manufacturing and processing profits earned in Canada eligible for the small business deduction will be reduced from 25 per cent to 20 per cent. In order to give effect to these rate reductions, it will be necessary to provide rules to enable a corporation to distinguish its manufacturing and processing income from other kinds of income, such as investment income, wholesaling and retailing income and natural resource income. Special rules for this purpose will be included in the bill and in the regulations.

The natural resource industries will not qualify for the two-year fast write-off or the special reductions in the rate of corporate tax because there are already in existence other incentives better suited to the needs of these industries. However, I am introducing tonight a further incentive to encourage more processing of our mineral resources through smelting and refining in Canada. I propose that the class of expenditures which earn depletion be extended to include all equipment acquired after tonight for the purpose of processing in Canada mineral ores after extraction and up to the prime metal stage. This will include all processing, whether or not related to a new mine or a major expansion, as well as custom processing. Furthermore, I propose that all of the income from such processing operations be considered as income against which depletion may be claimed and in respect of which the 15 per cent provincial abatement will apply.

Of course, as mineral resources are processed beyond the prime metal stage and oil and gas are refined beyond the crude stage, these further activities will be considered manufacturing and processing and will, therefore, be eligible for both the fast write-off and the rate reduction.

Most machinery and equipment is now written off for tax purposes at a 20-per-cent rate on a declining balance method. Tonight's proposal will permit machinery and equipment required for manufacturing operations to be written off within two years. It will replace the measure introduced in December, 1970, whereby manufacturing and processing enterprises were permitted to value new investment in depreciable assets at 115 per cent of their actual cost.

These measures will serve to increase substantially the cash flow of manufacturers and processors. Until the present, manufacturing and processing companies in Canada have borne a considerable weight of the corporate income tax. The ratio of tax paid to the value of their output has been much higher for corporations in this field than for other goods-producing companies. The changes proposed tonight will, I believe, put them in a more equitable position.

The tax treatment of companies engaged in manufacturing and processing will now compare very favourably with that in other nations, particularly the United States and the enlarged Common Market countries. Accordingly, it is to be expected that these measures will provide a substantial incentive for the establishment in Canada of new manufacturing enterprises and the expansion of existing enterprises by increasing the return that can ultimately be realized on capital investment.

The increase in the flow of funds available to these industries will strengthen their ability to compete with foreign manufacturers in a variety of ways. They make use of these expanded resources to finance new research and development, to finance an expansion of productive capacity, to introduce new product lines and to finance the development of new cost-reducing methods.

The improved financial position of these enterprises should also significantly enhance their ability to meet foreign competition in terms of price. With respect to those industries where there is at present a marked difference between Canadian and foreign price levels, I expect the savings permitted by these measures to be used to bring about a substantial reduction, and ultimately the elimination, of these price differentials.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Lewis: What is the expectation based upon?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Members of the House may ask what guarantee there is that this added cash flow will be used by our manufacturing industries for business expansion or to reduce prices, and not merely for higher profits. My answer is that I am confident that businessmen will see and recognize the underlying purpose of the government. Certainly we want to encourage a reasonable return on investment. But we also expect competitive prices, both at home and abroad. We expect the money to be used for new equipment and to replace equipment that is obsolescent. I expect business to get out and hustle, to grow, to compete, and to build jobs for Canadians. I am sure that the business community will justify this confidence and prove me right.

The measures which I am proposing to reinforce the expansion of manufacturing industries will be of benefit to all regions of the country. They will, of course, help to stimulate the growth of manufacturing in those areas of the country where it is already well developed. But they will also facilitate the establishment of new plants in those regions now relying heavily on resources. These regions are actively seeking to broaden their industrial base by promoting the development of manufacturing and processing.

This radical revision of the corporate tax system as it affects manufacturers and processors will require us to forego revenue amounting to about $500 million in a full year. But these measures should not be regarded so much as a cost to the federal treasury as a major investment by the nation that over time will more than repay itself in terms of increasing jobs for our workers and increasing prosperity for all Canadians.

I also wish to announce tonight an extension for one year of the existing provisions permitting a fast write-off of capital expenditures made by manufacturers or producers to provide air and water pollution control. Thus, such machinery and equipment purchased at any time before the end of 1974, and buildings to house pollution control equipment which are started before the end of 1973, will be eligible for the fast write-off. These fast write-off provisions will also be broadened to cover the costs of buildings, machinery and equipment acquired by independent companies providing pollution control services.

I turn now, Mr. Speaker, to other proposals again directly affecting the welfare of individual Canadians.

Over a period of some months, growing concern has been expressed both by members of this House and the public generally about the threat posed to the financial security of some Canadian citizens who have little or no ability to protect themselves from the burden of rising living costs. I have in mind particularly the elderly, a large proportion of whom are women, those veterans receiving pensions to compensate them for disabilities suffered in the military service of our country and families of veterans receiving the war veterans allowance.

Hon. members will recall that when the old age security program was amended and the guaranteed income supplement introduced six years ago, provision was made for the automatic escalation of both allowances up to a maximum of 2 per cent a year to offset increases in the cost of living.

[Translation]

Last year, further changes were made in the Old Age Security program and the supplemental allowance was raised substantially to provide greater assistance to those most in need. This rise in the supplemental payment made possible a real increase in the income of those eligible for the allowance because it more than compensated for increases in living costs prior to that time. At the same time, the provision for automatic escalation up to two per cent annually was retained for those qualifying for the combined Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement allowances. The universal Old Age Security pension was, however, fixed at $80 a month in keeping with the move by the government to channel public funds in a more selective way in order to provide income support for those most in need.

During the past few months we have been re-examining two features of the present program that have become a matter of public concern, the limitation on the annual increase in the combined Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement of two per cent annually and the pegging of the universal Old Age Security pension alone at $80. There are many elderly people who do not require the supplemental allowance to maintain a reasonable standard of living because they were able to make some provision for their own retirement during the period they were working. Even with the Old Age Security pension, however, the income of such elderly Canadians is in many cases already quite moderate and its purchasing power continues to be reduced by the rising cost of living.

Those receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement are also in a difficult position. If prices rise by more than two per cent a year—which has been the case recently—their real incomes will deteriorate unless there are periodic amendments to the legislation to provide for regular increases in these benefits.

[English]

In the long-term interests of the economy as a whole, it is essential for us to continue our efforts to maintain reasonable price stability in Canada. But these elderly Canadians are by no means responsible for the cost pressures that develop in our economy. On the contrary, they are the chief victims of inflation because they are the least able of any group in our society to protect themselves against it. We have come to the conclusion, therefore, that we have a duty as a nation to ensure that the elderly and veterans will be relieved of the hardship of a declining standard of living by helping them to meet the burden of the rising costs. I think everyone would agree that these are very special groups.

• (2050)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: When did you discover that?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In order to provide the needed relief and assistance to elderly Canadians, the government is proposing a number of measures. First, we shall seek authority to provide that the old age security pension should increase in accord with the full increase in the cost of living. This change would be made effective as of January 1, 1972, with the monthly payment being escalated by the percentage increase in the consumer price index in the fiscal year 1971-72 over the fiscal year 1970-71.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How much is that?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Beginning next year, the monthly pension would be adjusted on April 1 of each fiscal year to reflect the full rise in the cost of living during the previous calendar year.

Mr. Muir: Pierre said inflation was over.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Second, the advance in the economy and the national income now makes possible a further across the board increase in the guaranteed income supplement for needy, elderly Canadians. As of January 1, 1972, the maximum monthly benefit payable under a combined old age security/guaranteed income supplement would be raised from $135 for a single person to $150, and for a married couple from $255 to $285.

Mr. Lewis: That's the only good thing in the budget.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Further, the present ceiling of 2 per cent on the annual escalation index would be removed, so that on April 1 next year, this maximum benefit would also be increased in step with the full increase in the cost of living.

My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, will introduce amendments to the Old Age Security Act to bring these changes into effect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It's about time!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Third, the special exemption allowed persons 65 years of age and over for income tax purposes, which was recently increased by this government from $500 to $650, will be raised still further to $1,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: What about that, George?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They are delirious.

Mr. Horner: It's a good thing an election comes every four years.

An hon. Member: We should have an election every year.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This increased exemption will also be extended to taxpayers who are confined to bed or a wheelchair, and to the blind. I also wish to announce a further measure related to the blind and persons who are confined to bed or a wheelchair.

Mr. Jamieson: The Tories!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): To the extent that a blind or disabled person cannot make use of the $1,000 exemption, his or her spouse will be entitled to claim the otherwise unused portion of that exemption. Both of these measures will be effective from January 1, 1972.

In a full year the added expenditures resulting from the full escalation of the pensions for the aged, together with the increase in the maximum OAS/GIS benefit and the increase in the exemptions for the elderly, the blind and the disabled will cost about $350 million.

The government's concern for elderly persons has also led us to consider whether some fresh, new approach should not be undertaken on their behalf. It is obviously important that the growing number of men and women reaching retirement years should have opportunities to continue to participate in the life of the community in a meaningful way. Towards this end, my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, will shortly announce details of an experimental program to be known as New Horizons for the Aged.

Like the elderly, many of those Canadian veterans who made sacrifices in defence of our country—and their families—also find it difficult, if not impossible, to defend themselves against rising costs of living.

There have been periodic increases in the war veterans pension and war veterans allowances, the most recent being only last year. But the real income provided by these payments is in danger of being eroded by mounting prices. It is only fair and reasonable that we should stand ready to protect veterans and their families against such hardship as a matter of right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It took you four years to realize that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I propose, therefore, that effective January 1, 1972, pensions and allowances paid to war veterans also be increased from year-to-year in accordance with the full increase in the cost of living. We estimate the cost of this step will be about $25 million in a full year.

My colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, will shortly be introducing amendments to the Pensions' Act and the War Veterans' Allowance Act to give effect to these changes.

I am convinced the vast majority of Canadians will welcome these improvements, particularly those who will benefit directly—the elderly and veterans and their dependants—and those sons and daughters and other relatives who help to support them. I am sure that all members of the House will give wholehearted support to these important changes. With respect to escalation of pensions for the elderly and veterans, I want to stress again that these are very special groups and the same case cannot, in my judgment, necessarily be made for other groups.

I come now to a further area of public concern. This has to do with the growing financial burdens that must be carried by students—or by their husbands or their wives or their parents, as the case may be—in meeting the rising costs incurred in pursuing higher education or training for a vocational career.

It has been customary to think of education and training in terms of that undertaken largely by young Canadians as a necessary preparation for subsequent employment. Increasingly, however, education and training is becoming a continuing process. More and more adult men and women are resuming their studies to advance their education or training or to engage in re-training for new occupations in order to meet the requirements of our rapidly changing industrial society. This is particularly true of married women, who in growing numbers want to become qualified to obtain interesting, well-paying jobs after the early years of raising their families.

At the present time, of course, students may, for tax purposes, deduct from their annual earnings the full amount of their tuition fees. However, there are other costs of increasing importance which are not taken into account in any way. First there is the loss of income that might otherwise have been earned by a student. This forgone income is a major consideration in the decision whether to undertake or continue education or training. Second, there is the problem of the immediate cash costs that must be carried—of ordinary living, transportation, books and so forth. These costs have been climbing and there is evidence to suggest that they are weighing heavily against decisions to proceed with education or training.

To be sure, there have been valid concerns expressed about the very sharp rise in the amount of money which governments have had to pour into the educational system to cope with expanding enrolments and increasing costs. But a large part of this can be traced to the age structure of our population, which has resulted in a large inflow of students. This demographic phenomenon is now reversing, and we need to ensure that over the longer run Canada places an adequate emphasis on the development of our human resources. Taking this longer view, the federal government has concluded that some steps should be taken through the tax system to encourage the effort of individual students and their families to invest in further education and vocational training.

I therefore propose a new deduction related to the cost of obtaining education, which will be in addition to the existing deduction for tuition fees. This new measure will be a deduction of $50 per month per student for each month in the year during which the student was in full-time attendance at certain educational or training institutions. It will be applied to full-time attendance in a qualifying educational program at educational institutions providing courses at the post-secondary level and also at educational institutions certified by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in connection with the present tax provision affecting tuition fees. For these purposes, a qualifying educational program will mean a program of not less than three consecutive weeks' duration that requires the student to work not less than 10 hours per week at work related to the program. Those eligible for training allowances or whose courses are paid for by their employer will not be eligible for this deduction.

The deduction will be available to the student, but to the extent that she or he cannot make full use of the deduction, it will be available to the student's parent, husband or wife. This deduction will be effective as from January 1, 1972. It will involve a revenue cost of about $50 million in a full year.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, a further proposal affecting individuals relates to medical expenses. For most taxpayers, the introduction of publicly-financed programs for hospital amd medical care has greatly reduced the number of cases whereby medical expenses place an unusual burden upon a taxpayer. None the less, this is an area which requires continuing surveillance to make sure that the hardship cases are dealt with quickly and adequately.

In keeping with this policy, I wish to announce two new measures. First, I propose to include as a medical expense for tax purposes an amount paid as remuneration for a full-time attendant to care for a taxpayer, his spouse, or other dependant, in a domestic establishment in which the cared-for person resides. This will be available upon certification by a doctor that the person is incapable of self-care for what is likely to be an indefinite period.

Secondly, I propose to include as a deductible medical expense amounts paid to commercial transport services for transportation of a taxpayer or his spouse, or dependant, and an attendant if necessary, to and from a hospital, clinic or doctor's office to which the individual has travelled a distance in excess of 25 miles to obtain medical services not otherwise available nearer home.

Both of these measures that I have just announced will help to relieve financial hardship associated with illness.

[Translation]

A number of the income tax measures I have just outlined and others related to tax reform that I will outline shortly will have an effect on the revenues of all provinces which have harmonized their tax systems with ours for purposes of tax collection agreements. These effects may be quite substantial. However, we have already provided a guarantee to these provinces that their revenues will be maintained for five years at a level at least equal to that which they would have received under the former tax system. This guarantee was offered as a part of tax reform and is contained in the fiscal arrangements legislation recently enacted by Parliament. The guarantee means that the federal government will absorb any revenue cost that the provinces otherwise would have borne, if the combined effect of tax reform and the new measures proposed tonight reduces provincial revenues below the yield of the former tax system. I am confident, moreover, that the provincial governments will welcome these measures as contributing both to the longer-term growth of their respective provinces and to fairness in taxation.

I am bringing forward certain proposals tonight regarding the sales tax, most of which involve items that are of concern to those Canadians who are physically handicapped. I also wish to announce that in order to provide a further measure of support to industrial research and development in Canada, scientific research equipment purchased by manufacturers after tonight for use in the testing or development of new products will be exempt from sales tax. Details of these proposals will be found in the Ways and Means Motion that I will table later.

I would like to turn now to the Customs Tariff. The terms of the Canadian offer of tariff preferences for developing countries were announced in the House on November 14, 1969. The proposed Canadian system is also set out in the Ways and Means Motion which I am tabling tonight. It proposes the establishment of a "General Preferential Tariff" which, subject to appropriate safeguards, will provide for lower tariffs on most of the semi-manufactured and manufactured goods which we import from developing countries.

There is also provision for lower rates on selected agricultural products and industrial raw materials. This will be enabling legislation; it will come into force only after enactment and on a date to be fixed by proclamation. This is a contribution by Canada to a global effort to help the developing countries improve their exports to world markets.

There are a number of other tariff changes which I am proposing. Most of these are relatively minor in their economic impact; the details are set out in the Ways and Means Motion. I should mention one which is of importance to the textile industry. The duty on knit goods from Britain is to be increased from a net rate of 18 per cent to 25 per cent; the rate on knit goods from other countries entitled to the benefits of the British Preferential Tariff will remain the same. This proposal derives from negotiations following upon the implementation by Britain on January 1 this year of increased rates of duty on cotton textiles from Commonwealth sources, including those from Canada. The purpose is to restore the balance of our concessions in our trade agreement with Britain. It should benefit our textile industry, which was damaged by the increased British tariff on cotton textiles.

It should be noted that as Britain begins to alter preferential access to its market by its entry into the European Economic Community, Canada will no longer have an obligation to extend preferential rates on British goods.

As in previous budgets, all the changes—except those relating to the proposed General Preferential Tariff—are to come into force tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to refer to tax reform. Last December, Bill C-259 received royal assent and on January 1, 1972, the amended Income Tax Act came into effect. Only a few months have passed, but as a general observation, I am pleased to note that, except in a few specific areas, debate about broad policy issues seems to have run its course.

This is not to say that everyone is satisfied with tax reform and I myself am concerned about some of the provisions which have produced anomalies or which are working in unintended ways. I believe that part of my responsibility in this portfolio is to take a hard look at the rough edges of tax reform and I intend to see to it that the rough edges are smoothed out.

I want to say that I welcome the representations and suggestions I have received. It is inevitable in the course of a major tax reform that problems will arise. It has always been, and it will continue to be, the policy of this government to respond as quickly as possible to these problems as they become known. The discussions I have had with persons from all walks of life have been most helpful to me in identifying and finding solutions to many of these problems.

In a moment, I propose to announce a number of important amendments to the Income Tax Act arising out of tax reform, but first I wish to make a few general comments. The particular amendments have been selected either because they affect large numbers of taxpayers or because the government is already committed to make them. There are a few other amendments which I have been contemplating, but I have not included these in this budget because I am still considering the best solution to the particular problems. I mention this because many people have made sensible suggestions to me, but it is not possible to deal with all of them tonight.

I also want to say that I have given careful consideration to the debate in this chamber and in the other place and to the undertakings my predecessor made to both Houses of Parliament. He undertook to make certain amendments and to review other troublesome areas. I believe you will find that I have met the specific commitments and, as I have previously indicated, I am re-examining all areas which are having unintended effects.

I want to assure this House and all Canadians that it is my intention to continue to scrutinize the tax reform and to make such changes as may be necessary from time to time.

Finally, by way of general comment, I should say that I have not attempted in these remarks to describe all of the amendments which I wish to introduce tonight. I will refer only to those measures of general interest or of particular importance, and then only in a general way. However, the ways and means motion I am tabling will contain reference to all of the proposed amendments and members may review that document to obtain full details.

I want to discuss now the specific amendments, all of which will be effective January 1, 1972, unless otherwise indicated. First, some important amendments in the area of personal income.

One problem of particular concern is the impact of the new tax measures on charitable donations. Notwithstanding the increase in the annual limit on the deductibility of charitable donations from 10 per cent to 20 per cent of income, there seems to be a general fear that gifts and bequests of appreciated property will be discouraged if there is a deemed realization of the capital gain. This issue was carefully considered by the government during the course of the tax reform debate and my predecessor has explained on several occasions the problems and concerns which led to this decision.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

I believe that the basic decision was correct, but I am persuaded that in one particular situation, the rules should be relaxed. In those cases where the property to be gifted is not a substitute for money—that is, where the property gifted to the charitable organization is suitable for actual use in its charitable activities—I propose that the deemed realization rules be qualified. I have in mind here such examples as the bequest of an art collection to a public art gallery or the gift of a piece of real property intended to be used as a camp or a hospital. Some taxpayers who donate property that has increased in value may prefer to value the gift for purposes of both the deemed realization rules and the charitable deduction rules at its market value rather than its cost. I propose, therefore, that a taxpayer who gives or bequeaths appreciated property of this nature to a charity shall have the choice of valuing the donation for purposes of both these rules at an amount anywhere between its cost and its fair market value.

I also wish to announce a second amendment in this area. The act will be amended to provide that any bequest to a charity will be regarded as having been made in the taxation year in which the taxpayer died. This measure will permit the value of the gift to be deducted from the taxpayer's income in the year of death, subject to the normal limit.

Individuals who earn income that is not subjected to deductions at source are required to pay instalments during the year as a payment against their tax liability for the year. In order to ease the financial and paperwork burden facing many of our low income taxpayers, especially pensioners, I propose that henceforth instalments will not be required if the individual's federal tax liability for the preceding year did not exceed $400.

Under the present law, the tax treatment of income derived from certain damage awards payable to children is not entirely clear. For example, children who have suffered damage as a result of thalidomide have received awards which are being held in trust for their benefit until they attain their maturity. Under the law as it now reads, the income from these trust funds, which is being accumulated and held for the benefit of these children pending maturity, may be subject to tax. This, to my mind, is not a desirable result. Therefore, I propose an amendment which will exempt from tax the income derived from funds and annuities resulting from personal injury damage awards up to the time that the injured person attains age 21.

I have received a number of representations asking that some form of special treatment be extended to persons who receive lump sum payments from a deferred profit-sharing plan. Some plans have asked that the special form of averaging previously available under the old act be reinstated and other plans have sought some form of special treatment for capital gains realized or distributed by these plans. I find this problem particularly difficult. First, let me say that I am in no way opposed to profit-sharing plans; in fact, I can see many advantages in this approach—for example, increased incentive and a sense of collective effort. However, I am not persuaded at this time that a lump sum payment out of a deferred profit-sharing plan should enjoy any special treatment. It seems to me that payments out of such a plan should be treated in much the same manner as payments out of pension plans and registered retirement savings plans. All three of these types of plans have in common the deferral of income tax on the contributions to and the income of the plan. The government has previously indicated that it is conducting a general review of the taxation of retirement income plans. I have, therefore, concluded that this specific problem concerning the deferred profit-sharing plans should be considered as part of this general review.

A major feature of tax reform was the introduction of a tax on capital gains and I am pleased to note that these new provisions are, by and large, working well. None the less, some refinements are required. At this time, I wish to announce one important amendment and to mention that there are several other technical amendments to be found in the ways and means motion.

The important amendment concerns the provisions dealing with deemed realization of capital gains at death. It is intended to assist taxpayers who might face a heavy tax liability at a time when their assets might be illiquid. The amendment will provide that the payment of taxes occasioned by this circumstance may be paid in six equal annual instalments, together with interest. This provision is similar to the provision contained in the former Estate Tax Act and should relieve hardship which a taxpayer might otherwise face.

Next I want to announce several amendments relating to the taxation of corporations.

All corporations and certain individuals are obliged to pay instalments during the year in respect of their tax liability for the year. Under the present rules, taxpayers could base their instalment payments either on their estimate of the current year's liability or, alternatively, on a computation involving the prior year's income and the current year's tax rates. It has become increasingly difficult in recent years for taxpayers to use the "prior year" formula and this problem was exacerbated by the shift from the old system to the new system. In order to simplify the basis of instalment payments, I propose an amendment whereby taxpayers will be able to base their instalments on their estimate of the current year's liability or on taxes payable for the preceding year.

Where it is necessary to adjust the prior year's taxes payable in order to reflect certain specific changes in tax rates, simple adjustments will be prescribed by regulation. In this way, corporate taxpayers will be relieved of tedious calculations and yet the fiscal objectives can still be achieved.

Under the provisions relating to taxation of private corporations, one-half of the taxes paid on account of certain types of investment income are refunded at the time of payment of dividends. The purpose of this refund is to eliminate the artificial distinction between an individual "investing" directly or through his corporation.

It now appears that this provision may be open to some abuse and I believe that the government should correct this situation quickly, before taxpayers come to rely on an unintended loophole. The particular situation which troubles me arises in those cases where, within a corporate group, business income is converted into investment income in order to take advantage of the refund provision. To eliminate this loophole, an amendment will be made which will apply to certain kinds of investment income received by a corporation in taxation years commencing after 1972 from an associated corporation. The effect of the amendment will be to preserve the "business income" character of these particular receipts in the hands of the recipient.

In connection with the taxation of business and property income, I want to mention two problems which I will not attempt to solve tonight, but which are being given intensive examination. First, I am concerned about the taxation of certain property rights which were purchased before 1972 and which are subsequently sold. These rights are often called "nothings". In the event of a sale of these rights under the new system, a taxpayer could find himself facing a tax liability even though he has suffered a net cash loss on the purchase and sale. One example of this type of property is the agricultural products quota, such as the milk quota. In this regard, I have already established in co-operation with the Minister of State attached to the Department of Finance an interdepartmental committee of officials to examine this problem as well as other aspects of the taxation of agricultural producers.

Secondly, I am concerned about the new provisions designed to permit Canadian corporations to deduct exploration and development costs incurred in searching for natural resources in foreign countries. It appears that the reality of the international situation is that Canadian companies must often incorporate subsidiaries in the local foreign jurisdiction in order to carry out this type of work and it may then be difficult to utilize the new provisions.

The answers to these two problems will be difficult, but work is under way to see if appropriate and realistic solutions can be found.

I come now to the treatment of income earned abroad by Canadians. As I mentioned previously, this is an area which the government has undertaken to review. I personally am particularly concerned that the new measures do nothing to interfere with the success of our exporters, our Canadian based multi-national corporations and our international entrepreneurs. It is only a few months since the new act was passed and we have not completed our review. Although most of the measures affecting taxpayers in this area do not take effect immediately, I am well aware that corporations often must make decisions today which will commit them to a course of action for several years to come. Therefore, I want to announce a few measures which I believe will improve significantly the taxation of international income, but I also want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the House that I attach a high priority to the completion of our review.

I have had a number of meetings with taxpayers concerned with the rules for the taxation of foreign accrual property income, and I am persuaded that these rules, as now drafted, may produce unintended results in particular cases. However, this is a difficult area and I am not satisfied that we have yet found appropriate solutions which will eliminate the difficulties, while preserving the basic thrust of the reform. The foreign accrual property income rules are scheduled to become effective for taxation years commencing in 1973, but in order that no taxpayer be unfairly or unintentionally prejudiced, I propose that the starting date for these rules be postponed for two years—that is, they not become effective until taxation years commencing in 1975.

When a taxpayer relinquishes his status as a Canadian resident, he must include in his income any accrued capital gains as if he had sold all his capital property. Under the act, a taxpayer has the right to postpone this deemed realization but if he chooses this right, in any year in which he actually disposes of the particular capital property, he must report his income as if he had continued to be a Canadian resident. I have concluded that these rules may be too harsh in some circumstances and that some relief should be provided.

Therefore, amendments will be introduced to change the rules applicable in these circumstances. A first option will permit a taxpayer to pay the tax attributable to any deemed realization of his capital property in six equal annual instalments with interest, subject to the provision of satisfactory security. Alternatively, a taxpayer may elect to have any particular capital property treated as taxable Canadian property, in which event he will be taxed only when the property is disposed of and only on the actual gain realized.

Also in this regard, I believe that some special measure is required to deal with foreigners who come to Canada for a period. It is essential that we maintain a hospitable climate so that people with valuable skills are not discouraged from working in Canada for a period. Therefore, an amendment will be introduced to the effect that where a person has not been resident in Canada for more than 36 months over the preceding ten years, any accrued gains on property which he owned when he entered Canada will not be subject to tax when he leaves.

Let me discuss now the financial position of the government and our borrowing requirements. In respect of the fiscal year just ended and for which the books are not yet closed, we anticipate that budgetary revenues will amount to $14,145 million and expenditures to $14,745 million. These figures imply a budgetary deficit of $600 million. Net non-budgetary requirements amount to $1,003 million, apart from $485 million required to finance foreign exchange transactions. Total cash requirements thus amount to $1,603 million, excluding the financing of exchange acquisitions, or $2,088 million overall.

The strength of the economy has been such as to produce larger revenues, budgetary and non-budgetary, than were anticipated when estimates for 1971-72 were given to the House in October of last year. Budgetary expenditures were also somewht higher than forecast, mainly on account of higher fiscal transfers to provinces. Non-budgetary outlays were lower than anticipated six months ago because of lower advances to certain crown corporations. Outlays on exchange were substantial owing in the main to the large purchases made during the course of the world monetary crisis in the closing months of 1971.

On balance, however, the surge in revenues resulting from the pick-up in incomes and sales in the economy was responsible for the fact that our need to borrow funds was less than had been anticipated when the position was last reported to the House.

I wish now to indicate the order of magnitude of the government's cash requirements for the current fiscal year. Mr. Speaker, this is not an easy task and I am anxious to avoid leaving a false impression of precision. As I emphasized in my first address to this House upon assuming my present portfolio, there are severe limitations upon the present capacity of economic and fiscal science to provide accurate projections of cash requirements. Even in the realm of population projections, where perhaps the technique of forecasting is today best developed, we find that deviations of forecasts from census counts by province can be sufficiently great to produce errors in excess of $100 million in estimates of equalization payments, which depend on provincial population.

To take another example, revenues of the government amount to a figure of the order of $16 billion. Given the dependence of revenues upon the state of the economy, and the imprecision in official estimates of the GNP, even after the event, it would be totally unrealistic to expect a revenue forecaster to forecast within 2 per cent of the total. But 2 per cent of total revenue is some $320 million. This year we shall have particular difficulty in revenue forecasting owing to the fact that we have no experience of tax collections under the reformed tax system. I could cite many more examples.

I will offer to the House now the best estimates we are able to make of the cash requirements in 1972-73. I regard these estimates as the mid-points of rather wide ranges. I would urge hon. members to regard them in the same way.

For the current fiscal year, taking into account the effects of the measures I have announced tonight, we estimate that budgetary revenues will be $15,670 million, expenditures $16,120 million and the budgetary deficit $450 million. Net non-budgetary requirements are expected to be $1,550 million apart from any net source or use of funds in exchange transactions. Thus we calculate that we shall have to borrow, or finance through changes in cash balances, a total of $2,000 million.

While this figure is somewhat lower than the cash requirements which resulted from last year's operations, including the purchases of official reserves, it does not imply a significant reduction in the stimulus to the economy through fiscal injections from that provided last year. In my judgment, stimulus of this order is appropriate in our present economic circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I should like now for the information of members to include as an appendix to today's Hansard, a budget paper entitled Review of Government Accounts 1971-72. I should also like to include in today's Hansard supplementary tables showing government of Canada cash requirements, federal government revenues and expenditures on a national accounts basis, reconciliations of these figures with those compiled on a public accounts basis, and details of the budgetary revenues. The information in these tables applies to the fiscal years 1971-72 and 1972-73.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has suggested that certain documents be appended to Hansard: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For budget paper entitled "Review of Government Accounts 1971-72", see appendix.

[1]The "Total Financial Requirement" differs from "Overall Cash Requirement" as per Public Accounts because of the inclusion under Non-Budgetary Transactions of the change in the special non-marketable bonds held by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In the Public Accounts the change in these holdings is reflected in the net change in Unmatured Debt Outstanding.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Looking ahead, now, first in the broad perspective of the world economy, there are encouraging prospects. First and foremost are the prospects for our trading partners. In the close-knit world in which we live, Canada cannot prosper if other countries are in decline. Our expectation is that the economy of the United States will grow much more strongly this year than it did last. In the procession of cyclical phases, that country seems to be a phase ahead of Europe and Japan, speaking generally. Even so the rate of growth in those countries is also expected to be rather faster this year than it was last. These factors will contribute to the advance in our own economy.

There is, of course, unfinished business arising from the financial and commercial crisis of last fall. While more stability has returned to exchange markets generally, the fundamental reform of the international monetary system has yet to be worked out. The Canadian government attaches high importance and priority to this work. We are looking for reform in the evolutionary sense rather than for an entirely new system, though we anticipate some major changes nonetheless. It is our view that the complicated discussions and negotiations that are required on several planes, can best be carried out within the aegis of the International Monetary Fund. Canada expects to play its full part in this work and I will be speaking on this subject at the International Monetary Conference in Montreal tomorrow evening.

There is also unfinished business in respect of trade arrangements. There is now an undertaking by the major industrial countries to commence comprehensive trade talks next year. Canada will participate in these talks as constructively as possible, ever cognizant of the advantages to us of freer, multilateral trade. There are also specific bilateral trade issues between the United States and ourselves which need to be settled at the earliest opportunity.

[English]

Turning more particularly to the Canadian economy, we anticipate that our growth will be stronger than it was last year. In 1971 we grew at a rate in excess of the long-term trend. We will better that this year. I have spoken of the basic financial strength of consumers. This will yield a strong growth in consumer expenditures. I expect that investment in inventories, which are now at below-normal levels, will be substantial. I expect that capital investment by business will be greater than was indicated in the recently published figures of intentions, and having in mind the stimulus provided in this budget tonight it will be greater than it was last year, especially in machinery and equipment. All signs point to another strong year in housing.

Exports, too, will be higher than last year as a consequence of the growing economic strength of the countries to which we sell our products. However, the advance of our economy will boost our imports and our trade balance will, in all likelihood, be lower than it was this year, and our current account will be in deficit.

We are expecting a large increase in employment and all signs to date this year give credence to this anticipation. In March this year there were 330,000 more Canadians working than one year ago.

I expect that unemployment will fall on the average in the course of this year, though the extraordinary month to month fluctuations in the size of the labour force will likely continue and be reflected in an uneven movement in the unemployment rate.

There are mixed tendencies in the price picture. The growth of demand and rather lower productivity will make for price increases. The cost of imports may well rise less than last year. We do not expect that food prices will rise as fast this year as last and their current tendency encourages us in this expectation.

In summary, I expect that progress will be made this year in reducing unemployment. The growth in jobs should be considerably larger than last year. More goods and services will be produced and consumed by Canadians. Indeed, I am expecting that our real rate of growth in 1972 will be of the order of 6 to 6½ per cent. In short, I am expecting a year of considerable progress.

During the past few years, Mr. Speaker, virtually every industrial nation in the world has been going through a difficult and painful adjustment process. Canada was no exception. On the whole, however, the record shows that we weathered the storm better than most. Among the ten leading industrial nations, the growth of Canada's real output during 1971 exceeded that in every other country except Japan and was twice the increase in the United States. The rise in prices was significantly lower than that of any other industrial nation. The growth in employment last year of 2½ per cent was far greater than that of virtually any other industrial nation and was four times the percentage increase in employment in the United States. But given the rapid growth in our labour force, this was still not good enough.

Over a period of two years now, the growth of the economy has been steadily accelerating in response to the strong fiscal and monetary stimulus injected by the federal government. A further boost has been provided by a variety of provincial policies and programs. The evidence available on every hand indicates that there is a newfound sense of confidence among Canadians generally and among businessmen in particular about our prospects for continued strong economic growth in the year ahead.

I believe this sense of confidence in the future will be further strengthened by the measures which I have announced in the budget tonight. This applies with particular force to the substantial reductions which I have proposed in the tax load carried by the critically important manufacturing and processing sectors of our economy. This new thrust will provide a major boost to these hardpressed industries. These measures will provide our manufacturers and processors with incentive to expand employment, production and capital investment. I and other Canadians will now be counting heavily on them to fulfil the promise of this budget.

Millions of Canadians will also benefit individually from the changes I have proposed tonight to raise the supplementary pension allowance, to enable the pensions of the elderly and of veterans to keep pace with the cost of living, to increase further the tax exemption for the aged, the blind and disabled, and to provide significant tax relief from the heavy financial burden of education and training.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could do everything at once and I am sure that each member of this House, were he standing in my place, would have a long list of priorities of things he would want to change, of inequities he would want to cure. The bare fact of the matter is that we cannot do everything at once. We simply don't have the resources. There are limits to the scope of fiscal policy. There are limits to stimulus and readjustment. I have been conscious of the bounds within which I have been constrained: to do everything I can to stimulate the economy, to encourage growth for more jobs, to right injustices—but in a way and at a pace that does not inject too much fuel into the economy. I have had to resist a good many well-intentioned temptations lest I run the risk of firing inflation. That is what I meant when I said that I would be striving for a responsible budget, a budget that would reconcile growth and jobs with reasonable price stability. I am confident that the measures I have proposed to this House of Commons tonight are within the realm of responsible fiscal action. I believe the measures that I have announced tonight will help to meet those demands which deserve the highest priority—the easing of some of the financial hardship of many individual Canadians and the creation of permanent, well-paying jobs. I now wish to table the ways and means resolutions and I commend the budget to this House of Commons.

[Editor's Note: For notice of ways and means resolutions, see Votes and Proceedings of today's date.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), whom I have known for many years—I first knew him as a student many years ago at the same institution of learning—on a very voluminous budget, though I am afraid he had an embarrassment of choice. One of my colleagues said that this was not necessarily the responsible budget the minister spoke about but, rather, a "repair the damage" budget and that is where its scope lay.

On a much more serious note, I think that when we get out of this chamber all of us will realize that while the minister was speaking on a very important subject, one that affects Canada, others were speaking on other events that may make much of this quite irrelevant and the potential of those other events belittle much of what the minister has said tonight. May I say I am referring to events taking place outside this country. I do not want to get into any speeches which have been made elsewhere or to advert to the very delicate international situation that is now arising as a result of action being taken by the United States government. That is something we will learn much of later.

This budget message contains a lot of suggestions to repair the damages and make good the deficiencies which have existed for a long time. I am very sorry the minister's predecessor is no longer in the House because I should have liked him to hear these remarks. If one were not very charitable, one would be very cynical about the budget. I might suggest there would not be anything in this budget if this were not an election year. Members opposite, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) down, have repeatedly in the last two years voted down resolutions emanating from the opposition in respect of old age pensions and the 2 per cent escalation clause, limitations on the guaranteed income supplement, veterans pensions and the 2 per cent supplement in that regard.They have constantly voted down these measures and belittled them in speeches both in and out of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Tonight, in their desperation to recapture some popularity in the country, they have clasped these proposals to their breasts and have gone into a frenzy of applause for the new Minister of Finance as though he had thought up these things. I sometimes believe that the minister must blush as red as the tie he wears.

The minister faces the problems of people on low and fixed incomes, yet the remarks which appear in this document represent an outright condemnation of the administration of which he has been a member for the last three years. With callous disregard, the government has ignored the effects of inflation on pensioners, whether they be veterans or senior citizens, and has rejected at every turn proposals from the opposition and from groups outside this House in respect of alleviating the effects of inflation.

At page 12 of the minister's remarks we find this statement:

> Like the elderly, many of those Canadian veterans who made sacrifices in defense of our country—and their families—also find it difficult, if not impossible, to defend themselves against rising costs of living.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Did this government just find this out? Did this not apply last year or the year before? What did the government do about it then? The government sat on its hands and did nothing. As I say, this is a "repair the damage" budget. There are other remarks in purple prose in the more flamboyant passages the minister read. He did not write it, because he is not possibly capable of such atrocious language as we have heard tonight.

I suggest we are seeing again this new found concern about the inroads and hardships of inflation. This is an election year and, if you will forgive me for being cynical, Mr. Speaker, we cannot buy this response of distribution, hitting certain high points across the country and causing great concern for the public. Last week this government brought forward its policy, if you can call it that, in respect of foreign ownership. It is merely limited to takeovers and does nothing to encourage Canadians to own enterprises. Since that time, members on the government side and others have said we should wait until Monday night for the budget when the government will come through with something to give Canadians encouragement to own their own industries. What did we get? I suggest we got one big, fat zero and that is all. There is not even a misplaced comma in this address that deals with foreign ownership. There is not one iota of encouragement.

What we are to have is repression, with some form of screening agency dealing in matters which may or may not be constitutionally within the powers of the agency. I will not discuss that matter further until the bill comes before us. We hope that will be soon unless, of course, the Prime Minister decides he is going to pull the chain and call an election.

The Minister of Finance still faces the same problems of inflation and unemployment. Let us talk about some of the percentage rates of inflation. If the minister wants to study tables, let him look at absolute increases in the cost of living index and he will see they have been in the nature of 4.8 per cent rather than 3 per cent or something like that. As the cost of living escalates year by year, we receive claims by the government that the inflation increase amounts to only 3 per cent, 3.2 per cent or something like that, when the actual increase is more in the nature of 5 per cent to 6 per cent in some years.

We have heard it said that the problem of inflation was licked. I am sure that statement is not recorded in the book of sayings of the Prime Minister. Last October in the Throne Speech, as well as in June in the budget speech, we heard about all kinds of measures the government intended to take to stimulate the economy and reduce unemployment—but the figures are still the same; they have not gone down in total amount. The government has not reduced the percentage of unemployment and we see inflation returning again at the same rates of a year ago.

What has the minister done with regard to unemployment and incentive to industry? He has done some things which are generally in the right direction, but the choice of things was so wide it was hard for the minister to miss everything of which one could approve. Certainly the increase in respect of old age security and the lifting of that ironclad ceiling which was imposed last year on basic pensions is a step in the right direction.

The increase in the guaranteed supplement is a step in the right direction. The increase from $650 to $1,000 in personal exemption to those over 65 merely accentuates the difficulties which a flat rate imposes. This was pointed out during the debate on Bill C-259. It is far better to have tax credits. After all, the high income recipient who is also an old age security recipient benefits much more from the $350 in personal exemption. His marginal rate is much higher. Therefore, the real thrust of the relief which the government wishes to give is missed on this occasion, but that is because the members of the government have been rather stubborn about the tax structure and the type of exemption they want to grant.

With respect to the incentives for manufacturing and processing, I wish to quote as follows from the document entitled "Supplementary Information on the Budget":

> In general, the incentive will apply to operations within the ordinary meaning of the term "manufacturing or processing". Thus, machinery and equipment used in industries such as metal fabrication, chemicals, electrical products, pulp and paper, and textiles—to mention only a few examples—would qualify. On the other hand, assets of taxpayers in the service industries and in wholesale trade, retail trade, financial institutions, transportation, communications, construction, and public utilities would not qualify except to the extent that manufacturing and processing activities are carried out.

Agriculture, fishing, logging, operating an oil or gas well and extracting mineral resources would be excluded. Apparently we are to see a great deal of encouragement across the country, but in those areas where the corporation tax is levied by the province and collected by the province I would ask the minister, what incentive is there for the province? What incentive is there for the province of Quebec with regard to this, unless the minister is able to come to some agreement with the province and force it to follow suit? This will be a very interesting point in Quebec and possibly in Ontario.

There are many other things that we will be going into, Mr. Speaker, but I think we have had enough for tonight. I want to commend the minister on delivering one of the longest budget speeches that we have heard in years and for receiving a very interesting return before an adulating crowd. It was as though he were at a town hall meeting of his constituents. On that note, so that people may understand how the government has not been able to alleviate the mistakes it has made in the past, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) that this debate be adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that we dispense with the adjournment proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At 9.55 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS

INTRODUCTION

This review presents in summary form the financial operations of the Government of Canada for the fiscal year 1971-72. The fiscal year of the government ends on March 31 but the books must remain open for some time after that date to record adjusting entries and to take into account section 30 of the Financial Administration Act which permits payments made up to April 30 to discharge debts incurred before March 31 to be included in the accounts for the fiscal year. The figures used in this review are based on eleven months actual and one month estimated.

The financial operations of the government include the raising of tax and other revenues and their allocation to departmental and other expenditures; such operations are provided for in its annual administrative budget. In addition, the government undertakes other transactions which do not enter into the calculation of its budget surplus or deficit. These transactions include all receipts and payments leading to changes in the assets or liabilities of the government. Among such receipts and payments are those arising from debt operations and changes in the bank balances of the Receiver General; these types of operation are undertaken to finance the deficit or dispose of the surplus arising from all the other operations of the government, whether budgetary or non-budgetary. Accordingly, in what follows, debt operations and changes in the bank balances of the Receiver General are distinguished from other non-budgetary transactions.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE GOVERNMENT'S FINANCIAL OPERATIONS DURING 1971–72

This section outlines the financial operations of the government in 1971-72 giving a brief summary of the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions, unmatured debt transactions and changes in the cash position and the debt position during the fiscal year. More detailed explanations are given in subsequent sections of this review.

Revenue at $14,145 million for 1971-72 is $1,342 million or about 11 per cent more than 1970-71 revenue of $12,803 million. The increase of $1,342 million was the result of a rise of $1,188 million in tax revenue and an expansion of $154 million in non-tax revenue. The yield from personal income taxes (including the social development tax) is $686 million higher, from corporation income tax it is $19 million less and from return on investments it is $95 million higher than in 1970-71.

Expenditure at $14,745 million for 1971-72 is $1,563 million or 12 per cent higher than in 1970-71. The major changes between 1970-71 and 1971-72 expenditures are increases of $172 million in public debt charges, $200 million in fiscal transfer payments to provinces, $176 million in payments in respect of the Medicare Act, $116 million in outlays under Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, $71 million under the Canada Assistance Plan and $62 million for post-secondary education.

Given revenue of $14,145 million and expenditure of $14,745 million, there will be a budgetary deficit of $600 million as compared with a deficit of $379 million in 1970-71.

Non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions)

The three social security accounts are those for the Old Age Security Fund, the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Account. Summaries of the transactions in these accounts for 1970-71 and 1971-72 are given in table 2.

The Old Age Security Fund is financed by tax receipts. These receipts are $2,120 million, an increase of 11 per cent over their level in 1970-71. Payments rose to $2,206 million in 1971-72, $86 million more than receipts. In 1970-71, receipts of $1,914 million exceeded payments by $7 million.

Canada Pension Plan receipts of $1,101 million in 1971-72 exceeded disbursements of $167 million. The greater part of the excess of $934 million was invested in purchasing $910 million of provincial and federal government bonds.

Unemployment Insurance Account receipts at $1,135 million were $10 million less than disbursements resulting in a balance of $15 million in the account at March 31, 1972 compared with a balance of $351 million at March 31, 1971. In 1970-71 receipts were $771 million and benefits paid were $758 million.

Other annuity, insurance and pension accounts include the superannuation accounts of the public service, the Canadian Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the government annuities account and certain other accounts of a similar nature. Net receipts from these accounts at $884 million are $197 million more than in 1970-71.

The greater part of loans, investments and advances are made to crown corporations and the remainder made to provincial governments, governments outside Canada, international organizations, private businesses and individuals. In 1971-72 net loans and investments of $1,249 million to crown corporations are $128 million more than in 1970-71; other loans, investments and advances in the net amount of $513 million are $270 million more than in 1970-71.

Foreign exchange operations to finance increases in Canada's international reserves include receipts from Special Drawing Rights (SDR's) issued by the International Monetary Fund and payments arising from subscriptions of capital to the International Monetary Fund, advances to the Exchange Fund and the redemption of non-interest-bearing notes payable to the International Monetary Fund. During 1971-72 net disbursements arising from these operations in the amount of $703 million include net receipts of $117 million from SDR's, a net increase of $846 million in advances to the Exchange Fund Account and net disbursements of $260 million from transactions in respect of the International Monetary Fund. In 1970-71 net disbursements were $1,317 million, $1,358 million in net advances to the Exchange Fund and a net increase of $349 million in subscriptions to the International Monetary Fund, partly offset by an increase of $271 million in non-interest-bearing notes payable to the International Monetary Fund and the issuance of $119 million of SDR's by the International Monetary Fund.

Collections of provincial income taxes in the amount of $2,138 million exceed payments to the provinces of $2,023 million. In 1970-71 collections were $1,858 million and payments were $1,946 million. Net receipts from other operations are $365 million compared with net receipts of $210 million in 1970-71.

Unmatured debt transactions

The net cash requirements of $1,773 million arising from budget transactions, operations of social security funds and other operations was met by net issues of marketable bonds, treasury bills and Canada savings bonds. In 1971-72 there was a net issue of $359 million of marketable bonds compared with $678 million in 1970-71, a net issue of $95 million in treasury bills compared with $840 million in 1970-71 and a net issue of $1,945 million in Canada savings bonds compared with $1,226 million in 1970-71. Other borrowing produced a net payment of $309 million compared with $133 million in 1970-71.

Change in cash position

A summary of all these operations is given in table 1 which shows that their net effect was to increase the bank balances of the Receiver General, including those in foreign currencies, by $317 million from $1,256 million at March 31, 1971 to $1,573 million at March 31, 1972.

Change in debt position

As a result of all operations just described, the gross public debt increased by $4,658 million to $47,633 million at March 31, 1972, net recorded assets increased by $4,058 million to $29,711 million and the net debt increased by $600 million to $17,922 million.

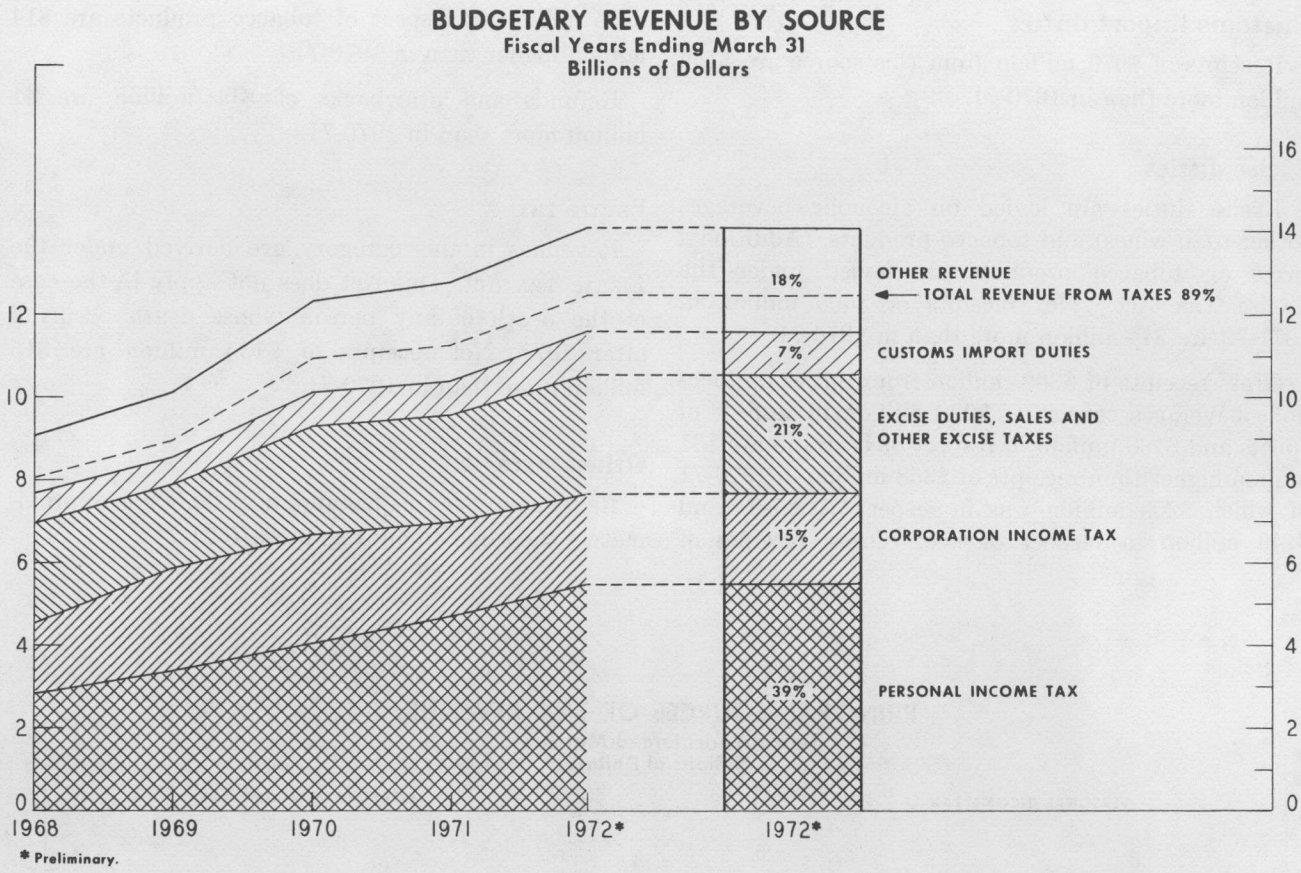
Tax Revenue

The effect of the tax changes announced in June and October was to moderate the growth in revenue which ordinarily would accompany a period of rapid growth in the economy.

The tax reform amendments which became effective January 1, 1972 had little effect on budgetary revenue in 1971-72. The old age security taxes were eliminated after 1971 but the old age security fund remains and amounts determined by reference to the previously existing old age security tax rates are credited to this fund.

Federal-provincial tax collection agreements

Under fiscal arrangements, that became operative in 1962, the federal government withdrew in part from the field of direct taxation and left the vacated area to the provinces. The federal government has entered into tax-collection agreements under which it collects the provincial personal income taxes of all provinces except Quebec and the provincial corporation income taxes of all provinces except Ontario and Quebec.



During the year collections were $2,138 million and payments to the provinces were $2,023 million.

Tax on personal incomes

As is shown in table 5, income tax is again the largest source of government budgetary revenue. The yield (excluding the old age security tax) is $5,540 million or 39 per cent of total budgetary revenue. In 1970-71 the yield was $4,697 million or 37 per cent of total revenue. The increase is due mainly to a higher level of personal incomes during the fiscal year. The tax on personal incomes credited to the old age security fund is estimated to be $1,237 million compared with $1,133 million in 1970-71.

Corporation income tax

Corporation income tax is the second largest source of budgetary revenue. The yield (excluding the old age security tax) is $2,200 million or 16 per cent of total budgetary revenue compared with $2,219 million or 17 per cent in 1970-71. The decrease of $19 million is due partly to the tax reduction passed in 1971 and partly to the exercise by corporations of their option to base tax instalments on the income of the previous year. The tax on incomes of corporations credited to the old age security fund is estimated to be $213 million compared with $208 million in 1970-71.

Taxes on dividends, interest, etc., going abroad

Revenue in this category is derived from taxes withheld from dividends, interest, rents, royalties, alimony, and income from estates and trusts paid to non-residents. Collections of $280 million in 1971-72 are $22 million more than in 1970-71.

Social development tax

This tax first took effect for the taxation year 1969 and was discontinued effective January 1, 1972 under the new income tax provisions. The tax, which was imposed on individuals, was the lesser of 2 per cent of taxable income or $120. During 1971-72 the yield is $409 million compared with $566 million in 1970-71.

Excise taxes including the sales tax total $2,395 million or 17 per cent of total budgetary revenue compared with $2,111 million or 17 per cent in 1970-71.

From a revenue standpoint the general sales tax is the most important tax levied under the Excise Tax Act. Receipts (excluding the amount credited to the old age security fund) of $2,000 million are $293 million more than in 1970-71.

The sales tax credited to the old age security fund is $670 million compared with $574 million in 1970-71.

The yield from other excise taxes is $395 million, of which $331 million is in respect of tobacco products. In 1970-71 the yield was $403 million of which $319 million was in respect of tobacco products.

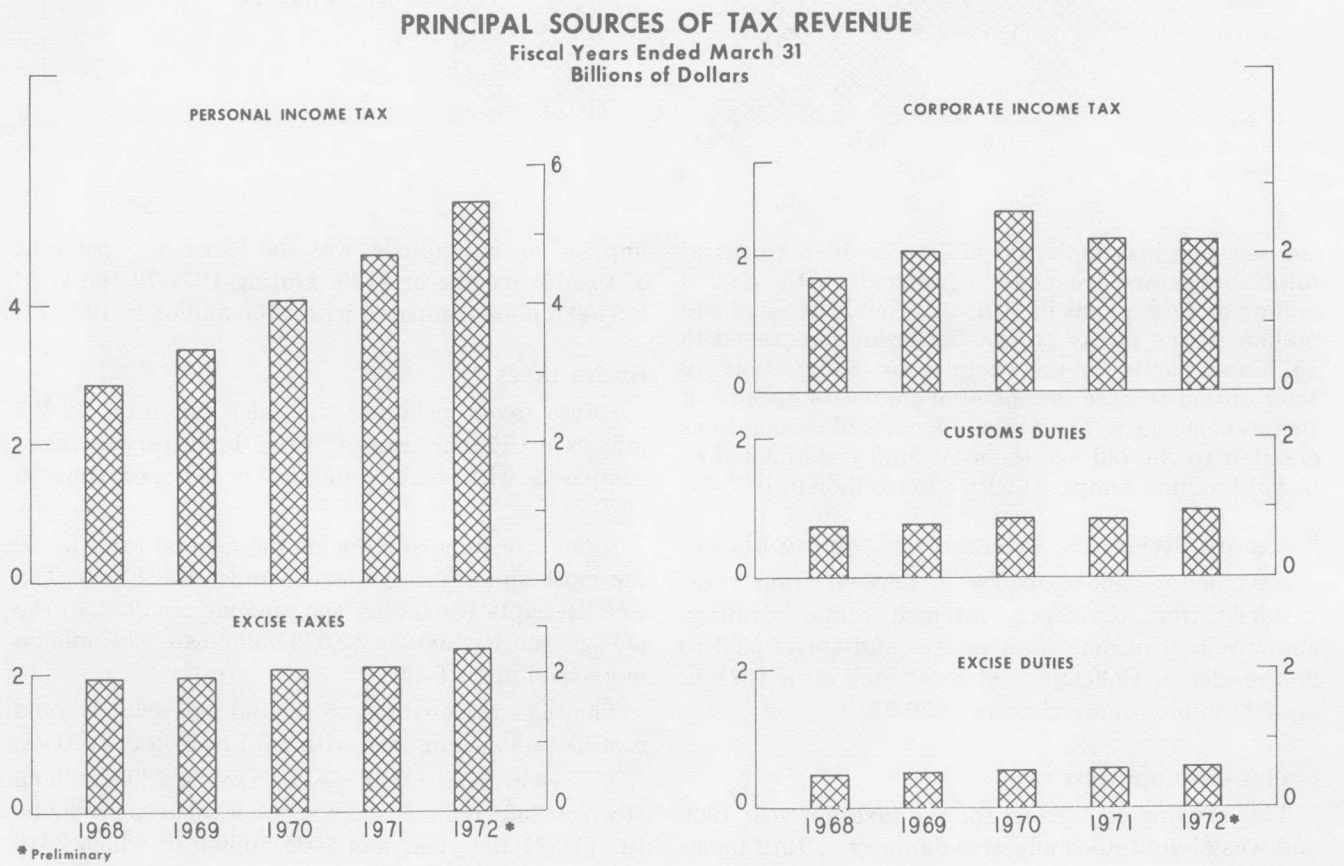
Customs import duties

Receipts of $970 million from this source are $156 million more than in 1970-71.

Excise duties

Excise duties are levied on alcoholic beverages (other than wines) and tobacco products. (Additional taxes on tobacco products are levied under the Excise Tax Act.) Net receipts of $605 million in 1971-72 are $44 million more than in 1970-71.

Gross receipts of $389 million from duties on alcoholic beverages consist of $229 million in respect of spirits and $160 million in respect of beer and are $31 million higher than receipts of $358 million in 1970-71 of which $209 million was in respect of spirits and $149 million in respect of beer. Gross receipts of $226 million in respect of tobacco products are $14 million higher than in 1970-71.



Refunds and drawbacks of $11 million are $1 million more than in 1970-71.

Estate tax

Revenues in this category are derived under the Estate Tax Act. This Act does not apply in the case of the death of any person whose death occurred after 1971. Net receipts of $135 million are $15 million more than in 1970-71.

Other taxes

Revenue under this heading of $300,000 is approximately the same amount as in 1970-71.

Non-Tax Revenue

Non-tax revenue in the amount of $1,611 million is $154 million more than in 1970-71. The main changes are increases of $95 million in return on investments and $62 million in net postal revenue.

Return on investments

These receipts amounting to $1,095 million consist of income derived from loans and advances made by the government and from investments by the government in productive or earning assets. In 1970-71 receipts were $1,000 million.

Receipts from crown corporations at $778 million are $73 million more than in 1970-71 due mainly to increases of $15 million in Bank of Canada profits paid to the government and $48 million in payments by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The yield from other loans and investments at $317 million is $21 million more than in 1970-71. The main changes are increases of $19 million in profits of the exchange fund account and $16 million in interest on Receiver General deposits with the chartered banks.

Gross receipts from Post Office operations are $483 million but authorized disbursements from revenue for salaries and rent allowances, other allowances and commissions at semi-staff and revenue offices, commissions at sub-offices, transit charges on Canadian mail forwarded through and delivered in foreign countries, etc., in the amount of $56 million and revenue credits of $27 million to expenditure result in net revenue of $400 million. In 1970-71 comparable amounts were gross receipts of $418 million, authorized disbursements of $55 million, credits of $25 million to expenditure and net revenue of $338 million.

As is shown in the section on budgetary expenditure the net costs of operating the Post Office during 1971-72 (excluding the $83 million charged to revenue) are $412 million. Given net revenue of $400 million, there is an operating deficit of $12 million. In 1970-71 net costs of $369 million and net revenue of $338 million resulted in an operating deficit of $31 million.

Public debt charges

Public debt charges consist of interest on public debt, the annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions, the cost of issuing new loans and other costs incurred in servicing the public debt. These charges in the amount of $1,995 million include interest of $1,948 million of which $1,573 million is in respect of unmatured debt and $375 million in respect of other liabilities.

The increase of $168 million mainly reflects an increase in unmatured debt.

When considering the magnitude of these public debt charges and the burden they place upon the public treasury, it must be borne in mind that a substantial portion of the debt is attributable to, or is invested in, productive or earning assets. Therefore, in calculating the net burden of the government's annual interest charges, the income derived from loans, investments and other productive assets must be taken into account. For 1971-72 this income is $1,095 million as shown in the non-tax revenue section under "return on investments". This amount deducted from the gross total of $2,075 million as shown in table 19 leaves a net amount of $980 million compared with a net of $878 million in 1970-71. Measured as a percentage of net debt, the burden of the net annual interest charges is 5.46 per cent in 1971-72 compared with 5.06 per cent in 1970-71. As a percentage of the gross national product for the calendar year ending within the fiscal year, the relative burden is 1.06 per cent compared with 1.04 per cent in 1970-71.

Payments of $1,128 million under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act are $141 million higher than in 1970-71.

Payments of $273 million under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act to the Province of Quebec are in respect of compensation to that province for its opting out of the following programs: hospital insurance and diagnostic services, old age assistance, disabled persons allowances, blind persons allowances, unemployment assistance, and the Canada Assistance Plan; and, in part, the general health grants program. Payments were $213 million in 1970-71.

Subsidies to provinces payable under the British North America Acts and other statutory authority are $34 million, $2 million more than in 1970-71.

The transfer of certain public utility tax receipts in the amount of $25 million are $1 million more than in 1970-71 and represent the transferable portion of income tax received from corporations whose main business is the distribution to, or generation for distribution to, the public of electrical energy, gas and steam.

The Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act, 1964, provides that where, in any fiscal year commencing on or after April 1, 1964, the federal savings in respect of a province providing schooling exceeds the federal revenue abatement in respect of that province for the taxation year ending in that fiscal year, the Minister of Finance may, out of the consolidated revenue fund, pay to that province in respect of that fiscal year an amount equal to the excess and where for a taxation year ending in any fiscal year commencing on or after April 1, 1964 the federal revenue abatement in respect of a province providing schooling allowances exceeds the federal savings in that fiscal year in respect of that province, the amount of the excess may be deducted from any payment to that province under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act or under any subsequent Act of the Parliament of Canada substituted therefore, or may be otherwise recovered as a debt due to Canada by that province. The abatement for the taxation year 1971 and the revised abatement for the taxation year 1970 in respect of the Province of Quebec exceeded the federal savings by $32 million which has been recovered from payments to that province under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act. In 1970-71 the abatement for the taxation year 1970 exceeded the federal savings by $28 million and was recovered.

National Health and Welfare

Expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare including those of the Medical Research Council are $2,714 million compared with $2,338 million in 1970-71. In 1971-72 expenditures in respect of air pollution and the public health engineering division were transferred from this department to the Department of Environment; 1970-71 figures have been adjusted for comparative purposes.

Outlays for welfare services are $1,105 million compared with $1,031 million in 1970-71; for health insurance and resources $1,482 million compared with $1,193 million; for medical services $47 million compared with $45 million; and for the Medical Research Council $35 million compared with $34 million.

Family allowances, family assistance and youth allowances

These expenditures total $617 million of which $555 million is family allowances, $60 million is youth allowances and $2 million is family assistance. In 1970-71 the total was $619 million of which $558 million was family allowances, $58 million was youth allowances and $3 million was family assistance.

Family allowances are payable in respect of all children under 16 years of age, resident in Canada, with minor exceptions such as children of immigrants who must reside in Canada one year before family allowance is payable. The monthly allowance is $6 if the child is under 10 years of age and $8 in the age group 10 to 15.

Family assistance is payable at the same rates on behalf of children of immigrants and settlers during their first year of residence in Canada.

Youth allowances are payable at the rate of $10 per month in respect of persons resident in Canada who have attained the age of 16 years and have not attained the age of 18 years and who are in full-time attendance at a school or university or are by reasons of mental or physical infirmity precluded from attending school or university. No payments were made in respect of persons resident in the Province of Quebec. However, under authority of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act, abatements in federal income tax otherwise payable by individuals resident in that province were allowed in compensation of the fact that the payment of youth allowances had been assumed by the province and to allow for the imposition of the required provincial income taxes.

Canada Assistance Plan

Payments to the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan are $462 million compared with $392 million in 1970-71. The Canada Assistance Plan Act which was enacted in 1966 authorizes the federal government to enter into agreements with the provinces for sharing the costs of assistance and welfare services provided by the provinces, territories and municipalities to persons in need. The rate of the federal contribution is 50 per cent of the shareable costs; the rates of assistance granted and the specific conditions of eligibility applied are determined by the provinces and their municipalities and take into account the budgetary requirements as well as the income and resources of the applicants. Contributions under this plan have replaced certain contributions which formerly had been made under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Disabled Persons Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Unemployment Assistance Act. Under a federal-provincial agreement the Province of Quebec has opted out of a major portion of this program.

Old Age Security Fund

The Old Age Security Act, 1951, directed that this fund be established and that credits to the fund should consist of a 2 per cent sales tax, a 2 per cent (maximum tax $60) on individual incomes and a 2 per cent tax on corporation incomes, and that pension payments of $40 per month be paid to all eligible persons over 70 years of age. Payments were effective from January 1952.

Amendments to the Act have increased these tax rates: on individual incomes to 4 per cent effective January 1, 1964 (maximum tax $120 increased to $240 effective January 1, 1967); on corporation incomes to 3 per cent effective January 1, 1959; and on sales to 3 per cent effective April 10, 1959.

The Old Age Security Act was amended effective January 1, 1972 to provide for the repeal of these taxes and for the crediting to the fund of an amount estimated to be equal to what would have been credited to the fund had those taxes not been repealed.

Pension rates also have increased by amendments to the Act to $75 per month effective October 1, 1963, to $76.50 per month effective January 1, 1968, to $78 per month effective January 1, 1969, to $79.58 effective January 1, 1970, and to $80 effective January 1, 1971.

The Act was further amended to authorize pension payments effective January 1966 to all persons who had satisfied the residence requirements of the Act who had attained the age of 69 years on or before January 1, 1966; the age limit being reduced by one year on January 1st of each subsequent year until 1970. A further amendment in 1966-67 authorized the payment of a montly guaranteed income supplement to eligible pensioners. The amount of the supplement that may be paid to a pensioner for a month is 40 per cent of the amount of the pension that may be paid to him for that month dependent upon the amount of his income for the preceding year. The most recent amendment in 1970 fixed the maximum basic supplement at $55 per month for 1971 but provided that this maximum would be increased each year so that the combination of the universal payment of $80 and the supplement would be increased by the same percentage as the index under the Canada Pension Plan.

During 1971-72 pension payments of $2,206 million exceed receipts of $2,120 million by $86 million reducing the balance in the account to $642 million at March 31, 1972. Receipts consist of $670 million from sales tax, $1,237 million from the tax on personal incomes and $213 million from the tax on corporation income. In 1970-71 receipts of $1,914 million exceeded payments of $1,907 million.

THE CASH POSITION OF THE GOVERNMENT

The government's cash account represents balances of current and special deposits to the credit of the Receiver General for Canada in the Bank of Canada, chartered banks in Canada and certain banks in London, New York, Brussels, Bonn, Frankfurt and Rome.

The cash position of the government is affected not only by budgetary transactions but also by changes in the government's unmatured debt and other non-budgetary transactions. Non-budgetary transactions are those which affect the government's asset and liability accounts and must be taken into account when considering the full scope of the government's financial operations.

On the asset side, the non-budgetary transactions consist, for the most part, of loans and advances to, and repayment by crown corporations and other government agencies and funds, national, provincial and municipal governments, international organizations and other borrowers. On the liability side they relate mainly to receipts and payments in connection with the many deposit and trust accounts, and annuity, insurance and pension funds held or administered by the government.

The following statement summarizes both the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions in 1971-72 and indicates how they affected the government's cash position. For purposes of comparison the corresponding figures for 1970-71 are also shown.

In 1971-72 an estimated deficit of $600 million in budgetary transactions and an estimated net requirement of $1,173 million for non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions) will result in an overall requirement of $1,773 million. As transactions in unmatured debt during the fiscal year are expected to result in an increase of $2,090 million in outstanding unmatured debt, Receiver General bank balances will increase by $317 million. In 1970-71 the budgetary deficit of $379 million and net requirements of $1,809 million for non-budgetary purposes resulted in an overall requirement of $2,188 million. As there was an increase of $2,611 million in outstanding unmatured debt, Receiver General bank balances rose by $423 million.

The implication of the level of cash balances at any given time can be misinterpreted because of their wide fluctuations throughout the year, as is illustrated in the following table. Furthermore, because many cheques are issued at the end of a month and are not redeemed until the first few days of the following month whereas the largest percentage of receipts are not received until later, cash balances may drop in the early days of each month by as much as $125 million to $300 million.

Gross debt, net recorded assets and net debt

The gross debt of Canada, or the total of liabilities as recorded on the statement of assets and liabilities, is estimated to be $47,633 million at March 31, 1972, an increase of $4,658 million over the total at March 31, 1971. The main changes are increases of $2,094 million in unmatured debt and $1,722 million in annuity, insurance and pension accounts. Unmatured debt at $27,295 million represents 58 per cent and annuity, insurance and pension accounts at $15,525 million represents 33 per cent of the total. At March 31, 1971 unmatured debt at $25,201 million was 59 per cent and annuity, insurance and pension accounts at $13,803 million were 32 per cent of total liabilities.

The government's net recorded assets are estimated to be $29,711 million at March 31, 1972, an increase of $4,058 million over the total at March 31, 1971. The main changes are increases of $1,762 million in advances, loans and investments, $910 million in the Canada Pension Plan investment fund and $955 million in foreign exchange reserve accounts. Advances, loans and investments at $15,660 million represent 54 per cent, foreign exchange reserve accounts at $6,683 million represents 22 per cent and the Canada Pension Plan investment fund at $4,611 million represents 15 per cent of the total. At March 31, 1971 advances, loans and investments at $13,898 million were 54 per cent, foreign exchange reserve accounts at $5,727 million were 22 per cent and the Canada Pension Plan investment fund at $3,701 million was 14 per cent of the total.

Based on the above figures the net debt of Canada will be $17,922 million at March 31, 1972 compared with $17,322 million at March 31, 1971. The increase of $600 million is equivalent to the 1971-72 estimated deficit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 9, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

On the order: Motions.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought that perhaps the government might have considered making a statement on motions about the serious situation in southeast Asia. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether that is the intention of the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend giving an undertaking to make a statement at this point. It is possible we will want to make one, but at this stage we are trying to get more knowledge of the facts and a better feeling of the situation.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DETERMINATION OF PAYMENT FOR WHEAT—EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO FLAXSEED, RYE AND RAPESEED

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

April 27, 1972—The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act."

Mr. MacEachen: May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker? With respect to this bill of which notice is given, there have been discussions among the House leaders and because this is the same bill as was reported out of committee last session it is understood that when and if it is given first reading it will be moved forward to the report stage on the understanding that hon. members will be able to move amendments in the usual way and will not be confined to the amendments that were moved in the last session. If the House is of a mind to do so, I should like to have an order which would put this bill at the report stage, where it stood at the prorogation of the last session, on the understanding that hon. members might move amendments either as in the former session or new report stage amendments.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered. Is it the intention that we now proceed with first reading of this bill on the basis of the order of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-204, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the order made a few moments ago this bill stands for consideration at the report stage.

CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING YOUNG OFFENDERS WITH ONE CONVICTION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-205, to amend the Criminal Records Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rynard: This bill is aimed particularly at those young offenders who have been convicted once of an offence such as the possession of marijuana or driving while impaired and who go on to lead useful lives but whose progress is marred by having a criminal record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ESCALATION OF VIET NAM WAR

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the dangerous escalation of the war in Viet Nam, ordered by the President of the United States, which poses a serious threat to world peace.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has given the Chair due notice of his intention to request leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing what he has termed "the dangerous escalation of the war in Viet Nam".

It is unnecessary for the Chair to emphasize the gravity of the situation to which allusion has been made. The Chair is confronted with a very difficult procedural question in deciding whether or not Standing Order 26 provides a suitable vehicle on which to stage a debate of this nature at the present time. This is not to ignore recent developments in that area of the world, but the broad question of the struggle in Viet Nam will be recognized by all hon. members as being one of a continuing nature. In that regard the Chair need only point out that a debate under the provisions of Standing Order 26 was held on May 1, 1970, on the basis of the "widening of the war in southeast Asia" and, in particular, "to seek ways and means of avoiding further escalation of the war and of promoting effective international action to bring peace to the area." Those words were used in support of the motion on that occasion.

Hon. members are aware that there can be only one debate about a given situation in the course of a session under the provisions of subsection 16(d) of Standing Order 26. Hon. members will ask themselves whether, in a developing and changing situation, the point has been reached where the provisions of the Standing Order should be invoked for the purpose of the adjournment of the House. It may well be that hon. members would find it more practical or useful to have such a debate later on.

Because of the uncertainty of the whole situation, it seems that the interests of the House would be better served if the Chair were not to put the motion today. It might well be that hon. members, either by mutual agreement or under the terms of Standing Order 26, might want to have such a debate later on as the situation clarifies. The hon. member for York South or other hon. members may want later on to invoke the provisions of the Standing Order. If that were done, the House may be assured that the motion will be considered very carefully in light of all the circumstances at the time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT GOAL IN LIGHT OF BUDGET FORECAST OF REAL RATE OF GROWTH OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the budget he presented to the House last evening. Presuming the real rate of growth of the gross national product that the minister is forecasting, according to the Economic Council of Canada we are two or three years away from getting unemployment down to a rate of around 4 per cent. I should like to ask the minister whether the government accepts this as a satisfactory goal in view of the minister's priority of fighting unemployment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not refer to the Economic council report at all last night. I said when I first assumed this portfolio that my goal was a job for every Canadian, and I do not accept any statistical measurement.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the unemployed exist, whether the minister wants to recognize it or not. I should like to ask the minister whether, in view of the Economic Council's studies and other forecasts made by the University of Toronto forecasting body indicating prolonged unsatisfactory levels of unemployment, which the minister has pledged himself to fight against, he is able to refute these predictions by the Economic Council of Canada by any government forecast relating to unemployment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was as specific as I thought I should be and as frank as I thought I should be to the House last night about forecasts and the state of the art of economic statistics. I have nothing further to add to what I said rather fulsomely, I thought, last night.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I take it from that that the minister does not dispute the forecasts of the Economic Council of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Stanfield: In the minister's budgetary statement he also announced his reversal of policy in accepting the principle of an automatic real cost of living escalator in relation to the basic old age pension. I should like to ask the minister why this principle was not extended to cover the real increase in the cost of living since the principle last applied, rather than adopting simply a token gesture of increasing the basic old age pension by the amount of $2.88 per month?

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will not prevent the Minister of Finance from replying to the question, but I hope we do not get involved in the budget debate during the question period. I think this kind of question, which is relevant and important, could be asked by many members and that would take the whole 40 minutes, but I wonder whether that is the intention of hon. members. This having been said, the minister might reply briefly to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he can give us some prognosis of the level of unemployment we can expect throughout 1972 or, perhaps more specifically, when we can expect to achieve that glamorous goal of a job for every Canadian that he announced some time ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, too, sounds like debate. The minister appears to be anxious to reply to these questions, but I suggest we should not have the budget debate before we get to it. If the minister wants to reply to these questions it is not my intention to prevent him from doing so, but I do not think we should get involved in a debate during the question period.

PENSION ESCALATION ANNOUNCED IN BUDGET—INQUIRY AS TO SIMILAR ACTION FOR RETIRED PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked a moment ago by the Leader of the Opposition. I should like to direct it to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that old age and veterans pensions are now to be escalated in accordance with the actual rise in the cost of living, will the President of the Treasury Board be bringing down legislation to provide the same condition in respect of pensions of retired public servants and others who come under federal jurisdiction?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is asking whether we are bringing down the same legislation the answer is no. He probably is aware of the arrangements under which superannuates' pensions are escalated. Contributions to such pensions are made by the employer, the government, and the present employees and before we can alter the present arrangement it is quite apparent that consultation with the employees' representatives would have to take place.

PENSION ESCALATION ANNOUNCED IN BUDGET—SIMILAR ACTION REGARDING RAILWAY PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question in the same area I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport. Now that other pensions are being put on an escalation basis that is related to the actual cost of living, what is the Minister of Transport doing with regard to railway pensions, both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on the matter of Canadian National pensions, even before my colleague the Minister of Finance brought down his budget last night I had held discussions with Canadian National. These have been progressing over a matter of several weeks now. The president of Canadian National is at present out of the country but expects to be back on the 15th. I believe he will have some proposals for me at that time.

As for the CPR, as I have indicated on previous occasions I have conveyed to them the representations of the hon. member and others, but from a legal point of view we have no power, of course, to require the Canadian Pacific to do anything.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are three or four members seeking to ask supplementary questions. We must try to make some headway. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for one supplementary question, then the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate for a supplementary to his question, and then we will go to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if this has to be my last supplementary question in this area today, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether he will again approach the Canadian Pacific in view of the fact that last week excessive profits were announced by that company? Surely these could be used to improve the pensions of those who made these profits possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is in the form of a representation, of course.

INTENTION OF BUDGET WITH RESPECT TO UNEMPLOYMENT LEVEL

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might rephrase my earlier question to the Minister of Finance. In view of his undertaking several days ago to indicate some of his expectations in his budget in so far as employment is concerned, will he very briefly indicate to the House whether his budget is aimed at keeping unemployment at the 6 per cent level or can we expect a substantial reduction? I ask this in view of the fact that obviously his budget would have to be based on some knowledge of what his expectations may be.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even as rephrased I suggest the question is not in order. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Speaker: I have to apologize to the hon. member. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am simply asking the minister to give us some indication of what his budget will do in terms of the unemployment level, whether it will bring it down or keep it at the same level. I suggest that this question is very much along the line—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

SUGGESTED INTERRUPTION OF BUDGET DEBATE TO IMPLEMENT PENSION CHANGES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the government give consideration to interrupting the budget debate so that it may immediately introduce legislation dealing with the proposed changes in respect of old age, veterans, blind and disabled pensions outlined last night so that these changes proposed by the government, though inadequate, may be dealt with immediately and not delayed until—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that the question as asked is debate, but perhaps the minister again might be allowed to reply to some of the questions asked in the last few minutes.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The hon. member surprises me. That is a very good idea.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM WAR—PRIOR NOTICE TO CANADA OF PRESIDENT NIXON'S INTENTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I appreciate that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not scheduled to be here today, but in view of the serious situation in Southeast Asia I am sure the Prime Minister appreciated that questions might be asked of him. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian government was informed of the intention of the President of the United States to escalate the war in Viet Nam before he made his statement last night, or was that not the case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing to the use of the word "escalate" by the hon. member, which would lead us into a debate, I am sure he would agree that that can be interpreted in various ways and I do not suppose there is any more reason to talk of an escalation by the President than by North Viet Nam when it sent 12 divisions into the South.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: On the substance of the question, the answer is that the United States government did inform our embassy very slightly prior to the announcement by the President last night.

Mr. Lewis: I gather from the wording of the Prime Minister's answer, Mr. Speaker, that it is the position of the Canadian government that the announcement of the President of the United States of the intention to mine harbours in North Viet Nam is not a matter which distresses the government or against which the government is intending to protest?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member wants to gather that, he is not making the right assumption because I said that if we had any position to take we would consider making it known either through the Secretary of State for External Affairs or myself. What he can gather is that I think it is rather unusual to talk about an escalation by only one side when, I repeat, 12 divisions from the North invaded the South when this action was taken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: It is always easier, Mr. Speaker, for a minister—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Lewis: Just hold your horses, if you have brains enough to do it.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

• (1430)

Mr. Lewis: It is always easier for the Prime Minister to debate in giving an answer than it is for me when I ask a question. I wish to ask the Prime Minister finally whether he can give the House any assurance regarding a statement being made on behalf of the government some time this week before what has now happened in Viet Nam escalates into a world war or brings us to the brink of a world war?

Mr. Trudeau: I can only repeat my earlier answers on the possibility of a statement. I am willing to be helpful and to answer questions if the hon. member wants me to put on record statements which the government has previously made regarding the horrors of this war—

Mr. Lewis: It is a new situation.

Mr. Trudeau: —and the desirability of ending it by negotiation rather than by military force. This has been the position of the government and it is well known. I submit even that it is probably in the interests of the three main powers involved in Viet Nam to terminate this war by negotiation rather than by the horrors of war. I think the President's action does not necessarily contradict this reality.

VIET NAM WAR— REPRESENTATIONS TO SOVIET UNION RESPECTING AGGRESSION BY NORTH VIET NAM

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether he intends to make representations to the government of the Soviet Union, asking them to urge North Viet Nam to put an end to the communist aggression against South Viet Nam.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suspect that President Nixon himself will make such representations to the Soviet government. With regard to the position of the Canadian government, we entertain good relations with the Soviet Union, the United States and the People's Republic of China and, should those countries feel a need for our views, Canada will always be ready to offer advice and, if required, to serve as an intermediary.

VIET NAM WAR—SUGGESTED RECONVENING OF GENEVA CONFERENCE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the grave threat to world peace inherent in the situation in Viet Nam, would the government consider seeking to have the Geneva conference reconvened thus leading to a ceasefire and a mutual exchange of prisoners between the two sides?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I just said in answer to the hon. member for Charlevoix, the Canadian government's position of being on good relations with the three main powers involved is well known. I do not think that at this stage a suggestion such as that made by the hon. member would be constructive. Indeed, I do not think it would result in anything precise until we know whether the President of the United States will go to the meeting in Moscow, as he is scheduled to do, and what type of exchange will take place there. In other words, it is less than two weeks before that meeting is to take place, and I suggest that if this kind of idea is to be discussed at all it would be better to discuss it at that level than in this House or through any representations of this government.

VIET NAM WAR—SUGGESTED RAISING OF SITUATION IN UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My supplementary question is for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the severity of the situation I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he would consider approaching the parties concerned and having them raise the question in the Security Council of the United Nations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat the answer I gave to the hon. member for Charlevoix.

VIET NAM WAR—INSTRUCTIONS TO CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE ON INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION—ASSISTANCE TO CANADIANS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is with respect to Canada's participation on the International Control Commission. Can the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether the government has instructed our representative to take any particular action in view of the drastically changed circumstances in Viet Nam, and can he indicate the nature of those instructions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of any such instructions, but I will gladly refer the question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): With regard to other Canadians working in aid projects in Viet Nam and the likelihood that these will be disrupted and perhaps be stopped altogether, can the Prime Minister indicate whether or not CIDA or the Department of External Affairs has been in contact with our people in Viet Nam to obtain an appreciation of their situation and any changes they may have to make?

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member is referring to their physical security, I believe arrangements have been made through the British embassy to ensure that any evacuation of Canadian personnel will be looked after with the help of the British embassy in Saigon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will attempt to return to this subject later. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF DEFICIT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance?

It was announced in the budget speech last night that the deficit would amount to one billion dollars, and this deficit of course will require borrowing money to finance it.

Is the minister in a position to indicate if this money will be raised in the United States, if the government will float bond issues in Canada or if it will secure an interest-free loan from the Bank of Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): There will be many procedures to follow, Mr. Speaker.

PAYMENT OF NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Finance indicate why it was not specified in the budget speech last night how the government intends to act in order to settle the national debt? Does it propose to forget about it, to pay it up or to let it grow for ever?

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

It would appear that every time ministers or the Prime Minister are asked questions of a financial nature, it is difficult to obtain an answer. Would it be because ministers are incompetent and do not understand a thing about financial matters? At any rate, we seldom get an answer.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member for Témiscamingue is not expecting me to answer this question from a procedural viewpoint.

[English]

MEASURES TO PROVIDE INCENTIVES FOR INVESTMENT BY CANADIANS IN COUNTRY'S INDUSTRIES AND BUSINESSES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that last week the government disclosed its limited policy with regard to foreign investment in Canada and since there was no mention of that matter in last night's budget, would the minister advise the House whether it is the government's intention to introduce other measures which will afford positive incentives to Canadians to invest in their own industries and businesses in Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite familiar with the income tax legislation in this country. He is aware of such incentives as the dividend tax credit, small business incentives, pension fund investments, the deduction of interest by one company to buy another Canadian corporation, and the incentives under the Canada Development Corporation. I could name a number of other incentives provided to Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Notwithstanding all those points which have existed for a year or more and have had no effect, may I ask the minister whether he has any further positive measures to introduce so we will get a meaningful operation with regard to Canadian investment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think I can say that at this stage Canadians should explore the wealth of incentives that are already available to them to invest in Canadian resources and industries.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope we will try to make some headway. There are literally dozens of members seeking to ask questions, and we will be running short of time. I hope we can limit supplementary questions so as to give more members the opportunity to ask their questions.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF BUDGET BILLS TO ENCOURAGE INVESTMENT IN CANADIAN EQUITY SECURITIES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Is the minister giving consideration to bringing in appropriate amendments to the budget bills when they appear so that it at least will not be disadvantageous for Canadians, as it is at present, to invest their money in Canadian equity securities compared with United States equity securities?

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This appears to be debate. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED LINKING OF KOOTENAY AND ELK RAILWAY TO U.S. LINE—REQUEST FOR ACTION SO THAT CANADIANS WILL NOT LOSE JOBS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of the Kootenay and Elk Railway Company and Burlington Northern, Incorporated versus the CPR et al, which reversed the Canadian Transport Commission's decision. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall wrote a dissenting judgment. Nevertheless, there is no question that his summary of what took place is the correct one, namely:

> The whole scheme would appear ... to be the classic case of a foreign conglomerate in concert with related Canadian companies so manipulating the enterprise that the export of Canadian jobs would be the result.

In view of that fact, which is borne out by the evidence and as the number of jobs for Canadians involved is very large with two million tons of coal a year going to be exported to Japan, in order to assure that these jobs shall not be exported would the minister bring in a measure to assure that this shall not be the consequence of that judgment?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question in part just a few days ago. As to the objective of ensuring that as many jobs as possible are retained for Canadians, and the appropriate legislative route to do that, I am looking into that issue separate from the Supreme Court Judgment because, as I understand it, further actions will probably be taken in the courts or before the Commission on that particular application. As to the basic question of protecting the jobs of Canadians in this way, I repeat that I am looking into it to see how it can be done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now that the matter has been under consideration for at least ten days, is the government now in a position to bring before the House very simple legislation to cover the decision of the Transport Commission and make it binding regardless of what the Supreme Court of Canada decided in reversing the decision of the Transport Commission?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, without wishing in the least to become argumentative with the right hon. member, I think he would agree that justice should take its course in terms of the various appeals and the like that are possible on this matter without our anticipating decisions of either the commission or the court.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no appeal.

PROPOSED LINKING OF KOOTENAY AND ELK RAILWAY TO U.S. LINE—ASSESSMENTS OF SUPREME COURT DECISION

Mr. Douglas Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. On May 2 the minister indicated to the House that he had two conflicting assessments of what was meant by the recent Supreme Court of Canada decision affecting the Kootenay and Elk Railway. May I now ask the minister what these two different assessments were and whether or not at this point the conflict still exists?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information in complete detail. I will try to answer the hon. member tomorrow and also to send him, or any other member interested, a written summary of the sequence of events.

INDUSTRY

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—POSSIBLE EXEMPTION FROM CUSTOMS DUTIES FOR CERTAIN IMPORTS—EXTENSION TO OTHER COMPANIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of one I put to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce last Friday and one that the hon. member for Regina East put to the Minister of Finance yesterday concerning the duty free remission rights that were being granted to the Michelin Tire Company in Nova Scotia. Yesterday the minister said on the one hand that the government had not authorized any duty free entry of certain types or certain sizes of tires for the Michelin Company and then he went on to say that the decision had not yet been reached as to when such a remission would come into effect. Would the minister clarify this? Is it a matter of time for the remission to be implemented, or the right to import duty free to be implemented, or has the government decided not to make such a concession to the Michelin Tire Company?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I would interpret it primarily as a matter of time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: If it is a matter of time, can the minister inform the House whether other tire companies in Canada located in Ontario and Quebec are going to be granted the same right to import tires produced in other countries duty free?

Mr.Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I cannot answer that question at this time, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

ALLEGED LACK OF BUDGETARY PROVISION FOR ANTICIPATED SHORTFALL IN UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister explain to the House why no budgetary provision was made for the anticipated shortfall in the unemployment insurance fund due to the excessive unemployment when it will be necessary for the government to make up that shortfall from the consolidated revenue fund?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, even on the basis of the premise of the hon. gentleman's question there are sufficient funds.

Mr. Hellyer: Is it not a fact that due to unemployment the shortfall above the statutory limit will be as high as perhaps $500 million and that this amount will have to be met out of the consolidated revenue fund during the coming year?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this again is debate. This is the kind of consideration that hon. members will want to take into account during the debate on the budget.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—GRANTS PAID TO DAY-CARE CENTRES—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the government is indirectly subsidizing day-care centres through LIP, especially in the province of Quebec, would the minister tell the House whether there has been discussions between himself and Quebec minister Castonguay on this subject?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of permanent day-care centres would fall partly under provincial jurisdiction, and the type of continuous dialogue the hon. member has suggested would take place between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and his counterparts in the various provinces.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF MAKING DAY-CARE CENTRES PERMANENT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister to explain what he meant when he said he would try to find ways of making the day-care centres under the Local Initiatives Program permanent? What is his program for doing that?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we intend to retain the criteria that were established when the Local Initiatives Program first came into being some months ago for those projects that involve day-care centres. This means that ongoing programs as of the first of June would include those day-care centres that can bear the scrutiny and examination we are now giving them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. At this point I have to appeal to hon. members. We have just about ten minutes remaining before the end of the question period. A number of hon. members are seeking an opportunity to ask questions. I will make an effort to see as many of them as possible, but for this purpose the Chair will need the co-operation of hon. members in limiting their supplementaries.

Mrs. MacInnis: According to what the minister has just said, is he planning to make the day-care centres permanent for only four more months, which I understand is the duration of the Local Initiatives Program?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. lady is suggesting that because it is impossible for me to extend them beyond the four months without the consent of all the provinces we should not extend them at all?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is debate.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mrs. MacInnis: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I do not want the minister to get me wrong in any way. He knows I am interested in finding out what his program is to make day-care centres permanent. Again I ask him, does he intend to provide funding for day-care centres beyond the next four months of the Local Initiatives Program?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the hon. lady has devoted more time than anyone I know, and I say this sincerely, to getting such a program implemented, and she ought to know that when such a program becomes a permanent feature of Canadian life the announcement will be made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

POST OFFICE

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS—PRESENTATION OF FORMAL OFFER BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Can he inform the House whether the government has yet made a formal offer on wages and job security in the talks with the postal unions?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the Postmaster General addressed himself to this question last week. I would repeat again that it is at the express request of the Council of Postal Unions that the detailed progress of the negotiations has not been published.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the government going to ask the Minister of Labour to offer his special mediators to help prepare a new contract with the postal unions before the situation deteriorates into an impasse?

• (1450)

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, all services of which we can avail ourselves will be used to prevent an impasse occurring.

EXAMINATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING RIGHT OF EMPLOYEES TO PARTICIPATE IN POLITICS

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Is the minister examining the recommendations of the first report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts on the Ann Booth case concerning the rights of civil servants to participate in political affairs?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather difficult question and I have instructed the Treasury Board staff to make a review of what is done in this respect in other jurisdictions to see what can be done to clarify the situation.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON—SUGGESTED BOYCOTT OF DANISH GOODS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can he advise whether he has yet had time to evaluate the efficacy of his call for a domestic boycott of Danish goods? Also is he in a position to indicate the response of the Danish government to this retaliatory move?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any comment.

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRAMS TO IMPROVE PRODUCTIVITY AND INCREASE INCOMES OF FISHERMEN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Since neither the announced fast write-off of two years on machinery and equipment nor the reduction to 40 per cent in the top rate of corporate tax on manufacturing and processing income applies directly to our fishermen, would the minister indicate what new programs he plans to implement to improve productivity and to raise the incomes of our fishermen, as stated in his budget speech?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that such a general statement ought to be made on motions. If the minister wants to indicate whether he plans to make this kind of statement on motions, the question will be allowed on that basis.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, would the minister make a statement on motions clarifying his position on this matter?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made a speech last night, but I will be glad to see what I can do to clarify the situation for the hon. member.

TAXATION

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TO ASSIST AGRICULTURE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Can he tell the House and the country, as he has a group studying taxation as it applies to agriculture, that this group is not sterile of ideas and that he will be coming forward with a budgetary statement soon which will be of benefit to the agricultural industry?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the committee under the chairmanship of my friend, the Minister of State from Calgary, is as fertile in ideas as is the hon. member.

Mr. Horner: The budget would not appear to be so fertile in ideas.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: What does the government have against the farmer?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONCESSIONS TO CORPORATIONS IN BUDGET INTENDED TO CREATE JOBS—MONITORING AGENCY TO CHECK HOW ADDED INCOME IS USED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I always seem to rise when there is commotion. May I ask the Minister of Finance a question arising out of the tax concessions to corporations which he announced last night and which he said he intended should be used for the creation of jobs. Does the minister intend to set up any kind of monitoring agency in order to watch over the way in which the added income from these concessions is used by companies, to see whether the income will actually be used to create jobs or whether it will merely be an addition to company profits? Is he setting up any machinery to monitor that very important situation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the confidence I have placed in the manufacturing industries will be borne out to the satisfaction of both the hon. member and myself. We will monitor this together, and I think we are capable of doing it.

Mr. Lewis: In view of what the minister said, would he tell the House whether actual corporate profits, which have risen substantially in the first quarter of this year in some cases, MacMillan Bloedel by 550 per cent, and Imperial Oil by 35 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of asking a question. It seems to me we are anticipating the budget debate, and many hon. members are seeking an opportunity to ask questions.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that and the list is rather lengthy. May I therefore ask the minister whether he is going to watch particularly these corporations with these large profits since the increase in profits in the case of many of these corporations was accompanied by an actual reduction in the work force and in some cases by the shutting of plants, that being the historical experience—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. I suggest to hon. members that questions taking two or three minutes are perhaps a little too long. I suggest that very respectfully. The minister might attempt to reply briefly.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman can make these points, if he wants to make them, when he responds to the budget address. I will certainly arrange for a gentleman from our side to reply with the facts.

Mr. Lewis: That is what we want—facts.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—POSSIBILITY OF EARLIER APPLICATIONS FOR CONSTRUCTION FROM TRANSMISSION COMPANIES

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the statement by the Prime Minister in Edmonton ten days ago that the cost of the proposed Arctic highway would be recovered through levies upon oil companies operating in the Arctic, is the minister reconsidering his statement to the House of April 25 in such a way that the government would call for submissions or applications from pipeline transmission companies for the construction of a Mackenzie Valley pipeline? I mention this with a certain sense of urgency because there is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked his question.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the Prime Minister did not say that and I have not changed the policy statement I indicated earlier.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond rising on a supplementary?

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

RECENT APPOINTMENT OF SCOTSMAN TO JOB IN CAPE BRETON—SUGGESTED REPLACEMENT BY CANADIAN

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is not actually a supplementary; it is a bootlegged supplementary but it does deal with applications. May I ask the minister if he has had an opportunity to examine the practice followed by AECL in dealing with applications for jobs in Cape Breton?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, yes, I have. I understand that AECL approached two Cape Bretoners with respect to filling the position, but they turned AECL down; other public relations and media people were approached without success; that, because of the urgency involved in filling the position it was decided to go ahead and hire this particular young man who had shown knowledge of the industry and particular ability. So the situation had been canvassed in Cape Breton before he was hired. When these approaches were not accepted it was decided to go ahead with the hiring of this young man.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, apparently the minister has been misinformed by the authorities. I have a letter in my possession which outlines quite clearly that this man has not been on the job long enough for his qualifications to be assessed. Without question, he was taken on without experience. This leads to another question which the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration should probably deal with. How can they bring a man in from Scotland without giving him some kind of status under the immigration laws? It is all a pack of lies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to advise hon. members that we have reached the end of the question period. I wish to remind hon. members that we should from day to day make every effort, by mutual consent and agreement, to limit the number of supplementaries asked. I know that in theory we might spend the whole question period on the same subject. Many of these matters are very important and would justify our spending a full question period on them. However, when questions are two or three minutes long, as some are, hon. members are deprived of opportunities to ask questions. If hon. members will examine the questions the next day as they appear in Hansard, they will see that many look more like speeches than questions. This applies also to replies made by ministers, which I feel are often too long. This, I suggest, deprives hon. members of an opportunity to ask questions which are important.

I have noted a number of hon. members in the third, fourth and fifth rows who have not had an opportunity to ask their questions. I will honestly try to make every effort tomorrow to give them an opportunity to ask their questions, and I apologize to them for not being able to reach them despite my best efforts. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

The House resumed, from Monday, May 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the amendment of Mr. Korchinski (p. 1872) and the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Knight) (p. 1903).

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, just before debate on this bill adjourned last night, I had been discussing the role of farm credit within the framework of a comprehensive farm program. The point I was trying to make was that, in the thinking of some farm groups during the past years, too much emphasis has been placed on the value of a farm credit program by itself. This does not mean that we underrate the fundamental importance of an adequate farm credit program. However, I think the farm credit program is only one part of the equation necessary to produce an effective, over-all farm program.

If we are to have a farm credit program that will fulfil the desired objectives, it is necessary that it be complemented by an adequate farm income program, an adequate pricing program, some measures to control the cost of goods that farmers must buy and ensure that adequate services are available to them to carry on their business. It is very important to keep these points in mind. This leaves aside for a moment the question of the merits of the measure before us and simply attempts to deal with the problem of farm credit within the context of a comprehensive farm program. It is necessary to view it in this sort of context if we are to come forward with an adequate program.

In dealing with the subject of farm credit and the structure of the farm industry in general, in recent years there have been too many instances of tribute being paid to the concept of the absolute necessity for increasing the size of the farm unit if farm problems are to be solved. In fact, there is some basis in economics for this sort of contention. In many respects, it is obvious that larger size farm units contribute to a more efficient operation. However, in recent years we have seen that an increase in size does not result in a better farm operation or the solution of the problems facing agriculture. When we referred to size in the past, the primary consideration was the size of the land holding or the physical size of the unit. We have to keep in mind that in agriculture today it is not necessarily related to the size of land holdings. In fact, size can be more closely related to intensive features of farm operations. Investment in the development of productive facilities on a very small land holding may be more productive in some cases and more important than the land holdings involved in a farm unit.

I took careful note of the comments made yesterday by the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan). He referred to the role of economists, his appraisal of economists and the poor service they have rendered to farmers in many instances in the past. I believe I correctly noted the context of the hon. member's remarks. I have to say a word about this because I have some credentials in this field. I hope the hon. member will listen closely because he might learn something. It is society that has assigned to the economist a role which does not properly belong to him. In many cases society has set up the economist as the final repository of wisdom in dealing with a complex of factors which involve a combination of social and economic considerations. The role of the economist is a particular one. If he is called upon to pass judgment within the framework of many considerations that should be clearly understood. The economist has his role to play just as the engineer and other professionals have their role to play. An engineer may respond to a request that the steam pressure on a boiler be doubled. He may say that is nonsense and, if you do that, the boiler will blow up. That is the engineering consequences of such a proposal or decision.

Similarly, the economist can quite validly point out the economic consequences of a certain course of action. However, all too often economists have been called upon to make social and value judgments which are not within the purview of the professional competence or skill of the economist as such. They may lie within his field of interest. He may have other skills in other fields of social science which may contribute to making a good decision, but they are not necessarily a part of the body of knowledge associated with that involved in calling upon the services of a professional economist. When comments of this nature are made, I hope it will be kept in mind that all too often it is society which has assigned to the economist a role which does not properly belong to him. I certainly acknowledge there are many economists who would be only too happy to accept the glory that goes with the role assigned to them by others and, in some cases, without validity.

When we take note of the role that farm credit plays in the rural community, it is important that we keep in mind what happens to many small farm communities throughout Canada which are presently facing a very serious situation. When touring various parts of Canada in recent years, I became very disturbed about some of the trends I saw. I not only witnessed the deterioration of some smaller communities which provided valuable service to the farm industry and people engaged in farming, but I witnessed the haphazard disintegration of some of these communities, involving both the farming sector and the small urban sector. This is very disturbing. It is not taking place as a result of rational planning or rational decisions made within whatever available framework we establish. It is happening by some sort of process which is very difficult to visualize and very difficult to tackle. It is happening in the absence of any sort of planning framework for our rural communities. This is of very great concern to many of us.

It is inevitable that there is going to be a process of rationalization take place in many of our rural communities. There will certainly be changes in transportation, communities, economics and other factors involved in carrying on business and providing services. This carries with it consequences for farmers and smaller communities. However, the changes are taking place without any thought being given to developing an alternative structure and a new framework whereby we can ensure an adequate level of service to the farm community.

Unless we ensure that adequate services are available to farmers, it will be much more difficult for farmers to develop a viable, efficient and economic farm enterprise in the long run. It is important that we keep this in mind as we consider this bill and other elements of government programs. Both federal and provincial governments must play a leading role in ensuring that the rural community survives in Canada and that the rural community is healthy, vigorous and making a viable and important contribution to the overall Canadian economy. If we do not have a healthy rural economy and rural society, it will be very dangerous for Canada from a social or economic point of view.

Rural Canada has played and continues to play a vital role in the Canadian economy. Whenever we have witnessed a turn-down in the economy, it has been largely due to difficult conditions in the rural sector. Everyone in Canada should keep this in mind. I see in many parts of the country the destruction of rural society. Rural Canada is in the process of being destroyed in the absence of effective policies to ensure that those who compose it enjoy standards of living and income commensurate with those provided in other sectors of the national life. No planning framework is being developed to ensure the continuance of a healthy and vigorous role in society. It would be dangerous to allow the present process of deterioration to continue. Any government which permitted this to happen would deserve a black mark against it, yet very little has been forthcoming under the leadership of hon. gentlemen opposite to ensure the maintenance of a vigorous rural society.

One element of a possible policy would be to ensure that young people are able to enter farming or remain in the smaller communities which serve the agriculture industry. A great deal of attention has been paid to this subject in various quarters. Lip service has been paid to the principle and token gestures have been made, but what has been done up to the present has been ineffective, proof of which lies in the continuing and increasing exodus of young people from rural communities. At present, rural communities are made up for the most part of old people on the point of retirement. Those who wish to take up farming, those who wish to stay in smaller communities, find it impossible to do so bearing in mind the amount of capital investment necessary to establish themselves in business. In most cases they move to the larger urban centres where they can often get jobs without a comparable effort in investment and labour.

Many farmers find themselves locked in, spending a lifetime paying off their land debts. Hon. members are familiar with the saying that many a farmer has lived poor and died rich. This is often the case; the only way in which the farmer has been able to build up a viable enterprise has been by incurring debts and then depriving himself and his family of many of the things which ought to have been theirs if they had been able to enjoy a standard of living comparable with that of others in our society. In some cases, when the time comes to retire, their position is not a bad one if they have managed to survive over the years, but it was only made possible as a result of a lifetime of hardship. This is a factor which contributes to a great deal of the poverty which is now evident in Canada and which is proving such a millstone around the neck of our society. Unless we deal with it we shall never be in a position to abolish poverty in Canada.

I am concerned about the whole question of interest rates as they affect rural communities. We debated this subject a few years ago when the government decided, as a matter of policy, that it would raise interest rates above the 5 per cent level which had been placed in legislation in previous years, and adopt a rate based on a formula linked directly to the current bank rate. This, as the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) pointed out, involves giving priority to strictly economic considerations. I say it is wrong to act on a basis of economic considerations alone when dealing with these matters. In such situations it is necessary to make social judgments and social values should take priority. I believe we should throw out the provision leading to the higher interest rates which have been in force during the past few years; unless we do so the agriculture industry will continue to be locked in the situation which it has known for far too long.

The minister made a case for not changing the interest rate structure in connection with the operations of the Farm Credit Corporation. He was bragging about the way in which interest rates had declined from 8¾ per cent to 7 per cent in the last few months. Big deal, is all I can say. He says that if interest rates were kept below the going market rate the result would be an upward pressure on land prices, a situation which would bring no net benefit to farmers. There is some truth in what the minister says in this regard when one considers the corporation as, largely, a land buying agency. But it seems to me we should look at the situation from an entirely new point of view. An effort should be made to ensure that farmers are able to obtain lower interest rates than in recent years and that this be arranged in such a way as to make an effective contribution to the carrying on of good farming.

As to the bill before us, I am not sure what good it will do. It certainly does not display the type of imagination, the type of initiative which is needed if we are to find a way out of the present agricultural crisis. I hope the government will take a fresh look at the entire question in an effort to reach a solution different from that which we have seen up to the present time.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the previous speaker's remarks about Bill C-5, entitled "An Act to amend the Farm Credit Act", and designed to assist farmers, which enables the Corporation to grant loans up to $100,000.

Mr. Speaker, during the last two weeks, I happened to visit some strictly rural communities and regions in western Canada, particularly in Alberta, SAskatchewan and Manitoba. Now, I do not think that Bill C-5 will be of any assistance to them. Actually, many western farmers are at grips with terrible financial problems; they cannot even pay, at this stage, the interest on loans obtained 10 years and sometimes 15 years ago; some farmers are now urging this government to take steps, and resort to the legislation called the "moratorium", to prevent the seizure of their lands. Being unable tp pay the interests, they certainly cannot think of writing off their capital.

Here is what is said in an explanatory note of the bill, about clause 16:

—This amendment would provide that loans may be made under the Act only to individuals who are Canadian citizens or landed immigrants. It would also provide that loans may be made to farming corporations only if they are controlled by shareholders who are Canadian citizens or landed immigrants and to cooperative farm associations only if their members are Canadian citizens or landed immigrants.

Mr. Speaker, the problem facing western Canada is not so much the repayment of loans, but rather the sale of a production that has been piling up for quite a few years. I saw over there grain producers who were still stuck with their crop of four or five years ago. Now, at that time, they were forced to borrow on their inventories in order to have some liquid assets that would enable them to keep on tossing about in this system that I would term a criminal one for farmers.

[Mr. Burton.]

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, presently, farmers cannot even pay the interest on their loans. At Medicine Hat, in northern Alberta, in the centre of the province, as well as in the areas surrounding Regina, Gravelbourg or Humboldt, they are deep into debt, at inconceivable interest rates. How can farmers be expected to pay an interest of 7, 8 or 9 per cent on loans, when they cannot even sell their products? It is not the government which pays the interest, it is the farmer. And today, several among them are scared to death of losing their farms.

Furthermore, young farmers are not at all interested in taking over from their parents on the farms. These young western farmers are rushing to the cities in order to find employment, whereas if an adequate agricultural system enabled them to earn a living, they would be eager to take over.

And the same problem arises in the East, as my colleague for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) was saying.

Mr. Speaker, in order to expand, farmers have to borrow money, but these loans should not be granted at excessive interest rates, as they are now. Let farm loans be granted at rates of 2½ or 3 per cent at the most, and then, I think that farmers' sons will be interested in carrying on the work started by their parents and will be more concerned with farming. This is merely a suggestion.

One of my hon. friends has said in this House that when it comes to grants, there is a tendency to favour large industries. More grants should be made to agriculture which, to me, forms the basis of the whole economic structure of Canada as well as of any other country. And I notice that the sector of Canadian society which we protect and help the least, although it has to put up with the greatest number of working hours weekly, monthly and yearly, is the agricultural sector. It is the farmers and the sons of farmers who have to work continuously. Quite often some of these people toil from 4.30 or 5 in the morning till 9 or 10 at night. Moreover, some farmers nowadays do not even earn 10 cents an hour even in eastern Canada or in Quebec.

They do not enjoy the right to strike and everybody knows, for instance, that cows do not go on strike Sunday morning or evening. The farmer is therefore compelled to work, to milk his cows in order to deliver his milk on the market the follwing Monday morning and continue to earn an income.

However, we do not take into account the situation of farmers. People often laugh at them or blame them by saying, for instance, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did a year and a half or two ago when he spoke thus to western wheat producers: "So you have wheat for sale? Get out then and sell it!" That was, then, the agricultural policy of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, we are not here to give that kind of answers. When a government sets up a table, progressive and acceptable agricultural policy, farmers feel at ease and at home. But today, they do not feel at home, but at the finance companies the whole year round and they are being exploited to the point where their lands can be lost or seized as presently happens in western Canada and often in eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is stipulated here that a farmer can borrow as much as $100,000 provided he proves that he needs that amount. But if he borrows $100,000, he will have to pay 7, 8 or 9 per cent interest. I say 7 per cent, but that is seldom the case. It is always a bit more because of administration costs. A bit more than 7 per cent is always charged.

An hon. Member: Seven and three-quarters!

Mr. Caouette: And soon it will be 8¼ per cent.

How can a farmer expect to pay 7, 8, 8¼ or 8½ per cent interest when that does not even represent his profits on his farming operation?

• (1530)

As I said earlier, some Saskatchewan farmers still have the wheat they produced four years ago—yes, four years ago—and the government says that we are selling wheat to China, Russia and advises the farmers to go and sell their wheat.

If, instead of travelling throughout the world to see how things are going in other countries, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) or the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) were truly looking for clients surely they would find several countries which need Canadian wheat.

A few weeks ago, I was in Cameroun with other members of a Canadian parliamentary delegation at the Yaoundé interparliamentary convention and noticed rather skinny young Negroes who surely were prepared to buy Canadian wheat.

Other countries, for instance India, need wheat. I am convinced that if we had the required machinery our ministers could sell our surplus wheat and help our farmers who cannot sell their crops.

Bill C-5 authorizes the corporation to grant additional loans. If someone already owes $15,000, $25,000 or $30,000 he will be granted a new loan so as to sink even deeper into debt and this new loan will include the amount already outstanding. Perhaps the former loan was granted at a rate of 4, 4½ or 5 per cent but under the new act the farmer will be able to borrow to pay his arrears at a rate of 7, 7½, 8 or 8½ per cent.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members or the people may think that this bill will assist the farmer. It is not going to help him, but to hurt him further. This reminds me of a certain finance company—this government is the agent of finance companies—when it advertises on the radio or television: If you owe money to the Household Finance Company, to the Beneficial Finance Company, to the Niagara Finance Company and to the Western Finance Company, "bundle up" all your bills and come to the Avco Finance Company, which will grant you a loan covering all your debts and you will have only one payment to make. The guy hurries up, "bundles up" all his debts—amounting to $2,000 or $3,000—and to have only one payment to make, he goes to the new Avco Finance Company—that which advertises every week on television—to raise a loan in order to pay off all the other companies. Once he gets out of this finance company's office, instead of owing $2,100, he owes $2,700. He will then owe $600 more but will have one payment to make instead of four or five. He will be told: Old chap, we got you out of the hole. But in fact they got him deeper in it and this is exactly what is being done with farmers under Bill C-5. They are urged to incur additional debts so they will be able to go into farming.

Mr. Speaker, within five or ten years a great many farmers will have lost their lands. Some rich western farmers—in Gravelbourg, Ponteix, Humboldt or Prince Albert, it matters little, I went there—were owners of their farm and operating it. Today, after 15 or 20 years of hard work, those people no longer own their farms. They live in the fear of their farms being seized because of interest past due, and the government maintains that system.

Canadian agriculture is being put to death. And I repeat that agriculture is still the cornerstone of the whole Canadian economic structure, even though some may laugh.

If it were not for the farmers, some people with bowler hats and dressy suits in the Montreal offices would dry up in no time. The farmer is needed, but few understand that. It is said that farmers work hard. They get up at five in the morning to milk their cows, while others get up at ten o'clock to "milk" the farmers, especially the financiers.

I see my Liberal friends smiling: they know what I mean.

An hon. Member: The ten o'clock boys!

Mr. Caouette: The ten o'clock boys!

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to say more on Bill C-5, but I want to put on the record the opinion of the group that I represent in this House, namely, Social Credit party members. I am sure that in all rural constituencies throughout Canada, farmers expect improvements rather than bills that hurt them further with debts at ever increasing interest rates.

I suggest that the government introduce a stable overall agricultural policy for the whole of Canada instead of a policy which is liable to sow discord between farmers of Western and Eastern Canada. Western farmers say, We have not enough because the government gives too much to the East. And in the East, farmers say, We do not get enough because the government gives too much to the West. And yet, there are enough resources in Canada for the whole population.

The problem that arises in Canada today is not one of production, but rather of distribution of consumer goods. There is the real problem: And unless we grapple with it, it will remain unchanged, even with budgets such as the one that was brought down last night.

We give incentives to manufacturers and say to them: "Produce more," even though we cannot sell what we produce now. We say to the farmers: "Produce more, buy combines, new trucks, tractors, farm machinery and produce." But we can't even consume what is being produced, simply because the consumers have no purchasing power.

Mr. Speaker, we have too much wheat in the Western provinces, too much milk in Quebec, too much corn in Ontario, too many mines, too many forest products in British Columbia, too much fish in the Maritime provinces, in short we have too much of everything. Have you ever heard that a worm dies in an apple because the apple is too big? It is exactly the point we have reached right now.

Within the next few weeks, when 600,000, 700,000 or 800,000 unemployed students will be asking for integration into our society and a summer job, there will be nothing we can do for them. Because we have too much of everything, are we going to let people live in misery? Mr. Speaker, this is not the solution. It is our barbarian financial system which aggravates the problem through class struggles.

Therefore, we say: Let's give through the Bank of Canada. For some people on the government side this seems to be a laughing matter. Nevertheless, the Bank of Canada should be instrumental in giving to the people of Canada the purchasing power which will enable them to buy the products existing in Canada. We shall then be witnessing unity in Canada and mutual respect among the provinces. The people will be satisfied because the government shows results which they expect through its administration.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I listened with keen interest to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) speaking in the characteristic breezy manner which he always uses to take us, with his acknowledged eloquence, on a tour of farming from East to West. Unfortunately, he is speaking of farming as it existed in the Ford car era of 1929, of non-profitable farming at the subsistence level.

What surprises me more is the hon. member's claims, referring to certain regions of Canada, that federal government policies are always beneficial to the Western provinces and that no heed is given to a policy seeking to assist Eastern producers. It would however seem that there has been preaching going on recently in some areas of the country, with no consideration given to the fact that the media can inform us of a speech made in one region of the country and another elsewhere by the same speaker, who did not expound the same philosophy throughout Canada.

However I should not like to restrict myself to what I consider to be a very negative approach, preferring a positive approach to Bill C-5 entitled "An Act to Amend the Farm Credit Act."

A study of the whole scope and philosophy of the bill reveals that the government is seeking to place farming in the proper modern context. The general purpose of the amendments is to increase the ability of the Farm Credit Corporation to meet the requirements of producers who seek long term credit, and to give them an opportunity to live decently on their land. In my view, those are both very worthwhile objectives, comparing the amounts of loans now available to those obtained formerly when the ceiling was $40,000 under Part II and $50,000 under Part III. These ceilings were set in 1964.

For corporate farmers, the ceiling was $80,000 for two joint owners and $100,000 for more than two, under Part II, and $100,000 for a syndicate, for instance, under Part III.

[Mr. Caouette.]

I went recently in an area of vegetable production, around Sainte-Clothilde, and I see here my colleague, the hon. member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Smith) who was telling me about it at noon today. These vegetable farmers want this act to be passed as soon as possible, so that they can build cold stores into which they could preserve their vegetables and put them on the market at a time when there would not be a surplus, thus getting better prices for their products.

In my mind, this act tends to favour farmers who are actually specialized, and not certain people who farm in order to produce all sorts of things.

I should like to reconsider a little the four phases of today's agriculture: In the 18th century, 80 per cent of Canadians lived off agriculture, which was called subsistence agriculture, and I think that no farmer wishes to go back to that type of farming.

At the end of the nineteenth century, we had a farm population of 75 per cent and an urban one of 25 per cent. Then, the economy was moving towards industrialization and agriculture towards commercialization. And this latter trend continued.

In the twentieth century, for example, we saw a radical change in population distribution when only 20 per cent of the population was agricultural and 80 per cent in the industrial or urban sector.

In 1970, we had an industrialized economy and agriculture. I feel that through amending the Farm Credit Act, favouring access to greater credits and helping the young to make of farming a profession, we will greatly help our agricultural industry.

Mr. Speaker, I was listening to some of the previous speakers still discussing family farms, and I suggest that it is very difficult to know where the family farm ends and the industrial farm begins, and that for many reasons, especially emotional ones.

In Canada the family farm is characterized by the use of the labour and capital provided by members of the family. At that time, it was the members of the family who tried with more or less success to produce some income. With the rise in the living standard, the labour of men and women is reduced and is replaced by capital. Even if in some parts of Canada the family farm is still a pretty vital operation, it can be said that in many regions the family farm faces great economic problems.

Efficiency in agriculture as in any other segment of industry requires capital. But the transfer of farms from one generation to the next has prevented young farmers from taking immediate possession of farms which were productive on a wider basis. And when the transfer was possible, young farmers had to work for other people for a salary during many years and postponed as long as possible the investments that were not available to them under the old legislation.

I think that the changes that have been brought are really very desirable because the old legislation did not provide for loans to young people under 21, whereas this legislation will enable the Corporation to grant loans to farmers under 21. This provision meets representations from provincial legislatures.

I listened attentively to the interesting remarks the hon. member for Témiscamingue made a moment ago. Even granting loans at 2 or 3 per cent interest would not have solved the problem.

First of all, I should like him to tell us from what source we should have obtained these funds. The problem is much more serious than that. I think that even if funds with interest rates in line with those he quoted a moment ago had been available, and if the producers had sold their goods at a loss, for instance, milk at $3 per hundred weight as it has happened before or—as someone said earlier—broilers at 10c. a pound, the producers cannot make a profit, no matter the availability of capital on the borrowing market, because attractive interest rates will not solve the problem. Farmers could have been put in a position where they could never pull through and it might have resulted in their further downgrading. Instead, the government developed an agricultural policy which, at a national level, takes consumer power into account.

Endeavours are being made to organize production so that farmers are able to obtain reasonable prices for the time they have been spending to grow their products. What has the present government put forward in order to ensure normal profits for Canadian farmers, so that as experts, they are treated as fairly as possible? I am sure there is still much to be done, but considering the steps already taken by the government, I think they have a promising future.

I will now deal with the Canadian grain policy. The hon. member pointed out a while ago that there was too much grain in western Canada, too much milk in eastern Canada, in short too much of everything. It is easy to say that there is too much of everything. But it would be better to put some order at the production level so that it will be geared to consumer and export markets.

Through a regulated grain and dairy production policy, grain as well as milk producers now receive good prices for their products. If those two products had been left as they were, if more investments had been encouraged through a 2 or 3 per cent rate of interest, real stagnation would have followed. Instead of making such a popular decision, we adopted a sound administrative line and asked producers to follow some regulations.

What about the results? Whenever one meets producers and asks them about it, one can see that they think the Liberal government is to be commended for such regulations which, as I pointed out, generated much more attractive prices and much more interesting incomes for producers.

As regards other production fields, we brought forward recently another agressive economic policy: the establishement of national marketing boards. Those national marketing boards for farm products will be another instrument enabling farmers to get a decent price for their marketing products. The implementation of that legislation will start with farm products and eggs.

All that, Mr. Speaker, to say how proud I am of the changes made in this legislation on farm credit. The importance given to the maximum amounts young people may borrow is certainly a worthwhile improvement.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to keep the floor any longer, but I think that when allowing credit for production we should also give advice to the producers. It is risky to extend credit without some accompanying advice.

• (1550)

In order to show to what extent we are aware of the importance of the agricultural sector, we shall set a policy consolidating those small farms which prove unprofitable because unit costs are too high, the size of the land does not warrant farm machinery expenses, or increasing production to 200,000 pounds of milk is not viable.

For various considerations such as for instance, the father's age or the transfer of the land to the son, we are promoting a policy aimed at consolidating unprofitable small farms into much more profitable units.

Mr. Speaker, all these changes show to what extent this government is aware of the prevailing farming revolution due to the transformations farming is being subjected to by technological advance, enlarged knowledge, higher agricultural yields and higher per unit animal yield, which contribute to a higher production, regardless of consumption capacity. We are very much aware of this revolution, I believe, and we are endeavouring, with the mechanisms I have referred to, to tidy up things at the production level.

[English]

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat strange that we should be considering increases to the Farm Credit Act at a time when foreclosures are predominant throughout many parts of the country. There are many pending cases of foreclosure and, as a matter of fact, I believe that the cases of pending foreclosures are at an all time high. In my own province of Alberta, where there are some 25 per cent of farm credit loans in arrears, where some 17 foreclosures have been made in the past year, 1971/72, and 102 foreclosures are pending, one must ask whether this legislation will be of any assistance to those farmers who are experiencing this type of difficulty.

I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Edmonton Journal of May 2 entitled "Farmers Feel Pinch of Easy Credit". The article was written in the northern part of the province, in Manning, Alberta. It reads as follows:

> Easy credit has become more of a curse than a blessing to many farmers in this region.
> The harsh realities of accumulative interest and a depressed agricultural economy have ruined some farmers and even the best are feeling the pinch to some degree.
> Foreclosure actions appear on the increase in the North Peace, prompting strong objections from the National Farmers' Union, which is seeking a two year moratorium on foreclosures to give farmers some breathing space.
> At first glance, the government's Farm Credit Corporation appears the chief culprit, since that institution has financed the majority of farm expansions in the region and therefore is involved in proportionately more foreclosure actions.
> But even those farmers who've lost land through FCC foreclosures are inclined to admit they've had more than a fair hearing from the crown corporation, most particularly when compared to some of the more conventional trust and mortgage firms.

I should like to reiterate the words of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) who paid tribute to the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation who have looked at the various problems of arrears and the people involved with a great deal of sympathy. I have had correspondence with the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation and many of his officials and officers who, in my opinion, have bent over backwards to try to help these individuals in every way possible. I want to convey to them the appreciation of many who have found their administration flexible enough to consider all factors.

The article goes on to point out further specific examples. It reads:

Ralph Ressler was raised on a farm in this region and in fact gave up farming during the 1950s to work in town.

And he wishes he'd stayed there, although he's in a better financial condition than many of his neighbours.

"Twelve years ago I had a good job and don't owe anybody a cent, but the government came along and said grow wheat and I listened. I borrowed $30,000 and bought some new machinery and more land and some cattle."

Right now Ralph is $4,000 in arrears, he's been threatened with foreclosure and he's certain that "without those cows I think they'd have foreclosed on me a long time ago . . ."

Peter Kulyna, a 41-year old mixed farmer who's been at it since he was 18, maintains there is plenty of agricultural land available now and "It's no use opening up any more land."

Ten years ago, he says, he had eight quarters of land and "about $30,000 kicking around in cash".

• (1600)

Today he's about depleted his reserves and says it's a simple matter of agricultural products costing too much to produce in relation to their selling price.

That is generally the perspective offered by the agricultural economy today, particularly in the northern parts of my province and in many other areas of western Canada. The problems involve mainly an unfair return for the products produced by the farmer in relation to the cost of production, combined with inaccurate marketing information, and also some trouble in respect of fiscal management.

When considering this bill to amend the Farm Credit Act, one of the first observations that one must make is that it goes far beyond the original objectives of the Farm Credit Act. A number of the proposed amendments can be classified as improvements to meet current demands. These include such provisions as the increase in the amount of the loan, provision for increased capitalization, amendments to the minimum age requirements, and the matter of citizenship eligibility. These are generally desirable amendments. I have no objection to them. But it seems to me that this measure will be of little benefit to any of the farmers who are having difficulty at present in discharging the mortgages they hold. The main problem in agriculture today is that of net income, and not necessarily having more funds available to borrow.

In his speech to the House last week, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) went to great lengths to point out that the agricultural situation has improved quite considerably. It may have improved in Ontario, Mr. Speaker. It may be fine there, but I must say that in western Canada we have had a reduction of roughly 50 per cent in our net realized income between the years 1966 and 1970. Here I am referring to the statistics of net farm income for 1970, provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. We had roughly $1 billion worth of realized net income in 1966. That dropped to roughly $494 million in 1970, a reduction of more than 50 per cent.

When the Chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation appeared before the standing committee the other day, he disclosed the amount of arrears which farmers had incurred on their loans. In western Canada those arrears are roughly $15 million, an average of some 25 per cent of the outstanding loans. In Ontario, the arrears amount to $1.5 million, or 7.7 per cent of the outstanding loans. In Quebec the arrears are $446,000, or 4.7 per cent of the outstanding loans. So, while these problems are present generally across the country, the position of the agricultural industry in western Canada has been reduced more than the position of the industry in central Canada.

Clause 1 of this bill reads:

The Corporation has all the powers necessary to carry out such duties or functions as may be assigned to it by the Governor in Council in relation to the administration of any agricultural program or as are assigned to it pursuant to any other Act of the Parliament of Canada.

It seems to me that this clause delegates power and authority to the Farm Credit Corporation to reshape the economic and social structure of the production sector of agriculture. These powers are very broad. They may be assigned to the directors by the Governor in Council or by an act of parliament. This is my first objection to the bill. If we are going to assign carte blanche authority to a Crown agency to administer agricultural programs and thus reshape the concept of the agricultural industry, as parliamentarians we should have a right to know what their programs are all about, and we should have a right to debate them. Above all, parliament and the farmers of Canada should know what these programs entail.

I am against any program being assigned to the Farm Credit Corporation or, for that matter, any other federal agency, by order in council, and when we reach committee stage I believe an amendment must be introduced to withdraw that power of assigning such a function to the corporation by order in council. The details of the immediate program intended to be administered through this clause of the bill are very sketchy. They are ambiguous, and in many cases controversial. We really do not have a bill before us dealing with the provisions of the so-called small farm development program. Without knowing the details, and the intentions of the government, we are not in a position to debate this part of the bill in an intelligent way.

I believe that the motives behind this program form part of a plot to cure the problems of agriculture by encouraging the removal of vast numbers of people from the agricultural industry. It is, if you like, a form of occupational genocide. There can be no doubt the ultimate objective is to carry out the plan of the ivory-towered bureaucrats and academics through a process of rationalization and adjustment in the family farm enterprise. From what we are led to believe after considering the small farm adjustments program, from the various policies that have been introduced by the government, and indeed from the task force report on agriculture, farming is no longer considered to be a way of life but rather a hard-nosed business operation, notwithstanding the vagaries of the weather, the international market place or the policies of competitive countries.

We are moving into an era when the federal government wants to opt out of the program of assisting the industry. Subsidy is now a bad word in agriculture. It is all right for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is all right for the Department of Manpower and Immigration. It is all right for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. But, I repeat, when it comes to agriculture it is a bad word, and the government is firmly committed to withdrawing any respectable assistance to agriculture.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), speaking to the Coopérative Fédérée du Québec on February 2, 1972, said of agriculture:

Like any other industrial sector it has to operate and will have to operate without subsidies, without outside aid, as a mature organism that has developed to its full potential.

It is less and less acceptable that the consumer should have to bear the cost of deficiencies which the farmer himself suffers—

I merely want to draw attention to the fact that the productivity index in the agricultural sector has increased from 100 in 1961 to 166.7 in 1971, as compared with 121.4 in the non-agricultural sector. That is efficiency, Mr. Speaker, but while achieving this efficiency we have had a reduction in the net realized income of the farmer.

The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board said something similar in an article which appeared in the Star Weekly on December 22, 1971, headed "Our Anti-farm Policy." I quote from it as follows:

Eight years ago Otto Lang was offering the first hints about what was to become the federal government's policy to kill Canada's smaller family farms.

Lang is now the federal minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, but then he was a law professor speaking to agriculture graduates at the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon.

"The family farm is not entitled to subsidy," he said. "Should those living on farms be subsidized by non-farmers to bring their economic level to that of non-farmers? Clearly not. The farmers are receiving non-economic benefits to make up the difference."

• (1610)

The benefits, he suggested, include 'independence, fresh air, quiet and privacy and the intimacy of neighborliness where you know all of your neighbors well.'

Lately, neither Otto nor Ottawa has been talking about all those benefits. But the federal government has been bluntly informing family farmers that they can't expect to be subsidized much longer. The big farm is more economical to run. . . .

Federal Minister of Agriculture H. A. Olson said not long ago, in the stilted language of the bureaucrat: 'We want to give farmers who are close to retirement age the opportunity to use their assets to put together a satisfactory retirement package. We also want to give other farmers the opportunity to withdraw from agriculture with a certain amount of dignity and security if they choose to do so. However, the choice will certainly be left to the farmer.'

What that statement really means is that the low-income family farmer has become an economic anachronism in Canada. And Ottawa will no longer prop him up with subsidies which can only be justified on sentimental grounds.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Mazankowski: The government's proposals for a production and grain receipts policy for the Western Grains Industry, of October, 1970, reaffirm the government's objectives to integrate smaller farm units and produce units of a more efficient size. While considering the question of size, Mr. Speaker, let us, for a moment, look at what Judge James Ross said. He conducted an inquiry into the egg industry in Ontario. One newspaper carries this report. Speaking of Judge Ross it says:

Repeatedly he insists that the family-type farm, employing one to three full-time men, must be buttressed. Not because it is a socially desirable business unit, which it is, but because it happens to be the most efficient production unit.

With lucidity he explodes the myths about bigness and 'economy of size' which are believed and preached by a number of naïve university professors. Like the authors of the Farm Income Report, he was unable to find one example of a corporate unit giving a better return to capital, management and labor than a family-run enterprise. In fact returns usually are lower.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: We know that the task force report in part recommends that subsidies and price supports to agriculture should be phased out, and that we must emphasize efficiency and rationalization. The approach of this government and the approacch of bureaucrats is that there must be more bigness, so to speak, in farming. For instance, more money is to be available for farm loans. This money is not necessarily to help the new fellow in agriculture get started; instead, it is for those who are already fairly well established and want to grow larger. How much bigger must farms become before they reach that so-called viable size that the government and its economic advisers talk about? That question is hard to answer, particularly in view of recent findings. I note that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is not here. I think the parliamentary secretary may be familiar with the comments in the CFA presentation made before the Prime Minister and members of parliament. Page 5 of the CFA presentation reads in part:

It is becoming clearer to all that agricultural subsidies must often be provided as necessary, legitimate features of overall policies and programs in support of the industry—

Farmers have no quarrel with this so long as rationalization does not turn out to be another word for abandoning necessary social and economic goals for our rural economy, and so long as it is understood that the transition may well prove to be an extended one in today's fast-changing and unpredictable world.

May I read one more paragraph from page 6 of the presentation, as follows:

The reality and the challenge facing Canadian agriculture today is that a well defined, well understood intermediate to long-term policy and program must be developed for every commodity sector and in every vital area of agricultural policy.

By well understood we mean well understood by the farmers themselves, and basically accepted by them. This in turn must mean that the necessary programs and policies are developed and carried out with producer involvement all along the line.

That, Mr. Speaker, has not been happening; that approach is not evident in this bill. Once more, in this bill, we are seeing the government implement some of the recommendations of the Task Force on Agriculture. As we know, that report has become the bible on which Liberal agricultural policy rests. Notwithstanding arguments to the contrary, there is sufficient evidence to show that many of the programs the government has introduced in this House emanated directly from the report of the Task Force on Agriculture. I am referring to programs such as Operation Lift, the grain stabilization bill, and Bill C-176 of the previous session, which introduced national marketing. Now, a so-called small farms adjustment program is being introduced.

May I point out once again, and this must be considered, that not one farmer served on the Task Force on Agriculture. Its report is the work of academics who, in all likelihood, had little or no practical experience in the art of farming. Our problems have arisen because so-called arm-chair experts have used theory and economic ideas in their attempt to cure the ills of agriculture. In addition, this government has displayed little imagination in its policies with respect to agriculture, and has shown little devotion to the people engaged in agriculture or to their welfare. Governing in an authoritarian, highly paternalistic way, the government is not so much dedicated to curing the ills of agriculture as to removing vast numbers of people from that industry.

Broadening the Farm Credit Act for the immediate future will simply mean the administration of the small farm development program. Probably, we should more appropriately refer to the program as the small farms adjustment program. I know it is to be called the small farms development plan, simply because development has more political appeal than adjustment. Really, however, the guts of the proposal are the same as before. You cannot change the guts of the program merely by changing the title of the bill. So far as I am concerned, this bill spells adjustment and consolidation, and the program is based on the March 8 policy paper, which contains a general, broad outline on which the federal government has been unable to reach a consensus with the provinces. It is a policy with respect to which we, the members of parliament, have been unable to elicit concrete information. We do not know the extent of the program. We have been highly unsuccessful in our efforts at seeing the matter clarified. The minister failed to enlighten the committee. The people representing the Farm Credit Corporation could not, because many of the questions concerned policy, enlighten us to any great degree with regard to the program. There are many unknowns about the government's small farm development program. I think the government is adopting a hit-and-miss, trial-by-error approach, which is tarnished with political bait. If one examines pages 7 and 8 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, No. 2, one will see the definition of a small farm. Apparently, that definition will vary according to the number of applications which are received. One does not know exactly what definition will be used.

If one examines carefully the report of the Farm Credit Corporation, one will see that the majority of so-called small farmers reside in Quebec and in the Maritimes. How are the funds to be allocated? How are the amounts to be divided? We have not been able to get answers. We are aware of one thing only, Mr. Speaker: that the government's underlying motive is to encourage the people to leave the land. They want to remove vast numbers of people from agriculture. This policy will have a further devastating impact on our rural communities. How the program in question is to be carried out we do not know exactly. We only know that the provinces have not been able to agree on it. Farm organizations do not necessarily agree. The people of my constituency do not agree.

In February, 1971, I sent out a questionnaire which asked simply: "Are you in favour of consolidating farms into larger units?" Ten per cent said yes, 82 per cent said no and 8 per cent were undecided. A news report in the Edmonton Journal has this to say about Mr. A. M. Runciman, a most knowledgeable and respected man in the grains industry:

> A. M. Runciman of Winnipeg, United Grain Growers president, says a global approach seems to be the only way 'we can get some answers to the universal conundrum of low incomes for the majority of farmers—
> Mr. Ruciman defined the federal program in 1970 which paid farmers to take land out of wheat production as 'infamous' and said the announcement of the small farm development program this week was another step in the wrong direction.

• (1620)

I am quoting from the December 9 edition of the Edmonton Journal.

> Mr. Runciman is concerned with other farm spokesmen about the new federal development program which, "regardless of the fine words ... aims to reduce the number of farmers in this country."
> Several farm spokesmen point to the report on the future of agriculture in the 1970s, made by a federally-appointed committee last year, which advocated a reduction of one-third of the 400,000 farms in Canada.
> "It's hard to make sense of phasing out a Canadian farmer who can grow wheat for say $1.20 a bushel when a European farmer continues to produce even though he can't get his costs for growing wheat below $2," Mr. Runciman said.
> He said nothing will be solved until Canada attempts to get agreement in principle among the various producing countries on long-term policies aimed at stabilizing production; and that the trend of Ottawa's policy will continue to hurt Canada's farmers.

I have no objection to the senior members of the agricultural industry voluntarily opting out of agriculture and retiring or, for that matter, any other group. I believe the senior people in agriculture should be allowed to retire with dignity. Through the rationalization and adjustment program for the textile industry, the federal government was able to assist those who were forced into making some social adjustments. However, I am concerned about who will be filling the void that will be created by the vast numbers who will be encouraged to leave the land as a result of this small farm development program. Will it be corporate holdings or syndicates?

Where does a young fellow with a deep desire to engage in the business of farming fit into the over-all program? What incentives are there for the young man? What encouragement and positive advice is there for him to become interested or actively engaged in the industry? This is basically what the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) sets out to do. If we are going to have a program which encourages people to leave agriculture, we must have another program to attract people into the industry. If we do not do this, our rural communities will die. Without this kind of approach, the so-called farm development program will be more accurately referred to as a "small farm extinction" program.

In its latest report, the Farm Credit Corporation stated that the number of applications by young people has decreased very significantly. The average age of a borrower is somewhere around 35. A very small percentage are under 24 years of age, something like 2 per cent of the people. The average age of the farmer now in business is in the vicinity of 57, 58 or 59. We must do something to bolster the prospects of the young person who wants to engage in farming as a means of livelihood. Such a provision should be incorporated in this bill as our amendment suggests. If we are going to spend $150 million to get people off the land, we should allocate a similar amount to get people back on to the land. We must maintain an equitable balance between our rural and urban populations. Perhaps we should go beyond that and make an all-out effort at restoring confidence and viability in rural Canada. I suggest we should form a department of rural affairs and rural development. DREE, which to some extent is responsible for rural development, has been another devastating failure. The Department of Agriculture is not concerned with the social implications it has created through this adjustment process. I believe a department of rural development and rural affairs, whose main objective would be to promote amd maintain a healthy and viable rural Canada, is something worth considering.

The problems of agriculture in rural Canada fall into three categories; agriculture, social adjustment, which perhaps comes under the Department of National Health and Welfare, and rural development. We do not have a co-ordinating body which looks at all these problems and which can be used as a co-ordinating device. The Department of Agriculture wants to rationalize everything for the sake of developing, promoting and maintaining a competitive and efficient production system regardless of the human side effects. DREE wants to encourage growth in the so-called urban growth centre, literally forcing people to migrate from rural to urban centres in order to find employment. The Department of National Health and Welfare looks at the problem on a broad basis, but is not truly meeting the challenges of social adjustment that are taking place in rural Canada. It is merely seeking more funds and herding people into the cities against their wishes, many of whom are ending up on welfare.

Rural life is what these people want. They want to stay in the rural areas. More consideration must be given to the processing of agricultural products and the establishment of light industry in rural Canada to provide the necessary alternatives. It is inconceivable that in this country, which offers so many opportunities, a person cannot be permitted to make a decent living in rural Canada if he so desires. A department of rural development and rural affairs would co-ordinate all these aspects into a viable policy that would put the emphasis on people rather than efficiency. As I said before, rural Canada must not be allowed to die. It must be strengthened and bolstered. If we do not face up to this problem now, we will have a situation in the future which will make our contemporary problems of pollution, poverty, drugs and so on pale by comparison. There is always a social price to pay for any automated or technological change that takes place. The coal miners and textile workers have received assistance. I believe the agricultural industry must be considered similarly in the light of alternatives for the rural areas rather than allowing the mass exodus of rural people into the urban society.

The other point we must consider is this. We must put a damper or perhaps a moratorium on the philosophy of bigness. In my opinion, bigness and the family farm concept are not compatable. If we allow this government to continue in the direction it is going, the family farm will disappear by 1980. What is meant by a family farm? Many members have suggested that it is impossible to define. One thing the Task Force on Agriculture did was make a rather succinct definition of the family farm. I wish to quote the opinion of the authors of the task force report on agriculture with regard to the future of the family farm. I quote:

> —one of the most commonly accepted definitions involves the following considerations:
> (1) The farm operator makes all or most of the managerial decisions;
> (2) The farmer and members of his family supply most of the labour needed;
> (3) The available farm resources are sufficient to provide the family with at least a minimum standard of living;
> (4) Tenure is reasonably secure for the operator and his family.

Let us look at what the task force believes the future holds for this kind of operation. This is according to the Liberal bible on agricultural policy. I see the parliamentary secretary shaking his head. But he knows, as I know, and as do most members of this House, that every agriculture policy which has been brought forth by the government has emanated from this book. On page 335, we read the following:

• (1630)

> It may become impossible eventually for the individual farmer to accumulate sufficient savings during his lifetime to develop an efficient size of business and own a debt-free farm by the time of retirement. The growing management skills, the need for greater integration between production and marketing and the ability to withstand heavy risks may not be within the capacity of the family-operated farm business by the end of the century. A corporate form of farming with hired management and equity financing through the stock market may eventually evolve out of the far-reaching changes which are certain to occur in agriculture during the next two or three decades.

Having regard to the confidence which the government has placed in this report, all I can say is this: goodbye to the family farm.

When we consider this subject, it behooves each and every one of us to draw the government's attention to the farm situation and the direction which is now being taken. The measure we are presently considering constitutes a further step toward the death of the family farm and of the rural communities. It is a step in the wrong direction. I do not believe it will strengthen the industry. I maintain, rather, that it will weaken it. The timing of this program is of considerable significance. It comes before us in a year in which there is ample evidence of a serious deterioration in the industry. Older farmers, in particular, are disgusted with the way in which agriculture has been going. The words "small farm development" admittedly offers some appeal, but again I warn hon. members that the bill spells the beginning of the end of what we have traditionally referred to as the family farm.

Let me remind the House that, though sales of grain have been fairly good in the past year, wheat prices have been the lowest for ten years. Prices received for oats have been the lowest in 20 years, and, for barley, the second lowest in the past ten years. In the Economic Review, to which reference has already been made in this debate, the index of farm prices which appears at page 133 shows that on the basis of an index of 100 in 1961, the farm price of agricultural products had risen to 117 in 1966. But by the end of 1971, it had dropped to 112.5. One also notes that the cost of commodities and services used in the production of agricultural products had increased by some 30 per cent in the same period. In these circumstances, farmers will naturally grasp at any program which might propose some measure of relief for them. But again, I warn them they had better read the fine print. If the program is based on the thinking of the report from which I have quoted, it spells disaster. It will set up a farm management service, a counselling service, a land transfer program and a listening service. In other words, the federal government will get into the business of buying and selling land. I submit that the task of the government now is simply that of a public relations agent trying to sell a policy successfully.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are trying to warn me that my time has expired. I have many more observations to make and I hope I shall have the opportunity of making them at a later stage.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I particularly wanted to participate in this debate on Bill C-5 designed to amend the Farm Credit Act and allow farmers to borrow more easily when they find it necessary to do so.

I represent an area where there are a great number of rather diversified producers. Having met with them fairly often, I am in a position to express their wishes on their behalf and to make their needs known to the government.

I would like to deal with this bill from a positive viewpoint. It would be easy for me to be very pessimistic as regards the farm situation. Today, however, we have to make comparisons and acknowledge that in the past four years—I say four years, as I have had the pleasure of sitting in this House for four years—efforts have been made and some progress has been achieved.

I feel that, were I to attempt to make producers believe that the situation has become satisfactory enough so that there is no need to introduce anything new and so we can just let things stand as they are, I would not be doing my duty.

Still, we must recognize that the government has solved a very difficult situation in connection with eastern producers, and that some steps have been taken which have greatly improved the situation of wheat producers in western Canada, compared with what it was three years ago.

We must also acknowledge that a recent policy of subsidies for hog producers have been greatly appreciated.

Bill C-5 provides certain advantages for today's producers. It proposes to increase the allowable amount of loans, which will be raised to $100,000, as has already been mentioned by several hon. members. As for the corporation staff, it was deemed that those officers would be competent enough to manage a program of land transfer or farm buying.

Also, an extra $10 million allocated for farm loans is likely to help improve the fate of those who want to continue working in that industry.

Another valuable measure consists in allowing young people of 18 years of age to get loans. I believe above all that it would be a tremendous mistake to only facilitate loans to producers.

I suggest in order to be very positive, that we must accept the recommendations or proposals put forward in Bill C-5. However, we must also consider the profits with which a farmer is left after the crops are in. If we merely provide such loans, we might, in some people's opinion, extend even more the suffering of some farmers.

In my view, such measure is a very important one. But how shall we be able to introduce other measures by which each producer will get a net realized income enabling him not only to pay back his loan and interest, but also to progress somewhat which will encourage him to remain on his land, as well as his son to take over his father's business who, at a certain age, must give it up. I think that, in this area, the government must work in cooperation with all hon. members to develop a policy which will promote a better farm product marketing.

During the last two years, we have reviewed at great length Bill C-176, which provided for the setting-up of farm products marketing agencies. For my part, I believed in this legislation and I still believe that this is the way, not only provinces, but all producers, will be able to take advantage of it. Thus, they will develop, which will enable them to pay back their loans.

Therefore, we could have producers benefit from this new legislation which, as I said before, is certainly desirable.

What every producer needs is an orderly marketing which will ensure adequate prices. No matter how many amendments are introduced with a view to making loans easier for young farmers to enable them to start in farming, we shall never be able to interest them as long as they are not guaranteed fair prices for all of their products.

In what way? Well, I believe we can, through legislation such as Bill C-176. The government must be urged to act quickly through the National Council it has appointed to acquaint the provinces with the problems they are facing in the agricultural field. Indeed, it is not always easy to call the provinces together and make them accept a fair production quota for every one. However, I do not think any meaningful progress will be possible if we cannot manage to have the provinces discuss the necessary measures with the federal government.

Five or six months ago, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether he was considering the possiblity of creating a new department, a state ministry for agriculture.

Without in any way underestimating the competence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), I believe that due to the complexities, difficulties and marked differences in the farming industry across Canada, it would have been desirable to seriously consider appointing a Minister of State responsible for eastern Agriculture. I believe the members from Ontario, the Maritimes and Quebec would appreciate such a measure.

And if some day the Minister of Agriculture happened to be from eastern Canada, I believe the western provinces would then be entitled to have a representative who would be called the Minister of State for Western Agriculture.

Of course, in the present context this would enable eastern Canada to be represented as it is entitled to have a voice in the ministers' council on account of the importance of its population and consumption. This would also give the Minister of Agriculture not only an adviser but a direct associate when the time comes for discussing estimates in the cabinet.

The idea was hailed, I believe, by the eastern producers, just as it would probably be by the western producers: once again, it is not a matter of dividing a national legislation. On the contrary. To my mind, by giving responsibilities to one more man, bearing in mind the difficulties and problems existing in the field of agriculture, two heads would be better than one. This has long since been recognized. That would be one way of improving the farming situation. Surely, the government will seriously consider setting up that type of department in the interest of both the Eastern and western farmers.

As a representative of the province of Quebec, I feel that Quebeckers experienced many difficulties last year. Indeed, pork producers and egg producers experienced serious difficulties.

I know also that potato growers have been forced to sell their last crop at ridiculous prices.

As for dairy producers, they find themselves in a rather favourable situation now compared with the previous two or three years.

As for tobacco producers, most of whom are in my region, they have now no serious ground for complaint.

I know also that a number of vegetable growers are experiencing difficulties because of the lack of well organized marketing, definitely because of the policy which has prevailed for a very long time, the law of supply and demand, according to which prices fall when crops are plentiful and increase when there is a shortage. No doubt, this does not favour the protection of the consumer.

I supported Bill C-176 because I thought that the national marketing agencies for farm products could bring about a well organized marketing, which could support adequate prices. And if, after establishing such marketing boards, it should be impossible to obtain reasonable prices, the government would have to pass some legislation designed to set a basic price, if we truly want to give the farmers the same safeguards that the workers enjoy today in many industries.

In my view, the farmer is always worried about the future, because of a lack of legislative measures and of programs offering him some protection. I know that some producers in some provinces have crop insurance. That is not good enough, whatever one may say. The Canadian farmer is entitled to safeguards, as the worker is entitled to the safeguards provided by the unions, which enable him to breathe freely and to sleep fairly well. The same cannot be said of the farmers, even today, and yet that industry has been around for a long time both in Canada and throughout the world.

I am confident that with goodwill and positive comments, we shall succeed in making the government aware of the problem so that it will introduce increasingly better pieces of legislation for the sole purpose of granting to each producer, who has the right to dream, adequate safeguards which he may enjoy as much as the worker.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to show the government the difficulties met for instance by landless producers.

We are quite aware that the feed grain policy was discussed in one part of the country but that it can also be accepted in another. One thing for sure, however, producers throughout Canada certainly have the right to get feed grain at the same rate. And upon such consideration I invite the government, for the tenth time maybe, to seriously consider legislation along that line. This is not easy, I admit.

I had the opportunity of listening to many comments made within the Committee on Agriculture where there is good will and good faith. But must we think that because it is difficult the problem should not be dealt with? And should we accept that producers in some areas of this country be definitely forced to pay more for feed grains in order to turn out the same product?

I venture to believe that in all fairness it is the government's responsibility to introduce as promptly as possible legislation allowing all landless producers—I refer to producers of eggs and fowl, who have had and are still experiencing problems—as well as hog producers to buy feed grains at equal prices. This would allow them to compete on an equal basis with producers in other regions and the legislation could really be called fair. I hope the government will give this particular consideration.

I make this representation, knowing that the Quebec Millers Association has submitted briefs and that hon. members from the east of the country are most anxious to have these changes brought about, in view of the situation of producers in their area. Hon. members from the west are well acquainted with the matter I am now dealing with and certainly hon. members from the east always unhesitatingly supported grants to western regions when they were in trouble. We know this cost the federal government millions of dollars. However, these people needed help and I believe hon. members were quite justified in voting for grants in their behalf.

Quebec benefited by some advantages regarding the Canadian Dairy Commission. For instance, that province received grants of $50 million from the Canadian Dairy Commission. The province of Quebec also receives $10 million for the transportation of feed grains to Quebec.

I give these figures because I must be honest enough to disagree when some people say that the Quebec minister of agriculture has done nothing. I think these remarks have been repeated in the House and as Quebecers we must show more objectivity.

I am one of those who have relentlessly defended Quebec's interests in this House but I am willing to recognize what the federal government has done for the province of Quebec.

In the field of agriculture, I think that the federal government has offered serious co-operation. And when the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) blamed the Quebec minister of agriculture for saying that the federal presence carries much weight in Quebec, I wonder how right Mr. Toupin was. And I am tempted to concur with the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean who is very familiar with the role fulfilled by the federal government in agriculture.

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I have had the opportunity of meeting the Quebec agriculture minister. We were able to ask him a few questions—short ones, because he was very busy. On the other hand the Ontario Minister of Agriculture granted us two days, which was very much appreciated.

As for the statements of the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, I am not endorsing them, far from it. In my opinion, the members of the Committee on Agriculture did a very good job defending the agriculture policy in connection with Quebec.

Of course, as many others, I deplored the $10 million reduction of the grants to the dairy industry made two or three years ago. But upon analysis, we must admit that generally speaking the dairy producers are really in a better position than three years ago and I must therefore admit that, even if this measure was wrong, it was probably necessary as proven by results which we must accept objectively. The farm consolidation program deserves the attention of all hon. members. I have had the opportunity of asking the minister whether he will maintain his national policy; he replied that he was decided to consider the problems and the wishes of the provinces. This reply is most interesting and demonstrates that the minister is prepared to respect the wishes of the provinces as to the consolidation of small farms.

Surely we must support the conservation of the family farms and also admit that a certain number of acres is absolutely necessary for a man to make a living. But we must accept the elimination of a number of producers and farmers.

To let people believe that with 10, 15 or 25 acres they can still make a living is to have the producers dreaming while we are perfectly aware that with the current changes it is impossible to live on a limited acreage as farmers did 30 or 40 years ago.

But between really going in for industrial agriculture and choosing appropriate standards for a man to live on a well-organized family farm, I think it is the government's responsibility to offer those farmers all the necessary means to keep their family farms, in order that their children may continue the operations which supported their parents. Even as a result of serious changes and with the facilities available under Bill C-5, it would be unfortunate to believe that a loan or farm credit policy alone is the ultimate answer.

It is a fact that credit is needed. Everybody knows that. However, what is actually needed is a policy which would guarantee adequate basic prices so that farmers may make a profit. This profit could serve as an incentive for their children to remain on the land and work it after their parents have departed. This is the only way to improve agriculture, to encourage young Canadian farmers to follow in their fathers' footsteps.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, it being five o'clock, I hope that this bill will bring about the results expected, and that this government will continue to propose policies likely to improve the lot of producers in all parts of Canada.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY ACT

AMENDMENT CONCERNING SEAT BELTS IN COMMERCIAL VEHICLES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock) moved that Bill C-17, to amend the Motor Vehicle Safety Act (seat belts), be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Motor Vehicle Safety Act in such a way as to add to public safety on our streets, roads and highways in Canada by including the proposed change which would require in the case of all commercial vehicles, notably trucks and buses, that the equipment, safety restraint seat belts, be mandatory and further that the use of such seat belts by the operators of these commercial vehicles also be mandatory. This legislation is already in effect in the United States on interstate and foreign-operated commercial vehicles. It is already beginning to save lives in that country.

In this country 5,000 Canadians are killed each year on our roads, streets or highways as a result of motor vehicle accidents. No less than 190,000 people are wounded every 12 months on those same streets, roads or highways and the economic toll taken by reason of accidents in Canada is estimated at approximately one billion dollars every 12 months. To give a broader perspective of the significance of the statistics I have quoted, let us extend that thought about the casualties to a four-year period. A four-year period is one which most members of this House are well aware of, as well as many people in the country, because it is approximately four years since the present government took office. I do not want to hold the present government in any way responsible for the slaughter on the highways, but let us consider the toll which has taken place on the streets, roads and highways in Canada in the last four years. In that four-year period 20,000 Canadians would be killed, 760,000 people would be injured on our roads, streets or highways and the economic loss would be in the order of more than $4 billion.

The toll in respect of motor vehicle accidents can be said to be representative of the world's worst war. In my view it demands a great deal more attention than we have given it. This is not a political issue. I know members on both sides of the House and in all the legislatures across the country agree that the damage, loss of life and the economic loss involved day by day in our country is a very great threat to Canada. So, when I say we must take action to attempt to curtail the loss I am not making any particular political expression. Although I do not think this is a matter in which we can bring about a truce or armistice let alone a peace, I think it deserves all our attention.

The three main features in motor vehicle accidents concern the driver, the vehicle and the road or driving conditions. My proposal has to do with two of these elements. In the United States, commercial vehicle accidents involving the vehicles covered by my bill claim 10,000 lives a year with 124,000 persons disabled. In our terms, if we take the usual one-tenth standard with regard to the difference in population between the United States and Canada, this would mean that approximately 1,000 Canadians are killed every year and approximately 12,000 are injured in bus or truck accidents. Toward reducing the loss, the United States department of transport, federal highways administration, in 1970 introduced new regulations providing that seat belts for the drivers of buses and the drivers and co-drivers of trucks and truck tractors must be installed in all motor vehicles used in interstate or foreign commerce which are built on or after July 1, 1971. Older vehicles, manufactured after January 1, 1965 must be retrofitted with seat belts by July 1, 1972. In the news release which was issued in respect of this new regulation it was stated that a landmark provision of the new regulations is the requirement that a motor vehicle which has a seat belt assembly installed at the driver's seat shall not be driven unless the driver has properly restrained himself with the seat belt assembly.

This is exactly in line with what the bill I have brought forward tonight seeks to achieve in Canada; that is, the mandatory equipping and use of safety restraint seat belts in commercial vehicles. I think it is clear to anyone who has considered the situation that the drivers of commercial vehicles, notably buses or trucks, have many lives other than their own in their hands when they are driving these vehicles on the highways. I believe it is obvious that if an accident occurs or a crash takes place and the driver of the commercial vehicle, a bus or a truck, is not wearing a seat belt and is hurled forward or into the roof of the vehicle or ejected from the vehicle, that vehicle would be out of control and would very likely be involved in the destruction of property or possible loss of the lives of people in other vehicles. It has been estimated that the use of proper seat belts in trucks or private cars has cut the rate of fatal accidents by 40 per cent. In this small bill, I am introducing I am simply seeking to make a change in the safety provisions in respect of motor vehicles which I believe is necessary and quite simple to bring about.

We have in our hands in this place this evening the power to save lives, if not by passing the bill, at least sending it to the proper committee for detailed study. This is a proposal to make mandatory the use of seat belts in commercial vehicles. I urge that my colleagues will give this motor vehicle proposal their approval so that it might be considered in committee and improved on if necessary.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? I have listened to the hon. member's remarks. He indicated the purpose of the bill is to require the mandatory installation of seat belts and also their mandatory use. Does the hon. member not concede that there might be a constitutional problem in a federal requirement concerning the use of seat belts?

Mr. Mather: If that should be so, and I do not know offhand whether it is, I believe this would be another reason for allowing the subject matter to go to the committee for detailed study.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) would like to amend paragraph (b) subsection (1) section 4 of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act by adding the following words:

(b)—including equipping motor vehicles with safety belts for mandatory use by operators—

The amendment proposed by the hon. member though commendable lies beyond federal jurisdiction. It would rather be the responsibility of the provincial governments following agreement between them and the federal government.

[English]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, responsibility for the federal government's role and leadership in the field of road and motor vehicle traffic was assigned to the Department of Transport in 1967, following an extensive inquiry into this national problem by one of the parliamentary committees. Preliminary discussions were successfully concluded when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) met with the ten provincial ministers responsible for motor vehicle administration in Quebec city in early 1969. At that conference, the provincial ministers welcomed the suggestion of an expanded role for the federal government in certain fields related to traffic safety, and specifically in the field of traffic safety research, in facilitating international co-operation in the field of safety research, and in developing safety standards for motor vehicles and parts at the point of manufacture.

Consultations between the federal and provincial governments continued, and in September 1969 the Minister of Transport again met with the provincial ministers responsible for motor vehicle administration in Fredericton. At that time, it was confirmed that the federal government should assume responsibility for ensuring the safe design, construction and functioning of new motor vehicles manufactured in Canada and for motor vehicles imported into Canada. Furthermore, it was agreed that the provinces would continue to ensure the safety of vehicles in use, as well as the safety of replacement and additional parts for motor vehicles.

[Translation]

In November 1969, the Minister of Transport tabled Bill C-137, entitled "Motor Vehicle Safety Act", which was passed by the House on March 11, 1970.

Commenting on this legislation, the Canadian Automobile Owners Association in its publication "Program and Resolutions for 1970-71", stated as follows:

The Canadian Automobile Owners Association commends all levels of government for agreeing to enact the Motor Vehicle Safety Act.

The fact that the federal government assumes this responsibility sets up a structure which should help in overcoming safety defects in motor vehicles that may be the direct cause of accidents or of serious injuries resulting therefrom.

[English]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the two main features of this act provided authority for the federal government to enforce safety standards for vehicles manufactured after January 1, 1971 and to require manufacturers to issue notices of safety defects in vehicles in the prescribed manner. Following the enactment of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, the task of developing motor vehicle safety regulations to implement the provisions of the act was commenced. The standards planned by the Department of Transport during the next five years with the objective of providing substantial safety performance improvement in those systems which contribute to the avoidance of crashes will include improved tire safety standards, standards of handling, stability, braking, vehicle controls and display systems, lighting and visibility.

The Motor Vehicle Safety Act provides authority to issue regulations respecting the design, construction and functioning of motor vehicles manufactured in Canada or imported into Canada. Thus, safety standards for seat belts and other safety features of new motor vehicles are prescribed by regulation rather than being specified in the enabling legislation. The Motor Vehicle Safety Act is not concerned with the use of motor vehicles on the road, as this is frequently regulated by the provinces under their highway traffic and motor vehicle acts.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, since the House passed the Motor Vehicle Safety Act on March 11, 1970, changes have been made to that act through amendments to its regulations.

[English]

For instance, the installation of seat belts in passenger cars was made mandatory on January 1, 1971 and it was required that by July 1, 1972 manufacturers instal seat belts in the operator's seating position in buses, trucks, multi-purpose passenger vehicles and chassis-cabs. It can be seen that the federal government has moved quite rapidly in this field to provide greater safety on Canadian highways.

You will also note, Mr. Speaker, that the use of such seat belts is presently regulated by the provinces under their highway and motor vehicle acts. While this falls primarily within provincial responsibility, I understand there is continuous consultation by the Department of Transport officials with their provincial counterparts to attempt to find ways of persuading more people to use seat belts when travelling in their automobiles.

On October 25, 1971, the Minister of Transport announced amendments to the regulations on motor vehicle safety—which amendments are now in force—lowering the acceptable limit of carbonic fumes flowing from automobiles and commercial vehicles exhaust pipes.

Another amendment provided more detailed provisions on the installation of safety belts to ensure greater protection.

Those amendments were published in Part II of the Canada Gazette on October 13, 1971.

On December 15, 1971, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and the Minister of Environment (Mr. Davis) jointly announced a proposed amendment to the same regulations on motor vehicle safety with a view to protecting public health and checking the deterioration of urban environment.

The recommendations contain more drastic provisions concerning the fumes produced by the new gas burning motor vehicles to be manufactured in 1973, 1975 and 1976.

Mr. Speaker, other changes in the regulations were announced by the Minister of Transport on February 22, 1972, March 17, 1972, and April 21, 1972.

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to this bill. It is not my intention to speak very long because I support its intent. I commend the hon. member for introducing it and I hope that it will be referred to the committee for consideration and implementation.

Bill C-17, the purpose of which is to require the equipping of commercial vehicles, trucks and buses, with safety belts in the driver position and to require the use of these restraint belts by the driver to increase his safety and that of the occupants of his vehicle and of other highway users, strikes me as an extremely important provision.

I think that we in Canada unfortunately have far too many highway accidents which entail casualties or very serious bodily injuries. It has been proved that the use of a restraint belt can prevent casualties and many very serious accidents.

I think we must welcome the decisions made by the government in the past few years to improve the safety of Canadians, particularly on our highways.

My colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Clermont), quoted a whole series of measures taken by the government in the past few months to ensure greater safety for people who drive along Canadian highways. I think we must welcome what has been accomplished, and have a right to expect that more will be done in this sphere.

It is frightening to realize that at the present time, the highway toll in North America—Canada included—is higher than that of any war, even a world war. All governments, particularly North American governments, should make every possible effort to improve motor vehicle safety.

I for one always use a safety belt when I drive my car. The type of safety belt I have is European: it is a four-point belt which fastens on the right. And I can guarantee that this type of belt is far more effective and much safer than the types we find on North American cars at present. I suggest that General Motors, Chrysler and Ford study the European types of belt used in Mercedes and Volvos and try to manufacture similar ones. I think that passenger safety would thus be greatly improved.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that we must congratulate the hon. member who presented this bill designed to improve car passenger safety by prescribing the use of better types of safety belts, and I think that all hon. members will agree that every possible step that can be taken to prevent loss of life should be encouraged.

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, again I want to join those who have congratulated the hon. member on this bill. He has shown a consistent interest in this subject over a period of time. I want to say a few things about the basic problem of constitutionality with respect to certain measures that he is proposing, and then I want to talk generally about the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, its purposes, and how the regulations under that act are brought into effect.

The Motor Vehicle Safety Act, which was Bill C-137 and which was passed by this House on March 11, 1970, by the Senate on March 23, and received Royal Assent on March 25, is the authority by which the federal government prescribes certain things by regulation. It provides authority for regulations respecting the design, construction and functioning of motor vehicles manufactured in Canada or imported into Canada. Thus safety standards for seat belts and other safety features of new motor vehicles are prescribed by regulation rather than being specified in the enabling legislation. The Motor Vehicle Safety Act is not concerned with the use of motor vehicles on the road, since this is presently regulated by the provinces under their highway traffic and motor vehicle acts. A few minutes ago, I asked the hon. member who introduced the bill, the hon. member for White Rock-Surrey (Mr. Mather), whether he was aware of this constitutional problem. The federal government, according to the law passed by this parliament, can require the installation of seat belts, but the penalty for failure to use the seat belts has to be prescribed by the provincial authorities. This appears to be the ridiculous situation we have under our constitutional arrangements, one that cannot easily or readily be avoided.

The installation of seat belts in passenger cars was mandated in the initial Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations which came into force with the proclamation of the Motor Vehicles Safety Act on January 1, 1971. In the October 23, 1971, edition of Part I of the Canada Gazette the Department of Transport proposed extending section 208 of Schedule D of the regulations to require the installation of seat belts in the operator's seating position of buses, trucks, multi-purpose passenger vehicles and chassis-cabs. Final regulations mandating seat belts in these vehicles effective July 1, 1972, were approved by Order in Council PC 1972-603 on March 28.

With respect to Bill C-17 the government is requiring the equipping of commercial vehicles, trucks and buses with safety belts in the driver position. While the ministry is studying seat belt use and attempting ways of increasing their useage, presently only the provincial governments would have the authority to mandate their use by operators of commercial vehicles. So, Mr. Speaker, the situation is that, by regulation under the existing act, it is the intention of the government to extend the requirement for new vehicles, and this is presently being done. The requirement that the seat belts, having been installed, would be used presents a much more difficult problem for resolution here.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Motor Vehicle Safety Act was adopted by Parliament as early as January 1, 1970.

The purposes of this act are as follows: First, to set compulsory safety standards for new motor vehicles, in order to protect passengers against injuries or death, as well as against hazards to health caused by exhaust fumes and perhaps by noise.

This act applies to every new motor vehicle as well as to parts manufactured or imported in Canada. Provinces will continue to be responsible for the safety of vehicles in use and for the administration of existing laws.

On November 13, 1970, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) announced that the new Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standards would come into force on January 1, 1971.

These safety standards are part of the Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations published in Part II of the Canada Gazette for November 25, 1970. I am quoting from the press release:

> These regulations first appeared as proposals published in Part I of the Canada Gazette for August 22, together with the regulations on snowmobiles which appeared in the September 19 issue. Manufacturers, dealers, importers and others concerned were given the opportunity to express their views on the proposals. Submissions were carefully reviewed and in some cases the original proposals were altered in the interest of clarity.

The safety regulations include 29 standards for design and performance of passenger cars, trucks, buses, motorcycles and trailers and five standards limiting release of exhaust gases of motor vehicles and 10 applying to snowmobiles. The regulations will be subject to constant review, additions or changes being inserted to keep them up to date and in line with technical progress. The safety standards for tractors and vehicles of that type are now being studied.

Under these regulations, all Canadian motor vehicle manufacturers or dealers must affix the national safety label on any vehicle classified as built after the proclamation date of these regulations. A label attesting that the vehicle meets all federal motor vehicle standards must also be affixed. Vehicles imported for commercial purposes must also bear this conformity label and importers can be authorized to affix it. Canadian manufacturers, dealers and importers may request authorization to affix the national safety label in stipulated places by applying to the Director of the Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety Branch, Department of Transport, Ottawa.

Mr. Jamieson also pointed out that Canadian residents importing vehicles for their personal use must conform to the Act and the Regulations. He stressed that only vehicles manufactured after the proclamation date of the Act and the Regulations must meet all safety standards. Further information on importing vehicles for personal use can be obtained from the Canadian Customs authorities.

[English]

I think the act that was debated at length and passed by this parliament has served its purpose and has been instrumental in introducing a substantial measure of improvement in regulations concerning vehicle safety. We have made a beginning only in this field. Those of the present generation face great challenges; we must improve what has been done.

I commend the hon. member for his bill. I know the matter will not rest here, because the problem the bill raises is fundamental. Even if we were to pass it we would not in my opinion squarely face the problem, a constitutional one, of requiring seat belts to be used. Research will continue in this area. Without question, the value of seat belts has been proven statistically. Accidents still happen in which people strapped in their seats cannot escape from the vehicle and suffer consequently. Although these incidents are rare, they do occur.

As I have said, research will continue and standards with regard to seat belts will need to be improved. More public funds will be required in this area. Without question, we have a major job to do in terms of public authority and regulation in this field.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to say a few words on this extremely interesting bill. Incidentally, I must congratulate my hon. friend from Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) for having introduced this bill and I know very well, in fact I have known him for several years, that he always brought new ideas in the matter of public bills. I think it was a tremendous effort on his part and he is to be commended for that.

As regards tobacco, Mr. Speaker, I believe that he not only broke new ground, but that he was a pioneer for he was among those who had been struggling for years so that legislation on tobacco and smoking would be passed.

There is no need for me to give an account of that. We were among the first countries to concern ourselves with this problem and I believe Singapore already passed legislation to that effect. I hope that we shall follow suit before long I shall always support my hon. friend from Surrey-White Rock on those social measures that would be beneficial to most Canadians.

This bill is somewhat in the same vein as those dealing with social security. It has to do with individual safety as regards seat belts. In a rapidly changing world like ours, there is reason to believe that instead of passing measures which are but poultices, it would perhaps be better to have measures passed by provincial government in an attempt to add as much as possible funds to the budget that would be precisely earmarked for the education of the people in safety matters.

We spoke about that while dealing with smoking. We finally concluded that we had to allocate money to education because it seems that all those social security ideas are based above all on the education concept.

We realized, while considering pollution matters, that it is very well to suggest legislation to prevent pollution, but perhaps it would be even better to encourage people to fight it or to grant funds to public schools to have them teach the young people what they should know about pollution, because, basically, whether the matter is the use of birth-control pills or tobacco, divorce or any other aspect of social security, there is a lack of education.

Even if better seat belts were installed in motor vehicles, I suggest that the problem could not be eradicated, for it is a well-known fact that 80 per cent of the accidents in Canada are caused by drinking drivers. Perhaps we can momentarily protect some innocent people, but we should rather focus our attention on the basic problem which, as I say, is education.

Perhaps we should say that there will be some improvement as concerns seat belts, as stated by my colleague from Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). Apparently, North American motor vehicles are equipped with various types of belts that are not provided in European cars. I think that this point should call for an extremely interesting debate, even at the UN, where the discussion could bear on international seat belts. Since recommendations on the standardization of road signs at the international level might be acceptable, I see no reason why a belt of world-wide use could not be accepted after conclusive tests.

Mr. Speaker, one realizes quite often that there is an improvement in the equipment, although manufacturers have presently a very good one at their disposal. I suggest that we could introduce, as I said, a standardized seat belt.

It is not necessary for me to explain that, in particular when the car is a few years old, those safety seat belts are in a very bad shape. When you open the doors of the car, it often seems that a parachute has fallen there and that its strings are intermingled both on the front and on the back seat.

I should even say that those seat belts can even become a dangerous hazard, especially for young children, when they get into the car. They may stumble over them and break a leg or an arm. Moreover, when those safety belts are not equipped with an automatic system or when they lie about anywhere in the car, they may often be the cause of accidents, especially when you get out of the car and those belts are hanging outside.

In my opinion, this bill, as a whole, is very good. I congratulate once more my friend for his wisdom, for the many sociological studies he carried out. I hope that he did not do them for the people of his constituency only but for the whole Canadian people. One cannot but praise him.

I would like to emphasize the matter of education in this area, as in those related to social security. I believe that the federal government, within its own jurisdiction, especially following the changes which have occurred in our society in the last few years, has made every possible effort to adjust safety measures, particularly as regards to motor vehicles, to this rapid change, to modern life.

On many occasions, the hon. minister has shown his concern with the problem of alcohol related to highway accidents. We should allocate funds to the prevention of the abuse which has caused 80 per cent of highway accidents in Canada.

As my friend from Ottawa-West (Mr. Francis) mentioned, we have enacted regulations on the security of motor vehicles. We have also carried out studies on warning and traffic control devices and also studies, very important in Canada and on the North American continent, on the calcium and sand which is strewn in tons on our roads, destroying the best cars. Whether a car is worth $15,000, $2,000 or $3,000 and whether or not it has received anti-rust treatment, it is inevitably doomed to the dump after a few years, eroded by rust.

That is another factor we should study more thoroughly to prevent cars becoming hazards on roads after a few years' use.

There also, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) issued statements to the effect that a number of surveys had been carried out and that we were on the right road to overcoming the effects of corrosion on motor vehicles.

We also took action about the falsification of labels on cars and I feel sure the federal government has shown its willingness to co-operate, to do its duty but as was said a while ago, the federal government cannot do everything single-handed.

Some aspects of the law involve the provinces, each one having its own responsibilities in this field, although in other spheres it is often the federal government's responsibility to act, at least in some general areas.

We have at all times passed legislation concerning the safety of gas operated vehicles, in order to check on the amount of exhaust fumes. I think this amendment was quite relevant. In fact, in pollution matters, we are faced with a problem that is to be found in Montreal and Toronto as well as in Vancouver. I think the government has done its utmost to settle it. It is in fact a very worthwhile bill and one cannot but approve a wise suggestion, even though it originates from an opposition member.

I feel it is my duty, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate my excellent friend, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. I encourage him to keep on putting on the Order Paper as many public bills as he likes, as we can discuss them in a friendly manner for light will often come from the clash of ideas.

Members of this House are always free to participate in the debates. This does not imply too much, but there has been one case where owing to a private member's bill the name of Trans-Canada Airlines was changed to Air Canada.

[English]

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member agree?

Mr. Isabelle: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, having in mind the sympathy which so many hon. members who have spoken have expressed for the principle of what is proposed and the virtue they see in safety features, together with considering the constitutional questions that have been raised, I wish to direct the following question to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat and other hon. members: Would it not seem reasonable, not to pass the bill but to allow the subject matter to go to committee for detailed study and approval?

[Translation]

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his excellent suggestion. I for one would be happy if this bill could reach the committee stage where we could at last exchange views and perhaps call for experts. I know that committees as well as members are overworked, but they would be very glad, once the committee's work is lessened, to consider this very important bill.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for introducing this bill. I hope he continues to put on the order paper many more good ideas like this one, for I feel sure they might eventually be retained.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Before I recognize the hon. member—

[Translation]

I would like to make a correction. It is perhaps not in order but I want to say that when I recognized the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), I should have designated him under his title, that is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and also designated the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) by his title, namely the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[English]

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, did I understand the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) to say that the government agrees to let this bill go to committee?

Mr. Jerome: I did not get that impression.

Mr. Howe: I thought that was intimated. If that is not the case, I wish to say a few words. I join all those who have congratulated the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) for bringing to the attention of this House social measures which have to do with the welfare of so many people whether they be cigarette smokers, drivers or others. His services to the House have been outstanding throughout the years in focusing our attention on areas of concern in connection with the health and welfare of the people of Canada.

• (1750)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howe: The bill before us directs attention to what is probably the greatest single problem confronting us, the reduction or prevention of death and injury on our highways. Throughout the years efforts have been made to introduce and popularize safety devices—seat belts, improved exhaust systems, more effective bumpers, and so on. All these things are good in themselves but to my mind the most important factor of all is the human element. As the saying goes, it is not the hole in the road that causes the accident, but the nut behind the wheel. We have all driven cars and been subject to little lapses of attention. We have not always paid attention to what was happening on the road. We all know that after a man has been driving for two or three hours on a super highway, he becomes fatigued and there is a danger he will lose track of things and fail to concentrate on situations presented to him.

I was interested to hear the comments of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle). I have always thought that driver education ought to be part of the curriculum of every educational system. I believe provincial boards of education should see that driver training courses are made available in our schools. There is a definite place, it seems to me, for training in driver skills because other than food and clothing there is scarcely anything a person uses more than an automobile. So it is just as important to learn the A, B, C of driving at school as it is to learn the A, B, C of finance or politics.

Some years ago the city of Kitchener instituted courses of driver education in its schools. If I remember correctly, statistics thereafter showed a marked reduction in the number of road accidents. This was because young people had been given proper training in handling vehicles. To my mind, no matter what may be done in the way of encouraging the use of seat belts, installing collapsible steering wheels or air cushions which will inflate automatically when an accident occurs, driver training is the most important factor in the prevention of accidents on the road.

I cannot understand why the federal government does not offer assistance to provinces which institute driver training courses as a regular part of their educational systems. It is likely that all of us have played some part in teaching members of our families to drive, but most of us would agree that the job is best done by an independent person who can instruct one on the rules of the highway and the proper way to handle a vehicle. I believe this is just as important as all the safety features which can be built into automobiles by manufacturers. Driver education should be encouraged and the federal government should give a lead by assisting provinces which incorporate such programs in their educational systems.

Mr. Hees: A fine speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) rise on a point of order? The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Mr. J.-T. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I am a little worried about this kind of proposal, one which will not solve the problem at all. As the hon. member has just stated, what we need is better driving education. Safety belts have proved to be death belts, nothing else. There was a recent case in Montreal where three people died wearing seat belts. It is not a case of providing people with belts; it is a case of educating people to drive properly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I gave the floor to the hon. member for Ottawa East because I thought he was raising a point of order. I think, now, I should give the floor to the hon. member for Ottawa East for the purpose of contributing to the debate.

Mr. Richard: I am very happy to take part, Mr. Speaker, having had very little opportunity to speak. Legislation has been introduced by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) concerning the use of tobacco and other things—matters which in my view have to do with education and should have nothing to do with the imposing of restrictions. It is in the high schools that it would be most valuable, in my view, for our children to be given an opportunity to learn how to drive. Then, again, there is no doubt that 60 per cent of the accidents on our highways are the result of alcohol.

Mr. Isabelle: Eighty per cent.

Mr. Richard: Perhaps it is 80 per cent. At any rate, it has nothing to do with seat belts. Belts account for a large number of accidents.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Richard: The fact that a man is tied down in his seat will not save him from fatal injury. I often wonder whether the hon. member has not sought, by speaking on tobacco, seat belts and so on, to find subjects popular and easy to explain. I am sure the hon. member realizes that the use of seat belts alone will not reduce the death toll on our highways.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hour set aside for private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, the amendment thereto of Mr. Korchinski (p. 1872) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Knight (p. 1903).

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on Bill C-5 and also to give my support to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). I should also like to state that I oppose the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight). So now everything is on the record and we know where we stand.

I suppose the legislation could be supported in principle to a limited extent in that it increases the amount of a loan that may be made, to a farmer to $100,000 from $40,000. It is time the amount was increased because a good many farmers in Canada are expanding their farming units. Some have sons, relatives or partners establishing farming enterprises and they need capital in order to make their farm units viable. So I think this provision in the legislation is at least a step in the right direction. As farm units become larger—they seem to be becoming larger, and by legitimate means—the need for good, sound agricultural credit will play a vital part in coming years.

The minister alluded to the fact that this bill was but a small part of what is called the small farms program. I would be a little sceptical about that statement. I believe the bill can be viewed separately from the small farms program. Whether the legislation is good or bad, I think the small farms program has been put before the Canadian public in such a manner that it will have a very rough and rugged journey for a good while. People in agriculture are becoming increasingly suspicious of government involvement in agriculture, as we have stressed over and over again in this House, especially when the government puts forward a proposed plan in which the farming community is not involved in any way, shape or form.

It is of interest to note that about the only small farm legislation we have is the proposed Saskatchewan land bank. I have before me an article which appeared in the Free Press Weekly, on the proposed land bank. I suppose from one point of view the Saskatchewan government should be given credit for at least putting forward their proposal and letting the farmers decide whether they approved of it. The land bank proposal is known as Bill 110. According to the Saskatchewan minister of agriculture, Jack Messer, it is proposed to establish a Saskatchewan land bank commission. The article to which I have referred is dated May 6 last and is quite critical of this proposed program. I should like to put a few excerpts on the record, but first may I say that I hope the federal plan is nothing along the lines of the Saskatchewan plan. The article reads in part:

On April 24, Roy Atkinson—

He is president of the National Farmers Union.

—expressed misgivings about the legislation. He said in part, "I think the government has lost sight of the fact farmers have a desperate income problem," and in a complete farm policy package, an adequate land bank program would be one element—

Mr. Messer said flatly he looked on the program as a revival of the Regina manifesto of 1933. And he said he was satisfied the present Saskatchewan government wants to socialize Saskatchewan farms.

As I said before, I hope the federal program does not go that far. The article continues:

In fact, farmer opposition to the Messer plan is remarkably widespread and farmers who oppose the land bank proposals are from all political parties.

Mr. Atkinson was then quoted in the article as saying:

• (2010)

One of Mr. Atkinson's pertinent comments was "few of the things a farmer needs to know are yet in sight in the bill except a long list of all the ways he can be evicted, fined or imprisoned if he doesn't keep up his rental payments." Strong words.

In addition the land bank commission would farm land acquired by it from farmers. The Saskatchewan government in competition with Saskatchewan farmers on the land itself.

At least in that case the land bank program, or what has been alluded to as part of the small farm program, will work in that way and this is perhaps the course that the agricultural industry will take. As a member for Manitoba, which is just a stone's-throw from Saskatchewan, I hope we have the foresight in our province to stay away from any kind of program such as this.

An hon. Member: Cast no stones.

Mr. Murta: Hon. members to my left are making quite a fuss, but I do not believe they are making half the fuss the farmers of Saskatchewan will make when they feel the consequences of the legislation being brought down by the Saskatchewan government.

Whether or not we are talking about a small farms program or amendments to the Farm Credit Act, the real question which should occupy the minds of everyone in this House is not whether this is a step in the right direction—because this is only a small part of the whole agricultural situation—but, rather, what is the government doing in respect of a form of crop insurance and, perhaps more important, about some form of price insurance. Those are the questions being asked by the farmers of Canada. The critical question involves crop insurance to give some kind of stability, and price insurance to give some realistic form to the income of farmers.

I suppose we should look at our total economy when we talk about some form of price insurance or some form of realistic prices for Canadian agricultural products. We have what I like to consider as two sectors to our total economy, one being the private sector and the other that sector which services the private sector. What has been happening over the past few years, as all hon. members know, is that the service sector of our economy, which is the largest, has been increasing as a result of wage demands and fringe benefits. That sector has made gains far greater than the gains of the private sector. The private sector includes the agricultural industry as well as a great many other basic industries. The private industries have had no way of absorbing this increased cost except on a personal basis, and the prices they have received for most of their products are just not high enough to sustain a realistic income. This is what we have to consider and this has to be our number one priority.

Let me refer to the prices received by farmers for certain agricultural products. These are 1971 figures representing prices to the consumer and prices to the farmer. They were compiled some time ago, but the comparison is valid. The price to the consumer for a loaf of white bread was 21 cents, but the price the farmer received was 2 cents. The price of pork per pound was between 59 cents and 95 cents, depending on where you bought it, and the price to the producer was 22 cents a pound. A dozen eggs were selling for 47 cents at that time but the price to the agricultural producer was 25 cents. A 42-pound box of no. 1 McIntosh apples was selling to the consumer in the supermarket at $5,50 but the farmers were getting $1.92. A 40-ounce tin of apple juice sold for 48 cents and the farmer was receiving 7 cents. Milk was selling at 35 cents a quart but the producer's price was 17 cents.

Using that kind of table, it is my contention that unless something is done to offset the gains to the service sector of our economy compared to those of the private sector, there is virtually no way to attack this problem other than by granting some type of government assistance to the private sector. We must find some way to slow down these gains and allow the primary sector of our economy to catch up. One might call this assistance direct payments, a two-price system or anything else you like, including a subsidy to the consumer; but this is what we must do. We must look at the situation realistically. This government has made no attempt to view this problem in realistic terms in order to find out how the farmers and others of this primary sector can obtain a greater portion of our gross national product.

The consumer plays a vital role in any agricultural program. Recently, the price for food in the United States has become one of the big election issues which President Nixon will have to contend with before this fall. Consumers must be made to realize that the farmer's share of food prices has been too small. The press in this country could have a role to play in this regard. I do not think it has done anything to explain why there was a final payment for wheat and it has done nothing to explain many other questions of this nature about which consumers read in the newspapers.

Quite often we get the feeling in western Canada—I am sure this must also be the case in the agricultural areas of the east—that all the assistance to farmers is given in the form of gifts or handouts from the government and that the farmers are skimming the cream off the top. It is up to members of parliament, Canadians in general and the press to drive this point home. There has to be a realistic move to increase farm income.

There are four or five ways to approach this problem in respect of farm income. We could charge our export customers more, but we know what happens when we do that. In 1968-69, when the Wheat Board held the price of grain at an unrealistic level, we lost sales. It is the same old story—you buy from the person who sells at the lowest price and on the best terms. At this time I believe it is unrealistic and impossible to think of charging our customers more in order to give farmers more income. We could charge Canadians more for their food. Here, again, we run into consumer reaction to higher food prices. This could be called an additional tax on the poor because it results in an increase in the price of a loaf of bread. For various reasons this is not acceptable realistically nor, at times, politically.

Some people across the country are advocating another method of increasing incomes to primary producers. This would involve a supply-management technique or controlled agriculture. If we had import controls in a supply-management technique we would have to use price controls. If we raise the price of a product within the country, we must protect that price because we sell agricultural products firstly on the North American market and secondly on the global market. If we increase the cost of food to the consumer, if we operate on a supply-management basis in agriculture, one fear I have when considering the provinces is that we would be moving to a supply-management type of agriculture for Canada. I think we will find such a step detrimental to agriculture. So I do not believe the supply-management concept will work in respect of getting more money into the hands of the farmers.

We could do what we are doing now, which is nothing; we could go on basically in the same fashion. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board says farm incomes are glorious; he says they are rising. They are rising; he is probably partially right. But theoretically when you start at zero and go to five, the increase is only five per cent, which is not enough.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is infinity.

Mr. Murta: They started out at infinity in 1968-69. That is the situation we found ourselves in through pricing ourselves out of world markets. The real return to agriculture is not significant. Therefore in my view we have virtually only one solution, which is assistance from the federal government in one form or another. I think we have reached a stage in agriculture when it is right and proper for the industry to ask for this much at least on the short-term, because otherwise we will not have an agricultural industry as we know it now. I believe that is certain. It would seem that a more realistic approach by government must be made to agriculture. As I mentioned before, we sell barley on the world market at 68 cents a bushel. As of late it has been increased to 73 cents. There is an increase but it is still not sufficient; the farmers' costs rise far too quickly.

In conclusion I say that the $100 thousand is, I believe, a necessary step and something for which a good many farmers have been looking. I am not referring to the corporate farmers to whom the members of the NDP refer but, rather, to any farmer who wishes to expand his operation and requires additional capital. I believe this move will be welcomed in all parts of Canada.

I have one final comment. I suggest that the agricultural planners, the people whom we do not see, such as the civil servants and others who draft legislation and establish a great many policies, should ask themselves the basic question—why a cannery often pays more for the label on the can than the product inside the can. I think if we asked ourselves this type of question we would come close to the heart of the problem which has been afflicting agriculture in Canada for a number of years.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to be brief because the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has a 40-minute text prepared and is chewing on the end of his pipe, raring to go.

The bill before us today is to amend the Farm Credit Act. A number of changes are being made to the act. Some are rather significant. There is the raising of the loan ceiling from $48,000 to $100,000. A major change is being made in clause 1 of the bill which would give additional power to the Farm Credit Corporation. But we find that the Conservative party has submitted an amendment to the bill. In the amendment they talk about the interest rate and deferred repayment but include a provision that in order to qualify one must meet certain production standards.

On Thursday last the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) moved a subamendment which would take out the selectivity clause in respect of meeting production standards. I do not know why the Conservative party has to include production standards. What do they mean by that?

An hon. Member: Performance standards.

Mr. Nystrom: The hon. member says they are performance standards. What do they mean by performance standards and selectivity? Last week in the House I recall Conservative members speaking out against selectivity when we were debating the family income security plan, and suddenly today they do a double-take and wish to include selectivity in the Farm Credit Corporation bill. This is part of the Neanderthal approach of the Conservative party. They reach back into the Stone Age and pull out something.

What are these production standards? I ask the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and other members what they are. Does one have to have a large farm or a large loan? Who will judge what the standards are, and who will police the standards? I can see the Conservative party setting up a huge, new network of government bureaucrats policing the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. McKinley: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to inform the hon. member who is speaking that performance means that they simply must live up to the terms of the agreement. The hon. member is now trying to read things into the amendment which are not there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I must inform the hon. member that this is a point of debate rather than a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am glad you had to remind the veteran member of that elementary point, about which a new member such as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) already knew. In the Conservative amendment, young farmers will qualify where they meet performance standards. I am sure many farmers would ask what the performance standards are, who would set them and who would police them. Would someone from the agricultural community, or a civil servant, do the policing? I and the hon. member for Assiniboia who moved the amendment to the amendment which would strike out the unacceptable part, which is selectivity, do not like the amendment brought in by the Conservative party. I know the hon. member for Mackenzie comes from an area similar to mine. We have smaller and different types of farms. Perhaps our farmers would not be able to meet the performance standards the Conservative party would lay down; therefore I do not wish to have anything to do with what is outlined by them.

I was very surprised to hear the hon. member for Lisgar give such high praise to the National Farmers Union. I wonder whether he or the hon. member for Mackenzie are members of that union. I am sure they must be, since they are quoting members of the National Farmers Union. I and most members of my party are supporters of the National Farmers Union, and I sometimes wonder whether members of the Conservative party are speaking out of both sides of their mouths.

As I said earlier, the bill before us deals with a number of measures to amend the Farm Credit Act. The one on which I express some reservation is clause 1 of the bill which would amend section 11 of the Farm Credit Act. It reads:

> The corporation has all the powers necessary to carry out such duties or functions as may be assigned to it by the governor in council in relation to the administration of any agricultural program or as are assigned to it pursuant to any other act of the Parliament of Canada.

Under this clause the government has a great deal of power through order in council to implement new policies with regard to agriculture and the family farm. I think this is a way of attempting to make laws through the back door. This is a plan for small farm consolidation which they call the small farm development program. I do not think this is right. When you are dealing with a plan of this magnitude, one that will affect so many people, such a plan should be discussed here so that members of all parties and all farm organizations can have their say. We should not attempt to bring in this program through the back door, which I suspect the government is trying to do by including clause 1 in Bill C-5 to amend the Farm Credit Act. This bill should be debated in parliament and I hope that when the bill reaches the committee the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) will shed some light on this part of it.

I believe that the small farm development plan would be termed, more correctly, the small farm elimination plan. All you have to do is look at some of the statistics to see what is happening to the small farms of this country. I believe it would be worth while putting some figures on the record. We find that between 1966 and 1971, according to the dominion census which was conducted last year, the number of farms in Canada decreased by 15 per cent, from 430,000 to 366,000. In Saskatchewan, the number of farms declined from 85,000 to 76,000, a drop of 10.2 per cent. This happened right across the country.

With regard to the maritime provinces, the province of Nova Scotia, for example, showed a decrease of 37 per cent. The number of farms in New Brunswick decreased by 37 per cent, and farms in Quebec decreased by 23.7 per cent between 1966 and 1971. This tells us loudly and clearly what is happening to agriculture right across Canada. The family farm is on its way out and the government is attempting to introduce the small farm consolidation plan through the back door. I say they will have a fight on their hands.

All of us in this party have expressed disappointment at the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his budget last night did not include one measly item for the farmers of this country, despite the number of farms having decreased by 15 per cent in the last five years. When I asked the Minister of Agriculture a question about this last week, he rose and in his arrogant and smug manner said, "We are looking after that. Farm income is up this year over last year and that will take care of the situation, so that farmers will not leave their farms as rapidly as heretofore".

I want to remind the minister and the government that in 1970 farm income dropped to an almost all-time low. In Saskatchewan, in 1970, the average net income per farmer was around $1,000 a year. That is a serious situation and it is something the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance should take into account. This is one of a number of indicators which show we are having trouble in agriculture right across the country. To underline the point I am making, I should like to quote to the House the leading paragraph of the 1972 presentation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of parliament by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which they made a short time ago. It reads:

> We meet with you today following a year when the farmers realized income fell to a new, disastrous low—the lowest in dollar terms for as long as comparisons make any sense; in real terms to 73 per cent of what it was ten years previously.

May I remind hon. members that 1961 was also a very poor year in terms of the farmer's income. The presentation continues:

> The forecast for 1972, which we sincerely hope events will disprove, signals a further decline. The cost-price squeeze has achieved a new, startling and damaging intensity.

I believe that what the Federation of Agriculture is saying is entirely true. The situation is not good in rural Canada. Farmers are being squeezed out, farm income is very low—and parliament and this government must do something about it immediately. I think there is a place for a rural society in Canada, a place for the farm, the town and the village. I mention the towns and villages because when you drive through Saskatchewan today you find that every town with the exception of one or two has declined in population since 1965 or 1966. This is due almost entirely to the depression of the agricultural industry, because when farmers are not making money—

Mr. Whelan: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: I realize when members from large urban centres, such as the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan), speak they do not understand what I am saying. But perhaps he can be educated. He is a member from a large urban centre and I understand and sympathize with him.

To go back to the Prairies and to rural Canada, we find that farm income there has dropped rapidly. We find, also, that the small towns suffer, businessmen are closing their doors or laying off workers. People then have to move from the small town or village into the city. In essence, this contributes to the destruction of a life style which I think is very much part of the Canadian society: it is the fabric of our life from coast to coast. This is the kind of life that I want to protect. We in this parliament are entirely responsible for what has happened in western and in rural Canada during the last five or six years.

It is about time the government got off its bottom and did something about the situation in a positive and constructive way. They are putting very little into agriculture. Nothing went to agriculture in last night's budget. The Minister of Finance had the audacity to say that farmers will benefit because when they get old they will benefit from the pension increase, and farmers who have sons and daughters who attend university will benefit from the $50 income tax allowance. The minister also said that we passed the grain stabilization plan. We passed no such plan. That shows how much he knows about agriculture, and I know the Assiniboia constituents will remind him of it.

We must do something about increasing the living standards of farmers and the prices they receive for their commodities. They receive less for a bushel of wheat now than they did in 1949. Look at the price of farm machinery which they have to purchase to produce a bushel of wheat! It has skyrocketed. Also the farmers have been victimized because of increases in the costs of production. What has the government done about this? The Barber Commission Report on farm machinery recommended a series of measures to help farmers and to bring down the costs of production. What has the government done with this report? Nothing. It has shelved the report, which is now gathering dust. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the government is more interested in farm machinery companies than in Canadian farmers. I also suggest to you that the Conservative party fits in the same bag as the government. Shake them up together, dump them out and they are both of the same cloth; it does not make any difference which it is.

We shall have to do some radical things in this country if we want do help the farmers. Reference has been made to the land bank project in Saskatchewan. I invite the hon. member for Lisgar to stop quoting the Free Press Weekly, which I suggest has not been a friend of the farmers. I invite him to come to Saskatchewan, talk to the farmers there and find out what they think about the land bank project of the provincial government. I know that the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) finds the idea intriguing. I know that the farmers in my constituency find it intriguing, and I know the National Farmers Union does not think it is going far enough. They are not opposed to the project for the reason that the hon. member for Lisgar suggests. He is so far off base that it isn't even funny. Again I invite him to come out and talk to the farmers in my province.

Under the project, land will be purchased from older farmers who want to sell their holdings. And leased or sold to younger people who want to take up farming. I point out that the average age of farmers in Saskatchewan is 57 years. Something has to be done to help the younger fellow and this is one of the main purposes of the land bank idea. A second purpose is to make sure that land does not get into the hands of large farmers or of foreign landlords, but to make sure that it goes to the smaller fellow, the guy who needs an extra half-section of land in order to expand his farming operation. My constituents and I are interested in this matter.

Also, in Saskatchewan the provincial government introduced a piece of foreign-ownership legislation to restrict the purchase of land by foreigners. That legislation is now before the agricultural committee of the provincial legislature. It is the kind of radical step that the federal government should be considering and implementing on the national level. There is a whole series of steps that the provincial government, even with its limited jurisdiction, has taken. The federal government should be doing the same things because it has the power to do them, the authority to do them and the necessary revenues. If we are really going to help the farmers, the government will have to start doing some of these things immediately.

The farm machinery companies may not love us, some of the food chain stores may not love us, some sections of the agribusiness may not love us; but we will have to step on some of their toes in order to do something constructive for our farmers. It is the farmer I am interested in, Mr. Speaker, unlike the Conservative party which is more interested in promoting Federal Grain or even some of the farm machinery companies.

Now I would like to make a few remarks about farm debt. I think this is relevant to debate on the Farm Credit Corporation. We are about to raise the maximum amount of a loan from $45,000 to $100,000. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture how this provision will work in connection with co-operative farming. Is a co-operative farm made up of five, six or seven people, limited by the $100,000 maximum stipulated in this bill? Again I would like to quote from the brief presented to the cabinet a short time ago by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Under the heading "Production Co-operatives" we find this passage:

> That both Canadian and provincial governments be urged to provide for production co-operatives to take advantage of government programs as though each individual member of the co-operative operated a separate farm.

I urge the Minister of Agriculture to confirm the fact, when the bill reaches committee, that its provisions will treat co-ops in this manner. If not, Mr. Speaker, we shall have to move amendments to serve that purpose. I wish to make another comment about the $100,000 ceiling provided in the bill. I think that the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson), speaking on this provision a few days ago, said he felt a bit uneasy about the volume of debt that this ceiling could imply. I know that back in 1965 to 1968, when things looked pretty good in western Canada, many farmers borrowed huge amounts of money from the Farm Credit Corporation and other lending institutions. Then the bottom fell out of the agricultural market. As a result, farmers are going bankrupt.

There are farmers in my constituency who have debts that they do not know how to meet. I receive letters from them about this problem, and every time I go to my riding people talk to me about farm debts and wonder how they can repay these loans. I would like to inform hon. members of the House of some figures released last week by the Farm Credit Corporation, showing the percentage of farm credit loans in arrears between 1969 and 1972. From these figures we find that in 1969-70, when the recession began to set in, 11.6 per cent of the loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation were in arrears. In 1970-71 that figure went up to 18.9 per cent and in 1971-72 it went up further to 21.1 per cent.

These FCC statistics reveal very clearly that farmers are in debt and will have difficulty paying off their loans. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that many of them are going bankrupt each and every week on the Prairies and, indeed, right across Canada. I am not saying this in order to reflect on the Farm Credit Corporation but to reflect on government policies that have brought about this situation in Canadian agriculture.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we will soon have to take constructive steps in agriculture if we are to save the farmers. We will have to do something about interest rates. We should have lower interest rates, and interest-free loans for younger farmers and small farmers who want to expand their operations in order to attain viable farming units. This should be done and could be done. We give millions of dollars every year in handouts to large companies, through DREE and other programs; but when it comes to the farmer we are adamant in charging him the going interest rate. This is not just and cannot be maintained if we are to retain the rural way of life in our country represented by the family farm.

There are a number of other topics that I could raise tonight but in essence, Mr. Speaker, I have covered the main concerns of my party with respect to this bill. Previous speakers have mentioned others. The essential and central point is that we must maintain the family farm as the basic unit of production. Over the last few years the Department of Agriculture and its task force have been talking about gradually phasing out the family farm, about consolidating farms, about readjusting agriculture and making units bigger and more efficient. I would like to remind some of these people, the bureaucrats and others who talk about agriculture in terms of GNP, net income and expenses, that we have on the farm people and a way of life that are very important. It is a way of life that must be strengthened, maintained and helped in every possible way.

If we are to help our farmers we must revive interest-free loans for younger farmers and those who want to expand their operations. We must put more and more money into the hands of these people. I remind economists that small farmers and young farmers are the best consumers we have in this country. They will buy machinery, they will buy food and clothing for their children, they will purchase commodities for their farms, they will increase the demand for consumer goods—and in turn we will have more jobs for people in our cities and towns. In this way the whole country will be better off.

For these reasons I urge the government to give agriculture higher priority and to provide interest-free loans to younger farmers and small farmers who want to expand their operations. We must in committee have another look at clause 1 of the bill. I hope government members can explain it to our satisfaction. If they cannot, then I and other members of my party will fight it very hard.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I did not want to let the first reading of this bill go by without saying a few words. I represent the riding of Shefford, a semi-rural, semi-urban area, in which the city of Granby has the largest agricultural co-operative in Canada. Last year, it had in excess of one million dollars' worth of business. It processed the majority of Quebec dairy products, which means that the riding of Shefford could well serve as an example to many others, at least in the field of agriculture.

In dealing with this bill, Mr. Speaker, I should like to use as a source of inspiration the words of one of the greatest presidents the United States ever had, and who said this: It is impossible to spare yourself troubles if you spend more than you earn.

Those who drew up this Bill C-5 certainly did not have the foresight of Abraham Lincoln who was a great statesman, who thought of future generations, contrary to those who drew up this bill thinking only of the coming election.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will allow the consolidation of farms. The government knows full well that its agricultural policy will not enable the average farmer to live off the farm and compete with the others. The owner of the average farm will never survive, because this bill provides a maximum loan of $100,000; this will enable the big farmers to buy out the average farm that is no longer profitable because of the agricultural policy of the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, one would think that the slogan of the present government, just as it was with the preceding governments, is this: Produce today, and go into debt for 25, 30 or 40 years. Buy today yesterday's production with tomorrow's money. Farmers are told: Buy today tractors which were produced yesterday, with borrowed money which you might be able to pay back in 35 or 40 years. Buy today equipment which can be produced today or has been produced yesterday, with money which you will earn tomorrow.

Nobody seems to worry about debts, Mr. Speaker. It would seem that the government does not care about debts, so much so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) was the first, this afternoon, to show Canadians, to show farmers, that one should not worry over debts. I asked him the following question: Has the government forgotten about the national debt? What is the government going to do about the national debt? The Minister of Finance rose, shrugged his shoulders, and looked surprised that somebody should mention the national debt.

Mr. Speaker, the debts with which we burden farmers, the national debt with which we burden Canadians will have to be paid, or they will be absorbed by those who hold mortgages on our economy.

Mr. Speaker, under a Créditiste government, under a Créditiste economy, we would say: Let us produce today, let us finance our production in order to use up in 1972 what we produced in 1972.

Social Credit, Mr. Speaker, suggests four economic solutions.

First, a scientifically social financial system to distribute producers' goods among consumers, according to the needs of the latter. We say that the Canadian economy is made up of two sectors; the public sector and the private sector. We say that the Bank of Canada should be used to finance the public sector, without interest, so that all the savings invested in public works, all the savings that are frozen, paralyzed, or invested in the building of bridges, highways, sidewalks, water and sewer systems, schools, universities, may develop the private sector. If the Bank of Canada ever finances the public sector with interest-free loans that the Canadian people will have to pay back according to the depreciation of public utilities, which will be then unfrozen, cleared from the public sector, the savings will then be made available to the production process or to private enterprise.

Therefore, we will finance public capital through the Bank of Canada and personal savings will finance the private sector.

I will now deal with the other solution. I will explain it tonight. It is entirely suitable to bill C-5; all new production must be financed through new credits.

Mr. Speaker, the Social Credit proposes that means of production be financed through savings, through interest-bearing loans from banks or from individuals who have faith in enterprise or from the caisses populaires. In short, producers will resort to private capital in order to finance means of production such as lands, plants, machinery or any other capital expenditures used in production or used by the private sector as is largely practised today.

Mr. Speaker, before elaborating on this explanation that any new production must be financed by new interest-free credits, I would refer to a basic document written by Major Douglas entitled Social Credit Textbook and which, at page 70, offers the following solution to the producer's problems, and I quote:

[English]

—another reason for the disparity between purchasing power and prices is the recall and cancellation, before the goods are sold, of the credits that brought them into existence. ... the credits required to finance production shall be supplied, not from savings, but by new credits relating to new production, and shall be recalled only in the ratio of general depreciation to general appreciation—

The application of this second principle prevents the flow of savings into production and redirects it back to its proper purpose in consumption. All reproduction will then function on credits created for the purpose, and these will be repaid as at present.

Mr. Speaker, we say that when the farm production is ready it may at all times meet the consumers' needs, in other words fulfil its objective. We say that there is a time-lag between the processing of a product and its consumption. This period of time is the inventory which represents billion of capitalized dollars and which are today quite a heavy burden on our producers.

In the future, we will accept that production reaches consumption but between production and consumption, between the transportation of finished product and consumption, today's producer becomes a victim to the strongest which are often able to eliminate the competitive producers. A deficiency in the financial mechanism at this stage of production plays into the hands of the stronger to the disadvantage of the weaker.

Mr. Speaker, we have only to consider the devious means used by many larger producers against smaller ones to realize that because the present system does not provide interest-free financing for all stages of production up to the ultimate one, that is consumption, a large number of bankruptcies occur among a large number of competent small producers. This, by the same token, eliminates healthy competition to the benefit of large producers who can obtain easy credit from banks and turns to the advantage of large producers but to the prejudice of smaller producers as well as of consumers.

Mr. Speaker, let us take for example the case of potato producers in New Brunswick who, come autumn, have to store their potatoes in cellars. They have a large production on their hands and a large debt to the bank. New federal credit facilities are not available for the latest production. Some time or other, the bank's manager requests the repayment of the debt. What happens then? In New Brunswick, for instance, someone who is shrewd enough to avail himself of the opportunity, can buy out, each autumn, the whole potato crop for a song because producers have to meet their loan repayments to the bank before their crop can be sold.

The same story happens also, Mr. Speaker, in other fields of production.

We need only consider maple syrup. In May or June, maple syrup producers in Beauce, because they have to pay their loans back to the bank, must sell their production to a certain dealer of the province of Quebec who is taking over maple syrup production.He buys it from the producer who has exhausted his credit with the bank and sells it in the fall for three times the price he paid for it.

If the Social Credit principle that any new production must be financed by new interest-free credit had been applied, the Maple Syrup Producers Association could have obtained interest-free credit on its maple syrup, a guaranty on its assets, its wealth, pending consumption. This way, the maple syrup producer would not be in the power of a few parasites who exploit both producers and consumers.

Many lumber contractors sell the outcome of their labours for peanuts because they cannot wait until their production has reached the consumers. How many producers are in danger of losing their whole production! They must sell to the first buyer available. They have always been exploited they cannot sell their production higher than cost and make a profit.

Mr. Speaker, I recall being in the Maritimes where I found that fishermen who had made good catches had to sell their fish for 3 or 4 cents per pound to parasites who got better terms from the banks. The fishermen who did not have the facilities to store their catches, prepare it for sale or can it, were at the mercy of the middlemen.

Producers of wheat, apples or potatoes and fishermen, both eastern and western, do not get interest-free loans which would enable them to survive until their production reaches the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, Social credit proposes a solution which would consist in giving the consumer the necessary purchasing power to buy the production. Even if I had all the necessary purchasing power to buy maple syrup, I would have to buy it according to my needs. That is why there is a time lapse before the producer can sell his commodities. This is also the reason why in the field of agriculture as in others, that from the time a tractor is manufactured up to the time it is sold to a farmer, there elapses a period of six, eight, nine months or even one year.

What happens, then? Manufacturers borrow money on which they pay interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month or the equivalent. This financial charge is added to the price of the tractor. In short, the consumer always pays in the end. Is it the producer's fault if he must wait for consumers?

This is why we, Créditistes, are saying that when production is ready for consumption it is social and precisely because it is social social credit must finance new production in order that it may reach the consumer and prevent all those parasites in our economic system from coming between the producer and the consumer.

[English]

An hon. Member: Free enterprise!

• (2110)

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I am for the free enterprise system but I am against the fact that some people, because they can get loans from banks, act not as private producers but as exploiters. On the one hand, they exploit producers and, on the other hand, they exploit consumers.

It is ridiculous to see that, during the ten years I have been sitting in this House, the government has introduced at least five bills on farm credit. At certain times, today for example, they say that farm credit must be developed. At other times they say that the interest rate on farm credit must be increased or they introduce another bill whose only purpose is to get the farmer into debt rather than enable him to free himself from those who exploit him between production and consumption.

Mr. Speaker, tonight I am taking the case of farmers because we are considering Bill C-5. But this system of exploitation between production and consumption exists in all areas of our economy. How many manufacturers of furniture, for instance, could compete with big firms, if they could get credit on their inventory! But today, what do we see? At the end of every month, when the producer signs his form 88 for the bank, the banker becomes the owner of the producer's inventory. And no matter whether the goods are sold or not, delivered or not, paid for or not, the banker tells the producer: Repay your loan to the bank. This means that he demands that the money gets back to the bank before the producer is able to sell his production to the consumer.

This is the system in which we live, anti-scientific, "anti-private enterprise", which only allows parasites which come between production and consumption, to control, to exploit both.

There are quite a few other such examples we could give. That is why Major Douglas suggested a solution designed to finance public capital through the Bank of Canada so as to free our savings for the financing of private enterprise. That is why Créditistes are saying: We respect private enterprise. We believe in competition rather than in a system like ours in which a few individuals control our economy.

When I hear some people denounce the present capitalist system, I claim that it is through ignorance, since we are not living under a capitalist system but under a system of free economy where might is right, where some can stifle others, whereas under a Créditiste system, we would enable the small producer, by granting him credit on his production pending consumption, to enter into competition with the large enterprises. It is not the case today.

That is why we kick about prices and inflation. It is said that all prices increase. Why? Because in some sectors of our economy we have reached a point where monopolies do anything they wish with prices. They are the only ones on the market. They set the prices they want. Why? Because when the small producer who is competent, ingenious and capable starts a business, he does not have the financial means to support his inventory and continue production. Only monopolies and cartels are able to support inventories, and there is not a single political party in this House, except the Créditistes, that suggests a solution to help the small enterprises without causing any harm to the large ones, to allow small enterprises to stand the competition of the large ones.

For instance, the machinery manufacturer who supports an inventory of $500,000 starts production in January, makes his delivery in August and September and gets the money from his customers in December and January. Which means that during one year, he must finance production, delivery and collection. This is why we no longer see any small producers able to face competition. They bust before the giants, the tycoons of production.

But Social Credit proposes a solution according to which any new production must be financed by new credits. In other words, when a producer has an inventory of $100,000, he may get credit interest free so as to be able to keep on producing, while waiting for his products to reach the consumer and that he may receive some cash and pay back—

Mr. Rose: This is an even more capitalistic system.

Mr. Rondeau: This is absolutely false. My hon. friend of the New Democratic Party says that this is an even more capitalistic system. It is precisely the reverse, it is false. Absolutely the reverse, it is true, I beg to differ.

Allowing small producers to produce and compete with the big ones, keeps the big ones down and allows the small ones to live. Whereas today, whatever control you set up, as the socialists are recommending, and if tomorrow morning the government takes over production in Canada, without small producers—

Mr. Rose: That is what Socialism is.

Mr. Rondeau: That is what you recommend. It is precisely because it is Socialism that we are in disagreement.

Mr. Rose: We heard you.

Mr. Rondeau: They have understood nothing. I disagree. We believe in the capitalist system, but not the present system. The New Democratic Party system is wrong. We are not living under a capitalist system now.

Mr. Rose: We are living under a free enterprise system.

Mr. Rondeau: We are living today in a system of economic liberalism where the big fellows stifle the small ones. That is why—

Mr. Rose: This is what the hon. member wants, free enterprise.

Mr. Rondeau: No, not free enterprise, but private enterprise. This is a different thing. The hon. member does not understand the difference between private enterprise and free enterprise.

Mr. Rose: The hon. member wants free enterprise at any cost.

Mr. Rondeau: I think that this evening I have touched the New Democrats on a sore point, because they have no solution to suggest for the production system. Their only solution is to monopolize and nationalize.

Mr. Rose: This what the hon. member wants.

Mr. Rondeau: No, this what my hon. friend wants; what we want is to enable more producers to survive within the framework of production. We want more producers to be able to face competition and to live on the outcome of their efforts.

Mr. Rose: What happens when they grow bigger?

Mr. Rondeau: Nowadays we fail to recognize the merits of the small producers; we stiffle them because they do not have the financial ressources which would permit them to carry inventories and compete with big enterprise.

Mr. Speaker, according to the social credit concept, new credit extended against finished products will be reimbursed through consumption and sales—

Mr. Rose: We will all be big producers, like Premier Bennett!

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, we are in favour of competition and free enterprise, not for free enterprise—

Mr. Speaker, the Créditistes have a solution to offer in the field of finance because they have detected the problem. Without becoming socialists, we are in favour of private enterprise. We want to respect the small producers and we are offering a solution to the financial problems of today's small producers. We offer a solution for the financing of public capital as well as private enterprise and inventories which would allow producers to live in a private enterprise system.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, after hearing our colleagues in the other two opposition parties tonight, I wonder how outnumbered one can get when it comes to the position of agriculture whether in Quebec, British Columbia or anywhere else.

Farm credit and its provision is, of course, a necessary part of agricultural policy. There has been no argument about that from any member of the House since the debate started. The question really is: To what ends will farm credit be applied and used? It is all very well to increase borrowing capacity to $100,000, but if this means an interest bill of between $7,000 and $8,000 a year to a farmer operating one or two sections of land whose net income is only $7,000 or $8,000 a year then, to quote the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), it is the road to bankruptcy.

If no more than farm credit is incorporated into the policies of this government or of any government, then we will continue down the road that has been deliberately trodden by the present government and the Conservative government before it, that of reducing the rural population of Canada. Unless farm incomes are sufficiently high to carry interest costs and repay principal, then the farmers are not only being led into bankruptcy but unless farm costs are held down as well, the cost-price squeeze accomplishes the government's objective of eliminating people on the land. That can be the only purpose of the present government. The practice of the government has been to denude rural Canada.

The government says its policy is to produce a viable agricultural industry. Farmers can be more efficient, says the government, if there are fewer people on the farm. If there are fewer people on the farm, then of necessity you must depopulate towns, villages and small cities. This is the risk the government is prepared to take in the name of what they call efficiency. In order to bring about this efficiency, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is prepared to give to farmers a credit of $100,000. If they live long enough to pay it back, fine. If they do not, the government will write it off and will be rid of yet another farmer.

Both the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang)—and may the Lord continue to save us—and the Minister of Agriculture have repeatedly rejected the recommendations of the task force on agriculture. Repeatedly they have said that report is not government policy, that the task force recommendations are only a report. But every piece of legislation that the ministers have brought to this chamber since that report was brought down has been designed to implement the task force recommendations and conclusions.

Once again we have a sneaker in this bill. Under clause 1 the Minister of Agriculture is sneaking in in his sneakers. He has yet to present any legislation detailing his so-called small farm redevelopment program. If he gets his way in this bill he will empower the Governor in Council to implement the program without this House or any farm organization even seeing the program beforehand.

An hon. Member: Why don't you people shut up?

Mr. Benjamin: If hon. members behind the curtains are going to start heckling me, perhaps they would come out front and do so. The other little sneaker that the Minister of Agriculture has in this legislation is that he will be able in his own way to duplicate services that are now provided by several of the provinces, whether they be ag-rep services, lending services, grants, loans for various operations such as hog raising, and so on.

This is a catch-up operation on the part of the federal government. The federal government is behind certain provinces in the country. I am not giving all the credit to Saskatchewan and Manitoba; there are one or two other provinces that the federal government is behind and this program is the Minister of Agriculture's way of trying to catch up without bringing in legislation. He can also use the program as a club over the heads of the other provinces, or as a bargaining lever.

In this regard I was very interested to hear the remarks made by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) who quoted what the National Farmers Union had to say about the program. A couple of weeks ago I heard the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) ask the minister in charge of the Wheat Board whether, as a result of the sale of the national grain company to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, he could arrange for the boxcars and shipping orders assigned to Federal Grain to be divided among the other grain companies.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Benjamin: So here we have the hon. member for Mackenzie as the friend of the private grain companies. When the private grain trade bought up other private companies, I do not recall any Tory asking whether or not their shipping orders and boxcars would be divided up, but it is a different story with the wheat pool.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Crowfood (Mr. Horner) on a point of order.

Mr. Horner: While I do not want to constrict in any way the socialist party of Canada, surely the hon. member should stick to the question at hand, which is the lending of larger sums of money to farmers. This bill is not concerned with the grain trade and with whether or not a wheat pool bought out a private industry or a private grain handling company bought out a wheat pool.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think to some extent the hon. member for Crowfoot has made a point. However, I think there is a relationship between farm credit and matters that affect the farming community generally and I think the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is in order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Crowfoot for raising that point. If he had raised it in the middle of his own speech he would have had a point of order. I repeat the point I was making. Members of the official opposition have been running around this chamber for the last couple of months trying to be on both sides of this question. But they can no longer have it both ways. At least my colleagues to my left, who are on the extreme right, take a position. However, when it comes to farm credit, on the one hand the Tories are saying that they have to protect the family farm and in the next breath they say, "But don't let those farmer-owned and operated outfits get too big, because this will mean they won't need as much credit, that there will be less need for the Farm Credit Corporation".

I was interested in the speech of the hon. member for Lisgar who spoke about small farms and I hope that he meant what he said this afternoon. Because if he is correct and if—heaven forbid—we ever have a Tory government again, then the national grain company will have to get out of the business of hog raising. Make no bones about it, Mr. Speaker, it must be one or the other.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Horner: Let me make it abundantly clear to you and the House, Mr. Speaker, that the national grain company and Mr. Heffelfinger are not friends of the Tory party. Mr. Heffelfinger is more of a Liberal party bedfellow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Crowfoot is entering the debate.

Mr. Benjamin: I am glad to hear that the Tory party is not in bed with the national grain company, or Mr. Heffelfinger or with the hogs.

Mr. Horner: That is exactly right.

Mr. Lang: He didn't say that.

An hon. Member: You have your Waffles.

Mr. Benjamin: We are kind of proud of them because they at least say what they are.

An hon. Member: They are pretty hoggish, too.

Mr. Benjamin: It is the ones who waffle from one side to the other that bother me. Just for the hell of it, Mr. Speaker, let us get back to farm credit. The hon. member for Lisgar quoted the president of the National Farmers Union. There is a real right-wing Tory for you and I find it amusing that if they want to be on both sides of the question they have to quote the president of National Farmers Union.

What the Tories forgot to quote from the president of the National Farmers Union is that the whole question of farm credit and the Farm Credit Corporation is not much good unless we have a national government that will do something about farm income and farm costs. Unless that happens, it does not matter whether we have the Grits or the Tories—and we have had one or the other for over 100 years. In the last 25 years, in spite of protests by the so-called Tory cowboys from the Prairies we have lost 400,000 family farm units in Canada. That has happened since 1945 even though we were unlucky enough to have a Tory government instead of a Liberal government during part of that time. Nothing changed when we had a Tory government.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). He made a speech today which I thought worthy of his holding an NDP membership card. I hope that statement does not cost him any votes. I am glad he said several things about farm efficiency and farm income, but I wonder why he did not ask why the farmers who increased their efficiency so much did not reap some of the benefits of this free enterprise system. Why did they lose so many family farms in Saskatchewan while at the same time productivity increased?

Unless the nation is prepared to approve subsidies directed at increasing farm income, farm credit goes down the drain. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) put his finger on the situation when he said that something had to be done about farm income and farm costs because the policy of $100,000 in loans at 7 per cent or 8 per cent interest is a policy of bankruptcy.

There must be a substantial change in policies for rural Canada. Any government of this country must realize there is something fundamental, civilized, human, decent and economic about a viable rural community. I am not talking just about farms but the towns and villages that service them, the small cities that service the towns and villages and the factories in those large cities that service the small towns, villages, farms and so on down the line.

Many countries in the world deliberately use part of their natural wealth to keep people out of metropolitan centres. Many of my friends in this House have suggested that if for no other reason than to save dollars we must maintain these people on the land. There is another reason for keeping the people on the land even if you have to subsidize them two or three years out of five. It is more civilized, justifiable, humane and it saves dollars to keep them on the land rather than move them into Saskatoon, Regina, Toronto, Winnipeg or anywhere else. And that is where they want to be.

I wish the Minister of Agriculture were here during the debate on his bill, because he is the one who refuses to do anything about farm costs. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and myself raised the matter of fertilizer costs. We pointed out that farmers in Ontario and the western provinces are suffering at the hands of a cartel. At that time he shrugged his shoulders and said that if we had anything more than hearsay, he would be glad to look into it. I asked him to look into the situation a year ago. I sent him evidence of a fertilizer manufacturer in the city of Edmonton, Imperial Oil Company—which is another friend of our Tory-type farmers—selling fertilizer in Saskatchewan at $20 a ton more than is paid for it in Montana. I think the name of the place in Montana is Deadwood, and that is where the Tories should be. When I wrote the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Mazankowski: Can you write?

Mr. Benjamin: My secretary wrote it by hand. When I wrote the Minister of Agriculture I sent him copies of customs certificates, purchase orders and bills of lading showing that it costs $20 per ton more for fertilizer in Saskatchewan than it does in Montana, 350 miles further away from the factory. The Minister of Agriculture, who is that great friend of the farmers—the minister who along with his colleague the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt is going to save the family farm—wrote me a letter on August 10 in which he said:

> There are a number of companies competing for the fertilizer market in Canada and the absence of any import tariff also allows competition from abroad, thus preventing any one supplier from cornering the market.

If you will pardon my French, that is a bunch of crap. There are no companies importing fertilizer into Canada, but the companies that are manufacturing fertilizer, including the one in Medicine Hat from where the Minister of Agriculture comes, in Edmonton and Calgary are selling it in the three prairie provinces at $20 to $30 a ton more than you have to pay for it in North Dakota, South Dakota or Montana.

Mr. Horner: What are the co-ops doing about that?

Mr. Benjamin: The co-ops are doing something.

Mr. Horner: What?

Mr. Benjamin: They depend on their suppliers, and if they sell it at a lower price the suppliers will discontinue the supply. If you want to put that to the CPR and other suppliers, I invite the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) to do so.

Mr. Horner: I will, because I do not believe your words.

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister of Agriculture can loan $100,000 to every farmer in western Canada at 7 per cent or 8 per cent—

Mr. Horner: And you will support it.

Mr. Benjamin: —but when it comes to paying $7,000 or $8,000 interest per year on those loans, that is a different story. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will continue to follow free enterprise policies in respect of agriculture, most of which were brought forward by the Tories when they were in power.

An hon. Member: This guy is a Waffle. Laxer will take care of you.

Mr. Horner: I wonder if Stephen Lewis knows about you. I did not say David; I said Stephen.

Mr. Benjamin: That is why he is not here. These private enterprise agriculturalists amuse me. They say they are bright, individual, free-wheeling types who brought themselves up by their own bootstraps. This reminds me of the private enterprise, big-wheeling rancher who complains about the land bank in Saskatchewan while he is sitting on 80 sections of Crown land.

Mr. Horner: Is that Alf Gleave?

Mr. Benjamin: No. Alf sold all his land, all one-quarter section of it. But the big enterprise, private agriculturalist, whether Tory or Liberal, is the one in Saskatchewan and southern Alberta who has been sitting on 50, 60 or 80 sections—it is easier to keep track of it by townships—of Crown land. It is this type of person who tells us he brought himself up by his own bootstraps. The son obtained the land from the father, the father obtained it from the grandfather and the grandfather stole it from the Indians.

These are the private enterprise agriculturalists who brought themselves up by their own bootstraps. I have listened to these fellows since I was knee high to a blade of grass. The Liberals and Tories always talk about the independent, free enterprise agriculturalists. For the past 25 years while they have been talking, we have lost half our family farms.

The Minister of Agriculture will try to sneak in his small farm development program. There will be some noise from the other private enterprise agriculturalists, but he will try to sneak this in in clause 1 of the bill without parliament having seen any legislation. It is not only a matter of the people who are trying to save family farms getting elected in the next election; it is more important that we get rid of the Tories and Liberals who have destroyed rural Canada during the last 25 years. We have had instances of private enterprisers talking about lending money to farmers at 7 per cent or 8 per cent and then killing them with rising prices and farm costs. We will support a $100,000 loan.

Mr. Korchinski: Handled by the credit union.

Mr. Benjamin: You bet. I hope the credit unions get all the lending business, and I hope the private banking friends of the hon. member for Mackenzie, the loan and trust companies, go belly-up tomorrow. So far as I am concerned, farm credit should be handled and operated entirely by the co-operative movement in the three prairie provinces, and I challenge my friend from Mackenzie to argue that point with me.

Mr. Horner: Challenge me.

Mr. Benjamin: I will.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: I shall finish off with the Liberals because the Tories are still sounding like 1890. They are trying to be all things to all people. I want to mention one other item which I believe has been overlooked in this debate, although I may be wrong. Under the provisions of the bill, the maximum loan is $100,000. I wonder whether anyone has thought about this in relation to the Veterans'

Land Act under which the maximum one may borrow is $40,000. The Veterans' Land Act requires assets as security. I ask the government why it is increasing the borrowing capacity under the Farm Credit Act and is not doing the same thing in respect of the Veterans' Land Act.

Mr. Korchinski: And the credit union.

Mr. Benjamin: And why is the credit union not doing all the lending? The Minister of Agriculture, of course, will answer that a veteran who has reached the maximum of $40,000 under the Veterans' Land Act can transfer it to the Farm Credit Act and borrow up to $100,000. That is perfectly true. But surely the veteran should have some special, built-in privilege. May I correct that and say he should have some special, built-in "right". Under the Veterans' Land Act it takes too long to have a loan processed. The process is too long and the land gets away; someone else buys the land in the time it takes a veteran to transfer his application from the Veterans' Land Act to the Farm Credit Act. Why should there not be equivalent amendments to the Veterans' Land Act? Surely the veteran should be given a special right and privilege in this regard.

Other groups can increase their holdings and assets under the Farm Credit Act. Unless the government brings in equivalent or even better changes under the Veterans' Land Act, the veteran will have no choice but to transfer his borrowing power to the Farm Credit Corporation. This would take some time. Some of these veterans have been established since the end of the Second World War. They are being left out of the deal. Surely there should be an amendment in respect of their legislation which would be equivalent to or better than the amendments to the Farm Credit Act. I ask the minister or someone speaking on his behalf to reply to this matter in the House, or at least to do so before the committee.

Despite what the Minister of Agriculture said, any amendment to the Farm Credit Act will not be sufficient unless we have a national government which will do something about farm income and costs in order that farmers will be able to obtain and repay the kind of loan the minister proposes for them.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight). I assure the House that I shall not be long. I shall not delay the passage of this bill to any extent. I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is some meaning to the words "where young farmers meet performance standards". We see a number of programs brought forward by the government from time to time. I refer to programs such as the Opportunities for Youth program in respect of which I believe most prairie members and Conservative members feel there are not enough criteria which must be met. It has been said that this really does not matter, that the programs have met certain standards and have passed certain boards.

We believe that the government is handing out bonuses to industry, and I call them just that. Last night, in the budget, big and small manufacturing industries received a reduction in income tax, which will do nothing other than encourage big business and big industry to modernize their plants, put in one more machine and lay off two men. That is all it will do. We do not see all kinds of government bonuses being handed out to people in the agricultural industry.

Because of the high average age of farmers, only 2 per cent of loans made to date under the Farm Credit Act have been made to farmers aged 25 and less. I see some members shaking their head. I suggest they check the evidence and they will see that what I am saying is true. Let them look at the Dominion Bureau of Statistics farm credit analysis publication, where they will see that 2 per cent of the loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation are to farmers aged 25 years or less.

We must make special provisions to encourage young people to return to agriculture, because the average age of the farmer at present is 58. The small farm development program is ineffective, yet the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) says he will go ahead with it. A detrimental measure was proposed in Saskatchewan which in essence would nationalize farms in that province. As reported in the Winnipeg Free Press, Mr. Messer, the minister of agriculture of the Saskatchewan government, said he wants to socialize Saskatchewan farms. He does not beat about the bush.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is what the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) wants to do.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) said they will not support our amendment. They want to socialize farms in the whole of Canada, not only in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Horner: I quote from the Winnipeg Free Press:

> Mr. Messer said flatly he looked on the program as a revival of the Regina manifesto of 1933. And he said he was satisfied the present Saskatchewan government wants to socialize Saskatchewan farms.

Mr. Speaker, I hear some nattering behind me from the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre said, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar sold his farm, so why should he worry now? I have reason to believe that he is living in the penthouse of one of the better apartment buildings in Ottawa, so why should he worry?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: It is a double point of order, Mr. Speaker. First, I wish to correct the record. The hon. member for Crowfoot was not right when he quoted me; he was incorrect. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar did not sell his farm; he sold his tractor. My second point of order is to ask you to rule now whether the point of order which the hon. member for Crowfoot raised would not be in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I respectfully suggest that the first was not a point of order. As to the second one, I think the hon. members are equal.

Mr. Gleave: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) for complimenting me on where I live. Let me point out that he happens to live in the same place.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: This is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. We are debating a serious piece of legislation which concerns the lending of money to younger people. The age is lowered from 21 to an unspecified age depending on the law in each province. The age may be 19 or 18. In fact, in most provinces it is 18. I am dealing with our amendment and the subject matter of the poor, weak and inept amendment moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

As to the idle remarks of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar who suggested that I live in the same apartment block as he does, I do not deny that. However, I live on the third floor, while he lives in the penthouse. Do I know what is going on in that apartment? I am not debating whether he sold his tractor or his farm. He knows what he sold. Furthermore, his constituents will know what he sold. They will know whether he has divorced himself from the land. If he will have a farm sale and call in an auctioneer, I would like to offer myself as auctioneer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has two or three minutes left, and I respectfully suggest that we return to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to the remarks you made when I drew your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre did not stick to the subject matter of the bill when he said that the wheat pools had been bought out by the private grain companies. Then he said I was not dealing with the subject matter of the bill and raised a point of order. In fact I was dealing with the bill. Then, Mr. Speaker, you said that we were both equal. To me this lends nothing to the debate. I do not want to cast reflections upon your ruling—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot knows that when the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre raised his point of order, I ruled in favour of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre and indicated that generally speaking when hon. members were dealing with agricultural matters they were relating them to farm credit. When the hon. member for Crowfoot was speaking, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre raised a similar point of order and I then ruled in favour of the hon. member for Crowfoot. I think hon. members were in order, generally speaking. It is a very wide-ranging debate.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

MANPOWER—LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—FUNDS ALLOCATED, AMOUNTS SPENT, APPLICATIONS RECEIVED BY PROVINCES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on February 25 I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Perrault) whether he would be prepared to make public the allocation of funds under the Local Initiatives Program for each province, and whether he would also be prepared to make available at the earliest possible date information on the amount of money spent in each province and the total number of applications received from each province under this program. On a number of occasions I consented to postpone taking up this matter in the adjournment debate. The most recent occasion was last Thursday night when the parliamentary secretary asked if I would postpone raising the matter that night. I can understand why he did so: it was because the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) had another announcement to make the next day about the extension of the program.

I have taken note of some of the information that has been made available since that time both by way of news releases and answers to questions posed in the House by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and myself. It has been revealed that $152 million will be spent under the Local Initiatives Program, on the basis of present information and before the extended time and amounts are taken into account.

I think it is worth while to take note of some of the distribution of these expenditures across Canada. In analysing some of this material we find that a high percentage of these expenditures was made in the Atlantic provinces and in the province of Quebec. Some 42 per cent of the total amount available under LIP was spent in the province of Quebec and 21 per cent in the four Atlantic provinces. In both cases these figures were considerably higher than the proportion of unemployment in those provinces in relation to total unemployment in Canada. There was one answer given to the hon. member for Winnipeg North that I found rather disturbing. That was the answer to the question:

What criteria were used in the provincial allocations for both municipalities and local groups?

The answer was:

The allocation was made proportionate to unemployment in the provinces to the base rate of 4.5 per cent unemployment and adjusted for out migration and native population that would not otherwise be reflected in unemployment figures.

In addition to the use of the unemployment figure itself, this of course is quite valid and in line with what some of us have advanced for some time, that account be taken of the out migration factor and of native population because they are not included in the normal labour force figures. However, I submit that these criteria do not take account of other factors in the economy, particularly of the underemployment that we have in some regions of the country.

The fact is that income levels are lower in some parts of the country than in others—in the prairie provinces, to give one example—and these lower income levels are a reflection of underemployment, which means only partial employment or something different than a straight unemployment figure. This should be taken into account as well. Also, there are different characteristics in the labour forces of the various provinces. No account is taken of the fact that in some parts you have different participation factors in the labour force, particularly as a result of the rural-urban ratio of the population. Where there is a higher rural ratio this will mean a lower formal participation factor in the labour force as a whole. This factor should be taken into account.

I find that only 2.8 per cent of the total program expenditures have been allocated to my province of Saskatchewan. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that while recognizing some of the problems in other parts of the country, we have a case that must also be considered. We have needs and problems that deserve consideration. But we find that whether it is the regional incentives program, some of the manpower programs or LIP, we are not getting our fair share of the programs. We find that a very high percentage of the program expenditures are going to the province of Quebec. I have to say this, while recognizing the serious nature of some of the problems that exist in that province. For example between July, 1971, and February, 1972, 61.1 per cent of all industrial incentive grants went to the province of Quebec.

Last week we had an announcement by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that the Local Initiatives Program was going to be extended until September 30. Although there are some deficiencies in the program, which have been outlined by my leader, I welcome this extension. Also, I welcome the addition of $30 million in funds to be made available, but am disappointed to learn that no new projects will be considered as a result of the extension of the program. As I understand it, the only projects that will be assisted are those for which assistance has already been given. However, Mr. Speaker, there are communities of some size in this country which up to the present have not received any assistance under the Local Initiatives Program and I submit—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) I will try to supply him, on behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Perrault) for whom I am replying tonight, with some figures for which he asked. As of April 14, 1972, the following sums of money have been committed to applications approved under the Local Initiatives Program. These totals will vary as the projects progress, since adjustments involving contractual changes are sometimes necessary after the final approvals have been negotiated. I am now prepared to inform the hon. member that amounts allocated in each province are as follows: Newfoundland, $9,900,113; Nova Scotia, $10,395,996; Prince Edward Island—

Mr. Burton: I already have those figures.

Mr. Watson: The hon. member says he already has those figures. I hold in my hand a list showing total amounts and numbers of applications received from each province under the Local Initiatives Program. If the hon. member wishes, I will put these on the record. The hon. member indicated that he has certain figures in his possession. However, I wonder if he would like me to put the first list of figures I mentioned on record, if time permits.

Mr. Burton: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Watson: The following sums have been committed to applications approved under the Local Initiatives Program: Prince Edward Island, $2,047,394; New Brunswick, $9,173,511; Quebec, $62,698,549; Ontario, $22,175,018; Manitoba, $5,365,159; Saskatchewan, $4,029,126; Alberta, $8,027,544; Northwest Territories, $1,039,483; British Columbia, $13,670,599; Yukon, $428,058.

As I said, I hold in my hand a list showing the total amounts and numbers of applications received from each province under the Local Initiatives Program. The amounts are set out together with the number of applications received from those communities.

Mr. Burton: What about communities that have not received any help?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Watson: I do not think there is time for me to put on record the totals of the applications. May I indicate to the hon. member for Regina East that the special factors which he indicated as having a bearing on the Saskatchewan scene will be brought to the attention of the minister.

FISHERIES—ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURE—REASON FOR OMISSION OF NOVA SCOTIA, NEWFOUNDLAND AND QUEBEC RIVERS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about certain aspects of the ban on salmon fishing that has been referred to in this House. I am pleased to see the minister in his place. I know he has been busy. With the election scare, ministers have been running all over the country in their own private airplanes and smuggling in a little politicking, so to speak. In the interests of the well-being of the nation, I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had better declare pretty soon whether there is to be an election immediately or next fall, so that we can get down to business and know where we stand.

The Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has a better record than most for attending during the "late show". I appreciate his being here this evening to reply to the question I raised earlier as recorded on page 1556 of Hansard. The narrow business at that time was with respect to the salmon ban on the rivers of New Brunswick only. I asked why rivers of other provinces have not, except in one case, been closed. I was particularly interested in Quebec. The minister said then, as he had said previously, that parallel action was planned in Quebec. I should like to get a fairly definitive statement as to what is meant and what is to be done. According to my information, there is not to be a ban in Quebec. There is to be a slight seasonal restriction similar to the sort of restriction which was imposed in New Brunswick in previous years before the outright ban was introduced.

We have the ironic situation in the north of New Brunswick, the Bay of Chaleur and the mouth of the Restigouche River, where the salmon fishermen are completely restricted on one side of the river while in Quebec they will be furiously fishing for salmon without any ban. I make the contention again, as I did when I asked these questions, that the minister should apply the ban to all the rivers in Quebec or should have negotiated with Quebec and found out where we fit before he banned the rivers in New Brunswick. This also applies to Nova Scotia. There are only two minor rivers there, St. Mary's and Margaree. They could have been banned, in the interest of fairness, as well as those in Newfoundland.

While the minister is answering, if he has time he should mention some other matters that I think have been subject to half-truth and misrepresentation by the minister and his officials. First, there is the matter of consultation with fishermen. At page 1607 of Hansard, the second column, the minister said:

—we have been in touch with the fishermen, and the fishermen agree with our approach.

My information from the fishermen is that none of them was approached in the official way which was promised. The minister should either now or later detail the exact times and places when he had consultation with the fishing associations about this full closure. Second, I would like to know what pollution has to to with this business. The minister mentioned that some rivers have more pollution than others. He referred to the pollution of the Saint John River. Frankly, I cannot fit the pollution part in, recognizing there is serious pollution in the Saint John River. I do not understand how a salmon ban will change the pollution in the river.

The third matter that came to my attention the other day is that there is no record of the return of salmon to the rivers in New Brunswick from Greenland. I would like the minister to comment on that. I understand from brochures I have that as late as 1969 and 1970 the department admitted there was not any proof by tagging of the return of salmon from Greenland. There is certainly a record of Atlantic salmon from New Brunswick all over the Atlantic, which are being caught and tagged. However, to my knowledge there is no record of salmon being tagged in Greenland and returned to New Brunswick. It may be an exercise in futility unless we have more facts on that matter.

I hope the minister will bring us up to date on a matter about which I understand negotiations are still continuing. That is the matter of compensation and the fact that in the meeting last Thursday there apparently was an almost direct refusal by the fisheries people, that is, those who represent the unions in Fredericton, New Brunswick, who turned down the compensation that had been offered. I want to give the minister time to refer to as many matters as possible. I point out to the minister that this is unique in the sense that the fishermen have not asked for compensation. They are being told they should stop fishing and there will be compensation. There should certainly be a very generous offer to them.

I have been here a long time, too long perhaps, but I do not think I have missed one year in making the suggestion that we have a massive program of study for the salmon. We are now finding that we do not have all the knowledge for this unique fish. I do not know whether the minister or the departmental officials are to blame, but he has to deal with this question on a piecemeal basis each year. First there were restrictions on the passing down of salmon rights. We were told that this would apply only to bona fide fishermen. They made plans on that. The season was then cut down and the fishermen co-operated fully in that regard. Having gone through that whole period of adjustment with their families, what little money they received was completely cut off this year. The possibility of being able to do some fishing is one thing, but they are cut off completely this year. If there is to be compensation, I urge that it be on a generous scale.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I should like to answer the hon. member in this way. We have been looking at the Atlantic salmon situation in terms of the entire east coast, not in terms of the individual provinces. We have been very much concerned about the large salmon, not so much about the smaller salmon commonly referred to as grilse. The principal large salmon rivers are, generally speaking, on the mainland. The best rivers are in New Brunswick and Quebec. I have stated in the House that Quebec is expected to take—indeed, I think I said "will take"—formal action with respect to closure for a period of years at least of the big salmon rivers.

As far as the commercial fishery is concerned, I discussed this matter at length yesterday with the minister responsible for fisheries in Quebec City and after an explanation of our attitude he again said he would endeavour to follow our approach as quickly as he could. A problem could arise if there were not close co-operation with Quebec with respect to those rivers, including the Matapedia and the Restigouche, which flow into the Bay of Chaleur. There must be an identical policy with respect to these rivers because Quebec fishermen are on one bank and New Brunswick fishermen are on the other.

We have offered compensation to New Brunswick commercial fishermen to cover the period during which fishing for salmon will not be allowed and we have proposed to the Quebec government that through the Quebec administration identical offers should be made to the commercial fishermen on the Quebec side of the Restigouche. There I believe there will be an identical policy on both sides of the rivers flowing into the Bay of Chaleur. The hon. member asked about rivers in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Labrador.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to advise the hon. minister that his time has expired.

TRANSPORT—PROPOSED LINKING OF KOOTENAY AND ELK RAILWAY TO U.S. LINE—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT MOVEMENT OF COAL TO U.S. PORTS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on May 5 I asked a question concerning the proposed linking of the Kootenay and Elk Railway with the Burlington Northern line which would be used to haul coal via the United States to Roberts Bank. On May 2 the leader of the New Democratic Party asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) whether he was considering amendments to the Railway Act which would give the Railway Transport Commission authority to take the public interest into account when dealing with applications which came before it. The minister replied that he had not had time in which to read the judgment, but indicated he wanted the maximum amount of Canadian products to be moved over Canadian rails and would be glad to consider any legislation or any other changes which might achieve such an objective.

On May 3 I sought to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 to discuss the carriage of coal by rail from the East Kootenays to Roberts Bank, B.C., by the United States route. This motion was not allowed. Again, on May 4 my hon. friend from Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) asked several questions and attempted to quote what Mr. Justice Hall had said in the Supreme Court judgment. However, Mr. Speaker suggested an attempt was being made to deliver a speech. Somehow, every time questions come up concerning railroads or railroad jobs, people do not appear to be much concerned. However, in this case thousands of jobs could be involved. When we consider what the ruling of the Supreme Court could mean, it should be clear why there is real concern. One of the Canadian Transport Commissioners, Mr. Griffin, had this to say in the board's decision on this application:

> In my view, the committee has a discretion and can refuse to make an order, though the matter of safety be satisfied, if by reason of the public interest, or for any other adequate reason, it appears just and proper to do so.

He went on to grant application No. 1. After the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission, the Kootenay and Elk Railway Company and Burlington Northern Incorporated appealed the decision to the Supreme Court of Canada, resulting in a five to four decision which declared that the Canadian Transport Commission had erred in their judgment. It should be realized that Crows Nest Industries Limited is a shareholder of Kaiser Steel Corporation, the parent of Kaiser. One of the incorporators of the Kootenay and Elk Railway was chairman of the board of Crows Nest Industries Limited and a director on the board of Kaiser Steel Corporation. Kootenay was incorporated as, and remains, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Crows Nest Industries Limited.

I should like to quote what Mr. Justice Hall had to say in the Supreme Court of Canada decision:

> I do not find any provision or undertaking that if the applications now being sought are granted, that Burlington will necessarily continue to use the Roberts Bank facility.

I might point out that the Canadian government has put millions of dollars into this facility.

> I see nothing in the record to prevent Burlington from using or creating another port in the state of Washington for the loading of this Canadian product destined for Japan. As a matter of fact, in the evidence of R. W. Downing, executive vice-president of Burlington, it is said that "the first discussions were directed toward moving the coal through a United States port", but later it was decided to use Roberts Bank as the only port with facilities to handle unit trains.

Further on, Mr. Justice Hall had this to say:

> The whole scheme would appear to me to be the classic case of a foreign conglomerate in concert with related Canadian companies so manipulating the enterprise that the export of Canadian jobs would be the result. That surely was a proper matter for the commission to consider and weigh. There is nothing in the record to indicate that CPR is unable for lack of equipment or personnel to carry all the coal going from the Sparwood area to Roberts Bank to fulfil present or future Japanese contracts and it is significant to observe that Burlington proposes to charge the same rate as CPR.

The first words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when he came into office last February was that his most urgent priority was jobs, and in his budget speech last night he said this remains his first priority. It appears to me that the members of the House are not aware of the situation here. If Kootenay and Elk are granted a common carrier licence there is every indication that not only will coal be hauled along the lines of Burlington Northern to Eureka in Montana and then west either to Roberts Bank or to Seattle, they will also haul lumber from British Columbia down to Eureka and then to markets east. This lumber may have come from the Kootenays and would have gone east to Calgary, Moose Jaw, Winnipeg and then south to the Chicago market. Resources from that area could well be hauled by this common carrier down through Montana on the Burlington Northern and then dispatched in either direction.

If the government is to be consistent with respect to what the Minister of Finance said last night, it is absolutely necessary to introduce amendments, as proposed, to the Railway Act which will take into consideration the interest of the public and other considerations. Time is slipping past. The government should be concerned about this matter. I hope it will take the initiative of introducing amendments to the Railway Act, that the House will pass them and the Canadian Transport Commission will rule on the application of Kootenay and Elk and Burlington and Northern Incorporated, thus saving thousands of jobs in Canada.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the link between the question asked by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) and the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) is tenuous but I will attempt on behalf of the minister to respond to the hon. member's question.

As the hon. member realizes, the legal implications of the matter to which he alludes are extremely complicated. Despite the protracted legal exercise that has already occurred, it is far from clear what, if any, additional steps the various parties will take. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Howard) has already spoken to me, to my minister and to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) regarding the very serious issues and implications involved in this controversy, and the hon. member has not ceased to make the government aware of his concern and deep interest in the resolution of this matter.

At stake in the issue raised before the Canadian Transport Commission and subsequently before the Supreme Court of Canada by the Kootenay and Elk Railway and the CPR is the question of whether coal will be carried from southeastern British Columbia to the west coast port of Roberts Bank via a United States railway employing United States workers, or via a Canadian railway employing Canadian workers. I have no hesitation in indicating that as far as I am concerned, Canada's national interest must prevail if the matter raised by the hon. member tonight passes the hypothetical stage.

The Minister of Transport, replying in the House of Commons on May 2—this has been quoted already tonight—made it perfectly clear that he wanted to see the maximum amount of Canadian products moved over Canadian rails. The original application of the Kootenay and Elk Railway has been dealt with by the CTC and has been the subject of a Supreme Court decision, as the hon. member has already indicated. The parties affected by the decision are now in receipt of it and presumably are considering what steps, if any, they will now take in light of this decision. So far, to my knowledge, none of the parties has indicated what will be their next step. Until then the government will continue to examine thoroughly the implications of the submission and issues raised before the CTC.

Motion agreed to and House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BURTON—DELAY IN APPEARANCE OF MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege concerning the failure of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to make himself available at reasonable times to appear before the Standing Committee on Regional Development, despite assurances to the House and the committee, to answer questions concerning the apparent failure of the minister to comply with section 16 of the Regional Development Incentives Act and the manner in which delays in appearances by the minister are preventing the committee from carrying out its responsibility to examine the estimates of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

The facts are as follows. Section 16 of the Regional Development Incentives Act states:

> The Minister shall, within 40 days after the 6th day of August, 1969 and monthly thereafter, or, if parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first days thereafter that parliament is sitting, submit to parliament a report respecting the administration of this Act.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion gave his interpretation of his statutory obligations in the House and in the standing committee on June 6 and June 16, 1969, and also on February 28 and 29 and on April 27, 1972. These statements made it clear that the minister undertook to give accurate and up-to-date information on grants under the Regional Development Incentives Act.

On April 27, the minister promised the Standing Committee on Regional Development to clarify as soon as possible the issue of a grant of $6.1 million to McCain Foods Limited, a grant which was not reported to parliament. On the same date the minister agreed to attend before the committee again at the earliest opportunity, possibly on May 5. Since that time the committee was informed that the minister was not available on May 5 and that his next appearance would be on May 18. Subsequently, that date was changed to May 17, and yesterday the chairman of the standing committee informed the members that this date had been altered to May 24. A relevant factor to be considered by members of the committee is the real possibility that the House may be dissolved before that date. Thus, the minister may not appear before the standing committee at all. It is apparent that at least in one case involving a grant of $6.1 million section 16 of the Regional Development Incentives Act has been breached. It is clear that for some reason the minister finds it inconvenient to clarify the issue before the proper forum, namely, the standing committee, as soon as possible.

Another question must also be considered. I submit that the instance just mentioned raises the probability that the minister has failed to report to the House as required by law other grants involving considerable sums of public funds. Only the minister can deal with these matters and some members of the committee have pressed for further appearances by the minister last week and this week at committee and subcommittee meetings.

It should also be noted that under the rules of the House the estimates are referred to committees for examination. Under the rules estimates must be reported back to the House before May 31 regardless of the stage of consideration. If a minister is unwilling to appear before the committee at reasonable times and on a sufficient number of occasions, it is impossible for the members of the committee to carry out their responsibilities in examining spending estimates before they are voted on by parliament. If such examination is thwarted it strikes at the heart of parliamentary institutions and infringes on the rights of members. If Your Honour finds that I do have a question of privilege, I am prepared to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That the question of ministerial appearances before standing committees during consideration of spending estimates be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for study and report thereon and that the committee give particular study to apparent delays by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in making further appearances before the committee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina East has given the Chair notice of his intention to raise the matter to which he has alluded by way of a question of privilege. The hon. member knows, as I am sure the House does, that the question of ministerial appearances before committees of the House is as old as confederation, actually as old as parliament, certainly going back longer than 100 years.

What the hon. member is bringing before the House at this time and what he would like the House to consider further, either directly or through one of its other committees, is certain proceedings of a committee. There is a long established rule and it is the tradition of the House that matters before a committee are dealt with by that committee, and if any difficulty arises during the course of the proceedings of any hearings held by the committee this should be indicated either in the committee's report or in the course of debate in the House on the report submitted by the chairman of the committee on behalf of its members.

There is also an alternative aspect to this matter. The hon. member seems to put in question the conduct of the minister in relation to the administration of his department or the application of his statutory obligations. Obviously this ought to be placed before the House in the form of a specific charge. All hon. members know how this has to be done. Certainly it cannot be done indirectly by way of a motion of the type submitted by the hon. member.

I would suggest that nothing would be gained by having a dispute between certain members of the committee and the minister brought to the House for consideration by way of a question of privilege. I might add that this matter was brought to the attention of the House previously under the guise of questions or a motion under Standing Order 43. When the Chair was invited to rule on the matter the Chair suggested at that time, and I do so again today, that this is a matter for consideration by the committee itself.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS INCREASING CERTAIN PENSIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about the business of the House. I have had meetings with the opposition House leaders and there is a general disposition to proceed as quickly as possible with the amendments to the Old Age Security Act and the veterans bill. It is understood that all members want to have these pension increases in the hands of the pensioners as early as possible. I am advised that if these increases are to be in their June cheques and in the hands of the pensioners by the end of June, it would be necessary to have the bill passed by the end of next week. For that reason I am asking that the customary notice be waived and that we begin second reading of the Old Age Security Act amendments today. Because of the time factors affecting the receipt of the pensions, I think hon. members will see the validity of making this special arrangement in this particular case.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to agree that this be done and that these long overdue amendments be now brought in. I would have preferred to give this consent several months ago. However, there has been one suggestion made which would not in any way impair our proceeding to pass this bill. We were debating Bill C-5 last night and the debate was almost brought to a conclusion. There has been a suggestion that, provided it is the feeling of the House expressed in the form of an order, all questions which need to be put in respect of the second reading of the bill dealing with the Farm Credit Corporation be put within half an hour for the purpose of second reading and sending it to the committee where the committee will hopefully make those changes it so badly needs. We might be able to complete that matter this afternoon before we start on the other bill.

The only other point I should like to make, and I am sure the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) will agree with me, is that we may be in somewhat of a dilemma and Your Honour may be in a difficult position if during the formal budget debate there is reference to the measures presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), specifically to the two bills the President of the Privy Council has now referred to, namely, the bill dealing with veterans pensions and the bill dealing with old age security benefits. If the House gives second reading to these bills, under the provisions and traditions of this House this might normally be an estoppel to hon. members who, in pursuing the budget debate, might like to say a word or two about pensions amendments.

I would hope, therefore, it would be clearly understood that if the debate on these two bills is completed as far as second reading is concerned before we get into the budget debate, this will not prejudice the right of hon. members to deal with these issues during the budget debate despite the fact that the House has indicated its intention to pass these bills. I am sure the President of the Privy Council, who wants to see these matters thoroughly aired, would have no objection to such an understanding.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the bills proposing pension increases I must say on behalf of this party that we warmly welcome the conversion which has taken place on the road to Damascus, or perhaps I should say on the road to the election. We are delighted that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have had a change of heart and are prepared to propose these increases to which they were formerly opposed, including the establishment of escalation of the basic old age security pension. Therefore, small as these increases are, we think people should have them as soon as possible.

We are prepared to waive the notice requirement and give first reading to the old age security bill and also to the veterans bill today so they can be printed and proceeded with as soon as possible. We are prepared to give first reading to both of them today and are prepared to proceed later today with second reading of the bill to amend the Old Age Security Act.

With regard to the suggestion by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that speedy passage of these bills should not interfere with discussion of their subjects in the budget debate I am sure that will be understood. With regard to his other suggestion that we proceed first of all today to conclude the debate on second reading of the farm credit bill, we are prepared to agree to that, and if the few minutes still to be taken by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) do not provoke anyone else to speak we hope that the votes on the subamendment and the amendment can be taken forthwith.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we have been asking for higher old age and veterans pensions for so long that we will certainly not oppose neither the first nor the second nor the third reading of the bill. We are willing, my colleagues and I, to have first and even second reading of the bill today.

I trust the minister will also take into account the fact that he is introducing two bills, on the eve of an election, which will allow an increase in pensions by the end of June. We are not against this, since for two years now, we have been asking the minister to grant those increases.

The fact of waiting to make retroactive payments from June to January will certainly be recognized as smacking of an election.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby rising on a point of order? I would hope there would not be a debate on this subject. We are on motions now and the minister has made a statement which has been responded to by representatives of the parties in opposition. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is rising at this time. I suggest to him and to other hon. members that only one representative of each party is entitled to speak on the subject. I assume this is the way we ought to proceed at this time.

My understanding is that the suggestion has been made by the President of the Privy Council and other members that there should be agreement and it should be so ordered by the House that the House will waive notice of first reading requirements in respect of the bills relating to pensions and that there would be an understanding that the discussion on these bills would begin later this afternoon. This would be subject to two conditions: First, that there be a maximum of 30 minutes assigned for the conclusion of the debate on Bill C-5 relating to farm credit. The other condition is the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River that hon. members should not be in any way estopped from referring to the matters dealt with by the bills to be discussed on second reading later today and which might conceivably be adopted before we have concluded the six days of the budget debate. I believe these are the conditions and requirements set out by hon. members. If I am correct I will put the question before the House in a moment. I believe the President of the Privy Council would like to add one word.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking for first reading of the veterans bill today and I would prefer that it be held off until I am certain that hon. members will have ample copies of the bill as soon as first reading is given. There will be ample copies of the old age security amendments for members, but I would not want first reading to be given the other bill unless copies are available.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I have indicated the proposal made to the House by the President of the Privy Council and agreed to by hon. members who have commented. Is this agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I believe hon. members agree with the conditions mentioned by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and the spokesmen for the opposition parties who made their comments afterwards.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Questions

FEDERAL FUNDING FOR TRAINING AUDIOLOGISTS, SPEECH THERAPISTS—SPEECH PATHOLOGISTS

Question No. 64—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. What federal funding is being given at the present time to programs of training audiologists and speech therapists-speech pathologists in Canada?

2. What recommendations, if any, of the Health Services Report, 1963, concerning training programs in audiology and speech therapy have been implemented?

3. How many individuals are working in these occupations at the present time in Canada?

4. How much federal money is being apportioned to research into communication disorders in Canada at the present time?

5. How much federal money is being expended for bursaries, scholarships, etc., for students in training for audiology and speech pathology at the present time?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Medical Research Council and Health and Welfare Canada assist two training programs in Canadian universities for speech therapists and audiologists. Assistance is currently (1971/72) being given as follows: University of Western Ontario, $41,365; University of British Columbia, $16,752.

2. In line with recommendations of Royal Commission on Health Services, financial assistance was expanded for speech therapy and audiology training and services. New training programs were established at University of Western Ontario and University of British Columbia.

3. The President of the Canadian Speech and Hearing Association estimated late in 1971, that there are approximately 600 qualified speech therapists and audiologists practising in Canada. This number meets the needs outlined in Volume II of the Royal Commission on Health Services, pp. 62-63:

"It has been estimated that between 400 and 500 additional speech therapists are needed . . ." as, ". . . in 1961, . . . there were between 100 and 125 qualified speech therapists in Canada . . .". The number of qualified therapists in Canada is expanding at the rate of 100-200 annually.

5. $203,203.59.

COMPLAINTS ABOUT DELAYS IN RECEIVING UIC BENEFITS

Question No. 94—Mr. Marshall:

How many inquiries have been received by Information Canada offices complaining about delays in receiving UIC benefits?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Monthly reports itemizing feedback from the public show that a total of 287 complaints about Unemployment Insurance Commission services have been recorded by Information Canada centres, over the period September, 1971 to March, 1972 inclusive.

ASSISTANCE BY INFORMATION CANADA WITH UIC BENEFITS

Question No. 96—Mr. Marshall:

What part has Information Canada played in directing information to Canadians who suffered delays in receiving UIC benefits?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): (a) Each Information Canada centre carries the three most recent UIC pamphlets for free distribution to the public: "Handbook for Employers", "Information for Claimants", "Story of the S.I.N. Number". (b) The majority of complaints have been registered at our Toronto and Montreal offices and have been concerned primarily with inability to reach UIC offices by phone. Our staff now takes down the enquirer's name, address, telephone number and social insurance number and forwards these through a special line to the appropriate UIC office for follow-up within 48 hours. This has been in effect since December, 1971 and appears satisfactory.

FUNDING OF DDH-280 CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Question No. 180—Mr. Forrestall:

1. To what dollar levels has primary and secondary funding carried the DDH-280 construction program as of January 31, 1972?

2. What is the current anticipated total cost to the Canadian taxpayer for the four DDH-280 turned over after sea trials with full armament and spares to the Commander, Maritime Command for operational purposes for which they were designed?

3. What accounting does the Minister of Supply and Services give to the Canadian people for the acceleration in total cost of this program?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Supply and Services as follows: 1. and 2. This information may be found in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence No. 8, dated 28 March, 1972, at pages 6-8, and No. 10 dated 19 April, 1972, at pages 24-30.

3. The Minister of Supply and Services makes an accounting each year to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee on all of his Department's operations when his main estimates are before that committee. On April 18, 1972, the Minister made the following statement before this parliamentary committee with relation to the DDH-280 Program:

"On the DDH project, the fitting-out of the four destroyers is progressing satisfactorily and deliveries are forecast for July, August, and December of this year, with the last ship being delivered by early June 1973. The comprehensive approach taken to the management of this project should make it possible for the four ships to be completed within the cost-ceiling, approved in the fall of 1970, of $252 million."

In addition to this the following information was included in the Supplementary Data on the Supply Program of the department which was tabled with the committee and which appear as an appendix to the proceedings on the meeting on that date:

"The department has formed an integrated organization with DND officers under the leadership of a naval captain, to apply project management principles to the acquisition program for four DDH-280 class destroyers. Improved planning, guidelines and systematic cost tracking have been applied which provide assurance that the construction of ships will be completed within the time limits and cost ceiling of $252 million approved in the fall of 1970.

Fitting out of the ships in proceeding satisfactorily and deliveries from the shipyards are forecast for: DDH-280, 29 July 1972; DDH-282, end of August 1972; DDH-281, end of December, 1972; DDH-283, early June 1973."

The DDH program is proceeding within the budget approved by Treasury Board and as announced by the Minister of National Defence.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE PAYROLL

Question No. 198—Mr. Burton:

1. What is the total full-time payroll of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

2. How many of these employees are earning more than $18,000 annually, distributed according to $1,000 intervals?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Total annual full-time payroll for the fiscal year 1971-72 is $28,526,000.

2. Number of employees earning more than $18,000 per annum as of February 1, 1972:

195	18,001-19,000
41	19,001-20,000
24	21,001-22,000
79	22,001-23,000
37	23,001-24,000
23	24,001-25,000
13	25,001-26,000
23	26,001-27,000
11	27,001-28,000
13	28,001-29,000
1	25,000-31,000	(SX-2)
5	28,000-35,000	(SX-3)
1	34,000-40,000	(SX-4)
Total 509

The difference in numbers presented in response to this question and to questions 197 and 199 is attributable primarily to adjustments in employees' salaries over the time period in question due to revised salary rates, annual increments and promotions. Another factor, but a relatively minor one, is additions to enable the department to meet its increasing responsibility.

Note: Above $30,000 information is provided by salary range only in order to protect privacy of salary information (for persons whose salary is directly related to performance) in accordance with TB Circular 1969-206.

EMPLOYMENT OF MR. MARIUS DION IN DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 457—Mr. Beaudoin:

Does the Department of Agriculture or one of its agencies have an employee in Canada by the name of Marius Dion and, if so (a) what are his duties in the Department (b) what is his annual salary?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Joseph Marias Alphonse Dion is employed by the Department of Agriculture as a P.I. 3 (Primary Products Inspection Group) in the contagious diseases division, health of animals branch at Montmagny, Quebec.

(a) Under general supervision he is responsible for the implementation of regulations under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

(b) Mr. Dion's salary range is $8,519 to $9,682 per annum.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS GUIDELINES FOR DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Question No. 458—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Does the Department of Public Works have guidelines for the regional distribution of funds allotted under its Main Estimates 1972-73 for major capital projects and, if so, what are they?

2. Of the major capital projects, has Saskatchewan been allotted only one and one half percent of the total although its population is four percent of Canada's total and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. In effect, the departmental main estimates as approved by the ministers constitutes the guideline for distribution of capital works funds. These estimates reflect the regional levels of activity which, in the case of the Department of Public Works, are dictated by the federal government activity in each area. Since it is a service agency, the Department of Public Works operations must parallel the requirements for accommodation as requested by other federal government departments and agencies.

2. At present, 1972-73 capital expenditure plans for the province of Saskatchewan total $2,066,000 which represents 1.5 per cent of the total departmental budget for such works. This planned figure reflects the level of demand from client departments and agencies for increased accommodation in that province, as well as the level of improvements to existing accommodation which can be carried out at this time, given the constraints of the capital budget ceiling and the priority of similar needs elsewhere. It should also be noted that the planned figure represents only those capital works projects to be funded by the Department of Public Works, and does not include other projects to be carried out by the Department of Public Works but which will be funded by other federal government departments and agencies.

4. What staff accompanied him?

5. What was the total of the salary and expenses for Dr. Barber and each staff member who accompanied him for the duration of the trip?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise in connection with the failure of the government to answer questions. I do not like to have to raise this, but the House is entitled to the respect of the government. What is happening is that questions that might prove embarrassing to the government are not being answered.

I have mentioned this matter before and of necessity I have to raise it again, because starred questions are to be answered in a reasonable time. The normal time is four days. Question No. 446, which was placed on the order paper on March 28, has remained unanswered. What is the use of a starred question unless it is going to be answered? In view of the fact it has not been answered, I hope Your Honour will not consider it remiss if I direct some questions to the government concerning this matter that is obviously being concealed. My question was:

How many Red Ensigns were in the possession of the Department of Public Works on the date the present flag came into existence?

I also asked how many were still on hand. It should not take very long to answer that question if they tell the truth.

My other question, No. 354, is not a starred question, but it is one that is requisite so that the farmers of western Canada may know what the situation was with respect to the final wheat payments for the 1970 crop year. My question asked:

What was the total amount disbursed by the Wheat Board for final wheat payments for the 1970 crop year?

The answer is available to the government any time it wishes to give it. Second, my question asked:

How many producers received payments in each of the prairie provinces?

Then I asked:

In how many cases did the farmers receive no payment because the amount to which each was entitled was applied to the outstanding balance due by him as advanced payment?

While Your Honour has no authority to direct the government, I think it should be made perfectly clear that this House cannot operate on the basis of a desire on the part of the government to defer answering questions that it believes will be embarrassing.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret having to take the time of the House, but I wish to refer to question No. 88 which I placed on the order paper on February 18 last. May I point out that the same question stood on the order paper for the whole of the preceding session of parliament without being answered. I cannot imagine what the reason would be for not answering it. It is a question of great interest to those who visit parliament and our national capital. My question is a very simple one:

Is the government giving consideration to the re-opening of the scenic walk around Parliament Hill—?

I really cannot understand why the government cannot answer that question in nearly two years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see two other hon. members who want to rise at this time. We could spend a lot of time this afternoon going over all the questions on the order paper that have not been answered to this point. However, having said that I will recognize the hon. member for Brandon-Souris who wants to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with question No. 210 which has been on the order paper since February 28. It deals with an important service in connection with the problem of the non-medical use of drugs and, with the recent resignation of Dr. Craig, it assumes some urgency. I trust the government will bring down an answer at an early date.

Mr. Ryan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. On February 18 questions Nos. 7, 43, 45 and 46 appeared on the order paper in my name. They also appeared on the order paper during the last session from, I believe, early in November.

The first question asks for particulars about the dealings with respect to Victoria Wood Development Corporation Limited and the low-cost housing complex on CNR land in Toronto. The second asks for particulars about the foreclosure action against Rochdale College. The third asks for particulars as to the payments coming in with respect to the mortgage on Pestalozzi College. The fourth asks for particulars as to what is happening to the white elephant, Richmond Square, a CMHC housing project in Toronto—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a point of order he should raise it by way of a point of order and not by way of a speech. I think he is perhaps going a little farther than he should and is making an argument.

Mr. Ryan: I think I have made my point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mahoney: What was the point?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Would Your Honour be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 1, 14 and 16?

[English]

CORRESPONDENCE PERTAINING TO LEASING AND DEVELOPMENT OF MAIN SQUARE, TORONTO

Motion No. 1—Mr. Ryan:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all leases, assignments of leases, leasebacks, subleases, assignments of subleases, lending agreements, assignments of agreements, mortgages and contracts pertaining to the leasing and development of Main Square in the City of Toronto from the commencement of negotiations by developers with the CNR to the present time, that may be in the possession of or subject to the control of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. David Weatherhead (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, these various documents support, and are part of, the arrangements between borrower and lender. Such arrangements are internal administrative matters and it is not in the public interest to disclose them. Under these circumstances I wonder if the hon. member would consent to withdrawing his motion?

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I regard these matters as being of great public interest and importance and think they should be revealed to the public. I therefore ask that this motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO SALE OF RYERSON PRESS LTD.

Motion No. 14—Mr. Macquarrie:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence, memoranda, etc., between the Government of Canada and the United Church of Canada and other individuals and organizations relating to the question of the sale of Ryerson Press Ltd.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable in so far as the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce, National Defence and Secretary of State are concerned. However, for the Prime Minister's office to comply a considerable number of man-hours would have to be assigned to extract this correspondence from the files. Since these man-hours are not presently available, extra staff would have to be employed on a casual basis in order to complete the job.

Mr. Bell: What about Ivan Head? He's writing books.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jerome: Accurate statistics on the numbers of such correspondence are, however, maintained, and such information could be provided in response to a question on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary is making a speech. I suggest to him that if comment is to be made it should be brief and not in the form of a speech.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, the motion is therefore acceptable except in so far as correspondence from the Prime Minister's office is concerned. If the hon. member is prepared to agree to this, we can comply with the rest of the motion.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I simply cannot believe that that particular office is shorthanded.

Mr. Jerome: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO ADVERSE EFFECTS OF CHANGE TO A FLOATING DOLLAR

Motion No. 16—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence and other documents between the government and firms or interested parties concerning adverse effects of the change to a floating dollar announced by the Minister of Finance in June, 1970.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the material requested in this motion has been examined and in most instances it gives detailed private information about the writer's business operations. As this information is considered to be highly confidential I would hope that the hon. member might withdraw his motion.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the government might have had a change of heart since the last session, but apparently not. Therefore, I call for the question to be put.

Mr. Jerome: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Shall the remaining motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I have made inquiries about notice of motion No. 18 concerning correspondence and other documents involving the sale of land at the Regina Airport. This was turned down in the last session on the grounds that the matter was still under negotiation. The matter has long since been settled. I have raised the question several times in the House, and I do not understand why the parliamentary secretary is not in a position to bring the motion forward.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, standing in my name on the order paper since April 13 there is a motion in regard to the second international airport in Toronto. Some weeks ago the Minister of Transport indicated he would be willing to present all the papers involved to the House and answer all questions in the House. I cannot understand why four weeks have passed since I put down the motion without the papers being supplied, and I sincerely hope the parliamentary secretary will look into it.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—COMPLETION OF REVIEW OF POSITION BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT—RESUMPTION OF DISCUSSIONS—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON DISC

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister who will recall that at the time of the visit to Canada by President Nixon both countries undertook to review their respective positions regarding differences between them on trading matters. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government of Canada has now completed its review of its position on this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid there is nothing to report at this time, Mr. Speaker. Both countries are carrying out the intentions they announced.

Mr. Stanfield: Has there been any discussion between the two countries on when conversations between the two governments respecting these difficulties will resume?

Mr. Trudeau: No formal consultation, Mr. Speaker.

• (1440)

Mr. Stanfield: I have one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who expressed the view that it would be in the interests of the United States to disclose to the government of Canada the effect of DISC upon corporations exporting to Canada from that country. Has a formal request for this information been made to the United States administration and, if so, has any response been received?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will be dealing with all these matters when he participates in the budget debate.

CANADA—UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT MINISTER WILL MAKE DETAILED REPORT EARLY IN BUDGET DEBATE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the government House leader which relates directly to the previous question. In view of the fact the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has committed himself to the House to make a detailed report on the auto pact discussions, the DISC legislation and auto pact prices, would the government House leader give us an assurance now that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will take part in that debate on the first or second day when that debate takes place in the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will be dealing with the budget debate. I cannot commit the minister to speak but I understand that he proposes to take part tomorrow or Monday.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister give a commitment that the budget debate will continue long enough for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to take part in it?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: You should have seen the look big brother gave you when you said that.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

GRANT TO McCAIN FOODS LIMITED—REASON FOR OMISSION FROM REPORT—DISTRIBUTION OF GRANTS AMONG PROVINCES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Would the minister be good enough to give the House the reason why he did not report to parliament in his monthly report the grant of $6.1 million to McCain Foods Limited of New Brunswick which was offered by his department on November 2, 1970, and accepted by the company on December 9, 1970?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this question was put to me in the committee where I indicated that I would give a reply. I asked the officials of my department to conduct an inquiry, not merely on the McCain's Food case to which the hon. member for York-South has referred, but on all such cases which may have come up. The deputy minister is ready to report.

Mr. Speaker, I was to appear before the committee next week. However, as it will not be meeting then, I shall go there specially this afternoon to reply to the question.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: You are getting evasive, the whole bunch of you.

Mr. Lewis: I am very glad to hear the minister say that he will appear this afternoon to answer questions. May I ask whether he has already had an investigation made into the very large proportion of grants under the Regional Development Incentives Act made so far this year which has gone to one province and the maldistribution of these grants across the country?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Here again, Mr. Speaker, the question was put not to myself but, I believe, to my deputy minister. He will attend the committee meeting this afternoon to supply the information requested.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I attended three of the committee's eight meetings, and the deputy minister attended four.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—STATEMENT OF QUEBEC SOCIAL AFFAIRS MINISTER ON INCREASE—FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION OF PROVINCES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Last night, on television, the Quebec Social Affairs Minister appeared stunned to learn that the federal government intended to raise old age security pensions by $15 for single people and $50 for married couples.

Would the Prime Minister tell the House if the proposed increases will require the co-operation and financial contribution of the Canadian provinces. Will the provinces have to pay part of those increases?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is out of the question, Mr. Speaker; the increases will be paid out of the tax receipts of the Canadian government.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, has the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs been in touch with the federal government since these increases were announced?

As to the second question, although the Prime Minister tells us that such is not the case, I should like to ask him whether the provinces contribute to the guaranteed income supplement which is being paid to our senior citizens.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

As to the second part of the question, there are no contributions made by the provinces, not even, for that matter, to the first portion of $80. The provinces will not be called upon to contribute to the annual increase mentioned in the bill.

I think that I share the hon. member's feelings and I do not quite understand what the Province of Quebec is getting all excited about, if indeed it is.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

TERMINATION AT END OF JUNE—PLANS FOR REPLACEMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As we are only a month and a half away from the windup of the mandate of the Prices and Incomes Commission, could the Prime Minister advise the House what the government's plans are for replacing that body or does it intend simply to leave that field open?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I made an announcement a couple of weeks ago which may have escaped the hon. member. It was to the effect that the commission itself would be wound up upon termination of its mandate, at the end of June, but that a small task force would continue in order to finish whatever was in the works in terms of preparing for publication some studies and background work, and that they would also stay around to keep active any contingency plan for fighting inflation.

Mr. Hees: Is the Bank of Canada concerned lest our old age pensioners spend all of their $2.88 raise at one time and thereby start a new wave of inflation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —and does not this pittance of a raise make "Six Buck Harris" look like Santa Claus?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that a question asked in those terms is not in order and I suggest it should not be answered. If the hon. member wished to redraft the question he will be allowed to do so, but I believe at this point——it might be advisable to allow a supplementary to the preceding question. I believe that the hon. member for Sainte-Marie has a supplementary.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING INCREASE

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question which is supplementary to the previous one on social legislation.

I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister to say before this House whether the provinces were consulted or advised about the measures or amendments to the Old Age Security Act that the federal government wanted to introduce before the Minister of Finance made his budget presentation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member means the amendments relating to old age pensions, etc. being considered now, the answer is obviously no because the provinces are not consulted before the presentation of a federal budget.

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I should like to ask whether the discussions that have taken place with the government of the province of Quebec regarding family allowances and social welfare matters generally included discussions about old age security and whether the minister concerned, who has expressed disappointment, envisaged there would be some global policy developed between the two governments regarding this field of security?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that at the time of the Victoria conference we were prepared to go much farther. We were prepared to envisage a constitutional amendment which would have made such consultation mandatory. However, the province of Quebec did not see fit to accept that amendment at the time. Consequently it is natural that we want to continue to exercise our constitutional right of increasing pensions and payments which are under the federal jursidiction, and that we should do so without consultation when they were going to be presented in a budget seems rather obvious, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Sainte-Marie on a further supplementary, but hon. members will note that we have many potential questioners today. Yesterday we ran short of time and I undertook to try to recognize those members today who were not seen yesterday. I would ask for the co-operation of members immediately to limit the number of supplementaries. Of course, I have to rely entirely on the co-operation of hon. members in this regard.

OLD AGE SECURITY—QUEBEC SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAM—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Since the federal government knew that the province of Quebec intended to introduce an integrated welfare plan and since other provinces were not previously consulted, does that position on the part of the federal government mean that it intends to oppose the Quebec government's intention to introduce an integrated welfare plan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker. As I have just said to the Leader of the Opposition, the federal government was ready to commit itself by a constitutional amendment to some consultations in the area mentioned by the hon. member as well as in many others.

We made that proposal at the Victoria Conference. The province of Quebec itself refused to see a constitutional amendment in the resolution we were ready to approve and, as I said to the Leader of the Opposition, until the Constitution is amended, all provinces must expect the federal government to continue to exercise its jursidiction in that field.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM WAR—SUGGESTED STATEMENT ON POSITION OF GOVERNMENT—CONSIDERATION OF SITUATION BY UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday the Prime Minister answered a series of questions about the grave new crisis in Viet Nam and suggested, I think, that a statement of the government's position, if it had one, might be made either by himself or the minister. Does the minister propose to make a statement in the near future on the government's position with regard to this crisis?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I read what the Prime Minister said yesterday. He said we were considering whether we should make such a statement. After consideration, I can say that I do not think it would be helpful at the moment to make such a statement and I do not propose to make one today or tomorrow.

Mr. Brewin: Will the minister seek to have the situation in Viet Nam brought before the Security Council of the United Nations as a grave threat to the peace of the world?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we very strongly support the offer of the Secretary General of the United Nations to make his good offices available for this purpose. We would have no objection to the matter being brought before the Security Council if those more directly concerned felt this was desirable and if the Secretary General so felt. We are not a member of the Security Council. On the other hand, we certainly would not turn down any place where this war can be brought to an end.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Prime Minister clearly pointed out that he was not going to be waffled into virulent anti-Americanism regardless of pressures that might come from various parts of the House. Believing in that, has he given serious reconsideration since yesterday to at least saying something that will reassure the people of Canada that, in the opinion of the government of Canada, what is actually taking place today in Viet Nam is something that is in keeping with the very difficult position in which the United States finds itself there?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I can satisfy the right hon. member, but I will try by merely stating that we in this party see no need to try to prevent disunity by practicing anti-Americanism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister is so completely in agreement that I do not see any reason for the applause I am receiving from the opposite side of the House. I ask the Prime Minister, and I hope I get the understanding of those members who have understandings, whether he is prepared to at least join in saying on behalf of Canada that the United States ought not to be condemned as it is in certain sections of this country today?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROPOSED PROGRAM, "NEW HORIZONS FOR THE AGED"—EARLY INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. During his budget speech on Monday evening the Minister of Finance announced the establishment of a new program entitled "New Horizons for the Aged" to help retired persons participate more fully in the community. Will the minister say whether he will soon present legislation to establish this program?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the nature of the program requires specific legislation in the sense that I think the hon. member has in mind. As the Minister of Finance indicated, I will be elaborating on the details of the program shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED NUCLEAR TEST BY FRANCE—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises from the fact that in the past the government has been very circumspect with regard to nuclear testing by other countries. What is the attitude of the government with regard to the intention of the government of France to conduct atmospheric nuclear tests in the South Pacific this summer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that question has already been asked, but the minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, by way of answer may I be permitted to table a copy of the note that was delivered to the French government on this subject?

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN COST OF FOOD—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF CAUSE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the cost of food used in the home increased by 7.4 per cent from April, 1971, to April, 1972, and in view of the further fact that in food chains such as George Weston, profits rose by nearly $3.5 million in the first three months of 1972, will the government undertake an investigation to see whether this increase in the cost of food, which bears so heavily on those on low income—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that this is argument and debate. The question should be asked as soon as possible.

Mrs. MacInnis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the government undertake to make an investigation to see whether this increase in the cost of food is due to inordinate mark-ups by supermarkets or excessive profit-taking by canners and processors of food?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly see that the suggestion of the hon. member is studied. However, I might say that according to our statistics the gain was in line with the March-April changes in the past five years. As a matter of fact, if you look at the average change between those two months for the past five years and the over-all consumer price index, it was slightly less this year than it has been in the past five.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

TRANSFER OF POINT EDWARD INDUSTRIAL PARK TO CORPORATION FROM DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that negotiations regarding the official transfer of the Point Edward Industrial Park from the Department of Transport to the Cape Breton Development Corporation commenced in 1969, can the minister advise whether this long-awaited action has taken place? I am sure he is familiar with the situation. In light of the statement made in committee on April 25, 15 days ago, by the president of Devco, Mr. Kent, that he was confident the matter would be settled that week, is the minister in a position to provide us with information on whether this has taken place so that the unions can negotiate a settlement?

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State.

Could he tell us if it is true that federal M.P.'s have nipped in the bud 39 projects submitted by Quebecers under the Opportunities for Youth program because they were considered too dangerous on account of their social scope and the individuals advocating them?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will realize, I am sure, that the question under its present form is out of order. He is inquiring about a statement or a suggestion which would have been made outside the House.

OLD AGE SECURITY—TRANSFERABILITY TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Bearing in mind representaticns made to the government by individuals and organizations across the nation, may I ask whether a decision has been reached as to the transferability of old age pensions to other countries after a period of residence in Canada of less than the 25 years presently required.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe the hon. member will be glad to learn, after all his work in this connection—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro: —that provision for this is contained in the legislation now before the House.

POLLUTION

THREAT FROM SUNKEN "IRVING WHALE"—TIME OF REMOVAL OF VESSEL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It is prompted by a statement by the minister of the environment and community services for Prince Edward Island to the effect that it is now too late to raise the Irving Whale this year. Can the minister advise whether this is the view of his department and, if so, when it is intended to remove this menace to the environment?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): If the hon. member means this year during the summer tourist season, it will not be done during that time. I fully agreed with the government of Prince Edward Island not to undertake the task during the summer tourist season. We are asking for additional scientific advice as to the best method of doing the job and the best time at which to do it. As well, if this has not already been done, an underwater investigation of the hull will be made to ensure that there is no potential for leakage during the interim.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Bearing in mind the considerable delay which has occurred in resolving this problem, would the minister care to make a statement on motions concerning the government's plans, in face of the continuing pollution threat to the island? What steps will be taken in the course of the next few months to prevent any possible danger from the continued presence of the Irving Whale near the shores of Prince Edward Island?

Mr. Jamieson: I would be glad to consider doing so either here or when I appear before the transport committee. But I can assure the hon. member that all the ongoing checks we are making indicate there is no immediate threat. We shall certainly keep policing the situation to make sure that this continues to be the case.

OIL

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. CONGRESSIONAL HEARINGS

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the growing concern in connection with the potentially disastrous tanker route down the British Columbia coast, and the fact that the economic committee of the United States Congress is planning hearings on the proposed trans-Atlantic pipeline through Canada, may I inquire what representations Canada will make at these hearings?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member means trans-Alaska pipeline rather than trans-Atlantic pipeline. The government would not propose, of course, to make any representations before a legislative body of another jurisdiction. I might say, however, that I have recently been in communication with the U.S. Secretary of the Interior to give him further information with regard to the Canadian proposal for a Mackenzie Valley pipeline, and to reiterate our concern about possible damage to the west coast of Canada consequent upon any approval of a Pacific tanker route.

Mr. Thompson: What does the government intend to do to speed up our own hearings so that we may know what we are talking about when we speak about building a Mackenzie Valley pipeline?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have pointed out several times in the House that we feel it would be desirable for us to know all the consequences of the impact upon the environment, as well as upon the oil economy, of a Mackenzie Valley pipeline. Studies to the tune of $15 million have been undertaken and the National Energy Board and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be in a position by the end of the year to pass judgment on any applications which might be made for a pipeline permit. I think I should reiterate what I said to the committee, that if anyone has a concrete proposal to make he should put it forward to my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Baldwin: Call an election; that would speed things up.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There's the big mouth. There's the natural gas, over there.

SINKING OF TUGBOAT "HARO STRAITS"—INITIATION OF OFFICIAL INQUIRY—POSSIBLE RAISING OF VESSEL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Some weeks ago the minister indicated his intention of ordering an official inquiry into the sinking of the tugboat Haro Straits. I ask the minister whether such an inquiry has been launched, who are the personnel of the body undertaking the investigation, and when does the minister expect a report?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I apologize to the hon. member for the half answer I am about to give. I believe the formal papers setting up the commission have been signed but I am not absolutely certain. If there is a delay, it is in securing personnel. This will be done within a day or two; and I will certainly advise the hon. member accordingly.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister whether he has made a decision with respect to raising the tug, as he has been requested to do, with a view to recovering the bodies of the crew and trying to ascertain from the state of the tug the cause of its sinking?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have indicated that part of the inquiry should involve at least an attempt to raise the tug. There are apparently some technical problems. If these can be overcome, it will be done.

Can the minister assure the House that a sufficient number of doctors will be authorized to use methadone in their practices?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): That will certainly be our objective.

Mr. Rynard: When will these temporary authorizations become permanent?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper. However, if there is urgency and it is a matter of interest to hon. members, the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. James A. Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): The plans are proceeding on schedule. I expect to announce next week the location and the names of the consultants.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the closure of the Rivers and Gimli bases, together with the transfer of Air Canada facilities, cost 3,000 jobs in Manitoba, is it the intention of the government to expand the new mint so as to provide employment for more than the 200 people originally envisaged?

Have these discussions been completed, and can the minister say what action he intends to take?

In view of Japanese and United States developments in ocean floor mining, is the government encouraging Canadian industry to investigate and develop, if feasible, mining of sea-bottom metalliferous nodules?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think I would have to take that question as notice.

Mr. Ryan: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would have thought that question could have been placed on the order paper. The hon. member has a supplementary and I will judge whether it might also be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, since the minister does not seem to know anything about it, I should like to put the question to the minister in charge of the environment. He was here a moment ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his supplementary.

Mr. Ryan: Since he is not here, I will ask it tomorrow.

POLLUTION

ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT—INQUIRY AS TO PROCLAMATION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which in a way is related to several questions asked today about the environment. Why has the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act which was passed, I think it is fair to say, with a fanfare of trumpets a couple of years ago, not been proclaimed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development answered a little while ago that the regulations to be published under that act have not been yet satisfactorily drawn up but that he expected this to be done very soon.

TRANSPORT

RAPESEED MEAL—ALLEGED FREIGHT RATE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WESTERN CRUSHERS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the great economic importance of the rapeseed crop to western farmers, would the minister investigate and report on what action may be taken with respect to what appear to be discriminatory freight rates related to the movement of rapeseed meal, whereby it costs a western crusher 79 cents per hundredweight to move rapeseed meal from Thunder Bay to Montreal—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me a question such as this should normally be placed on the order paper. The hon. member will agree that the question appears to be rather long and is conveying information.

Mr. Southam: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, this matter is of great urgency and has just come to my attention. I should like the privilege of finishing my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the hon. member to finish his question, but from time to time I bring to the attention of hon. members that it is helpful to everybody if they try to limit the length of questions.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, the meat of the question is that it costs a western crusher 79 cents per hundredweight to move crushed meal from Thunder Bay to Montreal whereas an eastern crusher can move meal over the same route for 44 cents per hundredweight.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will either take note of the question from Hansard or if the hon. member will send me the sheet on which his question is written I will be glad to look into it.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

TRANSFER FROM REGINA TO WINNIPEG OF AUDIT SERVICES BUREAU—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services. In view of the minister's expressed interest in the dispersal of government facilities geographically, would he undertake to review the decision of his department to close the audit services bureau in Regina and transfer it to Winnipeg?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, is a representation. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has a supplementary to the previous question.

GRAIN

RAPESEED—ACTION TO REGULATE OPERATION OF WINNIPEG FUTURES MARKET

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of some of the difficulties we have experienced in pricing rapeseed, is it the minister's intention to introduce further regulation of the operation of the futures market in Winnipeg?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we had in the House exchanges on this subject earlier in the week. We have received representations concerning use of the Grain Futures Act or modification of it. We have also had similar recommendations made by the rapeseed committee. We are giving consideration to the best form of action to implement the purport of these recommendations.

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will allow the hon. member a last supplementary. There are only three minutes before the end of the question period and hon. members asking supplementaries must realize that they are preventing questions from members around them.

Mr. Gleave: I ask the minister if he would be prepared to have Canadian Wheat Board officials and representatives of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture so we may question them regarding pricing developments and arrangements?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would want to give consideration to this representation and to whether it would be best to do that at this stage or in connection with legislative action.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—AGREEMENT BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC—EXERCISE OF LEGISLATIVE POWER BY QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Last Wednesday, the Premier of Quebec stated before the National Assembly that the province of Quebec would keep legislative primacy in the administration of the federal family allowances scheme.

Can the minister say, from this statement, whether negotiations are over between the two governments, and whether Quebec will keep legislative primacy in this field?

Mr. Speaker: This question has been taken into consideration but, for the time being, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—MINISTER'S POSITION ON DECISION IN LIGHT OF OBJECTIONS—PROVISION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Does the minister still stand by his original decision regarding the need for a second international airport, as well as the choice now before us as being the best possible, in view of mounting objections in regard to both decisions?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is yes. I might also call to the hon. member's attention the mounting degree of support for the proposal.

Mr. Alexander: I am appreciative of the minister's answer. In this regard I am with him, though I am seldom with the government on anything. In view of the fact the minister has given an undertaking to table the necessary studies and what-not that enabled him to make these decisions, when is he going to follow through on his undertaking? I believe it is extremely important for the members of the House to know the thinking of the government so we can answer the letters we are receiving on the matter.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I suspect that the hon. member was not in the House some two weeks ago, I believe it was, when I indicated that the material was available and that any hon. member who wished could get it in any quantity he required. My reason for not making a general distribution was simply to try to save money by not sending it to people who were not interested in it.

Mr. Alexander: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I must say this is a new approach. In view of the interest in this matter, I thought the documents would be tabled. Would the minister take it upon himself to publicize the documents so that the whole nation will know what we are talking about?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I think that has been done, but if the hon. member has additional ways in which he wishes to have this done I shall be glad to comply. In the meantime I will table the documents.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have almost reached the end of the question period. The Chair will recognize two or three members who have been trying to ask questions for a few days.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister join his Minister of Fisheries in endorsing a consumer boycott of Danish products to protest the Danish position on fishing for salmon on the high seas?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is not the position of the Canadian government, Mr. Speaker, and of course I support the position of the Canadian government.

An hon. Member: This afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That will be decided jointly by the Solicitor General and the Attorney General of Alberta, Mr. Speaker. They have been discussing this matter and I believe there is agreement in principle to proceed, but I am not aware of the timing which has been set for whatever measure they want to take jointly.

Mr. Paproski: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We hardly have time for supplementary questions, but if the hon. member wants to take the last seconds allotted his party, he may do so.

PLANS FOR CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like the Prime Minister to tell the House what special plans the government has to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary next year of the world's finest police force, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Solicitor General will announce these plans in due course.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—AGREEMENT BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC—EXERCISE OF LEGISLATIVE POWER BY QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in that case, I shall repeat my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Last Wednesday, according to a report published in La Presse, the Premier of Quebec stated:

—that Quebec will retain what it calls the legislative paramountcy in the administration of the federal family allowance program.

I wish to ask the minister whether negotiations between Quebec and Ottawa are completed and whether he can assure the House that Quebec will retain the legislative paramountcy in this field.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. member earlier, discussions with Quebec have not dealt with the question of legislative primacy but have been more along the lines of working out an acceptable solution to family allowances that would be in line with Quebec priorities, and at the same time, with the co-operation of the federal government through its family allowances plan, to provide assistance to people most in need of it. I believe the negotiations are almost completed and I hope we can now get on with the job.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier today I drew to the attention of the House the fact that there is on the order paper a motion for the production of papers in my name concerning a second international airport in Toronto. In reply to a question by the hon. member for Hamilton West, the Minister of Transport indicated that these documents are available.

I cannot understand why the motion I placed on the order paper on April 13 for these documents has not been dealt with and the documents tabled. Perhaps the minister would explain why the documents have not been produced.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. I do not know why there has been a delay; there certainly should not have been. I will look into this matter right away.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-5, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, the amendment thereto of Mr. Korchinski (p. 1872) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Knight (p. 1903).

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I assure the House that my remarks this afternoon will be brief. I believe that a number of points should be made before this bill is referred by the House to the committee. The amendment we have moved deals with encouraging young people to take an interest in the agricultural field.

Last evening I suggested that the Farm Credit Corporation made about 7.6 per cent of its loans to farmers in the under 25 age group. The amendment does not spell out a specific age limit but it does specify that where young farmers meet performance standards—by that we mean making the payments on their loans and meeting the other commitments in the agreements they sign—they should receive a bonus. This is certainly a worthy amendment and should have the support of the House. I hope to receive that support from the agricultural committee when the bill is considered there.

There are a number of other matters in this bill which cause me great concern. Clause 1 is of particular concern. I want to emphasize that the bill will be sent to the committee with a great deal of reservation on my part and on the part of other members of this party. Clause 1 in part reads:

The corporation has all the powers necessary to carry out such duties or functions as may be assigned to it by the governor in council in relation to the administration of any agricultural program—

If this bill is passed, the governor in council could ask the corporation to do almost anything. There is too much of this kind of thing going on today in Canada. Parliament and the elected representatives of the people are being bypassed in this way to the point that the government is now a sort of dictatorship.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has at times suggested that under this bill there will be provision for the Farm Credit Corporation to administer the small farms program. This program will be beneficial mainly to Quebec. It involves the expenditure of $150 million over a seven-year period. The minister has not given us any more information than that. The specific program spelled out by the minister on March 8 related to four matters. When we had officials of the Farm Credit Corporation before the committee, we asked how these four matters would be administered. One of the four items was special credit facilities to encourage prospective farm purchasers. This will mean that the Farm Credit Corporation will be in the business of lending money to land speculators. The manager of the Farm Credit Corporation said he thought that particular item had been dropped. We also asked about authority to enter the market directly to purchase and resell farms as the need arises. The manager of the Farm Credit Corporation thought that aspect had been dropped as well, but was not certain and did not want to commit himself on the matter.

There are four ways in which the small farms program announced by the minister would be used, and perhaps two of them have been dropped. The minister has not given us any information in this regard and has not attempted to explain what is meant by clause 1. While I will support the bill, many answers will have to be given to the committee in a much clearer way than has been the case so far. The Minister of Agriculture is as evasive as a greased pig. That is no way to pass legislation from this place to the committee. We shall be hard pressed in the committee to pass this legislation unless we receive more specific answers than those we have been given to date.

Obviously, this piece of legislation will be used to bring about any new gimmick the government dreams up in the field of agriculture, I suppose to entice Canadians to vote for the Liberal party in the coming election. It will also be used to move many farmers off the land. I do not think that is the direction in which Canadian agriculture or our farmers should be moving. In view of conditions around the world today, I think the farmer enjoys a high quality of life. He may not enjoy the riches of other people, but he still makes his own decisions and is not confronted with pollution and the crowds of the cities. We should encourage more farmers to stay on the land and more young people to take up farming.

We will be making amendments to the bill in committee in order to adjust the interest rate. This was one of the first major pieces of legislation to come before parliament after I was first elected. I well remember we had heated arguments at that time, as a result of which we pegged the interest rate at 5 per cent in respect of Farm Credit Corporation loans. The present Minister of Agriculture has seen this changed and for two years the interest rate has been 8 per cent and as high as 8¾ per cent.

The minister admits that there is no refinancing provision in the Farm Credit Act, although there should be. There is provision for refinancing under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as well as under many other mortgage systems. There should be refinancing every five years. The minister is reluctant to accept that idea because the interest rate may again rise and farmers would be required to pay even higher rates in five years' time. I certainly hope that is not the case.

This bill permits loans up to $100,000. That is a huge amount of money. If we do not make some special provision for repayment of this money, many young farmers may not be able to repay the loan and will end up in debt. The number of loans in arrears is increasing. Three years ago, in the province of Alberta, 15 per cent of Farm Credit Corporation loans were in arrears. The following year the figure was 21 per cent, and last year it was 25 per cent. This bill will not relieve that situation unless we bring in special provisions with regard to repayment of the money borrowed.

As I said in my earlier speech on this piece of legislation, this bill is a glaring example of omission with regard to answering the problems which exist today in the agricultural industry. Without saying anything further, I urge the minister and his parliamentary secretary, who is here today, to take very careful note that in committee we will want a full explanation of clause 1 and as to why reasonable interest rates cannot be set, at least in respect of part of these loans for the small farmer who meets the requirements of the legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on closing the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill C-5, I should like to do nothing more than to pay tribute to the directors of the Farm Credit Corporation. I believe, as all hon. members and, moreover, as the great majority of Canadian farmers, that the federal civil servants, as well as those employed in the various regions of this country, are doing a tremendous job to provide the best possible service to Canadian farmers. And for the work they have performed in the years gone by, Mr. Speaker, as well as for that they will most certainly accomplish in the coming years, I feel that we should express to them our genuine satisfaction.

This having been said, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the many hon. members who have taken part in the debate these last few days, and for the record, I shall state here that 28 members took the floor in order to express various opinions, raise several points of particular interest to them in the existing legislation, as well as in the amendments now before the House. I thank them for their contribution, since they have outlined interesting considerations, and I can assure them that we listened to them very carefully. The officials of the Farm Credit Corporation, like myself, took note of the recommendations and concerns they have expressed during their various interventions.

However, several hon. members commented on the amount of the arrears on the Farm Credit Corporation loans, especially in the Prairie provinces. Perhaps it might be advisable to examine the reimbursement situation in a much more positive light. By the end of the last financial year, on March 31, 1972, the situation in the Prairie region was as follows.

In Alberta, 12,868 farmers, that is 80.7 per cent of those who had borrowed money, were keeping up with their payments; in Saskatchewan, 15,880 farmers, that is 80.2 per cent, were in a similar situation; in Manitoba, 4,930 farmers, that is 79.3 per cent, were paying back their loan regularly.

With regard to the two central provinces of Canada, Ontario and Quebec, 13,199 Ontario farmers—92.7 per cent—and 7,152 Quebec farmers—93.1 per cent—were not behind in their payments.

This, Mr. Speaker, indicates that the situation in the Prairie region was a little more difficult than in Ontario or Quebec, which is understandable, since the amounts loaned in the Prairie region are quite important, as well as the amounts invested. Moreover, for the last three or four years, the slump in wheat sales in the Prairie region certainly had something to do with late repayments.

But in 1971, and this year, it does seem that income will become normal once again and that the Prairie farmers will fast make up for those arrears. To my mind, if the economy maintains itself, within two years at the most, those farmers should have made up their losses and have come back to the normal rate of delayed payments.

A survey of the situation throughout Canada reveals that 58,433 farmers, that is 84.6 per cent of all borrowers, were up to date in their payments by the end of the financial year.

These data must also be studied in the light of the recovery policy of the Corporation. When a borrower finds himself temporarily in financial difficulties, for reasons beyond his control, when payments would cause him hardships, the Corporation takes steps to defer them. I am convinced the hon. members will agree with this. Had the Corporation adopted a rigid attitude, the situation with regard to arreas would be very different. It would certainly be unfair to base ourselves on statistics concerning arrears to come to the conclusion that farmers are on the verge of bankruptcy, when the present conditions are partly due to the conciliating and moderate reimbursement policy of the corporation and depend of international conditions which have improved during the past few months.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, many members have made some comments on the provisions of clause (1) of Bill C-5 which would authorize the Farm Credit Corporation to perform other duties concerning the application of other farm programs on behalf of the government. I would like to point out that the said clause does not authorize the government to carry out the small farms development program nor any other farm program. The House has already authorized the expenditures concerning the small farms development program. Expenditures related to any other program should also be authorized by Parliament.

Clause (1) of the bill merely authorizes the corporation to carry out for the government programs previously approved by Parliament.

The corporation keeps a staff that it well versed in farm management, farm land appraisal, as well as property transactions. Furthermore, this staff is allocated throughout all agricultural areas of this country. It seems logical and reasonable to use the technical knowledge and existing administrative services of the corporation for the administration of certain agricultural programs, such as the small farms development scheme. It would surely be preferable to proceed thus rather than hire new employees and set up new administrative services which would only be used for the application of programs very closely connected with the work already done by the corporation. Such measures would allow better co-ordination of programs, avoid overlapping, and would be more efficient and less costly.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to refer to some other points, only a few of which have been raised.

Some hon. members have mentioned the fact that farmers are too far in debt already, and have said that this bill might cause them to get even further into debt. As far as straight figures are concerned, it is true that farmers may get further into debt, but this is not the only facet of the problem to be considered, as it is not merely a matter of getting into debt, but also a matter of assets.

Whether a farmer owes today $50,000 or $75,000 on properties worth $100,000 and $125,000 or whether he owed, 20 years ago, $10,000 or $15,000 on properties then worth $25,000 or $30,000, is absolutely the same thing.

Of course, the absolute figure has been increased, but proportionately speaking, I do not think there has been any substantial change.

Nowadays, people talk about low investment profits. Surely, everyone acknowledges that agricultural investments today do not yield what they should. But this is not attributable to credit as such. It is partly the result of our economic structures and of economic circumstances both Canadian and international. This is the main reason why farmers get such low prices for their end products. This is the source of all evil. The problem lies at this level and it is there that we should strive to rectify the situation as best we can, and although the soon to be established national farm products marketing agencies will certainly be a step forward—but not necessarily a solution to the problem—on the road to recovery for a better income in respect of the work and productivity of Canadian farmers.

I think we all realize that we must work hand in hand to convince Canadian consumers to pay more for Canadian agricultural products. We should try to sell this idea to our fellow citizens. There is too much anti-agriculture propaganda.

It is always alleged that agricultural products are very expensive. I believe that the main task we should undertake together is to convince the Canadian consumer that he finally does not pay too much for food when compared with other consumer products he buys. That is the main point which we must attack.

Some mention was made, and with reason, of the decrease in the number of farms. Mr. Speaker, this situation has started many years ago; it is therefore not new. The phenomenon is not found only in Canada, it is worldwide. Consequently, it is unreasonable to attack the government. It is a normal evolution taking place in modern society. Cities attract people. Industrialization attracts people. Many things in large urban centres attract people, education, recreation and living facilities.

For all those reasons, unfortunately, the young are attracted to urban centres and it is very hard to find people to follow up in agriculture. Only by providing farm producers with a higher income shall we be able to ensure this. I am sure that young people will engage in agriculture if they know that they can make a decent living, and this is one of the challenges which we must face together.

Some hon. members have said that the interest rate was too high. They think that if the interest rate was set at 5 per cent, the problem would be solved. No, Mr. Speaker, it would not be. The best example I can give is that of the interest rate paid by Quebec farmers, who can borrow money from the Quebec Farm Credit Board at 2½ per cent. And yet, a figure was quoted last week which showed that 25,000 farmers in Quebec, which is about half the farmers there, were in receipt of some kind of welfare payments. Obviously, this cannot be due to their paying too much interest on their loans, since the rate is only 2½ per cent, and yet they are still in a very difficult situation.

Interest rates are not the issue. Of course, they may mean $500 or $600 per year. But this is not the only cause of depression in agriculture, and we will not solve the problem by reducing or by pegging interest rates.

Young people cannot start off in agriculture. Sure enough, it is hard for a young man to start off in agriculture, but it could be easy for him if we still looked at it the way we did 30, 40 or 50 years ago, when a father used to bequeath to his son the property he had developed and acquired and which had been paid for the most part. That principle is still applied within the family farm which is endangered according to some people. Those who have a family farm believe in that despite what can be said here in this House. Instead of selling his son the farm he had developed and which was almost entirely paid for, the father used to transfer it to him so that he would not inherit a debt of $25,000, $35,000 $60,000 or $80,000 which he would drag all his life and which would force him to raise a minimum of cash in order to qualify for a loan.

If the family farm were transfered, as it is being mentioned, there would be no problem for any young man interested in agriculture. Unfortunately, that is not the case nowadays. We understand very well why the young man finds it so difficult to get the operation going.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refute the two amendments on which we shall be voting in a few minutes.

The Progressive Conservative amendment would have us write off part or all of the interest on loans to young new farmers. That is an excellent idea, I think, and it would be ungracious to say the contrary. But if we read the proposal, we realize that a vote for that amendment would kill the bill now before us and we would have to start all over again. It means killing the present bill.

I do not think we can approve this amendment, because of its immediate negative consequences, even though the objective is not necessarily bad. This is a good amendment, but I doubt that it would be an ideal answer and that it would attract a greater number of the younger people to farming.

As for the sub-amendment moved by our friends of the New Democratic Party, they obviously establish a distinction as to the qualities on which young farmers would be selected for obtaining interest deductions on loans. They would like to see the selective process eliminated from the proposal made by the Progressive Conservative Party. I am sure that, if a selection has to be made within a selected group, things will get much more complicated and I agree with them that those who would have to appraise the qualifications and skills of young farmers would have a difficult job, a job in which appraisals could be arbitrary to a certain extent. From that point of view, I agree with them and if subsequently the government was to introduce a measure to encourage young people to engage in agriculture or to stay on the farm, selection criteria should be examined very carefully in order that they do not include too many arbitrary elements.

This being said, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the House reject these two amendments so that the bill may be referred immediately to the Committee on Agriculture for consideration. I hope it will be examined quickly so that it comes back to the House to be passed and that Canadian farmers may take advantage of it immediately.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ESCALATION OF PENSIONS, RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS, INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-207, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to rise in the House today to recommend swift passage of the bill now before the House. In this connection, in terms of the assistance it renders our senior citizens it would be useful to review the record of the Liberal government since 1963 with regard to improving the financial security of Canadians over 65, especially when compared with the previous administration up to 1963. I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, it is a very enviable record indeed.

In 1963 the old age security pension stood at $65 a month. In 1964, under a Liberal government, the old age security pension was raised to $75 a month. In 1966, two years later, the government again moved in this field and introduced a series of new steps which further strengthened the income floor for our senior citizens; a $30 a month supplement was added to basic old age security, which was available to pensioners lacking other resources to provide for their retirement income. That brought the pension at that time, 1966, of those receiving old age security and the guaranteed income supplement up to $105 a month.

That legislation established the guaranteed income principle. Partial benefits were still available, even though many of our aged were receiving earnings, up to a certain level. Under that legislation there was no dollar for dollar deduction; there was no complete cut-off the minute other resources were available. Again in Liberal government legislation there was a new first. A concept of pension escalation was established to take into account the cost of living increase.

Mr. Orlikow: Why just 2 per cent?

Mr. Munro: The level of 2 per cent was set. It should be kept in mind that at no previous time was there any built-in escalation available. It should also be kept in mind that the 2 per cent level was set after a comparison of price increases for the previous five years, indeed the previous ten years, which indicated that this was indeed adequate. But we did say at that time that if at some future date the ceiling proved to be inadequate, then that ceiling could be adjusted. We are delivering on that promise today.

A third and important feature of Liberal government legislation in 1965 was that it involved the lowering of the age of eligibility on a staged basis from 70 to 65 years of age. This eliminated the inadequate and under-utilized old age assistance program with its rather degrading means test. As of today, the old age security and guaranteed income supplement provide a floor for all people 65 years of age and over on the basis of a simple and non-degrading incomes test, a test which has more than proved its validity over the years since its inauguration.

I have referred to significant moves by the Liberal government in raising the pension to $75 a month in 1963 and in raising the basic floor of pensions up to $105 a month in 1966. I should like to move on to 1970, four years later, to the next plank in the improvement of pension benefits. In December of 1970, following the white paper on income security we established the basic old age security pension at $80 with a supplement of up to $55 a month in the case of a single person, for a maximum of $135 a month. In the case of a married couple the supplement was $95 a month. This, together with the combined old age security pension of $160, adds up to $255 a month.

Moreover, all those eligible for full or partial supplementation maintained their eligibility for the cost of living escalation of the full amount of their pension, both the basic old age security benefit and the guaranteed income supplement. So again in 1970 we had a very significant increase in income support afforded to our senior citizens.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us about taking the escalation off the basic $80.

[Mr. Munro.]

Mr. Munro: Today we are once more moving into a major area of improvement of benefits for our senior citizens. We are now raising the maximum guaranteed income supplement for a single person to $150 a month from the previous $135, and we are raising the pensions of married senior citizens to $285 a month, in addition to which we are providing full escalation of both old age security and the guaranteed income supplement. We are removing the 2 per cent limitation and keeping the escalator in line with the cost of living increase. I think all members will agree that this very substantial absolute amount in pension, together with bringing for the first time in Canadian history the cost of living escalation in line with the cost of living index, is a very great step indeed in the support of our senior citizens.

Let us review the situation, then. In 1966 the pension stood at $105 per month for a single person. Today, in 1972, it is $150 a month. In 1966, for a married couple, the pension was $210 a month and today it is $285 a month. That is a very significant increase within a six-year period. In less than a decade of Liberal administration the income floor has risen from $65 a month to $150 a month, or $95 a month additional income which is an increase of almost 150 per cent. In addition, this assistance is available five years earlier than it used to be and now offers complete protection against increases in the cost of living.

I do not believe, having examined the legislation of just about all the nations in the free world, there is any country which has provided for its senior citizens as adequately as Canada under this administration. We can take justifiable pride in the fact that we now have levels approaching adequacy for our senior citizens.

That is not the only area, in terms of our senior citizens, into which we have moved in the past decade. In terms of income supplement this is only one area. As a matter of fact, as many of us know, the government originally conceived the income supplement as a plan transitional to the full implementation of one of the most important pieces of legislation brought in by any Canadian government, the Canada Pension Plan. This was another major thrust of the government during this decade.

An hon. Member: How about drugs?

Mr. Munro: I will get to drugs in a moment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You will need them.

Mr. Munro: The Canada Pension Plan will be in full operation in 1976, paying out full benefit levels. This, of course, not only includes retirement pensions but also disability pensions and pensions for widows and orphans. I think it is important to note that the Liberal government felt the welfare of our citizens in their retirement years to be so important that it instituted a plan which will take only ten years to reach full maturity. Most comparable plans take a lot longer to reach full maturity.

The Canada Pension Plan guarantees for the first time that pension benefits will be available to all Canadian workers, over and above the old age security payment, regardless of the vagaries of coverage under private pension plans. Guarantees are now secure under the Canada Pension Plan in such vital areas as portability, which provides the certainty that in moving from one job to another basic pensions will remain intact. It provides for adequacy in ensuring that these government pensions remain constant with prevailing wage and salary rates.

In terms of scope of benefits, the Canada Pension Plan provides not only for the retirement area but also for areas of disability and protection for the family breadwinner in case of premature death. And, once again, the government kept its eye open to the future as well as to the present. A cost of living escalator is also built into the Canada Pension Plan. The government also intends to continue keeping that plan consistent with growth in wages and salaries in the Canadian economy. In this connection I would refer hon. members to the list of improvements in such vital areas as maximum pensionable earnings contained in the government white paper on income security.

In the senior citizens income security field we not only have old age security and guaranteed income supplements providing for present conditions but also the Canada Pension Plan guaranteeing the future. Even now the federal government has an additional safety-net under senior citizens for whom even full old age security and guaranteed income supplements may not be sufficient. I refer to the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan. This was another cardinal achievement in social policy instituted under a Liberal administration. It permits among many other things, supplementary benefits over and above the guaranteed income supplement, to be shared equally by federal and provincial governments, if the provinces see that there are additional needs to be met.

Finally, I should mention that the government has not only acted to provide security through its own programs. It is also providing encouragement for Canadians who wish to use part of their current income to give themselves extra protection in retirement years. I refer, of course, to the income tax provision which allows the deduction of contributions made by an individual to a registered retirement savings program. Hon. members may recall that just last session, in the context of the general tax reform legislation, this government increased even further this encouragement by raising the deductible ceiling of such contributions to $2,500 a year.

I have indicated the numerous areas into which the government has moved to provide adequate income support for our senior citizens. There are other areas I should like to mention now under the heading of relief from major expenses which, if it were not for legislation passed by this government, would put our senior citizens to extra expense. I have outlined in previous speeches the major features of some of these. However, we know that the provision of income is only one of the ways in which our senior citizens can be assisted. The provision of income helps them purchase what they require to maintain an adequate standard of living, but in a number of areas these people need services which far exceed the amount of income benefits to which they are eligible. Accordingly, the government has moved to ensure that the burden of many of these expenses is removed from their shoulders.

Let me point out the health field in particular. It was a Liberal administration in the 1950s which brought in the hospital insurance program, and it was a Liberal administration in the 1960s which brought in the medical care insurance program. Of course, these measures assisted all Canadians, but they were of greatest assistance to our senior citizens. In addition to bringing in hospitalization and medicare as provisions to protect our senior citizens against the outlay of expenses they could ill-afford, we brought in another measure. We realized that often under hospitalization and medicare there might be premium payments which our senior citizens could not afford. That is why the Canada Assistance Plan, a Liberal achievement of the 1960s, ensures that premium relief for needy, elderly Canadians could be cost-shared by the federal government.

Of course, senior citizens have special health needs which go beyond the ordinary services provided by doctors and hospitals. I refer to special institutions such as chronic care homes—and convalescent homes, as well as extensive use of prescription drugs. Again, the Canada Assistance Plan provides that the cost of supplying and maintaining these services can be extensively shared by the federal government. Thus, most of the burden of keeping up one's health, so important to the enjoyment of one's retirement years, has been lifted from the shoulders of our senior citizens through the programs the nature of which I have described.

Again we have justifiable pride, in comparison with any country in the western world, in terms of the income support provided our senior citizens. I do not believe there is any country in the free world which provides comparable legislation to that which guarantees Canadian senior citizens adequate protection.

I have indicated some measures to relieve our senior citizens from expenses. I will move into one other area in this complex program to assist our senior citizens. I refer to housing. Through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation the government provides for senior citizens' housing. In recent years this has been drastically increased. Also in this area the Canada Assistance Plan makes provision for federal sharing of the cost of maintaining needy senior citizens in homes for the aged.

But even that is not all. One other major expense which Canadian citizens, including senior citizens, must bear is the expense of paying taxes. In the tax field the government realizes its special responsibility to lighten the burden of our senior citizens. This is why only last year we raised the supplementary tax deduction for our older people from $500 to $650 and at the same time reduced the age of eligibility for this deduction from 70 to 65. This effectively exempts those Canadians in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement for the aged from all tax responsibility. And again, on Monday night hon. members heard of yet another step along this same path when the Minister of Finance announced that these exemptions would now be raised to $1,000.

So having talked about programs designed to relieve our senior citizens of expenses, as well as the income support measures, I would now like to move quickly into the area of services for our senior citizens. As I have already mentioned, we have provided an income floor for our senior citizens and we have relieved them of major areas of expense. But to provide financial support and relief in the area of financial expense is really not enough. These actions are essentially passive. They provide the senior citizens the financial ability to live a life approaching comfort. But positive action is also highly desirable in programs which allow our senior citizens to participate in activities which add social and emotional richness to their lives. Just for this reason the Canada Assistance Plan provides cost-sharing services which permit this rounding-out, including such things as home visiting programs and some recreational programs. Again, I think hon. members should be justifiably proud of these provisons.

However, this still leaves one other important area of human activity. I refer to the area of challenge. Simply because a person has advanced to a certain age level does not mean he has ceased to be able to make a meaningful contribution to our society. There are many talents and skills among Canadians 65 years of age and over which ought to be tapped both to enhance a sense of continued meaning in their lives and also to benefit those who can make great use of the skills of our senior citizens.

One prototype program in this regard is now operating under the aegis of the Department of External Affairs. I refer to Canadian Executive Service Overseas, a program which seeks to make available to developing countries the knowledge and talents of experienced executives and managers, people imbued with the wisdom that has come from many years of experience. Programs such as these give the cue to moving ever more strongly in this area, and this is indeed our intention. I will have more to say about it at a later date, but I think that the New Horizons for the Aged program which the Minister of Finance announced in his Monday night budget will provide even more opportunities for those 65 years of age and over to stay right in the mainstream of Canadian society, rather than being forcibly turned out to pasture and confined to an inactive existence.

So in review I would indicate that we have now moved up, since 1966, from a guaranteed income supplement which provided $155 a month to an income supplement which guarantees a single person $150 a month.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That first figure should be $105.

Mr. Munro: That, of course, is even better. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) states, the former amount should be $105.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister said $155 when he meant $105. He should follow his notes.

Mr. Munro: We now have the level of $150 a month for a single person and $285 a month for a married couple. Added to this we have had significant tax relief through improvement of exemptions. And under the Canada Assistance Plan, services such as institutional care and drugs can be provided our senior citizens.

Mr. Rynard: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro: Yes, indeed, they can. Since there is significant income support under the present legislation to $150 a month for a single person and $285 a month for a married couple, perhaps the provinces no longer will find it necessary to give additional income support as some of them, though not all, have been doing. Perhaps this will enable them to take greater advantage of the cost-sharing arrangements under the Canada Assistance Plan to provide these very necessary services for our senior citizens.

Couple all this with a stepped-up housing program and the proposed New Horizons program to encourage participation of our senior citizens in useful and meaningful endeavour, to help end the isolation from which so many of them suffer, and I think the government in advancing this legislation today can take justifiable pride in the provision of income support services and protection against crippling expenses which is unequalled in any other country in the western world.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the interest of the rapid passage of the bill on second reading I will not be too long. I would just like to mention my amazement at the fact that two or three days after the budget speech the government can suddenly come up with amendments to this bill. All we have to do is look back at the Family Income Security Plan in Bill C-170 which has dragged for almost two years, and we have not yet obtained benefits for the children of this country, benefits which are so badly needed by the low-income families.

The minister spoke about the great things the government is going to do. We agree that this bill is a good one, but less than seven weeks ago, on March 23, 1972, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) rejected the Progressive Conservative appeal to the government which read as follows:

—to contribute to pensions, allowances and other benefits granted or administered by the government a yearly percentage increase corresponding to the percentage increase in the consumer price index for Canada.

The minister that night voted against the motion which read exactly as I have quoted it. Today, we in the House of Commons are in the incongruous position of having the same motion put before us in the form of a bill introduced by none other than the minister himself. What miracle wrought this conversion from a steadfast no on March 23 to a definite yes on May 8? The minister had some interesting things to say on March 23, 1972. He dismissed absolutely our requests for fairness to Canada's 1,800,000 recipients of the universal old age pension and our pleas that he raise pensions to a decent level and peg them to rises in the cost of living. He said, and I quote from page 1103 of Hansard:

As a government, we have obviously decided that in terms of bringing money to those who need it in waging a successful campaign against poverty, we must change from making universal payments to everyone, irrespective of income, to a selective technique. We must have an income test—I call it a guaranteed income technique—applied to what was previously our universal demogrant program of old age security—

Anyone listening to that speech might have been led to believe that the government contemplated no changes in the old age security legislation. If we were to believe the minister, the 2 per cent maximum cost of living increase to the guaranteed income supplement was more than adequate because he said, again on March 23, as recorded in Hansard at page 1105, that the 2 per cent cost of living increase——is proving to have the tendency to keep reasonably in line with increases in the cost of living.

Suddenly, between March 23 and May 8, the minister has discovered that old age pensioners deserve a better break and a more just cost of living increase on their benefits, just as we argued on March 23. Perhaps the minister found so much sympathy within the Liberal party for the Conservative party's motion that he had to work hard to incorporate the proposal into his party's platform just to stem the tide of those in his party who objected.

Consistency has never been one of the Liberal government's better attributes nor one of the Minister's strong points. From now on, whenever I or any of my colleagues ask the minister a question or press him for some reform and he gives a negative reply, we shall be confident that our request will be Liberal government policy within about six weeks—perhaps a little longer if an election does not appear imminent. The inconsistency and the cynicism of this Liberal government makes one wonder. First they bring in and then act on a white paper that shaves off the old age pension at $80 a month, with no cost of living increase guaranteed. Then more than two years later, when the nearness of an election makes it politically expedient, they belatedly promise a cost of living increase to these deserving old people.

Obviously, the polls have the government so terrorized that what we are witnessing today is a deathbed conversion. A conversion is better late than never, but I remind the government that few deathbed conversions have saved the dying patient's life, and this late move is unlikely to save a dying Liberal government.

There were three changes in pension legislation announced in the budget speech of the finance minister on May 8, 1972. These three changes were: first, to escalate the basic old age security pension by the full increase in the consumer price index, effective January 1, 1972; second, to increase the maximum guaranteed income supplement by $15 per person as of January 1, 1972, with full escalation after April 1, 1973; third, to escalate veterans pensions and allowances by the full increase in the consumer price index, effective January 1, 1972. These changes are a welcome but belated recognition of the needs of Canada's aged and veterans. But because these needs are so late in being recognized by the government, the measures proposed do not even begin to make up the ground lost in the last few years.

First of all, the failure of this government to escalate the basic old age pension according to increases in the cost of living from the time they first came into power is depriving old age pensioners of a healthy sum of money each month. If the Liberal government had actually embarked on its promises and the goal of a just society which it promised in 1968, it would have arranged for old age security pensions and guaranteed income supplements to be increased yearly at a rate corresponding to the annual rise in the cost of living.

If such a plan had been instituted, then the 1967 old age security pension would have risen by a fair margin by 1972. Old age pensioners, therefore, should have been receiving on January 1, 1972, much more than the $82.88 the government is now offering them with retroactive magnanimity. I will move an amendment to this effect at the end of my short speech.

Second, the change in the guaranteed income supplement, a program wildly hailed by Liberal government members as the answer to poverty among the aged, still will not bring Canada's poverty stricken up to the 1971 poverty line. Consider, for example, the single, old age pensioner whose income is less than $24 a year and who is therefore eligible for the maximum guaranteed income supplement. He will now receive a total annual income from old age security, the guaranteed income supplement and his own sources, of $1,834 to $1,858. But the poverty line for a single person in 1971 was $2,013. Therefore, the government is still guaranteeing poverty for Canada's aged now receiving the maximum supplement, by keeping their annual income from $155 to $179 below last year's poverty line. At least 27.3 per cent of all Canada's old age pensioners, involving 481,451 individuals, will be kept in this guaranteed annual poverty position.

Third, the change in the guaranteed income supplement legislation will be of no benefit to Canada's veterans who are in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement, for whatever additional money they receive through the guaranteed income supplement will be deducted from their veterans pension. The $15 they receive from the Department of National Health and Welfare will be deducted from the pension they have been receiving from the Department of Veterans Affairs. Nowhere in his budget did the finance minister estimate the savings to the federal government as a result of the $15 a month lowering of veterans pensions to Canada's aged veterans. I imagine that the minister's attitude is sunshine budget now, tears later.

With regard to veterans, the single veteran over 65 years of age is now eligible to receive $161 a month. With the increase of $15, an aged person who is 65 years of age and not a veteran would be receiving only $150. So he will lose that $15. At the same time, the married veteran whose spouse is also over 65 years of age is now getting $271. He will get an increase of only $14, which is what the wife would receive anyway as an old age citizen.

These three criticisms of the Liberal government's new look for old age pensioners are important ones on which I expect the minister to act within seven weeks, if his past record of requiring seven weeks for conversion to Progressive Conservative ideals and suggestions continues. We also await anxiously his promised introduction of the New Horizons for the Aged policy mentioned in the budget speech. Perhaps in this new policy the Minister of National Health and Welfare will recognize that in addition to being voters who have urgent needs, the aged are human beings and Canadians who want to participate fully in our society.

One further aspect of this bill worries me. This problem concerns the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) must expect old age pensioners to be financial wizards. This year, old age pensioners are to receive, effective the first day of the calendar year, a cost of living increase in their pensions based on the rise in the consumer price index over the fiscal year. Next year they will receive, on the first day of the fiscal year, a cost of living increase based on the rise in the consumer price index during the 1972 calendar year. With visions of fiscal and calendar years dancing in their heads, they will have many sleepless nights trying to figure out what amount of money they can count on through old age security benefits over the next few months.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, during this debate to place reform of old age pensions in the context of the budget itself. This reform has more to recommend it than the fact that it is long overdue. It is the single initiative in the budget that will provide direct stimulus to aggregate demand and thereby immediate stimulus to job creation. It is not adequate but it is one step in the right direction. I think it is appropriate to talk about the over-all effect of the budget in this debate because this measure and the budget are primarily responses to continuing inflation in Canada.

The continuing improvement in old age pensions will protect old people against inflation and provide some stimulus to the economy as a whole. The over-all budget, however, will perpetuate massive unemployment to fight inflation. The budget is not really directed toward reducing unemployment. The budget is not directed toward reaching full employment in the future. The budget does not represent a change in policy. All the government has done is to shift from creating massive unemployment to perpetuating it. This situation is not the fault of the Canadian economy and it is not a whim of fate. We have mass unemployment and will continue to have mass unemployment because this is the wilful policy of the government.

The budget could have been designed to get us on a swift path to full employment. The corporate tax cuts are necessary, but in my opinion they will do little to reduce unemployment directly. Their effect will not be significant until the latter part of 1973. This, of course, is common knowledge in economic circles and also in government circles. We know, and the government knows, that full employment is possible without running the risk of inflation greater than that of our major trading partners. All that stands in the way is a fearful government that refuses to allow the individual taxpayer and the economy to realize their potentials.

I will not deal with the many programs the minister announced and the "great" policies that the government has come up with in past years. He mentioned the Canada Assistance Plan and the housing program. If there is one thing that worries me and many Canadians, it is the situation with regard to housing, particularly for old age pensioners and senior citizens. I hope the minister will be able to persuade his colleagues to adopt a proper housing program for poor Canadians. I shall end my speech, Mr.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Speaker, by moving the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That all the words after "That" be struck out and there be substituted the following:

"this House, deeply conscious of the need to increase the old age security pension so as to reflect the full increase in the consumer price index since January 1, 1967, to date with adjustments to the guaranteed income supplement, is of the opinion that the government should consider the advisability of introducing appropriate amendments to effect such changes to the present limited terms of the bill."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have received a copy of the amendment from the hon. member. I am sure hon. members can assist the Chair, because I wonder whether the amendment is acceptable from a procedural standpoint. I do not know how many copies are available for hon. members, so I shall again read the amendment without indicating whether it is procedurally acceptable. It reads:

That all the words after "That" be struck out and there be substituted the following:

"this House, deeply conscious of the need to increase the old age security pension so as to reflect the full increase in the consumer price index since January 1, 1967, to date with adjustments to the guaranteed income supplement, is of the opinion that the government should consider the advisability of introducing appropriate amendments to effect such changes to the present limited terms of the bill."

It seems to the Chair that this wording does not meet one of the tests which we must apply to reasoned amendments. I may be in error on this and I know hon. members will relate their remarks to it. The question is whether or not it opposes the progress of the bill, whether or not it opposes the principle of the bill; in short, whether or not the reasoned amendment is contrary to and opposes the principle of the bill.

Second, according to the hon. member's own words his amendment refers to "introducing appropriate amendments to effect such changes to the present limited terms of the bill." These proposed amendments are not spelled out in his motion and the question in my mind is whether this is something that might be done normally in committee. I would appreciate the advice of hon. members.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the amendment put forward by my colleague is a reasoned amendment. We must bear in mind the particular difficulties which face a member of this House who is not of the administration in putting forward an amendment which proposes to affect the level of pensions payable under a government bill. As Your Honour can readily see, that is the purport of my colleague's amendment. He wishes the cost of living escalator to be effective from the date when increases in the cost of living were made applicable to old age pensions. To that extent one must go back to a particular incident in which I do not believe Your Honour was personally involved. I should not call it an incident. It was the occasion on September 13 last when the House was considering second reading of Bill C-259 and I put a reasoned amendment before the House.

At that time there was considerable discussion with regard to the use of reasoned amendments which, I may say, seem to be rather strange birds in this House. As a matter of fact, it was only during the latter months of 1971 that the House witnessed a number of attempts by hon. members, in particular the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move reasoned amendments. Until my amendment to Bill C-259 on second reading, none had succeeded.

I say this not in the spirit of a game to be played between members of the House and the Chair, but the question of reasoned amendments is of recent origin so far as this House is concerned. To use the words I used, as recorded at page 7763 of Hansard, on that occasion when I started to address the Chair, Beauchesne is singularly dangerous to rely on in this day of vastly changed rules, and more reliance should be placed in this particular field on Erskine May's Seventeenth Edition. We know that in the British House a reasoned amendment is the normal type of amendment. If Your Honour wishes me to read a number of references and examples that have been used in recent years, we will see that the reasoned amendment is a very useful tool for an expression of the views of the House with regard to a bill.

Before this House there is a motion for second reading of this bill and its referral to committee. I put it to Your Honour that it is not sufficient that the only acceptable amendment is one that is completely opposed to the bill. I would say there is no such thing, as complete confrontation which is absolutely necessary with regard to a bill. There can be opposition in degree, criticism in degree or suggestion for modification. When it comes to the question of whether a motion at second reading stage is one of opposition or is a dilatory motion, one which asks that the bill be not now read a second time but be read six months hence is a dilatory motion which opposes every principle of the bill.

The principle of the bill, in this case, is that the Old Age Security Act be amended in a number of particulars. It provides for the application of a cost of living escalator clause. It asks that there be an increase in the guaranteed income supplement; that the cost of living escalator formula shall apply to the guaranteed income supplement; that there be a change in the residence requirement for those entitled to Canadian pensions who live outside the country.

Which one of these amendments is deemed to be a principle of the bill? Not one. That there be an increase in pensions? My colleague proposes, and he cannot do this directly, that the cost of living escalator formula should apply retroactively to the basic pension from the date of the introduction of the cost of living escalator provision. In the wording of the motion he respects the limitation on the ability of a private member of this House to bring in a motion which, if accepted, would force the government into the expenditure of public funds.

But that is not the case at all. We do, in a reasoned way, indicate support for the measures that have been brought in, but indicate that there is this other need and that it must be considered by the government. We say that the government must bring in the amendment, as only it can, and that is why our amendment is so worded. The government must take appropriate steps to introduce a proper amendment in order to effect the purpose of our motion.

There is in the motion opposition to a good part of the bill, in that it is a motion to extend certain provisions. Surely the idea of an extension of the application of a formula cannot be taken as agreement with the proposal in a government bill, no more than if the government's proposal with regard to the guaranteed income supplement increment was to increase it to $5, because how would hon. members of this House propose to raise it to, say, $15 or $30 as it is now but by this type of amendment? It is sufficiently opposed to a portion of the bill that it would qualify as a reasoned amendment. It does not offend the rule regarding excessive authority on the part of a private member. It is certainly relative.

I would refer Your Honour to the arguments that were entered into at much greater length on my amendment to the omnibus income tax bill, which His Honour accepted. I would say that he did not necessarily accept it wholeheartedly. Perhaps opposition would have been somewhat easier had we enjoyed the benefit of His Honour's wise thinking on the matter of reasoned amendments, if there had been a follow-through with a set of guidelines. At the moment I would say that this House is striking out in the dark with regard to reasoned amendments and that we would save a good deal of time and difficulty for ourselves and the Chair if we had a clear understanding of the Chair's views on reasoned amendments.

As I pointed out—I do not want to belabour the point—we are working under a new set of rules whereby this House can have a meaningful exchange of ideas. I would remind Your Honour that this amendment is put forward on second reading, not at the report stage. At report stage my colleague would have to engage in the subterfuge of moving an amendment to the appropriate clause that he wished to amend, bearing in mind that he would be faced in committee with a much greater obstacle in trying to move an amendment to a particular clause extending a cost of living escalator formula which involved expenditure of public funds. That procedure, I would suggest to Your Honour, would be far too limiting for an exchange of ideas and meaningful debate in this House. Our rules are designed for meaningful debate. I reiterate what I said in September: report stage is not the most convenient, the most helpful time for this exchange of ideas.

Then we come to third reading. I again point out to Your Honour that third reading is an exceedingly limited opportunity for the exchange of ideas on a bill where the House has already had the opportunity of expressing its formal views, by way of vote if necessary, on second reading or on the really operative clauses of the bill. All it means on third reading is that either there is a standard dilatory motion, which is not helpful for the exchange of ideas, or modification of an important portion of the bill. If there is a stereotyped motion, we have to go back to committee for consideration of a particular point. The committee itself cannot do anything with regard to increasing any expenditure in the bill, so I put it to Your Honour that that avenue is barred.

Our rules are not a bar to meaningful discussion and exchange of ideas; they cannot be. We cannot have dead-hand rules of that type. I have had enough experience in the Chair in dealing with points of procedure to know there must be some form of structure for reasoned amendments. Your Honour may not have seen this type of amendment before, but both the House and the Chair operate by way of experience. Until we get guidelines which will be helpful both to those presiding over the sessions of this chamber and to members of this House, I submit that very serious consideration should be given to this question.

Your Honour may wish to reserve opinion as to the extent of the amendment, and then I might be in a very happy position whatever may be the views of the Chair on this amendment. Perhaps we are setting a few precedents. However, if a few precedents are set, when we get to the happy time of having some of these guidelines it will be much easier to understand what they are.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, my comments will be very brief. I submit that the proposed amendment is not procedurally acceptable, on two grounds. First, I submit that an amendment to a motion for second reading of a bill must be in opposition to the bill or the progress of the bill. This motion fails to do that directly or in clear language. It appears that the intent of the motion is to try to have the best of both worlds. The intent is to try to adopt that which is proposed in the bill but suggest that the government should consider going further. I submit that is clearly not within the limits of the precedents and rules that surround the moving of amendments to second reading motions.

In any event, the problem of the recommendation that is an essential part of this bill is that although the member is not endeavouring to move an increase directly in the expenditures that would be involved under this bill, in effect his amendment asks the government to do that for him or consider the advisability of doing it for him. Were that to be done or attempted, it would require steps which would exceed the recommendation of His Excellency with regard to this bill.

The hon. member is cleverly endeavouring to try to have the best of both worlds, being in support of the measure as far as it goes instead of being opposed, and at the same time causing further study to be made on it. Without directly moving that further expenditures be made, the hon. member is suggesting that a study of further expenditures be made. In both respects the motion is out of order.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I contend that the amendment is out of order. There was a time in this House when we debated the recommendations which preceded a bill. Under the new rules we do not debate such recommendations. What the amendment clearly tries to do is go beyond the scope of the recommendation of Her Majesty. By the device of an amendment to a bill, the hon. member is doing something he cannot do because of the restrictions that exist in terms of the recommendation on which the bill is based. I see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) shaking his head.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was merely saying the hon. member meant His Excellency rather than Her Majesty.

Mr. Francis: I appreciate the correction of my good friend. I hope he agrees with the substance of my argument.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not necessarily.

Mr. Francis: An amendment to a bill cannot go beyond the scope of the recommendation on which the bill is based. I submit the amendment fails in that respect and attempts to impose an additional drain upon the treasury.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has suggested that I might take this matter under advisement. I do not think any great harm will be done if I do that. It is now 20 minutes before six o'clock. As I indicated initially, my inclination is that the amendment is not in order. I am still of that opinion, but I will follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West, give further thought to this question and make a ruling that might be helpful. If hon. members are agreeable, I will reserve my decision until the bill is next before the House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to Bill C-207, I find there are several things I should like to say first. The problem is that one has to make a choice. The first thing I shall do is direct a word of encouragement and hope to the senior citizens of Canada, particularly their very active organizations. I say to them that their message is getting through. Even this government is realizing that it cannot fail to improve the pensions of our senior citizens. That is why we have this measure before us today.

When I mention senior citizens and their active organizations, I am thinking of groups with which I am in contact all the way from Newfoundland and Cape Breton Island to Vancouver Island, organizations such as Pensioners Concerned, United Senior Citizens of Ontario and senior citizens organizations and federations in every province of Canada. I also think of a new body on the Pacific coast known as Pensioners for Action Now. Members of all parties who have recently been in Vancouver are aware of this organization. Some of them are perhaps painfully aware of how hard the members of that body are working for a basic pension of $150 a month and for other improvements for our senior citizens.

The legislation before us today falls far short of the hopes, expectations and demands of our senior citizens and it will not satisfy them. However, at least the fact that it has been brought in says to these people that their message is getting through. I trust they will be encouraged, by this fact, to keep up their campaigns. They know that some of us in this House of Commons will continue to support their hopes, expectations and demands until we win real justice for our older and retired people.

The second thing I wish to say as a first word is that to some of us in this House of Commons this is a very happy day. I do not say that because we are thoroughly satisfied with the legislation the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has introduced but because it is one of those occasions when we are reminded that persistence does pay.

• (1740)

I did a little chasing through the records last night and this morning. I did not begin to turn up all the occasions upon which members of this party have pleaded for improvements in old age pensions and changes of one sort or another. But time after time the answer from this minister and his predecessors has been no. Time after time, when votes have been possible, we have lost those votes. In my own experience this goes back for three decades. I can remember the late J. L. Ilsley telling me I was asking for too much because I wanted the $20 pension raised to $25. So today we are reminded of the fact that persistence pays.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is inflation that does it, really.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And just as I have given what I hope is a word of encouragement to pensioners and to their organizations to carry on their activities, I say to the government and to the people of Canada generally that we shall continue to press for what we believe these people are entitled to receive, namely, a scale of pensions which will make it possible for those who have retired not just to be kept alive but to share in the standard of living which they, in their working years, helped to make possible.

I suspect it is desirable for us to say early in our response to this bill how we intend to vote and why. We are voting for the bill. I am sure this will come as no surprise. After all, we gave consent at the beginning of the day's sitting for the bill to be read the first time and printed so that it could be discussed without delay.

Mr. Munro: I hope David has not changed his mind since then.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You look after your own stand. Even though it is a bill which is terribly inadequate in that the amounts of increases offered are terribly low, we feel that these amounts should be put into the hands of our senior citizens as soon as possible. We feel they should get them without delay even though for those on a pension of $80 the increase will amount to only $2.88 a month, which does not go very far these days, and even though for those on the guaranteed income supplement, at the maximum the increase amounts to only $15 a month in the case of a single person and $30 a month in the case of a married couple. These amounts should not be denied for one week if we can avoid it, and that is why we are prepared not only to vote for the bill before us but to do what we can to expedite its passage into law.

In saying this, however, I should like to make it clear that we believe the government is trying to fob off our old people with an amount which is a disgrace to a country which is producing goods and services to the tune of $95 billion. In effect, we are saying to those whose efforts have helped to build up our country and make all this possible, that all we can do now is to increase their pensions by $2.88 a month, or $15 a month if they have nothing else. That is not good enough for a country like Canada.

I come now to the fourth point I want to make, and perhaps it is time to take the gloves off. I have been here for a long time. I have seen a good many examples of sheer, crass cynicism on the part of several governments. But seldom have I seen anything as cynical as the performance on the part of the government in connection with this piece of legislation.

Mr. Munro: That is coming from an expert, judging from the debate on family allowances.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister makes some references to family allowances. In the bill on family allowances he is forsaking a principle which it took the Liberals 50 years to accept. In this bill the minister is at least going back in some measure, to that principle, the principle of universality, and this is why, despite the smallness of the amounts involved, we find it is a bill we cannot oppose.

But to me this is an example of crass political cynicism, the sort of thing which makes the people of Canada wonder what politics and parliament and government are all about. The reason for asking the House to deal with this bill today and to put it through as quickly as possible was stated by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) this afternoon: it was in order that the increases provided for in the bill could, if possible, be included in the cheques which go out at the end of June. What are the increases for which the bill provides? In the case of those drawing only $80 a month—and according to the last return they numbered 778,480, or 45 per cent of those over the age of 65—the increase which the government wishes to get into their cheques at the end of June amounts to $2.88 a month, that is, 3.6 per cent of the basic $80.

Mr. Speaker, this is the era of cabinet leaks. I intend to spill another one. No. I am making this up, of course, though I am sure I might have got away with it had I pretended to state what went on in cabinet as though I had been there. They discussed this matter. The question was asked, "What about this increase of $2.88 a month? If we can get it to the old age pensioners by the end of June, and if we can persuade the opposition to let it go through, and if we call an election for July, say July 17, will that $2.88 be enough to persuade the 778,480 people who are on $80 a month to vote Liberal?" "No," said one of the cabinet ministers, "that is not enough. After all, Walter Harris tried six bucks and that didn't work, and a couple of years ago the present minister tried 42 cents, and that's why there has been so much opposition to this government from old age pensioners." So one of the smarter ministers—

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, I am not telling you that. His name is not part of my leak. One of the smarter ministers said, "You know, there is a way in which we could take care of this. Instead of making the increase effective just for the June cheque, we could make it retroactive to January 1. We have already provided that the old age security payments are paid on a fiscal year basis. January, February and March have already gone by, and the payments were at the rate of $80; but if we put this on a retroactive basis and provide for six months at an extra $2.88 and get it into the cheques at the end of June, that would amount to an extra $17.28." Well, $2.88 wouldn't do the trick, and $6 in the days of Walter Harris didn't do the trick. Then somebody in the cabinet said, "But I believe we can do it with $17.28".

That is the bait that is being held out to our old age pensioners, a cheque at the end of June with an extra $17.28 in it, in the hope that in the election that will probably be called on July 17 the feeling of kindness toward the government will carry over. If the election is not called then but is put off until August, September or October, then instead of getting cheques of $97.28 such as they will get at the end of June, these people will be getting a cheque for only $82.88. Then they will ask what has happened. They will say, "The government gave us this big increase; now they have cut us back and once again we are starving".

Mr. Munro: You are forgetting the guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I will come to that in a moment, if the minister does not mind.

Mr. Munro: I know you like to forget that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, not at all. If the minister thinks I am forgetting that, I will come to it right away. I will give him a little more of my cabinet leak. The cabinet came to realize that they could raise the guaranteed income supplement by $15, so that those who have nothing will get $150 instead of $135. They gave this task to the boys upstairs to work out, and they did it very ingeniously. According to the bill, the government is providing an increase in the supplement which brings it up to $67.12. Added to the $82.88, this amounts to a total of $150. That is just a case of the technocrats doing their job.

But someone in the cabinet said, "Fifteen dollars extra at the end of June? They will not notice that; that will not win the election. However, if we give these people six months retroactivity, six times $15 is $90, and if single people receive $90 and married people $180 in addition to their June cheque we should win the July 17 election without any trouble". The only difference between this session of the cabinet and the session in 1957 that decided on the $6 increase which Paul Martin brought in—though Walter Harris, being the minister of finance, made the basic decision—is that in 1957 the Liberals wanted to lose the election and went out of their way to find a way of doing so. We now have Liberals who want to win again, and they are out to buy votes from these retired people who are drawing the supplement. Those on the supplement are 55 per cent of the total. I think the minister said two-thirds the other day, but surely by now he knows better than that.

Mr. Munro: The new increase in GIS will bring more of them into the system.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The new levels will bring more people in. The total of 55 per cent will become 60 per cent or somewhere around that. Is that what the minister is saying?

Mr. Munro: At least.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In other words, the number of people who will get this $17.28 as an election bribe at the end of June will decrease a little, and the number who will get the $90 or $180 will increase a little.

Mr. Munro: The number of people in need in the future will get more. I should think that would impress you.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister is pointing out that the number of people who have greater need is increasing. As long as this government is in power, more people will be finding themselves in greater need. But the point I am making is that you have here a cabinet decision that is cold, crass and cynical. For years the government said no, it was not prepared to do anything for the pensioners. Now the government has decided to do something.

Do they do this in the normal way by making a pension increase effective when it becomes law as they did in 1970? That increase of 42 cents was not made retroactive; it did not apply until the following month. Or does the government provide for a nice spell of retroactivity so that the pensioners of Canada will feel kindly toward the government in the month of July? If anybody thinks I am going out on a limb in talking about a July 17 election, give or take a week or two. I cannot see this government putting out this bait and letting the political advantage of it melt away by October. If it does call an election on July 17, I hope that the editorial writers and people of Canada will roundly condemn the government for this kind of political cynicism, not only because it plays fast and loose with the needs of our old age pensioners but because it is playing fast and loose with the whole political process.

Someone said something earlier about war veterans not getting the increase now, but I am not going to be able to come to that in my speech today. I shall cover that point when we get back to the bill on Friday. I understand that we shall be debating the budget tomorrow and on Friday return to this measure. If we finish it we shall talk about the changes to war veterans pensions and allowances, and then on Monday go back to the budget. Tuesday we shall see where we are. Then we have Wednesday and Thursday and dissolution comes in there somewhere, there or on Friday, once the pension increases are through and it is clear that the pensioners will get this extra money.

I said I felt that this was crass political cynicism. Like the last speaker, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), and bearing in mind part of my past, I welcome this conversion even if it has been made on the road to an election. But when one realizes what the government and this minister have said about pension increases, and when one realizes what they said about taking the escalation off the basic old age pension, I think the minister should be in sackcloth and ashes instead of grinning, as he did, from ear to ear when bringing in the legislation today.

It was only 17 months ago, in December of 1970, that we debated a bill to which the minister referred in glowing terms today and which, among other things, removed the 2 per cent escalation from the basic pension, which at that point had gone up to $79.58 and which by that bill was made $80. We fought that at every stage, on second reading, in the committee, back in the House and so on. Then on Wednesday, December 17, 1970, there were two recorded votes in this House which were on one point only, namely, that the escalation should continue to apply to the basic $80. This minister led the fight against that proposition, and when the votes were taken on the night of Wednesday, December 17, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), who announced this change the other night, were both in the House and cast negative votes.

An hon. Member: So did the Prime Minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, the Prime Minister did not vote no; the Prime Minister was absent. However, the point I am making is that they took the very firm position that this was the wrong thing to do, to keep the escalation on the basic $80 pension.

I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, so on Friday I shall go a little more into the things the government and this minister have said during the last 16 or 17 months, even in recent times when they simply said, "No change". The government is now on the road to Damascus, on the road to the election. The government has seen the light and has suddenly about-turned and said it will do something for the old age pensioners. I do not like this kind of political cynicism.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose the following motion: In view of the slowness of negotiations between the Quebec and Ottawa governments concerning social policies, and in view of the fact that an agreement between the two governments is urgently necessary in the present situation in Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin):

That this House forthright refer the whole matter to the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs and that special meetings be held in order to reach a solution agreeable to both governments.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion moved by the hon. member for Joliette. This motion, moved under the provisions of Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent of the House.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have noted that there is no unanimity. Therefore the motion cannot be put.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-208, to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, to provide for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS FOR YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1969 AND 1970, TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Government Notices of Motions.

May 9, 1972—The President of the Privy Council:

That the Public Accounts for the year ended March 31, 1969 and the year ended March 31, 1970, and the reports of the Auditor General thereon, together with the evidence adduced by the committee during the second and third Sessions of the 28th Parliament, be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might rise on a point of order to suggest that as a result of discussions it might be possible to move that this reference to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be accepted at this time, if this could be done with consent.

Mr. Baldwin: We are quite agreeable. We think that the sooner we get these looked into the sooner we can look at the next ones which will be interesting.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister's point of order is the one on which I was rising, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we agree.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1969 and the year ended March 31, 1970, and the reports of the Auditor General thereon, together with the evidence adduced by the committee during the second and third Sessions of the 28th Parliament, be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROJECTED CONSUMER DEMAND LEVEL—ADEQUACY TO SUPPORT ECONOMIC EXPANSION IN LIGHT OF INCREASE IN PERSONAL INCOME TAX ON JANUARY 1, 1973

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister—I do not know whether he is visiting Rideau Hall or where he is—I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: You are nervous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Laing.]

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance upon what projections of consumer demand levels he based his decision to allow an increase of 3 per cent in personal income taxes to come into effect on January 1 next?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the hon. gentleman's premise. There was nothing in the budget affecting personal income tax. This parliament three or four weeks ago extended for the year 1972 the temporary 3 per cent reduction on personal income tax and the 7 per cent reduction on corporation tax which were introduced in October last by my predecessor. In the terms of that law, a law of this parliament, both the 3 per cent temporary reduction in personal tax and the 7 per cent reduction in corporate tax will expire at the end of 1972 except, of course, for manufacturers and processors with which the budget dealt. I would say to my hon. friend that in terms of personal tax I discussed this matter thoroughly when various options were put to me by the press as to what alternatives were available to me, and I explained to them what I intended to do on the basis of the resources available to me. Personal taxes will continue to decrease under the tax reform legislation of my predecessor under the four-year schedule which he set out, and of course the exemptions will be higher.

Mr. Stanfield: I thought we were getting into a debate for a minute, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. Granted that those of us who are members of this chamber and are very knowledgeable about taxation matters realize that the rate of taxation on personal income will increase again the first of January, I wonder why, in view of the very fulsome way, to use the minister's own words, in which he approached the general outline of the government's position, he did not feel it necessary to mention during the course of his budget speech that personal income taxes would go up again on the first of January next?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow the minister to reply, but I take the liberty to remind hon. members, before we spend too much of the question period on the budget, that we do have a budget debate later today. This having been said, the question has been asked and the Minister of Finance should be allowed to reply.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The answer to that quite clearly is that the budget did not touch on the personal income tax. I went on the assumption that parliament was aware of the present provisions of the law.

Mr. Baldwin: How about the people?

Mr. Stanfield: As I indicated, all of us here are well aware of the situation but we thought it might have been wise for the minister to disclose it to the public.

As a final supplementary question on this point, and out of respect for the view that you have expressed, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister again upon what his confidence is based that, despite the increase in the personal income tax which will take place on January 1 next, the level of consumer demand will be sufficient to support an expansion of the economy and therefore fight unemployment in the manner to which the minister has dedicated himself.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It was my judgment that consumer demand as represented by the expansion of the economy would be sufficient and that the temporary reduction authorized by parliament should be allowed to expire. That was fully disclosed to the press at a national press conference when they put those options to me.

REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT ON CERTAIN GRANTS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and I have given him notice of my intention to ask him a question on this matter. In view of the revelations in the Standing Committee on Regional Development concerning some millions of dollars in offers of grants by his department that had not been reported to parliament as required by law, would the minister undertake to submit an interim report to parliament at the beginning of next week providing the information that is available now? I ask this question because the deputy minister indicated that it would take several weeks to provide a complete report.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that, as reported yesterday to the Standing Committee on Regional Development, I have instructed my department to produce a supplementary report on cases involving revised incentive offers as soon as possible. Assurances to this effect were given to the standing committee yesterday both by myself and my deputy minister. Those assurances will be kept.

Mr. Burton: In view of the admission that about 90 grants to corporations were revised after the original offer, could the minister inform the House why it should take several weeks to provide a report to parliament on this matter?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the supplementary question is in order.

Mr. Burton: May I ask the minister whether he could not undertake to speed up the completion of this report and to provide an interim report, as I asked in my original question, which would provide information that is available now and allow time for checking out all the departmental records? Furthermore, could the minister also assure the House that this information will be made public before the next federal election?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not know when the next election will be held, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): The minister said, perhaps properly, that it would take considerable time to go through the 1,400 cases which have already been given grants, but could he not early next week at least present us with a list of the 90 corporations, which, as he has already said in the committee, have had their grants revised?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to draft an interim report as I would like to make sure that the figures quoted are correct. Otherwise, the committee members would be justified in charging us with giving false information. All records will have to be checked and a report could be brought in within reasonable time, I think.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LAY-OFFS IN NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—REFUSAL TO PAY BENEFITS—REVIEW OF REGULATION RESPECTING SEVERANCE PAY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the fact that following the closing of Quemont and Noranda mines and of the CIP mill in the town of Temiscaming, these companies have to give severance pay to laid off employees, and in view of the fact that the Unemployment Insurance Commission refuses to pay benefits to these newly unemployed people on the ground that they would have to exhaust this money before benefits can be paid to them, is the minister in a position to indicate whether his department is reviewing this situation which I think is utterly illogical so that these unpaid unemployed people can get fair treatment?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the whole area of what constitutes income is being reviewed at the present moment in light of the regulations, and that includes severance pay and vacation pay. As a general rule severance pay is spread over a period of not more than 33 weeks to make certain that people with labour attachment of 52 weeks still qualify for major benefits.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I could see the smile on the face of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion when I spoke of the unpaid unemployed.

However, I would ask the minister to tell us if the local unions have made representations or filed briefs with the department so that these people will be treated fairly. Because, even though they are receiving severance pay they are still unemployed.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have asked for representations from the representatives of the workers and also, of course, from the employers. The basic concept behind unemployment insurance is interruption of earnings rather than unemployment, but there have been representations from the representatives of the workers concerning the definition of earnings.

SOCIAL SECURITY

POSSIBLE RESIGNATION OF QUEBEC SOCIAL AFFAIRS MINISTER—NEGOTIATIONS ON MORE ACCEPTABLE SOCIAL SECURITY SYSTEM

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to ask my question of the right hon. Prime Minister but, as he is absent, I shall ask it of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since Mr. Castonguay suggested that the lack of comprehension and consultation between the federal government and Quebec is the reason for his threat of resignation, in view also of the present volcanic climate in the province of Quebec, we must endeavour to improve the situation and to prevent the loss of one of the outstanding Quebec ministers.

Would the minister say to this House whether he intends to meet his Quebec colleague as soon as possible to discuss with him the question of a social security system which would be more acceptable to the Quebec government?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that in terms of the family allowances we have been meeting constantly with Quebec, and I think to the beneficial end of both levels of government.

Mr. Stanfield: Which is the beneficial end of this government?

Mr. Munro: I would expect that we would come to an agreeable accommodation within a matter of days, so the negotiations along that line have been proceeding very well.

With reference to the government's intention to increase old age pensions, this, of course, was announced in the budget speech. For reasons that are obvious when that procedure is adopted, there could not be the consultation that otherwise might have taken place. As is obvious from recent speeches by members of all the opposition parties in the House, we were faced with what they agree is a fact, that a significant number of those 1,800,000 Canadians desperately need assistance, and that is what the Minister of Finance has done.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Caouette.]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—EXERCISE OF LEGISLATIVE POWER BY QUEBEC

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

In view of the answer which was recently given to me in the House by the hon. minister, specifically that there was no question of the federal government granting Quebec legislative primacy in the area of family allowances, does the minister intend to change his mind, following the events taking place in that province, and assure Social Affairs Minister Castonguay that the federal government will indeed grant Quebec legislative primacy in this area?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the discussions with Quebec as well as with the other provinces were set out in a letter from the Prime Minister to the premiers. He indicated the guidelines within which we felt it would be reasonable to expect the provinces to have an option to design family allowances within federal minimum standards. As far as I am aware the negotiations with Quebec have been proceeding very well and there has been no dissatisfaction expressed by that province with respect to the suggested accommodation in this particular regard.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope we will find a way to shorten both the questions and answers because we are running short of time.

[Translation]

Some hon. members have supplementary questions, including the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette).

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—EFFECT OF INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT ON WELFARE BENEFITS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

If we grant a senior citizen, whose spouse has not yet reached the age of 65, the security income supplement, do we in such a case file an application with the social welfare office of Quebec or with other provinces? Would the minister tell us whether he found out from provincial authorities if the increase granted people aged 65 will decrease the welfare allowance his spouse is receiving at the present time?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Natural Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the minister to reply but it seems to me that to some extent we are getting involved in discussing the details of a bill which is already before a committee.

[Translation]

I don't want to suggest that the minister should not answer the question put by the hon. member for Témiscamingue, but we should try to go on to something else and perhaps come back to it later on.

[English]

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has the floor for the moment.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the increase in pensions will benefit the elder spouse in the example the hon. member quoted; the spouse under 65 will not benefit from the increase, of course. It may be that the province will use this increase to deduct what they would otherwise pay the spouse under 65, but I hope that will not be the case.

FINANCE

LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING POSSIBILITY OF DOWNWARD MOVEMENT TO EQUALITY WITH U.S. DOLLAR AND MAINTENANCE OF CLEAN FLOAT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the Canadian dollar reached a value on the spot market yesterday of $1.0103, would the minister advise the House whether he shares the optimism of his predecessor that the Canadian dollar, following the negotiations of last fall, would move downwards to become equivalent to the United States dollar? Would he also advise the House whether it is the intention of the government to have the Bank of Canada maintain a clean float with regard to the relative values of the Canadian and U.S. dollars, notwithstanding the fact that his figures disclose that there was an intervention of about $500 million in the foreign exchange market in order to participate in a so-called clean float?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to deal with the $500 million first, that money was purchased from the exchange fund during the latter half of 1971 previous to the Smithsonian agreement of December 15 last year when the world money market was in a state of disorder and we felt we had to protect the dollar at that time. Since then, the dollar has been allowed to float cleanly.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In view of the difficulties that are imposed upon Canadian exporters by the ever-increasing value of the Canadian dollar, will the minister advise whether he shares the confidence of his predecessor that the policy of the Canadian government would not affect Canadian exports adversely?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the budget measures, particularly the corporate tax reductions for manufacturers and processors, had as one of their purposes to protect them against any movement in the Canadian dollar.

LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—NATURE OF FLOAT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance or the Acting Prime Minister. It arises from the admission just made by the Minister of Finance that the float was not clean prior to the Smithsonian agreement. To what extent can we rely upon the assurance given by the government, which has insisted consistently that the float was a clean float all along, when we now learn that it was only clean since a certain date?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are obviously getting involved in the debate which I gather we are to have later this afternoon, but the minister might reply briefly and then we will try to get on to another subject.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, nothing that the hon. gentleman has suggested in his statement deprives me of the validity of an answer that during the relative chaos of the international monetary market between August 15 and December 15, every country in the world took steps to protect its currency. That was the only time we had to intervene in any appreciable way to protect the dollar—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands shortly, but we have had so many supplementaries from the beginning of the question period that we are not moving along very quickly. For the moment, the Chair will recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

FLAGS

RED ENSIGN—REASON FOR DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, since March 28 I have been waiting for an answer to starred question No. 446 concerning the red ensign.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister ridicules the red ensign by his interruption. I ask why there has been such difficulty getting an answer to that question?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman wanted to know how many flags were left in the country under the control of my department at a certain time. I presume that my officials are busy counting flags and I expect we will have an answer by next week. We want the reply to the question to be correct and exact.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is the reason for the delay the fact that many red ensigns were put to the torch, or burned at the stake?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can reply briefly that next week the right hon. member will find out—

Mr. Speaker: Order! May we have order? The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

STEPS TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES IN LIGHT OF LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the value of the Canadian dollar in relation to the American dollar is at the highest figure since the Canadian dollar was unpegged, and in view of the fact that analysis shows that this is largely due to the fact that interest rates in Canada are higher than in the United States, is the minister, with the governor of the Bank of Canada, taking any steps to reduce interest rates in Canada to bring them in line with those in the United States so that we will not have this disequilibrium which is having such a harmful effect on manufacturing, particularly on lumbering in British Columbia?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other factors operating on the value of the Canadian dollar as well. If any steps are to be taken they will be announced here in due course.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that analysis shows that Canadians, particularly the provinces, are borrowing in the United States because of lower interest rates there and short-term capital is coming into Canada because of high interest rates here, and while the process of watching interest rates, as the minister said a few days ago he was doing, may be interesting, may I ask him when he proposes to act on interest rates?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RESPONSE OF GOVERNMENT TO ISSUANCE OF PERMIT BY UNITED STATES FOR CONSTRUCTION OF TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is here, may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. As the United States Secretary of the Interior, Rogers Morton, has today issued a permit authorizing construction of the trans-Alaska pipeline, would the Acting Prime Minister please inform the House what response the government of Canada has made to this tragic decision which threatens the entire environment of the Pacific west coast?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the granting of the permit by Mr. Morton was not unanticipated here nor in the United States as the matter has been before him for some time. In the meantime we have had discussions through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—

Mr. Stanfield: That great diplomat.

Mr. Laing: —with Mr. Morton and with the government of the United States and they have been very satisfactory.

An hon. Member: A clean float.

Mr. Laing: The minister put before Mr. Morton the possibility of reconsideration of a pipeline through the Mackenzie Valley. He indicated to him that in a very few months we would be in a position to delineate clearly the requirements for ecology. That has been taken into account by the government of the United States. It may be some time yet before construction can commence on the pipeline and it is our thought that there will be further discussions with the United States government.

• (1440)

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has said that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources placed the proposition before the Secretary of the Interior of the United States. However, we do not know what the policy of the government is or what is to happen. I have tried to learn from answers to questions whether anything is being done to speed up the pipeline feasibility, in view of what the Prime Minister said in Edmonton about the Mackenzie highway being paid for with the rent from such right of way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF ADDITIONAL DUTY BY UNITED STATES ON CERTAIN TIRES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is my understanding that the American government is considering imposing extra custom duties against Michelin X radial steel belted tires being manufactured in Nova Scotia. Has the minister any knowledge of this action and what difference will this make, in Canada's view, in the Domestic International Sales Corporation program? In other words, what action does the government contemplate taking?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I understand that a notice of countervailing duty is expected to be issued by the United States government. Thirty days would be given under this notice for parties to make representations. The United States government has already received our views on the Michelin case, and I am quite sure that these views will be repeated during that period of time.

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—POSSIBLE EXEMPTION FROM CUSTOMS DUTIES ON CERTAIN IMPORTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance on the Michelin question. For about a week I have tried to learn from the minister when the commitment made by the government to the Michelin Tire Company to give them tariff-free access to the Canadian market would come into effect. He has not answered the question clearly and he said he would look into it. Can he now inform the House when duty-free entry to the Canadian market will be granted to the Michelin company?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is talking about remission, I told him that no remission or relief has actually been granted to the Michelin company, nor, to the best of my knowledge, has any decision been taken as to when or in what form such supplementary relief would be given.

Mr. Broadbent: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since I have a letter from the former Minister of Finance dated last June which states categorically that such concession was being granted to Michelin for such entry into the Canadian market, can the minister inform the House now as to what happened to that decision? Was it revoked? Was I misinformed at the time? What has taken place?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will check the correspondence against my answer, and if the hon. member deserves further clarification I will give it to him.

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—DEPENDENCE OF EXPANSION ON REMISSION OF CUSTOMS DUTIES ON CERTAIN IMPORTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the decision of the Michelin company to proceed with expansion dependent upon such a remission being actually granted?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby for one last supplementary on this subject. I think all hon. members will want to consider the fact that we are fast reaching the end of the question period and we have not made much progress because of the length of questions, the length of answers and the number of supplementaries.

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—CONSULTATION WITH OTHER FIRMS IN INDUSTRY BEFORE MAKING GRANT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Since millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money have been allocated to the Michelin company in order to begin expanding the car tire market in Canada, and since the factories of existing firms in this country are already operating below capacity, did the minister's department consult with the other firms in that industry and did they agree to the notion that another firm should be tax supported and brought into the economy to produce tires?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the entire matter was discussed yesterday in committee with the deputy minister and the official responsible for the grants.

ST. JUST DE BRETENIÈRES SAWMILL FIRE—LOSS OF 250 JOBS—DISCUSSION RESPECTING ASSISTANCE IN RECONSTRUCTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Considering that last week an important sawmill was completely destroyed by a fire which caused damages of more than $2 million and since 250 workers thus lost their jobs, could the minister tell the House whether discussions have been or are being held with the heads of this company with a view to rebuilding the mill?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I could not say, Mr. Speaker. If company officials want assistance, they know they must contact the department. If this took place in the Quebec City area, we have offices there. I am not personally aware of this situation, but I will endeavour to find out whether there have been any meetings.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I should like to put a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

In order to hasten things, let me say that this sawmill is in St. Just de Bretenières, in the riding of Bellechasse—

VERSATILE MANUFACTURING LIMITED—PROPOSED EXPANSION IN UNITED STATES RATHER THAN CANADA—DISCUSSIONS WITH COMPANY OFFICIALS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising out of the questions I asked him last week respecting Versatile Manufacturing. Since the president of Versatile has revealed that officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce have not consulted and held discussions with officials of Versatile regarding the company's expansion in the United States, would the minister now take steps to initiate discussions with top level officials of the Versatile company with a view to having this expansion take place in Canada rather than in the United States?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think I gave the hon. member all the information I had at the time, but I will check. I hope that Versatile will also review its position bearing in mind the advantages that were contained in the budget of last Monday.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister has got to be kidding.

Mr. Mazankowski: In view of the minister's answer and since the president of the company has indicated that the DISC program was not the major, determining factor in this decision being taken, would the minister personally intervene and take an active interest in setting up meetings at once with the president and vice-president of Versatile with a view to having this plant expand in Canada rather than in the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That of course, is a representation to the minister.

POSSIBLE RESTORATION OF SATURDAY MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Can the minister tell the House whether he intends to reintroduce six-day letter carrier delivery in the urban areas of Canada? I ask this question in view of the minister's remarks in Vancouver.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question in the House a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, the minister indicates that he has already given a reply in the House some two weeks ago. I am aware of that. I was wondering whether the minister could perhaps give some further clarification at this time in view of his comments two weeks ago.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): No, Mr. Speaker.

FILMS

PROTEST AGAINST CANADIAN FILM, "WOW", AND SHOWING IN VIENTIANE, LAOS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and has to do with the recent film festival in Laos and the showing in April in Vientiane of a 90-minute Canadian government film, entitled "Wow", in which a number of actors illustrate the dreams they experienced while under the influence of marijuana. As many members of the diplomatic corps as well as others could not take 90 minutes of this drivel and walked out during the showing, may I ask the minister if he was aware of the showing, is this the government's way of portraying the good life in Canada, and is taxpayers' money to be spent in this manner?

Mr. Baldwin: Was the Minister of Finance in the film?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I could not endorse the esthetic judgments of the hon. member, whether accurate or not, I could not say, for I have not seen the film. However, the hon. member must know that all the films of the National Film Board are stocked with the various embassies throughout the world and that a committee of the NFB authorizes the participation of its own films in festivals throughout the world where they win many trophies.

I did not know the film "Wow" had been sent to Vientiane; I have just learned it. Should the hon. member ask me to have an inquiry made into the consequences of the viewing of that film at the festival, I should be happy to oblige.

I am sure he must have received it by now; I understand it was sent to his office some time ago. Has he received it, and will he table that report in the House?

AGRICULTURE

GRASSLAND INCENTIVE PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF GRANTS TO FARMERS THIS YEAR

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Agriculture who was supposed to have been here today. I have given notice to the department, and in the minister's absence perhaps the parliamentary secretary might provide an answer. Can any information be given to farmers concerning the grassland incentive program? Have there been any changes introduced as a result of last year's operations? There is some confusion. Some farmers are not certain whether they should apply or whether it is still possible for them to get grants this year.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): I have been informed by the department that the hon. member can be assured that the grassland incentive program will definitely continue. To date, although the response has been excellent, there is still provision in the program for another two million acres of grassland. A number of improvements have been made in the program and a copy of a press release detailing these improvements will be in the hands of hon. members this afternoon.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING MARIJUANA

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the great and anxious interest in the Le Dain Commission report on marijuana, which the minister says is just about ready for release, may I ask the minister to tell the House whether the government intends to make its position clear at this time?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): If the hon. member is asking me whether the government will make its position clear concerning a report it has not yet received, I do not think that makes too much sense. If he is asking whether we shall analyse the report once we see it, the answer is yes.

Mr. Rynard: It is important to realize that it is not knowing where the government stands on anything which is disturbing people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBLE WEAKENING OF OPERATION OF ACT BECAUSE OF ACCELERATION OF DEPRECIATION ON MACHINERY AND EQUIPMENT—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH FINANCE MINISTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether there was consultation with the Minister of Finance regarding the introduction of the new accelerated depreciation rate on equipment and machinery, which might have the effect of seriously weakening the position of the Regional Development Incentives Act, especially in areas such as the Atlantic provinces.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Would the hon. member be good enough to repeat the first part of the question?

Mr. McGrath: Yes. I wanted to ask the minister whether he had consulted with the Minister of Finance with regard to the provision in the budget with respect to the accelerated write-off of equipment and machinery costs, a provision which could weaken the effect of the grants made under the act?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I was at the cabinet meeting when this matter was discussed.

Mr. McGrath: What steps is the minister prepared to take to make sure that this does not happen?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the premise is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance related to the question asked by my hon. friend from St. John's East. Will the minister give consideration to the position in which manufacturing and other companies find themselves? Having received grants they are now required to write off that portion of the grant applicable to production machinery before they can establish their cost allowances. Would the minister give consideration to this point? In terms of the budget brought down the other night there would appear to be some lessening of the power of DREE to attract industry to designated areas.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I do not accept the premise, but I will certainly consider the point the hon. member has brought up. In general terms, I would hope that this change announced in the budget would make the Atlantic provinces more competitive, not only within this country but throughout the world.

PUBLIC WORKS

CHURCHILL REDEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—INCLUSION OF INCINERATOR TO DISCOURAGE INFLUX OF POLAR BEARS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. It relates to the redevelopment program being carried out jointly at Churchill, Manitoba, by the province and the federal government. Can the minister say whether any final decision has been reached concerning the inclusion in the program of an incinerator so that the influx of polar bears might be controlled or discouraged?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that this question ought to be answered at this time, rather than placed on the order paper. I have the impression it is the kind of question which might well be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Simpson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I thought the minister was preparing to rise. I was merely asking whether a final decision had been taken.

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, I was not preparing to rise. I shall have to look into this matter and give the information to the hon. member later.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MINIMUM WAGE—INQUIRY AS TO RAISING OF LEVEL FOR THOSE UNDER FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that it now has the authority to do so by order in council, is the government giving consideration to raising the level of the minimum wage for those who come under federal jurisdiction?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Consideration is being given to the minimum wage. Such consideration has been going on for some time now. While I am on my feet, may I—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May we expect an announcement soon?

Mr. O'Connell: If an announcement is to be made it will be made in due course. While I am on my feet—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. Perhaps the Chair might recognize the hon. member for Edmonton Centre and possibly return to the minister in a short while.

CANADIAN CULTURE

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST CANADIAN-GERMAN ORGANIZATIONS IN ALBERTA RESPECTING APPROVAL OF GRANTS UNDER MULTICULTURAL PROGRAM

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State. Would the Secretary of State advise the House what his department plans to do about the evident discrimination shown in making grants under the multicultural program, considering that not one of the numerous applications by Canadian-German organizations in Alberta has been approved?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the charge of discrimination in the member's question. I only wish to point out to him that he is very quickly drawing inferences. The process of grants to organizations under the multicultural policy has not been completely developed up to now, but surely there has been no discrimination against a group, especially that referred to by the member for Edmonton Centre.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: The minister said "multicultural". I received a telegram today stating that all the German organizations in Alberta have been discriminated against. They have not received one grant.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. members who have not had an opportunity to ask questions, but before moving to the budget debate and allowing the hon. member for Edmonton West to make his contribution, I will recognize the Leader of the Opposition who appears anxious to ask a supplementary.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM WAR—BRITISH PROPOSAL TO RUSSIA RESPECTING SPONSORSHIP OF CONFERENCE—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Acting Prime Minister or to anyone who is authorized to speak for the Department of External Affairs. What is the position of the government with respect to the initiative taken by the government of the United Kingdom in attempting to persuade the government of the U.S.S.R. to join with the United Kingdom in sponsoring a conference on Viet Nam similar to the conference which those two governments jointly sponsored in 1954? Has the government of Canada taken any steps to support the United Kingdom initiative?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Questions have been directed to the Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the Viet Nam situation and the suggestion has been made that a statement should be made in the House either by the Prime Minister or by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think this is still under advisement. If a statement should be made, I have every confidence that the matter now brought forward by the Leader of the Opposition will be dealt with in the statement.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to seek information from the government House leader—I see him behind the curtain—I know he has been cogitating upon my question. I should like to ask the House leader what the business will be for the rest of this week and all of next week.

• (1500)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as for the rest of this week, today, as my hon. friend knows, we are beginning the budget debate. Tomorrow we will continue our discussion of the Old Age Security Act amendments. If that bill receives second reading, we will commence second reading of the veterans bill. On Monday we will continue the budget debate, and on Tuesday we shall resume, if uncompleted, the pension bills, old age security and veterans.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, might I ask a supplementary? Can the hon. gentleman advise the House whether he has had certain discussions with his colleague, the Prime Minister, and can he reassure his anxious colleagues on the other side of the House that the House will in fact be sitting until the end of June? Can he also assure the opposition that we will in fact have an opportunity to debate supply for the requisite number of opposition days; and in view of the limited number of days left for government debate, will the minister take an opportunity next week to indicate precisely what priority he will give to the legislative items on the order paper still to be considered?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to give my hon. friend the assurance that, in the normal course, the House will be sitting until the end of June.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member is rising on a supplementary. The question period expired some minutes ago, so perhaps the hon. member has a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the government House leader when we can expect him to call government order No. 25, the amendments to the British North America Act granting educational rights to certain religious groups in Newfoundland.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that item is on the order paper, and I hope that I will have some discussion with my colleagues to determine at what stage we would bring on the motion, especially in light of what might be the present wishes of the government of Newfoundland.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question on the House business to the government House leader. What about Bill C-201, the foreign takeover review bill? Is it high on the list or down at the bottom?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is high on the list.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Spadina rising on a point of order?

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying hard to be recognized. I have a very urgent question and will not be here tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that a question cannot be brought up by way of a point of order. The question period ended at 2.58 p.m., some seven minutes ago. There were a number of members waiting for an opportunity to ask questions which I am sure were urgent. It is not up to the Chair to determine which question is the more urgent. If the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the House, of course—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent to return to the question period. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Monday, May 8, consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May we have order, please. It is difficult for the hon. member to commence his remarks unless the conferences now taking place are pursued behind the curtains. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your courtesy.

Hon. members will remember that before the debate adjourned on Monday night, we dealt with some of the highlights of the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). I criticized quite bitterly some of the comments of the minister about the amendment to the Old Age Security Act. We saw the government's strategem and of course we will hear tomorrow a more precise account of the proposals of the Minister of Finance on the Veterans' pension increase, on the cost of living, etc. With all that show off, the minister was purring like an old cat.

If I could get the attention of the minister, Mr. Speaker, I could tell him my mind. He was already gloating over the regard he hoped to win from everywhere on account of the proposed increases for old people, veterans and other citizens.

Although the minister announced a basic tax exemption increase for persons of 65 or over, he failed to point out—intentionally or not—that at the end of the fiscal year the 3 per cent deduction on the tax payable for 1972 would be lost. As early as January 1, 1973, some taxpayers will benefit from deductions but what is given them with one hand is taken back with the other.

We had already witnessed the sleight-of-hand of his predecessor, but the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson) took pleasure not in granting a tax deduction but in levying a surtax. And I do not have to go into details about his statement. Yet, we know very well that in the 1970 budget speech we were told that the surtax would automatically come to nothing at the end of December of the same year. But, and this was extraordinary, we had a budget, and a mini-budget in December 1970, to re-instate the 3 per cent surtax. But, stranger still—because of the fiscal needs of the government which, at the same time, wanted to slow down inflationary forces—the government found it advisable to re-instate that surtax. That was the first face-about.

Mr. Speaker, what is strange is that in June, the then Minister of Finance stated in the House that the government had an entirely new policy, an expansion policy, a policy of kindness towards the Canadian people, and the government strained its shoulder trying to pat itself on the back in a self congratulatory gesture by saying that it had reduced taxes, because it had cancelled the surtax.

Why did the Minister of Finance not speak as well about the 3 per cent deduction which is to end in December and which will apply to all Canadian people as regards personal income tax—a new 3 per cent tax increase. After all, over these past 18 months the public has got used to this 3 per cent reduction. Of course there are reductions for old age people, but nothing at all for the public in general. And now, one can see the reason for this hike in taxes. Actually, in the budget statement the minister referred to a table showing government revenue and expenditure. And what else can be seen in there? In personal income tax, Canadians will pay about $1,100 million to the government. Is that a reduction in taxes? Mr. Speaker, claiming that there is a tax reduction for the general public is a terrible thing.

This is impossible, for there is a $1,100 million difference which will result from the elimination of the 3 per cent reduction. The minister is peculiarly silent on this matter.

When you re-examine his speech and his statements made outside the House, you realize that when he found himself cornered by newspapermen who do not consider themselves naive enough to accept everything the Minister of Finance says, he had to admit that we would have a tax increase.

Mr. Speaker, this is an amount of $1,100 million in the personal income tax field. It is true that taxpayers aged 65 or more will benefit, retroactive to January 1, 1972, from an extra exemption of $350. We also know that guaranteed income is going to be increased by $15 and $30, effective January 1, 1972. But I want to point out to the Minister of Finance and others concerned that not one of the ministers who are in the House this afternoon were here last night when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) analyzed the Machiavellian policy of the government.

[English]

This is Machiavellian and will have to be examined in greater detail during our study of the bill in respect of the increase in old age pensions. There is reference to the increase in the GIS and the cost of living escalator, but I want to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) what he is doing with regard to the $15 and $30 increase in the GIS in relation to war veterans allowances. We have not seen the bill yet amending the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. Mahoney: It was tabled today.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We get a pontifical statement from the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) that the bill was tabled today, but it has not come down here yet. Can the minister tell the House whether the treatment of this particular increase will deviate from the treatment of past increases in the GIS and not count as revenue under the War Veterans Allowance Act? In the previous case, what was given with the right hand was taken away with the left hand and recipients of war veterans allowances were left at the same level.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Francis: It was corrected on April 1.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Not with regard to the guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Francis: Yes, it was corrected on April 1 in the regulations.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As a matter of fact, the War Veterans Allowance Board insisted that veterans go through the GIS plan rather than make their election under the War Veterans Allowance Act as to what would be their income, if they had any option in determining whether they would take the GIS. The ruling is, notwithstanding what the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) says, that veterans shall be deemed to go through the GIS whether or not they make an election, and that is the rule that applies today. Is this going to be continued in respect of this increase?

Mr. Francis: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You can make your speech in due course.

Mr. Francis: I just wanted to ask you a question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am asking the Minister of Finance whether it is proposed that the increase in the GIS will be exempt from the computation of revenues under the War Veterans Allowance Act?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The whole $15.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On the last occasion, there was an increase in the permitted ceilings under the War Veterans Allowance Act, only to the level of the increase in the statutory payments, not one penny more or less.

Mr. Francis: It was corrected on April 1.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Only for the $2.70.

Mr. Francis: That is what he is talking about.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, he is talking about the $15.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the hon. member for Ottawa West had listened, he would know I am not talking about the cost of living escalator. I am talking about the $15 and the $30 which are the statutory payments under the GIS. I am not talking in any way about the cost of living escalator, because the cost of living escalator is not subject to the income ceiling. I am referring to the limited increase amounting to $2.88 per month.

An hon. Member: Big deal.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is not going to be any equivalent, but you tell that to the thousands of war veterans who are, after all, entitled to something from this country. I want to state what the facts are, Mr. Speaker. The increase of $15 under the War Veterans Allowance

Act, and the increase of $30 under the guaranteed income supplement will be treated as income, so the net result for the veteran will be one big fat zero. This is generosity across the board!

• (1520)

Now, I ask the Minister of Finance if he intends to bring in an amendment to correct this injustice because it is pure, unadulterated injustice and discrimination against the category of veterans entitled to this type of coverage. It may be that this was an unfortunate lapse in thinking, but I ask this administration, which is not distinguished by the number of veterans in it, to look at this particular problem. This concerns the debt of one generation to another. The taxpaying Canadians in general owe a debt to our senior citizens of age 65—and this is being recognized more and more—I suggest to everyone who was not a veteran either by reason of age or choice that there is a debt owing to the veterans of this country and this administration will stand condemned if it does not make the necessary changes in that regard.

Mr. Mahoney: What increases did the Tories give the veterans?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will speak directly to the hon. member from Calgary South. I ask that hon. member—and I had the honour to serve in the regiment of his city— to look at the record of those administrations with regard to veterans.

Mr. Mahoney: You did not raise the pensions once.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, to have a minister of the Crown sit in his seat and make remarks which show precisely how wide the gap is between his ears is a disgrace to the administration. I will be charitable and say he is merely mistaken through ignorance. He could not possibly mislead the House.

Now, having said that I want to move to another item in the budget speech of the minister. He referred to percentages and worried about the escalation in the cost of living. Percentages were used. In all the press releases which have been issued by government departments and by his predecessor Minister of Finance, the performance of the economy has been given in percentage figures.

The government says that the cost of living has increased about 3.6 per cent in the last year. That is fraudulent misrepresentation all the way. If hon. gentlemen will only take a look at the tables of the consumer price index they will see that a five point increase, which is bad, becomes a smaller percentage figure because the base is increasing. Let us take a look. We have releases indicating that the consumer index is up 4¼ per cent since April, 1971 and is up 0.6 per cent compared with March 1972. But, the real increase is six points in the consumer price index. I say to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and any minister that when there is an increase of six points in the cost of living index, whether you start from base 100 or from base 133, it is still an increase in prices of six points and not a diminution of percentages. This is the point. I am not a mathematical numbskull.

Mr. Francis: That is clear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right. Government Representatives always speak of percentages.

Mr. Francis: It is 3.6 per cent.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The base is 100. Let us not have the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) cavil about this. He showed his ignorance on the last item and I will take him through this one, too. If it is six points on 100, let us wait five years at the present rate and we will be up to 175. What does six points mean with a figure of 175? It means a much lower percentage and the government will preen its feathers. The government will be happy. But I tell the hon. member for Okanagan-Boundary, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howard), that he will know about this because his pocket and his wife's housekeeping budget will suffer the same sort of debilitation. It will mean that his wife will be able to buy less and that the hon. member will be able to buy less than when the figure was 100.

It is the points which count, not the percentage. The hon. member has made a fatuous assertion and has taken an indefensible position because food prices have gone up 9.2 points since April, 1971. If hon. members do not believe this, let them read the statistics in the Bank of Canada Review for the month of April. They will see that in the general index for the end of April last year, food stood at 132.2 and at the end of April this year it stood at 138.2. When we mention food, I have to make this particular point. What are the senior citizens primarily concerned about? Of course, it is food, clothing and shelter. I would invite the Minister of Finance and any other of his disbelieving colleagues, to show me where the concentration in the consumer price index increase is, if it is not in food, clothing and shelter. It is 9.2 points in respect of food. It is 7.3 points in respect of shelter and 8 points in respect of other services these people get. We have heard this administration saying that in 1971 there was no more than a 3.6 per cent increase in the cost of living. That is a deliberate deception of the public; it is using another version of the figures because percentages are always calculated on an ever increasing base. The results are usually bound to come out as a lesser figure. I just want to put on record that no one should be fooled by this alleged percentage increase in the cost of living index.

Now, I will talk about another point that I made and that my colleagues will make shortly, particularly the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) when he speaks about personal tax cuts and the matter of unemployment. Others will speak about certain changes in the Income Tax Act, and the list of omissions is long. I will go through some of the undertakings made by the previous minister of finance which have gone unanswered in this budget. I have spoken about inflation. The Leader of the Opposition and others will speak about unemployment. If I were to list all the omissions in the budget I would be here until eight o'clock tonight, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) could not stand me for that long.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will miss my supper to listen to you.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is great stuff.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As I indicated the other night, over the months and the years we have spoken a great deal about the government's policy with regard to foreign investment. Then, the great day dawned. It was a grey dawn, covered with cloud. No sun shone on the Canadian scene as a result of that report. We got a picayune, repressive measure establishing a screening agency whose jurisdictional status is very much in doubt within the purely provincial realm. Frankly I expected the minister to do something about this matter because I think the Canadian public, particularly businessmen and the general investors, right down to the smallest buyer of mutual funds, expected the minister to drop the other shoe, the other half in what seemed to be a logical pattern in dealing with foreign ownership.

I can understand the setting up of a screening agency, but I do not agree with what is enunciated in that bill. On the other hand, I would have thought that the Minister of Finance would have brought in a fresh outlook, judging by his background and his statements regarding how he approaches his job and taking into account the complete bankruptcy of the previous policies of the government to which the minister makes more than incidental reference in his budget speech when he refers to the crippling effects of inflation. Who allowed inflation to go unchecked? The minister speaks about worrisome unemployment. Is the former minister of labour responsible for that? I do not think so. It is the general administration that is responsible. After all, the minister's predecessor took great credit when there was a momentary dip in the unemployment picture.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that the problem of inflation was licked. I expected a fresh look at things, and I hope the Minister of Finance will take a fresh look in the immediate future. Perhaps he can agree to amend the bill and bring in another recommendation. What about bringing in some incentives to Canadians investing in Canadian enterprises? This does not mean the list which the minister trotted out the other afternoon in reply to a question of mine regarding interest being allowed on purchases by Canadian enterprises of other Canadian enterprises. This is one foot on the road to Damascus.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They are all on that road.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then, there is the principal occupation rule.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is crowded.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member was not a member of the Finance Committee. Those propositions were fostered three years ago in the Finance Committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit an interjection? When I interjected I was referring to the road to Damascus being crowded.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I was speaking about the principal occupation rule, which has been one of the real nemeses to Canadian participation. I was involved in the development of the oil business back in the early 1950's, and if there was one thing that really killed Canadians as independents participating in the development of oil leases and in obtaining oil leases, as well as holding profitable control of the industry, it was that silly bureaucratic rule made I do not know where, perhaps in central Canada, the rule about the principal occupation. The minister tells me that the government has made a gigantic step in regard to it.

Under Bill C-259 Canadian citizens are still 80 per cent behind Americans on searching, exploring and developing within Canada. An American citizen has an 80 per cent advantage over a Canadian in the research and development of resources in Canada. You ask what has hobbled Canadians. Why did we have this stupid rule regarding interest not being deductible when you are competing with Americans who have an advantage? The Prime Minister has said that living next to the Americans can be compared to a mouse sleeping next to an elephant. A grunt from the elephant is an earthquake to the mouse. With regard to so much development on an industrial basis, whether or not we recognize it, there is a geographic continental approach. The minister knows very well what obstacle there is to the flow of capital across the boundaries. It is nil. There is, in fact, a continental financial policy which has been in existence a long time. Our friends to the south had every advantage when they came into Canada, but under our tax laws Canadians are not even allowed to compete on even terms.

I am disappointed in the minister. I would have thought that he would have striven to give us at least competitive equality. I would go much further in this field, Mr. Speaker. I personally, and I believe with the support of Canadians, would be prepared to discriminate by incentives in favour of Canadians and Canadian companies, without any fear of retaliation or what-have-you from anybody else. You know, Mr. Speaker, when Canadians try to invest in other countries, and some do, again notwithstanding a few of the proposals in Bill C-259, they run into rules and regulations that are enforced on behalf of the nationals of the countries into which they are going, and nobody objects to that. Why will the minister not do something with regard to Canadian investors? Why will he not give them an opportunity? I do not mean that this necessarily should be an opportunity to buy back Canadian industry. I don't know that you can buy it back. That is a pipe dream in somebody's mind. Not all the people in the New Democratic Party believe in it. Members of the Waffle wing are living in a fool's world. They think they can buy it back.

Mr. Mackasey: They are listening behind the curtains.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, hon. gentlemen opposite can see what is going on behind me, and members behind and to the left of me will have opportunities to make their own speeches. There is no question of buying back; but is there no way of encouraging Canadians to get out of American equities, to encourage Canadian mutual funds to get out of American equities and invest in Canada?

I can suggest a way of doing this. We have imposed a new tax on equities—capital gains. Why not, within our resources, give Canadians a break on capital gains and long-term investment in equities in the resource field? I suggest that the minister try this for size among the mining people, the oil people and the forestry people, and see what their reaction would be. I have here a report of the last meeting of the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia. I quote from it in all seriousness, particularly for the benefit of members who do not come from British Columbia, and I include Albertans among those. The Minister of State from Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) has heard this previously when he was a member of the Standing Committee on Finance.

B.C. forest industry is the highest taxed in the western world.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): What about provincial tax?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Federal taxes plus provincial taxes.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): What are the provincial taxes?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is the kind of excuse we get from people like the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is always somebody else's fault. Looking at it from the Canadian point of view, what is the competitive position of that industry?

Mr. Mahoney: Let's have the rate of federal tax.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is shameful for the federal government to participate with the provincial government in this, and I am not going to excuse the provincial administration one iota, no more than I will excuse any provincial administration that has escalated its estate tax, another subject with which I will deal later. The report of the meeting stated that in British Columbia:

—the industry's tax burden is the highest in the western world, and has reached the point where various levels of government are now taking nearly 80 per cent of pre-tax earnings.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): How much is federal tax?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I don't care how much the federal tax is. The provincial tax and the municipal tax take about 30 per cent or perhaps 32 per cent. The federal share is 47 per cent or 48 per cent.

Mr. Stanfield: There is a bit of silence over there now.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It strikes me as a very lame excuse for government members to say they recognize while they may have a sliver in their eyes, then the others have a fence post in their eyes. They are both blind. Whether the tax on Canadian industry is federal, provincial or municipal, that tax will be reflected in the sale price of the goods produced. And if there is a continuous loading on of tax, as some administrations are so blind as to do, including the federal government, all it means is that Canadian industry becomes less and less competitive.

With respect to the mining industry, I would like to ask whether the minister has read the recent speeches by the President of the Mining Association of Canada? Has he read the annual report by the President of Noranda? I hope he takes it to heart. I wish I could file the speech of the President of Noranda as an appendix to my own as I will not have time to read it in now, but I commend it to all hon. members.

The lack of initiative really lies at the federal level. In trading, we live in a very competitive world. Canada will live or die depending on the success of its international trade. A complete change is taking place in the Common Market. Next year the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—whoever they may be—I am not going to say they will be the same two men who occupy those portfolios now—

Mr. Béchard: They will be.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —will wake up and have to admit, as the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has already done, that on commodity account our surplus is going down. Next year, with the coming into force of the expanded Common Market, we will face some very difficult short-term problems. I am not going to affix any blame to any particular individual for that. This is something that is beyond Canada's control.

Mr. Pepin: That is why we have the budget we have.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is peanuts. And you are not even getting into the growing of peanuts.

Mr. Pepin: $500 million worth of peanuts?

• (1550)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Remember the example of the British government in the groundnuts scheme in Tanganyika. Don't get into peanut growing!

Mr. Speaker, what is lacking, and some provincial premiers have adverted to it, is a policy of industrial strategy for Canada. Perhaps we have seen a glimmer of this in some of the speeches made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) but within the taxation policy there is no reflection of it. There is an ad hoc bow to manufacturing and processing—but somewhere else. I am talking of manufacturing and processing as of now and next year. Most of the benefits of this administrative step will not occur until 1974 and 1975. The proof of the pudding in regard to any tax reduction measure is in the reaction of the people tasting it.

Mr. Mahoney: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I have seen this minister display tax ignorance and financial ignorance when he was handling Bill C-259, and more lately as well. If an industry says that a benefit or concession will mean very little, I am prepared to take their word ahead of those people who operate in an ivory tower. God knows, Bill C-259 was conceived in the tallest of ivory towers and was defended to the death by people who were shown to be absolutely and blatantly wrong.

This is within the context of what I have said about the needs of an industrial strategy for Canada. I commend to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that, if they have not already done so, he and his officials should start to work on a policy of industrial strategy for Canada. The manufacturing and processing benefits are going to be felt in Ontario and Quebec—the minister shakes his head.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Alberta is going to be booming as a result of it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The government of the province of Alberta does not think so. The minister should read the remarks of the provincial treasurer and provincial premier in regard to this, because they do not see it at the present time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is giving the premier just what he needs.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am talking about a change in manufacturing and processing. At the present time, the benefits will be too concentrated. What incentive has the minister given to Canadians to invest in new business in Alberta in competition with foreign interests which already exist there in large numbers, and which are not controlled by a foreign review board or a takeover board? This is what I am talking about, an industrial strategy. For instance, where have the benefits of DREE gone in the various provinces? They have gone to the constituency of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson).

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right, all one has to do is talk to the Minister of Agriculture and tell him that they have gone to his constituency, and the one next door. They have gone to other provinces too, but will there be any real benefit?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): And the Conservative ridings in the Maritimes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Where have they gone in the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec? In many instances, they are working contrary to the provincial departments of industry and trade. Let the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) ask the provincial ministers this question. I have heard his name included in a list, and it was not in a litany of saints, in relation to the operation of DREE.

Mr. Mackasey: And the Okanagan Valley.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We can pick various areas, but it has been a hit and miss operation. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is operating on its own hook, and not within a policy of industrial strategy established after discussions between the Minister of Finance and the provinces.

There are occasions when, for the benefit of Canada as a whole, the government of Canada should consult with the provincial governments so that we do not get the situation that we have now where there is confrontation between governments nor between the Minister of Finance when he was making sharp cracks at a provincial premier the other night. I will invite the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) to read the newspaper reports on the remarks of the Minister of Finance concerning Premier Bourassa.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up all the time of the House this afternoon. Someone else is going to talk about the details of the tariff changes. My colleagues and I welcome the creation of the new category of general preferential tariff to assist developing countries, and I commend the minister for it as will every thinking Canadian. It is much more constructive than just handing out grants and subventions. It will have to be worked out, and there will have to be some adjustments, but it is a step in the right direction.

One thing worries me about this whole change in the customs tariff, however, and that is it may be a reversal of free trading, particularly with regard to textiles. It will be much easier to impose duties and conditions unilaterally without negotiating quotas. There is a benefit in negotiating quotas in that there is usually a trade-off. During the election period of 1968, the then minister of industry, trade and commerce imposed a surcharge on certain textiles and this caused dislocations here in Canada as well as the countries it affected. As a result business relationships were soured. Surely, that is the wrong way to proceed, hiding behind the facade of bureaucracy. Members will not be able to get at those changes in a meaningful way until debate is over and the law in force. This is a point. Oh, it looks good. I know the Minister of State (Mr. Mahoney) loves efficiency and being able to put a big, heavy hand down on something, and hiding it. That is his way of behaving. But that, Mr. Speaker, is not how this House likes things to be done. It wants them out in the open.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Postmaster General on a point of order.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I was trying to listen to the simultaneous interpretation and I did not understand exactly what was said concerning the term "façade". As a matter of fact, I did not understand the exact translation of this word.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is "un mur sans ouverture", "it is a façade without opening". It is an English expression, but the minister knows English as well as I know French. Therefore if the expression is not easily translated, it is comprehensible.

[English]

This trend worries me, Mr. Speaker. Some of my colleagues will develop this point.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Did you lose your place?

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): For the moment I have mislaid some material that I want to put on record. This is a case, you know, of saving the face of the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney).

An hon. Member: Have you found the material?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, I have found it. I am about to refer to the Bank of Montreal survey on investment policy and capital spending in 1972. Some weeks ago, the capital investment intentions for 1972 of Canadian companies in the Canadian economy were released and, quite frankly, notwithstanding what the minister said, they were very disappointing. There is to be an increase of only 4.9 per cent over 1971 preliminary spending figures. If a price factor in the neighbourhood of 4 per cent is assumed, then total gain or growth for 1972 will be exceedingly slim. This is rather strange, Mr. Speaker, because the minister insists that there is a growing buoyancy in business activity. Remembering that during the second year of what we were told was economic expansion capital spending traditionally should have gathered strength, it would appear that this survey I hold in my hand should have shown more pronounced gains. The minister may have his explanation for what has happened. Yet, why was there this stagnation, shall we say, in the forecasts regarding capital spending in 1972 in the private sector?

First, let me say the low rate of growth indicates the rather large additions to plant capacity which were made in the previous two or three years. During 1969 and 1970, when inflationary psychology was particularly prevalent in the economy, producers in the manufacturing industries increased their investment outlays by an average of 19.4 per cent, at a time when one might have expected investment to drop under the pressure of the tight monetary policy prevailing at that time. May I interpose some other thoughts at this time. Since this 19.4 per cent evidently represents an overcapacity, the minister's incentives for the manufacturing and processing industries in the form of tax benefits and accelerated depreciation will not be as effective as he might think. It will be seen that during 1971 the mining industry also greatly expanded its investment outlays, thus increasing its capacity during a period when world demand was sluggish. Look at International Nickel and at many other companies with unused capacity. Does anyone think they will spend more money in 1972 and 1973 for machinery and expanded production facilities? I do not think so. Overall, these relatively large increases in productive facilities added inordinate weight to the high levels of excess capacity evident last year.

Second, possibly an even more important factor influencing capital spending intentions was the businessman's interpretation of future trends in the economy at the time the survey was taken. It was to be expected that some downward bias would exist, since businessmen were then still influenced by the poor performance of the Canadian economy in the previous year. In addition, the rather gloomy mood of the business community was further intensified last year by extraordinary events both in the domestic and international environment. There was the very unsettled international financial situation. Of course, in Canada we saw the establishment of the surcharge and trade protection measures taken by the United States.

Last, but by no means least—and I want the Minister of Finance to pay particular attention—there was the avalanche of proposed Canadian legislation affecting business. I refer to matters like Bill C-256, Bill C-263 and a litany of other, infamous acts. While over-all investment outlays by business on plant and machinery are scheduled to increase by 3.7 per cent, individual industries face vastly differing circumstances which are reflected in a fairly wide inter-industry disparity in capital spending intentions for this year.

I spoke earlier about the pulp and paper industry and the forest industry. Let us see where the pulp and paper industry stands at the present. This industry, the pulp and paper industry, constitutes one of the weakest investment sectors within the business community, whereas in the sister industry, the forest industry, investment outlays are expected to increase at the rapid rate of 12.4 per cent. This wide discrepancy is not surprising, since the forest industry in 1971 enjoyed a buoyant demand for lumber in the midst of a North American housing boom while pulp and paper, beset by sluggish demands, intense competition in its traditional markets and a further squeeze on profits as a result of the appreciation of the Canadian dollar, has seen its profit margins dwindle by two thirds. Today, if I may interpose, the minister did not have much to say about the future of the Canadian dollar. If the present trend continues, the pulp and paper industry, the Canadian heavy chemicals industry and many of our export industries will be even more hard hit. The tax reduction in 1973 will not be of assistance to them, because it becomes effective only in 1974 so far as cash flow is concerned.

The mining industry, with the exception of iron ore and petroleum, has also experienced a softening in market demand as a result of the slowdown in manufacturing activity in Europe and Japan. After the heavy investment program in 1971, producers in that industry have indicated a considerable cutback, by at least 17.5 per cent, in capital spending as well. Because of the heavy capital intensity of these resource based industries and the large weight of their investment expenditures within the business sector of the economy, their scheduled reduction of capital spending will act as a significant drag on the over-all expansion of spending on business plant and equipment.

That is the sector that the minister wishes to encourage. What will produce immediate results, Mr. Speaker. Will it be tax reductions in 1973 and 1974?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It will help corporate planning. We have given corporations the right to immediate depreciation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister talks about corporate planning and thinks that this will help. Why did the minister not do something about Canada's multinational corporations and the matter of international income? He has only postponed the evil day when the axe shall fall. Instead of being in 1973, it is to be in 1975. And is there any area in which long range thinking and long range commitment is of greater importance than in the international field? What company from western Canada, for example, would enter into a joint arrangement with Japanese industrialists in the absence of some greater certainty as to its future position? Oil and drilling operations are now limited in Canada. Take the position of a Canadian company which is operating in the North Sea, or elsewhere, through a subsidiary, or in partnership with foreign companies. Is such a company likely to go forward with its plans without knowing what the future is likely to be? Remember, all that these companies have been exposed to so far is the philosophy of Bill C-259 and, what is worse, of the white paper before it. The minister has said: I intend to put off the evil day until 1975. If I were a Canadian businessman considering the possibility of expanding overseas, Mr. Speaker, I would stay home. The minister must come to an early decision. There is no room for a postponement until 1975 at this point. It is totally wrong. How many companies have already transferred their headquarters?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Name them.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There are some. It is wrong to say "Name them", because by then the decision to move will have been taken, and there is no way in which the minister or anyone else can go cap in hand to a board of directors and say, "Please come back." This is an area in which we are bound to be competitive, an area in which it is necessary to compete with others on equal or on better terms. Just because someone says there has to be a certain amount of so-called equity in taxation, and someone in government says "A buck is a buck" a decision is made to tax business companies, even though the money has not yet been received by them, even though under the laws of the country in which the investment has taken place, in which the operation has taken place, it may not be remitted, even though the Canadian concern might own only a minority interest and cannot get the money home, the Canadian company is to be obliged to count this money as income and be taxed on it. What sort of hamstringing philosophy is that?

I am disappointed in this budget. I expected a great deal from the minister, having heard certain statements from him in the past expressing what I had hoped would be his philosophy, a philosophy which recognized that the Canadian economy works on the basis of incentives; that it should be encouraged; that it should feel the government is behind it, not on its back. But the government is exacting from the economy ever more hundreds of millions of dollars each year. One has only to look at the tables of government revenue and expenditure to realize how true this is. All this money comes from only one place. Every blessed last dollar comes out of the pockets of Canadians, people living and working in Canada. The government, of course, takes credit for redistributing it. It distributes largesse. All it is doing is taking money out of one pocket, putting it into another, and saying "What good boys we are; we are giving it back to you this way". As I say, I am terribly disappointed, and therefore, seconded by my hon. friend from Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell), I move:

That while acknowledging certain beneficial provisions—

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Isn't there something missing? Shouldn't you move to delete all the words after "That"?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. There has been a certain hiatus. The motion should read:

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following be substituted therefor:

While acknowledging certain beneficial provisions in the budget proposals, this House regrets the failure of the government to bring forth effective measures to relieve unemployment, to provide incentive for Canadian investment in Canadian development or to propose personal tax relief for stimulation of the economy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't you have any drafters on that side?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair was about to raise this technicality, the relationship of the amendment to the motion before us. We shall make the necessary arrangements so that the motion provides for the removal of all the words after "that".

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, on March 3 the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) placed a question on the order paper. It read as follows:

In the years 1957 and 1967, what percentage of the total money income was received by the (a) lowest one-fifth (b) second lowest fifth (c) third lowest fifth (d) fourth lowest fifth and (e) highest fifth of all family units?

A reply was tabled a few weeks ago and, to the amazement of everyone who examined it, it clearly showed that in the ten years between 1957 and 1967 there has been no appreciable change in the way in which income is distributed in Canada. And this despite all the vaunted programs brought in by the Liberal party and by the Conservatives before them aimed, it was said, at the redistribution of income. The distribution of income in this country remains essentially the same. The columnist, Douglas Fisher, simply took this information and printed it in the paper for which he writes, offering only a very limited amount of comment, something which, for Mr. Fisher, is unusual. This is a case, though, where the facts speak for themselves and additional comment is scarcely needed.

The other day, in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Chairman, the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) was obviously in a state of agitation. He asked the officials from Statistics Canada, who were appearing before the committee, to come prepared to state whether these figures were correct or not. I should like to quote from the minutes of that Committee for May 4, at page 11. The hon. member for Don Valley addressing the representatives of Statistics Canada had this to say:

I am not satisfied with the information that you have. I appreciate that you are giving us all there is, certainly I am prepared to accept that, but I am not satisfied that enough priority has been given by Statistics Canada to this area. I would just like to tell you that, to me, this is one of the most serious allegations I have ever seen made against the government that in the last X years, whatever it is there has been no significant or any redistribution of income. I think it is very important for the credibility of Parliament, if you like, that there has been movement. If it does not show in the dollars, but there are redistribution programs and government services that are not reflected in these figures, then Statistics Canada, I would submit, has a responsibility to try to produce the information so Canadians can actually see we are going to try to remedy this kind of disparity.

That is a most pathetic statement made by a young man in search of justification for his policies. Here was a conscientious Liberal, a man who really believed that Liberal policies would cure the ills of our society, dashed by statistics. The facts simply do not bear out that there has been any appreciable improvement in the distribution of incomes in this country.

Like so many of his colleagues, when the statistics did not bearout the point he was trying to make he accused those who were gathering the statistics. Or, as the Minister of Finance so often does, if he does not like the statistics on unemployment he quotes statistics he does like. He says: "Let's not talk about levels of unemployment, let's talk about how many people are working. Perhaps unemployment will then go away. I am not in the forecasting business; don't ask me what the levels of unemployment are going to be". He does not like the figures on unemployment because they are shocking, a disgrace to the country, so he finds himself some new statistics or challenges those that exist.

As a matter of fact, a little further on in the same committee proceedings the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) showed his unhappiness with the statistics on unemployment and started a round of questioning to see whether or not he could get Statistics Canada to indicate that there was something wrong with the way unemployment statistics are reported. Statistics Canada had to reassure him that the figures were indeed as they were, and that all the talk about participation rates and levels of unemployment and the number of young people in the labour force, new entrants in the labour force, and so on, do not alter the essential failure of the government to correct some of the glaring problems that are facing our society.

To some extent, the rising gross national product and the rising increase in production, that has taken place all over the world have obscured the redistribution of income and the fact that the benefits that are supposed to accrue from a Liberal society simply have not materialized. We live in a rich country and to some extent have been living off our capital assets. We have been polluting and taking short cuts, living off our resources, our power supplies, our iron ore, selling them off as a cheap way of maintaining much of the status quo. But we have not been running the country—certainly, the government has not—in an intelligent way.

I use these remarks as a preamble to what I am going to say about the budget, simply to indicate what has been going on and to show that the budget before the House is a continuation, a very bad continuation, perhaps even worse than before, of policies designed to perpetuate inequality between the people of the country and maintain the essential unfairness that exists. To paraphrase Walter Bagot's comment on the House of Lords, the cure for this budget is to have a close look at it; and when you take a close look at it, you see it for the bad budget that it is.

The government had at its disposal rapidly increasing revenues that could have been used to lower taxes for the ordinary people of Canada. Instead of that, the government gave the bulk of its growing tax revenues to the corporate sector. Of the $850 million that the government distributed, $350 million went—we think—for some worthwhile purposes, such as assisting pensioners and those who are going to school. But a much larger amount, $500 million, went to reduce corporate taxes. The government is going to collect 49.9 per cent of its revenue from income tax and 12.2 per cent from the corporate sector, which indicates a growing disparity between the two revenue fields. This situation is particularly objectionable when we consider that only a little while ago there was a temporary tax reduction of 3 per cent given in the personal income tax field but 7 per cent in the corporate field. Going back to 1962, at that time the government collected 31 per cent of its revenue from the personal sector and 21 per cent from the corporate sector. Today, the percentage is 44 per cent and 15 per cent. That is an administrative budgetary figure; the other figures were taken from national accounts.

In this budget the government is proposing to increase personal tax by $1.12 billion. Over the amount collected last year, this represents an increase of roughly 15 per cent. The government is proposing to increase direct sales taxes, which in the main come directly from the people, by almost 10 per cent. While the government is doing this, it is reducing corporate tax revenue by something like $60 million. When you look at what the government is doing it seems hardly credible.

The government apologists may say—I am sure the minister will say this—that it is impossible to make this kind of distinction between personal income and corporate income. After all, what are the corporations? They consist of shareholders and eventually this money goes to the shareholders. This may be the case in some kind of closed society where the shareholders of an industry are nationals of one country. But this is not true in a country like ours where the bulk of the taxes collected from corporations are collected from the companies rather than the shareholders. More than half of the taxes collected in Canada from corporations are collected from foreign owner corporations. So to the extent that a tax advantage is given the corporate sector, we are conferring a benefit on a foreign treasury or on foreign investors, not on Canadians. The government is asking the taxpayers of Canada, the wage and salary earners, to pay a fantastic subsidy to foreign owned corporations.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) asked why did not the government simply give these advantages to the Canadian owned corporations. This would have nullified what the government is trying to do, namely to bribe United States corporations in Canada not to return to the United States or to transfer production because of DISC. The hon. member for Edmonton West also said that the government did not have an industrial strategy. They certainly do have an industrial strategy, one that is becoming very obvious now. Their industrial strategy is simply to offer bigger bribes than anybody else. Their policy is: "Don't try to manage the economy, don't try to regulate industry, don't try to incorporate safeguards; just bribe. Whatever bribe is offered elsewhere, offer the same bribe".

Before the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) leaves the House—I know he is not doing so intentionally—I should like to make a comment that I want him to hear. I read one of his speeches the other day in which he said very much the same thing. Perhaps he did not mean to say it, but what he said was that the only way we can keep foreign-owned corporations in Canada is to give them higher profits. I think he said this in reference to the fact that automobile prices are higher here than in the United States. He says we have to give them more profits. In other words, we have to continue to bribe them. The minister may now leave if he wishes.

I suppose this is an industrial strategy of sorts, but is it really the kind of industrial strategy any self-respecting nation can live with, and is it the kind of industrial strategy Canadian wage and salary earners want? Are they going to be willing to pay more and more taxes in order to bribe corporations into staying in Canada? Are we Canadians so impotent we cannot develop our own country? Do we not have the technique, the ability, intelligence or whatever it takes to do this ourself? The sole industrial policy of the Liberal party is to bribe the hell out of corporations.

If DISC offers certain advantages let us figure out what this will mean to foreign-owned corporations. The Liberal government will not try to legislate in respect of them, put safeguards in our measures and will not tell these corporations that while operating in Canada they must act as good citizens. This government just bribes them, ups the ante and gives more than any other country would give them. I do not think we can give them much more as we are collecting very little in corporation taxes now. The amount is down to about $2.3 billion. If you take into account the fact that almost a billion dollars goes out in respect of DREE and another half billion in other government handout programs, we are not even collecting $1 billion from the corporate sector. As Carter asked, if you do not get anything from the corporations why do you need them? Surely, we are entitled to expect, not that corporations will carry the entire load of requirements in our society, but that they will carry part of the load instead of shifting it entirely to the shoulders of the wage and salary earners in this country.

One must ask who his friends are, because that's what politics is all about. It is obvious who are the friends of the Liberal party, and it is not the wage and salary earners of Canada. That party gives little consideration or thought to them. Perhaps now that an election is imminent, it will be very difficult for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to resist the pressures being brought to bear by the bagmen. I am sure they will not have any more trouble with him. This budget is a bagman's delight. The bagmen could not ask for anything better from the Minister of Finance. He has given them a marvelous gift on the eve of the election. The government does not even have to be very generous to the corporations of Canada. There are a few that are important, but that number becomes even less as far as the Liberals are concerned. They sometimes think about the Tories, but that is corrected very quickly when a budget such as this is presented.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

This is not a very generous government. If you take back one per cent of the beautiful handouts, the Liberal party will only have $5 million to go into this election. There is another incidental benefit. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wants to hold a banquet in Toronto, he can up the price because they can certainly afford to pay it. He does not have to improve the quality of the food and there is no reason to expect that the speeches will be any better. At least he can ask for more money because he has been generous, and I would think this generosity will be reciprocated in some way. Business may be grateful for these handouts but most Canadians will not be. I do not want to minimize some of the features of this budget which provide some benefit, but for the majority of Canadians there is very little in the budget which will be of assistance.

The Minister of Finance is playing a curious kind of game. He is playing a sort of Robin Hood role in reverse, robbing from the poor in order to help the rich. Perhaps we should call him "Hood Robin" when he plays the game that way. He is putting his hand in the pockets of the poor to help the rich. One is not supposed to rob from anyone in a civilized country, but he has decided to put his hand in the pockets of the wage and salary earners in order to help those people who do not require this kind of assistance. If we felt this was the only way to stimulate the economy of Canada, no matter what inequalities might result, perhaps we might have to put aside this question of equity. However, there is no evidence that equity has to be sacrificed, particularly at a time when profits are rising substantially in Canada. Profits bottomed out long ago and are now beginning to level off. There is no evidence which would indicate that the profit picture has to be improved in a general way in order to provide full employment, unless of course you take the view that the government is impotent, helpless and has no way of dealing with things like DISC or threats against the Canada-U.S. auto agreement.

Let us consider this charming and gallant "Hood Robin", our Minister of Finance. He does what you expect of a charming and gallant man. As he leaves the bank he has just robbed, or leaves the poor from whom he has just taken, he sees a lady selling apples on the corner and is seized with a moment of sentimentality. He reaches into his pocket and gives her a big tip. He hopes this act of kindness will obscure what he has just done. He hopes it will obscure the offence of acting against the poor of Canada in favour of the corporations. I do not think even his smile is enough to cover up what is happening.

In my view, and I believe in the view of all my colleagues, this is a fraudulent budget. The old age pensioners are supposed to be grateful for the $2.88 increase they will receive. Those receiving the income supplement will get some assistance and we are happy for that. There was no increase in basic old age pensions, and this is long overdue. These pensioners are supposed to be very thankful, but from every indication I have seen they are not. These people are not stupid. They know that the cheques are supposed to reach them just before the election and that they are expected to respond with gratitude. Perhaps the pensioners would be grateful if they were to receive the kind of largesse the corporations are getting from this government. Perhaps they should give back 1 per cent, which would give the government 2.8 cents. Perhaps the government should print a special bill of that denomination and send that along with the first cheque to the old age pensioners in order that they might show their gratitude to this government by mailing back that special bill. This could be done as a token of the gratitude they have for this government.

The other day I obtained a copy of the Evening Report and a copy of the Kitchener-Waterloo Record. The Record contained an article headed "3.6 per cent pension increase for vets 'great insult,' says legion head". Pensioners in this country may need every cent they can get, but they have some pride. It is an insult for the government to give them this kind of meagre handout in anticipation of an election, expecting them to be grateful rather than suspicious of the government's motive. The government would be better off to leave this matter alone until after the election. Once we had a "three buck election" in this country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was six bucks.

Mr. Saltsman: That's even better. We might look at the student assistance which on the surface would appear to be very good. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, it will be very good for somebody like myself with my income. It will be very good for members of parliament because we are receiving reasonably substantial incomes. We are not being badly treated. But it will not be good for an ordinary workingman because it is only possible to take advantage of the student assistance, the $50 a month for a student attending school, if you have taxable income. It will be a very substantial benefit for me since I have a son attending university. What sort of benefit will it be for the steel worker who is earning $5,000, $6,000 or $7,000 a year? What sort of benefit will it be to him?

• (1640)

Is this fair, particularly when we realize that the provincial governments have increased the fees at universities. They are cutting back in many ways and making access to university more difficult. I do not want the Minister of Finance to tell me it is a provincial problem and not a federal problem. The provinces started cutting back when the federal government placed ceilings on the aid it was prepared to give the provinces. The federal government told the provinces that every time their expenditures exceeded a certain amount there would be no sharing of the amount above that figure. The federal government said, in effect, that the provinces had so many years to start raising the money because they would no longer get it from the federal government. Then, the government has the gall to preen itself for what it is doing for the students. It destroys the financing of universities on the one hand, and then says that students will be better off because some advantages and compensation will be offered.

There are many things wrong with the financing of universities. I do not agree with everything that is done there. However, this method creates more difficulty and is insulting to the students of this country who do not make a great deal of money. It is a great benefit to a student who does make a lot of money, but how many students are there in Canada who can attend school and earn large enough sums of money to have a taxable income against which they might obtain a benefit? There are not very many so far as I am aware.

The assistance to the crippled and those who are disabled falls into the same category. Whoever drafted this legislation must have thought that only rich people have mothers who are incapacitated, that the poor do not have mothers or relatives who have to be wheeled around, because the benefit again applies to taxable income. This is similar to child care provision in the tax legislation which gives far more benefit to those with high incomes than to those with low incomes.

Also, it would seem that there are no farmers in Canada. I do not think a word appears in the statement about farmers. If the minister did not intend to do anything for the farmers or the fishermen, he might have had the good grace to apologize and say that he will do something for them later. It is as though they did not exist. When the Minister of Finance is asked why there has been this gross oversight, he says a lot is being done for them in other legislation. He will have many hard-nosed farmers to convince about that. The farmers have only themselves to blame, because they do not pay the $50 to attend the banquets at Toronto. The farmers have placed themselves in a terrible position by not attending the banquets and thereby qualifying to receive this treatment in the budget. I hope they have learned something from this budget about attending banquets. I do not know how much money is required to fly from Moose Jaw to Toronto to attend these banquets. The only reason they do not attend is that their wives prepare much better food; they cannot tolerate either the food or the speeches.

Let us take a look at machinery purchases. The government's argument is that the provision of benefits for machinery purchased will create jobs. I do not think the government will find many economists on its side. There is no evidence to support the idea that stimulation in respect of capital equipment will provide more jobs. It may improve profits and productivity. We will not quarrel about that. But it will not provide more jobs, particularly when we realize that more than half the machinery purchased for use in Canada does not come from Canadian sources but rather from sources outside Canada. Of course, the government is talking about correcting that situation.

There is no evidence that there is unused plant capacity. The factories in Canada are not so burdened with work that their machinery is overworked and is getting so hot that it is necessary to retool. Quite the contrary. There is a hardly a member of this House who cannot give an example of a plant closing down. In my riding, which is a highly industrialized riding, there is all kinds of plant capacity. The true effect of these plant purchases will be to increase corporate profits. The assumption the government is making is that if it gives its friends these goodies, they will be very responsible. The Minister of Finance loves the word "responsible" just as previous ministers have loved the word "confidence". There are things called corporations, markets and financial institutions, but there are no people. The government worries about the market because it says that is where confidence is needed. It says that you must stimulate corporations because that is what must be done. The people do not count. The minister has not heard about creating demand. What we are saying is that equity, productivity and improving the gross national product are not contradictory but go hand in hand. If you give the ordinary person a tax reduction you give him confidence that his government is not robbing him in favour of somebody else, and you will do more to improve the economy than by improving the profits of a handful of corporations.

If we look at the machinery bit, we find it is not 50 per cent depreciation that some corporations will be able to take. It will be 50 per cent this year. Next year it will be 100 per cent, because next year they can take the 50 per cent depreciation to which they were entitled on the machinery purchased this year, plus the 50 per cent on the machinery purchased the next year. That is a pretty nice bonus. It is not as though this approach has not been attempted before. It is not as though there has not been this rapid write-off and accelerated depreciation before and with a similar lack of effect, except on profits. It is a remarkable philosophy which says the only way one can run the economy is to increase profits, because otherwise the whole economy would run down.

At the end of this year, the 3 per cent relief that was given on the personal income tax is to be removed. There is no evidence to suggest the government has any intention of continuing this relief in respect of personal taxes. On the other hand, the 7 per cent benefit that was given to corporations is being formally included by reducing the corporate rate to 40 per cent. It is even better than the 7 per cent, and we have a long-term commitment from the Minister of Finance that corporations will be receiving this for a very extended period. This, in fact, is the beginning of a totally new policy. One has to wonder whether this Minister of Finance is more concerned about looking after the people of Canada or more concerned about building up the power brokers at the next Liberal leadership convention through the direction of his budget. He will not go down the slippery slide of the former minister of finance, because the former minister of finance, despite some of my objections to his policies, occasionally broke through with something for the people. Occasionally, he made a speech in which he said he had something for the people. But the present minister will not permit himself to fall into that kind of trap. They say that the Ministry of Finance spells the end of all leadership hopes. The minister has managed to surmount all kinds of obstacles and he may go down in history as the first minister of finance who managed to hold that office and, at the same time, to please the right people.

In my riding, the textile industry is important, and it is hard pressed. According to the local paper, the first reaction of the people in the textile industry to the budget was favourable. They really think that the Minister of Finance is doing something good for them. I hope they are right but I do not think so because there is a "Catch 22" in that budget when it comes to textiles. The tariff for textile goods coming from Great Britain is being raised. The preferential treatment that we have given on textiles is being extended, and therefore it looks as though this measure will be of some assistance to manufacturers in Canada.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

The minister has brought in another good measure. He is removing all the tariffs for the underdeveloped or developing countries. He will let manufactured goods from developing countries come into Canada. But he has included some protection. He allows the manufactured goods to come in so long as they do not disrupt the Canadian market, or words to that effect. What will happen? First of all, those people who are being excluded by the tariff will move to the developing countries where they will be welcomed. Meanwhile, the Canadian industry will be encouraged to expand and to say that happy days are here now, the Liberals are finally doing something for them. But then, they will find themselves right back in the same box in which they have been until now. There will be the same pressures from manufacturers to exclude the goods, and we will have gained nothing. It is a juggling, a fooling of everyone; it is not a policy, and it will turn out to be a cruel joke that the Minister of Finance has played on everyone.

We are also going to pay in another way because the cost of all public financing in Canada will rise sky high. As Corporation profits increase because of these tax measures, the price of equities will rise. It will be more profitable for people to hold equities rather than bonds. This will mean that bonds will have to compete at a different level. Higher interest rates will have to be given for fixed securities, for bonds and mortgages. There will be an increase in the cost of government financing of all kinds, municipal, provincial, federal and housing because the minister has increased the profitability of corporations. All of us will pay for it because all of us use these services to some extent.

One of the greatest problems facing every Canadian is the growing amount of municipal tax that has to be paid. As a result of this bonanza that the minister is handing out, this gift to the corporations which sounds so great now, the minister will make the job of financing everything outside the corporations in Canada virtually impossible, and the chief beneficiaries will be the American subsidiaries in Canada. The minister has consolidated the position of the American subsidiaries in this country. The foreign ownership policy has strengthened foreign-owned corporations, and they are the ones that will get the main benefit from the tax relief being offered and from the concessions that the government is giving.

I wish I had more time because there are so many things to criticize in this budget. I have only started to mention all the bad things that can be said about what the Minister of Finance has done. As the days go by, the bad things will become more and more obvious, as I think they are becoming more obvious.

Before my time runs out, I should like to move the following subamendment:

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words: "it being the view of this House that a substantial reduction in personal income tax on low and middle incomes should replace the tax cuts and other handouts to corporations."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the amendment which is now before the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, an amendment and a subamendment to the budget brought down Monday night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) are now before the House.

The amendment simply states, and I quote:

While acknowledging certain beneficial provisions in the budget proposals,— —no doubt a reference to the increased old age pensions—

—this House regrets the failure of the government to bring forth effective measures to relieve unemployment, to provide incentive for Canadian investment in Canadian development or to propose personal tax relief for stimulation of the economy.

And the subamendment states that this House believes that a substantial reduction in personal income tax on low and middle incomes should replace the tax cuts and other handouts to corporations.

I think three main points stand out in the budget: First, old age pensions are increased from $135 to $150 a month for single people and to $285 a month for married couples. Secondly, help is given to students, who are granted monthly deductions of $50 to further their studies. Thirdly, corporations are helped by getting tax cuts, tax concessions or incentives in the amount of $500 million, in order to stimulate the Canadian economy.

• (1700)

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I shall deal with the matter of senior citizens. In 1970, more precisely on May 4, the following motion was introduced in the House by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House calls upon the government to give consideration to an immediate and substantial increase in the basic amount of the old age security pension and in veterans' pensions and allowances, and this House also urges that still further steps be taken to improve the quality of life of all our older and retired people.

That motion was introduced on May 4 and, on the occasion of the debate on the proposal, I said, as recorded at page 6536 of Hansard, and I quote:

Why not pay $150 pensions to old people? I remember that in 1962, when the old age security pension was $65 a month and that my colleagues and I called for it to be raised to $100, we were literally told that we were crazy, that we were asking for the moon.

Now, in 1970, the same pension has reached $111.41 a month. This means that the government is crazier then we were then by $11.41 a month.

The question remains the same: Where will the money come from? When it was decided to increase the pension of hon. members, did anyone ask where would the money come from? Nobody did. The raise was approved. It was like an electronic system—so smoothly it went through.

And on page 6538 of Hansard, one can read the following:

Mr. Speaker, all this to say that the motion as drafted is very much acceptable. We support its intent because all the people and groups mentioned in the motion interest us to the utmost.

For many years now, we have been asking for $150 per month for old age pensions.

Now, on the same day, that motion was put to a vote and it is surprising to see to what extent an opinion can evolve over a period of two years. At that time, nine of my colleagues and I voted for increasing the old age security pension. We supported the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Among those who voted against it, I see the names of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). All three voted against the motion because it was allegedly impossible to raise the pensions. Why has it now become possible, with a larger number of unemployed and an economy more unstable than ever?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That is not true.

Mr. Caouette: How is it that we were ridiculed in 1970, whereas, today, the government is introducing this very legislation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): He will say anything.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, we intend to support this measure. I already said so yesterday in no uncertain terms. This is why I remarked on the night of the budget speech that I had never seen a government prove us so right, we Créditistes who for 30 years have been asking for a better deal for senior citizens as well as for all classes of society.

Mr. Speaker, in his budget speech, the minister forgot to speak of the increase in the national debt. He did not say that it amounted to $16,943 million as at March 31, 1970, to $17,360 million by March 31, 1971 and to $17,922 million by March 31, 1972.

Nor did he say that the interest on our debt in 1970-71 was $1,880,000,000; in 1971-72, $2,030,000,000 and it will be $2,260,000,000 in 1972-73.

I hope that members of the press gallery will mention this: $2,260,000,000 which represent $6,191,100 per day in interest alone on the national debt.

The hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion nods to me that we must pay it. We have to.

When his illustrious colleague, the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) is asked whether he can spare a few dollars for the Opportunities for Youth program, he replies to our young people: "It is too bad, we have already received 19,000 projects". He sends that same letter all the time. I quote:

I regret to advise you that your project cannot be subsidized this year. The 1972 Opportunities for Youth program created a tremendous interest and more than 19,000 projects were submitted to us. Budget limitations—

For the interest on the national debt, there is no budgetary limit. We must pay. I keep on quoting:

Budget limitations unfortunately compelled us to make a choice out of the thousands of applications that met with the program's general eligibility criteria.

We cannot even find out what those general criteria are. We ask the minister what they are and he answers: I don't know, my departmental officers know it. But he is the one who signs the letter, not some civil servant.

I quote once more:

Therefore after carefully studying all applications, we had to turn down projects of undoubtable value and interest.

I wish to thank you and your friends—

How nice! Just in case the election should suddenly be called. Back to the quotation:

—for your efforts in drawing up your project and for your interest in the program.

Yours sincerely,

Gérard Pelletier

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Lovely.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): What a lovely letter; not a single mistake.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, it is an excellent piece of rhetoric. Very nice, and in good French. But when you ask young people to present projects, why not tell them: Now listen; we cannot accept your project because we think there is discrimination with regard to the ridings. When the ridings are Liberal, we are a bit more generous. But they are not all Liberal.

Mr. Speaker, a project was submitted by a group of young people from Guérin, in my constituency. I am going to read a letter dated May 7 which they addressed to Opportunities for Youth:

To whom it may concern:

We have been advised that projects 281-5746 and 281-4937 have been refused.

As we live in a marginal parish, we prepared two projects related to tourism, while emphasizing the development aspect and the participation of everybody.

Since we feel we gave adequate answers to the questions asked, we cannot understand why the said projects have been refused.

We wish to know what the criteria for assessment are.

Those young people are not stupid! They know what they want, and their projects were serious and worthwhile. These projects were not those of social agitators, of communists or socialists. The letter went on:

We wish to know what the criteria for assessment are, and we request that these two projects be reassessed.

We would like to point out that the projects involve seven post-secondary students.

Hoping to receive a favourable reply, we thank you in anticipation,

Yours sincerely,

Opportunities for Youth,
Bernard Bois,

Guérin, Témiscamingue County

• (1710)

I have before me another one originating from Saint-Lambert Desmeloizes, in the Abitibi riding, and another from Malartic in the Villeneuve riding. Three people have signed the letter from the Abitibi riding, which indicates that young people are fairly concerned about this matter. At least they got an acknowledgement of receipt following the submission of their project; but the letter is more interesting than that and I quote:

This is a little story about two student groups of our parish and their experience with the Opportunities for Youth program.

We were informed, at the end of February, that graduating secondary students would be allowed to submit projects within the Opportunities for Youth program and that someone would call at the school to explain to them how to get organized—

This is about a government official who was to detail and specify the criteria. I proceed with my quotation:

Their project should reach Ottawa at the beginning of March. We had, therefore, some ten days ahead of us to think, organize and find a project which would meet the "general criteria", (very, very general ones).

The official in question who was supposed to give the necessary information was not immediately available—Time went by. One meeting after another was held, in the evening, in the parish church to set up a project as best as we could: There were no means of obtaining precise information and we were left to our hopes!

We received an "acknowledgement of receipt". That was something, at least!

A couple of months later, we received a nice letter informing us that the project meets the criteria—But that there were too many projects.

That was exactly the same letter I read earlier concerning another project.

No money—

And I proceed with my quotation:

that the project meets the criteria—But that there were too many projects. Ours were both rejected.

Two projects in one parish and none is accepted. I proceed:

Why? Was the choice made at random. Was there any reluctance to invest in our region? We should have been forwarned—

Were the projects not of the kind to be subsidized this year? Who could advise us? A matter of luck? We do not believe that anymore!

Should have we been told some secrets? We are far from Ottawa. We do not know any of your officials—

There would be many other questions which we would like to ask you, Sir.

It should be noted that the letter was sent to the Secretary of State. I continue to quote:

The same applies to LIP. We are promised the moon and stars and then nothing happens. Then some people will say that the young people have no interest whatsoever ... that they want everything ready-made ... that they do not know how to commit themselves, ... that they are pessimistic, passive, etc.

After so many deceptions, it is evident that they become passive.

The letter is signed by Louise Fluet, Johanne St-Georges and Mario Laroche: one is animator in the parish and the others are responsible for the program.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not read the other letter coming from Malartic. It says the same thing—a well presented project, which represents an expenditure of about $12,700 and could provide jobs for 17 people. Messrs. Gaétan Boulanger and Bernard Dubé, from Malartic, were responsible for it. The project number was 282-1970.

Mr. Speaker, I reviewed this project this morning, and I realized that it was very well thought-out. It is a good and necessary thing for the city of Malartic. Now, the minister continues to give the same answer: "I regret to inform you that your project will not be subsidized this year." No doubt that it could not be subsidized last year, since it had not been introduced.

Therefore, I must say that as a result of a lack of funds, thousands of projects are refused, and I say to the Minister of Finance that if a world war were to break out tomorrow morning, all young people would be enlisted in the armed forces. Then the necessary funds would be available to pay them, to clothe them, to feed them and provide them with suitable accommodation. I consider the government as being responsible for the disillusionment of the youth, which is completely disgusted by the public administration.

So, I am plainly telling this government that what the old parties have been able to achieve in wartime, the Créditistes undertake to do it in peacetime, that is to enable people to live decently in law and order.

Let no one tell me that there are not enough funds to assist our young people in creating or building something, when in wartime we find all that is required, nothing is lacking.

Mr. Speaker, we complain that youth is rebelling. We do not even allow them to participate in society and then we are surprised to find out that young people take up the cudgel against anything and want to destroy our Canadian society.

Instead of blaming the young who have their backs to the wall, let us condemn the financial system administered by the Minister of Finance. This is where the trouble lies.

To help the young, impossible! To pay $6,191,000 a day in interest only on the national debt, forget about it. The minister did not criticize that in his speech. He simply said: We shall help the aged. We agree. We have been in this House for ten years. Personally, I have been a member for ten years. I have constantly asked for better pensions for the aged. They are given $150, we ask for $200, but we shall nevertheless vote in favour of the government proposal.

We would have liked to see pensions granted from age 60, instead of 65; when the minister reaches 60, he will find that he can no longer find any work. He will no longer be in Parliament then and he will not be able to find a job. So, he would be happy to have the old age security pension. He should have thought about this when he prepared his budget. He should have announced pensions for people of 60 or over as well as for their spouses.

This afternoon I directed a question to the minister about pensions, because, last night, I was stunned to see on television the Quebec Social Affairs Minister about to faint because the federal government was granting increases in pensions. That would disrupt his comprehensive system, which he never produces. He blames Ottawa for giving something to Quebec's senior citizens. I fail to understand the stance of Quebec's Minister of Social Affairs. I have been told that by this time he may have turned in his resignation because Ottawa is considerably damaging the Quebec plan. I don't see what damage can be done if Quebec is not contributing a penny to this increase.

However, these increases still create problems on the provincial level. This morning I received a letter from a mother who is on welfare and supporting, alone, ten children, ranging from 20 to 2 years of age. She receives welfare benefits of $232 and she is wondering how they can pay $285 to a senior citizen and his wife. And justifiably so! She has no objection to old people receiving $285—not at all—but she is asking me to find out from the government how it could support 10 children and their mother on $232 a month. These are welfare benefits to which the federal government contributes 50 per cent and which are administered by Quebec—according to Quebec criteria.

René Lévesque could not improve on the minister.

Mr. Speaker, that mother is right. What reply did she get when she applied for an increase in her welfare payments? The public servant employed by Quebec told her: "Madam, the criteria prevent us from increasing your benefits. Go out and work to increase your income". If she did go to work, she would lose her whole allowance, or part of it.

• (1720)

However, there is another solution. They told her: If you cannot make both ends meet, if you cannot maintain your children, hand them over to us and we shall look after them. In such a case, the government would be willing to pay $800 a month or $80 per month per child placed in a foster home. They would break up the family by taking the mother out of her house and by taking her children away from her. The department is willing to pay. If the minister does not believe me, I could bring him to the welfare office in Hull tomorrow morning; I could have him see for himself whether this is true or not. They grant $80 per month for each child placed in a foster home by welfare offices. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion knows that this is true.

So, why should we put up with such a situation? Why, Mr. Speaker, must we inflict such troubles to mothers, as I pointed out earlier today? If a man receives a pension of $150 and his wife is under 65, she is not entitled to a pension. If both are 65, they will receive $285. If the mother is 58, 59 or 60, she will probably apply to the welfare office to get $30 or $40 a month—

An hon. Member: $25.

Mr. Caouette: —$25 or $30. Let us say $40 and be generous with the government. Forty dollars plus $135 make $175. If the wife is 65, then she will be granted $285 instead of $175, that is, $110 more, as if a person who is 65 ate more than she did at 58, 59 or 60.

That is not all. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) told me at noon today, as soon as the pension increase is passed by this House, the Quebec Social Affairs Department will reduce the pension paid to the mother who is not yet 65. She receives $40—

Mr. Ouellet: He never said that.

Mr. Caouette: He added: "I hope not". But we know that this has always happened in Quebec. If the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) says the opposite in Quebec, he will lie to the people. I know how things go because I am aware of it. The hon. member for Papineau takes pleasure in disparaging the Social Credit in Quebec. Let him meet me on the hustings and I will fix him in public.

Mr. Ouellet: Any time.

An hon. Member: He is going to bust his balloon.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have burst a lot of balloons in my days.

People are being told shameful lies and the Creditistes are accused of talking nonsense and of proposing senseless programs. The hon. member for Papineau thought it was funny when we asked for $150 a month. Who would have voted against that? Now, he is saying: the Liberals gave you $150. But it took the Creditistes to kick the government in the right place.

Mr. Speaker, we are asking for the adjustment of the financial system in Canada. That is where the trouble is. I know that the government members are human. Both the government and the hon. member for Papineau know that the financial system is the sore spot. That is why there is no reference to it in the budget, that is, it is being changed for the benefit of big business which is getting more incentives and tax concessions under the pretext that more jobs will be created.

Here is a good one. We will see how good the minister is. Let us look at the blatant inconsistencies among the government people. The Liberals agree with one another. Here is what the Minister of Finance said in his budget speech on May 8, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, my first words to this House as Minister of Finance last February were that my most urgent priority was jobs. This remains my first priority. The main thrust of this budget is to deal with this problem; to buttress the Canadian economy—to provide incentives for Canadian industry to grow and compete and provide jobs.

This is what the minister said. The objective is to create jobs. All the new industries are happy. Everything is clear: they will make more profits without increasing their sales, because the consumers don't have the money to buy the finished products.

Mr. Speaker, on March 10, 1972, the Finance Minister's chief, the Prime Minister, stated in Victoriaville, and I quote:

> "Man's most sacred task is to develop his talents, and that objective is not necessarily fulfilled through work, because we are moving more and more toward a society of leisure," stated the Prime Minister of Canada before some 500 people in Victoriaville on Friday, March 10.

One says: My main objective is to create jobs. The Prime Minister says: one must not believe that, it is self fulfillment that matters.

It seems we should organize leisure instead of creating jobs. If he thinks of creating jobs through further subsidies to large companies, the minister will not reach his objective. At the present time, those corporations are faced with overproduction in all Canadian economic fields.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It is my duty to tell the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

[Mr. Caouette.]

To proceed, the hon. member must obtain the unanimous consent of the House. Is that consent given?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Béchard: Provided it is new.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine say: "Provided it is new." I feel that what I have just said is rather new. Anyhow, I thank my colleagues for their kindness and I will do my best not to abuse their generosity.

To get back to the conflicting statements made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance in the space of two months. The former said: We must organize leisure, and the latter: We must create jobs. So, the Canadian taxpayers are wondering who is right and who lied.

Who is on the right track? I agree 100 per cent with what the Prime Minister said in Victoriaville because that is what we have been saying for the past 30 years. More and more, through the use of new techniques, workers are going to be replaced by machines. Then, we will have to organize activities and provide the people with a higher purchasing power so that they can buy the products of machinery.

Mr. Speaker—and again I say what I have been saying for a long time—the problem in Canada is not one of production. Even if car dealers were paid grants—I sell Chrysler products myself—they could not possibly sell every last unit. The same applies in all sectors: clothes, food, grain. During a recent visit out west I noticed four-year old crops in warehouses but no buyers. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is well aware of it.

In eastern Canada there are too many apples, too much milk, too much wood, too much of all kinds of things. In the Maritimes there is too much fish.

In British Columbia there is too much fish as well as too much wood and fruit.

In Alberta there is too much oil.

Recently that province's premier came to Ottawa in the hope of finding new customers.

Mr. Speaker, even if industries are subsidized, how will that increase the purchasing power of the Canadian taxpayers? It won't. That is why we claim there is obviously not much difference between what the government now proposes, for instance, for big business, and what the Creditistes have been suggesting for a long time. The big companies will make additional profits, but the little people, the average citizen, the ratepayer will still pay for the minister's budget. The minister did not say, in his budget speech, that the government expects to collect an additional $1,125 million more in income tax from the private citizens than in 1971-72.

The so-called gift of $500 million the government will give industry and that of $425 million to the veterans together amount to $925 million. This means that the government will distribute $925 million more but that it will take $1,125 million more from the taxpayers. Older people are going to get something!

Last year, 1,300,000 Canadians were looking for summer jobs. This year, it has just been announced that 1,400,000 young people will look for summer employment. It is assumed that 400,000 of them will find something, but this means that 1 million will not find employment. What are we going to do? What benefit will these unemployed young people get from this budget? They will be able to deduct $50 per month from their income, but they won't earn a cent. The minister should start by paying them these $50 so that they can pay them back later.

Mr. Béchard: You should read the budget statement in full.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) suggests that I read the budget statement. But with $50 a month deductible, or $600 a year, if the young person earns nothing, how is he going to pay?

Mr. Béchard: Read a little further!

Mr. Caouette: There is nothing in the budget which says that the governemnt is going to assist students, absolutely nothing.

I have duly established my allegations. I have just read three letters from the Secretary of State. We have no money! Out of the 19,000 projects, only 700 or 800 will be accepted. There you have it.

Mr. Béchard: There were none before.

Mr. Caouette: Let the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine go and explain that to his constituents to find out whether they will believe him.

Mr. Béchard: I already did.

Mr. Caouette: The party in power grants us a basic annual exemption of $1,500—approximately $30 a week. For a married couple, $2,850 a year represent $55 a week. The old age security pension, together with the guaranteed income supplement, come to a total of $150 per month.

What the hon. members of the Social Credit party suggest—something which should have been granted a long time ago—are basic income tax exemptions of $2,500 for single people and $5,000 for married couples.

What we also suggest in order to boost the purchasing power of the public so that the industries and the large corporations may sell their products is to grant a discount on the retail price, a discount compensated by the federal government to the industry.

If on a purchase of $1,000 the government were to allow a 20 per cent discount, the cost would be $800 instead of $1,000 and the consumer's purchasing power would be increased with no effect on the cost price of goods. This would bring retail prices down and the government would compensate retailers for the discount granted to the consumer. Because of this greater purchasing power, obviously industry would sell its products.

Increased buying power would obviously foster sale of products. With industry selling its products, obviously there would be new jobs created, new machines, new techniques used, etc. That is sheer common sense! It would be logical to finance production through consumption. But instead of that, we keep on supporting production and ignoring consumers. They are not organized to benefit by an increase in their buying power.

Failing distribution of dividends, prices should be brought down, with the government giving a discount to retailers.

Furthermore, we want to change the present welfare system throughout Canada. I discussed this in the West and in the East, saying the same everywhere. Welfare, as now operated, is an encouragement to sloth and fraud. Some people receive welfare benefits and do not deserve them while others, badly needing them, get none. Laziness and fraud are being encouraged. People are being told: Stay home, don't move. Should you work at all, you will lose your benefits. That is how fraud is being encouraged.

Recently, a Montreal mother was arrested for having received during the previous year over $12,000 in welfare benefits. She had registered her family at all welfare offices in Montreal and was drawing a cheque from each of those offices. At the end of the year, I believe the amount was $12,678.

Mr. Béchard: There is no spiritual director for the city of Montreal.

Mr. Caouette: I will send the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madelaine as a spiritual director to the city of Montreal, because one is badly needed there.

Mr. Speaker, we believe the whole welfare system should be replaced by a social security program including basic exemptions as far as personal income tax is concerned as well as economic security benefits to everybody. As for young people of 18 or over, including the students who are sending projects to the government, instead of having them cut branches along highways or maintaining them I don't know how, they should be guaranteed a yearly income to enable them at least to go back to school when courses will resume in September or October.

We call for a $1,200 grant per year for any citizen of 18 or more and $250 per year for those under 18. In the case of children, an amount of $250 per year represents a little more than $20 per month. Married people should also get a guaranteed yearly income of $2,500, not an income granted only if they do not work, but an additional income to the one they can earn.

People with a $3,000 or $5,000 income will receive in addition $2,000, $3,000 or $3,500. Apart from encouraging people to work, this will promote honesty, because people will know that they do not have to hide in a bedroom or elsewhere to work, so as not to be caught and lose their welfare benefits. Therefore, this would encourage people to be honest and to work. Nobody will ever refuse to earn something if they are encouraged to do so.

Mr. Speaker, instead of 600,000 unemployed people in Canada, we probably would have only 100,000 of them, or less than 50,000. These people would be working and producing something. They would contribute to the upswing of the economy.

On reaching the age of 60, not 65, there ought to be payments of $200 monthly to pensioners and to their spouses as well, even if the latter are only 60. Instead of receiving $285 an old couple should be getting $350, that is $65 more than is paid at present by the government. This should be paid as soon as age 60 is reached.

Everybody knows, including hon. members and the ministers—especially the Minister of Finance—that people aged 60 as well as mothers of 57 or 58 should not be allowed to work. Not being as old as their husbands who are 65, these women are not eligible for anything. In the Parliament Buildings there are working women aged 55 or 57. In order to make a living, they have to wash windows and scrub floors at night in a country as rich as Canada. This is unacceptable and the Creditistes certainly do not approve of this way of serving Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, those were the remarks I wanted to make on the budget which was presented on Monday by the hon. Minister of Finance. What is the purpose of the amendments and sub-amendments? To ask for jobs. I say that, in Canada, the problem does not consist only in the creation of jobs, but in the establishment of security, independently from employment.

When I hear labour leaders speak of job security, I submit that Canadians are not concerned about job security, but about pay security. The solution lies in having the purchasing power to buy the available goods and services. Whether we recognize it or not is immaterial. There is something I mentioned at the beginning of my speech, namely that $150 was unacceptable two years ago. Today, not only does the government accept it, but it introduces legislation to this effect. And all parties have unanimously recognized its necessity.

When we were asking for higher pensions at the time the Progressive Conservatives were in power, we had the same reaction—it was impossible. Today, we have seen them vote, to a man, in favour of the pension. As for NDP members, they have long been insisting on increased pensions. Almost every day, I hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre speak of veterans, of retired CN and CP employees and of all other pensioners whose benefits should be increased. He is right. Since the cost of living is going up, we should agree to increase these people's income. But do not always grab from those who own something to give those who have nothing because the end result will be that nobody will be poor, but nobody will be rich either. That is exactly what would happen.

As has been the case in various countries I have visited, people have said: Let us eliminate the big ones. Today, people in Quebec say: Let us go for large industries, let us smother them into oblivion. Once they have disappeared, we will be better off. But go out and see what happened in the countries where this has been done. Large industry has disappeared followed by the smaller. And the small one who did not have any large industry is controlled by a government which says: Power to the people.

Power to the people? You can forget about that! Power is in the hands of a few kooks who forcibly lead the people. This is exactly what is advocated at the present time, if we are to believe some Quebec labour leaders.

Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Sometimes he shows some common sense.

Mr. Caouette: The Liberal members know that I always have common sense—

An hon. Member: It is true!

An hon. Member: Oh no, not always!

Mr. Caouette: We all deplore what is happening in Quebec, but we must not forget that exactly the same things occurred 55 years ago in Russia. Unrest in Russia began with strikes, with labour leaders challenging the law, the rules, the authorities and saying to the union members: "Pay no heed!" Then the bloodshed began. This is exactly what happened in Sept-Îles last night. It was such a beautiful thing to behold: Canadians who are tearing at one another, saying: "Power to the people!"

And when these leaders take over—because it is never the people who assume power—the first thing they do is to control the courts. Castro, in Cuba, first took control of the courts, and 2,000 or 3,000 people were shot. That is their first reaction.

This is why I say that if people like Chartrand, Pepin, Laberge and Charbonneau tried in Russia, Czechoslovakia or Cuba what they have done here, within 24 hours they would be facing the firing squad!

That is the kind of system that they would give to our workers, farmers, people of Quebec and other Canadians! As for myself, I say to Canadians: Citizens of the silent majority, be a little more conscious!

We must open our eyes before it is too late. We must start by making people respect the order of justice, not that of injustice. Straight jackets in a system like ours are precisely what causes people to rebel. Let us improve the system rather than destroy it. It has been destroyed in other countries without result. On the contrary, things there are worse than they were.

If we compare farming in the USSR or in Czechoslovakia with farming based on personal initiative, we see a whole world of difference. Are we going to allow ourselves to be destroyed from within our country, as has happened in Cuba? When I hear Chartrand say: The only thing Cuba lacks is American toilet paper—I maintain it lacks something else. According to him, justice, judges, members of parliament, governments, nothing or nobody is any good any longer. Those people defy the law. Let them go and try to defy the law in the USSR or Czechoslovakia and see what happens. They would like to get hold of power for themselves, not for the working class.

Let us compare Canada with the USSR: here, the working week is 37, 38, 40, or in some cases, 42 hours. In the USSR, it has been 46 hours for the past 55 years. In Czechoslovakia, it has been 46 hours as well for the past 30 years.

In Czechoslovakia, three years ago students attempted to recover their freedom. Their rising was crushed with Soviet tanks. They are no longer allowed to recover their freedom.

Mr. Speaker, I warn not only parliament but the Canadian people against this. If some day we lose our freedom, we will never be able to recover it. We will be treated in exactly the same manner as the individual is treated in communist or socialist countries.

In my opinion, it is to the interest of the Canadian legislator to take a stand and to act with the aim of serving the best interests of the human being. We must move ahead, pass laws, introduce budgets, not only budgets which are generous when wars, killings and revolutions are involved, but generous budgets conceived in time of peace to preserve justice, law and order.

In this manner, we could achieve economic stability and personal freedom.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before I call on the minister, it is my duty to bring to the attention of the House that the following matters will be considered at the time of adjournment tonight: the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—National Defence; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Housing; the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk)—Grain.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I did listen with great interest to the speeches that were made this afternoon, but before going any further, I want to say how much the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) astonished me.

Let me tell you, because I don't want him to be judged solely on some comments he made this afternoon, that, in private, he is usually quite humble and even very kind. And this is contrary to the impression he sometimes gives to the House, where he assumes the role of a Moses, entrusted with the safekeeping of the Tables of the Law.

As far as I am concerned, I don't mind being told that I am not very clever, but to be told that I am in the pay of business, any business, that, Mr. Speaker, does not go down very well. In my opinion, the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member were rather uncalled for. I wanted to say it before carrying on with my comments.

Mr. Speaker, if I had not committed myself to report to the House on the price of cars and on the DISC program, I would have had the time to describe how important the manufacturing sector is to our economy, to our rate of employment and mainly to the increase of our exports. Perhaps the House is aware that 75 per cent of Canadian exports originate in the sector which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) saw fit in his wisdom—and I quite agree with him—to grant special consideration in his financial statement.

I could also have explained further why the Minister of Finance has decided to help this particular sector, the reasons being, among others, tied in with international trade. Most if not all of our important international competitors, all the major industrialized countries, have recently taken some measures to favour their manufacturing sector.

Mr. Speaker, some balance had to be re-established and the budget has done that, I think, in a way that was needed. Some people have not yet understood this. It seems to me that it is simple enough to understand, when we consider the changes that have taken place in the world of international trade, when we consider, for example, the support, that the European Community, Japan and very recently the United States—especially through the DISC program—and the governments of the industrialized countries give to their manufacturing sector. I for one feel that it would not have been rational not to do as much in Canada. We would have put ourselves in a position which would have brought great harm to us in the future.

All the people who say that nothing in this budget aims at increasing employment should be aware of the fact that the measures introduced by the Minister of Finance have consolidated and secured many positions presently existing in the sector of manufacturing. As far as I am concerned, I think that these measures will also have the effect of creating a good number of other jobs in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, if I had enough time—and I don't—I would have emphasized the contribution of this budget to the development of an industrial strategy which better meets the needs of the 70's. This budget brings a solution to a certain amount of problems which have been put forward very often by some industrial sectors whose leaders explained to us the very particular difficulties they had to cope with.

I believe as well that the budget will pave the way for a number of projects which had been shelved, delayed or considered as unfeasible at this time, very often as a result of the level of taxation which prevails in Canada.

A number of people suggested, this afternoon in particular, that tax reductions should have favoured personal rather than corporate income tax. Mr. Speaker, I ask them to think it over, for the consumer demand is already strong in Canada; on the other hand, imports are also increasing at a very rapid pace in this country; by the way, during the first quarter of 1972, there was a 22 per cent increase.

A tremendous reduction in personal income tax would have above all contributed to boost imports. It was really necessary to put the producers themselves in a competitive position enabling them to compete with these imports. Of course, we have a right to do it. Second, it was imperative that they be able to compete on international markets, in the area of manufactured goods.

Mr. Speaker, I will now speak about the two reports, as promised. They are difficult reports. Therefore, I will refer quite often to the notes before me, which I do not usually do, and I ask you to excuse me beforehand. I regret having to do so. I would rather talk as easily as the hon. member for Témiscamingue and leader of the Ralliement créditiste (Mr. Caouette), who does not have to refer to very precise notes.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I undertook last week to make a statement on DISC in the course of this debate. As the House knows, the government has been concerned that the introduction by the United States of the Domestic International Sales Corporation scheme might adversely affect the level of production, employment and investment in Canada, especially if a large proportion of U.S. companies with manufacturing facilities in Canada, exporting to this country or competing with Canadian goods in foreign markets were to take full advantage of this legislation.

DISC's effects are not, as everybody knows, confined to Canada. Canada is, however, highly dependent on exports, especially to the United States, and on imports from that country as well. We are also important users of U.S. investment. Canada is, therefore, uniquely vulnerable to any United States measures which might affect our trade or investment patterns. This is a fact.

The government has, therefore, been consulting since the DISC legislation was passed with Canadian companies likely to be affected and has, of course, been following developments very closely in Washington. We have given a great deal of consideration to the kind of policies which might become necessary if the DISC scheme became a serious threat to Canadian production and investment. Some people will ask why it takes us so much time to assess the situation. I think the reasons are pretty good. First, United States companies have been relatively slow in registering their intent to set up DISCs. Fewer than 1,500 firms are reported to have elected DISC status, out of some 25,000 U.S. companies now engaged in exporting and 500,000 with some export potential. Registration by March 31 did, however, qualify a corporation for tax deferral privileges retroactive to the beginning of this year and a company can still register a DISC at any time and qualify from the date of registration. What I am saying is that companies can come later and request DISC status, but the number that have already done so is limited in relation to the number of U.S. companies involved in exports.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Secondly, Canadian firms consulted do not yet know precisely how the DISC scheme may affect them. This is partly because the U.S. treasury department has not yet defined the full dimensions of this scheme, and also because many U.S. corporations have not apparently decided how and for what exports, if any, they will use their DISCs. So it is difficult for the government to be informed ahead of events. It is difficult to know what are the intentions of the companies before they have made decisions themselves as to their intentions.

Mr. Stanfield: I did not know the Liberal government was so modest.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I am not establishing a contrast this afternoon between the hon. gentleman and myself—we are both humble and, as was said about Attlee, for such good reasons. I am establishing a contrast between myself and the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). I for one am quite willing to accept the idea today, yesterday and for the future that I do not have a monopoly on truth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: I undertook to report particularly on my consultations with the major motor vehicle manufacturers regarding the use of DISC. My report is that of the four producers that were consulted, Ford of Canada confirmed that a division of the U.S. parent has been registered as a DISC and is including shipments to Canada under the provision of the DISC program to enable the parent corporation to take advantage of the income tax deferral provisions. This will enable Ford, U.S.A., to reduce its tax obligations to the United States government. The company says that it does not anticipate that the use of the DISC by this parent corporation will have any short-term effect.

An hon. Member: Short-term, yes.

Mr. Pepin: I said "short-term effect", and this is underlined in red in my text. It is not anticipated that DISC will have any short-term effect on their operations in Canada and, therefore, no immediate shift to U.S. sources, with a consequent lower utilization of company facilities in Canada, is expected. DISC would affect the company's longer term investment plans in Canada. I put it the way it is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether this might be a good time to interrupt the minister, if there is ever a good time. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that it is six o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pepin: Your Honour, when I was so sweetly interrupted by Mr. Speaker at six o'clock—as he said, if ever I can be interrupted—I was explaining the reason why the information on the effect of the DISC program has been so slow in coming and remains inadequate. I was also reporting on the state of affairs in respect of the four major automobile companies in relation to DISC. I covered Ford and I now move to General Motors and Chrysler. These two companies in the United States have registered under DISC with the United States federal department, but so far have taken no decision to include shipments to Canada under the program.

• (2010)

Again, neither of these two companies expects that DISC will have any short-term effect on the level of production in Canada, although each was less certain that the benefits under DISC would not have a bearing on long-term investment plans for the industry in North America. American Motors have not registered under the DISC program nor, they say, have they any present plans to do so.

As hon. members are aware, the demand for motor vehicles this year is expected to be well ahead of last year. It is expected to be a record year. The Canadian companies report that sales in Canada are exceeding those of last year. As the market demand in the United States is also very strong, the level of our automotive trade, in both exports and imports, is expected to exceed that achieved last year. The growth in both markets is not expected to significantly alter the trade pattern that is being achieved this year between the two countries. So despite the differences we have had with the United States over the future shape of the automotive agreement, this arrangement continues to bring substantial benefits to both countries.

It is obvious that the budget which the government brought down on Monday has placed the automotive as well as other manufacturing and processing industries in a position to compete more effectively with producers abroad, including those countries which have adopted various tax measures directly to further their own exports without affecting their domestic position with respect to pricing or sales. We regard many of these measures, which are direct export subsidies, as being contrary to the principles and obligations of GATT and we have protested against them to the countries concerned. As my hon. friends know, a direct export subsidy is considered to be an unfair advantage.

The new budget provisions for fast depreciation on equipment, machinery and anti-pollution devices, as well as the lower corporate tax on manufacturing and processing, are not retaliation against the value-added tax systems, income tax holidays, tax deferrals on exports and other specific measures which have unfortunately proliferated in recent years. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said on Monday, our new measures are designed to provide greater incentives for new investment in Canada and to strengthen the general ability of Canadian industry to compete with foreign manufacturers both here and abroad.

My hon. friends know that there is a difference between a direct subsidy and a general economic measure. Among their beneficial effects, these measures will put Canadian manufacturers and processors in general on an equal footing with producers in other countries. These measures will strengthen the ability of manufacturers in Canada to adjust to the challenges of enlarged European markets and other international developments and opportunities.

Despite the improved situation of Canadian business brought about by the revision of the corporate tax system, it may be that in special circumstances a Canadian producer may still feel at some disadvantage compared with his foreign counterpart, either in his competitive position or in his investment prospects. If this should come about, the government will consider any further steps which may be warranted.

The government is also looking at ways to obtain better identification of imports to Canada at prices which reflect export subsidies. Our objective in this regard will be to assess more accurately the impact on Canadian producers which subsidies may have, so that appropriate steps may be taken. The government is confident that the improved corporate tax system which the Minister of Finance placed before the House will enable Canadian manufacturers to hold their own in the increasingly competitive international market and play their part in the development of Canada.

My second short report is on the automotive price differential. I have consulted the same major Canadian automotive producers on this particular matter. The main purpose of the 1965 automotive products agreement was to expand production and employment and improve efficiency in the Canadian automotive industry. The government had the further intent, and the confidence, that the differential between car prices in Canada and those in the United States would be progressively reduced.

Production and employment in Canada have expanded dramatically since the agreement was signed in 1965. Efficiency has risen steadily and large investments have taken place in this country. Figures showing this great progress are public, and consequently I do not propose to repeat them tonight. They are available. The cost savings made possible by this rationalization were translated into a continuous decrease in the price differential until May, 1970, which is the date of the floating of the Canadian dollar.

May I briefly trace the progress which was made toward reducing the price gap under this agreement. In doing so—and this is a very complex exercise; I am not hiding the fact—I will use weighted average prices at the manufacturer's level, that is, f.o.b. factory excluding sales taxes. I am sure that at least one hon. member understands the meaning of these words, because we have gone over these things a number of times. So I repeat, they are weighted average prices at the manufacturer's level. "Weighted" means that in establishing figures we took into account the number of automobiles sold in each model of car.

Mr. Stanfield: It does not mean it is weighted to suit yourself?

Mr. Pepin: I did not understand the remark: I would like to hear it later. It is at the manufacturer's level that the automotive pact influences the costs of production and resultant prices. Because of sales tax differences at the dealer level, manufacturer's prices must be used if a meaningful comparison is to be made between Canadian and U.S. car prices. In other words, I exclude taxes because obviously they are different here from what they are in the United States. A comparison which would not take into account this fact would not be useful.

I shall also be using Canadian dollars in comparing Canadian and United States prices, converting the latter into Canadian dollar terms to permit a direct comparison. As the exchange rate of our dollar averaged 92½ per cent of the U.S. dollar during most of the period since 1965, I shall first compare prices using this rate both at the beginning and the end of the period. I shall then make a second comparison using the present rate of exchange, which for practical purposes I have taken at par. The use of these uniform exchange rates avoids the distortions which would result from converting each year's prices at varying rates of exchange.

The following is the first comparison: In 1965, when the agreement was signed, the average weighted price differential between Canadian and U.S. cars was over 8 per cent at, I repeat, the 92.5 per cent rate. As the benefits of the agreement gradually bore fruit, the average price gap grew narrower until by 1970 the differential was down to 3.5 per cent. By 1971 it would have been 3 per cent, and for the current model year about 2 per cent, had the value of the Canadian dollar remained unchanged.

In May, 1970, the Canadian dollar was allowed to float, and since then has risen to the present near-parity. If I adopt the present rate of exchange in calculating the price differential since the signing of the automotive agreement, in 1965 the average Canadian car would have cost nearly 16 per cent more than its United States counterpart. By 1970 this gap would have been about 11 per cent, and for the current model year the differential is just over 8 per cent at, I repeat, the manufacturer's level.

This price gap naturally varies from company to company and from model to model. Some cars are priced lower in Canada than in the United States. Most are more expensive, by various amounts. In general, the smaller, more popular cars are sold at a lower price differential than the larger, more luxurious models. One of the new sub-compacts, in the version which is the largest seller, is on average $61 less expensive in Canada, at the dealer level, tax free, than it is south of the border on the same basis.

The exchange rate which I have used to trace these prices does not have a direct bearing on the Canadian dollar price actually paid by the Canadian consumer for his car. Canadian car prices, in Canadian dollars, have risen over the period of the agreement only half as fast as those in the United States in U.S. dollars. But the Canadian citizen, Mr. Speaker, still buys cars at a higher price than the U.S. citizen. How come? The question, then—and it has been repeatedly posed in this House—is whether a differential of this size, or indeed of any size, is warranted under a continuation of virtually tariff-free trade in vehicles and parts with the United States. This is the question with which my department has been constantly engaged, and one which both I and my predecessor, the now President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), have discussed with the vehicle producers on many occasions.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Then, Mr. Speaker, what is the explanation? The producers have identified a number of elements where costs in Canada are higher than in the United States. These factors include cost of transportation of the cars to the dealers, sales taxes on materials, for example, construction materials, and other supplies, higher average costs of capital when they are borrowing on the Canadian market, greater administrative and overhead expenses related to Canada's separate and smaller economy, and the added burden of our colder winters. The companies are not able to identify, and neither are we, in cost accounting terms—I mean in any precise numerical terms—what these costs would amount to in terms that would be acceptable to economists, both ours and probably theirs.

While economists and accountants can, and do, recognize these and other cost factors in their studies of Canadian automotive production, it has never been possible to determine accurately just what these amount to in any particular Canadian operation and, even less, in the production of any given Canadian car. One can conclude, however, that there are in fact some continuing higher cost factors in this country which bear on the production of cars and their delivery to the dealers. It may be suggested that we buy a roomful of computers, hire a thousand economists and a few thousand accountants in order to get to the bottom of this problem, but some people say that even they could not decipher the complexity of the situation.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, our studies of this industry indicate that there are certain elements which offset some of the higher costs which the producers have identified. It is mentioned sometimes, for example, that the cost of steel is lower in Canada than in the United States. It is also mentioned that labour stability is an advantage in determining the costs of production in Canada. But these lower cost elements seem to be just as difficult to measure precisely for particular factories or vehicle models as are the higher cost factors. I hope that I am at least giving an indication of the tremendous complexity of establishing proportions and comparisons in this particular industry.

Mr. Broadbent: You left out profit margins.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the knowledge we have is that profits in Canada, generally speaking, are lower than they are in the United States for companies in this particular sector of the economy. But, again, this is terribly difficult to establish; often you have global or international figures for the operations of these companies and from these you have to try to extricate the Canadian aspect. Again, the exercise is a most difficult one.

Whatever the past situation may have been, the budget provisions which the government introduced on Monday have already substantially altered the cost and profit equation which has been such an important element in our review of this matter. The availability of the new provisions for accelerated depreciation of machinery and equipment used in manufacturing, and the lower corporate tax rates which will bear on this industry, have removed any doubt about the ability of the industry to continue to reduce the price differential. The 1973 models, when they come out in the fall, may well cost as much as current models because they will have to incorporate in both Canada and the United States stricter safety and pollution control devices. However, I expect the car manufacturers to narrow substantially the gap between Canadian and U.S. prices for the coming model year.

Why, you may ask, is the automotive industry singled out in this way? Why should it be expected to continue to move its prices closer to the U.S. level? First, this industry has been given privileges by the automotive agreement which are unique in Canada. The corporations can rationalize their production for the total North American market, with all the economies of efficiency and scale which that involves. Moreover, they continue to be protected in this country from overseas competition by what is now a 15 per cent tariff on most vehicles imported from third countries. The comparable tariff in the United States is only 3 per cent.

It would be intolerable if an industry which has been given the opportunity to arrange its production and distribution on a continental basis were to try to shelter behind this tariff. The government is, consequently, determined that this shall not happen and expects that the progress in reducing price differentials must resume and continue and that the advantages brought to the industry by the new budget measures and by the automotive agreement shall thus be shared equitably with the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I tried to get the minister's eye before he sat down. Would he answer a question on one matter, for clarification, before he finishes his speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I point out to the hon. member that this is not a point of order. I must also point out to him that the time allotted to the minister has expired, and the hon. member's question could be put only by unanimous consent.

Mr. Broadbent: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) to ask a question of the minister, provided the minister is ready to accept it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: A central part of the minister's reasoning as to why prices have not narrowed as substantially as they might have was the changing value of the Canadian dollar, which he said had a significant impact. If I followed the minister correctly, he seemed to suggest that, without explaining why, it should affect the price of cars. I wonder if he would take a minute to explain why this should be so.

• (2030)

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons for this. One is, obviously, that the companies have to meet competition in the United States at whatever price prevails there. The other is that some of them would tend to export more than they import, and consequently the disadvantages of revaluation would be greater. The case I was trying to make was that the price to the Canadian purchaser of an automobile, in Canadian dollars, at the manufacturer's level, has been substantially reduced since 1965 in comparison to what has happened in the U.S. I was trying to make the case, also, that the budget presented by the Minister of Finance brings in an important new element and we are expecting, indeed we are insisting, that this new element should be visible in the reduction of prices in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, with the approval of the House and the minister's willingness, I might ask—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) rising on a point of order, or for the purpose of asking a question? The previous hon. member was permitted a question by unanimous consent. I think the Chair should again ask if there is unanimous consent, otherwise the question cannot be asked. Does the House agree to allow the hon. member for Waterloo to ask a question of the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a direct question.

Mr. Francis: One speech is enough.

Mr. Saltsman: The report in the Globe and Mail of Tuesday of this week quotes the minister as saying:

> One of the reasons for the difference in price was the need for car firms to make a higher profit in Canada or there would be nothing to induce them to move out of the United States.

Is the minister still of the opinion that this is a valid position, and how can he reconcile that—

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I very sincerely do not recall having said that. If it can be proved that I said it, I will try to explain what I meant.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): At first glance, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) appears to be embarking on a new economic course, a course in line with his public statement that jobs are his first priority. He would appear to have succumbed to the pleas of the opposition over the last four years that unemployment is the number one problem in this country and that significant corrective action must be taken at once.

The adjustment of the old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement, the application of the escalation of veterans pensions and the increase in the basic exemption for people over 65 will put an extra $350 million—this is the minister's estimate—into the hands of some two million people, to spend as they please. While this is inadequate, as my colleague the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has pointed out, it will provide some immediate stimulus to the economy.

The proposals to cut corporate income tax, while a step in the right direction, will bring no immediate stimulus to the economy. After all, they do not become effective until January 1, 1973. Even if they were to take effect immediately, I question whether the $500 million involved could not have been directed to better advantage in the creation of jobs. Let me refer briefly to my remarks in the previous budget debate. On January 19, 1971, as reported at page 2566 of Hansard I said:

> We need substantial cuts in both corporate and personal income tax, to place more money in the hands of consumers and to reverse the pessimistic attitudes held by businessmen about the immediate future of the economy. Above all, the government must admit that it has been wrong in its political philosophy that everything must be brought under government control. We need an admission that it has been wrong in its theory which suggests that economic expansion can only be achieved where, when and how the minister and his bureaucrats decide ... we want from the government recognition that private enterprise and not the government is the only lasting source of economic growth and jobs.

The key phrase there, Mr. Speaker, is "both corporate and personal tax cuts" for I question the effectiveness of one without the other. Corporate tax cuts in themselves, despite all the good intentions of those who receive them, do not necessarily imply that manufacturers will increase their production. I recall that the Carter commission said as follows in this connection:

> Changes in corporate income taxes are likely to have a delayed impact on the investment spending of corporations.

It has been estimated that the average length of this lag is 15, or at least 12 months. This measure will not significantly affect investment decisions until well into 1973. It is difficult to be more precise about the length of this lag since it depends upon corporate expectations of future demand for their products. The Carter commission put it this way, and this is what has applied in our country in the last two or three years:

> When corporations have excess capacity, it will be difficult to induce them to make additions to capacity by reducing the rate of corporate income tax, especially in the short run. The only sure way of inducing them to expand capacity is by increasing the demand for their output.

The only measure in this budget, Mr. Speaker, that will help to increase consumer demand immediately is the $350 million going to the pensioners. Realizing this, it is obvious that the minister has not really changed direction; his is still the same old preoccupation with inflation as the villain of the economy. Despite his recognition that jobs are the first priority, there is little or nothing in his budget to create jobs now, when they are needed. Injecting $350 million into the economy under a tax system that is geared through progressive rates to bring most of it back is hardly inflationary. But I will come back to this point later.

Let me turn briefly to those sections of the economy which this budget completely overlooks. There is nothing in these budget measures that will provide any direct assistance or incentive to many of the most labour-intensive and important sectors of the economy. For instance, there is nothing that will provide any relief to the service industries, the construction industry, to farming, fishing or logging. When I recite these various industries, the obvious fact strikes me that these are the types of industry which form the backbone of the disadvantaged areas of this country both east and west. These industries are the mainstay of our Atlantic economy. In the Atlantic area we depend largely on farming, fishing and lumbering for employment.

[Mr. Thomas (Moncton).]

One of the disturbing features of this budget is the fact that it completely overlooks these important industries. How important it is to stimulate employment in this area can be illustrated by referring to the March figures for unemployment in Canada.

• (2040)

The unadjusted figure for the Atlantic area was 12.1 per cent. For New Brunswick, 12.6 per cent of the work force was unemployed, representing 27,000 people; for Nova Scotia the figure was 9 per cent, or 23,000 people; for Newfoundland, 15.4 per cent, or 24,000 people; for P.E.I., 16.2 per cent, or 6,000 people. According to Statistics Canada, about 80,000 people in the area are unemployed.

Although the figures are serious, what is most significant about them is that they are becoming static. If one looks at the figures for the last 12 months, one will find there has been little variation in the level of unemployment. This indicates that unemployment in the area is chronic. I do not mean to condemn outright the policies of DREE, but although DREE has pumped a great deal of money into the area unemployment levels remain chronically high.

It seems to me that the relief offered in the budget to the corporate sector will have the greatest effect in those areas which least need it and, conversely, the least effect in those areas which need it most. Most of the large manufacturing and processing industries of this country are located in Ontario and Quebec. Once again, there is to be no help at all for primary industries, in other areas involving the farmer, the fisherman and the lumberman. Surely these areas of our economy have the right to expect some assistance.

We need more direct employment and investment stimulus in our economy. Corporate tax relief measures are a step in the right direction. These should be coupled with selective personal income tax cuts. We must create the demand which will encourage production. I was interested to read a survey undertaken by a Toronto Star writer on April 1. He was examing the question of unemployment and asked all manner of people in this country what steps they thought we should take to cure unemployment. According to the survey, labour in British Columbia said that there should be lower taxes for the poor. On the Prairies, labour said there should be higher corporate taxes. In Ontario, labour suggested that taxes should be reduced; in Quebec, that there must be a fairer tax structure; and in the Maritimes, that taxes should be reduced.

When the same question was put to management, it is interesting to note that the replies from all areas were unanimous: the proper course was to cut taxes. When the economists were asked—and economists agree on hardly anything—their answers, again, were unanimous. In every area of the five surveyed, the unanimous reply was, "Cut taxes." It seems to me there is a message here for the government.

Every time members on this side of the House suggest cuts in personal income tax they are labelled irresponsible. Government supporters invariably ask, "Where will the money come form?" One is always tempted to reply that if this government would trim some of the fat, waste and extravagance which is the hallmark of its administration, it would not need to soak the taxpayer at every turn. That suggestion might be termed irresponsible by my friends across the way, therefore let me briefly outline how I think taxes would be cut in a way that would still provide enough revenue for normal government spending, although possibly not as much as this government would like.

In 1971 the economy was operating at a level approximately $3 billion below potential, according to Economic Council estimates. Given the high labour force growth and growth in productivity, it is certain that the loss of output in each of 1972 and 1973 will be at least $2 billion. A substantial stimulus to output is, therefore, required if this potential production is not to be lost.

It has been estimated that the increase in Gross National Product from every $1 cut in personal income tax will be $1.60. On the basis of that estimate, which is taken from the Carter commission, we would require a $1,250 million cut in personal income taxes because according to Carter a cut of $1 in personal taxes would increase the deficit by only 60 cents, due to the offsetting of a 40-cent increase in federal revenues which would accrue as a result of the increase in the Gross National Product. It should be noted that these figures of the Carter commission were estimated for the tax system in effect before the recent tax amendments were introduced.

It is also interesting to note that despite the many assurances we were given last year these tax amendments have resulted in federal revenues rising more quickly than the Gross National Product. If we use the Carter figure for the moment, however, a $1.25 billion personal tax cut would result in a net federal revenue loss of $750 million. According to one economist, a revenue cut of $500 million would be needed solely to eliminate fiscal drag in the coming year. "Fiscal drag" is the term for the additional revenues generated by the tax system with the growth of Gross National Product in money terms and without any change in tax rates.

This drag comes about because, according to my understanding of the system—no doubt other hon. members understand this—the tax system is geared to a progressive income basis. As the name suggests, this revenue leakage from the private sector is a drag on economic growth unless taxes are reduced or government expenditures increased. So the $500 million in drag that we shall see in the coming year will be generated primarily by an automatic increase in the level of personal income tax revenues. In other words, the tax bite automatically goes up as personal incomes increase.

It can therefore readily be seen that the $500 million in revenue forgone through the various adjustments will not be expansionary; that is to say, the $500 million that the minister estimates will be lost to the government through these tax cuts will not have an expansionary effect. This reduction in revenues will simply place us in the position we formerly occupied; it is needed to offset fiscal drag. Therefore this measure, in effect, is simply a transfer from individual taxpayers to corporations.

Let us consider the effects this budget will have on increasing the prospects of greater consumer demand in the near future. The only measure of significance in this regard is the $250 million in increased pension payments. Using the same multiplier as before, this would result in a GNP increase of approximately $600 million. A rough estimate of the likely effect of this increase would be to reduce unemployment to approximately 5.5 per cent by next May.

There is a continuing argument about what is a desirable rate of unemployment, and no one has really put forward a satisfactory answer. However, a figure of 4 per cent has been suggested many times as one for which we should strive. But to reduce the unemployment rate to close to 4 per cent within a year would require a budget deficit in the order of $940 million, slightly more than twice as large as that of the budget brought down earlier this week. This would be achieved by means of a personal tax cut of about 8 per cent. This figure is only an approximation, however, because of the difficulties in accurate revenue forecasting. The minister, with the resources of the finance department at his disposal, was forced to admit the following:

> It would be totally unrealistic to expect a revenue forecaster to forecast within 2 per cent. But 2 per cent of total revenue is some $320 million. This year we shall have particular difficulty in revenue forecasting owing to the fact that we have no experience of tax collections under the reformed tax system.

Assuming accuracy in the forecast, the 8 per cent cut in needed personal tax collections is based on uniform, across the board reductions. The size of the needed revenue cut would be reduced if the personal tax reductions were tailored to favour lower and middle-income groups. If the cuts given to these groups were increased, the over-all cut in total personal revenue collections could perhaps be reduced to 5 or 6 per cent. This is because cuts favouring lower and middle-income groups have a greater impact on stimulating consumer demand. These income groups spend higher proportions of income increases than do higher income groups; thus, the multiplier effect of tax cuts favouring them is higher.

It should be repeated that the $500 million adjustment in corporate taxes can be seen in large part as a non-expansionary redistribution of income from individual taxpayers to the corporate sector. It is difficult to argue, however, that the manufacturing sector did not merit some substantial tax relief since, as many hon. members have pointed out, the existing taxation system discriminates against this sector. The discrimination, however, has not been in favour of individual taxpayers who have in fact been bearing an increasing share of the tax burden. The lessening of the tax burden of manufacturing industries should not, therefore, have been at the expense of the individual taxpayer. What I am arguing is that despite all the assertions on the government side, when tax cuts are mentioned, that the economy cannot afford them, this is just not the case.

Mr. Bigg: Stop wasting money.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): One of my hon. friends says, "Stop wasting money." That is one way to begin. Cut out some of the fat and waste, as I said earlier. But even without this, our tax system is so geared that increased tax cuts affecting personal income do not mean corresponding decreases in revenue for the government, because as percentage figures go up the government takes a larger proportion of our income. In fact, it can be argued that aside from the stimulatory justification for personal tax cuts developed earlier, personal tax cuts are needed on grounds of fairness.

It was mentioned earlier that the fiscal drag results primarily from increased personal income tax revenue collections. Since tax rates are expressed in terms of money income and not real income, personal tax payments increase automatically due to inflation as taxpayers are pushed into higher income tax brackets even though their real income may not have increased. To prevent the government from profiting by inflation, therefore, and to avoid reducing the taxpayer's real income through increased taxation, personal tax rates should, it may be argued, be reduced in some relation to the cost of living index. The amount of this reduction should be sufficient to offset the personal income tax contribution to fiscal drag. I would commend these proposals to the Minister of Finance and to his officials.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, may I say how pleased I am to speak in support of the measures introduced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in the budget presented to the House last Monday evening. That budget had two main thrusts: it was designed to build on our economic strength, while at the same time helping those who are least able to help themselves. These are complementary objectives and fundamental principles of this government and, indeed, of all Liberals.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), has already spoken to his bill introduced in the House yesterday. Bill C-207 is designed to maintain the purchasing power of those receiving old age security pensions and to supplement the pensions of those most in need. I hope—and I speak for all those on this side of the House—that this bill, together with the bill providing for changes in veterans pensions, will receive speedy passage. Because those two pieces of legislation will be the subject of a separate debate I do not propose to deal with that thrust of the budget this evening. Rather, I want to concentrate on the thrust which is aimed at building on our economic strengths.

In my speech this evening I want first to comment on the basic thrust itself. Second, I want to emphasize the importance of technology as part of this thrust. Third, I hope to show the close interrelationship between the budget and the policies pursued by various departments of government, including those of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), the takeover policy of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray), and the policies and interests of my own ministry.

Mr. Bigg: Spoken from the heart.

Mr. Gillespie: Finally, I have some comments to make on the position of the opposition parties. I regret that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has left the Chamber and will not benefit from them.

An hon. Member: He is looking for the cabinet.

Mr. Gillespie: It should by now be very clear that this government attaches the highest priority to the on-going development of competitive and efficient industry in this country, with emphasis on those types of activities which will create opportunities for the meaningful employment of well trained, highly skilled Canadians.

Mr. Horner: Would the minister permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) knows he can only ask a question if the hon. member who has the floor accepts the question, and there does not seem to be such acknowledgement by the minister.

Mr. Gillespie: I will be pleased to entertain a question from the hon. member at the end of my remarks. He may be driven to ask a question or two when I deal with the position taken by opposition parties.

Mr. Horner: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I did not mean to make the minister lose his place in the notes of his speech. Somebody must have written the speech very well.

Mr. Gillespie: Now that we have heard the intervention by the hon. member, I will proceed. Our future standard of living and the future quality of life of all Canadians will depend on our ability as a nation to develop a competitive manufacturing industry—firms and industries which are competitive with the best in the world.

My colleague, the Minister of Finance, has reminded the House that we are a trading nation and depend far more on exports than many, if not most, other industrialized countries, and considerably more proportionately than the United States. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce also emphasized in his speech today the measures that his department has taken to provide access to world markets, and he has commented on the particular aspects of the budget in regard to the effect of DISC and on the automotive industry of Canada.

The proposed reduction in corporate income tax applicable to manufacturing and processing profits, the proposal to extend the present depletion write-off privileges applicable to equipment used in mineral ore extraction to equipment used in processing these ores, and the proposed two-year write-off provisions with regard to machinery and equipment used in manufacturing or processing are all designed to improve the over-all competitive position of Canada's processing industry and—

Mr. Horner: When will they take effect?

Mr. Gillespie: —to meet the special and peculiar challenges proposed by DISC.

Mr. Horner: He does not know; it is not in the script.

Mr. Gillespie: As I have already indicated to the hon. member opposite, if he will wait till the conclusion of my remarks I shall be pleased to answer any question he has to put. It will be evident that these measures are not short-term handouts; rather, they represent important components of a broader, longer run strategy designed to foster development of Canadian manufacturing industry.

One of the important elements in any industrial development program is, of course, the creation of a climate appropriate to innovation and technological advance. During the last few months several reports, such as the report of the Science Council on "Innovation in a Cold Climate: The Dilemma of Canadian Manufacturing Industry", the study sponsored by the Science Council dealing with multinational corporations and direct investment, and volume 2 of the special Senate committee report on science, have all focused on the innovative process in Canadian industry.

Many of the concerns expressed in those reports can perhaps be best summarized in the following way: "To lose the power to innovate in a changing environment is to yield control of the future to those who retain that power."

As Minister of State for Science and Technology, I have been particularly concerned with the whole question of industrial research and development, but particularly with the development end of the spectrum, the innovative process itself. Innovation is that research and development activity that is oriented toward the market need. It is the essential activity underlying all the successful new products, processes, systems and services. It is concerned with what will fill a need, what will sell. It is concerned with the ultimate test, the test of the market place itself.

Industrial R and D in Canada is not as great nor as well supported or productive as I should like it to be. Expenditures by Canadian industry on its own account, for instance, are low alongside those of other nations. One has only to take a brief look at some of the leading industrialized nations, such as the United States, the United Kingdom, Germany, France and Japan, to see that Canadian industry's expenditures on its own account rate lowest when related to a percentage of the gross national product. For example, United States industry spends 1.15 per cent of the GNP on its own account, the United Kingdom 0.96 per cent, France 0.65 per cent, Germany 1.1 per cent, and Canada 0.41 per cent. I am quoting the 1969 figures which are the most recently available.

Another way of looking at this is to say that last year Canadian industry invested—I think that is the proper word—on its own account something over $300 million in research and development. Japanese industry during the same period increased its expenditures on industrial research and development by $600 million. In other words, the increase in industriaal R and D expenditures in Japan was nearly twice the Canadian R and D expenditures financed by Canadian industry. As far as the Japanese experience is concerned, just as important as size of expenditure is how it is spent. For the most part they emphasize the innovative end of the research and development elements. Why do they do so, Mr. Speaker? They do so because it is profitable for them to do so, because it is in their interest to do so, and because in their judgment their future growth depended upon it.

New technology or improvement in existing technology, as the background papers tabled by my colleague the Minister of National Revenue indicate, is the largest single factor in economic growth. What do I mean by new technology or improvement in existing technology? Simply this: new products to fill an existing or new market need, or a process which will improve the quality of existing products, or a new invention or better way of producing a product at lower cost.

Total expenditures on R and D by themselves do not tell the story. As I have already indicated, the kind of R and D is important. The pay-off comes with R and D which is directed at the marketplace and with R and D which is directed by the entrepreneur, for innovation is more than just imaginative engineering and market research. The distinguishing characteristics of an entrepreneur are that he anticipates, he looks for the opportunity and then goes on to make it a reality. He does not wait for someone to present him with the opportunity. He is an activist. He is, above all, future-oriented; and he is an optimist—much the same qualities as I am sure you will recognize, Mr. Speaker, in the members of this side of the House.

The entrepreneur is an innovator with a sense of proprietary interest. This sense of proprietary interest is to be found in some, but not all, Canadian subsidiaries of foreign corporations. It flourishes in those which have specialized and have developed a distinctive competence around a particular product, process or system. It is the same sense of proprietary interest that is likely to be eliminated by foreign takeovers, and once lost is likely to be gone forever. I think it is worth mentioning at this point that entrepreneurship and proprietary interest, if they mean anything, mean the ability to take decisions about your own future, your own growth, your own style, your own directions, to plan your own development and your own specialization—in a word, to build your own distinctive competence.

I am emphasizing the entrepreneurship function and innovation because I think they are central to the development of competitive Canadian industries. The entrepreneur finds his excitement in the future. He is not backward-looking or inward-looking; he is outward-looking and future-oriented. And this is an outward-looking, future-oriented, forward-looking budget. That is why I think this budget is the right budget at this time. That is why I think the thrusts of the budget reinforce the initiatives of the government in trade policy, incentives and takeover policy.

Let us look at some of these measures for a moment. Industrial research and innovation are already encouraged under a series of plans provided by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce—I refer to the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, IRDIA; to the Program for Advanced Industrial Technology, PAIT; to IRAP, the Industrial Research Assistance Program, sponsored by the National Research Council—to establish a research capability in industry. I could refer to many other programs sponsored by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, introduced, extended and approved by my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, including DIRP, the Defence Industry Research Program; DIP, the Defence Industrial Program, industrial design assistance programs and programs to enhance productivity. They are considerable in number.

I should also like to remind the House of the provisions of the existing Income Tax Act, section 37(1)(b), which allow the manufacturer to write off his capital equipment purchased for research purposes in one year. There are other measures I could mention, but I shall mention only two. The first is incentive grants under DREE, which are aimed at assisting industry to establish itself in areas of slow growth. The second measure, which is very successful and popular, is the in-plant training program sponsored by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey). This program has allowed many Canadians to learn skills within a plant to the full advantage of the plant or the firm, and the employee.

There were three particular measures mentioned by the Minister of Finance in his budget which will provide additional stimulus to new technology and innovation. I refer to the proposed two-year write-off provision with regard to machinery and equipment used in manufacturing and processing, and to the reduction in the corporate tax rate which will enable otherwise marginal projects to get off the ground and to offer a possible profitable return where none existed before.

I refer, thirdly, to the decision of the Minister of Finance to remove the 12 per cent federal sales tax on purchases of scientific research and development equipment used in the testing and development of new products and processes. Based on current expenditures by Canadian industry on research and development equipment, this is equivalent to a saving of approximately $4 million annually. I am confident that this saving will represent an increased expenditure in research and development activities by all firms, to the long-run benefit to all Canadians.

It has been claimed by some opposition spokesmen that these measures will result in higher profits for the few, at the expense of the many. I think it is worth noting that there is no better guarantee of increasing jobs than a profitable, growing business. Businessmen commit their capital funds, whether they be for new machinery, new plant or research and development, when there is a chance to make a profit. That is precisely why the Japanese have spent so heavily on research, development and innovation. Obviously, the critic of the NDP, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), understands the meaning of the profit and loss system. I believe he is an entrepreneur. His leader gives no indication that he understands how the system works.

I should like to comment on one or two aspects of the government's policy on foreign ownership and, more particularly, the implications surrounding the acquisition of control of Canadian business enterprises. The takeover review policy is aimed at prohibiting the takeover of control of a Canadian enterprise when there is no significant benefit to Canada. In my view, these measures go hand-in-glove with the general thrust of the budget provisions aimed at strengthening and developing our secondary manufacturing and processings industries and, in particular, strengthening their innovative capacity. The takeover control measures are an essential element in the development of distinctive competence by Canadians in new technology and high technology industries.

A particularly important part of the Minister of Finance's budget was his decision to reduce the corporate tax rate on the manufacturing and processing profits of small firms from 25 per cent to 20 per cent. It is among the smaller firms that entrepreneurial activities are often most pronounced, and there is very good reason for this. The larger the corporation, the more difficult it is to innovate. The larger the firm, the more bureaucratic it becomes and the more it struggles with the problem of how to organize for innovation. That is why small, high-technology Canadian firms are a prime takeover target for foreign corporations. It is not the only reason, but it is often the principal one.

There are a number of other reasons why a foreign corporation may wish to acquire a Canadian corporation. It may be to eliminate a competitor, or perhaps to obtain a marketing arm for a product which a foreign corporation wishes to introduce into the Canadian market. It may be to obtain a source of supply which it does not now have. It may be to broaden the product line by acquiring new technological expertise, or it may be to update its own technology with the latest innovation. If it is the latter reason, that is, to broaden product lines through new technology or update its own innovation, and if the result is at the expense of future Canadian growth, that seems to me a reason for real concern, a concern held by all members on this side of the House. That, in my view, is one of the key features of the new bill on takeovers which reinforces the budget support for competitive, growing industries.

I should like now to spell out some of the specific ways that the budget proposals and the takeover policy interact and reinforce one another. The low rate of tax, which was 25 per cent and is reduced in this budget to 20 per cent on the first $50,000 of taxable income which can be accummulated up to $400,000, is a two-edge sword. I am not sure that opposition members appreciate the two edges. First, it encourages young and growing, innovative companies. I think probably they have not seen that. I am not sure they have seen the second, because it applies only to Canadian-controlled companies.

The benefit is not available to foreign-controlled companies. Secondly, if the foreign-controlled corporation were to purchase a small Canadian firm, not only would it lose the low rate of tax but it would have to pay a penalty equivalent to the amount of the benefit the small firm had earned during the period of the tax incentive. That in itself is a significant encouragement to the Canadian-controlled corporation.

The Minister of Finance in his speech on budget night also referred to the tax deductibility of the interest on funds used to purchase another corporation. This interest deductibility applies now to Canadian corporations which would be interested in making a purchase of another Canadian corporation. It places them now on all fours with United States corporations.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct your attention to the provision introduced in the House on May 2 by the Minister of National Revenue to require that all prospective acquisitions of Canadian firms with assets of more than $250,000, or annual sales of more than $3 million by non-resident interests, be examined by a takeover review agency. I would stress the importance of these threshold figures in relation to the activities of relatively small firms with development potential based upon technological capability. Some opposition critics have claimed that the $250,000 figure is too high. They may be unfamiliar with balance sheets and have confused gross assets, that is to say, the total of the figures on the left-hand side of the balance sheet with net assets; in other words, the total assets of the corporation less the outstanding obligations of the firm to its creditors. A second look might convince them that the screening process will pick up the innovative firms, particularly in high-technology and new technology industries, and give an edge to a Canadian buyer of a Canadian enterprise which wishes to sell control.

Mr. Speaker, there is another step which this government has taken to stimulate R and D activity and innovation in the private sector. It was the decision that I announced in the House during the Throne Speech debate to contract out research and development to the private sector wherever possible; in other words, instead of building up in-house capability in government laboratories, to place contracts outside as much as possible where the spin-off benefits can be realized, where the information can be used in an innovative way.

As I have already indicated in my remarks this evening, it is my view that innovation is a product of entrepreneurial activity, that entrepreneurial activity and a sense of proprietary interest go hand in hand and that a good deal of important technological innovation will be spawned in the smaller companies. This does not mean that our policies are designed only for small firms. Let us not forget, however, that big companies were once small. Our policies are aimed at stimulating entrepreneurial innovations and attitudes in the larger firms whether they be foreign-controlled or Canadian-controlled. Both can develop a sense of proprietary interest around distinctive products or processes unique to the Canadian firm.

In conclusion, I should like to discuss one or two of the criticisms of the opposition parties. The first, incredible as it may seem, is that the Conservatives have not yet grasped the basic issues in the foreign direct investment question. They have chosen to ignore the concept of significant Canadian benefit, I suspect because they have no convictions. They have chosen to confuse the issue of investment. They have not distinguished between portfolio investment and direct investment, and there is a difference as great as night and day. One might look at the difference in terms of the players and the spectators at a hockey game. Direct investment involves the management, the players. It involves a significant say in the management and policies of the firm, often involving control. This is the essential characteristic of multinational corporations.

Portfolio investment is passive. You choose your team and bet on it: that is about it. Nor have the Conservatives distinguished between the question of control and ownership. The Leader of the Opposition, for instance, was quoted as saying that there were not positive measures for Canadians to invest and thereby reduce the proportion of foreign ownership. His chief financial critic made a very similar statement which would seem to indicate that the party has decided to fudge the issue rather than confront it. They are wrong on both counts. The Minister of Finance has already detailed a number of measures, including a 33 per cent dividend tax credit, and referred to the provisions governing pension funds. That looks after the portfolio investment side, if one is interested in making a distinction and knowing the difference.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret that the time of the minister has expired. Is there agreement that the minister continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: Read on.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members. I shall not take advantage of their good will by speaking very much longer. However, I want to make this point about the difference between portfolio and direct investment, a distinction the opposition parties, particularly the Conservatives, have not made. They have not recognized that there are different incentives for the two different types. They have not recognized that on the direct investment side there are particular advantages for Canadians. The Minister of Finance mentioned them. He referred to the 33 per cent dividend tax credit, which is not extended to foreign corporations but to Canadian corporations.

Similarly, there is the low rate of tax, which I have already mentioned, on the small Canadian firms. This is not available to foreign corporations purchasing Canadian corporations in the direct investment way. Nor have the Conservatives recognized the interest deductibility which now applies to Canadian firms that want to make a direct investment in a Canadian firm. They have not recognized the difference, yet they piously go on saying there is no incentive for Canadians to invest. Let them, when they are speaking of investment, specify portfolio and then let them say where the incentives do not exist. I challenge them to do that.

Mr. Speaker, at no time has the Leader of the Opposition or his chief financial critic been prepared to distinguish between ownership and control. I would draw their attention to the title of Bill C-201, "An act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons". The question of direct controlling investment is quite separate from providing incentives to portfolio investors to invest in Canadian securities. It is about time the Conservative party realized this. The Montreal Gazette, not always a critic of the Leader of the Opposition, in a recent editorial highlighted this obfuscation, this evasiveness, this confusion, this lack of commitment in an editorial entitled—

An hon. Member: Did you write the article?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The Chair asks hon. members to recognize that the minister has the floor. It is difficult for the Chair to hear what the minister is saying.

• (2130)

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am about to give hon. members some of the facts, but they may not like them. The editorial is entitled "Non-answers aren't enough".

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, will the minister accept a question now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please.

Mr. Gillespie: It is difficult to make oneself heard over the noise. I wish to quote from the article. If the opposition will listen, they might learn what some of their one-time admirers are now saying about them. The article reads in part:

> Politicians who avoid definite statements are nothing new, but Robert Stanfield would not even commit himself to the view that this is the month of May. The Conservative leader's non-answers to questions on the latest episode of the CBC television program Encounter must have set some kind of record for evasiveness.

To an observer of the scene this will come as no surprise.

Mr. Paproski: Who wrote that?

Mr. Gillespie: It is he, not Mr. Watkins, the other leader of the NDP, who should be described as the chief Waffler in the country. There were other perceptive comments in the editorial that I would like to share with you, Mr. Speaker, and other members of the House, but I will quote only once more as follows:

> Even Mr. Stanfield's attacks on unemployment are beginning to sound a little too much like opportunism. He certainly ought not to give the government any respite on that subject, but the country is entitled to something more from a candidate for the prime ministry than a condemnation of unemployment.
> He would aim at bringing the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate down to 4 per cent. How?

Mr. Paproski: When we take over after the next election.

Mr. Gillespie: We on this side of the House know why he gives non-answers. He gives non-answers because he has a non-policy. He has offered only evasiveness, benign generalities and indignant blustering. These are no substitute for policy.

Mr. Horner: How many civil servants has the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) writing his speeches for him?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member should co-operate with the Chair.

Mr. Horner: You did well with the material somebody gave you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member should co-operate with the Chair and allow the Chair at least to follow the speech of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At the request of the Chair the House gave the minister extra time. I would point out to the Chair a flagrant breach of the practice of the House. The hon. member is a minister who has been here four years. There is nothing to indicate what the sheafs of paper that he has before him and from which he is quoting left, right and centre represent. They are not in any way his own contribution.

An hon. Member: Shame.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I rose on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): So far, I did not hear a point of order; unless the hon. member has something to add to make this a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will continue my point of order and point out very definitely that what the minister is doing is contrary to the practice of this House. He should not read his speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There are cases where ministers are allowed to do so for statistical reasons or on matters of policy. But you, Mr. Speaker, have been here also for many years and I do not think I have to point out the practices of this House. The House has been indulgent in granting the minister time to finish his speech, but in no way will we give him permission to read page after page. Members should prepare their speeches to conform to their time, or they should know better.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it is entirely inappropriate for the Conservative financial critic to suggest that the content of the minister's speech is not really his own. If one listened with care to the fatuous banalities, one could draw no other conclusion than that they are his own.

Mr. Gillespie: I had not realized that I was getting to hon. members quite as strongly as their reaction shows. If they are concerned with the printed word, I might tell them that I did not read it all. The quotation was from the Montreal Gazette editorial of May 10, and they can read it themselves.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Make your own speech.

Mr. Gillespie: With the co-operation of the House, I should like to finish my speech.

Mr. Horner: You've had co-operation.

Mr. Gillespie: In my remarks this evening I have tried, over one or two interruptions, to deal with the question of innovation, of technology, of entrepreneurship, of the sense of proprietary interest and of the interaction of various government policies. I have spoken about the policies of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and about the takeover policies announced by this government. I have referred to policies of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and to DREE. I am also trying to point out those which have my particular interest, which have to do with high technology. All of them reinforce the posture and proposals of the Minister of Finance. In my view, his proposals will meet the basic need of this country to establish at this time an industrial base that will ensure the future employment of the most rapidly growing labour force in the western world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He is over his time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is certainly a tough act to follow. I will try to deviate from my script a little more than did the minister. On a more serious note, I should like to take up my time this evening in replying to the comments made earlier by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). All members of the House know that we have been waiting with bated breath for almost two weeks now to get answers from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding what this government intends to do about DISC and about the differentials that still remain in the price of automobiles in this country as compared with their price in the United States.

I would appreciate the minister paying more attention to the points which I will make, because I wish to deal with his arguments. In the past, the record has been good for both members and ministers listening to each other's points. I would like his attention, if he would be considerate enough at this time to give it to me because, as I have said, I will be dealing with important matters. I must say that despite my personal respect for the minister, the speech that he gave today was one of the most disappointing experiences I have had.

The DISC legislation passed by the United States is potentially the most serious protectionist legislation passed by any industrial power since the 1920s, but the way the minister and the government have responded to it, Mr. Speaker, would lead you to believe that we had until the end of the century to make up our minds about what we are going to do in this country which, I remind you, is the United State's most important trading partner, just as the United States is our most important trading partner. It is a profoundly important issue. What did the minister say to justify the slowness in our response? He said that according to our knowledge of the United States companies, they were rather slow to act on this legislation. Somewhat fewer than 1,500 companies in the United States have set up DISCs. Further, he said the Canadian firms consulted on this matter did not know to this point how U.S. firms were going to respond. He went on to say that at least three major corporations in this country, Ford, General Motors and Chrysler, have already established DISCs. Well then, what is to follow from this?

Mr. Pepin: I said more than that.

Mr. Broadbent: I will come to the minister's other comments a little later. My point is that notwithstanding the fact that fewer than 1,500 corporations have set up DISCs, this could be of profound importance to the Canadian economy if a significant percentage of those have subsidiaries in Canada on the one hand, or are simply among those corporations that do a major percentage of their trade with Canada. It is that information which the minister should have presented to the House so that we could determine the situation which now exists.

It seems to me that the only companies he has mentioned by name are those that were already brought to his attention publicly and that were known by people both in this chamber and outside it. I am sure he has a list, or I would hope he has a list of the other firms involved. It is the minister's responsibility to inform the Canadian people of how many of these 1,500 companies are significant traders with Canada. We cannot wait any longer to see just what is going to happen. From the minister's own words we know that the Ford Motor Company, which employs thousands of Canadians, has been exporting cars and trucks from the United States into Canada. This will have an important impact on our automotive industry. How many other companies are doing this, Mr. Speaker? The minister has not told us. I submit that he has an obligation to find out and tell us.

The minister is simply relying on the reduction in corporation tax to deal with the DISC legislation. I suggest that this will not be enough. He knows very well that GATT is meeting later this month in Europe. It seems to me that the minimal action he can take is to go before GATT, having first informed this House that he will do so, and say to the other members of GATT, particularly to West Germany and Great Britain which have a high percentage of U.S. investment in them, "We in Canada are feeling the impact first. We are the major trading partner of the United States. You can imagine what will happen to your countries if the Americans are permitted to act on DISC for an indefinite period of time."

The argument that DISC is a clear and flagrant violation of GATT should be made at the GATT meeting. The minister should be attempting to mobilize support. I have mentioned West Germany and Great Britain. I could also include Japan. Surely these countries have an interest in stopping the Americans from getting away with DISC in the same way as they got away with the U.S. surcharge last August 15. Are we just to sit back and let American economic protectionist measures do severe harm to our economy as a whole? I suggest that we should not. I also suggest that the minister has failed in his responsibilities to the House by saying we really do not know what will happen yet. When we find out, Mr. Speaker, it may be too late. As the minister well knows, trade patterns and orders are set in motion many months in advance and in some cases years in advance. We may not know the full effects of DISC until 12 months, 18 months or 24 months from now. Therefore, the minister should act and not wait for what could be an economic disaster to confront us.

I wish now to deal specifically with the minister's comments on the automotive industry. They were indeed very revealing. He said he spoke to the heads of corporations. What did he learn, Mr. Speaker? He learned that the Ford Motor Company is exporting cars and trucks from the United States into Canada under DISC. But, Mr. Speaker, that is nothing new; we knew it before. The minister says he learned that General Motors and Chrysler Corporation have set up DISCs but they have not yet made clear what they intend to do with them. Again, this is not new information. We knew that. However, his conclusion from this—and I noted that he took great care with his words—was that in the short run the companies assured him that the effects on the Canadian automotive industry, as a result of the three firms that have set up DISCs, are not likely to be significant. With respect, Mr. Speaker, as one says around here, I suggest that the minister's comment itself is not very significant.

The minister knows very well that the model plans and production orders for next year's models are already locked in. The DISC legislation has had almost no time to have had an effect on the immediate or short-run plans of the automotive industry. Therefore, I assume he reaches the same conclusion I do, that the statement he made about the short-run effects of DISC on the automotive industry being insignificant is in itself rather insignificant. What we have to be concerned about with DISC in the automotive industry is not what is going to happen next year, but what will happen the year after and the year after that.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have any magical cure but it seems to me there is something we can do other than sit back and wait for events to happen. First, we must make it abundantly clear that the DISC legislation is a 100 per cent violation of the auto pact. There can be no question about that, and the minister knows it.

Mr. Pepin: I said so ten times.

Mr. Broadbent: I recognize that the minister has made that point a number of times, but I also recognize that neither he nor his government has done anything about it. Recognition of the fact, and changing the fact, are two different matters. What has to be done is that the government must not only maintain the production safeguards in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, but also insist that the current levels of guarantees be strictly enforced. This would mean that the companies within the present framework of the pact could only act under DISC provisions within very severe limits because of the provisions in the pact going back to 1964 levels of production. Above and beyond that we should have the safeguard requirements in the pact improved so that Canadians will be entitled to produce North American automotive products equal to the dollar value of the total North American market that they consume. That seems to me to be the guts of the issue.

• (2150)

As the minister knows, at the present time in Canada we are consuming about 8 per cent of the total North American output of automotive products but we are producing only about 6.5 per cent. If we made an issue of this, and that means that the minister made an issue of it instead of sitting back and waiting to see what the Americans are doing, if he would make a few speeches in Canada and if he would go to Washington and say that we Canadians have a right, not to produce more than we can consume in this industry but we have a right at least to produce what we can consume in dollar value—if that were written into the pact and adhered to, it would provide an effective protection against DISC in the automotive industry.

Related to that, of course, is the point that the American government should have exempted the auto industry from the DISC legislation in the first place if it was going to be at all consistent with international law. Again, the minister has said that he pointed this out to the appropriate American officials. But has he made a political issue of it, Mr. Speaker? Surely that is what counts in this country or in any democratic society. To go and speak quietly to some political opponent, whether in your own country or another, has no significant impact. I submit that if the man you are speaking to feels strongly about what he is doing, and if you do not make it a public issue and attempt to mobilize public support on your side, then he can smile and tell you to go to hell, if you will excuse the phrase, Mr. Speaker.

I suggest that is exactly what Mr. Connally and the American government in its trade relationships, with the United States automotive industry and DISC in general, is saying to our country. They are saying, "We will be quite content if the Canadians come to Washington and practice quiet diplomacy"—but unless the Canadian government tells the Canadian people very vigorously what the American government is doing to this industry, then of course the Americans will not change. To get a change the government, in this case the responsible minister, must try to mobilize Canadian public opinion on its side. If the minister did that, we might make a breakthrough in Washington; but as long as he sits back and hopes that the Americans will not be tough on us we will continue to get the short end of the stick. I submit the Canadian people deserve better than that.

Mr. Blair: Tell us what the UAW is doing.

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. fathead wants to know what the UAW is doing. In the United States it is the only major union that has opposed protectionist legislation coming out of the United States. It is the only major union that has supported the auto pact and has supported the Canadian union workers. If the hon. member has a second question, I will be glad to deal with it later.

I should like now to come to the question of auto prices. I must say I was dismayed, and I noticed the minister looked at little dismayed when he was speaking about this issue. I am sure he realized that the case he was presenting was not the most persuasive. It included items that he has brought forward during the question period in the last two months. Nothing new was provided in his speech. Perhaps he is in a difficult position. I think he has to admit that the auto companies in Canada are making monopolistic profits out of all proportion to what they are entitled to in terms of market price. He quoted the prices from 1965 to 1970 and pointed out that up to 1970 they had continued to go down. There is still a big gap and for some reason, the logic of which escapes me, he says the change in value of the Canadian dollar must have had some bearing in leading to the current result which is a 10 per cent difference in price. We had gone down to about 3½ per cent difference in 1970 and now at the factory list price we have about a 10 per cent difference!

The minister says that this must be due primarily to the change in the level of the Canadian dollar. I do not see that. If anything, it seems to me—I stand to be corrected—that the changing position of our dollar should have helped us because we buy more parts in the United States. Our auto assembly plants buy more parts in the United States than they buy here. That means, if our dollar has gone up in value, that the purchase of parts is relatively cheaper when buying from the United States. That should mean that the production costs of automobiles in Canada should have gone down, since the value of our dollar has gone up. Therefore, the improved position of the Canadian dollar should have meant a further and more significant drop in the price of automobiles.

I should like to put on the record some figures from a carefully documented article which appeared in the Globe and Mail on Wednesday, April 26, in regard to four medium-sized North American automobiles. For a Chevelle we paid $275 more in Canada for the same car that was produced in Canada and sent to the United States; for a Ford Torino we paid $300 more.

Mr. Pepin: How much of that is sales tax?

Mr. Broadbent: That is after all those differences are allowed, sales tax and other like things. We paid $325 more for the Satellite, and for the Matador we paid $325 more. The point is that in 1965 there was an economic reason for us to pay more for cars. We had inefficient assembly plants and we were producing perhaps 14 models in one plant instead on one or two. Now the Canadian assembly plants are the most efficient in North America, and therefore Canadians should be paying less for their automobile, at factory list prices, than the United States. This minister, as the man responsible for the auto pact, has a basic obligation to the consumer in Canada to do something about that.

I suggest that he should go to the corporations before the fall of next year and tell them to get their prices in line. He could make it very clear that he would take some kind of retaliatory action. For example, he might offer to reduce the federal sales tax by 6 per cent if the companies would pass that on to the consumer, plus reducing their price by a further 6 per cent. That would mean a total of 12 per cent. He might tell them that if they do not do this by fall, the government will take all the tariffs off imported automobiles.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that there is no economic justification for the difference in prices now. The minister has done nothing to clarify this issue tonight. The disparity remains. I submit that if we had equality in price, the consumer in Canada would get justice, and Canadian workers would get justice, because Canadians would buy more Canadian-produced automobiles and fewer foreign ones. That would mean more jobs for Canadians. The minister has failed completely in this area.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. We have listened to the diatribe by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent)—

Mr. Forrestall: Sit down.

Mr. Blair: I would like to ask him to show us where and when the head office of the United Auto Workers of America have said things in favour of the Canadian interest in the auto pact?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. This is a question, not a point of order.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REASON FOR DROP IN RESERVE FORCES STRENGTH—STEPS TO REVERSE TREND

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, the question I refer to this evening arises out of one put to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson). I asked specifically whether, in light of the alarming 22 per cent drop in Canada's armed forces reserves, the minister had taken steps to identify the cause of this decrease as well as steps to reverse the trend. We may learn if he has been able to identify the reason.

After Mr. Speaker intervened, the minister said that he had answered the question when he appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. He was referring to the committee meeting of Thursday, April 27. I asked the question because of the minister's response to a question asked by a colleague to my left, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland).

In view of the concern expressed by at least one member of the House with respect to the downgrading of the reserves in the Canadian armed forces, the minister's response before the committee was, to say the least, unintelligent. Not having fully grasped the meaning of the briefings which I am sure were given to him and which I am absolutely sure were accurate, the minister, obviously aware of his own intellectual capacity for understanding said as reported at page 12 of issue No. 11 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence:

> Actually if one takes the authorized ceilings as determined by my predecessor, Mr. Cadieux—

Actually, Mr. Cadieux is the predecessor once removed of the present minister. He is a most intelligent gentleman and if he were still minister of national defence he would show care and concern with respect to members of the Canadian armed forces. In any event, the reference by the minister before the committee was based upon estimates presented by Mr. Cadieux when he was minister of national defence. That hon. gentleman now is ambassador to France, I believe. To continue, Mr. Speaker, the minister reported as follows:

—the total was 23,200 and the actual number on strength at August 1971 was 20,950 which is 2,250 under the authorized strength.

It was the last figure, Mr. Speaker, based on an estimate given in 1969, that gave rise to my question. There are a number of questions that I should like to have answered. First, has the minister been fully advised by his professional staff why the reserve forces of the Canadian armed forces are alarmingly below a strength that is even minimally acceptable? Despite what the minister may have said, statistics show that to date there has been an alarming 22 per cent drop in the strength of the reserve forces. The reason for this drop concerns me, as does our action to stop it. For instance, why is there this alarming drop-out from our armed forces? Why are so many dropping out after the initial year of indoctrination? After serving their first year, many recruits do not even bother to resign; they simply do not come back for training. Why do they stay home?

I suggest that there are many reasons, one being the inadequacy of support from the regular forces brought about by a desire on the part of forces personnel, understandably, in view of the lack of money and lack of manpower, not to detail officers and senior NCOs to reserve units for training purposes. Another reason involves lack of funds. Also, because of our inability to transfer officers and NCOs to reserve units it is difficult to give those units the level of training that is absolutely necessary if we are to give the permanent personnel of the Canadian armed forces the sort of backing that is necessary. The raison d'être, if you will, for our reserve forces is that they are able to provide backing for our regular Canadian armed forces.

These are the questions we want answered. Has the minister identified the problems? What does he intend to do about them? Is there an adequate advertising program? Is there an adequate integrated training program carried out with the assistance of members of the regular forces? Do the reservists have access to a level of training which is normally available at officer and NCO level in the regular forces? All these questions must be answered if we are to identify the reasons for the alarming decline to which I have called attention. I hope the distinguished parliamentary secretary will give me some answers this evening.

Mr. J.-R. Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): May I say, in reply to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), that there is little I can add to what the minister told the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on April 27, two weeks ago, when responding to a question based on a newspaper article concerning the reserve forces.

Mr. Forrestall: He was responding to Doug Rowland's question.

Mr. Comtois: To say the least, the article was rather misleading in its use of statistics and in the conclusions which were reached. It is alleged that the reserve force dropped by some 22 per cent in two years. In December, 1969, the then minister of national defence announced a change in the authorized ceiling for the reserves to 23,200, this figure to include the militia, naval and air reserves. As of August, 1971, total reserve force strength was 20,950.

Two weeks ago the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson) advised the committee that the department was examining the question of the reserve forces and was developing plans concerning such matters as equipment, uniforms, training and pay.

Mr. Forrestall: Pay is important.

Mr. Comtois: As the hon. member knows, elements of the militia were training a few weeks ago with the Canadian airborne regiment in Jamaica.

Mr. Forrestall: Sixty out of 22,000.

Mr. Comtois: He will be interested to learn, also, that some 500 militiamen from across Canada will be training in Europe with the 4th Canadian mechanized battle group this summer. The first elements of this group will be departing for Europe in a week's time. Finally, it is planned that the deputy chief of operations and reserves will be appearing before the committee on May 30 to assist members in dealing with the subject of the reserve forces. Any questions of detail will be answered at that time.

HOUSING—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR HOUSING FOR INDIANS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, some two weeks ago I directed the following question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien):

Bearing in mind the interest taken in low-income groups as far as housing is concerned—

I believe there had been a good deal of propaganda in connection with the government's interest in low-income housing development.

—I should like to ask the member of the government who is replying for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether it is intended to increase government assistance toward the funding of housing for Indians. I ask this question in the light of the article by Mr. Stan Bailey in the Globe and Mail last Saturday calling attention to the frustratingly limited resources available for Indian housing at the moment.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who responded on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who was absent at that time, said he would ask the minister to look into it. I have been waiting almost a month and have not had a response from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since there has been no reply from the minister, whom I feel should be titled perhaps minister of Indian development and northern affairs, I raise the question again tonight.

I believe that of all the low-income groups in Canada, the Indians and Métis are among the lowest. However, I was appalled by the story that appeared in the Globe and Mail for April 24 last under the byline of Canadian Press. It was headlined, "Indians told to look elsewhere for funds", and datelined Sudbury, Ontario. I quote briefly from the article:

A spokesman from the federal department of Indian affairs told delegates to an Indian conference here they should look elsewhere for housing funds and not rely solely on the department.

Stan Bailey, housing finance and winter works programs liaison officer for the department, told representatives from 24 reserves the department has "frustratingly limited" resources.

Mr. Bailey was addressing 40 representatives of reserves in the Robinson-Huron treaty area who met here during the weekend.

He said the department has just over $3 million to spend this year on new Indian housing projects throughout the province. He was responding to Indian chiefs who complained of inadequate housing, a lack of public financing for housing and a large backlog of housing construction requests.

The article goes on, but I do not have the time to quote from it at length, in addition to which quoting from newspaper articles is a dull business anyway. I am interested in what might be done about this question. If Indian affairs does not have the necessary funding, why is it necessary to depend entirely on Indian affairs for this amount of housing assistance for our native people? It seems to me that the very fact we have an Indian affairs department at all tends to set the native people apart. They are people and they are Canadians, and I do not see any real reason for not financing their housing needs through CMHC, as well perhaps as other needs such as health care.

Section 15 has been used extensively throughout Canada. It provides loans up to 95 per cent for housing for other Canadians. These loans are provided to non-profit societies, old age pensioner groups, service club sponsored groups and Legion sponsored groups. Certainly our Indian and Métis groups and associations qualify as non-profit societies. I suggest to the minister that he urge the government, in caucus if necessary, to let our native peoples participate in CMHC loans and amend section 15 so that loans up to 100 per cent of project cost could be made to them, making the federal contribution in cash up to 10 per cent of project cost, thus matching the provinces.

From time to time I attend the opening of large, senior citizen high-rise developments to which there is usually a triple contribution, even a quadruple contribution—the municipality, perhaps a service club, the federal government and the provincial government. Invariably I am embarrassed by the total grant provided by the provincial government and the loan, with up to 35 years to pay, provided by the federal government. The date of the loan is of significance. If you happen to have a loan dated four days before a neighbouring municipality's loan, the interest rate for which is half a per cent higher, this means an additional $10 a month rental of the suites. Therefore, I suggest it would be really worth while if 100 per cent loans could be provided, with 10 per cent in cash matching the provincial contribution, and that the loans be not only for senior citizen housing but housing that is desperately needed by native people.

Another suggestion I would make is that whether it be a grant or whether it be a loan, it is the people's money. Even if the loan is financed over 35 years, it will be Canadians who will repay the loan. Another suggestion of merit is to make subsidized interest rates available to substandard housing on reserves.

An hon. Member: And to replace the government.

Mr. Rose: We will have to wait a couple of weeks for that. We should make subsidized interest rates on substandard housing available on Indian reserves. Most provinces are willing to make direct grants to support this kind of project. Why not extend it to Indian reserves and co-operatives throughout the country?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Buchanan).

Mr. Rose: I have not finished, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, yes, you have.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has for some time now been taking various steps to increase government assistance toward the funding of housing for Indians. During the fiscal year 1972-73, over $23 million will be spent on Indian housing, improvements and services. Over 12,000 houses have been built since 1965-66 when the Indian housing program was begun, and over 2,000 houses are expected to be built in 1972-73. During the past year a number of Indian band councils approached the department regarding guarantees by the minister in respect of loans for housing projects. When such proposals are viable, the minister's guarantee is given.

In 1971, for example, one Indian band obtained a loan of $194,000 from CMHC, repayment of which was guaranteed by the minister. Rents will be charged by the housing committee on a graduated rent to income scale. The units will be fully equipped and services will be provided. As the annual operating, maintenance and amortization costs will substantially exceed the amount the housing committee expects to recover from rental charges, the minister has agreed to pay the annual shortfall.

Officers of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are currently negotiating with officers of CMHC in an effort to work out ways and means whereby borrowing arrangements for construction of houses on Indian reserves may be of greater assistance to Indian people. One of the objectives of these negotiations is an arrangement whereby Indian borrowers in the low income brackets would be entitled to lower interest rates.

The department also administers an off-reserve housing program whereby Indian people can obtain from the department second mortgage loans, based on the amounts of their income, and first mortgage loans from CMHC or approved lenders. If the first mortgage instalments are paid regularly, second mortgage payments are forgiven at the rate of 10 per cent per year over a 10-year period. It is my understanding that in a number of provinces reservations are using the $8,000 per unit allocation they receive as the down payment and getting the balance from the CMHC, and thus are able to build substantially more homes than they would with the basic $8,000 per year grant they are getting.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

GRAIN—WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY—ACTION TO INCREASE PRICES TO FARMERS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my comments are related to a question I asked of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) a few days ago and the fact that the final realized price to the Canadian farmer for wheat, oats and barley has been the lowest in the past ten years. I have before me the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board for 1970-71. On page 18 appears a schedule of Canadian Wheat Board payments for No. 1 Northern wheat. It shows that in 1970-71 the price was $1.67 per bushel, the lowest in the past 12 years. The next lowest was in 1955-56. At that time the price was $1.58 a bushel.

• (2220)

With the government which came into power at that time, the price slowly climbed to a maximum of $1.97 at the time the government was turned out. Since then there has been a little fluctuation at about that level, and then a general decline to the present level. For oats, the final realized price per bushel was 60 cents. That is definitely the lowest price since the 1959-60 crop year and probably the lowest for the previous ten-year period although I do not have the figures to justify such a statement. For barley in the crop year 1970-71, the final realized price was $1.01 per bushel. The only time it was lower in the past ten years was in the crop year 1969-70.

I wish to bring these figures to the attention of the House and the minister because the minister has been running around the country spraining his wrist through patting himself on the back for doing such a tremendous job for the western farmers in selling wheat.

Mr. Pepin: And the farmers have been patting him on the back.

Mr. Yewchuk: They have not, because they have been starving.

Mr. Pepin: They recognize value.

Mr. Yewchuk: I recognize value when I see it, and I have not seen value in the grain market in the past couple of years. Another matter I want to mention is the volume sold in the past ten years. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) seems to imply that the volume of sales has been tremendous. I want to point out that the highest volume of wheat exported from Canada was in 1963 at the termination of the Conservative rule. At that time it was 594.5 million bushels. The highest it has been since that time was in 1966. It has been fluctuating, with a steady decline until the 1970-71 crop year when the volume was 435 million bushels, which is still nowhere near the maximum figure established in 1963 after the efforts of the government of the party to which I belong.

I wish to bring these points to the attention of the House because the farmer in the west, as well as in the east and in the central part of the country, is faced with ever increasing costs of production and an ever decreasing gross return as well as net return on his production.

This annual report also shows that the farmer has tried to compensate by increasing the number of acres on the farm and also by increasing very significantly the productivity of those acres. In other words, the farmer has made his operation more efficient. However, the net result is still an ever declining net income when his costs are paid at the end of the year. The only significant response from the government to this problem has been to encourage the removal of the farmer from the farm. What better way is there to try to do something about the continual problem than to destroy the farm completely and remove the man from the land so that you do not have to worry about his problems? This is what has been happening.

I could cite an area in my constituency covering a radius of 100 or 150 miles in which only six years ago there were 800 farms, while there are now only 400 farms in the area. What is happening? It is impossible to continue farming under the policies of this government. The farmers are being forced to leave the land and go to other places in order to try to find jobs, new housing and in some cases to re-educate themselves. This creates a host of new problems for a family, problems which sometimes are difficult to overcome.

I think we can be quite critical of this government, with some justification, because they have failed in two spheres. They have failed to do anything about the cost of production; in other words, they have failed to do anything to bring down the cost of machinery and the cost of its operation. Even though the Barber commission made some fairly good recommendations, none of them were implemented and the cost of the overhead to the farmer continues to climb.

The other aspect that was not considered was an increase in the price a farmer receives for his products. If we look at the cost per bushel which farmers receive in the United States, France, the European Common Market and other countries, we see that it hovers pretty close to $3 a bushel. I know that the parliamentary secretary will say that the two-price system is in effect. That is fine, but it applies only to about one-quarter of the production of Canadian wheat and it does not have the effect, in the long-term, for which we are looking.

I hope the parliamentary secretary does not dwell too long on the two-price system, and I hope to hear him say what will be done to increase the net income to the farmer.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in the addenda to the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board for the 1970-71 crop year there are a number of statistical tables, three of which set out the payments to producers for wheat, oats and barley, showing such payments in the case of wheat for the past 22 crop years. The average final payment for wheat in the 1970-71 crop year is by no means the lowest final payment in the last ten to 20 years.

The 1970-71 oats pool account has not yet been closed, so that it is not possible to make a comparison in this case. While the 1970-71 barley pool account had a deficit, it should be noted that there was an adjustment payment of 10 cents per bushel made by the federal government additional to the initial payment announced by the government for that crop year. The government has announced an increase in the level of initial payments on barley for the 1971-72 crop year.

It should also be noted that the government has introduced a two-price wheat program payment under which payments amounting to approximately $57 million have already gone out to grain producers in western Canada and the balance of which will be distributed to other wheat producers in the near future. The government is most concerned with shielding producers from the fluctuations which occur from time to time in the marketplace. It has already expressed its intent to develop the grain receipts stabilization plan which would take account of the downward swing in prices which occur in periods of world oversupply. Such a scheme offers the best protection to producers against depressed prices.

Additionally, the government is keen to achieve co-operation in international grain marketing in order to effect a level of prices which reflects a fair return to producers. Again, the government has established a market development fund of up to $10 million, the major portion of which will be directed toward the expansion of markets for Canadian grain. Finally—and I do not want to enter into an argument with my hon. friend—grain exports were at a record level for the 1970-71 crop year and there is every indication that this level will be exceeded for the current crop year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The motion before the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF COUNTERVAILING DUTY ON MICHELIN TIRES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. This motion arises out of the revelation yesterday that the United States government is planning to apply countervailing duties against tires exported to the United States by the Michelin Tire Company of Canada. Such action could lead not only to a further major disruption of the Canadian tire industry in central Canada by causing Michelin to dump all their tires on the domestic market but, beyond that, to the complete undermining of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion's programs in eastern Canada and elsewhere, whose success is largely dependent on the availability of the U.S. export market.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assume the hon. member will now indicate what the motion is that he proposes for consideration by the House.

Mr. Broadbent: I will do so right now, Mr. Speaker. I was just coming to the motion.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That at the next sitting of this House the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion make a statement on motions which will indicate what the government intends to do to cope with the very serious situation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 it requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity; therefore the motion cannot be put.

OIL

ISSUANCE OF PERMIT BY UNITED STATES FOR ALASKA PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move the following motion under the terms of Standing Order 43:

In view of U.S. Interior Secretary Morton's decision to permit construction of an oil pipeline in Alaska to carry oil to giant tankers for shipment along the coast of British Columbia involving inevitable spillage of oil and the desecration of our western waters and beaches, that this House urge the Prime Minister to make direct and immediate representations to the President of the United States urging a reconsideration of the decision to permit pipeline construction.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF TAPS TANKER ROUTE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I seek consent to move a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), arising out of the decision of the United States Department of the Interior to grant a licence to construct a pipeline in Alaska and, consequential upon that, to move oil by tanker down the west coast. There is an urgent and pressing necessity for this country to attempt to determine, first, what the opinion of the public is and, hopefully finding it opposed to this route, to thus attempt to consolidate it. I would therefore move:

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be authorized immediately to travel to British Columbia for the purpose of hearing witnesses regarding the proposed oil tanker route from the State of Alaska to the State of Washington and that the necessary staff do accompany the said committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that the government has scuttled this proposal as well as the other one?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—DECISION OF GOVERNMENT TO ACCEPT CONSTRUCTION APPLICATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement made outside the House in another city by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that the government is ready at any time to accept applications for building pipelines from the Arctic down the Mackenzie Valley, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister when it became government policy to accept such applications at any time.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, there have been a series of studies of the ecological requirements. We have spent a great deal of money and a great deal of time as well as a great amount of human resources on such studies. We have come to the conclusion that at the present time these studies have proceeded to the point where we are prepared to extend an invitation to corporations or government agencies to build a pipeline in that area on the basis that we can thereafter establish the necessary requirements in respect of the ecological necessities based upon the studies we already have.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the Acting Prime Minister when the government reached the decision that the ecological studies have proceeded far enough that the government is now prepared to receive such applications in view of the repeated statement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in the House that the government expected to be in a position to receive such applications by the end of the year?

Mr. Laing: I think the Minister of the Environment might answer this question more capably than I.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Or any other question.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): As the hon. member knows, we do have a three-year study under way costing approximately $13 million—

Mr. Lewis: $15 million.

Mr. Davis: —which began 18 months ago. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said, we believe that by this fall we will have enough background information to prepare ecological maps for the north. We will not have all the information we need by this fall but we think we will have sufficient information to reach definitive conclusions as to pipeline routing in 1973. Meanwhile, of course, the oil and gas companies are themselves collecting a great deal of biological and other information which they will include in their submissions when they apply to the National Energy Board.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could explain to the House how it is that the new position taken by the government of Canada, of which we heard for the first time yesterday, that it is now prepared to receive applications for an oil line down the Mackenzie Valley has only been announced after the United States announced that it is going to authorize construction of the Alaska pipeline involving shipment down the west coast. Would the minister try to give some explanation in reply to that question?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree that the open invitation was extended only after the announcement of Mr. Morton.

Mr. Stanfield: That was the first time we heard of the policy.

Mr. Laing: Included in the letter which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wrote to Mr. Morton was an invitation, because he said there should be no reason why regulatory and governmental considerations could not be given in an expeditious manner commencing with an application filed by the end of this year.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, by the end of this year.

Mr. Laing: This is indicative and confirms what I have been saying, that the studies we have undertaken thus far indicate to us the requirements that we are going to make when an application is made.

Mr. Stanfield: Tell that to the marines!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is obviously debate at this point. The hon. member for Skeena on a supplementary.

PROPOSED TAPS TANKER ROUTE—ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS OF PAISH STUDY RESPECTING POSSIBLE OIL SPILLS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. Inasmuch as it appears that the United States Department of the Interior has determined that it is favourable to the Alaska pipeline and the tanker route down the west coast and that this route is the one that will be used, can the Minister of the Environment say what steps the government is taking, and when, to put into effect the recommendations of the Howard Paish and Associates study, released by the minister a few days ago, which relate to protecting us from oil spills that might take place?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): The study to which the hon. member refers makes explicit the threat to Canada of large tankers moving into the inland sea between Vancouver Island and the mainland. We have been working closely with the Department of Transport and with our opposite numbers in the United States to endeavour to establish a scheme to ensure safety of navigation and to deal with oil spills. At the same time we do not want to appear to accept the inevitability of tankers moving into the Puget Sound area. We are determined that this not be the case.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The minister very adroitly evaded the question. I asked him what steps he is taking to prepare for putting into effect the recommendations of that particular study? Are we making any plans internally within the structure of the Canadian government, or is everything going to depend on what decisions are reached in conjunction with the United States?

Mr. Davis: We have our own plans and, as the hon. member knows, we have what might be called a crisis management organization in the Department of the Environment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: There is lots of room for that.

Mr. Fairweather: Have you got one for the government?

Mr. Davis: In other words, we are co-ordinating not only the studies of a preventive nature but also with respect to possible oil spills in the Puget Sound area. But as I said before, Mr. Speaker, we do not want to accept the idea or give an indication that we accept the idea that tankers will be coming into that area.

• (1120)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we really are getting into a debate on this subject. We might return to the matter in a short while. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR LIST OF AMERICAN COMPANIES MAKING USE THEREOF

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce some questions arising out of the statement he made yesterday that approximately 1,500 United States companies have registered under DISC. During the statement he mentioned only three, namely, Ford, General Motors and Chrysler, whose names had already appeared in the press. Would he inform the House whether he has information about the names of other U.S. firms which have registered under DISC, that is, of the 1,500 he mentioned yesterday and, if so, would he undertake to table a list of the names of such firms?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, we have other names of United States companies that are establishing DISC companies at this time. We get this information sometimes through Canadian subsidiaries of these U.S. companies. As I reported already to the House, we are trying to devise a system by which we would ask for identification of these companies when they export goods to Canada. I will look into the suggestion made by the hon. member as to the publication of the information we have.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would the minister inform the House what it is that he has to look into? If he has names, as he has said he has, would he tell the House why he could not directly undertake to give that information to members of parliament and to the people of Canada?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, to be frank, the United States government does not appear to be very keen to publish the names of these companies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why?

Mr. Pepin: I prefaced my answer by saying, to be absolutely frank on the subject—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why are you so considerate of them?

Mr. Pepin: Second, Mr. Speaker, the information that we get is only hearsay some of the time. As I indicated yesterday, in analysing the situation with respect to U.S. automobile companies, there is a substantial margin of nuances in the different cases. You have companies, as I indicated yesterday, that have formed DISC's and are using them. Others have formed DISC's but do not know exactly what they are going to do, and there are others that have not applied at all. I would be afraid of providing inadequate information.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to do a responsible job. If hon. members on the other side would like to be irresponsible, that is their choice.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the minister that it is not responsible to keep parliament and the people of Canada in the dark.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: That is cowardice rather than responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that he was recognized for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that this development in the DISC program holds out a very serious threat to the jobs of Canadian workers and to production in many areas in this country—electrical, petrochemical and others—what steps is the government taking now to obtain the necessary information both from Canadian companies that are subsidiaries of U.S. companies and from the United States department itself? Surely Canada is entitled to know who is going to cut its throat.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question has developed into an argument, but perhaps we might allow the minister to reply to that part of the hon. member's statement which was a question.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, when I hear my friends of the NDP moralizing, I always think of that man in the Bible who said "I thank God that I am not like other men".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not care what part of the Bible the minister cites or quotes from but he might also read Shakespeare and learn that the evil that men do lives after them except that it is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a point of order, perhaps he might indicate what it is. We are obviously going nowhere fast.

Mr. Lewis: What I want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, is that when we ask questions of the minister he can make his childish political cracks if he likes—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Lewis: —but he ought also to try to answer questions if, as the minister says so self-righteously, he is responsible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River.

ELECTIONS

REQUEST THAT PROPOSED BILL ON EXPENSES BE SUPPLIED TO MEMBERS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister or the acting government House leader. In light of the fact that the Prime Minister yesterday deliberately blurted out details of a bill which has just been approved in cabinet with regard to election expenses, can the Acting Prime Minister or the acting government House leader indicate when parliament will be allowed to see that bill? In view of the fact the Prime Minister said not long ago that the bill would not be presented because it would take too long to put through at this session, can any indication be given to the House of how much time the government intends to devote to the passage of this bill?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister made note last night, I think, in a speech to a group of people that it was the intention of the government to bring forward a bill dealing with election expenses. He gave no details of any kind. I would expect that the bill would be presented to the House some time next week.

Mr. Baldwin: Could the Acting Prime Minister find out and let the House know soon how long it is expected it will take to pass this bill in light of the Prime Minister's statement and whether it is going to take priority over the legislation dealing with foreign investment?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I would think that the length of time taken by the bill would depend upon the people who sit on the opposite side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize that there are supplementaries to the previous question. I was under the impression that the hon. member for Peace River was rising on a supplementary. Before returning to the previous subject the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Compton.

TRADE

VISIT OF JAPANESE INDUSTRIALISTS—ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN BUSINESSMEN IN MAKING CONTACT

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since a group of Japanese are presently visiting Canadian cities to buy Canadian products or to study the possibility of associating with Canadian firms and develop products for markets, does the minister intend to resort to publicity to enable Canadian businessmen to meet these Japanese industrialists?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the executives of three important Japanese firms have been touring Canada and met industrialists with whom they hope to do business. I do not think that people in general are interested in meeting them but should there be any businessmen who have not yet been contacted they only have to advise my department and we will do our utmost to accommodate them. In any case, this is what is being done at the present time.

ALLEGED LACK OF AGGRESSIVENESS IN MAKING SALES IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA—ACTION TO RECTIFY

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the public criticism by Czech officials of our lack of sales aggressiveness as a nation in their country. Can the minister indicate whether there have been similar criticisms from other nations and whether the department is taking immediate steps to rectify this very serious situation?

• (1130)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, you will never achieve perfection when it comes to eagerness in promotion. That kind of remark is often made and I have made some observations myself in the same vein. With respect to Czechoslovakia—I take it the hon. member is asking about Czechoslovakia—70 per cent of the trade of that country is with other socialist countries. The five-year plan anticipates that a little less than 50 per cent will be in that direction, so obviously the room for western industrial countries is limited. We are doing our best to promote Canadian goods there, especially with the new trade promotion measures announced recently. If the hon. member has any suggestions I will be delighted to look at them.

Mr. Danforth: As it is government policy to send representations and demonstrations to trade fairs and as Czechoslovakia has indicated that it would welcome such a presentation by Canadian industry in Czechoslovakia, will consideration be given to putting Czechoslovakia on the list?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, each year we participate in a number of fairs which we select on the basis of the benefits they could bring to Canada. In the last few weeks I have announced a new program, as the hon. member knows under which my department will pay 50 per cent of the costs of single companies which participate in fairs in which the Canadian government does not take part. This should encourage those companies which are interested in going to specialized fairs.

EXPLOSIVES ACT

SUGGEST DEFERRAL OF AMENDING BILL UNTIL NEXT SESSION IN LIGHT OF OPPOSITION BY CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who ought to be present, according to the roster, but is absent except in spirit. In view of the legislative program in general now before the House and the strong opposition that has been voiced by organizations such as the Winnipeg Game and Fish Association and the Manitoba Wildlife Association, as well as by Mr. Murray McMaster, president of the 16,000 member Saskatchewan Wildlife Federation to Bill C-7 amending the Explosives Act, would the Acting Prime Minister suggest to the minister that, in view of the strong opposition of at least 35,000 sportsmen on the Prairies to this bill which they would consider to be an infringement upon their rights as free citizens and sportsmen, this bill might be put off until the next session of a new parliament.

Mr.Speaker: Order, please. The Acting Prime Minister may, of course, reply to the question, but I take the liberty of bringing to the attention of the right hon. member and of hon. members that the question deals, of course, with a bill now before the House which has received and is receiving consideration. This should not preclude the Acting Prime Minister from replying to the hon. gentleman's question.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the right hon. member has the capacity for making very impressive representations, and this one will be taken into account as well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I cannot pass that up without saying that the hon. gentleman has proven that he makes a very good Acting Prime Minister.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STEPS TO PROTECT THOMPSON AND FRASER RIVER VALLEYS FROM FLOOD THREAT

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the very serious threat of floods in the Fraser and Thompson River valleys—snowpacks indicate potentially worse floods than have occurred at any time since records have been kept—can the minister advise the House whether he is watching the situation and whether his department and/or other government departments are ready to take any necessary action?

Mr. Baldwin: Of course the government is ready. It will pass a bill.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that our water management people are keeping an eye on the situation and that we are in close contact with the provincial government. I might also add that the runoff situation is not necessarily as formidable as the hon. member has suggested. Much will depend on temperatures, winds, etc. over the next few weeks.

ADEQUACY OF FLOOD PREVENTION MEASURES IN LOWER FRASER RIVER VALLEY

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment. Can he say whether he is satisfied with flood prevention measures so far taken, particularly as they affect the lower part of the Fraser River and Fraser Valley?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows there is some procedural difficulty in a question merely asking a minister whether he is satisfied with the status of a situation. The minister will be allowed to reply, but I do not really think that this is a proper form of questioning.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are not entirely satisfied. There is a diking program under way which will not be completed for several years. Until it is complete we will not have an adequate insurance policy to cover flooding in the lower Fraser Valley. We are, however, working closely with the province. We have contacted the provincial authorities with regard to an imminent flood. Their answer really is: Don't call us; we will call you if we are in difficulty.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE DUMPING BY U.S. FIRM SELLING SALT IN CANADA

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Inasmuch as the Department of Supply and Services awarded a salt contract to an American firm in preference to awarding it to Canadian suppliers, and as the price lists of the American salt company which received the contract indicate that the company is offering salt for sale in Canada at prices which constitute dumping, will the minister cause an inquiry to be made into whether the said salt supplying company is guilty of dumping and whether the Department of Supply and Services purchased American salt in preference to Canadian salt at prices which constitute dumping?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have taken note of the hon. member's representation and will see that my officials have the matter he has raised looked into.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO GRANT TO PROJECT IN TOWN OF SIMCOE

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question ought to be directed to the Secretary of State but in his absence may I direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Will he be so kind as to investigate a grant of $7,765 under the Opportunities for Youth program to a project in the town of Simcoe? One of the objects of the project is the publishing of an underground newspaper, a copy of which I have here, and the language is such that it could not be read in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis: I will bet the Prime Minister read it.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I exclude such notable exceptions, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister to have this grant investigated. I have the particulars here but will not take the time of the House to put them on record.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will draw the hon. member's question to the attention of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Would the minister consult with the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Leger, with whom I have communicated this morning and who has some details on this matter? There is some urgency involved.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

WELFARE

VALIDITY OF POLL CONDUCTED BY "WELFARE SYSTEMS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS"

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. I apologize for not having given him notice of it. May I ask, is there any government organization called "Welfare Systems of the House of Commons" which claims to have a mandate to poll various people who are receiving welfare assistance? I ask this question in view of requests to my office regarding the validity of this so-called poll.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will understand that this does not fall under my jurisdiction, but I might say that personally I am not aware of any such organization.

[Mr. Thomson.]

Mr. McCutcheon: I wonder whether I could impose on the good offices of the minister and ask him to investigate this problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course that is a representation.

PUBLIC ORDER

DISTURBANCES IN QUEBEC—DISCUSSION RESPECTING INTERVENTION OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence.

Because of the rather special situation now prevailing in Quebec could the minister tell us if the Quebec government has contacted him or his government and if negotiations were entered into for the intervention of armed forces should this prove necessary?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, is the minister ready to co-operate with the Quebec Minister of Justice and give him the necessary assistance in due course?

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, before the government of Canada can use the armed forces there has to be a request from the province.

Mr. Peters: Do not use the War Measures Act again.

• (1140)

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether reinstatement of the War Measures Act in Quebec is being contemplated?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FISHERIES

FISHERIES COUNCIL RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL SECTION AND ON FISHING ZONES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the complex problems at present facing the fishing industry at the international level, is the minister giving any consideration to establishing as a priority item an international fisheries section within the department because of the increasing involvement of international laws and negotiations with the Canadian fishing industry, as recommended to him by the Fisheries Council of Canada?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I think the fishing industry recognizes that our approach to offshore problems on a wide front, including pollution and conservation of the living resources of the sea, is really paying off and that this is consistent with the recommendations of the Council. Fisheries matters cannot be separated from environmental matters.

Mr. Crouse: Will the minister be taking any action on the recommendation of the Fisheries Council of Canada that Canada formally withdraw recognition of jurisdiction of the International Commission for the North Atlantic Fisheries over exclusive Canadian fishing zones since ICNAF is setting quotas inside Canada's 12-mile limit?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be surprised if ICNAF had any authority in our own exclusive fishing zones. As the hon. member knows, these zones have been extended in recent years. In our international discussions we are concerned with catches outside our own exclusive fishing zones, outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence, for example.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for York South has a supplementary to the previous question. If not, the Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition and then the hon. member for York South.

OIL

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—DECISION OF GOVERNMENT TO ACCEPT CONSTRUCTION APPLICATIONS—SETTLEMENT OF LAND CLAIMS OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to question the Acting Prime Minister a little further with regard to the sudden about-face in connection with the pipeline in the north. Does the decision to accept applications mean that the government has decided there are no land claims of the native people that require settlement or does it mean they have been settled? I ask this question because when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was questioned as recently as May 1, he said: These questions are hypothetical; nor have we decided whether a pipeline will be built or not, but we certainly hope one will be built. Now that the government has decided to accept applications and has decided in principle that a pipeline will be built, can the Acting Prime Minister state what this indicates as far as native claims are concerned?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, an application is still an application. Also, we are dealing here with a corridor as outlined by the Prime Minister in his announcement in Edmonton. The corridor in that area is a very tiny fraction of the area in which the Indian and other native people are involved. I am told that in the case of TAPS in Alaska there are only 20 square miles involved. I would assume from that that there will not be more than 40 or 50 square miles involved in putting a corridor down the Mackenzie Valley. Until we get these things in proper perspective, it is a little out of the way to talk about the rights of people who are scattered throughout the entire area.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the minister reminds me of the girl who was only a little pregnant. I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the corridor spoken of by the Prime Minister runs from the Mackenzie River into Alaska.

Mr. Laing: Of course, Mr. Speaker, we have no right to talk about a corridor into Alaska.

Mr. Stanfield: That is right.

Mr. Laing: I find it difficult to answer this kind of question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the difficulty of the Acting Prime Minister or any member of the government answering questions in these circumstances, but I remind the Acting Prime Minister that the government has now decided to accept applications for a pipeline from Alaska.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the Leader of the Opposition would agree that this is debate. The Leader of the Opposition might ask a supplementary question, which would ease the task of the Chair.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would even like to ease the task of the government. Having reminded the Acting Prime Minister that the pipeline for which the government is seeking authorization not only runs up the Mackenzie River but across to Alaska, I now ask him whether that means the government has decided there are no significant Indian claims to land in that area or that any such claims have already been settled?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, one would have to know the geography of that area. There is a flat plain across the Arctic. If American oil were to come by way of the Mackenzie, it would come across that flat plain to the Yukon. The mountain range that would then be encompassed and dealt with would not be the Brooks range, but the British mountains in the territory of the Yukon.

Mr. Stanfield: You have all that information now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will have to recognize the hon. member for York South. I appreciate that this matter is important, but I am sure it will not be settled between now and the next few days. Supplementaries can be asked at the next sitting of the House. If there is time, I will return to the hon. member for Athabasca.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

U.S. IMPOSITION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTY ON MICHELIN TIRES ALLEGEDLY BECAUSE OF INCENTIVE GRANTS—REQUEST FOR FURTHER INFORMATION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of reports that the United States intends to impose countervailing duties against Michelin products destined for the United States in part, so the report indicates, because Michelin received grants under DREE, and in view of the fact the reports indicate that similar action is contemplated in Washington against products of other firms that have received or may receive grants under DREE, will the minister give the House any information he has on the subject and also indicate what steps, if any, the government is planning to take to deal with this rather serious threat to Canadian jobs and exports?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the subject is not new. It has been debated between Canadian and American representatives on a number of occasions in the past. We now have a new situation, notice of countervailing. As I said in the House yesterday, there is a period of 30 days after the notice is issued for representations to be made, and further representations will be made by the Canadian government to the United States government in this respect.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister whether his answer confirms the report that these countervailing measures by the United States are not only contemplated against Michelin products but also against the products of other firms receiving grants under DREE?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this is the first I have heard about countervailing against other companies. The subject in recent times has been Michelin. I assume I am now answering questions on behalf of the Minister of Finance who is responsible for tariff matters. I will bring the question to his attention. If he has heard of other companies against which action has been taken, I am sure he will want to inform the House.

HARBOURS

CHURCHILL—PROGRESS IN EXTENSION OF SHIPPING SEASON

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has any progress been made with regard to the possibility of extending the season in the port of Churchill so that additional shipping may be arranged out of that port? Also, can the minister indicate in what area, if any, progress has been made?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in three areas, I would suggest. First, we have established a port authority largely made up of local residents in Churchill to help us in the preparation of a plan which would involve the technical aspects, that is, dredging, icebreaking and the like. Second, we have our own study going on at the present time of the ice conditions, particularly at the mouth of the river. Third, and perhaps most importantly in terms of getting a short extension of the season which would nevertheless be important, is an invitation which has now been accepted to a key group of insurance underwriters from around the world to visit the area and see what conditions are like. That will be done this summer, as far as I know.

Mr. Korchinski: In light of the fact that studies were conducted three or four years ago which indicated there was a possibility, would the government be prepared, if the marine insurance companies are not willing to lower their insurance premium rates to extend the season, to put its money where its mouth is in order to prove that it is possible?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister might reply briefly to the question though it sounded more like debate to the Chair.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, it is more like putting its money where the mouth of the river is. The problem is not that simple. We are examining the possibility of working with insurance underwriters, and this is why they are going to the spot to see for themselves.

[Later:]

CHURCHILL—SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF EXTRA FREIGHT COST BY GOVERNMENT TO INCREASE SHIPMENTS FROM PORT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the extra cost of freight for charter parties through the Churchill port, has any consideration been given by the government to the suggestion, as I recall, by the Hudson Bay Route Association that the government of Canada absorb the extra cost of freight insurance that has to be paid on shipments through Churchill? If that could be done it would greatly increase the volume of shipments of wheat and other products through that port.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. member would realize that to give him as full an answer as his question deserves would take a lot of time. A short answer is yes, we have looked at this alternative but we are satisfied, and I think I can also satisfy the right hon. member, that the other two steps have to be taken as well, that is, insurance and the question of water depth.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As well?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, as well.

TRANSPORT

RAPESEED MEAL—ALLEGED FREIGHT RATE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WESTERN CRUSHERS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. It is a repeat of the question I put to him on Wednesday relating to discrimination in freight rates affecting the movement of rapeseed meal east and west in Canada. The minister said he would examine the matter and answer later.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I did. I understand that four appeals have been lodged under the appropriate procedures before the Canadian Transport Commission. If the hon. member is interested in the names, they are the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Agra Industries Limited, Co-op Vegetable Oils Ltd. and Western Canadian Seed Processors Limited—that is, western rapeseed crushers. These are all appeals under section 23 of the National Transportation Act. Hearings commenced on April 24 and are still proceeding.

ELECTIONS

IMPLEMENTATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS IN BILL TO BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I return to a matter raised by the hon. member for Peace River and ask the Acting Prime Minister whether or not the legislation that he said would be introduced some time next week concerning election expenses will be based on the recommendations in the report of the special committee on election expenses which submitted its report to the House on June 4 last year? If so, will the legislation include provision for some form of disclosure of contributions, as recommended by that committee?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that the question anticipates an order. If the Acting Prime Minister wishes to reply briefly to the question he will be allowed to do so, but I have serious doubts as to its procedural acceptability.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman would want to be kept in a state of anticipation of seeing the bill when it is printed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in light of what Your Honour says, with which I agree most thoroughly, there is some problem here because of the fact that the Prime Minister saw fit to disclose some of the provisions of that bill yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that we have reached the end of the question period. I understand the right hon. gentleman has a supplementary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the disclosure made outside the House, which of course is a contempt of parliament—

Mr. Benson: You did it all the time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It would not be a contempt to the former Minister of Finance because he was used to doing that sort of thing. However, I am speaking to the Acting Prime Minister now. Has the cabinet passed the necessary resolution in order to make possible the introduction of the legislation to which the Prime Minister referred?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, if we were on the benches opposite, as we were years ago—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Baldwin: You will be soon.

Mr. Laing: —I would get from the right hon. member the same kind of answer as I am going to give him. I have nothing to say.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That reply just shows how ridiculous was the statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ESCALATION OF PENSIONS, RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS, INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-207, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I might refer to the ruling that I indicated I would make when this matter was before the House on Wednesday last. At that time the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) proposed an amendment to the motion for second reading of Bill C-207, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act, in the following words:

> This House, deeply conscious of the need to increase the Old Age Security pension so as to reflect the full increase in the consumer price index since January 1, 1967, to date with adjustments to the guaranteed income supplement, is of the opinion that the government should consider the advisability of introducing appropriate amendments to effect such changes to the present limited terms of the bill.

At that time, as recorded at page 2154 of Hansard, the Chair indicated that he had certain misgivings about the form of the proposed amendment and suggested that the amendment did not appear to meet the requirements of a reasoned amendment, either in form or in purport. At page 527 of May's Seventeenth Edition three rules are set down concerning the categories or, better still, the forms of a reasoned amendment. The descriptions of the categories or forms of that kind of amendment are as follows:

(1) It may be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from , the principles, policy or provisions of the bill.

(2) It may express opinions as to any circumstances connected with the introduction or prosecution of the bill, or otherwise opposed to its progress.

(3) It may seek further information in relation to the bill by committees, commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence.

The learned author goes on to state:

Such amendments have tended in modern times to become rather stereotyped and are confined generally to the first two categories.

Although category (3), as described by the author, may have become obsolescent in the British House of Commons, a type of that category of amendment continues in our practice under the form of a motion to refer the subject matter of a bill to a committee. Citation 386 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition makes reference to that.

As stated on Wednesday last, and again in the description of reasoned amendments as found in May, the proposed amendment is not contrary to or opposed in any shape or form to the principle of Bill C-207, nor is it opposed to progress of the bill. It does seem to me that unless some of the conditions which I have outlined are met, the motion proposed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe cannot be deemed to be a reasoned amendment. I therefore regret that I cannot accept it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the first part of my speech on Bill C-207 at the second reading stage was interrupted by the six o'clock adjournment on Wednesday, I was commenting on the way in which the government is exploiting the plight of our senior citizens and at the same time playing fast and loose with the political process. I had intended to bring before the House a number of quotations from the record to show how often this government has said no to any increase in the basic amount of the pension, how often it has said no to putting the escalation on a basis equal to that of the actual increase in the cost of living, and how often it has said no to the restoration of the escalation to the basic amount of the pension. However, partly because both in this debate and in the debate on the budget other members are putting these items from the record on Hansard, and partly because there are other things I want to say, I am going to omit the extensive reading of the record that I had planned.

I would simply say that the last occasion, according to my research, when the minister was asked directly if the government was prepared to increase the basic amount of the old age pension was on Thursday, February 24, 1972, as recorded in Hansard at page 208. I had put the question to the minister, and Hansard records this reply:

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is no intention in this regard, but I would remind the hon. member that the last time we dealt with this matter, about a year ago, we brought in the second largest increase in Canadian history.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Forty-two cents.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

I may add that the last occasion when this House voted on the precise question of escalating pensions according to the actual rise in the cost of living was on Thursday, March 23, 1972, and, as other members have already pointed out, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and all the rest of the Liberals who were present voted against that proposition at that time. Now, just before an election, we have this conversion. We welcome it. Even though we may feel there is cynicism in it, we feel that the small benefits being provided in this legislation should get to the people concerned just as soon as possible. If the earliest that these benefits can be given to them is in the cheques they receive at the end of June, I trust the House will give this legislation speedy passage so that technicality can be achieved.

Actually, what flows from the criticisms we have been making of the government for its cynicism, and the way it is doing things on the eve of an election, is the simple fact that the escalation should never have been taken off the basic old age pension, that the escalation should have been put on a basis equal to the actual rise in the cost of living and that there should have been a substantial increase in the basic amount of the pension long ago.

I should now like to comment on some of the features of the legislation which is before us. In a number of instances, I shall be expressing my pleasure and approval. In other instances, I shall have to complain very strongly that the bill does not go far enough.

The first thing I want to say by way of approval concerns something that is not in this bill but is in the budget proposals, namely, the extra exemption to be allowed persons 65 years of age and over which is to be increased, effective January 1, 1972, to $1,000 a year. This is a welcome increase, but I still think that those who are asking for higher exemption levels for our senior citizens are on the right track, except that I would recommend very strongly that relief from taxation for senior citizens should be achieved not by the method of higher and higher exemption levels, but by the method of a tax credit. What is really required is an amendment to the income tax law which would provide that persons living on pensions shall pay no income tax if their incomes are below $3,000 single or $4,500 married. I use those figures because they are the figures a number of organizations have been presenting, and because I think they are very responsible. We welcome the slight improvement in this area, but let the government not think it has gone as far as it should.

The second thing I should like to say is that we welcome most strongly, and perhaps this is the feature of this bill which in terms of principle is most important, the breaking of that 2 per cent ceiling. For the past several years, it has been a crime the way in which we have given old age pensioners an increase of 2 per cent when the cost of living was going up 4 per cent or 5 per cent, so that they were actually worse off in the end. This change that has now been made is, in fact, long overdue, that is putting the escalation on a basis equal to the actual percentage increase in the cost of living. However, I am in full sympathy with those to my right who have been pressing the point that something should be done, and their amendment that was ruled out of order was to this effect, to make up for the short-fall our pensioners have suffered since the escalation provision was established. The government has introduced retroactivity in another area, and this is an area where retroactivity should have been applied. The best way to have made up the short-fall that our pensioners have suffered because of this limited 2 per cent escalation would have been to make a substantial increase in the basic amount of the pension itself. We are back to our contention that the basic $80 figure should now be a figure of $150 a month. It is also our view that it should be made available at age 60, as I have contended many times.

The other comment I wish to make about the escalation of the old age pension and all pensions is that some day we have to get to the point where escalation is related to something more than just the cost of living. It ought to be related to the rise in the standard of living, the rise in wage rates or the rise in the gross national product. When all you do is give pensioners an increase equal to the rise in the cost of living, you merely permit them to continue to purchase the same standard of living they were able to purchase when they retired. In the meantime, conditions improve, society becomes more affluent, the standard of living goes up and it is not humane, decent or civilized to say to our older people: You are not to share in the increased standard or the increased benefits you helped to make possible.

Let me say quite clearly that it is a welcome breakthrough to get beyond that 2 per cent ceiling and to get the escalation attached to the actual increase in the cost of living, but it is by no means the last word. What we have to get is an escalation that permits retired people not only to be able to keep up with the rising cost of living, but permits them to share in the rising standard of living which society produces, because when our retired people were working they helped to make that possible.

The next thing I should like to say is that we welcome very strongly the fact that the escalation provision is being restored to the basic pension, which is now $80 a month. There was no rhyme or reason whatsoever to the position the minister took in this House in December of 1970, when he took the escalation off that basic $80 figure. We are pleased it is being restored. We share the views being expressed pretty generally throughout the country that the figure of $2.88 which is all it amounts to this year, is very small. I said the other night that this change will not help the government win an election, but of course that is the reason they are going into retroactivity, because that will result in these people having six times $2.88 or $17.28 in their pockets at the end of June.

Even after we express our approval of the fact that escalation is being put back on the basic pension, let it be said as strongly as we can say it that this is not the answer to the adequacy of the basic pension. The reason $2.88 is not a sufficient increase is that $80 was not an adequate basic pension. An increase of 3.6 per cent would not be bad if the basic pension were already $150 a month. One of the pitfalls in this kind of thinking is that the government may believe it can say to the country that it has now solved this problem, has taken it out of the political arena, and has placed pensions on the basis of being increased year after year according to the rise in the cost of living.

There are two things wrong with that. One is that it does not relate to the standard but only to the cost of living. The other thing is that we are talking about escalating a basic rate which in itself is inadequate. This is not the answer to the organizations across Canada, to those of us in this House and to pensioners generally who call for a basic pension of not less than $150 a month.

There is a provision in this bill which is now before us to which reference was made in a question and answer the other day which we welcome, namely, amending the act to provide that persons who have qualified in Canada for the old age pension may, after age 65, go elsewhere and continue to draw their pension provided they have had a certain length of residence in Canada. The old rule was that such persons had to have lived in Canada for 25 years after age 21. According to this bill, that is being changed so such a person, over 65, can go elsewhere and draw the pension without having to return to this country, provided he has lived here for 20 years after age 18. This is a laudatory modification which some of us have been requesting for a long time. Indeed, we asked for this long before the hon. member who made the request the other day came here. We think it makes sense, particularly when there is a desire on the part of many people, for health or family reasons, to go to warmer climates or to the countries from which they came in the first place.

Even though he is going behind the curtain, the minister is still within the sound of my voice and I hope he is listening. When the minister was making this change why could he not also have made a change in the 40-year rule. I refer to the rule which makes it possible for a person to live in Canada for most of his life, then go elsewhere before age 65, apply for the pension from another part of the world and get the pension without coming back to this country provided he has resided 40 years in Canada after age 18. When this rule was brought in, many people did not obtain a pension until age 69 or 70, and the 40 years did not seem to be too long a period. However, now that pensions are payable universally at age 65 and the applicable period is from age 18 to age 65, which is 47 years, one must still have 40 years' residence in Canada.

What I think is particularly unfair in this regard is the situation which develops as between a husband and a wife. If the minister cannot find it possible to change the rule in its entirety, perhaps he could find it possible to change it in respect of husbands and wives. There might be a situation in which a husband and wife go to the United Kingdom or to some other country. The husband may be able to meet the 40-year rule when he reaches age 65, but the wife, because she is a few years younger, does not meet the rule and is unable to receive the pension. This produces a difficult marital situation. If the wife returns she has a pension, but if she stays with her husband she runs the risk of being a widow without a pension. I am not making up this situation. I am familiar with cases of this nature. It would seem to me at a time when the government is cutting five years off the 25-year rule it should also be cutting five years off the 40-year rule. I place this before the minister and hope he will give it consideration.

I notice that quite a change is being made in this bill in respect of the basis for the escalating of pensions. In particular, I am referring to the fact the Old Age Security Act used to provide that the pension index for the purpose of this act is the pension index spelled out in the Canada Pension Plan. That provision is being abolished. We are now to have a new pension index or formula for the Old Age Security Act. There are two differences. One of course is that in this act we will take a different 12-month period from that which is taken for the Canada Pension Plan. The other difference is that the Old Age Security Act does not apply the 2 per cent ceiling, while it is still being applied in the Canada Pension Plan. My plea is that the same thing that is being done in respect of old age security should be done in respect of the Canada Pension Plan. When people are retired and draw both the old age security and the Canada Pension Plan, the money comes to them in one cheque. I think it is a little ridiculous for these people to be given an escalation of that joint pension part of which will be escalated by 2 per cent on the basis of one formula and part of which will be escalated by 3.6 per cent or some other figure on the basis of another formula. If it is correct to remove the ceiling from the escalation with respect to the old age security, I suggest it is correct to do it in respect of the Canada Pension Plan. I hope this will be given favourable consideration at an early date. Mr. Speaker, I see my time is running out. I wonder if I might have just a few more minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there is consent, the hon. member may proceed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I have two more points. I shall just state them. I am now pleading for justice and fair play. I will say more on this matter at a later date, but I mention it now by way of a caveat. I am concerned about the position of war veterans under this legislation. Bill C-208, which we may be debating later this day, provides for the ceiling on the war veterans allowance to be increased only by the amount the allowance itself is escalated. This year that will be 3.6 per cent. In the case of a single veteran it could be $4.35 and in the case of a married veteran it could be $7.23. I suggest, despite the things I think about this government, that it cannot and will not leave it that way. It would be utterly unthinkable for those receiving the war veterans allowance as well as the guaranteed supplement not to get the full $15 that would be available under the Old Age Security Act amendments. I see some very significant heads being shaken over there. I am not going out on a limb. I am not making any assertion about this, except that Bill C-208 does not meet the problem.

It may well be that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) when he introduces that bill will tell us of plans of the government for an order in council to exempt this $15 in the same way it exempted the $2.70 which was available in the month of April. Now, I see a certain head going up and down, so I hope that is correct. I just want to plead that this be done. If it is not done, the desire some of us have for both these bills to receive speedy passage will be lessened a bit in respect of the other bill, not this one. It does not affect this one, but it is a serious matter in the bill respecting veterans. But we must see to it that the experience of the past, when the gap has been narrowed between what was available to veterans and what was available to civilians, should not be repeated in this case. The veteran should get the full advantage of the $15 increase in the supplement to the old age security pension as well as the full advantage of the 3.6 per cent increase he will get in his war veterans allowance.

• (1220)

I said I would not abuse the time that was given to me, therefore I must sit down. I will just close on this note. Welcoming as we do the improvements that are provided in this legislation, I want to make it extremely clear that the failure to raise substantially the basic amount makes this bill really inadequate. The time has come for the basic pension to be $150 a month, universally available to our people and available at age 60, and for that $150 a month pension to be escalated annually in accordance with the rise in the standard of living which is possible because of what our senior citizens have done for this country. That goal is still to be met. That goal will still be fought for by the pensioners themselves, by their organizations, and by many of us in the House of Commons. It is a goal which I believe we shall win, and I hope we shall win it soon. In the meantime, small as these improvements are, they must not be held back from our people a day longer than is necessary. Therefore, we hope that this legislation will soon be passed and enacted by parliament. Whether or not an election issue is involved in the consideration of this measure is beside the point. The point is that our older and retired people must get these increases right away. But I say to them: carry on. I also say that we shall carry on the battle for a really adequate pension system for all the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, as the leader of our party (Mr. Caouette) pointed out again yesterday, we are of course in favour of increasing the old age pensions, although we fail to understand why the government members voted against the Social Credit proposal to do so two years ago.

Still, we feel that this bill smells strongly of elections. It is too sudden. It suffers from weaknesses, omissions if not errors, which I shall point out. Of course, we are aware of the need to give senior citizens of 65 or more a decent living. In fact, thousands of arguments can be invoked to prove that those who have reached 65 have in fact earned the pensions they receive.

We therefore have no objections to that increase; on the contrary, we have been requesting it for a long time. But we do not agree with the government, in fact we say it is illogical when it refuses to fill the gap which occurs at one point in the life of the old couple when they reach age 55 or 60. That is why we have insisted time and time again on the possibility of granting a pension to the two spouses when one reaches 65, regardless of the other's age.

This seems so obvious to us that the fact that it is not taken into consideration strikes us as illogical. We need only look at the case of a couple who have both reached 65. Last year they received $255, compared with $260 this year; under this bill they will be getting $285.

Mr. Speaker, when both spouses are 65, when they live in their own home or apartment, $285 is a very reasonable amount.

But where there is lact of consistency and even of plain common sense is when one of them is 65 and the other 60, 62, 63 or 64, in which case only $150 is paid for both. Why assess the pension for one couple aged 65 at $285 and the pension for another couple, one of which is 65 and the other 64, at $150?

Mr. Speaker, it does not make sense. That is why we have brought the matter up so often, even submitting amendments to deal with it. We even at one time, proposed a motion which was debated in this House, but unfortunately defeated.

Mr. Speaker, we are not demanding anything fantastic or miraculous. What we are calling for is plain common sense. Someone could retort: Then it is up to provincial governments to look after those who have not reached the age of 65. Of course we agree with that.

But upon looking closely at the criteria applied, for instance in the province of Quebec, we find they are below decency level, they are actually not pensions, but pittances. And for two persons who have not reached age 65, the Quebec government through the Social Affairs Department grants on the average only $130 or $140. These are the criteria in Quebec.

Therefore, two persons of 64 receive presently from the Quebec Social Affairs Department about $135 or $140, and at 65, they will draw $285. This gap is tremendous; in fact, the amount is then doubled.

As representatives of the people, we are made aware every day of scores of casess involving people who have not enough money to pay for their food, electricity and telephone. They come and ask us to plead with welfare officials, asking them to improve their standards of living.

On June 16, 1971, I wrote to the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs, Mr. Claude Castonguay, a letter clearly showing the ambiguous and illogical situation which prevails presently. I quote:

Dear sir:

You are no doubt receiving numerous letters to protest against the changes made in your department last fall. All those who find their cheques reduced, sometimes cut out altogether, become angry, frustrated and sometimes more sick than they were before.

I also wish to protest. You will, however, allow me to do so in a positive and constructive way by offering one suggestion.

We are still in the same country, as far as I know, if on different sides of the Ottawa river. Why then not accept as a vital minimum what the federal government grants as old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement.

A married couple, aged 65, is entitled to $255 per month. That is at the present time a decent minimum. Your department allows about $130 to two persons under 65 and without any income. Values in Quebec are different from those in Ottawa.

This pruning game in which your regional offices are indulging aggravates the poor people on welfare, all the more so because they seem to be received off-handedly when they are not simply thrown out or, still, they are refused an interview. Being poor and out of work is hard enough without adding the insult of a bureaucrat urging a middle age widow, for instance, to "look after herself". Why all these insulting investigations, these nosy checkings, these unaccountable delays when the only thing to do is to check income tax returns, something which should be made compulsory anyway?

Hoping that my comments will help you I remain

Yours truly,

M.P. for Champlain.

Mr. Speaker, I took the trouble to read this letter addressed to the Quebec minister in order to show you how much we want to close those gaps. In 1968, there was a great deal of talk about a just society. Is it fair that a married couple of 60, 61, 62, 63 or 64 cannot live with $130 a month, when it is acknowledged that from now on, the vital minimum will be of $285 at 65? Is there any justice in this? I shall be told that this is a provincial matter and that Quebec has only to increase its social welfare allowances. I agree, but the two government levels should show enough understanding to co-ordinate all their efforts along the same line.

I realize that the reactions of the Quebec Premier, Mr. Bourassa, and Minister of Social Affairs, Mr. Castonguay, were directly related to the letter which I read a few minutes ago. And this is how we are once more getting involved in a useless dispute and in such ambiguous situations that we are wondering where they will lead us.

I should like at this point to quote the comments of the Quebec Premier, Mr. Bourassa, on last Monday's budget statement, as published in La Presse on Wednesday, May 10, 1972. I quote:

Quebecers aged 65 and over may welcome the Turner budget but it is going to create a serious problem for the provincial government with respect to those aged 64 and less who will not benefit from Ottawa's new gifts in a field of joint jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, those, clearly are the words of the Premier of Quebec. So there is a problem. It comes from lack of co-ordination between the two levels of government. I do not mean by that the government is not justified in increasing pensions, but that the government is wrong not to co-operate better with the parties involved. It might have solved the problem by accepting our suggestion that the pensionable age be brought down to 60 and that it be granted automatically to the spouse when one of them reaches the specified age.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Castonguay's reaction was in the same vein. May I quote again from La Presse of Friday, May 10:

Income Security Policy Unachievable

I am quoting from Mr. Castonguay's text.

The announcement, in Monday's federal budget, of new fiscal and monetary benefits granted to elderly people is, in our view, proof that it is apparently impossible to achieve an income security policy as consistent as was required, integrated, and permitting a fair distribution of resources.

How is it that no thought was given to avoid such things? It is due, Mr. Speaker, to the haste, on the eve of a general election, to distribute more money in order to earn votes. I see no other reason. Why allow this further bickering between different levels of government? I shall again quote Mr. Castonguay when he stresses—

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Béchard: This is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the hon. member whether he will allow a question?

Mr. Matte: At the end of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to reply to the hon. member.

Mr. Castonguay further said this:

Last year and in 1970, Mr. Castonguay stressed, when the last amendments were made by Ottawa to the Old Age Security Act, the escalation principle had been rejected. The reason given was that any amount in excess should be paid through the guaranteed income supplement.

I fail to understand, he added, why a year later, they reconsider this principle which had been accepted a year earlier, as far as the escalation of the old age pension is concerned.

• (1240)

Whether Mr. Castonguay is right or wrong, Mr. Speaker, I cannot say. In his dealings with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, were there really any mention of these matters?

Mr. Speaker, I wonder what prevents these two levels of government from coming to an understanding. Nobody knows. One thing is sure, and it is that this increase which is quite necessary and of which we fully approve is unfair to those who have not yet reached age 65 and who must be satisfied with crumbs.

They will argue, not without reason, that the Quebec government must assume its responsibilities. However, when the federal government, through an amendment to the constitution, took over areas which come under the sole jurisdiction of the provinces, specifically old age security and family allowances, it was to compensate—and I agree—for the weak provincial governments in those days. Strangely enough, this happens when both governments have the same political colour.

Mr. Speaker, this situation the federal government has taken over by entering the field of old age security pensions should normally come under provincial governments. We understand Mr. Castonguay referring to integration when we know that Quebec alone must be concerned about supporting those who are not yet 65 and who have no income. I do not say that Mr. Castonguay has the solution. I am just saying that we have been suggesting the solution for a very long time. Recently it has been suggested here, before this House, that everybody should have a guaranteed minimum income which would do away with the welfare programs each Canadian province must implement.

In fact, a guaranteed minimum income for everyone would not be more expensive than the costly and disastrous application of the present social welfare system. That is the solution. When we finally realize that the basic principles of our financial and economic system must be changed, all these problems will be resolved. In the meantime, it is important that every one be treated fairly, as we are involved in this situation.

In particular, I blame the Quebec government for evading its responsibilities. I also blame the preceding governments of that province for acting likewise. It is for this reason that the federal government has taken over more than its share of the fiscal field and it must reimburse the provinces by intruding in areas over which they have exclusive jurisdiction. However, I blame the provincial government for not accepting its responsibilities.

In 1960, we saw that government under the administration of hon. Jean Lesage, asking for 100% of personal income taxes and 100% of estate taxes. We witnessed the fact that its successor, hon. Daniel Johnson, reiterated his demands for 100 per cent of income taxes. If the Quebec government applied this program, I am sure the federal government would have to give in.

Hon. members will remember that in 1952, for instance, when the then premier of Quebec, Maurice Duplessis, established the 8 per cent provincial tax for the first time, the federal government, led by Louis St-Laurent, reduced the federal income tax by 10 per cent.

I therefore advise the government of Quebec, if it wants to solve its problems, to assume its responsibilities, and if it needs 100 per cent of personal income tax, to go ahead and take it. I will then insist that the federal government reduce the federal income tax by the same percentage. Only in this way shall we be able to satisfy and to please everybody.

However, Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, the minister should consider immediately introducing two small amendments to his bill in order to help a large number of families. One of these would be very simple: it would consist in making eligible for an old age security pension couples in which only one spouse has reached the age of 65. The other amendment could also be acceptable: rather than raising the amount of pensions to $285—and I am not saying that this is exorbitant—it might have been preferable to bring down to 60 the age for pension eligibility and to leave the amount at $260 per month.

Mr. Speaker, there are still some things which do not make sense. As the Creditiste leader pointed out yesterday, do 60 year-old people pay less for clothes or for food? No, they do not; they pay exactly the same price. We would be solving a great problem by accepting these suggestions.

If we analyze the budget carefully, we realize that the extra $300 million of $400 million will be given with one hand and taken back with the other, since the 3 per cent tax exemption granted last October is automatically going to be abolished. This is once again mere window-dressing. They seem willing to increase the old age security pensions and even the family allowances; on the other hand, however, they take back the increase through taxation since the 3 per cent exemption will be removed.

Mr. Speaker, removal of this 3 per cent exemption practically offsets the surplus granted. This amounts to giving with one hand and taking away with the other.

Mr. Speaker, our wish is that as many Canadian citizens as possible may live in modest comfort, but obtaining employment is so difficult at the present time that people aged 60 find it impossible. Nonetheless, it is desirable that these people should get some income. This is why we should like all couples and single people, in fact all Canadians aged 60, to be entitled to the old age security pension.

Unfortunately, it does happen for instance that in some families with 7 or 8 children including several still attending school—which is extremely costly—the father, aged 60 or 61, can no longer work because of his age, his lack of the necessary skills or any other reason. At that stage, he has to apply to the social welfare agency whose benefits, I repeat, are not fair, being mere handouts.

It is wrong to suggest, as does the Quebec Department of Social Affairs, that a couple's expenses for food, clothing and personal effects amount to $78 only.

Mr. Speaker, it is appalling that such things happen. We should find here an opportunity of solving at least the problem of senior citizens aged 65 or more, and I wonder why the government should refrain from doing it. We would thus remedy a serious injustice and, by the same token, help the provinces which are facing empty coffers and are unable to meet the demands due to the huge number of applicants for social welfare either because they cannot find a job, or have not been employed long enough to be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I think that these suggestions are not exaggerated and that they should be seriously considered. I am ready, Mr. Speaker, to answer the question directed by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine (Mr. Béchard).

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I for one have ceased long ago to believe in the sincerity of the Social Credit's theory and the speech made by the hon. member for Champlain bears me out in my conviction.

I would like to ask him how he can reconcile the principle which he has expounded fairly strongly a while ago in the course of his comments, to the effect that social security should fall under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces, with the following statement he made in the same breath, towit: We have advocated and still do—as our leader has stated it himself—the payment of $1,200, $1,800, $3,000 and $5,000 to senior citizens and the needy.

Could the hon. member tell us where the Creditiste logic is in such a statement?

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member loses his temper without any reason. I clearly stated in my speech that, when a government does not assume its responsibilities, something must still be done for the people. I am pretty sure that at the time the federal government decided to deal with the old age security, it was trying to palliate a difficulty at the provincial level.

I shall now answer to the second part of the question put by the hon. members, stating that social assistance falls under provincial jurisdiction. I do agree, and when we establish general standards and say that we must get a guaranteed minimum income, it is the responsibility of the federal government to co-ordinate such action throughout Canada and in every province. There is no mystery in there, and I do not understand why the hon. member finds it inconsistent.

Social security falls under provincial jurisdiction, but the federal government's part is to ensure co-ordination, in order to do justice to all citizens of Canada. But the administration must be left to the provinces. This would be an ideal solution. We all advocate administrative decentralization so that people from every part of this country may get better service. However, we still bring in our own solutions to problems in every area. We represent the same citizens as provincial members, and we are concerned by the welfare of the people living in our respective riding, like any provincial member. At this time, we are seeking together to find appropriate solutions, either at the provincial or the federal level.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice rising on a supplementary?

Mr. Béchard: No, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I am pleased to find that the hon. member admits that this area is under federal government jurisdiction but I would like to ask him a question.

Since he too seems upset by the pension increases mentioned in the budget statement, could he tell us if his party is considering presenting before implementation the program which his leader recently prepared in the province of Quebec so as not to interfere into this field?

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, the plan prepared by our leader is included in the current program of the Social Credit Party of Canada. It is understood that, should the provinces so decide, the administration of social security programs will of course be administered by the provinces provided they keep to the basic standards set up for the country as a whole. The program of the Social Credit Party of Canada even specifies that it will be up to the provinces to decide whether they will implement it themselves or leave its administration to the central government. This is the genuine federalism which we want. We submit that each province should enjoy self-determination so as to be able to decide how they want to administer the program or have it administered by the federal government.

I repeat that there is no mystery in that and nothing illogical. We are preserving our basic principles while proposing solutions to the social problems facing all the provinces.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a remark and ask a question.

If the hon. member reads what he just said, he will realize that there is a tremendous difference between his administrative decentralization and political decentralization. What he said is pure denial of federalism. It would be good thing for him to think it over and adjust his views.

My question is the same as that of the parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Béchard). How can there be federal jurisdiction in those sectors when the exclusiveness of provincial jurisdiction is being proclaimed?

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, it is really comical since we are discussing a federal law in the federal Parliament and not in the Quebec National Assembly, a law on old age security which undeniably belongs to the field of welfare. We are now dealing with something pertaining to social security. In normal conditions, had it not been for the weakness of the Quebec government, it would never have been introduced. The federal government would never have had to do anything with it. But let us take for granted that the circumstances were such that at a certain moment the central government began to administer old age security pensions and family allowances. One must admit, and the hon. minister should also admit it, that that really belongs to the social security field which should normally be under provincial jurisdiction. However, on account of a precedent and an amendment to the constitution the federal government takes care of it. So why would the central government, which is supposed to ensure co-ordination throughout Canada, not establish social security standards that the provinces could apply? I do not see any inconsistency there.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

• (1410)

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is with a good deal of pleasure that I rise to take part in this debate. May I congratulate the minister on what he has done in this bill. I do not think that any trained seal could have taken the flip flop that he has so quickly and so well and come back here in his chameleon coat and presented what he has. But it is heartening to see the government is finally reacting to public opinion and demands, even if it means it has had to make a complete shift in policy. For let us make no mistake about it, this is a complete shift in policy. If anybody doubts that it is, I will document all the motions and debates we have had in the House as recorded in Hansard. Otherwise, I shall not refer to that, because I believe the minister realizes as well as I do the complete shift in policy that has taken place. The government is finally acknowledging the fact that in not providing for an escalating feature it was not compensating people for dollars constantly being eroded by inflation. As I have said, we now see with pleasure the compassion of the government in reversing its previous attitudes to this question.

A little less than seven weeks ago, namely on March 23, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) rejected the Progressive Conservative's appeal to the government to contribute to the pensions, allowances and other benefits granted or administered by the government a yearly percentage increase corresponding to the percentage increase in the consumer price index for Canada. On that night the minister voted against the appeal, and I am going to quote later what he said. Today, the House of Commons is in the incongruous position of having the same resolution introduced by none other than the minister himself. What miracle wrought this conversion from a steadfast no on March 23 to an ecstatic yes on May 8? I would venture to guess that the government got a tremendous number of letters from people all over the country and that the senior citizens organizations were making their voices heard.

As a matter of fact, the minister had some interesting comments to make on March 23. He dismissed our request for fairness to be shown Canada's 1,800,000 recipients of the universal old age pension and our pleas that he raise pensions to a decent level and peg them to the rise in the cost of living. As reported at page 1103 of Hansard for March 23, the minister said:

> As a government we have obviously decided that in terms of bringing money to those who need it in waging a successful campaign against poverty we must change from making universal payments to everyone, irrespective of income, to a selective technique. We must have an income test—I call it a guaranteed income technique—applied to what was previously our universal demogrant program of old age security and family allowance.

So, between March 23 and May 8 the minister suddenly discovers that the old age pensioners deserve a better break and adjusts their payments by granting a cost of living increase, as we argued on March 23. Perhaps the minister found much sympathy within his own party for the Conservative motion, and I venture to suggest that is one other reason he had this sudden conversion.

The minister mentioned certain programs and went on at length to deal with what the Liberal party had done over the years for our senior citizens to stimulate them mentally, to create jobs in areas where they would be adept at handling them, and he also mentioned what the pensioners were doing now. Stimulating them to do something is a very good plan. They have shown over and over again, by presenting their own case and grouping together, strength and faith in themselves in bringing their problems to their members of parliament. That the minister has gone along with this type of activity among themselves makes it all very worth while.

In many instances the pensioners have presented case histories to back up their position that they were living in poverty. Our elderly people have just as much right to share in the rising standard of living that has taken place since the last world war,—this was a point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—having suffered and accepted the hardships of the thirties that preserved and laid the foundations for what we have today. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre went on to say that there were other things besides the cost of living index, and referred to the gross national product, the quality of life and other matters. But all this goes back to the thirties.

It is not necessary to go into this in detail, although some of us do forget that in the thirties the old age pensioners of today earned from $20 to $50 a month in the labour market. Even professional people like doctors ready to go into practice earned from $100 to $150 a month. School teachers were earning from about $300 to $600 a year. These were mighty hard-earned dollars, and on this money they lived, raised their families and made a contribution to Canadian history and the Canada that we have today. It is interesting to note that the gross national product in 1933 was roughly $3.5 billion. Today, it is well over $90 billion and perhaps as much as $100 billion, some 30 times as great. This is some indication of how our people lived in the thirties.

The minister, who I notice has left the Chamber, conveniently forgets that his party has a poor record in respect of looking after old age pensioners. He would have us believe his party is the only party which is concerned about the old age pensioners and others on fixed income and that only they have done anything for them. Let us go back a little and take a look at the record. It is sometimes a good thing to be reminded of what has happened. The opposition confronted the government from time to time with the poverty situation of many of our older people. Over and over again, we moved motions to have the benefit increased, only to have the motion defeated and the old age pensioners denied their rights. As late as March 23, 1972 the minister, in pious platitudes, denied them what he was finally forced to give them. I shall not use the word "bribe" because I do not want to do so. I will not be cynical enough to use that word, even when there is an election before us. I would point out, however, that there is such an aura surrounding the situation.

There are 1,800,000 old age pensioners, and this could be a very persuasive reason for the government to do something about the situation. I should like to take the minister back a little since he has been quick to place on the record the suggestion that the Liberals were the only ones who had done anything for the old age pensioners. I would like to think that everyone here has tried to make a contribution to our senior citizens. Let us go back to the year 1956 when the pension was $40 a month. The Liberals at that time brought in an increase of $6 a month. The slogan at that time was "The six-buck boys". The gross national product then was roughly $33 billion. Then the Conservative party was elected in 1957 and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) became the Prime Minister. At that time the old age pension was immediately increased another $9, bringing the pension to $55 a month. Today, the gross national product is three times what it was then. The old age pension was then universal. Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the interruption of the minister. He should stand up and repeat it.

Mr. Pepin: I just observed that the population had increased also.

Mr. Rynard: Well, Mr. Speaker, if it has increased, what is the problem? We added on an extra $9 which brought up the pension to $55 a month. What is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) trying to say.

Mr. Mahoney: You did not give them another increase in six years.

Mr. Rynard: Yes, we did. The hon. member should do his homework. The Conservative party immediately raised the pension. The gross national product today is three times what it was then. What about the great record of the Liberal party to which the minister referred? The pension is not universal now. The Liberals have deserted the guidelines of their forefathers. The pensioners will take a long look at the last four years, and the so-called just society which had denied them their rights. They have been denied the rights they paid for through income tax in the amount of $961 million in 1971, $700 million in federal sales tax and $250 million from the 3 per cent corporation tax. They have been denied what is their right.

I wonder whether the minister recalls that it was through the efforts of the right hon. member for Prince Albert that Mr. Pearson was urged to keep his election promise made in 1963 to increase the pension by $10. But that was not a gift either, because very shortly after that there was an amendment to the Income Tax Act which brought up the tax another one per cent for old age pensioners to match the $10. Therefore, they received nothing. Then, the minister refers to the income supplement of $105 per month, with an escalator clause of 2 per cent. If the cost of living did not rise by 2 per cent not a nickel would be given to the pensioners. What a deal! The minister boasts about it being a first, but he forgets that his government had another first. No government previously had deliberately set out to cause unemployment in order to control runaway inflation. We have more unemployment than ever before and inflation is still with us. Why was he so miserly with that first provision about which he boasts? The senior citizens have been made to scrape the bottom of the barrel because of a 7 per cent increase in the price of food, shelter and clothing.

Let us not boast of arrogance and unfairness to our senior citizens. We pleaded with the minister to tie the increase to the cost of living. The old age pensioners pleaded with him. Their sons and daughters, who were the heaviest taxed in history and who had more deductions from their payroll than any other generation in history, pleaded with him, as they themselves found inflation eroding their dollar until it was hard to make ends meet and do anything for their parents. The government boasts about lowering the pension age to 65. What a mess the minister would have been in today had he not done so in view of the rampant unemployment.

Then, the minister goes on to talk about the $30 per month guaranteed income supplement that was introduced in 1966. This only went to the old age pensioners and senior citizens who had nothing else on which to live. The minister forgot to state that of every dollar earned, the government took 50 per cent in tax. He forgot to state that the $75 old age security pension which the government froze at $80, with the inflation we have had, today would be around $90. He starts off at January 1, 1972 still gypping the old age pensioner by $9.85 per month or $118.20 per year, if my mathematics are correct.

The minister speaks about what he is doing to relieve the problem senior citizens face in the field of housing. Well, I wish to dwell on that for a minute. Before I do so, however, I should like to refer again to the change in the guaranteed income supplement. It will be of no benefit to Canada's veterans who are in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement because 50 per cent of the additional money they receive through the guaranteed income supplement will be deducted from their pension. The $15 a month they receive from the welfare department will be deducted from the amount they receive from the Veterans Affairs Department. Nowhere in his budget does the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) estimate the saving to the government as a result of the lowering of the pension by $15 a month to 46,500 veterans. I ask him the reason for this. Let us keep in mind also that the government announcement has been very misleading.

Most Canadians believe that the guaranteed income supplement is to rise by $15 a month from its April, 1972 level. I would like the minister to correct me if I am wrong when I say it will not do so. It is the combined old age security-guaranteed income supplement payment that will go up by $15. I wish to ask the minister whether that is correct, and if not I would like him to clarify that point. There is only an increase of $9.42 per month for a single pensioner, not the $15 per month that the minister told us about here. I am sure that people do not realize this, and I wonder how many members of the minister's own party realize it. Married couples who each received a GIS payment of $50.05 in April 1971, will now receive $9.42 per month more, a payment of $59.62. Although these are good additional sums, the point is that GIS recipients will be getting less than $10 a month, although they have been led by the government to believe that they would be getting an extra $15. Can we blame them if they feel cheated when their first GIS cheque arrives under the new system? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) are guilty of misleading Canada's old age pensioners. Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare will tell us whether or not this is intentional. Such behaviour is almost fraudulent, for no efforts have been made by them to correct the mistaken impression which their announcement originally and intentionally gave.

The minister spoke about what he did in the field of housing, but he forgot to tell us that this was only marginal assistance. He should get down to brass tacks. Let us consider a typical small Ontario city. I picked out at random a city which has 2,349 pensioners of whom 1,500 are on GIS. The average rent for a bachelor apartment in that city is $125 per month, and the average rent for a one bedroom apartment is $150 per month. The construction of how many of those units was subsidized? In that city, only 15 single units renting at $37 per month were made available to old age pensioners, and only 12 units for married couples. I want to point out to the minister that only 39 people benefited out of the 1,500 who were on the guaranteed income supplement. Let the minister not mislead the public. We must realize that probably 50 per cent of the total income of those pensioners was spent on shelter. In the case of a single person, only about $50 a month is left to cover food, clothing and the other necessities of life. If that is the good life about which the Minister of National Health and Welfare speaks, then I do not want it.

The minister referred to the Canada Assistance Plan. He says that, surely the Canada Assistance Plan will cover the costs if the provinces and the municipalities are short of money. This is the minister's ace in the hole. He does not say it is a shared cost program, and if the provinces or the municipalities do not have the money, why does the minister not take care of it?

The minister also spoke about drug care. He forgot to tell us that this is not a compulsory program, that provision of food, shelter and clothes is compulsory, not drugs. If that is not so I would like him to tell us. Let us quit fooling the people. The minister spoke as if he had a drug care plan. He says that if the provinces or municipalities can pick up the tab, he will match it, but how many of them are in the financial position to do so?

Then, the minister spoke about chronic care homes. This is a subject that concerns me. Instead of hearing platitudes from the minister, I would have preferred him to say why the chronically ill who need nursing round the clock have to pay a deterrent fee of $3.50 a day in Ontario. He did not mention that when he spoke about all the benefits that were given to the old people. Surely, under the Canada Assistance Plan the federal government will pay half of the balance of what is left after the provinces have paid their share. What is the cost? The Minister of National Health and Welfare surely has those figures. I believe it is around $15 a day.

Now, I would like to dwell for a minute on the Canada Pension Plan. When the pensioners receive their pension under the Canada Pension Plan their guaranteed income supplement payments will be reduced. The minister neglected to tell us that also. There are many things that he passed over. The minister spoke about the talents of the experienced executives. I was glad to hear him refer to that because I think it is worth while to point it out. He did not mention that there were many doctors who had retired but who are now in Africa, South America and the British West Indies doing valuable work teaching some of their students the art of surgery. As a matter of fact, Dr. McClure is now in Viet Nam doing valuable work. He is a very well known surgeon. I mentioned my own profession but there are many other fields such as public health, social services and industry from which experienced people who have retired can be of assistance. This is the area into which we should be mainstreaming all our retired senior citizens who are able to carry on physically and mentally.

The minister also spoke about the adequacy of pensions. He did not state that they have recently become adequate only because he knew that he would be in trouble somewhere along the line. We must make provision for a quality of life that has changed over the years. All we have to do is to think back to the standard of life 30 years ago. The advance in technology has brought about many changes in our life. This is why I believe that pensions should be tied to the gross national product rather than just to the rising cost of living. We believe that this measure is worthwhile and we on our side welcome it. I am glad that we have been able to put sufficient pressure on the minister and that finally he has seen the light. After having made those observations regarding the minister's stubborn refusal to listen to the plight of the old age pensioners, let me say that I am pleased that he has taken this step. Criticisms have been made frequently by members of the House as well as by the press.

• (1440)

Here is an article from the Winnipeg Tribune. It deals with the Gallup Poll, that frightening thing. It mentions the leader of the Conservative party who met 600 old age pensioners in British Columbia and talked plainly to them about their problems. Then, it goes on to say:

> The Trudeau government has acted shamefully toward the aged. The last increase in the universal old age pension amounted to 42 cents. For needy pensioners (those receiving supplement) the increase was limited to 2 per cent regardless of the sharp rise in living costs. The cost of living had risen at least 3.5 per cent. As a result needy pensioners are worse off now than they were a year ago.
> Is this the just society?

I want to remind the minister of that and to tell him that there are a few things in this bill that we will be examining. Since I like the minister, I am pleased that he has taken another timid step. I congratulate him on that small step.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today, C-207, is entitled "An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act." It will have a profound effect on the lives of some 1,800,000 Canadians who are over 65 years of age. I understand that of these, some 995,000 receive part or all of the guaranteed income supplement. In his budget speech on Monday night, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said, when speaking about the old age pensions, that the budget was designed "to render justice to those people in our community who have been hurt by the rise in the cost of living and who have no way of fighting back."

Sir, this proposal to tie the old age pensions and guaranteed income supplement to the cost of living index represents a most significant step in our social policy program. There was provision under the old program to pay 2 per cent escalation to counteract the effects of inflation, but this only applied to the guaranteed income supplement recipients. This 2 per cent could never completely satisfy in the long haul because in many years the cost of living index rose much higher than that. Thus, a substantial lump sum payment had to be applied every few years to compensate for this.

The same principle applies to the old age security part of the pensions. People receive this pension as a matter of right. They contributed to the program in years gone by when they were paying their income tax, and now they are entitled to receive the benefits. I believe that with the escalation factor applied to this basic $80 a month figure, the benefits will be much more fair. If this pension is to be paid with cheap dollars, then there should be more of them. This is the only way to see justice done to our pensioners.

The opposition is deriding the small benefits that will be given through the increase to the old age security pension recipients as if it is paid as a lump sum increase, which of course it is not. It is only the increase in the cost of living, so that our old age pensioners can buy in 1972 the same amount of things that they did in 1971 with their old age pension benefit. Anyone who has paid interest on a loan or mortgage has learned how only a few percentage points add up over a period of time, especially if the interest is compounded. The benefits to be paid under this escalator clause for this increase in the cost of living are applied so that there is this compounding effect.

However, at the same time if the change in cost of living index is a negative one, the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement will have a floor under them so that they will not decline. So, we have the happy situation of the escalation to counteract inflation, and no decrease should our cost of living move downward as it would in a severe recession.

There is also provision in the bill for people to reside outside Canada for more than a six month period and still receive the OAS, providing they can show that they have lived in the country for at least 20 years after the age of 18. The old rule was that a person had to reside in Canada for a period of 25 years after age 21. I am sure other hon. members know of old age pensioners who, due to health reasons or family circumstance, had to be away from Canada for more than a six months period. But under the old regulations they had to return to Canada in order to continue to receive their old age security pension. This change will benefit these people.

The benefits themselves under old age security and the guaranteed income supplements can amount to $15 per month for a single person and $30 per month for a married couple. This brings the maximum benefits to $150 per month for a single person, and $285 per month for a couple. This represents about an 11 per cent increase. Further, these combined old age security and guaranteed income supplement benefits will be subject to the escalator factor in future years. If the cost of living index should rise as high in 1972 as it did in 1971, namely, 3.6 per cent, the maximum combined pension benefits would be increased by about $5 and $10 per month respectively for the single and married recipients, starting next April.

In his budget speech the Minister of Finance also mentioned that the special exemption for taxpayers over 65 years of age will be increased from $650 to $1,000. This, added to the basic exemption of $1,500, plus $100 for charitable gifts, will give a total exemption for single taxpayers 65 years of age and over of $2,600 per year. For a married taxpayer the amount is $2,850 plus $100 plus $1,000, making a total of $3,950. These benefits and exemptions are retroactive to January 1, 1972. This special exemption also applies to taxpayers who are blind and who are confined to bed or to a wheelchair.

The minister also said that a program will be brought forward to be called "New Horizons for the Aged." I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) will soon give the details of this program to the House. In my constituency we have several senior citizen clubs, including those at Bruce Mines, Blind River, Elliot Lake, and Mindemoya. These provide opportunities for fellowship and friendship to the senior citizens who participate in them. Especially important is their ability to speak as a united voice for senior citizens when making their views known to various levels of government and community agencies. However, I dare say there is more untapped talent, experience and common sense in these groups than in any of our other communities. If this program will release some of this talent, and mobilize it for community development, it will be one of the best programs we have ever seen brought forward in this House.

The bill before us today, Mr. Speaker, will substantially improve the lot of almost 2 million Canadians, 2 million of our most valued citizens. It does this not only through immediate lump sum increases in the guaranteed income supplement, but also by providing regular increases to compensate for the ravages of inflation. I commend the House on the spirit of co-operation shown between the various political parties to see this bill passed so that the benefits may be paid as soon as possible. I hope this spirit will continue so that the benefits may be in the hands of those who have made such an outstanding contribution to our country by the end of next month.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take too much of the time of the House this afternoon as we are rather anxious to see this bill get through the House today, but I feel I should say a few words on Bill C-207, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act. This bill will receive my support as it incorporates a principle for which we have been fighting for many years. This principle is that the actual cost of living increase be added to the basic pension every year. This yearly addition to the pension will at least maintain the purchasing power of the pension and will be welcomed by our senior citizens. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the increases in the guaranteed income supplements are also needed and welcomed by the members of this House and, I am sure, by the old age pensioners who receive them.

I should like to take this opportunity, however, to express my disappointment at the failure of the government to increase the basic old age security pension. There is no reason why a very substantial increase could not have been enacted by the legislation before us. This government talks about a just society and about priorities; in my opinion adequate living standards which are certainly tied in closely with income, should be a top priority in any just society. Adequate income standards for our senior citizens, who pioneered in every part of our nation and who have laid the very economic base upon which we depend today, certainly should be at the top of the list of priorities. This was not evident in the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on May 8.

The pension case for the New Democratic Party has been ably placed before this House by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I fully endorse the remarks he made earlier in this debate. There are, however, several points about which I would like to speak briefly as they say that repetition is the mother of learning.

The points I should like to deal with very briefly, Mr. Speaker, are those which illustrate the need for an immediate increase in the basic old age security pension to $150 a month and the need to amend the Income Tax Act in order to give these pensioners tax exemptions of at least $3,000 for a single person and $4,500 for married couples. In addition, I should like to speak about the future of the old age security pension. I believe that this pension should have an automatic escalator clause built into it. Prior to today we were always asking for part of this escalator clause to include a cost of living index, but another factor should be built into it, namely, consideration of the increasing gross national product. I do not think this can be done every year, Mr. Speaker, but certainly senior citizens who live in Canada are entitled to the benefits of the increasing productivity of our nation. There could be a very simple amendment made to the act to indicate that if the gross national product of Canada increased by a certain percentage a year or over two years, there would be an automatic increase to the pensioners living in Canada. This sharing of our gross national product is something to which I feel this government should pay more attention than it has in the past. We know that as far as pensioners are concerned, the sharing of the gross national product or the increasing prosperity of the Canadian nation is not taken into consideration.

May I return to the matter of the basic pension? I should like to point out that we have received a large number of communications from organizations all across Canada. These are organizations of senior citizens and deal with their problems. There is no doubt that senior citizens from one end of Canada to the other are, for the most part, in need of a sharp increase in the basic pension. The cost of living has been going up and there are many other costs which increase as we get older. There are things around the home where we have to depend more than ever on other individuals, such as home repairs. All this adds up to a need for more income for pensioners. There is no doubt that our nation is able to pay a basic old age security pension of $150 a month. We can do it. I am suggesting to the government that they look very seriously at this aspect of the Old Age Security legislation and see if they cannot come up with a substantial increase to grant at least part of the $150 amount which pension organizations and members of this House have been requesting.

There is one other point I wish to make before I sit down, Mr. Speaker. Tied in to all this, the increase in the basic pension, the protection of the income of our senior citizens by raising the amount on which they will pay no income tax and the establishment of a proper built-in pension which will include the increasing gross national product of the nation, the government should give consideration to lowering the pensionable age to 60. This is long overdue. I suggest that for a start this not be made a compulsory retirement age but individuals could be given the option of retiring at 60 and receiving the old age security pension. I trust that the minister and the government will look very seriously at this suggestion. It has been raised by a number of members in this House and as time goes on, especially with the extremely high unemployment which we see in our nation, groups and individuals are beginning to realize that we should be moving along these lines.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take any more of the time of the House. I can assure you that while we welcome the legislation before us we feel it has not gone far enough. Our group will continue to press for what we consider to be some basic reforms in this pension legislation. We serve warning on the government that whether we are back here for another session before the next election or return when the election is over, that our members will be pushing for those basic reforms which we are suggesting could and should be brought about by the government today.

In closing I can assure the House that this legislation will receive my support. I only regret that it does not go further at this time.

• (1500)

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, some of the measures of Bill C-207 are very much overdue. Such measures as there are, have been brought forward as a result of much pleading, goading and beseeching by the opposition. Also, there has been considerable help from Father Time who inexorably is bringing closer a federal election. The government has finally put on its cloak of compassion, that cloak which Liberal governments seem to put on for brief periods every three or four years.

Mr. Baldwin: Also the cloak of false virtue.

Mr. Peddle: On April 26 the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), while talking about other legislation before the House, said as reported at page 1697 of Hansard:

> As many hon. members know, the Economic Council of Canada, the Senate report on poverty, the Council on Social Development, to say nothing of numerous other studies, have all indicated that in this country perhaps four to five million Canadians are living below the poverty line and that something must be done to alleviate their situation.

In that speech the minister recognized that large numbers of people in Canada live below the poverty line. Despite that, the combined increase in old age pensions and the guaranteed income supplement as proposed is not large enough, for those who depend for their sole support on such government assistance will still live at standards considerably below the recognized poverty line.

The government is being inconsistent. Anyone who depends for sustenance on his old age pension and supplement is to all intents and purposes like an employee of the government. Surely it is consistent if the government on the one hand recognizes the level of the poverty line and on the other pays these needy people amounts that will keep them living at a standard considerably below the poverty line. I am not proposing to pick figure out of the air, although I suggest that is precisely what the government has done.

In past years, as I have said before, the government has handed out pensions and other social benefits for political reasons; there is no question about that. I hoped this measure would remove those benefits effectively from the political arena. I imagined that we might move away from the concept under which every three or four years governments use these benefits for promoting their own political purposes.

If benefits are to be improved, it is logical to begin at a starting point and not at a figure which may have been pulled out of thin air, whether it be $130 a month, $140 a month or any figure like it. This legislation does not contain a logical starting point. Rather than going along with any figure that the NDP might pull out of the air, I would suggest that the reasonable starting point is that established by the Economic Council of Canada, namely, the poverty line. Perhaps our starting point ought to be slightly above that because any lower figure will not bear scrutiny.

There is another area that I want to touch on briefly. I think it is a tragic circumstance that the people to whom I am about to refer have not been recognized in the legislation before us. I am talking about the husband, for instance, who has reached the age at which he is entitled to the old age pension and supplement, possibly, if he has no other means of livelihood, and whose wife has not reached that age; she might be any age under pensionable age. I am thinking particularly of wives who are not yet 65 and do not possess an earning capacity. I know the minister can say that the man who has reached 65 will be treated as a single pensioner and must look elsewhere for the necessary sustenance if he is to keep alive and maintain a roof over his head; in other words, he must look to the provincial welfare agency.

Mr. Speaker, a great many old people do not find it easy to approach such agencies. I have personally known of male pensioners who decided to stick it out, possibly for four or five years, until their wives became eligible for pension. It is not fair to ask such people to undergo these ordeals and I think their plight ought to be recognized. I realize that there must be a starting age for eligibility for the old age pension and I do not suggest at this point that 65 is not reasonable. Neither do I suggest that the basic age be changed. However, I am sure the minister will recognize that a man is obligated to support his wife and family. Perhaps the minister could work out a formula involving the old age pension supplement which would take into account a man's obligations.

The government has said that it recognizes for all time, through this measure, the impact on our older citizens of rising living costs. We are told that a formula is to be established for automatically increasing benefits each year as living costs rise. The increase is to be connected to the consumer price index. If you ask a pensioner with no income save his pension and supplement what he knows about the cost of living, he will tell you that he does not know very much about the consumer price index, about the Economic Council of Canada or bodies like it. He will tell you that for him increases in the cost of living mean increases in the cost of keeping a roof over the head of himself and his wife. He will tell you that living cost increases mean more expensive food, clothing and all the other necessities of life.

These are the matters that concern him. He is not greatly concerned about statistics, about the consumer price index or anything like that. If the government really wants people with no means except pensions and supplements to cope with increases in living costs, it must make it possible for pensioners whose spouses have not yet reached pensionable age to meet rising living costs and live in dignity. I am surprised that the government has not recognized the importance of this point. At one point I thought they had. I do not know how many people are in that category, but the number must be fairly substantial. I do not know what their political impact is and I do not really care. I merely recognize that a fairly large segment of our people live under these tragic circumstances and I want the government to recognize this problem and correct it.

These are the only two observations I wish to make. I welcome the improvement. However, I do not think the base has been established in any firm way: I think it has just been pulled out of the air, which leaves it open to more politicking. Perhaps the next study will tie the base to the poverty line or a little above it. Now that the government is suggesting it is being improved and taken out of the political ring, I think we should have a sound base. The established poverty line or a little above it seems to be the most sensible base.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on Bill C-207. In general, I welcome the amendments to the Old Age Security Act. In my constituency there are over 8,000 pensioners. I receive a lot of mail and many representations from them. In the past, pensions have been far from adequate. Many pensioners are living in poverty; their housing conditions are deplorable. This bill recognizes the need to help these people. I wish legislation of this type had been introduced into the House several years ago; I feel it is late now.

I wish to make two points which I hope the minister will take into consideration for future amendments to the legislation. We should be talking in terms of an early retirement for our older people. I receive many representations from people who want to retire at age 60, partly because of the problem of finding employment and partly because in an age of technology and cybernation there is less and less reason for people to work beyond age 60. I urge the minister to amend the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan to allow people to retire at age 60 if they wish. Many citizens in this country would like us to move toward this goal now.

Second, the pension for senior citizens should be raised to $150 per month. The basic pension of $80 is much too low. I note that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said that $150 a month would be too costly. I disagree. I urge that the basic pension be raised to $150 per month and that there be a cost of living escalator clause. I find it very encouraging that many pensioners in this country are now starting to organize pressure and lobby groups. There is the Pensioners for Action Now group in British Columbia, and a similar group in Saskatchewan. Some of the credit for pension improvements must go to these organizations. I encourage pensioners to organize and put pressure on the government in every way possible.

The money needed to raise pensions to a much higher rate is available. Other groups in our society receive these benefits. There are tax write-offs to corporations. Surely we can spend more money to help the old age pensioners of this country. They deserve it and should have it. I hope the minister considers these two very important matters and does something about them in the near future. I refer to the need for an earlier retirement age and a higher basic rate of pension.

[Mr. Peddle.]

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak briefly; I will just say a few words.

Not only shall I not condemn this government, but I shall congratulate it for having introduced this measure tending to increase the old age security payments. We know that this increase will be welcome, but it should have been granted a long time ago. In fact, we have been calling for it for several years and, a few months ago, we put considerable pressure on the authorities requesting that this increase be granted.

However, Mr. Speaker, why are pensions being increased? Because the cost of living is rising. Is this a valid reason?

At the present time, we are wondering, on the one hand, why the cost of living is increasing and, on the other hand, why the government is not doing anything to stop it.

The increase in pension will certainly be offset by the increase in the cost of living to such an extent that we shall have to start all over again within the next few months. Following this increase, our senior citizens will witness an increase in the cost of living, an increase in the rates of the homes in which they live, and will find themselves in the same old predicament.

Mr. Béchard: Why, then, increase the cost of living?

Mr. Latulippe: We are asking for a pension increase and a price adjustment.

If we could bring about a price adjustment and, thus, prevent an increase in the cost of living, the pensions would be justified and increasing the pensions would do a great service to the public.

Pensions are being increased but the cost of living is also rising. There is no solution to all that. We certainly agree with pension increases, but, at the same time, we deplore the increasing cost of living. The government must at all costs find a way to adjust prices through compensated discounts which could be deducted from the total surplus of national production.

National production will reach about one hundred billion dollars in the 1972-73 fiscal year, whereas consumption will be about sixty billion dollars. Production prices should be sixty billion dollars because, through a logical approach, the government could decrease prices and have the 100 billion dollars production sold for 60 billions. Through other methods, the government could also issue credits to provide or increase pensions which would keep the cost of living from increasing.

Mr. Speaker, we would avoid cost of living increases through price readjustments and a total readjustment of production and consumption. We could then achieve something. We could arrive at a certain level of stability that would allow products to be sold more easily, in increasing the purchasing power and at the same time price increases would be avoided.

In view of the present economic situation, we are all happy that our senior citizens will get an increase to the guaranteed income supplement. But they will be all the more unhappy to realize eventually that they do not profit by this increase, that prices go on increasing and that the purchasing power diminishes even more.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the government to open their eyes and to consider the proposed solutions. If they do not find better solutions, they can always examine those which have been proposed and try to implement them.

We are pleased with the increase but, at the same time, we deplore the fact that this will not solve the problem. There is no possible solution on that side. When pensions are increased and services improved, it is also necessary, in order to balance the economy, to find a logical, technical and philosophical means of preventing an increase in the cost of living. Yet, former governments have never thought of it. They have never stopped to consider the problem, to study that philosophical and technical economy which would solve the problem once and for all.

Mr. Speaker, our economy is like a giant motor without a throttle-value: it runs either too fast or too slow. Here is the solution we propose: let us fix a throttle-value on that economic motor which is very good, very powerful and has everything it takes. But our system has no controls. We suggest that the big economic motor be equipped with a regulator to maintain some price stability.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat what has already been said, as I do not want to hold up the business of the house. We are very anxious, like all hon. members, to see passage of that pension increase. We are anxious, like all other hon. members, to see our senior citizens receive that increase.

[English]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-207. I will not be long, so as to enable other hon. members to speak today if they so desire.

There are a couple of points missing from the bill which are an oversight of the minister, either foreseen or deliberate. One relates to a problem with which I am sure we are all familiar; it exists among aged couples pretty well universally. Because the habit in this country is for men to marry women younger than themselves, it follows that married men reach pensionable age sooner than their wives. It is also a fact of Canadian life that most women in their later years do not earn any income because traditionally their work is confined to taking care of the household, this so far being a non-paying position, speaking in general terms.

My first suggestion for improving this legislation is to ask the government to consider seriously extending the pension to the wife as well as to the husband as soon as the husband becomes of pensionable age. I have numerous acquaintances in my constituency, men who are aged 65—most of them agricultural workers, of course, my constituency being an agricultural one—and are retiring, with no other source of income. They have to support themselves and their wives on one pension. As I am sure even the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), who is here today, will admit, the pension being paid one person is not even sufficient to make adequate provision for his needs, and when he is also obligated to provide for his wife the situation becomes very difficult. Indeed, in view of the cost of rent, food and clothing the situation becomes impossible.

In some cases a man who qualifies for pension is forced to continue working until his wife reaches pensionable age, in which case he loses his guaranteed income supplement; or the wife is forced to go out to work until she receives a pension. Because many wives are not accustomed to going out to work, an extremely large burden is placed on the household until the wife reaches pensionable age. Therefore I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) why he neglected to consider this aspect of the pension plan. I am sure he is aware of the problem I have described. It is possible that he may have considered but rejected the idea. If this is the case, I should like him to state why he has rejected it and how he expects two people to live on one pension, at least until the wife becomes of pensionable age. If the minister does not expect them to do that, what else can they do? Is the wife supposed to apply for provincial welfare until she receives a pension, or should she go out to work to augment the family income?

The second point I wish to make relates to the agricultural policy of this government. The government's policy is designed to remove farmers from the land. As we know, a large number of agricultural workers in Canada are of middle age and are getting close to retirement age. Generally speaking, they are the ones most vulnerable to the difficult economic conditions our farmers are facing today. The people who are quitting the farms, through no choice of their own but because economic conditions are such that they can no longer earn a living on the farm, in most cases are in the 55 to 65 age bracket. Quite often they are unsuited to retraining and to relocating in order to take other jobs. In many cases their health is such that they cannot accept labouring work or work of an unskilled nature.

I suggest that in cases where farmers, as a result of economic conditions brought on by this government, are forced off the land, their pensionable age be lowered to 60 or 55. I do not think that is unreasonable. The contribution of these people to the building of this country, to the feeding of our people, and the amount of physical labour they have performed up to the time they are forced off the land, certainly warrants some kind of reward by way of an early pension which would allow them to retire from the land with some dignity and without the undue stress and strain involved in trying to become retrained for other types of employment.

• (1530)

Those are the two main points I wish the minister to consider. A wife should receive a pension as soon as her husband becomes pensionable. Second, in respect of farming people who have been forced off the land because of difficult economic conditions in agriculture, the age at which they become eligible for pension should be lowered from 65 to 60. I think this would serve a very useful purpose and the number of people involved, in relation to the whole, would not be very great.

Earlier today the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) made some unkind remarks, as he usually does when someone from our party is speaking, about the failure of the government headed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) to do anything about increasing pensions for our senior citizens.

I have before me a résumé of pension increases since pensions were introduced in 1952. It shows that from 1952 to 1957 a Liberal government raised the pension from $40 to $46. In 1957 it was immediately raised to $55 a month when the new government came into power. Five years later, in 1963, it was raised to $75. From 1967 to 1972 the basic pension was increased to $75, and then to a grand total of $80. So we can see that the generosity of the party the hon. member represents is not very great.

We recognize that some of the changes contained in Bill C-207 are quite useful. The idea of bringing in an escalator clause is good, but I am not convinced that the way it is set up will accomplish what is intended. I hope that when we have before us the regulations in this regard the matter will be clarified.

I conclude by saying that our senior citizens have been responsible for building this nation to the state in which it is today. In many parts of our country the senior citizens arrived in wilderness areas as pioneers. Through their efforts, physical, emotional and otherwise, they converted the wilderness into beautiful, productive country. Many of them were able to save sufficient funds to be comfortable in their old age. However, many were unable to do so, and it is in respect of this group that I emphasize the country owes them a decent living in repayment of their contribution to the conversion of what was wilderness into a beautiful, developed country.

I note the minister has left the House. He probably found my remarks boring. However, I plead with him to seriously consider the two suggestions I have made and urge that he endeavour to bring in appropriate amendments to the bill before it is passed by the House.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House long because we want to get this bill through the House today. It will go to the committee, where I hope it will be dealt with very quickly. I join my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who in commenting on the bill referred to the sheer cynicism which is evidenced by bringing it forward at this time. I also join my colleagues on this side of the House who have made brilliant speeches and have adequately dealt with the bill.

I stress the difficulty we experience in respect of legislation of this kind in attempting to meet our commitments. This measure has been subjected to amending motions by our party and by my friends to the left. These amendments have been voted against time and time again by hon. members opposite. Now we are confronted with the legislation, under these circumstances, because of sheer political banditry. It is precisely the same as the other circumstance I raised today about these issues being parallel.

While being interviewed on January 9, 1972, by Mr. Peter Desbarats, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was asked about a number of bills which I believe included this bill, and also about election expenses. I put this matter to the House because the principle is precisely the same. At that time the Prime Minister said:

> Well, quite candidly, one is a question of time. We did tackle this problem along with many others. We didn't bring it to the point where we could introduce legislation in time for the next election, which would have had to be many many months ago in order that the old election machinery and the electoral officers and so on be able to readjust to whatever new laws we . . . So, it's something we would have had to do, you know, a year ago to become effective.

Later in the interview the Prime Minister said:

> We have a very good report by Hyliard Chappell which came out a few months ago, it came out too late to be passed through Parliament in time to be effective for this present election.

But yesterday, on this note, the Prime Minister said:

> —this very morning in cabinet we approved a bill doing exactly those things—limiting campaign expenditures and having the state pay at least part of the bill of election expenses . . . so I consulted Don Macdonald and we decided to blow it tonight.

The bill is to be introduced on Tuesday. Under these conditions it is very difficult for this party and the opposition in general to conform with the view of the government with regard to the legislation which is to be introduced. I mention this matter in the hope that it might be an object lesson to my friends opposite, so that when they come to the serious problem of introducing legislation to this House they will do so having in mind the needs of the country rather than political cynicism.

Hon. P. M. Mahoney (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be even more brief. In view of the credit just claimed by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) for the Conservative government's $10 per month increases in the old age security pension in 1962 and 1963, I think we should all regard with a great deal of seriousness the allegations of political cynicism emanating from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND OTHER ACTS

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT OF PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-208, to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, to provide for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I do not know whether there has been general distribution of copies of the bill. I do not have one. Perhaps there has been a selective distribution.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have mine.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I see that the hon. member has now received a copy.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this bill will be relatively brief because although the measure is an important one it is quite simple and straightforward. My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in his budget speech on May 8 announced that legislation would be introduced to provide for the annual adjustment of veterans pensions and allowances to reflect changes in the cost of living. This bill will give effect to that undertaking.

In the past there never has been any clear principle governing the general changes made from time to time in the amount paid in veterans pensions or allowances. In recent years the rates have been reviewed every two years or so, but the basis and the exact timing of the reviews were never before spelled out and made public. Veterans and their families, or widows, had no certainty as to the amounts of the payments they might receive from year to year.

This bill will for the first time remove that uncertainty. It spells out clearly the fact that the pensions and allowances will be adjusted annually, that when changes based on living costs are warranted they will take effect on January 1, and that the amount of these changes will be arithmetically and automatically determined by the movement of the consumer price index. The adjustment will be made as of right. No longer will it be necessary for veterans organizations to come and plead for a review to recognize the shrinkage in the real value of veterans benefits because of price increases. The review will be statutory and annual and governed by the principle recited in the legislation itself. The bill, therefore, is a new landmark in the veterans' charter.

Hon. members will have noted that this is an omnibus bill to amend five different statutes, but the principle in all cases is the same. The first statute involved is the Pension Act, under which disability pensions and various allowances are paid to veterans, and also pensions are paid in specified circumstances to the widows or orphans of veterans. I should like to emphasize that the new principle of automatic escalation will apply not only to the pensions themselves but also to the various periodic allowances arising from this act. This includes attendance allowance, clothing allowance, dependant parents allowance and also the new exceptional incapacity allowance that was first enacted about a year ago.

Another point which I would like to stress is that the present bill relates only to the question of changes related to the cost of living; in other words, to the principle of escalation. Veterans organizations have also been making representations to the government with regard to the basic rates of pensions. In other words, apart from the periodic changes in rates there is also the question as to whether or not the pensions stand on the right base. I want to say clearly that this question of basic rates is under careful study. At this time I cannot predict the outcome of that study but I do want to point out that the present measure should not be regarded as being prejudicial in any way to the review of this question of basic rates. They are two different questions.

The second statute affected by this bill is the War Veterans Allowance Act, and here too the method of escalation will be the same. As in the case of other recent increases in this allowance, the statutory ceilings will be increased by the same amounts and not by the same percentages as the maximum allowances; in other words, the margin between the maximum allowances and the total income ceilings will remain unchanged.

Another matter of considerable interest in this connection is the question of how the current increases under the Old Age Security Act, also announced in the budget, will be treated for purposes of war veterans allowance. I am pleased to announce that the government intends to seek authority from the governor in council for a regulation exempting these increases under the Old Age Security Act so that they are not treated as income when computing entitlement under the War Veterans Allowance Act. These veterans, therefore, will quite properly qualify for the increases both as veterans and as citizens.

The third statute involved is the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, which relates to various groups of quasi-military personnel such as merchant seamen, auxiliary services personnel, firefighters and the like. These groups will enjoy exactly the same kind of escalation both with regard to disability pensions and with regard to civilian war allowances.

The fourth statute is the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, which provides for tuition fees and living costs of qualified young persons. Here again, the escalation will be automatic and will conform with changes in the consumer price index. The fifth of the statutes affected is the Department of Veterans Affairs Act. The purpose of this amendment is to provide that exactly the same kind of escalation may apply, as of January 1, 1972, to those who may be in receipt of treatment allowance. Hon. members will recall that the purpose of treatment allowance is to raise the payment made to a disability pensioner up to the equivalent of 100 per cent pension when he is under treatment in hospital for his pensionable disability.

Mr. Speaker, I promised to be brief. I have described the substance of this bill. It is simple but it establishes an important new right. Hon. members will certainly agree that Canada's veterans should not be expected to make supplication in matters of this kind. Cost of living changes are measurable and it is self-evident that they should be met by a standardized procedure such as that defined in this bill.

I should like to make one other point. Officials of my department are already making provisional arrangements for the issuance of cheques to cover the retroactive aspect of all these adjustments, and also to amend the amounts of subsequent cheques in accordance with the provisions of this bill. While I cannot say at this time exactly when the amended cheques can be distributed, I can assure the House that the revision will be completed at the earliest possible moment.

I apologize to the House for directing my attention almost totally to the notes with which I was provided, but hon. members will realize that this is quite a complex matter with which I am still trying to become familiar.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order only to point out to Your Honour and the House that members of our party who are particularly interested in this matter are unavoidably absent today, in the belief that the previous measure would have taken a little longer than it did. However, we are quite happy to let the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who will be speaking for his party, precede us if it is understood—we are not asking for an order to be made—that members of our party will be allowed to speak on Tuesday after the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has completed his remarks.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in the position of having to say a few complimentary words in at least two directions. First of all, I am grateful to my friend, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), for allowing me to speak ahead of a representative of the official opposition. I can understand the absence of the several members of that party who would be speaking on this matter, since they did not expect it to be reached this soon, but I dare to suggest that the views I shall express are probably the views that they would express if they were here this afternoon.

• (1550)

The other pleasant word I want to offer is to suggest to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) that if the speech he made this afternoon is—and I believe it is—a sample of the attitude he takes toward veterans affairs, he ought to reconsider his decision about not running again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I grant that as a Liberal he might have trouble getting elected in Vancouver South, but let us assume he could get elected somewhere, and if the Liberals were still in power I would hope he might continue in his position as Minister of Veterans Affairs. I say that, Mr. Speaker, because when suddenly it became obvious that this bill was going to be reached this afternoon I made some quick notes about the points I wanted to make and the questions I wanted to ask. The minister dealt with each one of them, and not only dealt with them but dealt with them very satisfactorily. That is why I wish he were not retiring.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that this is an area where it is not unusual for there to be this all-party approach, because it is true that in the veterans affairs committee we seem to have less partisanship than in almost any committee of the House. We meet in that committee, some members as veterans and some of us not, deeply conscious of our debt to those who have served us in a number of wars, and it is our supreme desire as members of the committee to see that the best possible deal is provided for our veterans.

[Mr. Laing.]

I said, Mr. Speaker, that I had made a few notes about questions which the minister has answered already. But even so, may I underline the points that have now been made clear. I think the most important thing he said in his few remarks was that the cost of living escalator being provided by this legislation is not a substitute for an adjustment in the basic rate of pensions. I trust that applies to all pensions and allowances, those under the Pension Act, under the War Veterans Allowance Act and under the other pieces of veterans legislation. As the minister must know, because there have been some press releases already from veterans organizations, the notion that this 3.6 per cent increase might be what the minister has been talking about lately when he has referred to possible increases in veterans pensions has been very annoying, and veterans have said that this is not good enough. They are absolutely right and the minister has answered that he agrees.

I said the same thing earlier to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), that the cost of living increase to be added to the basic $80 pension must not be a substitute for increasing that basic $80. I thank the Minister of Veterans Affairs for making it clear that the escalation, according to the cost of living, being provided in this piece of legislation is an extra and not something that is offered in substitution for an adjustment in the basic rates.

I trust that the review of the basic rates which is going on will be pursued diligently. I suppose that if the minister is going to stay with his determination not to run in the next election it means he does not have to go out on the campaign hustings. He can still be Minister of Veterans Affairs until the date of the next election, so he can stay in Ottawa and see to it that the department works hard on this question of basic rates.

I plead that when the department is discussing basic rates it should consider not only the disability rates under the Pension Act but also the basic rates set out in the War Veterans Allowance Act and the rates of various other allowances. The minister is moving his head to indicate that that is correct. Even though I seem to be spelling it out in full, Mr. Speaker, I think it is most important that it be spelled out. If the minister had not said what he did, we would be blasting him now. It is extremely good to see that these cost of living increases, to be made annually on a statutory basis, will not now or in the future be a substitute for an increase in the basic rates.

I still make the same comment about escalation in relation to this bill that I made in relation to the old age security pension. I still do not think it is good enough to escalate only according to the rise in the cost of living. That is better than no escalation at all. It is better than an escalation limited to 2 per cent. But I think our veterans in particular are entitled to share in the increased standard of living and that some day we will have to tie this escalation to a better formula than the rise in the cost of living.

A second note I made was to ask whether these increases would apply to all the pensions and allowances, and two I had in mind were the special incapacity allowance and the treatment allowance. By mental telepathy, or perhaps just by coincidence, the minister mentioned both of them and underlined the fact that what is being proposed in this bill is provision to escalate, according to the cost of living formula, all the allowances that are paid under any and all of the statutes respecting veterans.

Those were two of the points that I noted down. The third was one that I spoke about this morning when we were debating Bill C-207, the bill to amend the Old Age Security Act, namely, the question of the ceiling on the permissible income that applies to recipients of the war veterans allowance. As I said this morning, Mr. Speaker, if one looks only at the terms of Bill C-208 there is a terrible deficiency because all it permits is for the permissible income ceiling to be increased by the same number of dollars that the allowance payable is increased as a result of the application of the formula. A single veteran's maximum allowance is $121, and 3.6 per cent of that is only $4.35. A married veteran's maximum allowance is $201, and 3.6 per cent of that is only $7.23. If that is all that were to happen, if permissible income ceilings were to be increased only by those figures, then we would have the war veterans allowance recipient getting no advantage from the $15 or $30 increase in the guaranteed income supplement provided by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his legislation.

The minister has met that point most satisfactorily. He tells us that an order in council will be sought to exempt the extra $15 or extra $30 from the provisions respecting the ceiling, in the same way as for a number of years the 2 per cent addition has been exempted. This means, if I took the minister correctly—I want to get one more nod of the head from him—that in addition to the provision in the bill itself for raising the ceiling by $4.35 single and $7.23 married, there will be an order in council raising it by $15 or $30 so that the war veterans allowance recipient this time will get both. He will get the 3.6 per cent increase in the allowance he is receiving, and he will also get the benefit of the extra $15 under the guaranteed income supplement, which means that this year the single war veterans allowance recipient who is at the maximum can anticipate an increase of $19.35—that is, $15 plus $4.35—and the married war veterans allowance recipient who is at the maximum can anticipate an increase of $37.23, the $30 guaranteed income supplement and the $7.23 increase in the war veterans allowance as a result of this bill. If the minister will just nod his head to that, I will be very happy to call it four o'clock.

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the minister nods to anything, I shall have to call it four o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I just ask the minister to be ready to nod his head when we come back to this bill on Tuesday. Four o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

Marine Resources Development Study

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

FISHERIES

SUGGESTED IN-DEPTH STUDY OF MARINE RESOURCES AND THEIR DEVELOPMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the development, encouragement and maintenance of a co-ordinated, comprehensive, and long-range national program for the recovery and use of the resources of Canada's sea coast waters and continental shelves; and to this end, effectively utilize the scientific and engineering knowledge and skills of the public service and government agencies and co-operate with private investment enterprise in the exploration, technological development and industrial use of the resources of the marine environment of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate for the third time in the last two years an opportunity to address a few remarks to the chamber on the question of the resource that is the ocean around us. I first raised this matter on November 30, 1970, I had an opportunity to deal with it again on December 3, 1971, and I appreciate this further opportunity today.

In a world where the natural resources of the land are becoming more scarce, and where the pervading threat of famine is constant, the ocean and all its possibilities take on a new light. Throughout world history the ocean has played a major role in the life of countries. It has been alternately an avenue for transport in global commerce, a natural barrier contributing to national security and independence, and an arena for conflict. In the seventies the ocean is again emerging at the centre of world power. Not only are submarine missile systems a most important, if not the most important, component of military power nowadays but growing interest in the resources of the continental shelf and the possibility of exploiting these resources on a commercial scale opens up the perspective of a scramble for the sea between nations. In such a context, the whole nature of the sea is altered. However, if the resources of the ocean carry with them frightening consequences, they also generate positive economic effects. The present trend of countries toward the exploitation of the resources of the continental shelf, for example, opens up new, wide possibilities.

For a country such as Canada, where the continental shelf covers an estimated 1,470,000 square miles—an area equivalent to 38 per cent of the total land and freshwater area of the country—the future seems bright. For once, the east coast shall not be excluded from that bright future for its continental shelf covers an estimated area of 430,000 square miles, or over twice the immediately adjacent area of the four Atlantic provinces.

The mineral potential of the ocean certainly lives up to expectations. It is estimated that each cubic mile of sea water contains about 166 million tons of mineral salts; and when one considers that the ocean contains 317 million cubic miles of water, the resources seem astonishing. Chlorine and sodium constitute 84 per cent of these salts; another 9 per cent is constituted by five other elements, magnesium, sulphur, calcium, potassium and bromine, and some 50 or more elements make up the remainder.

Marine Resources Development Study

But even more impressive are the unexplored resources of the ocean bed. Manganese nodules from the deep ocean floor, for example, have been estimated by Dr. John Mero to contain, in total, enough copper to supply industry for 6,000 years, aluminum for 20,000 years and manganese for 400,000 years at the 1960 rate of consumption. Even in our progressive age, the age of change, these proportions seem quite astonishing and astounding. The ocean is also very interesting in the field of oil and gas exploitation. These two elements represent more than 90 per cent, by value, of all minerals obtained from the ocean and have the greatest potential for the near future.

At the moment, offshore sources are responsible for 17 per cent of the oil and 6 per cent of the natural gas produced by western or non-communist countries. Projections indicate that by 1980 a third of the oil production—four times the present output of 6.5 million barrels a day—will come from the ocean. The increase in gas production is expected to be comparable. These projections are particularly interesting for Canada. Indeed, while the actual exploration of oil is still at an early stage, research and geophysical surveys have been carried out for 20 years now by such institutions as the Geological Survey of Canada, the Bedford Institute, and Dalhousie University.

In 1960 the first offshore permits were issued for oil exploration, and since then the petroleum industry has spent millions of dollars on actual exploration, construction of rigs, and so on. The first wells drilled six years ago, two off the west coast, two on the Grand Banks and one on Sable Island off the east coast of Nova Scotia, have demonstrated to us the capability for which we are striving. We now know, for example, that all the land on the continental shelf off the east coast, and particularly within the jurisdiction of the four Atlantic provinces, is under exploration permits. This is an indication of the fact that we are indeed striving.

With this accrued emphasis on the mineral resources of the ocean, techniques in diving and in living in the sea take on new light and importance. Progress has been impressive in the last few decades. While the nineteenth century saw the first practical versions of the modern, closed diving suit, scuba apparatus and the development of the submarine in its modern form, the twentieth century has seen technological advances of all kinds from the bathyscaphe to the aqualung, from saturation diving to the underwater bases of Conshelf and Sealab. It also saw the first nuclear submarine, Nautilus, put out to sea in 1955, and the deepest descent in the ocean—a descent to 35,800 feet on the floor of the Marianas Trench—in 1960 by two men, Jacques Piccard and Lieutenant Don Welsh.

At the moment, basic means to explore and utilize the undersea world are considered the prime requisites of marine technology. These range from survey equipment to power sources, from materials for more reliable equipment to mooring systems, buoys and surface support platforms, from biomedicine progress to environmental information. Considerable technology already exists for the penetration by man himself, assisted by various devices, to depths ranging from 500 to 1,000 feet. The United States commission on marine science, engineering and resources considers that it is realistically possible for the United States to utilize the continental shelf and slope to depths of 2,000 feet within ten years, and to achieve a similar capability to depths of 20,000 feet within 30 years. This advanced technology does not in itself produce significant changes in industry, but it certainly opens up new avenues. Desalination, sub-bottom and deep water mining, power generation from waves, currents, tides and thermal differences are only a few examples of future possibilities.

What does Canada need to do or focus on in the future? Certainly research is very important to explore new possibilities and to find ways of exploiting the resources already discovered. And, as both the Economic Council of Canada and the Science Council of Canada have stated, research in Canada adds to productivity and profit in industry. At present, the federal government spends about 7 per cent of its research and development budget on marine science. While such a percentage seems high when one considers that marine research represents only 1 per cent of the national research and development expenditure in Great Britain and West Germany, it is not enough.

The federal money is channelled mainly through three departments, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Fisheries and the Department of Transport. Basic research has been successfully undertaken but very little effort and expenditure has yet been put on methods of exploiting the resources of the sea itself and the continental shelf. Such practical applications as continental shelf laboratories, deep exploration submersible systems and test facilities should be included in the present study with respect to marine science.

However, while research is central to Canadian development of the continental shelf, a clear statement of Canadian goals in the field of marine resources is very much needed to provide guidelines for future development. Our southern neighbour, the United States, has already made extensive examination of the uses of the sea in relation to national goals. Indeed, the commission on marine science, engineering and resources reported to the President in 1969 in a document entitled "Our Nation and the Sea". The commission clearly stated: "The nation's stake in the uses of the sea is synonymous with the promise and threat of tomorrow".

Translating that to our own scene, for Canadians the promise lies in new economic opportunities, a great stimulus to business, industry and employment and new sources of minerals and food. It lies, also, in expanding the nation's horizons and in strengthening its international position and peaceful collaboration among nations. The threat lies in the potential destruction of large parts of the coastal environment and in the further deterioration of recreational facilities, coastal shell fisheries and fisheries on the high seas. There is also the threat that unbridled international competition for the sea's resources may provoke conflict. That we do not want. I suggest that with careful and prudent planning such extremes can be avoided.

The report does not confine itself to defining the relationship between the uses of the sea and national goals; it also sets out definite goals that the United States should aim at fulfilling in the next 30 years. Among these goals is the capability to utilize the continental shelf and slope to depths of 2,000 feet within ten years and a similar capability to depths of 20,000 feet within the next 30 years. Such a definitive statement has been avoided in Canada and this, I think, is regrettable. It is high time that our country incorporated in its national goals a consciousness for the sea and a development plan to exploit the resources of the ocean. That plan must be developed in a manner which will meet our demands in respect of the ecology of the areas I have mentioned.

The 1970 report of the committee on marine science and technology could very well be used as a starting point in a major program of marine science. The committee suggested various mechanisms in the process of the formulation and implementation of a national marine policy. In my opinion, the first stage should be reached through a widely representative national board on marine activity that would make recommendations to the minister responsible to the House for science policy. The implementation and co-ordination of such policy should then be the responsibility of bodies or agencies with marine or maritime interests, such as, for example, the existing Canadian Committee on Oceanography.

I might add that the Canadian Development Corporation should be brought into the picture. This Crown corporation would be responsible for organizing marine development and innovation projects in industry. It would also be responsible for the rapid establishment of a solid technological base and for the promotion of marketing products and services at home and abroad. Marine environmental problems would be kept under review by the proposed environmental council reporting directly to the office of the Prime Minister. It is only through such structures, Mr. Speaker, that Canada will be able to set up a concrete and definite marine policy.

Given the growing importance of the ocean strategically and commercially and the vastness of the continental shelf, a great potential lies ahead and we should take steps now to ensure a rational and profitable exploitation of these resources. The time of decision is here. Multiple pressures force the nation to turn to the sea and multiple opportunities await the seaward-turning.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion before the House in the name of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) is most interesting. If I may give an outline of it in precis form, it says that the government should consider developing a national program for the use of the resources of our sea and marine environment. I think that in his speech the hon. member gave an excellent outline of his ideas and told us about the potential of our sea bed and marine resources.

I am sure hon. members are aware of the vast resources of Canada's continental shelf and of the resources adjacent to our sea coasts under the surface of the sea. I am referring to mineral resources and particularly to oil about which the public has heard so much lately. These resources are to be found in the Arctic, off the west coast and off the east coast, the part of our country about which the hon. member was speaking. Of course, an equally important part of these resources is to be found in the waters themselves, namely, the fisheries resources which have been important to this country historically and still hold an important place in our economic life.

These resources, however, are under pressure from many sides. This pressure comes principally from overharvesting and the destruction through pollution of the life-giving qualities of this milieu. It is this last threat that I wish to deal with briefly this afternoon. It is not feasible within the short time allotted, or even if there were considerable time at our disposal, as well as a large staff, to begin scratching much more than the surface of the subject of marine pollution.

Pollution in the coastal ocean—I refer to that part of the ocean over the continental shelf—arises from injections of waste by industries, municipalities, towns and villages along our maritime coasts as well as from the discharge of inland pollutants through tributaries and rivers flowing into the ocean. Considering the immense volume of the ocean and the relatively puny amounts of waste generated by man, it is surprising that these wastes cause such profound changes in the coastal ocean. The coastal ocean is relatively shallow and narrow and consequently there is a limited amount of water in the region to absorb the waste flowing into it.

Although waste disposal operations in coastal ocean areas are not a worldwide problem, they are serious for many developed countries. The coastal ocean is especially rich in marine life, providing most of the world's fish production and about 10 per cent of the world's protein. Coastal and estuarine waters and marshlands provide the nutrients, nursing areas and spawning grounds for two-thirds of the world's entire fisheries harvests. Seven of the ten most valuable species of the American commercial fisheries catch spend part of their lives in estuarine waters.

The high productivity of estuarine areas is illustrated by the following example. The maximum yield of Georgia estuarine waters has been estimated at ten tons of dry organic matter per acre per year, nearly twice that of the best agricultural land and seven times that of the Grand Banks. Pollution is an ever increasing threat to the estuaries. Land filling, dredging, dumping and marsh draining have seriously reduced these areas. In the past 20 years in the United States, dredging and filling alone have destroyed 7 per cent of that nations important fish and wildlife estuarine habitats.

The reasons for the pressures on coastal zone usage are clear. There is a major shift of population from rural areas to the cities and many are located in coastal regions in one form or another, either salt water or fresh water. Private housing has and will continue to exercise the greatest demand for shore property, but there are other needs that must be met. Heavy industry, for example, traditionally is located on the water's edge where it seeks a cheap source of industrial water and transportation. It also provides a simple solution to waste disposal problems and ready access to raw material. Pollution abatement requirements have lessened somewhat the desirability of a waterfront industrial location, but recent trends in shipping have increased the demand for deep water frontage.

Deep water access will be essential to the future competitiveness of many of our Canadian industries.

Electrical power production has constantly increased over the past, roughly doubling each decade. This means that by the year 2000 we will require approximately eight times more hydroelectric energy power than we have at the present time. Fossil and nuclear-fueled generating facilities require vast amounts of cooling water, and the location of these plants must take into account the problems and potential benefits of warming the local waters in relation to ecological balances, recreation, and so on.

We know there is serious pollution in estuaries and that coastal fisheries and shellfish beds are contaminated. We do not have the evidence at hand to state categorically that pollution in causing damage to the ocean itself. We do know it poses serious threats to marine nursing areas and, potentially, to ocean fisheries. International attention has been attracted to this problem. Scientists are involved in and working with various committees and international organizations such as the Food and Agricultural Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization and the World Meteorological Organization.

This week, Mr. Maurice Strong, a prominent Canadian who is Secretary General to the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, was in Ottawa. Hon. members will have read in the newspapers that Mr. Strong is pursuing very energetically his goal to achieve a greater degree of international co-operation in this field. However, the newspapers did not highlight the fact that Mr. Strong voiced satisfaction with Canada's role preparatory to the conference. Mr. Strong said, in effect, that to date Canada has been one of the major contributors. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Corbin), who could not be here today, in his capacity as chairman of the preparatory committee recently toured the country to receive briefs from interested groups and individuals. Their opinions will help form a strong Canadian position at the conference.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that while I agree on the importance of effectively utilizing the scientific and engineering knowledge and skills of the public service and government agencies in order to maximize the use and protection of the resources of the marine environment of Canada, I consider that the degree of co-operation already achieved is impressive. This country is not only a leader in this field but it has accepted and has played a major role internationally.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that this motion would be debated this afternoon. If I had kept in touch I might have done the same sort of work that obviously the previous two speakers have done. I should like to compliment the mover of the motion, and the hon. member who just completed his remarks, on the work they did in preparing their speeches.

I questioned the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Gillespie) about what Canada should be looking at in a specialized sense. The minister listed this field as being one with great potential. He stated that we had sufficient expertise and a great deal of fresh water and sea coast, as well as areas where the water is not very deep, to enable Canada to specialize in developing new industries. I am thinking of the specialized area of oil drilling; this might be one area in which Canada could contribute significantly. We might even make economic use of this expertise in order to obtain benefits beyond those which other nations have achieved.

We have a submarine which might be used in drilling offshore. I am also thinking of the problems in this area. We can see the need for a program such as is suggested. I talked to an oil man just a few days ago. He told me about some of the problems of his company with regard to drilling for oil. He spoke about the problems they may have drilling in the middle of Hudson Bay, where the water is very cold. An oil spill there would obviously create a great problem. These people are learning much as they go along.

I think there is merit in the motion before us, in the sense that the knowledge gained by one company might be used by another, particularly when we consider the amount of oil and natural gas in Canada, the Arctic Islands, Hudson Bay and off the east and west coasts. A co-ordinated study such as the hon. member suggests would be very valuable to all concerned. I am dealing with only one area, oil. An over-all study of the problems associated with drilling for oil would be worth while, especially when we consider the Arctic Islands and the great stretches of water between them. When you have a natural resource, you take advantage of it. This is one of the reasons we should support the hon. member's motion.

I am a Saskatchewan farmer and am therefore not very familiar with fish farming. However, we do have fish in our Prairie slews. To date fish farming has been only an experimental program, a conversation piece and a bit of fun for the people involved. The results have been good, and I believe that if we adopted this approach on a larger scale to the waters of our coasts it could bring huge returns in an economic sense. But we must apply ourselves to a consistent program of fish farming.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I read carefully the motion of the hon. member which, incidentally, deals with a topic of the highest importance for the Canadian economy, namely the better use of our marine resources and others which will inevitably contribute much to our economy.

I have no intention of treating lightly the motion before the House this afternoon, but may I be allowed to ask where the mover of this motion has been these past few years. I understand he has dealt with mines, especially offshore deposits, but where was he when the government made giant strides in the control of Canadian fisheries? Either, he does not wish to recognize what Canada has done, or else he was not interested in that field of almost daily concern to the Canadians and epecially the government.

Dealing only with these resources which, in my view, are the real wealth of the sea, that is the living resources, I shall make a quick review of the initiatives taken by

Canada, both through our laws and regulations, the participation of the federal Department of Fisheries in studies and discussions with national fishing organizations, and through its very active and continuous participation in the proceedings of international agencies such as ICNAF, the Conference on the Law of the Sea, etc.

Fisheries, Mr. Speaker, as all hon. members know, have a very special and privileged position in the history of Canada. This is the most ancient Canadian primary industry. I suggest to the numerous members present this afternoon that the first international agreement between Canada—as an independent country—and a foreign country was the halibut treaty signed with the United States, in 1923, for the protection of halibut reserves in the Pacific ocean.

Moreover, the Fisheries Research Board of Canada, created in 1898, is the oldest research organization sponsored by the Canadian government.

The importance of commercial fishing in Canada—it has to be admitted—has relatively decreased for some time and the advent of the industrial era which thanks to God invaded our country brought about scores of industries of all kinds that took away an important part of the people who were practising agriculture and fishing.

In spite of the considerable industrialization that our country has known, fisheries remain, Mr. Speaker, of very great economic importance for our coastal provinces. Canadian fishermen catch over 150 species of fish or shell-fish around our harbours on the Atlantic Northwest and the Pacific Northwest. Fishermen and the Canadian fishing industry have invested $200 million for the purchase of boats, equipment and gear of various sorts and investments in land facilities exceed $100 million. Some 80,000 Canadians are employed in an industry directly related to fishing. Of those, roughly 30,000 depend directly on the catches for their livelihood.

Mr. Speaker, it is advisable to point out at this stage that, for a large number of fishermen from the east coast of Canada, including those in my riding, Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine, this direct reliance on fisheries is total, since it is their sole source of income. Hence, the pressing necessity to take adequate measures even if they are strict.

If we want to assure to an important sector of the Canadian population a continuous and sufficient supply of this natural resource for future generations, the federal government and the provincial governments, which in some provinces have jurisdiction over fisheries, have the duty to take action.

As I said earlier, Canada and the Fisheries Department in particular have certainly not been lagging in that field. You will remember, for instance, that after the failure of the Law of the Sea Conference of 1958 and 1960 to settle the issue of the extent of the territorial sea and the limits of jurisdiction over fisheries, despite efforts and campaigns conducted by Canada in favour of the proposal establishing the territorial sea of 3 miles with the addition of the fishing area of 9 miles and then the formula of 6 miles plus 6 miles, the Canadian government did not hesitate to go forward.

Marine Resources Development Study

Those who were sitting in the House in 1964—and you were one of them, Mr. Speaker, although you are primarily concerned with the sporting point of view—will remember that as a result of this failure, the Liberal government elected in 1963 and the Minister of Fisheries, hon. Hédard Robichaud had suggested the adoption of an exclusive fishing area of 9 miles contiguous to the 3 miles of the territorial sea. Thus, Canada has been one of the strongest advocates of this proposal.

As the many members present here this afternoon are aware, this courageous action of the Canadian government has not been readily accepted throughout the world. However, we can say that the contiguous area established in 1964 to protect our domestic fisheries is now recognized under international law.

But the latest developments in the field of the fishing industry have been marked by the sophistication of fishing boats and equipment both in Canada and in the other countries involved in this industry. Moreover, the alarming extermination of certain species meant imminent extinction for some of them because of overexploitation by Canadian fishermen and well-equipped foreign fishermen who came and still come with huge factory ships to rake the bottom of our seas and catch this natural ressources, to the extent that the government and particularly our fishermen grew exceedingly disturbed. This demonstrated that the 12 mile exclusive limit for fishing, excellent 10 or 15 years ago when we had affluence, no longer has its original magic character.

Faced with the indecision of international organizations as to the establishment of efficent legislation intended to protect our fisheries in general, particularly our off-shore fisheries, the Canadian government felt once more that it had to take unilateral while always bearing in mind the interests of the fishermen, of the Canadian citizen and consequently of Canada as a whole.

Therefore we have seen this government introduce a series of amendments to the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act establishing exclusively Canadian fishing zones in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, for instance, as well as in the Bay of Fundy, the Dixon Entrance, the Hecate Strait, the Queen Charlotte Sound on the Pacific coast. At the same time and under the same legislation, Canads extended its territorial waters from 3 to 12 miles.

Of course, this Canadian initiative has not been accepted by all countries. There are varying opinions in this respect. Canada could have gone farther and claimed historically and geographically, full sovereignty on what is known as the "special water expanse". But the government has elected to guarantee our exclusive jurisdiction over fishing and, through another legislation, over pollution control in order to avoid any clashes that would jeopardize the forthcoming 1973 Conference on the Law of the Sea.

On the other hand, the interests of other countries directly affected by Canada's action have been taken into account and negotiations have been initiated with them with a view to obtaining that they phase out their traditional fishing practices in Canada's offshore waters.

Today, Mr. Speaker, it is heartening to note that the negotiations in regard to fishing, aiming at the withdrawal of some countries that have been traditionally hosts in our waters are making headway and that many agreements have already been signed with these countries whereby they accept to withdraw from our waters beginning in 1978 or 1980.

• (1640)

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government's position at this Conference on the Law of the Sea could be outlined, but I believe that other hon. members are very anxious to expound their views on the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), which has allowed us to show up the federal government's policy.

Much has been left undone, as I said before. However, I believe the Canadian government has adopted a positive stance and is aware that our fisheries must be protected so that our economy, our fishermen and Canadian citizens who derive a livelihood from this industry may continue to support their families in this way, and that action must be taken which, while it may sometimes seem drastic, is in the best interest of Canadians and Canada.

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the motion of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and as my colleague from Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) gave such a good start to the debate on fisheries, which are one of our main resources in eastern Canada, I should also like to continue in the same vein.

As the hon. member has indicated, the government has taken many steps to protect our coastal waters and show that Canadians are interested in Canada's continental shelf. This country is ahead of many others in this field.

It is well known by all that many problems arise both on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts with respect to mineral and marine resources development.

The province of Quebec and, as was pointed out earlier by the mover of this motion, that of Nova Scotia have been exploring the marine subsoil for several years in the hope of finding oil. Those provinces want to derive high revenues, some day, from offshore oil fields. However, if there were revenues to be obtained, a conflict was to be expected between provincial and federal jurisdictions concerning offshore rights.

The federal government took the lead and offered to share with the provinces any revenues which might be derived from offshore mining. This may be the best way to solve the conflict, since under present conditions, particularly where regional economic expansion is concerned, the Canadian government levies even higher taxes from the have provinces to distribute them to the have-not provinces of the Atlantic and Quebec.

Therefore, if revenues have to be shared between the have and the have-not provinces, any revenues that might be derived from offshore mining in Canada will have to benefit all Canadians and all provinces.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the motion before us is to allow the federal government to maintain on a national scale a long term and well coordinated program for the collection and use of our coastal water resources. The federal government must continue its research operations aiming at the maximum utilization of the resources along the Canadian shore line. But as always the scientists' first priority must be the protection of our environment. In fact, the hon. member mentioned this in his motion.

At the annual meeting of the National Council of Marine Leagues in Canada which was held in Ottawa on April 14, 1972, Mr. A. W. May from the Department of the Environment made a speech on the conservation and protection of our marine resources, and his introduction is worthy of mention. Mr. Way stated, and I quote:

• (1650)

[English]

The wholesome sea is at her gates, her gates both east and west.

The wholesomeness of the sea was taken for granted when J. A. Ritchie's words were inscribed in the stone above the main entrance to the centre block of our Parliament Buildings some fifty years ago, but is now a matter of some concern. Expressions of this concern from a wide variety of sources have resulted in widespread public awareness and sympathy for the problem but, perhaps inevitably, there is some backlash and a feeling in some quarters that the problems are overstated and overemphasized. I suggest that they are not. Although I may be preaching to the converted in this forum, I hope I will at least leave hon. members with a more detailed appreciation of the problems we face in protecting the marine environment and its resources, and the attitudes and actions of the Canadian government in meeting these problems.

With the exception of a very narrow strip adjacent to coastlines, the oceans have never belonged to anybody. Their use for various purposes has been free to all, and the concept of freedom of the seas is a very old one in international law. This freedom has traditionally included freedom for ship navigation and overflights, freedom to use the sea bed for cable laying, freedom to fish and freedom to conduct military operations. As the nations of the world look more and more to the sea as a source of minerals and of protein, as well as a convenient place to get rid of domestic and industrial wastes, it has become apparent that the old concept of freedom of the seas includes freedom to pollute and freedom to overfish and must be called into question.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on account of that freedom to pollute our waters and to overfish on the continental shelf, as Mr. May so well pointed out in his statement, eastern Canada is faced with a serious problem: commercial overfishing by certain countries in the North Atlantic.

North Atlantic salmon catches have been decreasing alarmingly in the last few years. The number of catches, in commercial as well as in sport fishing, decreased by 45 per cent in 1971 compared to previous years.

The federal and provincial governments have been worried for many years about such a decrease and many people expressed their opinion about that.

Following years of studies of our coastal waters and of the eastern continental shelf, it was discovered that such a decrease was due to commercial overfishing in the North Atlantic as well as to the introduction, during the sixties, of boats equipped with drifting nets in the waters near Port aux Basques, in Cabot strait.

The Gaspé salmon that could escape from Danish nets off the coast of Greenland was caught by Newfoundland fishermen. The Gaspé people are blaming the Newfoundland fishermen as much as Denmark for overfishing.

Danish and Newfoundland fishermen are draining this resource which reproduces more in Quebec because of its numerous salmon rivers, several of which are being developed at great cost by the province.

Mr. Speaker, during the few minutes remaining to me, I would not want to stray from the subject. It is worth mentioning that our coastal waters and continental shelf contain an important resource, marine life, which includes salmon.

Fisheries are undoubtedly one of the greatest resources in eastern Canada. There is one species of fish which travels thousands of miles off our coast. For those hon. members who do not know about the habits of the Atlantic salmon, I would like to say that its spawning grounds are to be found in the inland waters of the North Shore, Gaspé, Newfoundland and New Brunswick. When about three years old, salmon travel to the coast of Greenland and they return, at six or seven years, to spawn in the rivers where they were hatched. In the course of this four-year trip to the North Atlantic it used the Belle-Isle and Cabot straits to reach the international waters.

I avail myself of this opportunity to tell you that fifty years ago, salmon could be found in Great Britain, Europe and the Scandinavian countries. As these rivers are polluted as well as those in the northern United States, we now find clean waters only in the rivers of Quebec, New Brunswick and Newfoundland.

A hundred years ago, it was customary to find salmon at the mouth of the Hudson River, in New York, as well as in the St. Lawrence, Rideau and Ottawa Rivers. We could even find salmon near Toronto.

The International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries which represents 14 countries, was requested to study this problem of overfishing. The Danes were fishing Canadian salmon without violating any international law. We had to convince them to put an end to the excessive fishing that they were carrying out since 1965.

The Canadian argument at the 1969 Conference was that "the country where salmon spawns should be the only one constantly responsible for its fate, no matter where that fish happens to be at a given time". Consequently, this argument was dismissed by Denmark and West Germany.

The review conducted by the Department of Fisheries on salmon born in Miramichi River shows that 44 per cent of the catches were made by the Danes, and 19 per cent by Newfoundlanders.

As the Danes up to now have been quite reluctant to accept quotas, and since the Quebec government has taken steps to apply the regulations that proved necessary to preserve the few fishes left and allow them to spawn in the rivers, on March 14 last, in the committee on fisheries and forestry, I asked the minister to apply rather strict regulations to the fishermen in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. More recently, the minister announced that restrictions were to be imposed on fishing south of Newfoundland as well as in the Cabot Strait.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on talking about our well-known salmon fishing industry but as it is five o'clock, I think it is time for me to conclude, even if I should return to that subject on another occasion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT (EDMONTON WEST)—INCORRECT NEWSPAPER REPORT OF REMARKS CONCERNING GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT INCREASE AND WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last during my remarks on the budget I made a distinct reference concerning the application of the guaranteed income supplement to war veterans receiving the war veterans allowance. I indicated at that time there was a strong possibility that most, if not all, recipients of the war veterans allowance who would receive the guaranteed income supplement would not receive the full benefit intended by the legislation. Unfortunately, on Friday a number of newspapers in the country carried a story under a Canadian Press byline which indicated I had expressed the view that the increase in the guaranteed income supplement would reduce war veterans pensions.

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker, there may be some confusion in the mind of the reporter as to what is a war veterans pension and what is a war veterans allowance, but there is clearly no difficulty in the minds of hon. members of the House. I said it was the war veterans allowance and I insist it is the war veterans allowance. I hope that the correction of this erroneous report will receive equal prominence.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STATEMENTS BY MEMBER FOR YORK SOUTH ALLEGEDLY REFLECTING ON JUDGES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I regret the absence of the hon. member for York South, but I can do no other than endeavour to place a motion before the House, which I do with a very heavy heart. As one who has been a member of four of the bars of Canada and an honorary bencher of two and who has had his share of lawsuits in the courts, I have never found it necessary to attribute the results to a politically partisan court. I admit that Judges are not above criticism and they must be subjected to the constant searchlight of public opinion. But to condemn the judiciary blanket-wise as men virtually without integrity cannot be justified. That is the reason for the motion I wish to move under Standing Order 43. Such criticism can only lead to national chaos and lawlessness, if not worse.

I will not say any more. I am being as restrained as it is possible to be under the circumstances. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 concerning the blanket condemnation of the judiciary by the hon. member for York South on Saturday when, in a speech to the national conference of the United Steelworkers of America, he is reported to have said:

> Almost everyone with few exceptions . . . the moment a defeated Liberal or Conservative is appointed to the bench, he thinks he's God. That's the characteristic of a judge who sits on the bench.

That means that the judiciary, unable to protect itself, is not independent. If that were so, the rule of law would become a memory, and the very vitals of our national well-being would be destroyed. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

> That the subject matter of public statements made by the hon. member, and in particular those which are of a disparaging nature to the integrity and independence of the bench, be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has some doubts as to the procedural acceptability of a motion of this kind under Standing Order 43. I have the impression that the motion has implications of a charge against an hon. member, and that can hardly be made by means of a motion under Standing Order 43. I would think it would have to be made by way of a question of privilege making a specific charge against an hon. member which would then be debated in the House and, if found acceptable for referral to a committee, would be so referred.

At the same time, anything can be brought to the House for approval by way of unanimous consent. But before making a ruling on whether we have before us a motion under Standing Order 43 or a motion under Standing Order 17, I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wishes to rise on the point.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say that if this motion can be presented only on the basis of unanimous consent, we are prepared to give consent so far as this party is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): However, Sir, that is merely consent to have the motion presented. I should like to make it clear that there are one or two of our members who would like to speak to it. If there is unanimous consent to the putting of the motion, perhaps the time when it is called for debate might be arranged by agreement among the parties.

Administration of Justice

Mr. Speaker: I still feel that the issue is so important that the Chair should be given the opportunity to consider whether it should be debated in the House by way of a question of privilege or by way of a censure motion under Standing Order 43. It is certainly a point which is of interest to all hon. members, and I am prepared to accept the guidance of hon. members in this respect. Now that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has given his views, perhaps other hon. members would like to give their views on the point of order, not on the substance of the matter. I would certainly be guided by their views.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put it simply that this House, when operating under the rule of unanimous consent, is the master of its own destiny and can do anything. With great respect, Sir, I put it that way. If the House feels free to do so, it can make an order of this kind so there can be a debate, and we can incorporate into it all that needs to be done to cure any defects that there might be, although I am not admitting that there are any defects.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of a charge being raised. It is simply the fact that we, in parliament having legislative responsibilities as members of the House of Commons, must realize that members of the bench, while they are subject to criticism and must always be so, must not have levied against them the suggestion that what they do in most cases is to make decisions that are not above reproach and not according to law. Such a view denies the rule of law, and acceptance of that would be the end so far as government in this country is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These comments go beyond the strictly procedural aspect of the matter. I am wondering whether other hon. members have additional comments.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, so far as we are concerned we are quite agreeable to having this motion put by unanimous consent if necessary, and we are agreeable to spending some time today in debate on the motion, but I would be very reluctant to agree to an arrangement today which would deprive the House of continuing the debate on the budget and reaching a vote this evening. I would be quite agreeable, on behalf of the government, to any arrangement that would provide for putting this motion today with a limited time for debate, and if the motion is not dealt with by the end of that time period we would then move on to the budget.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for York South should have the opportunity of being here.

Mr. MacEachen: The right hon. gentleman mentions that it would be somewhat indelicate to proceed—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Improper.

Mr. MacEachen: —with the debate in the absence of the hon. member involved. Probably that leads us to the conclusion that we can agree to the acceptance of the motion but have it debated at a later time by arrangement.

Mr. Baldwin: By discussions.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. MacEachen: We can have discussions among the House leaders.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I support what the government House leader has just said. If the House is agreed unanimously that this motion should be put, then I think Your Honour is protected and you are in a position to put it, but I do feel that the time to debate it should be the subject of arrangements among the various House leaders. I agree that the hon. member for York South ought himself to be here. He will be here this evening, and he will be here tomorrow. We could arrange amongst ourselves when the debate would be held, but we seem to be showing unanimity on the presentation of the motion.

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair still has serious doubts as to this kind of motion. May I point out again that if hon. members want to do something unanimously they have the right to do so but, as hon. members know from experience, from time to time the Chair has refused to put a motion to the House because in his view the motion was not in proper form. The Chair has to make a determination as to whether this motion really is a motion of privilege which ought to be moved under Standing Order 17 rather than a motion under Standing Order 43. I think we could get ourselves into quite serious difficulty under the terms of Standing Order 43 if hon. members try to bring matters to the House and to initiate debates which are essentially debates that will invite hon. members to consider the conduct of individual members of the House. It is such a serious matter that I still have reservations.

On the other hand, I am faced with the situation that the government House leader, the House leader of the official opposition and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, speaking apparently on behalf of every member of the House, feel that the matter should be proceeded with. I hesitate to stand in the way of all this unanimity and say that there should not be a debate. What I propose to do is to hold the matter in abeyance for an hour or two so that hon. members may consider when and how such a debate, if it is going to take place, ought to take place and then advise the Chair of the result of their deliberations and what the unanimous consent is of which they would like the Chair to apprise hon. members.

For the moment the Chair will hold the matter in abeyance on the understanding that there will be discussion between the representatives of the parties.

OIL

PROPOSED TAPS TANKER ROUTE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, because of the high degree of unanimity expressed by hon. members I too seek to move a motion under Standing Order 43 about an extremely important matter. This motion relates to the proposal to move oil by tanker down the coast of British Columbia from Valdez Bay to Cherry Point and the danger for Canada and British Columbia in particular. Accordingly I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That this House herewith declares that the movement of oil by tanker along the coast of British Columbia from Valdez in Alaska to Cherry Point in Washington is inimical to Canadian interests, especially those of an environmental nature,

And further, that this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the government of the United States of America in order that that government be apprised of the concern that the House of Commons of Canada has about the proposed movement of oil.

If I receive unanimous consent, in order not to transgress upon the budget debate or any other matters we are quite prepared to let the motion come to a vote without debate.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard this motion which requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether there is unanimity. Perhaps I will inquire again whether there is unanimity. If hon. members are opposed they should make it clear by their nays. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I ask you to read the motion again so that the House will be fully aware of its import?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will read the motion, not for the purpose of putting it formally to the House but for the purpose of advising hon. members of its terms:

That this House herewith declares that the movement of oil by tanker along the coast of British Columbia from Valdez in Alaska to Cherry Point in Washington is inimical to Canadian interests especially those of an environmental nature,

And further, that this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the government of the United States of America in order that that government be apprised of the concern that the House of Commons of Canada has about the proposed movement of oil.

I will inquire again whether there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard no nays; therefore I assume there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: We will assume that the motion has been put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

PRIORITY FOR BILL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I hope I am not pressing my luck. I wish to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a question of urgent and pressing necessity. Bearing in mind the dispatch which the House displayed in the consideration of Bill C-207 concerning old age security and in view of the concern of Canadians about the delay in progress on Bill C-170, an act to increase children's allowances which was referred to committee on April 27, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon):

That this House urges the government to give highest priority in its management of government business with respect to Bill C-170 and that consideration of clause by clause study be proceeded with immediately by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bell: What?

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

POST OFFICE

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion under Standing Order 43 arising out of the rejection of the Treasury Board offer on wages and job security by the Council of Postal Unions last week, particularly with reference to the introduction of the principle of regional pay differences. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie):

That at the next sitting of the House the President of the Treasury Board make a statement on motions indicating what steps the government intends to take to get the negotiations back on course.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

INFORMATION CANADA—OPERATING COSTS

Question No. 95—Mr. Marshall:

What were the operating costs of Information Canada as of January 31, 1972?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): For the period April 1, 1971 to January 31, 1972, the operating costs of Information Canada were $5,719,488.82.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—COST FOR DELIVERY OF U.S. MAIL IN CANADA

Question No. 172—Mr. Rose:

1. What is the cost to the Canadian Post Office Department of letters mailed in the United States for delivery in Canada?

[Mr. Speaker.]

2. Is it normal practice for Canadian editions of U.S. magazines to be mailed from the United States to Canadian subscribers?

3. What is the estimated loss of revenue from billings, promotions and reminders sent by Time magazine to Canadian subscribers of their Canadian edition, post marked U.S. postage, Chicago, Illinois?

4. What other Canadian editions of foreign magazines mail their publication billings, promotion, etc. in the United States for delivery in Canada?

5. Has the Post Office Department made any proposals to Time magazine to secure this revenue and, if so, what has been the reaction?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. Information not available. However, statistical samplings will be held in 1973 under the auspices of the Universal Postal Union to determine the imbalance of mail exchanged between countries and when there is an adverse imbalance of traffic, the country of destination will be compensated. This will apply to mails exchanged between the U.S. and Canada.

2. No, to our knowledge it is not normal practice for Canadian editions of U.S. magazines to be mailed from the United States to Canadian subscribers.

3. Information not available.

4. None to our knowledge.

5. Yes, the reaction has been favourable and an early decision on this question is expected.

NON-MEDICAL DRUG USE PROGRAM

Question No. 210—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Has the government sponsored a network of "Non-Medical Drug Use" offices and, if so (a) how many have been opened (b) where are they located?

2. How are these offices funded and in what amounts?

3. How are they staffed and is the Public Service Commission involved in the selection of personnel?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The headquarters office of the Non-Medical Use of Drugs Directorate is located in Ottawa. In addition, there are five regional offices located in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

2. The offices are presently funded from funds voted for the Non-Medical Use of Drugs program.

3. A clerk-secretary is located in each regional office. These employees were selected according to Public Service procedures, and are appointed on a one-year term. With the exception of one officer in the Montreal office, all project officers located within the regional offices have been employed on short-term contracts. This method of employment has been used to respond immediately to urgent demands and to suit the nature of present program demands on these offices.

ABORTIONS

Question No. 311—Mr. Robinson:

1. Has the government calculated the number of extra hospital beds that will be required if the abortion laws are liberalized and, if so, how many extra beds will be required and who will pay for them?

Questions

2. Has the government any information to indicate that extra beds for abortion cases will be supplied at the expense of seriously ill people requiring hospitalization and, if so, how many will be unable to obtain accommodation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. According to practice policy, if the pregnancy is within the first 12 weeks, the abortion is carried out, most likely on an out-patient basis. This would not increase the need for additional hospital in-patient beds. In those cases, however, where the pregnancy is between 12 and 20 weeks, there would be a small but definite increased demand for in-patient service. These patients represent a small but important group when the indications for abortion, e.g., congenital anomalies in the fetus, become manifest later in the pregnancy. Payment for these patients would be made through existent hospital insurance and medical care plans as practiced in the provinces on a shared federal-provincial basis.

2. A therapeutic abortion is an elective procedure which should be performed within certain time limits. In consideration of this fact, hospital admission policies in respect to abortion are structured to either establish a quota of in-patient bed occupancy for these cases or reserve special beds only for this purpose, referring further admission requests for abortion to other hospitals in the community. The administration of the hospital is responsible for admission policies and is consciously aware of the need to retain a number of beds for the unpredictable requirements for admission of seriously ill patients. It is not anticipated that any seriously ill patients would be turned away from any hospital, particularly because of a prior commitment of such hospital to admitting a patient for therapeutic abortion. Provision has been made through planning, to anticipate these eventualities.

PROGRAM OF DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION TO INDUSTRY AND BUSINESS

Question No. 408—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government through Information Canada carry on a program of dissemination of information to industry and business?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Information Canada has no plans at the present time to carry on a program of dissemination of information specifically to industry and business.

*CANADA MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAM—TRAINING AND ALLOWANCE COSTS

Question No. 417—Mr. Rynard:

Were there variations in (a) training costs (b) allowance costs (c) total costs under the Canada Manpower Training Program between the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec during the period April 1971 to January 1972 and, if so, for what reasons?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, may I propose to the hon. member who asked this question that the reply be taken as read, because it is rather long. I further propose that it be incorporated in Hansard for today.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The answer referred to above follows.]

The following material in response to this question is provided for the full fiscal year from April 1, 1971 to March 31, 1972, as this enables more accurate financial figures to be given.

(a) The following are actual allowance payments and costs for the purchase of training based on provincial estimates of cost, and excluding amounts paid to employers under the Training-in-Industry Program:

	Ontario	Quebec
Training costs	$41,990,000	$42,652,000
Allowance costs	44,788,000	55,267,000
Total costs	86,778,000	$97,919,000

(b) The number of persons who were referred to training during 1971/72 was:

	Ontario	Quebec
Full time trainees	56,009	75,349
Part time trainees	1,111	34,298
Total trainees	57,120	109,647

(c) The variation in per diem training costs for the major program elements were the following, based on interim payments to the provinces:

	Ontario	Quebec
Basic Training for Skill Development	7.00	4.65
Language	7.00	7.88
Skill	9.00	8.56

The above figures may change when audits are made as final payments to the provinces are based on actual incurred costs.

(d) Variations in per diem training costs are due to a variety of factors including teachers' salaries, cost of facilities, class size etc.

(e) The variation in allowance costs per day of training provided is the following:

Ontario	Quebec
$9.53	$9.73

(f) Variations in allowance costs per day of training are due to differences in rates, the mix of trainees receiving allowances in different dependency categories, the percentage of trainees receiving allowances and other factors. The maximum and minimum rates at which allowances are payable are established in the AOT Act; The actual rates payable in any province are the subject of an annual consultation with the province concerned.

RED ENSIGNS

Question No. 446—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many Red Ensigns were in the possession of the Department of Public Works on the date the present flag came into existence?

[Mr. Perrault.]

2. How many since have been disposed of to organizations or private individuals?

3. How many are still on hand?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the reply is in three parts. First, on February 15, 1965, the date that the Parliament of Canada proclaimed the Canadian flag for use in Canada and abroad as the distinctive symbol of this country, there existed in the Department of Public Works stock a supply of 11,616 Red Ensigns, most of which were in used and damaged condition. There were in addition a supply of some 8,000 in the stock of the former Department of Defence Production.

In anticipation of requests for the Red Ensign by organizations and individuals wishing to use them for indoor display as historic mementoes, a directive was issued to preserve a reasonable number for this purpose. Used flags were destroyed by fire in 1967 in the accepted and traditional manner. After an appropriate interval to determine the demand for Red Ensigns for mementoes a number were declared surplus and destroyed in the same manner in December 1971 and early January 1972.

2. The remaining stock has been reduced by responding to requests from deserving organizations and individuals. In the period of approximately seven years, some 1,860 flags have been distributed.

3. At the present time, requests average about 20 per year and 749 unused Red Ensigns remain in stock and will continue to be used for this purpose. At the present rate of demand, this stock will not be depleted for a good number of years.

SITUATION IN NORTHERN IRELAND

Question No. 469—Mr. Robinson:

Has Canada been asked by Northern Ireland, the Irish Republic and/or the IRA to mediate in any way the situation in Northern Ireland?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The situation in Northern Ireland is an internal responsibility of the British Government and the Canadian Government has not been asked to mediate. However, during the visit to Ottawa of the Foreign Minister of Ireland in February, we agreed to pass on to the British Government some of his observations on the situation as we had passed on to him comments made to us by the British Government.

IRISH REPUBLICAN ARMY

Question No. 470—Mr. Robinson:

Has the government requested the Irish Republic to exert some control and responsibility over the IRA?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian Government has not requested the Government of the Republic of Ireland to exercise control and responsibility over the IRA. This is an internal affair of the Irish Government.

DEPARTMENT OF URBAN AFFAIRS—TASK FORCES

Question No. 474—Mr. McCleave:

What task forces have been commissioned by the Department of Urban Affairs since its establishment, what was the purpose of each and how much has each cost?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): No task force has been commissioned by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs since its establishment on June 30, 1971.

CONSTITUENCY OF PORTNEUF—NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED PERSONS REGISTERED WITH CANADA MANPOWER CENTRE

Question No. 500—Mr. Godin:

How many unemployed persons residing in the constituency of Portneuf are registered with the Canada Manpower Centre in Quebec City?

[Translation]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Data on Canada Manpower Centre clients, by area of residence, are not reported by the CMCs. Therefore, it is not possible to provide statistics on the number of unemployed Portneuf constituents who are registered with the Quebec City CMC. The electoral districts of Quebec, Montmorency, and the greater part of Portneuf are within the boundaries of the Quebec City CMC.

STATUS OF HOLDERS OF PASSPORTS ISSUED BY REGIMES NOT RECOGNIZED BY CANADA

Question No. 515—Mr. MacLean:

Are visitors, in some cases, refused entry to Canada simply because they are travelling on passports issued by certain countries and, if so, what are the countries whose citizens are not allowed entry to Canada?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): A passport issued by a regime not recognized by the Government of Canada is not considered as a valid passport for purposes of the Immigration Act. Because of this, a person who seeks entry as a visitor and presents only such a passport is refused. Examples of such passports are those issued by the regimes of East Germany, North Korea, North Viet Nam and Taiwan. If, however, such a person is in possession of some other form of travel document which is acceptable to the Canadian Government he is allowed entry. In addition, citizens of Southern Rhodesia are prohibited from entering Canada, except on humanitarian grounds. Details of this can be found in the reply to question No. 419 given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on January 11, 1971, as recorded on page 2255 of Hansard.

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT ACT—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Question No. 524—Mr. Mazankowski:

Under the provisions of the Employment Support Act (a) what agricultural commodities received financial assistance (b) what was the amount in lieu of each commodity (c) how were the funds distributed?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Commodity assistance given pursuant to the Agricultural Stabilization Act and Agricultural Products Board Act but in recognition of the objectives of the Employment Support Act.

(a)	(b)	(c)
Commodity	Amount to Date	Method of Distributing Funds

Rutabagas	69,548	Payments to distributors for benefit of producers
*Hogs	$10,762,460	Payments to producers

*A mandatory commodity under the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask why question No. 305 has not been answered. It has been on the order paper for over two months and should only require a week to answer.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I will look into that question.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to avoid raising a point of order, but I personally asked the minister to look into questions Nos. 255 and 278. Question No. 255 is of such a nature that each day the answer is delayed means that further information is necessary, thus making it more complicated for the government. With regard to question No. 278, I believe there is great injustice in the application of a rule. The answer will reveal whether this is correct. I require the information and I must proceed according to the means available to hon. members if I am to be able to act on the matter.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I have taken notice of the two questions and will look into them.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire when questions Nos. 158, 159 and 160 will be answered? They were placed on the order paper on February 22. Prior to that, they were on the order paper last October, seven or eight months ago. Surely an answer is available from the government benches by this time.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes a good argument. I will look into those questions also.

Proposed Duty on Tires

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

INDUSTRY

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—PROPOSED IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF COUNTERVAILING DUTY AGAINST CERTAIN TIRES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the stated intention of the United States government to seek countervailing duties against tires exported by Michelin Tire Company of Nova Scotia, and the serious effects that such action would have on the tire industry in Canada and, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) admitted on the weekend, on the entire regional development incentives program.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has provided the Chair with the notice required under Standing Order 26. In fact, he was good enough to do so on Friday afternoon and this has given the Chair an opportunity to consider over the weekend his desire to have the House engage in a debate on this matter under the Standing Order. If I may say so, I am grateful to the hon. member for the terms in which he proposes his motion. The statement of the case is consistent with the formal requirements of the Standing Order; it states the case precisely, without argument, as required by the Standing Order.

Evidently the matter raised by the hon. member is one of importance and of interest to all hon. members. It has in recent days been the subject of a number of questions in the House and is not lightly to be set aside. The Chair, as hon. members know, must take into account the tests provided by the Standing Order and relate them to the situation in which the House finds itself at this time. Under section 5 of Standing Order 26 there is a clear responsibility cast on the Chair in coming to a determination that the Speaker, and here I quote the Standing Order, "shall have regard to the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means."

Today is May 15. The current supply period will terminate on June 30. There is a total of 33 sitting days, including both these dates, remaining in the period. When one combines the number of days available on the budget debate and also allotted days remaining in the supply period, it will be seen that some 17 days, or more than half of the remaining sitting days in the current supply period, are available to members for the consideration of grievances or urgent problems other than legislative proposals. There is thus a considerable amount of time available during which the important matter proposed for discussion by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby can be brought before the House "within reasonable time by other means", as specified in the Standing Order. Indeed, this very day is an allotted budget day during which the matter alluded to by the hon. member can be considered by hon. members who will be taking part in the debate.

[Mr. Cullen.]

I would find it extremely difficult to justify setting aside part of a budget day for the purpose of discussing an urgent matter under the terms of Standing Order 26.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM WAR—BRITISH PROPOSAL TO RUSSIA RESPECTING SPONSORSHIP OF CONFERENCE—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the government of Canada support the initiative taken by the government of the United Kingdom in approaching the U.S.S.R. to join forces in sponsoring a conference on Viet Nam similar to the conference which these two governments sponsored in 1954, I believe, at Geneva?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we certainly support an initiative of this kind, but this is really a matter between the two chairmen of the Geneva Conference. We would be very pleased if the British government were successful in persuading the Soviet Union to agree to reassemble this committee. However, I have my doubts whether the British government will be successful.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated to the British government and the government of the U.S.S.R. the approval of the government of Canada with regard to such a conference? If he has not done so, does he propose to urge the two governments to jointly sponsor such a conference?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think my statement today indicates the position of the Canadian government. We hope the British government is successful, but I do not think that anything more than that kind of statement would be very useful. If the Soviet government is not prepared to reassemble the conference, they certainly will not be persuaded by my support.

Mr. Stanfield: I did not realize the Secretary of State for External Affairs was so modest. From time to time the minister has referred to the possibility that he might be making a statement with regard to the Viet Nam problem. Is it the intention of the minister to make such a statement?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, I have no present indication.

INDUSTRY

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—PROPOSED IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF COUNTERVAILING DUTY—POSSIBILITY OF ACTION AFFECTING OTHER COMPANIES ASSISTED BY DEVELOPMENT GRANTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the American government's intention to impose countervailing duties against Michelin tires exported from Nova Scotia to the United States and in view of the minister's assertion on the weekend in Halifax that this could "be very serious" for the federal government's whole regional incentive program. can the minister inform the House whether he has precisely determined the American policy in this area and, more particularly, do the Americans intend to take similar action against other firms receiving DREE grants?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the United States treasury has received a complaint to the effect that exports of Michelin X-radial steel-belted tires from Canada to the United States benefit from a bounty or grant. We are advised that, under American law, once the treasury receives a properly documented complaint they have no alternative but to start an investigation. This does not necessarily mean that a positive finding will be reached or that countervailing duties will be applied. It depends in part on the results of the investigation. As far as we know, the United States is not contemplating countervailing against products of other firms which receive grants under DREE.

Mr. Broadbent: Have our representatives in Washington determined the source of this initiative? Was the complaint made by an individual United States firm, or is this a reflection of United States policy? I ask this question bearing in mind the fact that discussions on trade with the United States are still continuing. Reference has been made to their objections to our DREE programs. This involves an important matter of policy. Could the minister tell us whether, for example, the Michelin situation is a reflection of the desire of the United States government, or of a particular person who raised the objection initially?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The notice of receipt of the complaint is couched in somewhat general terms, but the complaint would seem to be based upon the suggestion that the assistance the company has received both from the province of Nova Scotia and from the federal government under the DREE program might constitute, in terms of the United States law to which I have referred, a bounty or grant in support of exports. We do not yet know who made the complaint.

Mr. Broadbent: Can the minister tell us whether his department or some other department has considered the effects of this development upon the tire industry in Ontario which is already operating below capacity? The industry currently employs about 11,000 workers. Has the government considered the effects that successful action by the United States government in curtailing exports to the United States would have if those tires are dumped on the Canadian market?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not quite follow that logic. The complaint is based, as we read it, on the fact that the Michelin Tire Company of Nova Scotia received a bounty or grant from the province or from the federal government under the DREE program. This would not necessarily apply to Ontario plants.

Mr. Broadbent: I will try to simplify the matter for the minister. If the United States action is successful it will mean that Michelin can no longer export tires to the United States as intended. The company is going into the production of these tires in the near future and is therefore bound to sell them somewhere. Presumably this would be on the Canadian market. Is the government considering the effect this would have on the industry, particularly in the province of Ontario where tire plants are already operating below capacity?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There are too many hypotheses in that question for me to bear down on it.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): There is no hypothesis in this question, Mr. Speaker, though there is some doubt about the order in which the minister may want to do the things which he is asked to do. Is there any insurmountable barrier to the minister having, I think he said, a good meal with his feet up and a long chat with the United States Secretary of the Treasury? Is there a problem, or could this be arranged?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not see any problem, Mr. Speaker.

OLD AGE SECURITY—QUEBEC REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING AMENDMENT OF ACT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN—SUGGESTED EARLY CONSIDERATION OF BILL BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the chairman of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs but I will direct it to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister advise the House whether he has encouraged the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to consider Bill C-170, which was referred to it on April 27, because of the concern of people about the delay?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): My information is that the committee was charged with completing other work last week and, hopefully, that as soon as the old age security legislation has been dealt with the bill to which the hon. member has referred will be considered.

INQUIRY AS TO CORRESPONDENCE OR DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC CONCERNING RECENT BILLS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In case this was not covered by an earlier question I should like to ask the minister whether there has been any correspondence or discussions between the government of Canada and the government of Quebec with regard to recent bills dealing with social security matters introduced into the House?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not that I am aware of, Mr. Speaker.

WHEAT—POSITION RESPECTING DELIVERIES TO CHINA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Is it a fact that as at the end of April the Wheat Board was some seven million bushels behind in deliveries under the wheat contract with China?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check before I could give the hon. member details of the precise status of the contract with China. The Wheat Board is certainly up to date in terms of the shipments which the Chinese understand are to be made. Indeed, there is some discussion about the possibility of moving ahead of the schedule rather than falling behind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: Would the minister look into whether during the months of February and April the Wheat Board in fact issued orders that ships for hauling wheat to China should stay out of the port of Vancouver?

PLANS FOR PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL STORAGE SPACE AT VANCOUVER—IMPROVEMENT OF RAIL TRANSPORT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Bearing in mind the statement by the minister in Vancouver that more storage space is needed in that port to handle the volume of grain required, can the hon. gentleman tell us whether plans are under way whereby the additional necessary storage will be built by the government, or whether negotiations are in progress with the grain companies for the construction of these facilities?

[Mr. Marshall.]

An hon. Member: Preferably at Prince Rupert.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I am holding discussions with a number of grain companies. I have said on other occasions in the House that it is my view and the view of the government that it would be most desirable for the additional necessary storage capacity to be put in place by existing elevator companies, and I am confident they will do just that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: May I ask whether discussions are also under way with the two major railway companies aimed at providing protection against snow slides, mud slides and similar hazards to transportation with the object of ensuring year-round movement of grain from the Prairies to Vancouver?

Mr. Lang: The railroads have certainly had the advantage of learning, in the very difficult winter we have just experienced, how to improve their ability to deal with such obstacles. However, no one should be misled into thinking we can do anything about severe snow and mud and the difficult conditions which can occur generally in the Rockies in winter, short of levelling those small hills.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of hon. members seeking to ask supplementaries on this important subject. Hon. members should attempt to limit the number of their supplementaries; if we have two or three from every member this is bound to prevent other members asking their questions. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Gleave: I should like to ask the minister whether he wishes to leave the impression that in an age in which we can put men on the moon, we cannot get—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member leaves the impression with me that he is out of order.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): The minister has said that in his opinion additional grain handling facilities are necessary at Vancouver. Was the minister able to gather new information in Vancouver during his trip or was this information readily available? Does his view imply that the railways are able to handle the situation as far as transportation is concerned?

• (1450)

Mr. Lang: My recent trip was intended to give me an opportunity to look at the rail facilities rather than the terminal facilities. I have made it clear in previous statements that I believe additional storage facilities are required on the west coast. This conclusion follows the fact that our sales to countries to the west have increased very significantly and that there is tremendous additional marketing potential there. We therefore regard the new records we are setting each year as a new basis upon which to build. No one should have any doubt about the fact that we need more capacity there, and should therefore get into a position to put it into place.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BANGLADESH—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF HIGH COMMISSIONER

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the fact that Bangladesh has a population of 70 million people and has become the second largest nation in the Commonwealth, and in light of the fact that proposed Canadian development aid and other support for Bangladesh is second, I believe, for all nations receiving aid from Canada, will the government ensure that a high commissioner is appointed with adequate staff to handle this important post rather than having the situation which now prevails whereby, as I understand it, our representative in Bangkok has to look after this on a part time basis?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. gentleman for supporting my department in what is a perpetual argument with the Treasury Board. Perhaps I might repeat to him what I said to the high commissioner for Bangladesh when he called on me. I said I was sure he would prefer more aid for Bangladesh than a high commissioner there.

Mr. Brewin: What is the good of having a high level of aid if you do not have adequate officers there to administer it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I answer this directly. We do have an aid office there but we do not have a resident high commissioner.

OLD AGE SECURITY—CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING INCREASE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Has he received considerable correspondence during the last week from old age pensioners addressed to "Ten cent Turner" strongly protesting that the ten cents a day increase in pensions is completely inadequate to meet the increased costs faced by old age pensioners today?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Certainly that question is not in order and cannot be asked. Obviously the minister is anxious to reply to it, but it should not be accepted as it is clearly out of order.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I want to assure the hon. member that I have received a lot of communications thanking me for the more than one-third of a billion dollars for old age pensioners.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Does the minister not realize—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member seeks the floor to ask a supplementary question. Certainly he cannot ask a supplementary to a question that is clearly out of order. I might say that in the same way the minister's question of privilege was also out of order or procedurally incorrect. This having been said, the hon. member may have a legitimate and procedurally correct question to ask at this point.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not realize that this increase is less than half the increase given by "Six-buck Harris" in 1957, and we all know what happened to that minister and that government at that time?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the government is aware of the problem and a new Canadian Citizenship Act is being drawn up.

[English]

Mr. Ryan: As this anomaly in the act can be corrected speedily by a simple change in the definition of "minor", would the minister consider bringing in an amendment to the act forthwith? I am sure it would be quickly passed.

TAXING OF CERTAIN PROPERTY RIGHTS PURCHASED BEFORE 1972—POSSIBILITY OF TAXING ACQUISITION OF MILK QUOTA

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In the course of his budget speech, the minister said that he was considering taxing certain properties acquired before 1972, and he gave as an example of this type of property the quota on certain farm products such as milk. So, my question is: Does the minister intend to consider as income the milk quota that a farmer sells together with his farm in 1972? Is this the type of property that the minister intends to tax according to the announcement contained in the last budget?

PROPOSED ADMISSION OF GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC TO WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION CONFERENCE—POSSIBLE VISIT TO CANADA BY TRADE COMMISSIONERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what the government's attitude is now toward full membership of the German Democratic Republic in the World Health Organization conference at Stockholm, and is the government now considering looking with favour upon a visit of trade commissioners from the German Democratic Republic to this country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position of representation of the German Democratic Republic at the Stockholm conference is dependent upon the rules of the United Nations itself, that is, that the German Democratic Republic should be a member of either the United Nations or one of the subsidiary organizations. So far as I know, it has not yet qualified.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister to answer the second part of my question relating to the matter of trade commissioners?

Mr. Sharp: In answer to the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, we are, of course, quite prepared to carry on trade with the German Democratic Republic and have been doing so for some years. But we cannot, of course, recognize them officially in any way until we have recognized the government of that country.

POLLUTION

TAPS TANKER ROUTE THREAT—UNITED STATES RESPONSE TO PROPOSED REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS ON OIL MOVEMENT

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that on April 26, 1972, the minister indicated he had made formal representations to Secretary of State Rogers of the United States to join Canada in making a joint reference to the International Joint Commission of the whole question of pollution of waters of the west coast bordering Canada and the United States, I should like to ask whether the minister received a reply to his formal representations on this matter prior to the news release last week which indicated that the United States would proceed with the trans-Alaska pipeline?

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not yet received a reply. We did not receive one before that announcement, nor have we received one since.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, has the minister received any assurance from the United States in reply to Canadian representations that the oil from Alaska will not move through the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Georgia Strait to the refinery at Cherry Point?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. That continues to be the position of the Canadian government. I hope our representations in this respect will be successful because I believe that Cherry Point should be served from the interior so as to minimize the chance of oil spills in that beautiful part of British Columbia.

Mr. Harding: Has Canada made any representations to the United States in respect of oil shipments actually being made through Canadian waters to refineries in the Puget Sound area from the oilfields in the Cooke Sound area of Alaska?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have made some general representations to the United States about the importance, regardless of what happens, of improving the safeguards against oil spills. This applies, of course, to all shipments, not only those that might come down from Valdez but as well from any other direction. The United States in reply has said to us that of course there is a problem on the east coast as well as on the west coast, and we have said we would like to look at them all together.

MANITOBA BILL IMPOSING TAX ON OVERFLIGHTS ACROSS PROVINCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO MAINTAIN FREE USE OF AIR SPACE

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. It is my understanding that a bill has received third reading in the Manitoba legislature, but has not yet received Royal Assent, which would, among other things, charge a 5 per cent tax on overflights across the province. Will the minister look into what means the federal government can take to assure the free use of Canadian air space by all the people of Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member bringing this matter to my attention. I will look into it and report to him later.

STUDENT LOANS—SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF INTEREST-FREE PERIOD BECAUSE OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND REVIEW OF REPAYMENT PROCEDURES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On April 18 the minister undertook consideration of a suggestion to extend the interest-free period on student loans which are now due for graduates who are unemployed through no fault of their own. The minister made no mention of this problem in his budget. Does he plan any action to alleviate this problem?

• (1500)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member would allow me to take the question as notice and get back to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Stanfield: While the minister is considering that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask him whether he is prepared to review the repayment procedures his department is now following with a view to restoring responsibility for collection either to the Department of Finance or to some other government agency? Would he at least undertake a review of some of the procedures followed by collection agencies on whom the Department of Finance is placing the responsibility for collecting overdue loans? I make this request because I understand it is being suggested by some of these agencies to students who owe money that they should borrow from finance companies at rates as high as 18 per cent in order to get the Department of Finance off their backs.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept some of the statements in this question. I am advised we have discussed the situation of students who happen to be unemployed and are unable at this stage to repay loans with the chartered banks. They have agreed to co-operate in cases of unemployment by carrying such debts for a period of some six months without requiring payment before submitting claims under the guarantee provisions. That step we have already taken, and I will look into the other aspects of the hon. member's question.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CLOSING OF CIP PLANT AT TÉMISCAMINGUE—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC AUTHORITIES TO ALLEVIATE SITUATION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

In view of the closing down of the Canadian International Paper Company on May 31, can the minister tell us whether he has held discussions with Quebec authorities to ascertain whether it is possible to avoid hardship for the population of Témiscamingue, or are such meetings planned for this week or next in order to study the situation prevailing in Témiscamingue?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, that is a situation we are following very closely. We have prepared various plans. I have already met with the president of the company and he is not interested in reopening the plant, the mill. In fact, I have even offered him an updating grant, but he is not interested. Therefore, something else must be found and that is what we are trying to do.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the hon. minister.

Has the Quebec government submitted any plans to him, or does he expect to receive any before the plant closes down on May 31?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If contacts are established at the senior official level in my department, I might inquire and report to the hon. member on Wednesday.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRICES FARMERS RECEIVE ON EXPORT SALES—ADEQUACY TO RETURN PROFIT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice in his other capacity. In view of the fact that at a meeting of the various farm organizations recently held in Minneapolis there was agreement in the final statement that was issued that, while our exports of wheat throughout the world are increasing greatly because of the increase in demand, the prices being paid by importing countries do not return any profit to the farmer, I would ask the minister this question. As every one of the competitors knows what the other competing country is receiving, will he let the Canadian farmers know what the prices are for wheat sold for export, Nos. 1, 2 and 3, or whatever the new classifications are?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board in the ordinary course posts the prices at which it is offering wheat. I should point out to the right hon. gentleman that the increase in Canadian exports of wheat is taking place despite the fact that this year the over-all trade in wheat is down.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is the revised version but it is not what the agricultural organizations which met in Minneapolis said. I ask him whether he will now say if the prices being received for Canadian wheat by the Wheat Board for the several grades will be made known, and is it a fact that the prices being received are below a level that will bring the farmer any kind of a return?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the prices the Wheat Board quotes are available and known and can be compared with a previous year. Therefore the exact return can be calculated.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to understand the evasiveness of the hon. gentleman except that he is afraid to let the farmers know that their wheat is being sold at virtually firesale prices.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED INCREASE IN PROFITS OF SAFEWAY AND GEORGE WESTON—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF FOOD PRICES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of an increase in profits in the first three months of this year over last year by Safeway of 40 per cent and by George Weston of nearly 50 per cent, and in view of the fact that the rise in the consumer price index was mainly caused by increased food prices, will the minister undertake to investigate these profits with a view to lowering the price of food?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, under the Combines Investigation Act the director of that branch would in the normal course be required to make an investigation whenever he felt the act was being violated. If there is specific information available, I would ask the hon. gentleman to reveal it either to me or to the director. I am sure he will carry out his duties in that regard.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ALLEGED SECRET CRITERIA IN PROJECT ASSESSMENT FORM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AND TABLING OF DOCUMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of reports last week to the effect that there exists a series of secret criteria within a project assessment and analysis form for internal use by the Opportunities for Youth secretariat, could the minister alleviate some of the fears and concerns on this matter by indicating the nature of such rules, and perhaps also table the document in the House either today or tomorrow?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member got his information, but there is no series of secret criteria; there is a breakdown of general criteria into sub-criteria, which can be deduced from the first ones by those who suggest various projects. It is an analysis method; the five questions become 25 because each one is broken into five elements.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the fact that a story appeared on the front page of a Toronto newspaper last week to the effect that a number of additional rules in fact were used by the secretariat in deciding which programs were to be approved or not approved, would the minister not be willing to provide that information to members of the House so that we might have a clear picture of the actual basis on which decisions to approve were made, having in mind that the vast majority of projects which were submitted were not approved?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, as I have spent 25 years of my life in journalism, I pity the hon. member with all my heart if he believes everything he reads on the first page of the newspapers.

Secondly, I would like to tell him that there are no secret documents that could be revealed, and I believe that, when the department's budget is studied by the committee, I will be ready, and my officials too, to answer all questions, including the prejudice, the strengthening of which is being sought at the present time, that has arisen through a wrong interpretation of an answer given by the Prime Minister: No list of projects has been given to the RCMP. I felt that I had to say this.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We should try to move on. The hon. member will be allowed a second supplementary, but we will be running short of time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Since there has been a shortage of information throughout the piece from the minister concerning the basis on which decisions were made with regard to the more than 19,000 projects submitted, when is the minister going to provide some detailed information not only to members of the House but also to the thousands of students who submitted projects inasmuch as to date most of these people have received only a form letter with none of the information involved?

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS—POSSIBLE INTERVENTION OF POSTMASTER GENERAL—USE OF NEGOTIATORS FROM LABOUR DEPARTMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Now that the President of the Treasury Board is running into heavy seas in connection with the negotiations with the postal unions, would the Postmaster General use his good offices to ensure a fair and more equitable settlement to avoid the possibility of disruption of this important service?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member knows what he is talking about. I have kept silent in the House by request of the unions themselves. I do not think they have made any declarations on the issues that are now under negotiation. So far as the negotiations are concerned, they are still going on and progressing.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the postal unions on May 11, would the Postmaster General encourage the use of the special negotiators in the Department of Labour to bring about a reduction of growing tensions at this time?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I do not think the unions made a public statement on May 11.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF REASONS BEING GIVEN FOR REJECTION OF PROJECTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the previous question put to the Secretary of State. Could the minister assure us that if people who have submitted projects that were rejected write to the department they will be given not a form letter but specific reasons why their particular project was rejected?

POSSIBLE STEPS TO IMPROVE NET INCOME POSITION OF ONTARIO FARMERS

In view of the fact that the farmers of Ontario have suffered a reduction in net income from $402 million to $324 million, a difference of approximately $78 million in the last year, what steps are the Department of Agriculture and the minister contemplating to improve the situation of Ontario farmers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a number of steps have been taken, far more than you will permit me to list in reply at this time. I am sure the hon. member will find on examination that many returns to the Ontario producers have increased rather substantially in the last four to five months.

Has the minister anything to report on that continuing old chestnut, the problems between NABET and the CBC? If the minister did not understand my question, I am referring to the CBC and NABET labour dispute which is still smouldering.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to report at this time.

Mr. Nowlan: Is the Secretary of State or the Minister of Labour going to take any direct initiatives to resolve this continuing labour problem, or is the Secretary of State finally going to tell the Canadian taxpayers either what this dispute is going to cost them or what they are saving as a result of the disruption of the CBC service?

BARLEY—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN INITIAL PRICE TO PROVIDE GREATER INCENTIVE TO PLANT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Will any further action be taken as a result of the meeting he had with some provincial ministers of agriculture regarding the possibility of increasing the initial price of barley, a suggestion I made to the minister earlier, in the hope that farmers will increase their acreage this year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): In the discussions I had recently with the provincial ministers of agriculture we reviewed the same factors which had existed and which we had reviewed prior to the March 1 announcement of initial prices. At that time I had discussions with the Wheat Board and with many producer organizations concerning the proper level for initial prices, and the agreed 5 cent increase for barley was determined at that time. I see no reason to change it now. All of us are agreed that it is desirable for farmers to increase their barley plantings slightly over what was shown by the Statistics Canada survey.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT ON CERTAIN GRANTS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion a question, if he will take his mind off election planning for a few minutes. Can he indicate when he will be able to fulfil his obligation under the law and present to the House a supplementary report on the Regional Development Incentives Act, which he promised to present as soon as possible? Can he tell us how soon "as soon as possible" is?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I believe I answered this question last Thursday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Burton: Has the minister given any further consideration over the weekend to the production of an interim report such as was suggested earlier?

NATIONAL PARKS

FAILURE OF CERTAIN XAVIER COLLEGE STUDENTS TO OBTAIN EMPLOYMENT AS PARK GUIDES—SELECTION CRITERIA

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for Canada's national parks. In light of information from Professor Dr. Donald Arseneau, placement officer at Xavier College in Sydney, that of 23 students at that college who applied for positions as park guides not one was successful, would the minister cause an investigation to be carried out to ascertain whether this discrimination came about as a result of the bilingualism requirement?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire into the matter and report to the hon. member. I must admit that it is desirable that in all national parks there be people who can address visitors in both official languages.

[English]

Mr. Muir: I share the same hopes as one who supported and voted for the language bill. In view of the assumption reached by Dr. Arseneau as quoted in the press that "the implication of recent legislation seems to be that a person has less opportunity of obtaining a job with the federal government if his native language is English", may I ask the minister if he can advise the House whether, in selecting applicants for these positions, the basic criterion is that one must be bilingual and other qualifications are not important?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that it is not the intention of the government to bring in amending legislation at this session.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

In reply to the first part of the question, may I say that the study of the Bryden report is not yet completed and conclusions have not yet been reached as to what course of action should be followed, if any, as a result of the study.

Mr. Alexander: I was under the impression that the study had been completed and that a report had been submitted. Can the government House leader advise the House when he expects the investigation to be completed and therefore when the report is expected?

Mr. MacEachen: I cannot put any definite time limit on the study stage.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 11, consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 2178), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman (p. 2182).

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude my budget remarks today by dealing with the Michelin tire case in Nova Scotia. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) or a spokesman of his will arrange to deal with the substance of the issue before the debate concludes later tonight. There are two very important questions in the Michelin tire case. The first concerns an agreement that was made to grant the Michelin Tire Company a three year period during which time they would be permitted duty free entry into Canada of tires produced elsewhere. The attempts made by me in the last ten days to elicit a clear and unequivocal answer from the Minister of Finance on this situation have been, to put it euphemistically, not entirely successful.

• (1520)

I have a letter here, sent to me by the minister's precedessor, now the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson), dated June 21, 1971, the third paragraph of which reads:

> The government has agreed to permit the Michelin company to import certain types and sizes of tires duty-free for a period of three years—

Later in the letter he made reference to the fact that the government intended to permit the Michelin Tire Company duty free access to the Canadian market so far as certain lines of tires were concerned. What are the implications of this? They are now clear, Mr. Speaker, and they should have been clear at the time these negotiations were entered into with the Michelin Company. We already have seven tire producing firms operating in Canada, Mr. Speaker, most of them located in Ontario but some in Quebec, and they are all operating below capacity. So far as the Canadian market is concerned, the existing firms already have a surplus capacity. This is something the government should have known. It should never have entered into an agreement with the Michelin Corporation allowing that corporation to import tires, presumably made in France, into Canada. The only effect this could have would be the displacement of production, and thus of workers already employed in Canadian firms.

It is my understanding that the reason for the equivocation of the Minister of Finance in recent days is that a policy decision has not really been reached. If I am correct on that, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will verify it. I understand, from conversations with the heads of other tire companies in Canada, that they have protested strongly against this intended action by the federal government. They pointed out that even if their firms were subsidiaries of companies located elsewhere, it was unfair to them to give Michelin the right to import tires duty free, without giving the same right to them. The point that concerns me is not the question of unfairness to other firms, but the question of importing tires at all. I think it is a bad principle to allow Michelin or any other tire company to import tires duty free when our existing plants are operating below capacity.

The government must stop equivocating on the issue. It must make clear whether it has rescinded the commitment it made to the Michelin Tire Company. I hope it has done so. It was an unwise decision in the first place. Canadian jobs are more important than the desires of the Michelin Corporation. And I say this being completely aware of the problems of workers in the province of Nova Scotia, who are seeking employment there. Anyone who knows anything about unemployment levels in Canada east of the Ottawa River cannot be anything but concerned about the government's intentions to provide employment in that area. But there is no gain to be made for workers in Canada in general if we create jobs in Nova Scotia, or anywhere else, at the expense of men and women who are currently employed. All that does is shift unemployment from one part of the country to another, and this at the taxpayers' expense. It is bad policy. I appeal to the government to clear up the situation. Has it withdrawn its original decision to allow free access to the market? If not, I urge the Minister of Finance to undertake to do so, and to do it quickly.

Now, I wish to deal with the second aspect of the Michelin case. This concerns the recent announcement of the United States government that it will apply special levies against tires produced by Michelin and exported to the U.S. market. If this is going to be part of Mr. Connally's economic policy toward Canada, then the implications are simply horrendous for the Canadian economy. I refer to this matter with great care, Mr. Speaker, because all during the last year of Canada-United States negotiations on trade, the regional development program has been cited by the Americans as one of the things which irritate them. This may be the beginning of a major economic battle to be waged by the U.S. government against our regional development program involving Canadian firms seeking export markets, and in particular United States markets. It is of great importance to know whether this is a single incident, or whether the U.S. is simply beginning with Michelin and intends to apply its policy to all Canadian firms, no matter where they are located, that export goods to the United States. On this point, the government has a case that it can make.

I think the Americans are absolutely right in their objections to the Michelin case. They have some grounds for their argument if, in effect, what they are saying to the Canadian government is, "You are bringing a firm into this country that was not originally in existence here, and subsidizing it highly to produce goods not primarily for the Canadian market." That line of reasoning has to be given fair consideration. The Americans seem to have a legitimate case, but there is another point that concerns me at a more serious level. If the Americans intend to apply the same reasoning to all regional development cases, then a distinction has to be made between the Michelin case and firms that were already located in Canada which were simply given grants to move to other parts of the country. No country, the United States or any other, can make a case against such firms receiving grants if they export to the United States, because those firms were already involved in production for the domestic market here.

It is time for the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to take public action. The latter has assured us that he has practised quiet diplomacy with the Americans with respect to DISC and other measures. I do not know if he has upheld our case on the regional development situation, but both ministers have an obligation to make the Canadian policy clear, and make sure the Americans understand it now.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all those who have been ministers of finance sympathize with their successors. It is one of the most ungrateful of portfolios, although perhaps my successor on this occasion will receive as much gratitude as he deserves from the Canadian public, and that is a great deal. We all feel some sympathy when we see a minister of finance get up to deliver his first budget speech knowing that regardless of what it contains, whether it is concientious and humanitarian, it is bound to be the subject of partisan attack from all of the opposition parties. It is therefore with sincere admiration that I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on the budget that he delivered last Monday evening. Those who had great expectations about how he would perform found those expectations fulfilled. He has not disappointed us. He was conscious, as was the House, that this was the last budget before the next election.

• (1530)

Mr. Hees: Well now, we are getting close!

Mr. Sharp: A less intelligent minister might have opted for distributing largesse in order to try to buy votes. On this occasion my colleague opted for a responsible approach combined with humanitarianism.

Mr. Hees: John, he is saying it just as you wrote it.

Mr. Sharp: According to those who are in a position to judge, Canada has a record second to none throughout the world in recent years in terms of the expansion of the economy and the control of inflation. Indeed, as the Minister of Finance pointed out in his budget address, among the ten leading industrial nations the growth of Canada's real output in 1971 exceeded that of any other country except Japan and was twice the increase in the United States. The rise in prices was lower than that of any other industrial country. Someone said that if they gave Oscars for countries for economic performance, we would have been one of the recipients.

Mr. Muir: Sing along with Mitch!

Mr. Sharp: The main task of the budget was to do everything to ensure that the economy continued to surge ahead with a minimum of inflation.

This is a tough job at any time, but I am sure that members of the House will agree that at this particular time with the external threats to stability we had a very difficult task to face. I think the Minister of Finance faced it in a very intelligent fashion because he decided that we had to concentrate upon trying to improve our competitive position around the world. It was clear that the main problem in this connection was in the area of manufacturing. Resource industries have been enjoying special incentives over the years and as far as service industries are concerned, in general they were not subject to the kind of competition that has been causing us concern from outside Canada and they are expanding steadily and vigorously.

In manufacturing, however, in recent years there has been very little if any increase in employment. Forecasts of capital spending saw the same sort of condition, a reluctance on the part of manufacturing industries to increase their investment in plant, equipment and new buildings. The decision was therefore made to concentrate upon stimulating manufacturing industries as the most effective way of underpinning the growth of the economy. This also makes good sense, Mr. Speaker, in terms of an industrial policy. In the years to come there is good reason to believe that the demand for our raw materials and our energy will be very very high; all we have to do is remain reasonably competitive and we should reap the benefits of our good fortune.

When we come to manufacturing the situation is different, however, because there we will certainly have to vie for markets both at home and abroad. This is the challenge that all of us in this country must take up. This is not a partisan matter; it is not a matter that ought to divide the parties of this House or the people of this country. I suggest that this House and all parties in it should strongly support the dramatic tax reductions announced in the budget by the Minister of Finance relating to manufacturing industries.

Spokesmen for the NDP in particular have criticized these tax reductions. They have scorned the confidence of the Minister of Finance in the manufacturing companies of this country. The NDP is cynical about many things and perhaps this is one of the reasons why it never gets very far in politics. Someone said that they claim to have a policy for people but they suspect individuals.

Mr. Stanfield: I thought this was a non-partisan speech.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: What is the alternative to this action proposed by the NDP? What they proposed were across the board tax cuts to individual taxpayers. All of us applauded when the former minister of finance brought in his tax reform and took some 800,000 people or taxpayers off the tax roll and decreased the taxes for another four million people. This was the right priority at that time and combined with the family income security plan brought in by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), will probably result in as massive a transfer of help to the poor people of this country as has been accomplished in a generation.

One of the things that puzzled me about this particular approach is that it was opposed by the NDP. The attitude of the NDP toward FISP is little short of incredible. That party talks about a guaranteed annual income. A guaranteed annual income involves the transfer of income to the bottom end of the scale; it involves some sort of tapering of assistance as incomes rise but when the government, under the FISP legislation, proposed this with reference to family income support, the NDP was the only party in this House to oppose it. I think this is unbelievable and I can only say that perhaps the NDP is infected by a larger dose of the "Waffles" than we had suspected.

Would another tax cut to individual taxpayers have been the right step in this budget? This alternative was considered and obviously it has attractions. It might have appeared to be more popular politically to give some tax cuts to everyone in the country but would it have been the most effective way of creating new jobs, which the Minister of Finance quite rightly has said is the priority task? Mr. Speaker, I believe the answer is clearly in the negative. Consumer demand is already growing steadily and substantially. It does not require special stimulus at the present time. Moreover, consumers spend their money not only on goods produced in Canada but spend it on imports. If tax cuts had been used as the means to achieve a greater number of jobs in this country by increasing general spending, there would have been a very substantial leakage into imports with the result that I would have to conclude, as I am sure would all those who look at the problem, that this is the wrong prescription at this time.

Mr. Stanfield: Why was it right last fall?

Mr. Sharp: Because circumstances were quite different. One of the main purposes of policy at this time—and I am sure the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would agree-should be to increase spending by Canadians on Canadian goods and to increase the export of Canadian goods. This cannot be done by self-defeating protectionism to which this Liberal administration is very strongly opposed. Export subsidies or tax incentives are not going to do the job because they do not help us at home to meet competition from foreign imports nor, as I have said, can that be accomplished effectively by stimulating consumer demand. There is too much leakage involved in this method. What is needed is further efforts by Canadian manufacturers and processors to produce more efficiently and cheaply, to meet the competition of imports and the competition of other countries in export markets.

The budget zeros in on this problem as its main thrust. It does not do so by half measures but by very dramatic tax cuts affecting manufacturers both large and small and by special writeoffs to encourage them to become more efficient by buying new machinery and equipment.

I join with the Minister of Finance in inviting the manufacturers of this country to show that they are equal to the challenge. Canada is recognized as one of the more advanced industrialized countries in the world. We have a highly trained labour force which becomes more skilled day by day. Manufacturers, through their association, have made representations to the government for lower taxes. They have said they were at a disadvantage in comparison with companies around the world which they claimed were paying lower taxes. The government has now responded. It has done exactly what they asked the government to do, increased tax incentives by lowering the corporate rate of tax. I believe that they will respond.

• (1540)

I am one of those, also, who believe in co-operation between labour and management. I believe, as does the Minister of Finance that the manufacturers will respond to this challenge. I know I can associate myself with the Minister of Finance by saying that I expect the labour unions of this country will also respond to this challenge. This is not a case of a contest between the manufacturers and the labour unions; this is a case, it seems to me, of the labour unions and their employers in this country joining together in the urgent task of creating more jobs. This is a time for all parties, for all economic groupings, business and labour alike, to join together, to ensure the success of this battle for jobs in manufacturing and processing. It is not going to be won if the manufacturers and processors use these tax cuts simply for the purpose of increasing earnings and dividends. It is not going to be won, either, if those tax reductions are translated quickly into cost increases in the form of wage increases. It is the government's purpose, and I think it ought to be the purpose of everyone involved, to use these tax reductions to make Canadian goods cheaper—that is, to produce them more cheaply so that we can create more jobs. This, it seems to me, is an endeavour in which there should not be any differences of view, either in this House or as between management and labour.

I read the comments of the financial critic of the NDP and the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) about the DISC and about the necessity for taking action to meet the threat posed by that piece of mischievous American legislation. They concentrated their attention, it seems to me quite wrongly, on retaliation by Canada. Perhaps we shall have to take action if it can be shown that imports from the United States under the DISC are being unfairly subsidized. That remains to be seen. But it is typical, it seems to me, of the negative attitude of the NDP, that they fail to see that the threat posed by DISC is in foreign countries as well as here, at home. This threat cannot be met by imposing a levy on imports into Canada that are subsidized under the DISC or under any other program. That threat can only be met by giving our manufacturers and our processors some positive encouragement to compete on more equal terms with United States exports in foreign markets.

Obviously, however, this kind of encouragement to corporations runs counter to the philosophy of the NDP. Sometimes I think the NDP believes that the world is divided into corporations and individuals. Taking that point of view will not be enough. Surely, the logic of the position taken by the NDP is this: That party says, "Because we are opposed to any help to corporations, we are prepared to forgo the possibility of becoming more competitive and of increasing the opportunities for ordinary Canadians to work in producing goods for the home market and in producing goods for export." At one time I thought that the NDP was beginning to abandon the sterility of its doctrinal position. However, I read in the budget debate in this House just the same old stuff. It looks to me, Mr. Speaker, as if the NDP has once again turned or returned to that tired, old discredited line that has so little relevance either to the modern world or to modern Canada.

We are all familiar with the nature of the competition Canada faces around the world. As Secretary of State for External Affairs, I have had some opportunity to see the problem at first hand. I have talked to officials and governments around the world about the problems that are being faced by them and by ourselves. I can say this, based on my own experience, which I am sure is confirmed by the experience of most members of this House: We are not going to have an easy time. We are in a battle with giants—with the United States, with the new Europe and with Japan. But we are not without weapons in this battle. Canada is one of the great store houses of natural resources and energy which other countries will increasingly need and want. Our bargaining position is not minimal. Our labour force is becoming increasingly skilled. Our reputation abroad is good and we have that advantage that has not accrued to those giants, namely, that we are less suspect in international marts than they are. So, we have some advantages.

We have been exploiting these advantages in all directions by building up those relationships, political and economic, that ensure our producers of fair access to markets and fair trading rules. There never before has been such activity going on in negotiations between Canada and the United States, between Canada and Europe and between Canada and Japan. This has been a time of the most intensive activity, political and economic; we have been trying to establish and maintain rules for access by Canada to those markets.

Mr. Stanfield: Have they been very fruitful.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, very fruitful. There has been the biggest increase in exports in the last three or four years that this country has ever seen.

Mr. Hees: Obviously, the minister is talking only about the United States and ignoring the rest of the world.

Mr. Sharp: Here I must compliment my cabinet colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who is not in the House. I feel that he has been the most effective minister to occupy that portfolio,—

Mr. Hees: The rest of the world is down, Mitch.

Mr. Sharp: —and has been more effective than the hon. member who occupied that position and who is now in opposition.

Mr. Hees: Down, down, down. Trade with the rest of the world is down.

Mr. Sharp: The present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has done an excellent job in promoting Canadian goods, and he has been achieving success.

Mr. Hees: Our trade with the rest of the world is down.

Mr. Sharp: His predecessors in office ought to envy his record.

Mr. Hees: Every market but the United States is down.

Mr. Sharp: In the last three or four years, we have achieved a record that is second to none in the history of this country. I say that with all due deference to the hon. member who once occupied the position now occupied by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and who now sits in the opposition benches. I, also, take a humble position before my successor in office. It is no small wonder that our export industries hold in such high regard the present Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce, for he is a man who has worked well on behalf of Canadian industries abroad.

Some hon Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Boy, have you got some great imagination.

Mr. Sharp: The spokesman for the official opposition, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), in his remarks last Thursday took a potshot at the government's position on foreign takeovers.

Mr. Baldwin: He had so many targets, you know.

Mr. Sharp: As was characteristic, the hon. member said he was both opposed and in favour. Then, he moved over to the vague position of his party, namely, that something should be done.

An hon. Member: How about that?

Mr. Sharp: Yes. I also listened to Premier Davis on this issue over the weekend.

Mr. Hees: He told the truth.

Mr. Sharp: And what did he say? He said he would not accept the challenge laid down by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the provinces could limit foreign investment if they wished. And why did he say that? He said it because he was concerned that if Ontario limited foreign investment, Quebec, the Maritimes or British Columbia might not. He is quite right. That is one of the main problems. All parts of this country and all provinces do not have the same view on the subject of foreign investment. I am not sure what the attitude of the Conservative government of Ontario is. Perhaps, in due course, they will reveal it; or, perhaps they will remain as vague as are their federal counterparts in this House.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Hees: There are some differences in cabinet, you know.

Mr. Sharp: I only know this for certain: They will criticize the Liberal government in Ottawa, regardless of what it does. The name of the game from this time on apparently is to be party politics.

Mr. Hees: How are you fellows and Herb Gray getting along now?

Mr. Sharp: We decided to subject foreign takeovers to review.

Mr. Hees: Yes, but do you and Herb Gray agree?

Mr. Sharp: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—

Mr. Hees: Yes, but do you agree with Herb Gray?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, we are all agreed in cabinet. The opposition does not seem to be able to make up its mind.

Mr. Hees: You agree with Herb Gray! Well, that is one of the funniest things you have said all day.

Mr. Sharp: He sits in cabinet and is fully in accord on policies—

Mr. Hees: Then, he is not a man of conviction.

• (1550)

Mr. Sharp: No, no. He is a man of conviction. I do not know the hon. member's views. Perhaps he has not yet expressed them. I do not know whether the hon. member is a man of conviction or a man who shifts about from place to place trying to decide what position to take in the next election.

The Leader of the Opposition and Mr. Davis criticize us for not going further. If we had decided to subject new foreign investment to review, they would have accused us of wanting to limit the expansion of Ontario. They would have accused us of dividing the country, of favouring one part of the country against another. They would have accused us of encroaching on the jurisdiction of the provinces.

What is clear, I submit, is that for a policy regarding foreign investment to be successful, there must be a general consensus throughout the country on what is to be done, and there must be co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. This is not a question of whether or not the federal government has the courage to take far-reaching action. The important questions are: Will the policy work? Will it be supported in all parts of the country? Will it promote the unity, strength and independence of Canada? These are the issues we face.

In recent years, successive Liberal governments have moved forward steadily and deliberately to limit foreign control in Canada and to promote Canadian ownership. The proposal to review foreign takeovers is another step in that direction. It meets one of the serious concerns, a concern that has been supported in all parts of the country and on which, I believe, there is a national consensus. That is, we should do something about undesirable foreign takeovers. That is the national consensus. The process is not at an end.

There are few Canadians who do not support as much control as possible by Canadians of industries located in Canada. Every political party is in favour of that. There is no disagreement. The question is how to achieve that objective without limiting the economic development of the whole country and each of its parts. Some controls are necessary. We have put some of these in place. Some positive encouragement to Canadians is necessary. In this respect, we have been the most generous of all countries. We are very happy to see that some government initiatives such as the Canada Development Corporation, Panarctic and Polymer are now beginning to bear fruit. There are no simple answers to this question and it is futile to look for them. Every proposal has its advantages and its costs. Let us have a little less rhetoric and a little more realism.

The same may be said of the attitude of the opposition toward employment and price stability. Let us all agree that the ideal is full employment without inflation. We all support it. There is no difference of view among all parties in this House. Also, let us all agree that there is now too much unemployment in Canada and that prices are rising. The Minister of Finance has said on a number of occasions that he is not satisfied with the level of unemployment. There is nothing in these statements to divide the parties in this House. What really divides us is the fact that we on the government side have the responsibility for trying to help these things come about, and the opposition does not have that responsibility.

Mr. Stanfield: For the moment.

Mr. Sharp: The opposition is irresponsible. They criticize us, but they have never made any proposals that can be taken seriously. The Minister of Finance has predicted a very substantial increase in employment.

Mr. Baldwin: So did his predecessor.

Mr. Sharp: His predecessor was quite right. Last year, 330,000 new jobs were created.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: We have continued unemployment at 6 per cent.

Mr. Sharp: This year should be better.

Mr. Hees: That is what you have been saying for four years.

Mr. Sharp: It has gotten better in every one of those four years. We have a continuous rise in the economy of Canada over a fairly long period. The budget of the Minister of Finance will continue the expansion that is now under way. In Canada, we have a very rapidly and steadily expanding economy. The opposition is trying to say that we are not expanding. The evidence is to be seen on all sides. It is to be found in all the figures that appear every month that there is a very rapid expansion of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Hees: This is your last budget speech.

Mr. Sharp: Whether that very substantial increase in the number of jobs will reduce the level of unemployment is another question. As the Minister of Finance said, it probably will. However, here in Canada we are going through a most extraordinary period of expansion in the labour force. There is nothing like it anywhere else in the world. If our labour force were stable, as it is in continental Europe today, we would have more than full employment. However, we do not. These are not the conditions we face. We face the most rapidly increasing labour force in the world. The growth in employment in Canada last year was far greater than that of virtually any other industrial nation, and four times the percentage increase in employment in the United States, but we still had unemployment.

We are all concerned about those who, notwithstanding the buoyancy of the economy and the increase in jobs, cannot find work immediately. That is why the government improved the terms of unemployment insurance, embarked upon enlarged programs of manpower training, introduced the Local Initiatives Program and Opportunities for Youth which have been such a resounding success. However, let us not confuse this concern about the unemployed with silly statements that the Canadian government is faltering and that the government is failing to give sufficient stimulus. In fact, we are one of the most rapidly expanding countries, if not the most rapidly expanding in the world.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I join with others in congratulating the Minister of Finance for including in his budget message relief for those unable to keep pace with rising prices; the elderly retired, the disabled and the veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: The time has come to incorporate into these basic pensions an automatic adjustment to rising living costs. Such automatic adjustments involve a certain risk. This has been recognized over a period of years. However, in my judgment and the judgment of the government, this is a risk that must be accepted. By this action, by increasing the Guaranteed Income Supplement by $15 per month and by raising the exemptions for the elderly, Canada has maintained its reputation as the most generous country in the world in its treatment of veterans, pensioners and the disabled.

May I add one further thought by way of conclusion, Mr. Speaker. It is because over the years Canada has followed a responsible fiscal and monetary policy and because our economic performance has been so satisfactory that we can afford to have this deserved reputation for humanitarianism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will continue to follow the nonpartisan path the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has established. I do not intend to run the great risk of dislocating my shoulder by slapping myself on the back as often as the minister did.

In the course of what I have to say today, I intend to address myself mainly to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and his budget remarks. I do not propose to argue with him today as to whether or not it is a responsible budget, as far as it goes. I am more concerned, as the minister should be, about whether this budget is truly responsive to the needs of the country at this time. Applying that test, I find there are many significant ways in which the budget falls short of being satisfactory. These areas of shortfall are outlined in the amendment introduced in the House by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

In speaking to that amendment today, I wish to cover several of those areas of the budget in which the proposals cannot be considered realistically responsive. There is one basic fact about the Canadian economy, despite all the palaver of the Secretary of State for External Affairs this afternoon. In the past two years or so, our economy has been running below its potential at the rate of about $3 billion a year. The unemployment arising from this situation constitutes the principal challenge which faces the government in 1972. The gap is a real gap. It is not just a matter of statistics. It is certainly real for more than 600,000 Canadians who are out of work and looking for jobs; it is real for the taxpayer who is shelling out to meet the costs of welfare payments arising from unemployment; it is real for businessmen looking for sales and it is real for every man, woman and child who is in some way bearing the burden of an economy which is not producing to its full potential.

I do not propose to dwell on the fact that this gap was deliberately created by the present government. That is common knowledge; there is no reason for me to elaborate on it. But having created this situation, one would almost believe that the government was determined to preserve this gap between the rate at which the economy is operating and the rate at which it should be operating to provide something like an acceptable standard of employment. I have heard of people falling in love with their own mistakes. That is about the only explanation I can give for the seeming determination of the government to do almost anything rather than get the economy moving again at the rate required to narrow the gap rapidly and regain an employment situation which any civilized country would wish to achieve.

So, the first priority of the government must be to get rid of the gap between the actual and the potential operation of the economy. In concrete terms, this means a vigorous and determined effort to create enough jobs to get rid of the shameful phenomenon of mass unemployment which has existed in this country for some time. This is the measuring rod against which we must judge the budgetary measures the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has proposed. The budget we are considering today is the first budget which the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) has placed before the House. Appropriately enough, it has, superficially, a new look.

I had been hoping the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) would stay with us. He might learn something in passing.

Mr. Sharp: I will be back.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: Something non-partisan. As I was saying, there is, superficially, a new look about some of the measures the minister has proposed, at least by comparison with other budgets I have heard presented in the House. There is a modicum of justice done to some of our pensioners, though the move has come rather late in the day. I must say that if this step is followed by an immediate election the minister will have shown himself to possess a degree of political cynicism I did not think he had. Further, the fact that about 700,000 pensioners will benefit to the tune of some $2.88 a month is a reminder that the government still knows how to be petty. These pensioners, who have been bearing the brunt of inflation ever since January 1, 1967, should have been awarded an increase in their basic pension sufficient to compensate them adequately for the deterioration in purchasing power which has taken place since the last major change late in 1966. This would involve an adjustment, not of $2.88 but of nearly $15 a month in the basic pension. I have no hesitation in saying that the government I expect to lead shortly will do just that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Let us examine the methods the minister has used in his budget to stimulate the economy. There is, of course, the reduction the minister proposes in the rate of corporate tax affecting firms in the manufacturing and processing industries effective January 1 next year. Then, there is the provision for fast write-offs affecting some firms who buy new equipment, effective immediately. This is another aspect of the new look. There is a sort of industrial strategy involved here. That is what the Secretary of State for External Affairs was trying to say this afternoon.

The Minister of Finance is proposing to reduce corporate taxes as they affect certain firms. Revenue loss, as a result, will be supplied by raising personal income tax and, to some extent, increasing the taxes levied on other corporations. Last October all corporate taxes were reduced for a period of 18 months. This will cease to be the case at the end of 1972.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That was dealt with by parliament.

Mr. Stanfield: It is the 1972 year. I was merely pointing out that the reduction in taxes which the minister proposes in order to assist certain firms who engage in manufacturing and processing constitutes, in effect, a transfer which is bound to increase the load carried by individual taxpayers and other types of corporations. Personal income tax rates will go up 3 per cent on January 1. The minister did not call attention to this, but it is undeniable that they will go up.

Furthermore, the very fact that inflation is taking place at the rate of about 5 per cent per annum does, in itself, mean that the rate of taxation on personal income is increasing and will continue to increase, because inflation, applied to a progressive tax schedule, automatically means that if there is a 5 per cent increase in personal income the government will get much more than a 5 per cent increase in tax. So, while the minister is proposing this cut in taxation affecting certain kinds of corporations, let us bear in mind that taxes paid by other corporations will increase and, of course, taxes on personal income will increase. They will increase, first of all, because they are being put up expressly, and, second, because the process of inflation applied to the progressive income tax schedule automatically means that a person who does not get a nickel more in terms of real income in 1972 than in 1971 will be obliged to pay a great deal more to the government in proportion to that real income.

We have personal income taxes going up for two reasons. We have, as I say, a transfer of tax from certain types of corporations to personal income tax payers and, to some extent, to corporations. We have a new national policy which is a subsidy. I do not want the minister to get upset, as I am not criticizing his policy, I am just explaining what it is. It is a subsidy on the exports of those firms which can benefit from the minister's proposal, and a subsidy also toward the domestic sales of these firms which can comply. In other words, it does involve a form of protection. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) can say he does not believe in tariffs or protection, but the minister is in fact applying a form of protection to companies which can qualify.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is a pretty far-fetched economic argument.

Mr. Hees: It is perfectly true.

Mr. Stanfield: I am just explaining what the situation is.

Mr. Hees: You don't understand your own budget.

Mr. Stanfield: What the minister is doing is providing a subsidy through tax transfers for these companies in respect of domestic sales and, to some extent, in respect of exports. This is a national policy to encourage manufacturing in this country in order to increase our share of the domestic market, and to increase opportunities in the export area. The minister should be prepared to call it what it is.

I am not describing this move in these terms for the purpose of criticizing what the minister is proposing to do. I am not criticizing it as such. I am attempting to show what is being done. I am not objecting to this sort of encouragement being given to manufacturing and processing concerns, because I believe it will help them to be more competitive in the world as it actually exists. I have been for some time emphasizing the importance of Canadian corporations being able to compete in the world as it is. I have said that, and I welcome what the minister has done, provided it is accompanied by some other measures.

What measures should accompany the help the minister is proposing for certain corporations in this country? The purpose he has in mind is to create jobs in manufacturing and processing industries. His measure would only do so where there is an additional market available at home or abroad to these firms. I must say I found the Secretary of State for External Affairs extraordinarily complacent this afternoon in view of the marketing problems and the questions of access to markets that a country such as Canada faces today. He talked about these problems, but exhibited an extraordinary degree of complacency about them.

The Minister of Finance assumes that the encouragement he has offered will enable Canadian manufacturing and processing industries to get a bigger share of either the foreign market or the domestic market, presumably by reducing prices. Presumably that is what the minister has in mind, that these firms will be able to reduce their prices and be more competitive. Some of these firms will be able to do so to an unpredictable extent. The minister has said it will be some years before we really know the results of what he has proposed. In other words, he is not putting something before this House which will result in any dramatic increase in employment. As he says himself, this is something that may take years to have any real effect. The firms that will get any help from what the minister is proposing are those firms that are now making money and earning income. A very substantial percentage of firms are losing money, frequently because of competitive marketing conditions and not through inefficiency, and I point out to the minister that this proposal offers no help at all to them. The minister cannot deny that.

Furthermore, and far more important, his proposal is virtually useless to new industry. His proposal is of very little ecouragement to anybody or any group wanting to start a new industry in this country because, generally speaking, a new industry does not have any net income for many years. I say in all earnestness to the minister that what he is proposing, even for manufacturing and processing industries, will be of very, very little encouragement to the commencement of new industries in this area in Canada. If we are going to really succeed in fighting unemployment and creating the employment we want in the manufacturing and processing industries in this country we have to start a lot of new industries, and I say to the minister that his proposal is of no consequence at all in that regard.

Mr. Sharp: That is a silly statement.

Mr. Stanfield: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Sharp: I say, that is surely not true.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister says that is not true.

Mr. Hees: How do you help a company that has no income to tax?

Mr. Stanfield: It is all very well for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to say that is a silly statement, but it is a statement he cannot challenge because it is absolutely correct. A reduction in corporation tax and a fast writeoff offers virtually no encouragement to people to commence new industries because they cannot get any benefit from those proposals for years to come.

Mr. Hees: That is absolutely correct.

Mr. Sharp: I repeat, that is a silly statement.

Mr. Stanfield: I am afraid the Secretary of State for External Affairs does not understand these things.

Mr. Sharp: Oh, I do, very well.

Mr. Hees: He used to have these troubles when he was Minister of Finance.

Mr. Sharp: I think you should get new research men.

Mr. Hees: It is obvious why we have a different Minister of Finance.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen ought to consult some people who know something about this. If they consult people who are interested in starting new businesses they will find that what I have said is absolutely correct. I will return to the subject, Mr. Speaker.

I am simply pointing out now that the proposal of the minister falls far short of being an effective tool to expand Canadian manufacturing and processing. I also point out that there is really nothing here to encourage Canadians to invest more of their money in their economy in order to play a bigger part in the ownership of that Canadian economy in the future. I also point out to the Minister of Finance that, in so far as he claims that reducing these taxes will make these corporations more profitable, this is just as attractive to foreign capital as it is to Canadian capital. There is nothing in the minister's proposal which encourages Canadians as such to acquire a bigger share of the economy in the future.

If the Minister of Finance refers to the dividend credit that is available in connection with personal income taxes, I agree that encourages Canadians to invest their money in shares and to establish dividend paying corporations. It provides little if any encouragement, however, to Canadians to invest their money in risk enterprises or in new enterprises which will not pay dividends for years. That kind of incentive was not given before, and it is not provided in the minister's budget.

I have already said I accept the principle of the proposal made by the government to screen takeovers. I want the Secretary of State for External Affairs to hear me on this because a minute ago he misquoted me. I repeat for the benefit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, so that he will know my view on this subject and not misinterpret it, that I accept the principle of the proposal to screen takeovers as made by the government, but I also say that this will not in itself increase the Canadian role in our economy, and I do not think the government seriously suggests it will. It may prevent certain takeovers and enable Canada to obtain a better deal in respect of certain other takeovers, but it will not increase Canadian participation in our economy. That can be done by positive measures and there are no such positive measures in the budget.

Mr. Sharp: Such as?

Mr. Stanfield: The minister says "such as". I will come to that. In view of the time I am taking, the minister may have to wait for the second exciting instalment of my budget speech. The question of encouraging Canadians to participate in the economy is closely related to the failure of the minister to encourage the development of new manufacturing and processing enterprises in Canada. As I have said, I intend to return to this whole subject.

[Mr. Sharp.]

What are the other weaknesses in the budget proposals? The Minister of Finance says he has decided there is enough stimulus in the economy, after allowing for the increase in pensions which is the only increase on the demand side the minister proposes. The minister said there is enough disposable income available. He is concerned that if the disposable income were increased a lot of it would be spent on imports. The Secretary of State for External Affairs this afternoon spoke about leakage. I would hate to set myself up in competition with any member of this government when it comes to leakage. Of course, some of this money would be spent on imports. It always is. However, a very large proportion of it would also be spent in Canada. There is plenty of room for increasing output in Canada with the spare capacity and with 6 per cent of the labour force unemployed. Personal income taxes were not reduced. In fact, as I indicated, they are actually being increased in two ways. The actual increase of 3 per cent is taking place and there is the implicit increase which takes place through inflation as applied to our graduated scale of income tax. Yet, while the minister will not stimulate the economy in this way, he projects a rate of growth of the Canadian economy which involves the continuation of massive unemployment in this country for years to come, according to his own projections.

The other day I gave the minister the opportunity to dissasociate himself with the projections of the Economic Council of Canada concerning the real rate of growth required in Canada to bring unemployment down to around 4 per cent even over a period of two or three years. The minister did not disassociate himself from that forecast. Yet, his forecast of the rate of growth is substantially below the rate of growth the Economic Council of Canada says is necessary in order to bring unemployment down to even 4 per cent over two or three years. It is all very well for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to talk about the growth in the work force. Of course, we have a rapidly growing work force. The Economic Council of Canada pointed that out as far back as 1965. There is nothing new about this. That is the great reason the decision taken in 1969 by that minister and his colleagues to deliberately slow down the economy has involved us in tragedy. It is the reason we are having such difficulty now, and it is the reason it is such a crime to have this complacent government in a position of responsibility today. The Minister of Finance and his colleagues have accepted the continuance of high unemployment in this country for years to come, and that involves waste, the destruction of morale, a cost to the taxpayers and everything which goes with this situation. Why has he accepted it?

Why has the minister, in May 1972, adopted a less expansionist budget than his predecessor adopted in June a year ago or as recently as October last? Is he afraid of being charged with buying votes? The Secretary of State for External Affairs suggested he did not want to run the risk of being so charged. That did not prevent the increases in old age pensions, and of course it should not have.

Mr. Sharp: That is not buying votes, I hope.

Mr. Stanfield: Exactly. The government should not be open to that charge because everybody on this side of the House urged the minister to increase old age pensions. So far as reducing taxes are concerned, the minister was in exactly the same position. Everybody on this side of the House was urging this and suggesting it was desirable. No one over here could accuse the Minister of Finance of seeking votes by reducing personal income tax because we were all saying this was desirable.

Was it because of a fear of inflation that the minister did not reduce personal income tax. Is that the reason the Minister of Finance allowed the personal income tax to rise substantially in the course of the current fiscal year? Was it because of a fear of inflation? It is my conviction that an increase in employment is our number one social priority. Unemployment must be reduced. I say that even if in our effort to cut it down in a humane manner inflation should escalate, then we will deal with it even if we must impose temporary controls. Let us deal with unemployment in a humane way. The government and the minister continue to run the economy below its potential as an anti-inflationary measure to curb inflation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said he would not hesitate to do again what he did in 1969 and 1970 to fight inflation by slowing down the economy and creating massive unemployment. One can see this attitude reflected in the budget the minister presented. This government still expects the pensioners and the unemployed to be the sacrificial goats in its efforts to control inflation. I won't buy it.

I say that a rate of unemployment of 6 per cent or 5 per cent is inhumane, is uncivilized and is unCanadian. So, I totally reject the minister's approach of maintaining high unemployment as a method of containing inflation. I think it is pretty silly anyway to talk about the risk of overheating an economy which has an idle plant and a seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment of 6 per cent. We are a long distance from having an overheated economy.

What reason is there to believe that the government's reluctance to reduce personal income taxes—in fact, the government's actual increase in personal income taxes—will reduce the inflationary forces which work in this country today? I do not think that the people of this country are fools. They know when they are paying more taxes, and they know that they will be paying more personal taxes under the minister's budget. Will this encourage restraint in wage and salary demands in this country? Will the minister's budget seem equitable and fair to the ordinary Canadian? A reduction in personal income taxes was needed to prevent the tax on real incomes from rising, in other words a reduction in rates was required to prevent income taxes from rising in the circumstances. But a reduction in personal income taxes in association with the corporate tax cuts would, in my judgment, encourage restraint. The national policy of the minister to cut the taxes of corporations associated with something that would seem fair to the individual taxpayer would, in my judgment, have encouraged restraint and not have fed the fires of inflation.

I suggest that the minister is asking too much of the ordinary Canadian. At least he should not have added to his personal income taxes, at least he should have given him some consideration and provided some real stimulation to the Canadian economy at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: If we are to have restraint, we have to have fairness. I am concerned about several aspects of inflation. Unemployment being created and endured in the name of inflation is one aspect that concerns me, and like everybody else in the House I am concerned about the burden that inflation imposes on Canadians with fixed incomes. I am particularly concerned that the government of Canada has a vested interest in inflation. The reason for that is very simple. The graduated structure of tax rates under which we operate means that every jump in money income puts progressively more money in the coffers of this government through personal income taxes. It means, for example, that a rate of inflation of 5 per cent in a year increases government revenues by amounts considerably in excess of 5 per cent. It means that a taxpayer whose income simply keeps abreast of rising prices, without improving his position at all in terms of real income, is paying more money to the government of Canada under existing circumstances, and it means that without having taken any initiative of its own the government of Canada is increasing its revenues at the expense of the taxpayer. As the individual citizen gets poor, this government grows rich.

I am aware of the fact that the Carter Commission rejected any efforts to tax only the real increase in personal income. But the position taken by the Carter Commission was taken in the context of a rate of inflation substantially less than 2 per cent a year during the previous five years. I say that today we operate in a context which is totally different, one where annual rates of inflation are 4 per cent or 5 per cent, involving and requiring different measures than in the days of the Carter Commission and the modest inflation which existed then.

I say that if the government of Canada is sincere about fighting inflation, if it is sincere about justice, if it is sincere about honesty and fair dealing with the people it is serving, there is only one thing it can do, and that is get rid of its own vested interest in inflation which it can do in one, simple effective way. What I propose and what a government that I lead will do, is henceforth to calculate personal net income for federal tax purposes in constant dollars.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The appropriate base year for this calculation would be the year 1971, the year of the so-called tax reform, the year in which the government put through the House a rate schedule which it said was fair and equitable. The constant dollar calculation would be achieved by employing a consumer price index factor made available by Canada Statistics and shown on the income tax forms for the year.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Would you also control your expenditures in constant dollars?

Mr. Stanfield: I will come to that in a minute. That is another advantage in what I am proposing. It would be a simple calculation for the taxpayer, and there is no difficult administrative problem for the Department of National Revenue. If the cost of living in any year has increased by 10 per cent above 1971, then the income for tax purposes would be reduced by that percentage. That involves a very simple calculation. This would produce tax payable in 1971 dollars. Another very simple calculation would convert that figure back into the current dollars of the year to indicate the amount of tax available in the dollars of the year in question.

As of the inception of the so-called tax reform, schedules of personal income tax rates and exemptions were fixed for an indefinite period in the future. Under my proposal, these ongoing schedules would relate to ongoing real income rather than to inflated cash income. Thus, the federal tax payable would be free from any inflationary component so far as personal income tax is concerned. This would be just for the taxpayer, and it would force any government to come out into the open. If the government needed a bigger share of personal income to finance its operations, it would have to come before parliament and seek an increase in rates rather than relying, as it now does, on inflation to do its dirty work for it. The government can no longer count on inflation through graduated income tax rates to provide it automatically with a bigger and bigger share of the real income of taxpayers and a bigger and bigger share of the gross national product.

This proposal would be fair to the taxpayer. If his real income rises through the years, he will pay more income tax in real terms, but if he does no more than keep pace with the rise in the cost of living, he would not be penalized; he would pay the same rate as before. It is a simple proposal to calculate income taxes in any year by computing personal income in that year in 1971 dollars. It is a simple proposal but, as the minister realizes, one with tremendous implications. First of all, it would protect citizens from tax increases imposed upon them by inflation rather than imposed upon them as a result of an increase in their real income.

Mr. Sharp: It doesn't. It just changes the tax rates.

An hon. Member: You don't understand it.

Mr. Stanfield: May I remind the Secretary of State for External Affairs that centuries ago parliament fought the king for the right to control taxation. It achieved that control. But in recent years, that control has been very largely eroded through the ability of the government to increase tax rates in fact without changing the schedules, as a result of inflation. The steady inflation we have had for years has emasculated parliamentary control over taxation. My proposal would restore the fundamental principle of parliamentary control over the rate of taxation.

• (1640)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Second, this principle would give parliament greater control over government spending and government waste. The government could no longer count upon inflation to ensure that a given tax structure would, in each year, place in its hands a greater percentage of the gross national product. The government would be under heavy pressure to economize. It would be collecting personal income taxes in terms of 1971 dollars but it would be paying its bills in terms of current dollars. Everybody concerned about government waste, everybody concerned about the government taking more of the GNP without anybody's permission, should enthusiastically support the kind of proposal I am putting forward. Clearly, this proposal would not only remove the vested interests of the government in inflation but would give the government a positive motivation to fight inflation.

As the leader of a government, I would implement the proposal fully, given the chance, as of January 1, 1973. The cost of living de-escalator would be applied to 1973 for a tax de-escalation in a proportion to be determined by Statistics Canada, on the basis of comparison between the cost of living for the 12 months terminating September 30, 1972, and the 12 months terminating September 30, 1971. For convenience of calculation, we would go to the nearest percentage point. Clearly, there would have to be discussions with the provinces. There is no doubt about that. There would have to be discussion in connection with their own problems associated with maintaining a single joint tax return. I think this would probably involve the negotiating of new tax agreements with the provinces rather than the standpat agreement of which the minister is so proud, and while we were negotiating these with the provinces we would make a real effort to get sensible integration between the capital gains tax and the succession duties of the provinces.

For the balance of 1972, we would adopt an interim arrangement. We propose to assume the cost of living in 1972 to be about 5 per cent higher than in 1971. There has already been a tax reduction of 3 per cent which came into effect as of last October. That means there is still 2 per cent to be taken care of now. I repeat we are assuming a 5 per cent increase in the cost of living, and there has been a tax reduction of 3 per cent. This would involve a cut of 4 per cent in tax rates for the last six months of 1972 which, I think, would involve about $160 million. This would mean that it would be an interim arrangement to be in effect this year. This would be fair to the taxpayers. It would encourage a feeling of fairness and, therefore, restraint in Canadian society. It would stimulate the Canadian economy, and thereby tend to cut down unemployment, rather than accept the massive degree of unemployment that the government is accepting. We are concerned about unemployment. We are concerned about inflation. We are concerned about the ever-growing percentage of the gross national product that the government is acquiring without any authorization. We are concerned about restoring parliamentary control over government taxation and government spending. We are concerned about government waste.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I have outlined, and I am afraid at rather great length, some specific, concrete and, I believe, effective measures for implementing this concern, for fighting unemployment, for removing the government's vested interest in inflation, for controlling the government's percentage of the GNP, for increasing parliamentary control over taxation and spending, as well as for putting real pressure on the government to eliminate waste. I will seize an early opportunity to satisfy the curiosity of the Secretary of State for External Affairs about some of these matters, about how we are going to encourage more Canadian investment in the Canadian economy. I will do this probably later in this debate, although we do not know how long this debate will be allowed to continue. I will do it probably after the vote on the amendment put forward by hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

I will outline further measures that should be adopted to create more employment through creation of new Canadian enterprises, through creation of pools of venture capital, and measures to enable Canadians to increase their control of the Canadian economy. As I say, Mr. Speaker, the ministers opposite will have to wait for the next exciting installment in order to learn this. I have said enough today to indicate how unresponsive the government is to the needs of the country at the present time. I have outlined some of the important measures which would be responsive to those needs, measures which a Progressive Conservative government would implement. I, therefore, ask all hon. members to support the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Minister of Finance rising to ask a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the hon. gentleman would accept one.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, sure.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to try to understand his proposition. What he is suggesting is that tax revenues be calculated in constant dollars—

Mr. Stanfield: Personal income tax.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —for income tax purposes.

Mr. Stanfield: Personal.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Since expenditures would remain on actual dollars and would tend to outrun the revenues from personal tax limited to constant dollars would he not, to make up the difference, have to raise the rates and really end up with the same result except he achieves, as he puts it, some kind of parliamentary control? He is not suggesting to the Canadian people that he would maintain their tax rates on constant dollars. He would have to raise the rates to compensate for keeping personal tax revenues on constant dollars.

Mr. Stanfield: To the extent that the increase in the gross national product and the additional revenue that that would generate for a government was inadequate to support government programs, as the leader of the government I would have to come before parliament and seek additional authority—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): To increase the rates.

Mr. Stanfield: But I would have to seek that from parliament.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): And raise the rates.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, I would have to raise the rates if I could justify the raising of the rates.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. Crouse: Just listen a little and you will learn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition had the floor.

Mr. Stanfield: The whole point is that under my proposal a government has to justify the taxes it is collecting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Under the technique and the devices that this government has been using in recent years the people's taxes have been increased without any authorization, and they are increased every year without any authorization. It is time that sort of thing stopped.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Any more questions, John?

• (1650)

Mr. H. E. Stafford (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) must be congratulated on the many positive features of the budget. The increases in the old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement are steps toward social justice for our older citizens. The university students will welcome the budget provisions which will aid their quest for higher education. Our manufacturing industry, which is so vital to the employment picture, will be in a position to preserve and expand job opportunities.

However, I do not wish to speak today primarily on the positive aspects of the budget. These progressive and timely moves by the minister speak for themselves, despite the negative carpings of members opposite. My disappointment arises from the fact that the direct interests of a large segment of this nation were not included in the budget, the interest of the agricultural industry in the eastern part of Canada. We have in eastern Canada an agricultural industry whose people work hard and who in many fields, desperately need our help. I wish to point out, first of all, that many of the steps which this government has taken in recent years to assist agriculture have been excellent and in the right direction. The Lift program that encouraged farmers to discontinue wheat production and switch to other grains has been proven to be good. The $100 million pumped into the western economy in the form of acreage payments has had the effect of uplifting the whole western economy. These were all very good, but they were strictly for the west.

Then, we get to the moves of this government which have had and will have beneficial effects on a wider area of the Canadian agricultural economy. The payment of $5 per hog for the first 200 hogs per year produced by a producer will result in a maximum of $1,000 per hog producer which will be pumped back into the economy to help offset his losses for the past year. I know the farmers will welcome this action. They will also welcome the decision of this government to introduce a two price system for wheat which will mean a maximum payment of $500 to every wheat producer in Ontario who sold at least 500 bushels of wheat on the domestic market.

I cannot avoid at this time expressing my pleasure that the tobacco companies have made a working arrangement with the tobacco growers for the coming crop year. It is not enough, but it is a belated step in the right direction. The future of the tobacco industry, and especially its export division, looks better than it has for many years.

By and large, however, the producers of many agricultural products in Ontario are taken for granted. Agriculture in Ontario, even at the present price levels, contributes over $1 billion to the Canadian economy. Eighty per cent of this production is within western Ontario, within 100 miles of the riding which I represent. It is the most productive and specialized region in Canada. It is rich in terms of productivity and fertility. It is rich in human resources. It is steeped in tradition and proud of its ethnic cultures and background. When we think of western Ontario as a great manufacturing and processing area, we are right. It is also a great agricultural area. One-third of the agricultural produce of this country comes from Ontario. Yet in the past fiscal year, Ontario agricultural producers suffered a net income loss of over $75 million. Our corn producers are now producing corn at a loss.

Let us examine the facts with respect to corn. We tend to think of wheat as the king of grains. It is not; corn is. It contains more protein and other nutrients than any other grain. More people eat corn than any other grain in the world. Corn has a wider market than any other grain in the world. Corn is, indeed, among the foods which have the most life-giving substances. In 1971, the U.S. produced over 5½ billion bushels of corn. U.S. Corn is shipped all over the world, including Canada. The U.S. imposes a tariff of 25 cents per bushel on all corn entering the U.S. By contrast, our tariff on corn is eight cents per bushel.

The U.S. Agricultural Act of 1970 set up a commodity support program for those commodities, including corn, which are considered basic to the cost of living, the stabilization of prices and incomes and the welfare of the nation. The support or national loan level on corn is $1.03 per bushel, on top of which all participating growers are paid a direct subsidy of 32 cents per bushel on their corn base, less 25 per cent, by the commodity credit corporation. In the result, when our corn growers compete with U.S. corn producers they are competing with the U.S. Treasury with its support subsidy of 32 cents per bushel.

Canada is not among the great corn producing nations of the world. But in the past ten years Ontario and parts of Quebec have increased their annual production from 50 million bushels to 100 million bushels. This increase was achieved on the advice of the best provincial and federal economists and agricultural specialists who told the corn producers to produce more corn. They were told that corn was the crop to grow, that it would give them a better return than any other crop they could grow. Now, the corn producer finds himself in dire straits. The cost of production has risen and the price of corn has decreased. The net result is that the corn farmer is producing a commodity below cost and this cannot continue. The economic return is so poor that many farmers are going bankrupt. Every time a farmer is removed from the bottom, the farmer on the top is moved a notch closer to the bottom.

The accelerated depreciation allowing complete write-off in four years of the cost of storage facilities on the farm and of drying equipment to the value of $15,000 is great for the farmer who is making money. It cannot benefit the farmer who is not making a profit. Until there is reason to be optimistic about the corn industry, the farmer will not invest in storage or drying facilities. The farmer, like any other businessman, does not invest in the face of pessimistic forecasts. The price of corn in Chicago affects the price of all feed grains in Canada. Corn prices in Ontario are based on the availability of U.S. corn or western feed barley. The feed freight assistance subsidy holds down the price of corn to some extent. Corn can take the place of barley any time. There would be a market for all the corn grown in Ontario if it were not for the importation of western feed grain and U.S. corn.

We lost the sugar beet industry in southwestern Ontario by the default of the company who owned the last two plants at Wallaceburg and Chatham. Both the Ontario and federal governments allowed this industry to die in 1966 and 1967. At one time, there were five sugar refineries in this great agricultural production area. Now, there is none. Government economists told the farmers they could quit growing sugar beets and make more money growing corn. At that time they could, as corn was selling for over $1.50 per bushel. Now, with the increased cost of production, corn is selling for approximately $1.12 per bushel. We must re-establish the sugar beet industry. Sugar beets can be grown in southwestern Ontario with a sugar content of 16 per cent and yields of 20 tons of beets per acre. One ton of beets yields 290 pounds of sugar, If a farmer receives $15 per ton for his beets, his gross cash yield would be $300 per acre. A sugar beet policy is long overdue. The sugar beet industry could be developed to take 40,000 acres of land out of corn production. If we had a sugar policy for Canada, that would guarantee that at least 20 per cent of the sugar consumed in Canada would be produced in this country. It would re-establish this industry on an economical and long term basis for both the producer and the manufacturer, and it would have a stabilizing effect on other segments of the agricultural industry.

We have lost, over a period of years, a substantial amount of our tomato processing industry by allowing import brokers easy access to our market. We are also going to lose on frozen food exports such as peas, sweet corn and french fried potatoes to England and Europe, because of the expanded European Common Market. We must take action to protect these products, and this does not mean the reduction of tariffs on foodstuffs produced in low wage countries.

• (1700)

At the present time, we import 15.6 million bushels of soybeans and grow only 9.4 million bushels per year.

There is no tariff on soybeans coming into Canada, but the tariff is 60 cents per bushel going into the United States. The Canadian tariff should be equalized to the U.S. tariff. This would put more dollars in the pockets of the soybean farmers and induce the Ontario farmer to grow more soybeans.

Canadian farmers should establish a national oil seed marketing agency that would include rapeseed, sunflower seed and soybeans. Such a marketing agency could develop export markets for these oils and their by-products which would create a greater market for Ontario soybeans, the quality of which is recognized as among the highest in the world. An example of this is the limited production in Ontario this year of the Harwood variety of soybean for a specialized Japanese market. A soybean crushing mill should be built in southwestern Ontario, with access to railroads to develop the soybean industry. At the present time there are only three bean crushing mills in Ontario, two in Toronto and one in Hamilton. Such a crushing mill would create competition among the processors who would, in turn, look for more markets.

Farm machinery should be included in the fast tax write-off items announced in the budget for production equipment; or, at least a system of investment credit should be set up which would allow the farmer to deduct a percentage of the purchase price of new equipment from his net income tax, in addition to depreciation. This would help the farmer modernize his operation and develop a more efficient level of production.

The recent amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act, including the raising of the maximum loan to $100,000, will be a great help to the farmer. The Farm Credit Corporation should also set up a system of rental purchase agreements that would allow a young, qualified person to enter the farming industry, with the accumulated rent over a period of ten years being applied as a down payment on a viable farm. This would enable a young farmer to purchase a farm without a down payment, or make it possible for him to own a farm without seeking financial assistance from a feed company, which ties the young farmer into the present trend towards vertical integration.

Returning to the corn industry, my study of the industry leads me to suggest a number of specific moves on which there should be early action by the government. First, a two-price system could be established for corn. In fact, such a two-price system could apply to all farm products. Second, corn could be included in the Canadian Wheat Board Act, whereby the Wheat Board would have to issue a permit before corn could be imported. The same could apply to soybeans. Third, corn could be put under the jurisdiction of the National Farm Products Marketing Council. A provincial corn marketing agency would have to be established to do this. Grades of corn suitable for feed, distilling, starch and cereal could be established, and the agency could negotiate with the processors to establish prices for each grade. The agency could purchase the surplus corn on the market at harvest time. The surplus corn could be pooled and offered to eastern feed dealers with a continuity of market and guaranteed supply. The agency could seek out markets and arrange export sales.

Fourth, terminal storage elevators could be constructed. These should be located in a number of the main corn growing areas. They should be located where there is ready access to water, rail and highway transportation. They should be located so as to encourage processors and manufacturers to locate in or near the high production and storage areas, with the result that much of the crop would be consumed at the point of production, with low handling and transportation costs. Such storage facilities should be located with a view to export trade, taking advantage of the St. Lawrence Seaway and its shipping facilities which provide access to the whole world at low cost. These are only the major location criteria; there are others. Such points as Port Stanley and Port Burwell are natural locations for such facilities.

The necessity for availability of water transportation is proved by the fact that freight rates from Chatham, for example, to Montreal are 22 cents to 23 cents per bushel, whereas water rates are 6 cents to 7 cents per bushel. The need for storage facilities is emphasized by the fact that in recent years the price of corn to the producer at harvest time has been reduced by as much as 25 cents per bushel. Most important, the storage facilities must be built for the benefit of the Canadian corn producer in that tremendous production area of southwestern Ontario. The storage facilities should be built for the producers in that area and controlled by either the producers or the government.

Fifth, the duty on U.S. corn could be increased from 8 cents to 25 cents per bushel, to equalize the U.S. duty on Canadian corn, and sixth, Canadian corn could be subsidized on a similar basis as corn in the United States, by taking into consideration the cost of production plus a reasonable profit.

My emphasis today has been mainly on corn, simply because the problems of the corn grower are more urgent and immediate. This does not in any way lessen the necessity for similar action in relation to the other commodities I have discussed and, in fact, the whole farming industry. The potential of the great agricultural area in southwestern Ontario is almost boundless. The doubling of corn production in the past ten years can easily be repeated in the next ten years. Yields are expected to increase in the early years ahead in the United States, from 86 bushels per acre to 200 bushels per acre. Similar results can be attained here. Our quality is second to none. We should be known throughout the world in the years ahead as a great corn producing country. Today, foreign buyers do not even know we have corn for sale. Agricultural exports benefit the Canadian economy. They do as much, if not more, than any other export to reduce our balance of payments and help balance our economy. The government should devise a system of supports to encourage exports.

We must subdue the economic winds that are blowing the family farmer off the farm. As the September 12, 1969 issue of Time magazine put it:

> By a process of natural attrition Canada's 400,000 farms are already declining by 10,000 a year; 40 per cent of farmers are over 55 years old, and increasingly their sons are leaving the farm for city jobs.

The farmer is entitled to the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. He is entitled to his fair share of the retail prices.

The inroads of the conglomerate are only beginning to be felt in Canadian agriculture today. We must not allow a situation to develop in Canada as it did in California where, by 1969, 3.6 per cent of the farmers owned 70 per cent of the agricultural land. It is not in the national interest to allow thousands of farmers to be driven out of business and have market control gathered into the lap of conglomerate power. We continually talk about public interest and social efficiency in the interest of the community as a whole. Surely, there can be no greater public interest than our interest in food supplies.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, when I first looked at the budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) the other evening, I was reminded of my days in high school many years ago. There were various books I had to study. Most were a disagreeable green, drab grey or brown colour, but the algebra book was a bright, shiny red. It was usually designed in a way that would conceal the disagreeable contents. It was a bit of a delusion. I could not help but compare the minister's budget with that algebra book. On the face of it, one noticed the very substantial increase in the supplementary payments under the Old Age Security plan. With that, everyone in this House agrees and congratulates the minister on having the good judgment and good sense to accept not only the advice of opposition parties in this House in the past few years, but the various senior citizens groups across the country. However, after that, we begin to see the real contents of the budget.

Let us look at the Old Age Security escalator clause. It will be retroactive to the first of the year. That is fine. However, as I pointed out in this House earlier today, that amounts to $2.88 a month. A few years ago in this House, a previous Minister of Finance, who is no longer with us but retired shall we say, increased the old age pension. He was referred to as "Two buck Harris". This $2.88 a month increase amounts to approximately 10 cents a day, not even enough for a cup of coffee. Last weekend, one of my constituents referred to the Minister of Finance as "Ten cent Turner". This may not be polite, but at least it is accurate.

As has been pointed out by nearly every speaker, other than those on the government side, while the minister stated that the personal income tax as such was not being touched, there was a sort of error of omission. In fact, the personal income tax will be increased by 3 per cent at the end of this year. I think the budget was very deceptive in this regard. I have heard a number of people refer to it as the "Tricky Turner Treatment".

The next item in the budget is the estimated $500 million tax advantages and incentives to industry. To some degree, this is very good. However, the minister missed one point. He did not state whether any of this would be passed on to the taxpayers. That remains to be seen. I suspect it will not be passed on. The minister stated he has great trust and faith in business to use these incentives to purchase new machinery and pass on the benefits.

[Mr. Stafford.]

I have here a letter which was given to me by one of my colleagues. It is a circular letter dated May 8, 1972 from AOCO Limited of Belleville, Ontario, which apparently has a virtual monopoly in the field of spectacle lenses, rims and other things associated with eyeglasses. The letter reads:

> TO OUR GOOD CUSTOMERS: Enclosed you will find our new Rx and Stock Price Lists which supersedes all previous lists and becomes effective May 15th, 1972.
> Labour and material costs have increased rapidly over the past twelve months and, in order to maintain the high quality of our products, our price list reflects these increases.
> We would like to take this opportunity to thank you for your valued business in the past and we trust we may continue to service your requirements.

There is a footnote which reads:

> Regarding the above, you may expect a notice regarding price change on or about May 15th, 1972,—

In the past few weeks and months, a great many people have been guessing about the election date. No one has come up with a very good answer. Apparently this company was very good at guessing not only the budget date, but the contents of the budget because the price increases were to become effective the very day the budget was presented. I am sure it was a coincidence, but there it is. If this is any example of how some of the major business firms in this country are going to behave, I hope the minister will ensure that these tax benefits will not be granted until such time as there is an indication that business is going to use them in the way which the minister indicated. I agree that many businesses in this country have high business standards and will carry out the minister's ideas, but there are a great many in every industry and profession who are not so highly motivated and need watching. I hope the minister will take appropriate steps in this regard.

The main subject I want to deal with today is something which the minister has omitted. Other of my colleagues have dealt with or will be dealing with other aspects of the budget. In addition to omitting any reference to personal income tax, either reductions or increases, the minister omitted any reference to foreign investment. Shortly before the minister presented his budget, one of his colleagues presented the so-called government policy on foreign investment. I will not go into the details of that because everyone in this House and most Canadians are aware of how great an announcement that was and how much it did or did not do. Just after the foreign investment announcement was made, I remarked to one member on the government side that there was not much in that. He said "Just wait until the budget, then you will see something. There is really going to be something in the budget." That was not a very good guess because there was not anything in the budget concerning foreign investment or any allusion to it.

Whether one likes it or not, this question of foreign ownership, foreign control and foreign investment in Canada is a big issue. I agree that many Canadians are concerned about it for the wrong reasons, but the fact is people are concerned. There are some very good reasons to be concerned about the question of not only foreign investment, but the type and degree of foreign investment in Canada. Likewise, there are great differences of opinion in different parts of Canada. I recently had the opportunity of discussing this matter at meetings in various parts of Canada. The people in western Canada, the Atlantic provinces and, I understand from my colleagues, in Quebec as well say that they want to use foreign capital. They do not wish Ontario, Toronto in particular, to be the only place which gets the advantage of foreign capital. They feel they might possibly be discriminated against. I think that is an unwarranted view of how people in Ontario do things, but it is the view of people in certain parts of Canada.

I would agree that if the government took the position: you cannot do this, you cannot do that, or we shall restrict the flow of foreign capital, it would be unwise and, besides, it would not meet the wishes of, very likely, a large majority of Canadians. In addition, it might prove extremely damaging to the economy. But I believe the government ought to be taking a positive rather than a negative attitude. It should be encouraging Canadians to do something about owning their industries—gradually taking them over. I realize it will cost a great deal of money to buy Canada back and that it would not be feasible to do it all at once. But it can be done by degrees. The obvious tactic is the provision of tax incentives to encourage Canadians to purchase Canadian securities. At the outset, I believe any such incentive should be limited to the purchase of common stocks, sometimes referred to as equity stocks. These are the securities which in most cases symbolize ownership and control growth. Bonds and preferred stocks, the senior securities, may at some time in the future be important, but I believe a start should be made at encouraging Canadians to invest in common stocks.

It is clear that at the present time when Canadians have an opportunity to invest money, they do not always invest it in Canada. Our securities are competitive with other securities. I believe that on a per capita basis every Canadian invests two or three times as much in United States common stock as every American invests in Canadian common stock. We hear so much about United States investment in Canada but the fact is that Canadians, on a per capita basis, invest two or three times as much in United States stocks as Americans do in ours. It is sometimes said that Canadians do not like taking risks, that they want to be sure of their investments. I do not think this is so. From my own experience I would say that Canadians are quite prepared to take risks, provided they get some return for doing so.

It is difficult to produce accurate statistical information especially when one is, as it were, comparing apples with oranges—things which are not really comparable, except perhaps in size. But I have figures here from the Toronto Stock Exchange which indicate that a group of blue chip—or very safe,—common stocks in the year 1971 yielded an average of about 3.2 per cent return on the investment. I also have some figures from the United States for the same year, taken from Moodie's Stock Survey. They do not give us the average across the board, but the average for railroad stocks was 4.4 per cent, for utilities, 5.7 per cent, for bank stocks 4.14 per cent and for insurance companies 3.25 per cent. These figures merely indicate a trend. It is clear that the rate of return on common stocks, or at least, on many common stocks of the blue chip variety in the United States are higher than on comparable Canadian common stocks.

The same applies to rate of growth. There are always exceptions—statistics can be very misleading,—but the fact is that the rate of growth of most common stocks in the United States is faster than that which is reflected by comparable Canadian securities. Though people should, I suppose, be motivated at all times by patriotic motives, such is not always the case. At present there is actually a disincentive confronting all Canadians who contemplate an investment in Canadian common stocks. I believe the government should do something about this. The obvious means of doing so is, of course, through the Income Tax Act. It has been suggested that if a Canadian invests his money in Canadian securities—common stocks, again—his dividends might be taxed at a lower rate. Or, considering it from the point of view of growth, there might be an alteration in the rate of the capital gains tax as applied to a person who, shall we say, has held securities for two years or more. Any such increase in the value of Canadian securities might be taxed at the lower rate than that applicable to United States or other non-Canadian stocks. This arrangement, it has been suggested, would be difficult to administer. But difficulties of administration are not so relevant in this computer age, and, in any case, what I am suggesting would be infinitely easier than what the government is attempting to do in connection with its new family allowances program.

Hon. members may conclude that the proposals I am putting forward imply some kind of anti-Americanism. No way. We are not trying to be anti-American. We are trying to be pro-Canadian; we are trying to encourage Canadians to purchase ownership and control in Canadian industries by making it demonstrably to their advantage to do so. Someone has suggested that greater encouragement should be given to employees to purchase common stock in the companies for which they work.

This is a good idea in some cases. It has been very successful, I understand, in the case of the Eastman Kodak Company, and it has worked well in certain Canadian companies, too. But this kind of operation is more successful in the case of companies whose employees tend to make a lifetime career of their jobs; it might not be so successful in companies where there is a quick turnover in labour—where employees have little personal interest in the future of the concern for which they work.

In cases where people tend to stay in industry with hopes of advancing, encouragement should be given to them to participate in ownership. This is a sort of offshoot of my main argument. Something should be done to encourage Canadians to participate in industrial ownership. The minister has apparently more money at his disposal than was anticipated. There have been some tax cuts, to the extent of $500 million, and approximately $380 million will be given to old age pensioners. It would seem to me that something should have been done to encourage Canadian support in growth securities.

Another method that might be explored by the government is the granting of certain deductions, perhaps $500 to start with, from taxable income for Canadians who invest in Canadian industry. Perhaps all these things cannot be brought forward at once, but something along these lines should be done by the government. The next generation will soon be running this country. Our young people are enthusiastic about Canadians owning and controlling our industries. We must start paying attention to their views. I have attempted to briefly outline the methods that should be used to encourage Canadian ownership. I hope that before the budget bills appear, if they ever do, the minister and his colleagues will consider my suggestions.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in congratulating the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on his realistic, rational, humanitarian, positive, responsible and optimistic budget which, for a start, is in my view a complete success.

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for a member of the House who for many years has been in continual contact with businessmen to refrain from taking part in this debate on a budget which stresses the responsibilities of private enterprise and resisting that temptation is made even more difficult because in the exercise of my profession of chartered accountant I have often had the opportunity of advising businessmen on the management of their firms.

My experience in this field makes it clear to me, without the slightest doubt, that the Minister of Finance is right to state that the atmosphere of confidence between the federal government and the private sector must be enhanced. The minister is showing his confidence in them and I am sure businessmen will respond positively to his budget, giving the lie to some opposition members who claimed that businessmen would boost their profits, instead of using the fiscal incentives provided by the 1972 budget to increase their productivity in order to create more employment opportunities.

In my opinion, voicing our trust in the business sector of this country indicates that this government has reached the needed maturity to preside over the destiny of our beautiful country for many more years.

Businessmen have often criticized governments and rightly so, Mr. Speaker, saying there was a lack of consultation. If we look at this government's record since it came to power in 1968, we have to say that it has had the businessmen's co-operation which it sought through its white papers, more particularly the one dealing with tax reform, which has been considered in depth in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and which was used as a base for Bill C-259, a piece of legislation proposing the tax reform that the people has been waiting for.

A while ago, I was listening to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who first seemed to offer a magic formula. I should like to comment on that formula. First of all, as chairman of the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, I had an opportunity to hear Mr. Young, the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, who, as a witness, discussed with the committee ways to control inflation without checking economic recovery. He said something astonishing: All western industrialized countries are now seeking such a formula and world famous economists are constantly trying to find a way to reconcile economic recovery and inflation. He told us that should anyone ever find that formula, he would certainly deserve the Nobel prize.

I do not know whether the formula proposed originates with the Leader of the Opposition or one of his research assistants—nor whether that formula can really earn its designer the Nobel prize—however, I wanted to pass on to the House that remark from the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, who himself is still looking for that formula along with all the economists of the whole world.

In reply to a question put by the Minister of Finance the Leader of the Opposition, after explaining his formula, which appeared almost miraculous, answered: Yes, the taxation rate should be increased, the individual people should be taxed.

Therefore, I wonder how he can now reconcile his amendment, wherein he blames us for not reducing personal income tax, with a formula which would increase the personal income tax rate.

Of course, if I wanted to be smart, I could say that such a formula might lead to the death of the Progessive Conservative party and that the Leader of the Opposition would prove a good funeral director, but I shall not say so.

As so many other hon. members, I have had the pleasure of sending a questionnaire to approximately 28,000 homes in my riding. Among others, this question was asked: What, to your mind, are the three most urgent tasks to which the federal government should address itself?

• (1740)

According to the answers I received, in large numbers, it seems that in my riding the priorities are as follows: first, providing incentives to solve the unemployment problem; second, revising the old age pension policy; and third, re-examining our agreements with the Quebec government with regard to the housing issue.

In my riding, at least, unemployment and not tax reductions comes first. If my figures are accurate, cuts in personal income tax came tenth, I believe, among the priorities, because jobs is what the people want and I feel the budget is meeting exactly their demand.

My constituents are also aware of the consequences of our tax reform, which I was referring to a few minutes ago, and under which almost one million Canadians will not pay any income tax any more, and about five million have had their income tax reduced. Therefore, they know that the federal government has already recognized their need for a tax cut.

Of course, some have accused us of having introduced a political budget. If we had wanted to introduce a strictly political budget and become more popular, we would have lowered personal and corporate income tax. We would not have been selective, and instead of making the new reductions effective from and retroactive to January 1, 1973 only, we would have made them applicable effective the day following the budget speech for 1972.

But such was not the position taken by the Minister of Finance. He has preferred to introduce a sound, realistic and rational budget. Four major objectives were to be reached as follows: strengthening the economy, withstanding competition, providing jobs and alleviating the marginal citizens' burden.

It is obvious that there were various methods of reaching these four objectives, but the Minister of Finance has elected to stimulate that sector of the economy which, for many years, has been the slackest in terms of employment opportunities, that is the manufacturing industry. It is this industrial sector which, if properly organised, can generate the greatest number of jobs for Canadians.

The minister leaves it to private enterprise to set up the new industries that are needed, to modernize existing ones, to manufacture new products and thus to create new jobs. And I think it is normal that the private sector should be concerned with creating jobs in democratic countries that trust private enterprise.

For a good many years now we have been mostly sellers of unfinished products, our natural resources being extracted and shipped to other countries for processing. The Minister of Finance wishes to redirect this policy with which, on the other hand, has been a cause for concern for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (M. Pepin) who is also busy trying to stimulate the secondary industries of this country through incentives and legislations.

The Minister of Finance also said, as can be seen at page 7 of his budget speech—I quote:

It is, therefore, essential for us to take whatever steps are necessary to promote the development in Canada of manufacturing industries that are dynamic, vigorous and resourceful, that are unceasing in their efforts to innovate, that develop new and better products and that are aggressive in their efforts to expand their markets in Canada and abroad. In short, we must do everything we can to promote the development of Canadian manufacturing industries that are fully capable of meeting and surpassing competition from other countries.

I have been reading in newspapers, since May 8, 1972, the reported reaction of the business and labour sectors. Generally, it is very good, although some individuals may criticize certain measures. But there, again, it is difficult to reach a consensus on measures designed to stimulate the economy when economists themselves can hardly agree on methods likely to achieve the goals proposed in this budget.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier the amendment of the Progressive Conservatives. I would like to make a few more remarks on this matter, if I have enough time. The amendment reads first, and I quote:

—the failure of the government to bring forth effective measures to relieve unemployment—

Well, at the present time, the thrust of the budget is strictly unemployment. The opposition does not suggest any effective measures to fight unemployment, whereas we Liberals have put forward a formula which will really succeed provided businessmen are prepared to co-operate.

Of course, the opposition failed to mention the fact that unemployment is not uniquely Canadian but is a worldwide phenomenon. They did not explain either the reasons for such unemployment, which is that the influx of people on the labour market is too fast compared with the number of jobs which can be created. Obviously, they do not insist on the fact that in the past years, as stated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the House, we have created 1,200,000 new jobs—

An hon. Member: Tell us where!

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): —and we have succeeded in this better than seven other countries put together.

Obviously, the Créditistes find this amusing. They find everything amusing because they are not serious. I read the speech made by their leader on the budget; I found it amusing too, but on the other hand it is their privilege to laugh at whomever they want. It will be my privilege to make fun of them when they take part in this debate. That is a sure thing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Futhermore, Mr. Speaker, the amendment stated, and I quote:

—the failure of the government to bring forth effective measures— to provide incentive for Canadian investment in Canadian development—

• (1750)

In my opinion, the whole budget is aimed at stimulating investors so that they may reorganize their undertakings and co-operate in the economic development of Canada. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that with such a budget we will succeed in reaching in the long run the objectives set forth and that the population will find that the best party to preside over Canada's destiny is still the Liberal party.

Mr. Rondeau: So you say.

Mr. Forget: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member for Saint-Michel on a point of order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Victor Forget (Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, with leave, I would ask that we revert to routine proceedings in order to table a committee report.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Forget: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to table the first report of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 2178) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman (p. 2182)

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, even though the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is not in the House at the moment, I wish however to commend him for the courage he displayed in his budget statement. I must say that had it not been for his eloquence, the budgetary statement would certainly have been very dull, since it was likely to increase the burden of the individual rather significantly for the benefit of large corporations.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I should like to analyze objectively some aspects of the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance in order to show that it certainly contains some good things but that one also finds in it some things that need improvement.

Mr. Béchard: But there are some good things.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): The hon. member for Bonaventure has been making it his practice for some time of interjecting remarks during our speeches. I commend him for so doing, because, after all, this is a good opportunity to convey a few good ideas.

Mr. Béchard: I thank the hon. member for giving me this opportunity.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I shall go on with my speech and say that the increase in the estimates for 1972-73, under the heading of direct personal income tax, will be about $1,125 million, which will contribute to reduce the purchasing power of workers, prevent the purchase of many products, lower consumption and indirectly increase the number of unemployed in Canada.

I am quite pleased to see that the Minister of Finance is very optimistic about a possible upturn in the number of jobs in Canada during next year. But I suggest that if we do not bring any change to the way we finance public expenditures, there will be an increase in our national production, that is to say the economic growth, but there will also be an increase in the number of unemployed. This is what happened during the past few years. In view of the formula we are using now, the same will undoubtedly happen during the next 12 months.

Mr. Speaker, here is one of the good steps announced in the budget speech: the increase in the guaranteed income supplement. But then, a problem arises: we have read in papers recently that the Quebec minister of Social Affairs complained about the intrusion of the federal government into an area which he considers as falling only under provincial jurisdiction and that the $15 increase in the guaranteed income supplement will contribute to create problems to the Quebec government as regards people under 65.

Therefore, if the same kind of administration is maintained, it is certain that in the case of persons who are at the present time receiving welfare allowances and who are living with a spouse who is receiving the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement the spouse's pension will be decreased accordingly. This means that their total purchasing power will not increase in the desired proportion. It is a weakness in our administrative system which we should hasten to correct so that we may fulfill the purposes of the acts which are passed, that is to ensure a decent income to the people in need.

Even yesterday, some people came to meet their elected representative and explain to him their problems in connection with the old age security pension. This is why I strongly support the principles which the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) advocated last week when he rose to take part in the debate on the budget. Actually, he stated that it was urgent for the Canadian government to adopt an economic security policy and establish a guaranteed minimum income for all.

The events which are actually taking place in the world—and, more specifically in the province of Quebec where discontent is spreading from all quarters—prompt people to seek higher pay and security, in short, the right to live. They demand an increase in their income in line with the devaluation of the dollar.

I am satisfied of one thing, namely that if we adopted this policy it would help tremendously the government of the province of Quebec to settle the present conflict as quickly as possible, to stabilize the economy, to ensure social peace and security because this situation exists not only in Quebec but in all the other provinces.

Hon. members certainly received, like I did, a brief from the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities which asked the federal government to decentralize the revenue sources to the advantage of municipalities, so that they may have the revenues which are necessary to discharge their responsibilities.

In every field we try to obtain more in order to meet our own needs and to fulfill our obligations. The underlying problem is a financial one and the Minister of Finance recognized it in the speech he delivered last Monday; I quote:

> —I wish I could do everything at once and I am sure that each member of this House, were he standing in my place, would have a long list of priorities of things he would want to change, of inequities he would want to cure—

So the fact that those things exist is recognized. I continue with my quotation:

> The bare fact of the matter is that we cannot do everything at once. We simply don't have the resources.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, when the House took recess, I was quoting this very important excerpt from the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner):

> The bare fact of the matter is that we cannot do everything at once.

He was then saying that some projects had remained in abeyance and referring to the suggestions from hon. members concerning the establishment of priorities in the remedies designed to meet the needs of all our people. He said of Canada: "We simply don't have the necessary resources".

Mr. Speaker, what resources did the minister mean? Were they natural resources, human resources, planning resources or else financial resources?

Since this was a budget speech, I presume that the minister was referring to financial resources, since the discussion bore or money, credit—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but one of his colleagues wishes to rise on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Pringle: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is that we are not receiving the English translation of the hon. member's speech, and I am very interested to hear what he is saying.

Mr. Speaker: I thought this might be a good opportunity for the hon. member to practise his French.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for calling the attention of the Chair on the fact that the simultaneous translation system was defective. I do the same thing in similar circumstances, which is absolutely normal.

As I was saying, if it was a matter of physical resources, the figures quoted in the budget speech show that such resources are sufficient to fully meet the needs of the people. In fact, according to Statistics Canada, the gross national product for 1971 exceeded $95 billion. This means that Canadians are devoted to turning the wealth which Providence has made available to them into consumer goods, and that the government now has a responsibility to find the financial resources necessary to finance such production so that every individual, every family, may be assured of the minimum income necessary for a decent living.

Now, this mystery about money struck me several years ago. I was surprised to see that money was lacking in every field and others have also asked themselves questions about this problem.

I would now like to quote an article published in the Quebec newspaper L'Action in 1939. It is an editorial by Mr. Louis-Philippe Roy, a very intelligent man who at the time observed, like everyone else, the problems with which Canada was faced while governments were unable to achieve the goals which the population expected them to, and while all sorts of works and projects which the people needed were left unfinished.

This article reads:

> MYSTERY TO BE SOLVED: WHERE DOES THE MONEY COME FROM?
> In our Canada, resources are not lacking, nor are the means of transportation for distributing them.

This is still true nowadays.

> Our industrial labour is getting rusty with inaction, and our thoroughfares are often deserted.
> If Providence was generous to us, if wealth is abundant everywhere, if the earth is only waiting to be worked in order to bring forth its riches, the reason for the crisis is certainly not the poverty of the Canadian soil.
> Could it be that production is badly managed? No.

Nor is it badly managed nowadays. It is very well managed, organized, and planned.

> Both manufacturers and farmers could produce more if we insured the sale of their products.
> Ask the mother of children why her table is bare; the father, why he is going without food; the children, why they are declining; tradesmen, why trade is slow; professionals, why they work so much on credit; all of them will answer: no money!

That happened in 1939, and it is happening again in 1972.

The quotation goes on as follows:

> No money! Such is the answer given by governments to those who ask for their support, by industrialists to those who beg for a job, by consumers to retail dealers who ask for orders, by retail dealers to wholesalers; that is the answer that everybody gives to everybody else!—
> No money?

However, we know that, during the war, billions of dollars were spent to manufacture destructive devices. At that time, there was some money available.

And I quote again:

> Would its function be to organize man's destruction? Yet it seems that money was invented to ensure the exchange of farm or manufactured products, then the exchange of services.
> If people suffer, is it not, for a large part, as a result of the paralysis of exchanges? And it's money which would not be playing its part?
>
> Whose fault is it?
> It is not God's fault; nor that of nature, for money can exist irrespective of seasons and temperature; it is safe from drought and locusts.

There were locusts in those times too! And I quote:

> Its manufacture is limited to the amount of gold available,—

Nowadays, this myth has disappeared and has been replaced by another, which is quite as impressive: that of the American dollar.

However, let us not forget that our governments are also as poor as private individuals. The municipal, provincial and federal governments have only the money that we pay in taxes, etc., the money they borrow from banks.

That is the point to which I want to call the attention of the government, because this situation has not changed. I had hoped that a Minister of Finance as energetic as the one we now have would have the required strength to make the necessary changes in order to finally make this tool, that is, money, the nation's servant.

I quote further:

Yes, the powers that be that give banks the authority to make money, have to go to the banks and pay high interest rates to get credit in order to administer the country and give food to the unemployed.

Currency, money, credit: Is it then one and the same thing? Are banks the masters of it? What are their rules when they manufacture money? When they issue currency? When they extend credit? What do they demand in return and why? So many questions to which no school book will reply. And yet, this problem seems to be essential at this time. Why this mystery on the origins of money?

Is it not time for this mystery to be dissipated?

Since 1939 this question has obviously been answered because a movement existed in Canada, namely that of the hon. William Aberhart, in Alberta, which spread all over the country. Finally, we have more and more answers to this question. We should have not only answers but reforms while it is not too late because as things are going now, in the last budget of the Minister of Finance we find that day after day Canadians are taxed to pay interest to those who control the country's credit which is costing us $6,191,000 each day. At this rate, we cannot keep on developing normally and we shall be obliged to call again on the United States.

Is the United States position better than ours? We shall try and see how things are going on there. I have something quite interesting to say on this subject and which deserves some thinking.

This afternoon, I heard the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) say that to have a good administration in Canada the only way is to have a Liberal government. This is his opinion. To have a good administration in Quebec the only solution is a Liberal government.

I have nothing against the Liberals but I am saddened to see the Quebec Prime Minister load a wheelbarrow full of mortgages on provincial property, cross the border and say to the Americans: We give you our property as a guarantee. Give us figures, give us the permission to use our own natural resources.

It is quite true, Mr. Speaker, that things happen that way. I have here a very interesting document, published in the United States, in the December 9, 1971, edition of the Manchester Guardian Weekly and I quote:

The Canadian government is getting more and more worried about American domination over its economy and its natural resources. In this article, Mr. A. W. Cockerill wonders whether, at this stage, the Canadian people can still do something.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

CANADA—AN ECONOMIC COLONY

At a meeting of the U.S. Senate Committee on energy resources, in May 1971, Mr. Brice O'Brian, chairman of the United States National Coal Association, stated: "—our government believes that Canada belongs to us as far as her energy is concerned". That was not the truculent statement of a naive and not very diplomatic American industrialist. On the contrary, Mr. O'Brian's words were simply an echo of president Nixon's feelings, of the political opinion of the United States and industry in general.

• (2020)

The following month, in a statement on American energy needs, President Nixon himself said that, among the major solutions to the crisis, was the import of vast quantities of energy from Canada, that is natural gas, oil, coal, hydroelectric energy and water. Such energy sources, as well as some products, such as ore, coal, pulpwood and others, have for some time been called "continental resources" in the United States.

That is that. The Americans think that everything belongs to them. No wonder. When one spends one's time lending money to a neighbour, one finally thinks that the goods offered to guarantee such loans belong to the lender. That is quite normal.

I quote further:

That such resources belong jointly to all the inhabitants of the North-American continent is a fairly new idea, although political and industrial leaders in the U.S.A. must have had that in mind for much longer. If the matter were not so serious, one could laugh at the concept: in fact, such a notion implies that the resources of the American continent also belong to Canada and vice versa. There is only one problem: the U.S.A. have hardly any resources left and, consequently, they have none to share; what the U.S.A. mean when they speak of "continental resources" is very obvious.

As public statements on the subject multiply, the concept of "common property" becomes more and more imbedded in the public awareness, or at least, American public awareness—

The Nixon government is as adept as any other at translating the wishes of the minority into the will of the majority—

With a population of over two hundred million inhabitants, the United States already use up more than their share of world resources. In the middle of this century, that country changed from an exporter into an importer of raw materials. The economic development of the country may be compared to an enormous industrial machine in which three conditions must be met to ensure its continued existence: the needs for raw materials to feed it, personnel to make it work and markets to consume its production. The crux of the problem is the first requirement, because the other two are filled by the mere existence of a huge and growing population.

This gives us the idea that it is more and more interesting for American financiers to take mortgages on the natural resources of Canada, because it really pays them. I keep on quoting:

In the area of hydroelectric power—one line connecting Churchill Falls in Labrador, James Bay in Quebec and Kettle Rapids in Manitoba—the conquest of Canadian resources has already been achieved well up north. The electrical power shortage is so serious that major American companies, having foreseen it more than ten years ago, have acted immediately. One does not miss any opportunity in securing these resources, even with respect to investment capital.

And what does this produce, Mr. Speaker? They tell us. I learned some very interesting facts reading this document. The article goes on:

In the Schultz report, it was pointed out that for any dollar invested in Canada for oil extraction, 71 cents come back to the U.S. as investment income during the first year in which the investment was made.

No wonder the Americans are able to lend us money afterwards. Their profits are so good that they are able to buy the mortgages back later on. I quote the article again:

There is no reason to doubt that the same investment income is obtained from any other form of energy development or mineral extraction, be it natural gas, hydroelectric power or common metals.

I shall stop quoting here from this very instructive document which does not show however the true situation in the United States. It has not been proved that the author had a direct line with Our Father to have enough money to develop their country and help develop the rest of the world.

Here is a recent item published in La Presse, and I quote:

The United States are at their wits' end.

Today, the richest country in the world is . . . broke. Last year, the U.S. economy exceeded thousands of billions of dollars; yet, the municipalities of the twenty-one largest cities are short of money to pay their police force, their firemen, their teachers and garbage collectors—The State of Ohio has reduced its payments to the aged who are ill by 32 per cent.

It also says that the city of Boston:

—lacks the means to replace its wooden sewers that are 102 years old.

Therefore, that city is in a deplorable economic situation. What is the cause of this? Here is how the same article describes what has happened:

Their leaders are in a quandary. Where is the money to fill up the gaps to be found? By increasing the public debt? But the annual interest payments already amounts to $12 billion.

The President is therefore discouraged. He says that he was "fixed" by economists and planning experts. And I keep quoting:

In the high spheres of government, for the first time some attention is paid to the explanations of radical economists.

Those radical economists are people like Major Douglas who discovered that credit is a wealth which should belong to the entire nation and should be used in the interests of the people.

I further quote:

The Keynesians were wrong: Friedman's monetary partisans went astray; Mr. Nixon is enough of a realist to realize it.

Seeing the situation, he feels outright that it does not make sense.

However, in Canada, work is being done: surveys were carried out, a report was tabled not so long ago in the House, the Gray report. It is interesting to see what can be done in Canada to develop our natural resources and allow the population to share them.

Here is what appeared in La Presse of May 3, and I quote:

Economic growth could be maintained even without foreign capital.

I am certain that the author of that article is right because capital is artificial, and figures are involved. And there is a solution offered in the article, a most interesting one. The author must have consulted radical economists, since he writes as follows, and I quote:

Moreover the development of regional financial institutions and also a revision of the Bank Act are being proposed in order to enable provincial governments to take a financial part in the development of a bank with a Federal charter.

At last, it begins to break out, we begin to realize there are possibilities—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member. I am advised that his time is over; it is probably because he was carried away by his eloquency.

In any case, unless there is unanimous consent of the House, he will have to let one of his colleagues speak.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I find it sad that the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) should have exposed his corporate bias in such a naked way in his very first budget. I also find it sad that he has exposed the outmoded and outdated economic thinking which animates his policy. I find it sad, Sir, that he has become the slave of the same conservative advisers as his predecessor. All he needs is a pipe and he would be Benson reincarnated.

Mr. Orlikow: He would also need to weigh an extra hundred pounds.

Mr. Lewis: For some years, parliament and the people of Canada have waited for tax reform. A tax commission studied the matter. Almost the first sentence in the report of the Carter royal commission emphasized that our tax system suffers from inequities and injustices. We waited for tax reform last year, but we received only a repetition of the same inequities and injustices. We were presented with a tax bill that made a few, little changes but left the majority of Canadians saddled with an unfair share of this country's tax burden.

This minister, Mr. Speaker, had the opportunity in his first budget to take a stride forward to the just society. Instead, he took a stride backward. The Minister of Finance took a step which made the tax system even more inequitable and unjust so far as the Canadian people are concerned. This can be shown in various ways. I shall try to show it in one particular way, that is, the proportion of the tax revenue that is now coming from the corporate sector compared with the proportion coming from the personal income tax sector.

Direct taxes to be paid by individuals as the result of this minister's budget will, on a national accounts basis, be 49.9 per cent of federal revenues. The direct taxes to be paid by corporations, on a national accounts basis, will be 12.2 per cent of the federal revenue. The personal income tax will be four times as large in proportion compared with the corporation tax. I remind hon. members that the rest of the revenue comes from customs tax, excise tax and sales tax, all of which fall on the same Canadians who pay income tax. The profits which the corporations make are not touched. In case anyone thinks that this imbalance is something that was ordained by economic deities, outside the Minister of Finance or the Bank of Canada, let me point out that it is the climax of a trend that has not only continued but has accelerated under the present government.

May I be permitted to spend two or three minutes on a dry recital of statistics. In my opinion they are very revealing. From 1963 to 1967 the share of revenues provided by direct taxes on individuals rose by just two percentage points, from 37.3 in 1963 to 39.3 in 1967. It then leaped to 48.5 per cent in 1971 and is forecast to be 49.9 per cent in 1973. Meanwhile, the corporate contribution slid from 19.3 per cent in 1963 to 16.3 per cent in 1967, to 13.7 per cent in 1971 and, finally, to 12.2 per cent under this budget. I think we should note these figures. I will have something more to say about this imbalance which is an injustice of really gross proportions to the average Canadian.

In 1950 the proportion was about equal; in fact, the corporate direct tax proportion of the federal revenue was a little higher: it was 28 per cent as against 26.7 per cent in personal direct tax. In 1951 it was again about even—29.8 per cent for the corporate direct tax and 27.8 per cent for the personal direct tax. I will now jump to 1961; I will skip years so that my statistics will not be too overwhelming. In 1961 it started to slide.

An hon. Member: A good Tory year.

Mr. Lewis: As my good friend says, it was a good Tory year. It was 38 per cent for personal direct income tax, and 19.8 per cent for corporate tax. In 1967 it was 39.3 per cent, compared to 16.3 per cent; 1968, 42 per cent, compared to 17.3 per cent; 1969, 45.5 per cent, compared to 16 per cent; 1970, 48.4 per cent, compared to 14. per cent. In 1971 it was 48.5 per cent, compared to 13.7 per cent; 1972, 48.2 per cent, compared to 13.7. For 1973 the projection is 49.9 per cent from personal income tax, as against 12.2 per cent from corporate income tax.

I have here a chart which I have drawn. It is a very revealing chart. The curve of the proportion of federal revenue from personal income tax goes disastrously up all the time, whereas the proportion of revenue from corporate income tax goes steadily down. This has occurred as a deliberate policy of government. That, and some other things that go to the corporate sector of this country, show the way in which this government and the preceding Conservative government treat the people of Canada as individuals and families compared with the corporate sector.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nesbitt: Too bad the Gallup poll doesn't reflect it.

Mr. Lewis: We see what Liberal and Conservative government is all about—squeeze the ordinary Canadian while big business gets a free ride; and it is a free ride despite the comments that may be made to the contrary.

In his budget, the Minister of Finance forecast that for 1972-73, 15 per cent of federal spending, on a budgetary basis, will go to what he calls economic development and support. In plain English, that means that 15 per cent of the revenues of the federal treasury, on a budgetary basis, will go to grants and handouts to corporations. That is what the minister means. There will be grants under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, grants under the various programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, research grants, development grants and other concessions to the corporations in Canada.

On a budgetary basis, the minister says that 15 per cent of all federal spending will go to the corporations. Also on a budgetary basis as distinct from the national accounts basis, in order to make the two comparable we learn that 14.9 per cent, or 15 per cent of the budgetary revenues will come from the corporations which will receive 15 per cent of the budgetary expenditures. I suggest that even the Minister of Finance will agree that 15 minus 15 equals zero. The people of Canada must understand—and this is why I emphasize it—that the corporate sector makes almost no net contribution to the social expenditures of this country such as defence, taking care of the aged and taking care of the sick. All of that revenue comes out of the income of ordinary Canadian families, not from the corporate sector. I think it is important to underline these things.

I did not have the pleasure this afternoon of listening to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I was in Toronto when certain things happened. Although I am tempted to comment on them, I will not do so in this speech. In any event, I am certain that the spokesmen for the Conservative party will not protest against the silk-glove treatment that the corporations of Canada receive from this government, as they received it from the Conservative government in the past. I think that fact has to be underlined in this budget debate.

In 1969, the latest year for which statistics are available, 46 per cent of the corporations in Canada did not pay a cent of income tax. In the mining and petroleum industry, including oil extraction, 78 per cent of corporations did not pay any income tax. No one is going to tell me that 46 per cent of all corporations, and 78 per cent of mining and oil corporations made no profit in 1969; that they were just working the mines and extracting the oil out of the goodness of their heart and the philanthropic pressures of their conscience. They made profits, but they were able to tuck those profits away due to the kind of law that favours them, and the loopholes that are constantly provided for them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2040)

Mr. Lewis: I say the Minister of Finance had an opportunity to redress that imbalance and to do something about the economy and the unemployment situation. Instead of doing so, he merely emphasized the imbalance. The big cuts and the new concessions went to the corporations. There was a little help—not enough—given to old age pensioners, veterans and students.

Let me pause here to say that for the Minister of Finance to indicate in a budget an increase in social benefits is most unusual. It is not usually done in my experience, which is admittedly not a very long one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Walter Harris did it.

Mr. Lewis: Walter Harris did it, but that was a long time ago; it was some 15 years ago. For a minister of finance to increase social benefits in his budget is very unusual. But this poor fellow had to do it. If he had not referred to old age pensioners and students in his budget, it would have contained nothing but concessions to the corporations—and even he was too much ashamed to permit that kind of situation. The poor minister said to his advisers, "Come on, now I cannot take a budget to the House of Commons which does nothing except reduce taxes for the corporations. Give me something else." So he was able to turn to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and graciously say, "You will be able to rise tomorrow and do something for old age pensioners." And he was able to turn to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) and say, "You will be able to do something for the veterans." And his conscience was clear.

The fact that he had to make this announcement shows he knew that what he was doing to the taxpayers of this country was conscienceless; it was necessary for him to appease his conscience in some way. Much as I and my colleagues are ready to support the proposals affecting old age pensioners, veterans and students, let me tell the Minister of Finance that there is nothing in those provisions which will make any old age pensioner dance for joy even if he is physically able to do so.

I met with some of them yesterday in my riding. As hon. members know, in senior citizens' homes the women outnumber the men, and they did at this meeting. Those whose husbands had saved a little money and who were obliged to live on the old age pension alone, plus the little bit of additional income they had, were certainly not dancing for joy about the $2.88 a month which this "great" government, betraying the just society in every act it takes, had granted to them.

As for those who were entitled to the income supplement, even those entitled to the full income supplement, they realized that the $15 additional payment which the single old age pensioner is to receive and the $30 additional payment which pensioner couples are to receive is simply making up for the increase in costs they have been facing over the years—not since the supplement was introduced but for years when they had to live on inadequate pensions. They were not jumping with joy.

This is not to belittle what has been done. This is not to say it will not be of some use to old age pensioners. Of course it will be—not the $2.88, which is an insult, but the $15 a month, which makes $180 a year, and the $30 a month for a couple, which makes $360 a year. That, of course, is welcome money to them. But let us remind ourselves, before we become self-congratulatory, that if we adjust the needs of a single person in Canada, living at the poverty line, to the cost of living increase since 1969, which is about 6.5 per cent, a single person now needs $190 a month to live just above the poverty line, which is $40 more than the maximum, including the supplement which the Minister of Finance has provided. And a couple needs $317, which is $42 more than the maximum $285 which the minister has provided.

So let the Liberals in this House not bang themselves on their backs in self-congratulation. The payment to a single, old age pensioner is still $40 below the minimum required, and the amount received by a couple is $32 below the minimum required. In spite of these increases, old age pensioners will still have to scrape to make ends meet at the end of each month—and that is not the way to treat the aged people of this country.

Moreover, for the majority of Canadians this budget was a budget without joy. There was absolutely nothing in it for the ordinary wage or salary earner, for the farmer, for the fishermen, for the logger. They were not even mentioned in the budget. And there was almost nothing there for the small business people. There was absolutely nothing for the vast majority of Canadians. Indeed, as the minister has lately admitted, there is a hidden tax increase for the wage earners, the salary earners, the farmers, the fishermen, the loggers and the small business people who are not connected with processing or manufacturing—an increase of 3 per cent.

The 3 per cent tax cut made last October will end on December 31 of this year. Therefore, beginning on January 1 next, every Canadian in the categories I have mentioned will pay 3 per cent more in tax than he does today. This was the treatment given to the majority of the Canadian people, the majority of Canadian families. Yet the minister says, "This is a forward-looking budget." He must have had his head turned the wrong way when he said that.

What disturbs me, as a lay economist who studied economics at two institutions but who does not claim to be an expert, is that the minister has the audacity to say that his budget is intended to produce jobs. He will forgive me if I do not quote him but paraphrase him in my own way. He says, "Listen, private corporations and private business. I have just given you a tax cut, so please be kind enough to provide more jobs. I stake my political future on you." I could visualize him on his knees, except that he is a proud man and does not get on his knees, and I respect him for that. He pleads with these corporations to give him some jobs. Let me tell him that the corporations will give him jobs only if it pays them to do so. If it does not pay, there will be the same level of unemployment six months hence that there is now, if not a higher level.

Let us look at the economy at the present time as I see it and understand it, and I think most economists would agree with me. We have an economy which is now functioning under capacity. Many manufacturing plants across this country are not functioning at one hundred per cent capacity and there are many people laid off, or we would not have the extent of unemployment we now have by definition. There are plants which have laid off people, and those people are still laid off. Does the minister or anybody in his right sense suggest that when you go to a plant which is laying people off because it cannot sell its products, and give it an additional 9 per cent in profit, this will create jobs? I suggest the plant will simply take the 9 per cent into its profits.

The way to deal with an economy which is in an underproduction stage and working at something under total capacity is to increase aggregate demands so that the products which are manufactured will be purchased. It is only then that new and additional jobs will be created. There is already slack in our mills and factories. The minister should not try to induce them to invest more. Why should they invest more? What is the purpose of their investing more money? They cannot sell all the products they are now capable of producing. What will they do if they invest more money? They will produce more of the products they cannot sell. That is sheer nonsense. It is sheer, obvious and arrant rubbish—and that is what is being taught this parliament and the people of Canada.

I am certain there is not an economist in this country who would suggest that the giving of a tax cut to corporations would increase the number of jobs in Canada. Certainly there is not an economist in this country who would agree that the giving of rapid depreciation for new machinery and equipment would create jobs in this country. When does a manufacturing firm buy new machinery and equipment? It buys new machinery and equipment in order to improve its efficiency and to produce more efficiently. It produces more efficiently when it replaces human labour, not when it adds to human labour.

If our manufacturing concerns bought even most of their machines and equipment from Canadian firms, one might argue that there would be an increase in the number of jobs in the sector that manufactures machinery and equipment—but that is not true. The overwhelming majority of new machines and equipment which our manufacturing firms use is brought in from abroad, particularly from the United States. So even that could not create any jobs in the country.

Therefore, I suggest to the Minister of Finance, with real regret, that his budget even from the point of view of creating jobs is a sham which will not do this and cannot do it. I suggest to the minister, specifically, that he could have made available about $2 billion to the ordinary Canadian taxpayers and really have rapidly stimulated the economy in this country. In this way he might really have created jobs by increasing the purchasing power of the ordinary Canadian who spends almost every dollar he gets. He could have done this by removing the 7 per cent tax cut, which will continue for manufacturing and processing industries, and by taking back the $500 million he is giving away in this budget. This would have yielded about $675 million, enough—according to our calculations—to cut $100 off the tax bill of every Canadian earning less than $10,000 or $12,000. That would have meant something to the economy.

If the minister had increased the effective tax on corporations to about 46 per cent from 36 per cent, if he had adopted a full capital gains tax which would have yielded another $100 million, if he had recovered about $400 million by plugging the loopholes and generally tightening up the economy, and if he had reduced the number of giveaways various departments now make, he could have saved in the neighbourhood of $2 billion which could be given in tax cuts to the average Canadian, particularly those making less than $10,000 or $12,000 a year. These people would then use every single dollar to buy products produced by Canadian manufacturers and Canadian farmers.

If my eyes are correct and the clock is right, Mr. Speaker, I have about two or three minutes left at my disposal. Let me say this in conclusion. The basic reason for this kind of scandalous budget is the economic philosophy which animates those people across the aisle and our friends in the Conservative party and others. That philosophy is that only the private sector of the economy can be relied on to do the job of creating work and of increasing the wealth of this country, and that social capital is taboo and somewhat wasteful.

It is their philosophy that only the private sector knows what to do for Canadians and that the Canadian people, through their government and their representatives, do not know anything at all as to what should be done. I reject that philosophy. I suggest that the way to create jobs, if the minister will not make tax cuts as radically as I have suggested, is to use some of the money in the way I have indicated.

Everybody talks about pollution. If the government put some real money into cleaning up our waters, and into building purification and recycling plants in the cities and towns of this country, we could really fight pollution and create work for hundreds of thousands of Canadians. If the minister set aside some money to assist provinces and municipalities to build day-care centres so that mothers who wanted to go to work as well as fathers could simply put their children in these centres, that would be social capital which would create jobs. We need over 2,000 of these centres.

If the minister set a massive amount of money aside for low-income housing and urban renewal, instead of following the slow way in which money is now coming foward, that would be a social development which would create jobs for Canadians across the country. There are many other urgent needs that Canada ought to meet. The government ought to meet these needs and at the same time solve the problem of unemployment. If the government met those urgent needs as it should, there would be no reason for any single, able-bodied man or woman in Canada to be out of work. I believe a study of this budget will show how hollow and how unjust it is. I am sad for the Minister of Finance; indeed, I am almost ashamed for him.

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, today is leaders' day and you may wonder why someone with the view of the House which I have should be rising to speak in this debate. I want to reassure you, and quickly arrest any rumours on the other side of the House, that I am only a leftover from Thursday's list of speakers. But I am very glad to have a chance to speak at this time. I listened with interest to what was said by members the opposition parties and I think I should comment on their arguments.

The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) informed us that the highest priority of the Conservative party in government would be to provide jobs. Then he set forth two proposals which, had they been in the budget, presumably would have provided jobs. One of them is a sham and the other is a loser. The sham is his proposal to provide an automatic tax adjustment for inflation so that taxes would be reduced automatically every year by the amount of inflation. I call that a sham because it is obvious it would apply right across the board to all incomes and would have the result of reducing the total government revenue by the amount of the cost of living increase. It would then be necessary for the government to increase taxes to make up the amount required to meet its needs. The amount of increase would equal this sham or giveaway offered in an opportunist manner in an effort to win some votes. Just describing it indicates how empty it is. Let us hope the country sees it in those terms.

The second proposal of the Leader of the Opposition to provide jobs, which he set forth as the highest priority, is a $15 increase in the old age pension right across the board. That is a meritorious proposal. I hope a $15 increase in the old age pension will be possible. But what would that do in respect of jobs? I submit it would do nothing. It is a loser. The Leader of the Opposition has chosen to bring forward proposals designed to attract attention and win votes, but which are certainly not designed to do anything about providing jobs.

The budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is designed to do provide jobs. I shall come to it in a moment. However, first I should like to comment on the speech of the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis). We heard a very tired performance. Perhaps it is time for that party to put its new leader on the shelf beside its old leader. I had become accustomed to hearing from the old leader of the New Democratic Party that the mountain has laboured and brought forth a mole—

An hon. Member: A mouse.

Mr. Kaplan: —but that expression has died. From the new leader of the New Democratic Party we hear time and time again the ever-hopeful virgin entering this chamber full of expectations for the just society and enchanted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and our new Minister of Finance. He approaches the floor, unwraps those yellowed papers of his and then we hear that once again his hopes have been dashed and that his worst fears have been realized. What does he find—not a new leader but Mackenzie King again. Not Mr. John Turner but Mr. Benson again. This approach is wearing thin.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Kaplan: It is a tired performance which is repeated too often. Let me deal with his principal argument. His argument is that this government favours the corporate sector at the expense of the personal sector. The false premise on which his whole case is built is that there is a corporate sector and a personal sector and that there are different segments of the population. Listening to him, one would have the notion that somewhere or other there is a class of people in the corporate sector who live a life of luxury and ease, who do not work, who do not pay taxes, who are able to deduct all their expenses and who contribute nothing; while again, another group, the individuals, are the ones who make the goods, who accumulate the savings and who carry out all our industrial activity as well as pay all the taxes.

I think just to state the implications of the premise is to demonstrate how fallacious it is. The corporations are not real people. There is no difference between the corporate sector and the personal sector. There are only real people in this country. It is only people who pay taxes, the corporations just being a funnel. It is patently ridiculous for him to suggest that somehow to reduce the taxes of corporations is to confer a benefit on a privileged class of people. He knows perfectly well that taxes are paid by people. When corporations have their taxes raised, the price of goods tends to increase. In the end, all taxes are paid by people.

Mr. Orlikow: Which people?

An hon. Member: Tell us which people.

Mr. Kaplan: All people, on a progressive basis. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I am convincing the members of the New Democratic Party, but I believe I can put to them one point which perhaps may make my entire case. The Carter report, which they revere so highly as being the ultimate in equitable taxation, would impose on the corporations of Canada a tax of zero per cent. Under the proposals of the Carter report, all taxes would be paid by people. Integration is provided as the corporation is seen for what it is—a conduit. The members of the New Democratic Party approved this and never regarded it as a sellout, because it was made very clear in the analysis of the Carter report that taxes are paid by people and that the corporation is only a vehicle serving the interest of consumers, providing jobs and accumulating savings and profits for investors. I think the leader of the New Democratic Party owes his supporters a better analysis of Canada's problems than he gave tonight. He spoke about tax incentives and put forward the preposterous proposition that machinery takes away jobs and that any incentive to build up jobs by adding machinery would not do this but, rather, would tend to reduce the number of jobs in Canada.

I invite the leader of the New Democratic Party to consider the opinions of all the economies of the world. If he looks at those economies which have no machinery at all, he will find how much employment there can be where there are no machines. Then he should look at the economies which are the most advanced, those which have the latest machinery and industrial processes. I suggest to him that machinery modernization and mechanization is the key to providing full employment in Canada, and not the opposite. It is ridiculous to suggest that an incentive which would tend to make our economy more efficient would operate against the interest of the working man. I hope none of his supporters would ever believe that.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Why do you not try working in industry to find out?

Mr. Kaplan: I have. I should like to speak tonight about Canada's industrial strategy and how it has been moved forward positively by last week's budget. For the first half of this century it seems that Canada's industrial goals have been clear and fairly stable. The economy was divided into two sectors, international and domestic. In the international sector we developed production of products for world markets. These are products in which we have achieved international excellence in economy of production and in quality.

These goods include farm produce, timber, pulp and paper, and minerals. Partly by transportation subsidy and partly by stimulative taxation policies, this sector has developed to the basically healthy condition it is in today.

Of course, the international sector is subject to international movements. There is little the government of Canada can do directly to support the international sector when foreign competition gets hungry or when foreign markets decline. Although subject to cycles, the Canadian international sector stands up well today.

The remaining sector of Canada's economy has been the domestic sector of manufactured goods. In this sector it was Canada's industrial strategy to ensure that the total Canadian market was in effect delivered to the industries which produced manufactured goods in Canada. In this way, by a protected market, industrial expansion was stimulated and Canadian manufacture was encouraged. The policies of the government in this area included a forthcoming immigration policy, tariff protection, and later such interventions as grants and loans to industry from government and government agencies.

It is probable that without these policies of protection and stimulation of the sector of manufactured goods Canada would have no secondary industry today, our population would be less and there would be less Canadian opportunity than there is. We would be an economy wholly dependent on the export of resources, many of which are depleting rapidly.

This general industrial strategy of two sectors subject to very different regimes was right for its time. But beginning in the 1960s, or even earlier, it became clear that this industrial strategy could not endure and that changes were needed. There were political and economic reasons for this. It became clear, firstly, that secondary industry is not viable with only the Canadian domestic economy to serve. Twenty-two million people cannot support an electronics industry, a furniture industry, a footwear industry, a textile industry, a chemical industry, a fine paper industry, an automobile industry, or any one of a number of others.

Such a policy denies Canadian manufacturers the economies of scale which come from the hardware technologies of mass production and the mass media and from the software technologies of mass marketing and mass distribution. Internationally, the exclusion of foreign manufacturers was offensive as well because it prevented the customers of Canada who bought international goods from us from repairing their trade balances with us on a bilateral basis. Few countries have any primary goods which Canada needs in any quantities.

But political objections to the old industrial strategy were also significant. It happens that our domestic sector goods tend to come from the urbanized regions of central Canada while the international goods come from the west, the east and the non-urban regions. Over the years there has been a growing tension in which, for example, the west objects to being required to offer its goods, the international goods, in the world market at world prices subject to international recessions and monetary crises, while it is forced to buy its requirements in protected markets from central Canadian manufacturers. It alleges that these manufacturers are inefficient and non-competitive. Indeed, there is a factual basis for this. Canada's secondary industry is fragmented, it is weak, and protection in the long run is not a viable method of building a healthy industry. This kind of charge of the west or the east against the centre of our country weakens the unity of Canada. We need policies in every sector of national life, including the economy which tie us together and not which pull us apart.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

These factors forced Canada to reconsider its traditional industrial strategy. The reconsideration was piecemeal, a process rather than a concentrated effort—but the shape of our new industrial strategy is becoming clarified. What was recognized was that to remain viable economically, to preserve national unity, the old domestic sector had to be turned inside out. Canadian secondary manufacturing had to find international markets; it had to learn to live in the international community.

At the outset it may not have been clear that this was possible. Today, with part of the new policy already implemented, it is demonstrably clear that it can work. Manufactured goods have moved from 14 per cent to 38 per cent of our total exports in the last nine years. The policy change has been guided by the department of industry and then by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I should like to read a portion of the statute establishing the Department of Industry just to show how its terms of reference were directed toward this problem. It was established to—> —develop and carry out such programs and projects as may be appropriate to assist the adaptation of manufacturing industries to changing conditions in domestic and export markets, and to changes in the techniques of production; to identify and assist those manufacturing industries that require special measures to develop an unrealized potential or to cope with exceptional problems of adjustments,

The process carried on by the Department of Industry, later by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has been to review the economy sector by sector looking for ways in which the trade of that sector can find international markets.

The first sector of secondary manufacturing to be internationalized was the automobile industry. This chamber is aware of how successful this first step was—embarrassingly so, as we find our trade surplus now an issue in Canada-United States relations. But we have come so far from the timid safeguards of 1964 that they are largely irrelevant today. A big part of the success story reflects the achievement of American managers of U.S. capital in Canada. But it also reflects the fact that Canadian labour can be at least as efficient as its U.S. counterpart and that Canadian entrepreneurs in the accessories industry and in the after-market can be at least as good as their American counterparts, or better.

Following the automobile industry was the textile industry. Here the department has learned, to its surprise and to the surprise of almost all Canadians, that we make some textiles which we can sell even in Hong Kong, and that Americans are attracted to Canadian clothing, suits and attire where sold competitively right in American cities. The process of internationalizing the textile industry is still going on. It is not imposed by the government on the industry; in fact, the opposite is taking place. A board has been set up and the industry is invited to come forward and present rationalization plans. The government is prepared to assist in financing, to help retrain and relocate employees, to provide permanent pensions for employees who are unable to adjust. This adjustment assistance is a reasonable request to make of a Canadian taxpayer because it is part of a process from which all Canada benefits.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has indicated that the footwear industry will be next. In this Canadian manufacturing industry it is already obvious that protection is not the answer. The only answer is growth, finding international markets. I hope that the electronics industry, the furniture industry, the chemical industry and the fine paper industry will follow and that this new industrial strategy will be fully implemented as soon as possible.

Last week's budget presented in part Canada's answer to the threats to international commerce and, in particular, to Canadian industry presented by a whole series of moves by many states against trade liberalization. The DISC program with which we are all familiar is only one example of this, and if I could turn again for a moment to the remarks of the leader of the NDP, he said that the whole solution to unemployment in Canada is to provide more money for people in the low income groups. I agree that that is a desirable objective and that it would stimulate demand in Canada. But let me ask him this: What does that do to counter the DISC program, and like programs? What does that do to make Canadian goods competitive with American goods that are now coming in subject to tax subsidies? What does that do to assure us market access to European countries, to Asia and to places where we have to sell to be able to stay in business? This budget is responsive to these problems.

It is all very well to argue in favour of tax cuts for people with small incomes—and this is something that it would be desirable to do—but to assert that this kind of policy would keep Canada competitive is just foolishness. He had nothing to say in response to a very real problem which his own party has been as diligent as any in bringing to the attention of the House and of the government.

Mr. Gilbert: And we have policies for the DISC program also.

Mr. Kaplan: I would like to hear them, because certainly an NDP budget would have nothing to say about the DISC program and no solution for the non-tariff barriers being imposed on international trade by a great many countries of which the United States is only one.

It is part of Canada's industrial strategy, as is obvious from the foregoing, to encourage international trade liberalization. Other countries with huge populations can turn inward and seek to develop self-sufficiency. Some of the new trading blocs—the European Economic Community is one—have this option as well. But Canada does not have this option. We cannot turn inward if we want to continue to improve our standard of living, if we want to continue our efforts to eliminate poverty in Canada, if we want to absorb our growing population into our labour force. If we want to do these things, we have no alternative but to encourage trade liberalization and we must become more and more competitive. Therefore, we have to oppose this whole range of protectionist measures, not only the DISC program but other interventionist policies of other countries that are designed to give a subsidy to their own exports in foreign markets.

Canada's answer to all these protectionist measures, including DISC, in part came in the budget presented by the Minister of Finance last Monday. The measure he proposed is not a tax subsidy to exports. It cannot be criticized under the rules of the GATT because it applies to all Canadian manufacturing and processing, whether for domestic consumption or for export. The reduction of corporate taxation from 48 per cent to 40 per cent in this sector should go a long way to meeting programs like DISC and the interventionist policies of other governments. It should also help secondary industry injured by the increase in the value of the Canadian dollar.

Here again, Mr. Speaker, what does the leader of the NDP have to say to that? Giving tax cuts at any level of the personal sector does nothing to make our manufacturing industries and processing industries better able to deal with the increasing value of the Canadian dollar. But this tax reduction does. It puts them in a position to maintain their competitiveness against the manufacturing and processing industries of other countries. This is a measure which is responsive to the threat to this sector, and is consistent with the direction in which our new industrial strategy would lead this traditionally sheltered sector of the economy.

One can only echo the hopes and expectations of the minister that this incentive, together with the fast write-off, will be used by manufacturing industries because if they do take advantage of them, this will make us more competitive. This will increase Canadian production. This will help us to find new markets. Above all, this will help us to create employment for Canadians.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the decision to increase the guaranteed income supplement, the veterans allowances and the addition of a full cost of living adjustment provision. Inflation is a fact of life. While the government has done much to keep inflation in check in recent years, inflation has not been eliminated. It remains a fact of life which hurts most the weak in society, those who live on fixed incomes, those who are unable to bargain for increases.

There are two ways to deal with this problem. One has been used in the past, that is, to wait for a significant loss of real income for those receiving pensions and then to step in with a measure catching up, bringing the pensions back up to the real income level they had before and advancing them. This catching up process, which has been used in the past, has the effect of cheating pensioners because while waiting to catch up they suffer. Their real incomes decline while the incomes of other Canadians continue to increase. This system of automatic adjustment is the fairest one, and again I congratulate the Minister of Finance for responding in this area and for providing the cost of living adjustment.

Many people in society who have policies that they want to press on the government often press them by confrontation, by demand, by attack, by criticism. Of course, it is difficult for a government to ignore that kind of criticism. I think it is worth noting that the requests which were received by the government and by all members of the House on behalf of the old age pensioners were characterized by dignity, by respect for the institution of government and by a recognition that there were other needs in this country that also had to be considered. But nevertheless, the claims of the old age pensioners were very real and very deserving of consideration.

I think one should congratulate the old age pensioners for the way in which they made their case, and we should congratulate the government for responding not only to crisis and confrontation but to dignified demands put forward in a constructive way like those from the old age pensioners. I see my time has elapsed, Mr. Speaker, and I conclude.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes at my disposal I would like to refer to what I consider to be one of the most serious omissions from the budget, namely, any reference to the government's regional economic expansion policy or, indeed, to the effect that the present budget will have on that policy. I have already raised this matter in questions in the House to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). The subject was also raised in the regional development committee by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council when they appeared before that committee in the course of examination of departmental estimates a few days ago.

Unlike the accelerated provisions in the present budget, it is interesting to note that in the Gordon budget of 1963 similar capital cost allowances were introduced, but they were for designated regions. Referring to these capital cost allowances, Mr. Gordon said, as recorded at page 980 of Hansard in March, 1964:

> They are of special importance because it is here that the greatest need for continued encouragement appears to lie.

He went on to say:

> It will take time, however, for areas that have lagged behind the general rate of expansion to attract the new enterprises that are expected to result from these tax inducements.

Accordingly, Mr. Gordon, in the course of that budget extended these provisions until April 1, 1967. Compare that with the present write-offs for equipment and machinery. They apply right across the country. They apply on a national basis. Consequently, we are disturbed over the effect this could have on the government's regional economic expansion policies as they apply to the designated regions. I believe, and I hope I can be proven wrong, that this could result and probably will result in reducing the attractiveness of the Regional Development Incentives Act which is the main thrust of the government's regional economic expansion policies.

Under ADIA, which was the forerunner of the Regional Development Incentives Act, assets purchased under these grants were fully depreciable at accelerated rates. The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council has said, and I share this view, that the present RDIA with respect to the write-off provisions of the present budget, should in fact operate in the same way.

It is very interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that APEC indicated that the present forecast of investment in the Atlantic provinces for this year will be down by 23 per cent. APEC on May 9 emphasized the importance of reviewing the procedures under the new provisions to ensure that this does not happen, to ensure that RDIA incentives are not diluted by the provisions of this budget.

I was very disturbed in the course of my questions to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) because his answers on this very important subject seemed to indicate that he did not know much about it except that he had been present in cabinet when the budget had been discussed. This confirms a disturbing aspect of the government's regional development policy, a lack of consultation. There does not seem to have been any consultation between the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion before this write-off provision was incorporated in the present budget.

From time to time it was recommended that co-ordination is an essential feature if economic expansion and regional expansion policies of the government are to succeed. Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic Development Council in its first report recommended that there should be co-ordination especially in the area of the government's economic and fiscal policies. The budgetary provision which is designed to accelerate growth in manufacturing across the country could have the serious effect of diluting and weakening DREE grants and their effect on stimulating growth and employment in developing regions. For example, for firms in a 50 per cent corporate income tax category the real incentive value of an RDIA grant has been reduced by approximately 40 per cent in the first two years of operation of new equipment. This could be reduced more if you want to take interest into account.

The reason for this reduction, in relative attractiveness of designated areas to new investment, is that the portion of capital costs covered by RDIA grants is not depreciable for tax calculations. The remedy would be to allow faster write-offs for firms receiving a DREE grant or, more simply, to allow the full value of new capital investment to be used in depreciation allowances.

In relationship to the national average, I think it is worth mentioning unemployment. This has been referred to before in this debate but I think it bears repetition. Unemployment in the Atlantic region continues to be disproportionately and unacceptably high. Taking into account, for example, the peak unemployment month of January and February, unemployment in the Atlantic provinces for the last ten years has never gone below 9 per cent. For the last five years, when the government's regional development policies were supposed to have been operative, it has hovered around 10 per cent; this despite substantial DREE expenditures in the region on infrastructure and on incentive grants. Clearly, the government's regional development program is not working, certainly not in the Atlantic provinces.

The latest figures indicate that while the number of jobless remains unacceptably and disproportionately high, there is no appreciable change in the job situation. In other words, unemployment continues to rise while the job opportunities remain the same. The March unemployment figures for this year released by Statistics Canada indicate an unacceptable jobless rate of 15.4 per cent in Newfoundland, 16.2 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 9 per cent in Nova Scotia and 12.6 per cent in New Brunswick. Mr. Speaker, the figures would have been considerably higher were it not for the government's LIP program which had some small effect on the over-all situation.

The accelerated depreciation provisions of the present budget will probably stimulate manufacturing in the industrial regions of the country and, hopefully, offset to some extent the American DISC program. However, unlike Mr. Gordon's budget of 1963 and notwithstanding the assurances made in the House today by the Minister of Finance, they will have little or no impact on the designated regions of the country. For example, according to figures contained in the first report of the Atlantic Development Council, manufacturing in the Atlantic region accounted for 13.4 per cent of total employment in the Atlantic provinces whereas the figure for the whole country was approximately 23.4 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, given this fact plus the dilution of the ability of RDIA to attract industry, all present regional economic expansion policies are doing in the Atlantic region is perpetuating the existing economic structure. They should in fact be changing the structure because it has been demonstrated through the years that the structure is unable to provide jobs for the region.

Given the situation that presently exists in the designated regions and the failure of the present government policies to have any appreciable effect on it, it is difficult to reconcile the absence of any reference to regional economic expansion in the budget now before the House. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion refused to commit the government to the ten-year targets for the Atlantic region outlined in the first report of the Atlantic Development Council. In commenting on the minister's belated reaction to the Atlantic Development Council's first report which was tabled in the House in April, 1971, APEC in their newsletter of January 1972 said:

> The refusal of the minister to commit the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the Atlantic Development Council's 1981 goals and targets for the Atlantic region is as inexplicable as it is disappointing. It calls into question once again the federal government's dedication to the long-term development of the Atlantic provinces on a planned and orderly basis and reinforces the suspicion that DREE is nothing more than a well financed giveaway program to the be extended or retracted according to the economic and political exigencies of the moment.

But Mr. Speaker, the government continues to pursue a regional development policy without clearly defined goals and targets. In this respect it seems to operate in a vacuum. After all, the Atlantic Development Council is charged by statute to giving the minister advice on the operation of the program in the Atlantic provinces. To put in the words of APEC—

> What is needed from DREE are specific goals and targets, benchmarks by which it may judge and be judged on its performance.

The unemployment rate of 4½ per cent for the Atlantic region, which was the target on the ten-year development strategy put forward by ADC, can hardly be described as Utopian. Nevertheless, it is a goal and one which in my view can be achieved given the proper national economic climate. The other agency which is charged with advising the minister under the statute setting up the department, the Canadian Council on Rural Development, in its third review said:

> What kind of time perspective has the department? In so far as the benefits of heightened employment and inform income levels in the growth centres are expected to "trickle down" and make their effect felt throughout the entire region in which the growth centre is located, how long is it anticipated the process will take?

Mr. Speaker, obviously they have refused to accept the ten-year target of the Atlantic Development Council. In face of that refusal, no alternate target or program has been put forward by the minister. The report further said:

> In a modern educated democracy it is not enough that the public be told what the government had decided to do. It is essential that they also be told why.

Given the substantial funds being expended on to the DREE program both for regional development incentives and on the program for infrastructure in the designated regions, surely it follows that the government has certain obligations. Surely it is incumbent on the government to say exactly what its objective is. I believe, and this view is shared by many, that unless there is a deliberate attempt to change the existing structure in the region and the approach to regional development in the region, and provide the kinds of incentives which will change the industrial structure there, all we are doing is perpetuating the status quo.

• (2140)

The report of the Canadian Council on Rural Development, to which I just referred, was released in July, 1970. In it were the recommendations I have referred to that were made to the minister. Nevertheless, we were told a few days ago when members of CCRD appeared before the standing committee on regional development that nothing has changed in the last two years and that the government had failed to respond to their recommendations. The principal recommendations of the council are as follows.

> practicable, be objectively defined and made public.
> 2. The economic assumptions taken into account by the department in planning should be also made a matter of public record.

Nobody really knows what the government is attempting to do. The latest unemployment figures clearly show a continuing unemployment situation. Present government policies are not having any appreciable effect on unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, in eastern Quebec or, for that matter, in other designated regions of the country. Given this fact, I find it difficult, almost impossible, to understand why the minister did not refer in his budget to the government's regional economic policies. Why did he not ease the minds of those who are concerned by indicating exactly what affect the accelerated write-off and depreciation provisions will have on the implementation of the Regional Development Incentives Act? If the debate continues, and if the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion takes part in it, I hope he will attempt to set the record straight. Until that happens, Mr. Speaker, this question will remain a matter of great concern to those of us in the Atlantic provinces who are involved in the government's regional development program.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the subamendment lost.

At 10.10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday May 16, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STATEMENTS BY MEMBER FOR YORK SOUTH ALLEGEDLY REFLECTING ON JUDGES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the right hon. member for Prince Albert proposed to move a motion under Standing Order 43 in the following words:

That the subject matter of public statements made by the hon. member, and in particular those which are of a disparaging nature to the integrity and independence of the bench, be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Before putting the question the Chair expressed reservations about the procedural acceptability of the motion in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 51. Although there appeared to be unanimous consent among hon. members to proceed with the debate, the Chair undertook to look into the procedural aspects of the proposed motion.

It should be pointed out that the unanimous consent of the House contemplated by Standing Order 43 has reference only to the setting aside of the notice requirements provided in Standing Order 42. That is the sole purpose of the Standing Order. It does not set aside the ordinary rules applicable to the form and content of motions.

Thus, when a motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 the Chair has an obligation to ensure that the ordinary usages of the House are observed. Even after the most serious and exhaustive consideration of the matter, the Chair has the same reservations as to the procedural aspects of a motion of this kind.

In the circumstances I would hope that it might be found possible either to redraft the motion and propose it in other terms or, if it is the unanimous desire of the House, to have a debate on this matter in some other form, perhaps under the provisions of another Standing Order or procedure. As hon. members know, there have been discussions in this regard. Hopefully, these consultations will result in due course in some understanding between all parties and individuals concerned. However, this is not for the Chair to decide, and for the moment I would have to leave this in the hands of hon. members themselves.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the reference Your Honour just made to discussions among the House leaders with regard to this matter, may I ask the government House leader whether the agreement we reached yesterday for a debate at nine o'clock tonight, on a different type of motion but with respect to this matter, will be put into effect?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is not entirely my responsibility to determine whether this can be or will be done. First of all, I would prefer to hear the views of the mover and the seconder of the motion in question. If there is a desire along those lines, I would certainly be happy to co-operate with the over-all wish to have a debate, but it is not my purpose to bring about a debate that may not be desired at this point.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in view of what has just happened, and on the basis of the notice which I gave you, I am forced to rise on a question of privilege, which I now do, because what occurred yesterday has resulted in a misrepresentation of what I have said—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —and has got national attention in a thoroughly unfair way. Mr. Speaker, the first thing I want to say, in view of the attack made on me by the right hon. gentleman, is that I do not retract anything I said last Friday, nor do I make any apologies for having said it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The second thing I want to say is that the reports of what I said which appeared in the Globe and Mail and the Toronto Star were accurate reports. I do not claim that those reports in any way misquoted or misrepresented me, but I cannot say the same thing for what the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert put before the House and before the people of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —because what he said was a complete misrepresentation of what I said and, indeed, of what was reported in the papers to which I referred.

As recorded at page 2243 of yesterday's Hansard the right hon. gentleman said in part:

—I have never found it necessary to attribute the results to a politically partisan court. I admit that judges are not above criticism and they must be subjected to the constant searchlight of public opinion. But to condemn the judiciary blanket-wise as men virtually without integrity cannot be justified.

Later he said:

That means that the judiciary, unable to protect itself, is not independent.

The right hon. gentleman made these statements and I cannot permit these statements and misrepresentation to stand. I wish there had been a debate but since there is not one and I am not prepared to wait for tomorrow or the day after—this has gone across the country. I am entitled, I submit to you, Sir, to put the record straight now.

The right hon. gentleman may be prepared to let the matter stand now. He has had the publicity which of course he did his best to shun. No doubt his natural reticence was overcome by public demand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: But I do not appreciate what he has done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman rises on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the hon. gentleman exculpating himself by misrepresentation or otherwise but to go into detail he did indicate he is prepared for a debate that is not going to take place.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): All because you do not want it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say that no point of privilege is involved in the way the hon. member is putting the matter before us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for York South ought to be given an opportunity to state the question of privilege. He has given the required notice under the Standing Order that he wished to raise the matter by way of question of privilege and the Chair is allowing him to do so at the present time. I might indicate that if the hon. member's question of privilege relates directly to statements made by another member, that other member will have the opportunity, under the practice of the House, to respond. I feel we should not have a debate at this time, but the hon. member for York South obviously has the right to indicate what the question of privilege is on which he seeks a ruling from the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you will give me, in your usual fairness, the right to put my case, and the right hon. gentleman, who prides himself correctly on a sense of fairness, ought to have the courtesy to let me do it before he interrupts. I am sure he did not intend to be unfair but he was.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I say, Mr. Speaker, that if the right hon. gentleman had any charge to make against me he should have made it in the proper way, prepared to take the consequences if his charge failed, just as I would be prepared to take the consequences if his charge succeeded.

I said nothing in my statement last Friday to question the integrity or independence of the judiciary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Not a single word in my statement dealt with that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: If hon. gentlemen had read what I said, and I will be glad to send them a transcript of the tape, they would not scream so. Nor did I say anything about political bias—not a word.

What I said, Mr. Speaker, no doubt in an imperfect way, is the same as was said in this House by a very prominent member of this House and lawyer in this country. This gentleman said some years ago:

> Too often appointments to the judiciary in the past have been based on political services, and too often the qualification for appointment to the bench has been the fact that the applicant has been defeated for public office.

That statement, Mr. Speaker, is found on page 5254 of Hansard for 1944 and was made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might agree that at this point he is not proposing substantively the question of privilege which he would like the Chair to consider. This is debate and argument rather than setting forth the question of privilege itself.

• (1420)

Mr. Lewis: With respect, Mr. Speaker, when a member of this House is attacked in the House he has the right to set the record straight, and I intend to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, of course, has the right to do that but he has to do it within the rules and procedures of the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest to you that I am not going beyond the rules of the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —because that is precisely what the right hon. gentleman said in 1944 and many times since, as I could show if I had the time to look up his statements. That is precisely what I said last Friday. I said that many people who reach the bench are defeated Liberal or Conservative candidates and that the moment they reach the bench they think they are gods. As far as I am concerned, they are ersatz gods who do not have all wisdom.

Some hon. Members: Shame! Shame!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my remarks were directed entirely to judges in the field of labour relations, not to their performance as judges in other fields.

An hon. Member: That is not what you said.

Mr. Lewis: My remarks were related entirely to what I have found over the years, to the lack of understanding of labour relations that is shown by many on the bench. I ask your indulgence Mr. Speaker, to quote to the House a statement made by a very famous British judge, Lord Justice Scrutton, as found in the Cambridge Law Journal in 1921. Lord Justice Scrutton said this in relation to labour:

> . . . the habits you are trained in, the people with whom you mix, lead to your having a certain class of ideas of such a nature that, when you have to deal with other ideas, you do not give as sound and accurate judgment as you would wish. This is one of the great difficulties at present with labour. Labour says: "Where are your impartial judges? They all move in the same circle as the employers and they are all educated and nursed in the same ideas as the employers. How can a labour man or a trade unionist get impartial justice?"

Those are not my words. They are the words of Lord Justice Scrutton. He continues:

> It is very difficult sometimes to be sure that you have put yourself into a thoroughly impartial position between two disputants, one of your own class and one not of your class.

Those are the kind of words and that is the kind of thought that I expressed last Friday, and I make no apology for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I clearly said in my statement, Mr. Speaker, that I was not defending the labour situation in Quebec, Indeed, I do not defend it. I believe that the best way is to get back to the bargaining table. I believe, furthermore, that the present course which the labour unions have taken in Quebec is leading them into a dead alley, which I regret.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I find it difficult to accept the position taken by the hon. member for York South. He has given notice to the Chair under the terms of Standing Order 17 of his intention to raise a matter by way of question of privilege, I assume to seek the advice of the Chair or a ruling by the Chair on whether there is a prima facie case of privilege which would be followed by a debate. If the hon. member makes a speech for a certain period of time, I wonder whether he is not making at this time the speech which he would want to make if there were a debate on the matter. I suggest respectfully to him, and in all kindness, that this is not my understanding of the procedure under Standing Order 17. The matter is serious and important. I appreciate the hon. member's point of view in wanting to allude to the statements which have been made, but an effort should be made by him to try to indicate exactly what the question of privilege is, why the hon. member feels that his privileges have been impaired, and why the matter should be ruled upon by the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if a debate had been arranged, as I thought was to be arranged, I would not have risen to my feet now, but since a debate has not been arranged, my point of privilege is a simple one. It is that I have been unfairly attacked and misrepresented before this parliament and the people of Canada. I cannot imagine any democratic parliament or assembly denying me the right to set the record straight and to tell this parliament and the people of Canada what I said and what I intended to say. I will not be very much longer. I ask Your Honour's indulgence to let me do this. Your Honour can put me down, but I certainly will not be seated by the catcalls round the House.

I said that I was not defending the labour situation in Quebec and I regret what is now taking place. I saw this situation in Quebec, I saw that the difficulties had been temporarily quieted and that there was an opportunity for the situation to straighten out. But then the judge in question handed down what I believe to be—and this is what I said—"were savage sentences which resulted in the turmoil which is now regrettably taking place in Quebec".

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Lewis: I say to hon. gentlemen that if I had made a speech condemning the workers who are now causing the trouble, everyone here would have said I was a hero, but because I condemned the judge who imposed these sentences—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to insist that under the terms of Standing Order the hon. member is required to indicate what the question of privilege is. The hon. member may feel he has a right to redress and a right to explain the situation. He certainly has that. I am sure all hon. members want to give the hon. member for York South a chance to explain his position, but we should try to not have the debate which might have taken place in other circumstances.

The hon. member for York South suggests that he should have the opportunity at this time to make the speech he might have made on another occasion. I am not sure that is quite right. I think we should limit ourselves as much as possible to the question of privilege. Perhaps at some other time the hon. member might have an opportunity to pursue the line of thought which he is presenting to the House at the present time. Again I want to insist that the hon. member has rights, and I am sure I express the thoughts of all hon. members when I say we all agree the hon. member should be given an opportunity to express certain views in relation to the question of privilege.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the simple point I have tried to make is that what I said last Friday I believe is right in terms of our kind of society and our kind of judicial system.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: I was an amateur student of jurisprudence and the philosophy of the law, and it has been held in many cases that judges are subject to criticism, that they are not free of criticism. What I did last Friday was to criticize the judge responsible for sentences that resulted from reckless ignorance of the forces at work in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I had a right to make that kind of criticism, whether members agree with me or not. Therefore I was entirely unfairly misrepresented in the House. When I started to speak my intention was to move, and if Your Honour will permit me I will move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) the following motion:

• (1430)

That the false charges made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert as recorded on page 2243 of Hansard for Monday, May 15, 1972, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration of report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will, of course, give consideration to the motion proposed by the hon. member for York South. In view of the fact that the motion is directed toward him, the right hon. member for Prince Albert is entitled under our procedure to say a few words in reference to the matter which might be helpful for the guidance of the Chair in determining whether the question should be pursued further either in the House or before a committee. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have been in this House a long while and I have always maintained the traditions of proper debate. I have never made a misrepresentation intentionally at any time. I am not going to say of the hon. gentleman, "Methinks he doth protest too much", but the degree of his annoyance and exuberant exaggeration can only be attributed to the different reaction he has received throughout the country than he received when he spoke to the steel workers. I would not for worlds misinterpret him on any occasion.

Mr. Lewis: But you did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is easy to say that. But the record is clear and definite on the interpretation which was made. What I had to say yesterday was said without my having read any of the editorial comments across the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I took the course I did because I was shocked that a member of parliament, a distinguished member of the bar with a tremendous income in the labour field, should have made disparaging remarks about the courts, whether or not he ever appears very often within the courts.

As to my interpretation of what the hon. member said, I need only look at the press. In the Globe and Mail there is an article headed, "Lewis For The Lawless". I shall not speak of the alliterative value of that headline, but of Messrs. Pepin, Laberge and Charbonneau the article says:

Repeatedly, deliberately and coldly they urged strikers to disobey injunctions. Insistently they urged strikers to ignore other union leaders who were counselling respect for the law.

It goes on:

This denigration of the courts makes it difficult to understand how reasonable and intelligent men who have an understanding and sympathy with labour's difficulties—

[Mr. Lewis.]

As I have, and I have acted for them without charge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall omit the last sentence out of regard for the hon. gentleman as a most distinguished debater.

In the Ottawa Journal the heading above the leading article reads: "In Contempt Of Law". I am not going to read the article because I would not want to transgress as the hon. gentleman did. Then I see in the Gazette an article headed: "NDP's David Lewis Unfair, Non-factual, Irresponsible."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe I have to make the same remarks to the right hon. member as I did to the hon. member for York South. I am hoping we will not have at this point the debate which might be held in other circumstances. The hon. member for York South was given some leeway in expressing his point of view. The position of the right hon. gentleman, I suggest, is to give his views in relation to the hon. member's allegations with respect to his own statements in the House. Perhaps we might limit the discussion to that particular point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I naturally desire to follow most meticulously the rules of the House, but those rules were transgressed so palpably by the hon. member who preceded me that it becomes necessary to explain. I shall simply say this. I understand how deeply he feels, because there are some people who, if there is a ten-acre field and only four cowflaps in it, would walk into them all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: We farmers use down to earth expressions. The hon. gentleman says I misinterpreted him. Well, Mr. Speaker, I read what he said. Instead of telling the people in his audience to use the rights open to them under the law, in other words, not to become self-appointed martyrs, instead of telling them that they had the right to appeal which would have cleared up the matter simply, he did nothing of the kind except in a general way. All I would say is that if I misinterpreted the uncertainties and the sinuosities of the hon. gentleman's speech, then I am in good company in all the press all over Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There can be no further debate on this point. The Chair will have to make a ruling whether or not there is a prima facie case of privilege. If an affirmative ruling were made there would be a debate which could go on for the rest of the day, with the motion proposed by the hon. member being put to a vote eventually. I would suggest that the matter might be held in abeyance.

It should be noted that the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for York South was based on the assumption that there would not be a debate. My understanding is that there is still a possibility that there might be discussions. Certainly there are many possibilities open to hon. members—the submission of another motion which might be more acceptable under the terms of Standing Order 43, for instance. Then there is the possibility of discussion during the budget debate. There are other procedural avenues open to hon. members. If it could be arranged, it would be much better for hon. members to debate this lively issue under another Standing Order rather than under Standing Order 43 or on a question of privilege.

I have always hesitated, and still hesitate, to agree that the conduct or statements of hon. members—for example, the statement made by the hon. member for York South or the statement by the right hon. member for Prince Albert—ought to be put to the scrutiny of a committee of the House. I cannot believe this is the unanimous wish of hon. members. I would still hope that through consultation hon. members might find among themselves a way of resolving this matter. For the moment I think nothing would be gained by my ruling that there is a prima facie case of privilege and suggesting that there be a debate on the subject from this moment on. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The only contribution that I want to make is to say something to Your Honour about whether there is in fact, in our judgment, a prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member is allowed to do that, all hon. members would be allowed to and we would effectively have the debate that I suggest ought not to be had. The practice of the House is very clear. The Chair hears the hon. member who rises on the proposed question of privilege, and it has been the practice of the House, respected very generously, I might say, by hon. members, that the hon. member whose conduct and statements are referred to essentially by the proposed question of privilege is allowed to reply, as has been the case today. Certainly we would be embarking upon a dangerous course if, in addition to such statements, we allowed the hon. member for Greenwood and another 10, 15 or 20 members to speak to the question of privilege and to indicate why they think there is or is not a prima facie case. I do not think the hon. member should be allowed to do that.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, naturally I accept Your Honour's ruling but I thought that Your Honour had asked for advice on the point of privilege. I did not intend to join in any debate, which Your Honour has ruled is not acceptable at the present time, but I did want to make to Your Honour some observations on the point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I am suggesting that that is contrary to the practice of the House. I would earnestly suggest to hon. members that I do not think this kind of contribution made by the hon. member for Greenwood or by other hon. members would be helpful to the Chair.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I think it would be helpful to the House if we knew whether or not Your Honour has decided that the hon. member for York South does have a prima facie case of privilege, or whether Your Honour is postponing the matter and will give a decision later.

Mr. Speaker: I thought I had indicated that. I indicated that I should like to take the matter into consideration. I thought I also indicated that I had serious reservations about ruling that there was a prima facie case of privilege. As I have said, I have always had doubts as to the advisability of sending a matter where the conduct of a member is impugned to a committee of the House. I may be wrong, but to my mind I feel that the moment there is a prima facie question of privilege that is, in a way, a reflection upon an hon. member. This is why I have hesitation in saying that we should proceed on that basis.

I am not going to make a decision now. I am taking into account the fact that there have been discussions among hon. members and I am hoping some way can be found, if it is the desire of hon. members, to have a further debate on the matter. I trust that in the hours or days ahead some resolution along those lines may be arrived at as a result of consultations inspired by good will.

OIL

PROPOSED TAPS TANKER ROUTE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I desire to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. My motion relates to the decision made yesterday by the House to communicate its concern about the movement of oil in tankers down the coast of British Columbia to the government of the United States. Therefore, apropos, of that I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That this House authorizes the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to conduct an examination of the proposal to move oil by tanker from Valdez Bay in Alaska to Cherry Point in Washington with a view to developing and preparing supporting evidence relative to the concern expressed by this House on May 15, 1972, on the question of the said oil tanker route in order that such supporting evidence may also be transmitted to the government of the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The hon. member's proposed motion cannot be put.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder whether we could have some explanation of why the Liberal party denies this motion but agreed to the motion proposed yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Is it a matter of having a two-faced policy on this question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO AUTHORIZE ESTABLISHMENT OF MINERAL PROCESSING PLANT IN NORTHWESTERN BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Howard (Skeena)—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Development Corporation Act (mineral processing)".

Mr. Speaker: Before proposing the motion of which notice has been given by the hon. member for Skeena, it might be appropriate for the Chair to offer one or two brief observations.

At first glance it does appear that the title of the proposed bill may be defective in that, while it purports to amend the Canada Development Corporation Act, it does, in effect, give that body, or some other corporation, the power or authority to establish a smelter or refinery in northwestern British Columbia under the provisions of the Canada Development Corporation Act. Ordinarily, it seems that authority of that kind is granted under the provisions of private legislation.

Additionally, there is the question of the propriety or legality of endeavouring to direct the use of the funds of the corporation which, in part, consist of private as well as public moneys.

The procedural difficulties to which I have alluded should be considered in due course by the House and by the Chair. The motion will be put at this time without ruling on the question immediately, subject to further scrutiny of the question in due course.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-210, to amend the Canada Development Corporation Act (mineral processing).

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, someone has asked me to explain but I think you have done that adequately by indicating the purpose of the bill. It seeks to stop the export of job opportunities for Canadians in regard to processing of minerals in this nation by seeking to give the Canada Development Corporation, a body set up by this parliament, the authority, either by itself or in conjunction with other corporations or with the province of British Columbia, to build a smelter and/or refinery in British Columbia.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REASON FOR LABOUR FORCE FLUCTUATIONS—ADEQUACY OF BUDGET MEASURES TO PRODUCE SUFFICIENT STIMULATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance who a few days ago referred to his expectation that there would be fluctuations in the labour force for some months ahead. This has been borne out by the report from Statistics Canada for the month of April compared with the month of March. I will not ask the minister to engage in any lengthy explanation, but can he say in a few words why this phenomenon is taking place at this time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I spoke about the fluctuation in the month to month figures in the budget speech a week ago Monday and have nothing further to add except that, while I take some encouragement from the trend represented by today's figures, it is still small encouragement for the 600,000 men and women who are out of work.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the minister takes encouragement from this because I was going to ask him whether, in view of the fact that employment in three very employee-intensive industries, manufacturing, services and recreation, and sales declined in the month of April compared with the month of March, he would review his position that the economy has sufficient stimulation under the measures he proposed last week.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I stand by the position I presented to the House in the budget, and obviously the hon. member, if he disagrees with it, will continue the debate.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, again expressing disappointment that the minister is encouraged by this reduction in employment in these labour-intensive industries, I should like to ask him whether he would at least immediately review his decision to maintain in effect the 3 per cent increase in income tax which is to become effective on January 1 next?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would think the stimulus given to the industrial part of the economy will be a welcome remedy for the particular factors to which the hon. gentleman is referring.

INDUSTRY

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—POSSIBLE EXEMPTION FROM CUSTOMS DUTIES ON CERTAIN IMPORTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the employment prospects of some 11,000 rubber workers in Ontario and Quebec hinge upon the government's decision in the Michelin case in Nova Scotia, would the minister for once give us a clear answer to the question of whether or not the government has given the Michelin Corporation the right to import certain tires into this country duty-free for two years or does it intend to give that right in the near future?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I have already been clear about that. Whatever the decision is, it will not affect the Ontario part of the industry in the way the hon. member alleges.

Mr. Broadbent: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I want to phrase it politely. The minister suggested he has made the answer clear, but with respect I suggest it is anything but clear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that whether or not a question is clear is debate. The hon. member and the minister could spend quite a bit of time on this point.

Mr. Broadbent: I will rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister answer this question: Has the government granted the Michelin Corporation such a right or does it intend to do so in the future?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have said to the hon. member on two occasions that the government has not granted that right.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Richmond wish to ask a supplementary? If not, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Beaudoin: No, Mr. Speaker.

MANPOWER

LAY-OFFS BY MICROSYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL—USE OF FUNDS ALLOTTED TO COMPANY BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration arising out of a report that Microsystems International has laid off some 50 employees and plans to lay off more. In view of the fact that Microsystems International has been allotted more than $31 million under the defence industry program, of which over $8 million was spent by March 31, 1971, and in view of the fact that Microsystems International sells its products to Northern Electric of which it is a wholly-owned subsidiary, has the minister looked into the matter of these lay-offs and whether there will be further lay-offs and has he discussed the question of the allotment of funds to that company in view of the lay-offs?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will agree there are many questions in his question. The Department of Manpower, of course, is aware of the lay-offs and can only place at the disposal of the company the traditional facilities of the department and provide the facilities at our disposal for the people who are unemployed. I have tried to find out as precisely as possible the future prospects of employment in Northern Electric and intend to visit that company personally some time next week.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of National Defence under whom I believe the defence industry program comes. It has been indicated that it comes under the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. May I ask that minister whether there have been any discussions with this subsidiary of Northern Electric about the very large sum of money allotted to it and whether it is using that money properly in view of the lay-offs which are now taking place and are threatened for the future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the fact that a company receives money from the government for one reason or another, be it regional development or research and development, does not assure that the company will not experience any difficulties for centuries to come. Indeed, I do not really understand the purport of the question in the way in which it is formulated now.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I formulate the question again and perhaps make it clear. In view of the very large allotment of funds to Microsystems International and in view of the fact it claims to have had losses through sales to its parent company and therefore is laying off people—all its sales are made to Northern Electric, its parent corporation—I ask the minister whether he intends to look into the situation to see whether the funds which the government has made available and has undertaken to make available in the future are being used in a proper way or whether the company is not carrying on its business as it should and should not be allotted any further funds?

Mr. Pepin: I will gladly look into this, Mr. Speaker.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTION THAT MUNICIPALITIES SELECT PROJECTS—DISCUSSION BETWEEN FEDERAL AND MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in view of the absence of the Secretary of State.

With regard to the Opportunities for Youth program or the Local Initiatives program, does the government intend to allow municipalities to select their projects or will the selection continue to be made here in Ottawa or in Montreal? Have arrangements been made to consult the municipalities involved which know their own needs very well?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the question of the hon. member applies to the Local Initiatives Program. The minister in charge is here in the House; the hon. member may wish to direct the question to him.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I asked the question with regard to LIP, but I would not want the minister to overlook the Opportunities for Youth projects which interest municipalities.

Can the Minister of Manpower and Immigration tell us whether, in the future, the government or the officials of his department intend to consult the municipalities when time comes to grant subsidies for LIP projects?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, because we are very sensitive about the rights of the provinces, our dialogue and communications with the municipalities during the winter took place through the provincial authorities. In other words, a sum of money was placed at the disposal of the provinces to be allocated according to their criteria to specific municipalities within the provinces.

• (1500)

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

I understand the minister's explanation that municipalities must obtain the province's approval but since provincial authorities always reply: Yes, your project has been accepted; it is now up to Ottawa to say yes or no, could the minister tell us if Ottawa is in a position to consult the municipalities involved?

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: What I did was to announce some weeks ago that projects of the type the hon. gentleman is describing so aptly could be extended until the middle of June because of the red tape that had been synonymous with municipal programs. In other words, these projects can be continued beyond the end of May until the middle of June or even slightly beyond that time in order that they may be completed.

REASONS FOR LOWER PARTICIPATION RATE OF YOUTH IN LABOUR FORCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the report today by Statistics Canada that there has been a smaller than usual increase in the participation rate of those under the age of 24 but still a quarter of a million young people looking for work, and as this was before those in institutions of higher education came into the labour force, I wonder whether the Prime Minister has made any inquiries or whether any inquiries will be initiated by the government to see whether the reason for this lower participation rate is that young people have dropped out of the labour force and may now be enlarging the welfare rolls in various provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that may be one explanation of the erratic figures in the participation rate, but I believe that various ministers have stated at different times that the participation rate is moving with a great deal of inconsistency at present, and we are trying to find the explanations for that. I understand that even certain forecasting circles are refusing to forecast the rate of unemployment because of the erratic nature of the participation rate. We are trying to find the answer to the very helpful suggestions of the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): About eight weeks ago when there was a larger than usual increase, the Prime Minister gave me a somewhat similar answer and suggested at that time that the whole problem was being examined in some detail—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we should try to limit the length of questions. The question period started some ten minutes ago, and I believe we have had only three questions. If we have lengthy questions, many of our colleagues will be left on the sidelines.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Can the Prime Minister indicate when we may have specific answers with regard to this continuing problem, and second, whether or not special action is being taken by the manpower counselling office set up for young people in the last few weeks?

Mr. Trudeau: In answer to the first part of the question, discussions have taken place between various officials and officials of Statistics Canada in order perhaps to arrive with greater precision at the real unemployment figure and to gain more knowledge of the participation rate. I do not think that the results of those discussions are apparent yet in any conclusions.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In connection with the second part of that question, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who might indicate whether, in view of the still very large number of over a quarter of a million unemployed young people, special action is being taken by his department to deal with this very serious problem?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): There has been no new program, Mr. Speaker, other of course than in the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Efforts have been made to make the present plans more beneficial. One example is that there will probably be three times as many students travelling and working in Europe as a result of manpower initiatives than at this time last year. In addition, many of the young people will be working on local initiatives programs that have been extended to the extent of $30 million.

TRADE

INCREASE IN IMPORTS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT TREND

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As imports into Canada have increased at three times the rate of exports during the first four months of this year, thereby showing that countries selling in Canada did so far more aggressively than Canadians selling abroad, would the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that this kind of question is not in order. He is making an argument. That is not a question and it is difficult for the Chair to allow the hon. member to proceed.

Mr. Hees: Would the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House what steps his department is taking in the immediate future to counteract this trend?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, most people who pay attention to these matters have already understood the situation which simply is that the economies of the industrialized countries of the world are not growing very rapidly and in some cases are declining. This makes Canadian exports, particularly of industrial materials, more difficult—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister should not make a statement now.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the drop in Canadian exports has been largely in manufactured goods, those that produce jobs, and as these can be sold abroad actively, as another government once proved, would the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline what steps he intends to take? Let him just say yes or no.

Mr. Pepin: I do not accept the postulate and that is why I cannot agree with the conclusion.

POLLUTION

PHOSPATE CONTENT OF DETERGENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In light of the commitment given by the minister last October that the phosphate content in household detergents would be reduced to not more than 5 per cent by the end of 1972, will the minister say, in view of recent press reports, whether this commitment still stands?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Fisheries intend to carry out any reorganization of his department in order to arrest what appears to be a downgrading of the fisheries service within the department, especially in the light of the recommendation made to the minister by the Fisheries Council of Canada?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, since there is no downgrading of the fisheries service, I do not think any reorganization would be warranted.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO TIME FOR DISCUSSION OF BILL C-174

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. Would the House leader make government time available later this week for passage through the House of Public Bill C-174 in order to assure reasonable competition in the coming election?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, government time this week is very precious, and I am afraid I cannot accede to the hon. member's representation.

Mr. Hellyer: In view of the pressure on government time this week, would the House leader give his undertaking for next week?

Mr. MacEachen: I would be glad to consider that further representation for later in the session.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURE—COMPENSATION TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries—careful, George, my mike is open.

Mr. Hees: Saved again.

Mr. Crouse: In view of the statement by the president of the Southeast Fishermen's Association in New Brunswick that the salmon fishermen would start fishing operations by June 1 unless a common rate of compensation is paid to all fishermen, has the minister established a sound and acceptable proposal to cover the salmon fishermen's loss of time, fishing gear and income?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, discussions have been held with representatives of the fishermen's groups in the Maritime provinces and a formula has been struck which will be offered to fishermen individually in that area.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, would the minister give every assurance that he will deal directly with the fishermen themselves in the negotiations?

Mr. Davis: Yes, it is our intention to negotiate fisherman by fisherman and to reach a settlement on the form of compensation which I believe will be satisfactory to the fishermen.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Speaker. Will all full-time fishermen who have been denied a licence to fish for salmon receive compensation from the department?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COMPENSATION FORMULA

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries. If I heard him correctly, he made reference to a formula being struck which would form the basis for settlement with individual fishermen. Would the minister agree to table the formula in the House so that members can have an opportunity of examining it?

• (1510)

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this evening, when the Fisheries and Forestry Committee meets on the subject of salmon, might be a more appropriate time and place to table it.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ADOPTION OF BILL 19 BY QUEBEC NATIONAL ASSEMBLY—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

When the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion stated in Joliette, during the weekend, that Quebec government Bill-19 should never have been accepted, was he expressing the views of the federal government, or was he speaking as a former labour leader?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such a statement but if a provincial legislation is involved it is of course not subject to federal government policy, unless it were considered anticonstitutional, which I have no knowledge of.

Mr. Rondeau: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Could the right hon. Prime Minister nevertheless tell us whether the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion was expressing the views of the federal government when stating that Bill 19 should never have been accepted?

Mr. Trudeau: It is a matter, Mr. Speaker, of knowing what he did say and when the hon. member is quoting the word "accepted", I don't know what is involved. Accepted by whom?

HOUSING

POSSIBLE ADDITIONAL ACTION TO KEEP DOWN INTEREST RATES ON MORTGAGES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Does the government intend to take any measures to keep down interest rates for housing in addition to the new residential mortgage financing bill?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the measures introduced yesterday by way of a bill will assist in that endeavour.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PLANS FOR CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

Mr. Allen B. PLANS FOR CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION—POSSIBLE ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE SILVER DOLLAR

AIR CANADA

REASON FOR REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF FLIGHTS FROM WINNIPEG TO EUROPE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It refers to one I asked him about ten days ago concerning the reduction of air services to Europe from western Canadian airports. At that time he undertook to provide an answer later. I wonder if he has the answer now?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am advised by Air Canada that the reduction is for a limited or interim period only between the end of the winter-spring schedule and the start of the summer schedule. If the service has not yet been restored to what it was previously, it very shortly will be.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CLOSING OF FRIENDSHIP CENTRES—REASON FOR WITHDRAWAL OF FUNDS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but he is not here and neither is his parliamentary secretary so I will direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that an Indian friendship centre in Toronto has closed and that three others are about to close, can the Prime Minister say why funds have been withheld from these centres and whether anything is being done to ensure that funds are made available as expected?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. I did not understand the question. I will read it in Hansard and try to give an answer.

Mr. Osler: I have a supplementary to the previous question.

Mr. Ryan: On a supplementary—

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary, if that is all right with you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems we now have three supplementaries. Perhaps I should first recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre who has a supplementary to the previous question, and then the hon. member for Athabasca followed by the hon. member for Spadina.

AIR TRANSPORT

MANITOBA BILL IMPOSING TAX ON OVERFLIGHTS ACROSS PROVINCE—SUGGESTED EXAMINATION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Transport and it also concerns airlines. The Manitoba Government's Bill 21 does several things, but in view of the implications this measure appears to have for the free operation of mainline airlines and the development of northern transportation, as well as weakening the federal government's regional airline policy for Manitoba and the northwest, does the minister intend to have the constitutional legality of this legislation examined?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is clearly not a supplementary question. I find it difficult to allow the hon. member to ask a question when he seeks the floor on what is allegedly a supplementary and it is clearly not so. At the same time the hon. member has taken the time of the House to ask the question, and the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have asked for a copy of the bill in question. I will have it examined and report back later as to its ramifications.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FRIENDSHIP CENTRES—DEPARTMENTAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR GRANTS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct this question to the Prime Minister. Can he indicate whether a decision has yet been made as to which department, that of the Secretary of State or that of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, is responsible for grants to Indian friendship centres?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as a general principle both departments have authority to give grants to assist Indians and other groups of citizens to pursue their studies and representations. That is the principle, but if the hon. member has a question relating to any specific centre I could find out which of the two departments is in fact dealing with it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FRIENDSHIP CENTRE, TORONTO—REASON FOR DELAY IN GRANT

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. As the grant to the Toronto Indian friendship centre was apparently promised by the Secretary of State's department, as a grant from the province is dependent on the federal grant, and as the centre has been forced to close its doors because of the delay, would the Prime Minister look into the situation forthwith with a view to straightening out where this federal grant should come from?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take it from the hon. member's question that the federal grant, if it is to come, would come from the Secretary of State's department. Therefore, I will refer the question to him and ask him to reply to the hon. member in the House.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EARLY STATEMENT ON DEFINITION OF INCOME

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. For some time the minister has been looking into the matter of reviewing the regulation defining income under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Has the minister reached any decision with respect to that regulation, and is he able to make any report?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize for not being able to report fully. I have been away from the House more than is customary in recent days. I will look into the matter and see if we have arrived at conclusions on the basis of the representations received from the affected groups, both employers' associations and employees' associations.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that this was one of the big hang-ups in handling unemployment insurance payments last winter, can the minister assure the House that this matter will be clarified before the House prorogues?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I will admit that this was one of the reasons for the delays but I would remind the hon. gentleman that with a plan such as we have put together, providing up to $100 a week under very liberal conditions—I am talking about small "l" liberal conditions—someone has to pay for it and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really think we are entering into debate between the hon. member and the minister.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT BY PREMIER BOURASSA ON FEDERALISM—POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Sunday night the Quebec premier publicly stated that he was gradually losing faith in the principle of a viable federalism, because of the lack of consultation prior to some federal decisions. Considering the circumstances, can the Prime Minister give us the assurance that, from now on, prior consultations will take place between the two governments with regard to any question having a direct or an indirect bearing on the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that, for the past four years, this government has shown that it was ready to consult the provinces more than any other federal government in the past.

As for the practice followed in certain areas, an exchange of correspondence between Premier Bourassa and myself, between September and March, indicated that we were even prepared to insert in our statutes methods of payment which would depend on the provincial legislation. We were prepared to do this not only in the field of family allowances, but also, as indicated in my letter, in other fields. This letter has unfortunately remained without effect, on the one hand, because discussion was centred on family allowances and, on the other hand, because the other subjects could not be raised. However, the attitude of the federal government still remains the same: We wish to consult the provinces as much as possible and we shall keep on doing so provided, of course, the latter do not break negotiations with us.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lotbinière wish to put a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

QUEBEC POSITION RESPECTING RECENT BUDGET—CONTENTS OF CORRESPONDENCE ALLEGEDLY EXCHANGED

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since the Quebec premier on that occasion spoke of changing his government strategy for the development of future federal-provincial relations and even of retaliating, has the federal government received since then any communication from the Quebec premier pertaining to the recent federal budget and, if yes, can the Prime Minister reveal the contents of this communication?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered yesterday that, to my knowledge, no such representation was made to the government. Since then I do not know of any formal communication. I repeat, I believe the House and the general public should indeed read my letter of March 11 in which, I think, I proposed to the Quebec government that the discussions we were having on family allowances be extended to other fields. We were prepared to modify our legislation to take into account provincial priorities whenever possible.

Mr. Speaker: I remind hon. members that only a few minutes are left before the end of the question period. The hon. member for Lotbinière may ask a supplementary question and I will raise the next subject immediately afterward.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the right hon. Prime Minister, in replying to these questions, is using the past tense, would this mean that he is keeping the same strategy in connection with these relations or this policy or should we understand that the federal government does not intend to raise this subject during the next federal-provincial discussions?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think that once more the hon. member misunderstood my reply. I repeat that if he would refer to the letter I sent at the beginning of March to the Quebec premier, he would find that on the contrary the federal government is prepared to make those adjustments in the field of family allowances but also to discuss the adjustments in other areas connected with social legislation.

ELECTIONS

BILL RESPECTING ELECTION EXPENSES—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question regarding the bill introduced today by the President of the Privy Council at the request of the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether he has had consultations which would enable him to tell the House the length of time it would take after the bill is passed before it would become operative?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I indicated in answer to a question of that nature—I am not sure if it was in the House or outside the House—that we think it is such a good bill and so close to the recommendations of the Barbeau committee on which eminent Conservatives and NDP members sat and so close to the recommendations of the special committee of the House, that it might be passed with unanimous consent perhaps as soon as the opposition has taken knowledge of the bill. Perhaps it could be done tomorrow by unanimous consent.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister misunderstood the question. Irrespective of the merits of the bill, and we will decide that after we have had a look at it, can he indicate whether he has had discussions and consultations with officials which could lead him to tell the House how long the bill would take to become operative after it is given Royal Assent?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have not had direct discussion with the electoral officers on this matter but I am informed that the electoral law as it now reads makes it difficult for a bill to be applicable unless a period of six months is given to the electoral officer after the passage of such a bill modifying the electoral act. Of course, the House is always in a position, if it wishes, to amend that previous act and to decide unanimously that they want it to go into operation the day after tomorrow.

Mr. Baldwin: Bring it in and see what we do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. I suggest, respectfully, to the hon. member that perhaps we might return to this subject tomorrow. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—REQUEST FOR DELAY OF APPLICATIONS FOR TRANSFER OF TUGBOATS FROM CANADIAN REGISTRY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which relates to the retention under Canadian registry, if at all possible, of tugboat operations. Would the minister give consideration to deferring applications for transfer out of Canadian registry of tugboat operations on the east coast and the St. Lawrence River until such time as the operative sections of his colleague's bill with respect to foreign takeovers are capable of being brought into play in this situation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that suggestion under advisement. I am not sure what the legal limitations are but I shall be glad to look at them.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP BILL—INQUIRY AS TO DEBATE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister who some time ago attached great importance to the foreign ownership bill becoming law as rapidly as possible. I should like to ask him when this bill is going to commence its progress through the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, surely this is a matter for discussion between the House leaders. I think all parties have agreed that this week we should proceed as quickly as possible with the bill to increase the guaranteed income supplement and the veterans' pensions bill. As soon thereafter as the parties can agree on any other bill that they want to pass by unanimous consent or quasi-immediate action, we would be prepared to give these bills very high priority.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. A. D. Can the minister inform the House and give his assessment of the extent of damage done by certain inmates of Millhaven penitentiary last week when in a reported protest or strike they wilfully destroyed an estimated $4,000 worth of federal property in that new prison?

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO CONTRACT WITH PINKERTON AGENCY RESPECTING SERVICES NOW PERFORMED BY CORPS OF COMMISSIONAIRES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. On Thursday, May 4, I asked the minister if the National Capital Commission has made a contract, or is considering the making of a contract, with the Pinkerton Agency, a subsidiary of an American firm, for the provision of services in the national capital area now provided by the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires. Is the minister now in a position to answer my question?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member asked the question I sent for a report but apparently it has not come yet. I will get it immediately for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings has a supplementary.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister following the question put by the hon. member for Peace River. Could the Prime Minister outline to the House the specific nature of any deadline which the government seems at breakneck pace to be trying to attain by the end of the week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only deadline we have in mind is that if the old age pensioners—I do not know if it applies to veterans—are to receive their increased payments by the end of June rather than waiting another full month to the end of July we will have to pass that bill in all stages by the end of this week. Of course, if the opposition wants to take upon itself—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lisgar.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State about the intergovernmental committee which has been set up to deal with tax changes as they relate to agriculture. Is the minister now in a position to inform the House what some of the changes are at which this committee is at present looking?

Hon. P. M. Mahoney (Minister of State): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not.

Mr. Murta: Will the committee that the Minister of State is associated with be looking at changes involving certain aspects of the capital gains tax and certain aspects of the basic herd allowance which pertain to agriculture?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can certainly bring those matters to the attention of the committee if he so wishes.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURE—POSSIBLE IMPLICATIONS INVOLVING RIGHTS OF INDIANS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. It has to do with the implications of the ban on the Atlantic salmon fishery. Has the minister consulted with his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, to determine whether there are any implications involving the rights of our native peoples, that is to say, their treaty rights, arising from the ban on this fishery?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, there are some implications. These consultations are proceeding.

GRAIN

PILOT PROJECT FOR USE OF INTERIOR ELEVATORS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Since the federal government is going ahead with a pilot project to determine the feasibility of channelling grain through large interior terminal elevators, I wonder if the minister would be prepared to make a statement on motions outlining some of the details of this program, such as the elevator companies involved and so on?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has already pointed out, this is a rather modest pilot project. I announced some of the details in Winnipeg the other day, as I am sure the hon. member is aware.

TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR WHEAT—REASON FOR DELAY IN PAYMENTS TO ONTARIO PRODUCERS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary inasmuch as it pertains to wheat. In the absence of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, may I direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. The payments that are related to the two-price system for wheat were made to western producers some time ago but Ontario wheat producers have received nothing yet. Can the minister explain the reasons for the holdup and when these payments will be on their way?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is inaccurate to say that Ontario producers have received nothing. The application forms have gone forward and obviously we cannot process them until we receive them. We have tried to set some kind of deadline for the receipt of these applications but we will not be firm and say that is the last day on which they will be accepted. We also have to work out the other details to make sure—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the minister but we have gone beyond the end of the question period. I notice that the hon. member seeks to ask a supplementary, but other hon. members have not had a chance to ask even a first question. I say that with apologies particularly to the distinguished members occupying the front benches, who have been very patient. I hope they will not hold it against the Chair because the Chair has tried today to give priority to a number of distinguished colleagues who are not on the front benches. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND OTHER ACTS

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT OF PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

The House resumed, from Friday, May 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Laing that Bill C-208, to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, to provide for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. May we have order, please.

[Translation]

Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[English]

I hope that the important discussions taking place between hon. members might be continued behind the curtains so that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can carry on with his remarks.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when second reading of Bill C-208 was called on Friday last, it was my privilege to respond to the brief remarks made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing). As those who were here then will recall, I was most happy to extend to him my warm compliments for the things he said on Friday afternoon. That was an immediate, off-the-cuff response of mine. Having given the matter further thought, I still extend to him my compliments. Of course, I may have some suggestions to make in a few minutes, but may I repeat that there were three things the minister said on Friday afternoon that were extremely welcome.

First, he made it clear that the 3.6 per cent increase in the pensions and allowances of various kinds that are received by veterans, their survivors or dependents, is not to be in substitution for an increase in the basic rates of any of those pensions or allowances. The second assurance he gave, which I regard as important, was that the 3.6 per cent increase being provided under this cost of living escalation arrangement will apply to every kind of pension and allowance that is paid under any legislation coming under the responsibility of the Department of Veterans Affairs. One could have assumed that that would be so from the advance publicity given to this legislation; even so, it was good to hear the minister say that, as he did, on Friday.

The third assurance which the Minister of Veterans Affairs gave on Friday, which I find extremely welcome, is that the necessary order in council will be obtained so that veterans who are both on the guaranteed income supplement and the war veterans allowance will not receive an increase from one authority, only to have it taken away by another.

I say again, Mr. Speaker, that those are welcome statements; they are an improvement over certain statements which have been made on some occasions when veterans' legislation has been before the House of Commons. That being so, I hope the minister will work hard in the time that remains to him as head of his department in seeing to it that more improvements along those lines are made. However, Sir, I feel that there are some comments and suggestions that I must make under each of these three headings, and I must also make one or two others.

I return to the first assurance, namely, that the increase to be provided, on the basis of the cost of living increase, of 3.6 per cent is not to be a substitute for an increase in basic rates. As I said on Friday, I hope that assurance applies not only to the basic rate of disability pensions provided under the Pension Act, but that it will also apply to the basic rates set out in the War Veterans Allowance Act and in other acts to be amended by this bill. Perhaps we could take it for granted that if there is to be further consideration of the basic rates, that it will be a consideration of all basic rates, including those in every statute with which we are concerned.

The point I wish to emphasize particularly is this: I hope this is not just a swan song assurance given by a minister who is heading for retirement. I hope that what the minister has said is not just an expression of his own view. I have reason to believe that this is his own view, and I commend him for it. Nevertheless, I hope he is speaking with the authority of the government. After this parliament ends and somebody else becomes Minister of Veterans Affairs, if that somebody else is still a member of the present administration, I hope he will be bound by the assurances the minister has given, namely, that these 3.6 per cent increases are not in substitution for increases in basic rates.

I think we understand quite readily the complaints and protests that came almost immediately from the Royal Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations about the 3.6 per cent increase. Many of them felt that this increase was it. They felt it was the increase the minister had been talking about in recent weeks and that with this increase being made, nothing more would be said about an upward adjustment of the basic rates. This is extremely important. I hope that before this debate ends, at the end of the second reading stage, in committee or on third reading, the minister will give us the assurance that his statement about basic rates still being under active consideration is not only his own view, but is a commitment of the present government.

I now come to the second point that was made by the minister the other day in his brief statement, namely that the 3.6 per cent increases are to apply to all of the pieces of legislation administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and any other allowances or pensions paid by virtue of the authority set out in the Department of Veterans Affairs Act. I have to make the obvious point that increases in pensions for those who already receive them is very good, but there is still the problem of many veterans who are not receiving pensions at all, particularly pensions under the Pension Act to which they feel they are entitled.

As a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, I welcome the job we did in amending the Pension Act last year. I welcome the improvements we made to that act; the clarifying of the benefit of the doubt clause, the establishment of a new procedure and making it possible for any case, no matter how often it has been turned down, to be dealt with all over again. It was inevitable that procedures of this kind would result in a terrific backlog of cases. The members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs have been informed that the backlog is something in the order of 5,000 or 6,000. I again plead, as we have pleaded in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, that additional medical personnel or whatever personnel are needed be obtained so that this process can be speeded up.

We were very understanding with respect to the report submitted by the Canadian Pension Commission to the effect that it first dealt with the Hong Kong cases and then picked out a few other categories in terms of need. I believe the members of that commission are now giving consideration to the cases of older veterans, veterans of World War I. However, the point is that the promise and the news in the press that there is to be an increase is not of much help to the veteran who does not receive a pension at all, particularly when he feels he should be receiving one under the Pension Act.

I want to again make the point I made the other day. Not only should all pensions that come under the minister's responsibility receive the escalation that is provided, but the minister should pay some attention to the points we have been making to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) to the effect that the escalation should be on the most generous basis possible. We do not think that an escalation should merely enable one to continue to buy the same quantity of goods and services that he could buy when he want on pension. That is not good enough. People are not only faced with a rising cost of living, but also a rising standard of living. Who helped to make these rising living standards possible if it was not our veterans? This annual escalation is welcome. However, the Department of Veterans Affairs might give a lead to the Department of National Health and Welfare by giving some serious study to an even more generous arrangement for escalating on an annual basis the pensions of our veterans. I suggest that this type of escalation should be related to the growth in the gross national product.

I now come to the third item I talked about on Friday. As we reached the end of government time on Friday, I was trying to get the minister to nod his head in connection with some statements I was making. His head seemed to be pretty stiff at the time. It did not go up or down. Fortunately, it did not go from side to side either. Your Honour then called it four o'clock. I realize I may have put questions to him that could not be answered with a simple yes or no. I want to go a little further into this question of what is being done with regard to the situation that obtains where a veteran is receiving old age security, the guaranteed income supplement and the war veterans allowance.

I repeat that we are pleased that the minister has said extra money will not be given with one hand and taken away with the other. Veterans have the right to fear that is what will happen because it has happened on several occasions in the past. In recent years, when there has been an increase in the guaranteed income supplement of $1, $2 or, as was the case in the month of April, $2.70, the Department of Veterans Affairs has made sure that what was given with one hand was not taken away with the other. However, when there have been more substantial adjustments, there have been changes in the ceilings with the result that what was given by the Department of National Health and Welfare was taken away by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I may also say that the actual result, particularly in the changes that were made a little over a year ago, was a narrowing of the advantage that War Veterans Allowance recipients previously enjoyed over the civilian population. Our veterans are quite justified in fearing that will happen again. The minister said quite clearly that this will not happen and that there will be an order in council to ensure that what is given to the veteran under the guise of the guaranteed income supplement will be added to his total, not given with one hand and taken away with the other.

I think the minister agreed with me the other day that as far as Bill C-208 is concerned, all it does in this regard is provide that the maximum income ceiling set out by statute will go up by the amount the allowance is increased as a result of the 3.6 per cent escalation. As I pointed out the other day, 3.6 per cent of $121, which is the maximum war veterans allowance for single recipient, is only $4.35, and 3.6 per cent of $201, which is the maximum war veterans allowance for a married recipient, is only $7.23. If the single veteran is given an additional $4.35 on his allowance and what is in this act applies, that is the only advantage he will get. But the minister made it clear, and I hope this is a commitment that will be carried through without delay, that the amount to be received as guaranteed income supplement will be exempted from the ceiling imposed by the War Veterans Allowance Act, even as amended by this escalation.

Let me deal with this in terms of actual situations. There are no veterans over the age of 65 who get $121 a month in war veterans allowance if they are single, or $201 if they are married. Any veteran who is over 65, and who is drawing an old age security pension, has been told in a very effective manner by the War Veterans Allowance Board to apply for the guaranteed income supplement. Varying amounts are paid, but the standard case, of which there are thousands of examples, is this: a single veteran is drawing $80 a month as old age security fund and $55 by way of guaranteed income supplement—except that this has now gone up by $2.70. He is therefore drawing only $26 by way of a war veterans allowance. That is all. This brings him to a total of $163.70, that is, $161 under the Act, plus $2.70 because the guaranteed income supplement was escalated in April by $2.70. The point I am making is that the average single veteran is not getting $121 in war veterans allowance; he is getting only $26, and 3 per cent of $26 is only 93 cents. So the increase a single veteran will get in his war veterans allowance amounts to 93 cents.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He will also get $15 a month in his guaranteed income supplement. This makes it extremely important that the $15 be exempted from the ceiling. In the case of the married veteran, the picture is that he and his spouse are getting $160 in old age security payments, $95 by way of guaranteed income supplement, plus the $5.40 by which the supplement was increased in April plus $16 in war veterans allowance. That is the picture for thousands of veterans. So veterans get an allowance under the Act amounting to $26 if they are single, and $16 if they are married. I have already pointed out that 3.6 per cent of $26 is only 93 cents. Well, 3.6 per cent of $16 is only 57 cents. It is a strange situation when, under the terms of the War Veterans Allowance Act, the increase granted to a married man will amount to only 57 cents, as opposed to 93 cents a month for a single veteran.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thus, it is clear that the real advantage to most war veterans on the allowance will come not through the legislation that is before us but by way of Bill C-207 which is in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). This situation exists because of the action taken by the War Veterans Allowance Board in directing veterans to apply for the guaranteed income supplement. If this had not been the case, and if veterans were drawing more by way of veterans allowances than they are presently drawing, the 3.6 per cent would work out to a larger amount. In other words, the minister has inherited a number of problems because of the way in which these arrangements have been handled in the past. It is an omelet which will be hard to unscramble.

I ask this question, hoping for an answer at some point during this debate. When the order in council is sought and a certain amount of money is allowed as an exemption above the statutory ceiling, what will the amount of that exemption be? I assume the exemption will go up. Will it go up by $4.35, which is 3.6 per cent of $121 even though the average veteran is not getting $121, but only $16? I think it will, because of what is said in the statute. But what about the rest of it? Does it cover the 93 cents? Does it cover the 57 cents? And what about the fact that these increases, when they take place, will be built on a situation which reflects the fact that in the month of April veterans were already getting the extra $2.70 or the extra $5.40 if married? I am sure I have made things sufficiently complicated that the minister does not know what answer to give. The point I am making is this: I think the veterans should be given the best possible advantage from this legislation. They should really get both the additional $15 or $30, which the Minister of National Health and Welfare provides in Bill C-270, and they should get the additional 3.6 per cent, not just of the $16 or the $26 they are drawing, but of the $121 or the $201 available as a war veterans allowance.

I do not wonder that the minister said the other day he could not undertake that these cheques could be adjusted by the end of June. I do not wonder that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should have said today that the old age security cheques could be adjusted but that he was not sure about war veterans cheques. However, I hope that if we can get this legislation passed quickly the cheques can be adjusted by the end of June. Even if there is some delay, though, let the order in council be properly drawn and the adjustment be properly made so that the veterans may get the benefit of both increases, not just 93 cents and 57 cents, but the benefit of 3.6 per cent of the maximum total available under the allowance plus the amount available under the amendment to the old age security legislation and the guaranteed income supplement.

I could go on, but I believe it is unnecessary for me to do so. Like many other members of the House I have been through this too often—I have too often seen increases for veterans partially reduced because of a means test or income test in various pieces of legislation. One of the biggest hoaxes we ever saw around here was the provision in connection with the guaranteed income supplement that moneys received by way of war veterans pensions or allowances would not count as income against the supplement. It sounded good, Mr. Speaker. But then whoever was responsible for the administration of war veterans allowances declared that any money received by way of guaranteed income supplement did count against income received by WVA recipients. It is that kind of a mix-up that the minister has inherited. I hope he will sort it out in the most generous way possible. I am relying on the minister's statement the other day that the government will seek an order in council to correct the situation. I urge him to see that it does. I hope that the fact it is to be sought means that it has not been finally drawn, and that after this discussion of the matter the minister's officials will take a good look at the question to make sure that there is as full an increase as possible for war veterans allowance recipients.

• (1600)

I am about through with the remarks I wanted to make at this stage, Mr. Speaker. Again I express my thanks to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and his colleagues for letting me go first the other day when their spokesmen happened not to be here and the bill was called rather suddenly. I am not going to take advantage of the rule that permits the first opposition speaker unlimited time; that does not often happen to us and we are not in the habit of making use of that rule.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

However, before I sit down I just want to say that I still think that an area where we could and ought to start establishing the principle of a guaranteed annual income is with our veterans. The very fact that we have these many complications to which I have referred adds urgency to this plea. I think parliament has done well over the years by having provided in the Pension Act pensions for disability. Parliament also recognized that there are veterans who served and came back to Canada without any pensionable disabilities, yet were burnt out, had suffered, and deserved consideration from the parliament and the people of Canada. Therefore, we provided the War Veterans Allowance Act as a companion piece to the Pension Act. We have over 50,000 veterans today benefitting from the War Veterans Allowance Act, some on pension as well, many not. I think over 30,000 widows and other dependants also receive payments under the War Veterans Allowance Act. So, parliament's heart has been in the right place and this legislation has been a good thing. Nevertheless, the more complications develop, the more it seems to me to make good sense to set the age at 55 and to have a reasonable figure of at least $3,000 a year single and at least $4,500 a year married and to say: "This is a guaranteed income which we will provide for our veterans". This would cut through all this business about 57 cents and 93 cents, and all the other technicalities and difficulties which we have with us in this legislation.

I fully agree with the statement that my near neighbour, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), made the other day about the responsibility of the parliament and people of Canada to our veterans. This is a responsibility that a member like the hon. member for Edmonton West, who himself served in World War II, feels very strongly. Those of us who did not happen to serve feel it with equal, perhaps even greater force. That is why I believe we should put this proposal into effect.

May I say again that I welcome the tone of what the minister said on Friday. He did not say all the last words; there are a few more things to do. However, I urge very strongly that he use the remaining time that he has as a cabinet minister in this important portfolio to see to it that the commitment to adjust the basic rates is carried out. I also urge him to use his remaining time to see to it that the process of awarding pensions is speeded up, and that a still better escalation formula is found.

Finally, I plead with him as strongly as I can, as one who is pretty close to his generation, that we give a great deal of thought to our old soldiers, the World War I survivors—though, mind you, many of the World War I survivors are now getting on in years—and make sure that they get the kind of deal they deserve. I feel that this deal will be best met if we establish for all veterans who are 55 years of age and over a guaranteed annual income and for all, whatever their age, full and adequate recognition of their service to this country.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I should first apologize for my absence on Friday when this bill was unexpectedly introduced into the House following the conclusion of the second reading of the bill to amend the Old Age Security Act and the guaranteed income supplement. I am quite agreeable to the arrangement that was made at the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and so today I am following "the other Knowles". When we say "the other" we sometimes think of "the other place", but I am sure the hon. member would not want to be associated with that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): "Knowles" is right.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I join, I think, with every member of the House in expressing my agreement with the general tenor of the amendments contained in this legislation which is known as Bill C-208. It is designed to give assistance to our veterans, many of whom are living on pension or war veterans allowance, and are seeing their pensions and allowances eroded by the rapid rise in the cost of living. So that anything that can be done for those people I am sure every member of the House welcomes. Therefore, it follows that we agree with the principle of automatic adjustment of veterans allowances and pensions, and especially with an arithmetic formula which is tied to a specific time date whereby veterans organizations do not have to come constantly cap in hand to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) asking that their pensions be upgraded to meet the rising cost of living; that will now be done automatically and we are all happy about that.

Naturally, we also want to give the bill speedy second reading and get it into the hands of the committee where we shall have a greater opportunity to examine the legislation in detail and to obtain some answers from the minister and his officials regarding some of the apparent contradictions and anomalies that appear from a reading of the legislation at the present time.

We would also like some answers to the specific matters outlined in detail by the previous speaker, as a result of which it looks as though the increase in veterans allowances, announced with great fanfare, will actually turn out to be a mere pittance. We hope that this will not be the case and that the minister will seriously consider the representations that have been made to him, with which I know all members on this side of the House agree.

I also concur with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that we have in the present Minister of Veterans Affairs a man who is both understanding and co-operative, a man I personally would like to see continue on in the department. I feel he is a man of compassion, one who might be able to persuade his officials to bring about some far-reaching reform in our veterans legislation, especially as it affects war veterans allowances and the pensions. With the attitude he has I know he will be very receptive to some of the representations and suggestions that we are making to him today.

The changes that we are talking about, which come into effect on January 1, affect pensions and allowances only. It seems to me it would have been far more meaningful, and would have given the veterans a real boost, if the government had also taken another look at the basic pension rate and adjusted it in line with the increase in the cost of living. As we all know, the basic pension rate is the rate of an unskilled labourer in the public service of Canada. Over the years and up to the present time, this rate has been allowed to lag further and further behind the increase in the cost of living. At the present time the basic pension rate is $3,504. The average annual earnings of unskilled labour in the public service stands at $4,550 which means a difference of $1,046. This amounts to a lag behind what they really should be receiving of about 30 per cent, according to the formula understood by all veterans organizations, namely that the basic pension rate should be related to that of unskilled labour. The amount of money needed to overcome a 30 per cent lag would be considerable. By any reasonable calculation, this would amount to $71.3 million.

I believe it is proper that we should take a look at whether or not we can afford this type of increase, which on the surface would appear to be a considerable sum of money. The table I wish to place on the record shows the relationship between the gross national product in Canada and the expenditure on pensions for disability pensioners and their dependants arising from World War I and World War II. In the year 1930, the gross national product was $5,728 million. The pension liability in that year was $37 million. The gross national product was 154.8 times the pension payments. In 1965, the gross national product had risen to $52,056 million. The pension liability had also increased to $181 million. The gross national product at that time was 232.4 times the amount of the pension liability. What I am saying is that in 1930 the gross national product was 154.8 times the pension liability and in 1965 it was 232.4 times the pension liability.

Therefore, it would appear that Canada is well able to afford a substantial increase in pension liability, always bearing in mind in addition the following facts: the expenditure in respect of World War I veterans, and even World War II veterans, will commence to decline very rapidly in the future. The law of attrition takes effect. These people are reaching the age at which the grim reaper takes his toll. The number of pensioners decreases at a rapid rate. When we speak of $71 million we are not thinking of this as a continuing amount year after year but rather as a rapidly declining figure. I believe this should be taken into account. I repeat that the gross national product is now 232 times as large as the pension liability, and I believe this figure surely reflects the government's ability to pay a substantially increased amount to our war veterans.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs having announced the arithmetical formula, surely it would be a very simple matter to also adapt the basic pension rate to a similar formula. This is the sum and substance of the brief presented by the National Council of Veterans Organizations on different occasions and in particular by the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in March of this year. I think, as I have shown, it is not as unreasonable a request as one might think when one mentions an increase of $71 million.

I said I would be brief. We want to see this bill pass second reading and be referred to the committee. Therefore, I shall honour my pledge to be brief. I have touched only on one point, namely, that we should make some provision to adjust the basic pension. Others of my colleagues will be dealing with other specific subjects at which I believe the minister should take a very close look. Amendments will be suggested when we reach the clause by clause consideration in the Committee on Veterans Affairs. In particular, my colleagues will be dealing with the very question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) concerning the anomaly which appears to exist with relation to war veterans allowance, old age security pensions and the guaranteed income supplement. There is considerable confusion, and we want some enlightenment on this touchy issue because if the veteran is to receive an increase of a few odd cents after all this fanfare about increased pensions, he will be a disappointed and frustrated man. Surely, this is no way to treat the men who gave so much of their lives to this country in time of danger.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the other afternoon when I spoke on the budget proposals of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), I dwelt at some length and with, I have been told, considerable emphasis on what I consider to be the anomaly that is being proposed by the Minister of Finance in relation to those war veterans allowance recipients who would get the guaranteed income supplement. Nothing had been said up until that point which changed the purport of my remarks. As a matter of fact, if the truth be known, the Minister of Finance on that occasion nodded his head in agreement that this was to be the case. I do not know what transpired between the time I spoke on Thursday afternoon and the time the minister introduced this bill on Friday afternoon. However, there was an indication from the minister, as recorded at page 2,233 of Hansard that he would be seeking authority for an order in council, under section 22 and I presume paragraph (d), to increase the maximum income permissible to the recipients of war veterans allowance.

As has been indicated by my colleague from Norfolk-Haldimand and by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), it would be very interesting to know just how high the ceiling is to be raised. After all, there is some confusion. I am satisfied there is confusion concerning precisely how the cost of living escalator will affect the war veterans allowance portion of the permissible income of the individual, taking into account the escalator attached to the guaranteed income supplement, the road along which the minister is directed to travel and in respect of which he has no choice. This has always been a very burning question. I am more than amazed at the attitude within the department and the War Veterans Allowance Board that this is the way he should go; that is, when we come to an income support measure based upon war service the veteran shall avail himself of the general civilian provisions before he can choose to receive benefits under the war veterans allowance. I find this is an extraordinary position to have taken and certainly, if I were in a position at any time to do so, I would want to see a thorough revision of that position.

In the presentation of the budget and the budget documents, which I have in my hands, as well as in the comments on television and in the press, a great deal was made regarding the separation of the cost of living escalator clause from the guaranteed income supplement. Immediately people started calculating on a 3.6 per cent formula. I say that the 3.6 per cent formula is a fraud because that is not the true increase in the cost of living over the previous year. The formula should take into account the number of points of increase in the consumer price index because, as I said in my remarks on the budget speech, 3.6 per cent of the base of 100 is merely 3.6 points, but 3.6 per cent of 130 is actually 4.8 points. There is a world of difference. On the same basis, if the increase curve on the consumer price index were to go up at the same rate each year, the government, whatever party may be in power, could pat itself on the back and quote percentile figures showing that in actual fact the cost of living index was going down when that would not be the truth. This has been the basis of the increases in the cost of living formula for all the pensions, both civilian and veteran. I say it is a hoax to that extent. Of course, in principle it is an acceptable step forward, as we again indicated the other day, but a remarkable reversal of the attitude of the government and of all the ministers involved from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) down as indicated by their votes on those particular proposals put forward by the opposition. But now that we are on the road to an election, all these goodies come floating down.

The guaranteed income supplement increase is not $15, it is $12.12. There was a blur between the cost of living escalator and the increase in the guaranteed income supplement. Separate paragraphs were used, but everywhere it stated very carefully that the combined increase in OAS-GIS shall be $15. Therefore, instead of getting an extra $30 in GIS with a cost of living escalator provision attached, the increase in GIS for the war veteran should be $24.24 per couple, with the cost of living index making up the difference to $30. So, let us be clear once and for all what that increase is.

I shall not take the House through the complicated calculations put on the record by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but few if any recipients of the war veterans allowance get the full allowance. It is not possible because of the combination of old age security and the guaranteed income supplement. What is remarkable is that in the case of a recipient of the war veterans allowance, if his wife is five years younger than he is, has been working for five years and then retires, she gets a small payment under the Canada Pension Plan to which she contributed. This is actually a return to her of moneys which she paid in, not revenues. This payment is chargeable as income to the recipient of war veterans allowance. His wife's Canada Pension Plan payment is not income and should not be considered as income.

In the same way, if a war veteran's wife who had been a schoolteacher or a nurse in previous years had had enough foresight to buy an annuity, albeit a small one, whether a Dominion of Canada annuity or an annuity with an insurance company, when payments from it are received by either the recipient of a GIS or war veteran's allowance they are charged as income. Even though there is a difference in allocation, these payments are charged money in the hands of the wife belonging to the couple and disentitling the husband to a war veteran's allowance. I find that terribly unjust in those particular cases.

I know that sections of the War Veterans Allowance Act impose a means test, and I believe that if the Minister of Finance and his colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs really had the interest of the war veteran at heart they would have done something with section 6 of that act. Section 6 defines exempt income, and it should include a provision covering these cases. What is even worse is that section 8 of the act, which establishes values of personal property in excess of $1,250 where the veteran and his spouse own personal property of value in excess of $2,500, is ignored. There is also the requirement that property shall not exceed $10,000 in value. That is based upon 1965 values, Mr. Speaker, when the cost of living index stood at 107.4. The cost of living index in April, 1972, stood at 138.2, an increase of 30.8 points, or some 27 per cent. Yet those figures still remain on the statute book and constitute a bar.

I hope the minister will make a reply to the points that we have raised from this side of the House. Certain hesitant steps have been taken, but now that the act is open for review we should tackle elimination of the ridiculous rule of residence in Canada for one year prior to qualification. I invite the minister between now and election day, when he must vacate office, to acquaint himself with the situation of people qualified for war veterans allowance and who live in the United Kingdom or elsewhere outside of Canada. The representations on this point must make up a file a foot high.

I have tried to persuade the minister's predecessors on this point, but all the time we get the same assertion to the effect that there are administrative difficulties involved. That is utter nonsense, Mr. Speaker. Where there is a will there is a way, but unfortunately the government has not shown a will to deal with this matter. The Canadian Veterans Association of the United Kingdom, Colonel Victor Jones, and many others have presented brief after brief on this point. But the point is not being dealt with in this bill. There are great gaps in the amendments which are being presented. As I say, some hesitant steps are being taken. This would be a welcome opportunity to make the necessary changes.

The bill need not be limited to the budgetary proposals of the Minister of Finance. I certainly hope we can get some satisfactory answers from the minister to the representations made by hon. members in this debate. I also hope that the legislation will not remain long in committee because, as has been pointed out, there is no automatic $15 or $30 being added to cheques in this case. Individual calculations must be made. If the officials take as long to make these calculations as they do to make public service superannuation calculations, many a veteran will have passed on to his reward before he gets an increased cheque. However, I commend the legislation to hon. members, notwithstanding the many gaps in it.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I feel it is my duty to seize the opportunity afforded by the consideration of Bill C-208 to make known my views concerning the situation in which veterans are placed at present.

This bill provides for a much-needed and long-awaited increase in allowances. I have strong reservations, however, as to the final result of such measure.

Obviously, wide propaganda is going to be given to the implementation of this bill. This is nothing new, as the propoganda given to government measures is always wide enough to demonstrate the advantages of measures taken at several levels—whether they are provincial or federal measures, they are always given enough propaganda so that people expect something extraordinary.

At present, for instance, a number of rural Canadians are led to believe that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation assumes a good share of the rents of urban dwellers, who can easily benefit from the advantages offered by this organization, while in fact the contrary is true, since the number of families in this country which receive those allowances designed to assist them in paying their rents is minimal compared with the number of those who have to pay a fairly high rent to that same organization.

If we go back a few years, in the field of agriculture, for instance, because of wide propaganda given to settlers, to all the people who were new to agriculture, veteran farmers used to believe that they were being forsaken and that settlers had a much easier life since they could obtain grants right, left and center whenever they applied for them. That was a most erroneous concept of the life of settlers, since there was no relation whatsoever between the allowances they actually received and those which had been promised to them on the eve of an election.

In other words, governments promise a lot and give very little in relation to existing needs and to efforts made.

Today, Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes an increase of 3½ per cent, and this is just fantastic. It is one step forward. It is better than nothing. In my opinion, it is time, now more than ever, to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister who is at present piloting this bill.

However, since I have known for many years the veterans who live in the Portneuf riding, which I am pleased to represent, I can say that the measure before us does not fully meet their present needs. And if we refer to the increase in the cost of living, to the dollar devaluation, we can see that the new benefits fall far from the real needs of veterans, their widows or their children.

Mr. Speaker, I shall indulge, at this stage, and for my colleagues' information, in reading the exchange of correspondence about one case. This is a letter which was addressed to the former Minister of Veterans' Affairs (Mr. Dubé) on January 26, 1971. I quote:

> The above-mentioned person, who is a veteran's widow, has let me know that she receives only $145 per month, as a pension.
> Considering that this lady is paralyzed in one arm, and should therefore get a maid's help;
> Considering that her bad health requires expensive drugs;
> Considering that the pension of Pierre Laporte's widow was established in relation to the cost of living, would you be so kind as to review the case of this Canadian woman, who suffers unfair hardships, if one considers the amount of goods and services that are offered in this country.
> Thank you for your kind co-operation.
> Sincerely yours

On April 16, I received the following answer:

Dear Mr. Godin:

My assistants having given me a report on the case of Mrs. Jane Doe from Ville Les Saules, I can now answer the letter you sent me on that matter.

Following your letter from January 26 last, a department official went to see Mrs. Doe to inquire about her situation and try to find a way of providing her with additional help under the existing legislation. At the time of that visit, the income of Mrs. Doe was made of benefits she receives under the Old Age Security Act and the War Veterans' Allowance Act; those benefits provided her with the maximum income authorized for a widow under the War Veterans' Allowance Act, namely $145 per month.

As the increase in maximum yearly allowances was approved by Parliament, the monthly income of Mrs. Doe is thus $16 higher.

On the faith of information obtained by the department official during his interview with Mrs. Doe, it seems that the coming into force of those income increases would greatly contribute to iron out your correspondent's financial difficulties.

During the interview, our representative has brought out all the possibilities of assistance available to Mrs. Doe, particularly from the Army Welfare Fund and similar organizations——such as the Saint-Vincent-de-Paul and other organizations.

On with the quotation:

Unfortunately, it seems that Mrs. Doe's needs did not come under the criteria established by the administrators of these organizations.

I thank you for your interest in the welfare of this veteran's widow and I sincerely regret that the only additional assistance available to her is that resulting from the recent amendments to the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

Yours truly,

Jean-Eudes Dubé

Mr. Speaker, I personally visited this lady who is 66 years old. She is the widow of a soldier and she lives in a hovel where she has to pay $250 a year for heat. She wants to move, as the song says, but she cannot afford to do so. Apart from the rent, she has to pay additional taxes for snow removal, garbage removal, etc. Being truly short of money, she has even closed the switch on her hot water tank because, she says, "in this way, I save $2.50 per month".

This lady also tells me: I do not understand why the minister can do nothing to help me, and I do not understand why I should be content with $161 a month when Mrs. Laporte is receiving $16,000 a year. I know that Mr. Laporte died while on duty; my husband also died while in the service. Why is there such a big difference between my pension and that of Mrs. Laporte?

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that Mrs. Laporte needs $16,000 a year. But, truly, I remain puzzled faced with the analysis made of the two cases. As Mr. Laporte was a provincial minister, Mrs. Laporte is a provincial widow who receives $16,000 a year from the federal government. In the case of the widow of a federal employee, the limit is $161 a month.

To my mind, this situation is not only ridiculous but it smacks of the federal government program, and specially that of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), which incites people to revolution. One cannot look at these two situations and remain cool over the whole thing, it is so revolting. It is revolting for the serviceman's widows who is ill-treated and it is revolting for all her relatives and friends.

Unfortunately, servicemen's widow are not the only ones who are deprived. We have the impression that the present situation is really wished for by the Prime Minister, who seems pleased to see people rising against each other, being jealous of one another.

Mr. Speaker, an increase in allowances for the eligible is fine. However, I would not want to let go unnoticed the qualification method for these pensions.

The disability clause is the one that is most confusing. The treatment inflicted on some veterans following certain tests they have to undergo in front of the physician of the department responsible for these allowances, is unbelievable.

As an illustration of what actually happens, I will read into the record a letter concerning an application made by a veteran. This letter was mailed on January 8, 1970 by the Canadian Pension Commission to a veteran of the Portneuf riding and I quote:

Dear Sir:

With reference to our former correspondence and to your letter received last December 29, I have to inform you that following the recent consideration of your case by the appeal board, the commission has decided that your eligibility for the benefits of the pension act in respect—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I hesitate to let the hon. member proceed with his comments in the way he presently does. I have to call his attention to the fact that the bill now before the House obviously purports to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act, but I do not think that the Chair could allow, at this moment, a general debate on all aspects of that legislation.

The bill now before us provides for an annual increase in pensions, based on the cost of living index, but I do not believe that the Chair can, on this basis, authorize the hon. member to deal with the allocation of pensions or with decisions of the Canadian Pension Commission.

The hon. member who spoke a while ago before the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) has shown a tendency to wander in the same field and when the Chair was about to intervene because he was speaking about Canadian veterans living in the United Kingdom, he reverted to the question now being debated. I would ask the hon. member for Portneuf even though he may wish the Chair to allow him to complete reading of this letter, to come back to the matter under consideration as soon as possible.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I see that you realize that this is the time if ever to discuss the fate of veterans. After all, if we do not discuss it today I wonder when we will be able to do so. However, not only will I comply with your request, but I will spare the House the first letter which I was reading and quote only the reply to it.

This letter was addressed to me by the Department of Veterans Affairs and followed on the correspondence already exchanged. It reads in part:

According to the information which I have just received, Mr. Smith is eligible under the Pension Act because of his hallux valgus with plantar calluses, an ailment which he suffered prior to his enlistment and which was aggravated in a proportion of two fifths during his service in the armed forces on a military operations theatre. The reports from the medical examination which he underwent last February indicate that the total disability caused by this ailment is estimated at 10 per cent while that which makes him eligible for a pension on the basis of a two fifths aggravation is 4 per cent. Therefore, Mr. Smith is not eligible for monthly pension payments, but under the act he has been granted compensation in the amount of—

I also have here a letter from the wife of a veteran who says that her husband has to stay in hospital twice a year. In 1964, his invalidity had been estimated at 25 per cent, and his pension was based on 5 per cent of that 25 per cent, which in fact entitles him to $21.90 a month. I do not find that exorbitant. Frankly, to grant 3.5 per cent of $21.90 is almost to make a laughing stock of the veterans.

Now, doctors do not all agree on diagnoses. This pensioner has pulmonary problems, but who knows when, the day or the hour, his problems started? In a letter his wife wrote me dated May 9, she states that their family doctor recommends that her husband take a one-year rest. But as he has a family, and obligations, he cannot affort to take it. He is 51 years old.

Whatever their age, the veterans should be looked after because, in my view, they probably deserve more than the afflicted in the concentration camps of the communist countries.

As His Excellency the Governor General stated in the Speech from the Throne, if our country is rich, there is no reason to force to work the veterans who are tired, worn out and sick, who have killed themselves with work. All the more so as there are enough healthy people looking for work to replace those who deserve a rest.

Mr. Speaker, considering this evidence and considering these victims, I am inclined to believe that certain doctors employed by the Canadian Pensions Commission have become dishonest. We are under the impression that these people must justify their position by doing everything they can to harm those who are discharged on account of illness or disability as a result of years devoted to the defence of our country and even of other countries.

In order to rate a serviceman below 5 per cent, Mr. Speaker, as we have seen in the letter signed by the minister, they go so far as to speak of 2/5 of 10 per cent.

When it comes to experience, we all know that the Canadian government, through the Canadian Armed Forces, leaves no stone unturned. They test aircraft, aircraft carriers, hydrofoils. We send our soldiers for a while in the Baffin Island area to find out how people can live there. Savings are never important; experiences are what matters. In my opinion it is therefore not normal that these loads fall on veterans who always have to tighten their belt.

Since there are a great many such cases I take the liberty of asking the minister to do his utmost and order an investigation into that matter. If some Canadian Pension Commission officers are not acting or working properly, they should be replaced as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, if some legislation provides for the protection of animals there should be one providing for the security of human beings, especially veterans and their families.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before recognizing the next hon. member it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter)—Fisheries—Atlantic Salmon—Suggested boycott of Danish goods; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton)—Regional Economic Expansion—Position of discussions with provinces on programs; the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Industry—Versatile Manufacturing Limited—Proposed expansion in United States rather than Canada—Discussions with company officials.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND OTHER ACTS

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT OF PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Laing that Bill C-208, to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, to provide for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, in replying to some questions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. May I bring to the minister's attention that another hon. member rose at the same time as he rose. Knowing that if the minister speaks at this time he will close debate, I think the Chair ought to recognize the other hon. member who rose. The hon. member for Algoma.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I believe some discussions are going on with a view to continuing debate on this bill through the private members' hour. I do not know whether the House leaders want to comment at this time or whether we shall hear comments on this subject at five o'clock. At any rate, I believe discussions to that effect are going on; perhaps we shall know at five o'clock what is to happen.

May I comment briefly on the bill before the House this afternoon, Bill C-208, which makes provision for a cost of living escalator clause to apply to the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Pension Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance Act and the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act. In one way it is unfortunate, perhaps, that this bill is being debated at this time or that it will be debated tonight, because the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs is holding its hearings on the reference from this House concerning prisoners of war. The National Prisoners of War Association will be presenting a brief, as will be the Dieppe Veterans and Prisoners of War Association. I hope that time for debate will be extended this afternoon, because some of us will be busy in that committee this evening and will only have an opportunity to speak this afternoon.

I believe that the principle set out in this bill, namely, applying a cost of living formula to veterans pensions and allowances in order to provide for annual increases, is one of the most important principles that we shall introduce in connection with any pension scheme. In the past, the 2 per cent escalation applied to the Canada Pension Plan and guaranteed income supplement; there has been no similar allowance or increase for our veterans. In the past they were granted a lump sum increase to offset the effects of inflation. This bill, therefore, will let veterans know exactly the increases that they are to get, because their allowances and pensions will increase as the cost of living increases. This increase is to apply not only to the basic pension itself but also to the attendant allowances, the clothing allowance, the dependent parent allowance, the exceptional incapacity allowance and other allowances which may be of benefit to the pensioner.

The minister made clear on Friday that he does not consider this increase as a lump sum increase for meeting the demands that the National Veterans Association has made to the department and to the government. Rather, this is to be an increase which will compensate for the effects of inflation. In other words, if our dollars because of inflation are to be cheaper, our veterans are to get more dollars.

The minister made it clear that the basic rate of the Canadian veterans pension is under careful study. I believe that the National Veterans Association made it clear that they want to see the basic rate increased to $4,550, which I believe is close to the basic, average labour wage paid in the federal civil service. I am sure that many hon. members who represent veterans will want to see the government moving as quickly as possible in that direction. I know that veterans associations have responded by pointing out that the increase which has been granted will only offset the effects of inflation, and that it is not like an actual lump sum increase which would bring pension benefits to levels that the associations feel are desirable.

The amount of veterans legislation that this parliament has dealt with, especially in the last year, is notable. Last year, under Bill C-203, changes were made which established the Pension Review Board; the Bureau of Pensions Advocates was established as an independent body. That bill also introduced exceptional incapacity allowances and special benefits for Hong Kong veterans as well as the benefit of a doubt provision. Also, there were increases last year in the war veterans allowance and veterans pensions of 15 per cent and 10 per cent respectively. I should like to add my words of support for this bill. I understand that approximately 200,000 veterans across this country will benefit from this bill. The minister has said that he wants this bill passed as soon as possible so that veterans will benefit as quickly as possible. To that I lend my support.

[Mr. Foster.]

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed in today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

On the order: Private members' public bills:

February 25, 1972—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-9, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (abolition of corporal punishment).—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is general agreement on the part of all members of this House to allow this bill to be withdrawn, inasmuch as its subject matter has finally become part of a government piece of legislation which is now before a committee of the House. That piece of legislation will return here soon for third reading and will be forwarded to the other place.

An hon. Member: It is back.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I hear that it is back. Its consideration is moving with despatch. I hope that its passage through this place and the other place will be speedy, in view of the recent sentence imposed by a judge in Hamilton. He ordered ten strokes of the lash to be given to a young man, thus proving that some judges have not got the message—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Be careful!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): —that this outmoded form of punishment is no deterrent and does not protect society. I would therefore move:

That the bill be withdrawn, its subject matter having been dealt with by way of government legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to thank the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) for having withdrawn his bill because, as he explained, the government has decided in its wisdom to include Bill C-2 in the amendments of the Criminal Code. The bill will be discussed in the House in the near future on second reading since the committee has considered it in detail and the report has been submitted.

Now, concerning the remark made by the hon. member following an article published in the Globe and Mail today about the sentence applied in the case of a 16 year old boy condemned to imprisonment and ten strokes of the lash—

Mr. Prud'homme: This is disgusting!

Mr. Béchard: —half of them to be given during the first 30 days and the other half 30 before he comes out. I understand the hon. member.

However, I am surprised to hear him say that some judges did not get the message because he must know that in this country justice is administered by judges and not at the executive level or by the government.

Anyway, I think that the hon. member is satisfied with the provisions of Bill C-2 which completely removes this form of punishment from the Criminal Code.

• (1700)

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify this, I might say that I hope the judiciary and other officials across the country will use judicial restraint because in a very short period of time the government bill will become law and, I hope, serve the country well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair cannot allow debate on the subject matter at this time. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and the seconder of the motion, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to withdraw the bill because the subject matter is contained in another bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill withdrawn.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved that Bill C-18, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make it perfectly clear that the first allegiance of a Canadian citizen is to Canada and the Canadian constitution and to confirm in our oath that Canada is a free and independent nation. The bill suggests that we have the following oath in our Canadian Citizenship Act:

> I, A.B., swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Canada and the Canadian Constitution, and that I will faithfully observe the laws of Canada and fulfil my duties as a Canadian citizen.
> So help me God.

In my opinion, the present oath is unsatisfactory. It reads as follows:

> I, A.B., swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second, her Heirs and Successors, according to law, and that I will faithfully observe the laws of Canada and fulfil my duties as a Canadian citizen.
> So help me God.

I say that the present oath is unsatisfactory because Her Majesty is the head of state of several commonwealth countries. If we swear true and faithful allegiance to her, it is difficult in logic to determine where our loyalty lies when the Canadian government disagrees with other commonwealth countries. I know that legally Her Majesty is Queen of Canada, but this is a legal fiction. It is very difficult to explain to the ordinary citizen how Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second in the right of Canada can vote against Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second in the right of the United Kingdom as she did in 1956 at the United Nations during the Suez crisis. The symbolic Her Majesty was voting against herself. She was taking two opposing and contradictory positions.

Of course, as I have already said, this is a legal fiction. It does not really happen that way. What really happens is that Canada votes against the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand or Singapore. Unfortunately, with the type of oath we have at present, many persons find it confusing to understand how they can swear allegiance to Her Majesty and still place their full loyalty with Canada. I submit that it is much more honest, clear and understandable that we pledge our allegiance to Canada and the Canadian constitution. If this is what people are doing, this is what they should say.

Many new Canadians have told me how disappointed they were with the present oath when they had to take it at the citizenship ceremonies. Many of these people had given up their countries of birth to come to Canada. Of all the countries in the world, they had chosen Canada to be their country and to pledge their allegiance to her. In the citizenship ceremonies, however, they were pledging their allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second, her heirs and successors. As I said before, this is confusing. It is not an honest type of oath. It does not reflect the reality that we want to see.

While I agree that in most cases commonwealth countries agree with each other, there are serious instances when they do not. I gave the example of Suez. There have also been disagreements over trade, Rhodesia, and South Africa. Possibly there will be further disagreements with the United Kingdom over other matters. There could be a disagreement with the common market provisions once they are in force.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You are denying the commonwealth.

Mr. Allmand: No, I am not. This is not a measure to abolish the monarchy in Canada, to withdraw from the commonwealth or to change our constitution in any way.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is a giant step toward it.

Mr. Allmand: The monarchy is part of our constitution. If we pledge allegiance to the Canadian constitution, we include the monarchy in that oath. The principal difference is one of emphasis. At the present time the emphasis is on Her Majesty, only one part of our constitution. Under my bill, the emphasis would be on Canada and the entire Canadian constitution, but not eliminating the monarchy.

I am of British origin and I have great respect for the British monarchy and British institutions. Having said that, I think Canadians should stress those things which make them Canadian and which unite them as Canadians.

In this respect, we should adopt symbols which can be accepted by most Canadians. According to our last census, only 23 per cent of Canadians are of English origin while the balance of the population is made up of native peoples and people from many other countries. I admit that there are many other matters which are more important than this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I have spoken on these other matters. As a matter of fact, I have many private bills dealing with them. However, I think that this subject is important enough for me to put forward my ideas, and to do something about it. As I say, this is not a high priority item with me but it is something which has vexed many of my constituents, it is something which vexes me; we have to take a stand on these things and this is what I am doing. I repeat, this is not a move directed against the monarchy or against British institutions. It is, emphatically, a measure for Canada, and I am proud to present this bill.

• (1710)

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I offer you a new pair of glasses because I must tell you that between the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and myself, there is a difference not only in appearance but also in respect of politics.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just 100 pounds.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, no!

I fully recognize the hon. member's right to put this bill forward, but I disagree violently with the content thereof. The very form of the bill is an anachronism. I call attention to the words:

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows—

And then Canada's citizens entirely disregard the Crown. What the hon. member has forgotten is that the Parliament of Canada consists of three elements—the Crown, the Senate and the House of Commons.

Mr. Allmand: I said that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member may have said so. But if, in his view, this is the oath that a new citizen should take, then he is saying that the oath a Member of the House of Commons should take should be changed into the form he now proposes.

Mr. Allmand: Yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then I say to him, such an oath would be an entire denial of our form of constitution, of our form of government. The hon. member cannot have it both ways. I do not know how often he may have assisted at citizenship ceremonies, but at least ten times a year at the invitation of the judge I go to Edmonton citizenship court at which new citizens of Canada take the oath, having first renounced their citizenship of some other country. At this point, may I say that the oath proposed by the hon. member is deficient in that it fails to denounce the country of citizenship of the person about to become a Canadian citizen. To that extent, I say the form is deficient.

[Mr. Allmand.]

Mr. Allmand: Nor does the present oath.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It does.

On the basis of years of experience at citizenship courts I will say this: I do not know why new Canadians in the Montreal area should be any different from those in Edmonton. I have seen great pride among the people taking their oaths of allegiance to the Queen of Canada. And it is the Queen of Canada who figures in the oath of allegiance taken by Canadian citizens—the Queen, not the constitution. Why bring such a bill forward? There is nothing that it improves.

I remember many years ago as a young man taking my oath as a member of Her Majesty's Canadian Forces. I swore an oath of faithful service to my Queen and to my country. There are millions in Canada who did so. It may be that some were not old enough at the time, and did not have that experience. But without denying other members an opportunity of speaking, I would say that the acceptance of the principle of this type of oath of allegiance at this time or in my lifetime would be a most retrograde step. It amounts to a salami-type of republicanism, hacking away here and nibbling away there. The hon. member may smile, but I ask him to go into my part of the country and try to justify this measure. Oh, there would be some people who would not find it repugnant. I do not deny it. But those who say they respect the constitution would not agree with them.

The constitution says the Queen is the head of state in this country and that she is the Queen of Canada. She is not the Queen of Britain, as the hon. member said, as far as Canada is concerned. The hon. member talked about the possibility of exacerbating difficulties which exist between Canada and Britain. My goodness, there have been difficulties all along. Ever since the British landed in North America there have been difficulties between the authorities of that country and the people of this country. Yet this did not lead to any diminution of the recognition of the Queen's position as head of state in this country. And to recognize Her Majesty on one hand as head of state, and then to swear an oath of allegiance to something quite separate is, to my mind, nonsense. Incidentally, half of this proposed oath of allegiance appears in the present oath. Take the phrase about faithfully observing the laws of the country. What is so great about that? The question is: to whom is the oath of allegiance sworn? Is it to the constitution, to something which can be amended, something which is not sacrosanct? This sort of thing would be quite unacceptable to me.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I heartily welcome the opportunity to express my views on the bill brought forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, not only as a Canadian, but also as the representative of the district of Rimouski, in Quebec, which is situated in one of Canada's most French areas. I am as proud of that title as I am to be a Canadian.

The purport of the bill is to provide that new Canadians, those who want to become citizens of our great country will henceforth, instead of swearing allegiance as they do now, to Her Majesty the Queen, her heirs and successors, swear allegiance to Canada and the Canadian constitution.

First of all, I shall say that I fully endorse the views of my colleague for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, who feels that this new oath of allegiance for those who want to become Canadian citizens, joining us in our endeavours for the progress of our great country, will make the people of Canada as a whole more aware of the importance of this oath.

The Queen of Canada is the head of the Commonwealth, as we all know. But now, when swearing allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen we are, in my opinion, performing a highly symbolical gesture, difficult to explain particularly to all groups of Canadians. Living in a democratic system, we know how important it is to be close to the people, to make them understand the reasons for our gestures and the meaning of our symbols, which are very rich and meaningful for us. However it is sometimes difficult, particularly at the level of the media, to go into a full explanation of these things. They are highly symbolical. Symbols, it is true, are very important and very meaningful. Speech itself, the very words we use at every moment of our lives, are mere symbols. We do not quite realize this from day to day because this is so much part of our environment and our everyday life.

We are surrounded by all sorts of symbols which are both important and useful. However, the Queen of Canada, who serves also as head of the Commonwealth, is the symbol of a great accomplishment in this world. As Canadians, we are members of this great family which we call the "Commonwealth of Nations", formerly know as the British Commonwealth. We must be proud of the part we have played in the creation of the Commonwealth, which, as the saying goes, may be considered something as a feat of strength but which also testifies to a sense of diplomacy, to the understanding of the mankind and to this ideal of unity and peace which we wish to see established in our country and elsewhere in the world.

The Commonwealth countries formed a union, thus setting an example for many other countries which would extend their power throughout the world through means other than the democratic ways we approve, which are based on respect, freedom in peace and free enterprise.

I do not want to take up too much time; I want other colleagues to have a chance of expressing their views on the subject. Asking to take an oath of allegiance to Canada does not prevent the Crown, as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said a while ago, from being an integral part of the Canadian constitution. We must insist on that Canadian identity which we want to preserve and encourage. Without wanting to identify with our American friends who achieved what is commonly known as the American "melting-pot", we, in Canada, go on considering this ideal of a country that is a very remarkable mosaic of people. This way, if we insist on Canadian identity in the oath of allegiance of new Canadians, they will realize that Canada wants to maintain its identity within the Commonwealth.

And I conclude my remarks by pointing out that as to the Quebec group to which we belong and where we are proud to live in spite of the difficulties which a minority has been creating lately, we want to maintain our own identity, as do all the other groups of the Canadian mosaic and every hon. member and every Canadian. Despite the admiration and interest that I feel for a neighbour and friend, I want to preserve my identity, like everyone else.

The same thing goes in my opinion for groups, races and peoples. It is natural for the French-speaking group of Quebec to cling to its identity as it is for our English-speaking friends and for other groups in Canada. But all together, in this immense and beautiful mosaic, we are going to continue pursuing our Canadian ideal, insisting on our Canadian identity in the diversity that we want to preserve and develop.

[English]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in general support of Bill C-18, presented by my colleague for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), but perhaps my reasons for supporting it are slightly different from the ones he advanced for presenting the bill. I would put my reasons in terms of the principle of respect for the law, which I believe is not adequately taken care of by the present oath. I would extend my comments to include not just the oath of allegiance required for citizenship, but the oath of allegiance required in all the contexts with which I am familiar.

This issue was raised centuries ago by the great philosopher Aristotle, in chapter 15 of book III of "The Politics," in this question:

> Is it more expendient to be ruled by the one best man, or by the best laws?

This question was not one that originated with Aristotle; the problem had been raised, and an answer given, by Plato, Plato coming out in favour of kingship rather than in favour of law. Aristotle tended to come to a conclusion rather in favour of the law, and I think it is worth looking at his argument for a moment. He said that personal rule may have the advantage of initiative but that the law has the advantage of impartiality; that in the human mind there must always be some element of passion, whereas the law is free from such possibility of perversion. Thus, the rule of law is better, and law must be supreme except where, because of its generality, it fails to deal adequately with the individual case. Even so, he went on, such individual matters are more properly decided by the whole people than by an individual man.

From the viewpoint of our present perspective, the issue is somewhat distorted by Aristotle's presentation. Perhaps he confuses the question as to who really is in control, whether it is a government, or a single person, or government by the whole people, with the question of justice according to law. At least today we would want to give a considerably more complex answer to the question than he gave at that time.

In our country today there is no question that, however we express the oath or our form of government, we are talking about constitutional monarchy, about a form of democracy in which it is the people who are really the sovereign, not a single person. At the same time, however, there is a very important question of symbolism involved. The question is whether the law is better symbolized by a person or by the law itself.

• (1730)

The answer to this question may be different in different circumstances. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) asserted that the present oath adequately takes care of this problem because it uses the phrase "according to law". I would remind the hon. member that the use of the phrase "according to the law" in the present oath does not, I believe, refer to obedience of the law by the people. It has limited application merely to the accession to the monarchy. I do not have before me the exact terminology, but I believe the wording is "true allegiance to Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, according to law". It is "heirs and successors, according to law" which are to be obeyed, and not the law itself. I would suggest that the phraseology of the present oath, therefore, does not do adequate justice to the symbolism of the law, which I would like to see included in our basic oath and in our basic constitutional documents.

This matter might not perhaps have seemed so important were it not for the fact that in recent months many people in Canada have clearly shown their misunderstanding of the question. An organization has circulated to many members of parliament a document dealing with continuance of the monarchy. In this it is exercising its democratic right and I support its right to do so. This organization, however, suggests that any member of parliament who would advocate abolition of the monarchy would be false to his oath of loyalty to the Queen.

Of course, we in this House realize that our basic allegiance is to the monarchy, according to law—and that if parliament should change the law, our allegiance to the monarchy would be changed. I am not here to advocate such a change, but I believe that in considering the form of the oath it is important to realize this fact, because the change, if it took place, would be the new law of Canada and part of our constitution. It is quite lawful for a member of parliament to advocate such a change, just as it would be to advocate any change which is not brought about by unlawful means.

This matter is also misunderstood by some of the leading press writers in the country. Thus we have a situation where an organization in our country attempting to influence members of parliament, and even part of the fourth estate, generally believes that if a member of parliament were to advocate abolition of the monarchy he would in some way be contravening his oath of allegiance. Consequently, we must reconsider the oath of allegiance and try to make it clearer.

I should like to add, along the same line, that we can hardly overstress today, even in the atmosphere that was present in the House earlier in the day, the necessity of obedience to the law and the great status which the law must have. The achievement of justice according to law is certainly not enough if one thinks only of law and not of justice. At the same time, we all realize, after many centuries of struggle, that justice cannot be achieved unless there is adherence to an impartial law which is passed, we hope, by impartial men in parliament and administered by impartial men in the judiciary. It must be a question of the law and not of men. In today's climate, when so many people challenge the law, it is extremely important for us to make clear in all our basic documents that it is the law above all to which we in this country give allegiance. This is the reason I find myself very much in sympathy with the bill proposed by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand).

Having said that, I would express two reservations. It seems to me somewhat ironic that the Canadian constitution to which the hon. member referred in his proposed oath of allegiance is still a document of the British Parliament and we do not have a Canadian constitution. We have something which we describe in that way, but we do not have a Canadian constitution that has been made fully our own.

I would be the last to suggest that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce does not realize this. He and I for some two years sat on the constitution committee. We travelled across the country and heard hundreds of witnesses on these questions. The hon. member is certainly as aware as I am of these questions. I merely point out that a situation wherein we do not have a Canadian constitution is one in which the use of that expression in an oath could lead to misunderstanding and to other problems.

In conclusion I would also suggest, with all due respect to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and his very considerable ability with language, that perhaps a poet might do better with this wording. I do not see why the oath has to be always three or four lines in length. I do not see why in a moment of solemnity while taking an oath to be a member of parliament or to be a citizen, a person should not be happy to swear a longer oath than the one proposed here.

I would hope that if the bill should pass in its present form it would be possible subsequently to amend the formula which is proposed therein. I would suggest to the mover that it might be beneficial during the committee stage on this bill, if we should reach that stage, to call witnesses to give their views in respect of the best formula, from the point of view of adequately expressing not only the symbolism of the law but the devotion our people have to their country and to what we hope will be a new constitution.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak for a long time on this subject but I have been warned that other members wish to contribute to the debate; therefore I shall limit my remarks. My colleague the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is a man whom I greatly admire. I admire him more almost every time he opens his mouth and I witness the effect of his good work. I cannot say strongly enough, however, that I disagree completely with his words this afternoon. I regret having to say that, but I must. It may be a question of difference in temperament, but I believe it is much more than that.

It seems to me that people have loyalty to people. They always have had loyalty to people and not to pieces of paper. This is a natural phenomenon for people. In our parliamentary system, all actions are taken in the name of the head of state. Why should that most intimate, personal commitment, the oath of allegiance, be an exception to this rule? It is a fact that Her Majesty, and at other times His Majesty is part of the Canadian constitution. The Queen is far warmer, lovelier, more lively and therefore instinctively more worthy of allegiance than all the dry pieces of paper and legal judgments that many more learned and possibly more honourable friends could split hairs over until the end of time.

If Her Majesty is part of the constitution, surely it is sophistry to propose that we swear allegiance to all the dead or non-human parts of that same constitution and not the living part which is the monarch herself. I suggest the monarch is the keystone of the constitutional arch, as our Queen is the keystone in the arch of Parliament as well. Remove her and you remove the human symbols of all for which we are striving. And for what result? Just for the record, and to hearten myself and other people who feel as I do, I would like to quote two items and point out that this is an academic debate, thank God, and nothing more. First, we will talk out this bill and forget about it.

Second, so far as the government is concerned, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that the monarchy will last as long as this government lasts. Presumably he means by that, any government that he heads. He also said that the government's position was made quite clear in a white paper which was submitted to the constitutional conference in 1968 and again in 1969. He declared that the new constitution of Canada, if we were to have one, would be a monarchy and the head of state would be the Queen or the King. So the government has been on record for more than two years as taking this position. So long as we have a monarch, the keystone of the constitution, it is to the monarch that we shall swear allegiance and to no one or nothing else.

There is a human aspect to this question that cannot be ignored. All parts of Canada have been a kingdom since white men landed here in the sixteenth century. There were parts of Canada that were kingdoms among the Indians also, because they did not all elect chiefs or councils. Thus, the majority of Canadians have always sworn allegiance either to the crowned head of France or the crowned head of Great Britain or the crowned head of Canada. This is the one true, continuous Canadian fact of identity for over 400 years. Those of us who have kept up on the subject of Canadian identity should meditate on that fact. We have had all sorts of other things: we have had responsible government, we have built railroads, we have put satellites up in the sky, we have brought in old age pensions, we have tried to make life easier, we have fought with people in various parts of the world, we have had good times and bad times; but the one thing we have had continously for over 400 years is a crowned head to whom we Canadians swear allegiance.

If we are looking for a Canadian identity then, the first thing to do is spotlight our continued allegiance to the Crown. I would suggest throwing away a lot of other things before we throw away that. This is part of our flesh and blood.

Mr. Prud'homme: Yours.

Mr. Osler: Do not say "Yours," my friend. You have had a monarchy in Canada for longer than I have, because your people have been here longer than mine. A great deal of good blood is flowing in our present monarch which happens to be blood which came from France in the first place. We have all come from the same place and we have the same traditions, so do not say that it is mine, not yours. We are also all going to the same place in the end.

Mr. Allmand: I don't know about that.

Mr. Osler: There may be different annexes, but it will be the same place. For a Canadian to swear allegiance to the Canadian constitution would be an unnatural act and flying in the face of our history and traditions. I suggest that the monarchy is a very simple fact of life which can be explained to any new Canadian who does not understand it. It can be explained far more easily than to tell them that we find a pressing urge to change our whole way of life and our structure of being.

It is no accident that the most stable, most politically mature nations of this world are almost all constitutional monarchies. Those who speak French in our country have a great deal for which to be thankful. One of the things for which they should be thankful is that, because they have lived continuously under a monarchy, they have missed all the convulsions, bloodshed and terrible things that have occurred in their mother country since France ditched the monarchy instead of making it more pliant and suitable to modern times. So they have no relationship whatever to republicanism. By being Canadian, they escaped that black period of time through which their mother country went. Others have come to Canada from countries with absolute monarchies. It should not be too difficult for them to see that our monarchy is not an absolute monarchy and that their prejudices and fears are groundless here.

Do we want deliberately and unnecessarily to reject our own nature as a nation and to join the ranks of the constitution worshippers, almost all of whom have at some time in the relatively recent past got into serious trouble? There is nothing much wrong with Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Holland or Belgium—constitutional monarchies all. Most of the happiest and most progressive countries are constitutional monarchies.

We will not solve our problems by throwing out our monarchy or by swearing allegiance to some empty piece of paper. People with a lot of happy experience, relatively speaking, compared with many other countries of the world have found that to stick with the monarchy is a pretty good thing.

I will be accused of sentimentality concerning this subject. This I deny. I will own, however, to strong sentiment, which is quite different from sentimentality. I have strong sentiment where our oath of allegiance is concerned, for personal relationships of one human being toward another are the sole phenomena that give significance to this spinning hunk of rock in space that we all inhabit.

You can keep your dusty piece of paper and do with it what you like, Mr. Speaker, but as for me I will keep on swearing my allegiance to the Canadian Crown.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I find myself compelled to offer a few remarks in connection with this bill. I begin by saying that I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member who has just spoken. I do vary, however, from his approach to the matter because he said I believe—I hope I am quoting him accurately—that his approach was not sentimental. I am willing to acknowledge that my approach to the matter is sentimental, but I give anybody the right not to agree totally with me unless it happens to suit him and he has the same feeling.

I would point out that in taking an oath of allegiance we are really swearing allegiance to a person, but in this case that person happens to symbolize something. In the case of a Canadian who swears the oath of allegiance to the Queen, as we all have, he does so because she stands for the Parliament of Canada; she is part of the Parliament of Canada which consists of the Queen, the Senate and the House of Commons. We swear the oath of allegiance to her as a living person, one who symbolizes the things for which I believe we all stand.

Those who fought in two world wars and who have contributed tremendously to the development of our country swore an oath of allegiance to the Queen because she symbolizes the love of liberty; she symbolizes those things for which people from all over this great country of ours were willing to risk their lives. Personally, I think she is a great woman, a great person, and I love her. I am fond of her and I have no hesitation in saying that. But I do not necessarily try to inflict that feeling on other members of the House if they do not have it. However, what I do say is that you cannot swear allegiance to a constitution, to a piece of paper. There is nothing to a piece of paper; it is just something you can scribble on and throw into a waste paper basket. The explanatory note to this bill reads:

• (1750)

Under the present oath of allegiance the applicant for citizenship swears allegiance to Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors. This bill would make the oath more meaningful—

I do not agree that it would make the oath more meaningful. Whoever wrote those words should never have done so. It does not make the oath more meaningful to swear to the constitution, a piece of paper. That, to me, is ridiculous. The hon. member talked about what we should do by lawful means. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing more precious to people than what we call justice. There is no justice as great in the world, in my estimation, as British justice. Anybody who knows anything agrees with that.

Because she happens to be Queen of Great Britain does not necessarily mean that she cannot be Queen of Canada. I think it is a very fine thing that we have such a wonderful person to symbolize our great country. Mr. Speaker, the Queen is the symbol of something with which we can all agree. We in this House have our differences and argue our points back and forth. But the minute we get outside this chamber, and even in it, the thing we all agree on is the symbol of the Queen. There is no difference between us so far as the Queen is concerned. We are all for the Queen because she stands for something. Like the old saying, unless you stand for something you fall for anything. That could be so.

In my opinion it is a great thing to have a person whom we all agree is a wonderful symbol of a wonderful institution and that, of course, is Canada in our case. It may be Britain in the case of people who live there, but that does not make it any less attractive, potent, desirable and precious for the people of Canada.

It would be a terrible thing if this bill were to pass. In the first place, it would not be fair to the people of Canada because no change of this nature should be made without at least a vote of two-thirds of the members of this House or of the people of Canada: it is too serious a matter. People stand up here day after day and talk about the greatness of our country. We have gone along for 100 years with this oath of allegiance and apparently we all agree we have done pretty well, that we have made great progress as a country. Now some people want to change this. I am always in favour of change provided the change brings about improvement. That is the acid test of the desirability of change, to bring about improvement. The change suggested in this bill would be a tragedy; it would be no improvement and it would be a terrible thing to do.

So I say that for sentimental reasons, if you like, but also because she is a part of the Parliament of Canada, no Canadian need be ashamed to take the oath of allegiance to the Queen. So far as I am concerned, I am very proud of it. But even if you are not and do not have the kind of feeling that I have, you still can feel that with this oath of allegiance our country has done pretty well. We have lasted over 100 years and have made great progress. Those who contributed to our heritage and fought the battles of this country took the present oath. They were glad to take it. There were no complaints from those gentlemen when they risked their lives for this country. They did not question the kind of oath they took. They did not ask to take an oath to the constitution.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, this change would be a terrible mistake. I cannot express myself in strong enough language. And hon. members cannot even agree on the language; they are already fighting about the language. The hon. member who proposed the bill put in certain language and another hon. member who supported the bill said that that language should be changed. Before they even get it through the House they have started to fight about the language. The whole situation is ridiculous. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to vote against the bill if I get the opportunity.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-18 would change the oath of allegiance essentially by eliminating the reference to the monarch and substituting therefor "allegiance to Canada and the Canadian constitution". Most hon. members who have spoken on this bill during the last hour—and there have been quite a number of short speeches—have said that we are a constitutional monarchy. Certainly this party and this government have no mandate from the people to accept anything except our position as a constitutional monarchy, and this has been affirmed and reaffirmed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when the question has been put to him on numerous occasions.

I doubt very much that, in the circumstances, this party or this government would want to adopt a policy of eliminating the reference to the Queen from the oath of allegiance. I feel very strongly, as hon. members on both sides have said, that the Queen holds a special place in the hearts of Canadians and that the oath of allegiance has real meaning to us. We swear to that oath and it has real meaning to new Canadians who take it. I do not believe that new Canadians coming to this country and learning a little about our history, as they must before they go to the citizenship court, feel anything but pride in taking part in a ceremony in which Canadians have taken part over the years. I think that in fact it gives them special pride in their country and in joining hands with Canadians who have taken this oath in the past.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—ALLEGED STATEMENTS REFLECTING ON JUDGES—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we call it six o'clock perhaps hon. members would allow the Chair to make a brief ruling in reference to a matter which was raised earlier today in the House.

Earlier today the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 17, gave notice of his intention to rise on a question of privilege at the opening of our sitting. In his notice the hon. member indicated that he intended to refer to a motion proposed yesterday by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) under Standing Order 43. The hon. member for York South suggested that the words used by the right hon. member were in breach of parliamentary privilege. On this basis the hon. member proposed the following motion:

That the false charges made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, as recorded on page 2243 of Hansard for Monday, May 15, 1972, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration and report.

The Chair is required to determine whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. If a ruling were made in the affirmative, the hon. member's motion could be put and debated and the House itself would determine whether the matter should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration and Report. The suggestion made by the hon. member for York South is, therefore, that the words spoken in the House by the right hon. member for Prince Albert found a prima facie case of privilege.

When the matter was first raised in the House this afternoon, and indeed when the motion was proposed to the House by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) yesterday, the Chair expressed its reluctance at finding that the statements or conduct of hon. members should be referred to a committee for scrutiny. This is a feeling which I am sure is shared by all hon. members. It is certainly a view which is based on long-standing tradition in this House. I am advised that the last instance when a specific charge made by one member against another was accepted by the Chair for consideration as a question of privilege goes back to the year 1924. On that occasion, and on the few other occasions prior to 1924 when such a question went before a committee of the House, the charge against the member had reference to alleged wrongdoing.

The procedural position was explained clearly by Mr. Speaker Michener in a ruling dated June 1959, and reported at page 582 of the Journals of the House of Commons for that year. The then Speaker ruled that a charge in specific terms had to be made before a prima facie case of privilege could be found. The motion proposed by the hon. member for York South does not meet this test. His motion takes issue with what the hon. member calls the false charges made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. The assertion made by the hon. member for York South cannot be construed, in my estimation, as being a specific charge as set forth from the Chair on many previous occasions and in particular by Mr. Speaker Michener in the ruling to which I have just referred.

We are dealing here essentially with a matter of debate. I take the liberty to repeat the suggestion made yesterday that this is essentially a matter of debate. I feel that hon. members were suggesting a more acceptable procedure when they themselves suggested yesterday that the matter might be the subject of a debate under another Standing Order or procedure. If there continues to be a disposition by hon. members to debate this question, I assume that by agreement simple arrangements can be made to achieve this purpose.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

• (2010)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND OTHER ACTS

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT OF PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Laing that Bill C-208, to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, to provide for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to speak on this bill. I am not always complimentary toward the government, but in this case it must be handed a bouquet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bigg: After long delays, a non-partisan approach in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and many years of co-operative planning, speaking and working, we seem to be making a major breakthrough in veterans affairs. I think everyone in Canada, particularly the veterans, knows that the veterans affairs committee is non-partisan.

There have been remarkable contributions from all sides of the House. A good example was the very gracious way in which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) gave our party full credit for giving him the well earned priority of being the first to speak on this bill. He is a senior member of this House and for many years has been a champion of veterans affairs. This kind of co-operation is very satisfying.

I am by no means a senior member of this House, but in the 14 years I have been here I have taken a very keen interest in veterans affairs. The government is to be commended for its recent changes, particularly with regard to the Hong Kong veterans and Bill C-208 which is another great step forward. I agree that our veterans should not have to come cap in hand and beg the Canadian public, through this institution, for the basic income they so richly deserve. I am not going to waste too much time talking about that.

The bill is quite straightforward. It provides for a yearly reassessment of the problem of keeping up with the ever-spiralling cost of living. I am in complete agreement with this principle. As the minister pointed out at page 2233 of Hansard for May 12, in the past there never has been any clear principle enunciated on which to base our pension rates.

In spite of the bouquets I have just handed out, there is still one large hurdle to overcome. This or another parliament in the near future must decide on what kind of yardstick or benchmark the people of Canada wish to base the basic pension. I hope I am not straying too far from the bill. The basis of this bill is to give our pensioners the right deal and this is what prompts me to make these few remarks.

I understand, from representations made by veterans groups and departmental spokesmen, that in the past we have tried to base the general pension on the same level as the wage of an unskilled worker in the federal public service. I have no quarrel with that, because the public purse is not bottomless. However, that should not be the lowest benchmark. From looking at the present pay scales in the public service it is obvious that the basic pension rate has not been maintained at that level. I do not think it is a princely sum. It certainly should not be less than the average rate of pay for an unskilled worker in the public service. I do not know why that principle was not included in this bill.

I do not think it is too difficult to establish a rate. There has been unanimous approval by the members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, at least in the meetings which I have attended over the years. I have heard no objection from the press or the veterans organizations. I understand they would be very happy with this basic rate. It seems fair and equitable and would not put an undue strain on the Canadian public. After all, this is one of the richest nations on earth, per capita. Our potential is such that we can well afford to give this basic rate to our veterans who risked life and limb for Canada.

I am pleased to note that section 70 of the Pension Act, the benefit of the doubt rule, is being put into effect. I wish to refer to one outstanding case. This is not criticism; it is commendation for the way in which the pension commission, the pension advocates in particular, have done their job. I will not mention her name, but the woman involved is very grateful. She has been awarded a widow's pension which has been backdated three years. The pension commission, the doctors and everyone else involved reached the conclusion that her husband's death came about partly as a result of his war service but he had not applied for a pension soon enough.

Earlier attempts had been unsuccessful, but the case was reopened under section 70 and the widow was awarded a pension backdated three years. This, of course, will last her to the end of her days. I am personally familiar with this case. The award will relieve her of the necessity of living with her in-laws; it will enable her to pay hospital bills, and so on, which had accumulated over the years.

This is an example of what can be done by everyone getting together and giving a worthy Canadian citizen her rights in acknowledgement of many years during which she and her husband suffered in the interests of their country. This is section 70 brought up to date and working well. I wish to commend the pension commission, the authorities in the department and everybody involved for demonstrating that the will of parliament can still make itself felt and that even after many years we can show a sense of fairness to those who have served Canada so well.

I have already given credit for the changing of the position of the Hong Kong prisoners of war. I am one who has always felt that the laws of Canada should work equally for each and every one of us. I am therefore impressed by the logic of the argument that those who served in other theatres of war besides the Far East and who perhaps suffered equally or, in some cases, even more, should have their cases treated in the same way. Thus, when prisoners of war in other theatres come forward I know that our committee on veterans affairs will look very favourably on their presentation. They should certainly have the same opportunity to present their case, and I hope they will get exactly the same type of hearing.

One should remember, of course, that simply to award a blanket pension to Hong Kong veterans will not dispose of all their problems. The basic pension may not be adequate in all cases. Some of these men, who may not be satisfied with a 50 per cent pension, might wish to come forward and show that, for instance, they have aged prematurely as a result of their war service, or that a heart condition is related to their deprivations while in captivity. It would be difficult to prove that this is not the case, and we shall welcome veterans who wish to come forward to present such claims.

Mr. Speaker, I realize there are others who wish to take part in the debate. I thank the Chair for allowing me to stray from the mere monetary considerations of this bill and I thank the House for its attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say only a few words on Bill C-208 entilted "An Act to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allocance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act to provide for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder."

I will only state that for many years, under the previous administration and under the current administration, we have been requesting a better treatment for our veterans of both world wars.

We know that veterans did not obtain the attention they deserved from the government. And for many years one of our colleagues, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has been fighting to improve the plight of veterans and all those living on fixed pensions.

While the cost of living index rose sharply over the last few years these pensions remained stationary. Bill C-208 provides for the adjustment of pensions to the cost of living index on a retroactive basis to January 1, 1972. We heartily welcome this bill which, even though still imperfect, will nevertheless give special consideration to our veterans because all of us in this House have received representations from veterans complaining about their inadequate pensions which are not a privilege but a right.

War veterans were promised during the war that once they returned to Canada, they would never again know poverty depression and problems such as we had faced during the depression. But we were practically on the verge of such a crisis with the kind of pensions that these people were receiving.

I hope that these pension increases will substantially help our veterans and their families. Indeed, the bill makes provision for their children's education and for their widows.

Mr. Speaker, we believed that this legislation would be included in the program advocated for many years by the Social Crediters. All these bills relating to old age security, war veterans and needy mothers pensions and so on would have been integrated in a comprehensive program applicable to Canada as a whole with the consent of the provinces.

• (2030)

I can hardly see how a province could have objected to the implementation by the federal government of a comprehensive program whereby all Canadians, war veterans or otherwise, would have been treated equally.

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, we are happy that this bill has been introduced. As I said earlier, we have been asking, time and again that war veterans receive better pensions for themselves and their families, have easier access to property by helping them, for example, to build their own houses or acquire farm lands should they wish to settle on farms, in order to show them that we take into account the fact that they had entirely dedicated themselves to the defence of their country, Canada.

Therefore, we are quite glad that the government thought of the war veterans and their families. We support this increase in veterans' pensions.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to say a few words on this bill.

As I pointed out on the night the budget was brought down when reference was made to legislation designed to increase the old age security pensions and veterans allowances, the official opposition has been asking for an increase in old age pensions and veterans allowances for the past three years.

When I mention the official opposition, I think I would be unfair if I did not point out the efforts also made for the past three years by my colleagues the Créditiste members from Quebec when we asked for a substantial increase in old age security pensions so that the latter would reflect the increase in the cost of living.

As the hon. member who spoke before we was saying, our senior citizens were the pioneers, the people who built this country, who through their efforts, their energy and their labours built the society in which we now live.

I feel it is unfair for the government to choose a time when an election is forthcoming to say to senior citizens: We are at last thinking of you and we are granting you a substantial pension increase—very substantial indeed—$2.88 per month.

We also know that the system is going to create a degree of selectivity. This means that not all senior citizens are going to receive this monthly increase of $2.88, but only those which the establishment and public servants will select on the basis of criteria established through cabinet orders and regulations.

Mr. Speaker, obviously we support this increase in old age pensions and veterans' allowances. I would like, however, to take this opportunity to raise the veil on a conflict which exists at present between the federal government and that of the province of Quebec. Everybody knows that at the present time in Quebec we are going through extremely difficult circumstances that were not caused by the federal government. As a Quebecer, I cannot ignore the Premier's outcry against the federal government last Sunday, on television.

It has been claimed, Mr. Speaker, and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated it this afternoon that there was no conflict between Quebec and the federal government with respect to income security. In the meantime, an outstanding member of the Quebec Government, Mr. Castonguay, minister of Social Affairs, threatened to resign last week when he stated that the federal government, by bringing in its income security policy, had done wilful damage to the integrated security income plan that the Quebec government intended to implement. The right hon. Prime Minister, with his usual wisdom, tried to straighten out the situation. When at least three ministers of a Liberal government, on friendly terms with the present federal government, say they will resign because the Quebec policy was jeopardized by federal government action, I say there is a crisis, and this cannot be concealed by any statements made by the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro)—

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Asselin: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I should not like the hon. members to believe I am standing in the hon. member's way. Not at all. I understand very well what he means by saying that the federal government wanted to thwart the provincial government's action.

What I should like to know is whether the hon. member can tell us why the Quebec government did not introduce its integrated guaranteed income plan before Ottawa introduced a measure to increase old age security pensions. Why does the Quebec government always have to wait for Ottawa to take the first step, and then criticize instead of falling into step and entering into a dialogue with the federal government? I want to know if the hon. member is aware of that?

Mr. Asselin: I am aware of it, Mr. Speaker.

Of course, I shall reply to the question the hon. member has just asked me. If he is willing to re-examine the Victoria proposals, as well as the position taken by the province of Quebec on social security, he will realize that the exclusive spending power of the federal government without consultation with the provinces was questioned. The provinces also have spending powers and they are at the end of their tether.

If the Canadian Confederation does not allow continuous consultations with the provinces about the spending power, how can the provincial government, which is much closer to the ordinary people, implement programs likely to relate to the family or the individual? Of course, my colleague who interrupted me just now will be unable to say that I am wrong when I say that the problems having to do with the family, with the individual, and especially with the Quebec community, concern the Quebec government rather than the federal government.

I also say this to my colleague: the Victoria proposals should all be revised to prove to what extent the Quebec government wanted then to have the tools required to achieve its objectives with regard to families and individuals.

When the party on my left claims to be in favour of the family unit, of the fulfilment of the individual, of wealth and society, as integral parts of a community such as that of Quebec, I ask myself no questions.

[Mr. Asselin.]

So I say that the federal government has the right, by virtue of the constitution, to increase old age pensions. As the Quebec premier said recently, that province is not a province like to the others. For Quebecers, Mr. Speaker,—

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Asselin: I will come to that.

For Quebecers, the government which is closest to the people, better qualified for governing and pursuing their objectives, is indeed the Quebec government. For the English-speaking provinces, it makes no difference whether it is the federal or the provincial government as those people do not have—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I ask the hon. member to be honest in his statements. If there is a province that is willing to fight as much as Quebec to keep its jurisdiction, its rights, it is British Columbia, and there are others in Canada. In fact, each province wants as much freedom as it can get. At this point, I shall take the liberty of asking the hon. member another question.

When he says that the social question is a provincial jurisdiction, I agree wholeheartedly. But, what is stopping Quebec from applying its integral program, its guaranteed income program? What is stopping it from raising taxes? Instead of telling Ottawa: You raise the taxes and we shall spend them. Thus the people blame Ottawa for the taxes and commend Quebec for spending and increasing pensions.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I am taking note of my colleague's intervention. He would also like Quebec to continue to impose taxes, when people are already saturated with them.

An hon. Member: He knows it.

Mr. Asselin: Unless one applies a system which flies in the face of common sense, the Social credit system, we will never be able to manage it. I very much would like the hon. member to explain how such a system would work, either in Quebec or in Ottawa.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. Is the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Mather: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a very brief one. I want to remind my colleagues from la belle province that we are supposed to be discussing matters related to veterans pensions. Interesting as their crossfire about Quebec is, I would urge them to keep to the immediate point, namely pensions. There are other members who would like to speak on this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock has made a very good point. If there is any relevance in the remarks of the hon. member, it would have to be very broad and in reference to the whole social structure. I would invite the hon. member to be more specific in his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I was discussing the bill before the House and referring to recent statements of the Premier and the Minister of Social Affairs of Quebec.

What made me stray from the subject was the questions put by my friend, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). Of course, I tried to reply to the best of my ability. I say, however, that if he really has the interests of Quebecers at heart he should, I suggest, take into account the objectives of the Quebec government.

When that government stated that the increases of old age security pensions and veterans pensions have disrupted an integrated plan the government of Quebec intended to implement, all the Quebec members of this House—

Mr. Caouette: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Témiscamingue is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, we have before us Bill C-208, which is directly related to veterans. Actually, the statements of the Premier and the Minister of Social Affairs of Quebec were not related to the bill before us and did not even mention it. The bill on old age security pensions is not now before the House and I suggest the hon. member for Charlevoix—I bear him no ill feeling, far from it, he is a good friend of mine—should confine himself to the content of Bill C-208, purporting an increase of war veterans' pensions. When we get around to the old age security pension bill, I might then applaud the hon. member for Charlevoix.

Mr. Asselin: I made these remarks, Mr. Speaker, because my hon. colleague who just interrupted me forced me to do so. And as I am not the kind of man to backout I wanted to refute his arguments.

But I say, Mr. Speaker, that we definitely welcome the increase of the general pensions to elderly people as well as to veterans. And I repeat what I said earlier. If the government has moved, it is because we have been trying for three years to convince it that the people covered by Bill C-208 were not having an adequate income.

What I do not like is the fact that it waited till the eve of the general elections—

An hon. Member: You are so right.

Mr. Asselin: —to bring in a bill in order to get votes.

I say that our society has reached a higher maturity level than ever before. It is no longer possible to tell the electorate after distributing goodies on the eve of a federal election: "We shall grant an increase in such and such an area and get all the votes."

At this time, I wish to advise the government that, if they wanted to use this as an election bait, they are completely mistaken, for our people have changed more than they think. They have come of age politically: they can read and listen; now they are able to weigh, analyse and judge this government not on its election budget, but on its achievements during its four year mandate.

And since during that mandate, a great many people had to suffer considerably because of the unemployment situation, they will not readily disregard the fact that, regardless of these increased pensions to the aged and the veterans, this administration cannot redeem all its mistakes with an election budget.

In this perspective, I say that we are in favour of the increase but I am still warning the government that it is deluding itself if it thinks that all the social and economic errors made during four years will be forgotten and that, just before the federal election, the increase in pensions will have everybody thinking: "Even if the government was wrong during four years, it will still get our support.

I see in front of me one of the most important ministers, the hon. Minister for Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) and I want him to know that he is not really thinking about the veterans because they are receiving just before the election that might be held on July 17, a very meagre increase considering their services to the country for the safeguard of democracy and freedom, not only here in Canada, but also abroad.

The minister should not be deceived into thinking, Mr. Chairman, that such a low increase of the veterans pensions will incite them all to vote for a government that for four years forgot about their sufferings, their devotion and their efforts to save democracy.

[English]

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, with the customary brevity of my party, I believe I can express my ideas in about one minute. I wish to say three things. First, I want to thank hon. members who have spoken for having recognized the long-standing efforts of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in trying to improve the conditions, pensions and benefits of our veterans. Second, I want to welcome the proposal which the government has brought forward, which will at least bring veterans benefits into some sort of line with the ever increasing cost of living. If this is not done, they will suffer a continued reduction in their economic benefits. This measure might be likened to giving a person suffering from a ten-year old hangover two or three aspirins. But even that is a step in the right direction.

• (2050)

Third, and in conclusion, I urge all members of the House—this is not confined to my party by any means—to continue to press the government and the minister to recognize the need for raising the basic pension and other benefits which should go to the veterans of Canada and without which they will continue to suffer a reduction in their standard of living far below that to which they are entitled.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to say a few words about the increase in veterans allowances. It is a pleasure for me to speak on Bill C-208.

Through this bill, the government wants to increase pensions for veterans while keeping in mind the cost of living. We have been told by many veterans that the increase based on the cost of living does not amount to much. Therefore, veterans are not satisfied with their pensions.

As far as we are concerned, we wish to tell the government that we are pleased that they have been granted this increase due to the increased cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, we are greatly indebted to war veterans. We know what they did for society. We know what they went through, which other people did not experience.

At the same time, I would like to tell the government that other citizens who are not veterans also have equal rights. They are also entitled to our consideration, because I suppose those who died for society and left widows and children behind them should also be considered.

I would give veterans more consideration because they went to war, but we owe a great deal to those who remained in Canada and laid down their lives on the field of labour, those who died for their country and who did their utmost towards its development.

Mr. Speaker, if the increases granted to veterans are justified, we should not be asking ourselves why these pension increases are granted. We must grant them because the cost of living is going up. Why is it going up?

Mr. Speaker, why are we not in a position to administer through an adjustment of the cost of living, in order to prevent it from going up? When you let the cost of living go up, you do so for everybody.

The cost of living, Mr. Speaker, increases for everyone, not only for the veterans and the aged. Some people have no job; they live on welfare allowances and pensions of all kinds. They do not get enough because the cost of living increases and it does so because of them.

If we allocate increases to all these citizens, we shall contribute as well to push up the cost of living. If the cost of living goes up, we also raise taxes.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is a useless exercise. This economic uneasiness reveals to us that our economy goes on falling; it has no stability. It is completely out of kilter and the more we apply this ideological system, the more we apply our economic system, the more we unbalance our economy and the more it becomes difficult to live.

The increase that will be granted to old people and to veterans will be offset by the increase in the cost of living. This will leave them with almost nothing. It is almost useless to grant increases if we are not prepared to deal with the main causes of such an economic disorder.

I am for increases. I want people to have a better life, but I know that we are not dealing with the real problems, that the essential causes are deeper. That is where we should strike first. No one member is ready to take the necessary steps in order to eliminate the causes of the present economic disorder.

The increase in the cost of living should logically be followed by an increase in pensions and wages of all kinds. The situation is deteriorating and becoming ever more complicated.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

It is over this aspect, Mr. Speaker, that we should ponder. At the same time—one cannot ask him everything—I would ask the minister to examine the problem to find out whether there would be another means to curtail this increase in the cost of living. We must find a solution to this problem, we must reduce the cost of living. We have been looking for a solution for a long time.

Instead of raising pensions, we ought to lower the cost of living; this would simplify the situation and enable Canadians to enjoy an easier life.

When the unions ask for higher salaries, we could tell them: Instead of increasing salaries, we shall reduce prices; then you will no longer have any reason to ask for pay boosts.

If we reduce prices, we will leave more purchasing power in the hands of the citizens; our economy will be more viable. Exports will be facilitated because our prices will be lowered by as much.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should advise the House that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank all hon. members who have participated in this debate. I think that the nature, the aims and the objectives of the Department of Veterans Affairs are such that we can keep this kind of debate on a more non-partisan basis than might be the case in the discussion of legislation concerning any other department.

The Department of Veterans Affairs is truly a service department dedicated to the service of human beings who have served this country. I have been with the department long enough to have a great deal of confidence in the department itself and in those in charge of it who discharge their duties honourably and as fairly as they can within the confines of the resources granted them by the government.

I want to pay tribute to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Through the years it has conducted its business on a basis of anxiety to do the best it can without introducing political dispute. The kind of discussion that took place here tonight could have been participated in by members of parties on all sides of the House. Some of it went beyond the content of this bill, but that is understandable because the bill provided an avenue through which members of the House could express their wishes on behalf of the veterans.

I wish to deal with the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who has made a rather deep study of pensions, not only in Veterans Affairs but in other departments of government. He stressed that he was anxious that the increase in the cost of living provision should be no substitute for consideration of the increase in the basic rates of pensions and of war veterans allowances. I made that very clear. I have said before, and I say it in the House now, that when we are distributing some $229 million per year in veterans pensions, and some $79 million in war veterans allowances out of a total operating budget of about $15 billion, that does not frighten me and I do not think it frightens any member of parliament.

The hon. member also suggested that this might be a swan-song policy on the part of the department in the remaining short time that I shall be here. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the government will be magnanimous enough only to make it comfortable for me in the short time that I remain in the department. In any case, I think that the evil one does, just like the good, lives after one and I think that the influence of the legislation we are considering tonight will certainly be an abiding one on the government in the future.

The one concern I have at present is the backlog of cases. The hon. member suggested that there were 5,500 or 6,000. I have to bring him the bad news that as of tonight there are 7,700 cases. Because of the legislation that was introduced by my predecessor, avenues for appeal regarding pensions were opened to a great number of new people, and there has been a revival of a number of old applications made in the past. We are doing the best we can to hurry them along, to catch up with the backlog but at the same time not to disturb or depreciate the calibre of the decisions rendered.

Other hon. members have discussed the basic rates. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) took issue with the increase that we are allowing to take care of the cost of living index and said we were all wrong. The hon. member happens to be all wrong, and not us, because he was working from the assumption that the index was 100 per cent whereas the points are 130 and 135, and the increase in the cost of living last year was 4.7 per cent, an increase in points from 130 to 135, which works out to 3.6 per cent on the basis of 100.

I do not want to do any more arithmetic, Mr. Speaker, but we were given some arithmetic by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I do not want to suggest that socialist mathematics are accurate, and I do not want to provide any Liberal mathematics except to remind him that somewhere in the Bible that he knows so well where it says, "The liberal doeth liberal things."

I shall rest my case on some mathematics provided me by public servants. In the case that the hon. member cited I would tell him that on the new basis of a war veterans allowance, 100 per cent for a single person will be $180.36. I think that is not far from the computation he made. The ceiling rises from $161 to $165.36 and there is $15 exemption added to that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In other words, both are being added. That is good.

Mr. Laing: I might also assure him that the orders in council to which I referred have now been executed. I think I need say no more at the present time, Mr. Speaker, except that I appreciate the consideration which hon. members on all sides of the House have given this bill. I hope it moves along as quickly as possible. It is restricted to a very small section of the assistance towards veterans and in no way whatsoever impairs the right of this House, of members of the House or of the veterans' organizations themselves to continue to press us for an increase in the basic rates. As a matter of fact, we have received some representations on this already and my officers have done some work to give indicated costs to us of a variety of increases that might be made possible, of course always subject to the resources that the government has at the time. Again I thank hon. members who have participated in this debate.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to mention to the House the desirability of giving consent to deal with order No. 30, the report stage of Bill C-207. There are a number of report stage amendments attached to the notice paper. With consent, we might deal with those if they are in order. When we have dealt with them, then we can consider putting off further discussion of the report stage until the House has had an opportunity to look at report stage amendments which have been filed by the official opposition and which will appear on the notice paper tomorrow.

Further, if before ten o'clock we have reached the limit of our study of Bill C-207 for today, I would suggest to the House, as a matter of advance warning, that we consider dealing until ten o'clock with the report stage of Bill C-2. There are some committee amendments to that bill, and apparently there is unanimity. There have been no fresh amendments and it might be possible to deal with that bill this evening following whatever progress we make on Bill C-207.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the course proposed by the minister meets with our approval. We have no objection at all to giving consent wherever necessary to advance the discussion of Bill C-207 at the report stage, subject to the proviso to which the minister has referred and the caveat which I now file, that this consent is without prejudice to our right to deal with the amendments we have tabled today and which will be up for consideration tomorrow. I think we would be prepared to deal with this matter tomorrow to the extent that it is possible to do so, and we will give consent for that purpose. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, we are quite prepared to now deal with the amendments already before the House to the extent that the Chair wants to give them serious consideration.

• (2110)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we gladly concur in the proposal to proceed now with the report stage of Bill C-207, at least for the purpose of finding out whether the amendments that are on the notice paper are in order.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ESCALATION OF PENSIONS, RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS, INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-207, to amend the Old Age Security Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that there is agreement among hon. members that we might proceed at this time with the report stage of Bill C-207 and in particular, perhaps, consider motions Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 which are before the Chair and of which notice has been given.

I think I owe it to hon. members to indicate that in my view these four amendments are clearly out of order. In each case they involve a charge on the treasury. Unless hon. members wish to consider amendments which are not in order, I do not see how I can allow these motions to be put. I would be pleased to receive advice from hon. members. If hon. members want to give their opinions, I will consider them. The first one is as follows.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce) moved:

That Bill C-207, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be amended by inserting a comma after the word "who" in Clause 2 at line 23, page 1 and adding the following:

"has reached age 60.".

This is obviously, I think, a broad amendment, since it would force the Crown to incur additional expenditures. This type of motion, as everyone knows, requires the recommendation of His Excellency. If hon. members can convince me that my interpretation of this amendment is erroneous, I shall be happy to put it to the House, but it seems clear to me that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, we are somewhat amazed at the procedure used tonight in the absence of the sponsors of these amendments.

At all events, I share the views of the Chair as to the acceptability of the first amendment, which in the main tends to call the government's attention on the fact that it would be desirable to introduce an adjustment with respect to the age of eligibility to old age security pension.

In these circumstances, I perfectly agree that the ruling which the Chair has just given is in strict compliance with the Standing Orders and we accept it.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his eloquent words and his generosity in accepting the proposal of the Chair. What troubles me slightly is that the reservation I have just made with regard to motion No. 1 also applies to motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4; I wonder if the hon. member will be as enthusiastic in recognizing, in agreement with the Chair, that all those motions would entail additional expenditures on the part of the Crown. The hon. member may want to make certain remarks that would help the Chair express an opinion on motion No. 2 which reads as follows:

—That Bill C-207, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be amended by deleting the word "who" in Clause 2 at line 23, page 1 and substituting therefor the following:

"even if his age is lower than the provisions of the present Act if the spouse receives a monthly pension by virtue of the said Act.".

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) seems willing to express his views concerning the motion. Of course, this is merely concerning the procedural acceptability of this motion.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I have listened with great interest to your comments, the importance of which cannot be questioned, on motion No. 2 submitted by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise).

Mr. Speaker, I agree with you that this is expenditure. Indeed, the motion reads as follows:

"even if his age is lower than the provisions of the present Act if the spouse receives a monthly pension by virtue of the said Act.".—Mr. Laprise.

I agree that, literally, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of expenditure, and an exclusive prerogative of the government.

However, I maintain that a basic principle is involved, the very principle of the bill. The bill provides that an old age security pension will be paid to persons from age 65. We want to tell the government that we hope that it will adopt this view that, when a person is entitled to the old age pension under the regulations and the old age security act, his or her spouse, whatever that person's age, whatever that person's income be also entitled to the pension.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that you are right. It is a question of money, since it is a question of giving more money to these people who are not the same age as their spouse. But it remains that in our view that is a very secondary aspect, since it is not the question of money that is important but the question of principle.

For instance someone who has reached age 65, who gets the old age security pension while the spouse, 52 or 55 years old, is not receiving it cannot make both ends meet and this compels us to fight bitterly against the actual principle of the bill.

We intend to fight against this principle in order that the couple in need, when one spouse only receives the pension, may be able to draw it, whatever might be the spouse's age.

We hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will consider the spirit rather than the letter so that elderly people in Canada, even if they are married, are not penalized.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière is quite original in bringing in such an argument. He suggests that the Chair should consider only the principle, that is the motion's purpose, which is to provide advantages to a class of the population which he considers underprivileged. All hon. members will, I am sure, agree with the hon. member for Lotbinière and his colleague as to the principle. Unfortunately the Chair must sometimes go beyond priciples and abide by the Standing Order of the House, which clearly indicates, as the hon. member for Lotbinière agrees, and recognized when presenting his argument, that the Speaker must abide by the Standing Orders and by custom and tradition of our parliamentary institutions. I suggest that it clearly is not possible for an hon. member to present a bill or an amendment involving disbursements, unless such bill or amendment be accompanied by a recommendation of the Crown.

In this case, unless the hon. member can apprise me of a recommendation from His Excellency, I must rule that the amendment cannot be put. The hon. member of course knows as well as I do that the arguments he has just presented can be brought forward at the third reading stage. Hon. members for Lotbinière and Bellechasse, and their colleagues as well, will of course have the opportunity at that time to come back to the substantial arguments they have just submitted for the consideration of the Chair.

• (2120)

It is in blushing a little perhaps that I must say that my ruling concerning motions Nos. 1 and 2 applies, unfortunately, to motion No. 3 as well as to motion No. 4 which reads as follows:

That Bill C-207, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be amended (a) by deleting from Clause 3 the words "eighty dollars" at line 3, page 2 and substituting therefor the words "two hundred dollars" (b) by making consequential amendments to Clause 5.

I notice that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and perhaps members are ready to support the motion moved by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), who is trying to convince the Chair that this amendment is in order, and I will hear his argument.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like very much tonight to persuade the Chair to accept my amendment, because I think that the legislation as amended would better reflect pension reality.

When reference is made to pensions in this House, people think that this is not welfare. This is why I ask that it be a pension of $200 a month and not a pension of $100 and a welfare allowance of $100. These terms are always used. The public is going to be told that senior citizens have been granted a pension.

Actually, it is not a pension. This is why I suggest through my amendment that the pension be increased to $200 instead of $80 and that the words welfare assistance be deleted.

If you compute the amount of taxes used to pay this pension, and if you take into account the total number of older people, it can be estimated that these pensions and allowances will cost $150 a month for each senior citizen.

What else shall we do? We are supposed to give people $150; actually, we are cheating them because we are not really giving them $150. However, it costs more than $150 to send all these investigators to meddle with our senior citizens' affairs and create all sorts of trouble for them.

Our senior citizens deserve a pension and we must provide them with one and put an end to this situation where they must have recourse to social welfare.

Maybe some hon. members will again talk about the lack of money, as it was stated a moment ago. This goes beyond the scope of the act, for it will be necessary to spend more public funds. If the government will not make any change to its budget, let it provide for a new issue, through the Bank of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wish to indicate to the hon. member for Roberval that my objection to the motion was not related in any way to the Bank of Canada but rather to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms and to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

The hon. member understands that as well as I do and probably better than I do. I wish to remind him that the very interesting arguments he has just put forward could be very easily presented, I am sure, when the motion for third reading will be considered.

For the time being, I am deeply sorry to conclude that to conform to an old tradition, such a motion cannot, at the present time, be presented to the House.

Does the hon. member for Lotbinière wish to rise a point of order?

Mr. Fortin: No, Mr. Speaker, I thought we had skipped motion No. 3, unless I am absent-minded.

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest that the comments I have made in respect of motions Nos. 1 and 2 equally apply to motion No. 3. I do not want to be unfair to the hon. member for Lotbinière if he has any comments or special considerations to submit to the House. I have not the slightest doubt that my hon. friends would be happy to listen to his comments regarding motion No 3. I for one, would gladly do so.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your kind attention. I agree once more that it is a question of spending public funds, but here again, it is the principle that should prevail namely that on the one hand, you are right in applying the rules, but on the other hand, as you say so eloquently, all my colleagues are interested in helping our senior citizens. I wonder if the minister who is empowered to spend public funds could not sponsor the motions in question, provided there is unanimous consent, in order to solve the problem.

Mr. Speaker: I would remind the hon. member for Lotbinière that even if the minister should sponsor the motion before us, it would not be sufficient since it would require the approval of the Crown. This approval should appear in the order paper and, as I said, I have been through this document but could not anywhere find that His Excellency has made a recommendation regarding the expenses involved in motion No. 3.

There are still a few moments left before we come to the consideration of the other motions. The hon. member might get in touch with His Excellency to determine whether it is possible to obtain his consent in this regard.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I will certainly be in touch with His Excellency after the next election.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Is this just to pass the time?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): No it's precisely because we do not want to waste any time.

I have noticed the interest of the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) in our debates and I am positive, as are all hon. members, that had it not been for matters of procedure, all these amendments would have been accepted unanimously.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We must go on to the next item.

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to my hon. friends of the Social Credit party that we might ask the Bank of Canada to print new Standing Orders for the House.

Mr. Gauthier: It would certainly be better than if it were done by the present government.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Late notice has been given of three motions, Nos. 5, 6 and 7. The Chair has just read them and had a brief consultation. It may well be that some of these motions are not in order. I refer firstly to motion No. 5, standing in the name of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) which reads as follows:

That Bill C-207, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be amended by striking out the words "eighty dollars" at line 3, page 2 and substituting the words "ninety dollars".

To my mind, that motion is clearly out of order for the reasons I indicated a moment ago. It offends the royal recommendation which is on record, and I am sure the hon. member for Simcoe North would not want to do that.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) would not want to offend the recommendation of His Excellency. He is the last one who would want to do that. These motions were filed today. We listened with interest to what Your Honour said about the four motions filed by members of the Créditiste party. Our motions were filed earlier today and we thought they would not appear on the notice paper until tomorrow. We would not object to their being considered tomorrow. There are one or two, to my recollection, in connection with which I propose to raise strenuous argument.

As I say, I did not think we would be dealing with them until tomorrow and I do not have the amendments before me. I think, therefore, in line with the proposal made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), we might adjourn further proceedings on this bill until tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That having been said, we may consider that motion No. 5 is still under consideration. I doubt very much that I can change tomorrow the opinion which I have just expressed, even though the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) may advance strenuous argument. In fairness, however, I think it would be much better if we allowed these motions to stand until tomorrow so that the Chair and all hon. members may have a chance to study them more closely.

• (2130)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge the comments made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). It seems to me that we can make progress if we call order No. 3, the report stage of Bill C-2, an act to amend the Criminal Code.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1972

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT, NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT, PAROLE ACT AND VISITING FORCES ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the amendments that were adopted in committee will be found in Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, May 11. I rise on a point of order with respect to a technical error that appears in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). As I understand it, the amendment to clause 4 would strike out lines 4 to 13 inclusive on page 5, when the intention of those who accepted the amendment in committee was to strike out lines 4 to 19. This is simply a technical error.

If the House will permit me to make an amendment it will restore the intention in the reprinted bill so that all the lines that were intended to be struck out will be struck out, and not lines 4 to 13 as inadvertently mentioned in the amendment to clause 4. I realize that I require unanimous consent to make this technical amendment. It is not of substance. It was drawn to the attention of the minister by the legal officers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order to ask the minister whether page 5 of the reprint of the bill as amended and reported by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs conforms to the error that is in Votes and Proceedings of May 11 or whether it conforms to what was intended. After all, what would be before us at this point would not be in Votes and Proceedings but in the reprinted bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Maybe you cured your defect.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe our good friends the printers have corrected the committee's error.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the error does appear in the bill. As I understand it, it would be corrected if an amendment were accepted that Bill C-2 be amended by striking out lines 24 to 29 on page 5 thereof.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can our shirts be kept on for a minute?

Mr. Speaker: The House will enjoy a moment of silence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the moment is over. I have obtained the advice of top-flight legal counsel. I am informed that it was the understanding of the committee that what now appears as lines 24 to 29 on page 5 should not be there. Therefore we would give unanimous consent to making that amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I gather I am now permitted to move the amendment. I move:

That Bill C-2 be amended by striking out lines 24 to 29 on page 5 thereof.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Arthur Laing (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask one question on this point? Again, I have obtained legal advice. He is an NDP lawyer and will not send me a bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If we strike out lines 24 to 29 which are now identified as subclause (2) of clause 9, would it not then follow that the "(1)" that is in line 16 should also come out? Do we not end up with only one clause as clause 9? Does the minister see what I am driving at?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Unless there is someone here to tell us we are wrong, I suggest that the minister's amendment should include the elimination of "(1)" where it appears after "9" in line 16.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that makes sense to me. There does not seem any necessity for the "(1)" when there is only one. If we made an egregious error, the Senate can probably correct it.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Laing moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, would the parliamentary secretary be kind enough to enlighten the House as to the amendments? I do not know whether it is his intention to speak. We will be very brief and as far as we are concerned the bill will receive third reading. Does the parliamentary secretary intend to indicate the thrust of the amendments made in committee, for those members of the House who were not privileged to be there and participate in its flexible wisdom?

• (2140)

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was quickly called a while ago—considering the good intentions shown by the members lately.

An hon. Member: It is because it is a serious matter.

Mr. Béchard: I know and I thank the hon. members, if it is in order to pass this bill tonight, by having it go through the report stage and the third reading.

All the members who sat on the committee—distinguished members from both parties—certainly explained at their respective caucus recently the amendments that were brought forward, in some cases important amendments and in other cases minor ones.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) deals with clause 4 page 5 which was changed, as we have seen, as regards contempt of court in and outside the court. Here is what is mentioned in the bill as to punishment:

9. (1) Where a court, judge, justice or magistrate summarily convicts a person for contempt of court, whether committed in the face of the court or otherwise, and punishment is imposed in respect thereof, that person may appeal

(a) from the conviction, or

(b) against the punishment imposed.

Now in the existing legislation, as the bill has not gone through all stages yet, section 1 reads as follows:

9. (1) Where a court, judge, justice or magistrate summarily convicts—

(2) Where a court or judge summarily convicts a person for a contempt of court—

An amendment was moved following the submission of a very important brief by the Canadian Airline Pilots Association.

If my memory serves me right, because I did not have any time to refer to all my notes before coming to the House, the Airline Pilots Association was worried about the fact that the bill applied in particular to aircraft hijacking. However, we were told that there could be cases of hijacking on the ground by people who are not on board, but who, by telephone, may cause a lot of trouble, to an aircraft or to the pilot's family, who would be thus threatened by a person not on board.

A few other amendments were introduced. Of course, I should read the bill through, but I know that members of the official opposition, of the New Democratic Party, but none from the Social Credit Party because the latter never attended any meeting, agreed to these amendments wholeheartedly and unanimously.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute to all committee members whatever party they belong to for their contribution and cooperation and for the positive manner in which they approached the matter and handled the procedures during the debate on this bill.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we shall be able, I hope, to proceed with the third reading of the bill, which will enable the government, particulary with regard to air piracy, to ratify the Conventions of the Hague and Montreal, for we were told by the official from the Canadian Airline Pilots Association that nowadays the worst danger for pilots who have very heavy responsibilities is hijacking, which has become very common, not only in this country where it has happened a few times unfortunately, but in the whole world.

Several countries signed this agreement following a general and universal request and I believe we will be pioneers in this area since Canada will pass a legislation providing for the protection not only of pilots but also of the population that travels in those aircraft which are so huge that they could sometimes accommodate the whole population of a village in my constituency.

We are aware of the tremendous responsibilities of these pilots and this is why we are happy to see that members are eager to pass this bill.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I was not fortunate enough to be present during the committee meetings but I join the parliamentary secretary in saying that the members of the committee did a commendable job. I refer especially to the members of the Ralliement Créditiste who participated in the House. The parliamentary secretary mentioned two areas specifically—the right to appeal from contempt proceedings and the proposals relating to hijacking and air piracy.

The Criminal Code regarded as a whole constitutes a social contract whereby individuals give up a certain measure of individual freedom for the sake of society as a whole or, as Jeremy Bentham said, to produce the greatest good for the greatest number. Today, when we enter an age when it is becoming increasingly evident that many minority elements in society, not so much in Canada as in other parts of the world, are taking the position that violence may be used as a means of achieving social change, it is essential that the provisions of the Criminal Code be kept constantly under review: it is not good enough to let six or seven years go by without making amendments.

Anyone who has read the proceedings which took place in a court in Chicago when The Seven were tried must have been appalled by the conduct of the defendants and to some extent by the conduct of the presiding judge. To avoid this kind of thing, a remedy of appeal must be available in contempt cases. Let us not delude ourselves that it cannot happen here. It can. It is because of the need to preserve freedom and independence on the part of the judiciary to deal with violence as a means of revolutionary change that we must constantly review the needs of society as expressed in the Criminal Code, the social contract to which I have referred.

Air piracy is becoming in many parts of the world a means whereby changes are sought in the social structure through violence, intimidation and murder in line with certain particular views without worrying about the wishes of the rest of society, the majority of the people. We shall see a repetition of this conduct in all parts of the world and, I believe, to some extent in this country. I would therefore say it is essential that the contract providing for stability in society must be kept constantly in line with conditions of the day and amended in such a way that the rights of individuals are affected as little as possible but always bearing in mind the social purpose to be achieved. This is, really, the attitude with which we must approach these changes, and in doing so we give our approval to third reading of the bill at this time.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the main criticisms of this bill were put forward by the New Democratic Party when the bill was debated on second reading and I shall not repeat those criticisms. But I should like to underline one of the main areas which is missing from this bill, and that is the right to counsel. I would have thought the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) would have included this provision in the bill. We in the NDP were most disappointed by its absence. I hope that when the Minister of Justice amends the Criminal Code in the future he will include this provision, which is a necessary and vital one if we are to have a contemporary criminal law which is credible, enforceable, flexible and compassionate.

That is one of my main criticisms, and the other is this. There appears to be an approach by the government to refer many problems of criminal law to the Law Reform Commission and to await their study before any action is taken. The Law Reform Commission has a great number of subjects to study and on which to report to the government, and I hope this will not be the excuse of the government for not taking action. If we are to have law and order in this country we must have, as I have said, a contemporary law that is credible, enforceable, flexible and compassionate, and to shelter behind the Law Reform Commission will not do the government any credit.

The main area of concern to me which is now being studied by the Law Reform Commission is the adversary system. I have felt for many years that the adversary system fell far short of meeting the requirements of a criminal law based on the philosophy of the reformation and rehabilitation of a person accused of a crime. It is in this area that we must conduct studies in depth and take action if there is to be a response by the people. I hope that not only will we study the adversary system but also the law relating to mens rea.

Bill C-2 covered many areas of concern to a large number of Canadians in the last ten years and I cannot help but underline the credit that must be given to the government for passing legislation abolishing corporal punishment. This subject has been dealt with in depth and we regard it as a step in the right direction. I have attempted to persuade the Minister of Justice not only to abolish corporal punishment as part of a sentence imposed by a court but to abolish it as a disciplinary measure in penitentiaries across the country. When this is done I think we will be taking a humane and just approach to the treatment of inmates in institutions. I would ask the parliamentary secretary to use his good offices to persuade the Minister of Justice and also the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) that legislation in this area is required.

I was concerned when the bill was at second reading stage, and in committee, that it would not receive passage in view of so many rumours about an election. In committee I suggested that the bill be split so we could deal with the hijacking provisions, and I am happy that tonight we have reached third reading. Not only I but the members of the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association have expressed concern that parliament might prorogue without passing the hijacking provisions. I am sure the association will feel much better when the bill is given third reading in this House, passes the necessary stages in the other place and is proclaimed law. Many Canadians felt that these hijacking provisions were necessary for the safety and security of people in flight and that the government was slow in its approach to passing the legislation. The government will now have an opportunity of ratifying the conventions passed at The Hague and in Montreal, making them part of our international law in relation to hijacking.

One of the measures in the bill that we all welcome is that providing for absolute and conditional discharge. In the past, the suspended sentence procedure in the courts fell far short of dealing with people who had been convicted of crime. What it did was to impose a conviction which carried with it necessarily hurtful consequences regarding employment, travel and bonding.

We also welcome the provision dealing with the temporary serving of sentences of 90 days or less. This is a step in the right direction and will mean that many people who are convicted of an offence and receive a short jail term will be able to serve that term during weekends, being able to continue working during the week without losing their jobs, with consequent benefit to their families.

In drawing my remarks to a close, Mr. Speaker, we feel the bill is a step in the right direction. We also hope the government will continue to bring forth bills that make the law in Canada one that is contemporary, one that is credible, enforceable, flexible and compassionate. I look forward to the Minister of Justice being able to take the initiative in this direction.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether hon. members would be prepared to hear the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), in the expectation that we might get the bill through within a very short time. If the hon. member wishes to speak tonight, we might allow him to continue and get third reading of the bill since it seems to meet with the approval of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to not see the clock at this time and complete third reading stage of the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for their kindness. I did not intend to add these five minutes to their day's work.

First of all, I would like to correct what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Béchard) said about the Creditistes not attending the committee meetings. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the House, that this is a ridiculous accusation. It is very easy for one party with 150 members to sit on all committees. However, when only 13 members have to sit on more than 25 committees, it is a lot harder to do so. We cannot be everywhere at once.

I wish to indicate also that, according to the government, committee reports have generally been shelved. It follows then that it is in the House of Commons that the most efficient work is done, which we do with all our hearts.

• (2200)

Mr. Speaker, I took the floor during the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill C-2, introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). As I said then, I do accept that legislation, even though I am not too enthusiastic about it. Again, I do accept it even though it surely does not settle the problems of justice in Canada. I have in mind particularly some clauses or some part of the bill.

Indeed we can criticize justice in Canada, but if we take no steps to improve it, we shall settle nothing. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for this legislation, even if I already know that the whole problem of justice, the appointment of judges, and like matters will not be settled. But one thing remains, Mr. Speaker, we must achieve some progress.

I should like to call the attention of the House on a particular point. It is, in the bill, clause 44, sub-section (2.1), page 27, and I quote:

> Notwithstanding subsection (2), a court, judge or magistrate may remand an accused in accordance with that subsection
> (a) for a period not exceeding thirty days without having heard the evidence of a duly qualified medical practitioner where he is satisfied that compelling circumstances exist for so doing and that such a medical practitioner is not readily available to examine the accused and give evidence;

Mr. Speaker, this is quite in accordance with this government's philosophy on administration of justice and means that whenever a court, a judge or a magistrate is confronted with an accused in need of a medical examination before a decision is rendered, for more or less sophisticated reasons which are not explained anyhow, the court or judge would have the option to remand an accused who was under detention for observation at all times before the verdict or sentence was passed, without having heard the evidence of a physician, under the circumstances specified in this paragraph.

What are those circumstances? The bill reads:

> —where he is satisfied that compelling circumstances exist for so doing—

What does this mean? Here is a extremely vague phrase which allows for any interpretation and which means that before a sentence or verdict is passed, an accused can be released without having previously been examined by a qualified physician.

In the case of a person who suffers mental illness, for instance, or a mentally unbalanced female charged with murder of her newborn child, this means that the judge may release those persons until such time as a verdict or sentence is passed, without first having them examined by a physician, even if it means doing so later on—although no time is specified for that.

It seems to me that too much discretion is left to the courts in such cases. I feel that a medical certificate is extremely important for the protection of the accused.

Let me again take the example of a mentally unbalanced woman who has killed her newborn child, and who is released without previous medical examination and brought before the court again 35 or 45 days later, when her physical condition may have changed. This would mean that the accused would not be able to allege that at the time the crime was committed she was mentally unbalanced or had other extenuating circumstances, with the result that she would suffer prejudice because of the oversight of the legislators who would have left such a big loophole in the legislation.

That is why I did not want to speak any longer. I think the point I am making is clear enough to all the hon. members. And in order to amend this clause of the bill, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford (M. Rondeau): That paragraph (a) of subclause (2.1) of clause 44, page 27, be deleted and that paragraph (b) be renumbered accordingly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair would first point out to the hon. member that according to the practice and procedure in this House followed over the years, no amendment can be introduced unless it is in writing. In addition, I would remind hon. members that a motion for the third reading of the bill is now before the House and that according to our practice and procedure a bill cannot be amended unless it is referred to the committee with a request that it be amended as required. Otherwise, the hon. member could postpone third reading of the bill but I doubt that the amendment he now suggests—I cannot say "moves" because the Chair has not yet received a copy of it—would be acceptable in its present form.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have not made myself clear, or you have misunderstood me. You said that I did not send you a detailed explanation of my amendment because I know, as you do, that it is not the right time to move it. I wanted to make a positive contribution to the proceedings of the House and mention the changes which I think should be made. I am doing so by just explaining the amendment. I know that to amend it another amendment must be moved and the bill itself must be referred back to the committee for amendment. However, I should like the government members to be aware of the amendment that I should like to see made to the bill.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): To my mind, this bill is very important—

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We agreed to sit beyond ten o'clock to hear the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) complete his speech. I do not think we agreed to sit indefinitely. Perhaps the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) could tell us how long he intends to speak.

[Mr. Fortin.]

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I regret having to inform the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that when it was asked whether there was unanimous consent, I refused because I had some remarks to make. But I do not know why the Chair disregarded my objection to the unanimous consent and, under my privilege as a member, I think that I could make my remarks this evening, if the House allows me to do so, or later, if it does not.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the hon. member having time to make them, but I think tomorrow is a better day on which to make them than going on tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. So far as the Chair is aware, unanimous agreement was given to going beyond ten o'clock, with no restriction. The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) says that he expressed a negative opinion regarding the extension of time, but he did not seek the floor to express that opinion. So as far as the Chair is concerned, unanimous consent has been given to going beyond ten o'clock, with no restriction. I put myself in the hands of the House as to how long this debate is to continue, but so far as the Chair is concerned, in my interpretation of the agreement I do not see how I can restrain the hon. member who is seeking the floor, from speaking.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought my understanding was clear, that the debate was to go beyond ten o'clock to hear the hon. member for Lotbinière; but if it is thought to have been something else, I will not stand in the way. However, I hope the hon. member will be brief.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I hope the hon. member will forgive me for interrupting him, but the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) is rising on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to inquire as to the intention of the House with regard to the adjournment debate, because two members of our party are to take part in it and they are waiting. I do not know what great acceleration is needed for the passage of this bill, but may I inquire what is to happen to the "late show"? I might add that I do not think we should sit beyond 10.30 in any event, at least for the sake of the staff.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. So far as the Chair is concerned, I am available and unless the House wishes to dispense with the "late show," it will go on. So I do not see any problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. When I asked to be recognized, the only thing I said was, if you remember: "Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to the fact that it is 10 o'clock." Immediately, I was asked by all the parties whether I could not make my remarks immediately to expedite the third reading of Bill C-2. I agreed with pleasure.

I made my remarks as brief as possible as I was anxious to co-operate with my colleagues and in order that the bill could be dealt with tonight. However, the House deprived us of our right to speak to get it over with the bill tonight. It is then on the basis of this same point of order that my colleague for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) would like in his turn, even if he has only brief remarks to make, to have at least the privilege of making them; otherwise this would mean that I have been misled. I said I would be brief—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I would point out to the hon. member that, as far as the Chair is concerned, this point of order has already been clarified and I do not see, unless the House decides otherwise, any need to come back on our decision to sit beyond 10 o'clock and how the Chair can prevent the member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) from presenting his point of view.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my hon. colleagues.

In my opinion, this bill is quite important. I have had no opportunity to make my remarks before today. I have personally received many letters concerning certain paroled people who are well known in my riding. It was my duty to rise at this stage of the debate and contrary to the statements of the parliamentary secretary about this bill, my remarks will dwell mainly on the parole system. The Journal de Montréal of November 21, 1971, on the occasion of a convention of the Quebec Police Association reported that the chiefs of police were "fed up"—this is their own words—with the Parole Board attitude. Me too!!

Yet, when we are blamed for not attending the committee meetings which studied the parole system and ignored the recommendation already made to the government by the Quebec Police Association, it seems to me that we are wasting our time in this committee, for we know very well at the present time that some things are taking bad turns in this field.

I have here a pamphlet published by the Parole Board which states on page 3 or 4—the pages are not numbered—and I quote:

> Parole in Canada—
> —The inmate should normally complete one third of his sentence before he can obtain parole.

Mr. Speaker, on May 12, I received a letter—I refrain from giving names, but this is a patent case—in which the author told me, and I quote:

> We have just learned that—, an inmate at the prison of—, is going to receive permission to go outside to work and will have to come back to the prison only on evenings and weekends.

This case is really shocking. This is something that is taking place in the Eastern Townships.

I keep on quoting:

> Presently, he goes out as he pleases, accompanied by a guard. It is revolting to consider that the taxpayers' money is used to hire a private chauffeur for this prisoner. Why did he not remain in a prison of— It would be interesting to find out how he could manage to be transferred to—
> Why is it that some persons can thus dispose of the life of their spouse, and in spite of an 8 year sentence given in October 1971 by Judge—, he is released six months later, even though a parole investigation has been refused in February 1972? Is this the only punishment inflicted on a man guilty of murdering his wife, a few months in jail with as many furloughs as he wants,—all this with the taxpayers' money? We protest against such a use of revenues—

Mr. Speaker, I could go on ad infinitum, citing similar cases. The parliamentary secretary can well say that his bill will bring improvements, but some public agencies, police forces, public bodies in Canada have known of some premature releases. Even if a prisoner is supposed to serve a third of his sentence, we have evidence showing that prisoners sentenced to 8, 10, 12, 15 years emprisonment have come out three or four months after their conviction.

Here is an article published in the Journal de Montréal of November 21, 1971, and I quote:

> The Quebec Association of Police Chiefs is fed up with the Parole Board. It feels that it is too generous towards repeaters.
> Mr. Guy-Paul Simard, vice-president of the Association and chief of police of Trois-Rivières, told us yesterday following a meeting of the council that a resolution was unanimously passed in order to draft an exhaustive brief on the matter.
> We would like the Board to give a little more consideration to criminal records and show a little more rationality in its proceedings, Mr. Simard said. He added, we have been deploring for some time now the death of policemen killed in the performance of their duties because of individuals who had benefited from the leniency of parole.
> Director Simard also mentioned that in many cases, especially in armed robberies policemen were shot at by gangsters who, and I repeat, should have been behind bars.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a complete set of documents, correspondence and even editorials from newspapers, from television and radio, which all express opinions against the bill we want to railroad through tonight.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), the following amendment:

> That Bill C-2 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for the purpose of reviewing clause 44 and particularly paragraph (a)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, and the arrangement that did not contemplate a division at this hour of the night, I wonder if hon. members would agree to defer division on this amendment until tomorrow. There seem to be no further speakers. We could deal with this amendment and have third reading immediately when orders of the day are called tomorrow. If that were agreeable it would assist the situation.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very practical idea, particularly because of the "late show" and the staff.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, could I accommodate by moving the adjournment of the debate?

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. MacEachen: I understand that the House will order that we will have no further speeches and the vote on third reading as the first item of business tomorrow.

• (2220)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): If I may refer to the proposal of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), am I to understand that his proposal, if accepted, would become an order to the effect that this vote would be taken as the first order of business, without any debate?

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, because of our willingness to expedite at all times the business of the House, I agree with the proposal put forward by the President of the Privy Council.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is so ordered.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—ATLANTIC SALMON—SUGGESTED BOYCOTT OF DANISH GOODS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, on May 10, as reported at page 2143 of Hansard, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if he would join the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) in endorsing a consumer boycott of Danish products entering Canada as a means of protesting the Danish position on fishing for salmon on the high seas. The Prime Minister replied that it is not government policy to promote such a boycott.

The story of the government's ban on the commercial salmon fishery and the reasons therefor have been repeated in this House on a number of occasions. The Minister of Fisheries has stated publicly that the action taken by the Canadian government is intended to embarrass the Danes. Mr. Speaker, how naïve can the Minister of Fisheries be? The reaction from Denmark was exactly what any level-headed person would have expected: they told our government and Canadians in no uncertain terms exactly where they could go and what they could do.

In his statement to the House on April 24 the Minister of Fisheries said that last year the catch of Atlantic salmon by Denmark alone was four times that of all our fishermen. I suggest that that is an understatement. According to the minister's own figures, the number of salmon taken by the Danes last year was 15 times the number taken by fishermen in the three New Brunswick rivers in which the ban has been applied. Why is the government penalizing Canadian fishermen and denying them the opportunity to augment their incomes when actually the Danes are the worst offenders? The Danes are destroying the resource, not Canadian fishermen. It just does not make sense that we should try to ban salmon fishing for our fishermen and then make Canadian salmon available to the fishermen of Denmark.

Canada, Mr. Speaker, is trying to be the nice guy in international politics. But I say it is about time we showed some spunk.

Mr. Bell: Hear, hear!

Mr. Carter: We should be more concerned about protecting our rights and those of our fishermen that trying to maintain the image of Mr. Clean. I suggest that Canada should stop beating around the bush. Let us hit Denmark where it will hurt, in the $30 million worth of exports that enter this country annually from Denmark. If this government had any guts it would do everything in its power to prevent the sale of any Danish product in this country. And I think, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians would be only too willing to join in such an effort; they would respond to that kind of leadership.

Tonight I should like to urge Canadians across this country to take a stand for their Atlantic salmon fishermen and refuse to buy anything that is imported from Denmark. Treat it as a deadly poison: don't buy it, don't eat it and don't have anything to do with it. Let us continue that policy for as long as Denmark thumbs its nose at Canada.

Unless and until our government and our people are prepared to do that, until we are prepared to stand up and let the Danish government and Danish fishing interests know where we stand, I do not think we have any right to ask our fishermen to go along with stupid regulations which are only having the effect of protecting our salmon resource for the Danes.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: What do you know about salmon?

Mr. Danson: In response to the hon. member, I have had a close association with salmon, in all its forms, all of my life. This is a serious matter which the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) has raised. It is a new venture into international relations which has been raised in the House. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) said in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) on, I believe, May 3, this is the strongest representation made on commercial grounds that has ever been made, in his memory, in our country's history in relation to any other country. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, boycotts or sanctions in cases such as this are not government policy.

Our position has been made clear to the government of Denmark. It will be discussed at the International Conference for Northwest Atlantic Fisheries. The hon. member is calling for a step which is not consistent with Canada's stance in the past. The fact that the Danes are not recognizing the Canadian position in this matter is not reason for us to retaliate and make the situation that much worse. I think that Canada's position is a proper one. We do not think the Danish position is proper. I think privately that this is a matter of great personal sorrow as our people have always respected Denmark and the Danish people.

In spite of the fact the government's position is not one of imposing a sanction or boycott, there is nothing to prevent the people of Canada doing what they have done in other cases to show their disfavour with other countries or products from other countires, using their own judgment and following their own conscience with regard to purchasing goods from a country whose views they do not uphold or whose posture they do not support on a specific issue such as this.

I can only repeat that the government has made the very strongest representations, perhaps the strongest ever made on a matter of this kind. However, it is not the government's policy to impose sanctions on such an issue. The representations will be pursued and pursued vigorously.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—POSITION OF DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES ON PROGRAMS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on April 17 I asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) the following question:

> Can the hon. gentleman tell us what stage discussions have reached with the provinces, particularly concerning the department's programs and designated regions and special areas beyond the 1972 expiry date?

The minister replied:

> We are still in consultation and negotiation with the provinces.

I then asked the further question:

> Can the minister tell us whether his department has proposed that the present boundaries and scope of the programs remain as they are, or has he proposed some changes to existing programs?

I must have caught the minister at a loss for words. All he could do was reply with a smart answer. He said:

> We are in negotiation with the provinces, not with the hon. member.

I was not aware there had been any doubt about with whom negotiations were being carried on. The reason for my question is my concern about the future of some of the regional development projects and programs in light of the experience over the past year and the fact that some of the programs are due for renewal, revision or expiry within the next month and a half. Now is the time to look at these programs, to learn from experience and figure out the best route to follow and the best policy to adopt in the future.

Basically, there are three areas of concern. One is to analyse the effectiveness of programs to date. Second is to consider future emphasis and priority and programs, and third is to consider the regions that benefit from the programs undertaken. First of all, on the effectiveness of the programs I think our concern rests in particular with the operation of the Regional Development Incentives Act. Two hundred and thirty-three million dollars was committed under this program to the end of March, largely to private industry.

I think one of the basic criticisms of this program is that the government simply fills a passive role. In other words, it simply responds to initiatives taken by private enterprise, taken by others, rather than taking initiatives or leadership itself. In effect, there is no real plan in operation in terms of promoting industrial development, in terms of promoting an over-all development plan.

I think the question that must be asked is, in many cases would these plants have been built anyway? Under the program that preceded RDIA I think it was concluded that many of these plants would have been built even without this assistance, and it has been suggested by many reputable authorities, including one person before the standing committee today, that this is certainly a suspicion and a conjecture with respect to the present situation.

I think another question that should be asked is, could these funds be better used for other priorities, for other programs? I think, as well, we must ask ourselves the question, are we in fact building a high-cost structure into our industrial system? I think we must also ask what progress is being made, or has been made in eliminating regional disparity. The current program has been in effect for only three years. We certainly did not expect miracles to be worked during that time and we did not expect regional disparities to be eliminated. But we did expect to see a greater measure of progress than has been evident to the present time.

In considering future emphasis and priority I think we must look at our infrastructure program. We must place more emphasis on infrastructure programs to develop municipal facilities, community facilities, the types of facilities that are needed by all the people in a community and that in fact reduce the cost of producing goods and services and the cost of living for people living in areas which are disadvantaged.

At the present time the department has special regions in 22 communities of the country. I think this program could very well be extended and that more emphasis is needed in this area. I think, as well, we need to make the Canada Development Corporation the major instrument for carrying out development policy in regions. But it needs to be a different kind of Canada Development Corporation. We need a Crown corporation that is free to act in a variety of ways and is established to benefit the working people of Canada, rather than make profits in particular ventures.

We also have to consider the regions which benefit from these programs. This, of course, involves the designated areas which are now being reviewed. At the present time over one half of the country is in designated areas. There are rumours to the effect that the government is simply going to continue the present boundaries. What sort of imagination is this? It demonstrates an attitude of "I'm all right, Jack; everything's okay." Hasn't the department learned anything during the past years? Are they going to retain the present boundaries? What sort of a rationale is there for retaining the present boundaries?

In my own province of Saskatchewan there certainly is no rationale. I can give a good example involving my home town of Humboldt, where a detour was made around the town so that it could be included in a designated area. It happens to be the home town, as well, of the one cabinet minister from Saskatchewan. I have no objection to the inclusion of my home town as a designated area. But if there is a rationale for including that community in the designated areas, I can name for the parliamentary secretary and the minister many other communities in the province of Saskatchewan and elsewhere where there are equally good or better reasons for including communities in such designation.

In my own province of Saskatchewan I think there are particular problems at the present time which have arisen over the past several years, in large part due to the mismanagement of the Liberal government which was finally kicked out of office last summer. I think there is a strong case for more emphasis on programs in the province of Saskatchewan.

The latest census figures show that the population of Saskatchewan dropped by 29,000 between 1966 and 1971. When the natural increase in population is considered, the net out-migration is even higher. Since June 1, 1971, Statistics Canada estimates indicate that the population fell a further 7,000 by January 1, 1972, to a figure of 919,000. Income levels in Saskatchewan in recent years are one of the causes of out-migration. Our income levels in 1970 ranked seventh in terms of personal income per capita among the Canadian provinces. There was an improvement in 1971 and I am sure there will be some improvement in 1972 as a result of policies by the new government of the province of Saskatchewan.

Unemployment figures in Saskatchewan may be regarded as relatively low, but this is largely because of the out-migration factor, which means that in effect we export our unemployment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. John Roberts (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I followed the remarks of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) with a great deal of interest. He raised a number of very interesting questions in a rather far-ranging speech this evening. He has made a valuable contribution, as he has in the committee where I think he is one of the most serious and concerned members. As he said, the committee has been dealing with exactly some of the questions he has raised in its hearings which have been taking place over the past several weeks. I would be unable, in view of the time allotted to me, to go over all the ground and reply to him point by point, so I urge hon. members who are interested in pursuing these very important questions to read the evidence presented to the committee.

In view of the exhortation of the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) that because of the lateness of the hour we try to bring the sitting to a close as quickly as possible, out of consideration for the staff, perhaps I should content myself by saying that in relation to the question the hon. member for Regina East raised on June 17 regarding the stage which discussions had reached with the provinces in respect of the status of the designated regions and special areas, as the minister has indicated on a number of occasions, most recently in the House and before the standing committee, the department is consulting the provinces about the review of designated regions and special areas. As soon as the process of consultation is completed and the government has come to a decision, this House will be informed of the outcome. I am afraid that at the present time there is nothing else on the subject that can be said.

INDUSTRY—VERSATILE MANUFACTURING LIMITED—PROPOSED EXPANSION IN UNITED STATES RATHER THAN CANADA—DISCUSSIONS WITH COMPANY OFFICIALS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, tonight I wish to address to the parliamentary secretary a question which arises from questions that I have been directing to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) regarding Versatile Manufacturing Company, which is based in Winnipeg and has announced its intention to expand its operations into the United States. As most hon. members know, Versatile is a manufacturer of farm machinery and has, in my opinion, contributed more to reducing the price of farm machinery in western Canada than any measure introduced by the industry collectively, and certainly by the government, including its ill-fated Barber report which was stalemated before it was completed and is now doing nothing more than collecting dust.

Versatile is a Canadian company founded by two very industrious and innovative western Canadians on the assumption that farm machinery can be manufactured in western Canada which would not only be very satisfactory in suiting the needs of the agricultural industry but would also be sold at a reasonable price. Western Canadians, farmers and the public in general have watched the operation grow and, I might add, without the aid of government grants and concessions. This corporation has grown over the years to the point where it is now doing in excess of $25 million worth of business, employing some 800 people directly, plus the fact it has some 700 dealers distributed throughout the United States and Canada.

It has exported more than 60 per cent of its total production. I might say it has introduced many new concepts of design which have been followed by many other international manufacturers. It has steadily distinguished itself as a leader in farm machinery manufacturing, but because of the treatment of this company through the tax policies of both the federal government and the Manitoba government to some extent, coupled with the impact of the DISC proposals, the company has now announced plans to develop a subsidiary corporation for the purpose of manufacturing component parts in North Dakota in the United States. It plans to develop a subsidiary which will employ 100 people.

This could very well mean the beginning of the total transfer of this operation to the United States. I have asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether his officials have had discussions and have indeed approached the officers of the corporation with a view to having them review their decision and determine the exact reasons the move is being contemplated. The minister suggested that conversations were held with the officers of the Versatile corporation. However, upon discussing this with the principal officers of the Versatile Manufacturing company I have found this is not the case. As a matter of fact, there had been no consultations prior to my raising the question on May 11 this year.

If, as the minister pointed out, discussions were indeed held, the president and the vice-president know nothing of such discussions. Therefore, I believe in all fairness that if the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is at all concerned about maintaining this important industry in Canada, some meaningful initiative should be taken to meet with the officials of the Versatile corporation in the hope of having this expansion take place within Canada. The president of Versatile corporation pointed out to me that they are not asking for any concessions; they are simply interested in equal and fair tax treatment. For example, Versatile operating in the province of Manitoba pays in the order of 54 per cent corporate tax. It is being asked to compete against major international machinery firms, including such mainline companies as Massey-Ferguson which I am told has been paying 31.6 per cent in corporate tax over the past three years, based on its international operations, and compared with John Deere which is paying in the order of 10 per cent based on its international operations. Add to this the impact of the DISC proposals and you have a situation which is literally driving this corporation out of the country.

In all sincerity I believe the minister and his officials should immediately take action to set up the necessary machinery and initiatives to hold meaningful consultations and discussions with the senior officials of the corporation with a view to having the operation established in Canada. There is a debate going on today about the branch plant economy which is prevalent in this country. It seems to me that if we do not do anything to bolster the Canadian corporations which are operating within the country, we will have nothing more to look forward to than a continuation of this so-called branch plant economy. I urge the minister, through his parliamentary secretary, to take immediate action to have this expansion by the Versatile corporation come about somewhere in Canada.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to clear up a number of points with regard to the Versatile Manufacturing Company. First of all I want to say quite clearly that officials of our department have been in close contact with a number of officials of the Versatile Manufacturing company, including Mr. Robinson, the president, with whom officials of the department have met and to whom they talked in the last couple of weeks. Over a period of time other officials have been contacted in the department in connection with programs to assist them and advise with regard to marketing and production programs. Officials of Versatile have participated in scientific exchange missions to Germany and Russia and in trade fairs overseas and in the United States. So, as the hon. member can see, our department has had close contact with this company over a long period of time.

I want to say also that insofar as the DISC legislation is concerned, officials of this company have informed us that this legislation has not had a part in their decision to embark upon a manufacturing program in the United States. Also, the plant operation in Canada, which is now operating at a high employment level, will continue to operate in Canada. It is anticipated that this employment level will continue.

I would remind the hon. member of the recent tax changes which were brought in in the budget a week ago, which will reduce corporate tax a great deal and make it possible for companies such as this to compete more favourably with foreign operations abroad. I also want to remind the hon. member that Canadian manufacturers of agricultural machinery do not obtain any assistance from tariffs because of changes that were made a number of years ago which have brought the manufacturing and production of farm machinery in Canada down to the lowest possible level.

Mr. Mazankowski: Answer the question: Are you going to have discussions with Versatile?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I have answered the question. I said officials have dealt very closely with officials of Versatile for a considerable period of time. I have dealt with all of the points that have been raised in the hon. member's question. I have also said that the company will continue to manufacture in Canada at a very high level, and that the DISC program is not a factor in the decision of the company to establish a plant at Fargo, North Dakota.

All these points refute the points raised by the hon. member earlier. I think they indicate clearly that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been assisting this company in a great many ways to make them into a profitable and prosperous company in Canada and to make sure that they continue to serve the Canadian farming industry with products which are so famous and which have earned such an esteemed place in the Canadian economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT BY PREMIER BOURASSA ON FEDERALISM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move, under Standing Order 43, a motion concerning a matter of public interest.

Referring to the answer that the Prime Minister gave yesterday about a letter dated March 11, 1972 that he addressed to the Premier of Quebec concerning the suggestion of prior negotiations between both governments on any decision directly or indirectly involving the province of Quebec, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House in order to move, seconded by the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Blouin):

That the Prime Minister put on record the said correspondence.

POST OFFICE

MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN EDMONTON AND CALGARY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask leave of the House to propose a motion concerning a very urgent and pressing matter arising from the continued deterioration of postal services. The urgency arises from the fact that the provincial government of Alberta has now been forced to enter into a contract with a private mail courier for service between the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. This move has been necessitated to improve communication between government departments which, through normal mail services, has degenerated to the point where departmental efficiency is seriously affected. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Skoreyko):

That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be instructed to immediately investigate into all aspects of mail delivery service throughout Canada and, in particular, the service between the cities of Edmonton and Calgary.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is proposed to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND POPULATION VARIATION IN RESPECT OF CERTAIN RIDINGS

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-212, to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (rules).

Questions

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, this bill will enable the representation commission to extend the variation in the rules that permits the 21 ridings in schedule III of the Canada Elections Act to be treated differently from other ridings. Instead of the 25 per cent variance now provided with regard to the population of these ridings, the representation commission would be entitled to depart from the electoral population quota to the extent of 50 per cent for the 21 large ridings in schedule III.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

2. The total amount advanced on the loan to date is $1,324,681.14.

3. The loan is not yet on repayment and mortgage payments are not, therefore, in arrears.

6. The government has under study the Seaway Authority's financial structure to determine whether its obligations should be changed to be in line with a realistic assessment of anticipated revenues. Although the Seaway Authority has, since 1959, returned over $115 million to the Federal Government, over and above operation and maintenance costs on the Montreal-Lake Ontario section, it has not been able to meet its total interest liability nor repay any portion of the original cost of construction. As a result of the shortfall in interest payments, the outstanding indebtedness of the Authority has risen to the point where it is no longer reasonable to expect that future toll revenues can meet the obligations of the Authority under its existing financial structure. In 1970, the U.S. Government revised the financial structure of the American counterpart to Canada's Seaway Authority, the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, so as to require the Corporation to only cover annual operation and maintenance costs and repay the original capital costs of construction—accrued and future interest obligations were waived. This approach, along with other proposals, such as those contained in the Carr Report, present themselves as possibilities for altering the present system of repayment of the outstanding obligations of the Seaway Authority.

DARTMOUTH PUBLIC WHARF

Question No. 185—Mr. Forrestall:

With respect to the reply to Question No. 127 at page 1277 of Hansard dated November 18, 1970 (a) what were the conclusions of the consulting firm's report (b) what recommendations have been received to date by the government from the management of Halifax Harbour (c) what action is contemplated in the immediate future?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: (a) The consulting firm's report was inconclusive as to whether the wharf should be demolished or repaired. (b) Decision on repair or demolition of Dartmouth Pier be deferred until completion of harbour resource study which is underway and expected to be completed by May 31, 1972. In the meantime the scrap metal and unsightly material have been removed from the wharf. (c) See (b).

ASSISTANCE UNDER PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

Question No. 278—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, how many cash advances were made in the years (a) 1969-70 (b) 1970-71 (c) 1971-72?

2. How many cash advances were declared in default in (a) 1970-71 (b) 1971-72?

3. How many recipients were declared in default as a result of Section 13(c)?

4. How many of those in default have made deliveries according to available quota?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1. (a) 122,080; (b) 51,332; (c) 34,239 to May 8, 1972.

2. (a) 13,000; (b) 13,500.

3. 11,000.

4. The deliveries associated with these cases range over a three year period. The cost in terms of manpower and time to provide an answer to this part of the question is prohibitive. It is estimated by the Canadian Wheat Board that at least three man-hours would be required to examine each producer's delivery records for the three years to determine if every delivery opportunity had been utilized. The total requirement to investigate all defaulted advance payment accounts would exceed thirty thousand man-hours.

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY ACT—NOTICE OF DEFECTS IN VEHICLES

Question No. 304—Mr. Mather:

Has the Department of Transport required that auto makers recall and bear the cost of repairing vehicles with safety related defects and, if so, on what authority?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Under section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act it is an offence for a manufacturer, distributor or importer to fail to give notice of any defect in the construction, design or functioning of a motor vehicle or its components that affects or is likely to affect the safe operation of the vehicle and of which he is aware. There are no specific requirements under federal law requiring a manufacturer to correct safety defects in vehicles or to bear the cost of such work.

COMPENSATION TO JAMES RICHARD CROSS

Question No. 320—Mr. Godin:

Has the government recognized the anguish and hardships endured by the British diplomat James Richard Cross during his detention by the FLQ and, if so (a) was an amount of money offered to Mr. Cross as compensation (b) is this amount being paid on a monthly basis or was it paid as a lump sum?

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): (a) The anguish and the hardship suffered by Mr. Cross at the hands of the FLQ, and the courage with which he endured his terrifying experience, are indeed recognized by the Government of Canada as they are by Canadians. The calm discipline of Mr. Cross and the bravery of his wife and daughter during that period attracted the admiration of persons throughout the country. This recognition and admiration has been communicated to Mr. and Mrs. Cross by the government but compensation in the form of money was not felt appropriate. None has therefore been offered by the government. (b) Not applicable.

2. Manitoba: 33,509; Saskatchewan: 132,281; Alberta: 47,987.

3. 5,706.

Question No. 395—Mr. Trudel:

1. What projects has Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation financed in the constituency of Montreal-Bourassa since June 1968?

2. What projects has CMHC subsidized through the Société d'habitation du Québec since June, 1968 in the constituency of Montreal-Bourassa and what were the amounts involved in each case?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. See table following. DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—GUIDELINES FOR REGIONAL DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Question No. 459—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Does the Department of Transport have guidelines for regional distribution of funds allotted under its Main Estimates 1972-73 for major capital projects and, if so, what are they?

2. Of the major capital projects (by location), has Saskatchewan been allotted only three tenths of one per cent of the total amount although its population is four per cent of Canada's total and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No. The Department of Transport's capital budget as reflected in annual Estimates including those major projects identified in Main Estimates 1972-73 is based on execution of projects required to meet operational commitments.

2. As explained in (1) the major capital projects to be undertaken in 1972-73 in Saskatchewan or other provinces is not based on regional distribution of funds related to population but to operational priorities.

2. During the first quarter of 1972 three trips were made into Saskatchewan from our Edmonton office, while 8 trips were made into the province from our Winnipeg office. On each trip, complaints are investigated or routine inspections are carried out in the area covered by each trip.

3. Not known at this time. However, the Labour Standards Branch is presently conducting a study to determine whether the boundaries of the regional offices should be altered or additional offices established.

CMHC—RENTAL SCALE FOR PUBLIC HOUSING UNITS

Question No. 471—Mr. McCleave:

1. On what date was the present rental scale for public housing units implemented by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

2. When is it expected to implement a new rental scale?

3. What factors were considered in establishing the existing scale?

4. What new factors are being considered?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. The present rental scale for public housing projects was implemented by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation on April 21, 1970.

2. A date has not been established for the implementation of a new rental scale.

3. The existing scale is based on the philosophy of relating rent to income, with the proportion increasing with higher income levels. A maximum rental of 25 per cent of income applies at the upper end of the scale. Other factors taken into consideration include family composition, patterns of family expenditures, changes in prices and incomes, working spouses, one-parent families, and the degree of services provided.

4. A change from the basic philosophy of relating rent to income is not comtemplated.

NEAR COLLISION OF NEWFOUNDLAND TRAWLER "ZONNEMAIRE" WITH RUSSIAN SHIP

Question No. 486—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Is it the intention of the government to raise at the next meeting of the International Commission for Northwest Atlantic Fisheries in June 1972 the question of the reported near collision of the Newfoundland trawler Zonnemaire by a Russian ship?

2. Were Canadian fisheries officers refused permission to board the Russian factory ship involved in the incident?

3. Have officials of the Department of the Environment investigated the charge that powerful spotlights from the Soviet ship curtailed vision by officers and men of the trawler Zonnemaire?

4. What steps are being taken by the Government of Canada to avoid such incidents in the future?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): 1. The matter will be discussed between the Canadian and USSR representatives attending the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries (ICNAF) Meeting in Washington, D.C. during the period May 25-June 2, 1972, with a view to reaching agreement on procedures which should avoid such incidents in the future.

2. Upon receipt of the message suggesting discussion at ICNAF, the Canadian fishery officers did not request permission to board the Soviet factory ship.

CONSIDERATION OF ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Question No. 587—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to establishing a Parliamentary committee to concern itself with national capital matters?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): No.

[Mr. Basford.]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 57 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT AND INDIANS REGARDING JAMES BAY DEVELOPMENT

Motion No. 57—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all papers including correspondence between any Indian band, provincial or national Indian organizations and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and/or any officials in his Department regarding the James Bay Development.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 10, 33, 44 and 51.

COPY OF STUDY BY DAVID WILLIAMSON, REGARDING THE ANALYSIS TO DETERMINE SKILL DIGIT LEVELS

Motion No. 10—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by David Williamson, Ottawa, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding the "Analysis to determine skill digit levels for all of the occupations listed in the Occupational Demand Guide".

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Mr. David Williamson's work was part of an ongoing internal departmental appraisal in the assessment of the skill ratings of occupations used as one of the selection factors in evaluating applicants for immigration to Canada. Since no formal report was prepared, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, since no formal report was prepared I agree.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

REPORT BY OPERATION INDUSTRIES FOR DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION, 1967-68, RELATING TO MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEM

Motion No. 33—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Operations Research Industries, a study and recommendations on the design of a management-information system supporting the departmental planning, programming and budgeting system, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration in the fiscal year 1967-68, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the 1st Session of this Parliament.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the report requested was prepared by a private firm of consultants for the department in 1967-68, and it contains matters confidential to the department. I regret it cannot be tabled and I would ask the member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, it took a long time to find that out. I call for the question.

Mr. Jerome: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF REPORT ON LOW COST HOUSING BY PROFESSOR MELVIN CHARNEY

Motion No. 44—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for the tabling of the Report on Low Cost Housing prepared by Professor Melvin Charney for a task force on low cost housing appointed by the Minister of Urban Affairs.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the report referred to was one of the background papers prepared for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as part of the study of low-income housing. The final report on this study of low-income housing is now being prepared and will be presented to CMHC at an early date, at which time a decision about publication will be made. On that basis I ask the hon. member to consider withdrawing his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, since there are usually substantial differences between final reports and studies made, I cannot agree to that suggestion. I think the people of Canada are entitled to all the information contained in all these studies.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question!

Mr. Jerome: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO SECOND INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT IN ONTARIO

Motion No. 51—Mr. Howe:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, memoranda, special study reports between the Government of Canada or any department thereof and the Government of the Province of Ontario relating to the question of the second international airport in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government subject to the reservations which were discussed with the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the wish of the House that notice of motion No. 51 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Soeaker, may I refer to notice of motion No. 40 which has been on the order paper since March 13. Could the Secretary of State not supply some of this information, if not all, because much of it was published more than a month and a half ago?

Mr. Speaker: While the matter is being considered, perhaps the Chair might recognize the hon. member for Regina East on a point of order.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the parliamentary secretary to look into notice of motion No. 18 which was filed on February 24 of this year. We still have no response from the government. I suggest that it is a clear infringement of the rights of hon. members when the government refuses to acknowledge these motions and take some action on them, it is a clear infringement of members' rights. I think we have the right to expect a more prompt response from the government.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, at the hon. member's request last week, I looked into notice of motion No. 18. We have made progress in preparing the reply and would expect to be able to table the reply very soon.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, someone has just accused me of having an English accent; I do not think that is correct. Could I be told when the documents sought in motion no. 15 will be supplied? This request is for application forms, photographs and letters leading to the issuance of passports to Yves Geoffroy and Carmen Parent. The motion has been on the order paper since February 24.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, it is nice to have the hon. member back from a parliamentary course in London. We will look into the matter.

An hon. Member: He is the only one who failed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I hope that not all hon. members will want to rise about motions on the order paper. I see that three or four hon. members seek the recognition of the Chair. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to repeat my inquiry regarding question No. 305, which the parliamentary secretary said he would look into.

Mr. Jerome: We looked into question No. 305, Your Honour, and expect to be prepared to answer it next week.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the parliamentary secretary about motion No. 42 which simply calls for the tabling of a single document. The motion has been on the order paper since March 15 and the parliamentary secretary said he would look into the matter. I wonder if he has any report to make.

Mr. Jerome: We will do it, Your Honour.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the parliamentary secretary if he can tell me when question No. 240, standing in my name on the order paper since March 1, will be answered. It deals with a straightforward, uncontroversial question regarding the unit train experiment. When may I expect an answer?

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I have made a note of the number and will comment next Wednesday.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I refer again to questions 255 and 278, of March 2 and March 6. Has any progress been made on them?

• (1420)

Mr. Jerome: I have made a note of them.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question on the order paper, No. 425, asking for perfectly harmless information about financial assistance to some 95 corporations in Canada. Since we may have an election before long, I wonder whether steps can be taken so that I may get an answer soon?

Mr. Jerome: I will make a note of that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LE DAIN COMMISSION REPORT ON CANNABIS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON RECOMMENDATION THAT SIMPLE POSSESSION NOT BE AN OFFENCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare with regard to the report on cannabis that he tabled a few minutes ago. Specifically, what is the position of the government with regard to the recommendation of the commission that the prohibition against the simple possession of cannabis should be repealed?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the government has, through me, just received the report from the commission this morning and we have not had a chance to consider it yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the minister's great interest in this whole subject and the length of time during which these questions have been before the government and the people for consideration, when will the minister be making a statement in the House with regard to the government's position on these recommendations?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I hope the government will have a chance to study the report and consider it very seriously. It has very serious implications in terms of a social problem in Canada of tremendous concern. As soon as we have gone through that process, I am sure an announcement will be made. I would not want to leave the impression, as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, that a great deal has not been done by the government to combat this problem. That is far from the truth.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that the minister has a guilty conscience because I made no reference to that at all. When is the minister going to stop horsing around with regard to this report and make a statement on the government's position.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway on a supplementary.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, listening to the Minister of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thought the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was rising on a supplementary.

Mrs. MacInnis: It is not a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the way he seems to vacillate. Will he now make a clearcut statement and advise the House whether he will be prepared, after studying the report, to make a statement in the House on this subject and, in particular, set out whether he is in favour of the majority report or the minority report?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated, we will carry on with as constructive action as we can as a government to combat this problem. When we have had a chance to study the report we will take the appropriate policy decisions amd make them known at that time.

Mr. Woolliams: Is it the minister's intention to leave this matter until after the election?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LE DAIN COMMISSION REPORT ON CANNABIS—POSSIBLE REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is it the intention of the minister to refer the report to the appropriate committee for study and report to the House?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as to the procedure as well as the decision of the government on the substance of the report, I again indicate that we just received the report this morning and it is premature to make any declaration at this time. As soon as we have had a look at it and have discussed the matter, perhaps we can then offer greater clarification.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that cannabis was grown at the experimental farm for research purposes and that research is presently being carried out, can the minister tell us whether he intends to make a policy announcement prior to the completion of these experiments or is he going to consider this aspect in addition to the report?

Mr. Munro: Sufficient marijuana was grown for necessary experimental purposes on the experimental farm last year to make it unnecessary to repeat the operation.

An hon. Member: Is any left over?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN COST OF FOOD—MEASURES TO ASSIST LOW-INCOME CONSUMERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Having regard to the fact that between April, 1971 and April, 1972, the cost of food used in the home rose by twice as much as the cost of living generally, will the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the government has measures in hand designed to help low-income consumers?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has taken many measures of particular interest to low-income families, the aged and the disabled. I think the hon. lady will agree that this should be our first priority.

Mrs. MacInnis: In view of the fact that only two groups of people benefited from the budget—the aged and full-time students—would the Acting Prime Minister urge upon the government the necessity of convening immediately the joint parliamentary committee on prices to go into this matter of rising food prices?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. MacInnis: What are we to say when we go out to talk to low-income people who are desperate?

Mr. Baldwin: Tell them to wait until election day.

ALLEGED INCREASE IN PROFITS OF SAFEWAY AND GEORGE WESTON—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Bearing in mind the excessive profits made by many of the food companies, such as Safeway and Weston, can the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether he will cause these excessive profits to be investigated and instruct these companies to roll back their prices?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. That is not the intention of the government. The profits of these companies are taxed under the laws of Canada as approved by this parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I shall return to the hon. member in a short while but I am anxious that we should complete the first round of questioning.

USE OF DRAWING RIGHTS TO STABILIZE PAYMENTS BETWEEN COUNTRIES—POSSIBILITY OF EFFECTING MONETARY REFORM

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Finance Minister, but, as he is absent, I shall direct it to the Acting Prime Minister.

As there is some question of an international monetary reform through consultations and co-operation between countries, would the minister tell the House if the drawing rights will be accepted as a priority process to stabilize the balance of payments between countries?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these supplementary drawing rights have proved to be a very useful supplement to international liquidity. They will be continued. I believe they are being established as equivalent to gold.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Would the minister also tell us if member countries have adopted a definite plan of action geared to monetary reform, or if they prefer to keep the dollar as a reserve currency?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: The whole subject of international monetary reform is under most active study at the present time. It was under the Group of Ten, and I believe the group will be enlarged to become a group of 20. Canada is one of the countries which hopes that these consultations will be successful.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT— MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND PREMIER BOURASSA— ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS OPPOSING PROJECT

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

It was announced recently that the minister would meet with the Quebec premier about the James Bay Indians' claims. We learned later that the meeting had been postponed. Could the hon. minister tell the House when he intends to meet the Quebec premier and what will be his main subject of discussion in supporting the interests of the James Bay Indians?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, last Monday I had the opportunity of conversing with Quebec Premier Bourassa. He told me that he had to postpone the meeting. I do not know whether the new meeting will take place Friday or next week. We were able to discuss over the phone his intention of having work begin immediately in the Grande-Rivière area only, which will indeed reduce the number of Indians who will be affected. I hope we will discuss that problem and the situation of the James Bay Indians at the next meeting that will take place on Friday or early next week.

• (1430)

Mr. Asselin: I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In the light of those conversations with the Quebec premier, is there anything indicating that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would not give his support to the Indian people who want to lodge an appeal before the court in that case?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no indication of that. I said that I would help Indians at any time because it is my duty to do so, but I am happy to see now that because the Quebec government has decided to start working projects solely in the Grande-Rivière region only one third of the Indians involved will be affected.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

DISCUSSION OF TREATY RIGHTS BY MINISTER WITH NORTHWEST TERRITORIES NATIVES IN LIGHT OF MACKENZIE HIGHWAY PROJECT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Is the minister negotiating with the Indian Brotherhood in the Northwest Territories regarding native rights, particularly in connection with the proposed highway, and has he made a specific proposal in cash terms, say something of the order of $42 million?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity in January to meet with the representatives of the Northwest Territories Indian Brotherhood. We talked about that problem. I told them that the policy of this government was to see that treaties are respected and that if Indians wanted to choose their lands we intended to abide by the treaties. So far the Indians have not seen fit to proceed in this way. Like the Leader of the Opposition I saw the newspapers this morning but I have not yet received any official message from Mr. Wahshee.

[English]

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AND YUKON—INQUIRY AS TO CASH OFFER TO SETTLE ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary and is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister made any offer to the brotherhood in the Yukon territory or in the Northwest Territories of a specific cash settlement for the extinguishment of aboriginal rights, including treaties 8 and 11?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—CO-OPERATION BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

Could the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development give the House an assurance that his department will provide all possible co-operation to the province of Quebec to ensure the realization of the James Bay development project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my responsibility is to the Indians living in the James Bay area, and I have given them the assurance that I will do the utmost to help them benefit to the maximum from the development of the James Bay area, and this without their usual way of life being too much affected.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister arising out of the presentation of a petition on behalf of 60 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member.

[Translation]

Is the hon. member for Abitibi rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I requested permission to ask a supplementary question to that of my colleague from Charlevoix on the James Bay hydroelectric project and as this project will be carried out in my riding, I suggest that I have a right to this information.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I shall be happy to recognize the hon. member in a moment. For the time being, the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Yukon. As soon as we have disposed of the hon. member's question and the supplementaries that may be asked, I shall be happy to get back to the previous question and to recognize the hon. member for Abitibi.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

YUKON TERRITORY—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO PETITION REQUESTING DISSOLUTION OF COUNCIL AND ELECTION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister arising out of the presentation to the Governor General last Monday of a petition signed by 60 per cent of those eligible to vote in the last federal election in the Yukon asking for dissolution of the present session of the Yukon Territorial Council and the holding of immediate elections. Have the Acting Prime Minister and the government considered that petition and, if so, what action does the government intend to take?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, the matter has not yet been discussed by the government.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since under the provisions of the Yukon Act the Governor in Council has the power to dissolve the council and instruct that new elections be called, is it his intention to advise his colleagues in the Privy Council to follow the request made by 60 per cent of the eligible voters in the Yukon, dissolve the council and call a new election?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not received officially a request signed by Yukon citizens, but may I be allowed to say at this time that The Yukon Territory Act provides for elections every four years. If the majority of the inhabitants of the Yukon are displeased with the elected candidates they can do what all voters do in a democracy: that is, change elected representatives in the next election.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that 60 per cent of the eligible voters can hardly be called a minority. In the copy of the letter that I received from Democracy for Yukoners it is indicated that not only the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition but also the minister himself received a copy of the petition. I wonder whether he would make inquiries of his officials forthwith and advise the House, perhaps tomorrow, of what action he intends to take?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised that the Yukon delegation did not go to the trouble of meeting me. I was not even asked to meet them. I therefore have a feeling there is more interest in playing politics than in being serious.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Abitibi on a supplementary to the question put a moment ago.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—EFFECTS OF WORK AT GRANDE-RIVIÈRE ON NATIVES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should not like to retain a bad impression because of the reply the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development gave a little while ago, when he said that the Grande-Rivière project, which was announced last night by the Premier of Quebec, would involve only one third of the Indians of the area.

Did the hon. minister mean that this one-third of the Indians of the northern part of the James Bay basin is less important that the two-thirds of the Indians of the southern part?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker, that third is not less important, but nevertheless it is easier to deal with one-third of the Indian population of that area than with 6,000 Indians. It is my intention to protect those 2,000 Indians, just as I intended to protect the 6,000.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board and arises out of the information conveyed to the House by the hon. member for Vegreville with respect to the deteriorating postal situation in Alberta and the negative response of the postal unions to the recent offer of the Treasury Board in the current negotiations. When will the minister be making a statement in the House on these matters in an effort to cast some kindly light on a darkening situation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (president of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can rise to the poetic heights achieved in the question, but I would say that when casting light will help achieve useful results, it will be cast.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I shall address to the Acting Prime Minister, or perhaps the President of the Treasury Board would convey my message to him. Will he make a statement on these matters in view of their urgency, as illustrated by the fact that a provincial government has found it necessary to establish its own courier service?

HEALTH

INQUIRY AS TO WHEN LEGISLATION ON CIGARETTE ADVERTISING WILL BE PROCEEDED WITH

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare that is related to earlier questions in regard to one aspect of the drug problem in Canada and what the government may be intending to do about it. Can the minister indicate when he intends to proceed with the legislation he introduced last year calling for an end to all the disease-promoting cigarette advertising in Canada?

• (1440)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this depends entirely on the progress we make in respect of current pending legislation before the House. As the hon. member knows, we already have under consideration not only the old age pension legislation but the legislation affecting family allowances which is pending before the standing committee.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wished to direct to the Prime Minister but in his absence I shall direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he advise the House whether the Prime Minister has yet screwed up enough courage to call a general election by the end of this week—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: —or does he still intend to cling to office and continue not to face issues such as unemployment and inflation?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is entirely out of order, and I think he owes the Chair some respect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Hees: On a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Hees: Quiet, please. If the noisy rabble on your right would not make such a deafening din, Mr. Speaker, we on your left could hear Your Honour when you get to your feet and call for order and obey your instructions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will certainly not pursue the matter. The hon. member normally co-operates with the Chair, but when he asks this kind of question I cannot help but notice that he looks the other way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: There has been a request that I repeat the question because of the noise.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member could come back at the time of adjournement.

Mr. Hees: Thank you.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PRICE OF FOOD—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION TO DETERMINE WHETHER HIGHER PROFITS OF CHAIN STORES JUSTIFIED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister arising out of the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. In view of the fact that Dominion Stores has reported an increase in its profits for 1971 of some 300 per cent over the previous year, with a similar increase for the first quarter of this year, indicating that the increase in the price of food is not necessarily related to the increase in the cost of food, I should like to ask whether the government has any intention of having an investigation made by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs into the increase in the price of food to determine whether these increases are justified or represent exorbitant profiteering?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if there is any evidence that these prices have risen because of a lack of competiton in the system there is provision for remedy, and of course the minister and the agency responsible would make the necessary investigations. But if it is a question of some businesses being more profitable than others, I think the hon. gentleman would agree that this happens from time to time and that at some times profits are lower while at other times they are higher.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that practically all the large chain stores have shown very substantial increases in their net profits, will the Acting Prime Minister undertake on behalf of the government to have the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs look into this matter to determine whether there is an absence of competition or collusion between food stores in this country?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is yes. That is what I said in my first reply.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONSULTATIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES ON SETTING OF DATE FOR LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the high hopes of many fishermen in Atlantic Canada concerning a conservation program to be established at the next Law of the Sea Conference, will the minister indicate whether he has had recent consultations with the other countries involved and whether a date has yet been set for this important conference?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been holding consultations about the Law of the Sea Conference. We are still very interested in having it proceed as was originally envisaged, and that is the purpose of our interventions. Whether we shall succeed, of course, is not entirely within our control.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CAPE BRETON—REPLACEMENT OF ELIGIBILITY LIST FOR UNILINGUAL POSITIONS BY ONE FOR BILINGUAL POSITIONS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to one I directed a few days ago to the President of the Treasury Board regarding a Public Service competition held in the Cape Breton area to fill positions that may occur in the next year in Sydney and North Sydney. As we all know, these eligibility lists are good for a period of one year. I have information to the effect that those who qualified in this competition, numbering in all 20-odd, have now or will be advised that as of June 15 their chances will be gone and the positions will be filled by those who qualified in a previous competition requiring bilingualism. I should like to repeat my question of the other day. Will the minister enlighten us on this subject and advise us what we can tell these men who have already qualified but who are not going to get the opportunity of filling these positions in the Public Service?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I did cause an inquiry to be made. As the hon. gentleman knows, the establishment of this list and the competition is the responsibility of the Public Service Commission, not that of the government, as administrator. The Public Service Commission assured me it would investigate this story from Halifax and make a report. I have not yet received it.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the problem is not in Halifax but in Cape Breton, particularly in Sydney and Sydney Mines, will the minister assure us that these 20-odd people will not be discriminated against by not receiving employment because of the fact they are unable to speak two languages?

Mr. Drury: I can give assurance that there will be no discrimination, but I would rather wait until such time as the Public Service Commission reports before making any kind of statement.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF SASKATCHEWAN BILL RESPECTING OWNERSHIP OF FARM LAND

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

[English]

I should like to ask the minister to advise the House whether the Saskatchewan bill prohibiting the ownership of farm land by other Canadians and foreigners has been brought to his attention and, if so, has he received advice about its constitutionality?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the bill has indeed been brought to my attention and I have sought comment on its constitutional validity. Although it is only in the bill stage, it does seem to me that if it is not unconstitutional it ought to be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to hear the minister say he is looking into the constitutionality of a bill that has not yet been passed. It has been put over until the next session, as I understand it. It is a bill against ownership of farm lands in Saskatchewan by "foreigners" which includes all the rest of the people in Canada who do not live in Saskatchewan. In view of the fact the government of Saskatchewan is asking for representations to be made concerning this bill, will the minister, as the custodian of the judicial conscience of Canada, bring to the attention of the government of Saskatchewan the fact that this type of legislation is most disruptive and entirely out of keeping with our concept of Canadianism?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly give serious consideration to the recommendation of the right hon. gentleman. It is perhaps a little unusual to look at the constitutional validity of a bill when it is still in bill form, but in this particular case there is a declaration by the Saskatchewan government that it will be made retroactive to last April 1 when it is eventually passed.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence from the House of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to direct my question to the President of the Privy Council. Does the government intend to bring in legislation to remedy the horrendous mess in the field of immigration which has resulted from government inaction over the years?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is obviously not acceptable from a procedural standpoint. It is an argument.

Mr. Brewin: May I substitute another question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that it is entirely in order or in keeping with the traditions of the House to ask a question which the hon. member must know is out of order and then ask permission to ask another question. I will make an exception in favour of the hon. member in this case and allow him to ask another question.

• (1450)

Mr. Brewin: I will rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Does the government intend to do anything about the situation that has arisen in the field of immigration? Does it intend to bring in legislation soon on that subject?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): The answer is yes. When the legislation will be brought in is uncertain at the moment, whether in this session or the next—probably the next.

NATIONAL PARKS

RECRUITMENT OF WORKERS IN PARK DE LA MAURICIE

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Do the managers of the Mauricie national park follow directives from the minister when they recruit their employees exclusively through the Manpower Centre in Shawinigan, which does not serve at all the Champlain constituency where 75 per cent of the park is geographically located?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the declaration of the hon. member is not entirely true. They are also in touch with the Manpower Centre in Grand'Mère which covers part of the Champlain constituency. In any case, the minister in charge of this department is not the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

GRAIN

RAPESEED—SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF QUOTAS FOR DELIVERY TO DOMESTIC CRUSHERS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Is the minister prepared to reconsider his position and the position of the Canadian Wheat Board with regard to the delivery quotas for rapeseed, particularly for rapeseed delivered to domestic mills for crushing into rapeseed oil and rapeseed meal?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): The exact quotas both to producers and elevators, Mr. Speaker, and producers at processing plants are a matter which is handled by the Canadian Wheat Board and which is considered and reconsidered by them constantly in order to ensure that appropriate supplies are available to processors consistent with the principle that, generally speaking, equitable delivery opportunities should be offered to all producers in the prairie region.

Mr. Horner: Is the minister aware that deliveries are not equitable to the domestic crushing mills, and has he considered the constitutional question with regard to the delivery of a product to a processing plant in the same province and his authority to intervene in that regard?

Mr. Lang: A variety of legal questions touching on that matter have been raised and brought to my attention. I know of nothing that is going on that can be attacked on legal grounds.

ACTION TO RE-ESTABLISH INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In light of recent discussions held between top level agricultural spokesmen for both Canada and the United States with respect to the re-establishment of the International Wheat Agreement, what initiative, if any, is the Canadian government taking to re-establish this agreement which is so important to world wheat producers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we discussed this matter on a bilateral and multilateral basis with the other countries. There is an arrangement within the present International Grains Arrangement for the working body to agree at any time to reconvene a meeting and to attempt to establish fair pricing. That would be the body which would meet at an early date and look at the question again.

REASON FOR TRIP BY MINISTER TO WEST COAST

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In light of the trip he made to the west coast over the weekend, can he advise what the purpose of that trip was, and has he anything to report to the House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the trip, which was reviewed in the House in the question period on Monday, was to have a close look at the rail facilities at the coast, and at the way they service the relevant terminal facilities, in order to lay a basis for further decisions about improving our capacity to go after new record volumes of grain exports.

Mr. Benjamin: Can the minister advise the House whether he was accompanied by some Liberal candidates from the province of Saskatchewan and whether they rode with him on the plane?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIRPORTS

PLANS FOR EXPANSION OF VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—ACQUISITION OF RESIDENTIAL PROPERTIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has his department undertaken studies with regard to the expansion of Vancouver international airport on Sea Island and is the department planning to acquire the other residential properties on the island?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in so far as expansion is concerned there are what I might describe as long-range plans for expansion when and if it becomes necessary. At the moment we are moving ahead with the acquisition of various properties on Sea Island in order to have the land available when the time comes. I cannot be specific in my answer as to which particular properties are being acquired unless the Leader of the Opposition has some specific property in mind.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair might recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville who had a supplementary he wished to ask some time ago. If he does not want to refer to that matter, perhaps he might be recognized on a new question.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST INTENTION OF RAILWAYS TO INCREASE POTASH FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a new question for the Minister of Transport now that he is in the House. I think it is quite important. In view of the announcement this week that potash freight rates will be substantially increased on June 1 and in view of the protests from both the industry and the premier of Saskatchewan that the railways should not go ahead with this decision, can the minister tell us whether or not he has contacted the railways and asked them to rescind that decision? If he has, can he report to the House?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member knows that neither I nor the government have any authority to roll back a proposed freight increase by either railway other than under the terms of the National Transportation Act. There are a number of cases in the west to which I referred the day before yesterday having to do with appeals that have been lodged with the Canadian Transport Commission. This may very well be one of them or may be affected by those appeals. If such is the case, the CTC will decide whether or not in fact there is a case in the public interest for holding down the rates.

Mr. Nystrom: Would the minister undertake to investigate the matter and report to the House tomorrow?

Mr. Jamieson: I will be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON SOVEREIGNTY OVER ALASKAN OIL IF TRANSPORTED THROUGH PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the announcement by Washington last Friday regarding the trans-Alaska pipeline, has the Canadian government had any discussions with Washington regarding sovereignty of the passage of oil from Alaska to the continental United States through the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline? If so, can he tell the House what these were?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I do not understand the question. Perhaps it could be repeated; perhaps I misunderstood.

Mr. Ritchie: Has the Canadian government had any discussions with Washington regarding sovereignty over oil passing through a pipeline from Alaska to the continental United States?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, there has not been any discussion, but I understand secretary Morton said that one of the reasons the TAPS line is approved is that the oil would under that proposal not pass through any foreign country. That is all I know.

FRIENDSHIP CENTRES—PROVISION OF FUNDS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Secretary of State.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Athabasca and I asked the right hon. Prime Minister about the situation concerning the Toronto Indian centre and other Indian centres across the country which are saying that promised funds have been held up and they have had to close their doors. The Prime Minister said he would refer the question to the minister. Is the minister now in a position to explain the situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have taken emergency measures and I believe that some funds will be received tonight by these friendship centres which find themselves in the most difficult situations; anyway, the government is now considering a larger proposal, involving the whole question.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—RESPONSE TO REQUEST BY NATIVE BROTHERHOOD FOR FUNDS TO REHIRE STAFF

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State with respect to the lack of funding of the Northwest Territories Native Brotherhood and the fact that they have had to lay off half their staff as a result. Has the minister received representations to this effect from the brotherhood and, if so, will he make funds available forthwith so they can rehire their staff?

• (1500)

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we have any representation from the particular group to which the hon. member refers. I will conduct an inquiry without delay. This government is certainly not willing to let these institutions have overwhelming difficulties.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AMENDMENT DEFINING FISHERMEN AS INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS—POSSIBLE CLARIFICATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour concerning Bill C-183. In view of the fact that the Fisheries Council of Canada contends that clause 107(1) of the bill defining fishermen as independent contractors and employees is ultra vires of the parliament of Canada, since this is legislation relating to property and civil rights which are wholly within the jurisdiction of the provinces, is the minister aware of this and has he had an opportunity to discuss the matter with the law officers of the Crown?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the submission of the Fisheries Council. I have been aware in the past that the section, in the minds of some, lacks constitutionality, and I simply point out that in the view of the department it is a constitutional provision. That is why it is in the legislation.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that there appears to be legislation dealing with labour contracts and negotiations in the provinces of British Columbia, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, and in light of the submission made by the Fisheries Council which indicates that the government and the council are at loggerheads, is it the intention of the government to seek clarification as to the constitutional validity of the clause involved?

Mr. O'Connell: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1972

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE, CRIMINAL RECORDS ACT, NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT, PAROLE ACT AND VISITING FORCES ACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, be read the third time and do pass and the amendment thereto of Mr. Rondeau (p. 2333).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. By virtue of the special order adopted by the House last evening—

Mr. Lang: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to what appears to be a typographical error. During the course of last evening's very rapid proceedings there was a final suggestion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that section 9, the amendments to which appear on page 5 of the amending bill, need not contain the subsection (1) reference. I want to draw to the attention of the House that there are subsections 2 and 3 in the bill, and therefore subclause (1) is indeed required. If it is agreeable, I think we might put that technical matter right before proceeding to the vote.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I presume the minister means those subsections are in the act.

Mr. Lang: Yes, the original section 9 has three subsections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Since we are apparently dealing with a minor typographical matter, I think it would be the unanimous wish of the House that we act on the suggestion of the minister.

In conformity with the order of the House adopted last night the question will now be put on the bill before the House. The question is on the amendment to the main motion. Mr. Lang, seconded by Mr. MacEachen, moved that Bill C-2, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Criminal Code 1967 Amendment Act, the Criminal Records Act, the National Defence Act, the Parole Act and the Visiting Forces Act, be now read the third time.

[Translation]

And on the amendment moved by Mr. Rondeau:

That Bill C-2 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for the purpose of reviewing clause 44 and particularly paragraph (a).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment. All those in favor will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Rondeau) which was negatived on the following division:

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ESCALATION OF PENSIONS, RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS, INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 16, consideration of Bill C-207, to amend the Old Age Security Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and motion No. 5 (Mr. Rynard).

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When the House adjourned last night, a point of order had been raised in relation to motion No. 5 standing in the name of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard). The suggestion had been made that this motion might be difficult to accept from a procedural standpoint. I have looked at the matter and, before making a ruling, I am prepared to hear argument in relation to the point which I made last night.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have read with interest your remarks. I am afraid that Your Honour probably reread them, too, and they are probably so fresh in Your Honour's mind that it would be pointless for me to try to persuade you to take a contrary view. With regard to motion No. 5, I will not attempt to persuade Your Honour to make a ruling other than the one you indicated last night you would make. I am prepared to accept Your Honour's ruling on that. When that is disposed of, I would like to speak to amendment No. 6.

Mr. Speaker: If that is the disposition of the House, a ruling will be made formally. Referring hon. members to citation 246 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, I have to conclude that the motion cannot be put. I might say that I see no particular difficulty in relation to motion No. 6. Unless hon. members interpret it another way, there should be no procedural difficulty in at least having the motion put at this time. If hon. members agree, it can be put at this time.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North) moved:

That Bill C-207, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be amended by striking out the word "is" at lines 14 and 24, page 2 and substituting the words "shall not be less than".

He said: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this amendment, I am firmly of the opinion that there has been an injustice done all along the line, starting in 1967 when the old age security pension was fixed at $75. At that time, we brought in the guaranteed income supplement. There was a 2 per cent escalator clause added at that time, providing the cost of living went up by 2 per cent or more. Nothing was added if it did not go by 2 per cent. In 1971, the old age security pension was frozen at $80 per month, with the addition of 42 cents to the $79.58, but without the addition of any escalator clause. As a matter of fact, the guaranteed income supplement was, and always has been, tied to an escalator clause providing the cost of living went up by 2 per cent or more.
